Recalling its resolutions 3519(XXX), 3520(XXX) and 3521(XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/136 of 16 December 1976,

Taking into account that secure peace and social progress, the establishment of the new international economic order as well as the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms require the active participation of women, their equality and development,

Appreciating the contribution of women to the strengthening of international peace and security and to the struggle against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, foreign aggression and occupation and all forms of foreign domination,

Emphasizing its grave concern that in some regions of the world colonialism, apartheid, racial discrimination and aggression continue to exist and territories are still occupied, which represents a most serious infringement of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of human rights of both women and men, and of the people's right to self-determination,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 3519(XXX);

2. Calls upon all States to continue to make their contribution to creating favourable conditions for the elimination of discrimination against women and for their full and equal participation in the social development process and to encourage broad participation of women in the effort to strengthen international peace, extend the process of international detente, curb the arms race and take measures for disarmament;

3. Seizes the occasion of the International Anti-Apartheid year to be observed in 1978 to invite all States fully to support women exposed to colonialism, racism and apartheid in their just struggle against the racist regimes in southern Africa;

5. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to consider, as a contribution to the preparation of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, to be held in 1980, the elaboration of a draft declaration on the participation of women in the struggle for the strengthening of international peace and security and against colonialism, racism, racial dis-

Resolution 2063(LXII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5963, adopted without vote by Council on 12 May 1977, meeting 2058.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling section IV of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year, which provides guidelines for national action related to the mass communication media that encompass radio, television, cinema, press, advertising, public meetings and similar forums, as well as traditional types of entertainment which are essential for reaching the rural areas of many countries,

Convinced that the mass communication media, in many instances, have a detrimental effect on the attitudes and values regarding women's roles in society, that they often present obstacles to desirable changes in behavioural patterns, and that they can perpetuate stereotypes and myths pertaining to women,

Convinced also that the mass communication media have great potential as a vehicle for economic and social change, for the dissemination of information in the fields of education and training, for removing prejudices and stereotypes, for accelerating acceptance of the expanding roles of women and for the promotion of their integration in development as equal partners with men, and that they are important for the achievement of equality, development and peace,

Recalling that, in the progress report of the Secretary-General on the subject prepared for the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-sixth session, it is stated that there is little information available on the images of women projected by the more traditional types of mass communication media and their influence on the perpetuation of sex-role stereotypes, and that there is need for research in this area,

1. Encourages Member States to make representatives of mass communication media aware of the importance of formulating policies and guidelines for treatment of women in the media, which should include:

(a) Review of their recruitment, training and promotion policies and practices to ensure that there is no discrimination against women and that they have equal opportunities for admission and advancement at all levels of professional, technical and decision-making positions in the mass communication media;

(b) Publication of more news and editorials about women, particularly about progress and shortcomings in the economic, legal, social and political fields, such news to be given the place and the importance it deserves in the light of its subject-matter and not all of it to be placed in sections reserved for women;

(c) Portrayal of the roles and achievements of women from all walks of life, especially in the fields of development, professional work and social welfare, including women in the rural areas;

2. Recommends that Member States should encourage the presentation of programmes and the publication of materials which ensure the elimination of sex-role stereotyping in educational and informational activities and the projection of a positive image of men and women;

3. Requests that Member States take whatever action is necessary to establish and strengthen co-operative systems for schools and libraries in the production and dissemination of educational and information materials for use by television, radio, press, mobile units, community centres and other public facilities in urban and rural areas;

4. Recommends that Member States should encourage educational institutions and organizations to make greater use of the mass communication media for formal and informal education, literacy programmes, vocational training, political, civic and cultural education, as well as the formation of new attitudes about the role of men and women in society;

5. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, with a view to rendering assistance to developing countries which request it, and with the advice of specialists of those countries, to organize seminars which can help countries in improving the image of women and removing stereotyped sex roles in their teaching materials, and to prepare educational materials, with the same objectives, including films and other visual aids for primary schools and literacy programmes;

6. Suggests that Member States create committees or councils, composed of men and women in private, governmental and intergovernmental sectors, to advise and meet with policy and decision-making staff of the mass communication media, including particularly the field of advertising, for discussions and evaluations of progress towards changing the image and status of women in the media;

7. Encourages governmental and the competent non-governmental organizations, especially in co-operation with those dealing with the mass communication media, to organize workshops and seminars intended to create a greater understanding and public awareness of the potential and actual role of women in their respective societies, and to utilize the mass communication media to project positive and more accurate images of women;

