The question was discussed in the Special Political Committee at five meetings held between 26 October and 2 November 1977. The President of the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) addressed the Committee, describing the basic objectives of ICAO in ensuring the safe and orderly growth of international civil aviation throughout the world and of promoting flight safety in international air navigation. He referred to the Convention on International Civil Aviation signed in Chicago on 7 December 1944, the Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft signed at Tokyo in 1963, the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft signed at The Hague in 1970, and the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation signed at Montreal in 1971. It was the firm conviction of ICAO, he said, that universal acceptance of those Conventions and of the technical standards developed by ICAO would go a long way towards eliminating the threat to civil aviation posed by acts of unlawful interference.

The Special Political Committee also heard the President of the International Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations, who said it was clear that urgent steps were necessary to ensure that all nations complied with international law as it related to the denial of safety and refuge to aerial pirates and those who otherwise carried out attacks on civil aviation. He considered that the current scale of threat was such that it could be considered as constituting a threat to international peace and security.

Among the participants in the discussion were the representatives of Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Japan, Nigeria, Norway, the Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia and the USSR. There was general agreement that all acts of terrorism and violence directed against civil air travel were to be condemned. Several Members—including Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen and the USSR—while condemning acts of terrorism, did not wish them to be compared with the use of force in people's national liberation movements against racism and apartheid, and in class struggle. The point was made by the Philippines, among others, that half the Member States of the United Nations had not acceded to or signed the three Conventions designed to guarantee safety in the air. The need for further action by ICAO to ensure the security of air travel was stressed by a number of Members, Canada and Finland among them.

On 3 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 32/8 on the safety of international aviation. The Assembly thereby reiterated and reaffirmed its condemnation of acts of aerial hijacking or other interference with civil air travel through the threat or use of force, and all acts of violence which might be directed against passengers, crew and aircraft, whether committed by individuals or States. It called upon all States to take all necessary steps, taking into account the relevant recommendations of the United Nations and ICAO, to prevent such acts, including the improvement of security arrangements at airports or by airlines as well as the exchange of relevant information, and to this end to take joint and separate action—subject to respect for the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and for the relevant United Nations declarations, covenants and resolutions and without prejudice to the sovereignty or territorial integrity of any State—to ensure that passengers, crew and aircraft engaged in civil aviation were not used as a means of extorting advantage of any kind.

Further, the Assembly appealed to all States which had not become parties to the Tokyo, Hague and Montreal Conventions to give urgent consideration to ratifying or acceding to them. It also called upon ICAO to undertake urgently further efforts, including reinforcement of the relevant annex to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, with a view to ensuring the security of air travel and preventing aerial hijacking, interference with civil air travel through threat or use of force and acts of violence against passengers and aircraft. Finally, the Assembly appealed to all Governments to make serious studies of the abnormal situation related to hijacking.

Resolution 32/8 was recommended to the Assembly by the Special Political Committee, which approved a 50-power text by consensus on 1 November. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Cuba said it was not a party to the consensus. China expressed reservations on the paragraphs referring to Conventions that it had not signed.

The text was orally amended in the Committee by the sponsors, following consultations among regional groups, and by Saudi Arabia.

The Saudi Arabian amendments, which were accepted, were drafting changes and also added the operative paragraph by which the Assembly appealed to Governments to study the abnormal situation related to hijacking. An earlier Saudi Arabian amendment was withdrawn, its provisions having been included in a Saudi Arabian draft resolution that was not, however, pressed to the vote, on the understanding that the text would be reproduced in the Committee's report. By this draft, the General Assembly would have: (1) affirmed that saving the lives of hostages should remain the primary concern of the international community, notwithstanding the drastic measures that might have to be taken to curb international hijacking operations against civilians; and (2) called on Governments to make serious studies of the abnormal situation related to hijacking and take measures to work out possible solutions.

Resolution 32/8, as recommended by Special Political Committee, A/32/320 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 3 November 1977, meeting 56.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the orderly functioning of international civil air travel under conditions guaranteeing the safety of its operations is in the interest of all peoples and promotes and preserves friendly relations among States,

Recalling its resolution 2645 (XXV) of 25 November 1970, in which it recognized that acts of aerial hijacking or other wrongful interference with civil air travel jeopardize the lives and safety of passengers and crew and constitute a violation of their human rights,

Recalling also its resolution 2551 (XXIV) of 12 December 1969 as well as Security Council resolution 286 (1970) of 9 September 1970 and the Council's decision of 20 June 1972,

1. Reiterates and reaffirms its condemnation of acts of aerial hijacking or other interference with civil air travel through the threat or use of force, and all acts of violence which may be directed against passengers, crew and aircraft, whether committed by individuals or States;

2. Calls upon all States to take all necessary steps, taking into account the relevant recommendations of the United Nations and the International Civil Aviation Organization, to prevent acts of the nature referred to in paragraph 1 above, including the improvement of security arrangements at airports or by airlines as well as the exchange of relevant information, and to this end to take joint and separate action, subject to respect for the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and for the relevant United Nations declarations, covenants and resolutions and without prejudice to the sovereignty or territorial integrity of any State, in co-operation with the United Nations and the International Civil Aviation Organization, to ensure that passengers, crew and aircraft engaged in civil aviation are not used as a means of extorting advantage of any kind;

3. Appeals to all States which have not yet become parties to the Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft, signed at Tokyo on 14 September 1963, the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, signed at The Hague on 16 December

1970, and the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, signed at Montreal on 23 September 1971, to give urgent consideration to ratifying or acceding to those conventions;

4. Calls upon the International Civil Aviation Organization to undertake urgently further efforts with a view to ensuring the security of air travel and preventing the recurrence of acts of the nature referred to in paragraph 1 above, including the reinforcement of annex 17 to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, signed at Chicago on 7 December 1944;

5. Appeals to all Governments to make serious studies of the abnormal situation related to hijacking.

Research into unidentified flying objects and related phenomena

At the request of Grenada, the General Assembly included in the agenda of its 1977 regular session an item on "Establishment of an agency or a department of the United Nations for undertaking, co-ordinating and disseminating the results of research into unidentified flying objects and related phenomena."

In an explanatory memorandum attached to the letter, Grenada noted that it was seeking to bring about open discussions on the subject of research into unidentified flying objects (UFOs). In order to initiate a concentrated and co-ordinated study on UFOs and related phenomena and to focus world attention on such an important activity, Grenada was also seeking to have 1978 declared by the United Nations as the International Year of Unidentified Flying Objects, during which: (a) an agency or a department of the United Nations would be established to conduct and co-ordinate research in the matter; (b) a second International Congress on the Phenomenon of Unidentified Flying Objects would be held in Grenada; and (c) a special commemorative stamp series would be issued by Grenada and the United Nations to coincide with the holding of the second Congress. A draft resolution to this effect was annexed to the letter.

A letter dated 25 August 1977 to the Secretary-General from the representative of Grenada forwarded a copy of an address delivered by the Prime Minister and Minister of External Affairs of Grenada at the first International Congress on the UFO phenomenon, held in April 1977 at Acapulco, Mexico; a further letter dated 10 November forwarded copies of a study of the UFO phenomenon.

In the Special Political Committee, where the matter was discussed, the representative of Grenada submitted a draft resolution on the subject and withdrew its draft submitted earlier.

By the new text, the General Assembly would, inter alia, request the Secretary-General to undertake, for consideration by its regular 1978 session, a survey of the UFO phenomenon, and to transmit the text of the resolution to the Governments of all Member States. The Assembly would also decide to include the item in the agenda of its 1978 session.

The Special Political Committee heard statements on the question by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Education of Grenada. On 6 December the Committee, following consultations, approved by consensus a decision which was adopted by the General Assembly without vote on 13 December 1977 as decision 32/424. The Assembly thereby took note of the statements by the Grenadian Government officials, said it had studied the draft resolution submitted, and decided that the text should be transmitted to Member States and to interested specialized agencies so that they might communicate their views to the Secretary-General. It asked the Secretary-General to circulate those views to Members and to interested specialized agencies.

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Questions concerning development and international economic co-operation and the establishment of a new international economic order

During 1977, United Nations organs continued their consideration of the implementation of major decisions adopted by the General Assembly in 1974 and 1975 relating to a development strategy and the establishment of a new international economic order: the wide-ranging 1974 Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, adopted at the sixth special session; the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, adopted later that year; and a resolution adopted at the seventh special session, in 1975, devoted to development and international economic co-operation.

The implementation of these decisions was widely discussed in the Economic and Social Council—being the main topic of the annual debate on international economic and social policy—and in various of its committees. The Council adopted a resolution urging intensified efforts to achieve the goals of the new international economic order and urged action to prepare a new international development strategy for the 1980s.

The Assembly, at its 1977 session, also took up the question. It decided to convene a special session in 1980 to assess progress made in the establishment of the new international economic order and to take necessary action, including the adoption of a new strategy for the next United Nations development decade. The Assembly established an intersessional committee to oversee implementation of decisions reached in negotiations in the various United Nations bodies, and passed along to its 1978 regular session for consideration a draft text on preparations for a new strategy.

Observed with great interest during the year were the results of the Paris Conference on International Economic Co-operation. The Assembly had decided in 1976 to resume its thirty-first session after the conclusion of the Conference to consider its results in the context of development and international economic co-operation. The Conference's concluding meeting was held in June 1977; the results were extensively discussed in the Economic and Social Council at its July/August 1977 session in Geneva, and then by the General Assembly during its week-long resumed session in September, but the Assembly did not agree on the text of a resolution on the subject at that session.

On other questions, however, both the Council and the Assembly adopted decisions and resolutions—to mobilize assistance for various developing countries, to take note of the report of the 1977 session of the Board of Governors of the United Nations Special Fund, and to identify co-operative and assistance needs in the field of consumer protection. International energy questions were also taken up. The subject of international economic development law was deferred to 1978.

Decisions emanating from discussions of the implementation of the various elements of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade included those aimed at accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries, combating the effects of world inflation on the development process, promoting economic co-operation among developing countries and studying the role of the public sector in such promotion, adopting special measures in favour of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, and making operational the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries. The Council also took note of reports on managing public finance for planned development and on implementation of the Programme of Action of the 1976 Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour.

(Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States), 472 (decisions of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development), 526 (financing of economic development), 221-58 and 264 (assistance to various countries in Africa and to Viet Nam), among related topics discussed in this volume.

Implementation of General Assembly decisions on development strategy and establishment of a new international economic order

Action by the Economic and Social Council

At its July/August 1977 session the Economic and Social Council held its annual general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, and assessed progress made in the implementation of several General Assembly decisions elaborating that policy—the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,¹ the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,² the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,³ and a resolution of the General Assembly's seventh special session on development and international economic co-operation.⁴

Reports before the Council

Several reports by the Secretary-General, presented as a basis for the general discussion, highlighted progress made during the first half of the decade in implementing the recommendations contained in those decisions.

According to a progress report proposed to facilitate the third of the biennial reviews and appraisals of the International Development Strategy, the first half of the 1970s had been subjected to severe shocks, which included the breakdown of the Bretton Woods monetary regime and its replacement by a system of floating exchange-rates, wide swings in economic activities in the major developed market economies, widespread crop failures in most developing countries, a fivefold increase in the price of crude petroleum, an inflation of prices which had no parallel in the post-war period and an accompanying level of unemployment that introduced a new defensiveness into the trade policies of many developed market economies.

The impact of these shocks on the developing countries as a whole was severe; however, the report noted, the outcome, though a serious disappointment, was not as disastrous as had been feared. By 1974, national savings rates had reached the average 20 per cent target set for the end of the decade. Over the period 1971-1975, the volume of merchandise imports rose at 8.5 per cent per year, well above the 7 per cent target.

On the other hand, at 7 per cent a year the rate of increase of manufacturing production fell below the 8 per cent target. Agricultural production lagged badly, increasing at only 2.3 per cent a year, not much above half of the target. Total production growth fell short of the 6 per cent target, increasing at a rate of 5.6 per cent a year. The volume of merchandise exports increased at 3.5 per cent a year—only half of the target rate.

In money terms, the net transfer of resources from developed countries (excluding net transfer estimates from the centrally planned economies, which did not accept the Strategy and targets) more than doubled in the five-year period and reached $37,000 million in 1975; but in real terms there was very little increase. Over the five years, the net flow from developed market economies averaged 0.76 per cent of gross national product (GNP), compared to the target of 1 per cent. Provision of official development assistance amounted to 0.33 per cent of GNP, less than half the target rate of 0.7 per cent. Increasing external borrowing to finance balance-of-payments deficits over the five years had led to a doubling in developing countries' outstanding external debt—to $160,000 million by the end of 1975—and an even sharper rise in debt service payment—to about $13,000 million in 1975. However, as export earnings had risen more than threefold, the average ratio of debt service to exports had declined.

There was a wide variation in the performances of individual developing countries. The sharpest contrast was between the achievements of the oil-exporting countries and those of the other developing countries. The achievements of the former exceeded the Strategy targets, but the oil-importing developing countries had failed to achieve the income and trade targets. The oil-exporting countries began to provide substantial net flows of resources to developing countries by way of purchases, financial assistance, lending and investment.

Progress had been attained in respect to some qualitative objectives, including health and education; on the other hand, there was very little advance in nutritional levels, housing and other amenities.

Little progress was made in liberalizing world trade. Despite the 1973 Tokyo Declaration⁵ that inaugurated multilateral trade negotiations, with special consideration to developing countries, the negotiations had not increased developing-country access to the markets of the developed countries. The most significant development in this period was the institution by the developed market economies of generalized preference schemes which lowered the tariff barrier facing manufactured products exported by the developing countries. In most countries, however, these schemes were subject to a number of safeguards to keep the flow of such goods under control.

The World Economic Survey, 1976, also before the Economic and Social Council, provided a factual background in support of the Council's discussion, as did a report on the evolution of the Latin American economy in 1976.

The Survey reviewed the main developments in the world economy in 1976 and the outlook for 1977. It summarized the latest available data (April 1977) on world production and trade and examined briefly the state of economic balance. It also examined the most recent economic performance and problems in the developing countries, updating and revising information contained in the Secretary-General's progress report.

A general improvement in trade and trade-related activities, manufacturing and agricultural output in 1976 raised the average level of performance of the developing countries over the period 1971-1976 somewhat nearer to the 6 per cent target—to an average annual growth rate of 5.7 per cent. Financing the trade deficit, however, in the absence of significant expansion in official development assistance from the developed countries, resulted in a further increase in short-term borrowing from private—and more expensive—sources, which aggravated the burden of external debt.

The Latin American report reflected regionally the world-wide economic upturn, with rising exports and increased commodity prices, offset somewhat by a rise in the rate of inflation.

The Committee for Development Planning reported to the Council on its April 1977 session, at which it had—as requested—reviewed the lessons of the International Development Strategy since the beginning of the decade. Its conclusions highlighted the urgency of action to be taken during the balance of the decade and raised questions for the longer run, for consideration in formulating a strategy for a third development decade.

The Committee on Review and Appraisal decided at its May/June 1977 session to transmit to the Economic and Social Council a preliminary proposal submitted by the "Group of 77" developing countries, with an evaluation of the implementation of the broad development objectives of the International Development Strategy. In that proposal, it was said that the failure to implement the Strategy fully was essentially due to the performance of the developed countries generally, which had not, as a whole, attained the targets or implemented the policy measures contained therein. The argument used by the developed countries that recession or crisis in their economies prevented them from implementing those measures was considered unjustifiable. Whatever progress was achieved was said to be the result primarily of the efforts of the developing countries themselves.

The proposal went on to recount shortcomings in the achievement of percentage targets and in the elimination of colonialism, racial discrimination, and excessive armaments expenditures, while noting increased economic co-operation among developing countries. The proposal then evaluated implementation of and progress on a number of principles and policy measures in the field of trade and development. The picture had emerged, the proposal stated, of a dismal record of failure to implement key policy prescriptions, both of the Strategy and of the Declaration⁶ and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and of a marked absence of political will on the part of the developed countries with regard to the development issue.

In the light of the failure to achieve the targets set by the international community, the Group's proposal expressed the need for all developed countries to review and reorient their general and economic policies and to commit themselves, inter alia, to: (a) establishment of a common fund for an Integrated Programme for Commodities; (b) reaching the official development assistance target of 0.7 per cent of their GNP by the end of the decade; (c) adopting over-all solutions to the debt problems; (d) reforming the international monetary system; (e) promoting redeployment of industries from developed to developing countries; (f) ratifying the Agreement establishing the International Fund for Agricultural Development (see p. 1163); (g) acceding immediately to the 1974 Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences;⁷ (h) concluding the multilateral trade negotiations in 1978; (i) adopting a legally binding code of conduct for the transfer of technology; (j) assisting the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and those most seriously affected by economic crises; and (k) co-operating in speeding up the drafting of a code of conduct for transnational corporations.

Developing countries, for their part, should continue to undertake appropriate internal structural changes, seek to improve the situation of the poorest strata of their populations and promote mutual economic co-operation by fully exploiting their economic potentials.

Consideration by the Council

During the general discussion of international economic and social policy in the Economic and Social Council, representatives of 47 States, nine specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, four intergovernmental organizations, the regional commissions, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the United Nations Development Programme took part. All representatives emphasized the important evolution of ideas that had been emerging since 1970, strengthening the belief that the interdependence of the developed and developing countries was a reality. There was a consensus on the objective to achieve economic justice for nations and people. Views were more varied on the assessment of progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions concerning the International Development Strategy and the establishment of a new international economic order.

Developing countries generally expressed disappointment with the outcome of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation (see section below), which fell short of their expectations. Developed countries, on the other hand, held the view that some progress had been attained at the North-South dialogue, but that it was difficult to satisfy all the demands put forward by the developing countries. The socialist countries of Eastern Europe did not regard the Conference as an appropriate forum for a dialogue between the developed and the developing countries, since it did not represent all countries concerned.

The assessment of progress attained in the implementation of the principal General Assembly resolutions in the economic and social fields—dealing with the International Development Strategy, the new international economic order, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and development and international economic co-operation—varied between groups of countries.

The developed market economies stressed the achievements by developing countries as a whole of a growth rate close to the 6 per cent target established in the Strategy, but also realized the slow growth performance of several developing countries, particularly the least developed among them. The developed countries were generally in favour of applying the concept of "basic needs" to international development efforts. On the other hand, the developing countries emphasized the failure of the developed countries to implement the various elements of the Strategy, particularly the flow of official development assistance. The socialist countries of Eastern Europe expressed sympathy with the complaints of the developing countries, and stressed that radical changes were required in the structure of international economic relations if the objectives of the new international economic order were to succeed.

The representative of Denmark, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), said that, considering the severe shocks to which the international economy had been subjected in the first half of the 1970s, the framework of international co-operation on which the Second United Nations Development Decade was based had proved surprisingly resilient. However, the growth rates of individual developing countries varied strikingly, and it was significant that in the low-income developing countries the average annual rate had been only 3.5 per cent. He further pointed out that, in addition to the new international economic order, the most important new ideas which had developed in the current decade were those of "basic needs" and "collective self-reliance." The basic needs concept implied that the Governments in developing countries should concentrate on meeting the needs of the poor masses through such programmes as education, health and shelter, and should seek to include all sectors of population in the development process—a concept central to the development policy of EEC. The concept of collective self-reliance, also supported by EEC, was to help developing countries establish the necessary infrastructure for increasing economic co-operation among themselves.

The EEC countries, aware of the need to take urgent action, were determined to fight the tendency to restrict free trade, had encouraged the progressive improvement of the generalized system of preferences, had offered trade concessions to developing countries for tropical products, and would give new impetus to the multilateral trade negotiations.

Individual developed countries supported the EEC assessment.

The United Kingdom expressed its concern for social justice and supported the view that the new order had not only an economic aspect but also a human dimension. It was thus necessary to provide a basis for constructive work designed to achieve minimum decent living standards for all countries and all individuals.

The Federal Republic of Germany expressed the hope that every effort would be made to boost production, especially in agriculture in the poorer developing countries. Unfortunately, although it had encouraged imports from the developing countries and had refrained from giving subsidies to certain of its industries which had encountered competition, the least developed countries had been able to make only limited use of such opportunities, if at all; those countries should therefore be accorded special priorities on a larger scale.

In the context of the new international strategy, France believed that it was necessary to refine such concepts as that of "basic needs" and to give them a precise meaning. To make a set of practical recommendations, a coherent model of growth and distribution of the fruits of growth would need to be established to take account of projections corresponding to a number of economic factors and a list of feasible alternatives must be compiled, using United Nations expertise and studies.

Italy said that consideration should be given to setting up an appropriate machinery for solving the problem of energy, since it would occupy a leading role in the search for a more equitable economic order. Austria and Portugal also supported international co-operation in the field of energy. Greece attached importance to a proposal by the Secretary-General concerning the creation of a new energy agency; Canada, Japan and Sweden also noted the proposal with interest.

Italy said it had resisted the temptation to resort to protectionism, and it felt that the industrialized countries whose traditional activities faced import competition from countries with cheap labour might have to change their economies, placing emphasis on high-quality production and high technical standards. The new strategy should also take into account the important contribution which private initiative could make, Italy said.

Japan attached special importance in the new strategy to agriculture, social development and the diversity of the economic and social conditions and needs of the developing countries. It also attached great importance to the long-term stability of the raw material market, and in this respect it supported the creation of a common fund based on a concrete formula acceptable to all countries.

The United States said that, although it supported the idea of a new international economic system, its difficulties with the phrase "new international economic order" had arisen from the phrase's association with two resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth special session⁸ on which the United States had serious reservations. The United States would be able to support the new order as a broad evolving concept of relationships among nations, a broad framework for dialogue, in which the process of change must be through a consensus that took into account the economic systems, interests and ideas of all countries. It understood the new order to mean not only equality of opportunity for all States to share in the expansion of the global economy, but also equality of opportunity for all people within States. All people must therefore be assured of their basic human needs, and all countries should participate in the universal endeavours to meet those needs.

The Netherlands identified three major elements to be tackled in effecting structural change at the national and international levels: change in production patterns based on internationally agreed targets and criteria; a new world production system supported by appropriate trade and monetary arrangements and by adequate resource flows; and measures to assist in eradicating extreme poverty and to reach agreed minimum standards. The new development strategy should be directed not only towards meeting the basic needs and development of the developing world, but also towards the development of the world as a whole and towards structural changes within countries and in relations between them, should utilize diversified policy instruments to take account of the economic differences between countries of the third world, and should be more ambitious and more binding.

New Zealand also called attention to the need to tailor assistance programmes more precisely to differing circumstances of individual developing countries and regions. It cautioned against protectionist barriers raised by developed countries, and welcomed the move to co-ordinate the recommendations of many world conferences in the social development field with a view to incorporating them in the new development strategy.

The observer for Sweden deplored the failure of the developed countries to reach agreement on such issues as the debt problems of the least developed countries and compensatory financial assistance. Norway felt that the last three years of the decade should be utilized to redress the situation and in particular to attain the development assistance target.

The individual developing countries represented in the Council generally expressed their disappointment at the very little progress made in implementing the International Development Strategy and the new international economic order. Solutions had not been found for the urgent problems of indebtedness, economic aid, market access, the international monetary system, transfer of technology, commodity trade, and promotion and control of foreign investment.

Pakistan expressed concern that official development assistance, multilateral negotiations and declarations of intent gave little reason to hope that the Strategy targets would be attained. With regard to the concept of basic needs, Sudan agreed with Pakistan that resources of economic growth enabled programmes for social welfare to be sustained. The important point was to create a self-generating system of economic growth which would finance investment and social services.

The distinction between matters which lent themselves to international action and those which did not, according to Tunisia, should be borne in mind before social concepts such as basic needs could be appropriately incorporated in the documents to be drawn up for the coming decade. While Jamaica believed in the basic needs concept in a direct attack on poverty, in rural development and in self-reliance, it could not regard them as substitutes for restructuring the global economic system.

Argentina could not accept the concept of basic needs, since it separated economic development from the struggle against poverty and sought increasingly to concentrate all efforts on the most disadvantaged countries. That concept, it said, could not be defended intellectually and could become an instrument whereby help to the developing countries could cease at a crucial moment of their economic "take-off."

The greatest deficiencies in implementing the new economic order, according to Yugoslavia, were to be found in the contribution of the developed countries towards the implementation of national plans and programmes of the developing countries.

While agreeing to the need for international co-operation in the field of energy, Nigeria, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Yugoslavia shared the anxiety of several other developing countries that feared to see the problem of energy dissociated from that of primary commodities and other outstanding problems which had prevented the establishment of the new international economic order.

Malaysia believed that major structural changes were required in the pattern of international trade to bring it in line with the principles of the Tokyo Declaration of 1973. Insufficient priority had been given in the multilateral trade negotiations to improved access for products of developing countries, and the effectiveness and implementation of the generalized system of preferences had been hampered by various built-in constraints, such as product coverage and the application of quotas and ceilings. In Malaysia's view, there should also be greater redeployment of industries from developed to developing countries.

The problems of inadequate pace of expansion of agricultural production were stressed by several countries, among them Algeria, Bangladesh and the Sudan.

Virtually all developing countries, including, for instance, Afghanistan, Algeria, Ethiopia, Kenya and Yemen, expressed scepticism about the existence of political will on the part of most developed countries to help the developing countries in such areas as official development assistance, debt relief and external trade.

The observer for India expressed the view that attention should be focused on the divergence between the low-income developing countries and other developing countries. Cuba and Venezuela were among those stressing the need for greater access to world markets for developing countries, which feared the development of a new wave of protectionism.

The observer for Egypt and the representatives of Iran, Iraq and the Sudan pointed out that the level of official development assistance provided by countries belonging to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), in terms of GNP, greatly exceeded that provided by the countries belonging to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Cuba and others regretted that the external debt of developing countries had increased rapidly because of the rise in the prices of manufactured goods and other imports in relation to the prices of commodities exported, while there had not been any increase in the flow of aid.

China agreed with the developing countries that implementation of the Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Establishment of a New International Economic Order had been unsatisfactory, and believed it most important to persevere in the struggle for a new international order guided by the fundamental principles of safeguarding State sovereignty, independence, self-reliance, equality and mutual benefit which would replace the old order based on exploitation and plunder.

The socialist countries of Eastern Europe emphasized both detente and the need for restructuring existing international economic relations in order to reduce the problems of the developing countries. The main trends of the expanding economic and technical co-operation of the member countries of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance with the developing countries were in the development of national industry, the strengthening of the public sector and the acceleration of production, they observed; by January 1976, they had granted credits to the developing countries totalling 15,000 million roubles.

The USSR said that the United Nations had recently adopted a number of important texts in the socio-economic sphere; the question was to translate these documents into practice. The basic obstacle to the radical restructuring of international economic relations on a democratic basis continued to be the position of monopolistic circles. The USSR reiterated its proposal for a 10 per cent reduction in the military budgets of the permanent members of the Security Council and the utilization of part of the resources thus saved for aid to the developing countries. It stressed the importance of the preparation of a code of conduct for transnational corporations that would ensure their strict compliance with national laws.

The Ukrainian SSR said that the current review and restructuring of economic relations could not be undertaken in isolation, in view of the close relationship and interdependence of economic and political problems. The Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe was a positive factor of great potential influence on the relations between States and it established the necessary pre-conditions for continuing detente. It was hoped that the forthcoming Belgrade follow-up meeting would mark a new advance in implementing the programme.

The Ukrainian SSR did not merely give political support to the demands of the developing countries, but provided substantial assistance to them, particularly in the provision of equipment and aid for projects in the energy field, mining, metallurgy, chemicals and agriculture, education and health. The observer for the German Democratic Republic also said his country would continue to give them consistent support.

Bulgaria said that without radical internal socio-economic reforms, a restructuring of international economic relations could make only a limited contribution to increasing the productive potential and accelerating the progress of the developing countries.

Poland shared the anxiety of the developing countries about their economic growth; however, it viewed external development financing as a supplement to their own efforts. Trade expansion should be encouraged by counteracting the rising wave of protectionism and by speeding up the multilateral trade negotiations.

While not considering the results to be very satisfactory, Czechoslovakia felt that the Strategy for the Second Development Decade showed some progress in comparison with that of the First Development Decade, as it was directed not just at economic growth but also at social justice.

The observer for Mongolia said the public sector could play a decisive role in capital formation and in the use of capital resources towards meeting national requirements, and proposed more detailed study of the question within the United Nations.

Decisions of the Economic and Social Council

Following the general discussion of international economic and social policy in plenary meetings of the Economic and Social Council, the Council's Economic Committee considered a draft resolution, introduced by Yugoslavia on behalf of States members of the Council belonging to the Group of 77, on an assessment of the progress made in the implementation of the General Assembly's resolutions on the International Development Strategy, the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and development and international economic co-operation. It was withdrawn in the light of the consensus reached on a similar draft resolution on the same subject submitted by Pakistan in his capacity as Vice-Chairman of the Committee, following consultations. This text was approved by the Committee without vote on 3 August 1977 and adopted in like manner by the Council the next day as resolution 2125(LXIII).

By this resolution, the Council expressed its belief in the crucial need for concerted national and international measures for accelerated economic and social progress of all countries, especially the developing ones, and recognized the urgency of invigorating policy action in the remaining time of the Second United Nations Development Decade. It expressed deep concern at the slow pace of progress made in achieving the objectives of the relevant Assembly resolutions, urged all countries, in particular the developed ones, to intensify their efforts to bring about speedy results in the establishment of the new international economic order, and took note of statements made by States on reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States (see p. 445).

The Council also took note of the 1977 report of the Committee on Review and Appraisal, urged all countries to renew their efforts to offset the shortfalls in achieving the goals of the Strategy, and urged in particular the developed countries to adopt policies in favour of the developing countries that were fully in accord with the aims and objectives of Assembly decisions in the context of the Second Development Decade during 1970-1976.

The Council welcomed a decision of the Committee for Development Planning to direct its work at its next session to subjects relevant to the preparation of a new international development strategy, affirmed that such a strategy should be directed towards the objective of the establishment of a new international economic order and should encompass results achieved at United Nations meetings and conferences held during the decade on world economic and social problems, requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the bodies of the United Nations system, to ensure that the technical work for the new strategy was completed before the end of 1978, requested the Committee for Development Planning to identify possible elements for a new strategy and to submit its recommendations, and recommended that the General Assembly determine at its 1977 session the appropriate intergovernmental machinery for the formulation of a new strategy.

Differences from the Group of 77 text included the following: reference to concern over the failure of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation to reach agreements on most of the proposals for structural changes in the international economic system was deleted; concern over the slow pace of progress in achieving the aims and objectives of relevant resolutions replaced reference to lack of progress in implementing those resolutions; the phrase "aims and objectives of the decisions of the General Assembly in the context of the Second United Nations Development Decade" replaced a more abbreviated reference to Assembly decisions taken during 1970-1976 as elements to accord with policies in favour of developing countries to be adopted by developed countries; reference to results of major conferences on world economic and social problems was added; and a recommendation to determine, rather than establish, appropriate machinery for formulating a new strategy, and how such machinery was to report, were included in the adopted text.

After the vote, Yugoslavia stated that the Group of 77 was not altogether satisfied with the results of the consultations, but had agreed to the new text in a spirit of compromise.

Denmark said that the members of EEC viewed the operative paragraph directing the new strategy towards the establishment of a new international economic order as leaving open the whole range of possibilities for drawing up the new strategy in accordance with procedures to be agreed upon. Japan had reservations about that paragraph, since it considered the basic policy for the new strategy to be a matter for discussion by the Assembly. Japan's and the United States position on the Assembly resolutions referred to in the text which they had opposed or on which they had expressed reservations remained unchanged, they observed.

The Ukrainian SSR, also on behalf of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR, stated that they supported the resolution on the strength of the assurances given by the spokesman for the Group of 77 to the effect that it would not have any financial implications: it was understood that the intergovernmental machinery referred to would not be a new body and would be financed from the existing budget.

On 4 August 1977, the Council also adopted without a vote decision 275(LXIII) by which it inter alia took note of the Secretary-General's progress report which had been used as a basis for the general discussion. On a proposal of its Chairman, the Economic Committee, on 3 August, had recommended, without a vote, that the Council take this action.

At its resumed session on 5 October 1977, the Council considered and took note of a report by the Secretary-General on the collection of data and information relevant to the formulation of a new international development strategy and transmitted it to the General Assembly. Prepared in response to a request of 21 December 1976,⁹ the technical report reviewed the current data situation relating to the preparation of a new strategy and described that situation, in respect of information gathering and processing, in the light of recommendations on socio-economic issues by world conferences held during the decade.

The Council's action, by decision 284(LXIII), was taken, without vote, on a proposal by its President.

Action by the General Assembly

The General Assembly had, on 22 December 1976,¹⁰ decided to resume its thirty-first (1976) session prior to the opening of its thirty-second (1977) session solely to complete consideration of the agenda item on development and international economic co-operation, with particular reference to implementation of a decision adopted by the Assembly at its seventh special session in 1975,¹¹ and in the light of the results of the Paris Conference on International Economic Co-operation, which concluded on 2 June 1977 (see section below).

On 14 September 1977, the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee resumed consideration of the question.

Following a series of informal meetings held to consider a draft resolution on the subject submitted by Pakistan on behalf of the Member States which belonged to the Group of 77, the Second Committee adjourned on 19 September without having agreed on a text which could be adopted by consensus. The same day, before the closure of the thirty-first session, the Assembly took note without objection of the Second Committee's report on its resumed session, by adopting decision 31/430.

(Details of the Assembly's consideration of the results of the Paris Conference and of the text of the resolution submitted by the Group of 77 are contained in the section immediately following.)

The Assembly's thirty-second session convened the next day—20 September. The questions of development and international economic co-operation and the establishment of a new international economic order were foremost among the topics of the Second Committee's general debate, held from 28 September to 14 October 1977. Eighty-seven States participated in the debate.

The industrialized Western countries acknowledged the increased interdependence of the world's economies and problems. The concept of a new international economic order had gained wide acceptance and they were prepared to work towards its establishment; differences existed, however, as to the means and methods for attaining this objective.

All agreed that some progress had been made in the North-South dialogue at Paris; it had contributed to a better understanding of the problems and had confirmed the common willingness to continue the dialogue. Moreover, France and Ireland noted, it had been able to achieve a convergence of points of view and significant progress on a number of questions.

Strong industrial economies, with the capacity for substantial action, were essential if the hopes of the developing world were to be realized, Canada and the United States argued. By the same token, the United States said, the oil-producing countries had a special responsibility not to place new burdens on what was thus far a fragile world recovery.

With regard to a new international development strategy, Australia thought it might be desirable to formulate a medium-term strategy covering about 20 years, which could be reviewed every three or four years; such a strategy should also make finer distinctions between the problems of groups of particular countries and envisage different solutions for them. The Federal Republic of Germany agreed that realistic and attainable goals would have to be periodically adjusted to changing conditions. The new strategy, according to Denmark, should not be a general declaration but a practical tool for future development co-operation. Spain agreed with Argentina that negotiations on the reform of the economic order had to be separate from those on the new development strategy.

Norway and some other States contended that the United Nations often adopted too sectoral an approach towards development problems when those problems called for an integrated and interdisciplinary approach.

Most developed Western States shared a view expressed by Denmark that the flow of development assistance should be increased and a more equitable sharing of aid efforts must be achieved; that implied the participation of all industrialized countries, both Eastern and Western.

The absurdity of devoting $30,000 million to military expenditures and only one twentieth of that sum to development should end, Sweden stated. It was unacceptable that so few developed countries had attained the official development aid target; that also applied to the planned-economy countries of Eastern Europe, whose performance, Sweden said, was dismaying. The efforts made in increasing aid to the poorest countries by member States of OPEC were noted in this connexion.

Denmark held the view that there was a need to channel a higher percentage of concessional resources into multinational aid organizations. Belgium said that the recipients must ensure a better distribution of development aid. In connexion with a suggestion that developing countries should formulate national policies aimed at attracting and protecting private investment, Sweden cautioned that such investment must be on terms acceptable to the host country and help create appropriate local technologies.

National economic and social policies must be so oriented, in the view of the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom, the United States and others, that the poorer strata of the population would be the first to enjoy the fruits of growth. That strata must also be involved productively in the development process, Ireland added. A basic needs strategy was an essential element of the new international economic order, according to the Netherlands, but must complement and not detract from other urgently required policies, particularly the restructuring of the world economy. Moreover, a more just world order was not exclusively economic, for development had a social component as well, the United Kingdom added. The United States also commented on this point, saying basic human rights were as important as economic rights.

The socialist countries of Eastern Europe expressed sympathy with the programme of action for the establishment of a new international economic order proposed by the developing countries. Also, they stressed that there was a relationship between detente and development: international detente provided the necessary conditions for the solution of international economic problems. The arms race, moreover, was the main obstacle to economic and social development, given the enormous annual expenditures devoted to it.

These countries considered that the situation of the developing countries was due, to a large extent, to their continuing exploitation by the capitalist economies. Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia and the Ukrainian SSR said there were no grounds for arguing that the socialist countries of Eastern Europe bore equal responsibility with the imperialist countries for the economic underdevelopment of the developing countries and for the consequences of colonial oppression and neo-colonialist exploitation. The Byelorussian SSR and the German Democratic Republic felt that developing countries had a right to compensation from those former colonial countries which were passing on the burden of their economic crises.

In reorganizing international economic relations on a sound and equitable basis, these States agreed with the Group of 77 that the principles stated in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the decisions of the sixth and seventh special sessions of the General Assembly would have to be fully observed. Successful development also required, in the view of these States, progressive social and economic changes in the developing countries themselves, mobilization of national efforts and international co-operation.

In devising a new strategy, the USSR observed, the mistakes and shortcomings in the programmes of the two previous development decades would have to be taken into account. Undue stress placed in the past on so-called quantitative indicators had led to erroneous conclusions and recommendations. Research under way on long-term trends in the economic development of various regions provided a good basis for working out an approach to the evaluation of a future strategy, the USSR suggested. The new strategy should also emphasize an increased role for the public sector in economic development. Mongolia agreed, and added that the State sector was also better able to provide the needed resources, to counteract the influence of transnational corporations and to apply a unified approach to planning economic and social development.

The developing countries generally expressed dismay at the lack of political will on the part of the industrialized countries to make the necessary changes to achieve the new international economic order. They had made it clear that the establishment of the new order continued to be their general and absolute priority, Brazil said. The new international development strategy, moreover, should constitute an integral part of the effort to establish a new economic order.

They also expressed disappointment at the results of the North-South dialogue at Paris and considered fundamental most of the issues on which the Conference had failed to reach agreement.

The new international development strategy for the coming decade, according to Thailand, should reflect the dynamic interdependence of States and dismiss for ever the myth that growth in developed countries would ultimately be transmitted to the developing countries. That argument was no longer valid, India said; the developed world could no longer manage a high growth rate without high inflation, which meant developing countries paid more for imports than they received from increasing exports.

Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Kuwait and Venezuela were among those which deplored the effects of inflation. Constantly declining purchasing power in a world characterized by inflation did not encourage oil production beyond immediate needs, at the risk of very rapidly exhausting one's only natural resource, Kuwait said. World inflation, according to Ecuador, was attributable not to the price of oil but to the chronic enormous deficit in the budgets of the great powers, owing in large part to the sums allocated to the arms race and to the deficit in their balance of payments. Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador and Venezuela recalled that the five Governments members of the Andean Group had recently proposed the convening of a world conference to study the problem of inflation; intergovernmental machinery to be worked out by the new development strategy should give particular attention to that point.

Pakistan considered it necessary to prepare an indicative world plan which would set broad goals for the long term, say 20 years, and more concrete objectives in specific areas for shorter periods. Uganda cautioned that any targets set should be realistic and attainable in order to avoid generating false hope. Mexico and Venezuela stressed that economic and social problems needed to be considered from an interdisciplinary perspective, bearing in mind the interrelationships of all such problems. Global dialogue would be greatly facilitated by strengthening the dialogue in progress at the regional and interregional levels, Tunisia said. Costa Rica, Kuwait, Malta and others also pointed to the usefulness of regional negotiations to deal with particular problems of common interest.

Whatever the validity of the arguments adduced to determine who was responsible for underdevelopment, Peru observed, all those which benefited by keeping the conditions of international trade unchanged were partly to blame. Furthermore, the conceptual, political and material support of the socialist countries was essential.

The developing countries, too, needed to investigate their failure to create adequate national planning and development structures, India added. Increasing self-reliance was needed.

Several States voiced the opinion that it would be unwise to try to establish uniform development criteria for all States. Zaire said it was essential to stop treating the developing world as a homogeneous group in so far as its needs and interests were concerned. Cuba noted that care should also be taken to avoid putting all the developed countries—capitalist and socialist—on the same footing.

A number of developing countries reaffirmed the importance of a declaration issued by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77, which had met on 29 September 1977 in New York. They had made it known that they wished to continue, within specific timeframes, the process of meaningful dialogue on the basis of the principles and objectives of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, Iran declared. Cyprus, Indonesia and Yugoslavia, among others, pointed out that the Ministers had stressed that all international negotiations on the establishment of a new order should take place within the framework of the United Nations system.

China, also referring to the meeting, said it endorsed the reasonable propositions enun-ated by the Group of 77. The outmoded colonialist and imperialist system of exploitation had to be eliminated.

Prominent among the priority issues for negotiation set forth by the developing countries during the debate were: (1) the Integrated Programme for Commodities, including the common fund; (2) multilateral trade negotiations, reform of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, acceleration of expansion and diversification of the export of manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries, access of their agricultural products to markets, protection of their purchasing power, increase in their export earnings and improvement of their terms of trade; (3) measures related to compensatory financing facilities; (4) increase in the transfer of resources in real terms, especially of official development assistance; (5) acceleration of reform of the international monetary system, especially through an equitable distribution of international liquidity and to allow full participation in decision-making; (6) resolution of debt problems; (7) strengthening of industrial capacity; (8) adoption in 1978 of a legally binding code of conduct on the transfer of technology, revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, and proposals for consideration by the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development; (9) implementation of the decisions of the 1974 World Food Conference and the 1977 World Food Council and of the Assembly decision on the emergency food reserve (see p. 535), and conclusion of a new international grains arrangement; (10) resolution of the special problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and of those most seriously affected by economic crises; and (11) strengthening transport and communications, particularly in Africa.

Canada, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, Ethiopia, Greece, Iraq, Peru, Sweden, Thailand and Zambia were among the many States who commented on the burden of debt service of the developing countries. There could be no question of refinancing indebtedness of developing countries indefinitely, Peru said; the solution lay in realism and in just prices for raw materials strictly related to the intrinsic value of the produce and the labour costs involved.

That 50 per cent of the funds received by developing countries should return to industrialized countries in the form of debt servicing was lamentable, the Dominican Republic said. Ethiopia was of the view that the debt burden could not be alleviated by any means other than outright cancellation of the official debts of the geographically least advantaged. Bangladesh, Brazil, Egypt, Guinea-Bissau, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Sudan and Thailand welcomed announcements by Canada and Sweden that they intended to help relieve the debt burden in that manner.

Several Members—Afghanistan, India, Iraq, and Zaire among them—called into question what they saw as a perceptible trend towards compromise and consensus. Iraq agreed with Afghanistan that it was sometimes necessary to engage in realistic confrontation in the search for solutions on important issues. India noted that continuous efforts to create the illusion of consensus diluted programmes of action. Norway noted that consensus was of questionable value when undermined by a series of reservations; the new international economic order should therefore be based on binding commitments and a true consensus. Japan, on the other hand, considered that proceeding by consensus was vital to the formulation of a workable development strategy.

Two draft resolutions concerning machinery to oversee and monitor negotiations on international economic co-operation for development were submitted in the Second Committee: one by the United States and one by Jamaica on behalf of the Group of 77.

As the result of informal consultations, some of the provisions of the United States draft, as well as certain suggestions made by States members of EEC, were incorporated in a consolidated draft resolution largely based on the Group of 77 text; it was presented by Argentina, Vice-Chairman of the Committee who had presided over the informal consultations, and the other two drafts were consequently withdrawn. The compromise text was approved by the Second Committee on 15 December 1977 and adopted by the Assembly on 19 December as resolution 32/174. Both actions were taken without vote.

By the preamble to this text, the General Assembly recalled its resolutions containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the International Development Strategy, those of its sixth and seventh special sessions and that of 1976 on their implementation, those adopted by UNCTAD in 1976 and the results of various recent United Nations conferences. It also recalled the role of the Economic and Social Council and other United Nations bodies in the establishment of the new international economic order.

The Assembly noted both the report of the Conference on International Economic Cooperation and the 1977 report of the Committee on Review and Appraisal, with the preliminary proposal of the developing countries annexed to that report. The Assembly emphasized the need to oversee and monitor the implementation of the decisions and agreements reached in negotiations in various United Nations fora and to provide impetus for further negotiations to solve remaining issues. It expressed concern at the deteriorating economic situation of developing countries and at negative trends in international economic developments, and was deeply concerned that parts of the developing world were still subjected to colonialism, neo-colonialism, racial discrimination, apartheid and alien domination, which constituted major obstacles to economic emancipation and development. It recognized the concern that thus far negotiations on the establishment of the new economic order had produced only limited results while the gap between developed and developing countries was growing, and emphasized that further resolute efforts had to be made, particularly by the developed countries, to reduce the imbalance.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly affirmed that all global negotiations relating to the establishment of the new international economic order should take place within the framework of the United Nations system. It decided to convene a special session of the General Assembly in 1980 to assess the progress in this area in various United Nations fora and to promote the development of developing countries and international economic co-operation, including the adoption of a new international development strategy for the 1980s.

Also, the Assembly established a high-level committee of the whole to meet and report during the intersessional periods until the special session and to assist the Assembly by acting as the focal point in: (a) overseeing and monitoring the implementation of decisions and agreements reached in the negotiations on the establishment of the new economic order in the appropriate United Nations bodies; (b) providing impetus for resolving difficulties in negotiations and for encouraging the continuing work in these bodies; (c) serving as a forum for facilitating and expediting agreement on the resolution of outstanding issues; and (d) exploring and exchanging views on global economic problems and priorities.

The Assembly asked the Economic and Social Council to contribute effectively to the work of the committee, bearing in mind the relationship between the overseeing and monitoring functions of the committee and the role of the Council in the preparation of a new international development strategy.

Finally, the Assembly affirmed that the international community should make urgent, new and resolute efforts in the negotiations to secure positive and concrete results within agreed and specific time-frames.

The compromise text that the Assembly adopted as resolution 32/174 differed from the original text submitted by Jamaica on behalf of the Group of 77 in several aspects. Preambular paragraphs recalling UNCTAD resolutions and results of various recent United Nations conferences on major topics relating to economic and social development, which pertained to the establishment of the new international economic order, were provisions added that had previously been included in the United States text. A paragraph noting the declaration adopted on 29 September 1977 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Group of 77 was deleted. The preambular provision expressing concern at the limited results of negotiations was modified; by the original text, the Assembly would have expressed concern that the negotiations conducted thus far with a view to implementing the decisions on the establishment of the new international economic order had produced only fragmented and limited measures and that there was a lack of resolute and adequate efforts by the developed countries to reverse the growing gap between developed and developing countries.

Among other changes, the request that the Economic and Social Council contribute to the work of the committee and reference to the relationship between the functions of the committee and the role of the Council were added.

Finally, the text which was adopted omitted a final operative provision found in the Group of 77 text by which the new committee was to consider on a priority basis a number of matters of concern to the developing countries. These included the priority issues urged by the developing countries during the general debate (see above).

By the United States draft which was withdrawn, the Assembly would, among other things, have expressed awareness of the need to intensify efforts to find solutions to problems relating to the evolving process of promoting a new international economic order, and observed that the United Nations system was the most fully representative forum for economic dialogue and for negotiating agreed solutions. Affirming that in the dialogue new and resolute efforts would have to be made to secure positive results in promoting international economic co-operation and the economic and social development of developing countries, the Assembly would have entrusted the Economic and Social Council with reviewing the progress of, defining and examining negotiations, programmes and issues dealing with economic problems.

Under a permanent agenda item on development and international economic co-operation, the Council would have been asked: to provide for the exploration and exchange of views regarding global economic problems, their priorities and the status of work on them in various bodies; to encourage and facilitate the work of these bodies and provide agreed guidelines; and to identify new issues and gaps in ongoing work and recommend fora for discussion. The Council was to co-ordinate this work with the preparations for the new development strategy and submit reports on it. The Assembly, by this draft, would have recommended representation on the Council at a high level; to assist it, the Council would have created a small working group to consult closely with other countries to reflect a broad spectrum of views. These arrangements would have been reviewed in 1980.

Several States voiced reservations and interpretations concerning the resolution adopted. The United States noted that, while there was general agreement on carrying forward the North-South dialogue within the United Nations framework, it was possible that negotiations might take place outside the system. Also, it considered that the monitoring function of the new committee did not imply passing judgement on performance or compliance by countries or national entities on given issues, and that the agreed and specific time-frames for results on negotiations referred to those set by the negotiating bodies themselves. The Netherlands took the position that the new committee should set specific time-frames for negotiations, and it regretted that the resolution had not identified specific subjects with which the committee would deal on a priority basis.

Jamaica, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77, said the Group did not interpret the committee's mandate as being concerned with overseeing and monitoring activities in individual countries, although such activities would influence discussion. It considered that the sense of urgency and time-frames referred to related to the convening of a special Assembly session in 1980 and expected that bodies would operate within that time-frame. The Group emphasized that it interpreted strictly the operative paragraph affirming that all negotiations of a global nature on the new order should take place within the framework of the United Nations.

Australia said the new committee should not be a second tier for negotiations being carried on in other United Nations organs; the autonomy and mandates of those organs should continue.

Greece expressed a reservation concerning the fact that no mention was made in the resolution of the need to abolish monopolies and unfair discrimination in the new order; it mentioned in particular closed liner conferences.

The German Democratic Republic, on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that it doubted the need for the range of institutional and organizational arrangements proposed in the resolution; the task entrusted to the new body could be successfully carried out at the regular sessions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and their subsidiary bodies.

During the course of the discussions on the implementation of the development strategy, Jamaica, speaking for the Group of 77 Member States, said that instead of concentrating on the establishment of the new order, the attention of the international community was being diverted by attempts to redefine the conceptual basis for negotiations. On behalf of the Group, Jamaica then introduced a draft resolution on preparations for a new international development strategy. Its aim, Jamaica said, was to circumvent such attempts and ensure that the new strategy, in its conceptual and operative senses, would be directed towards establishing the new order, focusing on specific development issues.

By the preamble to the Group of 77 text, the Assembly would recall or note its previous resolutions and various relevant documents and would consider that full implementation of those resolutions—a matter of priority—would provide the necessary basis for the promotion of international co-operation for development. Further, it would consider that the inequity in economic relations, together with the resultant widening gap between the developing countries, was one of the primary issues confronting the international community, and adversely affected international economic co-operation and world peace and security.

By the operative part, the Assembly would affirm that the new development strategy should be directed towards the objective of the establishment of the new international economic order and thus should address itself in particular to several specific issues, comprising a concerted programme to generate and strengthen economic activities and increase production in the developing countries, bearing in mind the special problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and the most seriously affected among them. These included: ensuring equity in trade relations by improving the terms of trade of developing countries, liberalizing world trade in their favour and ensuring them a fair share of the price of their exports; increasing their agricultural production and ensuring access to and fair prices for their agricultural exports in international markets; reforming the international monetary system, ensuring that developing countries were allocated an adequate and equitable share of international liquidity and international monetary reserves; increasing the flow of resources in real terms to them on a predictable, continuous and increasingly assured basis; ensuring the free and unhindered transfer of technology and development of indigenous capacity in science and technology; promoting industrialization towards the target of locating in developing countries 25 per cent of world industrial capacity by the year 2000; promoting their individual and collective self-reliance, especially through promoting their economic co-operation; and eliminating without delay the major obstacles of colonialism, neo-colonialism, interference in internal affairs, and all forms of alien domination, apartheid, racial discrimination, and foreign aggression and occupation.

To achieve these objectives, a new international development strategy should define the role and commitments of all countries, primarily the developed countries, establish quantified and time-bound targets, especially for policies and measures crucial to accelerated development of the developing countries, and provide for appropriate institutional changes so that all countries could participate fully and on an equal basis in decision-making on all international economic problems. The Assembly would request the Economic and Social Council: to direct the Committee for Development Planning, while identifying possible elements for a new strategy, to base its work on the above provisions; to designate the Committee on Review and Appraisal to serve also as the inter-governmental machinery for the preparation and negotiation of a new strategy; and to ensure that all interested States could participate in the activities of the latter Committee as full members, that the Committee held its sessions and intersessional consultations as often as necessary, and that its work was co-ordinated with other activities. Both the Council and the Committee would be asked to initiate preparations for a new international development strategy early in 1979, taking into account the results of substantive negotiations taking place. All countries would be invited to participate actively in the Committee's work and all international research and planning for development should be geared towards the above objectives. Finally the Assembly would consider the report of the Committee for Development Planning at its regular 1978 session.

Following informal consultations on this draft, the Second Committee approved, on 16 December 1977 without objection, a decision proposed by the Group of 77 by which the Assembly would transmit the Group's draft resolution to the regular 1978 Assembly session for its consideration, taking into account the views that had been expressed orally and in writing. The sponsors accepted the reference to the views expressed, as suggested by Jordan and by the Netherlands.

A draft decision proposed by EEC was withdrawn following approval of the Group's text. By the EEC proposal, the Assembly would have deferred consideration of the draft resolution to 1978, taking into account views expressed in the consultations as well as an illustrative text in which the Community had informally submitted its views;¹² both texts would have been annexed to the decision.

The Assembly adopted the text of the Group of 77 without objection on 20 December as decision 32/443 C. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Belgium, Canada and Denmark said they had joined the consensus reluctantly—Belgium and Denmark because the decision failed to take into account the views in the EEC paper; Canada because it regretted postponement.

Jamaica commented that it was the understanding of the Group of 77 that the draft resolution was the only formal document before the Assembly. The Group of 77 therefore expected that the work of the United Nations in 1978 would take its views in that text fully into account.

Argentina, Finland, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom said it was their understanding that other views and proposals would be taken into consideration as well.

1980 special session of the General Assembly

By General Assembly resolution 32/174 of 19 December 1977 (see above), it was decided to convene a special session of the General Assembly in 1980, at a high level, to assess the progress made in the various fora of the United Nations system in the establishment of the new international economic order and, on the basis of that assessment, to take appropriate action for the promotion of the development of developing countries and international economic co-operation, including the adoption of the new international development strategy for the 1980s.

Resolution 2125 (LXIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/6047, adopted without vote by Council on 4 August 1977, meeting 2085.

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of the importance of the challenging tasks stemming from the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and General Assembly resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Believing in the crucial need for concerted national and international measures for the accelerated economic and social progress of all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Noting with concern the slow pace of the progress made in the search for solutions to the issues concerning the establishment of the New International Economic Order, and in particular the accelerated development of the developing countries,

Recognizing the urgency of invigorating policy action in the remaining time of the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3486(XXX) of 12 December 1975, by which the General Assembly decided to entrust the Economic and Social Council with the task of reviewing the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and recalling also article 34 of that Charter, by which the General Assembly decided to undertake its systematic and comprehensive consideration,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 31/182 of 21 December 1976 on preparations for a new international development strategy, and the role of the Committee for Development Planning and other organs and organizations of the United Nations concerned therein,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 31/178 of 21 December 1976 on the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 2626 (XXV) entitled "International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade," 3202(S-VI) entitled "Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order," 3281(XXIX) entitled "Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States" and 3362 (S-VII) entitled "Development and international economic co-operation," in section II of which the Assembly decided, inter alia, to undertake during the course of its thirty-second session a detailed assessment of the progress made in the implementation of the above-mentioned resolutions,

I

1. Expresses deep concern at the slow pace of the progress made in achieving the aims and objectives of General Assembly resolutions 2626 (XXV) entitled "International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade," 3202 (S-VI) entitled "Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order," 3281 (XXIX) entitled "Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States" and 3362 (S-VII) entitled "Development and international economic co-operation";

2. Urges all countries, in particular the developed countries, to intensify their efforts through dialogues and negotiations in various forums of the United Nations system, in order to bring about speedy results in the establishment of the New International Economic Order;

3. Takes note with interest of the statements made by representatives of States at the Council's sixty-third session on the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and requests the Secretary-General to submit those reports to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session for its consideration;

II

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee on Review and Appraisal on its fourth session and transmits it to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session for consideration and action;

2. Urges all countries to renew their efforts to help to offset the shortfalls recorded so far in achieving the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy, taking fully into account the aims of the sixth and seventh special sessions of the General Assembly;

3. Urges in particular the developed countries to adopt policies in favour of the developing countries that are fully in accord with the aims and objectives of the decisions of the General Assembly in the context of the Second United Nations Development Decade during the period 1970-1976;

III

1. Welcomes the decision of the Committee for Development Planning at its thirteenth session to direct its work for and at its fourteenth session to subjects that are relevant to the preparation of a new international development strategy;

2. Affirms that the new international development strategy should be directed towards the objective of the establishment of the New International Economic Order and within this framework should encompass results achieved at major United Nations meetings and conferences held during the Second United Nations Development Decade on world economic and social problems;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system concerned, to ensure that the technical work for a new international development strategy is completed before the end of 1978;

4. Requests the Committee for Development Planning to consider and identify possible elements for a new international development strategy, taking into account paragraph 1 of General Assembly resolution 31/182, and paragraph 3 of this section, and to submit its recommendations to the inter-governmental machinery mentioned in paragraph 5 below;

5. Recommends the General Assembly to determine at its thirty-second session the appropriate intergovernmental machinery for the formulation of a new international development strategy, which would report to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

Resolution 32/174, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/480, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, as well as its resolution 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling the resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fourth session,

Recalling the results of various United Nations conferences held during recent years on major topics relating to economic and social development, which pertain to the establishment of the new international economic order,

Recalling further its resolution 31/178 of 21 December 1976, Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2125 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977,

Noting the report of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation,

Noting the report of the Committee on Review and Appraisal on its fourth session and the preliminary proposal of the developing countries contained in the annex to that report,

Recalling the role of Economic and Social Council and of other organs, organizations, bodies and conferences of the United Nations system in the establishment of the new international economic order,

Emphasizing the need to oversee and monitor the implementation of the decisions and agreements reached in the negotiations in various appropriate forums of the United Nations system in their respective fields, and to determine further lines of action and provide impetus for further negotiations for the solution of issues remaining unresolved,

Deeply concerned at the deteriorating economic situation of developing countries and at negative trends in international economic developments,

Deeply concerned also that parts of the developing world are still subjected to colonialism, neo-colonialism, racial discrimination, apartheid, foreign aggression and occupation and alien domination, which constitute major obstacles to the economic emancipation and development of the developing countries and peoples,

Recognizing the concern that the negotiations conducted so far on the establishment of the new international economic order have produced only limited results while the gap between the developed and developing countries is growing, and emphasizing that further resolute efforts have to be made, particularly by the developed countries, to reduce the existing imbalance,

1. Affirms that all negotiations of a global nature relating to the establishment of the new international economic order should take place within the framework of the United Nations system;

2. Decides to convene a special session of the General Assembly in 1980, at a high level, in order to assess the progress made in the various forums of the United Nations system in the establishment of the new international economic order and, on the basis of that assessment, to take appropriate action for the promotion of the development of developing countries and international economic co-operation, including the adoption of the new international development strategy for the 1980s;

3. Decides to establish a committee of the whole,* which shall meet, as and when required, during the intersessional periods until the special session of the General Assembly in 1980;

4. Decides further that the Committee† shall assist the General Assembly by acting as the focal point in:

(a) Overseeing and monitoring the implementation of decisions and agreements reached in the negotiations on the establishment of the new international economic order in the appropriate bodies of the United Nations system;

(b) Providing impetus for resolving difficulties in negotiations and for encouraging the continuing work in these bodies;

(c) Serving, where appropriate, as a forum for facilitating and expediting agreement on the resolution of outstanding issues;

(d) Exploring and exchanging views on global economic problems and priorities;

5. Requests the Committee to submit reports on its work and recommendations to the General Assembly at its thirty-third and thirty-fourth sessions and at the special session to be held in 1980;

6. Recommends that representation on the Committee should be at a high level;

7. Decides that the Committee may establish appropriate working arrangements to accomplish its task;

8. Also decides that the election of officers of the Committee should take place annually;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Committee receives the necessary documentation to enable it to accomplish its tasks, as specified in paragraph 4 above, and authorizes the Committee to request the Secretary-General to provide specific reports in this regard in co-operation with the appropriate organs, organizations, other bodies and conferences of the United Nations system;

10. Requests in this context the Economic and Social Council, in discharging its functions under the Charter of the United Nations, to contribute effectively to the work of the Committee, bearing in mind the relationship between the overseeing and monitoring functions of the Committee and the role of the Council in the preparation of a new international development strategy;

11. Affirms that in the negotiations undertaken on the various issues in the appropriate bodies of the United Nations system the international community should, with a sense of urgency, make new and resolute efforts to secure positive and concrete results within agreed and specific time-frames.

* It is understood that the committee of the whole will be open to all States, this term being interpreted in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly.

† Subsequently referred to as the Committee Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174.

Preparations for a new international development strategy

At its 109th plenary meeting, on 20 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to transmit the draft resolution entitled "Preparations for a new international development strategy," set forth below, to the thirty-third session of the Assembly for its consideration, taking into account the views expressed orally and in writing:

"Preparations for a new international development strategy

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolutions 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

"Recalling further its resolution 31/182 of 21 December 1976 which initiated the technical work for the preparations for a new international development strategy,

"Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the collection of data and information relevant to the formulation of a new international development strategy,

"Recalling section III of Economic and Social Council resolution 2125 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977,

"Noting the Declaration adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of Seventy-seven, which reiterated the determination of the developing countries to pursue the action for the establishment of the new international economic order,

"Considering that full and effective implementation of the above-mentioned resolutions, which is a matter for priority action by the international community, will provide the necessary basis for the promotion of international co-operation for development,

"Considering further that the inequity in economic relations, together with the resultant widening gap between the developed and developing countries, is one of the primary issues confronting the international community and adversely affects international economic co-operation and the promotion of world peace and security,

"1. Affirms that the new international development strategy should, in its conceptual and operative senses, be directed towards the objective of the establishment of the new international economic order;

"2. Decides that the new international development strategy should address itself in particular to:

"(a) Establishing a concerted programme to generate and strengthen economic activities and increased production in the developing countries while bearing in mind the special problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and the most seriously affected developing countries;

"(b) Ensuring equity in the trade relations between developing and developed countries by, inter alia, improving the terms of trade of developing countries, liberalizing world trade in favour of developing countries and ensuring to the developing countries a fair share of the final price of their exports;

"(c) Increasing substantially agricultural production in the developing countries and ensuring access of their agricultural exports to international markets on a continued basis and at fair remunerative prices;

"(d) Reform of the international monetary system, ensuring that developing countries are allocated an adequate and equitable share of international liquidity and international monetary reserves, in keeping with their development needs;

"(e) Increasing substantially the flow of resources in real terms to the developing countries on a predictable, continuous and increasingly assured basis;

"(f) Ensuring the free and unhindered transfer of technology to the developing countries and development of indigenous capacity in the field of science and technology in those countries;

"(g) Promoting industrialization in the developing countries and intensified and tangible progress towards the target of locating 25 per cent of world industrial capacity in the developing countries by the end of this century;

"(h) Contributing to the promotion of the objective of individual and collective self-reliance of the developing countries, especially through the promotion of their economic co-operation;

"(i) Eliminating without delay colonialism, neo-colonialism, interference in internal affairs and all forms of alien domination, apartheid, racial discrimination and foreign aggression and occupation, which constitute major obstacles to the economie emancipation and development of the developing countries and peoples;

"3. Decides further that, for the purpose of achieving the objectives referred to above, a new international development strategy should define the role and commitments of all countries, primarily the developed countries, establish quantified and time-bound targets, especially for the policies and measures that are crucial for accelerated development of the developing countries, and provide for appropriate institutional changes that would enable all countries to participate fully and on an equal basis in decision-making on all international economic problems;

"4. Requests the Economic and Social Council to direct the Committee for Development Planning, while considering and identifying possible elements for a new international development strategy, to base its work on the provisions of paragraphs 2 and 3 above;

"5. Also requests the Economic and Social Council to designate its Committee on Review and Appraisal to serve also as the intergovernmental machinery for the preparations and negotiations of a new international development strategy;

"6. Further requests the Economic and Social Council, in making appropriate arrangements for the additional task assigned to the Committee on Review and Appraisal, to ensure that all interested States can participate in the activities of this Committee as full members, that the Committee holds its sessions and intersessional consultations as often as necessary and that its organization of work is co-ordinated with its existing and ongoing activities;

"7. Requests, in this context, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee on Review and Appraisal to initiate substantive preparations on a new international development strategy early in 1979, taking into account the results of substantive negotiations that are taking place;

"8. Invites all States to participate actively in the work of the Committee on Review and Appraisal and to make effective contribution to the formulation of a new international development strategy;

"9. Stresses that, in order to establish a solid basis for the preparations, all international research and planning for development should be geared towards the above-mentioned objectives;

"10. Decides to consider the report of the Committee for Development Planning, as called for in section III, paragraph 4, of Economic and Social Council resolution 2125 (LXIII), at the thirty-third session of the General Assembly."

Conference on International Economic Co-operation

The General Assembly in 1975¹³ had invited the Conference on International Economic Co-operation (CIEC) to report on its conclusions to the Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session. Following a decision by the Conference to postpone its final, Ministerial Meeting until 1977, the Assembly took note of CIEC'S 1976 interim report and decided to reconvene its 1976 session in 1977 to consider the results of the concluding Ministerial Meeting.¹⁴

Report of the Conference

On 24 June 1977, the Secretary-General transmitted the report on the final meeting of the Conference which had been held in Paris, at the ministerial level, from 30 May to 2 June

1977 with 27 participants representing developed and developing member countries.¹⁵ The Secretary-General of the United Nations and observers from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other international organizations also attended.

¹⁴ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 339.

¹⁵ The Conference was attended by representatives of Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Egypt, the European Economic Community, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

The report noted that on 14 May the final reports of the Conference's four commissions on the four functional areas—energy, raw materials, development and financial affairs—were presented. They were considered by the Conference's senior officials between 26 and 28 May and subsequently were submitted to the Ministerial Meeting.

The Conference had examined a wide variety of economic issues in each of these functional areas, the report noted, and recognized that the issues in each area were closely interrelated and that particular attention should be given to the problems of the developing countries, especially those among them most seriously affected by economic crises. The participants had recalled their agreement that the Conference should lead to concrete proposals for an equitable and comprehensive programme for international economic co-operation and that its action should constitute a significant advance in this co-operation and make a substantial contribution to the economic development of the developing countries.

The report stated that CIEC participants were able to agree on a number of issues and measures in the four functional areas. It outlined these areas of agreement as follows.

Energy: conclusion and recommendation on availability and supply in a commercial sense, except for purchasing power constraint; recognition of the depletable nature of oil and gas, and transition from an oil-based energy mix to more permanent and renewable sources; conservation and increased efficiency of energy utilization; need to develop all forms of energy; and conclusions and recommendations for national action and international co-operation in the energy field.

Raw materials and trade: establishment of a common fund, to be further negotiated in UNCTAD; research and development and some other measures for natural products competing with synthetics; international co-operation in the marketing and distribution of raw materials; assisting the importing developing countries in the development and diversification of their indigenous natural resources; and improving the generalized system of preference schemes, and identification of areas for special and more favourable treatment for developing countries in multilateral trade negotiations, and certain other trade questions.

Development: volume and quality of official development assistance; provision by developed countries of $1,000 million in a special action programme for individual low-income countries facing general problems of transfer of resources; food and agriculture; assistance to infrastructure development in developing countries, with particular reference to Africa; several aspects of the industrialization of developing countries; and industrial property, and implementation of relevant UNCTAD resolutions on transfer of technology and on the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development.

Finance: private foreign direct investment, except criteria for compensation, transferability of income and capital, and jurisdiction and standards for settlement of disputes; developing country access to capital markets; monetary issues of other financial flows; and co-operation among developing countries.

Issues on which the participants were not able to agree related to the following areas.

Energy: price, and purchasing power of export earnings; accumulated revenues from oil exports; financial assistance to bridge external payment problems of oil-importing countries; recommendations on resources within the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea; and continuing consultations on energy.

Raw materials and trade: purchasing power of developing countries; compensatory financing measures; aspects of local processing and diversification; interests of developing countries in, inter alia, maritime trade, commodity exchanges and a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences; production control and other measures concerning synthetics; investment in raw materials; protecting developing countries' interests which might be adversely affected by the implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities; relationship of the Integrated Programme to the new international economic order; and measures related to trade policies, the institutional framework of trade, aspects of the generalized system of preferences, multilateral trade negotiations and conditions of supply.

Development: indebtedness of developing countries; adjustment assistance measures; access to markets for manufactured and semi-manufactured products; and transnational corporations.

Finance: criteria for compensation, transferability of income and capital, and jurisdiction and standards for settlement of disputes; measures against inflation; and financial assets of oil-exporting developing countries.

The participants from the developing countries—known as the "group of 19"—noted with regret that most of the proposals for structural changes and for action on pressing problems were not agreed upon and that the conclusions of CIEC fell short of the objectives. The participants from developed countries—the "group of 8"—while regretting the lack of agreement on some important areas, welcomed the spirit of co-operation and expressed their determination to maintain that spirit in the future.

There was general recognition that the Conference had contributed to a broader understanding of the international economic situation; CIEC was only one phase in the ongoing dialogue between developed and developing countries and it recommended that intensive consideration of outstanding problems should continue in the United Nations system and other existing appropriate bodies.

The members pledged to carry out, in a timely and effective manner, the agreed co-operative measures and to invite non-member countries to join them in this effort.

In addition to transmitting the report on the Conference, the Secretary-General also presented a report on his participation in the Conference, in accordance with the Assembly's request of 15 December 1975.¹⁶

Consideration in United Nations bodies

The Economic and Social Council at its July/August 1977 session discussed the results of the Conference in its debate on international economic and social policy and on assessment of progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions on the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,¹⁷ the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States¹⁸ and decisions of the Assembly's sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions¹⁹ (see section above).

The Assembly resumed its thirty-first session on 14 September 1977 solely to consider the question of development and international economic co-operation in the light of the results of the Paris Conference. The item was considered in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which held informal meetings to consider a draft resolution on the subject submitted by Pakistan on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing Member States.

By this text, the General Assembly would have recalled a number of resolutions on international economic co-operation for development, noted with concern that progress in negotiations towards the establishment of a new international economic order had been slow and limited, and emphasized that the United Nations system was the most appropriate and fully representative forum for those negotiations; all countries would be urged to use the system for that purpose.

Taking note of the report of CIEC, the Assembly would have noted with regret that the results of the Conference fell far short of its agreed objective, that no real progress was made towards restructuring the international economic system and solving the most pressing problems facing the developing countries, and that CIEC had failed to reach agreements which could contribute to establishing the new order.

It would have noted that the Conference had reached only limited agreements in certain areas, such as infrastructural development, particularly in Africa, commodities, food and agriculture and the flow of resources to developing countries. It would have affirmed that new and resolute efforts must be made, in particular by the developed countries—which were urged to accord priority to the geographically most disadvantaged developing countries, to fulfil their commitment to negotiate and to reconsider their position on unresolved issues—to secure positive and concrete results within specific time-frames on all issues relating to the establishment of the new order.

The Assembly would have asked the Secretary-General and all bodies and conferences of the United Nations system to: take appropriate steps to organize or intensify effective negotiations for that purpose within their fields of competence, and keep them under review; submit reports on any difficulties that might arise in the negotiations; and publicize widely the concept and elements of the new international economic order, in particular in the developed countries, so as to generate the necessary political will for its implementation. The Assembly was to have provided guidelines at its regular 1977 session for the conduct of such negotiations, and was to convene a special session at the ministerial level by early 1980 to assess the progress made in the various fora; in the light of that assessment it was to take action to promote development and economic co-operation, including the adoption of a new international development strategy.

The Second Committee adjourned on 19 September without having agreed to a text which could be adopted by consensus.

The results of CIEC were also discussed by the General Assembly in plenary meetings during the resumed thirty-first session, on 13 and 19 September, at which representatives of the major groups and participants in the Conference spoke.

Before opening the debate, the President of the General Assembly referred to the divided opinions at the Paris Conference and to several issues of importance to developing countries on which CIEC was unable to agree, namely: in regard to raw materials and trade—the purchasing power of developing countries, compensatory financing, means for protecting the interests of developing countries which might be adversely affected by the implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities of UNCTAD, the relationship of that Programme to the new international economic order, and measures related to trade policies and an institutional framework; with regard to development—indebtedness of the developing countries; with regard to energy—financial assistance to bridge external payment problems of oil-importing developing countries. The fate of the measures on which there was no agreement remained uncertain, he said, except for being the subject of a continuing dialogue.

The representative of Canada, one of two Co-Chairmen of the Conference, laid particular stress on energy issues and went over several key areas of agreement where, he believed, work should be proceeding on implementation. Pointing to commitments made by industrialized countries regarding the volume and quality of official development assistance, provision by those countries of a $1,000 million special action programme for low-income countries, and progress in food security and agricultural assistance, the representative of Canada also indicated the need for further work in areas of disagreement. While the developing countries had the right to be impatient for change, he said, there must be recognition, and appreciation, of the important and difficult steps which developed countries had taken towards meeting their concerns. Unless these steps were taken as being positive, the political atmosphere in the future might not be conducive to further positive steps.

The representative of Venezuela, the other Co-Chairman of the Conference, saw the results of CIEC as limited. He particularly regretted that the results of the 18-month North-South dialogue on the fundamental problems of protecting the purchasing power of the developing countries' exports and on foreign indebtedness were discouraging. Moreover, little had been done to remedy economic dislocations caused by inflation. At Paris, it had been realized that it was disadvantageous not to have direct contact with all sectors of the international community, including China and the socialist countries in Eastern Europe. He recalled the main elements in the achievement of the objectives of the third world to improve and preserve its purchasing power: better and more stable prices for raw materials, greater access to markets for those materials and for semi-manufactured and manufactured products, greater and more predictable official development aid, greater access to capital markets, programmed relief for indebtedness, a transfer of technology that would make possible an industrialization process on a competitive basis, adequate participation in the establishment of new monetary liquidity, and special attention to the problems of the most seriously affected countries.

The representative of Pakistan, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77, said the Conference fell short of the objectives set for it by both groups of participants. Moreover, the agreements that were reached were set out in a somewhat generalized form and did not constitute commitments for specific actions. The developed countries were reluctant to discuss monetary questions and were unwilling to accept recommendations aimed at increasing developing countries' share in international liquidity and monetary decision-making, replacing, as the central reserve asset, national currencies with special drawing rights (SDR), or establishing a link between SDR and development aid.

The developed countries, the representative of Pakistan said, had also promised increased official development assistance flows, and the Conference had agreed on the development of social and economic infrastructure, particularly in Africa. However, the issues and measures on which agreement could not be reached included virtually the entire gamut of demands, proposals and recommendations in dispute for years between developed and developing countries. He mentioned in particular a proposal for immediate and general relief for official debts and a recommendation that the system of debt renegotiation be reviewed to give it a developmental instead of a commercial orientation. The basic assumption underlying the North-South dialogue that the prosperity and progress of one side could not be divorced from the welfare and development of the other must be given substance, he stated.

The representative of Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, said the Conference had led to positive results in several important fields on the basis of various Community proposals; they included progress in the application of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, improvement of the scheme of generalized preferences, increasing official development assistance, the special action programme, and infrastructure development in Africa. With regard to other problems, he called for continued joint efforts to seek conclusions satisfactory to all. He commented on two of these problems: direct investments and energy. As the principal economic and trading partner of the developing countries, the European Community would make every possible contribution to the implementation of the agreements reached and would continue its efforts to establish jointly a more just and equitable economic order.

France spoke of the Paris Conference—an initiative taken in 1974 by the French President to reopen a dialogue between the industrialized and developing countries—as an important link in the chain of efforts to establish a system of more equitable and rational relations undertaken since the Assembly's sixth special session in 1974. Originally launched on the single theme of energy, it was broadened at the request of the developing countries to cover all development subjects. Despite areas of uncertainty and wasted opportunities, the final result was not negligible, France said.

The United States representative said the Conference marked an important step forward in creating an international economic system built on growth, equity and justice. He emphasized that his country's acceptance of the concept of a new international economic order was not just a semantic exercise but a commitment to change.

The representative of China said his Government and people supported all the just propositions put forward by the developing countries at the Paris Conference. He said the experience of the struggle at CIEC showed that the most fundamental way for the establishment of a new international economic order was for the developing countries to unite more closely, uphold the correct principles set forth at the Assembly's sixth special session, persevere in the just struggle to safeguard their own national sovereignty and natural resources, persist in the oil struggle, further set up, consolidate and develop various organizations of producing countries, further strengthen regional economic co-operation among themselves, rely on their own and collective strength, and unite with all the forces that could be united to carry through to the end the struggle against super-power exploitation, plunder, monopoly and control.

According to the representative of Japan, the North-South dialogue helped to increase understanding of problem areas of the world economy, and he felt that attention should be focused on the many agreed areas. Japan considered that the agreement reached in the Raw Materials Commission—under the co-chairmanship of Japan and Peru—for the establishment of a common fund was one of the most valuable accomplishments of the Conference. It was regrettable, however, that agreement had not been reached on the continuation of the dialogue on energy problems.

The representative of Bulgaria, speaking on behalf of the socialist countries of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, made a statement which corresponded to a joint statement of 16 September 1977 by those countries that had been annexed to a letter to the Secretary-General.

In the statement the nine States referred to the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States as incorporating principles for the successful restructuring of international economic relations on a democratic and just basis. Detente, international peace and security, and progress in disarmament were closely interrelated, would facilitate democratization of such relations and release substantial resources for the economic development of all countries, they said. Their countries based their economic relations with developing countries on strict observance of equality, mutual advantage and non-interference in the internal affairs of others.

There were no grounds for holding their countries responsible for the consequences of colonialism, the harmful effects of inequality in economic relations, or the heavy burden resulting from the crisis of the capitalist economy, the statement continued. These countries had not taken part in the Paris Conference and did not consider themselves in any way bound by its decisions.

Before closure of the thirty-first session on 19 September 1977, the General Assembly, in adopting decision 31/430, took note without objection of the Second Committee's report on its resumed meetings.

Although no resolution was adopted on CIEC at that session, the subject was a major topic of discussion when the Assembly held its general debate at the beginning of the thirty-second session, which opened the following day, both in plenary meetings from 26 September to 13 October and, concurrently, in the Second Committee from 28 September to 14 October (see section above).

Emergency relief and development assistance

Immediate needs

Having continued the preparation of proposals on immediate needs resulting from economic emergency situations in response to a request of the General Assembly of 21 December 1976,²⁰ the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Economic and Social Council at its July/August 1977 session elaborating upon and supplementing proposals he had put forward in 1976.

The Secretary-General reiterated proposals he had made in his 1976 report on procedures to provide international assistance in the three types of emergency situations outlined: disaster situations, permanent or semi-permanent emergency situations, and disaster-like economic emergency situations. The main difference between the proposals made in 1976 and those in the current report was the suggestion in the latter that indicators, instead of global criteria, be formulated and monitored as an early warning system to detect impending disaster-like economic emergency situations, in view of the complexity of the task of formulating and utilizing formal global criteria to determine such situations.

A list of such indicators—not meant to be all-inclusive—was included in the report, as well as possible new arrangements and procedures for emergency assistance, in which greater stress was laid on the interagency nature of the proposed machinery. The report annexed existing arrangements for dealing with emergencies by a number of United Nations bodies and specialized agencies.

On 3 August 1977, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly together with a draft resolution on assistance in economic emergency situations proposed by seven Council members. The draft resolution, recommending a text to the Assembly for adoption, was annexed to decision 257(LXIII).

In essence, by the resolution the General Assembly would: (a) recognize that the international community should respond promptly and effectively to economically or socially disruptive emergency situations which arose through circumstances beyond the control of the countries concerned; (b) reaffirm that the United Nations and its specialized agencies should act in such emergencies in a flexible, comprehensive and co-ordinated manner; (c) express conviction of the need to improve and systematize the procedures for dealing immediately with emergencies and to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations system to provide, at the country level, early warning of impending emergencies; and (d) recognize the need for arrangements, additional to those already existing, to co-ordinate the combined resources of the United Nations and its specialized agencies in assisting Governments at a time of emergency.

The Secretary-General would be asked to make necessary arrangements at United Nations Headquarters for: monitoring the economic situation of countries in order to provide advance warning of potential emergencies and for assessing assistance required in economic emergency situations; providing assistance to Governments by the United Nations system; establishing effective ad hoc mechanisms for co-ordinating remedial action taken; providing assistance in mobilizing and co-ordinating voluntary contributions; and providing assistance where necessary in co-ordinating special emergency assistance programmes decided upon by the Economic and Social Council in the event of a proclamation of a state of emergency. The Council could proclaim a state of emergency at the request of the Government concerned if the situation warranted it, if necessary at a special session. The specialized agencies, the United Nations Development Programme and other organizations would be invited as necessary in collecting, co-ordinating and channelling available information on disaster-like economic emergency situations as well as in assessing the assistance required and in taking remedial action.

The text of the draft resolution had been proposed in the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee by Austria, Bangladesh, Kenya, Mauritania, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the Philippines. It was withdrawn by the sponsors, who orally proposed instead the draft decision taking note of the Secretary-General's report and transmitting both report and draft resolution to the Assembly for consideration at its regular 1977 session.

The decision was approved by the Committee on 1 August by 15 votes to 6, with 17 abstentions, in a vote taken at the request of the USSR. The Council adopted the text by 16 votes to 5, with 16 abstentions.

Both the USSR and the United States, which spoke following the vote, said the concept of economic emergency situations should be more clearly defined. Moreover, they considered that the special machinery envisaged for such situations might duplicate existing mechanisms, which the USSR considered to be sufficient. The USSR said it was also unable to support the idea of convening special Council sessions to deal with such situations.

On 13 December 1977, the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee considered the draft resolution transmitted by the Council, but took no action on it. However, on a Second Committee recommendation orally proposed by its Chairman and approved without vote on 13 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on immediate needs resulting from economic emergency situations. This was a provision of decision 32/443 B, which the Assembly adopted without vote on 19 December.

Earlier in the year, at its April 1977 session, the Committee for Development Planning had examined information relating to Angola, Cape Verde, the Comoros, and Sao Tome and Principe (see pp. 206, 249, 250 and 254, respectively) to ascertain whether they could be included in the list of the least developed among the developing countries on the basis of criteria used by the Committee for its general review in 1975. The Committee concluded that Cape Verde and Comoros could be included, as borderline cases, in the list of least developed countries.

Although available data on Angola and Sao Tome and Principe did not satisfy the limiting criteria for their inclusion in that list, the Committee recognized that they had been faced with serious difficulties since the years for which data were available. It decided to examine more recent and more detailed information on them at its next session.

On 29 July 1977, without vote, the Economic and Social Council took note of statements made in its plenary discussions on behalf of the Secretary-General during consideration of the question of assistance in emergency situations and of the observations made regarding the four countries by the Committee for Development Planning; it recommended that the Secretary-General continue his efforts to mobilize further assistance from Member States and the United Nations system for them in compliance with the Assembly's 1976 resolutions on assistance to those countries.²¹ This decision—252(LXIII)—proposed by the Council President, was adopted, without vote, on 29 July 1977.

On 14 October 1977, the General Assembly, by resolution 32/3 on assistance for the reconstruction of Viet Nam, recommended that Viet Nam be included in the list of the most seriously affected countries (see p. 264). By resolution 32/93 of 13 December 1977 on assistance to Djibouti, it recommended that Djibouti also be included in that list (see p. 252). (For texts of resolutions 32/3 and 32/93, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

United Nations Special Fund

At its fourth session, held on 19 January 1977, the Board of Governors of the United Nations Special Fund re-elected its officers and authorized its President to present the General Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions with proposals on how to maintain the small secretariat of the Special Fund until such time as the Board could reconsider the administrative expenses, on the understanding that this was a short-term arrangement and that its financing would come from the regular budget and not from the resources of the Fund.

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Board of Governors and transmitted it to the General Assembly at its regular 1977 session. Adopted without vote as decision 266(LXIII), this action was taken on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee, which had approved the text in like manner on 12 July 1977, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

On 20 October 1977, the Assembly's Second Committee considered the report of the Board of Governors and heard a statement by its President. He said that owing to a lack of contributions to bring the Special Fund into operation, the General Assembly in 1976 had decided to transfer the bulk of the Fund's resources to the International Fund for Agricultural Development. With regard to its mandate, the President pointed out that the Special Fund had been asked to review periodically the eligibility of the most seriously affected countries, and he suggested that that function might be entrusted to the Economic and Social Council. He also pointed out that it would be necessary to find alternative ways of performing the Fund's function as the central monitoring body for bilateral and multilateral assistance.

On the same date, on a proposal by its Chairman, the Second Committee approved without vote a recommendation to the General Assembly to take note of the report of the Board on the work of its fourth session. On 8 December 1977, the Assembly adopted the recommendation without vote as decision 32/417.

Also on 8 December, by decision 32/313, the Assembly took note of the information contained in a note by the Secretary-General to the effect that, awaiting consideration of the question of the future of the Special Fund, he would not in the circumstances submit an appointment for Executive Director for confirmation by the Assembly. The decision was orally proposed by the Assembly President and adopted without vote.

At its 2084th meeting, on 3 August 1977, the Council:

(a) Took note of the report of the Secretary-General on immediate needs resulting from economic emergency situations;

(b) Decided to transmit the report, together with the text of a draft resolution entitled "Assistance in economic emergency situations," annexed hereto, to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-second session.

ANNEX

Assistance in economic emergency situations

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3510 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and Council decision 177 (LXI) of 5 August 1976, endorsed by Assembly decision 31/422 C of 21 December 1976,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on immediate needs resulting from economic emergency situations (E/5989),

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3510 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and Council decision 177 (LXI) of 5 August 1976, endorsed by Assembly decision 31/422 C of 21 December 1976,

Recognizing that the international community should respond promptly and effectively to emergency situations during which serious disruptions of planned development occur or seem inevitable, with harmful economic and social effects, especially on the poorest strata of the population, and which have arisen through circumstances beyond the control of the countries concerned,

Reaffirming that the United Nations and its specialized agencies should act in such emergencies in a flexible, comprehensive and co-ordinated manner and convinced of the need to improve and systematize the procedures for dealing with emergencies so that immediate action is taken to offset their consequences,

Convinced also of the need to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations system to provide, at the country level, early warning of impending emergencies,

Recognizing also the various existing mechanisms, including the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, for the provision of assistance rendered by the United Nations system in emergency situations,

Recognizing further that arrangements are necessary to bring to bear in a co-ordinated manner the combined resources of the United Nations and its specialized agencies, taking into account the efforts of donor countries and voluntary agencies, in assisting Governments at a time of emergency,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on immediate needs resulting from economic emergency situations;

2. Invites the specialized agencies, the resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme and other organizations, in co-operation with Governments, to co-operate in providing information concerning relevant developments in their respective fields of competence and to assist as necessary in the assessment of requirements and in the implementation of measures of remedial action requested by the Governments concerned;

3. Urges the United Nations Development Programme to ensure that, at the country level, the resident representatives, in co-operation with Governments, collect, co-ordinate and channel all information made available to them about impending or existing emergency situations and assist in the application of relief measures;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make, as necessary, administrative arrangements at United Nations Headquarters for the effective carrying out of the following functions:

(a) The compilation and evaluation of data provided by the monitoring system referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 above, the assessment, in co-operation with the appropriate specialized agencies, of the assistance required in economic emergency situations and the provision of advance warning of potential emergencies to the Government or Governments concerned;

(b) The initiation of measures for the provision by the United Nations system of assistance to the Government or Governments concerned in an economic emergency situation, in co-operation with the appropriate specialized agencies;

(c) The establishment, through the designation of a lead agency or organization, as appropriate in the circumstances, of flexible and effective ad hoc mechanisms for co-ordinating the measures of remedial action to be taken by the United Nations and the appropriate specialized agencies in consultation with the Government or Governments concerned in response to their requests for emergency assistance;

(d) The provision of assistance in the mobilization of voluntary contributions from potential donor countries and voluntary agencies and the co-ordination of such aid with that provided by the United Nations and its specialized agencies;

(e) The provision of assistance, where necessary, in the co-ordination of the programmes of special emergency assistance which might be decided upon by the Economic and Social Council in the event of a proclamation of a state of emergency as envisaged in paragraph 5 below;

5. Decides that, if the characteristics of an emergency so warrant in the light of the activities foreseen under paragraph 4 (a) and (d) above, the Economic and Social Council may, at the request of the Government concerned, proclaim a state of emergency, if necessary at a special session convened in accordance with the Council's rules of procedure, and adopt a programme of special assistance commensurate with the magnitude of the emergency which prompted such a decision;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session on the measures taken to set in motion the arrangements outlined in the present resolution;

7. Requests the Economic and Social Council to keep under review, on a regular basis, the activities undertaken by the United Nations and its specialized agencies in accordance with the present resolution.

Consumer protection

At the organizational meeting on 14 January 1977 the Economic and Social Council, by decision 204(ORG-77) approving its work programme for 1977, requested the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) to prepare a brief report, for consideration later in the year, on the activities of the United Nations system on consumer protection.

The ACC report was considered by the Council at its July/August 1977 session. It broadly defined consumer protection activities of the United Nations system as consisting of three main elements: (1) objectives and measures related to consumer goods and services; (2) those related to their distribution; and (3) those related to the consumer as individual. A table suggesting specific objectives in each of these areas and setting out possible measures (including legal measures, voluntary standards and programmes) for their attainment was annexed to the report.

In taking note of the report, the Council recognized that the benefits of development measures aimed at raising the standard of living and improving the quality of life of the peoples of the world would be enhanced if they were accompanied by adequate measures for the protection of individual consumers, particularly those of the developing countries which did not have the capabilities required for such protection. It also recognized the importance of the work being done in the field of consumer protection by the Commission on Transnational Corporations, recalled a decision by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to assist developing countries to strengthen their capabilities for evaluating chemicals, foods, drugs and cosmetics, and realized the need for co-ordination of the work of the United Nations system in protecting individual consumers.

The Council asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations bodies concerned, to prepare a survey illustrative of the range of institutional and legal arrangements existing in this field at the national level, with a view to identifying co-operative and assistance needs that could be provided at a country's request.

The Council's action was embodied in resolution 2111(LXIII), which the Council adopted without vote on 4 August 1977 on a proposal by Austria, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Greece, India,

Kenya, Malaysia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, the Philippines, Portugal, Uganda, the United States and Zaire. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Although they had not voted against the resolution, several Council members made statements expressing dissatisfaction. The USSR was not sure the Council was the appropriate body to deal with the question. The Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the USSR objected to the haste in which action was taken on such a complex question. Argentina and Pakistan considered the resolution to be too concerned with consumer protection in developing countries and not concerned enough with the problem in developed countries.

International energy questions

In a report to the Committee on Natural Resources at its May 1977 session, the Secretary-General explored possible approaches to strengthening international co-operation in energy. These included setting up a consultative group on energy resources development directed towards the needs of developing countries, a new energy entity, or a working party on energy under the jurisdiction of the Committee.

The Committee brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council a statement by its Chairman to the effect that the Council might consider a review of international energy co-operation within the United Nations system, taking into account the work of other international bodies and giving special attention to developing countries, and that it include in its work programme for 1978 an item on the role of the United Nations system in energy co-operation. Inasmuch as a proposal made at the General Assembly's seventh special (1975) session to study the creation of an international energy institute²² was under discussion by the Conference on International Economic Co-operation (see section above), certain Committee representatives of States participating in the Conference reserved their position on this statement.

The Conference, which concluded in June 1977, discussed energy questions at length. It agreed, inter alia: that the world community required an international energy co-operation and development programme; that the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea should continue its efforts to establish an international regime for exploring and exploiting the sea-bed; that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development should expand its participation in the development of energy resources in developing countries; that measures should be taken to facilitate the availability and expansion of transportation, storage, harbour and marketing facilities for oil, gas, coal and their derivatives; and that bilateral and multilateral efforts should be made to assist developing countries in energy technology transfer. Various proposals were considered, including those for an international energy institute and expansion of energy-related activities in existing institutions; the Conference recommended that expeditious international consideration of means to achieve these objectives be given.

When the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, at the Assembly's regular 1977 session, discussed, inter alia, the implementation of the decisions of the 1975 special session, Australia proposed a draft resolution by which the Committee on Natural Resources would be requested to hold a special session in 1978, with representation at a high level, to consider energy matters. The Committee would be asked to conduct an overview of the world energy situation, examine issues and problems likely to arise during a transition period from the current energy mix to one based on more permanent and renewable sources, examine and make recommendations on energy questions and activities in the United Nations system, and provide advice to Governments. Priority subjects were conservation and efficient use of energy, exploration and development, research and development of non-conventional energy sources, transfer of energy technology, and financing. Special account was to be taken of the developing countries, particularly the energy-deficient ones.

Australia did not press for a decision on the draft resolution.

International economic development law

Owing to lack of time during the General Assembly's 1977 regular session, the Sixth (Legal) Committee did not discuss to any extent the question of the consolidation and progressive evolution of the norms and principles of international economic development law or a draft resolution on the subject submitted by the Philippines.

By the draft text, the Assembly would have, inter alia, asked the Secretary-General to study and report on the question of embodying those principles and norms in an appropriate instrument, taking into account traditional sources of international law, decisions and agreements adopted within the United Nations system, views expressed, and other considerations.

On an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Committee recommended on 12 December 1977 that the item be included in the provisional agenda of the Assembly's 1978 session; the Assembly adopted the recommendation on 16 December as its decision 32/440. The action was taken in both bodies without vote.

Questions relating to the Second United Nations Development Decade

Transfer of real resources to developing countries

Accelerating the transfer of real resources

In accordance with a request of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted to its 1977 session a progress report on the implementation of a resolution of 21 December 1976 on ways and means of accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries on a predictable, assured and continuous basis.²³ This report, prepared by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), was concerned with the aid-budgeting policies and practices of the 17 member countries²⁴ of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development regarding the recommendations contained in that resolution.

The report examined the role of governmental budgeting procedures in securing increased and predictable flows of development finance and the current practices of some developed countries, such as multiyear pledging of development assistance, maintaining the real value of such assistance in terms of the national currency of the donor country, endowment of development aid with non-lapsing authority to ensure that unexpended allocations were carried forward, reallocation to development aid budgets of interest and amortization receipts on past lendings, and establishment of a development tax earmarked for international development assistance.

A principal conclusion of the report was that, despite wide variation in the budgetary policies and practices of donor countries regarding the provision of development assistance, such practices in a majority of donor countries embodied at least some elements of the recommendations contained in the Assembly's 1976 resolution. The extent to which countries adhered to the recommendations contained in the resolution depended in part on the latitude permitted to the aid agencies to depart from the broad norms established by national legislatures for the totality of public expenditures. In the main, however, countries that had made most progress with regard to the recommendations tended to be those that had moved farthest towards adopting and attaining the target for official development assistance (0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP)) stipulated by the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.²⁵

The General Assembly at its regular 1977 session adopted resolution 32/181, aimed at accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries. By this resolution the Assembly inter alia expressed concern that in some instances the flow of official development assistance had declined in real terms, and recognized that such assistance from developed countries constituted an indispensable complement to the internal efforts of developing countries. It called upon the developed countries to implement the agreed provisions regarding the volume and terms of flows of real resources to developing countries contained in a 1976 resolution on the subject adopted by the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD.²⁶

The Assembly urged developed countries to increase substantially and effectively their official development assistance, on a more continuous and predictable basis, in accordance with the commitments—which the Assembly welcomed—made at the Paris Conference on International Economic Co-operation (CIEC) which had concluded in June 1977 (see section above). It reiterated suggestions made at CIEC to increase official development assistance flows: augmenting aid budgets annually by a specific percentage on a multiyear basis; setting aside at least 1 per cent of annual expected GNP increase to augment assistance flows; including aid-volume targets in economic planning; and long-range planning of aid budgets. The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of UNCTAD were both requested to submit progress reports to the regular 1978 session of the General Assembly on the question of the transfer of real resources to developing countries.

The resolution was adopted by the Assembly on 19 December 1977, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, by 131 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions. The text was proposed in the Second Committee by Bangladesh, Ecuador, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Paraguay and the Philippines; it was approved by that Committee on 12 December by 105 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions.

The German Democratic Republic, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR—and explaining their abstentions—said those countries rejected efforts to put them on the same level as the capitalist countries with regard to responsibility for the backwardness of developing countries. The requested transfer of real resources must take place through the use of the profits of the capitalist monopolies and the freeing of resources currently devoted to the arms race imposed by the capitalist countries. In addition, the evaluations in the resolution were based to a great extent on the provisions adopted at the Paris Conference; they had not taken part in that Conference and did not feel bound by its decisions.

The United States, which supported the resolution, wished to point out its understanding of the provisions relating to the 1976 UNCTAD decision, on which reservations had been expressed at the time of its adoption, and the fact that the United States did not accept the Strategy target for official development assistance. Moreover, it considered that the method chosen by each country to increase aid came exclusively within its own competence. Austria considered that the suggestions put forward in the resolution required more detailed examination.

Finance for development

Convinced of the urgent need to ensure the increased flow of resources to developing countries, including their access to capital markets, as indispensable to the mobilization of their resources for development, the General Assembly, on 19 December 1977, adopted a resolution on finance for development aimed at defining policies that would give developing countries such additional flow. It referred to work already done in this field by UNCTAD and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), and expressed confidence that the framework of economic co-operation among developing countries and countries of different economic and social systems could encourage investments in developing countries.

It requested the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of a group of high-level experts appointed by him on the recommendation of Governments, a report for consideration in 1978 on: the guarantee powers of existing international financial institutions and their possible enlargement; and the feasibility and desirability of establishing a multilateral insurance and reinsurance agency. Material for the group's consideration was to be supplied by relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system.

This request was embodied in resolution 32/177, which the Assembly adopted—by 121 votes to 0, with 16 abstentions—on the recommendation of its Second Committee. That Committee had approved the text on 13 December 1977, by 99 votes to 0, with 16 abstentions, on a proposal by Bangladesh, Egypt, Greece, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Malta, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the United States, Uruguay and Zambia.

Yugoslavia said it had voted for the text on the understanding that any future action arising out of the study would be acceptable only if it were in line with its general policy and national legislation. Algeria and Uganda also reserved their positions on the report to be produced. The German Democratic Republic, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said they had abstained because they disagreed in principle with the objectives in the resolution relating to the guarantee powers of existing financial institutions and the establishment of a multilateral insurance and reinsurance agency.

The Federal Republic of Germany regretted having to abstain because the requested study was already being undertaken in other bodies; France also felt it would duplicate activities being carried on elsewhere. Viet Nam said it had abstained because it doubted that the resolution would promote the main objective of developing countries to increase the flow of resources from developed countries on terms which would safeguard permanent sovereignty over natural resources and control by developing countries over their own economic activities.

Debt problems of developing countries

Decisions of UNCTAD

During 1977, the debt problems of developing countries were discussed extensively at several meetings held in Geneva under the auspices of UNCTAD: at two sessions of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the External Indebtedness of Developing Countries, held from 18 to 22 July and from 5 to 16 December 1977; and at the first part of the ninth special session of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, held from 5 to 10 September 1977.

The first part of the Board's ninth special session was held at the level of senior officials specifically to elaborate the provisional agenda for the ministerial part of the ninth special session—which was to review the results of debt-problem negotiations in other fora and agree on measures for an immediate solution—and to decide on further preparatory work for the ministerial session. The first report of the Intergovernmental Group was considered at length.

On 10 September 1977, the Trade and Development Board called on the Intergovernmental Group to prepare for the Board's ministerial session the following agenda items: a review of actions concerning the indebtedness of developing countries, in particular discerning features which could provide guidance in operations relating to debt problems; and consideration of proposals by developing countries and of other views expressed at the Group's session.

Reporting to the Trade and Development Board in September, the Chairman of the Intergovernmental Group observed that, while the experts had agreed that international co-operation in resolving the debt problems of developing countries was one of the most important tasks facing the international community and that the solution and prevention of such problems was in the common interest of both creditor and debtor countries, there were wide divergencies among the experts as to the nature of the problem and the merits of various proposals. He noted that the experts from the developing countries had felt that more specific terms of reference were needed to expedite further work by the Group.

The Group was also unable to reach any agreed conclusions at its December session, nor was there a narrowing down of the differences.

Decisions of the General Assembly

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly dealt with the issue of debt problems of developing countries in its resolution 32/187. By this resolution, the Assembly noted that no substantive action had been taken in pursuance of earlier resolutions on this subject and that the growing external debt of developing countries, amounting to nearly $200,000 million, placed a heavy burden on their foreign exchange resources. Many developing countries were unable to pursue or initiate development projects, their growth performance was extremely unsatisfactory, their per capita incomes had hardly increased, and they did not enjoy proper access to international capital markets; balance-of-payment support facilities had been inadequate and official development assistance flows stagnating, the Assembly observed.

The Assembly considered that substantial debt-relief measures were essential and would result in an infusion of urgently required untied resources. It was convinced that net capital inflows, especially relating to official development aid, must be increased substantially and quickly, and it regretted that most developed countries were not prepared to assist in resolving the immediate problems of developing countries suffering heavy debt burdens. It also noted that the $1,000 million special action programme offered by developed countries at CIEC—substantive action on which had yet to be taken—would cover less than one third of the annual debt-service payments of the least developed countries and the countries most seriously affected by economic crises.

The Assembly called upon the Trade and Development Board, at its ministerial session in 1978, to reach satisfactory decisions on:

(a) generalized debt relief by the developed countries on the official debt of developing countries, in particular of the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked and island developing countries;

(b) reorganization of the entire system of debt renegotiation to give it a developmental orientation so as to result in adequate, equitable and consistent debt reorganizations; and

(c) the problems created by the inadequate access of the majority of developing countries to international capital markets, in particular the danger of bunching repayments caused by the short maturities of such loans.

It welcomed steps taken by some developed countries to cancel some official debts, and the decision to extend certain future official development aid in the form of grants, and urged similar decisions by other developed countries. In addition, the Assembly recommended that additional financial resources be committed by multilateral development finance institutions to developing countries experiencing debt-servicing difficulties.

Resolution 32/187 was adopted, by 106 votes to 1, with 31 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second Committee. That Committee had approved the text on 14 December 1977, by 82 votes to 1, with 30 abstentions, on a proposal introduced by Jamaica on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing Member States. The vote was taken at the request of Belgium and the United States. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Several States commented or voiced reservations on the resolution.

Uruguay stated that it supported the resolution only on the understanding that any debt reorganization arising from it would not affect those countries, such as Uruguay, which did not want to participate in such a renegotiation. The representative of Chile expressed a similar view. While Mexico said it had voted in favour of the resolution, it did not consider the adoption of generalized debt-relief schemes or automatic mechanisms to be advisable. Turkey also voted in favour, but felt loans obtained in capital markets were subject to special regulations.

Canada said it had abstained because the resolution minimized the fundamental differences between various types of debt and between the particular circumstances of individual countries, and could accordingly be counter-productive to the work under way on that subject within UNCTAD.

Japan said it was prepared to participate in the deliberations of the Trade and Development Board and other appropriate bodies but it would maintain its policy of dealing with debt problems on a case-by-case basis. It believed the resolution prejudged the results of the Board's ministerial session and had therefore abstained. Belgium (speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Economic Community (EEC)), Finland and Sweden considered the resolution to be premature in view of the forthcoming ministerial meeting. Australia likewise abstained, stating that the debt question was very complex and could not be solved by proposals of such a general nature; it should be dealt with on a case-by-case basis and the services of the International Monetary Fund should be used to the greatest extent possible.

The United States said it regarded the debt question as a problem of the short- and medium-term balance of payments. The resolution diverted attention from other questions important to development and its submission was inappropriate since the subject was being discussed in another body. The United States did not agree with the preambular paragraphs—particularly those concerning the need for generalized debt relief, the inadequacy of balance-of-payments support facilities, access to capital markets, the alleged reluctance of creditor nations to give consideration to cases of extremely heavy indebtedness, or the interpretation of the special action programme of the Paris Conference.

The German Democratic Republic, speaking on behalf of eight socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Mongolia, stated that it had always been possible to find mutually acceptable solutions to the problems of financing and terms of payment in the bilateral relations between the Eastern European socialist and the developing countries. External debt-servicing problems were a result of the economic relations between the developing countries and the developed capitalist countries and their monopolies. Moreover, agreements reached at the Paris Conference were not binding on them since they had not taken part in it. Hence, these countries abstained in the vote.

Effects of world inflation on the development process

At the Conference on International Economic Co-operation which ended in June 1977, the participating States had recognized that inflation disturbed the functioning of the international economic and monetary order and was damaging to the economic progress of both developed and developing countries.

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly addressed the issue of the effects of the world inflationary phenomenon on the development process in adopting resolution 32/175. By this resolution, the Assembly, bearing in mind the Conference's conclusion, noted that the effects of the current inflationary phenomenon had become universal in their negative impact and that the control of inflation was a matter requiring the priority attention of the international community as a whole; the rapid spread of inflation indicated that isolated measures taken by States were not sufficient to control it, nor were measures within the scope of the developing countries capable of controlling internationally transmitted inflation.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to establish a high-level governmental group of experts to prepare a broad and comprehensive study of the current inflationary phenomenon and to formulate recommendations for combating the international inflationary process so as to formulate policies to reduce its economic and social effects. The Secretary-General of UNCTAD was to transmit the study to the Assembly in 1978, through the Economic and Social Council, together with the comments of the Trade and Development Board, to enable a decision on action to be taken, including the possibility of holding a world conference on inflation. The Assembly also recommended that the international community devote special attention to the problem of world inflation in the negotiations concerning the establishment of the new international economic order and in the preparation of the new international development strategy.

Resolution 32/175 was adopted by 125 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. The Second Committee had approved it on 13 December 1977 by 105 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. Its sponsors were Bolivia, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, India, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Spain, Surinam and Venezuela.

Although no Member opposed the resolution, several States which abstained in the vote on—and some which supported—the resolution expressed dissatisfaction with some aspects.

The German Democratic Republic, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said they believed the study could be prepared without convening a group of experts and there was no need to hold a special conference on it; further, their stated position regarding the Paris Conference remained unchanged.

Italy said it abstained because it felt that the problem could be most appropriately dealt with by international bodies which worked specifically on monetary problems, rather than by UNCTAD. France shared that view; it doubted the usefulness of the study, as did Greece and Ireland. Also, Italy did not feel that the causes of, and remedies for, inflation could be profitably studied by a world conference. Other countries which doubted the advisability of a world conference on inflation were Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Ireland, Japan and the Netherlands.

The Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States would have preferred that the study examine domestic causes of inflation in conjunction with the external factors.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

The Secretary-General prepared two reports on economic co-operation among developing countries for the 1977 session of the General Assembly. These reports informed the Assembly of support being given by the United Nations system to such economic co-operation, in accordance with an Assembly request of 16 December 1976.²⁷

The first report briefly recounted legislative and/or institutional developments which had taken place within the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations since the issuance of a report on this subject submitted by the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its May/June 1977 session. The ACC report identified, on a system-wide basis, activities relevant to economic co-operation among developing countries and provided a presentation of such activities, taking into account the main areas of emphasis in various declarations on the Group of 77 developing countries. The Committee deferred consideration of the subject for in-depth review at a later session.

The Secretary-General's report also noted that the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD, in September 1977, had concluded its consideration and elaboration of the terms of reference of its Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, established in 1976, and had examined and endorsed the programme of work adopted by the Committee at its first session in February and May 1977 (see also p. 474).

In the second report, the Secretary-General analysed continuing and planned activities by the developing countries, activities taken within the United Nations system, and activities taken within the United Nations Secretariat, including UNCTAD, UNIDO and the four regional commissions in the developing world.

The work programmes of the various units involved were analysed in the light of subregional, regional and interregional economic co-operation objectives and decisions laid down by the developing countries at three 1976 conferences: the Third Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven at Manila, Philippines, in January/February; the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August; and the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries at Mexico City in September.

These decisions were grouped in the following broad areas within which supporting activities were outlined in the report: (1) strengthening subregional, regional and interregional economic co-operation and integration; (2) establishment of a global system of trade preferences among developing countries; (3) cooperation in commodities and raw materials; (4) other measures of co-operation in the field of trade; (5) monetary and financial co-operation; (6) co-operation in production, including the food, agriculture and fisheries sector and the industry sector; (7) co-operation in infrastructure, i.e. transport and telecommunications; (8) co-operation in services, i.e. insurance and tourism; (9) measures in science, technology and technical co-operation; (10) measures in natural resources and energy and in human settlements development; and (11) co-operation in other areas, including measures in the fields of training, education, human resources, employment, public enterprises, health, research, the role of women in development, and sports.

The report noted that UNCTAD was the lead agency in co-ordinating these activities in view of the establishment and work programme of the Committee for Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries. Extensive intersectoral arrangements existed to assure co-ordination in economic analysis; in addition, the matter had been discussed among the regional commissions and by those commissions with UNCTAD and other United Nations bodies. Further, the report noted that an ad hoc subsidiary mechanism of ACC had been established to further intersecretariat consultations on programme matters relating to economic co-operation among developing countries.

The General Assembly took note of the second report of the Secretary-General on economic co-operation among developing countries on 19 December 1977 when, without a vote, it adopted resolution 32/180. By this resolution, the Assembly recalled previous United Nations decisions on support for the programme of economic co-operation among developing countries, and those adopted by the international conferences at Manila, Colombo and Mexico City in 1976.

The Assembly noted the importance of such co-operation, based on individual and collective self-reliance, as a major development strategy and recognized its achievement to be an important contribution to the establishment of the new international economic order. The need for fundamental structural changes in existing international economic relations on the basis of equity and justice was also stressed. The Assembly further reaffirmed that efforts by developing countries to promote co-operation for their own development did not diminish the responsibility of all other countries to establish just and equitable economic relations.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to ensure, through ACC, effective co-ordination of activities of the United Nations system in support of economic co-operation among developing countries and to continue to include in the United Nations medium-term plan an intersectoral presentation of activities envisaged to implement relevant resolutions, as well as a similar intersectoral presentation on a system-wide basis. Specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations were urged to provide, upon request, secretariat support services to facilitate meetings by developing countries in pursuance of economic co-operation objectives.

The decision adopting the terms of reference of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries was noted and the Committee's work programme was endorsed. The Assembly urged developed countries to provide support, when requested, for the implementation of measures of economic co-operation among developing countries and asked the Secretary-General to report on implementation in 1978.

The resolution was recommended for adoption by the Second Committee—which had approved it without vote on 7 December 1977—where it had been introduced by Jamaica on behalf of the Group of 77 developing Member States.

Australia and the United States reiterated previous reservations concerning the provision of support services by the United Nations to meetings of developing countries; Australia expressed the hope that the executive heads of the agencies would exercise restraint in implementing that provision. The German Democratic Republic, speaking on behalf of Mongolia and nine countries of Eastern Europe, hoped that United Nations support to co-operation among developing countries would be achieved by more efficient use of existing resources through improved co-ordination rather than increased budgetary resources.

The role of the public sector in promoting economic development

A report on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries was submitted by the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council at its July/August 1977 session, pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 12 December 1975.²⁸ The report was based on questionnaire replies from Governments, case studies by national institutions in developing countries, consultations with officials in developing countries, and other sources.

For the purpose of the report, the public sector was viewed as focusing primarily on entities producing traded goods and services which the Government and its agencies owned and controlled, as distinct from the whole range of governmental policy, decision-taking and activity. The report noted that the criteria applied by developing countries in determining the role and place of the public sector included: (a) providing facilities and services aimed at satisfying basic social and economic needs; (b) ensuring national control of natural resources and other key areas of economic activity; (c) preventing private domination of the economy; (d) filling gaps in the economy; (e) stimulating the private sector; and (f) ensuring adequate supplies of essential consumer goods and/or stabilizing the prices of those goods. The report sought to assess the impact of the public sector on: capital formation; the attainment of the aims of a unified approach to economic and social development; the creation of broader employment opportunities and the reduction of unemployment; and the expansion of the role of developing countries in international trade.

The report was considered by the Council's Economic Committee, which—in approving without vote on 3 August 1977 an oral proposal of the representative of Pakistan in his capacity as Vice-Chairman, submitted following consultations—proposed that the Council recommend that the General Assembly give further consideration to the matter at its regular 1977 session and provide for the continued study of the subject. The Council adopted the Committee's recommendation without vote on 4 August as decision 274(LXIII).

The role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries was accordingly considered in the Assembly's Second Committee later in the year. On 19 December 1977, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report when it adopted, without vote, resolution 32/179, on the recommendation of that Committee. By this resolution, the Assembly recalled earlier relevant resolutions and pertinent provisions thereof which reaffirmed the right of every State to exercise full and permanent sovereignty over its natural resources for the benefit of its people; it also recalled provisions of the 1975 Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation²⁹ which, inter alia, recognized the importance of ensuring an adequate role for the public sector in the expansion of the industrial development of developing countries. The Assembly also recognized the necessary and important role of the public sector, including public administration, finance and management, in enhancing the capacity for realization of national development objectives.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to continue studying this question and invited him, in his study, to take into account especially the following aspects: (a) capital formation and full realization of natural resources for the benefit of the entire population; (b) the role of the public sector in the long-term industrialization strategy, in promoting agricultural production, in national research and development in science and technology, in expanding international trade, including improvement of export and import capacity and balance of payments, and in adjusting to changing economic circumstances and undertaking necessary structural and other adjustments; (c) attainment of the aims of a unified approach to economic and social development, including the equitable distribution of income and wealth; and (d) creation of broader employment opportunities and reduction of unemployment.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to identify, based on national requirements, international measures required to support national public administration, finance and management for the development of the developing countries and to report in each of the next two years through the Economic and Social Council, which would make recommendations to the Assembly. It also recommended that the competent United Nations organs take into account the studies on this subject when formulating a new international development strategy.

The resolution had been proposed in the Second Committee by 26 States, where it was approved without vote on 1 December. (For text of resolution and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Statements of position on the resolution were expressed by the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States. The latter three countries agreed with the reference to the sovereignty over natural resources to the extent that that was compatible with the principles of international law. The Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States said they also believed in the importance of the private sector as an integral part of the development process. The weight to be given to each sector was for each country to decide for itself, in the view of the Federal Republic of Germany; the studies to be carried out should help countries in making those decisions but should not arrive at conclusions.

Special measures in favour of the least developed countries

The Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted on 4 August 1977 a resolution by which it requested developed countries, international organizations and financial institutions to increase technical and financial assistance to the least developed among the developing countries, and urged them to adopt the special measures in favour of those countries called for by UNCTAD³⁰ and by other United Nations resolutions. Such assistance should be supplementary to the general measures applicable to all developing countries. The specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other United Nations bodies were urged to strengthen their programmes in favour of the least developed countries and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was invited to provide increased resources to meet their special needs.

The Secretary-General of UNCTAD was requested to convene as soon as possible a special meeting, called for by UNCTAD, at which multilateral and bilateral financial and technical assistance institutions could carry out, together with representatives of the least developed countries, an assessment of their requirements and progress. In addition, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, Member States and United Nations-related bodies, was asked to report in 1978, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the relevant UNCTAD and other United Nations resolutions.

The text embodying these decisions, adopted without vote as Council resolution 2124(LXIII), had been proposed in the Economic Committee by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Iraq, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda, where it was approved without vote on 3 August 1977.

With reference to the provision urging developed countries to adopt special measures as called for by UNCTAD, the United States recalled that it had been unable to accept several proposals relating to debt problems in the 1976 UNCTAD resolution by which the Conference approved measures and actions in favour of the least developed countries.

The special meeting called for in the resolution was held in October/November 1977 at Geneva. It agreed on a series of conclusions and recommendations which were communicated to the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries. These covered, inter alia: aid requirements for accelerated progress (calling for doubling of aid); expanding the capacity to utilize aid; modifying aid policies; improving aid assistance and management; and co-ordination (including a recommendation for a further special meeting in 1979). Donor agencies indicated at the meeting that they recognized the special and urgent needs of these countries for increased assistance and reaffirmed their intention to increase substantially their official development assistance.

The General Assembly at its regular 1977 session also referred to the results of the special meeting, and endorsed the Council's request for a progress report. It welcomed the inclusion in the agenda of the 1978 ministerial meeting of the Trade and Development Board of a review of measures taken in accordance with UNCTAD resolution 98(IV) of 31 May 1976³¹ concerning, inter alia, the debt and related development and financial problems of the least developed countries. The General Assembly urged the adoption of specific and concrete measures in favour of the least developed countries as called for by the Assembly, UNCTAD and other related organizations within the United Nations system, and invited the developed countries and international institutions, particularly financial institutions such as UNDP and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, to increase the flow of financial and technical assistance to the least developed countries. It also took note of the allocation of $1,000 million to the special action programme pledged by the developed countries at CIEC in Paris (see section above).

This last provision—which had originally indicated that the allocation would be used to help meet the immediate needs of individual low-income countries, in particular the least developed countries and other countries most in need—was modified as the result of a United Kingdom amendment, accepted by the sponsors, to avoid introduction of CIEC terminology.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/190, adopted without vote by the Assembly on 19 December 1977. The text had been recommended by the Second Committee, which had approved it, also without vote, on 14 December. Its sponsors were Afghanistan, Bhutan, Botswana, Burundi, the Central African Empire, Chad, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, Nepal, Rwanda, the Sudan, Swaziland and Uganda.

With reference to the paragraph on the special action programme, the USSR reiterated its position with regard to CIEC: it did not consider itself bound by its decisions. Chile and India supported the resolution on the understanding that the special action programme and special measures were not to be at the expense of the other developing countries.

In other actions designed to identify those States considered to be the least developed among the developing countries in order to mobilize assistance for them from the international community, the Assembly adopted several resolutions calling for aid to individual Member States.

On 13 December 1977, by resolution 32/94 adopted without objection, the Assembly asked the Committee for Development Planning—the body designated to examine statistical data on national economic, social and other variables and recommend any necessary modifications to the Assembly's list of the least developed countries—to give priority consideration to including Tonga in that list.

This resolution had been proposed in the Second Committee by 27 States and approved without vote on 18 November. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By resolutions 32/93, 32/100 and 32/101, also of 13 December, the Assembly made similar recommendations with regard to Djibouti (see p. 252), Guinea-Bissau (see p. 253) and Seychelles (see p. 256), respectively; favourable priority consideration was asked for Djibouti and Guinea-Bissau. The Committee's conclusions were to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1978.

The Comoros was included in the list of the least developed countries by Assembly resolution 32/92, adopted on the same date (see p. 250).

United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

1977 Pledging Conference

The 1977 Pledging Conference on the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, which took place at Headquarters, New York, on 2 November 1977, was held jointly with the 1977 Pledging Conference on the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Capital Development Fund, for the announcement of pledges for 1978. This was the first Pledging Conference for the Special Fund—established in 1975³²—the Statute of which had been approved by the General Assembly on 21 December 1976.³³ The Fund's main purpose was to provide resources to offset the disadvantages of additional transport and transit costs facing land-locked developing countries as a result of their geographical limitations.

Of the 105 Governments that announced at the joint Conference specific contributions for the coming year, 10 announced contributions to the Special Fund, in a total amount of the equivalent of $105,169. In addition, Austria indicated that it wished a portion of its contribution to UNDP to be apportioned to the Special Fund. Pledges were subject to national legislative approval, and some States indicated that they were unable to announce pledges at that stage but would communicate them at a later date.

The following pledges were announced on 2 November:

State	Pledge
Chad	1,000,000 CFA francs
Cyprus	100 Cyprus pounds
Dominican Republic	1,000 pesos
Jordan	$5,000
Libyan Arab Jamahiriya	$50,000
Malawi	$2,000
Philippines	$2,500
Thailand	$1,000
Togo	200,000 CFA francs
Zambia	$36,900

Action by the General Assembly

The Administrator of UNDP submitted a report to the General Assembly in 1977 on the activities of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, which was being managed by UNDP during an interim period in collaboration with the secretariat of UNCTAD. The Administrator briefly outlined the activities to be supported by the Fund, as well as the Fund's proposed organization and management.

On 15 December 1977, the Assembly, expressing appreciation to the countries that had contributed to the Fund at the Pledging Conference on 2 November (see above), also expressed concern that the Fund had not thus far become operational. It urged States and the entire international community to contribute generously so that the Fund would become operational as soon as possible. Meanwhile, it authorized the UNDP Administrator, in collaboration with the UNCTAD Secretary-General, to propose interim arrangements to implement the Fund's aims, subject to the UNDP Governing Council's approval.

These actions were taken in adopting—by a recorded vote of 115 to 0, with 21 abstentions—resolution 32/113, recommended by the Second Committee. That Committee had approved the text on 9 December 1977 by 96 votes to 0, with 17 abstentions; the text was proposed by Afghanistan, Bhutan, Bolivia, Burundi, the Central African Empire, Chad, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Nepal, Rwanda, Uganda and Zambia.