8. Decides, taking into account the close relationship between the economic, social and cultural aspects of development and the necessity of the full integration of women in the development process, to appoint a special rapporteur to prepare a study on the impact of the mass communication media on the changing roles of men and women, including action taken by the public and private sectors at national, regional and international levels to remove prejudices and sex-role stereotyping, to accelerate the acceptance of women's new and expanded roles in society and to promote their integration into the development process as equal partners with men;

9. Requests the special rapporteur to submit a progress report to the Commission on the Status of Women, at its twenty-seventh session, and a comprehensive report containing findings, at its twenty-eighth session.

Chapter XXV

Consultative arrangements with non-governmental organizations

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations of the Economic and Social Council met from 7 to 11 February and from 7 to 11 April 1977 at United Nations Headquarters, New York, to consider new applications for consultative status and requests for reclassification received from non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

The Committee recommended that two organizations be reclassified to Category I, that three others be reclassified to Category II, that eight organizations be given Category II consultative status and that 10 others be placed on the Roster. The Committee also considered a report of the Secretary-General submitted in response to recommendations of the Committee and to two Economic and Social Council resolutions of 4 May 1973 concerning: the improvement of the contributions of NGOs to the implementation of the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade;¹ and contributions of NGOs to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.² Further, it revised the questionnaire for organizations seeking consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

The Committee met in April to look into, inter alia, the question of reviewing quadrennial reports required of NGOs by a Council resolution of 23 May 1968.³

The Committee: invited NGOs to submit to it, by 30 June 1978, reports on their activities covering four years; asked the United Nations Secretariat to circulate new applications when received and processed rather than together in one document; and expressed appreciation for efforts made in the Secretariat and regional commissions to improve relations with NGOs. It also considered in April the question of when the Committee might meet (outside the biennial cycle) to consider the requests for reclassification and new applications which, at its February 1977 meetings, it had deferred. It recommended a two-day meeting for this purpose early in January 1978, prior to the organizational meeting of the Economic and Social Council, and that it meet during Council sessions in order to avoid additional expenditures, without prejudice to the biennial cycle.

The Council, at its April/May 1977 session, considered the recommendations of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations concerning consultative status to be granted to various NGOs in accordance with the criteria set forth in the Council's 1968 resolution establishing the arrangements for obtaining and maintaining consultative status with the Council,⁴ and approved the Committee's recommended reclassifications and additions.

Thus, at the end of 1977, there were 731 NGOs that the Economic and Social Council could consult. These organizations were divided into three groups: Category I, Category II and the Roster.

Of the 731 NGOs in consultative status, there were 26 in Category I, 204 in Category II and 501 on the Roster.

In Category I were organizations concerned with most of the activities of the Council that could demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Council: that they had marked and sustained contributions to make to the achievements of the United Nations in social, cultural, educational, health, scientific, technological and human rights fields; that they were closely involved with the economic and social life of the people of the areas they represented; and that their membership was broadly representative of major segments of population in large numbers of countries.

In Category II were organizations that had a special competence in, and were concerned specifically with, only a few of the fields of activity covered by the Council and that were known internationally within the fields for which they had consultative status.

On the Roster were organizations that the Council, or the Secretary-General in consultation with the Council or with its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, considered able to make occasional and useful contributions to the work of the Council or other United Nations bodies.

Organizations in Categories I and II could submit for circulation written statements relevant to the work of the Council on subjects in which those organizations had a special competence. The Secretary-General in consultation with the President of the Council, or the Council or its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations could invite organizations on the Roster to submit written statements.

Category I organizations could present their views orally and also propose items for possible inclusion in the Council's provisional agenda. Such proposals were first to be submitted to the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations for subsequent action by the Secretary-General. Category I organizations, however, could propose items directly for the provisional agendas of the Council's commissions.

In addition, all three groups of NGOS could consult with the United Nations Secretariat on matters of mutual concern.