Belgium, speaking after the vote on behalf of the nine member countries of EEC, said they had abstained in voting on the resolution, with the same reservations they had held when the Fund was established. Canada, Japan, New Zealand, Sweden and the United States said they were not convinced of the need for or usefulness of the Special Fund or of the proliferation of special funds for special purposes; they had therefore abstained.

Earlier in the year, the developed countries were urged by the Economic and Social Council to make generous contributions to the Fund to make it operational; this was a provision of Council resolution 2127(LXIII) of 4 August 1977 (see subsection immediately following).

By another decision of 15 December (32/319), taken, without vote, on an oral proposal by the Assembly President, the General Assembly took note of the information in a report of the Secretary-General to the effect that, inasmuch as interim arrangements for the management of the Special Fund had been made, he was not at that time submitting for the Assembly's confirmation an appointment for Executive Director of the Fund, as stipulated in the Fund's Statute.

Measures in favour of the land-locked developing countries

By resolution 2127(LXIII), which the Economic and Social Council adopted on 4 August 1977, the Council recalled and reaffirmed various United Nations decisions and recommendations on special measures related to the needs of the land-locked developing countries and on means of improving their economic situation.

The Council reaffirmed the right of those countries to free access to and from the sea, and their right of freedom of transit. Special measures called for by the third and fourth sessions of UNCTAD were specifically urged, and the entire international community was called upon to give attention to the trade requirements of the land-locked developing countries, including transit facilities, in order that they might derive equitable benefits from international measures on behalf of all developing countries.

The UNDP Governing Council was invited to increase resources to meet the technical assistance needs of the countries in question, and developed countries were urged to make generous contributions to make operational the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries (see subsection above).

The Council asked the United Nations Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, Member States, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other United Nations bodies, to submit through it to the General Assembly in 1978 a progress report on the implementation of UNCTAD resolutions 63(III)³⁴ and 98(IV)³⁵ and other relevant United Nations resolutions.

The Council's resolution was recommended by its Economic Committee and adopted by 31 votes to 0, with 15 abstentions. The Committee had approved it on 3 August 1977 by 24 votes to 0, with 16 abstentions, as proposed by Afghanistan and Uganda.

Kenya, which had requested a separate vote on the Council's reaffirmation of the right of free access to and from the sea and freedom of transit, said that those principles seemed inconsistent with the cardinal principles of national sovereignty and territorial integrity, that the problem should be solved through bilateral negotiations and that the Council was the wrong forum for the matter.

The paragraph was approved by the Committee by 16 votes to 3, with 22 abstentions. It was also separately voted on in the Council, where it was adopted by 19 votes to 3, with 24 abstentions.

Other States agreed with Kenya, several of them noting that they could not support the paragraph in question although they shared the concern for the problems of the land-locked developing countries and the aims of the resolution. These States included Algeria, China, Greece, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Malaysia, Mauritania, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Sudan and Yugoslavia.

Argentina and Brazil said their support for the text had been given on the understanding that those provisions would in no way prejudice any decisions the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea might take. Austria said it interpreted that paragraph, in the light of previous resolutions and bilateral or multilateral agreements, as a general paragraph.

The USSR said its support for the paragraph was to be interpreted in the light of its participation in the Convention on Transit Trade of Land-locked States and should not be given a broader interpretation.

Denmark (speaking on behalf of the member countries of EEC), Japan and the United States reiterated their reservations about the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries. Moreover, Denmark added, since the great majority of land-locked developing countries belonged to the group of least developed countries, they would benefit from special measures already being undertaken in favour of those countries. Canada observed that the problems of the land-locked could be dealt with most effectively within the framework of bilateral co-operation and, on the multilateral level, through existing machinery.

The developing land-locked countries' right of free access to and from the sea and their right of freedom of transit was also reaffirmed by the General Assembly on 19 December 1977, when it adopted resolution 32/191 expressing concern over the slow progress being made in implementing specific action in favour of land-locked developing countries.

The Assembly urged members of the international community to provide these countries with technical and financial assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, improvement and maintenance of their transport and transit infrastructure and facilities. In addition, it requested UNDP, UNCTAD and other United Nations-related agencies to provide increased resources to meet those countries' technical assistance needs.

³⁵ See footnote 30.

Developed countries, other States and international organizations and financial institutions were invited to implement specific action for the benefit of land-locked developing countries, as envisaged in resolutions of the third and fourth sessions of UNCTAD (63(III) and 98(IV)) and other United Nations resolutions, and the Assembly confirmed the Economic and Social Council's request for a progress report on implementation.

Resolution 32/191 was adopted by a recorded vote of 129 to 0, with 10 abstentions. The Second Committee had approved the text on 14 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 101 to 0, with 14 abstentions. It was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Burundi, the Central African Empire, Chad, Lesotho, Mali, Nepal, Rwanda, Singapore, Swaziland, Uganda and Zambia.

The sponsors had originally proposed that the international community consider the possibility of according preferential treatment to the trade of land-locked developing countries. An Argentine oral amendment, adopted by 39 votes to 15, with 56 abstentions, eliminated reference to trade. Its adoption negated voting on a Pakistan amendment.

Two paragraphs were voted on separately in the Committee at the request of Afghanistan: the one on the right of free access to the sea, which was approved by a recorded vote of 41 to 4, with 66 abstentions; and a pre-ambular paragraph recalling the Assembly's 1976 resolution on the same subject,³⁶ approved by 40 votes to 2, with 69 abstentions.

A number of countries expressed the view that, while they were prepared to co-operate in solving the serious problems confronting the land-locked developing countries, the reference to the right of freedom of transit and the right of free access to and from the sea was a legal matter which should be examined by the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. Each State had the sovereign right to recognize or not recognize the right of transit on its territory and exercised that option under bilateral agreements.

Several States that had expressed reservations or understandings on these points in the Economic and Social Council during discussion of resolution 2127(LXIII) reiterated them in explanations of vote in the Assembly: Algeria, China, Greece, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritania, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Sudan, the United States and Yugoslavia. In addition, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand and Tunisia reserved their positions on these points. Viet Nam considered that this problem should be resolved on the basis of agreements among the countries concerned.

Benin, Egypt, Ghana, Jordan, Madagascar, the Philippines and Senegal said they had abstained in the vote on those two provisions in order not to prejudice the results of ongoing negotiations. Bangladesh, China, Peru and Uruguay approved them, on the understanding that they in no way prejudiced the results of the Conference on the Law of the Sea.

Action in favour of developing island countries

A report of the Secretary-General, prepared by the secretariat of UNCTAD and submitted in response to a General Assembly resolution of 21 December 1976,³⁷ reviewed progress on the implementation of specific action in favour of developing island countries. Based on replies received from Governments and international organizations, the report contained information on assistance provided to or proposed for such countries by the United Nations system, regional development banks and some developed market-economy bilateral donors, e.g. Australia, Denmark, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway and Switzerland. Poland and the USSR also reported on their trade and aid relations with developing island countries, and two developing island countries—Malta and Mauritius—also reported.

The report was submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. However, on 4 August 1977, by resolution 2126(LXIII), the Council, acting on a recommendation of the previous day by its Economic Committee, regretted that it had had insufficient time to consider the report and recommended that the Assembly consider it fully at its regular 1977 session, with a view to stimulating further attention to the need for specific action by the United Nations system and Governments. The text was approved by the Committee and adopted by the Council without a vote. It was proposed by Madagascar, Malta, New Zealand and the Philippines.

When the General Assembly took up the item at its session later in the year, it expressed awareness that the particular impediments hampering the economic development of many developing island countries—especially their difficulties in respect of transport and communications, distance from and smallness of markets, size of their economies, lack of resources and heavy dependence on a few commodities—called for continued international attention and specific action supplementary to the general measures applicable to all developing countries.

On 19 December 1977, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and welcomed the activities undertaken for these countries, specifically those by UNCTAD—which had created a secretariat unit devoted to their problems—and UNIDO—through a special technical assistance programme. It urged all United Nations organizations to continue to identify and implement appropriate specific action in favour of developing island countries, with particular attention to regional and subregional co-operation. Specific action was urged in accordance with UNCTAD recommendations concerning transport and communications, trade and commercial policies, industrialization, tourism, transfer of technology, marine and submarine resources development, the flow of external resources, environment protection and response to natural disasters. It called upon Governments, in particular those of developed countries, to take the special problems of these countries into account in their development efforts and in negotiations towards the new international economic order.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit to its 1979 regular session a sectoral analysis of action undertaken in favour of these countries, with proposals for further consideration in the light of the treatment of the subject at the fifth session of UNCTAD in 1979.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting, without vote, resolution 32/185 on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had also approved it without vote on 5 December 1977. Sponsors of the text were Australia, the Bahamas, the Comoros, Cyprus, Fiji, Jamaica, Madagascar, Maldives, Malta, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Seychelles, Singapore, Sri Lanka, and Trinidad and Tobago.

Also, by other decisions taken during its 1977 session, the General Assembly strove to assist developing island countries and territories.

By resolution 32/186, adopted without vote on 19 December, the Assembly expressed its awareness of the special problems faced by Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent, owing to their size, geographical location and limited economic resources, as well as the serious adverse effects of recent world-wide economic and financial problems. It stressed the urgency of rendering all necessary assistance to the peoples of these islands in their efforts to strengthen their economies, and called on the United Kingdom—the administering power—in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the peoples of these territories, to establish and finance an appropriate development programme. Specialized agencies and other international organizations, financial institutions and aid donors were asked to intensify assistance.

The Bahamas, Barbados, Canada, Cyprus, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Kingdom, Venezuela and Zambia had sponsored the draft text of this resolution in the Second Committee, where it was approved without vote on 12 December 1977.

On 13 December 1977 the General Assembly adopted a number of other resolutions concerning aid to developing island countries, on some of which the Economic and Social Council had taken decisions in July 1977 (see p. 400). By resolution 32/92, it urged Member States and international organizations to increase assistance to the Comoros, and included that country in the list of the least developed countries.

Reiterating its appeal for assistance to Cape Verde to deal with a catastrophic drought, the Assembly also included Cape Verde among the least developed countries, by resolution 32/99.

By resolutions 32/94 and 32/101, on assistance to Tonga and Seychelles, respectively, the Assembly requested the Committee for Development Planning to consider including those two islands in the list of the least developed countries. In addition, by resolution 32/96, the Assembly renewed its appeal made the previous year for financial, technical and economic assistance to Sao Tome and Principe.

(For texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour

The Economic and Social Council, at its July/August 1977 session, took note of two reports on the implications of the results of the 1976

Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour (also known as the World Employment Conference) held in Geneva.³⁸

By the first, the Secretary-General reported on steps taken, through ACC, to promote active participation by the organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the Conference's Programme of Action. The second was a special report by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) on measures it had taken or proposed to take to implement the Programme. Both reports had been requested by the General Assembly on 21 December 1976.³⁹

The Secretary-General reported that ACC had set up an interagency working group to review ongoing and planned activities, plan future work, formulate recommendations and examine the desirability of establishing continuing machinery for monitoring and co-ordinating activities relating to employment. At the group's interagency meeting, held in March 1977, the promotion and strengthening of an approach to development designed to satisfy basic needs on a sustained basis was the main focus of discussion, though specific work in the fields of migration, technology, adjustment assistance and active manpower policy was also among the main elements of the work programme considered. The meeting felt that the approach advocated by the World Employment Conference needed to be further elaborated and considered, with a view to setting out in an interagency framework, in specific terms, the objectives and main policy components of a strategy. The International Labour Organisation was asked to take responsibility for developing a first draft of such a framework, making use of the work other organizations had performed.

As for the establishment of continuing monitoring and co-ordination machinery, it was agreed that another interagency meeting, also of an ad hoc nature, should be scheduled for 1978.

In its Programme of Action, the World Employment Conference had urged the Governing Body of ILO to recommend measures for focusing research programmes, operational activities and organizational structures of the United Nations family more sharply on the contribution they could make to meeting basic-needs targets, particularly for the lowest income groups. According to the ILO special report before the Council, the ongoing activities of the ILO World Employment Programme had been progressively reoriented or expanded to take account of the recommendations of the Conference.

The report noted that many of the conclusions reached at a tripartite (Governments, workers and employers) meeting of experts in December 1976—which had undertaken a general evaluation of the research work carried out under the World Employment Programme—had been reflected in the programme and budget proposals for 1978-1979 endorsed by the ILO Governing Body in March 1977.

Studies of basic-needs requirements and shortfalls at the national level were undertaken in connexion with exploratory employment missions under a Jobs and Skills Programme for Africa carried out by the ILO African Regional Employment Team in Somalia, Swaziland and Zambia.

In line with the World Employment Conference's considerable emphasis on rural sector policies, ILO had become the lead agency in the work of an ACC task force to promote interagency efforts in the field of rural development directed at the elimination of rural poverty, and the Governing Body undertook an in-depth review of ILO's rural development programme.

The special report noted that a number of steps had also been taken to expand research and dissemination of information on the development and transfer of technology and to examine action on technology for employment, vocational training and income distribution. A number of activities had been carried out relating to Conference recommendations on migratory labour and the operation of manpower data pools, and research was undertaken, missions sent and studies published on the international division of labour, income distribution, youth employment, education/labour market/employment links, and the informal sector in urban areas, among other subjects.

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 275(LXIII) which was adopted without a vote, inter alia took note of both reports. The Economic Committee had recommended this action when, on 3 August 1977, it had approved without vote an oral proposal by its Chairman to take note of various reports submitted to the Council.

Public finance for development

In April 1977, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Economic and Social Council on managing public finance for planned development. The Council had requested the report in 1976, asking for proposals to assist developing countries meet changing demands on their public finance infrastructures stemming from new development requirements.⁴⁰ The report focused mainly on the importance and effectiveness of the management of public finance rather than on its economics. It reviewed five major components constituting the core of public finance infrastructure and its management in developing countries: government budgeting, tax administration, financial institutions, public enterprises, and accounting and auditing.

It reviewed the prevailing conditions in developing countries in each of these components and identified in each the policies, measures and improvements called for at the national, regional and international levels, including measures required for education and training in the various components of public finance management.

The report also proposed a programme of action to be undertaken by the United Nations Secretariat, in co-operation with the regional commissions. It recommended that United Nations research activities be designed to help developing countries: develop criteria, models and systems to make programme budgeting operational; develop policies and techniques for tax planning and administration to increase taxation's role in mobilizing resources and realizing policy objectives; develop fiscal and managerial policies and methods to improve co-ordination of financial institution activities; develop criteria for generating surpluses by public enterprises and increasing their productivity; formulate government accounting systems and classifications, performance evaluation and improvement programmes to make accounting and auditing more effective planning and management tools; and develop and localize professional accreditation standards and set up training courses to improve the supply of managerial and technical personnel.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the report on 4 August 1977 in adopting decision 275(LXIII), without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee. It was one of several reports on which the Committee recommended such action on 3 August in approving, without vote, an oral proposal by its Chairman.

Transfer of real resources to developing countries

ACCELERATING THE TRANSFER OF REAL RESOURCES

General Assembly—32nd session
Second Committee, meetings 54, 59.
Plenary meeting 107.

A/32/149 and Corr.1,2. Acceleration of transfer of real resources to developing countries. Report of Secretary-General.

A/C.2/32/L.38. Bangladesh, Indonesia, Kenya, Philippines: draft resolution.

A/C.2/32/L.38/Rev.1,2. Bangladesh, Ecuador, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Paraguay, Philippines: revised draft resolution, as further orally amended by sponsors, approved by Second Committee on 12 December 1977, meeting 59, by 105 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions.

A/32/464. Report of Second Committee.

Resolution 32/181, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/464, adopted by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107, by 131 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, and 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,

Recalling further its resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation in which it, inter alia, called for an increased, predictable, continuous and increasingly assured flow of concessional financial resources for development on more favourable terms and conditions,

Recalling further its resolutions 3489 (XXX) of 12 December 1975 on the acceleration of the transfer of real resources to developing countries and 31/174 of 21 December 1976 on ways and means of accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries on a predictable, continuous and increasingly assured basis,

Bearing in mind Trade and Development Board resolution 150 (XVI) of 23 October 1976 on the transfer of real resources to developing countries,

Concerned that in some instances the flow of official development assistance has declined in real terms,

Welcoming the commitment expressed by developed countries at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation to increase substantially and effectively their official development assistance flows,

Recognizing that assistance from developed countries constitutes an indispensable complement to the internal efforts of developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 31/174;

2. Calls upon the developed countries to implement the agreed provisions regarding the volume and terms of flows of real resources to developing countries contained in Trade and Development Board resolution 150 (XVI);

3. Urges developed countries to increase substantially and effectively their official development assistance, in accordance with the commitments made at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation, within the framework of an equitable sharing of their efforts and pursuant to the agreement of the General Assembly at its seventh special session and the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, which envisage the attainment of the 0.7 per cent official development assistance target by the end of the Decade, having in mind the form in which agreement was reached;

4. Further urges developed countries to implement the commitments made at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation aimed at increasing their flows of official development assistance on both a bilateral and multilateral basis and at improving the terms of official development assistance flows in accordance with methods to be determined by each developed donor country and, in this regard, reiterates the following suggestions, made at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation to increase official development assistance flows:

(a) To augment annually their official development assistance budgets by a specific percentage on a multiyear basis;

(b) To set aside at least 1 per cent of their annual gross national product increase expected to accrue to be devoted to augment official development assistance flows;

(c) To include aid volume targets in their economic planning;

(d) To undertake long-range planning of aid budgets;

5. Requests developed countries to take the appropriate measures to increase their flows of concessional development finance on a more continuous and predictable basis, bearing in mind the measures set out in the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to consider the question of the transfer of real resources to developing countries with due priority and to submit a progress report, together with comments of the Trade and Development Board, to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to review progress in the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session under the item entitled "Acceleration of the transfer of real resources to developing countries."

A/32/480. Report of Second Committee (part I), draft resolution IV.

Resolution 32/177, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/480, adopted by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107, by 121 votes to 0, with 16 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/174 of 21 December 1976 on ways and means of accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries on a predictable, assured and continuous basis,

Convinced of the urgent need to develop policies to ensure the increased flow of resources to developing countries, including the access of developing countries to capital markets, as indispensable to the mobilization of their resources for development, and to develop the general concepts in this regard emerging from the Conference on International Economic Co-operation,

Taking into account consideration of this urgency in the discussions of, inter alia, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on financing related to trade and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization on the redeployment of industry, investment guarantees and manpower training and employment,

Confident that the framework of economic co-operation among developing countries and countries of different economic and social systems can encourage investments in developing countries as determined by them,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of a group of high-level experts appointed by him on the recommendation of Governments and with due regard to equitable geographical distribution, a report on the following, including conclusions and recommendations, taking into account studies already undertaken within the United Nations system:

(a) The guarantee powers of existing international financial institutions and their possible enlargement;

(b) The feasibility and desirability of establishing a multilateral insurance and reinsurance agency;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide the group with material for its consideration, in consultation with relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system;

3. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its thirty-third session under the item entitled "Acceleration of the transfer of real resources to developing countries."

Debt problems of developing countries

General Assembly—32nd session
Second Committee, meetings 32-35, 37-39, 61.
Plenary meeting 107.

A/32/15, Vol. II. Report of Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD, Part Two, Chapter II and Annex I (decisions (a) and (b) adopted by Trade and Development Board at first part of its 9th special session, Geneva, 5-10 September 1977).

A/C.2/32/L.74. Jamaica (on behalf of States Members belonging to "Group of 77"): draft resolution, as orally amended by sponsors, approved by Second Committee on 14 December 1977, meeting 61, by 82 votes to 1, with 30 abstentions.

A/32/481. Report of Second Committee (on UNCTAD), draft resolution III.

Resolution 32/187, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/481, adopted by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107, by 106 votes to 1, with 31 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Recalling its resolution 31/158 of 21 December 1976 on debt problems of developing countries,

Recalling also resolution 94 (IV) of 31 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Noting that no substantive action has been taken in pursuance of the resolutions noted above and that the growing external debt of developing countries amounting to nearly $200 billion, resulting from a decline in their export earnings, increased import costs and inadequate concessional assistance, places a heavy burden on their limited foreign exchange resources,

Concerned that many developing countries are experiencing extreme difficulties in servicing their external debts and are unable to pursue or initiate important development projects, that the growth performance of the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked and island developing countries during the first half of this decade has been extremely unsatisfactory and that their per capita incomes have hardly increased,

Considering that substantial debt-relief measures in favour of developing countries are essential and would result in a significant infusion of untied resources urgently required by many developing countries,

Acknowledging that balance-of-payment support facilities have been inadequate and that official development assistance flows have been stagnating,

Convinced that net capital inflows, especially relating to official development assistance, to developing countries, in particular to the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, must be increased substantially and rapidly,

Aware that the majority of developing countries do not enjoy proper access to international capital markets and that, in any event, loans in such markets are available at high interest rates and on short maturities,

Regretting that so far most developed countries have not been prepared to assist in resolving the immediate difficulties of those developing countries suffering from the effects of heavy debt burdens or to consider the debt question in the perspective of development rather than commerce,

Noting that the Special Action Programme of $1 billion offered by the developed donor countries at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation will cover less than one third of the annual debt-service payments of the most seriously affected and the least developed countries, and that substantive action has yet to be taken by them to implement the Programme,

1. Welcomes the adoption of the provisional agenda for the part of the ninth special session of the Trade and Development Board to be held at the ministerial level, which includes proposals for the immediate solution of the debt problems of developing countries;

2. Calls upon the Trade and Development Board at its ministerial session to reach satisfactory decisions on:

(a) Generalized debt relief by the developed countries on the official debt of developing countries, in particular of the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, in the context of the call for a substantial increase in net official development assistance flows to developing countries;

(b) Reorganization of the entire system of debt renegotiation to give it a developmental orientation so as to result in adequate, equitable and consistent debt reorganizations;

(c) The problems created by the inadequate access of the majority of developing countries to international capital markets, in particular the danger of the bunching of repayments caused by the short maturities of such loans;

3. Welcomes the steps taken by some developed countries to cancel official debts owed to them by certain developing countries and the decision to extend future official development assistance in favour of the most seriously affected and the least developed of the developing countries in the form of grants, and urges that this be followed by similar decisions by other developed countries;

4. Recommends that additional financial resources should be committed by multilateral development finance institutions to the developing countries experiencing debt-servicing difficulties.

Resolution 32/175, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/480, adopted by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107, by 125 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 3515(XXX) of 15 December 1975 on the Conference on International Economic Co-operation,

Bearing in mind that the States participating in the Conference on International Economic Co-operation recognized that inflation disturbs the functioning of the international economic and monetary order and is damaging to the economic progress of both developed and developing countries,

Having regard to the fact that the effects of the present inflationary phenomenon have become universal in their negative impact and that the control of inflation is a matter requiring the priority attention of the international community as a whole,

Considering that the rapid spread of inflation indicates that isolated measures taken by States are not sufficient to control it successfully,

Bearing in mind that the measures within the scope of the developing countries are not in themselves capable of controlling internationally transmitted inflation,

Taking into account the report submitted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development by the Group of Experts on inflationary processes in the international economy and their impact on developing countries,

1. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to establish a high-level governmental group of experts, on a basis of equitable geographical representation:

(a) To prepare a broad and comprehensive study of the present inflationary phenomenon whose effects continue to exert a negative influence on the economies of all countries, particularly the developing countries;

(b) To formulate recommendations on possible measures to combat the international inflationary process and make it possible to formulate policies designed to reduce the economic and social effects of inflation;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to transmit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, the study prepared by the governmental group of experts established in accordance with paragraph 1 above, together with the comments of the Trade and Development Board, so that the Assembly may decide what action should be taken, including the possibility of holding a world conference on inflation;

3. Recommends, at the same time, that the international community should devote special attention to the problem of world inflation in the negotiations concerning the establishment of the new international economic order and in the preparation of a new international development strategy.

A/32/456. Report of Second Committee.

Resolution 32/180, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/456, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3177 (XXVIII) of 17 December 1973, 3241 (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3442 (XXX) of 9 December 1975 and 31/119 of 16 December 1976 and resolution 92(IV) of 30 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development relating to measures of support by developed countries and international organizations for the programme of economic co-operation among developing countries,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Noting the programme of economic co-operation among developing countries, adopted at the Third Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, held at Manila from 26 January to 7 February 1976,

Noting also the decisions taken by the non-aligned countries on economic co-operation among developing countries and, in particular, the Action Programme for Economic Co-operation and other relevant resolutions adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976,

Noting further the measures set out in the report of the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Mexico City from 13 to 22 September 1976,

Noting that economic co-operation among developing countries, based on the concept of individual and collective self-reliance, has been identified by them as a major strategy to promote their development and as an important means of consolidating their unity and solidarity,

Recognizing that, in the context of international economic co-operation, the achievement of the goal of greater co-operation among the developing countries is an important contribution to the establishment of the new international economic order,

Stressing that fundamental structural changes in existing international economic relations on the basis of equity and justice are essential for an enduring solution to the world economic problems and the promotion of international peace and security,

Reaffirming that efforts by the developing countries to promote co-operation among themselves do not diminish the responsibilities of all other countries to establish just and equitable economic relations between them and the developing countries and to contribute to the development of the developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on economic co-operation among developing countries;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, through the appropriate machinery of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, effective co-ordination of activities within the United Nations system in support of measures of economic co-operation among developing countries, as identified in the relevant decisions of the United Nations on the subject, including those based on the Programme of Action adopted at the Third Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, the Action Programme for Economic Co-operation adopted at the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, and the report of the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to include in the medium-term plan of the United Nations an intersectoral presentation of the activities envisaged to implement the relevant resolutions of the United Nations on economic co-operation among developing countries and to secure the same kind of intersectoral presentation on a system-wide basis;

4. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in accordance with their established procedures and practices, to support measures of economic co-operation among developing countries, including, as and when requested, the continued provision of the necessary secretariat support services and other suitable arrangements to facilitate the holding of meetings by the developing countries in pursuance of the objectives of economic co-operation among developing countries;

5. Takes note of Trade and Development Board decision 161 (XVII) of 2 September 1977, by which the Board adopted the terms of reference for the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries and endorsed the work programme of the Committee;

6. Urges developed countries to provide appropriate support, as and when requested by the developing countries, for the implementation of measures of economic co-operation among developing countries;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Resolution 32/179, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/480, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 3488 (XXX) of 12 December 1975, in which, inter alia, it recognized the important and vital role the public sector in developing countries could play in achieving the over-all economic and social development goals in accordance with their national development plans,

Recognizing the necessary and important role of the public sector, including public administration, finance and management, in enhancing national capacities for the full and effective realization of national development objectives,

Recalling its resolution 2845 (XXVI) of 20 December 1971,

Noting Economic and Social Council resolutions 1977 (LIX) of 30 July 1975 and 2018 (LXI) of 3 August 1976 on public administration and finance for development,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation, adopted by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization at its Second General Conference, held at Lima from 12 to 26 March 1975, which, inter alia, recognized the importance of ensuring an adequate role for the public sector in the expansion of the industrial development of developing countries,

Recalling the pertinent provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions which reaffirm the right of every State to exercise full and permanent sovereignty over its natural resources for the benefit of its people,

Bearing in mind that every State has the sovereign and inalienable right to choose its economic and social system in accordance with the will of its people, without outside interference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries, prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3488 (XXX);

2. Endorses Economic and Social Council decision 274 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977, in which the Council recommended to the General Assembly, inter alia, the continued study of the subject;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue studying the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries, as provided for in Economic and Social Council decision 274 (LXIII), through the fullest utilization of existing possibilities and resources and existing Secretariat departments;

4. Recommends that the competent United Nations organs should take into account the studies on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries in formulating a new international development strategy;

5. Invites the Secretary-General, in his study on the role of the public sector in the socio-economic development of developing countries, to take into account especially the following aspects:

(a) Capital formation and full realization by developing countries of their natural resources for the benefit of their entire population;

(b) Role of the public sector in implementing the long-term strategy of industrialization;

(c) Role of the public sector in promoting agricultural production;

(d) Role of the public sector in developing an effective national potential in research and development in the fields of science and technology;

(e) Attainment of the aims of a unified approach to economic and social development, including the achievement of an equitable distribution of income and wealth in the nation;

(f) Creation of broader employment opportunities and reduction of unemployment;

(g) Role of the public sector in the expansion of the share of developing countries in international trade, including the improvement of their export and import capacity and balance of payments;

(h) Role of the public sector in adjusting to changing economic circumstances and undertaking necessary structural and other adjustments;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to identify, based on national requirements, international measures required to support national public administration, finance and management for the development of the developing countries;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its thirty-third and thirty-fourth sessions through the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth and sixty-seventh sessions, respectively;

8. Requests the Economic and Social Council to examine the progress reports and to make appropriate recommendations on this subject to the General Assembly.

Special measures in favour of the least developed countries

Plenary meeting 2085.

E/AC.6/L.602. Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Iraq, Somalia, Sudan, Uganda: draft resolution, approved without vote by Economic Committee on 3 August 1977, meeting 808.
E/6047. Report of Economic Committee, draft resolution I.

Resolution 2124 (LXIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/6047, adopted without vote by Council on 4 August 1977, meeting 2085.

The Economic and Social Council,
Reaffirming the decisions and recommendations concerning special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in its resolutions 62 (III) of 19 May 1972 and 98 (IV) of 31 May 1976,

Recognizing that, in accordance with the above-mentioned resolutions, assistance to the least developed among the developing countries should be supplementary to the general measures applicable to all developing countries,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3214 (XXIX) of 6 November 1974, which, inter alia, urges Member States and organizations of the United Nations system to intensify urgently their efforts in favour of the least developed among the developing countries, including those in the field of trade,

Recalling further resolution 2 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries concerning special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries,

1. Requests the developed countries and all international organizations and financial institutions to increase the flow of financial and technical assistance to the least developed countries;

2. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to provide increased resources to meet the special needs of the least developed among the developing countries;

3. Urges the developed countries and all international organizations and financial institutions to adopt special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries, as called for in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 62 (III) and 98 (IV), and other relevant United Nations resolutions;

4. Urges the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other United Nations bodies to strengthen their programmes further in favour of the least developed countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to convene at the earliest possible opportunity the special meeting at which multilateral and bilateral financial and technical assistance institutions can carry out, together with representatives of the least developed countries, a general review and assessment of their requirements and progress as called for in paragraph 35 of United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 98 (IV);

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Member States, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other United Nations bodies, to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report on the implementation of United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 62 (III) and 98 (IV), other relevant United Nations resolutions and the present resolution to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Resolution 32/190, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/481, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Taking into consideration its resolution 3214 (XXIX) of 6 November 1974, in which it urged Member States and organizations of the United Nations system to intensify urgently their efforts for the benefit of the least developed countries, including those in the field of trade,

Reaffirming the special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in its resolutions 62 (III) of 19 May 1972 and 98 (IV) of 31 May 1976,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 2124 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977,

Bearing in mind the results of the meeting convened by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development between 31 October and 8 November 1977, at which the multilateral and bilateral financial and technical assistance institutions, together with the representatives of the least developed among the developing countries, carried out a general review and assessment of their requirements and progress, as called for in paragraph 35 of Conference resolution 98 (IV),

1. Invites the developed countries as well as international institutions to increase the flow of financial and technical assistance to the least developed among the developing countries;

2. Further invites the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other financial institutions to provide increased resources to meet the particular needs of the least developed countries;

3. Urges the developed countries, as well as appropriate international organizations and financial institutions, to adopt specific and concrete measures in favour of the least developed countries, as called for by the General Assembly and in the decisions adopted by the United Nations Conference on

Trade and Development and other related organizations within the United Nations system;

4. Welcomes the inclusion in the provisional agenda for the part of the ninth special session of the Trade and Development Board to be convened early in 1978 at the ministerial level of the review of measures taken in accordance with resolution 98 (IV) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development concerning the debt and related development and financial problems, inter alia, of the least developed countries;

5. Takes note of the allocation of $1 billion to the Special Action Programme pledged by the developed countries at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation held in Paris;

6. Endorses the request made by the Economic and Social Council in paragraph 6 of its resolution 2124 (LXIII).

A/C.2/32/L.18. Australia, Bangladesh, Canada, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Fiji, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Japan, Malawi, Maldives, Nepal, New Zealand, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Rwanda, Samoa, Singapore, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Uganda: draft resolution, approved without vote by Second Committee on 18 November 1977, meeting 50.

A/32/265/Add.1. Report of Second Committee (part II) (on report of Economic and Social Council), draft resolution III.

Resolution 32/94, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without objection by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, and 2768 (XXVI) of 18 November 1971 on the identification of the least developed among the developing countries,

Further recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1726 (LXIII) of 28 July 1972, in which the Council, inter alia, requested the Committee for Development Planning to undertake an examination of the latest available statistical information on the relevant economic, social and other variables in respect of the developing countries, with a view to making recommendations to the Council on any modification that might appear necessary in the list of the least developed countries on the basis of the criteria used in drawing up the list,

Bearing in mind its resolution 3487 (XXX) of 12 December 1975 by which certain countries were added to the list of the least developed countries,

Requests the Committee for Development Planning at its fourteenth session to give consideration, as a matter of priority, to the question of the inclusion of Tonga in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/177 of 21 December 1976, by which it approved the statute of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries and requested the Secretary-General to convene a pledging conference on the Fund,

Expressing appreciation to the countries that contributed to the Fund at the pledging conference held on 2 November 1977,

Concerned at the fact that the Fund has not yet become operational as envisaged in General Assembly resolution 31/177,

1. Urges Member States and the entire international community to make generous voluntary contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries in order to make it operational as soon as possible;

2. Authorizes the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to propose, in close collaboration with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, interim arrangements to implement the aims and purposes laid down in the statute of the Fund until the Fund becomes operational, in the manner specified in General Assembly resolution 31/177, subject to approval of such arrangements by the Governing Council of the Programme.

Resolution 2127 (LXIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/6047, adopted by Council on 4 August 1977, meeting 2085, by 31 votes to 0, with 15 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the decisions and recommendations concerning special measures related to the needs of the land-locked developing countries adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in its resolutions 63(III) of 19 May 1972 and 98(IV) of 31 May 1976,

Recalling Trade and Development Board resolution 109(XIV) of 12 September 1974, in which the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was requested to take appropriate and positive action on the relevant recommendations of the Group of Experts on the Transport Infrastructure for Land-locked Developing Countries,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 31/157 of 21 December 1976, in paragraph 1 of which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the land-locked countries and the specialized agencies, to find ways and means of improving the economic situation of the land-locked developing countries through the urgent implementation of resolutions 63 (III) and 98 (IV) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Noting General Assembly resolution 31/177 of 21 December 1976, by which the Assembly approved the Statute of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries and requested the Secretary-General to convene a pledging conference for the Fund,

Recalling the provisions of General Assembly resolution 31/157 and other relevant United Nations resolutions with respect to the exercise of the right of the land-locked countries to free access to and from the sea and their right of freedom of transit,

Aware of the slow progress in the implementation of specific measures related to the needs of the land-locked developing countries,

1. Reaffirms the right of free access to and from the sea of the developing land-locked countries, and their right of freedom of transit;

2. Urges the developed countries and all international organizations and financial institutions to adopt special measures in favour of the land-locked developing countries, as called for in resolutions 63 (III) and 98 (IV) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

3. Calls upon Member States and the entire international community to give attention to the trade requirements of the land-locked developing countries, including transit facilities, in order that they may derive equitable benefits from international measures on behalf of all developing countries;

4. Urges the developed countries to make generous contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, in order to make it operational;

5. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to provide adequate and increased resources to meet the technical assistance needs of the land-locked developing countries;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Member States, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other United Nations bodies, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report on the implementation of resolutions 63 (III) and 98 (IV) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other relevant United Nations resolutions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2971 (XXVII) of 14 December 1972, 3169 (XXVIII) of 17 December 1973, 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3311 (XXIX) of 14 December 1974, 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 and 31/157 of 21 December 1976,

Bearing in mind Trade and Development Board resolution 109 (XIV) of 12 September 1974, in which the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was requested to take appropriate and positive action on the relevant recommendations of the Group of Experts on the Transport Infrastructure for Land-locked Developing Countries,

Recalling also resolutions 63 (III) of 19 May 1972 and 98 (IV) of 31 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Bearing in mind the other resolutions and decisions adopted by the United Nations and its related agencies envisaging special action in favour of the land-locked developing countries,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 2127 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977,

Concerned with the slow progress being made in the implementation of specific action in favour of those countries,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 31/157 and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations with respect to the exercise of the right of land-locked developing countries to free access to and from the sea, as well as their right to freedom of transit,

1. Reaffirms the right of free access to and from the sea of the developing land-locked countries, as well as their right of freedom of transit;

2. Invites the developed countries, other States and international organizations and financial institutions to implement specific action for the benefit of such countries, as envisaged in resolutions 63 (III) and 98 (IV) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other resolutions adopted by the United Nations;

3. Urges members of the international community to provide land-locked developing countries with technical and financial assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, improvement and maintenance of their transport and transit infrastructure and facilities;

4. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other agencies within the United Nations system to take effective measures in order to provide increased resources to meet the technical assistance needs of the land-locked developing countries;

5. Confirms paragraph 6 of Economic and Social Council resolution 2127 (LXIII).

Resolution 2126 (LXIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/6047, adopted without vote by Council on 4 August 1977, meeting 2085.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in paragraph 3 of which the Assembly called upon the Secretary-General to submit to it, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report on the implementation of specific action in favour of developing island countries,

Regretting that insufficient time was available to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session for consideration of that progress report, Recommends that the General Assembly at its thirty-second session give full consideration to the progress report of the Secretary-General, entitled "Progress in the implementation of specific action in favour of developing island countries," with a view to the stimulation of further attention to the need for specific action in favour of developing island countries, both by the organizations concerned within the United Nations system, and by all Governments, particularly those of developed countries.

Resolution 32/185, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/481, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3338 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974 and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 dealing, inter alia, with efforts to meet the special problems of developing island countries,

Recalling resolution 98 (IV) of 31 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in which a series of special measures and specific action, respectively, in favour of the least developed countries and in favour of the land-locked and island developing countries were recommended,

Recalling also its resolution 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in which it called upon the Secretary-General to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report on the implementation of specific action in favour of developing island countries,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 2126 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977, in which the Council recommended that the General Assembly at its thirty-second session should give full consideration to the progress report of the Secretary-General with a view to the stimulation of further attention to the need for specific action in favour of developing island countries,

Mindful that the particular impediments hampering the economic development of many developing island countries, especially their difficulties in respect of transport and communications, their distance from market centres, the smallness of their economies and markets, their low resource endowment and their heavy dependence on a few commodities for foreign exchange earnings, call for the continued attention of Governments and of organizations in the United Nations system,

Convinced that specific action in favour of developing island countries, supplementary to the general measures applicable to all developing countries, is required to meet these particular impediments,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on progress in the implementation of specific action in favour of developing island countries and welcomes the initiation of the measures specified therein;

2. Welcomes, in particular, the activities undertaken by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, including the establishment of a unit in its secretariat devoted to the problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries;

3. Also welcomes the progress achieved by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in its implementation of the special technical assistance programme for developing island countries;

4. Urges all organizations in the United Nations system to continue to identify and implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specific action in favour of developing island countries, in accordance with the recommendations in resolution 98 (IV) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in particular those concerning the fields of transport and communications, trade and commercial policies, industrialization, tourism, the transfer of technology, marine and submarine resources development, the flow of external resources, environment protection and response to natural disasters;

5. Further urges the United Nations organizations concerned, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the regional commissions, to give attention to programmes of regional and subregional co-operation in respect of developing island countries;

6. Calls upon Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to take fully into account, in their bilateral and regional development efforts and in relevant negotiations towards the attainment of the objectives of the new international economic order, the special problems of developing island countries;

7. Decides to keep under review all progress in the implementation of the present resolution and requests the Secretary-General to submit for the consideration of the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session a sectoral analysis of action undertaken in favour of developing island countries and proposals for further consideration, taking into account the consideration of this question by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth session.

Resolution 32/186, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/481, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 32/413 of 28 November 1977, by which it deferred until its thirty-third session consideration of the question of Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent, Aware of the special problems faced by Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent with regard to territorial size, geographical location and limited economic resources, as well as the serious adverse effects on their economies of recent world-wide economic and financial problems,

Mindful that these Territories require the continued attention and assistance of the United Nations in the achievement by their peoples of their development objectives,

Recalling also its resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to these Territories and peoples,

Noting the action taken by the specialized agencies and the organizations within the United Nations system, as well as the regional bodies, particularly the Caribbean Community and Common Market, to provide economic, financial and technical assistance to these countries, as set out in the report of the Secretary-General on progress in the implementation of specific action in favour of developing island countries,

Recalling that the question of Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent is currently under consideration in the relevant and competent organs of the United Nations,

1. Stresses the urgency of rendering all necessary assistance to the peoples of Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent in their efforts to strengthen their national economies and calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the peoples of those Territories, to take adequate steps to establish and finance an appropriate programme of development of the Territories;

2. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, including in particular the United Nations Development Programme, international financial institutions and aid donors to intensify their assistance within their respective spheres of competence to the peoples of those Territories.

Chapter II

Restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system

Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System

During 1977, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System, established by the General Assembly in 1975,¹ held two formal sessions, both at United Nations Headquarters in New York. The Committee, which was to submit its conclusions and recommendations to the General Assembly at its regular 1977 session, continued to consider an informal consolidated text prepared by the Chairman as a result of negotiations held in 1976² and agreed that its work should continue to be conducted within an informal contact group, open to the participation of all the members of the Committee and presided over by the Chairman.

At its fifth session, held from 16 February to 4 March 1977, the Ad Hoc Committee gave particular consideration to three problem areas: interagency co-ordination, operational activities of the United Nations system, and Secretariat support services. Progress was made on the subject of interagency co-ordination, but the report noted that considerable difficulties continued to surround the inter-related areas of operational activities and Secretariat support services.

At its sixth session, held from 2 to 20 May, the Chairman initially invited the Ad Hoc Committee to direct its attention to the following problem areas: the General Assembly; the Economic and Social Council; other fora for negotiations; regional and interregional co-operation; and planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation. In the light of the discussions thereon, the Chairman revised the relevant sections of the consolidated text. The discussions also widened the consensus existing in respect of interagency co-ordination and achieved a measure of progress in respect of some of the major issues relating to operational activities and Secretariat support services; the Committee agreed, however, that further informal consultations would be required.

Informal consultations were held at Geneva in July, and subsequently in New York, within the context of a small representative group of Committee members known as the "Friends of the Chairman."

The Ad Hoc Committee resumed its sixth session in New York on 30 September 1977 to review the progress made in the informal consultations, following which a comprehensive revision of the informal consolidated text was issued. The Committee met until 14 December 1977, during which time an intensive discussion was undertaken of the consolidated text; on that date, the Committee adopted its final conclusions and recommendations.

Summary of conclusions and recommendations

The General Assembly. The role of the General Assembly as the supreme organ of the United Nations system in the economic and social fields was reaffirmed and the following measures, inter alia, recommended: (a) the Assembly should function as the principal forum for policy-making and for harmonization of international action on economic, social and related problems; (b) it should concentrate on the establishment of over-all strategies, policies and priorities for the system as a whole, and, as necessary, assign responsibility for negotiations to other fora within the system; and (c) it should review developments in other fora within and outside the United Nations, set guidelines for further action and make recommendations.

The Assembly was also called upon to promote support and assistance to the developing countries in strengthening and enlarging their mutual economic co-operation. A number of rationalization measures for the Assembly's method of work were recommended, affecting its agenda, allocation of items, programme of work and documentation.

The Economic and Social Council. It was recommended that the Economic and Social Council should concentrate on its responsibilities: (a) to serve as the central forum for the discussion of and the formulation of policy recommenda-dons on international economic and social issues; (b) to monitor and evaluate the implementation of over-all strategies, policies and priorities established by the Assembly; (c) to co-ordinate the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system; and (d) to carry out comprehensive policy reviews of operational activities throughout the system.

The Council was called upon to adopt a biennial programme of work and shorter but more frequent subject-oriented sessions spread throughout the year—except when the Assembly was in session—focusing on, inter alia, consideration of action by the United Nations system in particular sectors, review of the results of and establishment of guidelines for technical work, review of programme budgets and medium-term plans and recommendation of policy guidelines for operational activities. The Council could also convene special sessions to deal with special or urgent problems and, when important policy areas justified high-level participation, could convene periodic meetings at the ministerial or other sufficiently high level.

The Council should assume as far as possible the functions of its subsidiary bodies; these bodies would accordingly be discontinued or their terms of reference redefined and/or regrouped. In this connexion, the Council was called upon to adopt by the end of 1978 the following measures: (a) discontinuance of its expert and advisory bodies, unless otherwise decided; (b) streamlining, including discontinuance as appropriate, of the standing intergovernmental committees; (c) redefinition and regrouping of the terms of reference of the functional commissions, or the assumption by the Council of direct responsibility for their work; and (d) assumption of preparatory work for ad hoc conferences. The Council was also urged to refrain from establishing new subsidiary bodies.

All States Members of the United Nations wishing to participate in the Council's work should be enabled fully to do so; consideration should be given to ways of making the Council fully representative. The Council should also consider increasing the membership of any remaining reconstituted subsidiary bodies.

The Secretary-General and the executive heads of the organizations of the United Nations system were called upon to participate more actively in the work of the Council. The Council should examine and improve consultative relationships with non-governmental organizations.

Other United Nations fora for negotiations. All United Nations organs and programmes, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and ad hoc world conferences were called upon to co-operate in effectively discharging the responsibilities of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and, as far as possible, to give full and prompt effect to their specific policy recommendations, also taking fully into account the needs of developing countries.

Measures should be taken within available resources to enable the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to discharge the major role envisaged for that body as an Assembly organ for deliberation, negotiation, review and implementation in the field of international trade and related areas of international economic co-operation.

Structures for regional and interregional co-operation. The five regional commissions—as the main general economic and social development centres, taking into account the work of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies in specific sectoral fields and the co-ordinating role of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in respect of technical co-operation activities—were expected to exercise team leadership and responsibility for co-ordination and co-operation at the regional level, to provide inputs for the global policy-making processes of United Nations organs, and to participate fully in implementing their decisions.

Relationships between the regional commissions and other United Nations organizations should be strengthened, including their active participation in operational activities and preparation of intercountry programmes in their respective regions. The Assembly and the Council were called upon to take measures to enable the regional commissions to function expeditiously as executing agencies. The regional commissions should also assist developing countries in identifying projects and preparing programmes for promoting co-operation among them.

Organizations of the United Nations system should take early steps to achieve a common definition of regions and subregions and the identical location of regional and subregional offices. The regional commissions should increase their mutual exchanges of information and experience. A number of administrative and financial measures were also recommended, and the regional commissions were called upon to rationalize their structures, inter alia by streamlining their subsidiary bodies.

Operational activities of the United Nations system. Operational activities of the United Nations system for development should serve the following objectives: (a) a real increase in the flow in resources on a predictable, continuous and assured basis; (b) assistance provided should conform with national objectives and priorities of recipient countries; (c) activities and allocation of resources should fully reflect over-all strategies, policies and priorities of the Assembly and the Council; and (d) administrative costs should be reduced and efficiencies improved to increase assistance.

The following integration measures were recommended: (a) a single annual pledging conference should be held for all United Nations operational activities for development, without prejudice to other arrangements for mobilizing additional funds and contributions earmarked for specific programmes; (b) the administrative, financial, budgetary, personnel and planning procedures should be reformed to achieve maximum uniformity; and (c) at the country level, there should be improved coherence of action and integration of various sectoral inputs from the United Nations system, the UNDP country programming process being utilized as a frame of reference.

A single official should have over-all responsibility for and should co-ordinate operational activities at the country level. He was also expected to exercise team leadership and evolve a multidisciplinary dimension in sectoral development assistance programmes, in conformity with national priorities and with the assistance, as necessary, of joint interagency advisory groups. Steps should be taken to unify the country offices of the various United Nations organizations.

The General Assembly was called upon to consider establishing a single governing body responsible for the management and control, at the intergovernmental level, of operational activities for development (excluding the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Food Programme) to replace the existing governing bodies. Steps should also be taken to ensure adequate developing-country representation at the executive management and other decision-making levels in secretariats dealing with operational activities.

Planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation. It was recommended that the competent intergovernmental bodies charged with programming and budgeting should develop thematic approaches to planning, programming, budgetary and evaluation processes with a view to ensuring the implementation by the Secretariat of the Assembly's over-all priorities.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) was called upon to discharge fully its responsibilities as the main subsidiary organ of the Council and the Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination. It should assist both bodies in supervising, reviewing and carrying out evaluation exercises of activities with system-wide implications, make recommendations on the establishment and harmonization of medium-term plans and programmes, and formulate recommendations on the relative priorities of programmes for consideration by the Council and the Assembly. In order to carry out its responsibilities, CPC was asked to improve its programme and methods of work, and take measures to enable States to participate at a high level of expertise.

Organizations of the United Nations system should intensify their efforts to harmonize budget presentations and programme classifications, to synchronize their programme budget cycles and to apply procedures for prior consultation on work programmes and for joint programming. Measures should be taken to improve the effectiveness of internal evaluation procedures in respect of programme implementation. The membership of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) should be increased to ensure more equitable representation (see p. 1010).

Interagency co-ordination. Interagency co-ordination should aim at effectively assisting in the preparatory work for intergovernmental decisions, in their implementation and in their translation into mutually complementary joint programme activities. At the intersecretariat level, such co-ordination should concentrate on: preparing concise and action-oriented recommendations; concerting the implementation of policy guidelines, directives and priorities established by the Assembly and the Council; and developing the co-operative and joint planning and programming, and co-ordinated execution, of programme activities.

The machinery for co-ordination at this level, centred on the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), would be streamlined and reduced to a minimum, with maximum use being made of flexible ad hoc arrangements. Steps should also be taken to merge the Environment Co-ordination Board, the Inter-Agency Consultative Board and the Advisory Committee of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization with ACC. Greater communication between ACC and intergovernmental bodies was recommended, and ACCS agenda, functioning and reporting systems should be adjusted for improved response to priority concerns.

The review by the Council of the relationship agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies should be guided by the need to ensure full and prompt implementation of recommendations of the Assembly and the Council, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and within the scope of their respective basic instruments.

Secretariat support services. The United Nations Secretariat should be restructured so as to meet effectively the requirements and the policy directives of the Assembly and the Council in the economic and social sectors and to take fully into account the development requirements of the developing countries.

The Secretariat should concentrate on: (a) interdisciplinary research and analysis; (b) cross-sectoral analysis of programmes and plans; (c) substantive support for technical co-operation activities not covered by other United Nations organs, programmes or specialized agencies; (d) management of United Nations technical co-operation activities; (e) provision of technical secretariat services for CPC, the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly, ad hoc conferences and intersecretariat co-ordination machinery; and (f) other research, including the collection of relevant data, and analysis in sectors not within the purview of other United Nations organs, programmes and specialized agencies.

A specific clustering of functions under sectoral units was recommended, which should be accompanied by a thorough rationalization and streamlining of the capabilities of the organizational units concerned, including any necessary redeployment of staff.

The General Assembly should invite the Secretary-General to appoint, in full consultation with Member States, a Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation who, under the direction of the Secretary-General, would be in charge of: providing leadership and over-all co-ordination within the various components of the United Nations system in development and international economic co-operation to ensure a multidisciplinary approach to development problems; and ensuring, within the United Nations, the coherence, co-ordination and efficient management of all activities in the economic and social fields financed by the regular budget or by extrabudgetary resources. This applied equally to all services and organs in the United Nations without prejudice to their respective spheres of competence or terms of reference as contained in their mandates. The Secretary-General could entrust to the Director-General other tasks related to the ensemble of economic and social activities.

The Ad Hoc Committee did not come to an agreement on the level, remuneration and financial provisions for the office of the Director-General, but submitted a number of alternative texts on these matters in its recommendations to the General Assembly.

After the adoption of the conclusions and recommendations by the Ad Hoc Committee, interpretative statements were made by several members.

Speaking on behalf of the members of the European Economic Community (EEC), Belgium said that these States accepted the restructuring arrangements proposed, but continued to hope for a fundamental and dynamic restructuring, particularly with regard to operational activities and areas of competence of the Economic and Social Council. They interpreted any consideration of expansion of Council membership as primarily intended to compensate for the possible loss of representation arising from discontinuance of subsidiary bodies and to enable observers to play a fuller part in the Council's work.

Jamaica, speaking on behalf of the developing countries belonging to the Group of 77, said that, in reaffirming the power of the Assembly to assign specific negotiating functions to other fora in the system, it was the Group's understanding that the Assembly itself had the power to negotiate issues which it might have assigned elsewhere. Further, the Group could not agree to any specific measures worked out by the Council with regard to assuming the work of its subsidiary bodies, or regrouping or redefinition, unless the Council agreed beforehand to a compensatory increase in its membership, nor did it accept that there need be any overwhelming significance for the Charter on this occasion. In agreeing to certain initial steps relating to operational activities, Jamaica emphasized the Group's view that those steps were to be undertaken under the guidance of the Assembly and no other body.

The German Democratic Republic, speaking on behalf of eight States of Eastern Europe and Mongolia, said those States firmly opposed including in the Ad Hoc Committee's report recommendations whose implementation involved revision of the Charter, e.g. a proposal to increase the membership of the Council.

They did not consider that the proposals concerning operational activities imposed any financial obligations on them in relation to voluntary funds and assistance programmes. Moreover, they believed that certain proposals exceeded the Committee's mandate, e.g. increasing the membership of ACABQ, relationships to be maintained with non-governmental organizations, financial support for the work of CPC, and others.

Egypt and India considered that the recommendations were far from reaching the objectives for which restructuring was conceived—namely, the establishment of a new international economic order. Since little progress had been made in that direction, recommendations currently made were bound to be premature or unrealistic, India said. Egypt said it regretted the pressures—of time and other pressures—that had been put on delegations during their work on restructuring.

Japan felt that the Council's new scheme of subject-oriented sessions and its assumption of responsibility for functions of its subsidiary bodies should be undertaken in parallel with the measures to streamline subsidiary bodies, in order to avoid confusion and duplication.

The United States said that, while it accepted the broad definition of the Assembly's responsibilities as contained in the recommendations, provided they did not go beyond the authority vested in it under the Charter, the Assembly's role was neither to negotiate precise agreements nor place restraints on negotiations in other fora. Thus, the United States interpreted the "policy-making" function of the Assembly as applying to the Secretariat and to programmes and bodies, and, on a broader level, as establishing general guidelines of a recommendatory nature—not decision-making. It also noted that the Charter did not vest the Assembly with authority to "assign" negotiations to other fora, apart from its own subsidiary bodies.

The question of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system was considered by the Economic and Social Council on 31 October and 14 December 1977.

On 14 December, by decision 292(LXIII), the Council inter alia took note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and transmitted it to the General Assembly, together with the Council's comments thereon; these mainly set forth reservations expressed on the administrative and financial implications of the report as submitted by the Secretary-General. The decision was adopted, without vote, as proposed orally by the Council President.

Decisions of the General Assembly

The General Assembly considered the question of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system in the context of its assessment of progress in implementing its resolutions on the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,³ the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,⁴ the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States⁵ and development and international economic co-operation.⁶

Following formal and informal consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, and informal consultations on three draft resolutions concerning the Ad Hoc Committee, recommendations—one by the nine member countries of EEC, one by Jamaica and one by Iraq, Kuwait, Somalia and the Sudan—the Vice-Chairman introduced a compromise text for the Committee's approval.

On 20 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted the text as its resolution 32/197. Thus, the Assembly endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee, which it annexed to the resolution, and decided on the issues left unsettled by that Committee regarding the level, remuneration and the financial resources to be provided to the office of a Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. The Director-General was to be appointed by the Secretary-General, in full consultation with Member States, at a high level which the Secretary-General determined to be commensurate with his functions. The Director-General, acting under the authority of the Secretary-General, would assist him in carrying out his responsibilities as chief administrative officer, under the Charter, in the economic and social fields. He was to be appointed for a period of up to four years, and be provided with the necessary support and resources.

The Assembly invited the Secretary-General to appoint the Director-General as soon as possible, preferably during the first quarter of 1978. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations addressed to him and to assist the organs, organizations and bodies involved in the restructuring process to implement the recommendations within their respective spheres of competence. The Secretary-General was to report—and the organizations were to submit progress reports, including plans for further implementation—to the Assembly at its regular 1978 session through the Economic and Social Council. The Assembly would keep the recommendations under review.

Resolution 32/197 was adopted without vote by the Assembly; it had been similarly approved by the Second Committee on 19 December, after the other three draft resolutions before the Committee—annexing the same conclusions and recommendations but selecting one or the other of alternative texts offered by the Ad Hoc Committee in the section on Secretariat support services—had been withdrawn by their sponsors.

Before approval, the Second Committee Vice-Chairman orally amended the text by deleting a footnote indicating that the over-all remuneration of the Director-General would be intermediate between that of an Under-Secretary-General and that of the Secretary-General; the Committee agreed instead to include the statement in its report to the Assembly.

The nine-power text that was withdrawn differed from the compromise text that was approved mainly in that it did not contain, among other provisions, the following: a preambular paragraph reaffirming the desire to continue the process of restructuring the United Nations system; reference to a specific title of the Director-General or to his appointment in full consultation with Member States (a footnote to the text indicated that he should have a status enabling him to deal, under the authority of the Secretary-General, on an equal footing with all other high-ranking officials of the United Nations system); invitations to the Secretary-General to appoint him as soon as possible and to submit a report to the Council on how he planned to implement the recommendations; and a request for plans for further implementation from organizations in the United Nations system.

The Jamaican draft included a provision affirming that the restructuring process should be based on more equitable participation by developing countries in decision-making. It selected the Ad Hoc Committee's alternative text which stipulated that the post of the Director-General would correspond to a level higher than that of Under-Secretary-General (which Jamaica said retained the formula originally proposed by the Group of 77). Confirmation was to be undertaken at a resumed Assembly session, to be convened by March 1978, at which the Assembly would examine detailed proposals for implementing the recommendations, to be submitted by the Secretary-General in the light of comments made in the Ad Hoc Committee, the Council and the Assembly on the financial and administrative implications of the proposals. Requests for implementation and for progress reports by the Secretary-General and by organizations were also included. The Director-General was, inter alia, to assist the Secretary-General in giving effect to the recommendations.

By the four-power text, the Assembly among other things would have expressed its conviction that the United Nations system in the economic and social fields should be restructured urgently to make it more effective in carrying out its responsibilities for global development and enabling the United Nations to play its central role in the implementation of the new international economic order. The Assembly would also have: affirmed that the restructuring process should be based, inter alia, on the need for more equitable participation by the developing countries in decision-making processes in the system; expressed appreciation to the Ad Hoc Committee for its action proposals and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations, selecting the same alternative text on the level of the post of the Director-General as the Jamaican draft. He would be appointed for a four-year period, to be confirmed by the Assembly at a resumed session to be held not later than February 1978.

Noting that the administrative and financial implications of the Ad Hoc Committee's proposals could not be considered thoroughly at the current session, the Assembly would have asked the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Director-General, to prepare for its regular 1978 session a detailed statement of those implications and a plan of phased implementation of the proposals. Also with the Director-General's assistance, the Secretary-General would submit progress reports to the intersessional committee of the whole on economic issues, which was to be established by the Assembly in accordance with resolution 32/174 (see p. 393).

Following approval of the resolution in the Second Committee, Finland, speaking also on behalf of Iceland, Norway and Sweden, said those countries wished the Director-General had been given a clearer and more comprehensive mandate. They were particularly disappointed at the recommendations concerning operational activities which, they felt, offered limited prospects for major reforms; they had hoped for more emphasis on the co-ordination role of UNDP.

Those countries and others, including Australia, Canada, Japan and Turkey, considered that the measures outlined should be seen as only a first step in an over-all restructuring exercise. Japan maintained its reservation on the creation of the post of the Director-General; which, rather than contribute to co-ordination, might lead to confusion.

Speaking on behalf of the African group of Member States, the United Republic of Cameroon said the resolution met the concerns of his group.

Jamaica, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77, said the Group sought a new statement of administrative and financial implications of the recommendations; those submitted did not correspond with the true intent of the Ad Hoc Committee's proposals in all respects, particularly with regard to the phased implementation of the proposals, including redistribution of functions and allocation of posts and resources for the new departments and offices.

Sudan said the sponsors of the four-power text endorsed the statement by Jamaica and reiterated their understanding that the new Director-General would be involved in the process of internal restructuring.

The USSR said it had not opposed adoption of the resolution on the understanding that the reservations and interpretative statements of the Eastern European countries would be taken into account when determining ways to implement the recommendations. The best way to improve the effectiveness of economic and social activities, the USSR said, was not to set up new organs or posts but to make maximum use of existing organs and resources.

The administrative and financial implications of the restructuring proposals were extensively discussed in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee before its recommendations were adopted, on 21 December 1977, by the Assembly as a three-part decision (32/450). Based on proposals by the Secretary-General and endorsed by ACABQ, the Fifth Committee had approved the decisions on 19 December.

By decision 32/450 A, the Assembly created four new sections in the programme budget for the 1978-1979 biennium, comprising the new organizational unit to be headed by the Director-General and three other units: a Department of Economic Co-operation and Development, a Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and an Office of Secretariat Services for Economic and Social Matters, all titled subsequently. Both the Fifth Committee and the Assembly approved this decision without objection.

By decision 32/450 B, the Staff Regulations of the United Nations were amended to accommodate the financial implications of the new post of Director-General. The Fifth Committee took this decision by 81 votes to 8, thus approving a draft amendment to the Staff Regulations submitted by the Secretary-General. It rejected, however, by 58 votes to 10, with 22 abstentions, a USSR amendment to the new regulation to replace reference to the Director-General's "salary" by the term "remuneration," which the USSR considered to be in keeping with the decision of the Second Committee. The Assembly adopted decision 32/450 B by a recorded vote of 127 to 9, with 2 abstentions.

By decision 32/450 C, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General, with the concurrence of ACABQ, to transfer functions and related credits between sections of the 1978-1979 budget to give effect to the decisions in Assembly resolution 32/197 (see above). Before approving the text by 81 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions, the Fifth Committee rejected—by 66 votes to 11, with 12 abstentions—a USSR amendment to delete reference to the transfer of functions since, in the USSR's view, such transfer fell within the competence of the Second Committee, which had already taken a decision on the question, and the Fifth Committee was authorized to recommend only redistribution of resources. Decision 32/450 C was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 127 to 0, with 10 abstentions.

Resolution 32/197, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/480/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 20 December 1977, meeting 109.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling also its resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975, by which it established the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System for the purpose of preparing detailed action proposals with a view to initiating the process of restructuring the United Nations system so as to make it more fully capable of dealing with problems of international economic co-operation and development in a comprehensive and effective manner, in pursuance of General Assembly resolutions 3172(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 and 3343 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, and to make it more responsive to the requirements of the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order as well as those of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Reaffirming its desire to continue the process of restructuring the United Nations system, of which the results of the work of the Ad Hoc Committee constitute a valuable initial contribution,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System and expresses its deep appreciation to the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee for the excellent manner in which he conducted its work;

2. Decides that paragraph 64 of the recommendations contained in chapter III of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee should read as follows:

"64. The General Assembly should invite the Secretary-General to appoint, in full consultation with Member States, a Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, at a high level which he determines as commensurate with the functions outlined below, who, acting under the authority of the Secretary-General, would effectively assist him in carrying out his responsibilities as chief administrative officer, under the Charter of the United Nations, in the economic and social fields. Accordingly, the Director-General, under the direction of the Secretary-General, should be in charge of:

"(a) Ensuring the provision of effective leadership to the various components of the United Nations system in the field of development and international economic co-operation and in exercising over-all co-ordination within the system in order to ensure a multidisciplinary approach to the problems of development on a system-wide basis;

"(b) Ensuring, within the United Nations, the coherence, co-ordination and efficient management of all activities in the economic and social fields financed by the regular budget or by extrabudgetary resources."

"In addition, the Secretary-General could entrust to the Director-General other tasks in areas of responsibility related to the ensemble of the economic and social activities of the United Nations. The Director-General should be appointed by the Secretary-General for a period of up to four years. He should be provided with the necessary support and resources."

3. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee, as amended in paragraph 2 above and reproduced in the annex to the present resolution;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to appoint a Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation as soon as possible, preferably during the first quarter of 1978;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to implement those recommendations which are addressed to him, to assist the organs, organizations and bodies involved in the restructuring process and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, within the scope of its competence, at its sixty-fifth session;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fourth session a report giving further details on how he plans to implement the conclusions and recommendations annexed to the present resolution in the light of comments made^a and to seek guidance, as necessary, on issues requiring further clarification;

7. Requests all organs, organizations and bodies within the United Nations system to implement these recommendations within their respective spheres of competence and to submit progress reports, including plans for further implementation, to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session through the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session;

8. Decides to keep under review the implementation of the above-mentioned conclusions and recommendations.

I. General Assembly

1. The effectiveness of the General Assembly in fulfilling its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations as the supreme organ of the United Nations system in the economic and social fields should be increased by the following measures:

(a) The Assembly should fully exercise its powers under the Charter to promote, inter alia, solutions as to international economic, social and related problems and, to that end, to function as the principal forum for policy-making and for the harmonization of international action in respect of those problems.

(b) The Assembly should concentrate on the establishment of over-all strategies, policies and priorities for the system as a whole in respect of international co-operation, including operational activities, in the economic, social and related fields. It may assign to other forums within the United Nations system, as necessary, the responsibility for negotiating and submitting recommendations for action in specific areas.

(c) The Assembly should review and evaluate developments in other forums within the United Nations system and establish appropriate guidelines for further action. It may also review and evaluate developments in forums outside the United Nations system and address recommendations to them.

2. The General Assembly should promote support and assistance to the developing countries, in the context of measures agreed upon by those countries, for the purpose of strengthening and enlarging their mutual economic co-operation.

3. The General Assembly should rationalize its methods of work and procedures in the economic and social fields and, as a first step, should adopt the following measures:

(a) The Assembly should organize its agenda and allocate the items thereon in such a way as to achieve a balanced and efficient distribution of items in the Second and Third Committees, taking due account of the respective functions of those Committees, the nature of the items concerned, their substantive interrelationships and the need to consider questions of economic and social development in a co-ordinated manner. The Chairmen of the Second and Third Committees should hold consultations with a view to assisting the General Committee to that end. Steps should also be taken to improve co-ordination between the Second and Third Committees, on the one hand, and the Fifth Committee, on the other.

(b) The Second and Third Committees should, within their respective spheres of competence, fully utilize the possibility of grouping substantively-related items under one heading for purposes of consideration.

(c) Discussions in the Second Committee should focus on individual items or groups of items, organized in the manner indicated in subparagraph (b) above. Such discussions may be held concurrently on more than one item or group of items and should be addressed as far as possible to proposals submitted under these items. The Second Committee should set agreed deadlines for the submission of such proposals. These measures should also be adopted, to the extent applicable, by the Third Committee.

4. Documentation submitted by or on behalf of the Secretary-General to the Second and Third Committees as well as to other United Nations bodies in the economic and social fields concerning items on their agenda should be concise, action-oriented and in conformity with the relevant general and specific legislative directives.

II. Economic and Social Council

5. In exercising its functions and powers under the Charter and in fulfilling its role as set out in the relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions, the Council, under the authority of the Assembly or in the performance of such functions as may be assigned to it by the Assembly, should concentrate on its responsibilities:

(a) To serve as the central forum for the discussion of international economic and social issues of a global or interdisciplinary nature and the formulation of policy recommendations thereon addressed to Member States and to the United Nations system as a whole;

(b) To monitor and evaluate the implementation of over-all strategies, policies and priorities established by the General Assembly in the economic, social and related fields, and to ensure the harmonization and coherent practical operational implementation, on an integrated basis, of relevant policy decisions and recommendations emanating from United Nations conferences and other forums within the United Nations system after their approval by the Assembly and/or the Economic and Social Council;

(c) To ensure the over-all co-ordination of the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system in the economic, social and related fields and, to that end, the implementation of the priorities established by the General Assembly for the system as a whole;

(d) To carry out comprehensive policy reviews of operational activities throughout the United Nations system, bearing in mind the need for balance, compatibility and conformity with the priorities established by the General Assembly for the system as a whole.

^a Comments made in the Ad Hoc Committee, at the resumed sixty-third session of the Economic and Social Council and at the thirty-second session of the General Assembly.

6. In discharging these responsibilities, the Economic and Social Council should bear in mind the importance of assisting in the preparation of the work of the General Assembly in the economic, social and related fields so that the Assembly may give timely and effective attention to the substantive issues requiring consideration. Such preparation should include the drawing up, for consideration by the Assembly, of suggestions regarding the latter's documentation and organization of work in the economic and social fields, as well as of recommendations for action by the Assembly on substantive issues.

7. The Economic and Social Council should organize its work on a biennial basis and provide for shorter but more frequent subject-oriented sessions spread throughout the year, except when the General Assembly is in session. Such sessions of the Council should be scheduled for the purpose, inter alia, of considering action by the United Nations system in particular sectors, reviewing the results of technical work undertaken in specialized bodies and establishing guidelines for such work, reviewing programme budgets and medium-term plans within the United Nations system, and recommending policy guidelines for operational activities. The Council, taking into account the provisions of paragraphs 10 and 11 below, should identify subject areas on which such sessions should be held.

8. In formulating its biennial programme of work, the Economic and Social Council should identify the issues which will require priority consideration, decide on the schedule and agenda for its subject-oriented sessions and determine the manner in which substantively-related items on its agenda should be grouped under one heading for purposes of consideration. The Council may, in modification of its programme, decide on ad hoc arrangements—including in particular the convening of special sessions—to deal with emerging problems meriting special or urgent international attention. In formulating its programme, the Council should take into account the possibility of transmitting certain of the reports submitted through it to the General Assembly without debate.

9. At such times as may be decided upon by its members, the Economic and Social Council should also hold periodic meetings, at the ministerial or other sufficiently high level, to review major issues in the world economic and social situation. Such meetings should be effectively prepared and should concentrate on important policy areas justifying high-level participation.

10. In the light of the foregoing and in order to ensure that the subject areas referred to in paragraph 7 above are given the most effective and informed consideration possible within the broad context of the tasks indicated in paragraph 5, the Economic and Social Council should assume to the maximum extent possible direct responsibility for performing the functions of its subsidiary bodies; these bodies would accordingly be discontinued or their terms of reference re-defined and/or regrouped. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 27 below, the regional commissions should continue in being.

11. On the basis of the foregoing, the measures set forth in subparagraphs (a) to (d) below should be adopted by the Economic and Social Council not later than the end of 1978 in respect of its expert and advisory groups, its standing committees and the functional commissions, and the Council should give high priority to this task in formulating its programme of work:

(a) The discontinuance of the expert and advisory bodies of the Council unless the Council takes affirmative action to renew and redefine their mandates and, where appropriate, to set deadlines for the completion of their activities;

(b) The thorough streamlining, including discontinuance, as appropriate, of the standing intergovernmental committees;

(c) The redefinition and regrouping, on the basis of their substantive and methodological interrelationships, of the terms of reference of the functional commissions, or the assumption by the Council in appropriate instances of direct responsibility for their work;

(d) The assumption by the Council of direct responsibility for carrying out the preparatory work for ad hoc conferences convened by the Council itself and, as appropriate, by the General Assembly, without prejudice to arrangements already agreed upon for conferences currently under preparation.

12. The Economic and Social Council should to the maximum extent possible refrain from establishing new subsidiary bodies; it should make every effort to meet the need for any new bodies by holding subject-oriented sessions as provided for in paragraph 7 above. For their part subsidiary bodies of the Council should refrain from creating new subordinate sessional or intersessional groups without the prior concurrence of the Council.

13. In the light of paragraphs 10 and 11 above, all States Members of the United Nations wishing to participate in the work of the Economic and Social Council should be enabled to do so to the fullest possible extent. In addition, consideration should be given to ways and means of making the Council fully representative. Where the Council decides in the context of the measures envisaged in paragraph 11 above to regroup the terms of reference of particular subsidiary bodies, it should also give consideration to the possibility of such regrouping being accompanied by an increase in the membership of the reconstituted body or bodies. The Council should continue to invite non-member States to participate in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to them.

14. The Secretary-General and the executive heads of the organizations of the United Nations system should participate more actively in the deliberations of the Economic and Social Council and should provide full assistance to the Council in accordance with the relevant general and specific legislative directives.

15. The Economic and Social Council should examine and improve its consultative relationships with the non-governmental organizations, taking fully into account the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order. The Council should also make recommendations for the rationalization and harmonization of consultative relationships with the non-governmental organizations by the organizations of the United Nations system as a whole and in the context of ad hoc world conferences.

III. Other United Nations forums for negotiations, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other United Nations organs and programmes, the specialized agencies,^c the International Atomic Energy Agency and ad hoc world conferences

16. All United Nations organs and programmes, the specialized agencies, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the International Atomic Energy Agency and ad hoc world conferences should co-operate in whatever measures are necessary for the effective discharge of the responsibilities of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and should, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and within the scope of their respective basic instruments, give full and prompt effect to their specific policy recommendations.

17. In carrying out their respective mandates, all United Nations organs and programmes, agencies and ad hoc world conferences should be similarly guided by the over-all policy framework established by the General Assembly and the Eco-conomic and Social Council, taking fully into account the needs and requirements of the developing countries.

18. In the light of General Assembly resolution 31/159 of 21 December 1976, appropriate measures should accordingly be taken to enable the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within available resources, effectively to play the major role envisaged in resolution 90 (IV) of 30 May 1976 of the Conference as an organ of the Assembly for deliberation, negotiation, review and implementation in the field of international trade and related areas of international economic co-operation, bearing in mind the need to maintain its close and co-operative relationship with the Assembly and to co-operate with the Economic and Social Council in carrying out the Council's responsibilities under the Charter.

IV. Structures for regional and interregional co-operation

19. The regional commissions should be enabled fully to play their role under the authority of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council as the main general economic and social development centres within the United Nations system for their respective regions, having due regard to the responsibilities of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies in specific sectoral fields and the co-ordinating role of the United Nations Development Programme in respect of technical co-operation activities.

20. Taking into account the special needs and conditions of their respective regions, they should exercise team leadership and responsibility for co-ordination and co-operation at the regional level. They may convene periodic meetings, as necessary, for the purpose of improving the co-ordination of the relevant economic and social activities of the United Nations system in their respective regions.

21. The regional commissions should provide inputs for the global policy-making processes of the competent United Nations organs and should participate fully in the implementation of the relevant policy and programme decisions taken by these organs. They should be consulted on the definition of the objectives to be included in the medium-term plan of the United Nations covering fields of interest to them, taking into account the special needs and conditions of their respective regions.

22. Subject to such guidance as may be provided by the Governments concerned and without prejudice to membership of the regional bodies concerned, the organizations of the United Nations system should take early steps to achieve a common definition of regions and subregions and the identical location of regional and subregional offices.

23. Relations between regional commissions and the organizations of the United Nations system should be strengthened. Close co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme should be established and appropriate arrangements made to enable the regional commissions to participate actively in operational activities carried out through the United Nations system, including the preparation of inter-country programmes, as may be required, in their respective regions. Without prejudice to the special needs and conditions of each region, and taking into account the plans and priorities of the Governments concerned, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council should take measures to enable them to function expeditiously as executing agencies for intersectoral, subregional, regional and interregional projects and, in areas which do not fall within the purview of the sectoral responsibilities of specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, for other subregional, regional and interregional projects.

24. The regional commissions concerned should assist developing countries at the request of the Governments concerned in identifying projects and preparing programmes for the promotion of co-operation among those countries. Taking fully into account the relevant global policy decisions of the competent United Nations organs, the regional commissions concerned should intensify their efforts, with the assistance of the competent organizations of the United Nations system and at the request of the Governments concerned, to strengthen and enlarge economic co-operation among the developing countries at the subregional, regional and interregional levels.

25. As a means of promoting more effective interregional co-operation, the regional commissions should strengthen and, as appropriate, expand existing arrangements for the continuous exchange between them of information and experience. Such arrangements may include the holding of periodic intersecretariat meetings, utilizing existing machinery as far as possible for that purpose.

26. In order to enable the regional commissions effectively to discharge the responsibilities indicated in the preceding paragraphs, the necessary authority should be delegated to them and, to the same end, adequate budgetary and financial provision should be made for their activities.

27. Taking into account the special needs and conditions of their respective regions and bearing in mind the objectives set forth above, the regional commissions should rationalize their structures, inter alia by streamlining their subsidiary machinery.

V. Operational activities of the United Nations system

28. Restructuring measures in respect of the operational activities of the United Nations system for development should serve to promote the achievement of the following objectives:

(a) A real increase in the flow of resources for such activities on a predictable, continuous and assured basis;

(b) The assistance provided should be in conformity with the national objectives and priorities of the recipient countries;

(c) The orientation of these activities and the allocation of available resources for the activities to fully reflect the over-all strategies, policies and priorities of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

(d) The achievement of optimum efficiency and the reduction of administrative costs with a consequent increase in the proportion of resources available to meet the assistance requirements of recipient countries.

29. In carrying out the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, as provided for in paragraph 5 (d) above, the Economic and Social Council should be guided by the objectives outlined in paragraph 28 above.

30. With these objectives in view and as a first step, with future steps to be determined by the General Assembly, integration measures as outlined in the following paragraphs should be gradually undertaken, under the authority of the Secretary-General wherever appropriate, in respect of existing United Nations programmes and funds for development financed by extrabudgetary resources. The implementation of these measures should be carried out under the guidance of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council particularly bearing in mind, firstly, that a major premise underlying such integration is that it will stimulate substantially higher levels of voluntary contributions to operational activities for development and, secondly, that it should accordingly be carried forward with due regard to the current levels of such voluntary contributions. The resources, aims and objectives of each programme, as reflected in existing programmes and Funds, should remain clearly identified.

31. Without prejudice to other arrangements for mobilizing additional funds for particular programmes through other measures or from other sources and subject to provision being made for the earmarking of contributions for specific programmes, there should be held a single annual United Nations pledging conference for all United Nations operational activities for development. In preparing for the pledging conference, the Secretariat should make available to Govern-merits information concerning previous and current contributions for the various programmes from Governments and other sources.

32. Measures should be taken to achieve maximum uniformity of administrative, financial, budgetary, personnel and planning procedures, including the establishment of a common procurement system, harmonized budget and programme cycles, a unified personnel system and a common recruitment and training system.

33. At the country level, there should be improved coherence of action and effective integration, in accordance with the objectives and priorities of the Government concerned, of the various sectoral inputs from the United Nations system. The United Nations Development Programme country-programming process should be utilized as a frame of reference for the operational activities carried out and financed by the organizations of the United Nations system from their own resources.

34. On behalf of the United Nations system, over-all responsibility for, and co-ordination of, operational activities for development carried out at the country level should be entrusted to a single official to be designated taking into account the sectors of particular interest to the countries of assignment, in consultation with and with the consent of the Government concerned, who should exercise team leadership and be responsible for evolving, at the country level, a multi-disciplinary dimension in sectoral development assistance programmes. These tasks should be carried out in conformity with the priorities established by the competent national authorities and with the assistance, as necessary, of joint interagency advisory groups. Subject to the requirements of individual countries, steps should be taken to unify the country offices of the various United Nations organizations.

35. In the context of the foregoing, consideration should be given by the General Assembly to the establishment of a single governing body responsible for the management and control, at the intergovernmental level, of United Nations operational activities for development.⁴ This body should replace the existing governing bodies. Its composition should be such as to ensure a wide, equitable and balanced representation.

36. Steps should be taken to ensure adequate developing country representation at the executive management and other central decision-making levels of secretariat structures in the area of operational activities for development of the United Nations system.

VI. Planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation

37. The recommendations in the present section are designed to enhance the effectiveness of the planning, programming, budgetary and evaluation processes within the United Nations system.

38. The competent intergovernmental bodies charged with programming and budgeting should develop thematic approaches with a view to ensuring the implementation, by the Secretariat units concerned, of the over-all priorities established by the General Assembly.

39. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should fully discharge its responsibilities, in accordance with its terms of reference, as the main subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination. In discharging those responsibilities, it should also assist the Council and the Assembly in supervising, reviewing and carrying out, as appropriate, evaluation exercises in respect of the activities of the United Nations, particularly those having system-wide implications. Furthermore, it should consider and make recommendations regarding the establishment and harmonization of medium-term plans and programmes, including the concepts on which they are based.

40. In addition, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should in the light of the perspective indicated above formulate recommendations, for consideration by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, on the relative priorities of United Nations programmes; in this context subsidiary intergovernmental and expert bodies should accordingly refrain from making recommendations on the relative priorities of the major programmes as outlined in the medium-term plan and should instead propose, through the Committee, the relative priorities to be accorded to the various subprogrammes within their respective fields of competence.

41. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should make such further improvements in its programme and methods of work as would facilitate the full discharge of the above-mentioned responsibilities. The General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council should, in the light of experience, keep under continuous review the terms of reference of the Committee.

42. Measures should be taken to improve the effectiveness of internal evaluation procedures in respect of programme implementation. Appropriate methods should also be developed in order to assist the competent intergovernmental bodies, with the assistance as required of the Joint Inspection Unit, in carrying out their responsibilities for external evaluation.

43. The organizations of the United Nations system should intensify their efforts to develop harmonized budget presentations and a common methodology of programme classification and description of content. They should synchronize their programme budget cycles and provide full and compatible information on extrabudgetary resources in their programme budgets.

44. These organizations should work out without further delay solutions to the timing and technical problems which are impeding the effective application of the existing procedures for prior consultation on work programmes in order that the competent governing bodies may be enabled to take full account of the results thereof before approving such programmes. In the same context, vigorous steps should be taken towards joint programming in related programme areas.

45. These organizations should intensify their work on the elaboration of medium-term plans, including the problems of methodology, procedure and the harmonization of plan cycles. In addition, the procedures for prior consultation should be applied to these plans with a view to establishing an increasing measure of joint planning in areas of mutual concern and eventually to system-wide medium-term planning.

46. Measures should be taken to facilitate representation by States members of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at a high level of expertise and to ensure the continuity of such representation. To this end, and subject to the review envisaged in paragraph 12 of General Assembly resolution 31/93 of 14 December 1976, the payment by the United Nations of the travel and per diem expenses of one representative of each State member of the Committee should be continued.

47. In exercising its responsibilities as defined by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions should be guided by the priorities of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. To ensure more equitable representation, particularly for the interests of the developing countries, the size of the Advisory Committee should be increased to at least sixteen.

48. There should be close co-operation between the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and they should work out appropriate arrangements for maintaining continuous contact. The two Committees should so organize their respective programmes of work as to facilitate the discharge of the foregoing tasks; to the same end the

Secretary-General should make the necessary adjustments to the cycle for the preparation of the relevant documentation and generally ensure compliance by the Secretariat with the procedures indicated above.

49. Intergovernmental bodies should enforce existing rules concerning the submission of programme-budget implications of proposals submitted to them. To the extent possible, a statement of programme-budget implications should be available in writing during the consideration of proposals and normally not later than twenty-four hours before the approval of the proposals concerned. Such statements shall indicate, as appropriate, related programmes already included in the relevant medium-term plan, the percentage increase in the expenditures of the Secretariat units concerned and the resources which could be released from any programme elements which have become obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective. If in the course of a session two or more statements of programme-budget implications have been submitted, the Secretary-General shall submit, at the conclusion of the session, a summary of such statements containing aggregate figures.

VII. Interagency co-ordination

50. Interagency co-ordination at the intergovernmental level should be governed by the policy guidelines, directives and priorities established by the General Assembly and, under its authority, by the Economic and Social Council in the exercise of their over-all responsibilities as outlined in sections I and II.

51. At the intersecretariat level, interagency co-ordination should aim at effectively assisting in the preparatory work for intergovernmental decisions, in the implementation of such decisions and in their translation into mutually complementary or joint programme activities. To that end, it should integrate into a coherent whole the relevant expertise and inputs of the organizations of the United Nations system. It should also be a built-in element of the substantive support to be provided to the intergovernmental bodies concerned for the discharge of their policy-making functions as well as an integral part of intersecretariat arrangements for policy and programme execution.

52. On the basis of the foregoing, interagency co-ordination at the intersecretariat level should concentrate on the following tasks:

(a) Preparing, in compliance with the relevant general and specific legislative directives, concise and action-oriented recommendations for consideration by the intergovernmental bodies concerned;

(b) Concerting in an effective manner the implementation, in accordance with paragraph 16 above, by the United Nations organs, programmes and agencies concerned of policy guidelines, directives and priorities emanating from the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

(c) Developing the co-operative and, wherever possible, joint planning, as well as the co-ordinated execution, of programme activities decided upon at the intergovernmental level.

53. Interagency co-ordination at the intersecretariat level should be pursued with full respect for the competence, where relevant, of the regional commissions as outlined in section IV. In the field, such co-ordination should be pursued in conformity with the objectives and priorities of the Government concerned and should be supportive of the local co-ordination arrangements established by that Government.

54. The machinery for interagency co-ordination at the intersecretariat level should centre on the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination under the leadership of the Secretary-General. Subject to the guidance and supervision of the Economic and Social Council, that machinery should be streamlined and reduced to a minimum; except where the discharge of permanent functions necessitates the retention of continuing machinery, maximum use should be made of flexible, ad hoc arrangements designed to meet the specific requirements of the intergovernmental bodies concerned and geared to the policy-making and programming processes of the General Assembly and the Council. In the light of these considerations, steps should be taken to merge the Environment Co-ordination Board, the Inter-Agency Consultative Board and the Advisory Committee of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, which should assume their respective functions.

55. The agenda, functioning and reporting systems of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination should be adjusted to respond fully and promptly to the priority concerns, specific requirements and programme of work of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. The reporting schedules of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination should be reorganized so as to conform to the meetings calendar of the intergovernmental bodies concerned. Under the authority of the Secretary-General, the executive secretaries of the regional commissions should be enabled fully and effectively to participate in the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on matters of concern to their respective commissions.

56. Arrangements should be made to improve communication between the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the intergovernmental bodies concerned, including wider access to the results of the relevant Administrative Committee on Co-ordination discussions by these bodies on matters of concern to them as necessary, mutually convenient procedures should be worked out to enable the Chairman or designated representative of any of these bodies to be associated in an appropriate manner with Administrative Committee on Co-ordination discussions of particular concern to that body.

57. The review by the Economic and Social Council of the relationship agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies should be guided, inter alia, by the need to ensure that the agencies give full and prompt effect in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and within the scope of their respective basic instruments to the recommendations made by the General Assembly and the Council for the co-ordination of their policies and activities.

58. The powers of the General Assembly under Article 17, paragraph 3, of the Charter should be fully exercised in the interests of system-wide co-ordination, particularly in the context of the establishment of over-all priorities and in relation to administrative and budgetary issues of broad applicability. Appropriate arrangements to assist the Assembly in that regard should be made by the Economic and Social Council, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

VIII. Secretariat support services

59. The recommendations in the present section represent guidelines, the detailed implementation of which the Secretary-General would carry out in exercise of his powers under the Charter of the United Nations.

60. In the economic and social sectors, the United Nations Secretariat should be restructured so as effectively to meet the requirements and the policy directives of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and, in the context of the purposes stated in Article 1, paragraphs 3 and 4, as well as of the provisions of Articles 100 and 101 of the Charter, to take fully into account in particular the development requirements of the developing countries.

61. In support of the relevant intergovernmental bodies, the United Nations Secretariat should concentrate on the following functions:

(a) Interdisciplinary research and analysis, drawing as necessary upon all relevant parts of the United Nations system. On the basis of the relevant legislative authority, this function includes:

(i) Preparing, on a regular basis, global economic and

- social surveys and projections to assist the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in the discharge of their responsibilities as set out in sections I and II;
- (ii) Undertaking in-depth intersectoral analyses and syntheses of development issues, in close collaboration with those elements of the United Nations system engaged in similar work and taking into account relevant work in the various sectoral components of the United Nations system, and preparing concise and action-oriented recommendations on those issues in accordance with the requirements of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, for consideration by those organs;
 - (iii) Identifying and bringing to the attention of Governments emerging economic and social issues of international concern;

This function would accordingly cover, inter alia, the provision of substantive support services for the work of the Committee for Development Planning;

(b) Cross-sectoral analysis of programmes and plans in the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system with a view to mobilizing and integrating, at the planning and programming stages, the inputs and expertise of the organizations of the United Nations system for the following tasks:

- (i) Concerting in an effective manner the implementation of policy guidelines, directives and priorities emanating from the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;
- (ii) Developing the co-operative and, wherever possible, joint planning of programme activities decided upon at the intergovernmental level, with a view to system-wide medium-term planning at the earliest possible time;

This function would accordingly cover, inter alia, the provision of substantive support services for the relevant work of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination;

(c) Substantive support for technical co-operation activities in economic and social sectors which are not covered by other United Nations organs, programmes or specialized agencies; this function would include, inter alia, the provision of technical expertise in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of country and intercountry programmes and of specific projects, the provision of direct advisory assistance to Governments, the development of training materials and support of training institutions;

(d) Management of technical co-operation activities carried out by the United Nations in respect of:

- (i) Projects under the regular programme of technical assistance;
- (ii) Projects of the United Nations Development Programme for which the United Nations is the executing agency;
- (iii) Projects financed by voluntary contributions from Governments and other external donors including funds in trust;

(e) Provision, on an integrated basis, of technical secretariat services for the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly, ad hoc conferences and intersecretariat co-ordination machinery; this function includes organizing and co-ordinating the provision by the Secretariat units concerned of substantive support services, particularly documentation, as required by the above-mentioned bodies, ensuring that the substantive units concerned are informed of relevant developments in the work of these bodies, including resolutions and decisions adopted by them, and ensuring that these bodies are kept informed of action being taken in response to their decisions by the Secretariat units concerned;

(f) Without prejudice to the function defined in subparagraph (a) above, and in response to directives from the relevant intergovernmental bodies, research, including the collection of relevant data, and analysis in those economic and social sectors that do not fall within the purview of other United Nations organs, programmes and specialized agencies.

62. In view of their particularly close substantive and methodological relationship, the functions defined in paragraphs 61 (a) and 61 (b) above should be clustered together in accordance with a programme of phased implementation. In the same context, the functions defined in paragraphs 61 (c) and 61 (d) above should also be clustered together in a separate organizational entity in accordance with a programme of phased implementation. The function defined in paragraph 61 (e) should be treated as a distinct function in a separate organizational entity. The Secretary-General should deploy the function in paragraphs 61 (f) to the clusters of functions defined in paragraphs 61 (a) and (b) or 61 (c) and (d), respectively, on the basis of the substantive, practical and methodological relationships involved, and allowing for the possibility of deploying appropriate elements to the regional commissions.

63. The clustering of functions indicated in paragraph 62 above should be accompanied by a thorough rationalization and streamlining of the capabilities of the organizational units concerned, including the redeployment, as necessary, of their staff resources.

64. The General Assembly should invite the Secretary-General to appoint, in full consultation with Member States, a Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, at a high level which he determines as commensurate with the functions outlined below, who, acting under the authority of the Secretary-General, would effectively assist him in carrying out his responsibilities as chief administrative officer, under the Charter of the United Nations, in the economic and social fields. Accordingly, the Director-General, under the direction of the Secretary-General, should be in charge of:

(a) Ensuring the provision of effective leadership to the various components of the United Nations system in the field of development and international economic co-operation and in exercising over-all co-ordination within the system in order to ensure a multidisciplinary approach to the problems of development on a system-wide basis;

(b) Ensuring, within the United Nations, the coherence, co-ordination and efficient management of all activities in the economic and social fields financed by the regular budget or by extrabudgetary resources.⁹

In addition, the Secretary-General could entrust to the Director-General other tasks in areas of responsibility related to the ensemble of the economic and social activities of the United Nations. The Director-General should be appointed by the Secretary-General for a period of up to four years. He should be provided with the necessary support and resources.

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States

When the General Assembly, on 12 December 1975,¹ entrusted the Economic and Social Council with the task of reviewing progress in implementing and in preparing for comprehensive consideration by the General Assembly of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,² it engendered a request from the Council³ for reports by Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and regional commissions on progress achieved in the implementation of the Charter and on activities conducted in connexion with its dissemination.

Three reports submitted by the Secretary-General in May and June 1977 responded to the Council's request. Two of the reports were prepared by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD): one of them consolidated reports of UNCTAD, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the regional commissions on progress in their respective fields of competence; the other report, based on replies received from a limited number of States, referred principally to steps which responding Governments had taken to implement those parts of the Charter which were also included in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.⁴

The replies received were set out under 13 subject headings relating to various articles of the Charter: commodities; liberalization and expansion of trade; invisible trade; foreign investment; science and technology; promotion of increased net flows of real resources to developing countries; trade between States having different political, economic and social systems; regional economic groupings and economic co-operation among developing countries; least developed, land-locked and island developing countries; participation in the international decision-making process; promotion of economic, social and cultural development; common responsibilities with regard to the sea-bed and the environment; and other issues such as structural changes, disarmament and development, and elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination.

The responding States and institutions emphasized the importance of the activities related to the problems of international commodity trade, as demonstrated by their participation in or launching of schemes ranging from the export-earnings stabilization system between the European Economic Community and the countries of Africa, the Caribbean and the Pacific, to the Integrated Programme for Commodities. Their long-term strategies also involved issues such as market access, creation of producers' associations, and reductions in trade barriers on agricultural products, within the context of the multilateral trade negotiations.

Several responding Governments cited their participation in multilateral institutions designed to foster increased net flows of real resources to developing countries and their bilateral aid programmes as an indication of their attempts to meet internationally agreed targets for resource transfer. Several responding institutions also maintained that activities pursued within their areas of competence helped to increase the net flow of real resources to the developing countries.

The responding Governments and institutions in general reiterated their willingness to participate, both within and outside the framework of the United Nations, for the achievement of the goals envisaged in the Charter.

The third report, prepared by the Secretary-General, related to activities conducted in connexion with the dissemination of the Charter. The report outlined activities undertaken by the Office of Public Information in pursuance of the directive.

On 4 August 1977, with the adoption of resolution 2125(LXIII), the Economic and Social Council took note with interest of statements made at its current session on the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Charter, and asked him to submit those reports to the General Assembly for consideration at its session which was to open in September.

United Nations operational activities for developmentThe United Nations Development Programme

As the central funding organization for technical co-operation within the United Nations system, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is primarily responsible for the financing and administration of international development support activities at the country and intercountry levels.

The Programme is financed by annual voluntary contributions from Governments. These contributions have increased from about $55 million in 1959 to more than $510 million in 1977. With these resources, UNDP provides close to 45 per cent of the total cost of the technical co-operation projects with which it is associated; developing countries finance the remaining 55 per cent.

During 1977, UNDP financed 3,800 projects in 150 developing countries and territories of Africa, Asia, Latin America, the Middle East, the Mediterranean and Europe. Of these, 1,699 were on a large scale (involving a UNDP contribution of $150,000 or more each) and 2,101 were on a smaller scale. In addition, 4,650 projects were either in a pre-operational stage or field work had been completed. Thus, at the end of 1977, 8,450 projects had been launched with a combined cost, on completion, to UNDP and recipient Governments of $6,200 million. These projects covered nearly the entire economic and social spectrum: agriculture, industry, power production, transport, communications, trade, health, housing, education, training, community services and public administration.

The UNDP funds are allocated to developing countries and regions on the basis of indicative planning figures (IPFS) which cover five-year periods. In determining IPFS for the second development cycle (1977-1981), emphasis was placed on the basic criteria of population, per capita gross national product and the needs of the lower-income developing countries, particularly the least developed or the most seriously affected by the world economic crisis. Total projected UNDP expenditures for this period were estimated at $3,500 million.

The nature of development assistance activities is determined by country programmes in which the recipient Governments establish priorities and allocate funds. Activities are carried out primarily by the United Nations and its specialized agencies.

The Programme maintains field offices in 108 developing countries. These offices are headed by resident representatives who, in consultation with the national Governments, co-ordinate UNDP's technical co-operation projects and other development assistance programmes of the United Nations system.

Activities in 1977 under the United Nations Development Programme

During 1977, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) provided some 41,408 man-months of expert technical services at a cost of $226.7 million. It also supplied project equipment valued at $37.8 million, consulting and other sub-contracted services valued at $37.4 million and training fellowships valued at $23.7 million. Its administrative and programme support costs amounted to $59 million, of which $37 million was spent on maintaining its 108 field offices. Agency overhead were $45.3 million in 1977, as against $55.3 million the preceding year. Total expenditure during 1977 came to $436.4 million. During the year, UNDP also authorized some $397 million in net project approvals, more than double the amount recorded in the previous year.

By the end of 1977, 66 second-cycle country programmes were ready to be approved by UNDP's Governing Council. Total planned expenditures under these programmes amounted to $837 million through 1981, as against $619 million under the first programming cycle (1972-1976). In both cycles, 24 per cent of all planned expenditure was allocated to agriculture, forestry and fisheries, about 21 per cent to industry, and about 9 per cent to transport and communications. These sectors accounted for about half of all planned expenditures under the country programmes.

The most significant shift in sectoral emphasis came in the area of general economic and social policy and planning, which included statistics and public and financial administration. Planned expenditure in this sector increased from 10 per cent in the first cycle to 17 per cent in the second.

The basis for calculation of reported investment commitments related to UNDP-supported projects was revised in 1977: category A related to projects for which UNDP carried out micro-type pre-investment studies; category B related to reported investment commitments which resulted from UNDP-assisted macro-type studies such as general area or regional planning studies, master plans, etc.; and category C related to reported investment commitments for which the UNDP-assisted project was providing technical assistance support.

The total investment commitments during 1977 amounted to $3,797 million, as against $4,895 million the previous year. About 22 per cent of these commitments were from category A, 49 per cent from category B and 29 per cent from category C.

During 1977, UNDP's interregional programme continued its activities in support of the establishment of the new international economic order. Projects implemented in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development included training and advisory services on the generalized system of preferences and the multilateral trade negotiations of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, with emphasis on policy formulation and the planning and management of foreign trade. A new project to finance studies by policy-makers and professionals from developing nations on key international monetary and financial issues was initiated. Another, to foster economic and technical co-operation among developing countries in the pharmaceutical field, was the first interregional project for which a Government (Guyana) was designated as executing agency.

Global research programmes included two major new projects for the control of trypanosomiasis (sleeping sickness), a debilitating and often lethal disease which strikes millions of people and livestock in Africa and Latin America. Research was intensified to create improved strains of sorghum and millet—foodgrains which are the staple diet of large numbers of low-income families, and which are predominantly grown by farmers in the poorest dry-land agricultural areas of the world.

Another area of active UNDP involvement during 1977 was technical co-operation among developing countries, referred to as TCDC. In preparation for the 1978 United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, UNDP formulated a draft world plan of action for consideration by the Conference. Over 85 countries submitted Conference reports on their TCDC policies, activities and approach. The Programme also issued its first Directory of Services for Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, covering 900 institutions in 67 developing nations, and began preparations for a second, larger edition to be issued in 1978.

Another aspect of UNDP activities concerned the integration of women in development. Detailed guidelines aimed at helping women to participate in and benefit from UNDP-supported projects, and information and training materials designed to help planners increase and upgrade the role of women in the development process, were issued.

The UNDP Governing Council in January 1977 adopted a programme of "New dimensions in UNDP technical co-operation" which included, inter alia, provisions for execution of projects by developing country Governments. The UNDP Administrator subsequently approved a number of such execution arrangements, including six projects to be financed by the United Nations Sahelian Office at a cost of $1.8 million. In addition, two regional projects in Latin America were to be executed by the Caribbean Development Bank and the Board of the Cartagena Agreement, respectively. The Development Bank was to use UNDP resources to improve its capability to promote small-scale industry, to support Governments in the management of their investment projects, and to improve its effectiveness in assisting member Governments in national and regional planning.

Work on 245 large-scale UNDP-supported projects was completed during 1977. The results attained by some of these projects included the following.

In Zambia, sunflower seed was established as a viable national crop through the National Oilseeds Development Programme. While production was non-existent when the project began in 1972, 16,100 tons were produced during 1976-1977.

An agrarian reform project in Chile trained 638 agricultural cadres and 24,691 small farmers. It also organized a specialized documentation centre, produced audio-visual training materials and instituted two monthly publications. About 944 farmers and their families were involved in research which designed a methodology for associations for agricultural co-operation.

In Liberia, 13,000 people in 35 rural communities were able to have safe drinking water as a result of a well-drilling project, which, for the first time, provided basic information on the availability of ground water in Liberia and established a sound national well-drilling institution.

The feasibility of supplying 10 provincial towns in Haiti with water was confirmed by another project, which led to a grant of $1.3 million from the United Nations Capital Development Fund and a World Bank loan of about $6 million for implementation.

A number of countries were provided with improved planning capabilities through projects concluded during the year. They include the following:

— in the Philippines, assistance to the Institute of Environmental Planning made an important contribution to national planning capabilities through training and the development of planning concepts;

— in Pakistan, two technical assistance projects provided the Karachi Development Authority with annual development programmes for 1975/1976 and 1976/1977 and developed the Metroville Low-Income Settlement Programme; recommendations and methodology for improving the slum area of Lyari were also provided;

— in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, a reconstruction and development programming project equipped the Government with a plan for agricultural and industrial development projects;

— in the communications field, a UNDP-supported regional project established a high-quality, direct microwave radio relay link between the Gambia and Senegal; with an initial capacity of 12 telephone circuits and an expansion possibility of well over 120 circuits, the link was one of the first elements to become fully operational in the Africa-wide PANAFTEL system;

— a plan for development in the remote Jebel Marra area of western Sudan called for improvement of traditional systems of rainfed agriculture and livestock production rather than the development of large-scale mechanized farming; and — investigations of Botswana's Okavango delta determined the hydrological and ecological effects of withdrawing water for domestic, industrial and agricultural purposes, and developed plans for harmonizing water extraction with protection of the environment and the delta's wildlife resources.

Expenditures in 1977

Activities assisted by UNDP in 1977 continued to be executed almost wholly by agencies of the United Nations system. For details of expenditure by executing agency and by region, see tables below (amounts are in millions of United States dollars).

Provision of operational, executive and administrative personnel

Under a scheme for providing operational, executive and administrative personnel in the field of public administration, experts were appointed as officials of recipient Governments, although they remained in the employ of the United Nations or the specialized agencies participating in the scheme. The United Nations or the agency concerned recruited the experts, and supplemented the salaries paid by Governments if they were too low to attract experts of the required calibre. The experts were responsible for training nationals to take over from them as soon as possible.

In 1977, UNDP financed 135 operational experts in the following 41 developing countries, regions or territories: Angola (4), the Bahamas (1), Bahrain (1), Barbados (2), Belize (2), Botswana (13), the Caribbean (1), the Cayman Islands (2), the Cook Islands (1), Fiji (2), the Gambia (3), Ghana (4), Grenada (1), the Ivory Coast (2), Jordan (6), Kenya (4), the Lao People's Democratic Republic (3), Lesotho (5), Malawi (10), Malta (4), Mauritius (1), Morocco (7), the Netherlands Antilles (1), the Niger (1), Nigeria (8), Oman (6), Rwanda (1), St. Lucia (2), Samoa (2), the Solomon Islands (1), the Sudan (5), Swaziland (9), the Syrian Arab Republic (1), Tonga (3), Trinidad and Tobago (2), Tunisia (1), Uganda (3), the United Republic of Tanzania (4), Uruguay (1), Yemen (1) and Zambia (4).

Extrabudgetary activities in 1977

United Nations Volunteers

In 1977, the United Nations Volunteers programme helped expand the scope of UNDP project activities by supplementing the work of international and host country experts and by extending project outreach to local community levels. Volunteers were also engaged in a variety of activities to increase youth participation in development and to promote the involvement of domestic development services. Half the volunteers were drawn from the developing nations themselves.

In support of technical co-operation among developing countries, United Nations volunteers were in the process of forming Asian regional exchange teams with volunteers from Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Nepal and Sri Lanka. At the end of 1977, 50 per cent of the nearly 300 volunteers deployed were serving in Africa, 28 per cent in the Middle East, 16 per cent in Asia and the Pacific and 6 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean. A total of 331 volunteers were serving two-year assignments in 52 developing countries and territories, 281 of whom were serving in least developed countries or those most seriously affected by the world economic crisis. The number of volunteers in each country was as follows:

Least developed or most seriously affected countries: Afghanistan (10), Benin (6), Botswana (15), Cape Verde (7), the Central African Empire (6), Chad (3), the Comoros (1), Democratic Yemen (11), El Salvador (1), the Gambia (2), Guatemala (2), Guinea-Bissau (50), Haiti (3), Honduras (1), India (1), the Ivory Coast (5), Kenya (1), the Lao People's Democratic Republic (1), Lesotho (30), Malawi (1), Mali (3), Mauritania (2), Nepal (5), the Niger (7), Rwanda (4), Samoa (1), Somalia (5), the Sudan (26), Uganda (1), the United Republic of Tanzania (7), the Upper Volta (12) and Yemen (51).

Other developing countries: Antigua (1), Bahrain (1), Bolivia (1), Colombia (1), the Cook Islands (3), Costa Rica (1), the Dominican Republic (1), Ecuador (2), Gabon (1), Indonesia (1), Iran (16), Jamaica (1), Liberia (3), Nicaragua (1), Papua New Guinea (6), Paraguay (1), St. Lucia (1), Swaziland (5), Venezuela (1) and Zambia (2).

Assistance to colonial countries and peoples

The Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples was set up in 1974 to finance humanitarian assistance projects of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity. Beneficiaries of the Trust Fund in 1977 included persons from Namibia, Zimbabwe (Southern Rhodesia), Djibouti and South Africa.

The type of assistance given ranged from individual scholarships to the establishment of schools and health centres. In less than four years, commitments for such projects had reached the level of nearly $12 million, which included the $6 million IPF authorized by UNDP's Governing Council for technical co-operation with national liberation movements.

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

Established in 1974 to provide risk capital for natural resources exploration in developing countries, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration became operational in 1975 and there was an increase in its activities during 1977. Four new projects with an estimated cost of $6.6 million were prepared for approval during 1977 while some 20 additional requests for assistance were being processed. The four projects were for mineral exploration in Argentina, Cyprus, Panama and Turkey.

The Revolving Fund was currently financing mineral exploration, countering in part a sharp decline in activity by international mining companies which traditionally financed most high-risk prospecting in developing countries.

Total voluntary contributions to the Fund were $18.5 million by the end of 1977. Contributions in 1977 were from Belgium ($915,471), Japan ($3.5 million), the Netherlands ($400,000) and the United States ($2.5 million).

Fund for the development of Irian Jaya

Full-scale operations under the trust fund for the development of Irian Jaya (West Irian) ended in 1974. Residual activity continued into 1977 with allocations totalling $169,515. The balance as at 31 December 1977 was $742,272, of which $202,439 represented unspent allocations from previous years.

Trust Fund Programme for the Republic of Zaire

ended in 1971. No new allocations were issued in 1977. The balance as at 31 December 1977 was $10,514, with overspent allocations of $99,532 outstanding.

United Nations Trust Fund for an Operational Programme in Lesotho

Established to finance a number of operational and administrative-type expert posts in Lesotho, the United Nations Trust Fund for an Operational Programme in Lesotho covered a variety of fields from industrial development and educational planning to road transportation and tourism, including the development of sound Government infrastructures.

A net reduction in allocations of $92,557 was recorded in 1977. As at 31 December 1977, overspent expenditures amounted to $21,240, which were expected to be covered by further contributions from the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA).

United Nations Trust Fund for Provision of Operational Personnel to Swaziland

The United Nations Trust Fund for Provision of Operational Personnel to Swaziland was established to finance a number of projects in Swaziland similar to those financed by the Trust Fund for Lesotho. Allocations in 1977 totalled $576,301 and, as at 31 December 1977, overspent expenditures amounted to $356,933, expected to be covered by further contributions from SIDA.

United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency—residual assets

No new allocations were issued in 1977 and the balance of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency trust fund, as at 31 December 1977, totalled $23,289, of which $8,588 represented unspent allocations from previous years.

UNROB residual trust funds—Bangladesh

The United Nations Relief Operation in Bangladesh (UNROB) continued certain functions of the United Nations Relief Operation in Dacca. On 1 April 1973, the Secretary-General transferred most of the unexpended funds of UNROB to the UNDP Administrator. These funds were being used specifically for projects proposed by the Government of Bangladesh for relief and rehabilitation activities. During 1977, expenditures totalled $63,420. The balance, as at 31 December 1977, was $654,123, of which $593,349 represented unspent allocations.

Finances of the United Nations Development Programme for 1977

Programmes assisted by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) are financed through voluntary contributions of Member States of the United Nations and/or members of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency. Contributions pledged for 1978 amounted to $578.1 million, as at 30 June 1978.

Expenditures in 1977

Expenditures of UNDP in 1977 amounted to $436.4 million and were as follows (in millions of United States dollars):

Field programmes
Country projects	263.7
Intercountry projects	50.2
Programme Reserve	5.2
Special Industrial Services	3.4
Special measures for least developed countries	9.6
Subtotal	332.1
Agency overhead costs	45.3
UNDP administrative and programme support costs	59.0
Total	436.4

Expenditure ceilings for 1978

Due to financial difficulties encountered in late 1975, when UNDP faced cash flow problems, expenditure ceilings continued to be set for country and intercountry projects in 1978. The ceiling for all projects amounted to $471.7 million, including $139.6 million for projects in the Africa region, $162.8 million for Asia and the Pacific, $77.6 million for Latin America, $55.2 million for the Arab States and $20.7 million for developing countries in Europe. In addition, a ceiling of $11.2 million was placed on global projects, and $4.5 million on interregional projects.

Programme Reserve

At its June/July 1976 session, the Governing Council approved an allocation of $39.5 million for the Programme Reserve in the second programme cycle (1977-1981) to meet emergency needs. In 1977, $8.2 million of the Programme Reserve was spent, including $3 million transferred to the Special Measures Fund for least developed countries and $1 million to the United Nations Volunteers programme to finance in-country costs in least developed countries.

Projects financed under the Programme Reserve during 1977 were as follows:

Disaster-related projects in Angola, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Honduras, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mozambique, Nicaragua, the Philippines, Romania, Senegal, Somalia, Turkey and Yemen	$2,732,124
United Nations Volunteers programme in least developed countries	1,000,000
Transfer to Special Measures Fund	3,000,000
Other activities	1,455,938
Total	$8,188,062

Contributions pledged for 1978

At a joint pledging conference for UNDP, the United Nations Capital Development Fund and the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, held in New York on 2 November 1977, 105 Governments announced pledges totalling $455 million for UNDP operations in 1978. As at 30 June 1978, this figure had risen to $578,114,624, pledged by 132 countries (see table below). In addition, resources pledged to allow extra effort in favour of the least developed countries amounted to $7,785,981 (Norway: $1,930,502; Sweden: $4,301,075; Switzerland: $1,554,404).

Decisions of deliberative organs

The twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) were held from 18 January to 4 February and from 13 June to 1 July 1977.

Programme decisions

The UNDP Governing Council approved country programmes for the following 29 countries: Bolivia, Botswana, Burundi, the Central African Empire, Chile, Colombia, Democratic Yemen, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Turkey, the United Republic of Cameroon and Zambia.

The Governing Council also authorized the UNDP Administrator to incur expenditure for global programmes up to $25,000 on preparatory work in a given field without recourse to the Council on a case-by-case basis, and to incur expenditure annually for the interregional and regional programmes up to 0.1 per cent of the intercountry indicative planning figure (IPF) for programme preparation and review.

At its June/July session, the Governing Council decided, inter alia, to extend to Angola, Cape Verde, the Comoros, and Sao Tome and Principe the other benefits enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries, i.e. from the United Nations Capital Development Fund and from the special allocations for least developed countries which would become available in the future.

The Council also approved an IPF of $850,000 for Djibouti, approved a global project for assistance to the Integrated Cotton Research and Development Programme, and approved assistance to Romania from the Programme Reserve for reconstruction and rehabilitation purposes amounting to $1,572,000 following a March 1977 earthquake.

Role and activities of UNDP

At the June/July 1977 session of the UNDP Governing Council, the Administrator presented a report examining issues concerning UNDP'S role and activities which had been evolving during the period of financial difficulties (1975-1976). He asked the Council to clarify, in particular, the nature of UNDP'S substantive contribution to development efforts, its co-ordinating role within the United Nations development system as a whole, and its role as a funding channel for technical co-operation.

The Governing Council responded with a reaffirmation of those principles which had guided its decisions on the Programme's basic purpose and structure in the consensus of 1970.¹ In addition, it requested UNDP, in collaboration with its specialized agency partners in the United Nations system, to strive for greater coherence, in particular by further developing existing planning, appraisal and evaluation functions and consolidating those functions into a comprehensive system of analysis and feedback. It invited the Administrator: to work with his agency colleagues to improve substantive co-ordination of technical co-operation; to improve and expand the country programming framework to other sources of assistance, where Governments so desire; and to strengthen co-ordination at the field level in programming and implementation, taking account of the role of the resident representative as leading partner within the United Nations system at the country level.

The Governing Council appealed to Governments to increase their contributions to the maximum with a view to achieving and if possible exceeding the growth rate of 14 per cent on which planning had been predicated. It further requested Governments to assist in maintaining the coherence of the United Nations system by avoiding the creation of new technical co-operation funds, by placing existing funds wherever possible within the UNDP framework, by considering the possibility of multiyear indications of contributions to the Programme, and by more equitably sharing the responsibility for providing resources.

Finally, the Governing Council assigned to UNDP the role of the central funding body for technical co-operation in the United Nations system and requested the Administrator to invite, for informal discussions, interested Governments with a view to equitable sharing of the responsibility for providing resources for the Programme and to achieving, if possible, a multiyear financial basis for the Programme.

On 3 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2110(LXIII)) by which it noted with approval the comprehensive consideration given by the Governing Council to UNDP's role and activities, endorsed the decisions taken in that respect (which it annexed to the resolution) and decided to bring those decisions to the attention of the General Assembly.

Resolution 2110(LXIII) was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee. The Committee approved the text without vote on 1 August, as sponsored by Argentina, Brazil, Greece, Kenya, the Netherlands, Pakistan and Poland. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Later in the year, the General Assembly noted with approval the decisions of the Governing Council and of the Economic and Social Council. It invited the UNDP Administrator to continue his collaborative efforts with other United Nations organizations to strengthen UNDP's financial position and improve its management, to pursue efforts to improve substantive co-ordination within the United Nations development system and to increase substantially the number of experts from developing countries included in the lists of experts.

The Assembly also reaffirmed the validity of the consensus on United Nations development co-operation which it had approved in 1970.² In addition, it urged States to provide UNDP with the necessary resources and especially to achieve the 14 per cent annual growth rate for voluntary contributions.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/114, adopted without vote on 15 December. The text was sponsored in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by Jamaica on behalf of the Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries; it was approved by the Committee on 9 December without vote. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Technical co-operation among developing countries

At its two sessions in 1977, the UNDP Governing Council reviewed work relating to technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC).

It focused attention on the enhanced utilization of developing-country experts, consultants, fellowship placements, subcontracted services, equipment and supplies as an important means of strengthening TCDC and urged the United Nations development system to take all necessary measures to promote equal access by developing countries to opportunities to contribute to assistance projects. The Council invited developing countries to avail themselves of the services provided by the United Nations development system, in order to pool, co-ordinate, streamline and possibly twin their consultancy services.

These Governing Council decisions were endorsed on 19 December 1977, with the adoption of Assembly resolution 32/182. The Assembly called for action to assist the developing countries in designing projects which would promote TCDC, specifying a number of measures to be taken.

Resolution 32/182 was adopted without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which approved the text without vote on 7 December. It was sponsored by Jamaica on behalf of the Members belonging to the "Group of 77" and by Turkey. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In the meantime, the work of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries was going forward. Accordingly, on 5 October 1977, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 283(LXIII), noted the report of the Preparatory Committee recommending that the Conference be postponed to August-September 1978. The Council took this action, without vote, on the proposal of its President.

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly decided to convene the Conference at Buenos Aires, Argentina, from 30 August to 12 September 1978, approved the programme of activities set forth in the recommendations for the budget of the Conference and called upon all countries and relevant organizations of the United Nations system to participate in preparations for the Conference and to strengthen their public information programmes concerning it.

The Assembly's action was set forth in resolution 32/183, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which approved the text without vote on 1 December.

The text was sponsored by 45 Members. (For text of resolution and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The Economic and Social Council on 3 August 1977 adopted a resolution (2100(XXIII)) by which it called once more on UNDP, the specialized agencies and other organizations in the United Nations system to intensify their efforts, as a matter of urgency and in co-ordination with the Economic Commission for Western Asia, to identify the social and economic needs of the Palestinian people. It asked those bodies to consult and co-operate closely with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representatives of the Palestinian people, with a view to establishing and implementing projects to improve their social and economic conditions. The Council asked for this action as a matter of priority. The Council also asked all heads of organizations concerned to formulate and submit concrete proposals on this matter to their governing or legislative bodies, and it further requested the Secretary-General to submit an annual report to the Council on relevant actions taken.

Resolution 2100(LXIII) was adopted by a roll-call vote of 34 to 1, with 11 abstentions. The text was sponsored in the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee by Yugoslavia on behalf of States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77." The Committee approved it by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 11 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below; for roll-call vote, see p. 329.)

Following the vote, the United States said that it supported assistance to improve the economic and social well-being of the Palestinian people, but had voted against the resolution because the text introduced extraneous political issues outside the mandate of the Council.

United Nations Volunteers

At its June/July 1977 session, the UNDP Governing Council approved the Administrator's proposals to enhance the financial viability of the United Nations Volunteers programme by shifting the major part of its in-country costs to funding from UNDP indicative planning figures for the countries concerned. It authorized the use of up to $1 million in 1978 in regular UNDP resources to fund in-country volunteer costs in the least developed and newly independent countries, with a declining scale of additional funding in succeeding years through 1981.

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly had before it a report by the Secretary-General on the United Nations Volunteers programme. This described projects in several regions and presented a number of recommendations on the role of the programme.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly, without a vote, took note of this report and the proposals made therein and transmitted it for consideration and review by the Economic and Social Council at its first regular 1978 session. This action was embodied in decision 32/435. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had approved the text on 9 December on the proposal of the Sudan.

Resolution 2110 (LXIII), as recommended by Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, E/6039, adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1977, meeting 2084.

The Economic and Social Council,
Having considered the reports of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions,

Noting with appreciation the action taken by the Governing Council and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in full consultation with Governments and the participating and executing agencies, to restore the financial position of the Programme,

Sharing the continued concern of the Governing Council for the need to ensure that the resources for programme purposes reach at least the target set forth for the second programming cycle, 1977-1981,

Recalling its resolution 2024 (LXI) of 4 August 1976, in which it requested in particular all international organizations participating in the United Nations development system to strengthen their mutual co-ordination, both between headquarters and in the recipient countries, with a view to improving the integration of technical assistance at the country level in keeping with the consensus contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2688 (XXV) of 11 December 1970,

Noting with approval the comprehensive consideration given by the Governing Council to the role and activities of the United Nations Development Programme,

1. Endorses the decision taken by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its twenty-fourth session on the role and activities of the Programme;

2. Decides to bring this decision, reproduced in the annex to the present resolution, to the attention of the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-second session and invites the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system also to give it due consideration;

3. Looks forward to the further examination by the Governing Council of the role and activities of the United Nations Development Programme on the basis of the report which is to be prepared by the Administrator of the Programme;

4. Appeals to all Governments to increase their voluntary contributions to the maximum, with a view to achieving and, if possible, exceeding the over-all growth rate of 14 per cent on which indicative planning figures for the second programming cycle, 1977-1981, are predicated.

ANNEX

Decision of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme

The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Taking note of the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the role and activities of the Programme (DP/261) and of the observations made by members of the Governing Council during the consideration of that question and noting also the observations made by the agencies in the Council's deliberations,

Noting with appreciation the extensive efforts of the Administrator to associate the participating and executing agencies in the discussion of the Programme's role and activities,

Recalling the decisions of the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions calling for the establishment of a New International Economic Order,

Taking note that Governments, in national and international forums, have reiterated their commitment to accelerate the social and economic development of developing countries, in order to eliminate the injustice and inequality which afflict vast sections of humanity,

Emphasizing the need to expedite the implementation of the new dimensions in technical co-operation as defined at its twentieth session and the promotion of technical co-operation among developing countries,

Stressing the importance of obtaining the resources necessary to meet the requirements of the indicative planning figures for the second programming cycle,

Re-emphasizing that it is imperative that the resources of the Programme should be utilized for the maximum and efficient delivery of technical co-operation services,

Reiterating the concern expressed at its twenty-second session about the improvement of headquarters and field co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system, including the role of the resident representatives in accordance with the consensus of 1970, and taking note in particular of the decisions taken at that session on the quality and relevance of the Programme,

Reiterating also the need to ensure an integrated and interdisciplinary approach to operational activities, particularly in the field,

Recognizing the need for the continued development and strengthening of the Programme, in order to improve its work,

A. Reaffirms the validity of the consensus of 1970;

B. Reiterates the sovereign right of Governments to determine their development priorities and objectives;

C. Affirms the following:

- (i) Multilateral technical co-operation should be directed clearly and exclusively towards the goal of the national and collective self-reliance of the developing countries;
- (ii) Technical assistance programmes of the United Nations Development Programme should be increasingly oriented towards bringing about tangible transfers of technology, skills and know-how to the developing countries;
- (iii) The conceptual goals of the new dimensions in technical co-operation and technical co-operation among developing countries should be translated into operational and concrete programmes covering the range of priorities established by the developing countries;
- (iv) The Administrator of the United Nations Development

Programme should take all necessary measures to introduce more flexibility in the Programme so as to enhance its dynamism and effectiveness and to make the scope of activities and working methods of the Programme more responsive to the changing needs and priorities emerging from new economic conditions in the developing countries;

- (v) The Programme and the specialized agencies should explore together, in active consultation with both donor and recipient Governments, how best the United Nations system could effectively assist the developing countries in meeting their development priorities and objectives with regard to technical co-operation, bearing in mind the need for increasing assistance for their priority programmes for the benefit of the poorer sectors;
- (vi) As the central funding body for technical co-operation in the United Nations system, the Programme should continue to mobilize resources for technical co-operation and manage them efficiently, so as to respond effectively to the development priorities and objectives of the developing countries;
- (vii) In order to maximize the effectiveness of the technical co-operation operations of the United Nations system, the Administrator should, in full co-operation with the participating and executing agencies, further develop existing functions in respect of the planning, appraisal and evaluation of operations of this kind carried out under individual programmes, consolidating them into a comprehensive system of analysis and feedback, so as to ensure the optimal use of resources and a flexible system of programme management suited to each particular circumstance;
- (viii) The Administrator, in consultation with the executing agencies, particularly through the Inter-Agency Consultative Board and its subsidiary organs, should continue to explore the possibility of achieving harmonized financial, budgetary, personnel and planning procedures for the United Nations development system;
- (ix) Without prejudice to the universality of the Programme and its relevance to the needs of all developing countries, the Programme and the specialized agencies should continue their efforts to meet the special requirements of the least developed countries and the newly independent countries;
- (x) The Programme should aim at further strengthening its universal character by utilizing the experience and capacities of the widest possible number of countries, in particular the developing countries, for technical co-operation in all its fields and geographical areas;

D. Invites the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to continue discussions with the executing agencies, with a view to improving the substantive co-ordination of technical co-operation on the basis of the consensus of 1970, and by means of:

- (i) The progressive improvement of the country and inter-country programming process, including in particular the implementation phase, and the further study for this purpose of the recommendations of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit, in the light of the comments of members of the Governing Council, the Administrator and the executing agencies on this subject;
- (ii) The further improvement of co-ordination at the field level, with a view to strengthening the impact of the co-operation provided by the United Nations system in support of the development efforts of the developing countries, taking into account the role of the resident representatives as the leading partners within the United Nations system at the country level, as stipulated in the consensus of 1970, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 2688 (XXV);
- (iii) Where Governments so desire, in accordance with the consensus of 1970, the expansion of the country programming framework;

E. Appeals to all Governments:

- (i) To increase their voluntary contribution to the maximum, with a view to achieving and, if possible, even exceeding the over-all growth rate of 14 per cent on which the indicative planning figures for the second programming cycle are predicated;
- (ii) To consider the possibility of giving indications of contributions over a period of several years;
- (iii) To contribute to maintaining the coherence of the United Nations system by avoiding the creation of new technical co-operation funds within the United Nations system if such co-operation can be adequately undertaken by the Programme and, wherever feasible, by bringing such existing funds within the framework of the United Nations Development Programme;
- (iv) To bear in mind the need for coherence in the United Nations development system, as stated in General Assembly resolutions 2688 (XXV) of 11 December 1970 and 31/171 of 21 December 1976, in connexion with their participation in the specialized agencies of the United Nations, including also their governing bodies;
- (v) To provide that any additional resources which accrue to the Programme over and above the projected resources for the second programming cycle should, by decision of the Governing Council in each case, be allocated either to the programme reserve to be used prudently for special and extraordinary purposes above the levels of the indicative planning figures or, if required, to the operational reserve to afford protection against financial difficulties in the future; this should be without prejudice to the decision to be taken on the expert variance account deficit during the mid-term review;

F. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme:

- (i) To invite, for informal discussions, interested Governments, with a view to the equitable sharing of the responsibility for providing resources for the Programme and with a view to achieving, if possible, a multiyear financial basis for the Programme for planning purposes, bearing in mind the voluntary nature of the programme resources and the over-all flow of real resources for development assistance;
- (ii) To accept additional contributions for cost sharing and third party cost sharing within given limits, prescribed in accordance with the relevant paragraphs of the report of the Budgetary and Finance Committee at the Governing Council's twenty-fourth session;
- (iii) To encourage recipient Governments which are in a position to do so to achieve net contributor status by either increasing their contributions or forgoing their indicative planning figures;
- (iv) To make every effort possible to reduce the administrative costs of the Programme, thereby making additional resources available for programmes and projects in the developing countries;

G. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, taking into account the foregoing considerations, to prepare a report for the twenty-fifth session of the Governing Council, to facilitate the further consideration of the role and activities of the United Nations Development Programme;

H. Invites the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session to give due consideration to this decision.

Resolution 32/114, as recommended by Second Committee,

A/32/444, adopted without vote by Assembly on 15 December 1977, meeting 103.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, as well as its resolution 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also its resolution 31/171 of 21 December 1976,

Further recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 2024 (LXI) of 4 August 1976,

Having examined the reports of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions,

Reiterating the need to reach the required level of contributions to the United Nations Development Programme in order to fulfil the aims and objectives established in the second programming cycle, 1977-1981, and its concern about the lack of dynamic growth of resources for the Programme,

Noting that the results of the 1977 Pledging Conference on the United Nations Development Programme fell short of the agreed target of an over-all growth rate of 14 per cent for voluntary contributions,

Recognizing the need for the United Nations Development Programme to implement fully the new dimensions in technical co-operation, as set forth in the annex to General Assembly resolution 3405 (XXX) of 28 November 1975,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the consensus of 1970 as set forth in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2688 (XXV) of 11 December 1970;

2. Takes note of the reports of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions;

3. Notes with approval the action initiated by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 2110 (LXIII) of 3 August 1977, to reinforce the effectiveness and impact of the Programme, and requests the Governing Council, in pursuance of its considerations on the role and activities of the Programme, to take fully into account the views expressed at the sixty-third session of the Economic and Social Council and at the thirty-second session of the General Assembly;

4. Urges the Governing Council and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to ensure that the role and activities of the Programme are in accordance with the development priorities and objectives of developing countries and in line with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, in particular those related to the establishment of the new international economic order;

5. Invites the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to continue his efforts, in association with the participating and executing agencies and co-operating organizations, to strengthen the financial position of the Programme and to improve its management;

6. Further invites the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to continue discussions with the executing agencies with a view to improving the substantive co-ordination of technical co-operation on the basis of the consensus of 1970;

7. Urges all States to take measures to provide the United Nations Development Programme with the necessary resources to fulfil the aims, objectives and programmes established in the second programming cycle, 1977-1981, and especially to achieve and even exceed the over-all annual growth rate of 14 per cent for voluntary contributions, on which the indicative planning figures for the cycle are based;

8. Invites the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to pursue actively his efforts, as requested by the Governing Council, to strengthen the financial basis of the Programme, taking into account the views expressed in the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, and to report on the progress achieved to the Governing Council at its twenty-fifth session;

9. Further invites the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the heads of executing agencies to increase substantially the number of experts from developing countries to be included in the lists of experts submitted to Governments for the execution of projects financed by the Programme, including nationals from their own countries, regional and sub-regional groupings, in accordance with relevant decisions of the Governing Council.

A/32/457. Report of Second Committee, draft resolution I.

Resolution 32/182, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/457, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Bearing in mind the role of technical co-operation among developing countries as a new dimension of international co-operation as well as the conceptual and operational recommendations adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its eighteenth, twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions,

Aware of the need to implement those recommendations of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme through specific projects and programmes aimed at promoting technical co-operation among developing countries with the support of the participating and executing agencies of the United Nations system,

Bearing in mind the need for Governments and organs, organizations and other bodies within the United Nations system to contribute effectively, on the basis of experience gained in technical co-operation among developing countries, to the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries,

Reaffirming its resolutions 3251 (XXIX) of 4 December 1974 and 3461 (XXX) of 11 December 1975,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Working Group on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, as modified by the relevant decisions on technical co-operation among developing countries adopted at the eighteenth, twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme;

2. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the executive heads of participating and executing agencies and regional commissions to take all necessary measures, in the light of paragraph 1 above, for the speedy implementation of all the recommendations contained in the report of the Working Group on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries as modified by the relevant decisions of the Governing Council;

3. Also requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the executive heads of participating and executing agencies and regional commissions to assist the developing countries, at their request, in identifying, designing and executing development projects so as to promote technical co-operation among developing countries, particularly the least developed among them;

4. Further requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the executive heads of participating and executing agencies and regional commissions, in conformity with the above-mentioned decisions of the Governing Council, to formulate for approval, as appropriate, by the inter-governmental bodies concerned, suitable changes in their rules, regulations, procedures and practices for recruiting experts and consultants, placing fellows, awarding subcontracts and procuring equipment and supplies in order to utilize fully the capacity of and develop the potential existing in developing countries, irrespective of the economy and social system of the individual developing country;

5. Further requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to develop further according to its increasing needs, technical co-operation among developing countries in connexion with the Information Referral System, to update regularly and revise its information, to cover new areas and to establish appropriate linkages with the information sources of other organizations in the United Nations system, as well as those of developing countries;

6. Further requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the executive heads of participating and executing agencies and regional commissions to continue to report regularly on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Working Group on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries as modified by the above-mentioned decisions of the Governing Council, as well as on other activities undertaken by them for technical co-operation among developing countries, to the General Assembly, through the Governing Council and the Economic and Social Council, and, in relation to the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, to the Preparatory Committee for the Conference at its third session.

Recalling its resolutions 3251 (XXIX) of 4 December 1974, 3461 (XXX) of 11 December 1975 and 31/179 of 21 December 1976,

Recalling further its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Noting the recommendations made by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976 and by the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Mexico City from 13 to 22 September 1976,

Noting the Kuwait Declaration on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries of 5 June 1977,

Noting also resolution CM/Res.560 (XXIX) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-ninth ordinary session and endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 23 June to 5 July 1977,

Recalling the relevant decisions on the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its twenty-second, twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions,

Taking note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries on its first and second sessions and of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-third session and of its special meeting held on 3 October 1977,

Taking note further of the conclusions and recommendations of the regional intergovernmental meetings on technical co-operation among developing countries, held in Asia and the Pacific, Latin America, Africa and Western Asia,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the Conference for the ongoing preparations for the Conference,

Recognizing that the basic objectives of technical co-operation among developing countries are the furthering of the national and collective self-reliance of developing countries and the enhancement of their creative capacity to solve their development problems,

1. Decides to convene the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries at Buenos Aires from 30 August to 12 September 1978;

2. Approves the programme of activities envisaged in the recommendations on the budget for the Conference to be financed under the regular budget of the United Nations as submitted in the report of the Secretary-General of the Conference;

3. Calls upon developing countries to continue to participate actively in the preparations for the Conference and, to this end, to intensify the activities of the Governments' focal points, to establish committees for national preparations or other bodies, as appropriate, and to organize the participation of professional, technical, voluntary and other organizations in all the stages of the preparatory process and the Conference;

4. Calls upon developed countries to continue to participate actively in the preparations for the Conference, particularly by identifying such measures in their development aid and co-operation as would promote and strengthen programmes and projects for technical co-operation among developing countries;

5. Urges all countries and relevant organizations of the United Nations system to take the necessary measures to strengthen their public information programmes relating to the Conference with a view to creating an awareness of the importance of technical co-operation among developing countries;

6. Requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to transmit the present resolution to the Governments of Member States, with the request that they provide information to the Preparatory Committee for the Conference before its third session on the measures adopted to strengthen or implement the recommendations contained in paragraphs 3 to 5 above;

7. Requests the participating and executing agencies, including the regional commissions, to continue to give priority to their participation in the preparations for the Conference and to use their wide experience of technical co-operation in their contributions within the interagency task force for the Conference towards the preparation of the relevant documentation and of the plan of action and to ensure that their public information material includes items on the objectives and current state of preparations for the Conference;

8. Requests all organizations of the United Nations system actively to assist developing countries and the representatives invited to the Conference referred to in paragraph 3 (b) and (c) of its resolution 31/179 in their preparations for the Conference.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3210 (XXIX) of 14 October 1974, 3236 (XXIX) and 3237 (XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and Council resolutions 1978 (LIX) of 31 July 1975 and 2026 (LXI) of 4 August 1976,

Taking into consideration the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the Palestinian people,

Bearing in mind the views expressed during the sixty-third session of the Council,

1. Calls once more upon the United Nations Development Programme, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue and to intensify, as a matter of urgency and in co-ordination with the Economic Commission for Western Asia, their efforts in identifying the social and economic needs of the Palestinian people;

2. Urges these agencies and organizations to consult and co-operate closely with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, with a view to establishing and fully implementing concrete projects to ensure the improvement of the social and economic conditions of the Palestinian people;

3. Calls upon agencies and organizations within the United Nations system that have not taken the necessary action in conformity with Council resolution 2026 (LXI) to do so as a matter of priority;

4. Urges the executive heads of the organizations and agencies concerned to formulate and submit to their respective governing and/or legislative bodies concrete proposals for ensuring, in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the effective implementation of the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 above;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an annual report to the Council on the action taken by the agencies and organizations concerned and the results achieved.

United Nations programmes of technical co-operation

The term "United Nations programmes of technical co-operation" is used in a collective sense to describe the activities carried out by the United Nations in developing countries. These activities are financed under the regular budget of the United Nations, under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) or by funds-in-trust.

Activities in 1977

During 1977, obligations for the United Nations programmes of technical co-operation were $83,191,004, as against $92,446,185 in 1976. The decrease was due to reductions in programme expenditures under projects financed through UNDP and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA).

The expenditures in 1977 were as follows:

(1) regular budget programmes, that is, financed under the United Nations regular budget—$8,390,245;

(2) allocations under UNDP—$52,161,641;

(3) extrabudgetary operations financed by United Nations trust funds—$10,202,400: these included projects financed by recipient Governments, the provision of services of associate experts, special educational and training programmes for southern Africa, and projects financed by non-governmental organizations, the United Nations Environment Programme and several specialized agencies; and

(4) extrabudgetary operations financed by UNDP trust funds—$12,436,718: these were mainly operations financed by UNFPA, the United Nations Capital Development Fund, the Lesotho and Swaziland trust funds and the Zaire Trust Fund.

The largest expenditures made during 1977 were in the fields of: development planning, projections and policies; resources and transport; statistics; public administration, physical planning and housing; population; and social development.

The percentage of obligations incurred by region were: Africa, 41 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 25.1 per cent; the Americas, 17.2 per cent; the Middle East, 8.8 per cent; Europe, 2.4 per cent; and interregional, 5.5 per cent.

Under the regular programme, intercountry activities accounted for 83.1 per cent of total expenditures in 1977, as against 74 per cent in 1976. Country project expenditures amounted to 16.9 per cent of the total, as against 26 per cent the previous year.

Under UNDP, intercountry expenditures accounted for 11.3 per cent in 1977, as against 17.1 per cent in 1976, while country activities amounted to 88.7 per cent in 1977, as against 82.9 per cent in 1976.

Funds-in-trust activities accounted for 29.9 per cent in 1977, as against 28.9 per cent in 1976, for intercountry projects, while country project expenditures in 1977 amounted to 70.1 per cent, as against 71.1 per cent in 1976.

The number of experts assigned for project implementation in 1977 totalled 1,610, a decrease of 535 from 1976. The number of training fellowships during 1977 totalled 1,637, as against 1,028 in 1976.

The tables below show the number of experts, the amount of technical assistance expenditures by field of activity and the regional distribution of such expenditures in 1977.

Provision of operational assistance personnel

During 1977, under projects administered by the United Nations for the provision of operational assistance personnel, there were 40 officers filling posts in the following 17 countries and territories: Bahrain, Belize, the Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Nigeria, Oman, Rwanda, St. Lucia, Samoa, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Yemen and Zambia.

The operational assistance officers were appointed as officials of the Government being assisted, with the task of training nationals to fill their positions as soon as possible.

Decisions of the Economic and Social Council

The Secretary-General submitted to the June/July 1977 session of the UNDP Governing Council his annual report on technical co-operation activities undertaken by the United Nations in 1976, and pertinent statistical data. The Economic and Social Council, with the adoption of resolution 210 (LXIII) on 3 August 1977, took action on the reports of the UNDP Governing Council. (For text of resolution 2110(LXIII) refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Decisions of the General Assembly

The budget appropriations for the United Nations for the biennium 1976-1977 included an appropriation of $14,993,900 for the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation. This total included $11,271,300 to finance technical co-operation activities in the fields of economic development, social welfare and public administration. An amount of $3,622,600 was provided for regional and subregional advisory services, and $100,000 for special educational and training programmes for southern Africa.

^b The totals for experts by country of assignment are somewhat higher than the totals shown by nationality because a number of individual experts had more than one country of assignment.

^c The totals for fellowships by host country are somewhat higher than the totals shown by nationality because some fellowship awards called for study in two or more countries.

^d The figures given under the heading "Supplied by" are based on orders placed in the various countries during the course of 1977, whereas the figures given under the heading "Received by" are based on estimated expenditure within the year. Consequently the totals of the two equipment columns do not correspond exactly.

^e UNDP data in all five categories do not include agency overhead costs.

^f Regular programme data in all five categories refer to technical assistance activities, other than those carried out under UNDP, which were financed from regular budgetary resources of other organizations of the United Nations family.

The World Food Programme

In 1977, the World Food Programme (WFP), a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), continued to provide food aid to developing countries to assist them in carrying out development projects, and continued to meet emergency food needs.

Activities in 1977

The target for WFP's food aid pledges for 1977-1978 was set at $750 million; pledges reached more than $610 million, or some 81 per cent of the target, as at the end of 1977. A pledging target of $950 million was proposed for 1979 and 1980. (For list of 1977-1978 pledges, see table below.)

During 1977, Governments parties to the Food Aid Convention of 1971 contributed 292,197 metric tons of grain, valued at $42 million including cash for shipment, to the developing countries. Of this quantity, 3,000 metric tons were for the crop year 1972/73, 3,070 for the year 1975/76, 222,127 for 1976/77 and 64,000 for 1977/78. (For a list of contributions under the Food Aid Convention, see table below.)

The Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA), a 30-nation body responsible for co-ordinating international food aid, particularly emergency food aid, held two sessions in 1977. At these sessions, CFA approved 29 projects for economic and social development at a cost of $311 million. This represented 86 per cent, in value terms, of total commitments for projects for the year. An additional 38 projects were approved by the Executive Director of the World Food Programme. (For list of approved projects, see table below.)

The largest project was for the expansion of a programme of supplementary nutrition for pre-school children, pregnant women and nursing mothers in India, at a cost of $28 million. Other large school-feeding projects were in Egypt ($18 million) and the Philippines ($18 million).

The World Food Programme was assisted in the preparation of projects by organizations of the United Nations, in particular FAO and UNDP, which also provided technical and development assistance to recipient Governments for several projects for which WFP furnished food aid. In addition, WFP's activities were co-ordinated with those of bilateral programmes and with development activities of non-governmental organizations.

Assistance to refugees was an important function of WFP and was designed to contribute to the programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

Emergency operations

At its fourth session, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes increased the allocation of WFP resources set aside for emergency food aid from $40 million to $45 million for both 1977 and 1978.

In 1977, WFP helped to meet emergency food needs of about 18 million people in 23 countries through a total of 31 relief operations. This assistance amounted to about 319,386 tons of food commodities at a cost of nearly $86 million, including $45 million provided by the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR), which was set up in 1976 at the recommendation of the 1974 World Food Conference. Contributions for 1977 to IEFR amounted to 141,672 metric tons valued at $27.6 million.

The largest recipients of emergency assistance were Viet Nam, Bangladesh and Lebanon. (For list of emergency allocations and IEFR contributions, see tables below.)

In addition, during 1977 WFP, in co-operation with bilateral and multilateral agencies, carried out an operation to assist Sahelian countries adversely affected by drought. The Executive Director arranged for 100,000 metric tons of food commodities to be sent to the area to meet the urgent need for food. This was WFP's first regional operation.

Decisions of deliberative bodies

The Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme held its third session from 16 to 27 May and its fourth session from 24 October to 4 November 1977, both at Rome, Italy. It submitted a report on its work to the July/August 1977 session of the Economic and Social Council in which it reviewed recent developments in food aid policies and discussed food aid requirements and food aid targets for cereals. Among other things, CFA urged donor countries to fulfil without further delay the minimum food aid target of 10 million tons of cereals and to introduce forward planning in physical terms to ensure continuity of food aid.

To improve nutritional standards in developing countries, CFA recognized the need for diversifying food aid to include adequate quantities of commodities other than cereals. It also urged donor countries to channel more food aid through multilateral agencies such as WFP.

At the third session, CFA approved the text of a draft resolution on the target for WFP pledges for the period 1979-1980 which it proposed for adoption by the Economic and Social Council and the Council of FAO (see below). At its fourth session, CFA revised the General Regulations of WFP and forwarded the text to the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council for approval.

At its mid-1977 session, the Economic and Social Council adopted two decisions concerning the work of WFP. By decision 260(LXIII), adopted without vote on 3 August, the Council took note of the report of CFA. The Council took this action on the recommendation of its Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text on 1 August on a proposal by its Chairman.

By the other decision—268(LXIII)—the Council transmitted the report of CFA to the General Assembly. It also recommended to the Assembly for approval the draft resolution on the target for WFP pledges for the period 1979-1980 contained in an annex to the report.

Decision 268(LXIII) was adopted, without a vote, on 4 August 1977 on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee, which approved the text without a vote on 21 July as proposed by its Chairman.

Later in the year, on 31 October, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2128 (LXIII)) by which it submitted to the General Assembly the text of the proposed resolution establishing a target for contributions to WFP and calling for a pledging conference to be convened early in 1978. Resolution 2128(LXIII) was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of CFA, which had approved a pledging target of $950 million at its fourth session. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

the recommended text without vote as its resolution 32/112. It thereby established a target of $950 million for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme for the two years 1979 and 1980. Of this amount, not less than one third should be in cash and/or services. The Assembly requested that a pledging conference be convened at United Nations Headquarters early in 1978 and decided that the conference for pledges for 1981 and 1982 should be convened early in 1980 at the latest.

The text was recommended to the Assembly by its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved it without vote on 5 December. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Resolution 32/112, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/444, adopted without vote by Assembly on 15 December 1977, meeting 103.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provision contained in paragraph 1 of its resolution 2095 (XX) of 20 December 1965 under which the World Food Programme is to be reviewed before each pledging conference,

Recalling also the provisions of paragraph 4 of its resolution 3407 (XXX) of 28 November 1975 whereby, subject to the above-mentioned review, the pledging conference at which Governments should be invited to pledge contributions for 1979 and 1980, with a view to reaching such a target as may then be recommended by the General Assembly and by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, should be convened, at the latest, early in 1978,

Noting that the review of the World Food Programme was undertaken by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes at its third session and by the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session,

Having considered Economic and Social Council resolution 2128 (LXIII) of 31 October 1977 and the recommendations made by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes in its second annual report,

Recognizing the value of multilateral food aid as implemented by the World Food Programme since its inception and the necessity for continuing its action both as a form of capital investment and for meeting emergency food needs,

1. Establishes for the two years 1979 and 1980 a target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme of $950 million, of which not less than one third should be in cash and/or services in the aggregate, and expresses the hope that resources so contributed will be augmented by substantial additional contributions from other sources in recognition of the prospective volume of sound project requests and the capacity of the Programme to operate at a higher level;

2. Urges States Members of the United Nations or members or associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to make every effort to ensure the full attainment of the target;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to convene a pledging conference for this purpose at United Nations Headquarters early in 1978;

4. Decides that, subject to the review of the World Food Programme provided for in paragraph 1 of General Assembly resolution 2095 (XX), the pledging conference at which Governments should be invited to pledge contributions for 1981 and 1982, with a view to reaching such a target as may then be recommended by the Assembly and by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, should be convened, at the latest, early in 1980.

Chapter V

Trade and development

The main thrust of the activities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in 1977 was directed towards negotiations in the areas in which the fourth session of the Conference (held at Nairobi, Kenya, in 1976)¹ had called for action. Chief among these were commodities, transfer of technology and restrictive business practices. Also, UNCTAD supported major new programmes in a number of other important fields, including trade in manufactures, trade between countries with different economic and social systems, problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and economic co-operation among developing countries themselves. Its contribution to the establishment of a new international economic order and its progress in implementing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade were discussed. In addition, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD was asked to set up an expert group to study inflation.

The fourth session of UNCTAD had called for a series of negotiations on two parallel fronts under the Integrated Programme for Commodities. On the one hand, these negotiations related to individual commodities listed in Conference resolution 93(IV)² and, on the other, to an effort to establish a common financing fund. The meetings on individual commodities and those on the common fund were part of a single exercise, subject to a single timetable and to supervision by a single intergovernmental committee which was set up within UNCTAD for that purpose.

Meetings on a number of individual commodities were held—on copper, jute and jute products, hard fibres, phosphates, rubber, tropical timber, manganese, cotton, vegetable oils and oilseeds, and iron ore—as well as a meeting of a group on tungsten. The over-all objective of the negotiations was to stabilize and regulate commodity markets through concrete arrangements. A new International Sugar Agreement was concluded under the auspices of UNCTAD in 1977: provision was made therein for the relevant aspects of the Agreement to be reviewed if and when a common fund was set up so that this commodity could take advantage of the benefits offered.

The first session of the United Nations Negotiating Conference on a Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities was held in March/April and the first part of the second session in November/December 1977. Although agreement was reached in principle on the desirability of establishing a common fund as a key instrument of the Integrated Programme, no conclusions were reached on its character and the modalities of its operations. Later in the year, the General Assembly reaffirmed the urgency of establishing the common fund and requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to undertake consultations with a view to reconvening the Negotiating Conference early in 1978.

Continuation of the work on drafting an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology took place during the year at three sessions of an intergovernmental group of experts convened by UNCTAD; it expected to complete its work in 1978. On 19 December, the General Assembly decided to convene in 1978, under UNCTAD auspices, a United Nations conference to negotiate and to take all decisions necessary for the adoption of an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology.

Other aspects of UNCTAD'S work in the field of transfer of technology were its collaboration with the World Intellectual Property Organization on the revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property and its activities to help develop the indigenous technological capabilities of the developing countries. To that end, it aided the United Nations regional commissions in setting up regional centres for technology.

Closely related to these activities were negotiations undertaken in the field of restrictive business practices. These had the objective of formulating a set of multilaterally agreed equitable principles and rules for the control of restrictive business practices having adverse effects on international trade, particularly that of developing countries, and on the economic development of these countries, which faced a trend during 1977 of intensified protectionist barriers in the markets of the industrialized countries for their manufactured products. Co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme continued through training and advisory services on the generalized system of preferences, as did other forms of technical assistance and work to improve the various aspects of the system.

To promote economic co-operation among developing countries, the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries developed a work programme which included: specialized study of the feasibility of a system of trade preferences for the developing countries; the possibility of establishing multinational ventures among developing countries, particularly in the field of marketing and distribution of commodities; and the possibility of co-operative links between State trading enterprises within the developing countries.

Two groups of experts were convened in 1977 to identify trade opportunities and to study a multilateral system of payments between countries having different economic and social systems. The Committee on Shipping met in April and took a number of decisions on fleet development, port problems and technical and financial assistance. Work on a multimodal transport convention progressed.

Aspects of the interdependence of the problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system were considered in 1977, consultations were initiated to improve the character of data on financial flows to developing countries and studies were undertaken to promote exports from developing countries.

Preliminary work began on the matter of the debt problems of developing countries. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the External Indebtedness of Developing Countries met twice in 1977 and its reports were to be considered at the ministerial session of the Trade and Development Board in March 1978 (see p. 408).

The date and venue for the fifth session of UNCTAD was set—Manila, Philippines, May 1979.

These decisions and others are described in the sections that follow.

General trade and development questions

Role Of UNCTAD

The two-volume report of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), covering the work of the Board's sessions during 1977, was submitted to the Economic and Social Council in the second half of the year in accordance with past practice. The Council, on 31 October (decision 289(LXIII)), took note of the report and transmitted it to the Assembly for consideration at its 1977 session, where it was discussed in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee at meetings held between 1 November and 16 December.

Following the discussion, Jamaica, on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations which were members of the "Group of 77" developing countries, introduced a draft resolution on the subject. By this text the Assembly would take cognizance of the importance of the issues under negotiation, consideration or review in UNCTAD, in particular the Integrated Programme for Commodities and the establishment of a common fund, the debt problems of developing countries, the international code of conduct on the transfer of technology, and equitable principles and rules for restrictive business practices. It would also note the important contribution that UNCTAD'S work programme could make to the establishment of the new international economic order. Reaffirming the need to strengthen UNCTAD'S effectiveness as the organ with the major role within the United Nations system in the negotiation of global economic issues relating to trade and co-operation in the context of establishing that new order, the Assembly would affirm that measures should be taken to enable UNCTAD to play its envisaged role in deliberation, negotiation, review and implementation in international trade and related issues of economic co-operation. By this text, the Assembly would also request UNCTAD to keep under review the interrelated problems of international trade and international economic co-operation, and the impact of United Nations negotiations, especially on the trade and development of developing countries, with a view to contributing to their solution. Further, it would urge members of UNCTAD to expedite decisions and agreements on matters under negotiation.

In view of the short time available to study the text, the draft resolution was withdrawn and a procedural decision proposed by Canada, taking note of the reports of the Trade and Development Board on its 1977 sessions, was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 16 December 1977.

This action was incorporated in decision 32/446, which the General Assembly adopted without vote on 19 December.

Effects of inflation on development

Inasmuch as the effects of the current inflationary phenomenon had become universal in their negative impact on the economies of all countries, particularly the developing countries, and inflation control required the priority attention of the international community as a whole—since isolated national measures were not sufficient to control, and developing countries were not capable of controlling, internationally transmitted inflation—the General Assembly, on 19 December 1977, asked the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to establish a high-level governmental group of experts to prepare a comprehensive study of that phenomenon. The group was to recommend ways to combat the inflationary process and to reduce its economic and social effects.

The results of the study, together with the comments of the Trade and Development Board, were to be transmitted to the Assembly in 1978, through the Economic and Social Council. The Assembly could then decide on what action to take, including the possibility of holding a world conference on inflation.

These actions were embodied in Assembly resolution 32/175, by which the Assembly also recommended that the international community devote special attention to this problem in negotiations concerning the establishment of the new international economic order and in preparing a new international development strategy for the coming decade.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

On 2 September 1977, at the closing meeting of the first part of its seventeenth session, the Trade and Development Board adopted a decision by which it revised the terms of reference of its newly established Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries.

Accordingly, the Committee was to consider and recommend measures to provide support and assistance to developing countries in strengthening and enlarging their mutual co-operation at all levels. The Committee was to work under the general guidance of the Trade and Development Board, promoting general and consistent support policies and assisting the Board in reviewing and implementing UNCTAD decisions in the field of economic co-operation among developing countries. Among other tasks, it was to consider studies and proposals, formulate recommendations, and review, co-ordinate and report on the implementation of support measures, including technical assistance, from the United Nations system to efforts in this field.

At the same meeting, the Board took note of the report of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries on its first session, held in two parts in February and May 1977, and endorsed the programme of work the Committee had adopted at that session.

The General Assembly, when it adopted resolution 32/180 on 19 December 1977, took note of this decision. (For further information, see p. 410; refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS for text of resolution 32/180.)

Review of implementation of the International Development Strategy

On 29 April 1977, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD convened its eighth special session, for the purpose of conducting its third biennial review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.³ The scope of the review had been broadened to include progress achieved and improvement of the role of UNCTAD in implementing the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the Assembly's 1975 resolution on development and international economic co-operation,⁴ with particular reference to policy measures falling within UNCTAD's competence, and to include formulation of appropriate recommendations.

At the close of the session, on 4 May, the Board adopted the text of an agreed conclusion submitted by its President. Thereby, the Board transmitted to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as a contribution to their debates and discussions, a number of documents it had incorporated in its report which had been submitted to assist it in formulating its contribution to the review and appraisal process.

Special intergovernmental committee on international trade

On 19 December 1977, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the General Assembly, by decision 32/445, decided without vote to defer consideration of a draft resolution submitted by the States Members of the Group of 77 concerning the establishment within UNCTAD of a special intergovernmental committee on international trade to prepare a draft general agreement on trade. Consideration of the text had been postponed since 1975.⁵ On an oral proposal of its Chairman, the Second Committee had again recommended the deferment, without a vote, on 13 December.

Financing related to trade and the international monetary system

The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in 1977 considered several aspects of the question of financing related to trade and of the international monetary system. The interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system was considered by the Board at the first part (August/September 1977) of its seventeenth session. The world economic outlook for 1977 and 1978 was discussed, as were policy issues—such as demand management, the balance-of-payments adjustment process, trade, international price stability and investment—affecting the restoration of stable, equitable and full-employment growth conditions in the world economy. The Board again deferred a draft resolution on this issue remitted from previous sessions, but decided to keep the question of interdependence on its agenda for future sessions.

In the context of the role of UNCTAD in implementing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, reviewed during the Board's eighth special session in April/May 1977 (see subchapter above), the Board discussed the report of the third session of the Group of Governmental Experts on the Concepts of the Present Aid and Flow Targets, held in New York from 7 to 16 March 1977. The Group had concluded that there appeared to be broad inconsistency between the targets on aid and the targets on growth contained in the Strategy; a more comprehensive analysis and documentation would be needed to devise a soundly based strategy for the next decade.

The report was again considered at the August/September meetings, when the Board's Sessional Committee I considered the subject of financing related to trade. On 2 September, the Board asked the UNCTAD secretariat, in association with the United Nations Statistical Office, to undertake consultations with experts from the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the International Monetary Fund, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Bank for International Settlements, regional development institutions and intergovernmental organizations about the character of data on financial flows to developing countries. In the light of a report to be submitted on those consultations, the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade was asked to review the tasks to be performed by the Group of Governmental Experts at its next session.

On the same date, the Board also adopted a resolution by which it asked the Committee on Invisibles to consider and submit conclusions on a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General examining technical issues related to an export credit guarantee facility as a means of promoting exports from developing countries.

At its session later in the year, the General Assembly adopted, on 19 December, a resolution (32/177) on finance for development by which, inter alia, the United Nations Secretary-General was requested to examine, with the assistance of a group of high-level experts, the questions of (a) the guarantee powers of existing international financial institutions and their possible enlargement, and (b) the feasibility and desirability of establishing a multilateral insurance and reinsurance agency. He was to report thereon to the Assembly in 1978.

Questions relating to merchandise trade

Commodities

A new International Sugar Agreement was concluded in 1977 at a two-part United Nations Sugar Conference held under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (18 April to 27 May and 12 September to 7 October) at Geneva. The main objective of the Agreement, which was to enter into force on 1 January 1978, was to stabilize conditions in international sugar trade at prices remunerative and just to producers and equitable to consumers.

A preparatory meeting for the United Nations Conference on Olive Oil, 1978, was held under UNCTAD auspices in September.

Two sessions of an Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Tungsten, established by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board at its eighth special session on 4 May 1977 to examine proposals for stabilizing the world tungsten market, were held in 1977—from 18 to 22 July and from 28 November to 2 December. When the Group's work was completed it was to report to the Committee on Tungsten.

An intensive series of meetings was held in Geneva in 1977 within the framework of the Integrated Programme for Commodities established in May 1976 by UNCTAD in its resolution 93(IV),⁶ including 21 preparatory and associated meetings on 10 individual commodities.

Two preparatory meetings on rubber were held during the year (January and June). An intergovernmental task force, set up to consider a possible commodity agreement to stabilize rubber prices, recommended that the next preparatory meeting take a formal decision regarding the negotiation of such an international agreement.

A preparatory meeting on copper was held in May. Its intergovernmental group of experts met four times in 1977, and discussed approaches to copper problems.

At preparatory meetings on jute and jute products in January/February, April and July, the main issues considered were: market stabilization, research, development, promotion and access; cost reduction; shipping; and synthetic substitutes. An intergovernmental working group was set up to finalize recommendations and prepare draft proposals for an international arrangement or arrangements.

Preparatory meetings on tropical timber took place in May and October at which an extensive work programme was prepared, and one on manganese was held in June. A preparatory meeting on cotton, also in June, decided to continue its work at the level of governmental experts.

A preparatory meeting on vegetable oils and oilseeds, held in June/July, considered problems of market access and instability, trends in prices, fluctuations in export earnings, competition from synthetics, and the competitive position of developing countries. It recommended that a second meeting be held.

The October preparatory meeting on iron ore recommended that an intergovernmental group of experts be convened to collect and study information on the world iron-ore economy. The preparatory meeting on hard fibres, also held in October, recommended elements for an action programme for further consideration. A preparatory meeting on phosphates in December recommended continuation of its work examining problems of the world phosphate market, collecting and analysing information and recommending measures and techniques.

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee for the Integrated Programme for Commodities, at sessions in March, July and December, reviewed progress under UNCTAD resolution 93(IV) and the schedule of meetings under the Integrated Programme. It expressed concern at the insufficient progress made on individual commodities and urged Governments to move towards action more decisively.

Following preparatory meetings for the negotiation of a common fund in January and February/March, the United Nations Negotiating Conference on a Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities was convened on 7 March 1977. Lengthy discussions were held on the issues set out in resolution 93(IV), with the main emphasis on the objectives and the modes of operation of a common fund. The participating Governments adjourned on 2 April and reconvened on 7 November to consider proposals tabled by different groups of countries. It was not possible to obtain agreement on the basic elements of a common fund that would make it a key instrument of the Integrated Programme and, as there appeared to be no basis for continuing negotiations at that stage, the Conference was suspended on 1 December. All groups, how-

The Trade and Development Board, whose Sessional Committee I had considered the matter at its August/September 1977 session, adopted, on 2 September, a decision by which it urged all Governments participating in the negotiations on a common fund and in preparatory meetings and negotiations on individual commodities to participate more effectively and decisively to attain, within the agreed time-frame, the objectives for which they had been convened.

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly expressed concern that the Negotiating Conference had not produced the desired results, and expressed its awareness of the serious repercussions this would have on negotiations on individual commodities and on implementation of the Integrated Programme as a whole, as well as on international economic co-operation and future relationships between developed and developing countries.

On 19 December, it adopted resolution 32/193 by which, in addition to voicing those concerns, it reaffirmed the urgency of establishing the common fund, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to undertake consultations towards reconvening the Negotiating Conference early in 1978 and expressed appreciation to States which had announced pledges to the common fund. It called on States to take the necessary political decisions on the basic elements of a common fund which would make it a key instrument for attaining the objectives of the Integrated Programme, to enable the Negotiating Conference to resume within a clearly established negotiating framework.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 127 to 0, with 13 abstentions. Its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee recommended the text, which it had approved on 16 December by 102 votes to 0, with 13 abstentions, on a proposal by Jamaica on behalf of the States Members belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

Explaining its abstention, Japan said it could not accept a preambular paragraph stating that failure to agree on basic elements of a common fund as a key instrument of the Integrated Programme was in clear contradiction of the commitments made at the Paris Conference on International Economic Co-operation (see p. 395). The suspension of the Negotiating Conference did not mean the withdrawal of commitments made at the Paris Conference, Japan said; Australia, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and New Zealand noted that their abstentions should also be understood in that light.

Moreover, Japan did not believe that agreement on the basic elements of a common fund should be a pre-condition for the resumption of the Negotiating Conference. Belgium and Ireland agreed with that view. Italy said the text took no account of the views of some Members and therefore did not create a propitious climate for successful negotiations, while the United Kingdom considered that the text contained serious inaccuracies and over-simplifications.

Manufactures

The Committee on Manufactures held its eighth session at Geneva in July 1977. At this session it examined, inter alia, the development of a comprehensive set of interrelated and mutually supporting measures adopted by the fourth session of UNCTAD in 1976 by resolution 96(IV),⁷ for expansion and diversification of exports of manufactures of developing countries.

The Committee examined developments and issues in the multilateral trade negotiations of particular concern to developing countries, international trade in textiles, adjustment assistance measures, and the extent to which previously agreed provisions on the standstill had been adhered to (that existing import restrictions would not be intensified nor new ones introduced, affecting particularly exports of developing countries). The spokesman for the Group of 77, in a statement annexed to the Committee's report, expressed concern at the critical position of the developing countries, regretting that international practices had fallen short of the pledges made to create conditions for the expansion and diversification of exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures from developing countries.

Draft resolutions on adjustment assistance measures, on safeguards and standstill, and on export subsidies and countervailing duties, which had been remitted to the Committee by the Trade and Development Board, were deferred for consideration at its next session.

The Trade and Development Board, at its August/September session, discussed the report of the Committee on Manufactures, principally in its Sessional Committee I, and took note of the Committee's report.

The Third Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices, established under Conference resolution 96(IV), held its second and third sessions in May and October 1977. The Group was to prepare proposals and recommendations, inter alia, on negotiations for the formulation of a set of multilaterally agreed equitable principles and rules for the control of restrictive business practices, including those of transnational corporations adversely affecting international trade and economic development, particularly of developing countries. Agreement was reached at these sessions on the objectives and on certain aspects of action at national and international levels. The Group was also to make recommendations regarding supply and exchange of information for the control of restrictive practices having adverse effects on developing countries, the collection and dissemination of such information, and the provision of technical assistance to developing countries, especially in the training of officials. The Group asked the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare the first draft of the model law or laws on restrictive business practices to assist developing countries in devising legislation.

The Committee on Manufactures, which considered the Group's reports at its eighth session, asked the Group to proceed expeditiously with its work and to report again at its next session. Subsequently, the Trade and Development Board took note of a request of the Committee that, in the light of the final report of the Group of Experts, the Board should take appropriate action concerning institutional arrangements with regard to the negotiations envisaged in Conference resolution 96(IV).

Trade negotiations

Multilateral trade negotiations

During discussion of the report of the Committee on Manufactures on its July 1977 session by the Trade and Development Board in August/September, the representatives of some developing countries noted that the Committee had not been able to make adequate progress because some of the matters dealt with—such as multilateral trade negotiations and international trade in textiles—were being actively pursued in other fora. The spokesman for "Group D" countries (Eastern Europe) regretted that the important problem of growing protectionism in developed market-economy countries had not been reflected in the work of the Committee on Manufactures and stated that UNCTAD should focus its attention on those problems and seek ways and means to weaken the forces of protectionism. The spokesman for "Group B" countries (Western European and other States) welcomed the prospects presented by the multilateral trade negotiations and the will to accelerate the negotiations.

Generalized system of preferences

At the conclusion of its 1976 session, the Special Committee on Preferences had recommended the extension, beyond April 1977, of a joint UNCTAD/UNDP (United Nations Development Programme) project on training and advisory services on the generalized system of preferences, and that the project should continue to co-ordinate its activities with the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) in the field of export promotion and with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other appropriate international institutions in the promotion of industrialization programmes in developing countries relating to items covered by the generalized system of preferences. Pursuant to these recommendations, UNDP agreed to finance, up to 31 December 1978, a smaller project which was to act as a focal point for organizing and providing assistance to developing countries by holding national seminars for dissemination of information on the preference scheme.

Pursuant to another recommendation, the Working Group on Rules of Origin reconvened in April 1977 to continue work on improving the rules, including greater harmonization and simplification. It found some harmonization and improvement by preference-giving countries and noted requests addressed to these countries for further efforts in this field.

At its eighth session, held from 27 June to 1 July 1977, the Special Committee on Preferences agreed to the desirability of reviewing procedures for consultations on individual schemes of preference-giving countries, including the improvement of existing procedures and the establishment, as appropriate, of additional procedures. The Secretary-General of UNCTAD was asked to make proposals in this respect to the Trade and Development Board.

The Special Committee also recommended to the Board that the Working Group on Rules of Origin should reconvene in October 1978 to complete its task.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling resolution 93(IV) of 30 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the Integrated Programme for Commodities and the agreed timetable in that resolution concerning negotiation of a common fund and for the completion of all preparatory meetings and negotiations on individual commodities,

Noting the intensive work at the three preparatory meetings, held under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development during the period from November 1976 to March 1977, to provide the necessary technical basis for the United Nations Negotiating Conference on a Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities,

Concerned that the first part of the Negotiating Conference, held from 7 March to 2 April 1977, failed to produce any result,

Noting the agreement of Governments that a common fund should be established as a new entity to serve as a key instrument in attaining the agreed objectives of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, as embodied in resolution 93 (IV) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the agreement that the specific purpose and objectives of a common fund, as well as its other constituent elements will continue to be negotiated in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and the pledge to secure a successful conclusion at the second part of the Negotiating Conference, which was scheduled to be held from 7 November to 2 December 1977 at the plenipotentiary level,

Deeply concerned that the second part of the Negotiating Conference had to be suspended on 1 December 1977 because of failure to agree on even the basic elements of a common fund which would make it a key instrument of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, in clear contradiction of the commitments made at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation, held in Paris, and subsequently reaffirmed within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Mindful of the serious repercussions which this lack of result will have on the current negotiations on individual commodities and on the implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities as a whole,

Acutely aware that the failure of the negotiations on a common fund will adversely affect the course of international economic co-operation, with serious consequences for the future relationships between developed and developing countries,

Noting also that the developing countries and many developed countries are agreed on those basic elements of a common fund which will indeed make it a key instrument for attaining the agreed objectives of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, and expressing appreciation to those countries which have announced pledges to the common fund,

1. Calls upon those countries which have not yet done so to take the necessary political decisions on such basic elements in order to enable the United Nations Negotiating Conference on a Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities to resume its work within a clearly established negotiating framework;

2. Reaffirms the urgency of establishing the common fund and, to that end, requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to undertake consultations with a view to reconvening the Negotiating Conference early in 1978.

Invisibles, including shipping

At the eighth session of the Committee on Shipping, held at Geneva from 12 to 22 April 1977, the Committee adopted several resolutions relating to shipping and ports.

By a resolution on fleet development, the Committee requested the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) to prepare guidelines to increase the competitiveness of the merchant marines of developing countries, especially in the dry and liquid bulk sectors. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene an expert group to study financing available for ship acquisition and propose improvements in financing methods to help developing countries expand their fleets.

By another decision the Committee asked for a paper on the possibilities of obtaining more favourable freight rates for developing land-locked countries, so that the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board could formulate recommendations to Governments. Another resolution recognized the urgent need to alleviate the problem of port congestion; appropriate measures to this end were recommended, including setting up a trust fund to field task forces to requesting countries and a pilot study on congestion surcharge schemes to encourage port improvements and sharing the benefits of those improvements.

By a fourth resolution, the Committee asked States to create and strengthen shippers' organizations to represent the interests of national users of shipping services and to encourage regional and subregional groupings to obtain the most economical services. The secretariat was asked to help developing countries improve their bargaining position vis-a-vis liner conferences by providing technical assistance for such efforts. The United Nations was asked to allocate funds for the production of sea-borne trade statistics.

Increased funds for developing countries, especially the least developed, were urged in another resolution on technical and financial assistance in shipping and ports, and the Trade and Development Board was asked to establish, on an experimental basis, an information service on the availability of bilateral and multilateral donor sources of technical assistance in this field. Accordingly, the Board authorized the establishment of the information service on 2 September.

In addition, the Committee asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene in 1978 an ad hoc intergovernmental group to review the economic consequences of the existence or lack of a genuine link between vessels and their flag of registry. By another decision, it asked for a secretariat study on shipping promotion, concentrating on areas of possible harmonization of shipping policies.

In accordance with another Committee decision, on institutional arrangements for work on transport problems, the Trade and Development Board on 4 May 1977 asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to discuss the concept of an approach to transport problems in the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC)—which was shortly to consider an analytical and comprehensive report on activities of the United Nations system in the field of transport (see p. 808)—and make recommendations for possible changes in the terms of reference of the Committee on Shipping in the light of decisions of the Economic and Social Council on CPC's recommendations.

The Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade met at Geneva in December

1977, principally to discuss questions of insurance and reinsurance. By a resolution on insurance of large risks in developing countries, adopted on 9 December at the close of the session, the Committee, recognizing the need for co-operation between countries in this field, recommended that developed countries assist developing countries in their efforts to provide cover for their risks at the most economical and competitive rates, and provide expertise, reinsurance capacities and training facilities in underwriting and servicing large risks. It recommended that developing countries strengthen their domestic insurance markets and promote co-operation among their national insurance institutions to pool local technical knowledge, experience and capacity, and that they make optimum use of regional and subregional facilities, including expert listings and pooling systems for large and difficult risks. Both groups of countries should ensure the prompt settlement of reinsurance premiums and claims.

By another resolution, the Committee endorsed the conclusion that co-operative insurance, complementing other forms, had a special role to play in development, and recommended that institutions providing technical assistance note the contribution of co-operative insurance in national economic development and respond to requests of developing countries for aid in promoting it.

An expert group was convened in October 1977 to consider feeder and inter-island services by air or sea for island developing countries.

International multimodal transport

The Intergovernmental Preparatory Group on a Convention on International Multimodal Transport met in January and November 1977. Progress was made in the areas of documentation, scope of application and customs matters of the proposed convention. A number of draft provisions relating to these subjects was agreed, particularly with regard to customs. The Group also agreed to have consultation aspects embodied in the convention.

The Trade and Development Board, on 2 September, decided to convene a second session of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group on Container Standards for International Multimodal Transport to continue its work and to assist in determining the practicality and desirability of an international agreement on container standards.

Transfer of technology

The Group of Governmental Experts on the Role of the Industrial Property System in the Transfer of Technology, established on a recommendation of the Committee on Transfer of Technology of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), met at Geneva from 6 to 14 October 1977 to continue examining and to make recommendations on the economic, commercial and developmental aspects of industrial property in the transfer of technology to developing countries.

The Group discussed the impact of trade marks on development, and the international patent system. It proposed a series of considerations to be taken into account by the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) in preparing a new model law for developing countries on trade marks and in deliberations in WIPO on revising the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property.

The Group also recommended that the Committee on Transfer of Technology should request studies in the field of industrial property on matters of special concern to developing countries, such as the role of trade-mark protection in vital sectors of the economy, in consumer protection and in promotion of exports, and that the Committee should continue examining the topics dealt with by the Group of Experts.

The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on an International Code of Conduct on Transfer of Technology held three sessions at Geneva, in March/April, July/August and October/November 1977, at which it continued work on the elaboration of draft provisions of such a code to be negotiated by a proposed United Nations conference in 1978.

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly decided to convene in October 1978, under the auspices of UNCTAD, the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology, to negotiate and take all necessary decisions for the adoption of such a code.

By resolution 32/188 containing this decision, the Assembly also indicated the States, organizations and bodies that the Secretary-General was to invite to participate in the Conference; in addition to all States and the United Nations Council for Namibia, these included organizations with standing invitations to participate as observers in United Nations conferences and, in the same capacity, representatives of national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity.

The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff, services and other arrangements for holding the Conference, and to ensure that financial provisions were made for eligible participants. The languages of the Conference were to be those used in the Assembly and its Main Committees.

In order to be able to adhere to the proposed Conference timetable, the Assembly invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene additional meetings of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts, if necessary.

Resolution 32/188 was approved without vote by both the Assembly and its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee; that Committee had approved it on 14 December on a text proposed by Jamaica on behalf of the States Members which belonged to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

Argentina, chairman of an informal consultation group on the subject, amended the text, with the agreement of the sponsors, by, inter alia, adding the invitation to convene any needed meetings of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts. Sweden, in an amendment modified by the USSR, added a provision requesting that directly concerned non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council be invited to the Conference.

By another resolution adopted by the General Assembly on 19 December (32/178), on the establishment of a network for the exchange of technological information and the industrial and technological information bank, the Assembly thanked the Inter-Agency Task Force on Information Exchange and the Transfer of Technology and asked the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to continue its support of studies of existing and needed information networks. The Assembly also urged the Secretary-General of UNCTAD and the heads of other relevant organizations to continue assisting developing countries in establishing centres for the transfer and development of technology at the national and regional levels. (See also p. 544.)

By Assembly resolution 32/192, also of 19 December, on reverse transfer of technology, the United Nations Secretary-General was requested—in co-operation with UNCTAD and the International Labour Organisation and bearing in mind any recommendations of the Group of Governmental Experts on Reverse Transfer of Technology to be convened by UNCTAD early in 1978—to undertake an in-depth study of the "brain-drain" problem, taking into account specific proposals, such as the establishment of an international labour compensatory facility to compensate labour-exporting countries for their loss of highly trained personnel. The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, as well as its resolution 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further paragraph 13 of its resolution 31/159 of 21 December 1976,

1. Decides to convene a United Nations conference to negotiate and to take all decisions necessary for the adoption of an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to be held from 16 October to 10 November 1978;

2. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations

Conference on Trade and Development to convene, if necessary, additional meetings of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts, in order to adhere to the time-table for the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology as specified in paragraph 1 above;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to invite:

(a) All States to participate in the Conference;

(b) Representatives of organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate in the sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices in the capacity of observers, to participate in the Conference in that capacity in accordance with Assembly resolution 3237 (XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976;

(c) Representatives of the national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity to participate in the Conference in the capacity of observers in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3280 (XXIX) of 10 December 1974;

(d) The United Nations Council for Namibia to participate in the Conference in accordance with paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 32/9 E of 4 November 1977;

(e) The specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the World Tourism Organization, as well as interested organs of the United Nations, to be represented at the Conference;

(f) Interested intergovernmental organizations to be represented by observers at the Conference;

(g) Directly concerned non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to be represented by observers at the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the necessary arrangements are made for the effective participation in the Conference of the representatives referred to in paragraph 3 (b) and (c) above, including the requisite financial provisions for their travel expenses and per diem;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for holding the Conference at Geneva, to submit to the Conference all relevant documentation and to arrange for the necessary staff, facilities and services that it will require, including the provision of summary records;

6. Decides that the languages of the Conference shall be those used in the General Assembly and its Main Committees.

Questions relating to special trade flows and groups of countries

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

At its August/September 1977 session, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) considered trends and policies in trade among countries having different economic and social systems. Representatives of the countries participating in the discussion in the Board's Sessional Committee II stressed the importance of the flow of international trade between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and the developed market-economy countries, as well as between developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe. The technical assistance activities of UNCTAD in the development of trade between developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe were commended and support for their intensification was expressed.

Pursuant to a resolution of the fourth session of UNCTAD in 1976 (resolution 95(IV)),⁸ two intergovernmental groups of experts were convened in 1977. One of them met in October to identify trade opportunities in favour of developing countries which might result from the implementation of various multilateral schemes by member countries of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA), such as co-ordination of national economic plans, industrial specialization and co-operation in production, activities of international economic organizations, and associations of CMEA member countries, as well as possible modalities for co-operation of interested developing countries with these multilateral schemes.

The other group of experts met in November/December to study the issue of a multilateral system of payments between developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe. The importance of the trend towards multilateralization and greater flexibility in payments in recent years, facilitating further development of mutual trade, was particularly stressed by the group of experts.

In 1977, a considerable number of bilateral and multilateral consultations between interested member countries were held, with UNCTAD secretariat support, on both trade policy and practical issues of mutual economic relations.

In some cases, these had resulted in trade negotiations in the respective capitals or conclusion of trade and economic co-operation agreements between the parties involved.

Trade expansion and regional integration among developing countries

The Trade and Development Board decided, on 29 August 1977, to request the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to implement urgently the provisions of a resolution (98(IV)) of the fourth session of UNCTAD⁹ calling on him to convene a special meeting of multilateral and bilateral financial and technical assistance institutions, with representatives of the least developed among the developing countries, to assess the requirements, progress and problems of both donors and recipients. The Economic and Social Council on 4 August, by resolution 2124(LXIII), had also made such a request, and asked for an increased flow of assistance to and special measures in favour of the least developed countries.

The meeting was held in October/November 1977 at Geneva, and its recommendations communicated to the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on Least Developed Countries. The General Assembly, on 19 December by resolution 32/190, referring to the results of the meeting, inter alia urged adoption of specific and concrete measures in favour of the least developed countries and welcomed inclusion in the agenda of the Board's 1978 (ministerial) session of the review of measures taken in accordance with UNCTAD resolution 98(IV) concerning the debt and related development and financial problems of those countries.

(For further information, see p. 413; for texts of Council resolution 2124 (LXIII) and Assembly resolution 32/190, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

The Trade and Development Board, at its August/September 1977 session, discussed the particular needs and problems of land-locked and island developing countries but took no formal action on these questions.

The Economic and Social Council, however, on 4 August 1977, by resolution 2127(LXIII), reaffirmed the right of free access to and from the sea of the developing land-locked countries and their right of freedom of transit, appealed for contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries and urged adoption of special measures in favour of those countries. The Council called for specific attention to be given to their trade requirements, including transit facilities, and invited the United Nations Development Programme to increase resources to meet their technical assistance needs.

The General Assembly, by resolution 32/191 of 19 December 1977, also reaffirmed their rights of free access to and from the sea and freedom of transit and, inter alia, urged grants or concessional loans for the construction, improvement and maintenance of their transport and transit infrastructure and facilities. Specific action to benefit land-locked developing countries was urged, as envisaged in resolutions of the third and fourth sessions of UNCTAD, and United Nations-related agencies were asked to increase resources to meet the technical assistance needs of these countries. The Assembly confirmed an Economic and Social Council request for a progress report on implementation of UNCTAD and other relevant United Nations resolutions.

A report prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat and submitted to the Economic and Social Council—reviewing progress in implementing action in favour of developing island countries—was not discussed for lack of time, but was remitted by Council resolution 2126(LXIII) on 4 August 1977 to the General Assembly for consideration.

By resolution 32/185, the General Assembly took decisions on action in favour of developing island countries. On 19 December 1977, in adopting this resolution, it took note of the report, welcomed UNCTAD'S activities for those countries, urged United Nations organizations to identify and implement appropriate specific action—particularly regional co-operation—and called upon Governments to take the special problems of those countries into account in their development efforts and negotiations towards the new international economic order. A sectoral analysis of and further proposals for action in favour of these countries was requested.

Technical assistance and related activities

In 1977, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) continued to implement an active programme of technical co-operation in the field of international economic relations, including invisible transactions, in the following areas: trade policy, planning and projections; economic co-operation among developing countries; maritime transport, including ports and intermodal transport; insurance and reinsurance; and transfer of technology.

Approximately two thirds of UNCTAD operational activities were performed at interregional, regional or subregional levels. At the country level, special attention was given to the problems of the least developed, landlocked and island developing countries.

The major objectives of the UNCTAD programme of technical co-operation were:

(a) to assist developing countries in establishing adequate instruments and institutions whereby they could exercise a real control over their foreign trade in accordance with their development objectives and priorities (e.g. strengthening trade departments, methods of collecting and processing trade statistics, foreign trade planning and control, use of external tariffs, State import procurement, export incentives, debt management, control of capital flows);

(b) to strengthen the capacity of developing countries to participate in international consultations and negotiations to change current patterns of world trade and therefore affect their development process (e.g. projects in support of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, multilateral trade negotiations, elaboration of a code of conduct on transfer of technology);

(c) to assist in training officials and other nationals of developing countries to derive maximum benefit from such changes in global policies (e.g. the generalized system of preferences, the Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences); and

(d) to support the initiatives taken to develop economic co-operation among developing countries and increase their mutual trade and collective self-reliance (e.g. assistance to integration movements and other economic groupings, such as commodities organizations, multinational enterprises in trade, marketing, maritime transport, regional shippers councils and monetary agreements, support to preferential trade arrangements among developing countries).

In 1977, preparatory assistance was initiated for three new large interregional projects assisted by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in the fields of economic co-operation among developing countries, import procurement of food commodities, and trade between developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

In 1977, UNDP continued to be the main source of financing for operational activities. The level of expenditure reached $7.4 million in 1977 (as against $6.95 million in 1976), of which $6.5 million, or 88 per cent, was financed by UNDP. This did not include the portion of the joint UNCTAD/GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) International Trade Centre (ITC) programme financed by UNDP and for which UNCTAD served as executing agency—$1.6 million in 1977.

The Joint Advisory Group on ITC reported to the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD on its January 1977 session; the Board considered the report in connexion with its discussion of export promotion. The Group's deliberations had resulted in a number of recommendations with regard to: increasing resources for trade promotion assistance to Africa; building up of infrastructure in the least developed countries; decentralization of training activities; co-ordination of market development activities for primary commodities; strengthening and focusing the Centre's work programme; establishment of priorities for the Centre's assistance programmes; continuation of its programme evaluation activities; utilization of trust fund contributions; and changes in the Centre's consultative machinery.

Organizational questions

Fifth session of UNCTAD

On 31 August 1977, at the first part of its seventeenth session, held at Geneva from 23 August to 2 September, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) took note with appreciation of an invitation by the Government of the Philippines to host the fifth session of UNCTAD and recommended to the General Assembly that it convene the fifth session in Manila in May/June 1979, with a pre-Conference meeting of senior officials. Also, the Board decided that the fifth session should have a selective agenda, supported by concise, action-oriented documents, and should be so organized as to ensure the attendance of high-level policy-makers, including government ministers, and to permit all participants to contribute effectively to its decision-making process. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was to initiate the necessary preparatory work. Further, the Board decided to hold a two-week special session in March 1979 to consider substantive proposals for action by the Conference and to advance negotiations on them.

Taking note of the Board's resolution, the General Assembly, at its 1977 session, noted with appreciation the invitation of the Government of the Philippines and decided to convene the fifth session of UNCTAD at Manila from 7 May to 1 June 1979, and a pre-Conference meeting of senior officials at Manila on 3 and 4 May 1979.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/189, which both the Assembly and its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee approved without vote, on 14 and 19 December respectively. The text was proposed by Jamaica on behalf of the States Members belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

Use of the Arabic language

In another action, the General Assembly, by its resolution 32/205 of 21 December 1977, noted that organizational arrangements approved in 1976 with a view to providing Arabic language services to UNCTAD had not sufficiently achieved their objectives. It requested the United Nations Secretary-General to establish, as of 1 January 1978, on a permanent basis, an Arabic Translation Section in the United Nations Office at Geneva primarily to serve UNCTAD bodies. It further asked him to prepare, in consultation with the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, proposals aimed at the full implementation of the resolution on the use of the Arabic language (86(IV)) adopted at the fourth session of UNCTAD.¹⁰

Resolution 32/189, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/481, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/159 of 21 December 1976, in which it decided to hold the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in 1979 and requested the Trade and Development Board at its seventeenth session to recommend the place, date and duration of the session, taking into account the offer made in this regard by the Government of the Philippines,

Taking note of Trade and Development Board resolution 154 (XVII) of 31 August 1977 adopted at the first part of its seventeenth session, in which the Board recommended that the General Assembly should convene the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at Manila from 7 May to 1 June 1979, and a pre-conference meeting of senior officials at Manila on 3 and 4 May 1979,

1. Notes with appreciation the invitation of the Government of the Philippines to hold the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at Manila;

2. Decides to convene the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at Manila from 7 May to 1 June 1979, and a pre-conference meeting of senior officials at Manila on 3 and 4 May 1979.

The International Trade Centre

During 1977, the International Trade Centre (ITC) continued its activities under the joint sponsorship of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance in the field of trade promotion.

As in previous years, ITC assisted developing countries in the formulation and implementation of national trade promotion programmes. It provided information and advice on trade promotion institutions and programmes, export marketing services, and training institutions and services.

Assistance was given mainly through integrated programmes, which provided recipient Governments with several types of assistance, including institution-building, international marketing and training. Particular attention was given to the needs of the least developed countries.

In 1977, a total of 58 countries received ITC assistance at a cost of $9.4 million, of which 84 per cent came from trust fund contributions by industrialized countries and 16 per cent from the United Nations Development Programme. The Centre's assistance was provided mainly through the service of 407 technical co-operation experts, who assisted in establishing and strengthening trade promotion institutions and services (38 per cent of assistance programmes), in aiding with export market development of selected products (40 per cent), and in training of government officials and business executives in trade promotion and export marketing (22 per cent).

Integrated assistance programmes, operative in 29 countries, accounted for 57 per cent of ITC'S assistance expenditures.

Activities during the year also included assistance in identifying export products, undertaking research into export markets, and aiding in formulating market development plans and export strategies. Market surveys and reports were published, trade information was disseminated and new research tools for the provision of trade promotion assistance were developed.

In 1977, market research surveys were undertaken on spices, beeswax, tobacco, horticultural and slaughterhouse products, tropical aquarium fish, shark products, caffeine, outdoor furniture, gum arabic, canned mushrooms and asparagus. Monographs on oil-exporting countries as markets for other developing countries, and case studies, aimed at identifying market problems hampering the development of trade among developing countries, were prepared. Marketing assistance was provided to individual countries as part of integrated country projects or as special projects.

Also during the year, ITC helped to stimulate demand for basic commodities by supporting co-operative efforts by developing countries. It sponsored the establishment of the International Tea Promotion Association and convened a meeting for the formulation of a definitive text of the Agreement on the establishment of an International Tropical Timber Bureau. Also in 1977, ITC supported the promotional programmes of the International Institute for Cotton through a market development programme for cotton, covering three Scandinavian countries.

Nearly 80 per cent of ITC'S training assistance undertaken in 1977 was in the developing countries and was on a subregional and individual country basis. The programme focused on the educational management facilities of trade-promotion training institutions, by strengthening their programmes and through teacher training. In addition, ITC continued to provide training opportunities in developed countries through courses, workshops and seminars, and to provide training materials in trade promotion and export marketing.

Market surveys and other ITC publications, including the quarterly journal International Trade Forum, were available free of charge to developing countries.

(See also preceding chapter on TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT and PART TWO, Chapter XVII, of this volume.)

Secretariat

In 1977, ITC'S total staff included 103 in the Professional and 124 in the General Service and related categories, financed by regular-budget funds, extrabudgetary resources and developed country sponsors. The Centre's regular budget, financed in equal portions by UNCTAD and GATT, amounted to $5,543,000 in 1977.

Chapter VII

Industrial development

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued in 1977 its programmes of technical assistance to accelerate the industrialization of developing countries and strengthened its co-ordinating role within the United Nations for matters connected with its mandate.

During the year four major meetings were held to bring key sectors of industry into a system of consultations intended to mobilize international co-operation in planning industrial growth and facilitating redeployment of production capacity. These and all other activities were geared to meeting the target of the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation adopted in 1975 at the Second General Conference of UNIDO: a 25 per cent share of world industrial production for developing countries by the year 2000.

Fertilizers, iron and steel, leather and leather products, and vegetable oils and fats were the subjects of the four consultations, for each of which a minimum of six preparatory regional or expert meetings had previously been held. At the consultations, government and labour representatives and industrial experts all spoke with equal voices. Projections, largely based on UNIDO world-wide studies, were made for the period to the end of the century. As a result, the possibility of formulating plans for using potential plant capacity and resources, and large-scale investments seen as necessary in developing countries, were discussed within the perspective of supporting the over-all target.

By the end of 1977, a total of $7.2 million had been promised for work in 1978 following the first Pledging Conference on the United Nations Industrial Development Fund, created in 1976 to meet the desire expressed in the Lima Declaration to increase resources available to UNIDO. The total subsequently rose to $8.4 million, against a desirable annual funding level of $50 million fixed by the Industrial Development Board.

After having its mandate extended in 1976, the intergovernmental Committee to Draw Up a Constitution for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency again was unable to submit a final version of a constitution in 1977. Control and use of funds and certain organizational matters were points which could not be agreed. The General Assembly decided to refer the task to a conference of plenipotentiaries in New York during February and March 1978.

Details of these and other decisions concerning UNIDO taken by the Industrial Development Board, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly are described in the following sections.

Activities and expenditures in 1977

Expenditures of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) in 1977 were derived from the following sources of funds:

Source	Amount (in millions of US dollars)
Regular budget	24.10
United Nations regular programme of technical assistance	2.14
United Nations Development Programme, indicative planning figures	28.87
United Nations Development Programme, Programme Reserve and Special Measures (including Special Industrial Services)	5.09
Special Industrial Services Trust Fund	0.14
UNIDO General Trust Fund	4.72

Source	Amount (in millions of US dollars)
Special-purpose trust funds	2.92
Funds for overhead costs	5.30
United Nations Environment Programme, UNIDO/International Bank for Reconstruction and Development Co-operative Programme	0.40
Total	73.68

The regular budget of UNIDO, used for administrative and research purposes, is part of the over-all budget of the United Nations. The allocation for the biennium 1976-1977 was $46,087,000, a part of which was used to subsidize overhead costs incurred in United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) projects.

The value of technical assistance delivered in 1977 amounted to nearly $44 million, most of it under UNDP indicative planning figures (IPFS) for country programmes. This represented a cash increase of 9.8 per cent over 1976, though in real terms the level remained about the same.

Regional assistance for Africa came to $12.2 million, or 27.9 per cent of the total, as against 34 per cent in 1976. For the Americas the figure was $5.5 million (12.6 per cent, as against 16.7), for Asia and the Pacific, $14 million (31.9 per cent, as against 23.6), and $7 million for Europe and Western Asia (15.9 per cent, as against 15). For interregional operations the amount was $5.1 million, a percentage of 11.7, as against 10.7 in 1976.

Constraints resulted from UNDP currency difficulties in 1976 and the late establishment of ceilings for the year on UNIDO-executed projects, as well as late nominations for fellowships and study tours, and considerable increases in training fees by professional institutes and industrial enterprises.

Project work under Special Industrial Services (SIS) programmes, UNIDO'S method of providing urgent help in cases not covered by normal budgets, was worth $3.6 million in the year (including $100,000 from the remnants of the original trust funds). Following an initial reduction by UNDP, which later was able to raise the ceiling, projects worth $1.8 million were approved for the least developed countries and $2.1 million for others.

Expenditure of $2.2 million within the United Nations regular programme of technical assistance meant that the full appropriation of $4.4 million for 1976-1977 was used. Once again, group training programmes—which enabled non-convertible currencies to be used, appeared to be more effective and were comparatively easy to organize—grew at the expense of fellowships, down to 78 from 94 the previous year. The regular assistance programme also supported 10 advisers for regional commissions and four interregional advisers at UNIDO headquarters.

With $521,000 spent on the least developed countries from the budget for the regular programme of technical assistance, the total for the biennium for this purpose came to $972,000; activities included expert services, group training, study tours and feasibility studies. These were additional to efforts for the same group of countries through SIS and General Trust Fund programmes.

Projects under the General Trust Fund—used for training, technical meetings, industrial surveys and research, plant design, equipment, industrial information, promotional activities and expert assistance—ranged in value from $670 to more than $300,000. Voluntary contributions pledged for special purposes at the 1976 Pledging Conference on UNIDO became part of the trust funds, for which money available and work completed once more rose considerably, as in 1976. Projects approved reached $5 million and expenditure $2.9 million, compared with previous highest figures of $1.8 million and $1.7 million respectively. One result of the UNDP currency difficulties of the two previous years was that several Governments took over financial responsibility for projects.

Altogether 1,082 missions were carried out by 982 experts, of whom 678 were from 20 developed countries and the remaining 304 from developing countries.

Among assistance given for the preparation of UNDP country programmes were missions to Afghanistan, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Iran, the United Republic of Cameroon and the United Republic of Tanzania; in all, UNIDO collaborated in the preparation of country programmes for 90 countries.

As approved by the Industrial Development Board at its tenth session in 1976, the first two experimental sectoral consultations at the world level took place in Vienna during January and February 1977, on the fertilizer industry and on iron and steel. Each attracted good representation from government interests, businessmen in State or private enterprises, and workers and trade unionists, though suppliers of equipment and materials were less well represented. Encouraging results were reported to the 1977 session of the Board and two more consultations took place during the year: at Innsbruck, Austria, during November on leather and its products, and at Madrid, Spain, during December on vegetable oils and fats. More than 50 countries sent participants to each of the four meetings, for which UNIDO presented an issue paper and a world-wide study of the subject.

Prospects and possible targets for increasing production in developing countries were examined at all the consultations, with the year 2000 being borne in mind because of the 1975 Lima Declaration target.¹ A common need stressed was that expansion plans of all groups of countries should be harmonized to maintain a balance between supply and demand throughout the world. Other common requirements of the developing countries were trained manpower, adequate infrastructure and supplies of raw materials, organization of finance to cover high costs of capital equipment, access to markets and fair contract procedures.

Preparatory meetings for the consultations were held in collaboration with regional organizations and served to strengthen these and national links further because arrangements for sharing technology and training facilities were supported by ministerial meetings in Africa and Latin America. Other co-operative efforts were the preparation of expert studies on agricultural machinery, petrochemicals, capital goods, pharmaceuticals and agro-based industries, the Board having indicated that two of these would be selected at its 1978 session for further consultation meetings. Problems affecting all industries, such as finance, investment guarantees and training, were also examined so that proposals could be made for global consultations.

Activities on behalf of 29 least developed countries in 1977 accounted for expenditures of $7.5 million, $5 million of it from UNDP/IPF projects or Special Measures. A programme was drawn up aiming at providing pilot plants and production units to use natural resources; it included a pilot community food centre as well as food testing, fertilizers, pesticides and water management. Special attention was being paid to training programmes; for West Africa, training units were established in ministries responsible for industry and planning.

A portfolio was prepared of project proposals in the least developed countries for which co-operative assistance or finance was needed and contacts were made with 51 potential donors. Also, surveys in land-locked and island countries led to a number of project proposals' being adopted and funded under SIS or UNDP/IPF programmes. Mongolia asked for implementation of eight of these proposals.

In the Sahelian zone and other drought-affected countries of Africa, such as Ethiopia and Somalia, technical assistance was increased.

Mali was being helped to develop small and medium equipment, prototypes for solar refrigeration and generation of electricity from the sun. An amount of $300,000 from voluntary contributions of the Federal Republic of Germany was to help set up a centre in the Upper Volta for use of plastics in agriculture. Also, a feasibility study for fertilizer and pesticide industries was made for the region.

The priorities of developing countries to industrialize the agricultural sector included manufacturing, processing, institutional infrastructure, research and development, and training. Accordingly, UNIDO concentrated on multidisciplinary advice and assistance at national and regional levels. The expenditure of $6.4 million for this purpose was 36 per cent more than in 1976; activities were mainly concerned with wood, textiles, food processing, leather and its products, rubber products and packaging.

After timber engineering projects achieved good results in Kenya and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, requests for similar help came from Uganda and the United Republic of Cameroon. Large-scale projects in the textile industry were operational during the year in Egypt, India, Indonesia, Mongolia, Pakistan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand and Turkey. Experts helped with plans for an integrated coconut-processing industry in Samoa and a study tour for 26 coconut-processing technologists from 12 countries was organized jointly with the Asian and Pacific Coconut Community and the Philippines Coconut Authority. An engineering project for animal food production was initiated in Somalia and a regional plan to use available seeds for producing edible oils and pharmaceutical raw materials attracted interest from six African countries. A large-scale plan for developing all aspects of the leather industry was initiated in Bangladesh, and work continued in Mongolia on a leather board plant.

The tables below show UNIDO expenditures for direct technical assistance projects and support activities, as well as the number of experts received and provided, fellowships awarded and cost of assistance provided, by country or territory and by region.

Programme questions

Strengthening of operational activities for industrial development

Among the reports considered by the Economic and Social Council at its July/August 1977 session was one of the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) on strengthening operational activities in the field of industrial development and on reorganization of the UNIDO secretariat.

The report, the contents of which had also been considered by the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO at its May/June 1977 session, combined responses to two requests: one by the Industrial Development Board and another by the General Assembly.² The first part of the report answered a 1976 Board request; it outlined the experience of UNIDO following a reorganization of its secretariat to prepare it to fulfil the new role assigned to it under the 1975 Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation.³ The other part of the report summarized measures taken by the Executive Director to strengthen the organization's operational activities, particularly at the national and subregional levels, better to enable UNIDO to provide developing countries with the most urgently needed assistance and to focus its programmes more effectively on their specific needs.

The Council took note with satisfaction of the report and transmitted it to the General Assembly. These provisions were part of decision 265 (LXIII), which the Council adopted, without objection, on 4 August 1977, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, which had approved the decision without vote on 27 July; the Committee's Chairman had invited approval of the text, which appeared in a Committee working paper.

The Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee approved, at the 1977 session, two resolutions on the strengthening of operational activities for development.

The first became resolution 32/163, adopted by the Assembly on 19 December without a vote, and dealt with the strengthening of industrial development activities in the least developed among the developing countries. By this text, the Assembly commended UNIDO for its efforts in this respect and requested it to intensify its activities connected with, and devote maximum resources to, implementation of the special measures adopted in favour of those countries. The Industrial Development Board was urged to allocate a sizable sum from the United Nations Industrial Development Fund to meet the needs of those countries.

The Second Committee approved the text without vote on 12 December, as proposed by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Burundi, the Central African Empire, Chad, Ethiopia, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Mali, Nepal, the Niger, Rwanda, the Sudan, Swaziland, Uganda and Yemen.

The second resolution on strengthening operational activities which was approved by the Second Committee became resolution 32/

165 when it was adopted by the Assembly—by 123 votes to 8, with 5 abstentions—on 19 December. By that text the Assembly recommended that the number of industrial development field advisers be increased so that UNIDO could maintain an effective field presence in developing countries, requested the Executive Director to report to the Industrial Development Board on ways to increase the effectiveness of the senior advisers, and to review for the Secretary-General the status of funding of field advisers, indicating how they should be financed from the United Nations regular budget to bring their number to 30 as soon as feasible. The Secretary-General was asked to submit appropriate budgetary estimates to the 1978 regular session of the Assembly.

The Second Committee had approved the text on 12 December by 108 votes to 7, with 5 abstentions. The text was introduced by Jamaica on behalf of the Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

In explanation of their votes, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States said they considered it inappropriate to make specific recommendations regarding an increase in the number of field advisers and the financing of such an increase before the finding of a study in progress by UNDP on sectoral support to resident representatives were available. Japan said its agreement in principle to an increase was not meant to prejudice the results of the UNDP study. Australia and the Netherlands also explained their abstentions—and Belgium, France and the Federal Republic of Germany their opposition—on the grounds that the resolution prejudged the UNDP study. Australia, Italy and the United States considered that the resolution did not take into account deliberations in progress on transforming UNIDO into a specialized agency.

Denmark, speaking also on behalf of Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, though voting in favour of the text, also believed it would have been better to await the results of the UNDP study.

Belgium, France, Italy and Japan were among those of the view that the advisers should be financed from voluntary funds and not from the regular budget. The German Democratic Republic, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, although voting in favour of the resolution, asked the Executive Director to bear in mind that they also held that the posts should not be financed from the regular budget.

Industrial technology

During the May/June 1977 session of the Industrial Development Board, a co-operative programme of action to promote the creation, transfer and use of appropriate technology was debated on the basis of, inter alia, a report on the subject by the Executive Director. On 6 June, the Board adopted a resolution dealing with international co-operation in the transfer of technology and a decision on a co-operative programme of action on industrial technology appropriate to the resources and objectives of developing countries; both had been proposed by the Board's open-ended Working Group on Technology.

Operative section I of the resolution related to co-operation between developed and developing countries. The Board urged developed countries to encourage their enterprises and institutions to increase manpower development programmes in developing countries. All nations were urged especially to promote co-operation in the transfer and development of technology leading to: the adoption of an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology; facilitating access to new developments in technology without discrimination and on fair terms, and their adaptation to development objectives; the establishment of equitable principles concerning, inter alia, restrictive business practices related to the transfer of technology; and development of new forms of co-operation in research and development connected with the natural resources of developing countries.

By operative section II, dealing with fostering technological co-operation among developing countries, the Board urged bilateral and multilateral arrangements permitting exchange of information, joint research projects, exchange of expertise and trainees, sharing laboratories and installations, joint agreements to benefit from economies of scale, and creation of specialized technological centres. Developing countries were asked to undertake measures at all levels to obtain from enterprises operating within their jurisdiction the maximum contribution to those countries' technological development plans and projects.

Section III concentrated on the role of UNIDO in the development and transfer of industrial technology. The Board called for co-operation with all organizations concerned to strengthen the industrial technological capacities of developing countries. It invited national and international institutions implementing or financing industrial development programmes to give high priority to requests for assistance from developing countries, urged UNIDO to take an active part in the forthcoming United Nations conferences on science and technology and on technical co-operation among developing countries, and requested a report at its next session on the extent to which UNIDO was engaged in active programmes to achieve increased transfer of technology to, and to strengthen the technological capacities of, developing countries.

By the decision on a co-operative programme of action, the Board considered, inter alia, that aspects of appropriate technology should be introduced into UNIDO'S sectoral consultations. It endorsed implementation measures by UNIDO, outlined in the Executive Director's report, which called for international meetings on industrial technology, establishment of a consultative group on technology to advise the secretariat, and monitoring developments in this field, and requested a follow-up report for the next session. Agencies and other national and international organizations were invited to participate in projects, and Governments, financial institutions and other organizations to fund project implementation.

This decision and the Executive Director's report were transmitted through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly. The Council, by decision 265 (LXIII) (see section above), took note with satisfaction of the Board's report on its eleventh session, held at Vienna from 23 May to 6 June 1977, and particularly the decision concerning a co-operative programme of action on appropriate industrial technology.

Also by decision 265 (LXIII), the Council took note of and transmitted to the Assembly a decision adopted by the Industrial Development Board on 6 June endorsing a proposal in a report of the Executive Director to establish and make operational an industrial and technological information bank through a pilot project in 1977-1978. This was to be complementary to the current information and advisory services of UNIDO. The Executive Director was to submit in two years' time an analysis of experience gained, costs and results for the determination of further Board action.

The report of the Executive Director and the Board's decision were transmitted to the Assembly through the Council, which took note of the report on 4 August (decision 272 (LXIII)) on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, which approved it the day before on an oral proposal of its Chairman. No vote was taken in either body.

On 19 December, the Assembly, by resolution 32/178, inter alia endorsed the Board's decision regarding the pilot operation and asked the Secretary-General, in co-operation with UNIDO and other organizations, to develop alternatives for further work on the network. The UNIDO Executive Director and other executive heads were urged to continue to assist developing countries in establishing centres for the transfer and development of technology and in providing extension services, bearing in mind the possibilities of the network concept.

Resolution 32/163, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/462/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Industrial Development Board on the work of its eleventh session,

Taking note of the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization on the strengthening of operational activities in the field of industrial development,

Recalling the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order contained in its resolution 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974,

Bearing in mind the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation, adopted by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization at its Second General Conference, held at Lima from 12 to 26 March 1975,

Recognizing that further steps should be taken to implement without delay the decision to convert the United Nations Industrial Development Organization into a specialized agency,

1. Commends the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for its efforts in favour of the least developed countries and requests it to intensify its activities in connexion with the implementation of the special measures adopted in their favour and to devote the maximum resources possible to meet their needs and requirements;

2. Welcomes the establishment of a section within the secretariat of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to deal with the needs and requirements of the least developed countries;

3. Urges the Industrial Development Board to allocate a sizable sum from the United Nations Industrial Development Fund to the needs and requirements of the least developed countries, taking into consideration General Assembly resolution 31/202 of 22 December 1976;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution.

Resolution 32/165, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/462/Add.1, adopted by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107, by 123 votes to 8, with 5 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2152(XXI) of 17 November 1966 on the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, Recalling further its resolution 3086 (XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, in which it endorsed the recommendation contained in Industrial Development Board decision III(VII) of 14 May 1973 calling for an increase in the number of industrial development field advisers, and its resolution 31/162 of 21 December 1976 on the strengthening of operational activities in the field of industrial development,

Bearing in mind the need to strengthen the field presence of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization,

1. Recommends that the number of industrial development field advisers should be increased in order to enable the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to maintain an effective field presence in the developing countries serviced by its operational programmes;

2. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to submit a report to the Industrial Development Board on ways and means of increasing the effectiveness of the senior industrial development field advisers in programmes of assistance by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to the developing countries;

3. Further requests the Executive Director to submit to the Secretary-General a review of the status of funding of industrial development field advisers indicating how these advisers should be financed from the regular budget of the United Nations to achieve, at the earliest feasible date, the number of industrial development field advisers envisaged in Industrial Development Board decision III(VII);

4. Recommends that the Secretary-General should submit, on the basis of the review called for in paragraph 3 above, appropriate budgetary estimates to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Organizational questions

Establishment of UNIDO as a specialized agency

The Committee to Draw Up a Constitution for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency held its fifth session at Vienna from 7 March to 2 April 1977, at the conclusion of which it reported that, although it had achieved agreement on a substantial portion of the provisions to be included in a constitution for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), it had not been able to achieve agreement on certain provisions, and had reached no decision as to the method of continuing the negotiations.

At its eleventh session in May/June 1977, the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO emphasized that further steps should be taken to convert UNIDO into a specialized agency, regret having been voiced in debate that the drafting of a constitution had not been completed. The Board urged the Secretary-General to arrange for the resumption of drafting within the framework of a plenipotentiary conference.

On 4 August, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 2113(LXIII), by which it recommended that the General Assembly fix the date for such a conference of plenipotentiaries at United Nations Headquarters in New York early in 1978. The text of the resolution had been introduced by Yugoslavia in the Council's Economic Committee on behalf of the States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries; the Committee approved it on 26 July without objection.

The Council's resolution and the Board's recommendation were taken into account in General Assembly resolution 32/167—adopted on 19 December by 125 votes to 1, with 10 abstentions—by which the Assembly decided to convene on 20 February 1978 for three weeks at Headquarters, a United Nations Conference on the Establishment of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency, listing those to be invited by the Secretary-General, who was also to make all the necessary arrangements. The languages of the Conference were to be those used in the Assembly and its Main Committees.

The text of the resolution had been proposed in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by Jamaica on behalf of the developing Member States belonging to the Group of 77; the Committee approved it on 13 December by 91 votes to 1, with 9 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom had reservations concerning or objected to provisions of the resolution relating to invitations to the Conference. The German Democratic Republic, speaking on behalf of eight Eastern European countries and Mongolia, felt that the constitution should be drafted at an additional session of the intergovernmental drafting Committee or at a special meeting of a group of experts to ensure that the Conference achieved positive results. For that reason they had abstained in the voting.

As the resolution did not provide for any further negotiation of outstanding issues at the technical level prior to the convening of the Conference, the United States said it would have to vote against it.

United Nations Industrial Development Fund

The Industrial Development Board, at its May/June 1977 session, adopted four points concerning the United Nations Industrial Development Fund: setting a desirable funding level at $50 million annually; asking for the first Pledging Conference to be arranged during 1977; delegating programming authority for the Fund for 1978 to the Board's Permanent Committee, as well as authority to apportion the resources available in connexion therewith; and delegating project approval authority to the Executive Director for 1978-1979, within the programmes approved by the Board.

On 19 December 1977, in adopting resolution 32/166, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly took the Board's decisions into account, endorsed the desirable funding level of $50 million, and called on all States to make the maximum possible voluntary contributions annually to the Fund. The Second Committee had approved the text, as proposed by Jamaica on behalf of the States Members belonging to the Group of 77, without vote on 12 December. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

For list of pledges to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund for 1978, see subchapter below.

Third General Conference of UNIDO

As the Preparatory Committee for the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Industrial Development Board at its 1977 session reviewed the progress of preparations and recommended that the Conference be held for three weeks between September and October 1979 and that, in light of an invitation by the Government of India, the venue should be New Delhi. A draft provisional agenda, for which suggestions from regional commissions were invited, was submitted to the Assembly for its information. The Board would give further consideration to the agenda at its 1978 session, at which it would also consider the organizational aspects of the Conference. It asked the Permanent Committee of the Industrial Development Board to give special consideration to documentation for the Conference.

By resolution 32/164, adopted without vote on 19 December 1977, the Assembly decided that the Third General Conference should be held for three weeks in January/February 1980 at New Delhi and accepted with appreciation the offer of the Government of India—confirmed by a letter of 22 September 1977—to act as host.

The text was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 12 December, as proposed by 55 States. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By a section of resolution 32/212, adopted on 21 December, the Assembly approved the inclusion of Arabic as an official language of the Third General Conference. (For further information, see p.1059; for text of resolution 32/212, section VIII, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Recalling General Assembly resolution 31/161 of 21 December 1976,

Taking into account the importance of the role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in industrial development within the United Nations system and especially its role in increasing the industrial capacity of the developing countries,

Noting paragraph 184 of the report of the Industrial Development Board on its eleventh session, which refers to the convening of a conference of plenipotentiaries on the establishment of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a specialized agency,

Noting also the proposal of the Secretary-General that the conference of plenipotentiaries should be held at United Nations Headquarters from 29 August to 12 September 1977,

Taking into account the preparatory work necessary for the resumed thirty-first session of the General Assembly commencing 13 September 1977 and the importance of this work for both the resumed thirty-first session and the thirty-second regular session of the General Assembly in 1977,

Concerned that everything possible should be done to facilitate adequate preparation and full participation by Governments in the conference of plenipotentiaries,

Considering that a minimum period of three weeks would be necessary for negotiating and drafting a constitution for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, taking into account the nature of the problems still outstanding,

Membership in UNIDO

On 15 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/108, by which it decided to include the recently admitted United Nations Member States, Djibouti and Viet Nam, in the list of States eligible for membership in the Industrial Development Board.

The Assembly took this action on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved the text, as proposed by its Chairman, on 12 December. In both bodies, the action was taken without vote.

1. Expresses the view that in the present circumstances the dates proposed by the Secretary-General would not be practicable;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly should give due consideration to this matter at its thirty-second session and fix the appropriate dates for convening the conference of plenipotentiaries at United Nations Headquarters in the early part of 1978.

The General Assembly,
Recalling the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation, adopted at the Second General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, held at Lima from 12 to 26 March 1975, particularly the decision that the United Nations Industrial Development Organization should be converted into a specialized agency of the United Nations,

Recalling also the framework established by its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 2113 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977 on the convening of a conference of plenipotentiaries on the constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a specialized agency,

Noting paragraph 184 of the report of the Industrial Development Board on its eleventh session, which refers to the convening of a conference of plenipotentiaries on the establishment of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a specialized agency,

Bearing in mind the urgent need for the conversion of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization into a specialized agency,

Recalling in this connexion its resolution 31/161 of 21 December 1976 in which it, inter alia, called upon the Committee to Draw up a Constitution for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized agency to accelerate its work so as to enable the conference of plenipotentiaries to meet,

1. Decides to convene at United Nations Headquarters the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency for a period of three weeks, beginning on 20 February 1978;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to invite:

(a) All States to participate in the Conference;

(b) Representatives of organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate in the sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices in the capacity of observers, to participate in the Conference in that capacity in accordance with Assembly resolutions 3237 (XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976;

(c) Representatives of the national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity to participate in the Conference in the capacity of observers in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3280 (XXIX) of 10 December 1974;

(d) The United Nations Council for Namibia to participate in the Conference in accordance with paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 32/9 E of 4 November 1977;

(e) The specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the World Tourism Organization, as well as interested organs of the United Nations, to be represented at the Conference;

(f) Interested intergovernmental organizations to be represented by observers at the Conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the necessary arrangements are made for the effective participation in the Conference of the representatives referred to in paragraphs 2 (b) and (c) above, including the requisite financial provisions for their travel expenses and per diem;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for holding the Conference at United Nations Headquarters during the period indicated in paragraph 1 above, to submit to the Conference all relevant documentation and to arrange for the necessary staff, facilities and services that it will require, including the provision of summary records;

5. Decides that the languages of the Conference shall be those used in the General Assembly and its Main Committees.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/202 of 22 December 1976 in which it decided to establish a United Nations Industrial Development Fund,

Bearing in mind the provisions concerning the United Nations Industrial Development Fund contained in paragraphs 72 and 73 of the Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation, adopted by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization at its Second General Conference, held at Lima from 12 to 26 March 1975, which were endorsed by the General Assembly at its seventh special session in resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Taking into consideration the relevant decisions adopted by the Industrial Development Board at its eleventh session,

1. Endorses the decision of the Industrial Development Board that a desirable funding level for the United Nations Industrial Development Fund would be $US 50 million yearly;

2. Calls upon all States to make the maximum possible voluntary contributions annually to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund so as to meet the level mentioned in paragraph 1 above.

Questions pertaining to the environmentThe United Nations Environment Programme*Activities in 1977

During 1977, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) assigned 85 technical experts to projects in Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, India, Iran, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Mexico, Mozambique, the Netherlands, Peru, Portugal, Senegal, Switzerland, Thailand, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and the Sudano-Sahelian region of Africa. Experts were also assigned to assist in various United Nations programmes and conferences.

The experts were nationals of the following States: Argentina (1), Australia (2), Canada (6), Chile (3), Colombia (1), Egypt (2), France (6), the Federal Republic of Germany (1), Ghana (1), India (6), Iran (3), Italy (1), Kenya (1), the Netherlands (1), Norway (2), Pakistan (1), Peru (1), the Philippines (1), Sri Lanka (1), the Sudan (1), Sweden (4), Switzerland (1), the USSR (1), the United Kingdom (11), the United States (24) and Venezuela (1); and stateless (1).

During the year, UNEP held, participated in or sponsored 92 meetings, including: intergovernmental meetings on environment and development (in January at Nairobi, Kenya) and on land-based sources of pollution in the Mediterranean (in February at Athens, Greece); expert group meetings on trade barriers resulting from environmental policies (in February at Geneva), on an action plan for the protection and development of the marine environment (in June at Nairobi) and on the effects of cloud seeding (in November at Charlottesville, Virginia, United States, sponsored by UNEP and the World Meteorological Organization); a UNEP meeting on the ozone layer (in March at Washington D.C.); the United Nations Water Conference (in March at Mar del Plata, Argentina); a United Nations Institute for Training and Research conference on alternative strategies for the development of arid and semi-arid lands (in June at San Francisco, California, United States); a meeting to establish a conservation and management programme for natural resources in the Gobi region (in June/July in Mongolia); a workshop for environmental educators (in August/September at Geneva); the Intergovernmental Conference on Environmental Education sponsored by UNEP, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources and the Government of the USSR (in October at Tbilisi, USSR); and a meeting of the permanent joint committee for the transnational green belt in North Africa, sponsored by UNEP and the Arab League Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organization (in December at Tunis, Tunisia).

During 1977, UNEP published, sponsored or co-sponsored publication of 27 publications, studies and reports, including: The State of the Environment: Selected Topics, Pergamon Press, Oxford; Basic Human Needs—A Framework for Action, UNEP, Nairobi; Desertification: Its Causes and Consequences, Pergamon Press, Oxford; Co-ordinated Mediterranean Pollution Monitoring and Research Programme, Joint FAO/UNEP Report, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), Rome; Directory of Mediterranean Marine Research Centres, UNEP, Geneva; and Trends in Environmental Education, UNESCO, Paris.

Action programme for the human environment

The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme held its fifth session at UNEP headquarters in Nairobi from 9 to 25 May 1977. The role of UNEP in the assessment of environmental risks and in the identification of alternative, less harmful courses of action was discussed; the Council asked UNEP to inform Governments whenever the appearance of a potentially great risk to the environment was feared.

Regarding Earthwatch, the global environmental assessment programme established in 1972 to give early warning of impending crises, the Governing Council discussed strengthening the interaction among component parts to integrate them and improve Earthwatch's capability for evaluation and assessment. The Council called for a pilot study on one priority pollutant to illustrate evaluation techniques for pollutant monitoring. It also called for action to co-ordinate and integrate research efforts on the ozone layer, and for establishment of a co-ordinating committee within a year.

The Governing Council requested UNEP to continue to give high priority to the protection of human and environmental health, and called for special attention to be paid to chemical and biological food contaminants and to epidemiology and the control of chronic diseases as related to environmental factors. The Council recommended an action plan to abate pollution in the Gulf of Guinea and preparatory work for similar action in Asian waters. It also requested that a small working group on environmental law be convened, in particular to review a report on liability for pollution and other environmental damage and compensation for such damage.

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council, having received and considered the report and recommendations of the Governing Council of UNEP, including those submitted by the Governing Council in its capacity as the intergovernmental preparatory body for the United Nations Conference on Desertification (see subchapter below), adopted, without vote, resolution 2112(LXIII), by which it noted the report with satisfaction and invited the General Assembly to approve it.

The draft resolution had been approved, without vote, by the Economic Committee on 19 July. Sponsors were the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Italy, Kenya, Mexico, Poland, Portugal, Somalia, the Sudan, Togo, Tunisia, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly also noted the report with satisfaction, invited all United Nations organizations to take full account of the Governing Council's decisions, stressed the importance of environmental considerations in development programmes in different socioeconomic settings, and noted the reports of the UNEP Executive Director on the material remnants of wars and on international conventions and protocols on the environment; it also noted the progress of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on Natural Resources Shared by Two or More States.

These actions were embodied in resolution 32/168, adopted without vote. The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the text without vote on 7 December 1977. The sponsors were Argentina, Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, India, Jamaica, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, the Philippines, Portugal, the Sudan, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Environment co-operation regarding shared natural resources

The Governing Council considered a report of the Executive Director and reports of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on Natural Resources Shared by Two or More States on the question of environmental co-operation regarding shared resources. The Council decided that the work of the Group should continue and that the Group should be open to experts from other States members of the Governing Council interested in participating. It requested a report for its next session and an interim report for the General Assembly's 1977 session.

The Secretary-General, in a note of 17 August, reminded the Assembly that, pursuant to its request of 13 December 1973,¹ the UNEP Governing Council had requested the establishment of an intergovernmental working group to prepare draft principles of conduct for the guidance of States in the conservation and harmonious exploitation of shared natural resources. He informed the Assembly that the Group had met three times, that UNEP's Governing Council had requested the Executive Director to reconvene the Group, that participation in the Group had been enlarged from 17 to 28 members, and that the Executive Director would make an oral report on progress to the General Assembly.

The General Assembly, by resolution 32/168 (see above), noted the Secretary-General's note on the progress made by the Intergovernmental Working Group and the decisions of the Governing Council and expressed the hope that the Working Group would expedite its work in order that the Governing Council might present its final report on the subject to the Assembly.

Compensation for material remnants of wars

The UNEP Governing Council on 25 May 1977: affirmed that material remnants of wars could have lasting harmful effects on people, animals, vegetation, water, land and the ecosystem as a whole; requested the Executive Director to transmit his study on the material remnants of wars, particularly mines, and their effect on the environment to the General Assembly at its 1977 session; and asked him to continue his consultations with Governments and to continue to render assistance in the field of environmental protection to States in preparing their mine-elimination programmes.

Material remnants of wars might adversely affect the environment in many ways, according to the Executive Director's interim report presented to the Assembly. The report analysed replies from Governments as to remnants on their territory and observed that problems of disposal were formidable; remnants, scattered over wide areas, were of widely differing types. For the removal of existing remnants and their effects, an exchange of information, technical and financial assistance and advice, joint clearance operations and studies were recommended. For the prevention and avoidance of environmental hazards in the future, international conventions and protocols to limit the use of weapons with high and lasting destructive effects, and making ordnance such as mines self-destructive or self-neutralizing after a predetermined period were recommended.

The General Assembly, by resolution 32/168 (see above), noted this report and the decisions of the Governing Council, and invited Governments concerned to co-operate in the implementation of the decisions.

Environment and development

The Governing Council emphasized the need for industrialization to take place within an environmentally sound framework, and consequently the need for developing countries to have available guidelines, criteria, advice and technical assistance in the field of industry's effects on the environment. It asked the Executive Director, while ensuring a permanent process of communications and consultations on environmental aspects of industries, to follow up the reviews already undertaken, to proceed with the review of the remaining major industrial sectors, including chemicals, iron and steel, and non-ferrous metals, and to disseminate the resulting information. The Council called for expansion of this activity to fulfil the increasing needs of developing countries and for development of a continuous exchange of experience and information between developed and developing countries on environmental problems associated with industrialization.

The Governing Council also urged that the principles and objectives related to the improvement of the working environment be fully integrated into the general framework of the environment programme.

Environment conventions and protocols

The UNEP Governing Council, noting that a number of international conventions had been concluded to reduce pollution of the seas, but that the application of these conventions was still limited, recommended that all States accede to them.

In a report to the Governing Council at its fifth session, the UNEP Executive Director described developments in respect of conventions in the field of the environment in 1976 and outlined action taken to keep the Council informed of the status of existing conventions.

The report noted that the Agreement on the Conservation of Polar Bears had entered into force on 26 May 1976, and the Convention on the Protection of the Environment between Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden on 5 November 1976. Four new conventions and protocols were concluded during 1976, with seven more conventions at varying stages of preparation and negotiation.

The General Assembly, by resolution 32/168 (see above), invited Member States to ratify and implement the conventions and protocols relating to the environment and requested the Executive Director to continue to facilitate ratification and implementation by the greatest possible number of States.

Among the documents before the Assembly when it discussed the report of the Governing Council of UNEP were a note of 23 August 1977 from the Syrian Arab Republic transmitting a study by Syrian authorities on living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories, a note by Jordan of 21 October annexing a Jordanian Government report on Jerusalem under Israeli occupation, and a note of 28 July from Bulgaria forwarding the text of a decision of 29 December 1976 by its State Council concerning general principles for the protection, reproduction and development of the environment in the Bulgarian Black Sea Coast territorial unit and in the Danube territorial unit.

Resolution 32/168, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/463 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its fifth session and the statement of the Executive Director of the Programme introducing the report,

Having further considered Economic and Social Council resolution 2112(LXIII) of 4 August 1977 relating to the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling its resolutions 2997 (XXVII) of 15 December 1972 and 31/112 of 16 December 1976,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its fifth session;

2. Invites the governing bodies of all organizations within the United Nations system to take full account, within their terms of reference, of the decisions of the Governing Council and to ensure that those organizations review their programmes and budgets with a view to participating fully in the effective implementation of the environment programme;

3. Stresses the need for ensuring that environmental considerations are taken into account in development programmes in differing socio-economic settings, in the implementation of the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and in the formulation of the new international development strategy;

4. Invites all Governments to contribute generously to the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme, bearing in mind decision 98 (V) of 24 May 1977 of the Governing Council, so as to permit the full implementation of the medium-term plan for 1978-1981 for Fund programme activities;

5. Notes the report of the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on the study of the problem of the material remnants of wars, particularly mines, and their effect on the environment, and decision 101 (V) of 25 May 1977 of the Governing Council and invites the Governments concerned to co-operate with the Executive Director in the implementation of the decision;

6. Also notes the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Executive Director on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment and invites Member States, as appropriate, to ratify and implement these conventions and protocols, and requests the Executive Director to continue to take the necessary measures to facilitate the ratification and implementation of these and newly signed conventions and protocols by the greatest possible number of States;

7. Further notes the note by the Secretary-General on the progress made by the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on Natural Resources Shared by Two or More States and decision 99 (V) of 20 May 1977 of the Governing Council and expresses the hope that the Working Group will expedite the completion of its work to enable the Governing Council to submit its final report on the subject to the General Assembly.

International co-operation to counter the spread of deserts

The United Nations

Conference on Desertification

The United Nations Conference on Desertification took place in Nairobi, Kenya, from 29 August to 9 September 1977. It was convened by a General Assembly decision of 17 December 1974.²

Representatives of the following 95 States participated in the Conference: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, Canada, Cape Verde, the Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, the Congo, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, France, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, the Holy See, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, the Netherlands, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the South West Africa People's Organization and the Pan-Africanist Congress of Azania also participated.

Members of the secretariats of a number of United Nations offices and bodies attended, as well as representatives of the following specialized agencies: the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the World Meteorological Organization.

Observers from the following intergovernmental organizations participated: the African Development Bank, the Commission of the European Communities, the Economic Community of West African States, the Lake Chad Basin Commission, the League of Arab States (Arab Centre for the Studies of Arid Zones and Dry Lands; Arab League Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organization), the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of American States, and the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel.

Observers from 65 non-governmental organizations also participated.

Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

The Plan of Action to Combat Desertification was adopted by the Conference on 9 September 1977. It presented a comprehensive and detailed set of recommendations for initiating and sustaining a co-operative effort on the scale required to combat desertification. This co-operative effort was to reinforce and integrate national, regional and global actions against desertification, some of which were under way both inside and outside the United Nations family. The goal was to implement the Plan of Action by the year 2000. The seven-year period 1978-1984 was chosen for the implementation of the immediate action required and as an indication of the time at which a first general assessment of progress could be made.

The immediate aim of the Action Plan was to arrest the process of desertification and, where possible, to reclaim desert land. The long-term goal was to sustain the productivity of arid, semi-arid and subhumid areas vulnerable to desert-creep. A campaign against desertification was envisaged, particularly for developing countries subject to it, with such programmes to be encouraged in national development plans. Social problems in land-use management were a major concern of the Plan.

The basic principles guiding the Plan of Action were: any action undertaken should be within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations; it should include locally available technology where appropriate; the main focus was to be the well-being of the affected populations; efforts should conform with broader programmes for advancing social and economic progress; when implementing change, cultural and ecological differences in the vulnerable areas must be recognized; existing knowledge would be immediately adapted and applied; research was needed to clarify several fundamental problems; additional research should be geared to the scientific and technological capacity of the affected areas; a key to success in fighting desert-spread was improved land use; the inevitable periodic drought in dry lands and areas with low agricultural potential should be recognized; the United Nations system's resources must be marshalled in carrying out an integrated global programme of development, research and application of science and technology to solve desert problems; land and water management should take into account known ecological principles; both short-term relief measures and long-term preventive measures must be urgently considered, since prevention was cheaper than cure; and assessment of secondary environmental problems should not be overlooked when restoring a desert area.

The 28 recommendations adopted by the Conference concerned evaluation of desertification and improvement of land management (recommendations 1 to 3), the combination of industrialization and urbanization with the development of agriculture and their effects on the ecology in arid areas (recommendation 4), corrective anti-desertification measures (recommendations 5 to 11), socio-economic aspects (recommendations 12 to 16), ensuring against the risk and effects of drought (recommendation 17), strengthening science and technology at the national level (recommendations 18 to 21), integration of anti-desertification programmes into comprehensive development plans (recommendation 22), international action and co-operation (recommendations 23 to 26) and implementation of the Plan of Action (recommendations 27 and 28).

Resolutions of the United Nations Conference on Desertification

Eight resolutions were adopted by the Conference. By the first, the Conference recommended dissemination to all potential users of the documentation on desertification prepared for the Conference, recommended improvements to the world map of desertification, followed by similar dissemination, and approved the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification. By the second resolution, the Conference urged financial and technical assistance from all sources to help combat desertification in the least developed countries, and by the third it asked special aid for the drought-stricken Sahelian countries.

By the fourth resolution, the Conference condemned the use of chemical and biological weapons, poisoning of water, and other techniques of war that destroyed the environment. By the remaining resolutions, the Conference condemned South Africa's policy of bantustanization which put excessive pressure on agricultural land, condemned that country's continued occupation of Namibia, denounced the Israeli case study "The Negev: a desert reclaimed," and thanked Kenya for hosting the Conference.

Decisions of the Economic and Social Council and General Assembly

On 17 October 1977, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the results of the United Nations Conference on Desertification and transmitted it to the General Assembly. The Council's action was embodied in decision 285(LXIII) adopted, without vote, on the proposal of the President.

On 19 December 1977, by resolution 32/172, the General Assembly approved the report of the Conference. The Assembly called upon all Governments to consider, on a priority basis, the recommendations for national action in the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and urged them to consider setting up national authorities to co-ordinate, consolidate and implement national programmes to fight desert-spread. It further recommended subregional co-operation, aided by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and other organizations concerned, to prepare specific joint programmes as well as requests for development assistance to implement the Plan of Action.

The Assembly requested the regional commissions to undertake intensified and sustained action to support national efforts against the spread of deserts, such as assisting Governments in implementing the Plan of Action and convening inter-governmental regional meetings, technical workshops and seminars to consider immediate implementation of recommendations dealing with international action and co-operation. The Assembly also asked United Nations bodies to support international action to combat desert-spread.

The Assembly decided to entrust UNEP and the Environment Co-ordination Board with the task of following up and co-ordinating implementation of the Plan of Action. The Governing Council of UNEP was requested to report on follow-up action through the Economic and Social Council to the Assembly in 1978 and thereafter every two years. All countries, particularly developed ones, were called on to assist countries suffering from desertification, especially to finance their subregional and regional programmes. Multilateral financial institutions and private donors were also called upon to assist.

Developing countries were urged to give due priority to desertification problems in their development assistance requests.

The Executive Director of UNEP was authorized to convene immediately a consultative group, to consist of representatives from a wide cross-section of organizations—intergovernmental, governmental and others, including representatives of the United Nations system, as well as donor countries, multilateral financial agencies and developing countries having substantial interest in combating desert-spread. The group's main objective would be to assist in mobilizing resources.

The General Assembly endorsed in principle the creation of a special account within the United Nations to implement the Plan of Action, and requested the Secretary-General to submit a study on such an account to the Assembly's regular 1978 session.

In addition, the Assembly invited UNEP's Governing Council to arrange for a study of additional means of financing the implementation of the Plan of Action, to be prepared by a small group of high-level specialists in international financing. The Governing Council was to submit a report on additional financing to the regular 1978 session of the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council.

With a view to furthering research, development and refinement of data on desertification, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to approach Member States, competent organizations, relevant United Nations bodies and interested scientific institutions.

A further request of the Assembly was that the Secretary-General invite intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned with desertification to participate in implementation of the Plan of Action with a view to co-ordination of their activities within global and regional programmes.

Finally, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report to its regular 1978 session on the implementation of the resolutions adopted by the Conference, especially that on financial and technical assistance to the least developed countries and that on the effect of weapons of mass destruction on ecosystems.

Resolution 32/172 was adopted by 125 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. In the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text on 9 December by 104 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions, separate votes were taken, at the request of Mali, on two paragraphs. The paragraph by which the Assembly endorsed in principle the creation of a special account within the United Nations for implementing the Plan of Action was approved by 82 votes to 16, with 18 abstentions. The paragraph by which the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to submit a study on the establishment and operation of such an account was approved by 80 votes to 11, with 20 abstentions.

The text approved by the Second Committee was submitted by the Vice-Chairman of the Committee following informal consultations on a text submitted by Jamaica on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations which were members of the "Group of 77." This text was subsequently withdrawn.

In explanation of vote in the Second Committee, the following Members expressed objections to establishing a special account as a means for financing the Plan of Action: Australia, Belgium, Denmark, France, the German Democratic Republic (speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR), the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Objections to other provisions of the resolution were expressed by the German Democratic Republic (on behalf of nine powers), the Netherlands and the United States. The Netherlands considered that action against desertification could more profitably be taken at the national, regional and subregional levels through multilevel and bilateral arrangements, in particular by consortium arrangements focusing on small-scale projects involving a relatively small number of donor and recipient countries and multilateral agencies. The German Democratic Republic and the United States expressed reservations about the consultative group to be convened to assist in mobilizing resources to implement the Plan of Action.

In another action, taken on 19 December 1977, the General Assembly took note of a resolution of the United Nations Conference on Desertification that the least developed countries needed immediate financial and technical assistance from the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system. The Assembly recommended speedy implementation of the Conference's resolution, urged all concerned to extend additional international and bilateral assistance, and requested the Secretary-General to report on implementation at its regular 1978 session.

Resolution 32/169 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved a draft resolution, also without vote, on 7 December. The sponsors were Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Burundi, the Central African Empire, Chad, the Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Mali, Nepal, the Niger, Rwanda, the Sudan, Swaziland, and Uganda; they accepted oral drafting amendments by the United Kingdom.

Belgium, speaking on behalf of the member States of the European Economic Community, and the United States both noted that the principle of permanent sovereignty of States over their natural resources was acceptable only so far as the principle was applied in conformity with international law. Australia said it and other States had raised objections to the provision proposing additional international and bilateral assistance because it went beyond the recommendations of the Conference. The Federal Republic of Germany drew attention to the fact that the additional assistance referred to was not in fact available.

Also on 19 December 1977, the Assembly stressed the need for the immediate implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and of the relevant resolutions adopted by the Conference. The Assembly invited the Governing Council of UNEP to consider at its May 1978 session measures to improve institutional arrangements in the Sudano-Sahelian region, including the establishment of a subregional office of UNEP to support national and regional efforts to combat desertification and to encourage and co-ordinate assistance.

The Assembly also invited the Governing Council to include in its agenda, when considering implementation of the Plan of Action, an item concerning measures and modes of action for implementing projects and programmes to combat desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region.

These actions were embodied in resolution 32/170, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee which had approved a draft resolution, also without vote, on 8 December 1977. The sponsors were Algeria, Cape Verde, Chad, Egypt, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, the Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, the Sudan, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon and the Upper Volta. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Opposition to the establishment of a subregional UNEP office in the Sudano-Sahelian region was expressed by France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the USSR and the United States, on the ground that existing bodies in the area should be used.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and International economic co-operation,

Recalling further its resolution 3337 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, in which it decided to convene the United Nations Conference on Desertification,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the results of the Conference,

1. Approves the report of the United Nations Conference on Desertification, held at Nairobi from 29 August to 9 September 1977;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Government and people of Kenya for acting as host to the Conference;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the Conference for its efficient preparation and organization;

4. Calls upon all Governments to consider, on a priority basis, the recommendations for national action contained in section IV of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and, where necessary, the desirability of establishing a national authority to co-ordinate, consolidate and implement national anti-desertification action programmes;

5. Recommends that subregional co-operation be initiated or intensified, as considered necessary, among countries affected by desertification, with the required assistance from the United Nations Environment Programme and other organizations concerned, with a view to formulating specific joint programmes and requests for development assistance for implementation of the Plan of Action;

6. Requests the regional commissions to undertake intensified and sustained action in support of national efforts to combat desertification, to assist Governments, at their request, in the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and to convene as appropriate, in co-operation with interested Governments and regional organizations, intergovernmental regional meetings, technical workshops and seminars to consider the immediate implementation of the recommendations contained in section V of the Plan of Action;

7. Requests the organs, organizations and other bodies of the United Nations system to support international action to combat desertification within the context of the Plan of Action;

8. Decides to entrust the Governing Council and the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, as well as the Environment Co-ordination Board, with the responsibility of following up and co-ordinating the implementation of the Plan of Action, in accordance with recommendation 27 thereof, and requests the Governing Council to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session and every two years thereafter;

9. Calls upon all countries, in particular developed countries, as well as multilateral financial institutions and non-governmental donors, to provide and increase their assistance to countries suffering from desertification, especially for the financing of their subregional and regional programmes and projects within appropriate consortium arrangements, such as those pertaining to the Sahel green belt, and urges developing countries to give due priority to desertification problems in their development assistance requests;

10. Authorizes the Executive Director to convene immediately a consultative group, which would meet as and when required, comprising representatives from the organizations referred to in paragraph 7 above, such other organizations as might be required, donor countries, multilateral financial agencies as well as developing countries having a substantial interest in combating desertification, to assist in mobilizing resources for the activities undertaken within the framework of implementing the Plan of Action;

11. Endorses in principle the creation of a special account within the United Nations for implementing the Plan of Action;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit a study on the establishment and operation of such an account to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Governing Council and the Economic and Social Council;

13. Invites the Governing Council to have prepared, by a small group of high-level specialists in the international financing of projects and programmes, a study of additional measures and means of financing for the implementation of the Plan of Action, and to submit a final report on the subject of additional measures of financing to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to approach Member States and competent organizations and bodies within the United Nations system, as well as the scientific institutions concerned outside the system, for further research, development and refinement of the data pertaining to desertification, in order to close any existing gaps in scientific knowledge and technology, and for further development of the world map of desertification on the basis of the relevant recommendations of the Conference;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned with desertification problems and their impact on development to participate in the implementation of the Plan of Action with a view to co-ordinating their activities within world-wide and regional programmes;

16. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the resolutions adopted by the Conference, especially resolution 2 of 9 September 1977 on financial and technical assistance to the least developed countries and resolution 4 of 9 September 1977 on the effect of weapons of mass destruction on ecosystems.

Resolution 32/169, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/463 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Desertification, held at Nairobi from 29 August to 9 September 1977,

Recognizing that desertification constitutes a world-wide economic and social problem,

Reaffirming the cardinal principle of the permanent sovereignty of States over their natural resources,

Bearing in mind resolution 2 of 9 September 1977 adopted by the United Nations Conference on Desertification, in which the Conference recognized that the least developed among the developing countries with limited resources at their disposal were in need of immediate financial and technical assistance from the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system,

Taking note of resolution 98 (IV) of 31 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

1. Recommends the speedy implementation of recommendation 28 of the United Nations Conference on Desertification with respect to financial and technical assistance to the least developed countries;

2. Urges the United Nations and its Member States, the specialized agencies and international and regional financial institutions to ensure the implementation of the recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Desertification in favour of those countries by extending additional international and bilateral assistance;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

A/32/463 and Corr.1. Report of Second Committee (on UNEP), draft resolution III.

Resolution 32/170, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/463 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Considering the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and the relevant resolutions and recommendations adopted by the United Nations Conference on Desertification, held at Nairobi from 29 August to 9 September 1977,

Bearing in mind the resolutions and recommendations of the United Nations concerning the drought in the Sahel and the implementation of the medium-term and long-term programme for the recovery and rehabilitation of the region,

Aware of the particular seriousness of desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region and of the recurrent critical situations resulting from it, which hamper the economic and social development of the region and have particularly adverse effects on the way of life of the population,

Noting, in particular, the harmful effects of the particularly low level of rainfall in the region,

1. Stresses the need for the immediate implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and of the relevant resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Desertification;

2. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to consider at its sixth session, on the basis of a report by the Executive Director of the Programme which will take account of the role and activities of the competent existing organs in the region, measures to improve institutional arrangements in the Sudano-Sahelian region, including the establishment of a subregional office of the Programme for the purpose of supporting efforts undertaken at the national and regional levels by the countries concerned to combat desertification and of encouraging and co-ordinating, in co-operation with competent existing organs, assistance from developed countries, multilateral financial institutions, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental donors;

3. Further invites the Governing Council to include in its agenda, when it considers the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, an item concerning measures and modes of action for implementing projects and programmes to combat desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region.

Chapter IX

Questions concerning human settlementsUnited Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

During 1977 the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation received about 30 requests for assistance from various Governments. Including projects begun earlier, the Foundation had some 50 operational activities at various stages of development.

The majority of requests received were for institution-building pertaining to the mobilization of financial resources for development and improvement of human settlements. Seventeen projects dealt with institution-building or strengthening, 10 with training, and eight with assistance in the development of building materials. The others concerned housing policy, rural development, co-operative housing and housing administration.

Administrative arrangements

The General Assembly on 21 December 1977 approved the addition of new rules to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations which related to the Foundation.

Under the new rules, the Foundation was authorized to borrow funds, for reimbursable seeding operations, from Governments, governmental agencies and intergovernmental organizations; the net borrowings outstanding were not to exceed limits established by the Secretary-General, with due regard to the maintenance of adequate reserves to secure such borrowings and to the proper functioning of the Foundation. The Foundation was made solely responsible for repayment of loans to it, and no lender was to have any claim against the United Nations. In addition, loans could be made from the Foundation's resources to carry out its programmes.

This action was embodied in decision 32/451. The decision, orally proposed by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee Chairman, was approved by that Committee on 19 December 1977 by 57 votes to 4, with 23 abstentions. The Committee rejected—by 43 votes to 31, with 14 abstentions—a French oral proposal that consideration of the administrative arrangements of the Foundation be deferred to the Assembly's 1978 regular session.

In another action, the General Assembly, on 19 December 1977, appealed to all Governments to contribute generously to the Foundation as soon as possible—noting a suggested minimum target of f50 million in Government voluntary contributions proposed by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) to the UNEP Governing Council at its May 1977 session. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to convene a pledging conference during its 1978 regular session if funds to meet the target were not forthcoming.

These actions were taken in adopting, without a vote, resolution 32/173. The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the draft resolution on 12 December 1977, also without vote. The sponsors were Bangladesh, Egypt, India, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Nigeria, Oman, the Philippines, the Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia and Venezuela.

A number of Members, including Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Spain, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, commented that the newly established Commission on Human Settlements would have responsibility for the Foundation, its terms of reference and resources, and that consequently the plan for a possible pledging conference was premature.

Also on 19 December 1977, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to cancel the Trust Fund for Documentation on Housing, Building and Planning, established by the Economic and Social Council,¹ and to apply the released funds to the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) which was established by the Assembly on the same day by resolution 32/162 (see below).

This decision (32/443 A) had been orally proposed by the Second Committee Chairman and approved by that Committee without a vote on 13 December. The Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendation, also without vote.

Institutional arrangements for international co-operation in the field of human settlements

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 262(LXIII) which was adopted without vote, transmitted to the General Assembly, without prejudgement, as a text for further negotiation, a draft resolution on institutional arrangements for international co-operation regarding human settlements.