Review of non-governmental organizations granted consultative status

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 227(LXII), decided without vote to grant Category II consultative status to the following eight organizations: the Association for Childhood Education International, the Institute for Policy Studies, the International Indian Treaty Council, the International Institute for Vital Registration and Statistics, the International Islamic Federation of Student Organizations, the Union of Arab Jurists, the World Population Society, and the World Trade Centers Association. The following 10 organizations were placed on the Roster: the African Medical and Research Foundation International, the Asian Youth Council, the European Mediterranean Commission on Water Planning, the International Association for Hydrogen Energy, the International Center for Dynamics of Development, the International Peace Bureau, the International Progress Organisation, the International Union of Judges, the Latin American Confederation of Tourist Organizations, and Planetary Citizens.

The Council reclassified the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians and the International Organization of Consumers Unions from Category II to Category I, and reclassified the Christian Peace Conference, the International Association for Religious Freedom and the World Council of Credit Unions from the Roster to Category II.

By the same decision, the Council modified the Committee's recommendation to request that NGOS submit their quadrennial reports by 30 October 1977 instead of 30 June 1978, and urged that the Committee report to the Council's first regular session in 1978 on the extent to which NGOS in consultative status had complied with the principles governing their status and how their activities had contributed to the work of the United Nations.

The Council also took note of the part of the Committee's report regarding the review of the organizations, bearing in mind a Council recommendation that all NGOS that had not submitted the necessary information concerning themselves within the prescribed time-limit should be subject to suspension or withdrawal of consultative status.

Argentina had sponsored the draft decision in the Council's Social Committee, where it was approved without vote on 3 May 1977. The sponsor accepted oral amendments by Brazil, by the USSR and by the United States.

The Council on 4 August 1977 decided to request NGOS to submit their quadrennial reports in as many of the official languages of the United Nations as possible and requested the Secretary-General to invite interested Member States to provide relevant information concerning compliance by NGOS with the principles concerning their consultative status. The Council by the same decision increased the number of meetings scheduled and changed the dates for the session of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations to 16 to 27 January 1978.

Council decision 278(LXIII) embodying these provisions was adopted by a vote of 32 to 0, with 15 abstentions. The text, sponsored by Argentina, had been approved by the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee on 1 August 1977 by a vote, requested by the United Kingdom, of 29 to 0, with 14 abstentions.

In connexion with the adoption of this decision, it was the understanding of the Committee that, in order that the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations could carry out, at its January 1978 session, the review provided for in Council decision 227(LXII), reports could, as an exceptional measure, be circulated in the official languages submitted and only to Committee members; also, the six-week rule concerning circulation of documents before each session was deemed suspended. A consolidated document containing all the reports was to be issued in all official languages in due course.

Also on 4 August 1977, the Council, by decision 281(LXIII), authorized the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, in exceptional circumstances and when required on an ad hoc basis, and without prejudice to the biennial cycle of meetings, to hold brief meetings—additional to the Committee's regularly scheduled meetings—during sessions of the Council, using the meetings facilities allocated to the Council. (See p. 1036.)

Operating consultative arrangements

Written statements

Fifteen written statements by 10 individual NGOs were submitted to the Council during 1977 under the arrangements for consultation. In addition, joint statements were submitted by two, three and eight NGOs on social development questions and by 11 NGOs on developments on human settlements and follow-up to Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.

Written statements were submitted not only to the Council but also to the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission for Social Development and the Population Commission.

Healings of non-governmental organizations

During the April/May 1977 session of the Council, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU), the World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU) and Rehabilitation International made statements on the agenda item: "Activities for the advancement of women; Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace."

The International Organization for Standardization and ICFTU were heard, respectively, on transport questions and human rights questions.

During the Council's July/August session, the International Chamber of Commerce, ICFTU, the International Organization of Consumers Unions,

The International Union of Local Authorities and ICFTU spoke on developments in human settlements and follow-up to Habitat. The World Confederation of Labour and ICFTU made statements on transnational corporations.

The World Federation of United Nations Associations, WFTU and the League of Red Cross Societies spoke, respectively, on the work programme and budget for 1978-1979, industrial development co-operation, and assistance in cases of natural disasters and other disaster situations.

Chapter XXVI

Co-ordination and organizational questionsDevelopment and co-ordination of activities of the United Nations system of organizations

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) reported in 1977 on the functioning of its co-ordination machinery, which currently embraced 24 organizations and programmes participating in ACC, more than 30 programme sectors and 10 service sectors where organizations of the United Nations system co-operated on a multilateral basis.

During the year, ACC established a Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives to co-ordinate the implementation of global development targets. Development objectives of the system were also discussed at the Joint Meetings of ACC and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) in July 1977, as were ways to strengthen organizational contributions to the work of CPC and the Economic and Social Council, including harmonization of programme budgets and budget presentation. In this connexion, CPC presented a number of recommendations and conclusions pursuant to its new mandate—inter alia to review programmes as defined in the medium-term plan and to evaluate programmes to improve their design—and the General Assembly approved recommendations and took decisions relating to priority-setting and growth rates of programmes.

In addition, ACC considered the form of ad hoc machinery to co-ordinate activities on behalf of the least developed countries, and reviewed activities relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

The Committee also reviewed interagency co-ordination in a number of programme sectors: nutrition, human settlements, marine affairs, rural development, international years and anniversaries, water resources development, science and technology, activities of transnational corporations, the integration of women in development, education and training, the campaign against illiteracy, unemployment and poverty, and industrial development. The Economic and Social Council approved an ACC recommendation to set up a standing Advisory Group on Nutrition for consultant advice to agencies to replace the interagency Protein-Calorie Advisory Group.

Pending the establishment of permanent institutional arrangements to handle human settlements questions, which were set up at the end of 1977 with the creation of the Commission on Human Settlements, ACC co-ordinated system-wide action to implement previous decisions in this area.

By a decision relating to ACC'S work in marine affairs, the Council asked for additional co-operation in the field of coastal area development and more interaction between producers and users of marine technologies.

The Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems, an ACC subsidiary, under new terms of reference, launched several new programmes: it produced directories of United Nations information systems and services and of computer facilities, and it carried out work towards publishing a directory of administrative support systems, simultaneously with the further development of the Common Register of Development Activities. Other ACC administrative co-ordination activities included publication of ACC'S twelfth report on expenditures of the system in relation to programmes, promotion of collaboration between the International Civil Service Commission and the personnel services of various organizations, and work on calculating conference costs and improving terminology.

The Economic and Social Council in 1977 adopted a sector-by-sector approach to co-ordination problems to replace the organization-by-organization approach, eliminating the need for future annual analytical reports from the specialized agencies. Nevertheless, in 1977 the Council reviewed in depth the reports of the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Details of these and other co-ordination activities of the United Nations system are described in the sections below.

Functioning of co-ordination machinery

Restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system

The General Assembly on 20 December 1977 adopted resolution 32/197, by which it endorsed and annexed to the resolution the conclusions and recommendations of its Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System. The provisions relating to inter-agency co-ordination recommended that, at the intergovernmental level, such co-ordination should be governed by policy guidelines, directives and priorities established by the General Assembly and, under its authority, by the Economic and Social Council. The machinery for interagency co-ordination at the intersecretariat level should aim at assisting in the preparatory work for decisions and their implementation, and should conform to objectives and priorities of Governments. That machinery should centre on the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and should be streamlined and reduced to a minimum. Steps should be taken to merge the Environment Co-ordination Board, the Inter-Agency Consultative Board and the Advisory Committee of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization with ACC, which should assume their functions.

The agenda, functioning and reporting systems of ACC should be adjusted to respond fully to the priorities, requirements and work programme of the Assembly and the Council. The reporting schedules of ACC should be re-organized to conform to the meetings calendar of the intergovernmental bodies concerned. Communication between ACC and the intergovernmental bodies should be improved. As necessary, mutually convenient procedures should be worked out to enable the chairman or designated representative of any of these bodies to be associated in an appropriate manner with ACC discussions of particular concern to that body.

The Council's review of relationship agreements should be guided by the need to ensure that the specialized agencies give full and prompt effect in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and within the scope of their respective basic instruments to the recommendations made by the Assembly and the Council for co-ordination of their policies and activities.

Work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination

In its annual report to the Economic and Social Council covering its work from mid-1976 to mid-1977, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination noted that, in order to be able to co-operate more closely with the Council, the General Assembly and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), it had arranged that its work and that of its Preparatory Committee should be planned over longer periods and geared more closely to the work cycles of those bodies. The report noted that the organizations of the United Nations system had expressed satisfaction with CPC's decision to review their activities on a sector-by-sector basis rather than on an organization-by-organization basis, and with the consequences of that decision for reporting procedures.

The report also contained recommendations for consideration by the Council and other intergovernmental bodies on a number of specific issues, including: the contents and format of ACC's annual reports; the harmonization of the medium-term plans of organizations; a revision of ACC's interorganizational programme classification; a discussion of programme questions relating to a number of multidisciplinary subjects; administrative questions on personnel, financial, language and documentation issues; and an invitation to the Council to review proposals for the celebration of international years and other anniversaries.