The text of decision 262(LXIII) and its annex (the draft resolution) had been prepared in the Council's Ad Hoc Sessional Committee on human settlements, established for this purpose, which held three formal and a number of informal meetings during July and August. The decision, submitted by the Chairman of the informal consultations, was approved without vote by the Ad Hoc Sessional Committee on 2 August. (For text of decision, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Another draft resolution considered by the Ad Hoc Sessional Committee concerned co-operation in the field of human settlements with organizations outside the United Nations system. By this resolution, the Council would have recommended that the Assembly: welcome the increasing collaboration between the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning, the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation and non-governmental organizations concerned with human settlements; requested the Secretary-General to establish a small non-governmental advisory group on human settlements to propose co-operative activities between the United Nations and other groups and recommend procedures for collaborative programmes, to be presented to the future intergovernmental body for human settlements; and recommended that the regional commissions form similar regional advisory groups. The sponsors of the draft resolution—Austria, Colombia, Finland, the Netherlands, Norway and Portugal—withdrew it.

By decision 263(LXIII) of 4 August 1977, the Council took note of a report of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on activities of the United Nations system in human settlements, which had been submitted to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination. The report summarized the role and mandates, activities, opportunities for harmonization, interim co-ordination arrangements and proposed system-wide action of the organizations of the United Nations family in this field (see p. 781).

The discussion of institutional arrangements at the Assembly's 1977 session took place mainly in the Second Committee and culminated in the adoption of resolution 32/162 on 19 December 1977. By this resolution, consisting of a preamble and eight sections, the Assembly sought to achieve greater coherence and effectiveness in human settlements activities in the United Nations system, to develop new approaches to solving human settlements problems, and to consolidate and strengthen promptly the capacity of the United Nations system, in order to improve the quality of life of all people in human settlements.

By the first section, the Assembly enumerated several development assistance and technical co-operation activities which it considered international co-operation in the field of human settlements should entail.

By the second section, the Assembly decided that the Economic and Social Council was to transform its Committee on Housing, Building and Planning into a Commission on Human Settlements which would assume the Committee's responsibilities.

In addition to assisting regional and national efforts to solve human settlements problems through a comprehensive approach, promoting an increase in resource availability and strengthening international and interregional co-operation, the Commission was to: develop and promote policy objectives endorsed by the Assembly; propose ways to achieve over-all policy objectives within the United Nations system; study new issues, problems and solutions; approve the use of funds; and supervise the work of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements. It would report through the Council to the Assembly. The Commission's 58 members would be elected for three-year terms on the basis of a specific pattern of geographical representation.

By section III, the Assembly established a secretariat to service the Commission on Human Settlements, to be named the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and located at Nairobi, Kenya.

The Assembly, by the fourth section of the resolution, prescribed organization at the regional level, recommending that the regional commissions constitute themselves also as regional committees on human settlements, that responsibility for regional and subregional programme implementation gradually be transferred to regional organizations, and that the regional committees be responsible for their own planning and policies. Each regional committee, whose principal functions were elaborated by the Assembly, was to be serviced by a unit of the secretariat of the parent regional commission and financed from regular budget resources, selected regional resources and voluntary contributions. The regional secretariat units were to identify the institutions best able to help them with services, training and assistance in research relating to human settlements.

By the fifth section, on terms of reference, the Assembly determined that global and regional human settlements activities should deal especially with: settlement policies and strategies; settlement planning; institutions and management; shelter, infrastructure and services; land; and public participation. The Assembly also listed priorities.

By the sixth section, the Assembly particularly urged concerted action and co-ordination between the Commission/Centre and UNEP, to be reviewed biannually by their directors and officers. The existing interagency mechanisms of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination were also to be strengthened.

By section VII, the Assembly recommended: that the Centre and the secretariats of the regional commissions establish working relations, concerning human settlements, with the principal regional and global financial institutions; and that special co-operation should exist with the United Nations Development Programme at all levels.

The final section contained the Assembly's recommendation that co-operative working relations be sought at global and regional levels with universities, research and scientific institutes, non-governmental organizations and voluntary groups to make full use of their knowledge and experience in human settlements.

Resolution 32/162 was adopted by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 13 abstentions. It had been approved by the Second Committee on 9 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 101 to 0, with 13 abstentions, and was sponsored by Australia, Burundi, Canada, Ethiopia, Finland, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Mauritania, Mexico, Nepal, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, the Philippines, Portugal, Sri Lanka, Sweden and Uganda.

In explanation of vote, Argentina, Mexico and Venezuela expressed concern that the number of seats allocated to Latin American States in the Commission on Human Settlements was not sufficient. The creation of a new intergovernmental body and a new and independent secretariat away from United Nations Headquarters brought objections by France, Italy, Japan and the German Democratic Republic (speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR). The German Democratic Republic also objected to the expense of setting up the new Centre. Italy considered that the institutional solution just adopted carried the risk of duplication of UNEP efforts at the very least, and conflicting policies at worst. France said the resolution was a flagrant example of institutional and budgetary disorder.

Pursuant to a 1976 Assembly request,² the Secretary-General reported on co-ordination of action at the regional level in the field of human settlements. The report dealt mainly with activities within the framework of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Western Asia—specifically, regional meetings and conferences held or contemplated—to establish guidelines for intraregional co-ordination of action to be taken in order to deal with questions regarding human settlements.

On an oral proposal of the Second Committee Chairman, the Committee recommended, without vote, that the Assembly take note of the report. The Assembly did so, also without vote, by its decision 32/444 A of 19 December 1977.

Decent living environment for vulnerable groups

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly had asked the Secretary-General to report in 1977 on measures taken and results obtained towards protection of a decent living environment for the most vulnerable social groups, such as children, youth, the elderly and the handicapped,³ in the light of recommendations by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements in 1976.⁴

The Secretary-General in a note of 21 June 1977 stated that there had been insufficient time for Member States to implement and report on the recommendations of Habitat, and suggested that he be allowed to submit the report in 1978. On the recommendation of its Economic Committee, approved without vote on 19 July 1977 on an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Economic and Social Council, on 4 August, also without vote, recommended by decision 264(LXIII) that the Assembly concur in the Secretary-General's suggestion. The Assembly did so in taking decision 32/444 B without vote on 19 December 1977. The Second Committee had approved this decision on 12 December.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 3327 (XXIX) of 16 December 1974 regarding the establishment of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation,

Believing that the current level of resources available to the Foundation is clearly inadequate,

Recognizing that the international community, at both the global and regional levels, should encourage and support Governments determined to take effective action to ameliorate conditions, especially for the least advantaged, in urban and rural settlements,

Bearing in mind the invitation of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, in its decision 92 (V) of 25 May 1977, to the General Assembly regarding the setting of a target for total voluntary contributions by Governments to the Foundation,

1. Appeals to all Governments to contribute generously to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation as soon as possible in order to expedite action programmes in the field of human settlements;

2. Notes the proposal of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme regarding the target of $50 million as a minimum for the total voluntary contributions by Governments for the years 1978-1981;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to convene, during the thirty-third session of the General Assembly, a pledging conference on voluntary contributions by Governments to the Foundation if pledges to meet the minimum target referred to in paragraph 2 above are not forthcoming.

ANNEX

Institutional arrangements for international co-operation in the field of human settlements

The General Assembly,

Recalling relevant resolutions, in particular its resolutions 2718 (XXV) of 15 December 1970, 3001 (XXVII) of 15 December 1972 and 3327 (XXIX) of 16 December 1974,

Convinced of the need for urgent action to improve the quality of life of all people in human settlements,

Recognizing that such action is primarily the responsibility of Governments,

Conscious that human settlements problems represent a primary field of action in international co-operation, which should be strengthened in order that adequate solutions may be found, based on equity, justice and solidarity, especially among developing countries,

Recognizing that the international community should provide, both at the global and regional levels, encouragement and support to Governments determined to take effective action to ameliorate conditions, especially for the least advantaged, in rural and urban human settlements,

Recognizing that human settlements and the steps to be taken to improve them should be considered an essential component of socio-economic development,

Recalling the decisions of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, as well as the recommendations of the World Population Conference, the World Food Conference, the Second General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Conference of the International Women's Year, the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth special session and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, that establish the basis of the New International Economic Order,

Aware of the sectoral responsibilities of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Conscious of the need to achieve greater coherence and effectiveness in human settlements activities within the United Nations system,

Recognizing that new priorities should be identified and activities developed to reflect comprehensive and integrated approaches to the solution of human settlements problems,

Convinced that it is necessary to consolidate and strengthen promptly the capacity of the United Nations system in the field of human settlements,

Recognizing that urgent steps should be taken to ensure a better mobilization of financial resources at all levels, with a view to improving human settlements,

Believing that:

(a) The current level of resources available for development purposes, particularly for human settlements, is clearly inadequate,

(b) The effective development of human settlements has been hindered by great disparities in socio-economic development within and between countries,

(c) The establishment of a just and equitable world economic order through necessary changes in areas of international trade, monetary systems, industrialization, the transfer of resources, the transfer of technology and the consumption of world resources, is essential for socio-economic development and for the improvement of human settlements, particularly in developing countries,

I. International co-operation in the field of human settlements

1. Considers that:

(a) International co-operation in the field of human settlements should be viewed as an instrument of socio-economic development;

(b) The fundamental object of international co-operation for development is to support national action and therefore programmes for such co-operation in the field of human settlements should be based on the policies and priorities established in the recommendations for national action of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements;

(c) In seeking co-operation for development, countries should give due priority to human settlements;

(d) Requests for development assistance should not be subject to discrimination on the part of the institutions to which these requests are addressed;

(e) Technical co-operation should be made available to countries requesting assistance in policy formulation, management and institutional improvement relating to human settlements;

(f) Technical co-operation should be made available to developing countries requesting assistance in education and training and applied research relating to human settlements;

(g) Financial and technical co-operation for development should be accorded to countries requesting assistance for, inter alia, projects in self-help and co-operative housing, integrated rural development, water and transportation;

(h) All Governments should give serious consideration to making contributions as soon as possible to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation established by virtue of

General Assembly resolution 3327 (XXIX), in order to expedite action programmes in the field of human settlements;

(i) Emerging concepts and priorities regarding human settlements in developing countries present new challenges to the policies and capability of development assistance agencies in donor countries and to international bodies, and therefore multilateral and bilateral development assistance agencies should respond effectively to requests for assistance in the field of human settlements; special attention should be paid to the needs of the least advantaged countries, particularly in the provision of long-term low-interest mortgages and loans to facilitate the implementation of human settlements activities in the least developed countries that cannot fulfil existing terms and conditions;

(j) Information systems should be strengthened, where necessary, and better co-ordinated, and stronger links established at the regional level between human settlements and research institutions in different countries;

(fr) Many international organizations carry out activities related to human settlements, and specialized agencies and other appropriate bodies, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Bank and the World Health Organization should consider seriously the recommendations of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, with a view to their implementation in their respective fields of competence;

II. Commission on Human Settlements

2. Decides that the Economic and Social Council should establish an intergovernmental Commission on Human Settlements, which will have 58 members to be elected for three-year terms on the following basis:

(a) ... seats for African States;

(b) ... seats for Asian States;

(c) ... seats for Latin American States;

(d) ... seats for Eastern European States;

(e) ... seats for Western European and other States;

3. Decides that the Commission on Human Settlements will discharge inter alia the responsibilities at present exercised by the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning;

4. Decides that the Commission on Human Settlements will have the following main objectives:

(a) To assist countries and regions in increasing and improving their own efforts to solve human settlements problems;

(b) To promote greater international co-operation in order to increase the availability of resources of developing countries and regions;

(c) To promote the integral concept of human settlements and a comprehensive approach to human settlements problems in all countries;

(d) To strengthen co-operation and co-participation in this domain among all countries and regions;

5. Decides that the Commission on Human Settlements will have the following main functions and responsibilities:

(a) To develop and promote policy objectives, priorities and guidelines regarding existing and planned programmes of work in the field of human settlements, as formulated in the recommendations of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements and subsequently endorsed by the General Assembly;

(b) To follow closely the activities of the United Nations system and other international organizations in the field of human settlements and to propose, when appropriate, ways and means by which the over-all policy objectives and goals in the field of human settlements within the United Nations system might best be achieved;

(c) To study, in the context of the Conference's recommendations for national action, new issues, problems and especially solutions in the field of human settlements, particularly those of a regional or international character;

(d) To give over-all policy guidelines and carry out supervision of the operations of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation;

(e) To review and approve periodically the utilization of funds at its disposal for carrying out human settlements activities at the global, regional and subregional levels;

(f) To provide over-all direction to the secretariat of the Centre referred to in section III below;

(g) To review and provide guidance on the programme of the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements established by virtue of General Assembly resolution 31/115 of 16 December 1976;

6. Decides that the first session of the Commission on Human Settlements be held in the first half of 1978;

7. Decides that the Commission on Human Settlements will report to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council;

III. Habitat, the Centre on Human Settlements

8. Decides that a small and effective secretariat shall be established in the United Nations to service the Commission on Human Settlements and to serve as a focal point for human settlements action and the co-ordination of activities within the United Nations system, to be named "Habitat, the Centre for Human Settlements," hereinafter referred to as "the Centre";

9. Decides that the Centre shall be headed by an Executive Director, who shall report to the Secretary-General;

10. Decides that the Executive Director shall be responsible for the management of the Centre, which shall comprise the posts and budgetary resources of the following:

(a) The Centre for Housing, Building and Planning of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs;

(b) The appropriate section of the Division of Economic and Social Programmes of the United Nations Environment Programme directly concerned with human settlements, with the exception of the posts required by that Programme to exercise its responsibilities for the environmental aspects and consequences of human settlements planning;

(c) The United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation;

(d) As appropriate, selected posts and associated resources from relevant parts of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs;

11. Decides that the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation shall be administered by the Executive Director referred to in paragraph 9 above and shall have the terms of reference set out in the annex to General Assembly resolution 3327 (XXIX), with appropriate amendments to reflect the new relationship to the Commission on Human Settlements and its secretariat;

12. Decides that the Centre, under the leadership of its Executive Director, shall be entrusted with the following responsibilities, among others:

(a) To ensure the harmonization at the inter-secretariat level of human settlements programmes planned and carried out by the United Nations system;

(b) To assist the Commission on Human Settlements in co-ordinating human settlements activities in the United Nations system, to keep them under review and to assess their effectiveness;

(c) To execute human settlements projects;

(d) To provide the focal point for a global exchange of information about human settlements;

(e) To provide substantive support to the Commission on Human Settlements;

(f) To deal with interregional human settlements matters;

(g) To supplement the resources of the regions in formulating and implementing human settlements projects when so required;

(h) To promote collaboration with, and the involvement of, the world scientific community concerned with human settlements;

(i) To establish and maintain a global directory of consultants and advisers to supplement the skills available within the system and to assist in the recruitment of experts at the global level, including those available in developing countries;

(j) To initiate public information activities on human settlements in co-operation with the Office of Public Information;

(k) To promote the further and continued use of audio visual material relating to human settlements;

(l) To carry out the mandate and responsibilities previously assigned by the appropriate legislative bodies to the secretariat units to be absorbed in the central staff;

(m) To implement programmes until they are transferred to the regional organizations;

13. Decides that the Director of the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements should report to the Executive Director;

14. Decides that there should be close links between the Centre and the United Nations Environment Programme, and that for this reason the location of the Centre should be at Nairobi;

15. Decides that during the period 1978-1980 a significant portion of all posts in the Centre will be assigned to the regions for work on regional human settlements questions;

IV. Organization at the regional level

16. Recommends that the regional commissions should consider the establishment of regional intergovernmental committees on human settlements, comprising all members, in cases where such committees do not already exist;

17. Recommends that such regional committees should be established as soon as possible and then co-ordinate their activities with those of the Commission on Human Settlements and report to it through the appropriate regional commissions;

18. Recommends further that the responsibility for implementing regional and subregional programmes should be gradually transferred to regional organizations;

19. Recommends that each regional committee should be served by a unit of the secretariat of the parent regional commission under an executive officer; these units should preferably be established as soon as possible and should be provided with the necessary resources for their operations;

20. Decides that the regional committees should be responsible for the formulation of regional and subregional policies and programmes and for their implementation;

21. Recommends further that the budgetary and personnel resources available to each regional secretariat unit should consist of those available from the regular budgetary resources and those redeployed from the aggregate posts available to the central secretariat, voluntary contributions, including those made to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, as well as selected resources currently available to each region;

22. Recommends that the principal functions of the regional secretariat units should be:

(a) To serve the regional committees referred to in paragraph 16 above;

(b) To review progress in the implementation of programmes within the regions;

(c) To promote the active collaboration of governmental representatives in activities related to human settlements;

(d) To assist Governments of countries in the region in the formulation of their requests for assistance from the appropriate bilateral and multilateral bodies;

(e) To establish close links with the appropriate financial institutions at the regional and global levels and with regional units of the specialized agencies;

(f) To formulate, implement and supervise regional and subregional programmes and projects, especially regional training programmes;

(g) To execute regional human settlements projects;

23. Recommends that the regional secretariat units, with the approval of the regional committees, should identify those national and regional institutions which are best able to provide services, training and assistance in research relating to human settlements;

V. Terms of reference

24. Decides that human settlements activities and programmes at both the global and regional levels should deal in particular with the following subject areas:

- (a) Settlement policies and strategies;
- (b) Settlement planning;
- (c) Institutions and management;
- (d) Shelter, infrastructure and services;
- (e) Land;
- (f) Public participation;

25. Decides that the formulation of global programme priorities within these broad subject areas shall be undertaken by the Commission on Human Settlements and that of regional programme priorities by the regional committees, on the basis of the needs and problems of the region and of the countries within the region;

26. Recommends that the following functions be considered on a priority basis, in relation to the subject areas mentioned in paragraph 24 above:

- (a) Identification of the problems and possible solutions;
- (b) The formulation and implementation of policies;
- (c) Education and training;
- (d) The identification, development and use of appropriate technology, as well as the limitation of hazardous technology;
- (e) Exchange of information, including audio-visual information;
- (f) Implementation machinery;
- (g) Assistance in the mobilization of resources at the national and international levels;

VI. Concerted action and co-ordination

27. Urges in particular that the Executive Director of the Centre and the Bureau of the Commission on Human Settlements should meet biannually with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Bureau of its Governing Council to review together their respective priorities and programmes for improving human settlements and to strengthen and extend co-operation between the two organizations;

28. Urges also that the Executive Director of the Centre and the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme should participate in and address the annual meetings of their governing bodies;

VII. Working relations with financial institutions

29. Recommends that the Centre and the secretariats of the regional commissions should establish working relations, as regards the question of human settlements, with the principal financial institutions at the regional and global levels;

30. Recommends that special co-operation should exist at the global, regional and national levels between the United Nations Development Programme and the Centre;

VIII. Co-operation with organizations outside the United Nations system

31. Recommends that, at the global and regional levels, co-operation should be sought with universities, research and scientific institutes, non-governmental organizations and voluntary groups, in order to make full use of their knowledge and experience in the field of human settlements; at the intergovernmental level, this co-operation should be formalized and at the secretariat level it should be brought about by the establishment of appropriate working relations.

The General Assembly,

Recalling relevant resolutions, in particular its resolutions 2718 (XXV) of 15 December 1970, 3001 (XXVII) of 15 December 1972 and 3327 (XXIX) of 16 December 1974,

Convinced of the need for urgent action to improve the quality of life of all people in human settlements,

Recognizing that such action is primarily the responsibility of Governments,

Conscious that human settlements problems represent a primary field of action in international co-operation, which should be strengthened in order that adequate solutions may be found, based on equity, justice and solidarity, especially among developing countries,

Recognizing that the international community should provide, both at the global and regional levels, encouragement and support to Governments determined to take effective action to ameliorate conditions, especially for the least advantaged, in rural and urban human settlements,

Recognizing that human settlements and the steps to be taken to improve them should be considered an essential component of socio-economic development,

Recalling the decisions of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment and the recommendations of the World Population Conference, the World Food Conference, the Second General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Conference of the International Women's Year, as well as the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth special session and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States adopted by the Assembly at its twenty-ninth session, that establish the basis of the new international economic order,

Aware of the sectoral responsibilities of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Conscious of the need to achieve greater coherence and effectiveness in human settlements activities within the United Nations system,

Recognizing that new priorities should be identified and activities developed to reflect comprehensive and integrated approaches to the solution of human settlements problems,

Convinced that it is necessary to consolidate and strengthen promptly the capacity of the United Nations system in the field of human settlements,

Recognizing that urgent steps should be taken to ensure a better mobilization of financial resources at all levels, with a view to improving human settlements,

Believing that:

(a) The current level of resources available for development purposes, particularly for human settlements, is clearly inadequate,

(b) The effective development of human settlements has been hindered by great disparities in socio-economic development within and between countries,

(c) The establishment of a just and equitable world economic order through necessary changes in areas of international trade, monetary systems, industrialization, the transfer of resources, the transfer of technology and the consumption of world resources is essential for socio-economic development and for the improvement of human settlements, particularly in developing countries,

I

International co-operation in the field of human settlements

Considers that:

(a) International co-operation in the field of human settlements should be viewed as an instrument of socio-economic development;

(b) The fundamental object of international cooperation for development is to support national action and, therefore, programmes for such co-operation in the field of human settlements should be based on the policies and priorities established in the recommendations for national action of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements;

(c) In seeking co-operation for development, States should give due priority to human settlements;

(d) Requests for development assistance should not be subject to discrimination on the part of the institutions to which these requests are addressed;

(e) Technical co-operation should be made available to countries requesting assistance in policy formulation, management and institutional improvement relating to human settlements;

(f) Technical co-operation should be made available to developing countries requesting assistance in education and training and applied research relating to human settlements;

(g) Financial and technical co-operation for development should be accorded to countries requesting assistance for, inter alia, projects in self-help and co-operative housing, integrated rural development, water and transportation;

(h) All Governments should give serious consideration to making contributions as soon as possible to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation established by virtue of General Assembly resolution 3327 (XXIX), in order to expedite action programmes in the field of human settlements;

(i) Emerging concepts and priorities regarding human settlements in developing countries present new challenges to the policies and capability of development assistance agencies in donor countries and to international bodies; multilateral and bilateral development assistance agencies should therefore respond effectively to requests for assistance in the field of human settlements and special attention should be paid to the needs of the least advantaged countries, particularly in the provision of long-term, low-interest mortgages and loans to facilitate the implementation of human settlements activities in the least developed countries that cannot fulfil existing terms and conditions;

(j) Information systems should be strengthened, where necessary, and better co-ordinated, and stronger links should be established at the regional level between human settlements and research institutions in different countries;

(k) Many international organizations carry out activities related to human settlements, and specialized agencies and other appropriate bodies—in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the International Labour Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Bank and the World Health Organization—should consider seriously the recommendations of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, with a view to implementing them in their respective fields of competence;

II

Commission on Human Settlements

1. Decides that the Economic and Social Council should transform the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning into a Commission on Human Settlements, which will have fifty-eight members to be elected for three-year terms on the following basis:

(a) Sixteen seats for African States;

(b) Thirteen seats for Asian States;

(c) Six seats for Eastern European States;

(d) Ten seats for Latin American States;

(e) Thirteen seats for Western European and other States;

2. Decides that the Commission on Human Settlements will discharge, inter alia, the responsibilities at present exercised by the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning;

3. Decides that the Commission on Human Settlements will have the following main objectives:

(a) To assist countries and regions in increasing and improving their own efforts to solve human settlements problems;

(b) To promote greater international co-operation in order to increase the availability of resources of developing countries and regions;

(c) To promote the integral concept of human settlements and a comprehensive approach to human settlements problems in all countries;

(d) To strengthen co-operation and co-participation in this domain among all countries and regions;

4. Decides that the Commission on Human Settlements will have the following main functions and responsibilities:

(a) To develop and promote policy objectives, priorities and guidelines regarding existing and planned programmes of work in the field of human settlements, as formulated in the recommendations of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements and subsequently endorsed by the General Assembly;

(b) To follow closely the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations in the field of human settlements and to propose, when appropriate, ways and means by which the over-all policy objectives and goals in the field of human settlements within the United Nations system might best be achieved;

(c) To study, in the context of the recommendations for national action of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, new issues, problems and especially solutions in the field of human settlements, particularly those of a regional or international character;

(d) To give over-all policy guidance and carry out supervision of the operations of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation;

(e) To review and approve periodically the utilization of funds at its disposal for carrying out human settlements activities at the global, regional and subregional levels;

(f) To provide over-all direction to the secretariat of the Centre referred to in section III below;

(g) To review and provide guidance on the programme of the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements established by virtue of General Assembly resolution 31/115 of 16 December 1976;

5. Decides that the first session of the Commission on Human Settlements shall be held in the first half of 1978;

6. Decides that the reports of the Commission on Human Settlements will be submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council;

III

United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat)

1. Decides that a small and effective secretariat shall be established in the United Nations to service the Commission on Human Settlements and to serve as a focal point for human settlements action and the co-ordination of activities within the United Nations system, to be named "United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat)," hereinafter referred to as "the Centre";

2. Decides that the Centre shall be headed by an Executive Director, at a level to be determined later, who shall report to the Secretary-General until such time as any relevant recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System can be taken into account;

3. Decides that the Executive Director shall be responsible for the management of the Centre, which shall comprise the posts and budgetary resources of the following:

(a) The Centre for Housing, Building and Planning of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat;

(b) The appropriate section of the Division of Economic and Social Programmes of the United Nations Environment Programme directly concerned with human settlements, with the exception of the posts required by that Programme to exercise its responsibilities for the environmental aspects and consequences of human settlements planning;

(c) The United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation;

(d) As appropriate, selected posts and associated resources from relevant parts of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs;

4. Decides that the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation shall be administered by the Executive Director referred to in paragraph 2 of the present section and shall have the terms of reference set out in the annex to General Assembly resolution 3327 (XXIX), with appropriate amendments to reflect the new relationship to the Commission on Human Settlements and its secretariat;

5. Decides that the Centre, under the leadership of its Executive Director, shall be entrusted, inter alia, with the following responsibilities:

(a) To ensure the harmonization at the intersecretariat level of human settlements programmes planned and carried out by the United Nations system;

(b) To assist the Commission on Human Settlements in co-ordinating human settlements activities in the United Nations system, to keep them under review and to assess their effectiveness;

(c) To execute human settlements projects;

(d) To provide the focal point for a global exchange of information about human settlements;

(e) To provide substantive support to the Commission on Human Settlements;

(f) To deal with interregional human settlements matters;

(g) To supplement the resources of the regions in formulating and implementing human settlements projects when so required;

(h) To promote collaboration with, and involvement of, the world scientific community concerned with human settlements;

(i) To establish and maintain a global directory of consultants and advisers to supplement the skills available within the United Nations system and to assist in the recruitment of experts at the global level, including those available in developing countries;

(j) To initiate public information activities on human settlements in co-operation with the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat;

(k) To promote the further and continued use of audio-visual material relating to human settlements;

(l) To carry out the mandate and responsibilities previously assigned by the appropriate legislative bodies to the secretariat units to be absorbed in the central staff;

(m) To implement programmes until they are transferred to the regional organizations;

6. Decides that the Director of the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements shall report to the Executive Director;

7. Decides that there should be close links between the Centre and the United Nations Environment Programme, and that for this reason the location of the Centre should be at Nairobi;

8. Decides that during the period 1978-1980 a significant portion of all posts in the Centre will be assigned to the regions for work on regional human settlements questions;

IV

Organization at the regional level

1. Recommends that the regional commissions should consider the establishment of regional intergovernmental committees on human settlements, comprising all members, in cases where such committees do not already exist;

2. Recommends that such regional committees should be established as soon as possible and should then co-ordinate their activities with those of the Commission on Human Settlements and report to it through the appropriate regional commissions;

3. Recommends that the responsibility for implementing regional and subregional programmes should be gradually transferred to regional organizations;

4. Recommends that each regional committee should be served by a unit of the secretariat of the parent regional commission under an executive officer, that these units should preferably be established as soon as possible and that they should be provided with the necessary resources for their operations;

5. Decides that the regional committees shall be responsible for the formulation of regional and subregional policies and programmes and for their implementation;

6. Recommends that the budgetary and personnel resources available to each regional secretariat unit should consist of those available from the regular budgetary resources and those redeployed from the aggregate posts available to the central secretariat, voluntary contributions, including those made to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, as well as selected resources currently available to each region;

7. Recommends that the principal functions of the regional secretariat units should be:

(a) To serve the regional committees referred to in paragraph 1 of the present section;

(b) To review progress in the implementation of programmes within the regions;

(c) To promote the active collaboration of governmental representatives in activities related to human settlements;

(d) To assist Governments of countries in the region in the formulation of their requests for assistance from the appropriate bilateral and multilateral bodies;

(e) To establish close links with the appropriate financial institutions at the regional and global levels and with regional units of the specialized agencies;

(f) To formulate, implement and supervise regional and sub-regional programmes and projects, especially regional training programmes;

(g) To execute regional human settlements projects;

8. Recommends that the regional secretariat units, with the approval of the regional committees, should identify those national and regional institutions which are best able to provide services, training and assistance in research relating to human settlements;

V Terms of reference

1. Decides that human settlements activities and programmes at both the global and regional levels shall deal in particular with the following subject areas:

- (a) Settlement policies and strategies;
- (b) Settlement planning;
- (c) Institutions and management;
- (d) Shelter, infrastructure and services;
- (e) Land;
- (f) Public participation;

2. Decides that the formulation of global programme priorities within these broad subject areas shall be undertaken by the Commission on Human Settlements and that of regional programme priorities by the regional committees, on the basis of the needs and problems of the region and of the countries within the region;

3. Recommends that the following functions should be considered on a priority basis, in relation to the subject areas mentioned in paragraph 1 of the present section:

- (a) Identification of the problems and possible solutions;
- (b) Formulation and implementation of policies;
- (c) Education and training;
- (d) Identification, development and use of appropriate technology, as well as limitation of hazardous technology;
- (e) Exchange of information, including audio-visual information;
- (f) Implementation machinery;
- (g) Assistance in the mobilization of resources at the national and international levels;
- (h) Promotion of the establishment of an international information pool on building materials, plants and equipment;

VI Concerted action and co-ordination

1. Urges, in particular, that the Executive Director of the Centre and the bureau of the Commission on Human Settlements should meet biannually with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the bureau of its Governing Council to review together their respective priorities and programmes for improving human settlements and to strengthen and extend co-operation between the two organizations;

2. Urges also that the Executive Director of the Centre and the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme should participate in and address the annual meetings of their governing bodies;

3. Decides that there must be a sustained and determined effort, on the part of all organizations most closely connected with human settlements, at both the regional and global levels, to concert their planned programmes and projects;

4. Decides further that the existing mechanisms of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination must be strengthened to ensure that co-ordination in the field of human settlements is effective throughout the whole United Nations system;

VII Working relations with financial institutions

1. Recommends that the Centre and the secretariats of the regional commissions should establish working relations, as regards the question of human settlements, with the principal financial institutions at the regional and global levels;

2. Recommends that special co-operation should exist at the global, regional and national levels between the United Nations Development Programme and the Centre;

VIII Co-operation with organizations outside the

Recommends that, at the global and regional levels, co-operation should be sought with universities, research and scientific institutes, non-governmental organizations and voluntary groups, in order to make full use of their knowledge and experience in the field of human settlements; at the intergovernmental level, this co-operation should be formalized and at the secretariat level it should be brought about by the establishment of appropriate working relations.

Chapter X

Financing of economic developmentThe United Nations Capital Development Fund

The United Nations Capital Development Fund underwrites community self-help projects that directly benefit the lowest income groups in the least developed countries. The Fund's financing is used, for example, to provide simple agricultural equipment and irrigation systems, establish cottage industries, construct village schools, vocational training facilities, health centres, low-cost housing and farm-to-market roads, and to set up credit unions and co-operatives. Although its support is provided on a grant basis, projects which produce revenues are expected to repay the assistance into domestic revolving funds.

In the informal sector, which receives the major part of the Fund's attention and which is characterized by extremely low capital intensity, small capital inputs can bring about a significant improvement in human well-being. Thus, a grant of $1 million could bring disease-free water to about 70,000 people or basic health facilities to about 500,000 people.

During 1977, its third operational year, the Fund's resources reached a total of $67.5 million, including $18.7 million pledged for 1978 by 31 countries. Cumulative contributions of major donors included those of the Netherlands ($27.7 million), Sweden ($16.8 million), Norway ($7.9 million), Yugoslavia ($3.3 million) and Denmark ($2.7 million). New contributors were Haiti, Malawi, Senegal, Switzerland and the United States.

Of the total $14.8 million approved for projects in 1977, $4.3 million (29 per cent) was committed to agricultural production including credit, grain storage, livestock and fish farming; $2.7 million (18 per cent) to low-cost housing; $2.5 million (17 per cent) to rural water supply; $2.1 million (15 per cent) to feeder roads; $1.7 million (11 per cent) to small industry; $1 million (7 per cent) to nutrition support; and $0.5 million (3 per cent) to rural health.

Pre-investment expenditures connected with project identification and preparation amounted to $230,000; these were financed from the amounts allotted for country programmes by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

The Fund's administrative expenses in 1977 were $322,000, representing a 2.2 per cent overhead cost compared to the value of projects approved during the year.

Cumulative commitments in 1977 reached $47.4 million; there were 66 projects in 23 countries. In line with policies established by the UNDP Governing Council in June 1974, the resources available in 1977 were placed in the least developed countries.

Legislative decisions

At the twenty-fourth session of the UNDP Governing Council in June/July 1977, a discussion took place on the Fund's capacity to commit up to $50 million annually. The Governing Council took note of the report by the UNDP Administrator and of the views expressed during the discussion. It also asked the Economic and Social Council to recommend to the General Assembly that the administrative expenses of the Capital Development Fund be met from voluntary contributions made to that Fund.

On 3 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council, with the adoption of decision 259(LXIII), recommended that the administrative expenses of the Fund be met from voluntary contributions to the Fund, in accordance with the request of the UNDP Governing Council. Decision 259(LXIII) was adopted without a vote on the recommendation of the Council's Policy and Programme Coordination Committee, which had approved the text on 1 August on the proposal of its Chairman.

On 15 December 1977, the General Assembly, recalling its earlier resolutions on the matter, decided that the original function of the Capital Development Fund should be preserved until 31 December 1978. This action was set forth in decision 32/429, adopted on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

The Committee had approved, without vote on 9 December, a text proposed by its Chairman, who had orally amended his text to delete a provision that the administrative expenses of the Fund should be met from voluntary contributions. The Chairman acted on the suggestion of the Upper Volta. The Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United States said they would have preferred to retain the deleted phrase.

Pledging Conference

The 1977 United Nations Pledging Conference on UNDP and the United Nations Capital Development Fund was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 2 November. At this meeting, 28 countries pledged contributions to the Fund for 1978 totalling $17.9 million.

Total contributions pledged to the Fund as at 30 June 1978 amounted to f18.7 million. They are listed by country in the table below.

Country	Amount (in US dollar equivalents)
Afghanistan	3,000
Algeria	24,200

The role of the World Bank Group in international economic and social policy

Consideration by Economic and Social Council

The role of the World Bank Group—the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Development Association (IDA) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC)—in international economic and social policy was a topic discussed at the mid-1977 session of the Economic and Social Council.

Addressing the Council on the subject on 13 July 1977, the representative of the World Bank said that the flow of resources had always been of particular concern to the Bank. The President of the Bank, he said, had pointed out that the basic human needs of the people of the poorest countries would have been met if all developed countries had fulfilled their commitment of allocating the fixed target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance during the Second United Nations Development Decade. The middle-income developing countries—those with per capita incomes of more than $200—currently received over half the total of official development assistance, but if that assistance were distributed equally among all developing countries on a per capita basis, the poorest countries would receive an additional $1,500 million a year. The loss to the middle-income countries could be offset by broader trade concessions and greater access to non-governmental sources of capital.

The representative pointed out that concessional resources were principally channelled through IDA, with the poorest countries receiving over 90 per cent of all IDA commitments. The World Bank, he stated, was making efforts further to increase these commitments.

In March 1977, the fifth replenishment of IDA had been approved and the organization was to have available $7,638 million for the three-year period beginning 1 July 1977, a substantial increase over the level of the fourth replenishment.

In the fiscal year ended 30 June 1977, the World Bank sold obligations totalling over $4,000 million, the highest principal amount of World Bank bonds to be sold in any one fiscal year. Together with IDA, it committed over $7,000 million for 228 projects in developing countries. Its affiliate, IFC, added over $250 million in equity and loan funds for 34 projects, in co-operation with the private sector. Steps were taken to increase the capital of both the Bank and IFC, and to provide IDA with a sizable increase in resources for the next three years.

Co-financing, the representative observed, had become an important technique for increasing the flow of capital to the developing countries. Project co-financing in eastern Africa, for instance, had doubled between 1976 and 1977, adding more than 50 per cent to the total value of Bank and IDA lending in the area. In recent years, export credits had constituted an important source of co-financing. This type of financing had already proved successful in Latin America and was being used in other countries. The Bank had also continued to encourage private participation in its operations.

Over the past decade, the representative added, the Bank had considerably expanded and diversified its activities and taken steps to relate its lending programme more closely to borrowers' objectives. It had found that the infrastructure projects which it had supported benefited much of the population only slowly or indirectly. It therefore decided to place greater emphasis on assistance for projects which attacked the problems of poverty directly and would increase the share of agriculture and rural development in total lending. Total Bank and IDA lending for agriculture, 15 per cent in fiscal year 1972, had almost doubled by 1976. During the fiscal year ending on 30 June 1977, 75 agricultural projects were financed, about three fourths of the lending being for rural development.

In the seven years in which it had been lending for population, the Bank had committed about $159 million for 14 projects in 12 countries, representing about 55 per cent of total project costs. It was working closely with other national and multilateral agencies which were active in the sector.

Replenishment of the International Development Association

The representative of the World Bank, addressing the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee of the Economic and Social Council on 22 July 1977, said that although the negotiations on the fifth replenishment of IDA had proved lengthier than expected, the outcome was satisfactory: the representatives of 26 donor countries had agreed, in March 1977, on arrangements which, subject to legislative approval in the States concerned, would provide IDA with the authority to commit $7,638 million during the three-year period beginning 1 July 1977, an increase of 85 per cent in nominal terms over the previous replenishment.

Recognizing that the needs of the poorest countries for external assistance on concessional terms had grown and that the purchasing power of such assistance had declined in recent years, the traditional donors had decided to increase IDA resources. These had been further increased by contributions from non-traditional donors (the Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates) and by a special additional contribution from Kuwait.

It had become clear during the negotiations, the representative added, that the fifth replenishment could not become effective by 30 June 1977, by which time IDA would have committed practically all its funds. Most contributors had, therefore, expressed their willingness to provide commitment authority to IDA by making funds available in advance of the date on which the fifth replenishment would become effective, on condition that there should be a collective undertaking to that effect by a majority of donors and that that bridging arrangement would become operative only when Governments had given IDA formal notification that such contributions, amounting to $1,200 million, had been made. Government notification of $614.5 million in advance of contributions had thus far been received.

On 3 August 1977, by its decision 255(LXIII), the Economic and Social Council took note of the statement made by the representative of the World Bank on the results of the negotiations undertaken for the fifth replenishment of IDA.

The Council adopted the decision, without a vote, on the recommendation of its Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which had approved it on 22 July 1977, on the proposal of its Chairman.

Chapter XI

Questions concerning transnational corporations

Report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations

The Commission on Transnational Corporations held its resumed second session on 3 March 1977 at United Nations Headquarters, New York. It met to select the 16 persons, agreed upon by the Commission's members at an informal meeting on 22 February, who would serve as expert advisers to the Commission through its fourth session in 1978, as well as to assist the Commission's Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct. They were to serve in their private capacities and would be invited to give opinions on the topics under discussion.

After taking note, with satisfaction, of a statement by the Executive Director on the activities of the Centre on Transnational Corporations during the past year, the Commission, at its third session in April/May 1977, took note also of the report of its Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct on the work of its first two sessions in January and April/May 1977.

The report consisted of suggestions for a preliminary annotated outline of a code of conduct, supplemented by concluding remarks. Its main sections comprised: a preamble and objectives, definitions, major principles and/or issues related to the activities of transnational corporations, principles and/or issues relating to the treatment of transnational corporations, the code's legal nature and scope, and implementation.

The Commission expressed appreciation to the Group's Chairman and to the Centre for its support of the Group's activities. The Commission instructed the Working Group to continue its task of formulating a code of conduct for transnational corporations and to report in 1978.

In the area of technical co-operation, the Commission reaffirmed the great importance it attached to the programme, aimed at strengthening the negotiating capacity of developing countries. Answering the concern expressed by some Commission members about the possible involvement of the Centre in direct negotiations, the Executive Director assured the Commission that the Centre was not thus in-involved and that its technical co-operation programme in this area was being conducted within the framework of the United Nations system on technical co-operation. The Commission also stressed the importance of ensuring that the Centre's roster of experts should include qualified persons from all geographic regions.

The research programmes of the Centre, in particular those concerning transnational corporations in banking, in the food and beverage industry, and a comprehensive integrated study, as well as the publication of the first issue of the CTC Reporter, were noted with satisfaction by the Commission. (For other publications, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.) It stressed, however, that research projects should be geared specifically to support the formulation of a code of conduct and the strengthening of the negotiating capacity of host developing countries in their dealings with transnational corporations.

With regard to the establishment of a comprehensive information system, the Commission agreed that the Centre should proceed with the development of such a system, as well as with revising further a feasibility study on availability of information. It noted that the information system was organized into five general areas: information on individual transnational corporations; macro (or aggregate) information; laws, regulations and policies relating to transnational corporations; contracts and agreements between transnational corporations and government agencies and local enterprises; and bibliographical and documentary information. The Commission recognized the need for reliable and accurate information to permit meaningful analysis of the impact of corporation activities on both home and host countries, and the need for selectivity, in accordance with objectives and priorities previously laid down by the Commission and with the requirements of business confidentiality.

The Commission also adopted at its third session a resolution regarding the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes in that area. The Commission, inter alia, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of southern Africa to self-determination and independence and their right to dispose of their natural resources in their best interests, reaffirmed that collaboration by transnational corporations with the racist minority regimes in southern Africa was a major obstacle to self-determination, and strongly condemned such collaboration. It also called upon all transnational corporations to comply with the relevant United Nations resolutions by immediately halting all investments and by progressively disengaging from southern Africa. The Centre was asked to collect and publicize information on the activities of transnational corporations which collaborated directly or indirectly with the racist minority regimes in southern Africa and to continue in-depth studies on their activities.

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council took note, by decision 271 (LXIII) adopted without vote, of the report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on its 1977 sessions. The decision was recommended by the Council's Economic Committee, which had approved without vote an oral proposal to that effect by its Chairman on 28 July.

Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Problem of Corrupt Practices

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Problem of Corrupt Practices, established by the Economic and Social Council in August 1976,¹ held two sessions at Headquarters, New York, in 1977—in January/February and in March/April—and a resumed session at Geneva in June/July. In accordance with its mandate, it examined the problem of corrupt practices, in particular bribery, in international commercial transactions with the aim of elaborating the scope and contents of an international agreement to prevent and eliminate such practices. By the end of its resumed session in 1977, it had completed as a basis for its work an annotated outline of a possible international agreement and had discussed the formal language that such an agreement might contain.

The Commission on Transnational Corporations at its April/May 1977 session took note with appreciation of the Group's progress, summarized in an oral report to the Commission, and asked that it continue to be kept up to date on the Group's work.

In its report to the Council, the Working Group recommended that its membership should be expanded and that it should continue its tasks. The Working Group further recommended that the Council consider the question of convening a conference of plenipotentiaries to conclude the international agreement.

The report by the Working Group also contained the text of proposed but unagreed provisions relevant to the elaboration of an international agreement. The text had six parts: a preamble, definitions, action at the national level, action at the intergovernmental level, settlement of disputes, and entry into force.

Proposals and options other than an international agreement were also considered by the Working Group, including the drafting of a model national law, the adoption of voluntary guidelines or codes of conduct, and the efficacy of unilateral national action. In addition, the Working Group noted that the elimination of tax shelters, the disclosure by public officials of their net worth, and the topic of other corrupt practices could be dealt with by both national and international action.

On 4 August 1977, the Council adopted resolution 2122 (LXIII), by which it reaffirmed that work on a code of conduct should be given highest priority and that the conclusion of an international agreement on illicit payments should in no way interfere with or delay that priority; it also urged all States to make their best efforts to expedite the formulation of the code. Taking note of the Working Group's report, the Council decided to expand its membership to include all interested States (the necessary quorum being four States from each interested geographical group). It also decided that the expanded Working Group should meet as necessary in 1978 in order to draft an international agreement on illicit payments and consider all the issues defined in its report. Finally, the Council recommended that the General Assembly should decide, when it was deemed appropriate, to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries to conclude the international agreement.

Resolution 2122 (LXIII) was recommended by the Council's Economic Committee which, on 3 August, had approved a text submitted by its Vice-Chairman following informal consultations with Committee members. The text was approved by both Committee and Council without vote. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Ukrainian SSR, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR, expressed reservations on the text. An extension of the Working Group's mandate, they felt, would lead to duplication of work on the code of conduct, which was to take due account of the corruption problem. Moreover, in their view intensive work on an agreement might upset the priorities of the Centre on Transnational Corporations.

Yugoslavia, speaking on behalf of the States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77," said the text was far from satisfactory to those developing countries. The Commission should give absolute priority to the code of conduct; negotiations on corrupt practices should be linked with those of the code, which should be a legally binding instrument.

The Syrian Arab Republic, speaking on behalf of the Arab countries, said three points should be taken into account in future negotiations on corrupt practices: illicit payments affecting especially the situation in the occupied Arab territories and Namibia, subversive activities in the context of transactions, and compensation to injured parties for the long-term effects of illicit payments on development.

France, Peru and the United States considered that the Working Group should proceed simultaneously with other issues connected with the activities of transnational corporations and other measures to combat corrupt practices, as well as a draft international agreement. Algeria and Uganda held that the Group should consider not only the issues identified in its report but all comments made by Council members as well.

Other matters

The Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1975,² met in New York from 18 to 29 July 1977. Its report to the Commission on Transnational Corporations and a report of the Secretary-General were combined.

The Group of Experts reviewed existing accounting and reporting practices and the main issues and problems encountered in formulating international accounting and reporting standards for transnational corporations, focusing its attention on and formulating a set of recommendations, which included lists of minimum items of financial and non-financial information—for disclosure in general-purpose reports—needed to appraise the economic and social impact of transnational corporations nationally and internationally. The Group emphasized that it had sought to strike a balance between what was desirable and what was feasible, and that further work was necessary before a consensus could be reached.

The Secretary-General endorsed, inter alia, the Group's recommendation that the Centre on Transnational Corporations should keep under continuous review the reporting practices of transnational corporations, and acknowledged with appreciation the Group's contribution to the development of international standards in this area.

In its annual report, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination reported on arrangements in force for close interagency co-operation to ensure that the Centre could take full advantage of all work done in the United Nations system on questions related to transnational corporations, including setting up annual interagency meetings for this purpose. Such a meeting of officials responsible for programmes connected with transnational corporations was held in September 1977. Discussion focused on continuing major activities, as well as aspects of technical co-operation where it would be especially helpful for the organizations to pool their resources, such as available expertise for particular projects and training.

In a series of letters and notes verbales during the year, Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR protested, as they had in 1976,³ against what they termed the illegality of the inclusion in the delegation of the Federal Republic of Germany to the Commission on Transnational Corporations and its subsidiaries of a representative from a federal office located in the western sectors of Berlin.

Answering the allegation, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as the Federal Republic of Germany, reaffirmed their position that no illegality existed and that the choice of delegates was up to the respective Governments.

By a letter of 19 August and a note verbale of 15 November, the USSR and the German Democratic Republic, respectively, expressed their objection to the inclusion in a United Nations publication on company directories of information on Soviet foreign trade organizations. This constituted an unlawful and unwarranted attempt to place those organizations in the category of transnational corporations, according to the USSR.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3514(XXX) of 15 December 1975, which, inter alia, condemned all corrupt practices, including bribery, by transnational and other corporations, their intermediaries and others involved,

Recalling further Council resolution 2041(LXI) of 5 August 1976, which established an Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group to conduct an examination of the problem of corrupt practices, in particular bribery, in international commercial transactions by transnational and other corporations, their intermediaries and others involved, to elaborate in detail the scope and content of an international agreement to prevent and eliminate illicit payments, in whatever form, in connexion with international commercial transactions as defined by the Working Group, and to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session,

Noting the report of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Problem of Corrupt Practices on its first, second, third and resumed third sessions, submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session,

1. Reaffirms that the formulation of a code of conduct by the Commission on Transnational Corporations should be given the highest priority and that the conclusion of an international agreement on illicit payments should in no way interfere with or delay that priority;

2. Urges all States to use their best efforts to expedite the formulation of the code of conduct;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make adequate provisions for the necessary meetings of the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct;

4. Decides;

(a) To continue the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Problem of Corrupt Practices, so that it may complete its task;

(b) To expand the membership of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group to include all interested States, provided that the Working Group shall meet only if a quorum of four States from each interested geographical group is represented;

(c) That the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group shall meet as necessary in 1978, if at all possible at United Nations Headquarters in New York, in order to complete its task in accordance with its original mandate as contained in Council resolution 2041(LXI);

5. Decides that the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group should draft an international agreement on illicit payments and, in this regard, consider all the issues defined in its report;

6. Calls on the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session and also to submit a report to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its fourth session for its consideration and comments;

7. Recommends that the General Assembly decide, when it deems it appropriate, to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries, in order to conclude an international agreement on illicit payments.

Chapter XU

Questions relating to food problemsThe World Food Council

The World Food Council, which was established in 1974, held its third session at Manila, Philippines, from 20 to 24 June 1977. The Council reported that recent increases in food production had provided more abundant food supplies and permitted the rebuilding of grain stocks in some countries. It expressed concern, however, that there was no guarantee that the trend would continue. It noted the need for systematic and concerted action and adopted the Manila Communique of the World Food Council: A Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition.

The Communique consisted of a preamble and 22 recommendations, which were concerned with the following major goals: increasing food production; improving and ensuring world food security; increasing and improving food aid; improving human nutrition; improving the contribution of trade to the solution of food problems; and ensuring that the action programme of the Council was fully integrated with other development policies and programmes of the United Nations.

To increase food production, the Council recommended that the international community increase its official development assistance level to food and agriculture production. It estimated that $8,300 million in external resources on an annual basis would be required to achieve at least a 4 per cent sustained rate of growth of food production in developing countries, particularly food-priority countries. Of this amount, about $6,500 million should be made available as concessional loans to food-priority countries, which should substantially increase their own investment in food production.

All appropriate United Nations agencies, especially the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the World Food Programme, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) and regional banks, should help food-priority countries determine as quickly as possible: (a) the internal and external investment requirements to achieve the minimum 4 per cent rate of growth of food production; and (b) the internal and external policy and other constraints to be overcome to achieve this production growth.

The Council further called for immediate steps to be taken by donor Governments and international agencies, principally FAO, to determine the minimum package of agricultural inputs, including fertilizers, seeds and pesticides, in order to reach the 4 per cent growth target. It stated that assistance to developing countries should include a $20 million contribution to the FAO Seed Industry Development Programme.

To improve and ensure world food security, the Council recommended that all countries with accumulated food-grain stocks should convert them into national reserves. It emphasized that all efforts should be made to conclude, by June 1978, a new international grains arrangement, an important feature of which should be an international system of nationally held reserves. The size of such reserves and the cost-sharing between grain-exporting and -importing countries should be determined through negotiations, taking into account the ability of the various countries to contribute to such costs. Also, an international emergency reserve of 500,000 tons of cereals should be set up by the end of 1977.

The Council also recommended, among other things, that developing countries should be given financial and technical assistance to help them create and maintain their own food reserves, and improve storage and transport facilities. It called on donor nations to meet the 10 million ton target of cereals as food aid for 1977-1978 and emphasized the importance of international agencies such as FAO, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, UNDP and the World Bank giving priority to programmes for improving nutrition.

Decisions of the Economic and Social Council

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council, with the adoption of resolution 2114 (LXIII), endorsed the Manila Communique of the World Food Council: A Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition.

It commended the World Food Council for the important initiatives it had taken, as embodied in the Manila Communique, inter alia for increasing food production in the developing countries, improving world food security, food aid programmes and human nutrition, and liberalizing food trade.

The Council recommended that the General Assembly adopt the Programme of Action contained in the Manila Communique and urged all Governments, specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations to implement the Programme fully.

The resolution was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee, which had approved the draft resolution without objection on 25 July. The text was sponsored by Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Jamaica, Mauritania, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, the Philippines and the United States.

In addition, the Economic and Social Council adopted two decisions on related matters on 4 August 1977.

By decision 267(LXIII), the Council took note of the report by the Secretary-General and the President of the World Food Council on progress achieved in dealing with food problems. The report had stressed the necessity for concerned Governments to ratify the Agreement establishing IFAD so that the Fund could commence its operations without further delay.

By decision 269(LXIII), the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the African Inter-Ministerial Committee for Food and relevant United Nations organizations and specialized agencies.

Decisions 267(LXIII) and 269(LXIII) were adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which approved them without vote on 21 July, as proposed by the Committee Chairman.

Decisions of the General Assembly

The General Assembly also considered the report of the World Food Council. On 8 December 1977, the Assembly, by resolution 32/52, adopted the Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition contained in the Manila Communique of the World Food Council.

It commended the World Food Council for the important initiatives it had taken, as embodied in the Programme of Action, inter alia to increase food production in the developing countries, improve and ensure world food security, expand and improve food aid programmes, improve human nutrition and liberalize and improve food trade.

The General Assembly commended the Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other bodies that were taking steps to implement the Programme of Action and called upon Governments, specialized agencies and other bodies within and outside the United Nations system, dealing with food, agriculture and human nutrition, to implement the Programme of Action fully and as a matter of urgency.

It further called upon all potential donors to announce before the end of 1977 their contributions to the international emergency reserve of cereals and decided to review the implementation of the Programme of Action in 1978.

Resolution 32/52 was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the draft resolution without a vote on 16 November 1977. The text was sponsored by 29 States. (For text of resolution and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Resolution 32/52, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/360, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3348 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, by which it established the World Food Council to serve, in line with resolution XXII adopted by the World Food Conference, held at

Rome from 5 to 16 November 1974, as a co-ordinating mechanism to provide over-all, integrated and continuing attention for the successful co-ordination and follow-up of policies concerning food production, nutrition, food security, food trade and food aid, as well as other related matters, by all organizations of the United Nations system,

Further recalling its resolution 31/121 of 16 December 1976, in which it requested the World Food Council, at its third session, to take immediate and concrete steps to promote the early implementation of the resolutions adopted by the World Food Conference, including the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition, and its resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Having considered the report of the World Food Council on the work of its third session, held at Manila from 20 to 24 June 1977, Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 2114 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the World Food Council on the work of its third session and expresses its appreciation to the Government and people of the Philippines for acting as host to the session and ensuring its outstanding success;

2. Highly commends the World Food Council for the important initiatives it has taken, as embodied in the Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition contained in the Manila Communique of the World Food Council, inter alia, to increase food production in the developing countries, improve and ensure world food security, expand and improve food aid programmes, improve human nutrition and liberalize and improve food trade;

3. Adopts the Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition contained in the Manila Communique of the World Food Council;

4. Commends those Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other bodies that have already taken steps or are taking steps to implement the Programme of Action;

5. Calls upon all Governments, specialized agencies, organs and other bodies within and outside the United Nations system dealing with food, agriculture and human nutrition to implement the Programme of Action fully and as a matter of urgency;

6. Requests the President of the World Food Council to work with the Governments and organizations referred to in paragraph 5 above to promote full implementation of the Programme of Action and, to this end, requests the Secretary-General to give the necessary assistance to the World Food Council;

7. Further calls upon all potential donors to announce before the end of 1977 their contributions to the international emergency reserve of cereals;

8. Urges all Governments and United Nations organizations and bodies—particularly the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations as well as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the Consultative Group on Food Production and Investment in Developing Countries, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—to give full support and encouragement to the World Food Council in discharging the important responsibilities assigned to it by the World Food Conference and the General Assembly;

9. Decides to review at its thirty-third session the implementation of the Programme of Action.

International Fund for Agricultural Development

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 32/53, called for additional ratifications of the Agreement establishing the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD).

It welcomed the progress made and expressed the hope that all States eligible for original membership of the Fund would sign the Agreement so as to enable IFAD to become fully operational before the end of 1977, with the full resources pledged to it.

Finally, it invited all other Member States or members of specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency to become members of the Fund.

Resolution 32/53 was adopted without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the draft text, sponsored by 56 powers, on 16 November 1977, also without vote. (For text of resolution and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Resolution 32/53, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/360, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,
Recalling resolution XIII of 16 November 1974 of the World Food Conference, General Assembly resolutions 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975, 3503 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/122 of 16 December 1976 relating to the establishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development,

Concerned by the serious constraints facing the food and agriculture sector in the developing countries and especially the deteriorating situation of the least developed and most seriously affected developing countries in the field of agricultural development and nutrition,

Bearing in mind the objectives of the Fund as expressed in the Agreement establishing the International Fund for Agricultural Development and emphasizing that the Executive Board of the Fund should take into consideration the advice and recommendations relevant to these objectives formulated by the World Food Council at its various sessions,

1. Welcomes the progress made so far towards enabling the International Fund for Agricultural Development to become operational and expresses its appreciation to the Chairman of the Preparatory Commission for the Fund for his efforts in this respect;

2. Calls upon all States eligible for original membership of the Fund that have not yet taken action to become parties to the Agreement establishing the International Fund for Agricultural Development to sign it and to deposit an instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession as a matter of urgency, so as to enable the Fund to become fully operational before the end of 1977, with the full resources pledged to it;

3. Invites all other States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency to take action to become members of the Fund.

Chapter XIII

Application of science and technology to developmentUnited Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development

Report of the Preparatory Committee

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 21 December 1976,¹ the Committee on Science and Technology for Development, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held its first special session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 31 January to 14 February 1977. This session gave major consideration to a detailed programme of work for the preparatory period for the Conference, scheduled to take place in 1979, and to guidelines for the preparation of national papers. On 22 January 1977, the Secretary-General appointed Joao Frank da Costa as Secretary-General of the Conference.

The Preparatory Committee recommended that practical measures be taken to ensure that linkage and co-ordination of the Conference and its preparatory process with activities of the United Nations system, as well as those of organizations outside the system, be satisfactorily achieved.

The Preparatory Committee set forth a programme of work covering the preparation of national papers, regional meetings and papers, input from the United Nations system, inter-regional meetings, contributions from intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, documentation and a chronology of preparatory activities for the Conference.

With respect to guidelines for the preparation of national papers, the Preparatory Committee stated that the papers should reflect comprehensive points of view relevant to each item and subitem raised in the Conference agenda recommended by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution of 4 August 1976.² There should be the widest possible involvement, not only of officials responsible for economic and social policy, but of all segments of the business and scientific communities, and thus the process of preparing the papers would be an essential means of strengthening national capabilities for the application of science and technology towards the achievement of regional self-reliance and the establishment of the new international economic order.

According to the guidelines, the national papers should identify goals, policies and recommendations concerned with the application of science and technology to development at national, regional and global levels. Emphasis should be placed on analysis in the context of the economic and social framework of the Conference, rather than on a description of the current situation, and on identifying factors that inhibited the use of science or technology to further the socio-economic development of a country, measures designed to overcome these obstacles, and the uses of any new knowledge relevant to development goals.

In its report, the Preparatory Committee also examined the conceptual background of the Conference as it related to the concept of development, the application of science and technology to development, the roles of science and technology in development, institutional arrangements, international co-operation, scientific progress and human rights, and the global problématique.

The Committee emphasized that the main purpose of the Conference would not be to discuss science and technology as such, but the whole complex of policy considerations concerned with the accelerated application of science and technology to development at the national level and with increased international co-operation.

Consideration by the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, at its July/August 1977 session, considered a report of the Secretary-General submitted on 15 June 1977 on the current state of preparations for the Conference. The report, inter alia, outlined: the functional linkage between the Conference secretariat and the Department of Economic and Social Affairs; co-operation with the regional commissions, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations; and the implications for the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development of the decisions taken by the Preparatory Committee for the Conference.

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2123(LXIII) concerning the preparatory period for the Conference. By this resolution, the Council affirmed that the Conference and its preparatory period should be aimed at, inter alia, the development, through enhanced international co-operation in science and technology, of the independent scientific and technological capacity of developing countries.

The Council urged the Secretary-General and the executive heads of agencies and organizations concerned to ensure the speedy adoption and implementation of practical measures aimed at co-ordinating the preparatory activities for the Conference, within the framework of existing machinery and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 31/184 of 21 December 1976,³ and recommended that sufficient resources be allocated to ensure appropriate preparation. It called upon the Secretary-General to make proposals to the Assembly at its 1977 session for adequate personnel for the Conference secretariat, including a delineation of the specific responsibilities of the Office for Science and Technology and those of personnel seconded from other bodies and organizations of the United Nations system. The Council stressed the necessity of providing the regional commissions with adequate funds to carry out the responsibilities assigned to them by the Preparatory Committee, and requested that Governments expedite their arrangements for the preparation of national papers.

Resolution 2123(LXIII) was adopted, by 46 votes to 0, on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee, which had approved it on 3 August 1977 by a roll-call vote of 43 to 0.

The text was originally proposed in the Economic Committee by Yugoslavia on behalf of the States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. Informal consultations headed by the Committee's Vice-Chairman produced a revised version, but without sponsors. The USSR proposed, on behalf also of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, that the draft be transmitted to the Assembly for consideration, since its precise financial implications were still unknown. In view of a lack of consensus in the Committee, and of the absence of sponsors for the text, Mexico and Venezuela asked for a roll-call vote and asked States wishing to sponsor the resolution to so indicate: they were Argentina, Austria, Bolivia, Canada, Ecuador, Finland, Jamaica, Kenya, Mexico, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, the Sudan, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, the United States, Venezuela and Zaire. The USSR subsequently withdrew the five-power proposal, but the States did not participate in the vote.

On 4 August 1977, the Council adopted without objection decision 272(LXIII), by which it took note of, among other reports, the report of the Secretary-General on the state of preparations for the Conference. The Economic Committee had, without vote, recommended the text the day before on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The General Assembly, at its 1977 session, considered the report of the Preparatory Committee, as well as a report of the Secretary-General prepared in response to a number of provisions of the Assembly's resolution of 21 December 1976 concerning preparations for the Conference, and to bring up to date the information contained in the report he had submitted to the Economic and Social Council in June.

The report outlined arrangements for co-operation between the secretariat of the Conference and Member States, regional commissions, specialized agencies, interested organs of the United Nations system, and other inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations. It also contained summaries of reports submitted by organizations and other concerned bodies of the system on their preparatory activities for the Conference, and proposals of the regional commissions regarding the subject areas for the Conference.

On 15 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/115, by which it decided to hold the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development in 1979, and affirmed that the Conference should be aimed at, inter alia, the development, through enhanced international co-operation in science and technology, including the transfer of technology, of the independent scientific and technological capacity of developing countries. It urged all States to make positive contributions to the preparatory work of the Conference; the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the organs and organizations of the United Nations system were requested to give high priority to its preparations. The Assembly affirmed that the Secretary-General of the Conference was invested with full responsibility for the co-ordination of all substantive work of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, and asked for reports on the state of preparations.

The Assembly's actions were embodied in operative section I of resolution 32/115. The resolution as a whole was adopted, by a recorded vote of 127 votes to 1, with 10 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. On 5 December 1977, that Committee had approved the text of the resolution by 111 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions, as proposed by Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Jamaica (on behalf of the Member States belonging to the Group of 77), the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Turkey and the United States. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The vote in the Second Committee was requested by the German Democratic Republic which, speaking on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said those States had serious misgivings about the Conference agenda and were concerned at possible overlapping of the work of the Conference with that of other bodies, particularly the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). They considered the resolution to be of an interim nature and could not agree with its provisions relating to the organization of the Conference; consequently they had abstained in the vote.

On 3 and 13 October 1977, the Secretary-General received letters from Austria and Mexico, respectively, offering to host the Conference. On 9 December, a draft resolution was submitted by Austria in the Second Committee proposing that the Assembly accept the offer of that Government to act as host to the Conference at Vienna. At the same meeting, Mexico introduced a 28-power draft resolution by which the Assembly would decide that the Conference would be held in a developing country for two weeks in 1979. The text listed those to be invited, stipulated the working languages and asked for the necessary arrangements to be made. On a proposal by Austria, the Committee decided—by a roll-call vote of 51 to 27, with 47 abstentions, requested by Mexico—to transmit these draft resolutions to the General Assembly for consideration.

On 15 December 1977, on the recommendation of the Second Committee—which had approved by consensus a Jamaican proposal to this effect on 9 December—the General Assembly decided, without vote, by decision 32/430, on the dates for the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference and the fourth session of the Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

In addition to the two draft resolutions forwarded from the Second Committee, the General Assembly had before it a third draft resolution, submitted by the United States, by which the Assembly would accept an offer by that State to host the Conference at a location to be determined. On 15 December, by secret ballot proposed by Austria in agreement with the sponsors of the other two drafts, the Assembly chose Vienna as the venue of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (decision 32/431); the draft resolutions thus were not put to a vote.

On 19 December, following consultations among the sponsors of the three drafts and of amendments thereto—Egypt and Nigeria—Austria introduced an agreed text, by which the Assembly would decide that the Conference would be held at Vienna for two weeks in 1979, and would set forth provisions regarding invitations, languages and financial and other necessary arrangements. The General Assembly adopted the text on that date by consensus as resolution 32/184. Thus, the Secretary-General was requested to ensure that necessary arrangements were made with the Government of Austria, and that other arrangements, including documentation, staffing and financial provisions were also made, for effective participation of all those invited to the Conference. They included all States, representatives of organizations with standing invitations from the Assembly to participate in international conferences convened under its auspices, national liberation movements, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the specialized agencies, interested organs of the United Nations, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. The languages of the Conference were to be those of the Assembly and its Main Committees.

Belgium, France and the Federal Republic of Germany reiterated their positions with regard to the invitation to be addressed to the Council for Namibia (see p. 909). France also renewed its reservations concerning invitations to representatives of national liberation movements.

Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development

At its session held at Geneva from 7 to 18 November 1977, the major considerations of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development related to preparations for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development. Other items included the World Plan of Action for the Application of Science and Technology to Development, elaboration of harmonized United Nations policy in science and technology, research and development in non-conventional sources of energy, appropriate technology relevant to the needs of developing countries, and the application of computer science and technology to development.

With regard to preparations for the Conference, the Advisory Committee placed emphasis on the fact that Governments, as well as the scientific and technological community at large, should be involved to the maximum extent possible. There was a need to effect a strong link with the future and the younger generations, since they would ultimately be the major beneficiaries of the Conference.

The Committee envisaged the national papers for the Conference to be evolving documents, and noted that, to ensure the full use of subject areas and real interaction between national, regional, interregional and topical preparations, it would be desirable and necessary to proceed with a continuous revision and updating of the national papers until the Conference began. The Committee would convene an ad hoc working group in January 1978 to assist the Secretary-General of the Conference in delineating the subject areas and making recommendations on them to the Preparatory Committee.

The Advisory Committee would convene meetings of its regional groups to assist regional commissions in drafting regional documents and reports which were to be submitted to the regional meetings scheduled for mid-1978.

Finally, the Committee felt that due attention should be paid to the whole area of education and training during the preparatory process and in the documentation for the Conference. Many of the science teaching practices currently used in many developing countries were inadequate. The Committee felt it was important to ensure a better mix and social structuring of academics, technicians, machinists and labourers.

On 14 December 1977, the Economic and Social Council enlarged the membership of the Advisory Committee from 24 to 28, with due regard to equitable geographical representation and the desirability of increasing the participation of developing countries from all regions.

The Council took this action, as proposed by Kenya, Nigeria, Senegal and Zaire, in adopting resolution 2130(LXIII), without vote. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 15 December 1977, the General Assembly reaffirmed the Council's 1976 recommendation to increase the participation of developing countries in the Advisory Committee,⁴ and requested the Secretary-General to take into account the principle of equitable geographical distribution when implementing the resolution, bearing in mind the role of the Advisory Committee in the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development.

The Assembly took this action when it adopted resolution 32/115, section II of which contained these decisions. (For details, see section above; for text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

International Year for Science and Technology for Development

In November 1976, the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization adopted a resolution whereby it accepted in principle the idea of a UNESCO-sponsored International Year for Science and Technology. The Director-General of UNESCO so informed the Economic and Social Council and asked for its comments, in accordance with a Council request for such action before a final decision was taken.⁵ The other organizations within the United Nations system had been consulted within the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), as indicated in that Committee's annual report.

On 3 August 1977, the Council, by resolution 2108(LXIII), recognized the vital role of science and technology in the development of developing countries, and—having taken into consideration the stage reached in the preparations for the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development—invited the UNESCO General Conference to take fully into account the objectives of the Conference on Science and Technology, in order to make recommendations for the Council's and the General Assembly's consideration in 1978 concerning the designation of an International Year for Science and Technology for Development geared to the special interests of developing countries.

The Council's resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which, on 1 August 1977, had approved it without vote. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The resolution adopted was a compromise text submitted by the Chairman of that Committee following informal consultations between the sponsors of two related drafts—a draft resolution by New Zealand and the United Kingdom, and a draft decision by Yugoslavia submitted on behalf of the States members of the Council which belonged to the Group of 77.

By the two-power text, which contained sponsor-approved drafting amendments by Cuba and Uganda, the Council would recall that in 1973 it had requested intergovernmental organizations in the United Nations system to proclaim international years only on the most important occasions.⁶ Noting the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, aware that 1979 had been proclaimed the International Year of the Child and 1981 the International Year for Disabled Persons, and wanting to ensure that both these Years obtained the impact they deserved, the Council would decide that in the circumstances it would not be appropriate at that stage to authorize the designation of an International Year for Science and Technology. Affirming that the objectives underlying the UNESCO initiative would focus attention on the objectives of the Conference, the Council would invite the Director-General, in consultation with the Conference Secretary-General, to prepare a programme of international publicity and other measures during the preparations period, and dissemination of its conclusions; it would also keep the question under review.

By the Group of 77 text, the Council would take note with satisfaction of the UNESCO resolution, and invite the General Conference at its next session to recommend, through the Council to the Assembly, a year to be designated as the International Year for Science and Technology for Development, geared in particular to the special problems of developing countries.

Both texts were withdrawn by their sponsors.

Transfer of technology

Establishment of a network for exchange of technological information

At its July/August 1977 session and again in October, the Economic and Social Council considered two reports of the Secretary-General relating to progress in establishing a network for the exchange of technological information, submitted in implementation of General Assembly resolutions of 15 December 1975 and 21 December 1976.⁷

The first report outlined the response of organizations of the United Nations system to an Assembly request for feasibility studies on technological information systems—sectoral, regional or other—and on links between them, referring also to assistance in the establishment of centres for the transfer and development of technology. It contained the response of an Inter-Agency Task Force on Information Exchange and the Transfer of Technology, established by the General Assembly in 1975, to a request for an assessment of current inventories of information resources. It also contained an interim report of the Task Force on its work on a comprehensive analysis with a view to preparation of a plan for establishment of a network.

The second report, prepared by the Task Force, contained its further conclusions and recommendations with respect to the international network. It had tested the concept of the network against its findings and had concluded that the establishment of such a network was feasible. An important link between the potentially large number of information sources and users of technological information within and outside the United Nations system, the basis of the concept of a network as proposed by the Task Force, was seen to have been the creation of a pilot edition of a user-oriented directory of information services. The directory was designed to assist users to identify existing or soon-to-be-available services controlled, contributed to or otherwise made accessible by organizations of the United Nations system. The compilation of material for the pilot edition of the directory, to be published in 1978, was being carried out by the secretariat of the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems of ACC.

The report also contained recommendations which the Task Force considered necessary to build up, strengthen and maintain an international network for exchange of technological information, including action which should be taken by the Secretary-General and ACC towards arranging for continuous secretariat functions and co-operation among organizations.

The Economic and Social Council, in October 1977, considered a further report received in response to the Assembly's request of 15 December 1975 for feasibility studies on the establishment of information banks or systems: a study on the establishment of a patent information system, prepared by the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), concluding inter alia that WIPO had, in fact, an operational network for patent information.

On 4 August 1977, the Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a network for exchange of technological information, describing the work carried out by the Inter-Agency Task Force. On 31 October, it also took note of the final report of the Task Force and of the WIPO report on the establishment of a patent information system and transmitted them to the General Assembly for consideration at its 1977 session. The Council's actions were contained in decisions 272(LXIII) and 288(LXIII) which the Council adopted without vote—the first, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee which had approved it on 3 August, without vote, on an oral proposal by the Chairman, and the second, on an oral proposal of the Council President.

Also by decision 272(LXIII), the Council took note of a related report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) on the establishment of an industrial technological information bank (see p. 498).

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly reaffirmed the need for the improvement and strengthening of national capacities of developing countries for access to, collection, storage, analysis and dissemination of technological and related information, to make the proposed network fully effective. It took note of the two reports transmitted to it by the Council and welcomed the progress achieved in determining the shape of a technological information network, particularly in the publication of a pilot user-oriented directory. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue the preparatory studies and assessments of existing information networks already undertaken and, in co-operation with concerned organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to develop alternatives for further work on the network, including time schedules, costs and user-oriented operational suggestions, together with suggestions on sectors and/or subject areas where there was a particular requirement for an international information network. It urged developed countries in particular to improve the availability and quality of technological information needed to assist developing countries in the selection of technologies relevant to their needs.

The Secretary-General of UNCTAD, the Executive Director of UNIDO and the heads of other relevant agencies were urged to continue their efforts to assist developing countries in establishing centres for the transfer and development of technology at the national and regional levels and in providing extension services. The Assembly endorsed a decision of the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO regarding the pilot operation of an industrial and technological information bank (see p. 498), and recommended that work on the network, as well as on the bank, should take into account their interrelationship and also the preparations for the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development.

These actions were taken by the Assembly in adopting, without vote, resolution 32/178, on the recommendation of its Second Committee. On 13 December 1977, the Committee had approved, also without vote, the text, as sponsored by Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Colombia, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Indonesia, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal, Singapore, Sweden, Uganda and the United States. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly decided to convene a United Nations conference to negotiate and to take all decisions necessary for the adoption of an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology under the auspices of UNCTAD, to be held at Geneva in October and November 1978. The Assembly indicated the States and organizations which were to receive invitations to the Conference and the languages to be used at the Conference. The Secretary-General was requested to ensure that the necessary arrangements and requisite financial provisions were made for the effective participation in the Conference of the various representatives the Assembly had requested him to invite.

These actions were taken by the Assembly in adopting resolution 32/188, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which on 14 December 1977 had approved the text, also without vote, as introduced by Jamaica on behalf of the Member States belonging to the Group of 77 and as orally amended.

Reverse transfer of technology

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly, inter alia, recalled that by a resolution of 1 August 1974⁸ the Economic and Social Council, in considering the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries, had recommended that countries which benefited most from the "brain drain" from developing countries should consider adopting measures to help diminish the gravity of the problem. The Assembly reaffirmed the urgent need to formulate national and international policies to avoid the brain drain and obviate its adverse effects, and endorsed similar measures that had been recommended by UNCTAD in 1976.⁹

The Assembly recommended that, as a matter of urgency, Member States concerned and the competent international organizations should give due consideration to the formulation of policies to mitigate the adverse consequences of the brain drain. The developing countries were urged to make a thorough evaluation at the national level of the special characteristics of the problem and to give immediate consideration to promoting collective self-reliance among themselves to use and develop their human resources.

The developed countries were urged to support measures designed to encourage the absorption of trained personnel within the developing countries and to support international activities to find solutions to the problem, without prejudice to existing international agreements. Additionally, the Secretary-General was requested to undertake, in co-operation with UNCTAD and the International Labour Organisation, an in-depth study of the brain-drain problem, taking into account any recommendations of a Group of Governmental Experts on Reverse Transfer of Technology, to be convened by the UNCTAD Secretary-General in 1978, and other proposals, including a Jordanian proposal concerning the establishment of an international labour compensatory facility to compensate labour-exporting countries for their loss of highly trained personnel.

The Assembly took these actions in adopting resolution 32/192, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee. On 15 December 1977, the Committee had approved the text, without vote, as proposed by Argentina, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Iran, Jordan, Kenya, Morocco, Oman and Yugoslavia. Recalling further General Assembly resolution 31/184 of 21 December 1976 on the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, paragraph 6 of which requests the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, taking into account the time needed for the regional and interregional preparatory meetings, to submit its proposals to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session,

Reaffirming the need for effective co-ordination at all levels during the preparatory period for the Conference,

Taking note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development on its first session,

1. Strongly affirms, bearing in mind Council resolution 2028 (LXI), that the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development and its preparatory period should be aimed at inter alia the development, through enhanced international co-operation in science and technology, of the independent scientific and technological capacity of developing countries, in order to facilitate the solution of their economic and social problems, in particular by the development of technological innovation circuits, understood as denoting the continuous process of production, distribution and absorption of technologies, and that the preparatory period should be fully utilized to those ends;

2. Urges the Secretary-General and the executive heads of agencies and organizations concerned to ensure the speedy adoption and implementation of practical measures aimed at co-ordinating the preparatory activities for the Conference, within the framework of existing machinery and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 31/184;

3. Invites interested delegations to join with the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development in consultations with the Secretary-General of the Conference between the sessions of the Preparatory Committee and the Economic and Social Council, in order to facilitate the exchange of views and information about progress in the preparatory process;

4. Calls on the Secretary-General, in accordance with the terms of General Assembly resolution 3540 (XXX) of 17 December 1975, to submit to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions at the earliest possible time a request for the resources necessary in 1977, in order to ensure the earliest possible implementation of paragraphs 5 and 6 of Council resolution 2035 (LXI) of 4 August 1976, together with his most up-to-date assessment of the resources required to assist Governments with the preparation of their national papers, taking into account paragraph 47 of the report of the Preparatory Committee on its first session and the provisions of Council resolution 2035 (LXI);

5. Recommends further that for the biennium 1978-1979 sufficient resources be allocated to the Conference secretariat, the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system concerned, in order to ensure the appropriate preparation of the Conference;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General to make proposals to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session for the provision of adequate personnel for the Conference secretariat, and urges him to have due regard to the principle of equitable geographical distribution when making appointments at the level of senior officer; these proposals should take fully into account the work programme for the preparatory period and should include a delineation of the specific responsibilities of the Office for Science and Technology, as well as the responsibilities of the additional personnel seconded from the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization and other bodies and organizations of the United Nations system;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in connexion with the above, to make the necessary arrangements to facilitate the secondment of officials of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development and to ensure, through arrangements with other bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, the provision of the required personnel from these organizations;

8. Stresses the necessity of providing the regional commissions with adequate funds to carry out satisfactorily the responsibilities assigned to them in paragraphs 5 and 6 of decision 1 (I) of the Preparatory Committee, in which regard due account should be taken of the peculiar circumstances of each region;

9. Requests the regional commissions to take fully into account, in preparing the regional papers, the decisions of subregional or regional meetings convened by Governments in other forums for regional co-operation;

10. Requests Governments to expedite their arrangements for the preparation of national papers in accordance with the guidelines for the preparation of national papers as adopted by the Preparatory Committee in its decision 2 (I), so that the deadlines indicated in section G of its decision 1 (I) entitled "Chronology of preparatory activities for the Conference" may be respected;

11. Requests further that, with respect to the Latin American region, the Economic Commission for Latin America should co-ordinate all the activities pertaining to the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development with the Latin American Economic System;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the preparatory work for the Conference, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, a section on the implementation of the present resolution.

E/6051. Summary of programme budget implications of resolutions and decisions adopted by Economic and Social Council during its 62nd and 63rd sessions. Report of Secretary-General.

E/6044. Report of Economic Committee, draft decision, para. (a).

E/6020. Resolutions and decisions of Economic and Social Council, 63rd session (decision 272 (LXIII), para. (a)).

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974,

Recalling section III, paragraph 7, of its resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975, in which it decided that a United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development should be held in 1978 or 1979,

Recalling paragraphs 2 and 3 of Economic and Social Council resolution 2028 (LXI) of 4 August 1976,

Recalling also its resolution 31/184 of 21 December 1976, in which it decided, inter alia, to convene the Conference during 1979, in time for the General Assembly to take action at its thirty-fourth session in the light of the results of the Conference, and in which it established the preparatory mechanism for the Conference,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 31/184,

Taking note also of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development on its first session,

Considering that the vital role of science and technology is universally recognized and that the General Assembly has recommended that science and technology should be called upon to play a more direct and important role in the process of stimulating development and reducing international inequalities,

I

1. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 2123 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977;

2. Decides to hold the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development at an appropriate time in 1979, bearing in mind the decision contained in paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 31/184;

3. Affirms that the Conference should be aimed, inter alia, at the development, through enhanced international co-operation in science and technology, including the transfer of technology, of the independent scientific and technological capacity of developing countries, in particular through technological innovations, in order to facilitate the solution of their economic and social problems;

4. Decides that the Committee on Science and Technology for Development, when acting as the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, is open to the participation of all States as full members;

5. Urges all States, in consultation when necessary with the Secretary-General of the Conference, to take all necessary measures to make positive contributions to the preparatory work of the Conference;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the organs and organizations of the United Nations system to give high priority to the preparations for the Conference;

7. Affirms that the Secretary-General of the Conference is invested with full responsibility for the co-ordination of all substantive work of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference;

8. Requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations current reports on the state of preparations for the Conference;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive and analytical progress report on the state of preparations for the Conference;

Resolution 32/184, as proposed by Austria, A/32/L.49, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling its resolution 31/184 of 21 December 1976, in which it decided to convene the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development during 1979 and to take a final decision on the question of the site of the Conference at its thirty-second session,

Recalling also its resolution 32/115 of 15 December 1977,

Taking note of the offer made by the Government of Austria to act as host to the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development,

1. Decides that the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development shall be held at Vienna for two weeks in 1979 at an appropriate time;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to invite:

(a) All States to participate in the Conference;

(b) Representatives of organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate in the sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices in the capacity of observers, to participate in the Conference in that capacity in accordance with Assembly resolutions 3237 (XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976;

(c) Representatives of the national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity to participate in the Conference in the capacity of observers in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3280 (XXIX) of 10 December 1974;

(d) The United Nations Council for Namibia to participate in the Conference in accordance with paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 32/9 E of 4 November 1977;

(e) The specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, as well as interested organs of the United Nations, to be represented at the Conference;

(f) Interested intergovernmental organizations to be represented by observers at the Conference;

(g) Directly concerned non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to be represented by observers at the Conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the necessary arrangements are made for the effective participation in the Conference of the representatives referred to in paragraph 2 (b) and (c) above, including the requisite financial provisions for their travel expenses and per diem;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to co-operate with the Government of Austria with a view to holding the Conference, to submit to the Conference all relevant documentation and to arrange for the necessary staff, facilities and services that it will require, including the provision of summary records of its meetings;

5. Decides that the languages of the Conference shall be those used in the General Assembly and its Main Committees.

Resolution 2130 (LXIII), as proposed by 4 powers, E/L.1793, adopted without vote by Council on 14 December 1977, meeting 2090.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling its resolution 1454 (XLVII) of 8 August 1969 on future institutional arrangements for science and technology, in paragraph 6 of which the Council recognized that the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development had made an outstanding contribution to the general recognition of the role of science and technology in the development process,

Recalling also its resolution 2033 (LXI) of 4 August 1976 in which the Council recommended the desirability of increasing the participation of developing countries from all regions in the Advisory Committee,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 32/115 of 15 December 1977 on the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, in which the Assembly reaffirmed the Council's recommendations, contained in its resolution 2033 (LXI), to increase the participation of developing countries in the Advisory Committee,

1. Decides to enlarge the membership of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development from twenty-four to twenty-eight members, with due regard to equitable geographical representation and the desirability of increasing the participation in it of developing countries from all regions as recommended in Council resolution 2033 (LXI);

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit his nominations for the twenty-eight members of the Advisory Committee to the Economic and Social Council at its organizational session for 1978;

3. Decides to extend the term of the present members of the Advisory Committee until the end of the Council's organizational session for 1978.

Resolution 2108 (LXIII), as recommended by Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, E/6036 (part II), adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1977, meeting 2084.

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of resolution 2.112 concerning an "International Year for Science and Technology" adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its nineteenth session,

Recalling Council resolution 1800 (LV) of 7 August 1973, in which it requested intergovernmental organizations within the United Nations system to proclaim international years only on the most important occasions and invited them to notify the Council of proposals to this end before a final decision is taken, it being understood that they should be before the Council at least two years prior thereto,

Recognizing the vital role of science and technology in the development of developing countries,

Having considered the stage reached in the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, to be held in 1979 pursuant to General Assembly resolution 31/184 of 21 December 1976,

Invites the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to take fully into account the objectives of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, in order to make recommendations for consideration by the Economic and Social Council and by the General Assembly at its thirty-third session concerning the designation of an "International Year for Science and Technology for Development" geared to the special interests of developing countries in the field of science and technology.

Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Colombia, Germany, Federal Republic of, India, Indonesia, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal, Singapore, Sweden, Uganda, United States: draft resolution, approved without vote by Second Committee on 13 December 1977, meeting 60.

A/32/480. Report of Second Committee (part I) (on assessment of progress made in implementation of Assembly resolutions 2626 (XXV), 3202 (S-VI), 3281 (XXIX) and 3362 (S-VII)), draft resolution V.

Resolution 32/178, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/480, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Further recalling the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation, adopted by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization at its Second General Conference, held at Lima from 12 to 26 March 1975,

Taking into account resolutions 87 (IV), 88 (IV) and 89 (IV) of 30 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development concerning strengthening the technological capacity of the developing countries,

Further taking into account General Assembly resolutions 3507 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/183 of 21 December 1976 and Industrial Development Board decision V (XI) of 6 June 1977 regarding institutional arrangements in the transfer of technology,

Recalling paragraph 1 of its resolution 31/183, in which it reaffirmed the importance of wider dissemination of scientific and technological information for the purpose of allowing developing countries access to research findings that they considered to be of interest as well as project experience of other developing countries, thus permitting the selection of technologies essential for their industrial growth and promoting the development of their own technological capacity,

Reaffirming the need for the improvement and strengthening of national capacities of developing countries for access to, collection, storage, analysis and dissemination of technological and related information, in order, inter alia, to make the proposed network fully effective,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a network for the exchange of technological information and the note by the Secretary-General concerning the patent information system, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 3507 (XXX), and expresses its thanks to the Inter-Agency Task Force on Information Exchange and the Transfer of Technology and to the World Intellectual Property Organization;

2. Welcomes the progress achieved thus far in determining the shape of a technological information network, useful to all countries, in particular developing countries, in studying regional and national capacities and needs in technological information, particularly in the publication of a pilot user-oriented directory of information services of the United Nations system;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the preparatory studies and assessments of existing information networks already undertaken;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the regional commissions, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, as well as with the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other specialized agencies concerned, to develop alternatives for further work on the network, including time schedules, costs and user-oriented operational suggestions, together with suggestions on sectors and/or subject areas where there is a particular requirement for an international information network, using the best possible experience in the fields of identification of user needs, information exchange and the transfer of technology;

5. Requests the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in view of the fruitful collaboration developed by the Inter-Agency Task Force among agencies of the United Nations system on measures undertaken thus far in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 31/183, to make appropriate arrangements to continue such support and co-ordination during the period of study envisaged under paragraphs 3 and 4 above;

6. Reaffirms that all countries, particularly developed countries, should take measures as a matter of high priority to improve the availability and quality of the technological information, including advanced technologies, needed to assist developing countries in the selection of technologies relevant to their needs;

7. Urges the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the heads of other relevant agencies to continue their efforts to assist developing countries in establishing centres for the transfer and development of technology at the national and regional levels and in providing extension services, and, in this context, to bear in mind the possibilities of the network concept;

8. Endorses Industrial Development Board decision V (XI) regarding the pilot operation of an industrial and technological information bank;

9. Recommends that work on the network, as well as on the bank, should take into account their interrelationship and also the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report on the work requested in the present resolution, with a view to submitting a final report to the Assembly at its thirty-fourth session.

Plenary meeting 107.

A/C.2/32/L.85. Argentina, Ecuador, Iran, Jordan, Kenya, Morocco, Yugoslavia: draft resolution.

A/C.2/32/L.85/Rev.1. Argentina, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Iran, Jordan, Kenya, Morocco, Oman, Yugoslavia: revised draft resolution, approved without vote by Second Committee on 15 December 1977, meeting 62.

A/32/481. Report of Second Committee (on UNCTAD), draft resolution VIII.

Resolution 32/192, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/481, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic

Order and 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Bearing in mind its resolution 3017 (XXVII) of 18 December 1972 on the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1904 (LVII) of 1 August 1974 on the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries, in which the Council, inter alia, recommended that countries which benefit from the "brain drain", particularly those which gain most from the "brain drain" from developing countries, should consider the adoption of measures which would help, directly or indirectly, to diminish the gravity of the problem,

Reaffirming its resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, in which it emphasized, in section III, paragraph 10, the urgent need to formulate national and international policies to avoid the "brain drain" and to obviate its adverse effects,

Endorsing resolution 87 (IV) of 30 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development concerning the strengthening of the technological capacity of developing countries and, in particular, paragraph 18 thereof, in which the Conference recommended that all countries, particularly those benefiting from the "brain drain", should, in the light of the studies assessing the magnitude, composition, causes and effects of the outflow of trained personnel from the developing countries which were called for in resolution 2 (I) of 5 December 1975 of the Committee on Transfer of Technology, consider what measures might be necessary to deal with the problems posed by such an outflow,

Conscious that the development process of the developing countries, particularly their capacity to strengthen their domestic technological potential, is crucially dependent on the supply of highly trained personnel, and that the outflow of such personnel represents a significant loss to those countries,

Taking into account the fact that a Group of Governmental Experts on Reverse Transfer of Technology will be convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in accordance with resolution 2 (I) of the Committee on Transfer of Technology,

Taking note of the constructive proposal made by His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan bin Talal of Jordan at the sixty-third session of the International Labour Conference on 10 June 1977, concerning the establishment of an international labour compensatory facility to compensate labour-exporting countries for their loss of highly trained personnel,

1. Recommends that the Member States concerned and the competent international organizations should, as a matter of urgency, give due consideration to the formulation of policies with a view to mitigating the adverse consequences associated with the "brain drain";

2. Urges the developing countries to make a thorough evaluation at the national level of the special characteristics of the "brain drain" problem;

3. Also urges the developing countries to give immediate consideration to the modalities for promoting collective self-reliance among themselves with a view to using and developing their human resources on the basis of mutual advantage within the broader framework of co-operation in the field of trade, technology and capital;

4. Further urges the developed countries to support measures designed to encourage the absorption of trained personnel within the developing countries and to support the activities of the international organizations aimed at finding solutions to this problem without prejudice to existing international agreements;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the International Labour Organisation and bearing in mind the recommendations made by the Group of Gov-emmental Experts on Reverse Transfer of Technology, to undertake an in-depth study of the "brain drain" problem, taking into account specific proposals made on this subject, including the proposal referred to in the eighth preambular paragraph above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the results of the study to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session and, through it, to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, taking into account the relevant work being undertaken in other parts of the United Nations system.

Chapter XIV

The use and development of natural (non-agricultural) resources

The focus of attention of the international community in the field of natural resources during 1977 was the United Nations Water Conference, held at Mar del Plata, Argentina, in March 1977. From the Conference's deliberations emanated the Mar del Plata Action Plan, a series of over 100 recommendations, 19 additional specific regional recommendations and 12 resolutions, to be used as the basis for future work, at all levels, on the development and conservation of water resources.

The Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session in 1977, approved the report of the Water Conference and considered follow-up action to the Action Plan on integrated water resources development and management, recommending a number of steps towards implementing the recommendations of the Conference. The General Assembly, at its regular 1977 session which opened in September, also approved the Conference report and the Plan and urged action to implement the agreements reached at the Conference.

The Council's Committee on Natural Resources met twice during the year, at a special session in January acting as the preparatory committee for the Water Conference, and at its fifth regular session in May, at which it considered follow-up action to the Conference. In addition, it discussed issues and prospects of the world energy and minerals situation, the question of permanent sovereignty over natural resources, and co-ordination of United Nations programmes and technical co-operation among development countries in the field of natural resources.

The Economic and Social Council approved several resolutions drawn up by the Committee—on permanent sovereignty over natural resources, programme co-ordination, coal resources as well as new and renewable energy resources, and prospects for the development of chromium ores.

In other actions, the Council adopted measures to improve co-operation in coastal area development, and the Assembly asked the Secretary-General for a report on multilateral development assistance needed by developing countries for the exploration of their natural resources.

Details of these and other actions are described in the sections that follow.

The United Nations Water Conference

Preparations for the Conference

Acting as the preparatory committee for the United Nations Water Conference, scheduled for March 1977, the Committee on Natural Resources held a second special session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 3 to 7 January 1977. At this session the Committee reviewed the status of preparations as well as the principal documents for the Conference. The Committee recommended that the Economic and Social Council approve and transmit to the Conference: the provisional rules of procedure for the Conference, the revised provisional agenda and the recommendations regarding the organization of work. It also recommended transmittal of reports of task forces on community water supply and sanitation, and on water for agriculture, and recommendations of an ad hoc group of experts on technical co-operation among developing countries in water resources development—which had been convened in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in December 1976; those documents had been prepared at the request of the Secretary-General of the Water Conference.

The Conference agenda, as approved by the Committee, had two main substantive items: (1) the world water situation—prospects, problems and solutions, and (2) recommendations for action. The Committee agreed that the Conference should be structured on the basis of plenary meetings and two main committees which would review, discuss and finalize Conference recommendations before submitting them for final approval to the plenary. The allocation of work for the Conference was divided between the two committees; working, negotiating and drafting groups would be set up only within the sessional committees. The Committee also agreed on the main elements of the report of the Conference and speaking arrangements, and requested the Conference Secretary-General to prepare a consolidated guide to action recommendations derived from reports of regional preparatory meetings.

The Committee on Natural Resources also agreed on the advisability of holding pre-Conference meetings during two days preceding the Conference to consider organizational and procedural questions. On 13 January 1977, in the course of its organizational session, the Council adopted decision 207(ORG-77), suggested by its President, approving the recommendations made by the Committee and taking note of the Committee's decisions.

Over 250 abstracts of thematic papers were submitted by Governments to the Conference, illustrating their experience in the subject fields of the Conference agenda. A number of other supporting strategy papers in specified fields and background documents were prepared by experts, regional commissions, specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies.

Preparatory activities also included a two-day "encounter for journalists" session in March 1977 to inform journalists of the basic problems related to water resources and assist the media in effective coverage of the Conference.

Simultaneously with the Conference, a series of 14 seminars on water resources was organized by the Argentine National Commission for the Conference, at which experts exchanged scientific and technological information and studied how best to satisfy the ever-increasing demand for water.

Proceedings of the Conference

The United Nations Water Conference was held at Mar del Plata, Argentina, from 14 to 25 March 1977. Representatives of the following 116 Governments participated: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, the Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, the Holy See, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies represented at the Conference were the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the World Meteorological Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Economic Commission for Latin America, the Economic Commission for Western Asia, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, UNDP, the World Food Programme and the Consultative Group on Food Production and Investment in Developing Countries (a joint FAO/World Bank/UNDP body). The Palestine Liberation Organization also participated.

Eight intergovernmental organizations participated as observers—the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance, the European Economic Community (EEC), the Inter-American Development Bank, the League of Arab States, the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the Organization of American States, the Instituto Interamericano de Ciencias Agrarias, and the Instituto Italo-Latinoamericano—as well as eight international river commissions. The Conference was also attended by observers from 63 non-governmental organizations.

Ecuador, El Salvador, the Ivory Coast, Malaysia, Nepal, the Netherlands, the USSR, the United States and Zambia comprised the Credentials Committee. Two main committees of the whole were also established to study the substantive items of the agenda and to draft recommendations and resolutions. Committee I dealt with assessment of water resources, water use and efficiency, and environment and health; Committee II was concerned with planning, management and institutional aspects, education, training and research, and regional and international co-operation.

The Conference elected as its President Luis Urbano Jauregui (Argentina). Representatives from the following 18 States were elected Vice-Presidents: Canada, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Iraq, Japan, Mauritania, Mexico, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, Spain, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR, Venezuela and Zaire.

Officers of the Conference were: Malin Falkenmark (Sweden), Rapporteur-General; Julius Gikonyo Kiano (Kenya), Chairman of Committee I; and B. M. Abbas (Bangladesh), Chairman of Committee II. The Committees elected their own Vice-Chairmen and Rapporteurs.

The Conference was opened by the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs, on behalf of the United Nations Secretary-General, who said that the Conference should devise practical proposals that emphasized the role of water-resource management in equitable patterns of human development. For the immediate future, the most urgent need was to develop strategies to provide water for food production and improve community water supplies; strategies were also needed for flood and drought control and to prevent pollution.

The President of Argentina, addressing the Conference, referred to the principal factors responsible for the world water crisis—the world population increase, enhanced requirements of industry, urban concentrations, irrational use and increasing pollution. The task before the Conference, he said, was to identify the over-all measures to be adopted for the solution of water-related problems and to propose strategies and specific actions to alleviate and overcome the crisis.

The President of the Conference said that people were increasingly becoming aware that water was a scarce resource, yet while millions suffered from lack of it, others wasted it. It was therefore left to the current generation to administer with justice and in harmony with nature this element which was of such vital importance to life.

The Secretary-General of the Conference, Yahia Abdel Mageed, observed that for the first time the range and complexity of the problems of water development confronting mankind were being taken up in their totality by a world forum in a systematic and comprehensive manner. The Conference provided an unprecedented opportunity for Governments to impart new vigour to multilateral action and to enable the international community to carry out its expanded role in a more dynamic manner.

Decisions of the Conference

The Mar del Plata Action Plan

On 25 March 1977, the United Nations Water Conference adopted without vote the Mar del Plata Action Plan, which comprised a detailed set of action recommendations of the Conference and 12 resolutions, and urged that they be effectively implemented in good faith by all States.

Underlying the Plan was the conviction that solutions to problems of water resources development and management must be given high priority at the national, regional and international levels. Common themes were the need for strengthening local services, training personnel for water-related activities, improving planning methods, and co-ordinating national efforts under an over-all water development policy. The Conference viewed international measures as essential to support these efforts, and both intergovernmental and other international and national organizations were called on to provide a wide range of technical and financial assistance.

A summary of recommendations and resolutions follows. Except for a resolution on water policies in the occupied territories and a paragraph of a recommendation on regional co-operation concerning shared water resources, the Conference's resolutions and recommendations were adopted without a vote.

Assessment of water resources. The Conference recommended that national bodies should be established with comprehensive responsibilities for the systematic collection, processing, storage and dissemination of water resources data or the allocation of existing functions in a more co-ordinated way, with a view to improving knowledge on the quantity and quality of water resources; the network of hydrological and meteorological stations should be expanded, systems for measuring ground water (subsurface supplies) strengthened, and measurement techniques and instruments for international comparability standardized.

Resolution I of the Conference endorsed the idea that Governments should substantially increase the amount spent for these purposes, and establish or strengthen scientific infrastructure for water-assessment activities and training programmes for meteorologists, hydrologists and hydrogeologists.

Water use and efficiency. The Conference dealt in detail with each of the major uses of water, but placed emphasis on community water supply and waste disposal and on agricultural water use, which were made the object of both recommendations and resolutions.

Resolution II on community water supply referred to the targets of a recommendation of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.¹ The plan of action on community water supply and waste disposal called for the commitment of national Governments to provide all people with water of safe quality and adequate quantity and basic sanitary facilities by 1990, according priority to the poor and less privileged. The action plan listed priority areas for action, and recommendations for action at the national level and through international co-operation. Activities were to be focused on a proposed International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, 1980-1990, to be devoted to implementing the plan of action in resolution II on the basis of specific targets to be set up by each country. In this context, Governments were called on to develop by 1990 programmes and plans to provide coverage for populations, and expand and maintain existing systems and identify resources which were found to be necessary.

When dealing with agricultural water use, the Conference adopted resolution III which contained an action programme aimed at improving and expanding irrigation, rain-fed agriculture and livestock production, and at protecting agricultural land from flooding and waterlogging. The indicated magnitude of a 15-year global programme was to be 45 million hectares of improved and 22 million hectares of new irrigation development. The action programme included recommendations on phased national action, financing, training, extension and research, promotion of national advisory services and international programme support.

The Conference also urged countries to conserve their fisheries and exploit them rationally, promote intensive fisheries development, including aquaculture, and regulate or prohibit the use of certain polluting substances to prevent their entry into waters.

Turning to industrial water use, the Conference recommended the evolution of economic methods for reusing and recycling water, and of economic incentives to use water efficiently and treat wastes at their source. It adopted resolution IV recommending measures to stimulate research and development of technologies requiring the least possible use of water and measures to facilitate recycling.

For hydroelectric power generation, the Conference recommended that countries make national inventories of potential hydropower projects and take account of potential benefits from tourism and ecological improvements when they assessed the feasibility of projects. Assistance by international bodies was recommended in the preparation of long-term plans for hydropower.

Regarding inland navigation, the Conference recommended that countries study river use and port modernization as an integral part of transport systems, taking into consideration the needs of land-locked countries. It suggested that national regulations be issued against the discharge of untreated waste from ships, and it urged severe penalties for non-compliance with safety standards aimed at avoiding accidental oil or hazardous-substance spills.

The Conference recommended that national water management institutions help finance new technologies to encourage more efficient water use, and introduce where appropriate scales of charges that reflected the real economic cost of water. Countries were advised to promote efficiency and efficacy in regulation and distribution of water through such means as systematic planning of distribution, and transfer of water between river basins. Another suggestion was that countries explore the possibility of using natural underground water formations (aquifers) to store and distribute water.

Countries were urged to stress measurement and projection of water demand as a basis for planned development, taking account of anticipated population growth.

Environment, health and pollution control. Pointing to the environmental repercussions of large-scale water development projects and their possible adverse consequences for human health, the Conference stressed the need to evaluate the consequences of the various uses of water on the environment, to support mea-

It urged accelerated implementation of recommendations dealing with water of the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment.²

As an integral part of the planning of water projects, countries should arrange for studies of environmental impact and investigate the possibility at the formulation stage that dams and other large-scale water projects might actually spread diseases. Also, recreational benefits should be taken into account, nations should develop plans to ensure that wetlands harbouring wildlife were not indiscriminately destroyed, and scenic lakes and rivers should be protected.

As regards pollution control, it was recommended that countries apply laws, regulations and incentive charges in order to reach quality goals within certain periods of time. The discharge into the aquatic environment of toxic, persistent and bio-accumulative substances should be gradually eliminated. Countries were urged to adopt the principle that, as far as possible, direct or indirect costs attributable to pollution should be borne by the polluter.

Policy, planning and management. Each country should formulate a national water policy, in relation to the use, management and conservation of water, as a framework for implementing specific programmes. National development plans and policies should specify the main objectives of water-use policy, which should in turn be translated into guidelines and strategies, subdivided, as far as possible, into programmes for the integrated management of the resource.

Institutional arrangements should be such as to ensure real co-ordination among all bodies responsible for investigating, developing and managing water resources. Legislation should define the rules of public ownership of water and of large water-engineering works.

Public participation in planning and decision-making, involving water users and public authorities, could constructively influence choices between alternative plans and policies and should be encouraged, and experiences should be shared among countries.

Appropriate technology related to water-resource development and management should be perceived in the context of each particular socio-economic situation and its available resources. Priority should be given to technologies of low capital cost and the use of local raw materials and resources, taking environmental factors into account.

Natural hazards. In connexion with flood loss management, it was recommended that countries provide effective flood protection by structural and non-structural measures proportionate to the magnitude of the risk. They should also develop flood forecasting and warning systems as well as flood-fighting and evacuation measures to minimize loss of life and property.

Drought loss management should also be promoted, through such means as drilling and maintaining wells, developing drought-resistant plant species and, where possible, developing a policy to transfer people to suitable regions.

By resolution V, urging participation in the forthcoming United Nations Conference on Desertification to be held in Nairobi, Kenya, in August/September 1977 (see p. 509), the Conference called for action to combat desertification, including international assistance to States in formulating plans and projects.

Public information, education, training and research. Dealing with public information and extension services, the Conference stated that countries should accord priority to conducting programmes for national information campaigns directed to all people concerning the proper utilization, protection and conservation of water.

It said that education and training was needed at all levels, from professionals to village-level workers and water users. Countries should inventory their manpower needs and strengthen or establish regional training centres as joint ventures covering several nations.

Research needs should also be inventoried, and research should be promoted in a number of areas, a list of which ranged from weather modification and desalination to crop-water requirements and flood control.

Other recommendations were that the United Nations and other international organizations should help countries with technical and advisory services and by strengthening research institutions.

Regional co-operation. With regard to development of shared water resources, the Conference recommended that in situations in which countries lay upstream or downstream from one another on a river, bordered on a common lake or exploited a ground-water reserve extending into their neighbour's territory, they should establish joint committees, as appropriate and by agreement, to co-operate in such areas as data collection, management, pollution control, disease prevention, flood and drought control, and river improvement. In the absence of an agreement on how to use shared resources, countries which shared them should exchange information on which the future management of these resources could be based, to avoid foreseeable damages.

The paragraph containing this last recommendation was adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 13, with 48 abstentions, before the remaining paragraphs were adopted without Vote. Turkey voted against the provision and stated that co-operation between riparian countries on matters pertaining to transboundary waters could only be based on the concept of sovereignty and carried out exclusively through mutual consent. The recommendations of the Conference could not prejudice the work of the International Law Commission, nor could they be considered in the interim as having legal significance. Romania, which abstained, said it felt that bilateral, subregional or regional agreements among countries directly involved were the most suitable for resolving problems of transboundary water resources and for preparing generally acceptable principles or rules in the sector of shared water resources. In the opinion of Afghanistan, the decision contradicted the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources and failed to take into consideration co-operation based on direct agreement between the countries concerned. Nepal voted against the paragraph, reserving its position concerning certain recommendations on regional and international co-operation in the development of shared water resources.

By resolution VII, the Conference recommended that the Secretary-General explore the possibility of organizing meetings between international river commission officials with a view to developing a dialogue between the different river-basin organizations on potential ways of promoting the exchange of their experiences; regional commissions could facilitate this task.

International co-operation. While the bulk of the recommendations concerned action to be taken by individual countries, the Conference devoted particular attention to ways in which nations could co-operate regionally and internationally to make better use of their water resources.

The Conference, by resolution VI, encouraged technical co-operation among developing countries in the water sector with a view to achieving greater collective self-reliance in the development and management of water resources. It urged UNDP, in co-operation with the regional commissions and the United Nations system, to assist in promoting programmes in this field.

The Conference also adopted resolution VIII on institutional arrangements for international co-operation in the water sector, by which it recommended a central role for the Economic and Social Council, its Committee on Natural Resources and the regional commissions in following up the Conference's action plan on integrated water resources development and management. It also took note of proposals prepared by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Environment Co-ordination Board for interagency co-ordination in the field of water resources, and recommended that these be examined by the Committee on Natural Resources for report to the Council.

By resolution IX on financing arrangements for international co-operation, the Conference recommended that additional financial resources be provided for the water resources development work of United Nations organizations and of bilateral, subregional, regional and international programmes. It also recommended a study by the Secretary-General on the most effective and flexible mechanisms to increase the flow of funds, through existing and proposed bodies, for water development and management.

Other Conference resolutions. The Conference adopted resolution X on water policies in the occupied territories by which it denounced policies or actions by colonizing or dominating powers, "particularly in Palestine, Zimbabwe, Namibia and Azania," that were contrary to the development of water resources for the beneficial use of the indigenous peoples, who were the legitimate beneficiaries of their natural resources. The resolution was adopted by a roll-call vote of 52 to 17, with 22 abstentions. In explaining a decision to vote against the resolution, the representative of the United Kingdom, speaking on behalf of the member countries of EEC, stated that while some of the principles were acceptable, those States found it regrettable that the issue had been raised at the Conference in the terms used in the text.

Spain, which voted in favour, stated that it would have preferred a separate vote on the paragraph by which the Conference denounced policies or actions by dominating powers in specific locations; it contained terms that had not received the support of the Spanish authorities. Canada, which voted against the text, stated that the resolution introduced political issues that were outside the framework of the Conference. In a written communication to the Conference President, Israel said it opposed the resolution, which violated the Charter of the United Nations and the terms of reference of the Conference.

The Conference also adopted resolution XI on the Panama Canal Zone by which it expressed the wish that the negotiations being conducted by Panama and the United States would culminate at the earliest possible time in a just and equitable solution that would permit Panama fully to exercise its sovereign rights in the Canal Zone and, consequently, to formulate a national policy for the full development of water resources.

By a twelfth resolution, adopted by acclamation, the Conference expressed its thanks to the host Government and people.

Post-Conference action

Consideration by Economic and Social Council

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 214(LXII)—by which the Council noted that the fifth (May 1977) session of the Committee on Natural Resources would include an item on the Water Conference and that its Secretary-General would inform the Committee of the Conference results—the Committee considered the report of the Conference. The decision was orally proposed by the Council President and adopted without vote on 20 April.

The Committee formulated a draft resolution and a draft decision on the subject for consideration by the Council. The resolution referred to Conference resolution VIII on institutional arrangements for international co-operation in the water sector. By the decision, the Committee asked the Secretary-General to submit to the Council detailed information on the subjects which should be discussed at proposed regional meetings and at a proposed special session of the Committee on Natural Resources recommended in the resolution.

The Council, at its July/August 1977 session, had before it both the Conference and Committee reports and a note prepared by the Secretary-General highlighting the recommendations of the Conference and giving suggestions for follow-up action.

By resolution 2115(LXIII), which the Committee on Natural Resources had proposed, the Council called on the regional commissions to convene regional meetings to obtain the views of Member States on the opportunities, needs and problems with respect to carrying out the Conference's recommendations at the regional level. It also decided to convene a third special session of the Committee on Natural Resources, after the conclusion of the regional meetings, to decide on further steps to secure the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan. The Committee was called upon to provide for continued intergovernmental review and oversight of the Conference follow-up by international organizations. By the same resolution, the Council called upon ACC and the Environment Co-ordination Board to develop in greater detail the administrative and financial aspects of their proposals dealing with United Nations co-ordination activities in water resources development.

The Council adopted resolution 2115(LXIII) on 4 August by 41 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. Its Economic Committee had approved the text submitted by the Committee on Natural Resources by 22 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, on 29 July 1977. The vote was requested by the USSR, which reaffirmed its view, as did Bulgaria, that it was undesirable for the Committee on Natural Resources to hold a special session on a question which could be considered by that Committee in regular session.

By resolution 2121(LXIII), also adopted on 4 August, the Council approved the report of the United Nations Water Conference, urged Member States and all United Nations organizations to implement its decisions, and recommended that the General Assembly approve the Mar del Plata Action Plan and other Conference decisions and give due priority to measures needed to implement them. The Council also approved subjects suggested by the Secretary-General, in his note on recommendations and follow-up action, for discussion at the regional meetings and at the third special session of the Committee on Natural Resources. The Committee was invited at that session to review national and regional programmes and decide on further steps needed to implement the Mar del Plata Action Plan.

The Council recommended that Governments should, where necessary, consider the desirability of designating national water committees or other suitable organizations to co-ordinate and monitor the implementation of Conference recommendations at the national level on the basis of detailed national action programmes. It also recommended more popular involvement in the planning and decision-making process of formulating national policies.

The Council also requested the Secretary-General to prepare a number of specific reports for presentation to the Committee's third special session. These included:

(i) steps required to enable the Council, the Committee and the regional commissions to play a central role in the promotion of inter-governmental co-operation in the water sector, and to intensify co-ordination of United Nations activities at the country level under the leadership of UNDP resident representatives;

(ii) arrangements for an in-depth study of the Conference resolution on community water supply and the launching of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade;

(iii) preparation of a study on the most effective and flexible mechanism for increasing the flow of financial resources for water development and management; and

(iv) organizing meetings of existing international river commissions.

The regional commissions were requested to assign specific responsibilities in the water sector to an existing intergovernmental committee within the regional commissions, or create a new one if needed, and to formulate their requirement for more resources, if necessary.

The Secretary-General was also invited to transmit the relevant decisions of the Water Conference to other United Nations conferences yet to be held, namely the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development and the 1978 United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries.

The Council recommended that the UNEP Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on Natural Resources Shared by Two or More States expedite its work on draft principles of conduct, and that the International Law Commission give higher priority to the codification of the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses and to co-ordinating its work with activities of other international bodies with a view to the early conclusion of an international convention in this field.

Resolution 2121 (LXIII) was adopted by 43 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions. The text was recommended by the Economic Committee, which approved it on 1 August by 33 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, on a proposal by Yugoslavia on behalf of Council members belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. By an amendment to a preambular paragraph, Poland added water legislation to a list of subjects on which the Council noted that the Water Conference had taken far-reaching decisions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text was voted on at the request of the USSR, which reaffirmed the reservation it had made on resolution 2115 (LXIII)—that better use should be made of existing bodies rather than establishing new ones. Afghanistan, Bolivia and Brazil noted that, although they supported the resolution, they and other States had voted against a provision of the Conference's recommendations relating to regional co-operation on the question of developing shared water resources; Afghanistan said it maintained its reservation (see section above).

Consideration by General Assembly

On 19 December 1977, at its thirty-second session, the General Assembly approved resolution 32/158 by which it adopted the report of the United Nations Water Conference and approved the Mar del Plata Action Plan and other agreements reached at the Conference. It urged Member States and all United Nations organizations to implement those agreements. By this text, it also endorsed both Council resolutions of 4 August 1977 on the Conference (see above) and recommended that Governments should consider the desirability, where necessary, of designating water resources committees or other organizations to co-ordinate and monitor the implementation of the Conference's recommendations at the national level, with more popular involvement.

The regional commissions were asked to strengthen and intensify their responsibilities in the water sector through the assignment of specific responsibilities in this area to an inter-governmental committee within those commissions. The Assembly requested the Committee on Natural Resources at its special session to formulate concrete steps to secure early implementation of national and regional plans, and called on the Secretary-General to report in 1978 on the results of that special session, as well as on measures adopted by the United Nations system for implementing the Mar del Plata Action Plan.

Resolution 32/158 was adopted by a recorded vote, requested by Argentina, of 128 to 0, with 9 abstentions. It had been sponsored in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by 38 States and approved by that Committee on 30 November by 90 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions.

The resolution was put to the vote in the Second Committee at the request of Czechoslovakia, which, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said those States had abstained because they had reservations about certain Conference resolutions and recommendations which had raised problems with regard to organizational and regional co-operation to the extent that implementation could imply the creation of new bodies duplicating activities of existing ones. The Committee for Natural Resources could carry out a review of national and regional plans and programmes at its regular session, without a need for a special session, and the Centre for Natural Resources, Energy and Transport could assume responsibility for co-ordinating activities.

With regard to the Assembly's adoption of the report of the Water Conference and approval of the agreements reached there, Brazil reaffirmed reservations made during the Conference, as did Afghanistan, Israel, Nepal and Turkey.

Resolution 2115(LXIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/6043, adopted by Council on 4 August 1977, meeting 2085, by 41 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,
Bearing in mind resolution VIII of the United Nations Water Conference,

Recognizing the imperative need for accelerated progress in the investigation and development of water resources, and the difficulties in the area of co-ordination which affect United Nations bodies in the execution of their tasks relative to water resources,

Further recognizing the central role which the Committee on Natural Resources and the regional commissions within their respective regions should play in the promotion of inter-governmental co-operation in the follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan on integrated water resources development and management, as recommended by the United Nations Water Conference,

1. Calls upon the regional commissions to convene regional meetings to obtain the views of States Members of the United Nations on the follow-up to the United Nations Water Conference, and on the opportunities, needs and problems with respect to carrying out the recommendations of the Conference at the regional level;

2. Calls upon the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the Environment Co-ordination Board to develop in greater detail the administrative and financial aspects of the proposals contained in their report on present and future activities of the United Nations system in water resources development;

3. Decides to convene a special session of the Committee on Natural Resources, in order to decide on further steps to secure the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan on integrated water resources development; this special session, to be convened after the conclusion of the regional meetings referred to in paragraph 1 above, should be of no more than eight working days' duration and should take into account the observations of the regional meetings and the report to be prepared as requested in paragraph 2 above;

4. Calls upon the Committee on Natural Resources to provide for continued intergovernmental review and oversight of the follow-up to the United Nations Water Conference by the international organizations concerned in the field of water.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolution 3513 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and Council resolution 1979 (LIX) of 31 July 1975,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Noting that the United Nations Water Conference held at Mar del Plata, Argentina, from 14 to 25 March 1977 took far-reaching decisions on the entire spectrum of the management and development of water resources, covering such aspects as the assessment of water resources, use and efficiency in different aspects, environment, health and pollution control, planning, management and institutional aspects, water legislation, education, training and research, and regional and international co-operation,

Considering that the decisions reached at the Conference call for urgent action and taking into account the provisions of Council resolution 2115 (LXIII),

1. Approves the report of the United Nations Water Conference containing the Mar del Plata Action Plan and the other decisions reached at the Conference;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Government and people of Argentina for making possible the holding of the Conference and for their generous hospitality;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the Conference for the efficient preparation and organization of the Conference;

4. Urges Member States and all organizations of the United Nations system to take intensified and sustained action for the implementation of the decisions reached at the Conference;

5. Recommends to the General Assembly that it should approve the Mar del Plata Action Plan and the other decisions reached at the Conference, and give due priority to the measures needed to implement them;

6. Recommends that Governments should consider, where necessary, the desirability of designating national water committees or other suitable organizations to co-ordinate and monitor the implementation of the Conference's recommendations at the national level on the basis of detailed national action programmes, encompassing areas specified in the note by the Secretary-General on the recommendations of the United Nations Water Conference and follow-up action, and recommends more popular involvement in the process of planning and decision-making towards the formulation of a national policy;

7. Invites the Committee on Natural Resources at its special session convened in accordance with Council resolution 2115 (LXIII) to review plans and programmes prepared at the national and regional levels and to decide on any further steps necessary to secure the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan;

8. Approves the subjects suggested by the Secretary-General in section III of the note referred to in paragraph 6 above for discussion in regional meetings and at the special session of the Committee on Natural Resources;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To formulate, in accordance with the decisions reached at the United Nations Water Conference, proposals in respect of steps required (i) to enable the Council, the Committee on Natural Resources and the regional commissions to play the central role in the promotion of intergovernmental co-operation, and (ii) to intensify the co-ordination of activities of the United Nations system at the country level under the leadership of the resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme;

(b) To make the necessary arrangements for an in-depth study of the implications of Conference resolution II on community water supply, and the launching of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade recommended in paragraph 15 of the Mar del Plata Action Plan;

(c) To arrange for the preparation of an in-depth study, in co-operation with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system and in consultation with Governments, of the most effective and flexible mechanism for increasing the flow of financial resources specifically for water development and management, covering the elements outlined in the note by the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 6 above;

(d) To present the result of the special studies called for in subparagraphs (b) and (c) above to the Committee on Natural Resources at its special session;

(e) To make appropriate arrangements for organizing meetings of representatives of existing international river commissions, with a view to developing a dialogue between the different organizations on potential ways of promoting the exchange of their experience;

10. Requests the regional commissions to strengthen and intensify their responsibilities in the water sector and, to this end, to assign specific responsibilities to an existing inter-governmental committee within the regional commissions, or if necessary create a new one in accordance with the recommendations of the Conference and with resolution 1 (V) of the Committee on Natural Resources, and to formulate their requirement for whatever additional resources may be necessary for this purpose;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To make the necessary arrangements for the co-ordinated preparation and servicing of the special session of the Committee on Natural Resources, which will deal with a wide spectrum of water-related activities and complex studies, and to urge the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system concerned with water resources development to participate effectively and substantively in the preparation process;

(b) To transmit the relevant decisions of the United Nations Water Conference to the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development for further action to ensure that water management problems and the problems of appropriate technologies be given priority attention in the preliminary national and regional analysis undertaken in the preparation process for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, as well as by that Conference itself;

(c) To transmit the relevant recommendations and resolutions of the United Nations Water Conference to the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and to the competent organizations dealing with the preparatory process for that Conference, with a view to future action and specific objectives in this area being defined;

12. Recommends that the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on Natural Resources Shared by Two or More States, of the United Nations Environment Programme, should expedite its work on draft principles of conduct in the field of the environment, for the guidance of States in the conservation and harmonious exploitation of natural resources shared by two or more States;

13. Draws the attention of the International Law Commission, with reference to Council resolution 1955 (LIX) of 25 July 1975, to the recommendation of the United Nations Water Conference requesting the International Law Commission to give a higher priority in its work programme to the codification of the law of the non-navigational uses of international water-courses and to co-ordinate its work with activities of other international bodies dealing with the development of the international law of waters, with a view to the early conclusion of an international convention;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the result of the special session of the Committee on Natural Resources.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3513(XXX) of 15 December 1975 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1979(LIX) of 31 July 1975,

Recalling further its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Noting that the United Nations Water Conference, held at Mar del Plata, Argentina, from 14 to 25 March 1977, took far-reaching decisions on the entire spectrum of the management and development of water resources,

Considering that the agreements reached at the Conference call for urgent action,

1. Adopts the report of the United Nations Water Conference and approves the Mar del Plata Action Plan and the other agreements reached at the Conference;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Government and the people of Argentina for their generous hospitality during the holding of the Conference;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the Conference for the effective preparation and organization of the Conference;

4. Urges Member States and all organizations of the United Nations system to take intensified and sustained action for the implementation of the agreements reached at the Conference;

5. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolutions 2115 (LXIII) and 2121 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977;

6. Reaffirms that due priority should be given to the measures needed to implement the Mar del Plata Action Plan as well as other agreements reached at the Conference;

7. Recommends that Governments should consider, where necessary, the desirability of designating national water resources committees or other suitable organizations to co-ordinate and monitor the implementation of the Conference's recommendations at the national level on the basis of detailed national action programmes, encompassing areas specified in the note by the Secretary-General on recommendations of the Conference and follow-up action, and recommends more popular involvement in the process of planning and decision-making towards the formulation of a national policy;

8. Requests the regional commissions to strengthen and intensify their responsibilities in the water sector and, to this end, assign specific responsibilities to an intergovernmental committee within the regional commissions, in accordance with the recommendations of the Conference and with resolution 1 (V) of 16 May 1977 of the Committee on Natural Resources, with the allocation, if necessary, of additional resources;

9. Requests the Committee on Natural Resources, at its special session, to review plans and programmes prepared at the national and regional levels and to formulate immediate and concrete steps to promote and secure their early implementation;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the results of the special session of the Committee on Natural Resources and on the measures adopted by the whole United Nations system for the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan and the agreements reached at the Conference.