The Committee considered a number of tasks facing the system pursuant to recent decisions concerning development and international economic co-operation. In particular, ACC addressed itself to the over-all question of the compatibility of the long-term development objectives set by the system, and measures to strengthen the analytical and technical support provided by it to intergovernmental bodies concerned with long-term development planning and target-setting.

The Committee replaced its Sub-Committee on the Development Decade with a new Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives. Its mandate was to formulate manageable and functional procedures to help the secretariats of the system contribute to the formulation and implementation by national and international policy-making bodies of global targets and programmes for development co-operation. Its functions and working procedures were elaborated by ACC at its July 1977 meeting in the light of, inter alia, discussions thereon by CPC at its May 1977 session. The terms and implications of the ACC initiative were also reviewed at the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC in July 1977. The Task Force held an organizational session in October and explored the possibilities of conducting an over-all survey of objectives and action programmes, a study based on experience gained in implementation, and co-ordination of quantitative work.

Immediately following a special meeting at which multilateral and bilateral financial and technical assistance agencies carried out a review of their requirements with representatives of the least developed countries (see p. 413), ACC convened an ad hoc interagency meeting to consider interagency machinery to deal with issues relating to those countries. It postponed a decision on establishing an ACC sub-committee for co-ordination of such activities; instead, ad hoc interagency meetings could be convened to assist ACC in that respect, and activities on behalf of the least developed countries would be regularly reviewed by existing ACC subsidiary bodies in their fields of competence.

In accordance with a Council resolution of 1 August 1974,¹ representatives of organizations of the system held a meeting with a representative of the Organization of African Unity in March 1977 to review activities relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples² and other relevant resolutions with a view to achieving effective co-ordination of activities.

On 3 August 1977 the Council, by decision 256(LXIII), which it adopted without vote, took note of, inter alia, the annual report of ACC for 1976/1977. The decision had been orally proposed in the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee by the Chairman and approved without vote on 1 August.

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC

The Economic and Social Council, at a meeting of its organizational session on 12 January 1977, considered the 1976 report on the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC. A number of issues which had been taken up in that report and proposals which had been agreed upon to improve co-operation and communication between the two bodies and to promote better understanding between government representatives and secretariats³ were, Council members had felt, in need of more study than could be given at the 1976 session. Following the January 1977 discussion, the Council adopted, without vote, on an oral suggestion of its President, decision 208(ORG-77), by which the Council, having taken fully into account the comments made on the report, took note of the conclusions contained therein.

The two Committees held the twelfth in their series of Joint Meetings at Geneva from 5 to 7 July 1977 and reported their views and conclusions to the Council at its July/August 1977 session.

As noted in the report, the Joint Meetings concerned themselves with two major items: ways and means of strengthening the contributions of organizations to the work of CPC and the Economic and Social Council; and development objectives of the United Nations system.

With regard to the first item, the two Committees recognized that a large number of measures adopted over the past few years had corresponded to that objective, in particular a change in the presentation of the CPC report, communication to CPC of summaries of the work of the ACC Preparatory Committee and of the results of preliminary consultations among specialized agencies, and special analyses conducted by ACC on the sectors chosen by CPC for detailed study.

The question of the harmonization of programme budgets was considered; the executive heads said they were in favour of such harmonization in the interests of co-ordination, despite the difficulty and expenditures entailed for the agencies.

With regard to the methodology to be adopted for the study of the activities of the specialized agencies, the two Committees recommended that the sector-by-sector approach to co-ordination problems should be adopted, rather than an organization-by-organization approach. This would eliminate the need for agencies' analytical summaries; their annual reports would be sufficient.

On 3 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote a three-part resolution (2098(LXIII)), on programming and co-ordination in the United Nations system, by a provision of which it endorsed the recommendations of the Joint Meetings concerning in-depth studies on the basis of a programme-sector-by-programme-sector approach to co-ordination.

(For additional views and conclusions of the Joint Meetings on this item, and subsequent action by the Council and the General Assembly, see section below on PROGRAMMING AND CO-ORDINATION IN THE UNITED NATIONS SYSTEM, and p. 1045; for text of resolution 2098(LXIII), especially section II, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below, under the heading PROGRAMMING AND CO-ORDINATION IN THE UNITED NATIONS SYSTEM.)