Other questions relating to natural resources

Operational activities

During 1977, the United Nations continued an active programme of technical co-operation activities in the natural resources sector. In the energy field, 15 large-scale and 13 small-scale projects were being executed by the United Nations—in Africa, Asia, Latin America, Europe and the Middle East. Nine projects, concerned with energy surveys, geothermal energy, electric power, petroleum exploration, institution building and training, were started in Bangladesh, the Central American region (Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala, Nicaragua), Chad, India, Kenya, Peru and Turkey.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) budget for the year was about $2.21 million. Fifty-eight experts served the projects in operation and 26 fellowships were granted during the year.

A number of other projects concerned energy. Seven projects dealing with the development of geothermal resources were in operation in Chile, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, India, Kenya, Nicaragua and Turkey. Assistance in the field of new sources of energy was provided to Bolivia, Cape Verde, Cyprus, St. Vincent and Turkey. Petroleum exploration and development continued in Chile, Ecuador and Turkey. Efforts were also continued in the field of electric power in Bangladesh, Guinea-Bissau, India, Mozambique, St. Vincent and Samoa. Energy surveys were carried out in Bolivia, Kenya and Peru. In addition, technical advice on petroleum legislation and economics was given to Afghanistan, Gabon, Greece, Jamaica and Liberia.

During the year, the United Nations supported 69 projects in 35 countries and territories concerned with mineral exploration, institution building, the transfer and application of technology, and training of personnel in assisting Governments to develop their mineral resources. The projects were executed in Argentina, Benin, Bolivia, Burma, Burundi, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Ethiopia, Ghana, Greece, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, India, Iran, Kenya, Lesotho, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, the Republic of Korea, Rwanda, the Solomon Islands, the Sudan, Turkey, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. United Nations activities in support of these projects involved 116 experts and the granting of 42 fellowships in 1977.

During 1977, 61 projects for water resources development and management were under execution—33 large-scale and 28 small-scale—distributed among regions as follows: Africa, 29 (15 large-scale); the Americas, eight (six large-scale); Asia, 20 (nine large-scale); and Europe and the Middle East, four (three large-scale). Full water-projects or projects containing substantial water components were initiated in six countries or territories not previously assisted in this field by the United Nations: Antigua, the British Virgin Islands, Papua New Guinea, Thailand, Viet Nam and Yemen.

The total UNDP budget was in the range of $11 million and was divided among various components: 146 experts, $5 million; equipment, $3 million; subcontracts, $1 million; 76 fellowships, $600,000; and miscellaneous, $500,000.

Among the large-scale projects in operation, 18 were involved in ground-water exploration and development, many of these in the Sahelian region in Africa. River basin development was concentrated in five major rivers: the Gambia, the Kagera and the Mano (in Africa), the Morava (Europe) and the Sittang (Asia). Institution building was continued in Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Ethiopia and Indonesia. Coastal engineering research was carried out in India. A navigability study of the Paraguay River was carried out in Argentina south of Asuncion, Paraguay. Assistance to the Philippines was aimed at a balanced economic, social and physical rehabilitation in the development of the Pampanga Delta/Candaba Swamp area.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

At its fifth session, held at Geneva from 9 to 19 May 1977, the Committee on Natural Resources considered a report by the Secretary-General on the question of permanent sovereignty over natural resources and approved a draft resolution on the subject for action by the Economic and Social Council. The text was adopted by the Council on 4 August as its resolution 2120(LXIII) by 38 votes to 1, with 11 abstentions.

The Council by this resolution asked the Secretary-General to prepare progress reports for the Committee on Natural Resources on the work being done in the field of the exercise of the inalienable rights of peoples and permanent sovereignty over natural resources in territories subjected to foreign domination, colonial administration, alien occupation, apartheid or racial discrimination, expressing concern for the natural resources of those territories. It also requested the Secretary-General to prepare detailed reports for the Committee on pertinent aspects of and relevant developments concerning the exercise by developing countries and peoples of their inalienable rights and of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources, reaffirming its desire to safeguard such rights and sovereignty of States within territories beyond their control and to ensure full compensation for the exploitation of and damage to those resources.

Resolution 2120(LXIII) had been approved by the Council's Economic Committee on 29 July by 24 votes to 1, with 11 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Denmark (speaking on behalf of the member countries of the European Economic Community) and the United States maintained reservations they had made when the draft was approved in the Committee on Natural Resources, to the effect that the subject was being dealt with in political fora and was too complex an issue to be dealt with in a technical body.

Multilateral development assistance for exploration of natural resources

In recognition of the importance of natural resources to the world economy and to the development of developing countries, the General Assembly, at its regular 1977 session, moved to examine comprehensively the financial requirements and the adequacy of existing mechanisms for financing exploration for energy and mineral resources in developing countries. In this connexion, it adopted, on 19 December 1977, resolution 32/176 by which it reaffirmed that the effective discovery, exploration, development and conservation of their natural resources by developing countries was indispensable to the mobilization of their resources for development, and noted that several developing countries desiring to do so had been unable to undertake systematically a survey of their natural resources. It also emphasized the need to increase the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (see p. 450).

The Secretary-General was requested to prepare in 1978, with the assistance of a group of high-level experts recommended by Governments, a report, with recommendations, on: the estimated financial requirements over the next 10 to 15 years for the exploration and location of natural resources in developing countries which indicated their interest; the availability of multilateral mechanisms for the provision of adequate financing for the exploration of natural resources, with special reference to the availability of soft loans with an element of subsidy for developing countries, bearing in mind the special needs of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and those most seriously affected by economic crises; and the availability of mechanisms for the transfer of technology to developing countries for the exploration and exploitation of natural resources.

The resolution was adopted by 130 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions. The draft text had been approved by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 13 December by 108 votes to 0, with 7 abstentions, where it was sponsored by Algeria, Bangladesh, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Indonesia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Tunisia, Uganda, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The Federal Republic of Germany and the USSR supported the exploration of natural resources of developing countries but doubted the wisdom of establishing a special group of experts, since the study could be conducted with existing United Nations machinery. The Netherlands said it interpreted the resolution as not changing the terms of reference of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration; it had doubts about the feasibility of including an element of subsidy in the role of the Fund. Australia and Sweden hoped that the resources of the Centre for Natural Resources, Energy and Transport would be used in the preparation of the study.

France and Italy said they abstained because the resolution seemed to restrict or lose sight of the role and mandate of the Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, which they considered should be the focal point of United Nations activities in that field. The United States said it abstained because it doubted the wisdom of making an advance commitment to increase the resources of the Revolving Fund or provide concessional financing for exploration except in so far as such action emerged as legitimate conclusions of the study. Also it would like the study to be confined to the general availability of technology for exploration and exploitation instead of seeming to presume the need for new mechanisms for the transfer of technology. Moreover, it maintained its reservation on the provisions relating to permanent sovereignty over natural resources contained in the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order³—the United States position being that permanent sovereignty should be exercised within international law.

³ See Y.U.N., 1974, pp. 324-26, resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing text of Declaration.

Co-ordination of programmes

At its fifth session in May 1977, the Committee on Natural Resources adopted decisions on the question of co-ordinating the future activities of the United Nations system in the water resources field in the period following the United Nations Water Conference and on the broader question of co-ordination of programmes within the United Nations system in the over-all field of natural resources development. The Committee asked the Economic and Social Council, in considering programme co-ordination of water resources, to note particularly the idea that the responsibilities of the regional commissions should be strengthened and intensified, that programme co-ordination in this field should be carried out basically within the framework of and through those commissions, and that the Committee itself should play a principal part in the co-ordination of programmes of a general scope. It asked the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the administrative and financial implications of a proposal to establish an inter-agency water resources board, and it asked the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Environment Co-ordination Board to provide implications of alternative measures necessary for the administrative support of the proposed board.

The Committee also approved a draft resolution which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption. On 4 August 1977, the Council adopted the draft, without vote, as resolution 2116(LXIII), on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, which had approved it, also without vote, on 29 July.

By this text, the Council asked the Secretary-General to include in future reports to the Committee on Natural Resources detailed analyses of current and planned programme activities in the natural resources field, in order to enable the Committee to perform its task of co-ordination effectively.

The Council took note of an ACC/Environment Co-ordination Board report on current and future activities of the United Nations system in water resources development, and of a report of the Secretary-General on a comprehensive plan of action for and co-ordination of programmes within the system in natural resources development. It also reaffirmed a 1975 request for reports⁴ particularly identifying gaps and overlapping of activities, and providing the Committee with the necessary analytical capability to carry out co-ordination and priority-setting functions.

Energy

In its consideration of the world energy situation in 1977, the Committee of Natural Resources had before it reports of the Secretary-General providing an overview assessment of the world energy situation, the prospects for oil shale, the status and prospects of coal production and utilization in developed and developing countries, the status of geothermal energy, and possible approaches to strengthening international co-operation in energy through the United Nations system.

The Committee recommended two resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council—one dealing with the study, development and use of coal resources, and the other with prospects for new and renewable sources of energy—both of which the Council adopted on 4 August 1977.

By the first (resolution 2118(LXIII)), the Secretary-General was requested to present to the Council in 1978 a report: assessing the progress achieved in expanding the use of coal; describing current and anticipated work on the evaluation of the prospects of using coal, as scheduled in the work programmes of the regional commissions, the specialized agencies, the United Nations Environment Programme and UNDP; and presenting action proposals for increasing the utilization and processing of coal and assisting countries in overcoming their energy problems, bearing in mind environmental considerations. He was asked to ensure that these problems were studied at the planned international symposium on the evaluation and working of coal deposits to be convened in Katowice, Poland, in 1979.

In his work on long-term economic trends, the Secretary-General was asked to give special attention to long-term forecasts of energy, its sources, requirements and supplies; in inter-organizational efforts to develop energy sources alternative to oil and gas, high priority should be given to an evaluation of coal as fuel and for the chemical industry.

Resolution 2118(LXIII) was adopted without vote, as it had been on 29 July in the Council's Economic Committee. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the second resolution (2119(LXIII)), the Council expressed concern at the current world energy situation and the possibility of early depletion of the non-renewable sources of energy because of over-reliance on them and their unplanned consumption. The Council requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the concerned elements of the United Nations system, to submit a report to it in 1978 on the feasibility of holding an international conference on new and renewable sources of energy such as solar, geothermal and wind power, biogas, and tidal and wave power, bearing in mind the particular situation of the developing countries.

On 29 July, accepting a Kenyan drafting amendment and proposal that the Secretary-General's report be submitted to the Council's second 1978 session rather than its first, the Economic Committee approved the text, as so amended, without a vote; the Council similarly adopted it on 4 August.

At the regular 1977 session of the General Assembly later in the year, concern with global energy problems was expressed during the Second Committee's discussion of an Australian draft resolution on international energy consultations. By that resolution, the Assembly would propose that the Committee on Natural Resources be requested to hold a special session in 1978, with high-level representation, to consider energy matters and particularly to evaluate the over-all world energy situation taking into account all forms of energy currently in use, to examine the issues and problems likely to arise during the energy transition period, to examine the current activities of the United Nations system in the field of energy, to recommend priority courses of action in dealing with energy questions through United Nations programmes, and to advise Governments on the matters under the Committee's consideration.

In addition to the above activities, several specific subjects were identified which might be taken up during the special session, including: conservation and efficient utilization of energy, especially in the developed countries; exploration and development of conventional energy sources; research and development in non-conventional energy sources; scope for transfers of energy technology; and financing aspects. The draft resolution was not pressed to a vote.

Prospects for development of chromium and other ores

The Committee on Natural Resources, at its fifth session, had before it a report of the Secretary-General assessing the prospects for the development and supply of copper over the next 10 to 15 years, the first in a series of studies on future prospects for selected non-ferrous metals. The Committee asked that the Secretary-General prepare a similar evaluation of the development of and demand for nickel.

In addition, the Committee proposed a resolution for adoption by the Council by which the Secretary-General would be asked to prepare such a report for the Committee at its next session on the 10 to 15 year prospects for chromium ores, paying special attention to measures for evaluating prospective deposits in developing countries.

The Economic Committee, on 29 July 1977, approved the Committee's draft text and the Council adopted it on 4 August as resolution 2117(LXIII). Both actions were taken without vote. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Coastal area development

At its July/August 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council considered two reports by the Secretary-General on marine questions.

The first report, on coastal area development and management and marine and coastal technology, reviewed progress made in the previous two years in three closely related areas: in the first area, it reviewed the preparation, purpose and scope of a manual on coastal area development, to be published in 1978, which among other objectives sought to provide planners and decision-makers with detailed guidelines for establishing a national programme of coastal management; in the second area, the report briefly reviewed several other activities undertaken by the United Nations Secretariat in the field of coastal area development and management in close co-operation with the concerned organizations in the United Nations system, namely, regional activities, both research and technical co-operation projects, seminars, and activities in support of training; and in the third area, the report focused on measures to ensure a better and wider application of marine and coastal technology and included a description of the elements of a work programme in this field.

The second report, on uses of the sea, identified two emerging developments of particular importance: the trend towards the extension of national resource jurisdiction to a 200-mile seaward limit; and a greater emphasis on a regional approach to marine affairs. It also contained a summary of progress made in the field of marine science, including activities in the field of training, education and mutual assistance, and the development of the Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Information System (ASFIS), a world-wide system established by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) offering computerized information services to scientists, scientific institutions, and other agencies involved in the science and technology of marine and freshwater ecosystems.

On 26 July, the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee approved without vote a draft resolution on co-operation in coastal area development. The sponsors were Argentina, Canada, Kenya, Norway and Portugal. On 3 August, the Council adopted the text without vote as resolution 2099(LXIII).

By this resolution, the Council requested the Secretary-General to co-operate with IOC, FAO and other competent United Nations organizations in the development of ASFIS, taking full account of the requirement that identified information needs not currently dealt with by other United Nations information services be met, in particular the need for an information referral service regarding coastal area development.

The Council invited the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the competent United Nations organizations to take or support any other measures needed to assist Governments in developing coastal areas and, in this connexion, to encourage more effective interaction between producers and users of marine and coastal technologies and to promote closer co-operation among developing countries in this field. He was asked to report through ACC on progress made. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The Committee on Natural Resources, at its fifth session in May 1977, considered the annual report of the Administrator of UNDP on the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration. The report covered activities of the Revolving Fund during 1976, providing a brief account of the progress and operation of the Fund, including the status of projects and pre-project activities such as evaluation missions to developing countries.

In taking note of the Administrator's report, the Committee requested a fuller, analytical report for its next session, including in particular a financial and technical annex for each project financed by the Fund, with an assessment of the Fund's operations as of that time, to facilitate a review of experience and of the Fund's basic principles.

The Governing Council of UNDP at its June/July 1977 session at Geneva, acting as the governing body of the Fund during the initial stage, considered the Administrator's report and a report concerning feasibility studies by the Fund; it took note of the reports on 28 June.

(See also p. 450.)

Report of the Committee on Natural Resources

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted, without vote, decision 270(LXIII) by which it took note of the report of the Committee on Natural Resources on its fifth session in May 1977 and of the resolutions and decisions contained therein.

Among those not previously mentioned in the above sections was a resolution by which the Committee requested the Council to invite the Secretary-General to prepare reports for the next session on the technical and economic aspects of the transport of liquefied natural gas and possibilities and prospects for the use of gas associated with petroleum deposits, paying special attention to measures to assist the developing countries in solving these problems.

The Economic Committee approved the text without vote on 29 July on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

At its resumed session later in the year, the Council, by decision 293(LXIII), decided to accept an offer by the Government of Turkey to host the sixth session of the Committee at Istanbul in 1979. The Council approved without vote an oral proposal of its President to this effect on 2 December 1977.

Resolution 32/176, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/480, adopted by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107, by 130 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 3201 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 which relate to permanent sovereignty over natural resources,

Reaffirming that the effective discovery, exploration, development and conservation of their natural resources by developing countries is indispensable to the mobilization of their resources for development,

Bearing in mind especially the over-all impact of natural resources on the development of developing countries and the connexion thereof with the flow of capital and the transfer of technology,

Emphasizing the link between the improvement of the structure of the raw materials markets, taking into account the interest of developing countries, and the adequate flow of investment into the raw materials sector,

Noting that several developing countries desiring to do so have been unable to undertake systematically the survey of their natural resources,

Taking into account the work of the Committee on Natural Resources,

Emphasizing also the need to increase, inter alia, the resources of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources exploration,

Recalling also the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, Recalling further the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Emphasizing further the need for urgent specific action in order to establish the new international economic order,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of a group of high-level experts appointed by him on the recommendation of Governments and with due regard to equitable geographical distribution, a report on the following, including conclusions and recommendations, taking into account studies already undertaken within the United Nations system:

(a) An estimate of the financial requirements over the next ten to fifteen years for the exploration and location of natural resources in developing countries which indicate to the Secretary-General their interest;

(b) The availability of multilateral mechanisms for the provision of adequate finance for the exploration of natural resources with special reference to the availability of soft loans with an element of subsidy for developing countries, bearing in mind, inter alia, the special needs of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and the most seriously affected among them;

(c) The availability of mechanisms for the transfer of technology to developing countries for the exploration and exploitation of natural resources;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide the group with material for its consideration, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other interested bodies of the United Nations system;

3. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its thirty-third session.

Resolution 2116(LXIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/6043, adopted without vote by Council on 4 August 1977, meeting 2085.

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the important role of the Committee on Natural Resources pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1535(LXIX) of 27 July 1970 entitled "Development of natural resources," in proposing recommendations to the Council in the programming and co-ordination of the activities in the United Nations system in the field of natural resources,

Emphasizing the need for the effective co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the field of natural resources, in order to avoid unnecessary constraints on the scarce human and financial resources of the United Nations system and its capacity for supporting the developing countries in their development efforts,

1. Takes note of the report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the Environment Co-ordination Board on present and future activities of the United Nations system in water resources development and the report of the Secretary-General on a comprehensive plan of action for and co-ordination of programmes within the United Nations system in the field of natural resources development, and of the comments made on these reports;

2. Reaffirms paragraph 2 of Council resolution 1957 B (LIX) of 25 July 1975, and in particular subparagraphs (c) and (d) thereof;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the reports to be prepared pursuant to Council resolution 1957 B (LIX) a detailed analysis of the current and planned programme activities in the field of natural resources, in order to enable the Committee on Natural Resources to perform its task of co-ordination effectively.

Resolution 2118(LXIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/6043, adopted without vote by Council on 4 August 1977, meeting 2085.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1954(LIX) of 25 July 1975 on problems of availability and supply of natural resources, and particularly resolution 1954 A (LIX),

Conscious of the world-wide significance which energy and fuels have acquired in recent years, and of their effect on economic development, particularly that of the developing countries,

Commending the reports of the Secretary-General on coal and taking note of their findings,

Recognizing the desirability of intensifying international cooperation in ensuring long-term supplies of energy in appropriate quantities and forms,

Noting the reports of the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee in pursuance of Council resolution 1954 C (LIX),

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3508(XXX) of 15 December 1975 entitled "Examination of long-term trends in the economic development of the regions of the world,"

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in his work on long-term economic trends, to give special attention to long-term forecasts relating to energy and the main energy sources, and to countries' requirements and supplies, taking into account the possibility of using alternative energy sources;

2. Recommends to the Secretary-General that, in the joint efforts of all organizations of the United Nations system to develop energy sources alternative to oil and gas, high priority should be given to the evaluation of the prospects of using coal as a raw material both for producing liquid and gaseous fuel and for the chemical industry;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the views of the executive secretariats of the regional commissions, the specialized agencies and also the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Development Programme, to submit an interim report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session:

(a) Presenting an assessment of the progress achieved in expanding the use of coal;

(b) Describing the present and anticipated scales of work on the evaluation of the prospects of using coal, as scheduled in the respective work programmes of those bodies;

(c) Presenting action proposals for practical measures for increasing the utilization and processing of coal and assisting countries in overcoming their energy problems, and at the same time taking into account environmental protection requirements;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, as far as possible, that the above-mentioned problems are studied in detail at the planned international symposium on the evaluation and working of coal deposits, which is to be held no later than 1979.

E/6043. Report of Economic Committee, draft resolution V.

Resolution 2119(LXIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/6043, adopted without vote by Council on 4 August 1977, meeting 2085.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing that the remaining decades of this century represent a period of transition from a world economy largely based on oil to one based on alternative, new and renewable sources of energy,

Bearing in mind the long lead times required to develop and harness alternative new sources of energy,

Recalling that the United Nations has pioneered the promotion and development of new sources of energy such as solar, geothermal and wind power and convened the United Nations Conference on New Sources of Energy at Rome in 1961—the first major international conference on these new sources of energy, which provided a benchmark against which previous and subsequent progress is measured,

Aware of recent technical developments and those anticipated in the next few years in these and other new sources of energy such as biogas, tidal and wave power, oil shale and tar sands, among others,

Considering the vital role renewable forms of energy could play in the improvement of the living conditions of all the peoples of the developing countries,

Deeply concerned by the prevailing world energy situation and by the possibility of the early depletion of the non-renewable sources of energy because of over-reliance on these resources and their unplanned consumption,

Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other United Nations bodies concerned, to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council, at its sixty-fifth session, on the feasibility of holding an international conference on new and renewable sources of energy such as solar, geothermal and wind power, biogas, and tidal and wave power, bearing in mind the particular situation of the developing countries.

E/6043. Report of Economic Committee, draft resolution III.

Resolution 2117 (LXIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/6043, adopted without vote by Council on 4 August 1977, meeting 2085.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the importance of natural resources for world economic development,

Recalling the minerals which are identified in the Integrated Programme for Commodities currently under discussion in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Taking into account the work of the International Geological Correlation Programme, of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, on ophiolites (i.e. rocks potentially containing chromium), and noting the greater availability of information on common base metals such as copper, lead, nickel and zinc, Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for the sixth session of the Committee on Natural Resources a comprehensive report assessing the prospects for the development of chromium ores, and also the demand for chromium over the next 10 to 15 years; in the report, special attention should be paid to measures that might be undertaken to evaluate prospective deposits in developing countries.

Resolution 2099 (LXIII), as recommended by Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, E/6040, adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1977, meeting 2084.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1802 (LV) of 7 August 1973 on marine co-operation and 1970 (LIX) of 30 July 1975 on uses of the sea and coastal area development,

Reaffirming that the rational use of marine resources and coastal areas is an essential component of national economic development and that the wider and more effective application of technological capabilities in developing countries is a prerequisite to this end,

Considering that the programme in this field proposed by the Secretary-General in his progress report on coastal area development and management and marine and coastal technology is complementary to and will be integrated, as required, with related activities carried out by other organizations of the United Nations system,

Noting from the annual report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination for 1976/77 that the Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Information System being developed jointly by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission could be made fully responsive to system-wide needs in the field of coastal area development,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to co-operate with the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and other competent United Nations organizations in the development of the Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Information System, and to take full account of the requirement that identified information needs not at present dealt with by other information services within the United Nations system be met, in particular the need for an information referral service regarding coastal area development;

2. Invites the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the competent organizations of the United Nations system to take or support such other measures as may be required to assist Governments in developing coastal areas and, in this connexion, to encourage more effective interaction between producers and users of marine and coastal technologies and to promote closer co-operation among developing countries in this field;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, using the co-ordination machinery of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to report to the Council, as appropriate, on progress made in implementing the present resolution.

Statistical developmentsActivities in 1977

The Statistical Office of the United Nations began work in 1977 on the revision of the 1975 Directory of International Statistics, which was to be updated to 1978 and expanded in coverage to increase its usefulness in the co-ordination of international statistical activities. Work continued on a new Handbook of Statistical Organization. Work started on the third issue of the Supplement to the Statistical Yearbook and the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics, which was to contain updated descriptions of the definitions, methods and classifications in use for the national statistics included in both publications.

The Statistical Office, in co-operation with a number of international organizations, also began developing an international price statistics programme to meet the general analytical requirements of the international community. Guidelines on price and quantity statistics were published, and a draft manual on producers' prices was prepared.

Work on phase II of the International Comparison Project, a joint undertaking of the Statistical Office, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and the University of Pennsylvania (United States), was concluded in 1977, and a report on this phase was published, presenting binary and multilateral comparisons for 1970 and 1973 for 16 countries.

The processing of the results of the 1973 World Programme of Industrial Statistics was begun in 1977. Initial proposals were drawn up for the 1983 World Programme.

A new international questionnaire on energy statistics was circulated to Governments in June 1977 to collect data for the compilation of national energy balances.

A programme on environment statistics was initiated, with support from the United Nations Environment Programme. The Statistical Office undertook a survey of country practices in this field and the development of a process dictionary for use in materials/energy analysis.

Draft principles and recommendations for population and housing censuses were prepared. These included recommendations on the operational aspects of the censuses as well as on topics and tabulations.

The Office, in co-operation with a number of specialized agencies, completed the manuscript of the Compendium of Social Statistics, 1977—the first issue since that of 1967 and the most comprehensive selection of social statistics ever compiled at the international level.

Preliminary guidelines and illustrative series of social indicators were published, emphasizing the development of social indicators as a user-oriented selection process, directed towards the measurement of living conditions and of the circumstances and factors that influence those conditions.

A study was made of the methods of achieving integration in the collection, storage, processing and dissemination of social and demographic statistics. Work began on the harmonization of concepts and classifications among specialized fields of such statistics.

Also issued were provisional guidelines on the national and sectoral balance-sheet and reconciliation accounts of the System of National Accounts, as well as provisional guidelines on statistics of the distribution of income, consumption and accumulation of households. Draft guidelines on statistics of tangible assets were prepared. In addition, a technical report on the feasibility of using welfare-oriented measures to supplement the national accounts and balances was published. This was designed to analyse the usefulness of the national accounts for social welfare questions.

During 1977, the United Nations also continued to collect and publish statistics showing major global, regional and national economic and social characteristics, including data on external trade, industrial production, prices, construction, distributive trade, transport, energy, national economic accounts, population, migration and vital statistics.

(For list of publications, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The first session of a working group on world-level classifications composed of the statistical offices of the United Nations and of the European Communities was held in November 1977. Possible revisions in the International Standard Industrial Classification (ISIC) of all economic activities were reviewed. These were to take account of changes in the structure and organization of industry since the 1968 revision of ISIC, to facilitate harmonization between commodity classifications and ISIC, and to bring about closer co-ordination between classifications of the same type produced by different organizations.

Centres for long-term statistical training continued to operate under United Nations auspices in Iraq, Japan and Uganda. United Nations participation in the Institut de statistique, de planification et d'économie appliquée, located at Yaounde, United Republic of Cameroon, ceased in 1977. The Statistical Office co-operated with the Munich Centre for Advanced Training in Applied Statistics for Developing Countries (Federal Republic of Germany) in conducting, in August 1977, a seminar on statistical organization.

Decisions of Economic and Social Council

On 5 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, adopted, without vote, resolution 2054 (LXII) by which, inter alia, it requested the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to take a sympathetic view of the requirements of developing Member States for financing of training of statisticians, especially through its regional funds, and to increase this component in its assistance with a view to fostering the long-term and lasting development of the statistical services of developing countries.

The text, proposed by the Statistical Commission, was approved without objection by the Economic Committee on 21 April 1977, following approval without a vote of oral amendments by Afghanistan, Brazil and New Zealand. The amendments of Afghanistan assigned priority to the least developed countries, those of New Zealand made statistical training subject to the priorities of developing countries, and Brazil made a drafting change.

On the same day, the Council drew the attention of developing countries to the value of a continuing national household survey capability to meet their needs for reliable and integrated statistics as a complement to periodic censuses. Among other things, it requested the Secretary-General and UNDP, in co-operation with the World Bank and in consultation with other multilateral and bilateral donor agencies, to consider ways of carrying out this necessary development activity, including the provision of resources for inter-country technical advice and training in this field.

This action was set forth in resolution 2055 (LXII), adopted without a vote.

The text, proposed by the Statistical Commission, was approved without objection by the Economic Committee on 21 April 1977, following approval of an oral drafting amendment by Mexico.

Also on 5 May, the Council noted the report of the Statistical Commission on its November 1976 session and approved the objectives and work programme recommended by the Commission. This action was embodied in Council decision 220(LXII), adopted without vote. It was approved by the Economic Committee without vote on 21 April on the proposal of the Statistical Commission.

The Economic and Social Council decided on 5 May 1977, inter alia, that the seventh session of the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination of the Statistical Commission would take place on 23 and 24 June 1977 in Geneva, Switzerland. This action was taken by decision 213(LXII), adopted without a vote. The Statistical Commission had recommended this, and the Economic Committee had approved it without a vote on 21 April.

The Council scheduled the twentieth session of the Statistical Commission for January 1979 in New York, by its decision 281 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977 (see p.1036), in conformity with a recommendation by the Commission. The Economic Committee on 21 April 1977 had postponed this decision until the Council's second regular 1977 session.

In another action, the Council, on 12 May 1977, requested the Statistical Commission at its 1979 session to contribute to the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, 1976-1985, by co-operating with relevant United Nations bodies in developing improved methods, including training of personnel, for collection of detailed social and economic statistical data on women and their work. Resolution 2061(LXII) was adopted without a vote. (For text of resolution 2061 (LXII), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Resolution 2054 (LXII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/5960 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Council on 5 May 1977, meeting 2054.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Statistical Commission on its nineteenth session,

Recognizing the crucial role played by training in the overall development of statistical services of Member States which are developing countries,

Noting with satisfaction the considerable past assistance rendered by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and other sources to the financing of training of statisticians, which has had a favourable impact on the statistical services of Member States which are developing countries,

Further noting the necessity to increase and consolidate the quantity and quality of technically competent statisticians in the countries of the developing world, who should collect, compile and analyse statistical data required for preparing and monitoring the economic and social development plans of developing countries,

Emphasizing the fact that sound development policy and evaluation can proceed only on the basis of adequate data concerning important development sectors,

Expressing concern over the rapidly declining trend in assistance rendered by the United Nations Development Programme to the financing of training of statisticians, especially through its regional funds,

Further concerned that, because of the lack of necessary financial and personnel resources, many developing countries, particularly the least developed, are unable on their own to set up and maintain an effective vehicle to train all levels of statisticians,

Requests the United Nations Development Programme to take a sympathetic view of the requirements of Member States which are developing countries for financing of training of statisticians, especially through its regional funds, and, subject to the priorities of developing countries for the application of regional and country programme funds, to increase this component in its assistance with a view to fostering the long-term and lasting development of the statistical services of developing countries, priority being given to the requirements of the least developed among the developing countries.

E/5910, Chapter I. Draft resolution II, as proposed by Statistical Commission for adoption by Economic and Social Council, and as orally amended by Mexico, approved without objection by Economic Committee on 21 April 1977, meeting 786.

Resolution 2055 (LXII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/5960 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Council on 5 May 1977, meeting 2054.

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the Statistical Commission on its nineteenth session and, in particular, of the high priority it assigned to the proposal by the Economic Commission for Africa for a regional programme of technical assistance to developing countries designed to enable them to establish or improve a continuing national household survey capability, and of the broad relevance of such a programme to other developing regions,

Recalling paragraph 74 of the World Population Plan of Action, in which, inter alia, all countries that have not yet done so are encouraged to establish a continuing capability for taking household surveys,

Recalling also resolution 272 (XII) adopted by the Economic Commission for Africa at its twelfth session and third meeting of the Conference of Ministers, in which it, inter alia, urged the undertaking of a multipurpose programme of household surveys for the collection of integrated demographic, social and economic data through the establishment of a field survey mechanism,

Recalling further the recommendation contained in paragraph 30 of the Programme of Action adopted by the Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour, held at Geneva from 4 to 17 June 1976, in which, inter alia, international bodies and interested countries are invited to consider the feasibility of initiating a world-wide programme in support of household surveys,

Realizing that the renewed emphasis on approaching development efforts on an integrated basis, as exemplified by the decisions of the World Population Conference, the World Food Conference and the World Conference on Employment, implies an increased need for countries to have integrated statistics available for the planning, management and evaluation of programmes arising from these efforts,

1. Considers that national sample surveys, carried out on a continuous and integrated basis, by focusing on the individual and the household, can provide important quantitative information on economic, social and demographic conditions, and changes therein, for the entire population and the special groups within it, including the most disadvantaged groups such as the rural poor;

2. Draws the attention of developing countries in all regions to the value of a continuing national household survey capability in serving their national needs for reliable and integrated statistics as a necessary complement to periodic census programmes;

3. Draws the attention of developing countries to the possibility of using additional funds available to them through their United Nations Development Programme country programme facility to support the establishment or upgrading of such national survey capabilities as an important component of developmental infrastructure;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations Development Programme, in co-operation with the World Bank and in consultation with other multilateral and bilateral donor agencies, to convene a meeting, as soon as is practicable, to consider ways and means of carrying out this necessary and important development activity, including the provision of resources for needed intercountry technical advice and training in this statistical field;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, to provide all necessary support for this programme and to submit a progress report to the Statistical Commission at its twentieth session.

Chapter XVI

Population questions

Population activities of the United Nations

Operational activities

The regular programme of work in the population field included research studies on population trends and structure, demographic projections, fertility and family planning, population and development, and population policy. Substantive services were provided to technical co-operation projects in approximately 70 countries. Emphasis was on activities related to analysis of demographic data and integration of demographic factors into development planning.

EXPENDITURES ON TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION
PROJECTS BY REGION

Region	Amount (in US dollars)
Africa	6,071,162
Asia	1,364,122
Europe	13,823
Latin America	2,815,444
West Asia	642,829
Global	115,336
Interregional	614,663
Total	11,637,379

A total of 81 country, regional and interregional experts provided assistance, distributed as follows:

POPULATION EXPERTS IN THE FIELD

Region	Country level	Regional/ interregional levels	Total
Africa	13	16	29
Asia	4	1	5
Europe	—	6	6
Latin America	7	28	35
West Asia	6	—	6
Total	30	51	81

Training programmes were emphasized. During 1977, 187 fellowships were awarded at the United Nations regional and interregional population training and research centres and other institutions.

FELLOWSHIPS IN POPULATION STUDIES

Region of origin of fellow	At United Nations centres	At other institutions	Total
Africa	78	18	96
Asia	22	13	35
Latin America	32	1	33
West Asia	11	11	22
Europe	—	1	1

The importance of training was further stressed with the establishment of the interregional training and research programme in population and development at the State University of Moscow. This programme of specialized training in relating population phenomena to economic and social planning was offered to those who had completed courses at the United Nations-sponsored demographic training and research centres and to other qualified candidates nominated by Governments of developing countries.

A number of missions were undertaken during 1977 to advise Government officials on projects and programmes in population. Meetings organized during 1977 included:

— the Expert Group Meeting on Demographic Transition and Socio-Economic Development, which met from 27 April to 4 May at Istanbul, Turkey, to consider the impact of socio-economic change on fertility; and

— the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Demographic Projections, which met at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 7 to 11 November, to consider ways of improving demographic projections.

Since official projections were lacking for nearly three quarters of all nations, the Ad Hoc Group of Experts stressed the importance of United Nations population projections at national, regional and global levels, and noted that estimates prepared by the United Nations Secretariat were indispensable for policy-makers and long-term-development planners.

Interagency co-ordination continued on demographic projections, monitoring of population trends and policies, review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action,¹ the World Fertility Survey and harmonization of work programmes. The Sub-Committee on Population of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination met in May 1977 to consider activities being undertaken by the United Nations family.

Publications remained an important element of United Nations population activities.

The Population Bulletin of the United Nations was revived by the Population Commission to present brief articles of interest and value to Governments, international organizations, research institutions, social and economic researchers and the public.

A study, Levels and Trends of Fertility throughout the World, 1950-1970, showed that crude birth-rates declined by about 24 per cent in the more developed regions, and by roughly 13 per cent in the less developed regions, over the 20-year period. Findings were presented by regions of the world, with statistical tables, charts and maps.

A series of reports, "National experience in the formulation and implementation of population policy," was initiated in 1977. Reports were issued on Cuba and Mexico in 1977, with others soon to come. The intention was to publish a report on every country. The reports examined a variety of situations and solutions of population policy adopted by Governments, often determined by historical, political, socio-economic or cultural circumstances.

Action to implement the World Population Plan of Action

The Population Commission met at United Nations Headquarters in January 1977. This was the first session at which actions taken to implement the recommendations of the 1974 World Population Conference² were examined: monitoring of population trends and policies; measures undertaken at the national, regional and international levels to implement the World Population Plan of Action adopted at the Conference; proposals regarding arrangements for the review and appraisal of the Plan of Action; guidelines on population-related factors for development planners; regional consultations to follow up the World Population Conference; and interrelations between population, resources and environment.

The Population Commission reviewed a report on the actions taken by States and non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations to implement the recommendations of the World Population Plan of Action. The non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations which reported positive support to the Plan of Action were organizations concerned with demographic phenomena, economic and social development, the environment and resources, and/or the human rights aspects of social and economic phenomena.

With regard to the Secretary-General's 1976 guidelines on population-related factors for development planners,³ the Population Commission confirmed the importance of considering population matters in the context of development planning. The Commission recommended that a more detailed and substantial report be prepared to include methods of incorporating demographic variables in development planning.

The Population Commission also reviewed the results of the regional consultations held in the five regions subsequent to the World Population Conference to maintain and strengthen the momentum of the political consensus reached at the World Conference and to accelerate action that Governments might wish to take in dealing with their national and regional problems.

With regard to the work on interrelations between population, resources and environment, the Commission suggested that the work of the United Nations on existing models and "Project 2000" (a long-term development research project designed to assist in formulating concrete proposals for future international development strategies and a new international economic order) should be supplemented to treat population not only as an external factor but also as an internal variable dependent on economic and social development.

Following its consideration of the report of the Population Commission, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2051 (LXII) on 5 May 1977, by which it requested the Secretary-General, in pursuing the task of collecting data and information relevant to the formulation of a new international development strategy, to take due account of the World Population Plan of Action as one of the inputs of particular relevance to that task.

The Council recommended to the General Assembly that, when it considered the question of preparing a new international development strategy, the role of population and the importance of population policies and activities in their relationship to the establishment of a new international economic order should be given due weight, and should be duly integrated into the goals, objectives, policy measures and targets to be contained in any new strategy.

Resolution 2051 (LXII) was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which had approved it without a vote on 22 April 1977. Amendments by Algeria and Yugoslavia to the preamble of the text which had been proposed by the Population Commission were approved without vote. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Economic and Social Council also adopted on the same day a resolution by which it noted with satisfaction the progress of work in the population field, the biennial work programme (1978-1979) and the medium-term plan (1978-1981). It requested the Secretary-General: to continue and strengthen the work on population trends and structure, demographic estimates and projections, factors affecting patterns of reproduction, population and development, and population policy; to arrange for the continuation of the monitoring of population trends and policies and for the establishment of appropriate machinery for the review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action; to prepare a manual for the use of national planners on methods of incorporating demographic factors in development planning; to continue and expand the United Nations programme of technical co-operation in the field of population to countries desiring this assistance, adapting the programme to the requirements of developing countries; and to strengthen the United Nations programme of training in population. The Council further recommended that the publication Population Bulletin be continued on a biannual basis.

This action was embodied in resolution 2053 (LXII). The draft text had been approved, without a vote, by the Economic Committee on 20 April 1977, as proposed by the Population Commission. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In another action on 5 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 221 (LXII), took note of the arrangements of the Population Commission for review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action. These arrangements were to include the convening of a group of experts to assist the Secretary-General in drafting proposals. This decision was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which had approved the text proposed by the Population Commission, without a vote, on 20 April 1977.

The expert group, which met from 31 May to 3 June 1977, reaffirmed the view that the monitoring exercise and review and appraisal of the Plan of Action would involve four interrelated levels: national (Governments), regional (United Nations regional commissions), sectoral (United Nations specialized agencies) and over-all (United Nations Secretariat). The experts advised the Secretary-General on the nature and scope of the review and appraisal and made recommendations on the questionnaire to be sent to Governments to elicit the relevant information.

Population information system

The Population Commission in January 1977 considered a feasibility study of a world-wide population information system, and reaffirmed the importance of the exchange of population information.

On the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council adopted, without a vote, resolution 2052 (LXII) concerning establishment of such a system. By this action the Council requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to continue exploratory studies concerning the establishment of a world-wide population information system and to submit the findings of those exploratory studies to the Population Commission at its session in February 1979.

This resolution was adopted on 5 May 1977, as recommended by the Economic Committee, which had approved the draft text without a vote on 20 April 1977.

Report of the Population Commission

By decision 222 (LXII) of 5 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Population Commission on its nineteenth (10 to 21 January 1977) session and of the appendix thereto summarizing recent population trends and policies. The Economic Committee, on the proposal of its Chairman, had approved the draft decision without a vote on 22 April.

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly, by decision 32/443 B, also took note of the summary in the appendix, to be published as the Third Concise Report on the World Social Situation. The decision was taken, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had, on the recommendation of its Chairman, approved the draft decision without a vote on 13 December.

United Nations Fund for Population Activities

Operational activities

By 31 December 1977, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) had approved project budgets totalling $81.4 million. The cumulative total for project budgets approved for the nine years of UNFPA operations was $339.2 million.

On 1 February 1977, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the governing body of UNFPA, approved the renewal of the existing agreement with Egypt for an estimated period of five years in the amount of $10 million. The Council also continued UNFPA support to the World Fertility Survey programme as well as large-scale family planning projects in Colombia, El Salvador, Mexico, Nepal and Thailand. In addition, the Governing Council endorsed a proposal by the Executive Director that multi-bilateral funding arrangements should, in future, be entered into to cover also smaller projects.

At its June/July 1977 session, the Governing Council approved UNFPA'S administrative budget in the amount of $4.7 million and gave the Executive Director approval authority of a total of $105 million for 1978.

The following tables show UNFPA allocations by major function, by executing agency, by type of project and by area.

UNFPA ALLOCATIONS BY MAJOR FUNCTION

	Amount (in US dollars)
Basic population data	12,173,903
Population dynamics	9,533,798
Population policy	1,463,101

Latin America and the Caribbean	15,192,439
Interregional	7,667,559
Global	7,483,816
Total	81,439,809

The countries and territories in which UNFPA supported projects during 1977 were:

Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, the Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, Colombia, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Dominica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Ghana, the Gilbert Islands, Guatemala, Guinea, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, the New Hebrides, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Romania, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Vincent, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Swaziland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Tuvalu, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zaire and Zambia.

Publications in 1977 included the monthly newsletter Population, the quarterly journal Populi, the Population Profiles series, the annual Inventory of Population Projects in Developing Countries Around the World and a new series, Reports and Documents, whose first title was Priorities in Future Allocation of UNFPA Resources.

Legislative decisions

The Deputy Executive Director of UNFPA made a statement on the Fund's current activities to the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee of the Economic and Social Council on 26 July 1977, in connexion with the Council's policy review of operational activities for development. Similarly, the Executive Director orally reported to the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 7 November 1977.

On 15 December 1977, the General Assembly, by resolution 32/114, took note of the reports of the UNDP Governing Council on its 1977 sessions, which contained an account of the Governing Council's consideration of UNFPA. (For text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

On 16 December, the Assembly, by resolution 32/131, inter alia invited UNFPA to provide financial assistance to developing countries, upon request and in accordance with its mandate, to improve conditions for the aging. (For text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Resolution 2051 (LXII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/5961, adopted without vote by Council on 5 May 1977, meeting 2054.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Population Commission on its nineteenth session,

Bearing in mind that the World Population Conference, which was held at Bucharest from 19 to 30 August 1974, adopted a World Population Plan of Action as a policy instrument within the broader context of the internationally adopted strategies and of international progress,

Also bearing in mind the efforts made by Governments, by the United Nations system, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to apply an integrated approach to social and economic development,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 31/182 of 21 December 1976, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee for Development Planning as well as with the Administrative Committee on Coordination and other relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system, to collect data and information relevant to the formulation of a new international development strategy, and decided to consider at its thirty-second session appropriate action for the preparations for a new international development strategy,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 3344 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, in which the Assembly took note with satisfaction of the report of the World Population Conference, including the resolutions and recommendations of the Conference and the World Population Plan of Action,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in pursuing the task of collecting data and information relevant to the formulation of a new international development strategy, to take due account of the World Population Plan of Action as one of the inputs of particular relevance to that task;

2. Recommends to the General Assembly that, when it considers the question of preparing a new international development strategy, the role of population and the importance of population policies and activities in their relationship to the establishment of a new international economic order should be given due weight, and should be duly integrated into the goals, objectives, policy measures and targets to be contained in any new strategy.

Resolution 2053 (LXII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/5961, adopted without vote by Council on 5 May 1977, meeting 2054.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the recommendations of the World Population Conference and particularly of the World Population Plan of Action, General Assembly resolution 3344 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974 on the World Population Conference, and General Assembly resolution 3345 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974 on research on the interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development, and the emphasis in the World Population Plan of Action on human rights and the role of women,

Recalling also its decision 87 (LVIII) of 6 May 1975 concerning the monitoring, review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action, its decision 89 (LVIII) of 6 May 1975 concerning the biennial review in depth by the Council of population matters with special reference to the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action, its resolution 1943 (LVIII) of 6 May 1975 and its decision 169 (LXI) of 4 August 1976 on guidelines on population-related factors for development planners, and its resolution 1946 (LVIII) of 7 May 1975 on activities in the field of population,

Aware of the need to take steps for the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action, and the need to strengthen the monitoring, review and appraisal functions of the Secretariat,

Aware also of the important supportive role of the United Nations system to Governments in achieving the goals of the World Population Plan of Action through research, exchange of information and technical co-operation,

Stressing the supportive role of the work programme of the United Nations system in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade and the pursuit of goals of economic co-operation,

Taking note of the discussions of the Population Commission at its nineteenth session on the progress of work, the work programme for the biennium 1978-1979 and the medium-term plan for the period 1978-1981,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the progress of work, the work programme for the biennium 1978-1979 and the medium-term plan for the period 1978-1981;

2. Draws the attention of the General Assembly, in its consideration of the work programme and budget, to the need to strengthen the work of the Secretariat, including the regional commissions, arising from the World Population Conference, taking note of General Assembly resolution 31/93 of 14 December 1976;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue and strengthen the work on population trends and structure, demographic estimates and projections, factors affecting patterns of reproduction, population and development, and population policy;

(b) To arrange for the continuation of the monitoring of population trends and policies and for the establishment of appropriate machinery for the review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action in the light of the discussions of the Commission on the question at its nineteenth session;

(c) To prepare a manual for the use of national planners on methods of incorporating demographic factors in development planning taking into account the interrelationships between demographic variables and economic and social factors;

(d) To continue and expand the United Nations programme of technical co-operation in the field of population to countries desiring this assistance; to adapt this programme to the requirements of developing countries; and to pay particular attention to support for development of population policies and establishment of population studies units at the national level;

(e) To strengthen the United Nations programme of training in population, in particular through continuation and expansion of the demographic training and research centres sponsored by the United Nations, support for the establishment of national training centres, and expansion of fellowships for training in population, giving attention to the training of administrators and development planners in the integration of population and development planning;

(f) To continue the publication, on a biannual basis, of the Population Bulletin of the United Nations as a forum for providing population analysts and planners with results of work done in the population field by the international organizations;

4. Emphasizes the need for the organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen their collaboration and co-ordination in the planning and execution of their population programmes.

E/5961. Report of Economic Committee, draft resolution II.

Resolution 2052 (LXII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/5961, adopted without vote by Council on 5 May 1977, meeting 2054.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling the recommendations of the World Population Conference, in particular those contained in the World Population Plan of Action, especially in paragraphs 15, 80, 90, 91, 100 and 102, which place emphasis on the exchange, sharing and dissemination of information in the field of population,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 3344 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, which deals with the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action,

1. Takes note of the findings of the study undertaken with regard to the establishment of a world-wide population information system (POPINS);

2. Affirms the importance of intensified efforts towards the dissemination of scientific and technical information in the field of population, especially in the developing countries; the need to promote easier access to such information for users, particularly those directly or indirectly concerned with economic and social development; the need to develop at the national level appropriate institutional arrangements and supporting programmes to promote the sharing and exchange of information; the importance of establishing or strengthening regional capacities in the field of population information; and the desirability of establishing appropriate co-ordination and linkages among the already existing information activities and services in the field of population;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Governments, with the collaboration of the regional commissions and the specialized agencies and with the advice of experts in relevant areas, to continue exploratory studies concerning the establishment of a world-wide population information system, with particular emphasis on:

(a) Gathering information about the volume of literature, institutions, potential users and their needs, especially by means of in-depth studies on a small number of national and regional institutions to estimate the amount of information which exists and to identify current and future needs of users;

(b) Consultations at the national and regional levels on arrangements for collaboration with existing programmes, especially as far as discussions with possible funders of the system are concerned;

(c) Aspects related to the design of the system, with particular attention to the operating costs of the possible options of the system at the national, regional and international levels;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to endeavour to obtain the necessary funding for the proposed activities through extra-budgetary resources;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit the findings of these exploratory studies to the Population Commission at its twentieth session for its consideration.

Chapter XVII

Regional economic and social activitiesThe Economic Commission for Europe

At its thirty-second session, held from 19 to 30 April 1977 at Geneva, the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) approved a programme of work for 1977-1978, endorsed a long-term programme for 1978-1981 and reaffirmed its wish that ECE principal subsidiary bodies pay special attention to topics in the Final Act of the 1975 Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (Helsinki Conference) requiring multilateral co-operation in the fields of economics, science, technology and the environment. The Commission asked for an analysis of topics that might be considered at a high-level meeting on the protection of the environment, and invited the Executive Secretary to inform the (October 1977) Belgrade (Yugoslavia) review meeting of the Helsinki Conference of progress within ECE in implementing provisions of the Final Act.

During the year ECE co-operated closely with the other regional economic commissions on matters of common concern. These included the ECE/Economic Commission for Latin America study of the evolution and prospects for economic relations between Latin America and Europe, and projects of interest to countries of the Mediterranean region. The Commission also contributed to United Nations global activities in the fields of economic perspectives, human settlements, the environment, water, and science and technology.

Other decisions adopted at the Commission's 1977 session dealt with, among other things: proposals to solve transboundary air pollution problems; problems of land use and land-use planning; general energy problems; standardization; automation; engineering industries; and the participation of the Danube Commission in the work of ECE.

Activities in 1977Development of trade

As a contribution to efforts to remove or reduce obstacles to the development of intra-

European trade, an inventory of all such obstacles was established. Trade officials, managers and other experts discussed marketing research and the marketing and design of capital and consumer goods at the fourth Seminar on East-West Trade Promotion, Marketing and Business Contacts (March 1977). A multilateral system of notification of laws and regulations concerning foreign trade was given a successful trial run, and intergovernmental discussions on the development of industrial co-operation were widened to include longer-term financial aspects.

Work to adapt and harmonize international trade procedures in line with modern techniques, with the aim of reducing documentary and handling costs of transactions, went ahead in a number of fields. A study was made of the economic aspects of labour migration within Europe.

Long-term perspectives

The Over-all Economic Perspective for the ECE Region up to 1990 was completed; it was to provide Governments and principal subsidiary bodies of the Commission with an outlook on the development of the region in the context of the world economy. It was decided to begin analytical studies and projections in various fields as starting-points for a new major perspective exercise.

Scientific and technological co-operation

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology prepared the ECE contribution to the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, and made arrangements for the regional conference on this subject to be held in Bucharest, Romania, in 1978.

The first steps were taken towards co-operative technological forecasts in certain areas, such as the innovative dimensions of the energy problem. This was in line with the emphasis placed by the Senior Advisers on new technologies in the environmental context of energy production and use, new energy sources and low-calorific fuels.

Among co-operative activities were: a joint programme of the Senior Advisers, the Conference of European Statisticians and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, relating to the measurement of international technology flows; and the preparation by the Senior Advisers and the Committee on the Development of Trade of a manual on licensing procedures and related aspects of technology transfer.

Problems of the environment

The increasing importance attached to comprehensive planning and management permitting preventive action for the defence of the environment was clearly expressed in activities of the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems; a meeting on environmental perspectives was held in Bilthoven, Netherlands, in September, and another on integrated physical, socio-economic and environmental planning took place in Geneva in November/December. There was new emphasis on introducing procedures for assessing the environmental and socio-economic consequences of development. Efforts were made to promote the concept of low- and non-waste technology following the holding of a seminar in Paris in November/December 1976. Environmental impact assessment was the topic of the policy debate at the fifth session of the Senior Advisers in February 1977; preparations were made for a seminar on this subject.

A steering body for the ECE project on the long-range transmission of air pollutants was established in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the World Meteorological Organization. The monitoring and evaluation of sulphur dioxide pollution under this project was started. A report on fine particulates was completed, and a task force on odours was created.

The Senior Advisers' investigations of the impact of new energy technologies on the environment reflected general concern with the adjustment of energy consumption to a new fuel-supply situation and to increasing environmental constraints.

Energy

A study on new issues affecting the energy economy of the ECE region in the medium and long term was prepared, and work was started on a new study of the rational use of secondary forms of energy in industry.

The study on perspectives of the coal industry in the ECE region (1985 and beyond) was completed, and work on coal gasification and liquefaction took on importance.

A study on the rational use and distribution of gas was disseminated and a programme of specialized work was completed on the forecasting of gas demand, with the help of computers. The Symposium on the Gas Industry and Environment was held in Minsk, Byelorussian SSR, in June 1977.

A major activity in connexion with electric power was the holding of the Symposium on Load-curve Coverage in Future Power Generating Systems, in October in Rome. The changes to be expected in the supply and demand for electric power in the future in the light of increases in fuel prices were examined in a study under preparation on the medium- and long-term prospects for the electric power industry in the ECE region. Progress was made on an ECE project for the interconnexion of the electric power transmission systems of the Balkan countries.

Transport

Technical and regulatory work, including the elaboration and updating of international instruments and regulations and the making of recommendations, was a well-established function of ECE in the transport field. The Convention on Road Traffic and the International Convention for Safe Containers—both elaborated largely under ECE auspices—entered into force in 1977. A new regulation dealing with motor vehicle lights entered into force and five draft regulations on other aspects of motor vehicle construction were adopted by the Island Transport Committee. Five recommendations to improve road traffic safety were also adopted.

The Trans-European North-South Motorway project was established, with ECE and United Nations Development Programme assistance, and studies were begun of road traffic in south-eastern Europe and of road links with the Middle East.

The economic feasibility study of an inland waterway linking the Danube, Oder and Elbe Rivers was continued and the first part of a study of east-west European freight traffic flows was completed.

Industry

The Symposium on the Interrelation between the Iron and Steel Industry and the Steel Consuming Sectors in December 1977 permitted an exchange of experience and views among specialists at a time when business activity was seriously affected by the economic situation. Three studies were in preparation: structural change in the iron and steel industry; the role of scrap in the iron and steel industry; and the use of continuous processes.

The Symposium on International Economic and Technological Co-operation in the Chemical Industry was held in Budapest, Hungary, in May. Studies on the raw material and energy requirements of the chemical industry were completed.

Enterprises were strongly represented at the Seminar on Engineering Equipment for Foundries and Advanced Methods for Producing Such Equipment, in November/December. Work continued in the field of trade statistics and market trends and prospects for engineering industries.

Automation activities in ECE established a bridge between manufacturing and the field of science and technology. The Seminar on Industrial Robots and Programmable Logical Controllers was held in Copenhagen, Denmark, in September. Another seminar, on computer-aided design systems as an integrated part of industrial production, was in preparation.

Agriculture and timber

The Committee on Agricultural Problems included in its programme a review of supply and demand developments for foodstuffs, milk and meat in Europe up to 1985. A symposium on new agricultural developments affecting frozen and quick-frozen foods was held in Budapest in April. The Committee on Agricultural Problems and the Timber Committee gave special attention to questions of interest to the ECE members which were developing countries from the economic point of view. Both Committees published their regular surveys of markets, and also production and trade statistics.

Human settlements

The main concern of the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning was to give effect to the recommendations of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (1976), which singled out the regional commissions as the principal instruments of intergovernmental follow-up action. The Seminar on the Impact of Energy Consideration on the Planning and Development of Human Settlements, held in Ottawa, Canada, in October, was the first major intergovernmental attempt to reconcile long-term policies and aims in the field of energy production and conservation, on the one hand, and human settlements development and planning on the other. The July 1977 seminar on long-term trends in housing policies, in Turku, Finland, was another of the Committee's major activities. Efforts to promote international trade in building products and know-how and to harmonize the technical content of building regulations were advanced.

Water problems

The Committee on Water Problems prepared plans to follow up on the decisions of the United Nations Water Conference (held in March 1977). The trend in the Committee's activities was to give increasing attention to water policy problems, to make its work action-oriented and to share ECE experience with other regional commissions. A start was made with the harmonization of data collection and assessment of pollutants discharged into the sea by industries. Preparations were made for a seminar on the rational use of water; ECE participated actively in the UNEP Mediterranean Action Plan, and the work on water problems remained closely related to ECE activities in the fields of transport, industry, energy and land use.

Statistics

An ECE seminar held in Washington, D.C. in March 1977 considered the organization and technological and methodological problems of statistical services during the next decade. A conversion key for foreign trade classifications used in different parts of the ECE region was completed; this was an important step towards making the statistical information of countries with different economic and social systems fully comparable. Progress was also made with the harmonization of statistical concepts and nomenclatures, particularly in social and demographic statistics, general energy statistics, statistics for environmental studies and policies, and price statistics.

Increased priority was given by the Conference of European Statisticians to work on statistics for environmental studies and policies and the inclusion of statistics of land use in its programme.

The regular statistical bulletins published by ECE for many sectors of economic activity were given a critical appraisal, with rationalization as the aim.

Standardization

As proposed in the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference, ECE began a systematic effort to obtain information from national administrations on existing certification arrangements, with the aim of giving them a wider international field of application. Standardization continued to be a basic feature of ECE activities in such fields as trade, industrial co-operation, technology, transport, human settlements and agriculture; ECE also continued to promote its role in harmonizing government policies for defining priorities for standardization.

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

The thirty-third session of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) was held at Bangkok, Thailand, from 20 to 30 April 1977. Conforming to a resolution adopted in 1976, work was further streamlined and a core of essential activities was given priority, including an integrated programme on rural development.

Attention to the question of technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) was intensified. Two handbooks on TCDC training courses and consultancy services were supplemented by a new handbook containing a roster of experts. The Regional Centre for Technology Transfer was opened at Bangalore (India) in July 1977. The secretariat collaborated with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in running the TCDC Information Referral System by selecting the regional organizations with capacities for TCDC and obtaining input from them. In 1977, 15 regional advisers and experts undertook 70 missions to most of the developing countries of the region.

The Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery came into being, as did the Asian Re-insurance Corporation; and 14 countries ratified the Constitution of the Asia-Pacific Telecommunity. The Asia and Pacific Centre for Women and Development opened in Teheran (Iran) in February 1977.

Activities in 1977

Agriculture

The Commission adopted a resolution by which it would establish a regional co-ordination centre for research and development of coarse grains, pulses, roots and tubers in the humid tropics of Asia and the Pacific. Indonesia offered host facilities.

A periodical, Agricultural Information Development Bulletin, began publication in July.

The Asian Rice Trade Fund, founded in 1974 but never operational owing to lack of participation and funds, was re-examined at an intergovernmental meeting in March. A suggestion that an expert working group be appointed to formulate concrete proposals was endorsed by the Commission.

The Joint ESCAP/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) Group

Farming Project, approved by the Commission at its 1977 session, began to study successful group farming systems and village-level small-farm workshops with the intention of promoting similar groupings.

Development planning

The Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1976 was published and work began on the 1977 Survey which was to be in two parts—a review of recent developments and emerging issues, and a special study on the impact of the international economic crises on selected economies in the region. Three issues of the Economic Bulletin for Asia and the Pacific were published. Plans were laid for a new series of monographs, Development Papers, arising from ESCAP secretariat research.

Work was expanded during 1977 by a consultant group on a major research project on new patterns and strategies for development. This was started in 1976 and was to continue until 1979, forming a regional contribution to the International Development Strategy for the 1980s.

Other activities during the year included contributions to general activities in rural development, extension of technical assistance and advisory services concerning planning techniques and administrative systems, studies of possible regional and subregional responses to problems concerning raw materials and commodities, and development of a co-ordinated approach to issues posed by transnational corporations.

Industry, housing and technology

The Meeting of Ministers of Industry held in Bangkok in November 1977 provided a framework for changes through new policy and strategy orientation recognizing four important elements—strengthening of linkages between industry and agriculture; orientation of industry to satisfy the basic needs of the poor; dispersal of industries away from metropolitan areas; and development of small-scale industries and their linkages with large and modern industries.

The ministers also recognized that the implementation of new policies and strategies of industrialization would involve breaking new ground and an innovative approach. It therefore decided to establish an ad hoc group of ministers which would meet periodically to examine progress and development in different countries relating to new industrial policies and innovative approaches. The ministers also proposed setting up a club of developing countries to help the least developed.

The first regional preparatory meeting for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held in Bangkok in December 1977, identified five priority areas to be reflected in country studies—food and agriculture; natural resources; energy; health and nutrition; and industrialization.

The Regional Conference on Human Settlements, held in Bangkok in May, recommended principles regarding housing and initiation of a regional programme on human settlements.

A fact-finding mission on industrialization in non-metropolitan areas visited eight countries. Its reports were to be considered at an intergovernmental meeting in 1978.

International trade

As a preparatory step in implementing some of the basic provisions of the Bangkok Agreement (on trade negotiations),¹ a workshop on rules of origin and harmonization of customs tariff nomenclatures and trade statistics was organized.

The Asian Clearing Union which began operations at the Bank Markazi Iran, Teheran, in November 1975, tripled the value of its transactions from 1976 to 1977.

Pursuant to a Commission decision, a meeting of experts was convened in November to advise the secretariat on the principles and guidelines of a draft blueprint for trade expansion and co-operation in the ESCAP region. The blueprint was to be considered by a meeting of ministers of trade.

The ESCAP Trade Promotion Centre continued its four services—professional development, market/product development, trade information and trade-promotion advice.

The Agreement Establishing the Asian Re-insurance Corporation received seven signatures during the year, by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, India, Iran, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Thailand. The Corporation was expected to commence operations in 1978. A draft agreement was also prepared for the establishment of a regional export credit insurance scheme.

Increased attention was given during the year to the special needs of the land-locked, least developed and island developing countries. The UNDP-financed project on assistance to the least developed land-locked countries entered its second phase with emphasis on promoting co-operation between the land-locked and transit countries.

In the field of raw materials and commodities, the secretariat worked closely with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), FAO and the UNCTAD/General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade International Trade Centre, as well as the Association of Natural Rubber Producing Countries, the Asian and Pacific Coconut Community, the Pepper Community and the South-East Asia Lumber Producers Association. Advisory services on raw materials and commodities were provided to member countries and commodity communities in the region.

Natural resources

The Committee on Natural Resources met in August 1977 and was concerned primarily with water resources. It also acted as a regional follow-up to the United Nations Water Conference, held in March. As recommended by the Committee, consultations were held with the bodies concerned on the setting up of an interagency task force on water for the ESCAP region. The Third Regional Symposium on the Development of Deltaic Areas was held in November.

In the energy sector, work was concentrated on rural energy, with a workshop in Fiji and a roving seminar in Indonesia, Iran, the Philippines and Thailand. The Commission stressed the importance of continuing work on non-conventional energy resources, noting the importance of geothermal energy in some countries. A seminar and study tour on urban electrical distribution systems was held in May and June at Tokyo and other cities in Japan and a study was undertaken on peak-load coverage with specific reference to gas-turbines and hydroelectric plants.

The Commission also endorsed a proposal for a triennial publication on mineral exploration and development.

Four sheets of the preliminary edition of the ESCAP sedimentary basins map were printed and distributed; the Bouguer anomaly map (gravity map) of the western part of the ESCAP region was published and distributed; and work continued on the second edition of the mineral distribution map of Asia.

¹ See Y.U.N., 1975, p. 527, regarding the First Agreement on Trade Negotiations among Developing Member Countries of ESCAP.

Population

Monographs on the population situation in Thailand and Sri Lanka were published and distributed. Monographs on other countries were in progress. A training course on analysis of fertility and mortality data was conducted for participants from island countries of the Pacific. Three expert group meetings were held—on migration and human settlements; on population and development planning; and on population growth and economic development in subnational areas. A comparative study of the relationship of migration and urbanization to development began in July. Technical assistance was provided to Sri Lanka for its 1971 census report.

Two expert group meetings helped member countries integrate family planning into development programmes. Seminars in Malaysia and the Philippines used research findings for development and management of family planning programmes.

Technical assistance in population information was provided to Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Thailand in preparing draft project proposals for the establishment of national population clearing-houses and documentation centres. The regional clearing-house instituted computerization of the selective distribution of population information.

Social development

A workshop and study tour on methods and techniques of promoting people's participation in local development was organized from 1 to 15 December in India, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Thailand.

The mobile training scheme for the landlocked and least developed among the developing countries worked in Bangladesh from February until mid-November. A meeting to assess in-country training was held in Bangkok in December.

The Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women allocated $400,000 to ESCAP for development and implementation of technical co-operation projects in the region aimed at integrating women into the development process. For 1977, UNDP allotted $50,000 to help the initial implementation of the regional five-year action programme for such integration of women. A project on the role of women's organizations in rural areas was being financed by the United States.

A regional training workshop for the development of rural youth programmes was held in April in the Republic of Korea.

Statistics

Three technical meetings were held in 1977, relating to the 1980 censuses of population and housing. Advisory services were provided on national accounts, social and demographic statistics, civil registration and vital statistics, and population and housing censuses.

Among publications issued, the Asian and Pacific Recommendations for the 1980 Population and Housing Censuses was released and the Statistical Yearbook for Asia and the Pacific, 1976 published.

Shipping, transport and communications

The ESCAP secretariat continued its efforts to establish and strengthen maritime training programmes, shippers' organizations, freight study units and national merchant marines, and to develop ports and increase use of inland waterways.

Training of managerial personnel was accomplished by the organization of regional and country-level workshops and a study tour in Europe.

The secretariat continued to provide shipping statistics, undertook a study on an optional shipping network in South-East Asia, and completed a study on liner services connecting Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Europe. It also undertook a survey of inland water transport in several developing countries.

The continuing ship-users' co-operation project was centred on the strengthening of shippers' organizations and the development of suitable analytical tools and transfer of technical knowledge.

Other activities related to containerization, its impact on employment and the development of maritime information systems and optimal shipping and port networks.

The Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications called for the modernization of the railways, endorsing the seminars-cum-study tours to augment railway training, and the dispatch of a roving team of experts to solve railway problems. The Committee also approved regional strategies for railway development in the next development decade. Included was a master plan aimed at the development of the Trans-Asian Railway and the main national trunk lines connecting outlets to the principal sea and river ports and centres of industrial and rural development. The plan also included urban and suburban transport development, transfer of new railway technology, the sharing of railway research experience, and multimodal transport development in rural areas and in and around large cities.

A programme was started to upgrade technical conditions and ancillary services of important sections of the Asian Highway network to an international standard for the promotion of border-crossing traffic.

In telecommunications, the ESCAP/International Telecommunication Union Unit assisted in the preparation of microwave specifications for Afghanistan and the implementation of the Asian telecommunication network which was expected to be completed in 1980.

The Constitution of the Asia-Pacific Telecommunity, adopted by the Commission in 1977, was ratified by 14 countries.

Regional training and research institutions

As renamed by the Commission at its 1977 session, the four older institutions for regional training and research became known as the Asian and Pacific Development Institute; the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific; the Asian and Pacific Development Administration Centre; and the Social Welfare and Development Centre for Asia and the Pacific. In February the Asian and Pacific Centre for Women and Development was established.

The first session of the Intergovernmental Governing Council of the institutions, held in November, marked completion of the process of setting up an integrated management structure for these institutions.

Despite the Commission's appeal for contributions for the institutions, their financial situation was uncertain; UNDP indicated that, in line with its established policy, it would cease support to the institutions after 1981.

The 1977 work programme of the Development Institute emphasized subregional and country-level activities, relatively greater emphasis on research directly concerned with problems of poverty, and greater involvement in the Pacific subregion. Altogether, 368 training opportunities were provided to participants from 27 countries in 1977, bringing the cumulative total to 3,003 since 1964.

The seventh general course of the Statistical Institute ran from October 1976 to March 1977. The eighth general course was inaugurated on 3 October. Two advanced courses were also held, one dealing with planning and conduct of sample surveys, with emphasis on error control, and the other with the 1980 world census of agriculture. Four country courses were conducted in Bangladesh, Iran, the Philippines and Sri Lanka.

During the year, the Development Administration Centre conducted 16 seminars, expert group meetings, workshops and training courses at the regional, subregional and country levels. It also carried out several research studies relating to rural organizations in rural development, investment prices and returns in public enterprises, and managerial civil services in Asia.

The Social Welfare and Development Centre placed major emphasis on organizing practitioner-oriented training activities and on new strategies, methods, and techniques for combating rural poverty. It conducted an expert group meeting on the development of indigenous teaching materials and training resources concerning the problems and needs of urban children and family life in Asia and the Pacific and held technical meetings and workshops in Bangladesh, India, the Philippines and the Republic of Korea.

The Centre for Women and Development provided advisory services to Iran and took part in preparations for the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women.

Mekong project

Resources paid or pledged to the Mekong project increased by about $5 million during 1977 to a total of $360.4 million. The work programme for 1977 contained 55 projects, but sites for about half were inaccessible during the year.

The hydrological network was expanded in 1977 with the addition of 17 hydrological and 8 meteorological stations in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand. The long-range Pa Mong optimization and downstream effects studies were completed and a draft report prepared in April 1977. The $40 million extension of the Nam Ngum project in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, to increase the hydroelectric capacity from 30 to 110 megawatts and expand the transmission system accordingly, continued on schedule towards completion in 1978. Under a programme of channel marking for safer navigation on the Mekong, 31 new beacons were installed between Vientiane and Luang Prabang. Three large thematic maps covering the whole basin were published. They were produced by the secretariat of the Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin with assistance from France, based on interpretation of satellite imagery over the preceding three years. The maps presented unique information on land use and land capability.

During the Commission's 1977 session, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam signed an agreement to proceed with new water resources development activities in the lower basin of the Mekong River. They proposed an interim committee to conduct activities of interest to the three countries, pending the resumption of the participation of Democratic Kampuchea in the Mekong Committee.

Offshore mineral exploration

The fourteenth session of the Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Offshore Areas (CCOP) was held at Manila, Philippines, in September/October 1977. Extension of work conducted under its auspices to 1981 was proposed; for the period 1978-1981, UNDP approved about $3 million, which included $934,400 from its own funds and $2 million from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Advisory services were rendered to CCOP countries for a geological survey of Malaysia; tin investigations in the Taiping coastal plain of Malaysia; and a geological survey of Indonesia. Assistance was also given for consideration of computerization of geological data in Indonesia and for continuation of heat-flow measurements in Indonesia, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines and Thailand.

Two research cruises were co-ordinated by CCOP: one in Indonesian and Philippine waters from February to May by the R.V. Valdivia of the Federal Republic of Germany, and one in the CCOP region from January to July by the R.V. Thomas Washington of the United States.

Japan provided its annual seven-month group training course in offshore prospecting. Also, shipboard training was provided to participants from member countries during geological and geophysical research cruises undertaken for the International Decade of Ocean Exploration programme.

The final report on the joint survey of the mineral potential in the Strait of Malacca undertaken in 1976 was completed and distributed.

The sixth session of the Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in South Pacific Offshore Areas and its Technical Advisory Group were held at Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea, in October. Under the auspices of the Committee, 1977 activities included reconnaissance surveys in the waters off the Cook Islands, Fiji, Samoa and Tonga, and aid to national projects in the waters off Fiji and the Solomon Islands. On-the-job training was incorporated in the projects. Also provided was a basic geology course for some 18 trainees that began in November at the University of the South Pacific (Suva, Fiji).

Typhoon Committee and Panel on Tropical Cyclones

The tenth session of the Typhoon Committee was held at Tokyo, Japan, in October 1977. The Committee recommended that ESCAP and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) organize a review mission in the first half of 1978 to evaluate country requirements and programmes and draft a long-term plan of action for the Committee.

During 1977, "Guidelines for disaster prevention and preparedness in tropical cyclone areas," prepared jointly by ESCAP, WMO and the League of Red Cross Societies, was published. Following the success of a pilot flood-forecasting system, steps were taken to install such systems in major river basins in the Philippines, Thailand, and the states of Sabah and Sarawak in Malaysia.

The fourth session of the WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones was held at Lahore, Pakistan, in April. At an informal planning meeting at Bangkok in November, discussions were held on ways to obtain storm-surge data in the Bay of Bengal.

Tin Research and Development Centre

The Agreement establishing the Southeast Asia Tin Research and Development Centre and the project document for UNDP financial support were signed by Indonesia, Malaysia and Thailand on 28 April 1977.

The three member countries together were to contribute $135,000 annually to the Centre; Malaysia provided facilities for the Centre at Ipoh.

The Centre aimed at developing methods for locating new primary ore deposits, efficient mining, ore beneficiation and smelting. It was to complement the work of the International Tin Research Institute and the International Tin Centre which were concerned with uses of tin and with marketing, respectively.

Regional Mineral Resources Development Centre

The Intergovernmental Meeting on the Organizational Aspects of the ESCAP Regional Mineral Resources Development Centre, at its meeting in Bangkok in August 1977, accepted Indonesia's offer of a permanent headquarters in Bandung.

During 1977, the Centre gave technical advisory services on mineral exploration to 11 countries. Work continued on the development of a systematic inventory of geological and mineral data.

Decisions by the Economic and Social Council

On 25 July 1977, the Economic and Social Council took note with satisfaction of the annual report of ESCAP for the period 3 April 1976 to 30 April 1977, of its recommendations and resolutions, and of the Commission's programme of work. Decision 246(LXIII) was adopted, without a vote, on the proposal of the Council President.

The Economic Commission for Latin America

In addition to the seventeenth session of the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA), which is also known by the Spanish acronym CEPAL, held in Guatemala City from 25 April to 5 May 1977, there were conferences and preparatory meetings for world conferences held in the region during the year. The Commission continued to analyse the main trends of the regional development process and to provide assistance to member Governments in economic and social activity. The Commission also continued research and analysis concerning the specific situation of the region regarding the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,² and the Latin American position within the proposed new international economic order.

Thus ECLA produced its annual Economic Survey of Latin America, 1976 as well as a comprehensive appraisal of the salient features of the Latin American economy during the previous 25 years, and studies and reports on such matters as regional integration, environment, external indebtedness, inflation, transport and communications, export promotion, water resources, human settlements, the integration of women in development, and co-operation with other geographical areas.

Closely related to ECLA activities during 1977 were the programmes on training, research and information carried out, respectively, by the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning, the Latin American Demographic Centre and the Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation.

The ECLA secretariat in 1977 prepared a study—"The economic and social development and the external relations of Latin America"—as the basis for the third regional appraisal of the International Development Strategy. This was discussed by member Governments at two regional gatherings held in March in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic: the Committee of High-level Governmental Experts and the second session of the Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee.

The study contained an appraisal of the performance of the region's countries during the past 25 years and set forth a number of conclusions. The concept of economic development prevailing in the early 1950s, the study commented, conveyed an image of continuous progress based on industrial development, which, combined with certain economic and social reforms, would lead to a higher degree of social consensus. This concept, inter alia, influenced the extent and depth of production changes and the nature of the external productive, commercial and financial relations of Latin America; it also determined the persistence of distributive problems, the rigidity and changes in the rural sector, the structure of employment and the growth of the middle strata of the population, thus characterizing the styles of regional development for more than two decades.

During the current decade, the study continued, there had been a tendency towards greater economic growth and productive and technological change, as well as an increase of production capacity. The region had broadened and diversified its external financial and economic relations while becoming progressively inserted in the international system, mainly due to developments in national policies and to the succession of significant changes occurring in the international setting because of the cycle in the industrial countries—a boom which culminated in 1973, the economic recession in the industrial economies and the slow recovery which took place during 1976—and the rise in petroleum prices.

The second part of the study, devoted to the external relations of Latin America, stated that the region's place in the world economy was undergoing a profound change: Latin American countries were ceasing to be specialized in the production of commodities alone; though commodities still accounted for most of external sales, manufactures were being exported and strongly influenced the growth rate of total exports, as a result of a considerable level of industrial development and a domestic technological effort which, while still insufficient, had already become significant. Developments in industry, technology, trade and financing had opened new development opportunities for the countries of the region. However, they were also raising new problems, according to the study. The differences among the countries of the region were growing greater; many of them—numerically the majority—were still passing through stages resembling those of many other developing countries, while a group of countries, which could be described as semi-industrialized, was gradually entering a stage of intermediate development, as a result of which they had become a case sui generis in the developing world.

The study mentioned the persistency of accumulated external debt and large deficits in current accounts. These features, it said, pointed to the pressing need to design and implement a co-operation policy adapted to new and changing circumstances, with the active participation of the Latin American countries, the other countries of the developing world and, above all, the developed world.

The study also examined the progress and problems of Latin America in its relations with developed areas, particularly the United States, the European Economic Community, Japan and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

The work of the Commission's seventeenth session was carried out in two phases: the first at the technical and the second at ministerial level. The third regional appraisal of the International Development Strategy, adopted at the session, was entitled the "Guatemala Appraisal." It expressed the views of the countries of Latin America regarding their own development and the fulfilment of the goals of the International Development Strategy within the framework of a new international economic order. The Commission also adopted a series of guidelines for the work of the secretariat during the next two years.

Among the topics discussed at the session were: the need to solve the problem of extreme poverty and some of its concomitants such as unemployment, underemployment, malnutrition and illiteracy; the priority to be given to the training of human resources; the need for a regional plan of action concerning integration of women in development; economic integration as a fundamental prerequisite for the development of the Latin American countries; measures to ensure stable and remunerative prices for primary commodities, and the removal of barriers affecting manufactures exported by the region; problems of domestic financing and external debt; and the adoption of a code of conduct in respect of the transfer of technology. Also, Commission members agreed on the need to put into practice a code of conduct to ensure that transnational corporations complied with the laws and regulations of the host country.

Economic and social planning

The Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning of Latin America and the Caribbean was held in Caracas, Venezuela, in April 1977 under the auspices of ECLA and the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning. Among other decisions, the Conference recommended the strengthening of the Institute as the focal regional body for the implementation of advisory planning services and training.

Three substantive programmes were carried out during 1977 by the Institute: advisory services, training and research. Advisory services were rendered to Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador and Venezuela.

In its training programme, the Institute completed another regional development planning course, in Santiago, Chile, and two planning and economic policy courses in Honduras and Costa Rica. It also co-operated in the organization of courses in Brazil, Mexico and Spain, related to regional and urban development planning, agricultural development planning and environmental management in development.

Information

The Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation continued during 1977 the systematization of basic bibliographical information in the economic and social fields and the establishment of mechanisms to deliver this information, promptly and at a reasonable cost, to researchers, private and public institutions and international agencies. Among other activities, the Centre was engaged in technical training, integration work and assistance to countries and institutions.

Population

In 1977 the Latin American Demographic Centre started a two-year programme on population. Activities included monitoring of population trends in the region, electronic processing of population data, and teaching, training and technical advice on population matters, in particular those related to development.

As part of the assistance provided to Governments, the Centre collaborated in the design, processing and analysis of basic population statistics for Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Nicaragua, Panama and Peru. Also, in co-operation with the World Fertility Survey, several missions were carried out in Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic and Panama, while computer services were provided for Chile and Haiti.

After the evaluation of the demographic situation in each country of the region in the period 1970-1975, the Centre undertook a study on population trends in the region for the period 1950-2000; its activities were complemented by traditional education and training programmes and by a service of documentation and information, including the collection of reports, articles, documents and other publications on population.

Regional integration and co-operation

In compliance with specific mandates from member Governments, ECLA intensified its efforts to promote diversified forms of co-operation. It collaborated closely with the Latin American Economic System in such spheres as industrial and agricultural programmes and projects, trade agreements and joint infrastructure programmes.

Co-operation with other regional organizations and institutional mechanisms such as the Andean Pact, the Central American Common Market, the Caribbean Community, and the Latin American Free Trade Association were strengthened during 1977, with particular emphasis on the integration of the countries of the Caribbean in the fields of trade, raw materials, communications and transport, environment and the removal of language barriers as a means of accelerating co-operation in a sub-region united by common interests.

Water and desertification

The Commission contributed to the United Nations Water Conference, held in March 1977 at Mar del Plata, Argentina, with a regional inventory and a regional position adopted at a preparatory meeting in Lima, Peru, in August/September 1976, and referred to as the "Lima Consensus on Water Problems."

A regional preparatory meeting for the United Nations Conference on Desertification took place in February in Santiago, under the joint auspices of ECLA and the United Nations Environment Programme. Representatives of the region's Governments worked out a common position regarding the main regional desertification problems, as a contribution to the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification adopted in September in Nairobi, Kenya, by the Desertification Conference. (See p. 509.)

Women in development

In January 1977, ECLA held a preparatory meeting in Mexico City for the Latin American Conference on the Integration of Women in Economic and Social Development; in June, a regional conference was held in Havana, Cuba, where member Governments studied a plan of action, which was ratified at the eleventh extraordinary session of ECLA'S Committee of the Whole, held in New York on 21 November 1977.

Decision by the Economic and Social Council

On 25 July 1977, the Economic and Social Council noted with satisfaction the annual report of ECLA for the period 7 May 1976 to 6 May 1977, its resolutions and recommendations, and the Commission's programme of work. Decision 247(LXIII) was adopted, without a vote, on the proposal of the Council President.

The Council also, with the adoption of resolution 2123(LXIII) on 4 August 1977, requested the Commission to co-ordinate all activities regarding preparations for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development with the Latin American Economic System. (For text of resolution 2123(LXIII), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

The Economic Commission for Africa

The thirteenth session of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) (fourth meeting of the Conference of Ministers) was held at Kinshasa, Zaire, from 24 February to 3 March 1977. The Commission adopted 42 resolutions covering a wide range of matters concerning the socio-economic development of Africa. Included were the questions of economic co-operation among African States in a number of specified areas, trans-African highways, a pan-African telecommunication network, use of space technology for natural resources development, railways, training of manpower, industrialization, intra-African trade and integrated development.

Preparations began for the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988), a programme recommended by ECA and approved by the General Assembly in December 1977, and practical activities in many economic and social sectors continued and expanded.

Activities in 1977

Agriculture

During 1977, ECA'S activities in agriculture were centred on the promotion of food production and on the improvement of trade and co-operation within Africa.

The Commission studied African groupings and organizations involved in food for an analysis of supply and demand projections to 1990, and also prepared a study on food availability in selected west African countries. A study on waste of food in western Africa was also prepared and circulated among countries concerned.

Preparations were made for ECA'S participation in studies for the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) on import and export profiles and trade and production potential in food, livestock, fish and forest products.

In co-operation with the West African Rice Development Association, a study was undertaken on the possibilities of the west African subregion's attaining self-sufficiency in rice production. Another mission studied possible co-operation and trade in agriculture among the States belonging to the Central African Customs and Economic Union.

The Commission also studied trade co-operation potentials in eastern and southern Africa, which led to the formation of the Eastern and Southern Africa Preferential Trade Community.

Economic co-operation

The Economic Co-operation Office of ECA concentrated mainly on the formation of an action-oriented programme for the ECA Multi-national Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCS) located in the various subregions.

The third meeting of the Council of Ministers of the Lusaka (Zambia) MULPOC, in November 1977, established a set of priority projects for the promotion of intercountry co-operation through expansion of trade, creation of integrated rural development schemes, establishment of freight booking centres and a multinational coastal shipping line, harmonization of transport policies, co-ordination of industrial policies of the subregion and manpower development.

The Council of Ministers also recommended to the countries of eastern and southern Africa that they convene an Extraordinary Conference of Ministers of Trade, Finance and Planning in March 1978 for the establishment of a preferential trade area and a clearing and payments system in the subregion.

Similarly, the Gisenyi (Rwanda) MULPOC Ministerial Council held in October 1977 adopted a priority action programme for Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire. The Council decided that co-operation should concentrate on the industrial utilization of methane gas, the development of agriculture and agro-industries in the Ruzizi Valley, the expansion of trade and the development of tourism and human resources.

The Economic Co-operation Office also provided assistance in co-operation with Trade and Transport Divisions for the study of co-ordinated transport and trade policies in the countries belonging to ECOWAS.

Industrial development

The major industrialization activity of ECA was the reformulation and implementation of intercountry projects and industrial branch programmes, approved at the third Conference of African Ministers of Industry in 1975, aimed at creating national, subregional and regional centres to provide assistance in industrial design, engineering and management consultancy.

Preparatory activities were undertaken to mount investigative field missions in respect of engineering, chemical and metal industries development programmes.

The fourth Conference of African Ministers of Industry, meeting at Kaduna, Nigeria, in November 1977, recommended that: (a) ECA, in collaboration with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), organize in early 1979 a symposium on industrial policies and strategies for internally self-sustaining development and diversification and collective self-reliance during the period 1978 to 2000; (b) priority continue to be given to industrial branch programmes—agro-industries and forest-based, building materials and construction, engineering, metal and chemical industries; and (c) ECA, in co-operation with OAU and UNIDO, should formulate permanent institutional machinery to tackle issues raised at sectoral and global consultations and call for co-operation and consultation among African countries.

Field missions by ECA assisted member countries in such matters as industrial strategies, policies and plan formulation. Work was continued on identification of opportunities for small-scale industrial development.

Investment Africa continued to be circulated among government officials, institutions and business circles in African countries, as well as among potential investors in the industrialized countries.

Education and training

Resolutions on co-operation in manpower development and utilization and on training for development were adopted by the Commission at its February 1977 session. Among training plans discussed was a proposal to develop some African institutions into subregional graduate schools of business management and finance and to develop a regional higher technical training and research institute.

Under an ECA/Netherlands fellowship programme, designed to enhance the training capability of pre- and in-service training institutions, four trainers' workshops were organized and 19 fellows placed for training in various African institutions. With the co-operation of 10 Governments and the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance, 99 candidates were successfully placed, under the Commission's bilateral fellowship programme designed to develop critically needed specialists.

The secretariat undertook advisory missions in the field of procurement and supplies management and in correspondence education. Field study and promotional missions were also undertaken on the localization of accountancy training and certification and on the development of indigenous consultancy organizations in western Africa.

In addition to training courses in tax policy and administration and in budget/plan harmonization organized for Mauritius and the countries of eastern and southern Africa, ECA, in collaboration with the African Association for Training and Development, sponsored a regional meeting on training policies and practice at which a suggested training policy statement was drafted, for adoption by member Governments.

International trade and finance

The Commission was designated Co-ordinator of the ECOWAS trade customs and monetary questions study project. A study on trade flows within ECOWAS was completed, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), and a number of studies in related fields were started.

As to global trade and finance, ECA, OAU and UNCTAD organized an African regional meeting on the proposed Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, enabling member States to analyse the complex issues involved and to work out common African positions.

Further, the Second African Regional Seminar on Multilateral Trade Negotiations was also organized jointly with UNCTAD, to assist participants in assessing developments in negotiations from an African standpoint and defining their strategy.

Remote sensing

An intergovernmental meeting to draw up a constitution for the African Remote Sensing Council was held at Nairobi, Kenya, in January 1977, and a meeting of donor countries interested in the project took place at Kinshasa in February; participants from outside the region included Canada, France and the United States.

The Conference of Ministers of ECA, meeting at Kinshasa in February/March 1977, approved the establishment of two regional receiving and processing stations in Kinshasa and Ouagadougou, Upper Volta, and, in due course, an additional station. It also approved the setting up of five regional training and user-assistance centres in Kinshasa, Nairobi, Ouagadougou, Cairo (Egypt) and Ile-Ife (Nigeria).

In order to implement the remote sensing programme for Africa, a technical committee consisting of representatives of the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), the Governments of Canada, France and the Upper Volta and ECA drew up a detailed programme of work for the implementation of the Ouagadougou training and user-assistance centre, as well as the receiving station. Agreement was reached on modalities for implementation of the Ouagadougou complex.

Detailed consultations also took place with a view to establishing a training and user-assistance centre in Nairobi. By July, agreement had been reached and USAID agreed to fund the centre's start-up.

Mineral resources

Advisory services were given to a number of member States concerning mineral resources development. Two missions were sent to Dar es Salaam and Dodoma (United Republic of Tanzania) to discuss setting up an east African mineral resources development centre. The inaugural meeting of its Governing Council took place at Dar es Salaam in September, followed by the meeting of potential donors to the centre.

A study on the present status and main trends in the development of mineral resources in west Africa was issued at the end of the year. A seminar and study tour in the USSR for African geologists, on new exploration methods, took place at Tashkent from 16 August to 3 September, with representatives from 19 African States and five non-African countries.

Energy resources

An inventory of African energy resources as a whole was initiated in 1977 and data were collected, with a view to preparing an atlas of African energy resources. The Commission took an active part in meetings concerned with the interconnexion of electrical grids in western and central Africa and in the MULPOC inaugural meeting at Gisenyi. A regional adviser on solar energy was recruited, a solar energy library was established and a five-year project on the promotion of solar energy in Africa was prepared. Also, assistance in the development of solar energy was given to Liberia, the Sudan and the United Republic of Cameroon.

Cartography

The second meeting of the Council of the ECA-initiated African Association of Cartography was held in November 1977 at Algiers, Algeria. A ceremony was held for the first graduates of the Regional Centre for Training in Aerial Surveys at Ile-Ife. The fourth meeting of the Governing Council of the Regional Centre for Services in Surveying and Mapping was held at Nairobi in December 1977; ECA continued to assist the Centre to secure bilateral assistance for equipment and to encourage more East African countries to become members.

The Commission continued its cartographic inventory of Africa, including aerial photography, topography, geodesy and geophysical surveys. The inventory, financed by Canada, was to be published in a series of indexed maps of the continent, thus identifying the cartographic work that remained to be done.

Environment

A regional seminar on the human environment, attended by 15 countries, was organized at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in January 1977. Specific recommendations were made, to be carried out jointly by ECA and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). In February, at a joint programming meeting, it was decided to establish an environmental co-ordination unit of ECA, financed by UNEP. The Commission participated in the United Nations Conference on Desertification in August/September 1977 at Nairobi. During the last quarter of the year, a study tour visited countries in western and northern Africa, where the workings of existing environmental machinery were observed.

Science and technology

The ECA secretariat participated in activities which led to the convening of a meeting of plenipotentiaries at Kaduna in November 1977 on the establishment of an African regional technology centre. It also participated in regional preparations for the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development.

Following consultations between ECA and the International Development Research Centre on technology policy instruments, a joint workshop on the subject, attended by seven English-speaking African countries, was convened at Kericho, Kenya, in December.

The fourth meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development in Africa was held in January 1977 and the African Regional Group of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development met at Addis Ababa in October. A constitution for the African Regional Organization for Standardization was provisionally signed by 17 African countries.

Economic research and planning

The Survey of Economic and Social Conditions in Africa, 1976-1977 was completed for publication. Part I covered the international economic situation, the search for a new international economic order, economic developments in the ECA region, and education and employment. Part II analysed socio-economic developments in the independent developing countries of Africa.

On the projections and strategy for a Third United Nations Development Decade, an analysis was made of trends since 1960 and a paper reviewing progress studies was published in 1977.

A study on the growth and structure of financial institutions in a number of African countries was also completed. A continuous in-depth study of the development problems of the least developed African countries was under way.

Human settlements

At its 1977 session, the Commission established a regional intergovernmental committee on human settlements with co-ordinating responsibility.

Advisory assistance to Governments in the development of housing co-operatives was continued and a seminar was held at Maseru, Lesotho, for the eastern and southern African countries.

Work continued to implement the joint ECA/UNIDO/OAU construction and building materials industries development programme. A team of three African experts visited eight countries; their report, including a work plan up to 1980, was adopted by the fourth Conference of African Ministers of Industry at Kaduna in November 1977.

Population

During 1977, ECA completed a number of micro- and macro-case studies on the inter-relationships between population growth and social and economic development, and papers on migration, mortality, fertility and demographic policies in Africa. Assistance in analysing census and survey data was given to several countries. The provisional results of the Mali population census of December 1976 were published early in 1977. Major demographic field surveys were made to provide data for planning the new capital of Nigeria.

The Commission also participated in conferences on population matters held at Cairo, Geneva, Lagos (Nigeria), Alexandria (Egypt), Amman (Jordan) and Accra (Ghana) and in Mauritius and Mexico. Two United Nations Fund for Population Activities missions to Liberia and Senegal assessed the basic demographic needs of those countries.

Lectures on statistics and sampling were delivered at the Regional Training Institute for Population Studies at Accra, and on demography at the East African Statistical Training Centre at Dar es Salaam. Information activities continued with the publication of two issues of the African Population Newsletter. The African Directory of Demographers and a manual on demographic concepts and definitions relevant to the African region were in preparation.

Social development

Meetings, workshops and seminars were conducted by the ECA secretariat in various African centres with the aim of enhancing rural development and improving work performance in rural socio-economic activities. Studies on national youth service schemes and their impact on development, and on family welfare services in Africa were completed.

A regional conference was held in Mauritania in September 1977 to review progress on implementation of national, regional and world plans of action for the integration of women in development.

The secretariat participated in an appraisal mission of the problems raised by the influx of South African student refugees into Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland. It also co-operated with OAU and the All-Africa Conference of Churches in refugee matters.

Statistics

In 1977, ECA devoted its statistical resources to two main activities: the development of national data-gathering services, and the development of a data bank and regional statistical publishing service. Efforts were concentrated on the African Household Survey Capability Programme, designed to create statistical survey capabilities in the countries of the region, and on the Statistical Training Programme for Africa. In addition, advisory services were provided to various countries of the region in the fields of national accounts, population statistics and electronic data-processing.

Transport, communications and tourism

Meetings of the Committee of Experts and the Ministers of Transport of the Central African Subregion were held in March 1977 at Ndjamena, Chad, to consider and adopt the draft constitution of the Central Transport Coordinating Council.

The fifth meeting of the Port Management Association of Eastern Africa was held at Tamatave, Madagascar, in July to consider technical reports on port administration in the subregion.

With regard to the Trans-African Highways Programme, Belgium and Japan accepted ECAS request to finance engineering studies of two sections of the Mombasa (Kenya)-to-Lagos highway in Zaire. The Commission continued its effort to mobilize financial and technical assistance for completion of the major trans-African highways; it co-operated with the Governments of France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom to organize the Pan-African Conference on Highway Maintenance and Rehabilitation, held in November at Accra.

Efforts were continued by ECA, the African Development Bank, OAU and the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), as the Coordinating Committee for the Implementation of the Pan-African Telecommunication Network, to organize funding of the remaining portion of stage I of the network, as well as of the feasibility study on stage II, which comprised about 16,000 kilometres of route links to the main network. The Pan-African Telecommunication Union was established with headquarters in Kinshasa.

In tourism, technical assistance was given to three countries: the Congo—administrative organization, introduction of tourism statistics and legal regulation of tourism activities; Seychelles—tourism development policies; and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya—organization of professional training for the hotel industry. Also, studies of social costs and benefits of tourism were carried out for several African countries.

Decisions by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly

On 25 July 1977, the Economic and Social Council noted with satisfaction the annual report of ECA for the period 1 March 1976 to 3 March 1977, its recommendations, resolutions and work programme. Decision 249(LXIII) was adopted without a vote, on the proposal of the Council President.

On the same day, the Council decided to amend ECAS terms of reference to add Angola and Seychelles to the list of member countries, by adopting resolution 2091(LXIII). The draft resolution, as proposed by the Council President, was adopted without objection. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa

On 29 July 1977, the Economic and Social Council approved the text of a resolution for adoption by the General Assembly which would have the Assembly endorse ECAS proclamation of a Transport and Communications Decade in Africa during 1978-1988.

This action was embodied in Council resolution 2097(LXIII), adopted by 40 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. It was sponsored by Yugoslavia, on behalf of the Council members belonging to the "Group of 77." (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted without vote the recommended text as its resolution 32/160. The text, orally amended by Jamaica on behalf of States Members belonging to the Group of 77, was approved without a vote by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 30 November.

By this resolution, the Assembly proclaimed a Transport and Communications Decade in Africa during the years 1978-1988, with a view to giving active support to a global strategy for the development of transport and communications in Africa. It requested the Secretary-General to help in the preparation of a detailed plan of action for the Decade and to co-ordinate mobilization of the required technical and financial resources. It also asked him to propose, in consultation with ITU, one year as a World Communications Year and to submit a detailed programme for that Year to the Economic and Social Council. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

African Institute for Economic Development and Planning

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly noted a report of the Secretary-General and the observations of the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions concerning the statute of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning and requested the Economic and Social Council to return the statute to the Conference of Ministers of ECA for certain revisions. This action was taken by decision 32/428 B, adopted without objection. The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee had approved the text without vote on 15 December 1977, on an oral suggestion by its Chairman.

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 on the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 on the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic cooperation, and in particular the need to narrow the gap between the industrialized and the developing countries,

Recognizing the urgent need to improve substantially the transport and communications infrastructure in Africa in particular,

Noting with satisfaction the initiative of the Organization of African Unity and the Economic Commission for Africa in the establishment of an integrated African road network and the rationalization of Africa's railway systems and other transport systems in order to facilitate the promotion of multinational economic co-operation in Africa, intra-African trade and the political, social and economic integration of Africa,

Commending resolution 291 (XIII) of the Economic Commission for Africa entitled "Transport and Communications Decade in Africa," adopted at its thirteenth session (fourth meeting of the Conference of Ministers) (E/5941, part III),

Noting section III, subsection D, of the annex to the report of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation (E/L.1774) on infrastructure, and in particular paragraph 8 of that subsection dealing with Africa,

Convinced that effective support is required from the international community in order to promote the principle of collective self-reliance for the purpose of solving African problems in these sectors,

Convinced further of the need to adopt an integrated approach in the formulation of a global strategy for the development of transport and communications in Africa, taking into account all the problems facing the continent in this field,

Noting further with appreciation the progress made in the development of a Pan-African telecommunication network, which is jointly sponsored by the Organization of African Unity, the International Telecommunication Union and the Economic Commission for Africa,

Welcoming the continuing interest of the specialized agencies in the application of communications technologies and services, in particular that of the International Telecommunication Union, which, as the lead agency, has the responsibility for the regulation, co-ordination and harmonization of activities in this field,

1. Endorses the recommendation made in paragraph 1 of resolution 291 (XIII) of the Economic Commission for Africa adopted at its thirteenth session (fourth meeting of the Conference of Ministers) and proclaims a Transport and Communications Decade in Africa during the years 1978-1988, with a view to:

(a) Giving active support to the preparation and implementation of a global strategy for the development of transport and communications in Africa, for the purpose of solving the problems of the continent in this field;

(b) Mobilizing the technical and financial resources required for this purpose;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the executive heads of the agencies concerned, to provide all possible assistance to the African States in the preparation of a detailed plan of action for the Decade and to co-ordinate the mobilization of the necessary technical and financial resources required to make the Decade a success;

3. Calls upon all Member States, in particular the developed countries and others in a position to do so, to participate effectively in the implementation of programmes for achieving the objectives of the Decade;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Telecommunication Union and other specialized agencies concerned, to propose for consideration, as appropriate, one year during the Decade as a World Communications Year, in view of the importance of transport and communications to other regions of the world, and to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session containing a detailed programme of measures and activities to be carried out during such a Year;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session, a detailed progress report on the implementation of the present resolution, and to submit thereafter annual progress reports.

Resolution 32/160, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.3 and Add.3/Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and in particular the need to narrow the gap between the industrialized and the developing countries,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2097 (LXIII) of 29 July 1977 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Recognizing the urgent need to improve substantially the transport and communications infrastructure in Africa in particular,

Noting with satisfaction the initiative of the Organization of African Unity and the Economic Commission for Africa in the establishment of an integrated African road network and the rationalization of Africa's railway systems and other transport systems in order to facilitate the promotion of multinational economic co-operation in Africa, intra-African trade and the political, social and economic integration of Africa,

Commending resolution 291 (XIII) entitled "Transport and Communications Decade in Africa" adopted on 26 February 1977 by the Economic Commission for Africa at its thirteenth session and fourth meeting of the Conference of Ministers,

Noting section III D of the annex to the report of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation on infrastructure, in particular paragraph 8 thereof dealing with Africa,

Convinced that effective support is required from the international community in order to promote the principle of collective self-reliance for the purpose of solving African problems in these sectors,

Convinced further of the need to adopt an integrated approach in the formulation of a global strategy for the development of transport and communications in Africa, taking into account all the problems facing the continent in this field,

Noting with appreciation the progress made in the development of a pan-African telecommunication network, which is jointly sponsored by the Organization of African Unity, the International Telecommunication Union and the Economic Commission for Africa,

Welcoming the continuing interest of the specialized agencies in the application of communications technologies and services, in particular that of the International Telecommunication Union, which, as the lead agency, has the responsibility for the regulation, co-ordination and harmonization of activities in this field,

1. Endorses the recommendation made in paragraph 1 of resolution 291 (XIII) of the Economic Commission for Africa and proclaims a Transport and Communications Decade in Africa during the years 1978-1988, with a view to:

(a) Giving active support to the preparation and implementation of a global strategy for the development of transport and communications in Africa, for the purpose of solving the problems of the continent in this field;

(b) Mobilizing the technical and financial resources required for this purpose;

2. Decides that, in accordance with its resolution 31/93 of 14 December 1976, the mobilization of the necessary financial and technical resources required to make the Decade a success constitutes a pressing need of an unforeseeable nature;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the executive heads of the agencies concerned, to provide all possible assistance to the African States in the preparation of a detailed plan of action for the Decade and to co-ordinate the mobilization of the necessary technical and financial resources required to make the Decade a success;

4. Calls upon all Member States, in particular the developed countries and others in a position to do so, to participate effectively in the implementation of programmes for achieving the objectives of the Decade;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Telecommunication Union and other specialized agencies concerned, to propose for consideration, as appropriate, one year during the Decade as a World Communications Year, in view of the importance of transport and communications to other regions of the world, and to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session containing a detailed programme of measures and activities to be carried out during such a Year;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session, a detailed progress report on the implementation of the present resolution and to submit thereafter annual progress reports.

The Economic Commission for Western Asia

During 1977, there continued to be interruptions in the work of the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) in consequence of the hostilities in Lebanon. However, the secretariat was able to implement the greater part of its work programme and to meet requests for assistance by member countries. The fourth session of the Commission was held at Amman, Jordan, from 24 to 29 April 1977.

The Commission adopted resolutions requesting the Economic and Social Council to approve the membership applications of Egypt and of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). It approved a programme of action in favour of the least developed countries of the region, dealing particularly with the financing of the United Nations regional project for public finance and administration. It also called for regional co-operation in a number of areas, including water resources development, and assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon.

By other decisions, the Commission approved a programme of work and priorities for 1978-1979, gave priority to the work programme relating to the practices of transnational corporations in the oil industry in the region, and dealt with matters relating to an economic survey of member countries, statistics and data needed for the implementation of the work programme, and the possibility of establishing a Western Asia centre for the transfer and development of technology.

Activities in 1977

Development planning

Work continued on the preparation of studies on long-term trends in and forecasts of economics development in the ECWA region. A series of studies dealt with: development trends and prospects in selected ECWA countries; an evaluation of government budgetary systems and their role in development planning in selected countries of Western Asia; and liberalization of non-tariff barriers.

In support of the region's participation in the multilateral trade negotiations being conducted under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), a regional seminar was held in September in Beirut, Lebanon, in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. Working papers prepared by the ECWA secretariat concerned the generalized system of preferences and ECWA countries, special preferences for ECWA countries and the advantage to ECWA countries of accession to GATT. Work continued on an inventory of trade barriers facing products of export interest to ECWA countries. Also, a project was begun to establish a comprehensive information system on the operations of transnational corporations in the region.

The Regional Project for Public Finance and Administration conducted training programmes, both centrally and country based, for officials at decision-making levels from Democratic Yemen, Oman and Yemen, and project experts made field trips to those countries.

Food and agriculture

Activities under the agriculture programme were concerned, inter alia, with establishment of a reliable data system and improvement of agricultural planning. Planning assistance in the form of studies or critiques was provided for the following projects: the technology of food-crop production in the East Jordan Valley; post-war livestock development in Lebanon; the five-year development plan of Yemen; and the establishment of a livestock research centre for Democratic Yemen.

Activities initiated included: preparation of a project on the development of livestock statistics in Lebanon; agricultural sector studies on Democratic Yemen and Yemen, particularly involving the development of a macro-economic framework and domestic demand projections; and a study on integrated livestock planning in selected countries of the ECWA region.

Additional studies dealt with enhancing food security (food security implications of Arab trade in agricultural commodities and food security planning in the Syrian Arab Republic). The Commission also made a subregional study of agricultural plan harmonization and integration covering Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Industrial development

Projects in the field of industrial development included: the collection of data and information relating to industrial plans, programmes and policies in countries of the ECWA region; identification of areas that had the potential for development on a regional basis of components, parts and equipment for telecommunications; identification of electrical equipment for manufacturing on a regional basis; and identification of construction equipment manufacturing on a regional basis.

Work continued on country papers relating to the chemical industry. Covered was the state of the chemical industry in Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen.

A study was initiated to investigate, analyse and determine the basis for a policy guideline and criteria to be applied in formulating an optimal production and investment strategy for petrochemical industry in the Arab world.

Among the advisory services and assistance extended to countries in the region were the following: establishment of a chemical complex based on Dead Sea brine in Jordan; evaluation of a report on the industrialization prospects of the United Arab Emirates; valorization of dates and the formulation of a vegetable-oil processing plant in Oman; preparation of a questionnaire for use in an industrial census in Lebanon; and assessment of operational problems of Syrian metal industries.

Natural resources, science and technology

A detailed report was prepared on the water demand of each country in the ECWA region by the year 2000 in the municipal, industrial and agricultural sectors, and another on projections of water supply was expected to be completed during 1978. In connexion with a project to study manpower training needs and problems, a preliminary survey was made of existing training facilities and needs.

The first version of a survey pertaining to the development of mineral resources in countries of the ECWA region was completed, and projects were begun to collect and process mineral economic information with regard to supply and demand and to estimate skilled manpower requirements in the mineral resources sector.

Another report completed dealt with medium- and long-term projections of the demand for and supply of energy in the ECWA region.

A report was prepared setting forth basic guidelines for the establishment of a Western Asia centre for the transfer and development of technology. It made recommendations concerning management, staffing, budget, location, functions and services.

A seminar on technology transfer and change in the Arab Middle East was held in Beirut in October 1977. The three main subjects were: the system of science and technology; agriculture and water in the region; and industry and transport. The technical papers and proceedings of the seminar were considered to be a significant addition to the meagre literature of relevance to the region in the field of transfer of technology.

The first regional preparatory meeting for the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development was convened in Beirut in December 1977. The meeting reviewed progress in the preparation of national papers, considered plans for follow-up and agreed on the following five subject areas for the Conference: food and agriculture; transport and communications; natural resources (rational management and utilization, development and conservation, renewable, non-renewable and non-conventional sources of energy); industrialization; and human settlements (health, social services, housing and environment).

Another study made recommendations on the establishment of a regional network of technological information exchange, within the context of an international network.

Population

The work programme in the field of population continued to emphasize data collection and demographic analyses. Among the projects were: a demographic socio-economic survey of nine new towns in Oman; an expert group meeting on a census of the Palestinian Arab people held in Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, in June 1977; an expert group meeting on census techniques held in December and attended by technical representatives of countries of the region; and advisory missions to Jordan, Lebanon, Oman, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen. A major project was undertaken by the Government of Lebanon with the assistance of ECWA to secure urgently needed population and housing information.

Work on the first population country profiles neared completion. These country profiles contained information on population data collection activities, a brief analysis of the most recent population and related socio-economic data available, a general view of prospective trends of population variables, a review of population policies undertaken by the country in question and a bibliography on population research and other relevant publications relating to that country.

A population library and reference centre at Beirut, financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, was expanded during the year both in terms of activities and library resources.

The Population Bulletin of ECWA was redesigned to emphasize its role as the major scientific journal dealing with population questions of the region. Two issues were produced in Arabic and English.

Transport and communications

The development of an integrated transport and communications network in the ECWA region continued, and work was completed in Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

At the request of Yemen, two experts visited the country to advise the Government on a $20 million project for the development of a deep-water port at Mocha.

The Regional Adviser on Transport and Communications advised Bahrain on maintenance and expansion of its public transportation system. Jordan was assisted in two projects: a study of the cost of moving bulk grain from Aqaba to Amman by rail; and proposals for a traffic study for the Amman region. Lebanon received advice on its programme for the rehabilitation and maintenance of highways.

Social development and human settlements

A regional survey on planning for youth was completed, with special reference to national development plans, statistics and machinery. Also, work continued on the collection of quantitative data depicting women's social, educational, legal and employment status in the region. Other reports and studies dealt with social welfare planning and programming in Lebanon, regional facilities and personnel for rehabilitation of the disabled, and popular participation in decision-making in the ECWA countries. A preliminary project was prepared for drug control in Lebanon.

Advisory services were also provided on: establishment and/or improvement of women's organizations in Oman and the United Arab Emirates; establishment of a work plan for a newly created Department of Women's Affairs in Jordan; a pilot programme of community development in Oman; social development planning and social reconstruction in Lebanon; social aspects of integrated rural development projects in Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Jordan, and the Syrian Arab Republic; programmes for youth in Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Qatar and Yemen; and design and implementation of projects for social development and family welfare in Qatar and the Syrian Arab Republic.

An assessment report of the human settlements situation in the region was prepared, as was a study evaluating housing finance in the ECWA region, with particular reference to Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Advisory services were provided to Governments in the field of low-cost urban housing, housing finance institutions, human settlements technology and reconstruction activities in the field of housing, building and planning.

Statistics

Statistical activities included the collection of economic statistics with special emphasis on the preparation and development of national accounts, and collection of prices, index numbers and purchasing-power parity for international comparison.

Assistance was given to Yemen in preparing and publishing in June 1977, jointly with ECWA, the "National accounts of the Yemen Arab Republic for the years 1969/1970-1975/1976."

Also, assistance was given to Jordan in setting up its national accounts within the framework of the new United Nations System of National Accounts.

Substantial assistance was given during the year by the Regional Adviser on National Accounts and Economic Statistics to several regional training institutes and to Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Jordan, Qatar and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The first bulletin of the National Accounts Studies entitled "Economic growth of the ECWA countries throughout the period 1960-1972" was published in May 1977.

Technical co-operation

There was an increase during the year in the technical assistance and supporting services to the countries of the region and to the projects decentralized to ECWA.

The Commission was designated as the executing agency for United Nations Development Programme assistance to the Arab Planning Institute in Kuwait. A number of smaller projects were also assigned to ECWA for execution and management.

Also, during the year there was significant progress in the recruitment of regional advisers and in the provision of their services to the countries of the region.

Decisions by the Economic and Social Council

On 25 July 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 248(LXIII) by which it noted with satisfaction the report of ECWA on its fourth session, the Commission's resolutions relating to its work programme, and the Commission's programme of work. Decision 248(LXIII) was adopted, without objection, on the proposal of the Council President.

On 22 July 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions by which it decided to admit Egypt to membership in ECWA and to amend its terms of reference so as to admit the Palestine Liberation Organization.

These actions were embodied in resolutions 2088(LXIII) (Egypt) and 2089(LXIII) (PLO).

By resolution 2089(LXIII), the Council considered that the full participation of PLO in ECWA would contribute to the purposes and aims of the Commission, and amended the terms of reference of the Commission to provide that its members were to consist of the States Members of the United Nations situated in Western Asia which used to call on services of the United Nations Economic and Social Office in Beirut and of PLO.

Resolution 2088(LXIII) was sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Bangladesh, Greece, Iraq, Malaysia, Mauritania, Pakistan, the Philippines, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uganda, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zaire. It was adopted without vote.

Resolution 2089(LXIII) was sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, Iraq, Kuwait, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mauritania, Pakistan, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uganda, Yemen and Yugoslavia. It was adopted by a roll-call vote of 27 to 11, with 12 abstentions.

(For texts of resolutions and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A number of Council members, including Canada, Ethiopia, Iran, Peru and the Philippines, said that they could not support the resolution on the admission of PLO for legal reasons and reasons of principle, namely that the participation of bodies not States in the work of the regional commissions was counter to the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations concerning participation of States in the United Nations.

Recalling its resolution 2026(LXI) of 4 August 1976, on assistance to the Palestinian people,

Considering that the full participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization in the Economic Commission for Western Asia would contribute to the purposes and aims of the Commission,

Taking into consideration resolution 36(IV) of the Economic Commission for Western Asia,

1. Decides to amend paragraph 2 of the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Western Asia as contained in Council resolution 1818 (LV) of 9 August 1973 to read:

2. The members of the Commission shall consist of the States Members of the United Nations situated in Western Asia which used to call on the services of the United Nations Economic and Social Office in Beirut and of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Future applications for membership by Member States shall be decided on by the Council upon the recommendation of the Commission.

2. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Commission to take the necessary measures for the early implementation of the present resolution.

Long-term trends in economic development of regions

The Secretary-General submitted to the July/August 1977 session of the Economic and Social Council a report on long-term trends in the economic development of the regions of the world, prepared at the request of the General Assembly.³ The first part of the report contained a generalized picture of global economic trends and projections, including a discussion of methodology. It examined actual trends in the past two decades, bearing in mind possible discontinuities in future trends, both in the short-term (the remainder of the 1970s) and in the medium-term outlook for the decade of the 1980s. It also considered the long-term perspective until 2000 in the light of these trends. In conclusion, it stated that the comprehensive analysis within the United Nations of future global and regional economic trends was only in the initial stages and was continuing in the United Nations Secretariat both at Headquarters and in the regional commissions.

Annexed to the report were regional studies on long-term trends and forecasts prepared by regional commissions.

The changing economic structure in relation to growth in the region was described in the study of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE). Aspects included were future growth patterns, technological change and problems of international co-operation of the region. Among other things, the report stated that the ECE region had undergone rapid structural changes over the past 25 years, in particular a marked decrease in employment in agriculture, important compositional shifts within the manufacturing sector, in terms of both output and employment, and a steady rise in output and employment shares of public and private services. It concluded, inter alia, that the unprecedented economic growth of the region would continue in the next generation.

The study by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific analysed recent trends in employment, agriculture, industry, government services and other sectors of the economies of the region, and offered preliminary comment on long-term regional forecasts. It stated that of the 33 developing countries and territories of the region, three of them—Hong Kong, the Republic of Korea and Singapore—probably would not share the fundamental problems of development that would be common to the others in the 1980s. Five others—the centrally planned economies of China, Democratic Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia and Viet Nam—organized their economic and social life in a different manner. The remaining 25 countries had in common the basic problem of development in the 1980s. The report noted the special problems of the five land-locked and 10 island countries of the region. It also noted that in comparison with the 1950s and 1960s, the current development objective of most of the countries of the region was to raise the levels of living of the lower-income groups.

The study of the Economic Commission for Africa examined development trends in the region in the period 1960-1975 and offered a preliminary assessment of long-term prospects and forecasts based on past policies and the current policy mix. It cited a number of salient features of the 1960s and the first half of the 1970s. Income growth in the developing African countries, it said, was substantially affected by the cyclical fluctuations in the economies of member countries of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, their major export market. African developing countries as a whole maintained the long-term trend of about 5 per cent average annual growth of their gross domestic product (GDP). Inflation accelerated substantially in the latter part of the 1960s and first half of the 1970s. A most serious feature, it noted, was slow growth in agricultural production, on which about 80 per cent of the total population depended directly. The report concluded, inter alia, that over-all, on the basis of current and emergent policies, there might be grounds for believing that the GDP growth rate in the 1980s could reach or exceed 6 per cent a year.

The study of the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) was issued as an ECLA document under the title "Long-term trends and projections of Latin American economic development" and was not annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

On 25 July 1977, the Economic and Social Council, with the adoption of resolution 2090(LXIII), noted with satisfaction the Secretary-General's report and recommended that the regional commissions should continue and further expand their studies of long-term economic trends in their respective regions, designed to reach practical conclusions regarding the expansion of economic co-operation both on a regional and on an international scale.

The Council affirmed the need to bear in mind long-term prospects for the economic development of the regions of the world during the elaboration of the new international development strategy. It then asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee for Development Planning, the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the heads of other interested bodies of the United Nations system, to start, on the basis of the regional studies under way, preparations for the elaboration of an over-all socio-economic perspective of the development of the world economy up to the year 2000, with special emphasis on the years up to 1990, taking due account of social and economic factors within development projections, interregional economic relationships and sectoral forecasts and including methodological guidelines appropriate for the further examination of long-term economic trends. The Council asked for a progress report in 1978.

Resolution 2090(LXIII) was adopted, without objection, on the proposal of Algeria, Bangladesh, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Greece, Iraq, Mexico, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Uganda, the USSR, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/57) by which it also noted the Secretary-General's report. It endorsed the resolution adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 25 July and in particular the Council's recommendation that preparations be started for elaborating an over-all socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000. The Assembly reaffirmed the necessity to take into account long-term prospects when elaborating the new international development strategy. The Assembly then decided to consider the matter again at its regular 1979 session.

Resolution 32/57 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 22 November. The sponsors were Bangladesh, Colombia, Cuba, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, India, Iraq, Madagascar, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Surinam, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Uganda and the USSR. Amendments proposed by Mexico were accepted by the sponsors.

Resolution 2090 (LXIII), as proposed by 18 powers, E/L.1780/Rev.1, and as further orally amended by sponsors, adopted without objection by Council on 25 July 1977, meeting 2079.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, General Assembly resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and General Assembly resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation.

Considering that the United Nations activities initiated by General Assembly resolution 3508 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 entitled "Examination of long-term trends in the economic development of the regions of the world" should contribute to providing an adequate basis for international economic negotiations relating to international trade, primary commodity and food problems, industrialization, monetary problems and other issues of primordial importance for economic and social development on the global scale,

1. Notes with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General on long-term trends in the economic development of the various regions of the world and their mutual relationship, prepared in accordance with paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 3508 (XXX);

2. Recommends that the regional commissions should continue and further expand their studies of long-term economic trends in their respective regions, designed to reach practical conclusions regarding the expansion of economic co-operation both on a regional and on an international scale;

3. Affirms the need to bear in mind long-term prospects for the economic development of the regions of the world during the elaboration of the new international development strategy;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee for Development Planning, the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the heads of other interested bodies of the United Nations system, to start, on the basis of the regional studies under way, preparations for the elaboration of an overall socio-economic perspective of the development of the world economy up to the year 2000, with special emphasis on the years up to 1990, taking due account of social and economic factors within development projections, interregional economic relationships and sectoral forecasts and including methodological guidelines appropriate for the further examination of long-term economic trends;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council at its sixty-fifth session a progress report on the action taken to implement the provisions of the present resolution.

A/C.2/32/L.36. Bangladesh, Colombia, Cuba, Egypt, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Greece, India, Iraq, Madagascar, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Surinam, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Uganda, USSR: draft resolution, as orally amended by Mexico and by sponsors, approved without vote by Second Committee on 22 November 1977, meeting 51.

A/32/385. Report of Second Committee.

Resolution 32/57, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/385, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recognizing that the United Nations activities initiated by General Assembly resolution 3508 (XXX) of 15 December 1975, entitled "Examination of long-term trends in the economic development of the regions of the world," to be continued and expanded on the basis of Economic and Social Council resolution 2090 (LXIII) of 25 July 1977, should contribute to the establishment of the new international economic order and, in this context, to the process of international economic negotiations relating, inter alia, to trade, primary commodities, food problems, industrialization, monetary problems and other issues of primordial importance for economic and social development on a global scale,

Bearing in mind that the regional studies involved should be so designed as to reach practical conclusions regarding the expansion of economic co-operation on both a regional and an international scale,

Bearing also in mind the need to study long-term prospects for the social and economic development of the various regions of the world and on a global scale, inter alia, in order to utilize, as appropriate, the results achieved in the work on the new international development strategy,

Noting that studies and projections of long-term trends and their implications for development policies will be considered by the Committee for Development Planning at its fourteenth session,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on long-term trends in the economic development of the various regions of the world and their mutual relationship and studies of the regional commissions annexed thereto, prepared in accordance with paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 3508 (XXX);

2. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 2090 (LXIII), in particular paragraph 4 thereof, which contains the recommendation to start, on the basis of the regional studies under way, preparations for the elaboration of an overall socio-economic perspective of the development of the world economy up to the year 2000, with special emphasis on the years up to 1990 and on the problems of developing countries;

3. Reaffirms the necessity to take into account, as appropriate, regional and global long-term prospects for economic and social development during the preparatory process for, and in the elaboration of, the new international development strategy;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, the progress report referred to in Council resolution 2090 (LXIII);

5. Decides to consider the status of the examination of long-term economic trends at its thirty-fourth session as a separate agenda item;

6. Invites all States, as well as the concerned organizations, organs and bodies within the United Nations system, to reply to requests for information which may be made in the course of the implementation of the present resolution.

Other matters concerning regional economic and social activities

Regional economic co-operation

In a report to the July/August 1977 session of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General described the action taken to strengthen the secretariats of the regional commissions to enable them to promote effectively co-operation among developing countries at the regional and interregional levels. He also described proposals and arrangements for intersecretariat co-operation and for the co-ordination of existing and future activities for the promotion of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. The Secretary-General concluded that these arrangements would eventually require additional resources for the regional commissions.

On 25 July 1977, the Council, with the adoption of decision 251 (LXIII), took note of the report of the Secretary-General. The decision was adopted, without objection, on the proposal of the Council President.

Invitation to the Holy See

At its July/August 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council considered a letter dated 21 June 1977 addressed to the Secretary-General by the Permanent Observer of the Holy See to the United Nations, requesting that the Holy See be invited to attend sessions of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Latin America, the Economic Commission for Western Asia and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific in a consultative capacity.

On 22 July 1977, the Council adopted decision 244 (LXIII), by which it recommended that those commissions invite the Holy See to attend their sessions on a basis similar to that provided for in the relevant terms of reference applicable to States Members of the United Nations not members of the commissions. Decision 244 (LXIII) was adopted, without vote, on the proposal of Argentina, Austria, Colombia, Italy, Japan, Kenya, the Philippines and Togo.

Meetings of Executive Secretaries

Following consideration of the annual report of the Secretary-General on the meetings of the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions, held in January and June/July 1977 at Geneva, the Economic and Social Council, on 25 July 1977, adopted decision 250 (LXIII), taking note of the report. The Council adopted the decision, without objection, on the proposal of its President.

Chapter XVIII

The United Nations Children's Fund

Activities in 1977

The Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) held its annual session between 23 May and 3 June 1977 in Manila, Philippines. The Board reviewed major policies, including priorities in education activities, community involvement in primary health care, assistance to poor urban children, and initial plans for the 1979 International Year of the Child. Preceding its session, a special meeting considered the situation of children in Asia, with emphasis on basic services.

The basic services approach endorsed by the General Assembly in 1976,¹ which emphasized the importance of bringing to the under-served areas of developing countries primary health care, formal and non-formal education, improved nutrition and family food supplies, clean water and sanitation, responsible parenthood, and improvement in the lives of women and girls, was increasingly the focus of UNICEF'S work. Local leadership and community participation, together with linkage to and support from higher levels of Government, were key factors in accomplishing those objectives. This approach was the foundation for various activities on which UNICEF reported to the Board.

The role of UNICEF in aid for primary and non-formal education was the subject of a report to the Board.

The report pointed out that the emphasis of UNICEF assistance was on promoting qualitative improvements in education and helping countries to bring effective education to children who were not receiving it. Aid was provided for curriculum reform, the development of teaching aids and textbooks, teacher training and retraining, and the education of girls. Commitments for education ranged between 20 and 26 per cent of all project commitments; in recent years about one fourth of those commitments had been for non-formal education. Also, UNICEF provided assistance in connexion with reconstruction efforts in primary education in countries affected by wars or natural disasters. Assistance provided by UNICEF amounted to 40 per cent of general multilateral aid in that field and 20 per cent of multilateral plus bilateral aid.

The report concluded that UNICEF co-operation, small as it was in relation to the problem, was filling a major role in a key field of development and was complementing rather than duplicating other aid.

The Board decided that the general lines of UNICEF assistance policy should be maintained for primary education and non-formal education, especially as an eventual component of basic services. It also called for an evaluation of the external aid provided.

The general progress report of the Executive Director of UNICEF to the Board indicated how the guidelines for aid to projects in countries with different levels of resources had been followed from 1972 to 1976. The basic indicator for the amount of aid recommended from general resources had been child population, modified for countries either poorer or better off than those in the middle income range of developing countries.

Classified as Group I were the least developed countries plus several which had recently acquired independence or faced special circumstances requiring greater assistance. Group I also included small countries with a child population under 500,000 which required special consideration. Fifty countries assisted by UNICEF were in Group I. The intention was to give to projects in Group I countries roughly three times the over-all average level of aid of that given to countries in the middle range of development, Group II. For the five-year period, the average annual UNICEF expenditure per child was 20 cents.

Thirty-two countries were in Group II, with projects receiving the "normal" amount of UNICEF assistance. Group III consisted of 18 better-off countries moving towards self-sustaining development, whose need for material UNICEF assistance was diminishing.

It was decided by the Board that the Executive Director would review the matter of increasing the relative amounts going to projects in the poor countries and the amounts going to the various geographic regions, and report again in 1978.

Child health: the primary health-care approach

The Executive Board discussed issues affecting the health of children in developing countries,

taking account of a joint study by UNICEF and the World Health Organization (WHO) on community involvement in primary health care, and a report of the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy, as well as comments on that report by the Executive Director.

Members of the Board expressed their agreement with the views of the Joint Committee on implementing primary health care and encouraged UNICEF and WHO to pursue their efforts to develop primary health care in the context of general development. The Joint Committee report also included a review of current progress and plans to strengthen national actions to improve and extend communicable-disease control, with particular attention to immunization against diseases that commonly affected children.

The Board concluded that UNICEF should consider assistance to communicable-disease control, including the expanded programme of immunization, as one of its main priorities, and that provision of vaccines, drugs and other material assistance should be considered as a long-term commitment, to be phased out only when taken over by permanent sources.

Reaching the children of the urban poor

A review of seven urban projects being assisted was submitted to the Executive Board. It listed some of the instruments that might be used to bring direct benefits to children in shanty towns and slums, including: communication links between the Government and the community so that community needs and Government priorities were interrelated and the communities assured of a part in the development process; women's activities and programmes related to their assumption of non-traditional urban roles, a factor bearing on the well-being of children; and application of appropriate technology for urban areas which could advance community self-help activities.

The report noted that there was reason to doubt whether the main approach for UNICEF assistance should continue to be through special urban projects, and recommended that a clearer picture be drawn of UNICEF assistance benefiting the children of the poor in urban areas, not just assistance through special urban projects.

The Board agreed to the preliminary conclusions and recommendations of the Executive Director and asked him to report further in 1978.

Child nutrition

Expenditures by UNICEF for child nutrition in 1976 totalled $9 million, or 11 per cent of all programme expenditures, but those figures understated UNICEF nutritional aid, since assistance in health, education and social welfare often included support for improved nutrition.

Current UNICEF assistance in child nutrition took a number of forms: strengthening maternal and child health services to deal with nutrition; assistance in the development of national food and nutrition policies to fulfil the special needs of children and of nursing and pregnant mothers; orientation and training at various levels; applied nutrition and nutrition education to promote the production and use by families and communities of foods for better family and child nutrition; development and local production or home preparation of low-cost weaning foods; nutrition rehabilitation schemes for young children who face the greatest risk and children in emergency situations; intervention against nutritional deficiency diseases such as xerophthalmia, anaemias and goitre; and national or area monitoring and forecasting of the food and nutrition situation as it affected children.

Assistance to young children and women

The high priority accorded by UNICEF to the young child was reflected in many of its activities during the year. Direct measures on behalf of the young child included health and medical care, special feeding, immunization and day-care. Indirect measures included projects relating to safe and sufficient water for drinking and household use, improved environmental sanitation, nutrition education and domestic production and use of better foods, the lightening of women's heavy daily work, and programmes in which parents were helped to become more actively involved in the development of the young child.

Assistance was given to increase the mother's capacity to take care of her children, to alleviate her tasks and to augment her educational and income-earning opportunities. It was felt that that, in many instances, provided greater help to the young child than direct services for children. The United Nations Children's Fund continued to provide assistance for the training of women and girls in child care, nutrition, health, home budgeting, cooking, sewing, food production, food preservation and storage. In some countries women were being helped to acquire skills, such as poultry-keeping, bee-keeping and handicrafts, that might increase family income.

As a part of a general effort to improve family living conditions and reduce the work of mothers, some countries were developing village-level methods of food conservation and storage, supply of potable water, environmental sanitation and home improvement. Based on experience in Kenya, the Board approved support for a regional programme in East Africa to disseminate information and practical techniques of village technology to six countries in the region.

UNICEF fund-raising system

A report on the UNICEF fund-raising system was submitted to the Executive Board. It drew attention to an imbalance of response among Government donors and proposed steps to improve fund raising.

The Board decided that on the whole the system had performed satisfactorily, though some improvements could be made to increase general contributions and to facilitate long-term planning.

The Board reaffirmed its conviction that UNICEF should continue to depend for its revenue entirely on voluntary contributions from Governments and the general public and should not seek a system of assessed contributions.

Income and expenditures

Revenue for meeting UNICEF commitments totalled approximately $164 million in 1977. Of that, $127 million was allotted to general programmes and $37 million to specific purposes. The revenue came from the following sources: 71 per cent directly from 133 Governments and territories as regular and specific-purpose contributions; 14 per cent from private sources such as fund-raising campaigns, greeting-card profits and individual donations; 4 per cent from the United Nations system; and 11 per cent from miscellaneous sources.

Donations-in-kind, mainly children's foods, to the value of $33.3 million were also delivered through UNICEF in 1977. Those deliveries, not counted as revenue, consisted of donations by six Governments totalling $3.6 million and by the European Economic Community totalling $29.7 million.

Also not counted as revenue was $18 million handled by UNICEF as funds-in-trust not subject to Board commitments, mainly for reimbursable supply procurement on behalf of Governments, organizations in the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations.

Expenditure against commitments in 1977 amounted to $142 million: $128 million for assistance and $14 million for administrative services. The assistance expenditure comprised $82 million for supplies (including freight), $24 million for non-supply assistance and $22 million for programme support services. Expenditure in 1977 was higher by $29 million, or 25 per cent, than in 1976.

At the 1977 session of the Executive Board, new commitments were approved for $129.4 million and, in addition, commitments entering into effect outside the Board session totalled $146 million. Taking into account expenditure to fulfil commitments and cancellation of commitment, commitments outstanding at the year end were $183 million.

Legislative decisions

International Year of the Child

Following consideration of the International Year of the Child (IYC), the UNICEF Executive Board approved a commitment of $3 million from the general resources of UNICEF to assist developing countries to review and prepare the strengthening and extension of services benefiting children in connexion with the observance of IYC in 1979. It also requested the Economic and Social Council to recommend that the General Assembly hold a special discussion of IYC at its 1978 and 1979 regular sessions to help launch the Year and to mark its close. The Board suggested this might include a review of accomplishments in various countries and commitments for increased external assistance to programmes benefiting children.

On 3 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted, without a vote, resolution 2105 (LXIII) on the International Year of the Child.

By this resolution, the Council expressed appreciation to the UNICEF Executive Board for its commitment of $3 million to assist developing countries with preparatory activities to improve services for children in connexion with their observance of IYC; affirmed the need for intensified national and international action in preparation for the Year; appealed to Governments that had not announced pledges for the cost of the Year to do so; transmitted the report of the Executive Director to the Assembly and recommended that the Assembly devote special discussions to IYC at its 1978 and 1979 sessions.

The draft resolution was amended by Mongolia by the addition of a preambular paragraph that was accepted by the sponsors. The draft was approved by the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee without a vote on 20 July 1977. The sponsors were Afghanistan, Austria, Bangladesh, Colombia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iran, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, the Philippines, Poland, Uganda and the United States.

On 15 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without a vote, resolution 32/109 dealing with the International Year of the Child.

By this action the Assembly commended UNICEF for its preparatory work with regard to IYC, noted the co-ordination being achieved through the use of an interagency advisory group, reaffirmed that the major focus of the Year was at the national level, expressed gratitude to Governments that had contributed to the administrative costs of the Year and appealed to all Governments to contribute.

The Assembly also: requested UNICEF to report to it in 1978 on IYC activities in the United Nations system; stressed the importance of participation of non-governmental organizations and the public at all levels; invited Governments to inform UNICEF on activities undertaken to promote the objectives of the Year; requested the Secretary-General to publicize IYC and its aims and objectives world-wide; decided to consider further the preparations for the Year at its regular 1978 session and to hold a special debate in plenary on the situation of children in the world at its regular 1979 session; and expressed the hope that Governments, non-governmental organizations and the public would respond generously with contributions to attain the objectives of the Year and, through UNICEF and other channels of external aid, substantially to increase resources for services benefiting children.

The text, with a drafting amendment by Yugoslavia, had been approved without a vote by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 16 November 1977, and sponsored by 42 Member States.

Expansion of basic services to children in developing countries

The report of the UNICEF Executive Board on its 1977 session was reviewed by the Economic and Social Council at its July-August 1977 session. On 3 August 1977, the Council noted with appreciation that the basic services approach had become a unifying theme for the Fund's work, and was being increasingly applied in developing countries. Those countries that had not done so were urged to incorporate the concept in their national development plans. The Council also urged developed countries, and others in a position to do so, to increase their voluntary contributions to UNICEF so that it might reach its current target of $200 million in annual revenue from all sources.

These actions were taken by resolution 2109

(LXIII), which was adopted without a vote. The text was approved by consensus by the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee on 1 August 1977. The sponsors were Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Norway, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

(For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Later in the year, the General Assembly adopted another resolution (32/110) relating to UNICEF activities.

By this action the Assembly commended UNICEF's initiative in elaborating and implementing the basic services approach for children as part of a comprehensive development strategy, urged developing countries that had not done so to incorporate that concept in their national development strategies, and appealed to Governments to increase significantly their contributions to UNICEF, if possible on a multiyear basis, so that an equitable sharing of voluntary contributions would be achieved and the $200 million annual-revenue target attained.

The text was approved without a vote by the Second Committee on 1 December 1977. There were 46 sponsors. The Assembly adopted resolution 32/110 without a vote on 15 December. (For text of resolution and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Enlargement of the Executive Board

On 3 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted, without a vote, decision 258 (LXIII) by which it recommended that the General Assembly at its 1977 session consider enlarging the Executive Board of UNICEF. On 1 August the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee had approved without a vote the draft decision, which was sponsored by the States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

The Assembly did not take up the question in 1977.

Pledging conference

The annual pledging conference for UNICEF was held on 3 November 1977. In all, 88 Governments announced pledges or indicated minimum expected pledges for UNICEF's general resources for 1978 totalling $97,938,747. New pledges were also received for specific purposes in the amount of $7.5 million. Due to the timing of budget preparations and approval, a number of Governments could not announce their pledges at the conference.

Resolution 2105 (LXIII), as recommended by Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, E/6036 (part I), adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1977, meeting 2084.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the progress report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund on preparations for the International Year of the Child, 1979, prepared in response to paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 31/169 of 21 December 1976,

Convinced that, with adequate support from Governments and others concerned, the International Year of the Child could make a significant contribution to improving the lot of the children of the world, in particular those in developing countries,

Bearing in mind that the International Year of the Child could further promote the principles in the Declaration of the Rights of the Child adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 1386 (XIV) of 20 November 1959,

Aware that the attainment of the objectives of the International Year of the Child would be further promoted by the establishment of a New International Economic Order, bearing in mind General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States contained in General Assembly resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 and General Assembly resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Noting that the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund has reviewed estimates of costs for the secretariat of the Year and for information activities during the period of approximately three years of preparation for and observance of the Year, to be financed from voluntary contributions of Governments,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund for its commitment of $3 million from the Fund's general resources to assist developing countries with preparatory activities designed to improve services benefiting children in connexion with their observance of the International Year of the Child;

2. Commends the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund for his efforts in the preparatory activities for the Year;

3. Affirms the need for intensified national and international action in preparation for the Year, as well as supporting action at the regional level;

4. Appeals to Governments that have not already announced pledges for the cost of the Year and are in a position to do so to make their pledges as soon as possible;

5. Transmits the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-second session;

6. Recommends that the General Assembly respond favourably to the request of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund contained in the Board's report on its session held from 23 May to 3 June 1977, and cited in paragraph 27 of the report of the Executive Director, to the effect that the General Assembly devote a special discussion to the International Year of the Child at both its thirty-third session in 1978 and its thirty-fourth session in 1979.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 2105 (LXIII) of 3 August 1977,

Recalling its resolution 31/169 of 21 December 1976, in which it proclaimed the year 1979 International Year of the Child, with the following general objectives:

(a) To provide a framework for advocacy on behalf of children and for enhancing the awareness of the special needs of children on the part of decision-makers and the public,

(b) To promote recognition of the fact that programmes for children should be an integral part of economic and social development plans with a view to achieving, in both the long term and the short term, sustained activities for the benefit of children at the national and international levels,

Believing that the concept of basic services for children is a vital component of social and economic development,

Recognizing the fundamental importance in all countries, developing and industrialized, of programmes benefiting children not only for their well-being but also as part of broader efforts to accelerate the economic and social process,

Having considered the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund on the preparations for the International Year of the Child and the level of contributions to the financing of these activities,

1. Commends the Executive Director and staff of the United Nations Children's Fund for the preparatory work which has laid the foundation for a successful International Year of the Child and, in this regard, welcomes the appointment of the Special Representative for the Year;

2. Notes with satisfaction the co-ordination being achieved through the use of the Interagency Advisory Group for the International Year of the Child, composed of representatives of concerned organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations;

3. Reaffirms that the major focus of the International Year of the Child is at the national level, but that this should be supported by regional and international co-operation;

4. Expresses its gratitude to Governments that have contributed thus far to the administrative costs of the International Year of the Child and appeals to all Governments to contribute to its financing;

5. Requests all United Nations bodies concerned, including the specialized agencies, to keep the United Nations Children's Fund informed of their respective programmes for the International Year of the Child and, in this regard, requests the Fund, as the lead agency, to prepare a report for the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the activities being undertaken in the United Nations system;

6. Stresses the importance of the active participation of non-governmental organizations and the public, at both the international and national levels, in support of the International Year of the Child;

7. Invites Governments to inform the United Nations Children's Fund on activities undertaken in their country to promote the objectives of the International Year of the Child;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations Children's Fund, to publicize the International Year of the Child and its aims and objectives in both developing and developed countries;

9. Decides to consider further the preparations for the International Year of the Child at its thirty-third session and to observe the Year by holding a special debate in plenary meeting on the situation of children in the world at its thirty-fourth session;

10. Expresses the hope that Governments, non-governmental organizations and the public will respond generously with contributions to attain the objectives of the International Year of the Child and, through the United Nations Children's Fund and other channels of external aid, to increase substantially the resources available for services benefiting children.

Resolution 2109(LXIII), as recommended by Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, E/6039, adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1977, meeting 2084.

The Economic and Social Council,
Having considered the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund on its session held at Manila from 23 May to 3 June 1977,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 31/167 of 21 December 1976, which, inter alia, recognizes that the provision of basic services for children constitutes an important aspect in the development process, and expresses the conviction that the basic services concept and strategy provide guidelines for future action by the United Nations Children's Fund which are equally appropriate for adoption by other agencies and authorities concerned with the promotion of programmes for human development in developing countries,

Noting with appreciation that the basic services approach has become a unifying theme for the Fund's work, without more traditional assistance programmes being neglected, and that the Executive Board is giving close attention to the action required in the implementation of that approach through its consideration of such subjects as community involvement in primary health care,

Noting with approval the other actions of the Executive Board as recorded in its report, especially its careful review of the programmes assisted by the Fund and its assessment of steps taken to improve continually the management of the Fund, including appropriate co-ordination with other organizations of the United Nations system concerned,

1. Notes with satisfaction that the basic services concept and approach is being increasingly applied to varying degrees in a number of developing countries and urges those that have not already done so to incorporate, as appropriate, this concept and approach in their national development plans and strategies;

2. Urges developed countries and others in a position to do so to increase their voluntary contributions to the United Nations Children's Fund, so that it may reach the current target of $200 million in annual revenue from all sources as soon as possible, and in this connexion draws attention to the Pledging Conference for the Fund scheduled for 3 November 1977;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of the Philippines for its generous hospitality in serving as host to the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund at its session in May/June 1977.

Resolution 32/110, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/444, adopted without vote by Assembly on 15 December 1977, meeting 103.

The General Assembly,
Noting Economic and Social Council resolution 2109 (LXIII) of 3 August 1977,

Having considered the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund on its session held at Manila from 23 May to 3 June 1977,

Deeply concerned about the magnitude of the unmet needs of children in developing countries and the effects that a failure to meet these needs could have on the long-term development process,

Believing therefore that meeting these needs should be taken fully into consideration in the drafting of a new international development strategy,

Believing moreover that the basic services approach, as elaborated by the United Nations Children's Fund, deserves full support because it contributes to the meeting of essential human needs,

Recognizing the need for all Governments, especially those that are not contributing to the United Nations Children's Fund in relation to their financial capacity, to increase their contributions as soon as possible,

1. Commends the United Nations Children's Fund for its initiative in regard to the elaboration and implementation of the basic services approach for children as part of a comprehensive development strategy;

2. Urges developing countries that have not already done so to incorporate, as appropriate, this concept and approach in their national development plans and strategies;

3. Appeals with a sense of urgency to Governments to increase significantly their contributions, if possible on a multiyear basis, to the United Nations Children's Fund, so that an equitable sharing of voluntary contributions will be achieved and that the target of $200 million in annual revenue from all sources will be attained as soon as possible, and not later than 1979, the International Year of the Child.

Assistance to refugeesActivities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

In 1977, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) was required to expand its traditional tasks of providing international protection and material assistance to refugees, while at the same time pursuing special humanitarian assignments and initiating new ones for the benefit of displaced persons.

Activities in 1977International protection

The High Commissioner was faced in 1977 with responsibility for an increased flow of refugees, particularly in Africa and Asia.

He also continued promoting accessions to international legal instruments affecting refugees, notably the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol. In 1977, the number of parties to the 1951 Convention rose from 68 to 72, and the number of parties to the 1967 Protocol rose from 63 to 67. Accessions to the 1969 Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa drawn up by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) remained unchanged at 18.

An important development was the adoption by the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts (Geneva, 17 March to 10 June 1977) of Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949. This Protocol related to the protection of victims of international armed conflicts and included provisions of benefit to refugees and stateless persons.

Though a number of countries throughout the world admitted thousands of asylum-seekers, the grant of asylum continued to be problematical. In some places refugees were denied asylum and in others they were admitted only temporarily.

The problem of persons leaving the Indo-Chinese peninsula in small boats and seeking asylum remained acute. As at 31 March 1978, the total number of such refugees known to UNHCR was nearly 27,000, of whom some 25,000 were resettled or accepted for resettlement. The High Commissioner, jointly with the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, issued an appeal aimed at ensuring that ships' masters observed scrupulously their obligations regarding rescue at sea. The High Commissioner also continued appealing to competent authorities to permit the temporary landing of rescued persons.

The fundamental principles of asylum and non-refoulement (expulsion of or refusal of entry to aliens) were emphasized at the twenty-eighth (October 1977) session of the UNHCR Executive Committee and by the General Assembly at its 1977 session.

Measures to ensure the physical protection of refugees were again required in some countries. While this was primarily the responsibility of the Governments of the countries of residence, UNHCR was nevertheless called upon to investigate and intervene with national authorities in cases, for instance, where refugees were in physical danger or in prolonged detention.

During 1977, procedures for the determination of refugee status in accordance with the definition contained in the 1951 Convention and the 1957 Protocol were established by the authorities of Australia, Canada, Djibouti and Greece. Other countries were considering the matter. The Office of the High Commissioner continued to advise Governments on the issuance to refugees of travel and identity documents.

Efforts aimed at the reunification of refugee families were pursued, either by helping relatives of refugees to receive authorization to leave their country of origin, or by helping them to leave the country of asylum and gain admission to a country of resettlement.

Efforts by UNHCR under the 1951 Convention to promote the economic and social rights of refugees led to an improvement in their position in certain countries. The Office also continued to promote naturalization, as provided for under the 1951 Convention, notably in Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany and Spain.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany continued its co-operation with UNHCR in providing compensation payments to refugees persecuted under the National Socialist regime on account of their nationality. The Government of Uganda began a 10-year programme of payments to Ugandan Asians outside Uganda to compensate for their loss of assets.

Material assistance to refugees

Despite the fact that some special programmes could be phased out in 1977, the over-all assistance activity of UNHCR had to be considerably expanded once again to meet increased requirements, particularly in Africa and Asia. The general programmes accounted for a total expenditure of $23.6 million and the special programmes a total of $87.3 million, for an over-all expenditure of nearly $111 million as compared with some $90 million in 1976. The general programmes comprised the former annual programme and the High Commissioner's Emergency Fund, while the special programmes covered UNHCR'S special operations of humanitarian assistance and all other trust funds, including the Refugee Education Account.

As in the past, Governments, particularly those of countries where assistance projects were carried out, contributed in varying degrees to refugees; UNHCR also continued to benefit from the active co-operation and support of other United Nations agencies and programmes as well as of other governmental and non-governmental agencies.

The main permanent solutions for refugees remained voluntary repatriation, resettlement through migration and settlement in the country of asylum. However, relief assistance, particularly under special programmes, represented a major component of assistance programmes and absorbed a sizable share of funds.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN AFRICA

At the end of 1977 there were some 1.5 million refugees of concern to UNHCR in Africa. Of an additional 1.8 million displaced persons in 1977, many had returned to their homes by the end of the year. The general programme had to be expanded in the course of the year as a result of major developments, including in particular: the arrival in various countries in southern Africa of South African refugee students following the Soweto (South Africa) riots in 1976; growing numbers of refugees from Namibia, and a major influx from Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe), mainly into Mozambique; a large flow of Zairian refugees into eastern Angola; and increased numbers of refugees from Ethiopia, notably into Djibouti.

Other sizable groups of refugees to whom UNHCR continued to provide assistance were Angolan refugees in Zaire, Ethiopians in the Sudan and refugees from Burundi in the United Republic of Tanzania. Assistance was also given in Botswana, Egypt, Ethiopia, Kenya, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia, and in a number of other countries, mostly in western Africa.

Under its special programmes of humanitarian aid, UNHCR continued its assistance to Sahrawis in Algeria, with expenditures totalling over $1,274,500 supplemented by donations of food from governmental and non-governmental sources valued at $864,770. On the other hand, it was possible to phase out the $12.1 million United Nations programme of humanitarian assistance to Angola and UNHCR'S special programmes in Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique, with the return to their homes and rehabilitation of former refugees and persons displaced inside these countries.

Part of UNHCR'S assistance to refugees from colonial territories was channelled through national liberation movements recognized by OAU.

Local settlement, mainly rural and aimed at allowing people to become self-supporting within the local community, continued to be the main solution for the majority of refugees. New rural settlements came into being, existing settlements were improved and one was handed over to national authorities. In addition, counselling and educational services were required on a larger scale in order to deal with urban refugees and with the influx of refugee students.

For assistance in Africa under the general programmes in 1977, UNHCR provided over $13 million, of which nearly $10 million was for local settlement, mainly in agriculture. Under the special programmes $22.5 million was provided. This amount included the $13.3 million made available to Angola and to the Sahrawis in Algeria.

Nearly $2 million was provided in Mozambique for the special programme for the repatriation and resettlement of returning refugees. Some $1.6 million for higher secondary and further educational assistance was provided from the Refugee Education Account. From the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, $170,000 was provided for assistance to individual refugees of South African origin.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN THE AMERICAS

Over-all UNHCR expenditure in Latin America in 1977 amounted to some $5.3 million, of which more than $3 million was for supplementary assistance and over $1 million for resettlement through migration.

Of the 80,000 or so refugees of European origin and some 29,000 of Latin American origin, the latter group continued to require the greater attention, the majority in Argentina. The total number of refugees of Latin American origin, of whom a considerable proportion were Chileans, remained more or less constant in 1977 since resettlement to other parts of the world was offset by new arrivals. Resettlement through migration remained the only possible solution in very many cases, followed by local settlement where feasible. Interim temporary assistance measures figured prominently, as did legal counselling and assistance in education.

In 1977, 4,292 refugees and dependants of refugee heads of family abroad were resettled in other countries. At the end of the year some 5,000 refugees were still awaiting a resettlement opportunity.

In Canada and the United States, UNHCR was concerned, inter alia, with the promotion of resettlement. By the end of 1977, Canada had admitted almost 7,000 persons since 1975 and the United States some 31,500, mainly displaced persons from Indo-China, but also small groups of Lebanese and refugees from the Caribbean and Latin America.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN ASIA AND WESTERN ASIA

In 1977, UNHCR'S activities in Asia continued to centre on special operations on behalf of the large and increasing number of displaced persons in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon and Viet Nam and for the growing number of Indo-Chinese displaced persons in Thailand and other countries in South-East Asia. Resettlement in third countries was the most suitable long-term solution for the latter, and during 1977 some 25,000 displaced persons from Indo-China were resettled in various countries, mainly France and the United States. By 31 March 1978, however, 106,300 such persons in various countries still awaited permanent solutions.

In the Lao People's Democratic Republic, UNHCR continued the programme begun in 1974 of assistance for rehabilitating displaced population. The programme involved transportation by road, river or air and initial installation assistance. Of some 121,000 persons who returned to their villages in 1977, some 105,000 received assistance from UNHCR. To meet immediate needs, household equipment, tools and food were distributed. Plans for longer-term rehabilitation were under preparation. Expenditure by UNHCR in 1977 totalled $1,532,000, including as major items $675,000 for transportation to the villages and provision of resettlement kits, and $405,000 for emergency food supplies.

In Thailand, the number of displaced persons from the Indo-Chinese peninsula stood at 97,600 at 31 December 1977: nearly 79,000 were from the Lao People's Democratic Republic, 15,000 from Democratic Kampuchea and 3,600 from Viet Nam. During the year UNHCR assisted the departure of 14,021 such persons to countries of resettlement. Assistance activities, based on an agreement with the Government of Thailand, were directed towards care and maintenance of the existing case-load, the immediate needs of new arrivals and measures to facilitate the resettlement of those wishing to emigrate to third countries.

In view of the large numbers involved, arrangements were made to accommodate the displaced persons in Thailand in temporary relief centres constructed in various provinces on sites chosen by the Thai Government. Preparations were also made for the implementation of several self-help projects. Expenditure under UNHCR'S special programme in Thailand totalled nearly $9,084,000 in 1977, of which some $5,360,000 was for care and maintenance and nearly $2.9 million for assistance towards resettlement.

Under the special programme in Viet Nam in 1977, assistance was mainly for consolidating earlier rehabilitation efforts, in consultation with the national authorities. This included agricultural machinery, establishment of a buffalo breeding farm, continued assistance in poultry breeding and assistance to the fishing community. In addition to regular aid, emergency supplies of food, clothing, shelter material and medical equipment were required. Total expenditure in Viet Nam came to nearly $3,475,000, including $1,415,000 for assistance in rehabilitation of displaced fishermen, $590,300 for agricultural assistance and $500,000 for constructing and equipping hospitals and dispensaries.

Special assistance activities by UNHCR in Lebanon in 1977, undertaken within the framework of a programme of United Nations assistance, were again directed to bringing essential relief assistance, particularly in the first months of the year. Needs at that time were mainly for domestic utensils, blankets, tarpaulins, tents and medical supplies.

This emergency phase ended in mid-1977, when UNHCR appealed to Governments for contributions towards a programme for the return of the displaced persons and their rehabilitation in their own villages. In consultation with the Lebanese Government, 25 villages were selected to form part of the rehabilitation programme, its principal objectives being to provide shelter, reinforce village infrastructure in such sectors as health, water supply and education, and encourage resumption of economic and social activities.

As with the emergency phase, UNHCR'S rehabilitation programme came within the wider framework of United Nations assistance in Lebanon. It thus benefited from the co-operation of the United Nations Children's Fund, concerned with water supply and school equipment, of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for the provision of fertilizers needed to restore agricultural production, and of the World Food Programme (WFP), which implemented a number of "food-for-work" projects linked to the reconstruction of housing and restoration of public utilities.

Major financial commitments of UNHCR under its special humanitarian action in Lebanon in 1977 were approximately $642,000 for emergency needs, $185,000 for initial measures connected with the return and rehabilitation programme and some $145,000 for transport.

Activities in Lebanon under UNHCR'S general programmes were again affected by events in the area, which impeded local settlement or resettlement elsewhere of refugees in Lebanon. Efforts in 1977 were thus essentially directed to re-establishing effective counselling services and to providing immediate assistance as required.

Under its special programmes in Asia, UNHCR'S expenditure in 1977 totalled nearly $18,560,000, while expenditure under the general programmes totalled some $1,148,000.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN EUROPE

As in past years, UNHCR'S assistance to refugees in Europe was of a marginal nature, since these refugees were greatly assisted by national Governments and by non-governmental organizations.

European refugees continued to seek and receive asylum in various countries, while non-European refugees, mainly from Indo-China, Latin America and Africa, were accepted for permanent settlement by many European countries.

Indo-Chinese displaced persons constituted the largest group settling in Europe in 1977, and France alone continued to admit approximately 1,000 of these persons each month. In addition, nearly 1,000 refugees from Latin America were admitted for permanent settlement throughout Europe, mainly in Austria, Belgium, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom.

Facilities were provided for the reception and transit of refugees, for settlement, vocational training and counselling. Some individual financial assistance was provided, notably to refugees in Greece, Italy, Spain and Turkey.

A UNHCR branch office was opened in Portugal to help displaced persons from former Portuguese territories and other groups.

A total of $1,822,000 was expended by UNHCR in various European countries (excluding Cyprus) in 1977 under the general programmes.

At the request of the United Nations Secretary-General, the High Commissioner continued throughout 1977 to act as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus, a function he had performed since August 1974, following the events of that summer on the island. This assistance was required to bring continued help to persons who were still displaced and in need, including some 155,500 Greek Cypriots, 37,250 Turkish Cypriots and 700 Maronite Cypriots.

With the continued help of the World Health Organization, WFP and the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, substantial supplies of food and medical consignments were made available throughout the island. Further measures were also taken to reactivate farms, small businesses and local crafts, and to promote a number of low-cost housing projects to replace temporary accommodations. Groups such as the very young, the handicapped and the old, requiring specific forms of assistance, once more received the special attention of the Co-ordinator. (See also p. 368.)

Legislative action

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council, on the proposal of its President, transmitted (by decision 276(LXIII)) to the General Assembly the annual report of UNHCR covering the period 1 April 1976 to 31 March 1977. Mauritania reserved its position on several paragraphs of the report relating to assistance activities in Africa.

On 29 July 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions on assistance to Mozambique (2094(LXIII)), to Botswana (2095(LXIII)) and to Lesotho (2096(LXIII)). Recognizing the plight of the refugees and the additional burden imposed upon those countries by the continuing refugee influx, the Council, inter alia, requested the High Commissioner to strengthen further his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees and urged the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out these programmes.

The General Assembly, on 13 December 1977, also adopted resolutions calling for assistance to Mozambique (32/95), Botswana (32/97) and Lesotho (32/98), and by each resolution requested UNHCR to strengthen humanitarian programmes to these States and urged the international community to provide the High Commissioner with the necessary means. (For texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly, after considering the report of UNHCR, adopted resolution 32/67 without vote.

By this resolution, the Assembly expressed deep satisfaction at the efficient manner in which the High Commissioner and his staff continued to accomplish their humanitarian tasks and requested him to continue to provide assistance to refugees and displaced persons.

The Assembly asked United Nations agencies and programmes to support, and urged Governments to co-operate with, the High Commissioner in promoting permanent and speedy solutions through voluntary repatriation and assistance in rehabilitation of returnees, integration in countries of asylum or resettlement in other countries.

Governments were also urged to facilitate the High Commissioner's efforts in the field of international protection through accessions to and effective implementation of international and regional instruments relating to refugees, by following humanitarian principles in granting asylum and by ensuring that they were scrupulously observed.

Finally, the Assembly called upon Governments to contribute generously to the financing of the High Commissioner's activities.

On 16 November 1977, the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee had approved without vote the text of the resolution, which was sponsored by 51 Members.

(For list of sponsors and text of resolution 32/67, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In a further action on 8 December, the General Assembly recalled that it had decided to review in 1977 whether or not UNHCR should be continued beyond 1978.¹ Considering the outstanding work of UNHCR in providing international protection and material assistance to refugees and displaced persons, in promoting permanent solutions to their problems, and in dealing effectively with various humanitarian tasks, the Assembly decided to continue UNHCR for a further five years from 1 January 1979. It would review, no later than at its regular 1982 session, the arrangements for the Office to determine whether it should be continued beyond 31 December 1983.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/68, adopted without vote on the basis of a 51-power text approved without vote by the Assembly's Third Committee on 16 November 1977. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Also on 8 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 32/69, by which it noted with regret that the High Commissioner, Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, would shortly be relinquishing his duties, and expressed appreciation for the effective and dedicated manner in which he had performed his functions. On 16 November, the Third Committee had approved the text by acclamation; it was sponsored by 67 Members. (For text of resolution and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

At the same meeting (by decision 32/314), the Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, elected Poul Hartling as High Commissioner for a five-year term beginning on 1 January 1978.

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly also adopted without vote resolution 32/70, by which it commended the assistance programmes to refugees in southern Africa already being implemented by the High Commissioner, urged Governments to provide him with the necessary facilities to assist those refugees and requested United Nations agencies and non-governmental and voluntary organizations to extend to him maximum support. Finally, the Assembly requested the High Commissioner to continue to co-operate with OAU and to keep it informed of UNHCR activities.

The draft text of this resolution, sponsored by 45 Members, was approved without vote by the Third Committee on 16 November 1977. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Conference on territorial asylum

Pursuant to a resolution adopted by the General Assembly on 9 December 1975,² a Conference of Plenipotentiaries was convened by the Secretary-General in Geneva from 10 January to 4 February 1977 to consider and adopt a convention on territorial asylum. Articles were provisionally adopted on the granting of asylum, on definition of categories of persons to whom the convention should apply, on non-refoulement, and on the activities of refugees in the country of asylum. However, the Conference was unable to agree upon a convention in the time allotted, and in its report recommended that the General Assembly convene another session.

During the discussion in the Assembly, it was noted that the High Commissioner was continuing to consult with Governments on the question. The Chairman of the Third Committee proposed that the High Commissioner keep the Secretary-General informed of progress in consultations with Governments so that at its next session the Assembly might have more information available to it to decide the appropriate time to reconvene the Conference. On 16 November 1977, it was decided without objection that since the Committee was not seized with a proposed resolution or decision, this summation would appear in the Third Committee's report.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office and having heard his statement,

Recalling its resolution 31/35 of 30 November 1976 and taking into account the additional responsibilities assumed by the High Commissioner in different parts of the world for the benefit of an increasing number of refugees and displaced persons,

Recognizing the eminently humanitarian character of the various activities of the High Commissioner and the importance of permanent solutions being promoted by his Office, including voluntary repatriation, local integration or resettlement in other countries,

Concerned by infringements of the basic human rights of refugees and the urgent need on the part of Governments to ensure their effective and continued protection,

Recognizing the need for further accessions to and effective implementation by Governments of the relevant international instruments, including in particular the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

Commending the increasing number of Governments contributing to the High Commissioner's programmes and emphasizing the need for a wider sharing of the financial burden to provide the vital humanitarian assistance required by refugees and displaced persons,

1. Expresses its deep satisfaction at the efficient manner in which the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his staff continue to accomplish their humanitarian tasks;

2. Requests the High Commissioner to continue to provide humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons of concern to his Office, including those in urgent need of help in Africa, Asia and Latin America;

3. Further requests United Nations agencies and programmes to render the fullest possible support to the High Commissioner's humanitarian tasks;

4. Urges Governments to extend the necessary co-operation to the High Commissioner in promoting permanent and speedy solutions to the problems facing his Office through voluntary repatriation and assistance in rehabilitation of returnees, integration in countries of asylum or resettlement in other countries as needed;

5. Further urges Governments to facilitate the efforts of the High Commissioner in the field of international protection, inter alia:

(a) By considering accession to the relevant international and regional instruments established for the benefit of refugees;

(b) By elaborating appropriate procedures at the national level for the effective implementation of the provisions of these instruments;

(c) By following humanitarian principles with respect to the granting of asylum and ensuring that these are scrupulously observed, including the principle of non-refoulement of refugees;

6. Calls upon Governments to contribute generously towards the financing of the High Commissioner's humanitarian activities in view of the universal character of the problems facing his Office and the need for a wider financial support of the programmes being undertaken by him.

Resolution 32/68, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/352, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2957 (XXVII) of 12 December 1972, in which it decided to review, not later than at its thirty-second session, the arrangements for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with a view to determining whether the Office should be continued beyond 31 December 1978,

Recognizing the need for concerted international action on behalf of the increasing numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner,

Considering the outstanding work which has been performed by the Office of the High Commissioner in providing international protection and material assistance to refugees and displaced persons as well as in promoting permanent solutions to their problems,

Noting with deep appreciation the effective manner in which the Office of the High Commissioner has been dealing with various essential humanitarian tasks entrusted to it,

1. Decides to continue the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for a further period of five years from 1 January 1979;

2. Decides to review, not later than at its thirty-seventh session, the arrangements for the Office of the High Commissioner with a view to determining whether the Office should be continued beyond 31 December 1983.

The General Assembly,

Noting with deep regret that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees will shortly be relinquishing his duties,

Recognizing the progress achieved under his guidance in promoting humanitarian solutions to the problems of refugees and displaced persons in various parts of the world,

Considering his unrelenting efforts to alleviate human suffering through the special humanitarian tasks entrusted to him in addition to the original functions of his Office,

1. Expresses its sincere appreciation and thanks to Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan for the effective and dedicated manner in which he has performed his functions as United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Extends its good wishes to him for success in his future undertakings.

Resolution 32/70, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/352, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Noting the information provided by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the assistance activities of his Office on behalf of refugees in southern Africa,

Noting with deep concern the increasing number of refugees from Namibia, South Africa and Zimbabwe and recognizing the burden thus imposed upon the receiving countries,

Noting the continuing efforts of the High Commissioner to extend adequate assistance to these refugees, particularly in neighbouring African States,

Recognizing the close co-operation existing between the Organization of African Unity and the High Commissioner,

1. Commends the programmes of assistance already being implemented by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and requests him further to strengthen measures for the benefit of refugees in southern Africa;

2. Urges Governments to contribute generously towards the programmes of the High Commissioner and to provide him with the necessary facilities required to assist the refugees in southern Africa, inter alia by providing opportunities for local settlement, education and vocational training;

3. Requests United Nations agencies and programmes, non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to extend maximum support to the High Commissioner in his efforts;

4. Requests the High Commissioner to continue his co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and to keep it currently informed of these assistance activities.

Chapter XX

International drug control

The year 1977 was marked by a growth of interest in the drug problem by Governments. International co-operation was considerably strengthened, with increasing numbers of seizures and larger amounts seized in the fight against illicit drug traffic. Also, more and improved measures were taken to reduce both supply and demand for illicit drugs.

The first measures were taken during the year to implement the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, which had come into force on 16 August 1976. The abuse of psychotropic substances, constantly growing, was causing problems of equally great concern as the abuse of the traditional narcotic drugs.

Implementation of drug control treaties

Ratifications, accessions, acceptances and successions

During 1977, seven nations became parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances—Costa Rica, Greece, Guyana, Monaco, Pakistan, Senegal and Zaire—bringing the total to 48 parties.

Mexico, Peru and Spain became parties to the 1972 Protocol amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961. At the end of 1977, parties to the Single Convention, 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol, totalled 59 (the total included countries which had already been parties to the unamended Single Convention and, by adherence to the 1972 Protocol, had also become parties to the amended Single Convention). The total number of parties to the unamended Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, was 109 at the end of 1977.

In view of the fact that adherence by States to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances lagged far behind adherence to the treaties concerned with the control of narcotic drugs, the General Assembly, by resolution 32/126 adopted on 16 December 1977, reiterated its appeal to all States not parties to the 1971 Convention to take steps to accede to it. (See also section below on DRUG ABUSE AND MEASURES TO REDUCE ILLICIT DEMAND.)

Reports of Governments

In 1977, Governments submitted to the Secretary-General 124 annual reports for 1976 on the work and the implementation of international treaties on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, in accordance with the requirements of international drug-control treaties. One hundred and forty-two national legislative texts on narcotics communicated to the Secretary-General were published in 1977.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

During its twenty-seventh session, held from 7 to 25 February 1977 in Geneva, Switzerland, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered in detail the world situation with regard to drug abuse and measures to reduce illicit demand. It reviewed the illicit drug traffic and action taken against it, including the work of its Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East and of the Third Meeting of Operational Heads of National Narcotics Law Enforcement Agencies, Far East Region.

It also considered matters related to the submission of annual reports by Governments, the action of international organs and organizations and the problem of co-ordination, the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1976, and scientific narcotics research, including a report on the work of the United Nations Narcotics Laboratory and collaborating national institutions and scientists.

Special attention was devoted by the Commission to problems related to maintaining the supply of legal opiates. The Commission studied at length measures to implement the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances. The Commission also considered the work of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC) and the operations financed by it.

When the Economic and Social Council discussed the allocation of resources for international drug control at its April-May 1977 session, it had before it a draft text prepared by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs by which the Council would, among other things, request the Secretary-General, in preparing the next biennial budget and medium-term plans, to give above-average priority to international drug control programmes and to ensure that the necessary resources were allocated under the United Nations regular budget to the relevant Secretariat units to deal with the increased workload.

When this text was discussed in the Council's Social Committee, the USSR proposed an amendment to delete reference to ensuring that resources were allocated from the budget. The amendment was defeated by 19 votes to 8, with 10 abstentions. The text as a whole was then approved by 38 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, on 3 May 1977.

At a Council plenary meeting, Greece, after consultations, proposed an amendment deleting the operative paragraph assigning above-average priority to drug control programmes and substituting a recommendation for the allocation of necessary resources from the United Nations regular budget. Accepting this amendment, the Council adopted the text without a vote on 13 May 1977 as its resolution 2081 (LXII). It thereby recalled discussions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on adequate priority for narcotics control, observed that previous arguments for this priority were still valid, particularly in view of the recent entry into force of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances; and recommended that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the General Assembly ensure that the necessary resources were allocated for international drug control under the United Nations regular budget, bearing in mind the importance of the programme.

By another action (decision 224(LXII)) on 13 May 1977, the Council, without a vote, took note of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. The Social Committee, on the proposal of its Chairman, had approved the decision without a vote on 3 May 1977. By the same decision, the Council elected to defer consideration of a proposal by the Commission to schedule certain regional drug-control meetings for its Sub-Commission and operational heads of narcotics law enforcement agencies.

International Narcotics Control Board

During 1977, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) met in Geneva, from 12 to 27 May and from 12 October to 4 November. Its annual report to the Economic and Social Council for 1976 reviewed the development of international drug control since 1968, when it had succeeded the Permanent Central Board and the Drug Supervisory Body. The Board gave special attention in its report to more than 15 countries where control problems associated with drug abuse, illicit traffic or the uncontrolled or illicit production of narcotic raw materials were the most serious.

During 1977, the Board reviewed the current world situation, noting major problems with abuse of four groups of substances: opiates, cannabis, cocaine and psychotropics.

On 13 May 1977, the Council adopted without vote resolution 2068(LXII) by which it inter alia expressed appreciation to the members of the Board for their distinguished service in international drug control, commended the Board for its comprehensive and valuable 1976 report, and recommended that all Member States give it urgent attention. The draft resolution had been approved without a vote by the Social Committee on 3 May 1977. It was sponsored by the United Kingdom.

Drug abuse and measures to reduce illicit demand

Reviewing the extent of drug abuse and its main trends, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its February 1977 session noted that heroin addiction showed a continuing upward trend. There was an over-all widespread abuse of cannabis with a considerable number of cannabis offences reported and growing amounts of liquid cannabis seized. Cocaine was increasingly abused, mainly in the Americas and Europe; a worldwide increase was also noted in the abuse of psychotropic substances, mostly sedative hypnotics and amphetamines. Methaqualone, amphetamines and hallucinogens were predominantly abused by young people. Multiple drug abuse was emerging as the most common pattern of drug-taking, but traditional use of opium, cannabis and coca leaves persisted in a number of countries. The Commission reviewed a preliminary report of the Secretariat on a study of measures to reduce illicit demand and approved a draft resolution thereon for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

Among the activities undertaken in 1977 were pilot studies on drug abuse assessment carried out in collaboration with Governments of several countries, co-operation with specialized agencies, in the execution of demand-reduction programmes in a number of developing countries, and analysis of the extent, patterns and trends of drug abuse by regions of the world and the characteristics of national programmes aimed at reducing illicit demand.

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council expressed satisfaction that the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other specialized agencies had co-operated in preparing the report of the Director of the Division of Narcotic Drugs on the study of measures to reduce illicit demand for drugs, and recommended its publication, as well as continuation of the study with financial aid from the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control.

This action was taken with the adoption of resolution 2064(LXII), by 42 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. The draft resolution had been recommended by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and approved by the Council's Social Committee on 3 May 1977 by 30 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions.

Also on 13 May 1977, the Council invited the Secretary-General to ensure that the specialized bodies and agencies of the United Nations devoted special attention and priority to combating drug abuse in Africa, particularly south of the Sahara, and requested him to report on this to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 1979.

This action was taken by resolution 2065(LXII), adopted by 41 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. The resolution had been submitted by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, and approved by the Social Committee on 3 May 1977 by 35 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions.

Later in the year, the General Assembly by its resolution 32/124 invited UNFDAC to initiate, in collaboration with WHO and other United Nations bodies, action to design models for prevention, treatment and rehabilitation of drug abusers, and to study the feasibility of establishing treatment and rehabilitation centres to care for and to train personnel in this field.

These actions were taken on 16 December 1977, by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 11 abstentions. The resolution had been approved by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 8 December 1977, by a vote of 106 to 0, with 9 abstentions. The sponsors were Austria, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ghana, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Singapore, Spain, Thailand and the United States.

(See also section below on CO-ORDINATION OF AID TO AREAS OF ILLICIT PRODUCTION.)

Also on 16 December, the Assembly inter alia invited Governments to take measures against drug abuse, including early prevention of drug addiction, health education programmes, provision of treatment, and rehabilitation programmes. It asked them to evaluate drug programmes and intensify research into causes of drug abuse. It called for greater co-operation of Governments and United Nations bodies in programmes for reducing illicit drugs demand and for exchanging information. It urged Governments to inform the United Nations about the extent, patterns and new trends in drug abuse and about programmes to reduce illicit demand. The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the specialized agencies, to strengthen facilities to assist Governments in reducing such demand. (See also section below on ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN DRUGS.)

These actions were taken in adopting resolution 32/126, by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 11 abstentions. The resolution was approved by the Third Committee on 7 December 1977 by 118 votes to 0, with 15 abstentions. The sponsors were France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden and Thailand.

Illicit traffic in drugs

During its February 1977 session, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs reviewed the illicit drug traffic situation for 1975 and 1976 and noted some marked fluctuations in the quantities of drugs reported seized. In 1975, heroin seizures throughout the world increased by 44 per cent, thanks to greater operational co-operation on regional and interregional levels. During 1976, the flow of heroin into Europe, principally from South-East Asia, continued to increase, with seizures 130 per cent above those for 1975. The cocaine problem remained centred in the Americas. Many regions continued to face substantial traffic in cannabis, cannabis resin and liquid cannabis, and a greater weight of psychotropic substances was seized. There was also an increase in diversions from licit channels by way of theft and forgery of prescriptions.

The main routes from producing to consuming areas remained substantially unchanged in 1975 with, however, more devious routes being taken by many illicit couriers in order to avoid enforcement measures. The age group 15 to 25 years predominated in reports on persons implicated in drug offences. A substantial drop in opium seizures in Asia and the Far East and noticeable heroin trafficking from Asia indicated that more heroin was being manufactured near the centres of illicit opium production.

At the same time, the Commission noted the improved measures taken by many Governments to counter the illicit drug traffic and noted the fruitful regional, interregional and international co-operation emerging in many parts of the world.

Acting on this matter, the General Assembly, by its resolution 32/126 of 16 December 1977 (see above), urged Governments to strengthen their narcotics agencies, improve the exchange of narcotics information with other countries, and co-operate with international narcotics-control bodies. It asked those bodies to assist Governments in all possible ways.

Co-ordination of aid to areas of illicit production

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs noted with satisfaction the positive results obtained in projects supported by UNFDAC in areas faced with illicit production of narcotic raw materials, such as Afghanistan, Pakistan and Thailand, and confirmed its view that the Fund should continue to serve as a catalyst, emphasizing the pilot nature of those projects which, if successful, should be taken over by Governments and their results applied on a wider scale, with the technical and financial backing of the international community.

Subsequently, the Economic and Social Council, on 3 May 1977, adopted resolution 2066(LXII), by which it urged Governments concerned with crop replacement projects in areas of illicit production of narcotic raw materials to include such projects in development programmes when seeking international aid. It also urged Governments, organizations and international institutions to give special attention to such projects, and asked the Secretary-General to transmit the resolution to all concerned.

The resolution was adopted by 44 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. It had been recommended by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and was approved by the Social Committee on 3 May 1977 by 36 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions.

In a related action, the Council, recalling a Commission recommendation which urged restriction of cultivation of the poppy, and endorsing that recommendation, requested the Secretary-General to publicize the Commission's consideration of the subject and asked Member States to comment on the issue. This action was set forth in resolution 2067(LXII), adopted by 45 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, on 13 May 1977. The resolution was approved by the Social Committee on 3 May by a vote of 36 to 0, with 5 abstentions. It was sponsored by Canada, Mexico, Norway and Yugoslavia.

(For text of resolutions, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By its resolution 32/124 of 16 December 1977 (see above), the General Assembly also acted on this matter. It invited all bodies engaged in development assistance to support UNFDAC projects to substitute legal crops for crops of narcotic materials.

The Assembly also invited Governments seeking international aid to include such projects in their development programmes.

Scientific research

The United Nations Narcotics Laboratory continued in 1977 to focus its attention on isolating and determining the components of khat (Catha edulis Forsk) and on methods of identifying narcotic and psychotropic substances. In October, a meeting of experts was convened by the Laboratory in Hong Kong to discuss the feasibility of using chemical characteristics of heroin to identify its sources and to track its movement. The Laboratory also continued to co-ordinate research on the chemical composition of cannabis smoke.

Considerable progress was made in studies designed to maximize the yield of phenanthrene alkaloids (for codeine) per unit of cultivated area. Training in methods for the identification and analysis of drugs was provided at the Laboratory for fellowship holders from Antigua, India, Iran, Nepal, Pakistan, Thailand and Turkey. With the assistance of UNFDAC, laboratory equipment, chemicals and technical literature were provided for national laboratories in areas affected by illicit traffic.

United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control

Contributions to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in 1977 amounted to $7.5 million, bringing the total since UNFDAC was established in 1971 to $30.5 million contributed by 74 Governments. This financing was adequate to meet projected expenditure for 1978.

In addition to the continuation of existing programmes and projects, a programme agreement was concluded with the Lao People's Democratic Republic. Consultations on possible assistance were held with the Governments of Nepal and Tunisia. Technical assistance missions were undertaken, with Fund support, in Malaysia and in three countries of Africa south of the Sahara.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/125, by which it endorsed Economic and Social Council resolution 2066 (LXII) of 13 May 1977 (see above) on co-ordination of aid in areas of illicit production of narcotic raw materials, reiterated its appeal to Governments for sustained contributions to UNFDAC by giving due consideration to the economic and social development provided by drug control programmes financed by the Fund, and urged international organizations and institutions to co-operate with the United Nations by financially supporting drug control programmes which included sectors dealing with the economic and social development of the areas covered by those programmes.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 11 abstentions. The text was approved by the Third Committee on 7 December 1977 by 115 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. It was sponsored by Australia, Bolivia, Canada, Ghana, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Sweden, Thailand and the United States. Resolution 2064 (LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5966, adopted by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2059, by 42 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Director of the Division of Narcotic Drugs on the study of measures to reduce illicit demand for drugs, of which the Commission on Narcotic Drugs took note at its twenty-seventh session,

Considering that efforts to combat addiction to the narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances covered by the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, and by the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, call for an attack on the problem at the three levels of demand, supply and illicit traffic,

Being of the opinion that the solutions to the problem of reducing demand are multiple, interdisciplinary and, very often, still at an experimental stage,

Convinced that progress can be achieved only through international and interagency co-operation at all levels,

1. Expresses satisfaction at the fact that the specialized agencies, in particular the World Health Organization, the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, have co-operated in the preparatory work for the report of the Director of the Division of Narcotic Drugs on the study of measures to reduce illicit demand for drugs;

2. Recommends that the Secretary-General should publish the report of the Director of the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the papers referred to in paragraph 4 thereof, and should continue that study on the same lines as hitherto, in co-operation with the World Health Organization and the other specialized agencies concerned and with the financial assistance of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control;

3. Recommends also that the publication envisaged in paragraph 2 above should include an introduction outlining the reservations of a technical nature which emerged from the statements of some delegations at the twenty-seventh session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

E/5933, Chapter I A. Draft resolution III, as recommended by Commission for adoption by Economic and Social Council, approved by Social Committee on 3 May 1977, meeting 808, by 35 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions.

Resolution 2065 (LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5966, adopted by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2059, by 41 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution II adopted by the United Nations Conference to consider amendments to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, in which the Conference states that the fulfilment by the developing countries of their obligations under the Convention will be facilitated by adequate technical and financial assistance from the international community,

Recognizing that many African countries, particularly those south of the Sahara, lack the resources to enable them to fulfil their obligations under the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, and under the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances,

Taking note of the efforts so far made by certain specialized bodies of the United Nations to prevent and combat drug abuse in some African Countries,

Noting that despite these efforts the actual situation in the field with regard to drug abuse is beginning to show undeniable signs of gravity,

1. Invites the Secretary-General to ensure that the various specialized bodies of the United Nations and the specialized agencies shall devote special attention to the African countries, particularly those south of the Sahara, and assign to them some measure of priority in their programmes designed to combat narcotic drug abuse, particularly in such fields as epidemiological and sociological surveys, technical assistance, personnel training, regional seminars, regional co-operation, treatment, social rehabilitation and reintegration, information and education and crop replacement;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its twenty-eighth session on the measures taken or planned.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 2064 (LXII), 2065 (LXII) and 2066 (LXII) of 13 May 1977, and other resolutions on the dangers of drug abuse,

Acknowledging articles 38 and 38 bis of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961,

Recognizing the growing threat caused by the spread of drug abuse in many parts of the world, the impact of this situation on social and economic development, agriculture and many other areas, and the resultant increase in crime and corruption,

Aware that drug abuse has serious adverse effects on the quality of life of individuals and upon the societies in which they live,

Concerned by the fact that drug trafficking exploits every individual with which it comes in contact,

Realizing that the concerted effort of States is required in dealing with this problem, and that the international effort in this respect should be strengthened,

Noting that agencies of the United Nations system are addressing attention through various programmes to the reduction of drug supply and demand,

Bearing in mind that the initial purpose of the introduction of drugs into society was to improve the health and well-being of individuals,

Recognizing the urgent need to make individuals and Governments more aware of the dangers of drug abuse and the need for increased attention to the field of prevention, treatment and rehabilitation,

1. Invites the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to initiate, in collaboration with the World Health Organization and other appropriate agencies and bodies of the United Nations, actions to design models for prevention, treatment and rehabilitation, taking into account the diversity of cultures in which drug abuse exists, for the purpose of identifying and demonstrating the best techniques for assisting drug abusers in order to facilitate the work of national authorities in reducing drug abuse;

2. Further invites the above-mentioned organizations to study the feasibility of establishing treatment and rehabilitation centres to care for individuals suffering from addiction and abuse and to train persons to apply the best methodologies in this field;

3. Invites the United Nations Development Programme and other appropriate agencies and bodies of the United Nations, as well as international or multilateral financial institutions engaged in development assistance, to co-operate with and assist the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, in accordance with requests by Governments, in the commissioning of pilot projects aimed at providing farmers who had relied on growing narcotic raw materials as their principal source of income with other ways and means of income in areas where the illicit cultivation and production of narcotic raw materials shall gradually be eradicated in accordance with the decisions of the Governments concerned;

4. Invites Governments to consider including projects designed to promote economic alternatives for farmers and others who are dependent on illicit production of narcotic substances, as additional and integrated components in their economic development programmes when applying for technical and financial assistance from multilateral institutions;

5. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to study at its next session the possibility of launching a meaningful programme of international drug abuse control strategy and policies, including the possibility of integrating therein existing policies or envisaged development assistance programmes;

6. Suggests that the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fourth session give special consideration to all problems related to drug abuse.

Abstaining: Bulgaria, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

The General Assembly,

Recalling relevant articles of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, as well as of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolutions 1932 (LVIII) and 1934 (LVIII) of 6 May 1975, 2002 (LX) of 12 May 1976, 2064 (LXII), 2067 (LXII) and 2081 (LXII) of 13 May 1977, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recognizing the serious health, social and economic problems caused by drug abuse,

Noting with satisfaction the considerable results achieved by national law enforcement agencies, by increasing regional and interregional collaboration and in co-operation with the competent international organizations and bodies, in intercepting more and more the actual movement of drug contraband,

Noting with great concern that the continuing international illicit traffic in both narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances causes the death of many human beings or severely infringes upon their health and thus is detrimental to many societies,

Convinced that measures to reduce illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including prevention, treatment and rehabilitation, must be taken concurrently with measures to reduce illicit supply of, and illicit traffic in, drugs,

Convinced also that intensified and co-ordinated efforts by all competent agencies and organizations concerned with the fight against illicit drug traffic, at the national, regional and international levels, could bring about better results in the interception of such traffic,

1. Urges every Government to intensify its efforts in that respect by strengthening and co-ordinating its law enforcement agencies responsible for intercepting the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, by providing them with the best and most expeditious ways and means of exchange of relevant operational information with the respective authorities of other countries and by co-operating to the fullest extent possible with the international organizations working in this field, in order to achieve the best possible results and to avoid waste of time and manpower;

2. Calls upon those international organizations and bodies, such as INTERPOL, the International Criminal Police Organization, and the Customs Co-operation Council, to assist, in all possible ways and in the most co-ordinated manner avoiding duplication, the respective law enforcement agencies of all Governments, in particular by providing them with all available operational information related to the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

3. Invites Governments to take all appropriate measures against drug abuse, including in particular the early prevention of drug addiction and health education programmes, as well as to provide facilities for treatment and rehabilitation of persons addicted to drugs;

4. Invites Governments to carry out evaluation of their drug prevention programmes in order to assess their efficiency as well as to expand and intensify research in the fields of epidemiology and knowledge of causes and motives of drug abuse with regard to both pharmacological and sociological aspects;

5. Calls for more extensive and effective co-operation of Governments and competent bodies of the United Nations and specialized agencies in order to facilitate appropriate designing and implementation of programmes aimed at reducing illicit demand for drugs and at furthering exchange of experience and information among scientists and experts from various nations who are actively engaged in this field;

6. Reiterates its appeal to all States not yet parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances to take steps to accede to it and requests the Secretary-General to transmit this appeal to all Governments concerned;

7. Urges Governments to provide, in addition to the data already furnished in their annual reports to the Secretary-General, other relevant information on the extent, patterns and any new trends in the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as well as information on programmes undertaken to reduce illicit demand for drugs;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen and expand to the extent possible, in co-operation with the specialized agencies, the facilities available to provide Governments which request its assistance in their work to reduce illicit demand for drugs.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling paragraph 4 of its resolution 1559 (XLIX) of 11 November 1970,

Recognizing the importance of economic and social measures in the struggle against drug abuse,

Convinced that projects concerned with providing farmers and others dependent on the illicit cultivation of narcotic plants with alternative economic and social opportunities can make, as part of a national development programme including control measures, an important contribution to the progressive elimination of such dependence and can help to meet countries' own economic and social needs, as well as the world demand for food,

Convinced that narcotics-related projects, including projects developed on a pilot basis and aimed at replacing such illicit cultivation of raw materials by alternative economic opportunities, if acceptable on their economic merit to the multilateral institutions, could generate supplementary assistance for national economic and social development programmes of the Governments concerned and help to meet obligations under the international drug control treaties,

1. Urges the Governments concerned with crop replacement projects to take into account the strong desirability of including such projects as referred to above as additional and integrated components in their development programmes when applying for technical or financial assistance or both from multilateral institutions for the realization of those projects;

2. Invites all Governments, the competent United Nations organs and organizations, the specialized agencies and other international or multilateral financial institutions, when considering applications for development assistance from Governments concerned in the progressive elimination of such illicit cultivation, to give special attention, to the extent feasible, to such programmes and projects;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Governments, to the executive heads of the United Nations bodies and agencies concerned, including the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Food Programme, the World Bank and other international or multilateral financial institutions engaged in development assistance.

Recalling recommendation 1 (XXVII) on restriction of the cultivation of the poppy, adopted by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its twenty-seventh session,

1. Endorses recommendation 1 (XXVII) of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to all Governments the opinions and proposals submitted during the debate on these issues at the twenty-seventh session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the sixty-second session of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Invites Member States to submit, through the Secretary-General, comments on this issue to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its twenty-eighth session and to the International Narcotics Control Board.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier appeals for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in resolutions 3012 (XXVII) and 3014 (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3146 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3278 (XXIX) of 10 December 1974 and 3446 (XXX) of 9 December 1975, as well as similar appeals by the Economic and Social Council in resolutions 1664 (LII) of 1 June 1972, 1937 (LVIII) of 5 May 1975 and 2004 (LX) of 12 May 1976,

Noting with interest Economic and Social Council resolutions 2066 (LXII) of 13 May 1977 on the co-ordination of technical and financial assistance in areas of illicit production of narcotic raw materials and 2067 (LXII) of 13 May 1977 on the restriction of cultivation of the poppy,

Realizing that many programmes of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control aiming at the reduction of illicit cultivation and production of narcotic raw materials require, to a large extent, socio-economic development action as a condition for and a complement of their primary drug control aspects, and help Governments assisted by such programmes, in particular by multi-sectoral country programmes, in the economic and social development of the geographical areas concerned,

Convinced that such drug control-related programmes, which contribute to the general economic and social development of the areas covered by them, merit support from Governments and international or multilateral organizations and institutions concerned with providing economic and social development aid,

1. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 2066 (LXII) on the co-ordination of technical and financial assistance in areas of illicit production of narcotic raw materials;

2. Reiterates its appeal to Governments for sustained contributions to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control by giving due consideration to the economic and social development provided in drug control programmes financed by the Fund;

3. Urges all international or multilateral organizations and institutions concerned with providing economic and social development aid to co-operate with the United Nations by supporting financially the implementation of such drug control programmes which include sectors dealing with the economic and social development of the areas covered by those programmes;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments and of international or multilateral organizations and institutions concerned with providing economic and social development aid and to invite them to co-operate in its best possible implementation.

Chapter XXI

United Nations disaster reliefAssistance activities in 1977*Aid to Sudano-Sahelian populations

During 1977, the United Nations Sahelian Office (UNSO), an organization within the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), implemented priority projects and continued planning and resource mobilization for the medium-term and long-term rehabilitation and development programmes of the eight drought-stricken Sudano-Sahelian countries: Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta.

Since its organization in 1974, UNSO has maintained close working relationships, through its field office at Ouagadougou, Upper Volta, with these drought-stricken countries and their regional organization, the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, in order to support their efforts to achieve three main objectives: to mitigate the effects of future drought; to achieve self-sufficiency in food staples; and to accelerate socio-economic development.

The United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities provided $44 million in 1977 for priority projects, carried out by specialized agencies of the United Nations under the supervision of UNDP, namely: to complete feasibility studies for construction and maintenance of 3,200 kilometres of feeder roads in the Sahel; to initiate construction of feeder roads in Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, the Niger and the Upper Volta and to prepare for road building in Mauritania and Senegal; to strengthen regional agro-meteorological and hydrological services; to study telecommunications and radio for rural development; to convene a seminar on forest development; to plan a regional inventory of water points and earth dams; to study herd reconstitution in the Kanem area in Chad; to plan development of the Sahel's continental fishery resources; to plan grain storage, including silo construction, in Mauritania; to equip and operate 36 existing deep-bore wells in Mauritania in co-operation with the African Development Bank; to finance a phase of a water-control plan in northern Senegal; to continue work on an underground water supply project in Cape Verde; to increase the supply of improved seeds for food crops; and to construct water points for livestock in the Gambia.

In addition to these activities through the Trust Fund, UNSO consulted with the Permanent Inter-State Committee, the Office for Special Relief Operations of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the World Food Programme and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator about providing food and agricultural aid to Cape Verde, the Gambia and Senegal. Harvest prospects were monitored in Mauritania, parts of Mali, and the Upper Volta.

The activities of UNSO were reported by the Secretary-General to the Governing Council of UNDP at its June/July 1977 session and later in the year to the Economic and Social Council.

On 3 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council noted with appreciation UNSO's role in helping to combat the effects of drought and in mobilizing resources and implementing the Permanent Committee's recovery programme, and expressed appreciation for the method of work adopted by UNSO. The Council also expressed its gratitude to contributors to that Committee's programme, and urged them to continue to contribute. It asked Governments, especially those of developed countries, to give financial and technical support to efforts to move relief materials from the port of Douala, United Republic of Cameroon, to the drought area. In addition, the Council requested UNSO to continue its close co-operation with the Permanent Committee, and its co-ordination efforts between United Nations programmes and bodies in the implementation of medium- and long-term assistance programmes.

The Council's decisions were embodied in resolution 2103(LXIII), which was adopted without vote. The draft resolution was approved without vote by the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee on 26 July 1977. Sponsors were Canada, France, Mauritania, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Senegal, Tunisia and Uganda.

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly urged Governments, United Nations agencies and intergovernmental organizations to respond immediately to a new drought emergency in the Sahel, and requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of FAO to apply the experience gained in relief operations in continuing to produce forecasts, and to provide adequate assistance to overcome problems of supply, storage and distribution. It also expressed gratitude to all contributors to the Permanent Inter-State Committee's recovery programme and urged all to continue to respond favourably, both with regard to emergency measures and implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery plan. The Assembly specifically urged States to aid efforts to strengthen transport infrastructure and facilities, with particular emphasis on movement of foodstuffs from ports to the land-locked Sahelian countries.

Among other things, the Assembly then asked UNSO to continue its close co-operation with the Permanent Committee and its efforts to ensure co-operation and co-ordination between United Nations programmes and bodies, and asked the Secretary-General to continue his action aimed at mobilizing the financial resources necessary for the implementation of the medium- and long-term projects identified by that Committee.

These decisions were embodied in Assembly resolution 32/159, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 30 November 1977. The text was sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, France, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal, Tunisia and the Upper Volta.

By another action, taken on 19 December 1977, the General Assembly stressed the need for immediate implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification adopted by the United Nations Conference on Desertification (Nairobi, Kenya—August/September 1977) (see p. 509). To facilitate this implementation, it invited the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) to consider measures to improve institutional arrangements in the Sudano-Sahelian region, including establishment of a subregional UNEP office to support efforts to combat desertification in that region.

This action was embodied in resolution 32/170. (For text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Aid to Ethiopia

At its April-May 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council's attention was drawn to fears of the Ethiopian authorities that their resources of food and transport would be insufficient to deal with deteriorating conditions. Reporting to the Council in May 1977, the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator warned of possible food shortages in certain regions of Ethiopia. He noted that Ethiopia had experienced serious crop shortfalls in 1977, owing to the drought in 1976 in the provinces of Wollo and Tigre and the Rift Valley. Grain import requirements for 1977 were estimated at 200,000 tons. Commercial imports of 100,000 tons had been arranged and 53,000 tons had been committed as food aid; donors were asked to make up a shortfall of some 50,000 tons. The food shortage was further complicated by the lack of trucks for distribution.

The Government of Ethiopia had purchased 200 trucks and appealed for 150 additional vehicles to the international donor community through the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO). Also UNDRO participated in a joint assessment mission with the World Food Programme (WFP) and FAO.

On 5 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2047(LXII), by which it noted with concern that crop failures in Ethiopia could cause a crisis before the harvest in October. The Council: requested the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the Administrator of UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and other United Nations organizations and specialized agencies to intensify their assistance to Ethiopia; appealed to Governments of Member States and to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue and increase their assistance to Ethiopia for relief, rehabilitation and recovery of the drought-stricken areas; and decided to keep the matter under review.

The resolution, adopted by the Council without vote, was proposed by Afghanistan, Argentina, Bangladesh, Cuba, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritania, Nigeria, the Philippines, Rwanda, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A report on assistance to Ethiopia, submitted by the Secretary-General to the 1977 session of the General Assembly, called attention to the continuing critical need for trucks. It noted that until the main harvest in December 1977, food would continue in short supply, especially in the areas of Wollo, Tigre and Wollega, and in the cities, where prices for all cereals except wheat had increased by more than 50 per cent in 12 months.

The report also pointed out that food aid would be required during 1978, but that this would have to be supported by transport which could not currently be provided from within the country. Food aid in quantities beyond the estimated harvest/requirement shortfall would also be needed for refugees and war victims.

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it requested the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the Administrator of UNDP, UNICEF and other United Nations organizations and specialized agencies to intensify their assistance to Ethiopia and to implement the relevant Assembly and Council resolutions.

The Assembly also appealed to Governments of Member States, to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and to all voluntary agencies to increase their assistance to the people of Ethiopia, and called upon all concerned to ensure that this international assistance be used solely for relief and rehabilitation. Finally, it called for reports on implementation.

The Assembly's decisions were contained in resolution 32/55, adopted without vote. The Second Committee had approved the resolution without vote on 18 November 1977, as sponsored by 75 Member States.

Other assistance activities

According to a report by the Secretary-General on UNDR0, in early January 1977 torrential rains in eastern Bolivia caused extensive flooding in two provinces, killing 10 people and affecting 70,000. For emergency needs, UNDR0 allocated $5,000, and other members of the international community reported contributions totalling $35,083.

A cyclone struck three provinces of Madagascar in February 1977, killing 30 people, making 15,000 homeless and causing extensive damage to crops and infrastructure. An UNDR0 representative visited Madagascar and reported on food needs and the help needed in reconstruction of roads, rural health stations, schools and communications facilities. An emergency allocation of $20,000 was made by UNDP, and other assistance reported to UNDR0 totalled $30,000.

In February 1977, heavy rains caused flooding in Mozambique, affecting thousands of acres of agricultural land and causing damage to infrastructure. Fifty people were reported dead and 400,000 were affected; thousands of cattle were reported drowned. An UNDR0 representative visited Mozambique to assist the UNDP resident representative in co-ordinating relief. An international appeal for medicines, food, blankets and clothing was launched by UNDR0, which also contributed $20,000. Other contributions in cash or goods were provided by UNICEF, UNDP, WFP, the World Health Organization (WHO), the Red Cross and bilateral donors.

On 4 March 1977, a severe earthquake struck Romania, causing 1,570 deaths (mainly in Bucharest), injuring 11,300 and making nearly 35,000 families homeless. The cost of the damage was estimated at more than $830 million. An UNDR0 allocation of $20,000 was used for medical relief supplies. Together with the League of Red Cross Societies, UNDR0 provided information on further relief requirements. Aid was provided by UNICEF, UNDP, WFP, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and WHO; aid was also given by Governments, national Red Cross/Red Crescent societies and by other voluntary agencies and private donors.

In April 1977, a number of villages and a town were destroyed by a volcanic eruption in the Comoros. An UNDR0 contribution of $15,000 was used for emergency health needs; the League of Red Cross Societies provided blankets, food and medicine.

In early 1977, an outbreak rate of smallpox in Somalia reached alarming proportions, and the Government requested assistance from the United Nations. On behalf of the Government of Somalia and WHO, UNDR0 launched an appeal for vehicles, spare parts and communications equipment to support field teams from WHO, the Somali Red Crescent Society and volunteers. International donors provided 4-wheel-drive trucks which were airlifted to Somalia. By November 1977, the outbreaks had been contained.

Severe flooding in north-eastern Peru in April 1977 caused 17 deaths and made hundreds homeless; UNDR0 allocated $4,749 for local purchase of relief items.

In early May, a series of tornadoes struck Bangladesh. Floods caused the loss of over 350,000 tons of rice and damaged jute production. Following an appeal made through UNDR0, several Governments contributed medicines to supplement supplies provided by WHO and UNICEF.

At the request of the Government, a joint UNDR0/UNICEF/WFP/FAO/WHO mission visited Haiti in May 1977 to assess the food situation, which had worsened steadily since a 1975 drought. About 400,000 people were affected, of whom about 250,000 were in urgent need; about 150,000 were being assisted by United States voluntary agencies and WFP. Later in 1977, United States voluntary agencies and donor Governments increased their food-for-work projects, and contributions were made by UNDP and UNICEF. A second United Nations joint mission in September 1977 noted that the situation was improving slowly, aided by relief operations and by rain.

A cyclone and torrential rain caused extensive damage in Oman in June 1977, killing 105 people and causing numerous injuries and extensive losses of farm animals. The Government appealed for outside help through UNDR0, and contributions for emergency needs were provided. A representative of UNDR0 assisted in the co-ordination of assistance and UNDR0 allocated $20,000 for the local purchase of tents.

An earthquake followed by tsunamis struck Indonesia in August 1977, causing loss of life and numerous injuries and making 20,000 homeless; UNDR0 contributed $19,300 for relief work; UNICEF and WFP also provided assistance, as well as Governments and voluntary agencies.

After heavy rains and floods caused considerable damage on the island of St. Vincent in October 1977, UNDR0 allocated $20,000.

In October 1977, the Government of the Upper Volta requested UNDR0'S help following the destruction of drinking-water reservoirs after heavy rains; UNDR0 granted $17,000 for building materials; WFP also provided assistance.

Widespread flooding in two river valleys in Somalia in November 1977 caused damage to many villages, roads and crops, and affected 40,000 persons. A joint UNDP/WFP mission surveyed the area, accompanied by an UNDR0 expert and a representative of the League of Red Cross Societies. Medical supplies and services were provided by the Somali Red Crescent Society and UNICEF; WFP authorized an emergency project for 20,000 people and the United States Government contributed supplies. An UNDR0 contribution of $20,000 was used for the relief operation.

In November 1977, southern India was hit by two cyclones and a severe cyclonic storm, causing over 20,000 deaths and making hundreds of thousands homeless. At least 300,000 acres of crops were destroyed, extensive damage occurred to infrastructure and communications, and there were heavy livestock losses. Relief operations were undertaken by the Government and the Indian Red Cross Society. Aid was also provided by UNICEF, CARE, Church World Service, Catholic relief services, and by the World Council of Churches. A series of reports on the situation was issued by UNDR0 which also provided a total of $30,220 for the purchase of relief items; many Governments, organizations and voluntary agencies also contributed.

In late 1977, UNDR0 allocated $20,000 to supplement the efforts of the Relief and Rehabilitation Commission of the Government of Ethiopia following loss of crops by floods. In another action, UNDR0 and UNDP provided $17,000 and $20,000, respectively, to the Government of Peru for the purchase of new medical equipment for the flood-damaged regional hospital in Cuzco.

Measures to expedite international relief

In 1971, the General Assembly invited Governments that were potential recipients of disaster relief assistance to consider legislative or other measures to facilitate the receipt of aid in times of emergency, including overflight and landing rights and necessary privileges and immunities for relief units.¹ A report on this matter was prepared jointly by UNDR0 and the League of Red Cross, Red Crescent, and Red Lion and Sun Societies.

Proposed measures to expedite and improve the delivery of international relief assistance were contained in an annex to the annual report of the Secretary-General on the activities of UNDR0. Thirteen proposals concerned: designation of a single national relief authority in each country; simplified consular and customs documentation requirements; waiving of restrictions on food imports; visas for relief personnel; the shipping of relief items; free air freight; overflight and landing rights; and access to communications facilities.

On 3 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council, after considering the report of the Secretary-General, adopted a resolution by which it called for action by all concerned to facilitate international relief. The Council requested the Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, in co-operation with Governments, United Nations bodies and appropriate intergovernmental organizations and voluntary agencies, particularly the International Red Cross, to pay special attention to promoting measures designed to expedite international relief. The Council asked that a progress report be made at its second regular session in 1978.

The Council also called upon Governments, intergovernmental agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned with relief operations to give due consideration to the recommendations in the report of the Secretary-General, with a view to adopting legislative, administrative and operational measures to speed the delivery of international relief.

The Council's decisions were set forth in resolution 2102(LXIII), adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 21 July 1977. Sponsors were Denmark, Finland, Mexico, Norway, Pakistan, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United States and Zaire. An amendment proposed by France was withdrawn after informal consultations and resubmitted as a draft decision. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Council adopted the French-sponsored decision (253(LXIII)) on 3 August 1977. It thereby noted with satisfaction that the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator had concluded cooperation agreements with a number of specialized agencies, and asked him to undertake further agreements of this kind, particularly in disaster prevention, so as to achieve greater cohesion.

The Council adopted decision 253(LXIII), without vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 21 July 1977.

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly, taking note of the Secretary-General's report on the activities of UNDR0, endorsed the Economic and Social Council resolution of 3 August 1977 calling for facilitation of international relief assistance. The Assembly invited Governments of disaster-prone countries to undertake planning and preparation for the provision of relief to victims of natural disasters, in co-operation with the international community and with the assistance of UNDR0.

The resident representatives of UNDP, in co-operation with UNDR0 and appropriate specialized agencies, were urged by the Assembly to co-operate with Governments that wished to include in their country programmes projects to reduce the impact of disasters and lessen their long-term socio-economic effects.

The General Assembly, reaffirming its resolution of 21 December 1976² by which, inter alia, it recognized the need for a sound financial basis for UNDR0, decided to examine UNDR0'S future finances at its regular 1978 session, with a view to the further transfer of appropriate costs from voluntary funding to the United Nations regular budget.

These Assembly decisions were embodied in resolution 32/56, adopted without vote. The draft resolution, sponsored by 42 Members, had been approved without vote by the Second Committee on 30 November 1977. (For text of resolution and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Following the adoption of the resolution, statements were made by several Member States. France and Italy said that, although they had joined in the consensus, they did not agree that financing for UNDR0 should be transferred from voluntary funding to the regular budget. The USSR also held this view, while the United States believed that not more than 50 per cent of certain UNDR0 administrative expenses might be charged to the United Nations regular budget.

Resolution 2103(LXIII), as recommended by Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, E/6038, adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1977, meeting 2084.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, particularly General Assembly resolutions 3253(XXIX) of 4 December 1974, 3512(XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/180 of 21 December 1976 and Council resolution 1918(LVIII) of 5 May 1975,

Considering that the nature and scope of the needs of the countries of the Sudano-Saharan region make it necessary for the international community to continue and to strengthen its action of solidarity in support of the recovery efforts and economic development of those countries,

Noting with appreciation the role played by the United Nations Sahelian Office in helping to combat the effects of the drought and to implement the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme adopted by the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and to mobilize the necessary resources to finance priority projects,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Saharan region,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General, which gives an account of the efforts made to implement the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Saharan region;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the method of work adopted by the United Nations Sahelian Office and for the results achieved;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the Governments, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental organizations, private organizations and individuals that have contributed to the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme drawn up by the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel;

4. Urges all Governments, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental organizations, private organizations and individuals to continue to respond favourably and on a continuing basis, either bilaterally or through the United Nations Sahelian Office or any other intermediary, to the request made by the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and by the Governments of the Sudano-Saharan countries;

5. Urges also Member States, particularly developed countries and those in a position to do so, to consider giving urgent financial and technical support to the current efforts in the evacuation of international relief materials from the port of Douala to the land-locked and drought-affected countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region;

6. Requests the United Nations Sahelian Office to continue its close co-operation with the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and its efforts to ensure co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations programmes and bodies, with a view to the implementation of medium-term and long-term assistance programmes;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the General Assembly through the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region.

Resolution 32/159, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.3 and Add.3/Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1977, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, 2959(XXVII) of 12 December 1972 and 3054(XXVIII) of 17 October 1973,

Recalling further its resolutions 3253(XXIX) of 4 December 1974, 3512(XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/180 of 21 December 1976 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1918 (LVIII) of 5 May 1975 and 2103(LXIII) of 3 August 1977,

Taking note of the decision of 27 June 1977 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme concerning the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

Deeply concerned at the magnitude of the effects of the new drought prevailing in the Sudano-Sahelian region and, in particular, at the serious shortage of food and the livestock losses,

Taking note of the declaration adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel at its special session held at Niamey on 26 and 27 October 1977,

Mindful of the fact that the transport problem, particularly the state of the infrastructure and the inadequacy of the present capacities, constitutes a major obstacle for the countries of the region,

Noting the measures taken by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme to establish large stockpiles of food in the ports of the Sudano-Sahelian region,

Noting the individual and collective efforts made by States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel,

Noting with satisfaction the decisive role played by the United Nations Sahelian Office, on the one hand, in helping to combat the effects of the drought and to implement the priority medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme adopted by the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, and, on the other hand, in mobilizing the necessary resources to finance priority projects,

Taking note of the expansion of the recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sahel as a result of the adoption by the Council of Ministers of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, meeting at Ouagadougou from 25 to 28 April 1977, of the drought control and development strategy and programme for the Sahel,

Considering that the nature and magnitude of the needs of the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region, which are among the least developed countries, make it necessary for the international community to continue and to strengthen its action of solidarity in support of the recovery efforts and economic development of those countries,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

I

Emergency measures

1. Urges Governments, United Nations agencies and inter-governmental organizations to respond immediately to the appeal made by the Council of Ministers of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel at its special session held at Niamey, in particular by taking emergency measures to meet the requirements for food aid specified in the declaration adopted at Niamey;

2. Calls upon Member States, donor agencies and the competent United Nations agencies to employ special procedures for the transport of this aid and to inform the World Food Programme thereof so that it may co-ordinate shipments to the affected regions;

3. Invites Member States, donor agencies and the competent United Nations agencies to dispatch any evaluation missions required for the purpose of determining accurately the exact requirements of each of the countries concerned;

4. Urges Member States, particularly the developed countries, international financing institutions and intergovernmental organizations to intensify their assistance to the Sudano-Sahelian countries by providing them with increased financial assistance to alleviate the effects of the drought;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to apply the experience gained in relief operations in continuing to produce forecasts and to provide adequate assistance to overcome the problems of supply, storage and distribution;

6. Urges the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to continue to operate the early warning system in order to keep abreast of developments in the situation in the Sudano-Sahelian region;

II

Implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme

1. Takes note with satisfaction on the report of the Secretary-General on the efforts made to implement the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region drawn up by the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Governments, United Nations agencies, intergovernmental organizations, private organizations and individuals that have contributed to the implementation of the programme;

3. Urges all States to provide financial and technical support for efforts to strengthen transport infrastructures and facilities, with particular emphasis on ensuring uninterrupted movement of food-stuffs and other products from the ports of unloading to all regions of the land-locked countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region;

4. Also urges all Governments, United Nations agencies, intergovernmental organizations, private organizations and individuals to continue to respond favourably and in a continuing manner, either bilaterally or through the United Nations Sahelian Office or any other intermediary, to requests for assistance from the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and its member States;

5. Draws the attention of Member States and of the Secretary-General to the importance of the meeting of the Council of Ministers of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel held at Banjul from 16 to 19 December 1977, and of the third Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Permanent Inter-State Committee to be held at Banjul on 20 and 21 December 1977;

6. Requests the United Nations Sahelian Office to continue its close co-operation with the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and its efforts to ensure co-operation and co-ordination between United Nations programmes and bodies, with a view to the implementation of the medium-term and long-term assistance programmes;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his action aimed at mobilizing the financial resources necessary for the implementation of the medium-term and long-term projects identified by the States members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the General Assembly, through the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region and to report to the Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of section I of the present resolution.

AID TO ETHIOPIA

Economic and Social Council—62nd session
Plenary meeting 2054.

E/5919. Assistance to drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia. Report of Secretary-General.

E/L.1763. Afghanistan, Argentina, Bangladesh, Cuba, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Mauritania, Nigeria, Philippines, Rwanda, Upper Volta, Yugoslavia: draft resolution.

Resolution 2047(LXII), as proposed by 13 powers, E/L.1763, as orally revised by sponsors, adopted without vote by Council on 5 May 1977, meeting 2054.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General submitted to the Council pursuant to General Assembly resolution 31/172 of 21 December 1976 on the progress made in the implementation of all relevant resolutions regarding assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia,

Noting with concern that in four regions of the drought-sensitive areas of the country crop failures have been reported, and that a crisis could result before the next harvest in October,

Having heard the statement of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator outlining substantial grain import requirements for the year 1977 as well as the urgent need for transport vehicles and associated equipment for the distribution of relief grain,

Having also heard the report of the Assistant Administrator and Regional Director for Africa of the United Nations Development Programme on assistance being provided by the Programme to the Government of Ethiopia in relation to its relief and rehabilitation programmes in the drought-stricken areas of the country,

Taking note of the measures taken by the Government of Ethiopia to deal with emergency relief and rehabilitation in the drought-stricken areas of the country,

Recalling its resolutions 1833(LVI) of 8 May 1974, 1876(LVII)

of 16 July 1974, 1971 (LIX) of 30 July 1975 and 1986(LX) of 6 May 1976, in which the Council, inter alia, called upon the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to respond to the requests of the Government of Ethiopia with regard to the immediate, medium-term and long-term needs of the drought-stricken areas, and appealed to the Governments of all Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to continue giving their fullest support and assistance in the Government's effort towards rehabilitation and recovery,

Further noting that despite the generous assistance offered to the Government of Ethiopia by the Governments of Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and voluntary agencies, enormous difficulties of rehabilitation and recovery still persist,

1. Requests the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the other United Nations organizations and the specialized agencies to continue and intensify their assistance to Ethiopia in its relief and rehabilitation effort in their respective areas of competence and to implement promptly the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3441 (XXX) of 9 December 1975 and 31/172, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1833 (LVI), 1876(LVII), 1971 (LIX) and 1986(LX);

2. Appeals to Governments of Member States and to inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and all voluntary agencies to continue and increase their assistance to the Government of Ethiopia for relief, rehabilitation and recovery of the drought-stricken areas;

3. Decides to keep the matter under review.

Resolution 32/55, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/404, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 31/172 of 21 December 1976 on the progress made in the implementation of all relevant resolutions of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council,

Having heard the statement of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator outlining substantial grain-import requirements for the year 1977 as well as the urgent need for transport vehicles and associated equipment for the distribution of relief grain,

Noting the statement of the Assistant Administrator and Regional Director for Africa of the United Nations Development Programme on assistance being provided by the Programme to the Government of Ethiopia in relation to its relief and rehabilitation programmes in the drought-stricken areas of the country,

Noting also the statement of the Commissioner for Relief and Rehabilitation of Ethiopia outlining the measures taken by the Government of Ethiopia to deal with emergency relief and rehabilitation in the drought-stricken areas of the country,

Noting with deep concern that a major crop failure as well as a critical shortage of transport vehicles have caused a serious crisis of food shortages in the drought-prone areas,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1833(LVI) of 8 May 1974, 1876(LVII) of 16 July 1974, 1971(LIX) of 30 July 1975 and 1986(LX) of 6 May 1976, in which the Council, inter alia, called upon the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to respond to the requests of the Government of Ethiopia with regard to the immediate, medium-term and long-term needs of the drought-stricken areas, and appealed to the Governments of all Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to continue giving their fullest support and assistance in the Government's effort towards rehabilitation and recovery,

Further noting that, despite the generous assistance offered to the Government of Ethiopia by the Governments of Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and voluntary agencies, enormous difficulties of rehabilitation and recovery still persist,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia;

2. Requests the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations organizations and specialized agencies to continue and intensify their assistance to Ethiopia in its relief and rehabilitation efforts in their respective areas of competence and to implement promptly the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3441 (XXX) of 9 December 1975 and 31/172 of 21 December 1976 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1833(LVI), 1876(LVII), 1971(LIX) and 1986(LX);

3. Appeals to Governments of Member States and to inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and all voluntary agencies to continue and increase their assistance to the people of Ethiopia for relief, rehabilitation and recovery of the drought-stricken areas;

4. Calls upon all concerned to ensure that the international assistance provided be used for the sole purpose of relief and rehabilitation;

5. Invites the Secretary-General, the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session and to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fourth session on the implementation of paragraphs 2 to 4 above and of other relevant resolutions of the Assembly and the Council.

Resolution 2102(LXIII), as recommended by Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, E/6035, adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1977, meeting 2084.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971 on assistance in cases of natural disaster and other disaster situations, which established the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and which, inter alia, recognized the need to ensure prompt, effective, and efficient responses in times of natural and other disaster situations that would bring to bear the resources of the United Nations system, prospective donor countries, and voluntary agencies,

Recalling further paragraph 1 (a) of Assembly resolution 2816 (XXVI), which authorized the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, on behalf of the Secretary-General, to establish and maintain the closest co-operation with all organizations concerned and to make all feasible advance arrangements with them for the purpose of ensuring the most effective assistance,

Recalling in particular paragraph 8 of the same resolution, which invited recipient Governments, inter alia, to appoint a single national disaster relief Co-ordinator to facilitate the receipt of international aid in times of emergency and to consider appropriate legislative or other measures to facilitate the receipt of aid, including overflight and landing rights,

Aware that obstacles and impediments to the speedy delivery of international relief assistance continue to come to the attention of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and of the League of Red Cross, Red Crescent and Red Lion and Sun Societies and other relief agencies,

Noting with satisfaction the annual report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the oral statement made by the Co-ordinator to the Council at its sixty-third session,

Noting in particular annex II of the report of the Secretary-General, containing a survey, prepared jointly by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the League of Red Cross, Red Crescent and Red Lion and Sun Societies, of obstacles and impediments to the delivery of international relief and the movement of relief personnel, based on the accumulated experience of a number of Governments and intergovernmental and voluntary agencies concerned with relief activities,

Noting further the recommendations made in that annex regarding measures for surmounting such obstacles and impediments, and the suggestions for further measures to expedite relief and the movement of relief personnel,

1. Commends the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator for his efforts on behalf of the victims of disasters;

2. Requests the Co-ordinator to continue these efforts and, in

Resolution 32/56, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/404, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, establishing the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, 3243(XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the strengthening of that Office, 3440(XXX) of 9 December 1975, which provides, inter alia, for measures to be taken in support of the activities of the Office, and 3532(XXX) of 17 December 1975 on the financing of emergency relief assistance and technical co-operation activities of the Office,

Recalling also section II, paragraph 14, of its resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Reaffirming its resolution 31/173 of 21 December 1976 in which, inter alia, it recognized the need for the maintenance of the activities of the core programme of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and provided for measures for securing a sound financial basis for the Office as well as for a review by the Economic and Social Council in 1978 of alternative sources of funding for the technical co-operation activities of the Office,

Bearing in mind that the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, as a permanent body within the United Nations system, is responsible, inter alia, for co-ordinating international disaster relief assistance,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator;

2. Commends the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator for his efforts on behalf of the victims of disasters;

3. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 2102 (LXIII) of 3 August 1977 on measures to expedite international relief;

4. Invites Governments of disaster-prone countries to undertake measures of planning and preparedness for the provision of relief to victims of natural disasters and to co-ordinate their efforts with those of, and co-operate with, the international community, and requests the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to assist those countries in this work to the extent possible;

5. Urges resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme, in collaboration with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and appropriate specialized agencies, to co-operate with and assist Governments that wish to include in their country programmes projects to reduce the impact of disasters and lessen their long-term socio-economic effects;

6. Reaffirms that the Secretary-General should continue to have the capacity to contribute emergency relief assistance to countries as a first response to disaster situations;

7. Decides to examine at its thirty-third session the question of future financial arrangements for ensuring a sound financial basis for the core programme of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator with a view to including in the draft programme budget for the biennium 1980-1981 proposals for a further transfer of appropriate costs from voluntary funding to the United Nations regular budget;

8. Requests the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to take the present resolution into consideration when formulating its recommendations on the medium-term plan for the period 1980-1983.

Chapter XXII

Social questionsSocial policy and development planning*Unified approach to development

Responding to a General Assembly request of 28 November 1975,¹ the Secretary-General reported on the application by Governments of a unified approach to development analysis and planning, based on information provided by 20 Governments. The report was submitted to the January/February 1977 session of the Commission for Social Development, held in Geneva, and to the April 1977 session of the Committee for Development Planning, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York.

The information provided by the Governments was presented in summary form in the Secretary-General's report under three headings: (a) the approaches used in the formulation of development goals; (b) the approaches used in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of policies, programmes and projects for achieving development goals; and (c) the requirements for analytical and statistical information.

On 4 February 1977, the Commission for Social Development decided to review on a regular basis the progress made by Member States and organizations of the United Nations system in applying a unified approach to development analysis and planning. It recommended a draft resolution on the subject for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

The Committee for Development Planning, at its April 1977 session, also examined and noted the report, and at the same time drew attention to the study prepared by the United Nations Secretariat entitled "Planning for development: goals and policies of developing countries for the second half of the 1970s" which, it felt, also shed light on the integrated approaches to development planning adopted in developing countries.

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council urged Member States to continue to carry out a periodic evaluation of achievements in social fields resulting from their development planning, and to inform the Secretary-

General of such progress, especially in connexion with the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.²

The Council invited the Secretary-General and the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) to use information supplied by Governments in carrying out projects on a unified approach to development analysis and planning, and to focus on specific developmental issues, such as the distribution of income, consumption and services, employment and popular participation in the development effort.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2071(LXII), adopted without vote. The text was approved without vote by the Social Committee on 28 April 1977, as recommended by the Commission for Social Development. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In response to an Economic and Social Council request of 3 August 1976,³ the Secretary-General prepared a report on pilot projects to be undertaken by the Secretariat and by UNRISD on the practical application of a unified approach to development analysis and planning, which was submitted to the Council in 1977.

In adopting decision 275(LXIII) on 4 August 1977, the Council took note of the report. The text, adopted without vote, had been approved by the Economic Committee on 3 August.

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, decision 32/418 by which it took note of the Secretary-General's report. It also invited those countries that had not done so to respond to the Secretary-General's aide-memoire of 27 February 1976 on a unified approach to development analysis and planning, and requested the Secretary-General to present a new report in 1979 on the basis of those replies. The decision had been approved by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 1 December 1977, on the proposal of the Chairman.

National experience in measures for social progress

Mobilization of national resources

On 14 January 1977, the Economic and Social Council, with the adoption of decision 204(ORG-77), referred to the Commission for Social Development a resolution of the General Assembly of 30 November 1976⁴ concerning national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress.

The Commission, at its January/February 1977 session, had before it a note by the Secretary-General on the subject which called attention to the report he had submitted to the Assembly in 1976. That report had analysed 50 replies by Governments to a questionnaire on various aspects of country experience in carrying out fundamental social and economic changes.

The Commission approved a draft resolution on the question for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. By this resolution, which the Council adopted on 13 May, Member States were requested to prepare monographs on national experience in mobilizing national resources for purposes of social progress and development, for consideration by the Commission for Social Development at its 1979 session.

The resolution (2070(LXII)) was adopted without vote after approval without vote by the Social Committee on 28 April. An oral drafting amendment was made by Afghanistan in the Social Committee. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Distribution of national income

The Commission for Social Development also had before it in January/February 1977 a report of the Secretary-General on the meeting of an expert group on levels of living, equity and the distribution of social consumption in developing countries and a Secretariat paper on public expenditure on social services in developing countries. The report of the expert group contained recommendations for future activities on income distribution. The Secretariat's report analysed data and the broad impact of public expenditures on education and health in developing countries for the period 1969-1974.

The Commission approved the text of a draft resolution on this matter for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. On 13 May 1977, with the adoption of this text, the Council requested the Commission to continue its activities on issues related to the distribution of national income, in particular on income tax reforms and other tax reforms, the role of trade unions and the effects of inflation on low-income groups. It also asked the Secretary-General to provide the Commission with all available information on the effects of inflation on low-income groups and the Council invited him to report through it to the General Assembly in 1978 on the findings of various agencies and organs of the United Nations system relating to the distribution of national income. It also asked the Assembly, as a one-time measure, to put on the agenda of its regular 1978 session an item on the importance of the equitable distribution of national income for economic and social development.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2074(LXII) adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, which approved the text without vote on 28 April. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Social and institutional reform to increase food production and distribute it more equitably

In its discussions concerning social and institutional reform as a means of increasing domestic food production and distributing it equitably among the population, the Commission for Social Development considered at its 1977 session a joint report of the secretariats of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank).

The report gave a perspective of the food situation and examined the institutional, social and behavioural constraints impeding increases in small-farm food production. It also examined government policies to overcome problems of equitable distribution and consumption, particularly approaches to social marketing and food distribution outside the market system, and provided conclusions and recommendations for consideration.

Subsequently, the Commission approved the text of a draft resolution on the matter for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

⁴ Ibid., p. 552, text of resolution 31/38.

The text was adopted without vote by the Council on 13 May 1977, as resolution 2073(LXII). The Council thereby recommended, among other things, that Member States should:

- give attention not only to the production but also to the distribution of food;

- assign high priority to rural development, including land reform, as appropriate, in order to increase agricultural production, ensure an adequate food supply and its equitable distribution among the population, and achieve greater impact of the essential inputs, including social services and infrastructure, on food production in rural communities;

- strengthen the institutional framework in developing countries so as to build up national capacity to mobilize local resources and directly to ensure the participation of small farmers in food production;

- mobilize women and youth more effectively into rural development and food production efforts by providing special programmes for their organization, training and participation;

- improve action research jointly among agricultural and social scientists in order to design more effective programmes at the community and area levels, particularly in linking social and cultural change with the introduction of better agricultural technologies, incentives and planning at the grass-roots level; and

- take immediate action for implementation of the resolutions adopted by the 1974 World Food Conference.

The Council also requested the Secretary-General to review the experiences of Member States in promoting food production and ensuring more equitable food distribution, to collaborate with the United Nations system in disseminating information on reforms and other innovative approaches to this matter and to keep the Commission and the World Food Council informed of progress in this regard.

The Council acted on the recommendation of its Social Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 28 April after amending the draft proposed by the Commission for Social Development.

A Ukrainian SSR amendment included democratic agrarian reform, recommended in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development⁵ and other resolutions, as a necessary change for accelerating food production and equitable distribution; another added increased agricultural production, adequate food supply and equitable distribution as reasons for States to assign, as recommended, high priority to rural development.

Amendments jointly sponsored by Algeria, Jamaica, Mauritania, Mexico, Nigeria, Venezuela and Yugoslavia (subamended by Austria, by Denmark, by Mexico and by the United States) inter alia added references to the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,⁶ the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,⁷ and to resolutions of the World Food Conference. An Iranian amendment deleted paragraphs referring to consideration and endorsement of major conclusions and recommendations of the joint secretariat report, and the Federal Republic of Germany added a consequential drafting amendment.

Later in the year, on 19 December 1977, the General Assembly, with the adoption of decision 32/443 B, inter alia took note of the joint report of the secretariats of the United Nations, ILO, FAO and the World Bank on social and institutional reform as a means of increasing domestic food production and distributing it equitably.

The decision was adopted on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which approved the text on 13 December, on the proposal of the Chairman.

Implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development

Following consideration, at its 1977 session, of several reports on the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,⁸ the Commission for Social Development approved the text of a draft resolution concerning implementation for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

On 13 May 1977, the Council adopted without a vote as its resolution 2069(LXII) the text recommended by the Commission and thereby recommended its adoption by the General Assembly. Resolution 2069(LXII) had been approved by the Social Committee without a vote on 28 April.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted that text without vote as its resolution 32/117.

⁵ See Y.U.N., 1969, pp. 433-38, resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, containing text of Declaration.

⁶ See Y.U.N., 1974, pp. 324-32, resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing texts of Declaration and Programme of Action.

⁷ Ibid., pp. 402-7, resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing text of Charter.

⁸ See footnote 5.

By this resolution, the Assembly urged all Governments to take due account of their ultimate responsibility of ensuring the social progress and well-being of their people, inter alia by adhering to the principles espoused in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development. It asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1979 a comprehensive report on the implementation of the Declaration during the period 1969-1979 by Governments, international organizations and agencies concerned with development, and it decided to mark the tenth anniversary of the Declaration at its 1979 session.

Resolution 32/117 was adopted on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee which approved it by consensus on 7 December.

Reinforcing the social development sector in the United Nations

At its 1977 session, the Commission for Social Development considered the question of how the social development sector within the United Nations might be reinforced in the context of the preparation of a new development strategy and of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations.

The Commission made several recommendations in the form of draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. It recommended that the Council ask the Secretary-General to appoint a small working group of experts to study and make recommendations regarding the operational effectiveness of social development activities within the United Nations, the effectiveness of existing United Nations co-ordination machinery and the future role of the social development component within the United Nations, with a view to strengthening the social development input in the preparation of a new development strategy.

It also recommended that the Council call for a special session of the Commission to consider the report of the working group on the reinforcement of the social development sector within the United Nations.

The draft resolutions recommended by the Commission were considered by the Economic and Social Council at its April/May 1977 session. During discussions in the Council's Social Committee, a series of amendments were made to the first draft which ultimately provided, among other things, that the working group would be appointed by the President of the Council as an ad hoc working group of the Council and that the working group would report directly to the Council.

These amendments were variously sponsored: by the United States, subamended by the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia; jointly by seven powers (Algeria, Jamaica, Mauritania, Mexico, Nigeria, Venezuela and Yugoslavia), subamended by the Netherlands; and by the USSR. Following their approval, the Social Committee approved the text without vote on 29 April 1977. The second draft resolution proposed by the Commission was not acted on as it had been superseded by the approved text.

Thus on 13 May 1977, the Council adopted without vote resolution 2079(LXII) by which it expressed its desire to ensure that the social development sector within the United Nations be accorded continuing high priority and recommended that the President of the Council appoint an ad hoc working group of 10 experts to study and make appropriate recommendations with regard to the operational effectiveness of the social development activities within the United Nations, the effectiveness of United Nations co-ordination machinery and the future role of the social development component within the United Nations so as to strengthen input towards a new development strategy.

It further recommended that the Secretary-General transmit the working group's report to the Commission for comments and to the Council at its first 1978 session, taking into account the General Assembly's decisions at its 1977 session regarding preparations for a new international development strategy.

On 4 August 1977 the Council decided without vote (decision 273(LXIII)) that its resolution 2079(LXII) of 13 May should not be put into effect until such time, at its January 1978 organizational session, as it had reviewed the implications thereof in the light of the outcome of the work on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system. The draft decision had been recommended by the Council's Economic Committee, which approved the text without vote on 28 July 1977. Its sponsors were the States members of the Economic and Social Council belonging to the "Group of 77."

Training for social development

On a proposal of the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council on 13 May 1977 adopted a resolution by which it: called on governmental and non-governmental organizations, institutions and associations to intensify their efforts in the field of training for social development; invited them to provide financial and material assistance to that end and provide support for the establishment, maintenance and expansion of research and training centres for social development at the regional level; urged that such regional training centres in social development co-operate closely with other intergovernmental, regional and national training centres in their regions to enable them to train front-line workers in national institutions; and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a survey of training issues directly related to the objectives of social welfare within the series of periodic international surveys of training in the field of social development.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2080(LXII) adopted without vote as approved by the Council's Social Committee, without vote, on 29 April 1977. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Co-ordination of the results of world conferences on social development

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 2072(LXII). The Council thereby, among other things, requested the Secretary-General to continue to identify and consolidate the common elements of declarations, recommendations, resolutions and plans of action of a number of conferences held during the 1970s, in the context of social development and the formulation of a new international development strategy, and to submit the result of his analyses to the General Assembly at its 1977 session. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The action had been proposed to the Council by the Commission for Social Development. The text drafted by the Commission was amended in the Council's Social Committee and approved without a vote on 28 April. The amendments were proposed jointly by Algeria, Jamaica, Mauritania, Mexico, Nigeria, Venezuela and Yugoslavia (subamended by Afghanistan, by Argentina and by Brazil), and by the Netherlands and New Zealand.

Other aspects of social development and policy

Research and training in regional development

The United Nations Research Institute for Social Development began in 1977 to review the approaches that developing countries had taken to involve the poor majority in the development process and to disseminate that information to interested countries.

The United Nations Centre for Regional Development was evaluated in 1977. It was decided that emphasis would be reduced on country and field work, and increased on classroom exercises and formal training.

At its 1977 session, the Commission for Social Development, after reviewing the work of UNRISD, urged it to give due emphasis to its co-ordinating and catalytic roles in connexion with data collection, documentation and information and other scientific work which facilitated research on the local, national and regional levels. It also urged that UNRISD devote its resources and capacity to supporting and undertaking field research by national and regional research bodies.

On 12 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council, with the adoption of resolution 2061(LXII), inter alia requested UNRISD to co-operate with other United Nations bodies in preparing an inventory of social and economic indicators relevant to the analysis of the status of women. (For text of resolution 2061(LXII), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Adoption law

On 16 December 1977, by decision 32/437, the General Assembly, having been unable for lack of time to consider the item entitled "United Nations conference for an international convention on adoption law," decided to include it on the provisional agenda of its regular 1978 session. The draft decision had been recommended by the Assembly's Third Committee, where it had been approved without vote on 9 December.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the application by Governments of a unified approach to development analysis and planning,

Noting with concern that only a limited number of countries replied to the aide-memoire sent by the Secretary-General on a unified approach,

Recognizing that development planning is a continuing process within which evaluation of results achieved is a matter of high priority,

1. Urges Member States to continue to carry out a periodic evaluation of the social results of their development planning;

2. Further urges Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their progress in implementing social aspects of national development plans, in particular of measures taken and results achieved or expected, especially in connexion with the review and appraisal of progress in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, contained in General Assembly resolution 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970;

3. Invites the Secretary-General and the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development, in carrying out projects on a unified approach to development analysis and planning, to take the information supplied by Governments into account and to focus on specific developmental issues, such as the distribution of income, consumption and services, employment and popular participation in the development effort.

Resolution 2070(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5964 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2059.

The Economic and Social Council,
Considering the mobilization of national resources as an important factor in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for purposes of social progress,

Mindful of article 16 of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, in which it is stated that social progress and development in countries require:

(a) Maximum mobilization of all national resources and their rational and efficient utilization; promotion of increased and accelerated productive investment in social and economic fields and of employment; orientation of society towards the development process,

(b) Progressively increasing provision of the necessary budgetary and other resources required for financing the social aspects of development,

(c) Achievement of equitable distribution of national income, utilizing, inter alia, the fiscal system and government spending as an instrument for the equitable distribution and redistribution of income in order to promote social progress,

(d) The adoption of measures aimed at prevention of such an outflow of capital from developing countries as would be detrimental to their economic and social development,

Recalling its resolution 1139(XLI) of 29 July 1966, in which it called upon the Commission for Social Development, inter alia, to pay particular attention to the question of mobilizing national resources,

1. Decides to include in the agenda of the twenty-sixth session of the Commission for Social Development a separate item entitled "Mobilization of national resources for purposes of social progress and development";

2. Requests Member States to give particular attention in reports submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 31/38 of 30 November 1976 to information on the question of mobilizing national resources for purposes of social progress and development;

3. Invites Member States to prepare monographs on national experience in mobilizing national resources for purposes of social progress and development for consideration by the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-sixth session.

Resolution 2074(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5964 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2059.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling its resolutions 1086 D (XXXIX) of 30 July 1965 and 1322(XLIV) of 31 May 1968, concerning the distribution of national income,

Recalling also the Declaration on Social Progress and Development contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, contained in General Assembly resolution 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in General Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974,

Being concerned about poverty, inequality, social injustice, unemployment and the underemployment which still exist in many countries,

Considering that an equitable distribution of national income contributes to social justice and economic development, in particular eradication of poverty the causes of which may be assessed in a variety of ways,

Believing that close attention should be devoted to these issues,

1. Expresses its appreciation of the efforts of the Commission for Social Development and of the Expert Group on Levels of Living, Equity and the Distribution of Social Consumption in Developing Countries;

2. Requests the Commission for Social Development to continue its activities on issues related to the distribution of national income, in particular on income tax reforms and other tax reforms, the role of trade unions and the effects of inflation on low-income groups;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a note for the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-sixth session containing all available information on the effects of inflation on low-income groups;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to submit a report through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the findings of various specialized agencies and organs of the United Nations system, relating to the distribution of national income;

5. Requests the General Assembly to include as a one-time measure an item entitled "Importance of the equitable distribution of national income for economic and social development" in the agenda of its thirty-third session.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order contained in General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States contained in General Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, as well as General Assembly resolution 3362(S-VII), of 16 September 1975, on development and international economic co-operation, in section V, paragraph 3, of which the Assembly stated that particular attention should be given to improvement in the systems of distribution of food-stuffs,

Noting with concern that food production is not keeping up with the growth of demand in developing countries,

Mindful that the problem of balancing food demand and supply can be solved by, inter alia, raising production levels in the developing countries, finding more equitable ways of distributing food and implementing various resolutions on this subject adopted by the World Food Conference,

Mindful also that to this end it will be necessary to bring about social and institutional changes to accelerate food production and to distribute it equitably among the population, including democratic agrarian reform, as recommended in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, and in other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council,

1. Recommends to Member States:

(a) In formulating development strategies, policies and measures, to give attention not only to the production but also to the distribution of food, and to conceive plans and programmes in these areas as interrelated aspects of a single comprehensive system in each country;

(b) To give due priority to the collection of information on the food needs of various population groups, and to an in-depth study of damage caused by deficient nutrition, as a means of formulating strategies for major groups;

(c) To assign high priority to rural development, including land reform, as appropriate, in order to increase agricultural production, ensure an adequate food supply and its equitable distribution among the population, and achieve greater impact of the essential inputs, including social services and infrastructure, on food production in rural communities;

(d) To strengthen the institutional framework in developing countries so as to build up national capacity to mobilize local resources and directly to ensure the participation of small farmers in food production;

(e) To mobilize women and youth more effectively into rural development and food production efforts by providing special programmes for their organization, training and participation;

(f) To improve action research jointly among agricultural and social scientists in order to design more effective programmes at the community and area levels, particularly in linking social and cultural change with the introduction of better agricultural technologies, incentives and planning at the grass-roots level;

(g) To provide increased resources for education and training at the grass-roots level, including special techniques of non-formal or multiplier training of farmers, women and youth to accelerate their collaboration in food production and nutrition;

(h) To create specialized planning teams in national planning organizations to prepare strategies and reform measures for national food systems, including aspects of production, distribution and consumption in terms of costs and benefits for the society as a whole;

(i) To take immediate action for the implementation of the resolutions adopted by the World Food Conference and thus assist the developing countries in their efforts to increase food production;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Bank to assist Governments, upon their request, in preparing and implementing such strategies, policies and measures;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To review, in collaboration with the relevant specialized agencies and organs of the United Nations system, the experiences of Member States in promoting increased food production and ensuring a more equitable distribution of food among the population;

(b) To collaborate with the United Nations system in documenting and disseminating information on social and institutional reforms and other innovative approaches and programmes designed to increase food production and distribute it equitably among the population;

(c) To keep the Commission for Social Development and the World Food Council informed, as appropriate, of progress being made in this regard and to bring to the attention of the Commission, in particular, relevant policies and programmes adopted by Member States which could usefully be disseminated through it to other Member States;

4. Decides to bring to the attention of the General Assembly at its thirty-second session the joint report of the secretariats of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Bank on social and institutional reforms as a means of increasing food production and distributing it equitably among the population.

Resolution 32/117, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/458, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in its resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, for the formulation and implementation of national policies and measures conducive to rapid social and economic progress,

Recalling its resolution 2543(XXIV) of 11 December 1969 on the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and other United Nations documents bearing on socio-economic development, in particular the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolution 3201 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974,

Convinced that in conformity with the Declaration on Social Progress and Development the primary task of all States and international organizations is to eliminate all obstacles to social progress, in particular such evils as inequality, exploitation, war, colonialism and racism,

Conscious of the fact that further social development contributes to peaceful coexistence, detente and the strengthening of international peace and security,

Recalling that 1979 will mark the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration,

1. Urges all Governments to take due account of their ultimate responsibility of ensuring the social progress and well-being of their people, inter alia by adhering to the principles espoused in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development;

2. Recommends that international organizations and agencies concerned with development should continue to consider the Declaration as an important international document in the formulation of strategies and programmes designed to achieve social progress and development;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, essentially from the information already available, a comprehensive report, in lieu of an annex to the 1978 Report on the World Social Situation as provided for in Assembly resolution 2543(XXIV), on the implementation of the Declaration during the period 1969-1979 by Governments, international organizations and agencies concerned with development;

4. Decides, in order to mark the tenth anniversary of the Declaration, to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fourth session a separate item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development."

Resolution 2079(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5964 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2059.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1139(XLI) of 29 July 1966 in which it adopted the present mandate and present designation of the Commission for Social Development,

Bearing in mind that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System, established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975, is considering various proposals relating, inter alia, to the institutional and structural machinery for dealing with social development activities within the United Nations,

Desiring to ensure that the social development sector within the United Nations shall be accorded, on a continuing basis, the high priority it deserves considering the gravity and urgency of the problems in this sector,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 31/182 of 21 December 1976 on preparations for a new international development strategy,

Mindful of the need to incorporate the social aspects of development in the formulation of a new international development strategy, taking fully into account the resolutions on the establishment of the new international economic order,

1. Recommends that the President of the Economic and Social Council should appoint an ad hoc working group composed of ten experts from Member States, taking into account the principle of equitable geographical distribution, to study, bearing in mind the work under way on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, and to make appropriate recommendations for improvement, inter alia, with regard to:

(a) The operational effectiveness of social development activities within the United Nations;

(b) The effectiveness of existing United Nations co-ordination machinery with respect to such activities;

(c) The future role of the social development component within the United Nations with a view to strengthening the social development input in the preparation of a new development strategy;

2. Recommends also that the Secretary-General should transmit the report of the working group to the members of the Commission for Social Development for comments and that the report, together with those comments, should be submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fourth session taking into account the decision of the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the subject of preparations for a new international development strategy;

3. Recommends that the Commission for Social Development, at its twenty-sixth session, should give the report of the working group priority consideration in its agenda.

E/5915, Chapter I A. Draft resolution XI, as recommended by Commission for Social Development for adoption by Economic and Social Council, approved without vote by Social Committee on 29 April 1977, meeting 805.

E/5964 and Corr.1. Report of Social Committee, draft resolution XII.

Resolution 2080(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5964 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2059.

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind that many of the objectives defined in its resolutions and those of the Commission for Social Development concerning such topics of social development as programmes and policies for youth, the improvement of the situation of the aged and the disabled, the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and, in general, the promotion of the developmental objectives of social welfare, depend for their successful realization not only on material resources but also on the skills and capacities of those responsible for planning and implementing, administratively and practically, national social welfare programmes,

Conscious that such skills and capacities can be elicited, stimulated and improved by training suitably adapted to the level and type of workers involved, including in particular para-professional workers and volunteer workers required to provide services on the scale needed in many developing countries,

Aware that the shortage of workers with the necessary levels of knowledge and skill still constitutes a major constraint to the successful accomplishment of social welfare programmes in many countries,

Welcoming the proposals for training contained in the programme objectives for the period 1978-1981, in particular the improvement of training opportunities for youth workers and the studies leading to the production of a report on innovative approaches to the training of trainers, supervisors and field workers in social welfare,

1. Calls upon Governments, professional institutions and associations and other non-governmental organizations to intensify their efforts in the field of training for social development;

2. Invites Governments and intergovernmental and other bodies which are in a position to provide financial and material assistance for such purposes, to provide support for the establishment, maintenance and expansion of research and training centres for social development at the regional level, especially in those regions which do not yet have them;

3. Urges all regional training centres in social development established in collaboration with the United Nations to co-operate closely with other intergovernmental, regional and national training centres which may exist in their regions in the training of higher level manpower so that the latter may in turn train front-line workers in national institutions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, within the series of periodic international surveys of training for social development, a survey of training issues directly related to the objectives of social welfare.

Resolution 2072(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5964 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2059.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolution 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, Recalling also the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic

Order contained in General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States contained in General Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, and General Assembly resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling further the results achieved at the major conferences of the United Nations and the specialized agencies held during the current decade on world economic and social problems,

Noting its resolution 1927(LVIII) of 6 May 1975 on the implementation of the International Development Strategy, in which it reaffirmed the importance of the role of the Commission for Social Development especially as regards the final review and appraisal of the Strategy and the importance of including social aspects of development in a strategy for the 1980s,

Noting also General Assembly resolution 31/182 of 21 December 1976 on preparations for a new international development strategy,

Mindful of the general consensus on the importance of a unified approach to development analysis and planning,

Mindful also of the need to incorporate the social aspects of development in the formulation of a new international development strategy, taking fully into account the resolutions on the establishment of the new international economic order,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Committee for Development Planning and of the intergovernmental bodies responsible for the formulation of a new international development strategy the declarations, recommendations and resolutions on the establishment of the new international economic order of the General Assembly and of world conferences such as the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, the World Population Conference, the World Food Conference, the Second General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Conference of the International Women's Year, Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour, and the United Nations Water Conference;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to analyse systematically the declarations, recommendations, resolutions and plans of action of the conferences mentioned in paragraph 1 above by identifying and consolidating their common elements, seen in the context of social development and relevant to the formulation of a new international development strategy;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the results of such work to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session in the report to be submitted in pursuance of Assembly resolution 31/182.

Housing, building and planning

Technical aid and studies in 1977

In addition to the development of settlement policies and planning, the aim of technical assistance projects in housing, building and planning under way in 1977 was the amelioration of living conditions of the urban poor through the upgrading of slums and squatter settlements and establishing and strengthening the institutional arrangements to underpin these programmes. Improvement of traditional methods of construction and strengthening the building industry to cope with the expanding requirements of developing countries was another area of concentration. The limited available resources for human settlements programmes were used for a small number of large-scale projects that were felt to have potential for impact on socio-economic development.

During 1977, 201 experts, including 43 associate experts, worked on assignments in housing, building and physical planning in 42 countries and territories, two regional projects and one interregional project. These included: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bangladesh, Botswana, Burundi, Chad, Colombia, Cyprus, the eastern Caribbean islands, Ecuador, Egypt, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Malaysia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nigeria, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Viet Nam, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

A total of 64 United Nations fellowships were granted in 1977 to nationals of 16 countries: Argentina, Bangladesh, Chad, Democratic Yemen, Guyana, India, the Ivory Coast, Nigeria, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, the Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Thailand, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia.

Sponsored by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the Government of Indonesia, a workshop on integrated improvement of urban marginal settlements was organized by the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning at Bandung from 26 September to 1 October 1977. It was attended by 79 participants from Asia and the Pacific.

An ad hoc group of 16 experts from nine countries met at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 28 November to 2 December 1977 to consider strategies for the improvement of different types of lower-income urban settlements.

An ad hoc expert group meeting on physical improvement of slums and squatter settlements was held in collaboration with the Government of the Bahamas, the University of Miami, Florida International University and the Sunbelt USA and Caribbean Regions of the Emerging Professionals International Conference, at Nassau from 31 January to 4 February 1977. There were eight experts from eight countries, and observers from five countries attending.

An ad hoc expert group meeting on criteria for the selection of appropriate building technologies was held in collaboration with the Government of Jordan at Amman from 10 to 14 December 1977. The meeting was attended by nine experts from eight countries, and observers from 10 countries.

An ad hoc expert group meeting on national settlement analysis and policy formulation was held from 14 to 18 November 1977 at United Nations Headquarters, attended by experts from 11 countries. Also, an ad hoc expert group meeting on human settlements information dissemination and exchange was held from 28 November to 2 December 1977 at the International Labour Organisation headquarters at Geneva, attended by experts from nine countries.

Total expenditures in 1977 amounted to $9,072,097 of which $646,465 came from the United Nations regular budget, $5,932,124 from the United Nations Development Programme, $64,932 from UNEP and $2,428,576 from funds-in-trust. Fifty large-scale projects were continued or started: in Africa, 18; the Americas, 9; Asia and the Pacific, 14; Europe, 2; West Asia, 5; and two interregional. There were also under execution 22 small-scale projects: in Africa, 11; the Americas, 4; Asia and the Pacific, 5; Europe, 1; and West Asia, 1.

Publications by the Centre included Human Settlements Performance Standards, The Social Impact of Housing, Land for Human Settlements, and the quarterly newsletter, Human Settlements. (See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES for other publications.)

Trust Fund for Documentation on Housing, Building and Planning

The Economic and Social Council by a decision of 5 August 1966⁹ approved the establishment in New Delhi of an international institute for documentation on housing, building and planning. On 28 May 1968,¹⁰ it requested the Secretary-General to seek funding from Member States. Because contributions were negligible, the Secretary-General suggested in a note to the Council that the Trust Fund for Documentation on Housing, Building and Planning be cancelled and the funds released contributed to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. The Council took no action on this, but since it referred the draft resolution on human settlements (see below) to the General Assembly, the Secretariat suggested in a note that the Assembly take up the matter in connexion with its consideration of institutional arrangements for international co-operation in the field of human settlements.

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without a vote, decision 32/443 A by which it requested the Secretary-General to cancel the Trust Fund for Documentation and authorized him to contribute the funds released to the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), established by Assembly resolution 32/162 of 19 December 1977. The draft decision had been approved by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 13 December, without a vote, on the proposal of its Chairman.

Institutional arrangements for international co-operation in human settlements

On 4 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 262(LXIII) by which, without prejudging the final position that Member States might take on the matter, it transmitted to the General Assembly a draft resolution on the question of institutional arrangements for international co-operation in the field of human settlements, endorsing recommendations of the 1976 Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements. The question had been debated by an ad hoc sessional committee whose Chairman submitted the draft decision.

The General Assembly, on 19 December 1977, adopted resolution 32/162 by which it established an intergovernmental Commission on Human Settlements and a secretariat to service the Commission.

The Assembly decided that the Economic and Social Council should transform the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning into a 58-member Commission on Human Settlements. The main objectives of the Commission were to: assist countries and regions in increasing and improving their own efforts to solve human settlements problems; promote greater international co-operation in order to increase the availability of resources of developing countries and regions; promote the integral concept of human settlements and a comprehensive approach to human settlements problems in all countries; and strengthen co-operation and co-participation in this domain among all countries and regions.

The Assembly further decided that a new secretariat would be established in the United Nations to service the Commission on Human Settlements and to serve as a focal point for human settlements action and co-ordination, to be named the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat).

Social services

Technical aid activities

During 1977, an adviser on the rehabilitation of the disabled visited Bermuda, Cyprus, Gabon, Romania, Sierra Leone and the Sudan. Two experts in rehabilitation were provided to Iran and Pakistan, and five experts in the fields of social welfare, aging, child and family welfare, in-service training and social defence and correctional services were assigned to Iran. One on the social situation and needs of women was provided to Bahrain.

In the field of rehabilitation, five fellowships were awarded in 1977 to Israelis for study in the United States and three to Pakistanis who studied in Iran. Twelve fellows from Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Burma, Iraq, Jordan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Pakistan, the Philippines and Poland studied aspects of rehabilitation in the USSR. Fellowships in social welfare were awarded to one national of Israel and one of the Netherlands for study in the United States.

International Year for Disabled Persons

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in 1977 a report on the 1981 International Year for Disabled Persons, as requested by the Assembly on 13 December 1976.¹¹ The report contained a draft programme for the Year, based on the Secretary-General's consultations with Member States and international organizations concerned.

In the draft programme, the Secretary-General proposed, among other things, that the principal United Nations bodies dealing with social questions should consider, in their scheduled sessions in 1981, a long-term programme of action aimed at (a) the implementation of the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons¹² and the Declaration on the Rights of Mentally Retarded Persons,¹³ (b) the implementation of the objectives of the International Year as enumerated by the General Assembly on 16 December 1976¹⁴ and (c) assisting developing countries in designing national programmes for these purposes.

On 16 December 1977, the Assembly: approved the Secretary-General's proposals for preparatory work on the International Year for Disabled Persons for the period 1978-1979; authorized him to undertake the measures required to implement those proposals, including information activities through 1981; decided to establish an intergovernmental Advisory Committee for the International Year for Disabled Persons, composed of representatives of 15 Member States, with the task of considering the proposed programme for the Year and consulting thereon with Member States and specialized agencies; requested the Secretary-General to convene the Advisory Committee by March 1979 and to report on that meeting to the General Assembly's regular 1979 session; appealed to Member States for generous voluntary contributions for the Year; encouraged Member States and organizations concerned to take specific action in the preparation of the observance of the Year and decided to include the matter in the provisional agenda of its regular 1979 session.

These actions were taken by resolution 32/133, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. On 9 December 1977, the Third Committee had approved without vote a text sponsored by 39 Member States.

Resolution 32/133, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/437, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 31/123 of 16 December 1976, by which it proclaimed the year 1981 International Year for Disabled Persons and decided to devote that year to the realization of a set of objectives, including:

(a) Helping disabled persons in their physical and psychological adjustment to society,

(b) Promoting all national and international efforts to provide disabled persons with proper assistance, training, care and guidance, to make available to them opportunities for suitable work and to ensure their full integration into society,

(c) Encouraging study and research projects designed to facilitate the practical participation of disabled persons in daily life, for example by improving their access to public buildings and transportation systems,

(d) Educating and informing the public of the rights of disabled persons to participate in and contribute to various aspects of economic, social and political life,

(e) Promoting effective measures for the prevention of disability and for the rehabilitation of disabled persons,

Recalling, in particular, paragraph 4 of its resolution 31/123 in which it requested the Secretary-General to elaborate, in consultation with Member States, the specialized agencies and the organizations concerned, a draft programme for the International Year for Disabled Persons,

Recalling its resolution 31/93 of 14 December 1976 on the medium-term plan, in paragraph 6 of which it urged organs to refrain from undertaking new activities not programmed in the medium-term plan and the subsequent programme budget unless a pressing need of an unforeseeable nature arises as determined by the General Assembly,

Having considered with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General on the International Year for Disabled Persons and the draft programme for the Year annexed thereto,

1. Approves the proposals of the Secretary-General, contained in his report, for preparatory work for the period 1978-1979;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to undertake the measures required to implement these proposals, including the necessary information activities prior to and during the International Year for Disabled Persons;

3. Decides that the International Year for Disabled Persons represents such a pressing need of an unforeseeable nature;

4. Decides to establish an Advisory Committee for the International Year for Disabled Persons, composed of the representatives of fifteen Member States to be appointed, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, by the Chairman of the Third Committee, in concurrence with the regional groups;

5. Decides that the task of the Advisory Committee shall be to consider, and to consult with Member States and specialized agencies on, the draft programme for the International Year for Disabled Persons prepared by the Secretary-General;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to convene the Advisory Committee no later than March 1979 at the Headquarters of the United Nations and to submit the report on that meeting to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-fourth session;

7. Appeals to Member States to make in due time generous voluntary contributions for the International Year for Disabled Persons;

8. Encourages Member States and the organizations concerned to take specific action in the preparation of the observance of the International Year for Disabled Persons;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fourth session the item entitled "International Year for Disabled Persons."

Social defence

Technical aid activities

The technical co-operation activities of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice were devoted during 1977 to the development of preventive strategies to minimize the effects of criminality on social and economic development.

During the year, the United Nations sponsored conferences and seminars designed to promote collaborative efforts in crime prevention and the treatment of offenders. These were held at Rome, Italy (10-14 January), Reno, Nevada, United States (23-27 May), San Jose, Costa Rica (31 August-2 September), Uppsala, Sweden (4-7 October) and Bonn, Federal Republic of Germany (10-14 October).

The United Nations continued to collaborate with and provide technical support to the regional institutes for crime prevention and the treatment of offenders. The institutes were in Costa Rica, Egypt and Japan.

Four experts in crime prevention and the treatment of offenders were assigned to Jamaica and Sri Lanka. Two associate experts were assigned to the Latin American regional institute in Costa Rica. Two fellowships were awarded to Sri Lanka and one to Kenya.

Publications in 1977 included the International Review of Criminal Policy, No. 33, 1977, and The Place of Criminal Justice in Developmental Planning: Monographs of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Section.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Crime prevention and control

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly considered a report of the Secretary-General on crime prevention and control, based on detailed quantitative data and other information provided by Member States.

Three general conclusions were set out. First, crime was increasingly a major problem in many countries. Second, in view of the seriousness of crime, which extended across national frontiers, international co-operation must be strengthened. Third, the United Nations had a primary and unique role to play in the development and promotion of relevant research and in the elaboration of policy guidelines and planning strategies in this field.

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 32/60, by which it requested the Economic and Social Council to consider in a comprehensive manner at its first regular 1978 session the question of crime prevention and control, with a view to further co-ordination of the activities of United Nations bodies, and invited the Council to request the Commission for Social Development to consider the functions and long-term programme of work of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and to submit its suggestions and proposals to the Council.

The General Assembly also decided that the members of the Committee should be professional and scientific experts in the field, elected by the Council on the basis of equitable geographical distribution. It entrusted the Committee with preparing United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders by submitting appropriate proposals to the Council. The Assembly endorsed a recommendation of the 1975 Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, requesting the Committee to review the provisional rules of procedure of the Congress.

On 16 November 1977, the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee had approved the resolution without vote, as sponsored by Argentina, Benin, Cuba, Cyprus, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Iraq, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the Upper Volta, Uruguay and Viet Nam. Amendments by Australia and by the United States were accepted by the sponsors.

Report of Fifth Congress on Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Commission for Social Development, at its January/February 1977 session held at Geneva, considered the report of the 1975 Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, together with a draft resolution on this subject proposed by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its 1976 session.¹⁵ The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the submission to the General Assembly of this draft resolution.

However, the Council, on 13 May 1977, with the adoption of resolution 2075(LXII), approved instead a text sponsored by Greece. By this text, the Council submitted to the Assembly three draft resolutions of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, endorsed Committee recommendations on human rights in the administration of justice and recommended that the Secretary-General give urgent consideration to certain recommendations of the Committee on its work programme. This resolution was adopted without vote following approval of the text without vote by the Social Committee on 28 April. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Later in the year, on 8 December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/59) dealing with the report of the Fifth Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. It thereby requested the Secretary-General to implement to the fullest extent possible the conclusions of the Fifth Congress, stressed the need for intensive international and regional co-operation and co-ordination in crime prevention and control, and urged that technical assistance in crime prevention and control be made available to Governments requesting it.

The Assembly requested Member States to give maximum support to the conclusions of the Fifth Congress and to provide information to the Secretary-General on the measures taken in this respect so that he could prepare a report for submission to the Sixth Congress in 1980 and to the General Assembly at its 1980 session.

The Assembly also drew the attention of Member States to the existence of the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence¹⁶ and urged them to contribute to it. It further requested the Secretary-General to make preparations for the 1980 Congress, inter alia by commissioning consultant reports and organizing regional preparatory meetings.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/59 without vote, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, which on 16 November 1977, also without vote, had approved a draft text proposed by its Chairman. This text replaced the draft submitted by the Economic and Social Council in an annex to its resolution 2075(LXII) of 13 May 1977, as well as amendments thereto which had been submitted by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Costa Rica, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Kenya, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, the Philippines, Sweden, Thailand and Uruguay, and also by Australia and Austria.

Prevention of crime and improvement of treatment of offenders

The Commission for Social Development at its 1977 session also considered a report on ways to prevent crime and improve the treatment of offenders, prepared by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in response to a General Assembly request of 18 December 1972.¹⁷ The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council submit to the Assembly the draft resolution proposed by the Committee on this subject.

With the adoption of resolution 2075(LXII) on 13 May 1977 (see section above), the Council among other things transmitted to the Assembly the draft resolution proposed by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the subject of preventing crime and treating offenders.

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/58 by which, inter alia, it took note of the report on ways to prevent crime and improve the treatment of offenders as a guideline for future United Nations activities, invited Member States to use the report in formulating national crime prevention policies and strategies, and urged Member States and international governmental and non-governmental organizations to support the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence and the international and regional institutes in crime prevention and control.

The Assembly adopted the resolution, without vote, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, which on 16 November 1977, also without vote, approved a draft text proposed by the Chairman. This text replaced the draft transmitted by the Economic and Social Council.

Application and implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners

The recommendations of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the range of application and the implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, prepared in response to an Economic and Social Council resolution of 12 May 1976,¹⁸ were submitted to the 1977 session of the Commission for Social Development. The Commission, after considering the report, proposed to the Council, inter alia, the adoption of a draft resolution proposed by the Committee on this subject.

The Council considered the reports of the Commission for Social Development and of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control. On 13 May 1977, the Council adopted without vote, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, resolution 2076(LXII) by which it decided to add a new rule, 95, to the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners approved by the Council on 31 July 1957,¹⁹ in order to widen their scope to all categories of detainees, in particular to any person deprived of liberty, regardless of whether a criminal charge had been lodged against that individual. The new rule also mentioned the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights²⁰ and warned against the application of re-educational or rehabilitative measures to persons not convicted of any criminal offence.

The Council adopted a text sponsored by Portugal, rather than the text transmitted by the Commission. The text was approved by the Social Committee without a vote on 28 April 1977.

Code of conduct for law enforcement officials

The Commission for Social Development at its 1977 session also considered a draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials, prepared by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in response to a General Assembly request of 9 December 1975.²¹ It recommended to the Economic and Social Council the submission to the General Assembly of the draft resolution proposed by the Committee on this subject.

With the adoption of resolution 2075(LXII) on 13 May 1977 (see subsection above on REPORT OF FIFTH CONGRESS ON PREVENTION OF CRIME AND THE TREATMENT OF OFFENDERS), the Council among other things transmitted to the Assembly this draft resolution. (For text of resolution 2075(LXII), see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, decided without vote, by decision 32/419 of 8 December 1977, to request the Secretary-General to transmit the draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials to all Governments for their examination and comments and to examine the draft code, together with the comments received, at its regular 1978 session.

Human rights in the administration of justice

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 2075(LXII) of 13 May 1977, inter alia endorsed the recommendations made by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its 1976 session concerning the formulation of new standards for ensuring human rights and freedoms in the administration of justice (see subsection above on REPORT OF FIFTH CONGRESS ON PREVENTION OF CRIME AND THE TREATMENT OF OFFENDERS).

In December 1977, the General Assembly adopted several resolutions dealing with the protection of human rights, including protection against torture: resolution 32/62 on the drawing up of a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; resolution 32/63 concerning a questionnaire on the implementation of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;²² resolution 32/64 on unilateral declarations by Member States against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; and resolution 32/121 on the protection of the human rights of certain categories of prisoners. (For further details, see p. 713, and, for texts of resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Capital punishment

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly reaffirmed that the main objective to be pursued in the field of capital punishment was that of progressively restricting the number of offences for which the death penalty might be imposed, with a view to the desirability of abolishing this punishment. The Assembly urged Member States to provide the Secretary-General with information for his 1980 reports on capital punishment and invited the Economic and Social Council to report to the Assembly on this question in 1980. Further, the Assembly called upon the Sixth (1980) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to discuss the question of capital punishment and requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to undertake the necessary preparations for this discussion.

The Assembly's action was embodied in resolution 32/61, which was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee. The draft resolution, sponsored by Austria, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, Honduras, Italy, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Senegal, Sweden and Venezuela, was approved by the Third Committee without vote on 16 November 1977. Oral amendments proposed by the USSR were taken into consideration in revisions to

Resolution 32/60, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/359, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,
Noting with concern the increase of crime in many parts of the world,

Conscious that crime in its various forms hampers the economic, social and cultural development of peoples and threatens the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Reaffirming the right of each State to formulate and implement its national policies and programmes in the field of crime prevention and control in accordance with its own needs and priorities,

Recognizing the importance of co-operation among Member States and the efforts made by the international community in the field of crime prevention and control, as well as the need to co-ordinate the action of United Nations bodies in order to achieve greater effectiveness in this field,

Noting the importance of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and the necessity of their thorough preparation,

Recalling its resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950 concerning United Nations activities in the field of crime prevention and control, and taking into account the considerable changes which have taken place in the United Nations since that time,

Noting with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General on crime prevention and control,

1. Requests the Economic and Social Council to consider in a comprehensive manner at its sixty-fourth session the question of crime prevention and control with a view to further co-ordination of the activities of United Nations bodies in this field, in particular the preparation every five years of a United Nations congress on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, the publication of the International Review of Criminal Policy and the provision of technical assistance to interested Member States, at their request;

2. Entrusts the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with the function of preparing the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders by submitting appropriate proposals to the Eco-nomal and Social Council concerning, inter alia, the place and time of the congresses, the provisional agenda, participants and preparation of the necessary documentation;

3. Endorses the recommendation of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, which requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to review at its fifth session the provisional rules of procedure of the Congress with a view to bringing them into conformity with current practice in other United Nations bodies, conferences and congresses convened under the auspices of the United Nations, and requests the Committee to submit the revised draft rules of procedure to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-sixth session;

4. Decides further that the members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control should be elected by the Economic and Social Council for a term of four years, with half the membership being elected every two years, on the basis of the principle of equitable geographical distribution, from among experts who possess the necessary qualifications and professional or scientific knowledge in the field and are nominated by Member States;

5. Invites the Economic and Social Council to request the Commission for Social Development to consider the question of the functions and long-term programme of work of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with a view to further improving United Nations activities in this field, and to submit its suggestions and proposals to the Council.

Draft resolutions adopted by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

Report of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the seriousness of crime problems, which have assumed new forms and dimensions in many countries of the world and are transcending national boundaries,

Concerned about the high social and material cost which crime exacts and the impediment it presents to more wholesome development and a better quality of life for all,

Alarmed at the excesses of those crime control policies which, in certain countries, extend to torture and other abuses negating the basic principles of human rights and of criminal justice itself,

Reaffirming the need to develop effective and equitable policies for crime prevention and control consonant with fundamental human rights and a more rational use of available resources, both human and material,

Recognizing that the various forms of social control for the prevention of crime should take into account differences in traditions, economic and political structures, available resources and levels of development existing among Member States,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention in General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950, the affirmation of United Nations leadership in crime prevention as reflected in Economic and Social Council resolutions 731 F (XXVIII) of 30 July 1959 and 830 D (XXXII) of 2 August 1961 and the call for strengthening international co-operation in crime prevention contained in General Assembly resolution 3021 (XXVII) of 18 December 1972,

Having considered the Report of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Geneva from 1 to 12 September 1975, and the recommendations made by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its fourth session,

1. Endorses the conclusions of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Requests that, in the light of the needs emphasized at the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the Secretary-General implement to the fullest extent possible the conclusions of the Fifth Congress, especially by:

(a) Giving them the widest possible circulation and dissemination and by stimulating international efforts to exchange experience and knowledge;

(b) Gathering and disseminating information concerning crime trends and criminal policies, with special emphasis on economic criminality and abuses of economic power that have a detrimental effect on national economies and international trade, and developing strategies to deal with them;

(c) Providing, to Member States requesting them, advice and assistance for the re-evaluation of their criminal justice systems and for reassessment of the purposes as well as the effectiveness of such systems in relation to national and local requirements;

(d) Elaborating guidelines for the development and implementation of policies designed to make criminal justice systems more responsive to current social needs, to ensure the strict observance of fundamental human rights and to promote a more rational, consistent and integrated approach to the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;

(e) Fostering the exchange among countries of information relating to crime and to the functioning of the criminal justice systems and establishing an international system for a unified informational data base;

(f) Transmitting for appropriate action to the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions, as well as to all other United Nations organs and organizations concerned, those conclusions of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders that fall within their spheres of competence;

3. Stresses the need for intensive co-operation and co-ordination in crime prevention and control among all the United Nations organs and organizations concerned, especially the United Nations Development Programme, the various regional commissions and institutes and the specialized agencies;

4. Urges that technical assistance in crime prevention and control be made available to Governments requesting it as a matter of urgency, and that high priority be given to the provision of regional and interregional technical advisory services and co-operation, particularly in the light of recent directives of the policy-making bodies of the United Nations focusing on regional and intercountry activities, and the proven success of this approach to crime prevention;

5. Invites Member States to give maximum attention and support to the conclusions of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and to secure their utmost effect on national laws and practices;

6. Draws the attention of Member States to the existence of the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence, established in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 1086 B (XXXIX) of 30 July 1965, and urges them to contribute to it;

7. Appeals to all Member States to support international action for crime prevention, especially through the sharing of costs of international meetings, seminars, workshops and training courses and by acting as hosts to regional research centres, and to furnish to the Secretary-General, in time for submission to the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held at Sydney in 1980, information relating to the measures taken to implement the conclusions of the Fifth Congress;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures for the preparation of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and to prepare a report on the information received under paragraph 7 above for submission to the Sixth Congress and to the General Assembly.

Resolution 32/59, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/359, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the seriousness of crime problems, which have assumed new forms and dimensions in many countries of the world and are transcending national boundaries,

Concerned about the high social and material cost which crime exacts and the impediment it presents to a more wholesome development and a better quality of life for all,

Alarmed at the excesses of those crime control policies which, in certain countries, extend to torture and other abuses, negating the basic principles of human rights and of criminal justice itself,

Recalling in this context the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, contained in the annex to its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Recognizing that the various forms of social control for the prevention of crime should take into account differences in traditions, economic and political structures, available resources and levels of development existing among Member States,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in crime prevention under General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950, which was affirmed in Economic and Social Council resolutions 731 F (XXVIII) of 30 July 1959 and 830 D (XXXII) of 2 August 1961, and in the promotion and strengthening of international co-operation in this field in accordance with Assembly resolution 3021 (XXVII) of 18 December 1972,

Having considered the report of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Geneva from 1 to 12 September 1975, and the recommendations made by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its fourth session,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to implement to the fullest extent possible the conclusions of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders by:

(a) Transmitting for appropriate action to the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions, as well as to all other United Nations organs and organizations concerned, those conclusions of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders that fall within their spheres of competence;

(b) Giving them the widest possible circulation and dissemination and stimulating international efforts to exchange experience and knowledge;

(c) Gathering and disseminating information concerning crime trends and criminal policies, with special emphasis on economic criminality and abuses of economic power that have a detrimental effect on national economies and international trade, and by developing strategies to deal with them;

(d) Providing to Member States, at their request, advice and assistance for the re-evaluation of their criminal justice systems and for reassessment of the purposes as well as the effectiveness of such systems in relation to national and local requirements;

(e) Elaborating guidelines for the development and implementation of policies designed to make criminal justice systems more responsive to current social needs, to ensure the strict observance of fundamental human rights and to promote a more rational, consistent and integrated approach to the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;

(f) Fostering the exchange among countries of information relating to crime and to the functioning of the criminal justice systems;

2. Stresses the need for intensive international and regional co-operation in crime prevention and control, as well as co-ordination, among all the United Nations organs and organizations concerned, especially the United Nations Development Programme, the various regional commissions and institutes and the specialized agencies;

3. Urges that technical assistance in crime prevention and control be made available to Governments requesting it, as a matter of urgency, and that high priority be given to the provision of regional and interregional technical advisory services and co-operation, particularly in the light of recent directives of the policy-making bodies of the United Nations focusing on regional and intercountry activities and the proved success of this approach to crime prevention;

4. Invites Member States to give maximum attention and support to the relevant conclusions of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and to provide to the Secretary-General, in time for submission to the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held at Sydney in 1980, information relating to the measures taken in this respect;

5. Draws the attention of Member States to the existence of the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence, established in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 1086 B (XXXIX) of 30 July 1965, and urges them to contribute to it;

6. Appeals to all Member States to support international action for crime prevention, especially through the sharing of costs of international meetings, seminars, workshops and training courses and by acting as hosts to regional research centres;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the information received under paragraph 4 above for submission to the Sixth Congress and to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures for the preparation of the Sixth Congress, inter alia, through the commissioning of reports by consultant experts, selected with due regard to equitable geographic representation, and the organization of regional preparatory meetings, pursuant to existing practice, for Africa, Asia and Latin America, to which all Governments of the region may send experts and to which the Secretary-General shall invite consultant experts from the region concerned.

ANNEX

Draft resolutions adopted by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

Methods and ways likely to be most effective in preventing crime and improving the treatment of offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3021 (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, in which it instructed the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to consider the methods and ways likely to be most effective in preventing crime and improving the treatment of offenders, including recommendations on the measures most appropriate in such areas as law enforcement, judicial procedures and correctional practices,

Concerned about the prevailing trends of criminality in many countries of the world, which show the spread of emerging new forms of serious and organized crimes,

Having considered the report entitled "Methods and ways likely to be most effective in preventing crime and improving the treatment of offenders," contained in annex IV to the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its fourth session,

1. Takes note of the above-mentioned report as a guideline for future United Nations activities directed towards the prevention and control of crime and delinquency and the treatment of offenders;

2. Invites Member States to make use of the report in formulating and implementing national crime prevention policies and strategies;

3. Calls upon Member States, as well as international governmental and non-governmental organizations and specialized agencies, to collaborate fully with the United Nations Secretariat and with each other in pursuance of the goals set out in the report;

4. Urges all Member States, as well as international governmental and non-governmental organizations, to support the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence and the international and regional institutes in crime prevention and control;

5. Recommends that the Secretary-General should draw

Resolution 32/58, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/359, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3021 (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, in which it instructed the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to submit a report on the methods and ways likely to be most effective in preventing crime and improving the treatment of offenders, including recommendations on the measures most appropriate in such areas as law enforcement, judicial procedures and correctional practices,

Concerned about the prevailing trends of criminality in many countries of the world, which show the spread of emerging new forms of serious and organized crime,

1. Takes note of the report entitled "Methods and ways likely to be most effective in preventing crime and improving the treatment of offenders," contained in the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its fourth session, as a guideline for future United Nations activities directed towards the prevention and control of crime and delinquency and the treatment of offenders;

2. Invites Member States to make use of the report, as appropriate, in formulating national crime prevention policies and strategies;

3. Calls upon Member States, as well as international governmental organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies, to collaborate fully in pursuance of the goals set out in the report;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to facilitate the collaboration referred to in paragraph 3 above;

5. Urges all Member States, as well as international governmental and non-governmental organizations, to support the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence and the international and regional institutes in crime prevention and control;

6. Recommends that the Secretary-General should draw on the report in formulating proposals for future medium-term plans in crime prevention and criminal justice.

Resolution 2076(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5964 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2059.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling its resolution 663 C (XXIV) of 31 July 1957 and General Assembly resolution 3144 B (XXV/III) of 14 December 1973,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 3218 (XXIX) of 6 November 1974 and the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment annexed to General Assembly resolution 3452 (XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Aware that despite the increase in the influence of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, violations of the Rules are frequently occurring,

Recalling that in paragraph 6 of its resolution 1993 (LX) of 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to study the range of application of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and to formulate a set of implementing procedures for these Rules,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its fourth session, as well as the report of the Commission for Social Development on its twenty-fifth session,

Decides that a new section E, entitled "Persons arrested or imprisoned without charge," should be added to part II of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, reading as follows:

"Rule 95

"Without prejudice to the provisions of article 9 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, persons arrested or imprisoned without charge shall be accorded the same protection as that accorded under part I and part II, section C. Relevant provisions of part II, section A, shall likewise be applicable where their application may be conducive to the benefit of this special group of persons in custody, provided that no measures shall be taken implying that re-education or rehabilitation is in any way appropriate to persons not convicted of any criminal offence."

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Commission for Social Development on its twenty-fifth session, in so far as it concerns the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its fourth session,

1. Submits to the General Assembly draft resolutions I, II and III of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, reproduced in the annex to the present resolutions;

2. Endorses the recommendations made by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in its report under the heading "Human rights in the administration of justice";

3. Recommends that the Secretary-General, in the formulation of future work programmes of the United Nations, should give urgent consideration to subitems (a), (b) and (d) of the recommendations made by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in its report under the heading "Role and function of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control."

Draft resolutions adopted by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

Code of conduct for law enforcement officials

The General Assembly,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Recalling, in particular, the rights and freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted in its resolution 3452 (XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Recalling further paragraph 3 of its resolution 3453 (XXX) of 9 December 1975, in which it requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to elaborate a draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials,

Mindful that the nature of the functions of law enforcement and the manner in which these are exercised have a direct impact on the quality of life of individuals as well as of society as a whole,

Conscious of the difficult task which law enforcement officials are performing conscientiously and with dignity, in compliance with the principles of human rights,

Aware, nevertheless, of the potential of abuse which the exercise of such awesome duties entails,

Recognizing that the establishment of a code of conduct for law enforcement officials is only one of several important measures for providing the citizenry served by law enforcement officials with protection of all their rights and interests,

Aware that there are additional important principles and prerequisites for the humane performance of law enforcement functions, namely:

(a) That, like all agencies of the criminal justice system, every law enforcement agency should be representative of and responsive and accountable to the community as a whole,

(b) That the effective maintenance of ethical standards among law enforcement officials depends on the existence of a well-conceived, popularly accepted and humane system of laws,

(c) That every law enforcement official is part of the criminal justice system, the aim of which is to prevent and control crime, and that the conduct of every functionary within the system has an impact on the entire system,

(d) That every law enforcement agency, in fulfilment of the first premise of every profession, should be held to the duty of disciplining itself in complete conformity with the principles and standards herein provided and that the actions of law enforcement officials should be responsive to public scrutiny, whether exercised by a review board, a ministry, a procuracy, the judiciary, an ombudsman, a citizens' committee, or any combination thereof, or any other reviewing agency,

(e) That standards as such remain moot unless their content and meaning, through education and training, and through monitoring, become part of the creed of every law enforcement official,

Adopts the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials below, drafted by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its fourth session to serve as a body of principles for observance by law enforcement officials of all nations:

CODE OF CONDUCT FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICIALS

Article 1

Law enforcement officials must at all times fulfil the duty imposed upon them by law, by serving the community and by protecting all persons against illegal acts, consistent with the high degree of responsibility required by their profession.

Commentary:

(a) The term law enforcement official includes all officers of the law, whether appointed or elected, who exercise police powers, especially the powers of arrest and detention;

(b) In countries where police powers are exercised by military authorities, whether uniformed or not, or by state security forces, the definition of law enforcement officials shall be regarded as including officers of such services;

(c) Service to the community is intended to include particularly the rendition of services of assistance to those members of the community who by reason of personal, economic, social or other emergencies are in need of immediate aid;

(d) This provision is intended to cover not only all violent, predatory and harmful acts, but extends to the full range of prohibitions under penal statutes. It extends to conduct by persons not capable of incurring criminal liability.

Article 2

In the performance of their duty, law enforcement officials should respect and protect human dignity and maintain and uphold the human rights of all persons.

Commentary:

(a) The human rights in question derive from national and international law. The human rights under international law are guaranteed under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, and other international instruments;

(b) National commentaries to this provision should identify regional or national provisions identifying these rights.

Article 3

Law enforcement officials may never use more force than necessary in the performance of their duty.

Commentary:

(a) This provision emphasizes that the use of force by law enforcement officials should be exceptional;

(b) While it implies that law enforcement officials may be authorized to use such force as is reasonable under the circumstances for the prevention of crime or in effecting or assisting in the lawful arrest of offenders or suspected offenders, any force used beyond what is essential for these purposes is not tolerable;

(c) National law ordinarily restricts the use of force by law enforcement officials in accordance with a principle of proportionality. It is to be understood that such national principles of proportionality are to be respected in the interpretation of this provision. In no case, however, should this provision be interpreted to authorize the use of force which is disproportionate to the legitimate objective to be achieved.

Article 4

Matters of a confidential nature in the possession of law enforcement officials should be kept confidential, unless the performance of duty, or the needs of justice, require otherwise.

Commentary:

By the nature of their duties, law enforcement officials obtain information which may be potentially harmful to the interests, and especially the reputation, of others. By law, such information can be utilized only for the conduct of legal proceedings. Any divulgence not made in the performance of duty and not serving the needs of justice is improper.

Article 5

No law enforcement official may inflict, instigate or tolerate any act of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, nor may any law enforcement official invoke exceptional circumstances such as a state of war or a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency as a justification of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Commentary:

(a) This prohibition derives from the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by the General Assembly, according to which:

"[Such acts] are an offence to human dignity and shall be condemned as a denial of the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and as a violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights [and other international human rights instruments]";

(b) The Declaration defines torture as follows:

"... torture means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted by or at the instigation of a public official on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or confession, punishing him for an act he has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating him or other persons. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to, lawful sanctions to the extent consistent with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners";

(c) The terms "cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" have not been defined by the General Assembly, but should be interpreted to extend the widest possible protection against abuses, whether physical or mental;

(d) The provision is intended to cover all persons who are in any way involved in conduct covered by this provision.

Article 6

Law enforcement officials having custody of persons needing medical attention should secure such attention and take immediate action to meet the needs of the person in custody.

Commentary:

(a) "Medical attention" refers to services rendered by any medical personnel, including certified medical practitioners and paramedics. While in practice the medical personnel referred to is likely to be attached to the law enforcement operation, the provision should be understood to require law enforcement officials to take into account the judgement of medical personnel from outside the law enforcement operation. This envisages that the person in question has access to medical attention from other medical personnel, including that person's own physician;

(b) All medical personnel must act in conformity with principles of medical ethics.

Article 7

Law enforcement officials must refrain from and rigorously oppose all acts of corruption.

Commentary:

(a) Corruption is intolerable in all phases of life, particularly in the public service agencies. Governments cannot expect to enforce the law among their citizens if they cannot, or will not, enforce their law against their own agents and within their own agencies;

(b) While the definition of corruption must be subject to national law, it should be understood to encompass the commission or omission of an act in the performance of or in connexion with one's duties, in response to gifts, promises or incentives demanded or accepted, or the wrongful receipt of these once the act has been committed or omitted.

Article 8

Law enforcement officials must refrain from and prevent and rigorously oppose all violations of this code by taking appropriate action, to the best of their capability. When violations have occurred, or can be expected to occur, law enforcement officials should report the matter within the chain of command, or take such other actions as are lawfully open to them, including, when necessary, the reporting to any agency with reviewing or remedial power.

Commentary:

(a) The provision seeks to preserve the balance between the need for internal discipline of the agency on which the public safety is largely dependent, on the one hand, and the need for dealing with violations of basic human rights, on the other. A law enforcement official should report violations within the chain of command and take legal action outside the chain of command only when no other remedies are available;

(b) The term "agency with reviewing or remedial power" refers to any agency existing under national law, whether internal to the law enforcement agency, or independent thereof, with statutory, customary or other power to review grievances and complaints arising out of violations within the purview of this code;

(c) While in most countries such agencies are statutory bodies, in some countries the mass media may be regarded as performing similar complaint review functions so that a law enforcement official, on his own initiative, may be justified in bringing his report to public attention by such means, as a last resort, consistent with the laws and customs of the country in question.

Article 9

A law enforcement official who, in fulfilling the obligation of this code, erroneously exceeds the limits of law despite honest and conscientious assessment, is entitled to the full protection afforded by national law.

Article 10

A law enforcement official who complies with the provisions of this code deserves the respect, the full support and the collaboration of the community and of the law enforcement agency in which that official serves, as well as the support of the law enforcement profession.

Resolution 32/61, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/359, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to article 3 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which affirms everyone's right to life, and article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which also affirms the right to life as inherent to every human being,

Recalling its resolutions 1396(XIV) of 20 November 1959, 2393(XXIII) of 26 November 1968, 2857(XXVI) of 20 December 1971 and 3011(XXVII) of 18 December 1972, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 934(XXXV) of 9 April 1963, 1574(L) of 20 May 1971, 1656(LII) of 1 June 1972, 1745(LIV) of 16 May 1973 and 1930(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, which confirm the continuing interest of the United Nations in the study of the question of capital punishment with a view to promoting full respect for everyone's right to life,

Concerned at the fact that only thirty-two Governments responded to the questionnaire addressed to them for the preparation by the Secretary-General of the first five-year report of 1975 on capital punishment, submitted in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1745(LIV),

Noting with concern that, notwithstanding the limited progress mentioned in the first five-year report of the Secretary-General of 1975 on capital punishment, it remains extremely doubtful whether there is any progression towards the restriction of the use of the death penalty, thus justifying the conclusions drawn by the Secretary-General in the aforementioned report,

Considering that the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders is to be held in 1980,

Taking note of the request of the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 1930(LVIII), to the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2857(XXVI), to proceed with the report on practices and statutory rules which may govern the right of a person sentenced to capital punishment to petition for pardon, commutation or reprieve, and to report on these questions to the Council at the latest at its sixty-eighth session, together with the basic report of 1980 on capital punishment,

Expressing the desirability of continuing and expanding the consideration of the question of capital punishment by the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms that, as established by the General Assembly in resolution 2857(XXVI) and by the Economic and Social Council in resolutions 1574(L), 1745(LIV) and 1930(LVIII), the main objective to be pursued in the field of capital punishment is that of progressively restricting the number of offences for which the death penalty may be imposed with a view to the desirability of abolishing this punishment;

2. Urges Member States to provide the Secretary-General with relevant information for his preparation of the second five-year report of 1980 on capital punishment and of the report on practices and statutory rules which may govern the right of a person sentenced to capital punishment to petition for pardon, commutation or reprieve;

3. Invites the Economic and Social Council to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session on its deliberations and recommendations on the basis of the aforementioned reports of the Secretary-General and of the study to be submitted by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in accordance with Council resolution 1930(LVIII);

4. Calls upon the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to discuss the various aspects of the use of capital punishment and the possible restriction thereof, including a more generous application of rules relating to pardon, commutation or reprieve, and to report thereon, with recommendations, to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

5. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to give consideration to the appropriate place on the agenda of the Sixth Congress of the issue mentioned in paragraph 4 above, and to prepare documentation on the question;

6. Decides to consider, with high priority, at its thirty-fifth session the question of capital punishment.

Popular participation and institutional development

Technical aid activities

During 1977, 17 experts, three associate experts and one consultant provided technical assistance in the fields of popular participation and institutional development to Botswana, the Central African Empire, Democratic Yemen, Guatemala, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Oman, Saudi Arabia and Swaziland.

The projects were concerned with integrated rural development, integration of women in development, community development operations and training, evaluation and research. In addition, two technical advisers stationed at United Nations Headquarters and staff members provided short-term advisory services at the request of Governments, individually or as members of multidisciplinary teams.

Twenty fellowships were awarded to nationals of Botswana, the Central African Empire, Democratic Yemen, the Niger and Saudi Arabia. Placement for them was arranged in Egypt, France, Jordan, the Netherlands, Poland and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The second United Nations correspondence seminar on local- and intermediate-level development was conducted for 38 participants from 17 developing countries. Of these, 20 from eight countries and the Economic Commission for Africa attended a workshop held in Berlin from 15 to 26 August 1977.

Agrarian reform and rural development

At its April/May 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2073(LXII) dealing with social and institutional reform as a means of increasing domestic food production and distributing it equitably among the population. By this action the Council recommended, among other things, that Member States should:

(a) assign high priority to rural development, including land reform, as appropriate, in order to increase agricultural production, ensure an adequate food supply and its equitable distribution among the population, and achieve greater impact of the essential inputs, including social services and infrastructure, on food production in rural communities;

(b) strengthen the institutional framework in developing countries so as to build up national capacity to mobilize local resources and directly to ensure the participation of small farmers in food production;

(c) mobilize women and youth more effectively into rural development and food production efforts by providing special programmes for their organization, training and participation; and

(d) improve action research jointly among agricultural and social scientists in order to design more effective programmes at the community and area levels, particularly in linking social and cultural change with the introduction of better agricultural technologies, incentives and planning at the grass-roots level.

Chapter XXIII

Human rights questionsAction against racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, nazism and racial intolerance

During 1977, the United Nations continued to take action against racism, apartheid and all forms of racial discrimination.

The implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination was the subject of a resolution recommended by the Economic and Social Council and adopted by the General Assembly. The resolution urged United Nations organs to increase their support for national liberation movements and the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid.

During the year, preparations for the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were continued. The Assembly decided that the Conference would be held at Geneva in August 1978.

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination continued to consider reports submitted by States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which, by the end of the year, had been ratified or acceded to by 97 States.

The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa reported to the Commission on Human Rights on its mission of investigation to South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe (Southern Rhodesia). The report formed the basis of a resolution of the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council decided that the Working Group, together with the Assembly's Special Committee against Apartheid, should examine treatment of prisoners in southern Africa and police brutality in South Africa.

By the end of 1977, 38 States had ratified or acceded to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid. The World Conference for Action against Apartheid took place at Lagos, Nigeria, in August 1977. In December, the Assembly proclaimed 1978 as International Anti-Apartheid Year.

The Commission on Human Rights continued drafting a declaration on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance. The Assembly asked the Commission to give priority to completing the declaration.

The Commission continued consideration of the report on the adverse effects on human rights resulting from aid to colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa, prepared by a Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The Commission asked the Rapporteur to prepare a provisional general list identifying individuals, institutions and representatives of States who were giving political, military or economic aid to those regimes.

The International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination was observed on 21 March 1977 at a special meeting held at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

Details of these and other actions are described in the sections below.

International action to combat racism and racial discriminationDecade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination*Implementation of the Programme for the Decade

On 10 December 1973, the General Assembly launched the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in an effort to ensure the rapid eradication of all forms of racial discrimination. When approving the Programme for the Decade on 2 November 1973,¹ the Assembly asked the Economic and Social Council to assume responsibility for co-ordination and evaluation of the activities undertaken in support of the Programme.

On 11 March 1977, at its thirty-third session, the Commission on Human Rights decided to postpone until 1978 consideration of the item on implementation of the Programme for the Decade, which had been referred to it by the Economic and Social Council in 1976.

At its April/May 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council discussed the implementation of the Programme. Among the documents before it was the fourth annual report of the Secretary-General on Decade activities, containing information on actions, suggestions and trends emerging from the deliberations of United Nations organs and bodies, including the Assembly's Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, and the specialized agencies concerned with the question of racial discrimination and apartheid.

The report summarized: activities undertaken or contemplated during the Decade under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights with regard to the elimination of racial discrimination; information submitted by non-governmental organizations in consultative status concerning activities undertaken or contemplated during the Decade; and a report on the actions of the United Nations Office of Public Information with respect to the Decade.

The Council also had before it a report of the Secretary-General summarizing information on their activities relating to the Decade received from the following eight States: Australia, Kuwait, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and the Upper Volta.

On 12 May 1977, by resolution 2056(LXII), the Economic and Social Council recommended to the General Assembly for adoption a draft resolution on implementation of the Programme for the Decade. Resolution 2056(LXII) was adopted by a roll-call vote of 47 to 0, with 5 abstentions. The sponsors of the text were Algeria, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Kenya, Mauritania, Nigeria, Rwanda, Somalia, the Sudan, Tunisia, Uganda, the Upper Volta and Zaire. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Later in the year, at its August/September 1977 session, acting under a 1976 resolution of the Commission on Human Rights,² the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities decided, as part of its contribution to the Decade, to consider ways and means of using national courts, administrative tribunals and domestic fora, including legislatures, to help implement United Nations resolutions on racism and related matters. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report in 1978 on how United Nations instruments had been used within States.

When the General Assembly discussed the implementation of the Programme for the Decade at its 1977 session, it had before it a report of the Secretary-General containing an analysis of replies to a questionnaire received from eight Member States—the Congo, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Mauritius and Portugal—on activities undertaken in connexion with the Decade.

Also before the Assembly was the text of the draft resolution on the Decade recommended by the Economic and Social Council. The discussion on the text took place in the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which on 6 October approved the text without vote.

On 7 November 1977, the Assembly adopted, without vote, the text recommended by the Third Committee as its resolution 32/10. By this resolution, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed its resolution of 13 December 1976³ on the implementation of the Programme for the Decade and drew the attention of Member States and international and other organizations to the need to respect and implement the provisions of that resolution.

The Assembly again condemned the policies of apartheid and racial discrimination prevailing in southern Africa and elsewhere, and renewed its strong support for oppressed peoples struggling to liberate themselves from racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, colonialism and alien domination. It called once again upon all Governments which had not done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that owned and operated enterprises in southern Africa, in order to put an end to such enterprises.

The Assembly urged United Nations organs and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to strengthen and enlarge the scope of their activities in support of the objectives of the Programme for the Decade, in particular by intensifying their educational and information campaigns, by increasing their material and moral support to national liberation movements and the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and by offering all assistance to, and co-operating with, the Secretary-General to ensure the success of the 1978 World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see subsection immediately below).

³ Ibid., pp. 571-72, text of resolution 31/77.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to do his utmost to give the Programme for the Decade the fullest publicity, having regard to the need to focus international attention on the struggle against racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and also renewed its call for adequate resources to enable the Secretary-General to undertake the activities entrusted to him under the Programme for the Decade. It appealed again to Governments and private organizations for voluntary contributions in support of the Programme's activities. (For text of resolution 32/10, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Australia, Austria, Canada, Greece, Japan, New Zealand, Portugal, Spain and Uruguay were among those expressing reservations, despite the absence of a vote. Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine States members of the European Economic Community (EEC), expressed the most repeated reservation—that the provision calling on Governments to take legislative and other measures in respect of their nationals and corporations to end enterprises in southern Africa gave rise to legal difficulties since the subject essentially fell within the competence of the Security Council.

Japan also expressed reservations on the provision urging, among other things, increased material and moral support to national liberation movements. Israel and the United States said they wished the fact that they had not participated in the adoption of the resolution to be recorded.

1978 World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination provided that, as a major feature of the Decade, a world conference to combat racism and racial discrimination should be convened not later than 1978 and that the Economic and Social Council would act as the preparatory committee for the Conference.

During 1977, the Council continued its preparations for the World Conference. At its organizational session in January, the Council decided to enlarge the membership of the Preparatory Sub-Committee for the Conference which it had established in 1976⁴ from 16 to 23 members, authorized the Council President to appoint the members from specific geographical regions, and authorized the Sub-Committee to meet at United Nations Headquarters, New York, in March 1977. The decision (206(ORG-77)) was adopted, without vote, on a proposal by the Council President, amended by Algeria, Somalia and the Sudan to indicate that the Council wished the Sub-Committee to meet in New York for two weeks.

On 4 February 1977, the Government of Ghana informed the Secretary-General that, for financial reasons, it was obliged to withdraw its offer to host the Conference. The Council, on 23 February, at its third special session held to consider preparations for the Conference, adopted without vote resolution 2046(S-III), as proposed by the President, by which it took note of the letter from Ghana and amended its 1976 resolution on Conference preparations⁵ by authorizing the appointment of a 23-member, instead of a 16-member, Preparatory Sub-Committee; in addition, by deleting reference to the Government of Ghana from the resolution, that country was no longer involved in direct consultations on the preparations.

(For text of resolution 2046(S-III), see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below; for membership, see APPENDIX III.)

The Preparatory Sub-Committee met at Headquarters from 14 to 25 March 1977 and completed the preparations for the Conference, in particular the provisional agenda, rules of procedure, timing, cost, representation at the Conference and documentation. The report on these arrangements was submitted to the Economic and Social Council.

The Council considered the Sub-Committee's report at its April/May 1977 session. By resolution 2057(LXII), adopted on 12 May, the Council approved the draft provisional agenda and the draft provisional rules of procedure for the World Conference. It requested the Secretary-General to appoint, after consultation with regional groups, a Secretary-General of the Conference, and made recommendations to the General Assembly regarding invitations to participants and observers at the Conference. It recommended to the Assembly that Arabic be included as a language of the Conference and that the World Conference be held in Geneva or New York or any other place which might be suggested by any Government offering to act as host. It further recommended that the duration of the Conference be two weeks in August 1978, subject to adjustment if an offer was received and accepted from a Government to host the Conference. In the annex to the resolution, the Council decided on the nature of the documentation for the Conference.

⁵ Ibid.

The resolution recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly. Among other things, it would have the Assembly endorse the Conference arrangements proposed by the Economic and Social Council, specify which organizations should be invited to the Conference as participants and observers and authorize the defrayment of the costs from the regular budget of the United Nations.

The resolution, with an oral drafting change by the Philippines, was adopted, by consensus, on a proposal by Algeria, Egypt, Gabon, Kenya, Mauritania, Nigeria, Rwanda, Somalia, the Sudan, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda and the Upper Volta.

An annex to the draft resolution, specifying the categories of non-governmental organizations to be invited and amending the provisional rules of procedure of the Conference accordingly, was proposed by the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo and Venezuela at the Council's resumed session on 2 December 1977. It was adopted without vote as decision 290(LXIII).

When the Third Committee considered the draft resolution submitted by the Economic and Social Council, it decided without objection, on a proposal by Yugoslavia, to recommend that the Conference be held in Geneva. The draft resolution was approved with that addition on 6 December by a recorded vote of 108 to 1, with 5 abstentions.

On 16 December, the General Assembly adopted this text as resolution 32/129, by which it endorsed the Council's resolution and its annex and decided to convene the Conference at Geneva from 14 to 25 August 1978. It requested the Secretary-General to invite all States and the United Nations Council for Namibia to participate in the Conference.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to invite as observers to the Conference: representatives of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU); representatives of organizations with standing invitations to participate in conferences convened under United Nations auspices; the specialized agencies concerned and other interested United Nations organs and committees; interested intergovernmental organizations; and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

The Assembly decided that the costs of the Conference should be defrayed from the United Nations regular budget and that Arabic should be one of the working languages. It called on the Secretary-General to give maximum publicity to the Conference, and on all States to participate actively in its proceedings.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/129 by a recorded vote of 131 to 1, with 1 abstention. (For voting details and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On the same date, by decision 32/433, the Assembly amended the Conference's provisional agenda to include a reference to the important role of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁶ in the international struggle against racial discrimination. That decision, based on a recommendation by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination transmitted by a note verbale of 26 August 1977, was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, where, on 6 December, on an oral proposal by Yugoslavia, it had been approved without vote.

The United States said that, since there had been no attempt to accommodate the views of those that had wished to ensure that the Conference would remain true to its original purpose, it had been unable to participate in the vote or in other decisions associated with it. Israel said it opposed the text for the same reason. Belgium (speaking on behalf of the nine members of EEC) and Canada, on the other hand, said they were conscious of efforts made to restore the Decade and the Conference to their original purposes and had reason to believe that the Conference would be able to be held within the programme established without the introduction of extraneous elements.

The General Assembly linked its Special Committee against Apartheid with the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination when it adopted resolution 32/105 B on 14 December, designating the year beginning 21 March 1978 as International Anti-Apartheid Year. The Special Committee was, among other action requested of it, urged to participate effectively in the Conference. (See p. 152; for text of resolution 32/105 B, see pp. 164-66.)

Other international conferences to combat racial discrimination

The Commission on Human Rights decided on 4 March 1977 to send members of its Ad

Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa (see subchapter below) to the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, to be held in Lagos, Nigeria, in August 1977 (see p. 148).

By resolution 2087(LXII) adopted on 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council welcomed the offer of the Nigerian Government to host the World Conference and invited the Special Committee against Apartheid to submit the report and documents of that Conference to the 1978 World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see subsection immediately above.)

(For text of resolution 2087(LXII), see p. 163.)

The Chairman of the Commission attended the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo, Mozambique, in May 1977 (see p. 183). The Economic and Social Council had also decided that a member of the Division of Human Rights should attend the Maputo Conference when it adopted decision 215(LXII) on 22 April 1977. The Council President had suggested that the Council approve a recommendation to that effect by the Preparatory Sub-Committee for the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

Elimination of racial discrimination

Status of the International Convention on Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly on 21 December 1965,⁷ entered into force on 4 January 1969.

On 31 December 1977, the Convention had been ratified or acceded to by the following 97 States: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, the Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, the Holy See, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, the Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Six of the States parties—Costa Rica, Ecuador, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Uruguay—had made declarations, under article 14 of the Convention, recognizing the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to receive and consider communications from individuals or groups of individuals within their jurisdiction claiming to be victims of a violation by the State party concerned of any of the rights set forth in the Convention. Under article 14, the Committee was to be competent to exercise this function when at least 10 States parties were bound by such declarations.

At the 1977 regular session of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the status of the Convention, giving a list of States which had signed, ratified or acceded to it, as well as the texts of declarations and/or reservations made by some States at the time of ratification or accession.

By a resolution adopted on 7 November 1977 without a vote, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General, expressed its satisfaction with the increase in the number of States which had ratified or acceded to the Convention, and reaffirmed its conviction that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and implementation of its provisions were necessary for the realization of the objectives of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. It appealed to States which had not become parties to the Convention to ratify or accede to it, and appealed to States parties to study the possibility of making the declaration provided for in article 14.

This last appeal was the result of an amendment proposed by Ecuador, Sweden and Uruguay when the draft was discussed in the Third Committee in October 1977. The amendment was approved by a roll-call vote, requested by Costa Rica, of 34 to 1, with 73 abstentions. The Committee approved the amended text on 6 October by a roll-call vote, requested by the

The Assembly adopted the resolution recommended by the Third Committee as resolution 32/11.

(For voting details and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By another action of 7 November (resolution 32/13), the Assembly, among other things, invited States parties to the Convention to observe fully its provisions, and States not parties to ratify it or accede thereto.

(For text of resolution 32/13, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below, under heading REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION.)

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up in 1969 in accordance with the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, held its fifteenth session at Vienna, Austria, from 28 March to 14 April and its sixteenth session at United Nations Headquarters from 1 to 19 August 1977. The Committee submitted its eighth annual report to the General Assembly's 1977 session, which opened on 20 September.

At its 1977 sessions, the Committee continued its consideration of the biennial reports and additional information submitted to it by States parties to the Convention on the legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures they had taken to implement the provisions of the Convention. It examined 30 initial or periodic reports, and postponed consideration of reports from Austria, Belgium, India, Iraq, Nepal and Peru on which the documentation was not available in all working languages. Representatives of all 30 reporting States participated in the consideration of the reports and submitted further information in reply to questions raised by the Committee.

The Committee's report to the General Assembly summarized the views expressed by the Committee members and the statements made by representatives of States parties. It drew the attention of the Assembly to the fact that 35 reports were outstanding. The Committee also informed the Assembly of its decision to ask States parties to give adequate information on the measures they had adopted in fulfilment of article 7 of the Convention, which requested them to undertake to adopt effective measures, particularly in the fields of teaching, education, culture and information, designed to, inter alia, combat prejudices leading to racial discrimination.

Four decisions arising out of States parties' reports were adopted by the Committee on information supplied: by the Syrian Arab Republic on the situation in the Golan Heights; by Panama relating to the situation in the Panama Canal Zone; by Jordan relating to the situation in the Israeli-occupied West Bank; and by Cyprus relating to conditions in that State. By separate decisions, the Committee expressed its concern that these States were unable to or had been prevented from fulfilling their obligations under the Convention in parts of their national territories, and requested the Assembly to ensure that no practices of racial discrimination arising out of conditions in these States were permitted (see also p. 695).

The Committee considered the application of the provisions of the Convention to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and non-self-governing territories after its three working groups had examined documents supplied by the Trusteeship Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁸ The Committee, while endorsing the general approach of the Special Committee, expressed regret that the Special Committee did not supply sufficient information on racial discrimination in those territories and reiterated its request that the Special Committee obtain and transmit the desired information.

Having postponed taking a decision in 1976, the Committee considered its contribution to the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. It was decided that two documents should be prepared for the 1978 World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination: a popular publication on the Convention, and a study on the importance of encouraging wider acceptance and more complete implementation of it. The Secretary-General was requested to draw the matter to the attention of the Assembly's Third Committee, when it took up the question of the World Conference. It was suggested that the agenda of the Conference might be amended to include reference to the Convention (see above, decision 32/433).

On 7 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution, by the operative provisions of which it took note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and in particular the section of the report relating to Trust Territories and non-self-governing territories. It drew the attention of the relevant United Nations bodies to the Committee's opinions and recommendations and stressed the necessity of providing the Committee with sufficient information to enable it to discharge its responsibilities towards those territories.

The Assembly commended the Committee for its decision to ask States parties to include information in their reports on the measures they had adopted in the fields of teaching, education, culture and information to combat racial prejudice, and welcomed the Committee's decision to give general distribution to the reports of States parties and other official Committee documents. It welcomed the Committee's efforts to focus greatest attention on the just cause of the peoples struggling against the oppression of the colonialist and racist regimes in southern Africa, and invited States parties to provide information to the Committee on their relations with those regimes, as well as on the demographic composition of their own population.

The Assembly expressed grave concern that some States parties were prevented from fulfilling their obligations under the Convention in parts of their territories, endorsed the relevant decisions of the Committee and invited States parties to observe fully the provisions of the Convention and other international instruments and agreements to which they were parties concerning the elimination of all forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin.

The Assembly took these decisions by adopting resolution 32/13—by a recorded vote of 132 to 1—on the recommendation of the Third Committee, where the text was sponsored by Argentina, Cyprus, Egypt, Ghana, India, Madagascar, Morocco, Nigeria, the Philippines, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yugoslavia. The text was approved in the Third Committee on 26 October by a vote of 103 to 1, with 1 abstention. At the request of the Federal Republic of Germany, a separate vote was taken on the operative paragraph by which the Assembly expressed its grave concern that some States, for reasons beyond their control, were prevented from fulfilling their obligations under the Convention in parts of their territories and endorsed the relevant decisions of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. It was approved by a roll-call vote of 70 to 1, with 28 abstentions; the roll call was requested by the Syrian Arab Republic. The same paragraph was also adopted separately in the Assembly by a recorded vote of 100 to 1, with 28 abstentions.

International Day

The General Assembly's Special Committee against Apartheid held a special meeting on 21 March 1977 to mark the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, as proclaimed in 1966 by the Assembly to commemorate an incident at Sharpeville, South Africa, on 21 March 1960, in which 69 demonstrators against the pass laws were killed and 180 were wounded. Attending were representatives of permanent missions to the United Nations, of specialized agencies and of OAU.

Statements were made by, among others, the United Nations Secretary-General, the President of the Security Council and the Chairmen of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, of the Commission on Human Rights, and of the Special Committee against Apartheid. The Executive Secretary of OAU also spoke, as well as representatives of the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania. Many messages of support were received from world leaders and Governments.

By a resolution adopted on 14 December 1977, the General Assembly proclaimed the year beginning 21 March 1978 International Anti-Apartheid Year. It endorsed a programme designed to intensify the campaign against apartheid, recommended by the Special Committee against Apartheid, calling on all Governments to, among other things, establish national committees for International Anti-Apartheid Year, to encourage the information media to give maximum publicity to the Year, and to encourage parliaments to hold special sessions—perhaps on 21 March 1978—devoted to the Year. Resolution 32/10, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/307, adopted without vote by Assembly on 7 November 1977, meeting 60.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolve to achieve the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling that, in its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973 and in the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination annexed thereto, it called for a continuing effort by all peoples, Governments and institutions to eradicate racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Noting that, despite the support given to the Programme for the Decade by the international community, intolerable conditions continue to prevail in southern Africa and elsewhere, including the denial of the right to self-determination and the inhuman and odious application of apartheid and racial discrimination,

Reiterating its conviction that a serious threat is posed to international peace and security by the continued defiance by the racist regimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia of the resolutions of the General Assembly and of various other organs and bodies of the United Nations relating to the policies of apartheid, racial discrimination and the illegal occupation of Namibia,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 31/77 of 13 December 1976 regarding the implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and draws the attention of Member States, international organizations, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to the need to respect and implement the provisions of that resolution;

2. Condemns once again the policies of apartheid, racism and racial discrimination which prevail in southern Africa and elsewhere, including the denial of the right to self-determination and the inhuman and odious application of apartheid and racial discrimination;

3. Renews its strong support for oppressed peoples struggling to liberate themselves from racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, colonialism and alien domination;

4. Appeals to all States to continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General by submitting their reports, when due, in compliance with the provisions of paragraph 18 (e) of the Programme for the Decade;

5. Calls once again upon all Governments which have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in southern Africa, in order to put an end to such enterprises;

6. Urges United Nations organs, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to strengthen and enlarge the scope of their activities in support of the objectives of the Programme for the Decade, in particular by:

(a) Intensifying their educational and information campaigns;
(b) Increasing their material and moral support to the national liberation movements and the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid;

(c) Offering all assistance to and co-operating with the Secretary-General to ensure the success of the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to do his utmost to give the Programme for the Decade the fullest publicity, having regard to the need to focus international attention on the struggle against racism, racial discrimination and apartheid;

8. Renews its call for adequate resources to be made available to the Secretary-General to enable him to undertake the activities entrusted to him under paragraph 18 (g) of the Programme for the Decade;

9. Appeals once again to Governments and private organizations to make voluntary contributions in support of the activities envisaged in the Programme for the Decade;

10. Decides to consider at its thirty-third session, as a matter of high priority, an item entitled "Implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination."

The Economic and Social Council,
Having reviewed the provisions of its resolution 1990(LX) of 11 May 1976 as amended by its decision 206(ORG-77) of 14 January 1977 regarding the membership of the Preparatory Sub-Committee for the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Taking note of the communication dated 4 February 1977 from the Government of Ghana to the Secretary-General regarding the venue of the said Conference,

Decides to replace the introductory phrase of paragraph 4 and subparagraph 4 (a) of resolution 1990(LX) by the following text:

"4. Authorizes the President of the Economic and Social Council, in consultation with regional groups, to appoint a committee of twenty-three States Members of the United Nations, which, acting as the preparatory sub-committee of the Council:

Resolution 2057(LXII), as recommended by 13 powers, E/L.1765, and as orally amended by Philippines and by sponsors, adopted by consensus by Council on 12 May 1977, meeting 2058.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973 and its own resolution 1990(LX) of 11 May 1976,

Recalling also its decision 206(ORG-77) of 14 January 1977 and its resolution 2046(S-III) of 23 February 1977,

Having considered the report of its Preparatory Sub-Committee for the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

1. Approves the draft provisional agenda and the draft provisional rules of procedure for the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint, at the earliest possible time, after consultation with regional groups, a Secretary-General of the Conference and further requests that such an appointment be made at the level of Assistant Secretary-General, in order to ensure the appropriate capacity for co-ordination and interaction with Member States and within the United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

3. Recommends to the General Assembly that invitations to participate in the Conference be extended to:

(a) All States;

(to) The United Nations Council for Namibia in accordance with General Assembly resolution 31/149 of 20 December 1976;

4. Recommends to the General Assembly that the following be invited to participate as observers:

(a) Representatives of national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974;

(b) Representatives of organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate in the sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and 31/152 of 20 December 1976;

(c) The specialized agencies concerned as well as interested organs and bodies of the United Nations;

(d) Interested intergovernmental organizations;

(e) The Special Committee against Apartheid;

lic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia Against: Israel.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973 and 32/10 of 7 November 1977 on the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, resolution 31/81 of 13 December 1976 on the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and resolution 32/11 of 7 November 1977 on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on its fifteenth and sixteenth sessions submitted under article 9, paragraph 2, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Noting with appreciation the decisions taken by the Committee at its sixteenth session about its contribution to the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination by preparing a document on the Convention and a relevant study on the acceptance and implementation of the Convention,

Stressing the importance of the undertaking of States parties to the Convention to engage in no act or practice of racial discrimination against any person, groups of persons or national or ethnic minorities, and to ensure that all public authorities and public institutions, national and local, shall act in conformity with this obligation, in accordance with relevant provisions of the Convention,

Noting the decisions adopted by the Committee at its fifteenth and sixteenth sessions,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

2. Takes note also of the part of the report relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories and to all other Territories to which General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 applies, draws the attention of the relevant United Nations bodies to the opinions and recommendations of the Committee relating to those Territories and stresses the necessity of providing the Committee with sufficient information in order to enable it to discharge fully its responsibilities under article 15 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

3. Commends the Committee for furthering the implementation of the Convention by requesting the States parties to the Convention to include in their reports under article 9 information on the measures which they have adopted to give effect to article 7 of the Convention in the fields of teaching, education, culture and information with a view to combating prejudices which lead to racial discrimination, promoting understanding, tolerance and friendship among nations and racial or ethnic groups, and propagating the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention;

4. Welcomes decision 2(XVI) of 9 August 1977 in which the Committee decided in principle to give general distribution to the reports of States parties to the Convention and other official documents of the Committee which would bring about greater awareness by world public opinion of the problem of racial discrimination and mobilize it on the realization of the goals and principles contained in the Convention;

5. Welcomes all efforts by the Committee to focus the greatest attention on the just cause of the peoples struggling against the oppression of the colonialist and racist regimes in southern Africa;

6. Invites States parties to the Convention to provide necessary information to the Committee in accordance with article 9 of the Convention, taking into account in particular:

(a) General recommendation III of 18 August 1972 and decision 2(XI) of 7 April 1975 on the status of their relations with the racist regimes in southern Africa;

(b) General recommendation IV of 16 August 1973 on the demographic composition of their population;

(c) General recommendation V of 13 April 1977 on measures adopted to give effect to article 7 of the Convention;

7. Expresses its grave concern that some States parties to the Convention, for reasons beyond their control, are prevented from fulfilling their obligation under the Convention in parts of their respective territories, endorses the relevant decisions of the Committee and recalls General Assembly resolution 2784(XXVI) of 6 December 1971 and Assembly resolution 3266(XXIX) of 10 December 1974 concerning the situation in the Golan Heights;

8. Invites the States parties to the Convention to observe fully the provisions of the Convention and other international instruments and agreements to which they are parties concerning the elimination of all forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin;

9. Invites all States which are not yet parties to the Convention to ratify or accede to it and, pending such ratification or accession, to be guided by the basic provisions of the Convention in their internal and foreign policies.

Apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

The International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, adopted by the General Assembly on 30 November 1973,⁹ entered into force on 18 July 1976.

The Assembly, by a resolution of 13 December 1976,¹⁰ welcomed the entry into force of the Convention and, inter alia, invited the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to implement article IX of the Convention by appointing three Commission members to consider reports submitted by States parties on measures they had taken to give effect to the provisions of the Convention.

The Economic and Social Council therefore decided on 14 January 1977, by decision 204(ORG-77), to refer the Assembly's 1976 resolution to the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-third session in 1977, on the understanding that the group appointed under article IX should meet for a period of not more than five days either before or after that session of the Commission. The decision was part of the Council's work programme proposed by its President following consultations and adopted without vote.

⁹ See Y.U.N., 1973, pp. 103-5, resolution 3068(XXVIII), annexing text of Convention.

¹⁰ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 577, text of resolution 31/80.

The Chairman of the Commission appointed Cuba, Nigeria and the Syrian Arab Republic as members of the group. By a resolution of 11 March 1977, the Commission decided that the group should meet for five days before the February/March 1978 session. It invited the States parties to submit their reports to the group through the Secretary-General and asked United Nations organs to provide information relevant to compiling a list of individuals and organizations alleged to be responsible for crimes enumerated in the Convention.

By a resolution of 4 March 1977, the Commission inter alia requested the General Assembly to invite the United Nations Council for Namibia to study, in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), the possibility of Namibia's becoming a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights,¹¹ and in particular to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.

The Secretary-General, in his report to the 1977 session of the General Assembly on the status of the Convention, outlined the legislative, administrative and other action taken by States parties to implement the 1976 Assembly resolution. He included a list of States which had signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention. Also before the Assembly were reports of the Assembly's Special Committee against Apartheid, containing details of activities undertaken during the year (see p. 148), a report on the proceedings of the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos, Nigeria, from 22 to 26 August 1977 (see p. 148), and a report on the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo, Mozambique, from 16 to 21 May 1977 (see p. 183).

On 7 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 32/12, by which, inter alia, it declared that it was convinced that the proclamation of 1978 as International Anti-Apartheid Year (see p. 152) would contribute to the aims of the Convention. It took note of the proceedings of the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and of the World Conference against Apartheid and also of the General Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Apartheid, Racism and Colonialism in Southern Africa, held at Lisbon, Portugal, from 16 to 19 June 1977.

Convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa demanded all necessary support by the international community, the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention, expressed satisfaction with the increased number of States which had ratified it or acceded thereto, and asked States which were not parties to the Convention to accede to it as soon as possible.

The Assembly's resolution was adopted, by a recorded vote of 101 to 0, with 25 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee which, on 11 October 1977, approved the text, by a roll-call vote of 88 to 0, with 26 abstentions. The resolution was sponsored by Algeria, Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guyana, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Kenya, Madagascar, Mongolia, Nigeria, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yugoslavia.

Costa Rica requested a separate vote on a preambular paragraph added orally by the sponsors by which the Assembly took note of a document referring to the General Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted at Lisbon in June. Costa Rica said it had reservations about reference to a document produced by a non-United Nations conference. Belgium (speaking on behalf of the nine countries of the European Economic Community (ECC)), Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Iran, Mexico, Nicaragua and Peru also voiced reservations on that paragraph. It was approved by 65 votes to 9, with 24 abstentions.

Belgium added that the EEC countries maintained their objections to the Convention itself, which were essentially of a legal character, as did Australia, Austria, Canada, Fiji, Israel, Japan, New Zealand, Portugal, Turkey and the United States.

The Assembly also urged all those Governments which had not done so to become parties to the Convention during International Anti-Apartheid Year when it adopted resolution 32/105 B on 14 December 1977. (For text of resolution, see pp. 164-66.)

On 31 December 1977, the Convention had been ratified or acceded to by the following Report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa

At the beginning of its session in 1977, the Commission on Human Rights, by telegram, requested the Secretary-General to employ whatever means he considered most appropriate to save the lives of Aaron Mushimba and Hendrik Shikongo, members of SWAPO in danger of death before the law courts of South Africa.

In March 1977, the Commission considered the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, containing a detailed analysis of human rights violations in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, based on information gathered by the Group in the course of a mission of investigation in June/July 1976.

On 4 March, the Commission adopted a three-part resolution by which, in the first part, it inter alia requested the Group to institute an inquiry concerning persons who had been guilty of the crime of apartheid or a serious violation of human rights in Namibia and to inform the Commission on the subject; and it recommended that the Economic and Social Council draw the attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council to the desirability of adopting specific measures to put an end to the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa.

The second and third parts of the resolution were adopted and submitted in the form of draft resolutions to the Economic and Social Council; the former dealt with examination of the treatment of prisoners in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, and the latter with the authority of the General Assembly as Administering Authority for Namibia.

On 13 May 1977, on the recommendation of its Social Committee—which had approved, on 6 May, by a roll-call vote of 36 to 1, with 5 abstentions, the text proposed by the Commission—the Council adopted decision 232(LXII), thereby endorsing the Commission's recommendation on the desirability of adopting specific measures, including those provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,¹² to put an end to the illegal occupation of Namibia. The United Kingdom requested a vote on the draft decision in the Social Committee and Cuba asked that it be taken by roll call in both the Committee and the Council. The Council adopted decision 232(LXII) by 43 votes to 1, with 5 abstentions.

On the same date, acting on the second and third parts of the Commission's resolution, the Council adopted three resolutions (2082 A-C (LXII)). The Council took this action on the recommendation of its Social Committee, where Nigeria, the Philippines and Togo had introduced, as a separate resolution (2082 B (LXII)), a provision of one of the Commission's texts recommending that the General Assembly should declare 1978 International Anti-Apartheid Year.

The Social Committee approved both the amendment and the draft resolution without vote on 6 May.

By resolution 2082 A (LXII), the Council approved the decision taken by the Commission on Human Rights to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts. Moreover, it decided that the Group, in conjunction with the Special Committee against Apartheid, should examine the treatment of prisoners in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe; Nigeria, the Philippines and Togo added the provision that the mandate should include the examination of the deaths of a number of detainees, as well as police brutality during peaceful demonstrations against apartheid in South Africa since the Soweto massacre of 16 June 1976, with a view to submitting a report. The Social Committee had, on 6 May, approved the three-power amendment and the text as a whole without vote.

Resolutions 2082 A and B (LXII) were adopted by the Council together, without a vote.

By resolution 2082 C (LXII), the Council suggested that the General Assembly should consider the applicability to United Nations organs of the solemn obligation of the administering powers to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those territories against abuses; in this connexion, it should consider the desirability of exercising fully its powers in its capacity—recognized by the International Court of Justice in 1971—as Administering Authority for Namibia, either directly or through the United Nations Council for Namibia.

The Social Committee approved the draft resolution on 6 May by 28 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. It was adopted by the Council by 36 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. The three-part draft resolution as a whole was then adopted without a vote.

Study of ways to ensure implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid and racial discrimination

The Commission on Human Rights at its 1977 session decided to postpone until 1978 consideration of a study of ways and means of ensuring the implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid, racism and racial discrimination. The study was to be carried out jointly by the Commission and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

Later in the year, by a decision taken on 31 August 1977, the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to prepare, for the 1978 session, a preliminary document setting forth information on how various United Nations instruments, including declarations and resolutions, had been used in national courts, administrative tribunals and domestic fora, including legislative fora, with suggestions for their effective future use in the specific field of racial discrimination. It requested a similar document on action taken by non-governmental organizations, such as churches, made unions and commercial bodies, on shareholder action to discourage collaboration by banks and transnational corporations with colonial and racist regimes.

By a resolution of 7 November 1977, the General Assembly recorded that it awaited with interest the study being undertaken by the Sub-Commission on the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the right of peoples under colonial and foreign domination to self-determination (see p. 702).

(For text of resolution 32/14, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Related General Assembly decisions

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/65, by which it took note of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa concerning the deaths of detainees and police brutality in South Africa and condemned the South African regime for its continuing violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the 1975 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.¹³

By resolution 32/122 of 16 December, the Assembly demanded the release of all individuals detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle against apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, colonialism, aggression and foreign occupation. It asked the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give particular attention to their release.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3068(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, by which it adopted and opened for signature and ratification the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and its resolutions 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 and 31/80 of 13 December 1976,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and is a crime against humanity and that its continued intensification and expansion seriously disturb and threaten international peace and security,

Convinced that ratification of and accession to the Convention on a universal basis and implementation of its provisions without delay are necessary for the achievement of the goals of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Convinced that the proclamation of 1978 as International Anti-Apartheid year will contribute to the aims of the Convention,

Bearing in mind the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Taking note of the document referring to the General Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Apartheid, Racism and Colonialism in Southern Africa, held at Lisbon from 16 to 19 June 1977,

Convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa against apartheid, colonialism and racial discrimination and the effective implementation of their inalienable and legitimate rights, including their right to self-determination, demand all necessary support by the international community,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Expresses its satisfaction with the increase in the number of States which have ratified the Convention or acceded thereto;

3. Requests all States which have not yet become parties to the Convention to accede thereto as soon as possible;

4. Welcomes the establishment by the Chairman of the thirty-third session of the Commission on Human Rights of a group as provided for by article IX of the Convention;

5. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to continue its efforts to undertake the functions set out in article X of the Convention;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

A

The Economic and Social Council,
Taking note of resolution 6(XXXIII) of the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Approves the decision taken by the Commission on Human Rights to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts;

2. Expresses its satisfaction to the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts for the work it has carried out;

3. Decides that the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, in conjunction with the Special Committee against Apartheid, should examine the treatment of prisoners in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, including the deaths of a number of detainees, as well as police brutality during peaceful demonstrations against apartheid in South Africa since the Soweto massacre of 16 June 1976, with a view to submitting a report;

4. Decides that the reports of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts should be brought to the attention of the General Assembly without delay;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to give all due publicity to the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts and to furnish all necessary assistance to the Group to enable it to fulfil its mandate.

B

The Economic and Social Council,
Taking note of resolution 6(XXXIII) of the Commission on Human Rights,

Gravely concerned about the situation in South Africa and southern Africa as a whole,

Noting with deep anxiety and indignation that the South African racist regime has continued to employ violence and massive repression against the black people and all opponents of apartheid in defiance of the resolutions of the General Assembly, Recommends that the General Assembly should declare 1978 International Anti-Apartheid Year.

C

The Economic and Social Council,
Taking note of resolution 6(XXXIII) of the Commission on Human Rights,

Suggests that the General Assembly should consider the applicability to United Nations organs of the solemn obligation of the administering Powers to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses, which was reaffirmed by the Assembly in its resolution 31/7 of 5 November 1976, and, in this connexion, should consider the desirability of exercising fully its powers in its capacity—recognized by the International Court of Justice in 1971—as Administering Authority for Namibia, either directly or through the United Nations Council for Namibia.

Elimination of religious intolerance

A General Assembly resolution of 16 December 1976¹⁴ was referred to the Commission on Human Rights by the Economic and Social Council on 14 January 1977 by decision 204(ORG-77). The Assembly had asked the Commission to speed up its work on elaborating the text of a draft declaration on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, and to report on progress to the Assembly. The drafting of the declaration as a matter of priority had been requested by the Assembly in 1972.¹⁵

An open-ended working group was re-established by the Commission in 1977 to continue work on the draft declaration. It was able to complete the preambular part and to begin consideration of the operative part of the draft. The Commission took note of the working group's report on 11 March and decided to re-establish the group to resume work on the draft during its 1978 session.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, requested the Commission on Human Rights to give the preparation of the draft declaration the priority necessary to complete it.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/143 without a vote. In the Third Committee, the draft resolution was sponsored by Austria, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, the Netherlands, Norway, Senegal, Sweden and the United States. The sponsors accepted an oral amendment by the Byelorussian SSR, and the text was then approved on 9 December without objection. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Measures against terrorism or incitement to racial discrimination or group hatred

On 11 March 1977 the Commission on Human Rights decided to postpone to its 1978 session consideration of the question of measures to be taken against ideologies and practices based on terror or on incitement to racial discrimination or any other form of group hatred.

On 14 December 1973,¹⁶ the General Assembly had decided to defer consideration of the question until such time as a discussion of the matter had been concluded by the Commission.

Adverse effects on human rights resulting from aid to colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa

During the Council's discussion of its work programme for the year, the United Kingdom expressed the view that the Assembly in 1976—by its resolution 31/33 on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa¹⁷—had invited the Council to undertake a task which was wholly improper, i.e. to study consequences of the use of the veto in the Security Council. The United Kingdom proposed that the Economic and Social Council should not currently refer the matter to the Commission on Human Rights as the Council President, after consultations, had proposed in the basic work programme. Bulgaria, on the other hand, said it would be unconstitutional for the Council to challenge an Assembly resolution and called for a decision on the competence of the Council to adopt the United Kingdom proposal.

Accepting an Iranian suggestion instead, the Council voted on the inclusion in its decision 204(ORG-77) of reference to the Assembly resolution. At the request of the United States, the vote was taken by roll call, and the words in question were adopted by 33 votes to 8, with 10 abstentions, before the decision as a whole, as amended, was adopted without vote. Thus, on 14 January, the Council decided to refer the Assembly's resolution to the Commission.

On 4 March 1977, the Commission considered the matter in the light of the General Assembly resolution and a report of its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on its consideration of a preliminary study of the subject prepared by Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt), Special Rapporteur.

The Commission, by a resolution on the question, again denounced with indignation the political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given by certain States to South Africa and the illegal minority regime of Southern Rhodesia, and requested all States to take the necessary steps to put an end to such assistance.

The Commission requested the Sub-Commission and its Special Rapporteur to prepare a provisional general list identifying those individuals, institutions, including banks, and other organizations or groups, as well as representatives of States, whose activities constituted assistance to the colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa. It also requested the Secretary-General to prepare, for submission to the Sub-Commission at its 1978 session, a preliminary report on the existence of partial lists concerning violations of fundamental human rights in southern Africa drawn up by other United Nations bodies.

On 26 August 1977, the Sub-Commission again considered the study prepared by the Special Rapporteur and requested him to undertake a final updated revision of his report for wide dissemination after its submission to the General Assembly at its 1978 session, taking into account the comments and suggestions made in the Sub-Commission and the Commission. The Sub-Commission also asked the Special Rapporteur to prepare the necessary material for a provisional general list identifying those whose activities constituted assistance to the colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa.

Violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms

Question of human rights in the occupied territories

During 1977, the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights and by the General Assembly. Also during the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications from Arab countries concerning the treatment of the civilian population in the occupied territories (see p. 307).

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights

At its thirty-third session, held at Geneva from 7 February to 11 March 1977, the Commission on Human Rights adopted two resolutions on the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East.

By the preambular part of the first resolution, adopted on 15 February, the Commission among other things welcomed the statement by the Security Council on 11 November 1976¹⁸ by which the Council expressed its grave anxiety over the serious situation in the occupied territories as a result of continued Israeli occupation. The Commission took note of the reports of United Nations organs, specialized agencies and international humanitarian organizations on the situation of the occupied territories and their inhabitants, in particular the 1976 report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories.¹⁹ The Commission also expressed alarm at the continuation by Israel of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the occupied territories, in particular measures aimed at annexation, as well as torture and ill-treatment of detainees, expropriation and discriminatory legislation.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Commission deplored Israel's continued violations of the basic norms of international law and of the relevant international conventions, in particular its breaches of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (the fourth Geneva Convention) of 12 August 1949, and Israel's persistent defiance of United Nations resolutions. It condemned a number of Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories, which it enumerated in the resolution.

The Commission also condemned the massive deliberate destruction of the Syrian city of Quneitra, perpetrated during Israeli occupation and prior to the withdrawal of Israeli forces in 1974. It reaffirmed that all measures taken by Israel to change the character, demographic composition or status of the occupied territories or any part thereto—including Jerusalem—were null and void. The Commission also declared null and void all measures taken by Israel with a view to changing the structure, status and established religious practices in the sanctuary of Al-Ibrahimi Mosque in the city of Al-Khalil (Hebron) and called upon Israel to rescind all such measures taken.

The Commission called upon Israel to release all Arabs imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and national liberation, and to accord them the treatment of prisoners of war. It requested the Secretary-General to collect all relevant information concerning detainees, such as their number, identity, place and duration¹ of detention, and to make this information available to it at its 1978 session. In addition, the Commission called upon Israel to comply with its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and to abide by its obligations under the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949.

The Commission reiterated its call upon all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid any actions which might be used by Israel in pursuit of proscribed policies and practices.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to bring this resolution to the attention of all Governments, competent United Nations organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to give it the widest possible publicity, and to report to the Commission at its session in 1978, when, it was decided, the matter would be given high priority under the new title "Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine." The Secretary-General was requested to bring to the attention of the Commission all United Nations reports appearing between sessions of the Commission that dealt with the situation of the civilians of the occupied territories.

By the preambular part of the second resolution, also adopted on 15 February, the Commission recalled the General Assembly's resolution of 16 December 1976²⁰ by which it reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to all Israeli-occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem. By the operative part of the resolution, the Commission deplored the failure of Israel to acknowledge the applicability of that Convention to all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; it urgently called upon Israel to acknowledge and to comply with the provisions of the Convention in those territories. The Commission urged all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with the provisions thereof in the occupied territories. The Secretary-General was requested to bring this resolution to the attention of all Governments, competent United Nations organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations.

In a separate action, the Commission decided to send a telegram to the Government of Israel expressing its deep concern at the reports of the deaths of Arab detainees in Israeli prisons attributable to the conditions of their imprisonment, and called upon the Government of Israel to take urgent measures to ensure improvement in prison conditions and refrain from ill-treatment of detainees.

Decisions of the Economic and Social Council

At its sixty-second session in April/May 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2085(LXII)) on the question of the violation by Israel of human rights in the occupied Arab territories. By this resolution, the Council took note of the action of the Human Rights Commission on the question, commended it for its vigilance and for the action taken in connexion with the protection of human rights in the occupied territories, and requested the Commission to pursue its efforts in this regard and to continue to take appropriate measures.

The text, which was sponsored by Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, was approved by the Social Committee on 6 May 1977 by a roll-call vote—requested by the Syrian Arab Republic—of 34 to 2, with 12 abstentions. It was adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 13 May by 35 votes to 2, with 11 abstentions.

(For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Inasmuch as the sponsors could not accept a United States proposal that the paragraph by which the Council commended the Commission for its vigilance and action in connexion with the territories should be deleted, the United States asked for a separate vote on that operative paragraph; it was approved by a roll-call vote of 34 to 3, with 11 abstentions.

Report of the Special Committee in 1977

The ninth report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, established by the General Assembly in 1969, was presented to the Assembly on 17 October 1977.

The Special Committee reported that Israel, as an occupying power, had persisted in its violation of the fourth Geneva Convention throughout 1977 and that the day-to-day situation in the territories continued to be tense, marked by incidents which often led to injury and loss of innocent civilian lives; such incidents were directly attributable to the military occupation, the report stated. The report noted that the Government of Israel had continued to deny the Special Committee access to the occupied territories, but that the Committee had followed developments in the occupied territories on a day-to-day basis, even though it was unable to conduct its investigations on the spot. This was carried out by examining: information gathered from various sources, such as the Israeli and Arab press, evidence furnished by Governments, oral testimony, information contained in United Nations documents, and information communicated by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and contained in ICRC publications.

In its report covering the period from 17 September 1976, the Committee noted that it had held meetings during February/March, May, September and October 1977, and that witnesses were heard during these meetings in May, September and October. The Committee reported that on the basis of the information received by it since its preceding report, the situation in the occupied territories had not altered from previous years: the Government of Israel continued to implement a policy of annexation and settlement of the occupied territories. The report gave a chronological narrative of daily occurrences, including announcements by Israel of new plans for additional settlements that had been established.

The report also provided information describing the situation of civilians in the occupied territories, including accounts of strikes, demonstrations, arrests, imposition of curfews and treatment of youths. Violent demonstrations and riots had taken place, in addition to frequent explosions and arrests. The Committee said that detained civilian inhabitants did not enjoy the protection envisaged for them under international law. It provided information on treatment of civilian detainees during interrogation, trial and imprisonment. The pattern of arrests that emerged over the period covered by the report indicated a prison population that was constantly swelling. Prison overcrowding was underlined in the report as a major cause for concern; in addition, the Special Committee, on the basis of information received by it, concluded that a strong prima facie case had been established that detainees in occupied territories were subjected to treatment which could not be described as other than torture.

In its report, the Special Committee again referred to the question of the destruction of structures in the town of Quneitra by Israel, and transmitted to the General Assembly a report, prepared by an expert commissioned by the Special Committee, which gave an assessment of damages not covered in a previous survey, in particular damages to furniture and streets resulting from the destruction of the town in 1974.

According to the report of the Special Committee, a significant development during 1977 was the emergence of a policy followed by the Government of Israel based on the assumption that the territories in question were not occupied territories. This assumption, the report noted, was at the root of the thesis held by Israel that the fourth Geneva Convention was not applicable to these territories. However, the report went on to point out that many Assembly resolutions attested to the applicability of the Convention to the occupied territories. In addition, the report noted, several Assembly resolutions had endorsed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, and the Special Committee had endorsed this right as well.

The Special Committee also noted that the policy followed by Israel was further reflected in the measures taken by the Government with regard to acquisition of territory by direct or indirect purchase, expropriation and other methods. The number of settlements had continued to grow, as did the number of Israeli civilians living in the occupied territories. Similarly, the Government continued to deny the right of return to the hundreds of thousands of civilians who had fled their homes during and after the 1967 hostilities. The twin policies under which territories and persons were governed in the occupied territories resulted in alterations in the physical character and in the demographic composition of these territories and there was no sign that this situation would change in the foreseeable future.

The Special Committee reiterated the proposal it had made in previous years for the adoption of an arrangement²¹ based on the protecting-power formula envisaged under the fourth Geneva Convention in an effort to ensure protection of the civilian persons in the occupied territories.

Decisions of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

At its fifteenth (March/April) and sixteenth (August) sessions in 1977, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination adopted two decisions concerning the question of human rights in the occupied Arab territories.

By a decision adopted on 1 April 1977 on information supplied by the Syrian Arab Republic relating to the situation in the Golan Heights, the Committee recalled its previous decisions on the subject, and noted reports and information furnished by that Government to the effect that the situation had not only persisted but had deteriorated substantially as a result of the continued refusal to permit the return of the displaced population, the continued establishment of settlements and other acts against the population of the area.

The Committee expressed grave concern that a State party to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination²² had been prevented from fulfilling its obligations under the Convention and that this unacceptable state of affairs had lasted for nearly 10 years. The Committee expressed the hope that the population of the Golan Heights would be able to return to their homes as soon as possible and to enjoy their human rights and fundamental freedoms as citizens of the Syrian Arab Republic. The Committee asked the General Assembly to ensure that no change in the area was brought about that would have the effect of establishing racial discrimination—including changes in demographic composition—and to take the necessary steps, as a matter of urgency, to enable the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic to take over full responsibility for implementing its obligations under the Convention over the whole of its national territory.

By a decision adopted on 4 August 1977 on information supplied by the Government of Jordan relating to the situation in the West Bank occupied by Israel, the Committee noted the information furnished by Jordan concerning the continued refusal by the Israeli authorities to permit the return of the displaced population, the continued establishment of settlements, and other acts against the population of the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River. The Committee noted that a State party to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination had been prevented from fulfilling its obligations under that Convention in a part of its territory, expressed its grave concern at this unacceptable state of affairs, and expressed the hope that the displaced population of the West Bank would be able to return to their homes as soon as possible and to enjoy fully their human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Committee asked the General Assembly to ensure that no change in the area was brought about which would have the effect of establishing racial discrimination, including change in the demographic composition.

Report of the Secretary-General

In a report prepared at the request of the General Assembly,²³ the Secretary-General described the measures taken by him to comply with the request of the Assembly to render the necessary facilities to the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, to make available additional staff as necessary and to ensure the widest circulation of the report of the Special Committee and of information regarding its activities and findings.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories was considered at the General Assembly's thirty-second session in 1977 by the Special Political Committee, which also had before it a number of communications from the representatives of Cyprus, Egypt, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Oman, the Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic addressed to the Secretary-General.

The first, dated 30 June 1977, from the Sudan, transmitted texts of newspaper articles relating to allegations of torture of prisoners in Israel; a letter dated 29 July from Oman concerned the legalization of three Jewish settlements in occupied territory near the towns of Kafr Kaddum, Khan Al-Ahmar and Ramallah; on 19 August Iraq stated that Israel had declared that it was enforcing its laws in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip; a note verbale of 17 August transmitted an official declaration of 16 August of the Syrian Arab Republic concerning expansionist measures by Israel in the territories; a letter of 26 August transmitted a statement by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Cyprus on the colonization of Israeli-occupied Arab territories; a letter of 6 September transmitted a memorandum by the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of Jordan concerning the consequences of an Israeli decision regarding the equalization of services of the inhabitants of the territories and of Israel; on 19 September Egypt drew the attention of the Special Committee to a report published by the Swiss League for Human Rights concerning the common and systematic use by Israel of torture and other practices of expropriation, confiscation and destruction of Arab property; on 7 November, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted testimony of two journalists before the Special Committee in September 1977; on 15 November, Israel transmitted excerpts from a briefing by the Attorney General of Israel at the end of July to the Jerusalem press corps concerning allegations of ill-treatment of prisoners in Israel; and on 9 December Israel informed the Secretary-General of a recent visit of a representative of ICRC to Israel.

On 13 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted three resolutions on the 1977 report of the Special Committee.

By the preambular part of the first of these resolutions (32/91 A), the Assembly among other things recalled that Israel and those Arab States whose territories had been occupied by Israel since June 1967 were parties to the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 and took into account that States parties to that Convention undertook not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly: (1) reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem; (2) strongly deplored Israel's failure to acknowledge the applicability of the Convention to those territories; (3) called once more upon Israel to acknowledge and to comply with the provisions of that Convention in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem; and (4) urged all States parties to that Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions.

²³ See Y.U.N., 1976, pp. 587-88, text of resolution 31/106C of 16 December 1976.

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 132 to 1, with 1 abstention; the Special Political Committee had approved the text on 29 November by a roll-call vote of 114 to 1. The text was sponsored by Bangladesh, Chad, India, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan, Senegal, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

(For text of resolution 32/91 A, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the second resolution (32/91 B), the Assembly, having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, particularly the expert's report on damage suffered in Quneitra, expressed its appreciation for the report and condemned the massive destruction of Quneitra perpetrated during the Israeli occupation and prior to the withdrawal of Israeli forces from that city in 1974. The Assembly reaffirmed that the Syrian Arab Republic was entitled to full compensation under international law and in equity for this destruction. It took note of the statements made by the Syrian representative before the Special Political Committee, reserving the right of his Government to full compensation for all damages, including those not covered by the expert's report. The Assembly requested the Special Committee to complete the survey on damage in Quneitra, taking into account all its aspects, and further requested the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with all the facilities required for the completion of this task.

This resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 96 to 1, with 37 abstentions; the Special Political Committee had approved the text on 29 November by a roll-call vote of 83 to 1, with 33 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Byelorussian SSR, the Comoros, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Mali, Pakistan, Senegal, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam.

(For text of resolution 32/91 B, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Resolution 32/91 C concerned the work of the Special Committee. By its provisions, the General Assembly commended the efforts of the Special Committee in performing its tasks, and deplored the continued refusal of—and again called upon—Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories.

The Assembly also deplored Israel's continued and persistent violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and other applicable international instruments. It condemned in particular—and demanded that Israel desist from—the following policies and practices: annexation of parts of, establishment of Israeli settlements in, and transfer of an alien population to the occupied territories; evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of those territories and denial of their right to return; confiscation and expropriation of Arab property and other transactions for acquisition of land involving Israeli authorities, institutions or nationals on the one hand and the inhabitants or institutions of the occupied territories on the other; destruction and demolition of Arab houses; mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population and of persons under detention; pillaging of archaeological and cultural property; interference with religious freedoms and practices, family rights and customs; and illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and population of the occupied territories.

The Assembly reaffirmed the invalidity of all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, and also reaffirmed that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in the occupied territories constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and of United Nations resolutions. It demanded that Israel desist forthwith from those policies and practices.

The Assembly reiterated its call upon all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions which might be used by Israel in pursuit of its policies of annexation and colonization.

The Special Committee was asked to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the occupied Arab territories, to consult with ICRC as appropriate and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arose. The Special Committee was also requested to continue to investigate the treatment of civilians in detention in the occupied territories and to submit a special report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arose.

The Secretary-General was asked: to render all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories; to continue to make available additional staff as necessary to assist the Special Committee; to ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee and of information regarding its activities and findings through the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat; to reprint, where necessary, those reports of the Special Committee which were no longer available; and to report to the Assembly at its 1978 session, when the item would again be included in the provisional agenda.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 98 to 2, with 32 abstentions; the Special Political Committee had approved the text on 29 November by a roll-call vote of 84 to 2, with 30 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Comoros, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan, Senegal, Uganda and Viet Nam.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 3092 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/106 B of 16 December 1976,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Noting that Israel and those Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to that Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to that Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Strongly deplores the failure of Israel to acknowledge the applicability of that Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967;

3. Calls again upon Israel to acknowledge and to comply with the provisions of that Convention in all the Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urges once more all States parties to that Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with the provisions thereof in all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 3240 C (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 C (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/106 D of 16 December 1976,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, in particular annex II thereof, entitled "Report on damage at Quneitra," a report on the nature, extent and value of damage, submitted by a Swiss expert engaged by the Special Committee,

1. Expresses its appreciation of the thoroughness and impartiality with which the expert engaged by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories discharged the tasks entrusted to him;

2. Condemns the massive, deliberate destruction of Quneitra perpetrated during the Israeli occupation and prior to the withdrawal of Israeli forces from that city in 1974;

3. Reaffirms that the Syrian Arab Republic is entitled to full and adequate compensation, under international law and in equity, for the massive damage and deliberate destruction perpetrated in Quneitra while it was under Israeli occupation, and to all other legal remedies in accordance with applicable international law and practice;

4. Takes note of the statements made by the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic before the Special Political Committee at the thirty-first and thirty-second sessions of the General Assembly to the effect that his Government reserves all rights to full compensation in regard to all damages resulting from Israel's deliberate destruction of Quneitra, including those not covered by the expert's above-mentioned report or not falling within the scope of his assignment;

5. Requests the Special Committee to complete its survey on all the aspects referred to in paragraph 4 of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with all the facilities required for the completion of the tasks referred to in the previous paragraphs.

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations as well as the principles and provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, as well as of other relevant conventions and regulations,

Recalling its resolutions on the subject, as well as those adopted by the Security Council, the Commission on Human Rights and other United Nations bodies concerned and by the specialized agencies,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, which contains, inter alia, public statements made by leaders of the Government of Israel,

1. Commends the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Deplores the continued refusal by Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

3. Calls again upon Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

4. Deplores the continued and persistent violation by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and other applicable international instruments, and condemns in particular those violations which that Convention designates as "grave breaches" thereof;

5. Condemns the following Israeli policies and practices:

(a) The annexation of parts of the occupied territories;

(b) The establishment of Israeli settlements therein and the transfer of an alien population thereto;

(c) The evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories, and the denial of their right to return;

(d) The confiscation and expropriation of Arab property in the occupied territories and all other transactions for the acquisition of land involving the Israeli authorities, institutions or nationals on the one hand, and the inhabitants or institutions of the occupied territories on the other;

(e) The destruction and demolition of Arab houses;

(f) Mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population;

(g) The ill-treatment and torture of persons under detention;

(h) The pillaging of archaeological and cultural property;

(i) The interference with religious freedoms and practices as well as with family rights and customs;

(j) The illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and population of the occupied territories;

6. Reaffirms that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, or any part thereof, including Jerusalem, are null and void, and that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in the occupied territories constitutes a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

7. Demands that Israel desist forthwith from the policies and practices referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the present resolution;

8. Reiterates its call upon all States, in particular those States parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, in accordance with article 1 of that Convention, and upon international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, which might be used by Israel in its pursuit of the policies of annexation and colonization or any of the other policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

9. Requests the Special Committee, pending the early termination of the Israeli occupation, to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross in order to ensure the safeguarding of the welfare and human rights of the population of the occupied territories, and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

10. Requests the Special Committee to continue to investigate the treatment of civilians in detention in the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and to submit to the Secretary-General a special report on that subject as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To render all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories, with a view to investigating the Israeli policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

(b) To continue to make available additional staff as may be necessary to assist the Special Committee in the performance of its tasks;

(c) To ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee, and of information regarding its activities and findings, by all means available through the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat and, where necessary, to reprint those reports of the Special Committee which are no longer available;

(d) To report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the tasks entrusted to him in the present paragraph;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories."

Other matters relating to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms

Study of situations revealing a consistent pattern of human rights violations

At its 1977 session, the Commission on Human Rights adopted, in closed meetings, a number of confidential decisions within the framework of an Economic and Social Council resolution of 27 May 1970,²⁴ which laid down procedures for dealing with communications relating to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms (see section below). Under the Council resolution, particular situations which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights requiring consideration by the Commission were to be brought to its attention by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

Before the Commission was a report of a working group of five of its members, authorized by a Council decision of 12 May 1976,²⁵ which met to examine confidential material referred to the Commission by the Sub-Commission.

Apart from the confidential decisions, the Commission also adopted a general decision by which it decided that the Sub-Commission and its Working Group on Communications (see section below) should have access to the records of the closed meetings of the Commission and to all other confidential documents when considering those cases of violations of human rights referred to it.

The Economic and Social Council again approved a decision of the Commission to set up another five-member working group to meet a week before its 1978 session to examine particular situations referred to it and those still under review. Decision 231(LXII) was approved on 13 May 1977, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, where the text was approved on 6 May, also without a vote.

Human rights violations, especially in colonial areas

On 28 February 1977, the Commission adopted a resolution expressing its conviction that greater attention should be paid to violations of economic, social and cultural rights. It observed that, although difficult economic and social conditions appeared to prevail in many of the countries whose cases had been examined, those countries had a duty to do everything in their power to ensure respect for human rights, including cultural rights.

In this connexion the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, endorsed a request by the Commission by appealing to all States, especially the developed States, and specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to make all efforts to accelerate the establishment of conditions that could promote the unrestricted enjoyment of all human rights in States with difficult economic and social conditions.

The Council took this action on 13 May 1977 by adopting decision 230(LXII) without a vote, the text having been approved by the Social Committee on 6 May without a vote.

On 18 August 1977, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities discussed ways in which it could better examine human rights violations in all countries, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories. It was suggested that the Sub-Commission, with the help of the Secretariat, might consider procedures which would improve the way in which it performed its task.

Communications on human rights

The five-member Working Group on communications, established in 1971 by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, met from 1 to 11 August 1977 prior to the Sub-Commission's August/September session and considered communications concerning human rights, including replies of Governments thereon, received by the Secretary-General since its 1976 session. The Working Group was set up to bring to the attention of the Sub-Commission those communications which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Working Group had before it the Secretary-General's monthly confidential lists of communications containing brief summaries of 18,842 communications received since the 1976 session. The Working Group submitted a confidential report to the 1977 session of the Sub-Commission which considered the report at closed meetings on 31 August and adopted a confidential resolution by which it communicated its findings to the Commission on Human Rights.

Question of human rights in Cyprus

On 9 August 1977, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination adopted a decision by which it expressed the hope that a speedy normalization of conditions in Cyprus would be effected, bringing to an end the hardships suffered by refugees and others because of their racial or ethnic origin, and enabling them to enjoy fully their fundamental human rights without discrimination. The Committee further expressed the hope that the United Nations would ensure that no changes would be brought about in the area, including changes in the demographic composition. (See also p. 368.)

Owing to lack of time, the Commission on Human Rights was unable to consider at its 1977 session the question of human rights in Cyprus, but decided to give the subject due priority at its 1978 session.

Protection of human rights in Uganda

Two resolutions relating to Uganda, sponsored by Canada and by the United Kingdom, respectively, were considered by the Commission on Human Rights at a meeting on 9 March 1977. After it had been pointed out that a related and confidential draft resolution was also to be considered by the Commission, it was decided by a roll-call vote of 17 votes to 8, with 6 abstentions, to continue consideration in closed session. Canada did not insist on further discussion of its draft.

A draft resolution on the protection of human rights in Uganda was placed before the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee of the General Assembly on 6 December 1977 by Denmark, Finland, Iceland,

Norway and Sweden. By this text the Assembly would express deep concern about repeated violations of basic human rights of individuals in Uganda, express the hope that the Organization of African Unity would give appropriate consideration to those violations with a view to their cessation, and would request the Human Rights Commission to consider the situation.

The sponsors did not press the draft resolution to a vote, on the understanding that the concern expressed therein would be taken into account when the Commission resumed consideration of the question.

Importance of the right to self-determination

Studies on the right to self-determination

Continuing its discussion of the right of people to self-determination and the application of that right to peoples under colonial and alien domination, the Commission on Human Rights discussed, at its February/March 1977 session, the progress of two studies being undertaken by special rapporteurs of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The first study dealt with the historical and current development of the right to self-determination on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations and other United Nations instruments, with particular reference to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms; the second dealt with the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the right of peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination.

The studies had been submitted to the Sub-Commission in preliminary form in 1976, and the Sub-Commission had then recommended that the Commission on Human Rights should propose to the Economic and Social Council that it request an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal nature, scope and impact of declarations and resolutions of the United Nations in the field of human rights.

During discussion of the studies, Commission members recognized the importance of formulating principles and courses of action to ensure the observance of States' obligations, but did not wish to take any action which might diminish the authority of United Nations resolutions. The Commission therefore asked the special rapporteurs to take account of its opinion that the right to self-determination constituted a rule, and perhaps a peremptory norm, of international law.

At its August/September 1977 session, the Sub-Commission noted the progress which had been made on the study of the historical and current development of the right to self-determination, despite the vast documentation involved and the difficulty of preparing such a study of synthesis on a multidisciplinary basis.

The Sub-Commission decided to examine the final report at its session in 1978.

The Sub-Commission also considered the completed report on the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the right to self-determination. Wide support was expressed for the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur, particularly his recommendation that all relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations should be codified. Further discussion on the legal character of United Nations resolutions led the Sub-Commission, in its resolution arising out of the study, to draw the subject to the attention of the International Law Commission for consideration and action.

The Sub-Commission also asked the Special Rapporteur to update his report, taking into account developments in several specific territories, and to submit it to its 1978 session. The Secretary-General was requested to transmit the report to the General Assembly at its 1977 session and to other relevant United Nations bodies.

When it adopted resolution 32/14 on 7 November 1977 (see section below), the General Assembly indicated that it looked forward to the publication of the two studies by the Sub-Commission.

Realization of the right to self-determination

At its 1977 regular session, the General Assembly again considered the question of the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights. The discussion took place in the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee at meetings held between 6 and 24 October.

The Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General containing information from 11 Member States—Cyprus, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Iran, Iraq, Japan, Jordan, Malta, Nigeria, Seychelles and Sweden—and from 10 non-governmental organizations on action they had taken to implement an Assembly resolution of 30 November 1976, which called on States, United Nations agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to strengthen assistance to colonial territories and peoples under alien domination and foreign subjugation.²⁶

Also before the Committee was a letter of 16 November 1977 to the Secretary-General from Turkey, transmitting letters from Nail Atalay and Rauf R. Denktash, identified as the representative and the President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, respectively, commenting on the Cypriot reply in the Secretary-General's report. The Secretary-General had also received a letter from the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Egypt transmitting documents arising out of the First Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the League of Arab States held in Cairo from 7 to 9 March 1977.

On 7 November 1977, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which it called upon all States to implement fully and faithfully the resolutions of the United Nations on the right to self-determination. It reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation by all available means, including armed struggle. It also reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, of the Palestinian people and of all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference.

The Assembly demanded the immediate evacuation of the French administration and forces from the Comorian territory of Mayotte and condemned the policy of "bantustanization," reiterating its support for the oppressed people of South Africa in their just and legitimate struggle.

The Assembly reaffirmed that the practice of using mercenaries against national liberation movements and sovereign States constituted a criminal act and that the mercenaries themselves were criminals. It called upon all countries to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in, and the transit of mercenaries through, their territory to be punishable offences and also prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General. It condemned the policies of those members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and of other countries whose relations with the racist regimes in southern Africa encouraged those regimes to suppress the aspirations of peoples for self-determination and independence.

The Assembly strongly condemned all Governments which did not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples still under colonial and foreign domination, notably the peoples of Africa and the Palestinian people, and also strongly condemned the ever increasing massacres of innocent and defenceless people by the racist minority regimes of southern Africa. It demanded the immediate release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence and full respect for their fundamental personal rights. It noted with appreciation the material and other forms of assistance that peoples under colonial and foreign rule continued to receive from Governments, United Nations agencies and other organizations, and called for a maximization of this assistance.

The Assembly looked forward to the publication of the two studies of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on the historical and current development of the right to self-determination and on the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to that right (see section above). Finally, it asked the Secretary-General to give maximum publicity to the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to give the widest possible publicity to the struggle being waged by oppressed peoples for the realization of their self-determination and national independence.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 32/14 by a recorded vote of 113 to 3, with 18 abstentions. Before the vote, the Assembly rejected by a recorded vote of 58 against to 21 in favour, with 53 abstentions, an amendment proposed by Belgium, Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States; the amendment sought to delete the reference to NATO.

The Third Committee, voting on 24 October, approved the text of a 50-power draft resolution by a roll-call vote of 108 to 3, with 18 abstentions. The Committee rejected by a roll-call vote, requested by Belgium, of 61 against to 25 in favour, with 41 abstentions, an amendment identical to, and with the same sponsors as, that rejected by the Assembly in plenary session. (For text of resolution 32/14, list of sponsors, and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A number of other States, including Austria, Greece, Maldives, Swaziland and Turkey, reserved their position on the paragraph referring to NATO.

Belgium, speaking for the nine States members of the European Economic Community (EEC), said that certain other paragraphs also posed difficulties for them. For example, they could not agree that the legitimacy of armed struggle should be proclaimed in a United Nations resolution. Norway, explaining the abstentions of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, said that those States also had reservations on the paragraph which legitimized violence, as did Austria, Fiji and Swaziland, among others.

According to Belgium, EEC could not support in their entirety the paragraphs referring to the Middle East, which could give rise to confusion with regard to the Palestinian problem on which it had made its opinions clearly known. Israel and Portugal also had reservations on those provisions.

In France's view, Mayotte, by virtue of its clearly expressed will, currently formed part of the territory of France; thus the resolution constituted inadmissible interference in the internal affairs of a State. Portugal and Surinam also could not agree to the wording of the paragraph concerning Mayotte.

The United States said it voted against the resolution because it contained language that was objectionable and inopportune. New Zealand said it had difficulty with the wording and content of various paragraphs referring to specific situations, which in its view could be more effectively discussed in other fora, such as the Fourth Committee, the Security Council and the General Assembly.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2649(XXV) of 30 November 1970, 2955(XXVII) of 12 December 1972, 3070(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, 3246(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3382(XXX) of 10 November 1975 and 31/34 of 30 November 1976,

Recalling also its resolutions 2465(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2548(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2708(XXV) of 14 December 1970, 3103(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973 and 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974 on the use and recruitment of mercenaries against national liberation movements and sovereign States,

Recalling the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, and the declaration adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Taking note of the declaration of the First Afro-Arab Summit Conference, held at Cairo from 7 to 9 March 1977,

Reaffirming its faith in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and the importance of its implementation,

Reaffirming the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, national sovereignty and territorial integrity and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples as imperatives for the enjoyment of human rights,

Affirming that "bantustanization" is incompatible with genuine independence, unity and national sovereignty and would have the effect of perpetuating the power of the white minority and the racist system of apartheid in South Africa,

Reaffirming the obligation of all Member States to comply with the principles of the Charter and the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial and alien domination,

Welcoming the independence of Djibouti,

Reaffirming the national unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Indignant at the continued violations of the human rights of the peoples still under colonial and foreign domination and alien subjugation, the continuation of the illegal occupation of Namibia and South Africa's attempts to dismember its territory, the perpetuation of the racist minority regimes in Zimbabwe and South Africa and the denial to the Palestinian people of their inalienable national rights,

1. Calls upon all States to implement fully and faithfully the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial and alien domination;
2. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial and foreign domination and alien subjugation by all available means, including armed struggle;
3. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, of the Palestinian people and of all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference;
4. Demands the immediate evacuation of the French administration and forces from the Comorian territory of Mayotte;
5. Condemns the policy of "bantustanization" and reiterates its support for the oppressed people of South Africa in their just and legitimate struggle against the racist minority regime in Pretoria;
6. Reaffirms that the practice of using mercenaries against national liberation movements and sovereign States constitutes a criminal act and that the mercenaries themselves are criminals, and calls upon the Governments of all countries to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territory and the transit of mercenaries through their territory to be punishable offences and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General;
7. Condemns the policies of those members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and of other countries whose political, economic, military or sporting relations with the racist regimes in southern Africa and elsewhere encourage these regimes to persist in their suppression of the aspirations of peoples for self-determination and independence;
8. Strongly condemns all Governments which do not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples still under colonial and foreign domination and alien subjugation, notably the peoples of Africa and the Palestinian people;
9. Strongly condemns the ever increasing massacres of innocent and defenceless people, including women and children, by the racist minority régimes of southern Africa in their desperate attempt to thwart the legitimate demands of the people;
10. Demands the immediate release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, full respect for their fundamental personal rights and the observance of article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, under which no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment;

11. Notes with appreciation the material and other forms of assistance that peoples under colonial and foreign rule continue to receive from Governments, United Nations agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and calls for a maximization of this assistance;

12. Looks forward to the publication of the following studies by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities:

(a) Historical and current development of the right to self-determination on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments adopted by United Nations organs, with particular reference to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(b) Implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the right of peoples under colonial and foreign domination to self-determination;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to give maximum publicity to the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to give the widest possible publicity to the struggle being waged by oppressed peoples for the realization of their self-determination and national independence;

14. Decides to consider this item again at its thirty-third session on the basis of the reports that Governments, United Nations agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations have been requested to submit concerning the strengthening of assistance to colonial Territories and peoples under foreign domination and control.

Respect for human rights in armed conflicts

Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts

In response to a 1976 General Assembly request,²⁷ the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly in 1977 on the proceedings of the fourth session of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts. The Conference was held in Geneva, from 17 March to 10 June 1977.

The Secretary-General reported that the Conference resumed its consideration, in committee,²⁸ of the two draft additional protocols to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims; the first protocol related to the protection of victims of international armed conflicts, and the second to the protection of victims of non-international armed conflicts. Additional Protocols I and II were formally adopted by consensus on 8 June 1977 and their texts were included in the Secretary-General's report. On 9 June, by a roll-call vote of 87 to 1, with 18 abstentions, the Conference adopted the draft Final Act.

²⁷ See Y.U.N., 1976, pp. 594-95, text of resolution 31/19 of 24 November 1976.

²⁸ Ibid., p. 593.

On 7 June, the Conference adopted six resolutions on further action to be taken by States, specialized agencies and other organizations concerning subjects considered by the Conference. By the first resolution, the Conference invited the International Civil Aviation Organization to establish procedures for the designation of electronic and visual identification of medical aircraft to avoid their engagement by combatant forces. By the second resolution, it invited the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization to establish means for identification of medical transports to avoid attacks upon them. In both cases, the Conference suggested a flashing blue light as the primary means of such identification.

By another resolution, it invited Governments to make preparations for the 1979 International Telecommunication Union World Administrative Radio Conference so that the requirements of radiocommunications for announcing and identifying the movement of protected medical transports in armed conflicts might be adequately provided for in the Radio Regulations annexed to the International Telecommunication Convention.

By another resolution the Conference urged States to become parties to the Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, and its Additional Protocol, signed at The Hague, Netherlands, on 14 May 1954. By a fifth resolution, it invited the signatory States of the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 to ensure that knowledge of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts was effectively disseminated, and also urged the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to participate actively in the dissemination effort.

By another resolution, the Conference resolved to send the report and proposals of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Conference, which had discussed the issue of prohibitions or restrictions for humanitarian reasons of the use of specific conventional weapons deemed excessively injurious or which had indiscriminate effects, to the Conference's participating Governments and to the United Nations. It recommended that a conference should be convened not later than 1979 with a view, inter alia, to reaching agreement on the prohibition or restriction of the use of such weapons; the General Assembly was invited to take action towards this end at its 1977 session.

On 10 June, the Conference expressed, by another resolution, its gratitude to the Government, authorities and people of Switzerland, to ICRC and to the staff of the Conference for their services.

The Secretary-General also reported on the activities during the year of the International Institute of Humanitarian Law and on the proceedings of the Fourth Round Table on Current Problems of International Humanitarian Law held from 30 August to 4 September 1977 at San Remo, Italy. Initially organized to be a forum for informal discussions between the sessions of the Diplomatic Conference in Geneva, the Round Table was set up again when the Conference ended to discuss the implications of the two Additional Protocols which had been adopted. The Round Table also considered the question of torture in its humanitarian and legal aspects and the legal and practical aspects of relief in peace time and during armed conflicts.

The Secretary-General's report was considered by the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee from 11 to 17 October and on 18 November 1977. The adoption of the two Additional Protocols was generally welcomed, representing as they did an effort to contribute to the progressive development and codification of international law and to modernize the rules concerning the conduct of hostilities. It was pointed out by Sweden that, for the first time, the international community had adopted rules regarding area, guerrilla and environmental warfare and starvation as a method of warfare, in addition to including important new rules on the wounded and on the protection of medical and civil defence personnel.

Another important fact, Mongolia said, was that the Protocols improved on the content of the 1949 Geneva Conventions in that they dealt with the protection of the civilian population and broadened the classification of acts that constituted war crimes.

Iran and Turkey were pleased to note that Protocol I provided that journalists on dangerous professional missions in areas of armed conflict would be considered as civilians. Viet Nam considered that the main achievement lay in having taken account of the new reality of the wars of the past three decades, namely wars waged by peoples in defence of their right to self-determination and against colonialism, neo-colonialism, apartheid and racism.

The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Guinea, Kenya, Mongolia, Romania, Sierra Leone, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Republic of Cameroon, Viet Nam and Zambia were among those which were gratified that Protocol I accorded combatant and prisoner-of-war status to members of national liberation movements fighting against colonialism, racism and foreign occupation. Algeria, Bulgaria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, Togo and the USSR referred to the importance they attached to the articles denying such status to mercenaries, although Democratic Yemen, Guinea, Kenya, Morocco and Zaire would have preferred the text of that provision to be more forceful.

Pakistan said it regretted the absence of provisions on periodic meetings of parties to discuss new types of weapons likely to affect combatants and civilians indiscriminately, on prohibiting the use of prisoners of war to extract political concessions, and on effective machinery to oversee the implementation of all humanitarian laws and consider complaints of violations by parties. Czechoslovakia regretted that some articles prepared in Conference committees, such as one relating to the prohibition of reprisals, had been excluded from the final text.

France said some of the provisions of Protocol I, while unquestionably reflecting a humanitarian spirit, could prejudice the exercise of the right to self-defence against aggression. It also regretted that there were not precise criteria for distinguishing between non-international conflicts regulated by Protocol I and those regulated by Protocol II; such a confusion could generate legal and political problems, France said.

Honduras, Togo, the United Republic of Cameroon and Zambia considered that in Protocol II, relating to the protection of victims of non-international armed conflicts, a suitable balance was struck between the need for humanitarian rules and the need to respect State sovereignty. Norway and the United States, on the other hand, considered that there had been too much deference to the concept of national sovereignty, to the detriment of the protection of human rights. The Federal Republic of Germany said it would have been happier if a more equitable solution taking account of the rights of both the individual and the State could have been found, while the Ukrainian SSR regretted that a simplified text of Protocol II had been adopted, somewhat reducing, it felt, the protection afforded to the victims of non-international armed conflicts. Sweden expressed dissatisfaction regarding certain aspects also, such as the rules regarding non-international conflicts, which had had to be drastically and abruptly curtailed at the end of the Conference, despite the fact that those conflicts were the most common.

Norway and the United States would have preferred to see the creation of a mandatory fact-finding commission to inquire into cases of grave breaches or serious violations, and the introduction of machinery for the automatic appointment of protecting powers. The Netherlands noted in that connexion that the fact-finding commission described in Protocol I was entirely dependent on the consent of all parties to the conflicts.

Cyprus said one area in which stronger wording and bolder measures could have been appropriately adopted was the prohibition or restriction of excessively injurious conventional weapons. Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Italy, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, the Netherlands and Yugoslavia were among Members which supported the Conference resolution on follow-up regarding prohibition or restriction of the use of certain conventional weapons. Austria, Egypt, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Pakistan, Peru and Venezuela also supported the convening of a conference in 1979 to help reach the goals, set out in that resolution, of prohibiting or restricting such weapons. Hungary had reservations concerning the usefulness of the conference, however, and the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Guinea, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Zaire considered that the problem should be reviewed in the broader context of the problem of disarmament.

Finland, Honduras and Hungary said it was equally important to ensure the effective dissemination of international humanitarian law.

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted by consensus a resolution on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, by which it recalled the fundamental principle of international law set out in Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations²⁹ that all Members were to refrain from the threat or use of force in their international relations. The Assembly reaffirmed the need to secure the full observance of human rights in armed conflicts pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts. It also stressed the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949, and called on all parties to armed conflicts to observe them.

The Assembly welcomed the successful conclusion of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts which resulted in the adoption of the two Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949. It called upon all parties to armed conflicts to acknowledge and to comply with their obligations under the existing instruments of international humanitarian law; it further called upon all States to take effective steps for the dissemination of humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts.

The General Assembly urged States to consider without delay signing and ratifying or acceding to the two Additional Protocols, opened for signature on 12 December 1977 in Berne, Switzerland, as well as the 1949 Geneva Conventions themselves. The Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Swiss Federal Council for acting as host to the four sessions of the Diplomatic Conference and to ICRC for preparing the basis for discussion and for its constant assistance to the Conference. Lastly, it requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its 1979 session a report on the state of signatures and ratifications of the Additional Protocols.

Resolution 32/44 was adopted on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee. The 27-power text was approved by consensus by that Committee on 18 November 1977. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By a note verbale of 20 December, the United Republic of Cameroon brought to the attention of the Secretariat a declaration adopted by the first African Seminar on International Humanitarian Law, held at Yaounde from 28 November to 2 December 1977. The Yaounde Declaration on Humanitarian Law recommended that African Governments sign and ratify the two Additional Protocols to the Geneva Conventions and continue their efforts to disseminate the principles of international humanitarian law by, among other means, including courses on the subject in universities and establishing regional training courses.

Resolution 32/44, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/32/396, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 97.

The General Assembly,
Mindful of the necessity to eliminate the scourge of war which has brought untold sorrow to mankind,

Recalling the fundamental principle of international law set out in Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations that all Members shall refrain from the threat or use of force in their international relations,

Reaffirming the need to secure the full observance of human rights in armed conflicts pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Convinced of the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on the fourth session of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts, held at Geneva from 17 March to 10 June 1977,

1. Welcomes the successful conclusion of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts which has resulted in two Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, adopted by the Diplomatic Conference on 8 June 1977, namely, Protocol I relating to the protection of victims of international armed conflicts and Protocol II relating to the protection of victims of non-international armed conflicts;

2. Notes the recommendation, approved by the Diplomatic Conference, that a special conference be called on the issue of prohibition or restriction of use for humanitarian reasons of specific conventional weapons;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Swiss Federal Council for acting as host to the four sessions of the Diplomatic Conference, and to the International Committee of the Red Cross for preparing the basis for discussion and for its constant assistance to the Conference;

4. Urges States to consider without delay the matter of signing and ratifying or acceding to the two Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, which will be opened for signature on 12 December 1977 in Berne;

5. Appeals to States which have not done so to become parties to the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

6. Calls upon all parties to armed conflicts to acknowledge and to comply with their obligations under the existing instruments of international humanitarian law and to observe the international humanitarian rules which are applicable, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

7. Calls upon all States to take effective steps for the dissemination of humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session a report concerning the state of signatures and ratifications of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fourth session an item entitled "Report of the Secretary-General on the state of signatures and ratifications of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 concerning the respect for human rights in armed conflicts."

Advisory services in human rights

Activities in 1977

In 1977, the programme of advisory services in human rights provided for a regional training course on safeguards against deprivation of the right to liberty and security of the person. The training course took place from 5 to 22 December at Fuchu, Japan, and was attended by 18 judges, public prosecutors, police officials and other jurists from 15 member States of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

A total of 14 fellowships in the field of human rights were granted in 1977 to recipients from the following 14 countries: Benin, Chad, Cuba, Cyprus, Guatemala, Jordan, Kenya, Liberia, Mali, Mongolia, Portugal, Senegal, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia. The programme for 1977 included awards on questions relating to: the protection of human rights in the administration of justice; the protection of the rights of the child in the administration of justice; the institution of ombudsman and other related institutions concerned with the protection of human rights; the protection of the human rights of the disabled through rehabilitation and legislation; and the activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the field of human rights.

At its 1977 session, the Commission on Human Rights decided to postpone until 1978 consideration of advisory services in the field of human rights.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/127) by which, inter alia, it requested the Secretary-General, under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to give priority to the organization, in areas where no regional commission on human rights existed, of seminars for the purpose of discussing the establishment of appropriate regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights (see also p. 732).

On the same date, in connexion with the observance of the thirtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1978, the Assembly adopted resolution 32/123 by which it recommended the organization at Geneva of a special world-wide seminar on national and local institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (see also p. 729). (For texts of resolutions 32/127 and 32/123, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Protection from torture and other cruel or inhuman treatment

Human rights of detained or imprisoned persons

The Commission on Human Rights, at its thirty-third session held in February/March 1977, noted with regret the increasingly widespread and systematic use of torture on detained persons. There was some support for the view that the time had come for the United Nations to give consideration to an international convention on the prevention and punishment of torture.

The Commission approved a resolution by which it reiterated the need for full observance and implementation of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.³⁰

tion of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to continue to consider the question of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in the light of pertinent resolutions. It also asked the Sub-Commission, whose Special Rapporteur, Erik Nettel (Austria), was currently preparing a draft of a body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment, to present a comprehensive report on the elaboration of such a body of principles to the Commission's 1978 session; the Commission would then submit the report to the General Assembly at its regular 1978 session.

Later in the year, during its August/September session, the Sub-Commission recommended that the appointment of a five-member working group be authorized to meet for not more than five working days prior to the Sub-Commission's next session to prepare a revised draft body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment, on the basis of those which had been prepared by its Special Rapporteur.

In 1976,³¹ the Economic and Social Council had transmitted a 1975 General Assembly resolution relating to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment³² to the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission for Social Development and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control. In particular, the Council asked the Committee to study the range of application of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, approved by the Council on 31 July 1957,³³ and to formulate a set of implementing procedures for those Rules.

After consideration of the reports of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and the Commission for Social Development, the Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, decided on 13 May 1977, by resolution 2076(LXII), to extend the Standard Minimum Rules so that they protected persons arrested or imprisoned without charge. (See p. 662; for text of resolution 2076(LXII), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Also in May 1977, the Council's Social Committee considered a draft decision sponsored by Colombia, Greece, the Netherlands, Norway and Rwanda by which the Council would authorize the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to appoint a group of five of its members to meet for not more than five days before each Sub-Commission session in order to analyse documentary material on the human rights of persons subjected to detention or imprisonment received in the course of the year. The sponsors subsequently decided not to press the draft decision to a vote.

The Sub-Commission at its 1977 session approved two further resolutions on the question of the human rights of persons subjected to detention or imprisonment. By the first, it called on States whose authorities resorted to arbitrary arrest, indefinite detention without trial, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment to discontinue such practices and to restore full respect for basic human rights and fundamental freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other instruments. The second resolution, by which the Sub-Commission expressed concern at the manner in which certain countries took action against individuals during a state of seige or emergency, contained a decision to entrust two Sub-Commission members, Nicole Questiaux (France) and Jose Joaquin Caicedo Perdomo (Colombia), with preparing a study on the implications for human rights of recent developments in this sphere.

When the General Assembly, at its regular 1977 session, considered the report of the Economic and Social Council, it had before it a letter of 9 December 1977 from Fiji, New Zealand and Singapore circulating a petition presented by Amnesty International on behalf of 1,121,609 individuals and organizations, representing 84 million people in 133 countries. The petition urged the Assembly to take steps to ensure strict observance in all countries of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and urged all Governments to act for the immediate release of all prisoners of conscience.

By a resolution adopted on 16 December 1977 (32/121), the General Assembly requested Member States: to take effective measures to safeguard the human rights and fundamental freedoms of persons detained in respect of offences which they had committed or were suspected of having committed, by reason of their political opinions or convictions; to ensure, in particular, that such persons were not subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; and to ensure that, in the determination of any criminal charge against them, such persons received a fair hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law. The Assembly called upon Member States to examine periodically the possibility of releasing such persons.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/121, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had considered the draft in 1976, including amendments proposed by the German Democratic Republic, but had deferred approval owing to lack of time.³⁴ The resolution as revised by the sponsor, Sweden, was considered again in 1977 and approved on 8 December by consensus.

The Assembly also adopted resolution 32/122 on 16 December, by which it emphasized that any attempts to suppress the struggle against colonial domination and racist regimes were incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, expressed its solidarity with fighters for national independence and social progress, against colonialism, apartheid, racism and foreign occupation, and demanded the release of all individuals detained or imprisoned as the result of their struggle towards those ends. It insisted that Israel and the racist minority regimes in southern Africa should immediately and unconditionally release all individuals detained because of their struggle for self-determination and national independence and against apartheid, all forms of racism and racial discrimination, colonialism and foreign occupation.

The Assembly called on Member States to support and aid peoples fighting for their liberation and asked the Commission on Human Rights to continue giving particular attention to the question of the release of individuals detained or imprisoned as a result of their participation in struggles against apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, colonialism, aggression and foreign occupation and for self-determination, independence and social progress for their people.

Resolution 32/122 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 97 to 18, with 22 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Third Committee. The draft had also been deferred from 1976, along with an amendment by Algeria, Egypt, Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic.³⁵

Morocco proposed oral amendments in 1977 to change the title of the resolution and to rearrange the order of the wording of the provision by which the Assembly demanded the release of certain detained persons. A consequential oral proposal by the Federal Republic of Germany brought the wording of the request to the Commission on Human Rights in parallel with the Moroccan change, and a Cuban oral amendment to that same provision asked the Commission to "continue" to give particular attention to the question. All those amendments and an oral drafting amendment by Iran were accepted by the sponsor—the Byelorussian SSR. Morocco, however, asked for a separate vote on an Algerian subamendment to add the conjunction "and" between the policies struggled against and objectives struggled for in Morocco's amended provision—by which the Assembly demanded the release of all individuals detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle against apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, colonialism, aggression and foreign occupation "and" for self-determination, independence and social progress for their people. Algeria said there existed cases of peoples struggling for self-determination, but whose struggle was not necessarily taking place in a situation of racism or racial discrimination. Morocco observed that for the first time the principle of social progress of peoples had been introduced in the context of the struggle for self-determination and against racism and foreign occupation. There should be a cause-and-effect relationship; thus, "in order to achieve" should be substituted for the word "and" proposed by Algeria. Morocco subsequently withdrew that and another oral amendment it had made to refer to combatants rather than individuals in this provision. The conjunction was retained by 42 votes to 20, with 40 abstentions, and the resolution as a whole, as revised, was approved by a roll-call vote of 69 to 17, with 28 abstentions, on 9 December. By a separate vote, the Assembly also retained the word, by a recorded vote of 66 to 36, with 33 abstentions.

By a resolution, adopted on 8 December, the General Assembly condemned the South African regime for its continuing violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and for the practice of subjecting political detainees and others to torture and other inhuman treatment or punishment, in particular that which led to the murder of Stephen Biko. It reiterated its deep aversion to the régime's practice of subjecting opponents of apartheid to summary banning, detention, imprisonment and sometimes murder.

The Assembly demanded that South Africa release all political prisoners without pre-condition, lift all banning and house arrest orders imposed on opponents of apartheid, and put an immediate end to the indiscriminate use of violence against peaceful demonstrators against apartheid and to the persistent recourse to torture of political detainees. It expressed its conviction that the ideals and martyrdom of Stephen Biko and all other nationalists murdered in South African prisons would continue to enrich the faith of the peoples of southern Africa and the world in their struggle for racial equality and dignity.

Resolution 32/65 was adopted, without vote, as recommended by the Third Committee, where the text was approved, also without vote, on 9 November. It was sponsored by Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Hungary, India, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Mexico, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo (on behalf of the African group of Member States), Trinidad and Tobago, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

(See also p. 153.)

On 7 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/14, by which, inter alia, it demanded the immediate release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, full respect for their fundamental personal rights and the observance of article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, under which no one was to be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. (For details, see p. 703; for text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Declarations and convention on torture and other cruel or inhuman treatment

When the Third Committee met during the Assembly's 1977 session to discuss the question of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, it had before it a note by the Secretary-General containing the text of a draft resolution on a code of conduct for law enforcement officials, submitted by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 2075(LXII) for consideration by the General Assembly. (For text of resolution 2075(LXII), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.) The Secretary-General also transmitted a resolution of the World Health Organization relating to the progress of a study being undertaken on behalf of that organization on the feasibility of elaborating a code of medical ethics relevant to the protection of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Further, the Secretary-General reported on action taken by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on the subject under consideration by the Third Committee.

On 9 November, the Committee approved a draft decision by which it recommended that the General Assembly should request the Secretary-General to transmit the draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials to all Governments for examination and comment and to report back to the Assembly's 1978 session. The Assembly adopted the recommendation without vote on 8 December as decision 32/419.

(For details, see p. 663.)

Also on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions relating to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

By the first resolution, adopted on 8 December, the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to draw up a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, in the light of the principles embodied in the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The Commission was requested to report on its work to the Assembly in 1978, when an item on the topic would be included in the agenda to review the progress achieved.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/62 without vote; in the Third Committee, the text, sponsored by 40 States, was approved without vote on 9 November.

By the second resolution, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to draw up and circulate among Member States a questionnaire soliciting information on the steps they had taken, including legislative and administrative measures, to put into practice the principles of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and

Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. Special attention was to be given to publicity on the Declaration, measures to prevent torture, training of law enforcement personnel and other public officials, legislative or administrative action, and legal remedies for victims.

Resolution 32/63 was adopted without vote on 8 December 1977. In the Third Committee, which approved the draft without vote on 9 November, the text was sponsored by Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Portugal and Sweden. The sponsors accepted an Argentine oral proposal to delete a provision to include the item in the agenda of Assembly's 1978 session, since the provision was already contained in resolution 32/62.

By the third resolution, the Assembly called upon all Member States to reinforce their support of the Declaration by making, publicizing, and depositing with the Secretary-General unilateral declarations against torture along the lines of a model declaration annexed to the resolution. It asked the Secretary-General to provide annual reports on such unilateral declarations.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/64 on 8 December without vote. The resolution was sponsored by Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Iran, Italy, Jordan, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Senegal, Sweden, Tunisia, Yugoslavia and Zambia. An oral amendment, similar to the Argentine amendment accepted by the sponsors of resolution 32/63, was proposed by the USSR and accepted, and the text was approved by the Third Committee without vote on 9 November.

In accordance with a request by Ireland and New Zealand for confirmation that the item on torture would be considered in 1978 in all its aspects, in view of the acceptance of the Argentine and USSR amendments, the Third Committee on 9 November decided that the reports to be prepared by the Secretary-General under the item "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" were to take account of all the resolutions adopted under that item by the Assembly at its regular 1977 session, and that the discussion on the item at the 1978 session would include the item in all its aspects, as well as the specific issues mentioned in the various resolutions adopted. India requested that the decision appear in the Third Committee's report. On 8 December, the Assembly took note of this decision without adopting a formal de-

Protection of human rights in Chile

On 14 January 1977, by decision 204(ORG-77), the Economic and Social Council referred a 1976 General Assembly resolution on the protection of human rights in Chile³⁶ to the Commission on Human Rights. During the Commission's consideration of the resolution in March, it had before it, among other information and communications, the 1976 report of its Ad Hoc Working Group established to inquire into the situation of human rights in Chile,³⁷ supplemented by the Group's fourth report to the Commission, information received from international organizations on their activities relating to human rights in Chile, and the observations of the Government of Chile on the Working Group's report, as well as a number of other communications from the Chilean Government. The Commission heard evidence from State representatives and those of non-governmental organizations.

On 9 March, the Commission adopted a resolution by which it expressed profound indignation at the violations of human rights which continued to take place in Chile, and called on the Chilean authorities to end secret arrests and subsequent disappearances and to restore and safeguard basic human rights and fundamental freedoms. It asked the Secretary-General to invite Member States, United Nations agencies and other international organizations to report to the Assembly's 1978 session on steps taken to implement the Assembly's 1976 resolution. It also asked the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake a study for 1978, with specific proposals, on the consequences of the various forms of aid extended to the Chilean authorities and also to analyse feasible ways of aiding those arbitrarily arrested or imprisoned, those forced to leave the country and their relatives.

Finally, the Commission extended for one year the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group, having expressed its appreciation of the Group's work.

On the recommendation of its Social Committee, approved without vote on 6 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group and requested the General Assembly to make appropriate financial and staff arrangements. The Council took this action by decision 233(LXII), adopted without vote on 13 May 1977.

On 31 August 1977, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities discussed the situation in Chile in the light of the Assembly's 1976 resolution and the requests of the Commission on Human Rights. The Sub-Commission agreed to carry out a study on the consequences of the various forms of aid extended to the Chilean authorities and appointed Antonio Cassese (Italy) as Special Rapporteur to prepare the study. It expressed its appreciation to Member States, United Nations organizations and other bodies which had aided persons arrested or imprisoned in Chile, those forced to leave and their relatives, and recommended that a voluntary fund administered under the authority of an independent board of trustees be established to receive and distribute humanitarian, legal and financial aid to such persons. The Secretary-General was requested to prepare a report for the Commission on Human Rights at its 1978 session with suggestions as to the methods of establishing the fund, its structure, sources of contributions and channels of distribution.

The General Assembly had before it at its regular 1977 session, when discussing this matter, the fifth report of the Ad Hoc Working Group to inquire into the situation of human rights in Chile. The report was prepared at meetings in Geneva in August 1977 during which the Group also examined information gathered in July during a field mission to Caracas, Venezuela, and New York, and during hearings in Geneva. The report described: the Group's relations with the Government of Chile; constitutional and legal developments in that country; the situation concerning liberty and security of the person, including arrest, detention and trial, disappearance of detained persons, and official investigations of cases of missing persons; torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and the specialized organs of State security; conditions of refugees, exiles, those deprived of their Chilean nationality, and those expelled from the country; and the situation regarding intellectual freedom and cultural, economic and social rights.

In its conclusions, the Working Group reiterated its conviction that a visit to Chile was of paramount importance in order to fulfil its mandate, and would prove beneficial to all concerned. Although it noted that a large number of political detainees had been released, the scale of arrests and detention had diminished, and accounts of torture were less shocking than reflected in previous reports, it was unable to conclude that respect for human rights had been restored and the situation was in several areas still disturbing. It expressed the view that violations of human rights were systematic and institutionalized in Chile and that a new system of intimidation had been introduced, whereby the authorities controlled individuals by short-term detention and torture, followed by continuous harassment.

In a reply to the report of the Working Group, the Government of Chile refuted in detail the evidence provided by the Group and charged that: the report was not the result of a genuine investigation; it did not reflect the current situation of human rights in Chile; and the Group utilized investigation methods which were intellectually unacceptable, did not draw the conclusions which any serious, objective and impartial investigation would have revealed, and interfered in the internal affairs of Chile.

The General Assembly also had before it a note by the Secretary-General describing the steps taken to ascertain the fate of 36 missing relatives of a group of 26 persons who had organized a hunger strike at the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) in Santiago. The hunger strike was carried out in June 1977 to draw attention to the fate of missing persons in Chile. In addition, Chile brought to the Assembly's attention in June 1977 official statements concerning the release from custody of persons detained under state-of-siege regulations, including Luis Corvalán Lepe and Jorge Montes, members of the Chilean Communist Party, and on the current situation in that country. Replies were transmitted, which had been received from 19 Governments and from specialized agencies and international organizations to a request of the Secretary-General, which outlined the steps they had taken under an Assembly resolution of 16 December 1976³⁸ to help restore human rights in Chile.

On 16 December 1977, the Assembly adopted a resolution on the protection of human rights in Chile by which it reiterated its profound indignation that the Chilean people continued to be subjected to constant and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms and to systematic intimidation, including torture, disappearance of persons for political reasons, arbitrary arrest, detention, exile and deprivation of Chilean nationality. It expressed its particular concern at the continuing disappearance of persons and the refusal of the Chilean authorities to accept responsibility or to account for the large number of such persons, or even to undertake an adequate investigation of cases drawn to their attention.

The Assembly deplored the unsatisfactory way in which the Chilean authorities had fulfilled their undertakings to the Secretary-General relating to the disappeared relatives of the Chileans who had held a hunger strike at ECLA headquarters and also the failure of the authorities to allow the Ad Hoc Working Group to visit the country. It called on them to restore and safeguard basic human rights and fundamental freedoms and to respect international instruments and decisions. It demanded an end to secret arrests and subsequent disappearances and clarification of the status of disappeared persons. It also reiterated its invitation to Member States and international organizations to inform the Secretary-General of steps taken to implement the Assembly's 1976 resolution on this question.

The Assembly invited the Commission on Human Rights to extend the mandate of the Working Group. It also asked the Commission to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, specific recommendations on possible humanitarian, legal and financial aid to those arbitrarily arrested or imprisoned, to those forced to leave the country and to their relatives. The Commission was also asked to submit a progress report to the Assembly in 1978 on action taken to clarify the status of individuals whose disappearance was attributable to political reasons.

Resolution 32/118 was adopted, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, by a recorded vote of 96 to 14, with 25 abstentions. In the Third Committee, the resolution, sponsored by 35 States, was approved on 7 December by a roll-call vote of 98 to 12, with 28 abstentions.

Resolution 32/121, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/458, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in particular its articles 5, 10 and 19,

Recalling article 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which guarantees to everyone the right to hold opinions and to freedom of expression, subject only to such restrictions as are provided by law and are necessary for the respect of the rights or reputation of others or for the protection of national security or of public order, or of public health or morals,

Recalling also the prohibition against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment which is laid down in article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Noting, in this connexion, further efforts to eliminate torture which have been made in the United Nations and which have been reflected in the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,*

Further recalling article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which provides that all persons, in the determination of any criminal charge against them, are entitled to a fair hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law,

Recognizing the importance of full respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle against colonialism, aggression and foreign occupation and for self-determination, independence, the elimination of apartheid and all forms of racial discrimination and racism, and the termination of all these violations of human rights,

Aware of the fact that in many parts of the world numerous persons are detained in respect of offences which they committed, or are suspected of having committed, by reason of their political opinions or convictions,

Noting that these persons are often exposed to special dangers as regards the protection of their human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Realizing, therefore, that special attention should be given to the full respect of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of these persons,

1. Requests Member States:

(a) To take effective measures to safeguard the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the above-mentioned persons;

(b) To ensure, in particular, that such persons are not subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

(c) Also to ensure that such persons, in the determination of any criminal charge against them, receive a fair hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law;

2. Calls upon Member States to examine periodically the possibility of releasing such persons as an act of clemency or by way of conditional release or otherwise.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3246(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3382(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/34 of 30 November 1976 and 32/14 of 7 November 1977, in which it reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for liberation from colonial and foreign domination by all available means, including armed struggle, and demanded full respect for the basic human rights of all individuals detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, and their immediate release,

Noting with appreciation the progress achieved in the elimination of colonialism and the realization of the right of peoples to self-determination,

Expressing its serious concern regarding the continuing denial of the right to self-determination of the peoples of Namibia, Zimbabwe and Palestine and other peoples fighting for the realization of their right to self-determination and their liberation from colonialism and racism,

Recalling that the Security Council, in its resolution 392(1976) of 19 June 1976, once again strongly condemned the policy of apartheid as a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind and a serious breach of international peace and security and emphasized the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination,

Emphasizing the necessity of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling its resolution 3103(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, in which it solemnly proclaimed the basic principles of the legal status of the combatants struggling against colonial and alien domination and racist regimes,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the fighters for national independence and social progress of their people, against colonialism, apartheid, racism and foreign occupation;

2. Emphasizes again that any attempts to suppress the struggle against colonial domination and racist regimes are incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

3. Demands the release of all individuals detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle against apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, colonialism, aggression and foreign occupation and for self-determination, independence and social progress for their people;

4. Insists that Israel and the racist minority regimes in southern Africa should immediately and unconditionally release all individuals detained or imprisoned because of their struggle for self-determination and national independence and against apartheid, all forms of racism and racial discrimination, colonialism and foreign occupation;

5. Calls upon Member States to provide support and assistance in all fields to the peoples fighting for their liberation from colonialism, foreign occupation, racism and racial discrimination;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give particular attention to the question of the release of individuals detained or imprisoned as a result of their participation in the struggle against apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, colonialism, aggression and foreign occupation and for self-determination, independence and social progress for their people;

7. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

A/32/355. Report of Third Committee, draft resolution IV.

Resolution 32/65, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/355, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,
Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in particular its article 5,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, contained in the annex to its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa, established pursuant to resolution 2(XXIII) of the Commission on Human Rights, concerning the deaths of detainees and police brutality in South Africa since the Soweto massacre of 16 June 1976,

Gravely concerned about the reports regarding the torture of political prisoners and the deaths of a number of detainees and about the growing wave of acts of repression against individuals, organizations and information media in South Africa,

Deeply shocked by the cowardly and dastardly murder in detention of Stephen Biko,

1. Condemns the South African regime for its continuing violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

2. Reiterates its deep aversion to the practice whereby the South African regime persistently subjects all opponents of apartheid to summary banning, detention, imprisonment and sometimes murder;

3. Strongly condemns the practice of subjecting political detainees and other victims of apartheid in South Africa to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

4. Strongly condemns, in particular, the arbitrary arrest, detention and torture which led to the murder of Stephen Biko by agents of the racist minority regime of South Africa;

5. Demands that the minority apartheid regime of South Africa:

(a) Release all political prisoners without pre-condition;

(b) Lift all banning and house arrest orders imposed on opponents of apartheid;

(c) Put an immediate end to the indiscriminate use of violence against peaceful demonstrators against apartheid and to the persistent recourse to torture of political detainees;

6. Expresses its conviction that the martyrdom of Stephen Biko and all other nationalists murdered in South African prisons and the ideals for which they fought will continue to enrich the faith of the peoples of southern Africa and other parts of the world in their struggle against apartheid and for racial equality and the dignity of the human person.

A/32/355. Report of Third Committee, draft resolution I.

Resolution 32/62, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/355, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one may be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, contained in the annex to its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Believing that further international efforts are needed to ensure adequate protection for all against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Welcoming in that regard the work that has been done, or is being done, on the basis of General Assembly resolution 3453(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Considering that a further significant step would be the adoption of an international convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

1. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to draw up a draft convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, in the light of the principles embodied in the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

2. Further requests the Commission on Human Rights to submit a progress report on its work to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" for the purpose of reviewing the progress achieved in accordance with the present resolution.

Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Germany, Federal Republic of Ireland, Italy, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Portugal, Sweden: draft resolution, as orally revised by Argentina and sponsors, approved without vote by Third Committee on 9 November 1977, meeting 42.

A/32/355. Report of Third Committee, draft resolution II.

Resolution 32/63, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/355, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, contained in the annex to its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Recalling its resolutions 3453(XXX) of 9 December 1975 and 31/85 of 13 December 1976,

Having regard to article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which provides that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Taking note of resolution 7(XXVII) of 20 August 1974 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities regarding its annual review of developments in the field of human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment,

Reiterating that the Declaration should serve as a guideline for all States and other entities exercising effective power,

Gravely concerned over continued reports from which it appears that in some countries State authorities are systematically resorting to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to draw up and circulate among Member States a questionnaire soliciting information concerning steps they have taken, including legislative and administrative measures, to put into practice the principles of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment while giving special attention to the following subjects:

(a) Publicity given to the Declaration, not only in governmental bodies and services but also among the public at large;

(b) Effective measures for the prevention of torture;

(c) Training of law enforcement personnel and other public officials responsible for persons deprived of their liberty;

(d) Any pertinent legislative or administrative action taken since the adoption of the Declaration;

(e) Effective legal remedies for victims of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the information provided in response to the questionnaire to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session and furthermore to submit such information to the Commission on Human Rights and to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its thirty-second session.

A/32/355. Report of Third Committee, draft resolution III.

Resolution 32/64, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/355, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the dignity and worth of the human person place upon Member States the obligation to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which stipulate that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, unanimously adopted by its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975, as well as its resolution 31/85 of 13 December 1976,

Recognizing the necessity for further international action in the form of a convention for the elimination of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recognizing also the importance of action by Member States to develop and utilize their national machinery to eliminate torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Calls upon all Member States to reinforce their support of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment by making unilateral declarations against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, along the lines of the text which is annexed to the present resolution, and depositing them with the Secretary-General;

2. Urges all Member States to give maximum publicity to their unilateral declarations against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly, in annual reports, of such unilateral declarations against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment as may be deposited by Member States.

ANNEX

Model unilateral declaration against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The Government of.....hereby declares its intention:

(a) To comply with the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (General Assembly resolution 3452(XXX), annex);

(6) To implement, through legislation and other effective measures, the provisions of the said Declaration.

The General Assembly,

Emphasizing its commitment to foster universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, everyone has the right to life, liberty and the security of person and the right not to be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile, or to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, unanimously adopted in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Reaffirming once more its condemnation of all forms of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Considering that both the General Assembly in its resolution 31/124 of 16 December 1976 and the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 9(XXXIII) of 9 March 1977 expressed profound indignation that constant and flagrant violations of human rights have taken place and continue to take place in Chile, in particular the institutionalized practice of torture, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment, the disappearance of persons for political reasons, arbitrary arrest, detention, exile and cases of deprivation of Chilean nationality,

Considering that its efforts and those of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the restoration of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile have not met with the response that their authority and unanimity of purpose demand,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 8(XXXI) of 27 February 1975, 3(XXXII) of 19 February 1976 and 9(XXXIII) of 9 March 1977, in which the Commission established the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Situation of Human Rights in Chile and extended its mandate,

Welcoming the steps taken by the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to implement General Assembly resolution 31/124,

Noting that the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-fourth session will be considering reports on the consequences of the various forms of aid extended to the Chilean authorities and on a voluntary fund to receive contributions and distribute, under the authority of an independent board of trustees, humanitarian and financial aid to those detained or imprisoned in Chile and their relatives,

Having considered the reports of the Ad Hoc Working Group and of the Secretary-General under this item, as well as the observations and documents submitted by the Chilean authorities,

Commending the Chairman and the members of the Ad Hoc Working Group for the thorough and objective manner in which the report was prepared, in spite of the difficulties arising from the persistent refusal of the Chilean authorities to permit the Group to visit the country in accordance with its mandate,

Deeply deploring the destruction of the democratic institutions and constitutional safeguards formerly enjoyed by the Chilean people,

Gravely concerned by the fact that, in spite of the appeals by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General, private institutions and citizens of Chile, the Chilean authorities have consistently failed to give a satisfactory account for missing persons,

Concluding that constant and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms continue to take place in Chile, notwithstanding recent developments, mainly due to the continuous efforts of the Chilean people and the international community, which, according to the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group, indicate a decrease in the number of political prisoners and in the number of detainees under the state of siege,

1. Reiterates its profound indignation that the Chilean people continue to be subjected to constant and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, to lack adequate constitutional and judicial safeguards of their rights and liberties and to suffer assaults on the freedom and integrity of their persons, in particular by methods of systematic intimidation, including torture, disappearance of persons for political reasons, arbitrary arrest, detention, exile and deprivation of Chilean nationality;

2. Expresses its particular concern and indignation at the continuing disappearance of persons, which is shown by the available evidence to be attributable to political reasons, and the refusal of the Chilean authorities to accept responsibility or to account for the large number of such persons, or even to undertake an adequate investigation of cases drawn to their attention;

3. Deplores, in this connexion, the unsatisfactory way in which the Chilean authorities have sought to fulfil their undertakings to the Secretary-General, acting under the mandate of General Assembly resolution 31/124, and relating to the disappeared relatives of the Chileans who drew attention to their plight by engaging in a hunger strike at the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Latin America at Santiago;

4. Further deplores the failure of the Chilean authorities to comply with their own repeated assurances to allow the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Situation of Human Rights in Chile to visit the country in accordance with its mandate;

5. Calls once more upon the Chilean authorities to restore and safeguard, without delay, basic human rights and fundamental freedoms and fully to respect the provisions of the relevant international instruments to which Chile is a party and, to this end, to implement paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 31/124;

6. Demands that the Chilean authorities put an immediate end to practices of inadmissible secret arrests and subsequent disappearance of persons whose detention is systematically denied or never acknowledged, and clarify forthwith the status of such persons;

7. Reiterates its invitation to Member States, United Nations agencies and other international organizations to inform the Secretary-General of steps taken to implement paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 31/124 in order to allow him to submit further reports to the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-fourth session and the Assembly at its thirty-third session;

8. Invites the Commission on Human Rights:

(a) To extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group, as presently constituted, so as to enable it to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session and to the Commission at its thirty-fifth session, with such additional information as may be necessary;

(b) To submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, specific recommendations on possible humanitarian, legal and financial aid to those arbitrarily arrested or imprisoned, to those forced to leave the country and to their relatives;

(c) To submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report on action taken in compliance with paragraph 5 (c) of Assembly resolution 31/124;

9. Requests the President of the thirty-second session of the General Assembly and the Secretary-General to assist in any way they may consider appropriate in the re-establishment of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile.

Other human rights questions

Alternative approaches and ways to improve the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly had before it at its regular 1977 session, which opened in September, an updated report of the Secretary-General on alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and a tabular report on the status of the international conventions in the field of human rights for which the Secretary-General acted as depositary. The reports were submitted in response to an Assembly request of 9 December 1975.³⁹

The first report analysed views expressed in a debate on the subject during the Assembly's thirtieth (1975) session as well as replies the Secretary-General had received in response to requests for the views of Member States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

Among the topics on which replies were received were: strengthening the capacity of United Nations organs to promote the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms; ratification of the International Covenants on Human Rights⁴⁰ and other human rights conventions; suggestions concerning the adoption of new substantive instruments; systems of periodic reports on human rights; procedures applicable to allegations of violations of human rights; fact-finding and investigation procedures; questions regarding the establishment of an international court on human rights; questions relating to international sanctions in cases of gross violations of human rights; the question of the establishment of a United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights; the question of the establishment of regional organs in the field of human rights; the good offices of the Secretary-General; studies on human rights; information and education in the field of human rights; co-operation with non-governmental organizations; promotion of human rights through advisory services; and action of specialized agencies.

On 16 December 1977, the Assembly adopted a resolution by which it acknowledged the progress achieved by the international community in the promotion and protection of human rights, particularly with respect to the standard-setting work within the United Nations system. It nevertheless expressed its deep concern at the continuing existence of an unjust international economic order which constituted a major obstacle to the realization of economic, social and cultural rights in developing countries.

The Assembly decided that future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights should take into account certain concepts, which it enumerated. Among these were: that equal attention should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of both civil and political, and economic, social and cultural rights; that the full realization of civil and political rights without the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights was impossible; and that the achievement of lasting progress in the field was dependent on sound and effective national and international policies of economic and social development.

Further, all human rights were inalienable; consequently, human rights questions should be examined globally and, when approaching such questions within the United Nations system, the international community should give priority to the search for solutions to flagrant violations of human rights. Priority should also be given to the realization of the new international economic order which was an essential element for promoting those rights, and the experience and contribution of both developed and developing countries should be taken into account by all organs of the United Nations system in their work related to human rights and fundamental freedoms. Finally, it was of paramount importance that Member States undertake specific obligations through ratifying or acceding to international instruments in this field.

The Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to carry out, at its 1978 session, an over-all analysis of alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system of improving the effective enjoyment of human rights. It also requested the Commission to comply with the mandate given it by the Economic and Social Council on 12 May 1976⁴¹ and the mandate established by the Commission in its decision of 21 February 1977, whereby the Commission would take steps to rationalize its work, with the help of the Secretary-General, in order to establish a proper and balanced long-term programme of work (see p. 733). The Assembly asked the Commission to submit a progress report on these matters to its 1978 session and a final report with conclusions and recommendations to its 1979 session.

The Assembly's decisions were embodied in resolution 32/130, adopted, by a recorded vote of 123 to 0, with 15 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, where the text was approved on 5 December 1977 by a recorded vote, requested by Cuba, of 126 to 0, with 11 abstentions. The resolution was sponsored by 35 Members.

During consideration by the Committee, several amendments were proposed by Morocco. After the Committee had considered a revised text submitted by the sponsors, Morocco withdrew a number of amendments and the remainder were rejected, either by roll-call or recorded vote. Two of these were in the preambular part of the text. Two others would have added to two of the operative paragraphs the concept that human rights should be implemented without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion. The final amendment would have noted the primary role of Governments in promoting the rights of individuals when referring to the concept that a new international economic order was an essential element in promoting human rights and should thus be given priority.

The Third Committee also had before it a draft resolution sponsored by Australia, Bolivia, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, El Salvador, Finland, the Gambia, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Lesotho, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Senegal, Spain, Surinam, Sweden, the United Kingdom and Venezuela. By this text, the sponsors proposed that the General Assembly decide to establish, under the authority of the Secretary-General, a United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, whose functions would be, among other things: to promote and strengthen universal and effective understanding and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, religion, sex or language, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments; to consider as areas of special concern such massive violations of human rights as apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, colonial domination, foreign occupation and alien subjugation; and to give special attention to the critical importance of ensuring the enjoyment by all of civil and political rights and economic, social and cultural rights, as well as all other rights recognized by the United Nations.

The High Commissioner's functions would also be: actively to promote understanding of the basic human rights inherent in the establishment of a new international economic order; to render, at the specific request of any State, assistance and services, including good offices, to that State and to report to the Assembly on its results, with the consent of the State concerned; and to maintain close relations with the Secretary-General and all other United Nations organs, giving advice and assistance to ensure co-ordination of their activities.

Also, by the resolution, the Assembly would stress that the authority of the High Commissioner would in no way prejudice the functions and powers of organs already in existence or which might be established to promote or protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, and would emphasize that the High Commissioner would have to give careful consideration to the economic and social situation and the cultural and religious values of the different countries. The Assembly would also request the High Commissioner to keep in close touch with the Secretary-General so that he could be informed of the relevant work of all United Nations organs, and so that he could receive the facilities and information required to carry out his functions.

The General Assembly would further decide that the High Commissioner would be appointed by the Secretary-General for a term of five years, and that his post would be financed under the regular budget. It would also request the Secretary-General to submit concrete proposals in 1978 for the organization of the High Commissioner's office, and, finally, would review the question in 1983 in the light of the activities undertaken and the results achieved.

A number of amendments were proposed jointly by the German Democratic Republic and Madagascar. These would have had the Assembly defer consideration of the establishment of the Office of a High Commissioner for Human Rights until the feasibility of a general agreement between Member States had been ascertained by the Secretary-General, who would undertake consultations with regional groups on the establishment of such an office, or any other mechanism to enhance human rights activities within the system, and report to the Commission on Human Rights in 1978.

Angola, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, Mongolia and the Ukrainian SSR also submitted amendments by which the Assembly would have determined that the Commission on Human Rights possessed the prestige and integrity required for the performance of its functions, and would have assigned to the Commission the functions assigned to the High Commissioner by the 24-power resolution. Also, the Secretary-General would be asked to continue and strengthen advisory services in this field.

An oral amendment by Saudi Arabia, seeking to ensure that the High Commissioner would not be influenced by any campaign waged by a State or its mass media to besmirch the reputation of any other Member State, was accepted by the sponsors. Saudi Arabia also submitted an amendment which would have asked the Assembly to ensure that the High Commissioner refrain from taking any action which might jeopardize the development of friendly relations among nations, particularly with regard to matters essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of States.

At the same meeting, Cuba orally submitted a procedural decision proposing that the draft resolution, together with all documents related to it and opinions advanced during the debate, should be transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights at its 1978 session for consideration during the over-all analysis it was to undertake on alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The decision was approved on 5 December 1977 by a recorded vote, requested by Oman, of 62 to 49, with 21 abstentions.

The report of the Third Committee was considered by the General Assembly on 16 December. During a procedural debate, Costa Rica asked for a recorded vote on the Committee's decision, but subsequently withdrew the request. The Assembly agreed to take note of the matter without adopting a formal decision.

On 16 November, a draft resolution sponsored by Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Ireland, Luxembourg, Rwanda and Senegal was introduced in the Third Committee. The sponsors proposed that the General Assembly should request States voluntarily to waive the right accorded to them by an Economic and Social Council decision of 27 May 1970,⁴² which allowed States to withhold consent for the holding of investigations and for access to their territory by an ad hoc committee appointed by the Commission on Human Rights, and to communicate to the Secretary-General their statement of intent to that effect. The Secretary-General would be requested to list States which had transmitted such communications in an annual report to the Assembly. The draft resolution was rejected on 6 December 1977 by a recorded vote, requested by Belgium, of 45 against to 29 in favour, with 51 abstentions.

On 22 November, Chile introduced a draft resolution by which the General Assembly would request the Secretary-General to appoint a group of 10 experts of recognized competence and proven experience in human rights matters, including representatives of the different geographical areas and legal systems, to prepare a study with a view to the establishment of a system for the investigation of allegations of violations of human rights. The group of experts would submit its report for consideration by the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session in 1979 and for subsequent consideration by the Assembly at its regular 1979 session. After consideration, the draft resolution was rejected on 6 December by a recorded vote, requested by Cuba, of 50 against to 15 in favour, with 65 abstentions.

Status of the International Covenants on Human Rights

On 16 December 1966, the General Assembly adopted and opened for signature, ratification or accession the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, together with its Optional Protocol.⁴³

The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights entered into force on 3 January 1976; the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights entered into force on 23 March 1976—both three months after the date of deposit with the United Nations Secretary-General of the thirty-fifth instrument of ratification or accession. The Optional Protocol to the latter Covenant entered into force simultaneously with that Covenant.

As at 31 December 1977, 46 States had ratified or acceded to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights: Australia, Barbados, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, ⁴² See Y.U.N., 1970, pp. 530-31, text of resolution 1503(XLVIII), esp. para. 6.

⁴³ See footnote 40.

Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guyana, Hungary, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Mongolia, Norway, Panama, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Spain, Surinam, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Yugoslavia and Zaïre.

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights had been ratified or acceded to by all the above States with the exception of Australia and the Philippines. The Protocol to that Covenant had been ratified or acceded to by the following 16 States: Barbados, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, Jamaica, Madagascar, Mauritius, Norway, Panama, Surinam, Sweden, Uruguay and Zaïre.

Upon ratification of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Governments of Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom had made declarations pursuant to article 41 of that Covenant, recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee, established under article 28, to receive and consider communications by a State party claiming that another State party was not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant. In accordance with article 41, such declarations by 10 States parties were needed before the provisions of the article came into force.

On 18 February 1977, the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the entry into force of the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocol. It felt this was a major step in international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Commission invited all States to become parties to these Covenants and to the Protocol and also to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

The Human Rights Committee set up under the terms of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights held its first session from 21 March to 1 April 1977 at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and its second session at Geneva from 11 to 31 August. Having adopted rules of procedure, the Committee heard reports from six States parties to the Covenant—Cyprus, Ecuador, Finland, Hungary, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia—on legislative, administrative and other action they had taken to implement the Covenant.

Some reservations were expressed by the States parties on the possibility of translating general concepts contained in the Covenant into domestic law and on whether the provisions of the Covenant could be invoked before domestic courts. For the guidance of States parties, the Committee adopted general guidelines regarding the form and content of future reports.

The Committee also dealt, in private meetings, with communications before it under the Protocol to the Covenant and adopted rules on the admissibility of such communications. It established a working group, to meet at Geneva in January 1978, to make recommendations on the admissibility of communications.

Since the Committee on Human Rights was required under article 45 of the Covenant to submit its first annual report through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly at its regular 1977 session, the Council took up the Committee's report in October 1977, in accordance with a suggestion of the Committee Chairman and Council decision 242(LXII) of 13 May 1977. On 17 October, the Council decided, at the suggestion of the President, to take note of the report and to transmit it to the General Assembly together with a report on the financial implications of the Committee's work. The decision—286(LXIII)—was adopted without a vote.

The report of the Human Rights Committee was considered in the Assembly's Third Committee. The Committee unanimously approved a draft resolution which the Assembly adopted on 8 December without objection as resolution 32/66. By this resolution, the Assembly expressed recognition of the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights, noted with appreciation the report of the Human Rights Committee on its first two sessions and expressed satisfaction with the serious manner in which the Committee was undertaking its functions. The Assembly stated that it appreciated that the Committee strove for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto.

It again invited all States which had not done so to become parties to both Covenants as well as to consider the possibilities of acceding to the Optional Protocol to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The Assembly then, among other things, requested the Secretary-General to keep the Human Rights Committee informed of the activities of the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

The text, which was approved on 2 November, was submitted by the Third Committee Chairman. It consolidated two draft resolutions, one proposed by Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Haiti, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Peru and Spain, and the other by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Iran, Iraq, Kenya, Madagascar, Mali, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Trade union rights

At its April/May 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council again considered allegations of infringement of trade union rights in South Africa. The Council had before it the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights, giving details of, among other things, a complaint dated 4 December 1974⁴⁴ from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions concerning the arrest of four members of the Black Allied Workers' Union. The report stated that the four workers had been released, but that two had subsequently put in claims of maltreatment.

The Council also had before it a note by the Secretary-General listing complaints by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and by the International Textile, Garment and Leather Workers' Federation concerning several arrests of trade unionists in South Africa, in the course of which one death had occurred, and the banning of many others. Further details of these cases were also given in the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts.

The Secretary-General stated in his note that in accordance with a 1950 Council resolution⁴⁵ he had sought the consent of South Africa to refer two banning orders against trade unionists to the International Labour Organisation (ILO). However, the South African Government, in a letter of 10 February 1977, had rejected the allegations on which the referral was based.

On 13 May 1977, after having considered the reports, the Council adopted without a vote resolution 2086(LXII). The resolution, which was sponsored by Algeria, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Jamaica, Mexico, Nigeria, Uganda and Yugoslavia, condemned the continued gross infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, called for the immediate release of all trade unionists under detention in southern Africa and for the lifting of all banning orders imposed on persons engaged in trade union activities, and demanded full recognition of all trade union rights of African workers in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below; see also p.152.)

On the same date the Council also decided without vote, by decision 236(LXII), to invite ILO to make a thorough study of possible ways of improving the lot of African agricultural workers and their families, and to request the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to continue its studies of allegations of infringements of trade union rights and to report to the Commission on Human Rights and the Council. It further decided, by decision 237(LXII) also adopted without vote on 13 May, to transmit the allegations contained in the note by the Secretary-General, together with the reply of the South African Government, to the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts for consideration and report.

Also on 13 May, the Council noted a complaint of the World Federation of Trade Unions that workers in Bahrain were being denied trade union rights. Since Bahrain was not, at the time of the complaint in May 1976, a member of ILO, the Secretary-General had sought the consent of the Government of Bahrain to refer the matter to ILO. The Government of Bahrain rejected the proposal on 4 April 1977.

The Economic and Social Council decided to take no further action in view of the fact that Bahrain became a member of ILO on 18 April 1977. It took note, through decision 238(LXII) adopted without vote, of the communications from the World Federation of Trade Unions and of the reply of Bahrain.

The Council further decided without a vote on 13 May, by decision 235(LXII), that since the Bahamas had become a member of ILO on 25 May 1976, a complaint and clarification of the allegations from the Bahamas Workers' Council and the Engineering, Fuel, Service and Allied Workers' Union (Engineering and General Union) as well as the replies from the Bahamian Government thereon, should be transmitted to ILO for appropriate action. The Council had decided in 1976 to defer consideration of the matter until 1977.⁴⁶

These decisions were recommended to the Council for adoption by the Social Committee which, on 13 May 1977, had approved the texts as orally proposed by its Chairman.

Human rights of migrant workers and exploitation of labour through trafficking

On 14 January 1977, by decision 204(ORG-77), the Economic and Social Council decided to refer to the Commission on Human Rights at its 1977 session a General Assembly resolution of 16 December 1976 on measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers.⁴⁷

At its session in February/March 1977, the Commission considered the report of an informal working group which it had established on 18 February 1977 to consider the question on the basis of, inter alia, instruments adopted and documents and studies prepared by the United Nations and specialized agencies.

On 11 March 1977, the Commission, bearing in mind that the informal working group had been unable to consider fully the documents before it because of lack of time, accepted the recommendation of the group and adopted a resolution by which it took note with satisfaction of a study on the exploitation of labour through illicit and clandestine trafficking prepared by the Special Rapporteur, Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco), and of the report of a seminar on the human rights of migrant workers held in Tunis, Tunisia, from 12 to 24 November 1975. The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council should consider the question at its April/May 1977 session, taking into account existing international instruments, as well as related studies and reports on the subject.

On the recommendation of its Social Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution on this subject on 13 May 1977, without a vote. By resolution 2083(LXII), the Council recommended that the Commission on Human Rights, at its 1978 session, in collaboration with ILO and other interested organizations of the United Nations system, and in the light of any recommendations of the General Assembly on the subject, should make a thorough study of the questions mentioned in the Assembly's 1976 resolution. Further, the Council decided to study this question at its first regular session in 1978 after considering the Commission's report.

The Social Committee approved the resolution on 6 May 1977 without a vote. The sponsors, which accepted an amendment by Italy to recall Council resolutions of 6 May 1975,⁴⁸ were Algeria, Colombia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Jamaica, Mexico, Rwanda, Tunisia and Yugoslavia.

When the Assembly's Third Committee discussed, on 1 December 1977, that part of the report of the Economic and Social Council relating to migrant workers, it also had before it a note by the Secretary-General reporting on the arrangements made, at its first meeting in Geneva on 9 March 1976, by the Ad Hoc Inter-agency Group on Migrant Workers and their Families, established by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination pursuant to a 1975 Council request,⁴⁹ for co-ordinating the activities of international organizations and for disseminating information to intergovernmental bodies. The Commission for Social Development had discussed and formally taken note of the report at its January/February 1977 session.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which it invited all States: to end discrimination against migrant workers; to extend to migrant workers having regular status in their territories treatment equal to that of their own nationals with regard to the enjoyment of fundamental human rights, with particular reference to equality of opportunity in employment, occupation, social security, trade union and cultural rights, and individual and collective freedoms; to promote implementation of relevant international instruments and adopt agreements to eliminate illicit traffic in alien workers; to ensure that their human and social rights were fully respected; to enlighten public opinion on the economic and social contributions of migrant workers; and to consider ratifying the ILO Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975.

Host countries were invited to arrange for adequate information and reception facilities and policies to preserve the cultural values, education and health of and to ensure housing for migrant workers, as well as to promote the normalization of their family life through family reunion. Countries of origin were invited to disseminate full knowledge of their rights and obligations.

The Assembly recommended that the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council should consider this question fully and in depth at their next sessions, in collaboration with ILO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and other interested agencies of the United Nations system, on the basis of the instruments adopted and the documents and studies prepared by the United Nations and the specialized agencies, including the Special Rapporteur's study on clandestine trafficking and the report of the 1975 Tunis seminar.

Resolution 32/120 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text on 7 December 1977 without vote. The text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Barbados, Colombia, the Comoros, the Dominican Republic, Italy, Jamaica, Mali, Mexico, the Niger, Portugal, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Spain, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey and Yugoslavia. Slavery, including slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism

The Working Group on Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its third session at Geneva during August 1977.

The Working Group submitted a report, for consideration by the Sub-Commission, which included recommendations: that Governments, whether parties or not, and non-governmental organizations should be requested to report annually on the legal, administrative and practical situation in relation to the abolition of the institution and practices covered by the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery; that the Convention should be ratified by all countries and a list published of those not parties; that a 1967 report on slavery and a study of traffic in persons and prostitution be updated; and that apartheid should be considered a collective form of slavery at the Working Group's next session.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

On 14 January 1977 (decision 204(ORG-77)), the Economic and Social Council decided to refer to the Commission on Human Rights a

1976 General Assembly resolution⁵⁰ by which the Assembly inter alia requested the Commission to give special attention to the implementation of the 1975 Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind.⁵¹

On 11 March the Commission adopted a two-part resolution recommended by an open-ended informal working group it had set up to consider the item.

By the first, the Commission asked its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to study, with a view to formulating guidelines, the question of the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health against treatment which might adversely affect the human personality; it was to submit a progress report to the Commission when such a report was ready.

By the second part of the resolution, the Commission emphasized the importance of the fact that United Nations Members, in their programmes and plans, should take account of the provisions and principles in the 1975 Declaration, in particular those relating to the transfer of technology and scientific knowledge to developing countries, thereby accelerating the realization of the economic and social rights of the peoples of those countries.

The Commission instructed its Sub-Commission to examine studies relating to the subject in the light of the Declaration and to submit its observations. It also drew the attention of the Committee on Science and Technology for Development to the Declaration and requested that Committee to take its provisions into account in the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, to be held in 1979 (see p. 539).

The Sub-Commission discussed the Commission's resolution on 25 August 1977. During the discussion, it was suggested that one member of the Sub-Commission might undertake the task of formulating guidelines and defining priorities on measures for protecting the human personality. It was felt that this would be a suitable subject for consideration at the 1979 Conference.

On 16 December 1977 the General Assembly adopted decision 32/434, without a vote, by which it decided, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, that there was insufficient time to consider the question of human rights and scientific and technological developments, and the matter was deferred to the Assembly's regular 1978 session.

The Third Committee on 9 December had adopted, without a vote, a decision to that effect proposed by France. A draft resolution, sponsored by the Byelorussian SSR—by which the Assembly would have called on Member States to take account of the Declaration in their programmes and development plans and would have instructed the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development to take account of the provisions of the Declaration in preparing the 1979 Conference—was withdrawn by the sponsor.

Thirtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 1978

On 21 February 1977, the Commission on Human Rights decided to recommend to Member States and international organizations that the thirtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁵² which would occur in 1978, would be an appropriate occasion for special efforts to promote universal respect for human rights, particularly by stressing the role of education in promoting human rights, and asked them to report on their efforts to mark the anniversary. The Commission also requested the Economic and Social Council to invite UNESCO to lay appropriate proposals for this purpose before its member States and to submit a report to the Commission in 1978 on the situation regarding teaching of human rights throughout the world, with detailed recommendations.

A draft decision on the topic was transmitted to the Economic and Social Council, which, on 13 May 1977, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, adopted it as decision 228(LXII), without a vote. By the decision, the Council endorsed the recommendation of the Commission and consequently decided to request UNESCO to take the proposed action.

On 16 December 1977, by resolution 32/123, the General Assembly invited Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations to take appropriate measures—a number of which were suggested in an annex to the resolution, including a number of proposals put forward by the Secretary-General in a note to the Assembly—to celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It also requested the Secretary-General to initiate appropriate activities at the United Nations level; these included a special commemorative meeting and special events on or around 10 December 1978 (Human Rights Day), a special seminar, awarding of human rights prizes, issuance of updated United Nations publications and information on human rights, and special broadcasts.

Suggested activities at the national level included formal proclamation of 10 December 1978 as Human Rights Day, special messages by government leaders, special parliamentary and other meetings, establishment of human rights institutions, encouragement of teaching programmes, dissemination of the Universal Declaration, and issuance of special stamps.

The Assembly welcomed UNESCO'S decision to organize in 1978 an international conference on the teaching of human rights and invited UNESCO to work with the Commission on Human Rights in developing a programme of action on the subject.

Resolution 32/123 was adopted without vote. Austria, on 10 October 1977, had submitted a note verbale indicating its strong support for the role envisaged for UNESCO in the anniversary observances and its intention to introduce a resolution on the subject in the Third Committee. The text, eventually sponsored by 27 States, was approved without vote by the Third Committee on 9 December 1977.

On 4 December 1950⁵³ the Assembly had invited all States and international organizations to observe 10 December of each year as Human Rights Day to celebrate the proclamation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and to report annually on their observance of the Day. The Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on 23 November 1977 on information received from six Member States and 24 United Nations information centres on their observance of Human Rights Day in 1976.

Realization of economic, social and cultural rights and study of special human rights problems in developing countries

When the Commission on Human Rights discussed the question of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights at its February/March 1977 session, special consideration was given to ways of following up the study on the subject carried out by its Special Rapporteur, Manouchehr Ganji (Iran). Particular concern was expressed about the increasing disparity of living conditions and income levels between the developed and the developing countries, which, it was felt, the international community had a duty to decrease.

The Commission adopted a resolution on 21 February by which it recommended that the Economic and Social Council invite the Secretary-General, in co-operation with UNESCO and the other competent specialized agencies, to undertake a study on the international dimensions of the right to development as a human right in relation with other human rights based on international co-operation, including the right to peace, taking into account the requirements of the new international economic order and fundamental human needs. The study was to be available for consideration by the Commission at its 1979 session.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to draw the attention of the competent organs of the United Nations to the resolution for their views and comments, and to transmit them to the Commission at its 1978 session. He was also asked to examine ways of updating the Special Rapporteur's report.

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, adopted without a vote a decision (229(LXII)) by which it endorsed the recommendation of the Commission on the proposed study and invited the Secretary-General to take appropriate action. The text of the decision was proposed by the Commission on Human Rights; the Social Committee approved it without vote on 6 May.

In accordance with the request of the Commission, the Secretary-General, in a note of 22 December 1977, submitted replies which he had received from eight organs of the United Nations outlining the actions they were taking in the fields of economic development and of social welfare to bring about a better realization of economic, social and cultural rights.

Specific rights or groups of rights

The individual's duties to the community and limitations on human rights

On 26 August 1977, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities considered additional chapters of a draft report on the individual's duties to the community and the limitations on human rights and freedoms under article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁵⁴ prepared by the Special Rapporteur, Erica-Irene

Daes (Greece). The chapters referred to safeguards for human rights against arbitrary and discriminatory limitations and restrictions, to guarantees against abuse of power by executive, judicial and administrative authorities and to the remedies available to the individual against unlawful or arbitrary limitation or restriction of his rights and freedoms.

During the discussion, it was suggested that the report might deal with the question of the violation of human rights under unconstitutional Governments, notably military regimes, and with means of safeguarding human rights under military rule. It was also suggested that the Special Rapporteur might wish to consider such topics as the role of military tribunals and paramilitary or police organizations, and the concept of "economic emergency," often used as a ground for justifying the establishment of military rule. The Sub-Commission decided to consider the final report at its 1978 session.

Rights of ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities

At its 1977 session, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities considered the final report on the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Francesco Capotorti (Italy). The discussion focused on issues brought out in the report, including the problem of minorities created by arbitrary frontiers imposed in the past and also the situation of the gypsy population in some European countries, who were felt not to enjoy equal rights in certain cases.

On 31 August 1977, the Sub-Commission adopted two resolutions on minority rights. By the first, it endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur and asked him to present them to the Commission on Human Rights. It also recommended that the Commission consider drafting a declaration on the rights of minorities within the framework of article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,⁵⁵ which laid down that States having minorities within their borders should not deny to them the right to enjoy their own culture, to practise their own religion and to use their own language. The Sub-Commission also asked the Commission to recommend that the Economic and Social Council print and widely disseminate the report.

The second resolution appealed to countries which had gypsies within their borders to accord to them, if they had not done so, all the rights enjoyed by the rest of the population.

Discrimination against persons born out of wedlock

An informal working group established during the 1977 session of the Commission on Human Rights undertook the examination and review of draft general principles on equality and non-discrimination in respect of persons born out of wedlock, contained in the 1976 report of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

After having discussed the report of the working group on 11 March, the Commission adopted a draft decision in which it accepted in principle the draft general principles contained in the Sub-Commission's report and referred them to the Economic and Social Council for further consideration.

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, adopted without vote decision 234(LXII), by which it took note of the work done on the question by the Commission on Human Rights and requested the Secretary-General to transmit the draft general principles to Governments for comments. The Council decided to consider the draft general principles on equality and non-discrimination at its first regular 1978 session.

This draft decision had been proposed by Italy in the Social Committee. It was approved as orally revised to take account of suggestions by Cuba—that the Council take note of, rather than welcome, the work of the Commission—and the United States—that the draft principles be submitted to Governments for comments—without a vote on 6 May. In view of the adoption of this decision, no action was taken on a draft decision recommended by the Commission on Human Rights that the Council take note of Commission's decision of 11 March referring the principles to the Council for further consideration.

Declaration on legal protection of the human rights of non-citizens

At its 1977 session, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities considered the question of drafting a declaration on the legal protection of the human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live.

During its consideration of the question, the Sub-Commission had before it the updated final study on the question, prepared by the Special Rapporteur, Baroness Elles (United Kingdom).

During the debate in the Sub-Commission, there was some support for the view that the report as a whole constituted a thorough review of the main issues involved, which would enable the Sub-Commission to formulate constructive recommendations. There were, however, reservations concerning the approach followed by the Special Rapporteur, which, some members thought, took insufficient account of recent developments in international law concerning, in particular, the question of compensation for expropriation, the transfer of assets by aliens out of the host countries, the status of refugees and stateless persons, and the right of asylum.

There was some disagreement on whether the concept of a minimum standard of treatment for aliens was still a useful and valid norm of international law, or whether contemporary principles of sovereign equality among nations precluded such matters as the right of aliens to own property.

Doubts were expressed on the current necessity for a declaration on the rights of aliens. Some Sub-Commission members felt that their legal status might better be governed by domestic legislation, reinforced by bilateral treaties.

On 31 August 1977, the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to submit the draft declaration to Governments for their consideration and comments. The Special Rapporteur was asked to resubmit the draft to the Sub-Commission at its 1978 session, taking into account the replies from Governments.

On 11 March 1977, the Commission on Human Rights had decided to postpone consideration of the legal rights of non-citizens until 1978.

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly had before it a report of the Secretary-General submitted in accordance with an Assembly request of 9 December 1975 for an updated version of his report on alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms⁵⁶ (see section above).

⁵⁶ See footnote 39.

The report referred to, among other things, the possibility of establishing regional commissions in the field of human rights. Replies from two Governments—Chile and the United Kingdom—and from two non-governmental organizations were summarized.

By a resolution (32/127) adopted on 16 December 1977, the Assembly appealed to States in areas where regional arrangements in the field of human rights did not exist to consider agreements with a view to the establishment within their regions of suitable regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to give priority to the organization, in regions where no regional commission on human rights existed, of seminars to discuss the usefulness and advisability of the establishment of such commissions.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/127, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, where the text was sponsored by Ecuador, Italy, Kenya, Lesotho, New Zealand, Nigeria, Oman, Panama, Swaziland and the United States and approved without vote on 12 December.

A number of oral amendments by Yugoslavia were taken into account by the sponsors in a revised version of their text.

Freedom of information

At its January/February 1977 session, the Ad Hoc Committee on Periodic Reports of the Commission on Human Rights took up periodic reports on freedom of information for the period from 1 July 1970 to 30 June 1975, received from 46 States and five specialized agencies. Contributions from non-governmental organizations in consultative status were also considered.

The Committee adopted two resolutions for consideration by the Commission. The first would have the Economic and Social Council request Member States to submit periodic reports once every three years in a continuing cycle; the first report, on civil and political rights and freedom of information, to be submitted in 1979, and the second, on economic, social and cultural rights, to be submitted in 1982. The Council would also recommend that the Ad Hoc Committee consider the desirability of the continued publication of the Yearbook on Human Rights.

The second resolution would have the Commission recommend that Member States request contributors, in preparing their reports, to adhere to the Commission's guidelines and length limitations, paying increased attention to the full realization of the right to freedom of information and providing data on the quality as well as quantity of information being disseminated. The Commission would express regret at the absence of reports from several States and on some territories. The text would have the Commission recommend that the issuance of subject and country indices be discontinued, that the Ad Hoc Committee review the continuance of the document on the status of multilateral treaties on human rights, and that contributors observe the time-limits, include information as up to date as possible and report only on areas directly related to their field of concern. It also suggested that the Commission welcome a decision taken by UNESCO in 1976 to endorse the Non-aligned Press Agencies Pool as a means of providing developing countries with alternative sources of information.

Owing to lack of time, the Commission on Human Rights decided on 11 March 1977 to postpone to its 1978 session consideration of freedom of information, including the report of the Ad Hoc Committee.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly, without a vote, decided that, for lack of time to consider the item, the question of freedom of information should be included in the provisional agenda of its 1978 session, to be considered with appropriate priority.

The Assembly adopted this decision (32/436) on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which approved the decision, without objection, on 9 December on the proposal of its Chairman. The Committee had before it a background note of the Secretary-General which, among other things, drew the attention of the Assembly to current interest in the possibility of improving national information and mass communications systems to aid social progress and development, as expressed in an Assembly resolution of 16 December 1976.⁵⁷ The Secretary-General also noted increasing co-operation among non-aligned countries in the field of information and the mass media.

Role of youth in promotion and protection of human rights

On 11 March 1977, the Commission on Human Rights postponed until 1978 consideration of two items on the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights. The first related to channels of communication with youth and international youth organizations, and the second to conscientious objection to military service.

On the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council adopted, without a vote, resolution 2078(LXII) on 13 May 1977, by which it asked the Secretary-General to submit proposals for action-oriented guidelines which would help to identify the particular policies and actions required at national and international levels to bring about more effective and widespread youth participation in achieving the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council also requested the Secretary-General to establish an interagency task force drawn from the Secretariat of the United Nations and the specialized agencies directly concerned with youth policies and programmes. It recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of guidelines for the improvement of channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, as set out in the annex to the resolution.

(For further information see p. 799; for text of resolution 2078(LXII), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Methods and long-term programme of work

During its 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights had decided to examine further the question of its programme and methods of work. It therefore put certain proposals to the Economic and Social Council for authorization.

The Council agreed to the proposals and authorized officers chosen by the Commission to hold preparatory meetings before the next session to work out by advance planning a proper and balanced long-term programme of work. It also agreed that the Commission could better handle its work if agenda items could be separated into two groups, the first dealing with civil and political rights and the second with economic, social and cultural rights; urgent matters would continue to be dealt with at every session.⁵⁸

When the Commission met in February 1977, discussion continued on matters affecting the future programme and methods of work that remained unresolved. On the programme of work, the view was expressed that, guided by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Commission should give priority to taking action in fields where human needs were evident and urgent. In this connexion, it was felt that consideration should be given to finding ways to deal with urgent matters between sessions of the Commission.

On the organization of future work, there was general agreement that the relevant documentation on the subject, together with the record of the Commission's current and past discussions on the item, contained many useful suggestions, which, if summarized and analysed, could provide the necessary background for decisions to be reached at the 1978 session. The Secretary-General was accordingly asked to carry out this task.

The Commission also decided to invite the Chairman/Rapporteur of the 1976 working group responsible for the study on situations revealing a consistent pattern of gross violations of human rights to be present when the Commission discussed the matter at closed meetings (see also p. 700).

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the obligation of all States to observe the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations is fundamental for the promotion and respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms and for the realization of the full dignity and worth of the human person,

Conscious that it is the duty of the United Nations and of all Member States to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Convinced that such co-operation should be based on a profound understanding of the variety of problems existing in different societies and on the full respect for their economic, social and cultural realities,

Bearing in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Acknowledging the progress achieved by the international community in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, particularly with respect to the standard-setting work within the United Nations system,

Noting with satisfaction the entry into force of the International Covenants on Human Rights and of a large number of other important international instruments in the field of human rights,

Considering that the acceptance by Member States of the obligations contained in those instruments is an important element for the universal realization and respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the ideal of free human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby everyone may enjoy his economic, social and cultural rights, as well as his civil and political rights,

Profoundly convinced that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are interrelated and indivisible,

Recognizing that apartheid, all forms of racial discrimination, colonialism, foreign domination and occupation, aggression and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity, as well as the refusal to recognize the fundamental rights of all peoples to self-determination and of every nation to exercise full sovereignty over its natural wealth and resources, constitute situations which in themselves are and generate mass and flagrant violations of all human rights and fundamental freedoms of peoples as well as of individuals,

Deeply concerned at the continuing existence of an unjust international economic order which constitutes a major obstacle to the realization of the economic, social and cultural rights in developing countries,

Considering that the approach to the future work within the United Nations system in the field of human rights should take into due account the experiences and the general situation of, as well as the efforts made by, the developing countries to implement human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the thirtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights should be marked by an overall analysis of existing problems in the field of human rights and by increased efforts in finding appropriate solutions for the effective promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, taking into account the experiences and contributions of both developed and developing countries,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on this item,

1. Decides that the approach to the future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the following concepts:

(a) All human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent; equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of both civil and political, and economic, social and cultural rights;

(b) "The full realization of civil and political rights without the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights is impossible; the achievement of lasting progress in the implementation of human rights is dependent upon sound and effective national and international policies of economic and social development," as recognized by the Proclamation of Teheran of 1968;

(c) All human rights and fundamental freedoms of the human person and of peoples are inalienable;

(d) Consequently, human rights questions should be examined globally, taking into account both the over-all context of the various societies in which they present themselves, as well as the need for the promotion of the full dignity of the human person and the development and well-being of the society;

(e) In approaching human rights questions within the United Nations system, the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to the mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and persons affected by situations such as those resulting from apartheid, from all forms of racial discrimination, from colonialism, from foreign domination and occupation, from aggression and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity, as well as from the refusal to recognize the fundamental rights of peoples to self-determination and of every nation to the exercise of full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources;

(f) The realization of the new international economic order is an essential element for the effective promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms and should also be accorded priority;

(g) It is of paramount importance for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms that Member States undertake specific obligations through accession to or ratification of international instruments in this field; consequently, the standard-setting work within the United Nations system in the field of human rights and the universal acceptance and implementation of the relevant international instruments should be encouraged;

(h) The experience and contribution of both developed and developing countries should be taken into account by all organs of the United Nations system in their work related to human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights:

(a) To undertake at its thirty-fourth session, as a matter of priority, an over-all analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the light of the above concepts;

(6) To comply with the mandate established by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1992(LX) of 12 May 1976 and the Commission in its decision 4(XXXIII) of 21 February 1977, and in the light of the present resolution;

(c) To submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report with its conclusions and recommendations on the work done with respect to subparagraphs (a) and (b) above, and to submit a progress report to the Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Council;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all United Nations organs and specialized agencies concerned;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms."

A/32/333. Report of Third Committee.

Resolution 32/66, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/333, adopted without objection by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,
Convinced that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights,

Recalling its resolution 31/86 of 13 December 1976 and in particular the importance of the entry into force of the International Covenants on Human Rights as a major step in the international efforts to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, thereby contributing greatly to the co-operation of States in the attainment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling in this respect its resolutions 2200 A (XXI) of 16 December 1966 and 3270 (XXIX) of 10 December 1974,

Noting with appreciation that following its appeal several Member States have acceded to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Having noted the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Bearing in mind the important responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council in relation to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto,

1. Recognizes the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as a major step in the international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Notes with appreciation the report of the Human Rights Committee on its first and second sessions and expresses satisfaction at the serious manner in which the Committee is undertaking its functions;

3. Expresses its appreciation to States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights which have extended their co-operation to the Human Rights Committee;

4. Invites again all States which have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights as well as to consider the possibilities of acceding to the Optional Protocol thereto;

5. Appreciates that the Human Rights Committee strives for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and of the Optional Protocol thereto;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Human Rights Committee informed of the activities of the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

8. Recalls that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights envisages that the Secretary-General shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the Human Rights Committee.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1997 (LX) of 12 May 1976,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa,

Gravely concerned at the increased use of arrests and bannings to suppress legitimate trade union activities among African workers in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe,

Commending the widespread manifestations of trade union solidarity with the struggle of African workers in southern Africa,

1. Condemns the continued gross infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe;

2. Calls for the immediate release of all trade unionists at present under detention in southern Africa and for the lifting of all banning orders imposed on persons engaged in trade union activities;

3. Demands full recognition of all trade union rights of African workers in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe.

Resolution 2083(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5967, adopted without vote by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2060.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Recalling the resolution adopted by the General Assembly concerning migrant workers and Council resolutions 1749(LIV) of 16 May 1973 and 1926(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, in which the Council affirmed the need for the United Nations to consider the situation of migrant workers in an interrelated manner and in relation with general factors which have a bearing on human rights and human dignity,

Aware that the situation of migrant workers is of major importance to many countries and is becoming increasingly serious in certain regions, and that the Commission on Human Rights and other relevant organs of the United Nations should take immediate measures to ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 31/127 of 16 December 1976, in which the Assembly recommended that the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council should consider the question at their forthcoming sessions,

Emphasizing the serious concern expressed by the General Assembly at the de facto discrimination suffered by alien workers in some countries despite the legislative and other efforts exerted to prevent and punish it,

Aware of the work done in the field of migrant workers by the specialized agencies, particularly the International Labour Organisation, and by other organizations of the United Nations system,

Having taken note of the work of the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-third session on this question,

1. Recommends to the Commission on Human Rights that at its thirty-fourth session, in collaboration with the International Labour Organisation and other interested organizations of the United Nations system, and in the light of any recommendations which the General Assembly may transmit to it on the subject at its thirty-second session, it should make a complete and thorough study of the questions mentioned in Assembly resolution 31/127 under an agenda item entitled "Measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers";

2. Decides to study this question at its sixty-fourth session in the context of its consideration of the report of the Commission on Human Rights.

Resolution 32/120, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/458, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the terms of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Considering the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 1963,

Considering also the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975, and the Recommendation concerning Migrant Workers, 1975, adopted by the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation,

Recalling its resolutions concerning migrant workers, in particular resolutions 3449(XXX) of 9 December 1975 and 31/127 of 16 December 1976, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1749(LIV) of 16 May 1973 and 1926(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, in which the Council affirmed the need for the United Nations to consider the situation of migrant workers in an interrelated manner and in relation to general factors which have a bearing on human rights and human dignity,

Aware that the problem of migrant workers continues to be of major importance to many countries, that it is becoming increasingly serious in certain regions and that the Commission on Human Rights and other relevant organs of the United Nations should take immediate measures to ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers,

Emphasizing its serious concern at the de facto discrimination suffered by alien workers in some countries despite the legislative and other efforts exerted to prevent and punish it,

Believing further that the problem of migrant workers is becoming more serious in certain regions for transient political and economic reasons and for social and cultural reasons,

Recalling that the family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State, and that in that context the families of migrant workers are entitled to the same protection as the migrant workers themselves,

Aware of the work done in the field of migrant workers by the specialized agencies, particularly the International Labour Organisation, and by some United Nations organs, such as the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Appreciating, in particular, the efforts which the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization continues to exert in the field of migrant workers, Convinced, in particular, that an effort at close co-operation between the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization will contribute to the improvement of the situation of migrant workers,

Aware of the efforts made by countries of origin to facilitate the return of migrant workers and their reintegration into the economic and social life of their country,

Having regard to Economic and Social Council resolution 2083(LXII) of 13 May 1977,

1. Calls upon all States, taking into account the provisions of the relevant instruments adopted by the International Labour Organisation and of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, to take measures to prevent and put an end to all discrimination against migrant workers and to ensure the implementation of such measures;

2. Invites all States:

(a) To extend to migrant workers having regular status in their territories treatment equal to that enjoyed by their own nationals with regard to the enjoyment of fundamental human rights, with particular reference to equality of opportunity and of treatment in respect of employment and occupation, social security, trade union and cultural rights and individual and collective freedoms;

(b) To promote and facilitate by all means in their power the implementation of the relevant international instruments and the adoption of bilateral agreements designed, inter alia, to eliminate the illicit traffic in alien workers;

(c) To take all necessary and appropriate measures to ensure that the fundamental human rights and acquired social rights of all migrant workers, irrespective of their immigration status, are fully respected under their national legislation;

3. Invites Governments of host countries to make arrangements for adequate information and reception facilities and to put into effect policies relating to training, health, social services, housing and educational and cultural development for migrant workers and their families, and to guarantee the free exercise by them of activities calculated to preserve their cultural values;

4. Further invites Governments of countries of origin to give the widest possible dissemination to information designed to provide migrant workers with the fullest possible knowledge of their rights and obligations and to ensure their effective protection;

5. Invites all States to intensify efforts to enlighten public opinion in host countries on the importance of the contribution made by migrant workers to economic and social development and to raising the level of living in such countries;

6. Calls upon host countries and countries of origin which consider it useful to do so to co-operate with a view to facilitating the reintegration of migrant workers into their countries of origin, regard being had to socio-economic conditions in the latter countries;

7. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organisation to ensure jointly, by appropriate means, very wide dissemination of information calculated to eliminate the stereotypes and prejudices which led to the de facto discrimination suffered by migrant workers;

8. Invites Governments of host countries to give consideration to adopting definitive measures to promote in their territories the normalization of the family life of migrant workers through family reunion;

9. Calls upon all States to give consideration to ratifying the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975, adopted by the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation;

10. Calls upon the United Nations organs and competent specialized agencies, including the International Labour Organisation, to continue devoting their attention to this question;

11. Recommends that the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council should consider this question fully and in depth at their next sessions, in collaboration with the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other interested agencies of the United Nations system, on the basis of the instruments adopted and the documents and studies prepared by the United Nations and the specialized agencies, including the study on the exploitation of labour through illicit and clandestine trafficking and the report of the Seminar on the Human Rights of Migrant Workers, held at Tunis from 12 to 24 November 1975.

Resolution 32/123, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/458, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Considering that the year 1978 will mark the thirtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which, conceived "as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations", has been and rightly continues to be a fundamental source of inspiration for national and international efforts for the protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Aware that for their full observance human rights must be ensured to all human beings and that this aim cannot be attained unless human rights are made known to them, particularly through teaching and education,

Recalling in this respect its resolution 217 A (III) of 10 December 1948, by which the General Assembly proclaimed the Declaration, which demands that "every individual and every organ of society, keeping this Declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms,"

Recalling also its resolution 2906 (XXVII) of 19 October 1972 concerning the observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration,

Considering Commission on Human Rights resolution 3(XXXIII) of 21 February 1977, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-second session, which recommends to Member States, the specialized agencies and all international organizations, governmental and non-governmental, concerned with the protection and promotion of human rights, to take appropriate measures to ensure that the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration is the occasion of special efforts to promote international understanding, co-operation and peace as well as the universal and effective respect for human rights, particularly by laying stress on the educational approach both within and outside formal school systems,

Desiring to give appropriate significance to the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration,

Taking note with appreciation of the suggestions contained in the note by the Secretary-General concerning the observance of the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration,

1. Invites Member States, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take appropriate measures, such as those contained in the annex to the present resolution, to celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate appropriate activities at the United Nations level, such as those indicated in the annex to the present resolution, to celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration;

3. Welcomes the decision of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to organize in 1978 an international conference on the teaching of human rights and appeals in this connexion to all States to facilitate the participation of qualified experts in this conference;

4. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to take appropriate measures to consult the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-fourth session on the elaboration of a programme of action designed to develop education on human rights, in pursuance of resolution 3(XXXIII) of the Commission;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session an item entitled "Thirty years of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: international co-operation for the promotion and observance of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights" and recommends that this item should be considered in plenary meeting;

6. Further decides to hold a special commemorative meeting to celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration, which falls on 10 December 1978, and requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary preparations for the programme of this meeting.

ANNEX

Suggested measures for the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

1. The following suggestions are made for possible action at the national level:

(a) Formal proclamation of 10 December 1978 as Human Rights Day;

(b) Issuing of special messages on 10 December 1978 by Heads of State or Government or other prominent civil personalities;

(c) Special meetings of parliamentary and other public and private institutions on Human Rights Day;

(d) Special consideration by States which have not yet ratified or acceded to the international instruments of the United Nations in the field of human rights, to become parties to these instruments;

(e) Establishment of national or local institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights;

(f) Encouragement of teaching programmes on human rights at the various levels of education;

(g) Dissemination of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in national languages, including languages of minorities;

(h) Issuing of human rights postage stamps, first-day covers and special cancellations during 1978;

(i) Participation by non-governmental organizations in the celebration and organization of activities by such organizations;

(j) Activities in the framework of and in support of current Decades and International Years being prepared on human rights issues.

2. It is recommended that the following measures, among others, should be taken at the United Nations level:

(a) Organization of commemorative events at United Nations Headquarters and at the United Nations Office at Geneva on or around 10 December 1978;

(b) Organization in 1978 at Geneva of a special seminar within the programme of advisory services, at the world-wide level, on the subject of national and local institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights; the report of the seminar should be forwarded to the General Assembly;

(c) Adoption of arrangements for the award of human rights prizes as envisaged in recommendation C of the annex to General Assembly resolution 2217(XXI) of 19 December 1966;

(d) Dissemination by the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat of appropriate public information, broadcasting and audio-visual material designed to draw attention to and emphasize the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the role played and work done by the United Nations to ensure the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(e) Issuance of updated versions in all official languages of the United Nations of the publications Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments of the United Nations and United Nations Action in the Field of Human Rights and granting of assistance to institutions which intend to publish them in other languages.

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the suggestions made for the establishment, in regions where it does not already exist, of regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Aware of the importance of encouraging regional co-operation for the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 7(XXIV) of 1 March 1968, in which the Commission requested the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of arranging suitable regional seminars under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights in those regions where no regional commission on human rights exists at present for the purpose of discussing the usefulness and advisability of the establishment of regional commissions on human rights,

Recognizing the important contribution of the regional commissions of the United Nations in the economic and social fields,

1. Appeals to States in areas where regional arrangements in the field of human rights do not yet exist to consider agreements with a view to the establishment within their respective regions of suitable regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to give priority to the organization, in regions where no regional commission on human rights exists, of seminars for the purpose of discussing the usefulness and advisability of the establishment of regional commissions for the promotion and protection of human rights;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session for further consideration.

Chapter XXIV

The status of women

In 1977, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly took further action to advance the status of women. The Council, during its April-May session, considered the following: a research programme on the role and position of women in development; the draft Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women; progress on the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year; improvement of the data base for measuring the implementation of the World Plan of Action; preparatory work for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980; and the influence of the mass communication media on attitudes towards the roles of women and men in present-day society.

The General Assembly, at its 1977 session, took up, inter alia, the draft Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women; the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women; the interagency programme for the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985); the Pledging Conference for the United Nations Decade for Women; the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980; the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women; and women's participation in the strengthening of international peace and security and in the struggle against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, aggression, occupation and all forms of foreign domination.

The decisions taken are described in the sections below.

The United Nations Decade for WomenImplementation of the World Plan of Action and the International Development Strategy

During its April-May 1977 session, when the Economic and Social Council considered the question of the implementation of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year, it had before it, among other things: the 1976 report of the Commission on the Status of Women; a report of the Secretary-General on proposals and suggestions for implementing the World Plan of Action and related decisions of the 1975 World Conference of the International Women's Year;¹ and a report of the Secretary-General on progress achieved towards the establishment of an International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and of a research programme on the position and role of women in development.

The Council noted that the review undertaken by the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1976 session should be considered as a preliminary review and appraisal of the implementation of the World Plan of Action. It considered that action was urgently needed to meet the minimum targets of the World Plan of Action for the period 1975-1980. The Council requested the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of the Committee on Review and Appraisal, and urged the Committee to take the recommendations of the resolution into account in the 1977 review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade (see p. 378).

The Council noted with interest the following developments in a number of countries during 1975-1977: commitment to sexual equality and the integration of women in development; planning of constitutional or legislative prohibition of sexual discrimination; provision of equal access at all levels of education; and adoption of comprehensive measures for health education and services, sanitation, nutrition, family planning and other welfare services.

The Council considered that the following action was urgently needed to improve the situation of women sufficiently to meet the 1980 minimum targets of the World Plan of Action: legislation guaranteeing equal pay for equal work; measures to communicate to women their rights and to assist them in exercising their rights and responsibilities; establishment of goals, strategies and time-tables to increase participation by women in decision-making at all levels; setting of target dates for the elimination of illiteracy; establishment of life-long education to help women; reduction of the heavy workload of rural and urban poor women; improvement in employment opportunities; acceleration of equal opportunity for women; facilitation of the combination of family and work responsibilities; and extension of health and social services, maternity and child-care services and family life education.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with the regional commissions: a questionnaire on the implementation of the World Plan of Action to be forwarded to Governments in 1977; and a report, based on replies from Governments, for submission to the Commission on the Status of Women in January 1978. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report, based on replies to questionnaires, for consideration by the Commission in January 1978 and at the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980.

The Council took this action by its resolution 2060(LXII), adopted without vote on 12 May 1977. The Social Committee had approved the resolution without vote on 26 April. The text had been recommended to the Council by the Commission on the Status of Women. Added to the subparagraph on the need for legislation guaranteeing equality for women was a Cuban amendment for a specific call for laws guaranteeing women equal pay for equal work. This was approved without vote. Japan and Iran made drafting amendments. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Council took action to improve the data base for measuring the implementation of the World Plan of Action with the adoption of resolution 2061(LXII) on 12 May 1977. By this resolution, it requested the Statistical Commission: to continue to co-operate with Government statistical offices and international bodies to develop improved methods, including the training of personnel, for the collection and tabulation of statistical data to obtain breakdowns by sex for specific socio-economic indicators; and to develop guidelines and methods for assessing women's participation in planning and decision-making, and guidelines and methods for measuring women's actual economic and social contributions. The Council requested the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development to prepare an inventory of social and economic indicators relevant to the analysis of the status of women.

This resolution was adopted without vote. It had been approved by the Social Committee, as amended, without vote on 26 April. The draft resolution had been recommended to the Council by the Commission on the Status of Women. An Argentine amendment added a preambular paragraph noting actions taken to revise basic concepts for data collection to free statistics from sex-based stereotypes. In addition, Argentina and Cuba made drafting amendments. Jamaica added a call for the training of necessary personnel as part of the request for improved statistical methods. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By decision 223(LXII), the Council deferred action on two draft resolutions recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women, one on involvement of non-governmental organizations in implementing the World Plan of Action and the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, and the other on communications concerning the status of women. By the same decision it took note of the report of the Commission. The Council adopted decision 223 (LXII) on 12 May 1977 by 30 votes to 13, with 4 abstentions. Its Social Committee had approved the text, by 24 votes to 17, with 5 abstentions, on 26 April 1977. Sponsors were Algeria, Argentina, Cuba, Ethiopia, Iraq, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

The General Assembly, in considering this topic, had before it a report of the Secretary-General on measures taken to implement the World Plan of Action and the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women.

Noting that the interagency programme for the United Nations Decade for Women had been drawn up in July 1977, and was the subject of a study to be considered by the special interagency meeting on the Decade for Women to be held in July 1978, the Assembly emphasized that increasing efforts must be made at every level to attain the objectives of the Decade.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1978, through the Economic and Social Council, the study of the interagency programme, and to transmit the study to Governments every two years. The Assembly also urged interested agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to identify and undertake joint projects as quickly as possible.

These decisions were embodied in Assembly resolution 32/138, adopted without vote on 16 December 1977. The Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee had approved the text on 9 December 1977 without vote. The sponsors were Austria, Bangladesh, Benin, Burundi, France, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, India, Iran, Iraq, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jama-

hriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, New Zealand, the Niger, Norway, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Senegal, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, the Upper Volta, Venezuela and Zambia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly also had before it two additional reports of the Secretary-General. The first contained a brief account of activities undertaken by the United Nations on behalf of rural women, including action taken at regional meetings on regional plans of action for the integration of women in development.

The second report concerned the promotion of full equality of women and men in all spheres of life in accordance with international standards and the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. This report was based on information supplied by 30 Governments, seven specialized agencies and 13 non-governmental organizations on the measures taken since June 1976 to implement the Declaration and related instruments. Those replying reported, on the whole, positive efforts to implement the Declaration; serious concern with the problems of discrimination against women; and genuine legal, social, and economic improvements for women either being initiated or under way.

Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women

Programmes and management of the Fund

In considering the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, the General Assembly had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the decisions of the Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and containing his observations on that Fund.

The report noted that at its first session, held in March 1977, the Committee had emphasized that the Voluntary Fund should serve as a catalyst for selected projects benefiting women in the developing countries, with priority to be given to the poorest women in the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries. The Committee also requested the regional commissions to submit comments on the proposed programme of the Voluntary Fund and proposals for priority projects from their respective regions. At its second session, in June 1977, the Committee had adopted a series of guiding principles for the management of the Fund, had approved implementation of the Economic Commission for Africa programme proposed earlier in 1977, and had encouraged the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Economic Commission for Western Asia to appoint women as programme officers and/or consultants.

The General Assembly, on 16 December 1977, noted with satisfaction the decisions taken by the Consultative Committee and urged the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies concerned, including the United Nations Development Programme, to assist the regional commissions in formulating projects to be submitted to the Committee. The Assembly also urged these bodies to co-operate closely with the Committee in developing programmes for the advancement of women. Finally, the Secretary-General was requested to continue to report annually on the management of the Fund and to submit periodic progress reports on the execution of projects.

These decisions were incorporated in Assembly resolution 32/141, adopted without vote. The Third Committee had approved the text on 9 December 1977, without vote. Sponsors were Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Costa Rica, Ghana, India, Iran, Iraq, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Niger, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States, Venezuela and Zambia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Pledging Conference for the United Nations Decade for Women

The Assembly, on 16 December 1977, noted with satisfaction the results of the first Pledging Conference for the United Nations Decade for Women, held at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 8 November 1977, when pledges were received in the amount of $3,301,655 for the Voluntary Fund of the United Nations Decade for Women, and $535,500 for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women. In addition, Egypt pledged to provide training scholarships in Egypt for the Institute.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to convene, during its regular 1978 session, a second pledging conference to finance the Voluntary Fund and the Institute. He was also asked to organize an information campaign to stimulate the interest of Governments, organizations and individuals likely to contribute to the Voluntary Fund and the Institute.

These decisions were contained in Assembly resolution 32/139, adopted without vote. The Third Committee had approved the text also without vote on 9 December 1977. Sponsors were Austria, Bangladesh, Benin, Burundi, Ghana, Guinea, Iran, Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya,

Mauritania, Morocco, the Niger, the Philippines, Senegal, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey and the Upper Volta. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980

On 12 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of the recommendations of the Commission on the Status of Women, requested the Commission to give highest priority to the preparatory work and substantive and organizational arrangements for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare for the Commission a programme of concrete action for the second half of the Decade.

The Council then decided to establish, not later than June 1978, a preparatory committee to make recommendations on arrangements for the Conference. The committee would consist of no more than 23 Member States designated by the President of the Economic and Social Council, after consultation with regional groups. The Council also invited the regional commissions to consider ways and means of making effective contributions to the Conference, including the possibility of regional seminars.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2062(LXII), adopted without vote. The Social Committee had approved the resolution without vote on 27 April 1977, as amended by Iran and the United Kingdom. The text was recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women. The amendment by the United Kingdom, on the establishment of the preparatory committee, and that by Iran, on regional seminars to precede the World Conference, were approved without vote. Amendments proposed by Nigeria and by Japan were not put to the vote, their subject-matter having been covered in the amendment by the United Kingdom.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly, noting the Council's action concerning the World Conference, accepted the offer of the Government of Iran to act as host for the Conference, which was expected to be held at Teheran in May 1980 for two weeks.

The Assembly decided to convene the first session of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women in June 1978, and requested the Secretary-General to report through the Council on its work.

The Assembly took these decisions by its resolution 32/140, adopted without vote; the Third Committee had approved the text without vote on 9 December 1977. It was sponsored by 33 Member States. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly, by its resolution 32/142 of 16 December 1977, inter alia requested the Commission on the Status of Women, as a contribution to preparations for the World Conference, to consider the elaboration of a draft declaration on the participation of women in the struggle for the strengthening of international peace and security and against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, foreign aggression and occupation, and all forms of foreign domination. Resolution 2060(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5963, and as orally amended by Council President, adopted without vote by Council on 12 May 1977, meeting 2058.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3490(XXX) and 3520(XXX) of 12 and 15 December 1975, in which the Assembly affirmed that a system-wide review and appraisal of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year should be undertaken biennially as an input to the process of review and appraisal of progress made under the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, taking into account the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the decisions resulting from the sixth and seventh special sessions of the General Assembly,

Recalling also that the General Assembly, in paragraph 4 of its resolution 3490(XXX), requested the Commission on the Status of Women to report its findings and conclusions on major trends and policies with regard to the status of women, particularly the integration of women in development, to the Economic and Social Council through the Committee for Development Planning and the Committee on Review and Appraisal,

Noting that the Commission on the Status of Women, at its twenty-sixth session, considered the report of the Secretary-General prepared on the basis of information furnished by Governments, in implementation of the above-mentioned General Assembly resolutions, as well as of Council resolution 1855(LVI) of 16 May 1974,

Recognizing that, within the time-limit given, few Governments were able to report on measures taken at the national level specifically to implement the World Plan of Action and that it is therefore difficult at this stage to adopt findings and conclusions on major global trends and policies with regard to the status of women,

Believing that the review undertaken by the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-sixth session should be considered as a first preliminary review and appraisal of the implementation of the World Plan of Action and that a more comprehensive review should be undertaken at the twenty-seventh session in 1978,

Noting the decision of the General Assembly, in paragraph 20 of its resolution 3520(XXX), to convene, in 1980, a world conference of all States to review and evaluate the progress made in implementing the objectives of the International Women's Year,

1. Notes with interest the following developments reported during the period under review in a number of countries:

(a) The recognition of and commitment to the principle of equality of men and women and the integration of women in development, both for reasons of social progress and for economic development;

(b) The adoption or plans for adoption of constitutional and/or legislative provisions ensuring the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of sex;

(c) The establishment of provisions for equal access at every level of education and guidance, compulsory education and the measures necessary to promote co-education and to prevent school drop-outs;

(d) The adoption of comprehensive measures for health education, health services, sanitation, nutrition, family education, family planning and other welfare services;

2. Considers that, on the basis of the material submitted, action is urgently needed to improve the situation of women in the following areas in order to meet the minimum targets set forth in paragraph 46 of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year for the five-year period 1975-1980:

(a) The enactment of legislation guaranteeing the principle of equality and non-discrimination on grounds of sex, particularly legislation designed to guarantee to women equal pay for equal work;

(b) Appropriate measures to inform and advise women of their rights, utilizing the mass communication media wherever appropriate, and to provide them with assistance in exercising their rights and responsibilities;

(c) The establishment of goals, strategies and time-tables to increase the participation of women in decision-making at local, national and international levels;

(d) The establishment of specific target dates for the elimination of illiteracy, especially among young persons, and the provision of the measures necessary for its maintenance within as short a time as possible for each State;

(e) The provision of life-long and continuing education, training and retraining facilities to meet the needs and aspirations of women;

(f) The development of modern rural technology, cottage industry, pre-school day-care centres, and time and energy saving devices to help reduce the heavy workload and increase the resources of women, particularly those living in rural sectors and the urban poor;

(g) The creation of new employment and income-producing opportunities for women and the expansion of existing employment opportunities, and elimination of discrimination in the terms and conditions of employment on grounds of sex;

(h) The establishment or strengthening of an interdisciplinary and multisectoral machinery by Governments for accelerating the achievement of equal opportunities for women and their full integration into national life;

(i) The establishment and enforcement of measures to facilitate the combination of family and work responsibilities;

(j) The provision and extension of comprehensive and continuous health and other social services to underprivileged urban and rural communities, including maternity and child-care services as well as family life education;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of the Committee on Review and Appraisal at its fourth session in May 1977, together with the relevant reports submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-sixth session and any information submitted subsequent to the preparation of those reports;

4. Urges the Committee on Review and Appraisal, in accordance with paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 3490 (XXX), to pay special attention to the question of the status of women and to take into account the above recommendations in the review and appraisal in 1977 of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in connexion with the next review and appraisal of the implementation of the World Plan of Action:

(a) To prepare, in consultation with the regional commissions, a questionnaire on the implementation of the World Plan of Action to be forwarded to Governments in 1977;

(b) To prepare a report on the basis of the replies to the questionnaire, taking into account information received subsequent to the preparation of the report of the Secretary-General, for the consideration of the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-seventh session in January 1978;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To ensure as far as possible that, in 1979, the questionnaire relating to the implementation of the World Plan of Action shall be forwarded to Governments, together with the request for information relating to the review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy;

(b) To prepare a comprehensive report based on the replies to these questionnaires, for consideration by the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-eighth session and at the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980.

E/5909, Chapter I A. Draft resolution VI, as recommended by Commission for adoption by Economic and Social Council, as amended by Argentina (E/AC.7/L.719) and Cuba (E/AC.7/L.716) and as orally amended by Jamaica, approved without vote by Social Committee on 26 April 1977, meeting 800.

E/AC.7/L.716. Cuba: amendments to draft resolution VI recommended by Commission on Status of Women in E/5909.

E/AC.7/L.719. Argentina: amendments to draft resolution VI recommended by Commission on Status of Women in E/5909.

Resolution 2061 (LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5963, adopted without vote by Council on 12 May 1977, meeting 2058.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3490(XXX) of 12 December 1975, and paragraph 216 of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year, which provide for the submission to the Economic and Social Council and its relevant functional commissions and advisory bodies, at their forthcoming sessions, inter alia, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Statistical Commission, of the decisions of the relevant United Nations organs, specialized agencies, regional commissions and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Recalling also the provisions of paragraphs 167 to 170 of the World Plan of Action on the collection and analysis of relevant data,

Convinced of the need to build up a scientific and reliable data base and socio-economic indicators, in order to measure more accurately the implementation of the World Plan of Action,

Noting the action initiated by the Statistical Commission at its nineteenth session in November 1976 in planning for the 1980 World Population and Housing Census Programme and efforts under way to encourage needed revisions in the basic concepts used for the collection and compilation of economic, demographic and social statistics so as to free them from sex-based stereotypes,

1. Requests the Statistical Commission at its twentieth session, as a contribution to the success of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, 1976-1985, to continue its action in co-operation with national statistical offices, regional commissions and intergovernmental organizations, organs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, especially the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, with a view to developing:

(a) Improved methods, including training of the necessary personnel, for the collection and tabulation of statistical data, particularly at the national, subregional and regional levels, to obtain breakdowns by sex for indicators such as urban/rural residence, age, marital status, literacy, education, income, level of skills and participation in modern and traditional economic activities, and relevant information on household and family composition;

(b) Guidelines and methods to assess the participation of women at all levels and in all sectors of planning and decision-making in society;

(c) Guidelines and methods for the measurement of women's actual economic and social contributions which are not a part of regular national data collection systems;

2. Requests the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development to co-operate with other relevant bodies within the United Nations system in preparing an inventory of social and economic indicators relevant to the analysis of the status of women, on the basis of its work on the research data bank of development indicators and its project on monitoring changes in the conditions of women for planning and programming purposes.

A/32/440. Report of Third Committee, draft resolution III.

Resolution 32/138, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/440, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3520(XXX) of 15 December 1975, in which it proclaimed the period from 1976 to 1985 United Nations

Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, to be devoted to effective and sustained national, regional and international action to implement the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year and related resolutions adopted by the World Conference of the International Women's Year,

Recalling further that in its resolution 31/136 of 16 December 1976 it approved the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women which focused on the first half of the Decade, 1976-1980,

Noting that the joint interagency programme for the integration of women in development, whose establishment was called for in paragraph 5 (b) of General Assembly resolution 3520(XXX), has become an interagency programme for the United Nations Decade for Women based on the implementation of the World Plan of Action, for the formulation of which the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs serves as focal point,

Noting also that this programme was drawn up in July 1977 in the context of the conceptual framework and the co-ordination of ongoing activities and planned activities of the agencies concerned,

Noting further that this programme, which should be brought up to date every two years, is currently the subject of a study which is to be considered by the special interagency meeting on the United Nations Decade for Women to be held in July 1978 with a view to preparing for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women,

1. Notes the measures already taken by the Secretary-General to implement the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women;

2. Emphasizes that constant and increasing efforts must be made at the national, regional and international levels to attain the objectives of the Decade;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with all the interested agencies and organizations of the United Nations, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, the study of the inter-agency programme accompanied by the observations formulated by the Council with regard to it;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments every two years the study of the interagency programme for the Decade;

5. Urges the interested agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to identify and undertake as quickly as possible projects to be executed jointly.

Resolution 32/141, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/440, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision to extend the activities of the Voluntary Fund for the International Women's Year, established by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1850(LVI) of 16 May 1974, to cover the period of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1976 to 1985,

Recalling also its resolution 31/133 of 16 December 1976 containing the criteria and arrangements for the management of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the management of the Fund submitted to it at its thirty-second session,

1. Notes with satisfaction the decisions taken by the Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women at its first two sessions, held in March and June 1977;

2. Expresses the hope that the projects which the Consultative Committee has already approved will be implemented as soon as possible;

3. Urges the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies concerned, including the United Nations Development Programme, to assist the regional commissions in formulating projects drawn up in connexion with the United Nations Decade for Women, with a view to submitting them to the Consultative Committee;

4. Also urges the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies concerned, including the United Nations Development Programme, to co-operate closely with the Consultative Committee with a view to developing programmes which will contribute to the advancement of women;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit annual reports on the management of the Fund and:

(a) To include in such reports a summary of the projects selected by the Consultative Committee for financing by the Fund;

(b) To submit periodically to the General Assembly progress reports on the execution of such projects.

Resolution 32/139, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/440, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/137 of 16 December 1976, in which it requested the Secretary-General to convene during the thirty-second session of the General Assembly a pledging conference for contributions to be made to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and to the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women,

Noting with satisfaction the results of the first Pledging Conference for the United Nations Decade for Women, held at the Headquarters of the United Nations on 8 November 1977,

Convinced that the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women, if it is to be fully effective, must be translated into the greatest possible number of projects and programmes at the national, regional and interregional levels,

Also convinced that the speedy establishment of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women will contribute substantially to the attainment of the research and training objectives of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year,

1. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General for having convened the first Pledging Conference for the United Nations Decade for Women;

2. Expresses its warm thanks to those countries which have already contributed, those which have pledged contributions and those which have expressed their intention of contributing to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and/or to the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to convene during the thirty-third session of the General Assembly a second pledging conference for voluntary contributions for the purpose of financing:

(a) The Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women;

(b) The International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to organize an information campaign with a view to stimulating the interest of Governments, organizations and individuals likely to contribute to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women.

Resolution 2062(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5963, adopted without vote by Council on 12 May 1977, meeting 2058.

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that the General Assembly, in its resolution 3520 (XXX) of 15 December 1975, decided to convene in 1980 a world conference of all States to review and evaluate the progress made in implementing the objectives of the International Women's Year and, where necessary, to readjust existing programmes in the light of new data and research available,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1999(LX) of 12 May 1976, in which the Council requested the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-sixth session to consider different aspects of the preparatory work for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980, including its agenda, and decided to consider at its sixty-fourth session the preparatory work for the Conference on the basis of the deliberations of the Commission on the Status of Women and the Committee on Review and Appraisal,

Taking note of the recommendations made by the Commission on the Status of Women in its report on its twenty-sixth session,

1. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-seventh session to give the highest priority to the consideration of the item entitled "Preparatory work for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980" and to the study of proposals concerning the substantive and organizational arrangements for the Conference, taking into account all the relevant reports relating to the review and appraisal of the implementation of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year, as well as the discussions of the Commission and the documents submitted to it at its twenty-sixth session, and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fourth session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for the consideration of the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-seventh session a report outlining a programme of concrete action for the second half of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, 1976-1985, as the basis for a report to be submitted to the 1980 World Conference;

3. Decides to establish, not later than June 1978, a preparatory committee composed of not more than twenty-three Member States designated by the President of the Economic and Social Council after consultation with regional groups, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, to make recommendations concerning the substantive and organizational arrangements for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980;

4. Invites the regional commissions to consider, at the earliest opportunity, ways and means of contributing effectively to the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980, including the possibility of holding before 1980 regional seminars or meetings on the themes of the Conference, and reporting thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fourth session.

A/32/440. Report of Third Committee, draft resolution V.

Resolution 32/140, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/440, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3520(XXX) of 15 December 1975, in paragraph 20 of which it decided to convene at the mid-term of the United Nations Decade for Women a world conference to review and evaluate the progress made in implementing the objectives of the International Women's Year as recommended by the World Conference of the International Women's Year and, where necessary, to readjust existing programmes in the light of new data and research available,

Recalling that the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 1999(LX) of 12 May 1966, requested the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-sixth session to consider different aspects of the preparatory work for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, including its agenda, and also decided to consider at its sixty-fourth session, in the spring of 1978, the preparatory work for the Conference,

Recalling also that, in accordance with the request of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on the Status of Women has considered various aspects of the material preparations and the organization of the Conference as well as the implications of the Conference for the programme budget, bearing in mind a note by the Secretary-General,

Recalling further that the Economic and Social Council, at its sixty-second session, adopted resolution 2062(LXII) of 12 May 1976, in which it:

(a) Requested the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-seventh session to give the highest priority to the consideration of the preparatory work for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women,

(b) Requested the Secretary-General to prepare for the consideration of the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-seventh session a report outlining a programme of concrete action for the second half of the Decade,

(c) Decided to establish, not later than June 1978, a preparatory committee to make recommendations concerning the substantive and organizational arrangements for the Conference, (d) Invited the regional commissions to consider ways and means of contributing effectively to the Conference,

Noting that preliminary exchanges of views on the preparatory work for the Conference have also taken place in the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination at the two special inter-agency meetings held in September 1976 and July 1977, which were brought to the attention of the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-sixth session and will be brought to its attention at its twenty-seventh session,

1. Accepts the offer of the Government of Iran to act as host to the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women;

2. Notes that the Conference will in principle be held at Teheran in May 1980 for a period of two weeks;

3. Decides that the first session of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, to be convened pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2062(LXII), shall be held at the Headquarters of the United Nations in June 1978;

4. Notes the efforts made thus far by the Secretary-General and the Commission on the Status of Women with a view to undertaking the preparatory work for the Conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the work of the Preparatory Committee during its first session.

Education and training of women for development

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council, during its April-May 1977 session, considered a report of the Secretary-General on progress achieved towards the establishment of an International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, and on the progress of a research programme on the position and role of women in development. The Secretary-General noted that as of March 1977, three Member States had made pledges of financial support for the Institute, and one had made a cash contribution. The survey of existing data and information referred to in the Council's decision of 12 May 1976² had been initiated, and replies received indicated that research projects, surveys and training programmes for women were being undertaken or contemplated in 15 countries. A bibliography on women and development was being prepared. A preliminary time-table on administrative arrangements for the establishment of the Institute had been prepared, and the Secretary-General had accepted the offer of the Government of Iran to act as host to the Institute. Efforts to secure funding for the Institute were continuing.

After considering this matter, the General Assembly, on 16 December 1977, requested the Secretary-General to prepare a description of the structure, composition, responsibilities and programme of the Institute, as well as the proposed arrangements for co-ordination with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the regional commissions and the regional research centres for the advancement of women. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council in 1978 on the progress achieved.

These decisions were incorporated in Assembly resolution 32/137, adopted without vote; the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee had approved the resolution on 9 December 1977 without vote. There were 34 sponsors. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By another decision, the Assembly expressed thanks to countries which had contributed or pledged contributions to the Institute and to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, and requested the Secretary-General to convene a second pledging conference in 1978. The Secretary-General was also asked to organize an information campaign to stimulate the interest of likely contributors. The Assembly took these decisions by its resolution 32/139 on 16 December 1977 (see section above).

Research on the role and position of women in development

The Economic and Social Council took note, by its decision 240(LXII) of 13 May 1977, of a progress report of the Secretary-General on action taken to establish a system-wide United ² See Y.U.N., 1976, pp. 620-21, text of resolution 1998(LX).

Nations research programme on the role and position of women in development. The report noted the preparations being made for the establishment of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, and the work undertaken within the framework of the joint interorganizational programme for the United Nations Decade for Women. Decision 240(LXII) was approved, without objection, on the recommendation of the Council President.

Training of women for project preparation and implementation

By another action, the Economic and Social Council invited the Administrator of UNDP and the executive heads of the specialized agencies to organize, at the request of Governments, training programmes for women related to planning, evaluation and management of development projects. The Council suggested that such training programmes, inter alia, incorporate: how to identify community needs and formulate a project plan; how to determine priorities as they related to national development; and how to negotiate proposals, develop management skills, implement projects, and evaluate progress.

The Council recommended that Member States promote equal opportunities for the participation of women in training programmes, and requested that such training be envisaged as a possible programme for the planned International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women.

In addition, the Council invited international agencies concerned to report, inter alia on their management courses and the extent to which women were integrated in such courses, and to allocate to women an equitable number of responsible posts. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on the Status of Women in 1978 and to the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980, on action taken to implement this resolution.

The Council took these decisions by resolution 2059(LXII), adopted without vote on 12 May 1977. The Social Committee had approved the resolution without vote on 26 April 1977, with amendments by Argentina and the Ukrainian SSR, by Cuba, by Iran, by Jamaica, and by the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR. The text had been recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women.

The amendments jointly sponsored by Argentina and the Ukrainian SSR: (1) added a preambular paragraph recalling an Assembly resolution of 16 December 1976;³ (2) replaced the provision originally proposed with that adopted, by which the Council invited the Administrator of UNDP and the heads of other United Nations agencies and commissions to organize training programmes for women related to the planning and management of development projects; and (3) similarly recast the provision by which it recommended that Member States promote equal opportunities in training programmes for development projects and request any assistance required from United Nations organizations. The first and third proposals were accepted without vote, and the second was approved by 36 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions. Cuba sponsored an amendment by which the Council invited international agencies to—rather than express the wish that they should—allocate to women, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, an equitable number of responsible posts, particularly in departments implementing the resolution. This was approved without vote, as were drafting amendments by Iran, Jamaica and the USSR. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Resolution 32/137, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/440, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 31/135 of 16 December 1976, in which it endorsed the establishment of an International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1998(LX) of 12 May 1976 concerning the same question, Recalling further the reports of the Secretary-General on the progress achieved towards the establishment of the Institute, submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-first session and to the Economic and Social Council at its sixtieth and sixty-second sessions,

Convinced that the early establishment of the Institute will contribute substantially to the realization of the objectives of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year and the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women,

Noting the preparations already undertaken by the Secretary-General for the establishment of the Institute,

Considering that those preparations should be actively continued and that a preliminary draft document describing the structure and composition of the Institute should be prepared not later than April 1978,

1. Notes the efforts made thus far by the Secretary-General with a view to the establishment of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue those efforts and to prepare, in consultation with the competent bodies of the host country, the competent organs and institutions of the United Nations system and the regional commissions concerned, a draft document describing the structure, composition, responsibilities and programme of the Institute, as well as the co-ordination of the activities of the Institute with those of the organizations concerned, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, the regional commissions and the regional research centres for the advancement of women, having regard to the recommendations of the Group of Experts set forth in the report submitted by the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council at its sixtieth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fourth session on the progress achieved towards the establishment of the Institute, including substantive and administrative preparations, and to submit to it for consideration and adoption the draft document referred to in paragraph 2 above.

E/5963. Report of Social Committee, draft resolution II.

Resolution 2059(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5963, adopted without vote by Council on 12 May 1977, meeting 2058.

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that women should have equal access to participation in the formulation and implementation of development planning at the local, national, regional and international levels,

Considering also that women, for the most part, have not participated in the systems governing funding allocations and have not had an active role in national development planning,

Considering further that it is essential for women to acquire the necessary skills in the preparation of development project proposals, project management and evaluation procedures,

Concerned that women may continue to be denied participation on an equal basis with men unless they have the necessary skills,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 31/134 of 16 December 1976, in which the Assembly recognized the need for women to have rights, opportunities and obligations equal to those of men, particularly in the fields of education and professional and vocational training, so as to permit their full participation in the process of development,

1. Invites the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the executive heads of the specialized agencies, wherever possible, and in co-ordination with the appropriate international and regional training and research institutes concerned and the regional commissions, to organize, at the request of the interested Governments, training programmes for women related to the planning, evaluation and management of development projects;

2. Suggests that such training incorporate, among other things, the following:

(a) How to look for needs of the community and formulate a project plan;

(b) How to identify good project suggestions;

(c) How to determine priorities as they relate to national development;

(d) How to write a proposal, including budget estimates of time, personnel, equipment and technical support;

(e) How to locate sources of local funding, generate funds and seek new sources of financial and human resource support from private and government sources;

(f) How to negotiate proposals and obtain support from potential sources of funds including contributions in kind;

(g) How to locate and develop management skills among women for the implementation and evaluation of the project;

(h) How to ensure timely and appropriate implementation;

(i) How to evaluate progress of implementation, solve problems and determine when special assistance is needed to complete the project;

3. Recommends that Member States should promote equal opportunities for the participation of women in training programmes related to the planning, evaluation and management of development projects, requesting such assistance from the organizations of the United Nations system as they deem necessary for that purpose;

4. Requests that this kind of training be envisaged as a possible programme of the planned International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women;

5. Invites all international agencies concerned to prepare reports which include the following information:

(a) The frequency of management and training courses, their content and where and by whom they were organized;

(b) The extent to which women are integrated in such courses;

(c) How much stress the international agency places on the inclusion of women in the preparation of project proposals in its work with national Governments;

(d) How much effort has been devoted to the dissemination of information, for example to individual women leaders and women's organizations, about these courses, as well as other kinds of training and education on formal and informal bases;

(e) Whether participation increases in accordance with the efforts made to encourage women to take advantage of these courses;

6. Invites international agencies to allocate to women on the basis of the principle of equitable geographical distribution an equitable number of responsible posts in their respective structures, particularly in the departments entrusted with the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-seventh session, in 1978, on the steps taken to implement the present resolution and to submit a further report on action taken to the Commission at its twenty-eighth session and to the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980.

Other action to promote the advancement of women

Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women

In response to a request by the General Assembly on 15 December 1975,⁴ the Commission on the Status of Women elaborated a draft Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. The Economic and Social Council, on 12 May 1977, commended the Commission for its work in drafting the Convention, and invited Member States and specialized agencies to make comments. The Council submitted the draft Convention to the General Assembly, recommending consideration as a matter of urgency with a view to its adoption at the Assembly's regular 1977 session.

These decisions were embodied in Council resolution 2058(LXII), adopted without vote. The Social Committee had approved the text without vote on 20 April 1977. Sponsors were Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Denmark, Iran, Jamaica, Kenya, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United Kingdom. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

When the General Assembly considered the draft Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, it had before it a report from the Secretary-General presenting an analysis of the text based on comments from 27 Governments and four specialized agencies. Although most comments were favourable, there were suggestions for specific changes.

The Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee had established, on 19 October 1977, a working group of the whole to consider and finalize the draft Convention. The working group held 12 meetings. Its report on the work concerning the title, preamble and articles 1 to 9 was noted with satisfaction by the Third Committee. On 16 December 1977, the Assembly recommended that another working group be established at the outset of its regular 1978 session to continue consideration of incomplete articles. The Assembly decided to include the draft Convention on the agenda of that session, when it hoped it would be adopted.

The Assembly took these decisions by resolution 32/136, adopted without vote. The Third Committee had approved the resolution without vote on 9 December 1977. It was sponsored by 29 Member States. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

At the request of Mali, the Third Committee took a separate vote on the paragraph by which the Assembly noted with satisfaction the report of the working group. This was adopted by 117 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions. It also voted, by 89 to 6, with 22 abstentions, to retain the phrase "with satisfaction."

Technical assistance and advisory services

An African Regional Conference on the Implementation of National, Regional and World Plans of Action for the Integration of Women in Development was held in Nouakchott, Mauritania, in September 1977 to review progress in implementing the regional plan. It was attended by representatives of 35 countries.

A Technical Consultative Meeting, held in Mexico City in January 1977, was attended by experts from nine countries of the region. A Regional Conference on the Integration of Women in the Economic and Social Development of Latin America, held in Havana, Cuba, in June 1977, adopted a regional plan of action, and recommended that a special session of the plenary committee of the Economic Commission for Latin America be convened during 1977 to approve the plan and adopt measures to guarantee its implementation.

In February 1977, a regional follow-up seminar was held in Nepal on the participation of women in political, economic and social development, with special emphasis on machinery to accelerate the integration of women in development.

A seminar was held in the Netherlands in April 1977 on the changing roles of men and women in modern society, their functions, rights and responsibilities. The seminar focused upon the new relationship between men and women in societies which were trying to rid themselves of remaining sex-oriented prejudices and barriers.

Women's participation in strengthening peace and in the struggle against colonialism, racial discrimination, foreign aggression and foreign occupation

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly had before it a report of the Secretary-General on women's participation in the strengthening of international peace and security, and in the struggle against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, foreign aggression and occupation and all forms of foreign domination. The report summarized activities undertaken to implement an Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975⁵ on the subject, and was based on information furnished by 13 States, one intergovernmental organization and 14 non-governmental organizations.

The Assembly, on 16 December 1977, took note of the report, and called upon all States to continue their efforts in this area. It invited all States to proclaim a United Nations Day for Women's Rights and International Peace, and to give their full support to women exposed to colonialism, racism and apartheid in their just struggle against the racist regimes in southern Africa. The Assembly requested the Commission on the Status of Women to consider, as a contribution to the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980, the elaboration of a draft declaration on the participation of women in the struggle for the strengthening of international peace and security, and against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, foreign aggression and occupation and all forms of foreign domination.

The Assembly further called for a progress report on implementation, and put the item on the provisional agenda for its regular 1978 session.

The Assembly took these actions with the adoption of resolution 32/142, by a recorded vote of 71 to 19, with 46 abstentions. The Third Committee had approved the text on 9 December 1977 by a roll-call vote of 53 to 19, with 52 abstentions. The sponsors were Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Madagascar, Mongolia and the USSR. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Influence of mass media on attitudes towards roles of women and men in society

The Economic and Social Council, on 12 May 1977, noting the mass communication media's power to perpetuate stereotypes and myths about women, adopted a resolution encouraging Member States to: make media representatives aware of the importance of formulating policies for treatment of women in the media, to ensure that there was no discrimination against them; publish more news stories and editorials about women; and portray the roles and achievements of women from all walks of life.

The Council then recommended, among other things, that Member States encourage programmes to eliminate sex-role stereotyping and make efforts to use the media to bring about new attitudes towards the roles of men and women in society. The Council requested the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to prepare educational materials and organize seminars to help countries improve the image of women and remove stereotyped sex roles from teaching materials, and suggested that Member States create committees to advise and meet with media representatives for discussions on progress towards changing the image and status of women in the media.

The Council decided to appoint a special rapporteur to prepare a study on the impact of the media on the changing roles of men and women, requesting him to report to the Commission on the Status of Women.

These decisions were incorporated in resolution 2063(LXII), adopted by the Council without vote. The Social Committee had approved the text, as amended, without vote on 27 April 1977. The text had been recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Several amendments were proposed in the Social Committee. Japan proposed, and later withdrew, a drafting amendment. Cuba also introduced amendments; in addition to drafting changes, these concerned: the hiring and advancement of women in the mass communication media; publication of more news and editorials about women in sections other than those reserved for women; and the provision by UNESCO of educational films at the request of and with the advice of specialists from developing countries, to improve the image of women in those countries. Jamaica offered a subamendment to the effect that UNESCO also organize seminars, and prepare other visual aids to improve the image of women. These amendments were approved without vote.

Poland proposed three amendments. The first added professional work by women to the other fields in which media attention was sought; it was approved without vote. The second and third amendments would have requested the Secretary-General, rather than a special rapporteur, to report on the impact of mass communication media on the changing roles of men and women; the second was defeated by 14 votes to 13, with 5 abstentions, the third becoming inapplicable. A drafting amendment by Yugoslavia was approved without vote, and another became inapplicable. Other amendments proposed by New Zealand and by the USSR and approved without vote deleted parts of the Commission's draft text referring the special rapporteur to specific studies and recommending an agenda item for a proposed ad hoc committee on communications.

Communications concerning the status of women

The Council had before it a draft resolution, proposed by the Commission on the Status of Women, relating to communications concerning the status of women. By decision 223(LXII), adopted on 12 May 1977, it deferred action on this draft resolution (see p. 743).

Resolution 2058(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5963, adopted without vote by Council on 12 May 1977, meeting 2058.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolution 3521 (XXX) of 15 December 1975, in which the Assembly requested the Commission on the Status of Women to complete, in 1976, the elaboration of the draft Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women,

Commending the Commission on the Status of Women for its work in drafting such a Convention,

Recalling, furthermore, General Assembly resolution 31/136 of 16 December 1976, in which the Assembly, inter alia, approved the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women, which calls for the adoption of such a Convention by the Assembly and its entry into force in the first half of the Decade, 1976 to 1980,

Convinced that the early adoption of such a Convention by the General Assembly and its entry into force would contribute to the speedy realization of the principles of equality between women and men,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the draft Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women completed by the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-sixth session;