Concerning the second major item of discussion at the Joint Meetings—development objectives of the United Nations system—the two Committees had emphasized that the definition of a development strategy was not a theoretical exercise in econometrics; what counted in a strategy was its implementation. Harmonization and homogeneity would not be sought for their own sake but to make the system more dynamic.

The conclusions of the Committees on this item were that the work of ACC'S newly created Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives (see section immediately preceding) would be of practical assistance to intergovernmental bodies in engendering maximum mutual compatibility of development objectives and promoting their implementation, and it would contribute to the flexibility and responsiveness of the system to development policies. It was pointed out, however, that the secretariats should avoid any impression of preempting, bypassing, financing or taking over the work of intergovernmental bodies or generally reaching conclusions within the province of those bodies. The Task Force's work should be as specific and action-oriented as possible. The initiative also placed responsibility on intergovernmental bodies to provide guidance and a sense of purpose to this work. The hope was expressed that consideration of issues relating to the compatibility of development objectives would be actively pursued by the Council and through such subsidiary bodies as CPC, the Committee on Review and Appraisal and the Committee for Development Planning.

Annual reports of IAEA and of the specialized agencies

The Economic and Social Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, for its consideration of international co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system at the July/August 1977 session of the Council, had before it a statement of the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to the Council and analytical summaries of the annual reports of the following specialized agencies: the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the Universal Postal Union, the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization and the World Intellectual Property Organization.

Pursuant to a 1975 recommendation by Ace,⁴ the Council reviewed in depth the reports of ILO and UNESCO at its mid-1977 session.

The annual report of IAEA for 1977 was submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session in November (see p. 103).

On 3 August 1977, by decision 256(LXIII), the Council, on the recommendation of the Committee, took note of the analytical summaries of the reports of the specialized agencies and IAEA, as well as of the annual report of ACC for 1976/1977. (For details, see section above on WORK OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE ON CO-ORDINATION.)

A statement on behalf of the executive head of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) was made to the Council in July 1977; reports of the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and the International Development Association were transmitted to the Council in October and November 1977 (see p. 527).

The Council, by its resolution 2098(LXIII) of 3 August 1977 on programming and co-ordination in the United Nations system, decided to discontinue the submission of analytical summaries of the reports of the specialized agencies. The agencies were invited to co-operate actively, through ACC, in the preparation and timely submission of reports on United Nations system-wide programme sectors for consideration by CPC.

the heading PROGRAMMING AND CO-ORDINATION IN THE UNITED NATIONS SYSTEM.)

Programming and co-ordination in the United Nations system

A task force on the harmonization of programme budget presentation met in February 1977 under the auspices of ACCS Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions. It reported fully on progress made by organizations in implementing decisions on: harmonization of concepts relating to medium-term plans, including the framing of objectives; techniques of performance reporting and evaluation; agreed definitions in the programme budgeting and financial fields; revision of ACCS interorganizational programme classification which served, inter alia, as the basis of ACCS annual report on expenditures in relation to programmes; procedures for prior consultations on medium-term plans and programme budgets; and arrangements for future work. This organization-by-organization review, however, which was considered to be a prerequisite for planning system-wide development activities, was not completed.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination considered for the first time at its May/June 1977 session a programme budget in the manner defined in its new terms of reference—reviewing United Nations programmes as defined in the medium-term plan—and undertook its new evaluation work to improve programme design; these tasks had been entrusted to it in 1976.⁵ It combined its work on the budget for the 1978-1979 biennium and its evaluation work by studying four selected programme areas in detail—public information, transport, human settlements and environment—and ascertaining whether the draft programme budget was compatible with the medium-term plan adopted by the General Assembly in 1976. It submitted recommendations to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly on three of the four topics (the institutional consequences of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, however, were still under consideration by the Council). It also recommended guidelines for improvement of programme evaluation and decided on programmes it would consider in depth at its next session.

With regard to setting priorities, CPC recommended that, in the economic, social and humanitarian fields, each programme in the Secretary-General's draft programme budget should show all existing or proposed subprogrammes or programme components which represented 10 per cent of the resources requested for that programme, and to which the highest or lowest priority was to be assigned.

The Committee included in its report a draft resolution for Assembly consideration by which, inter alia, the Assembly would confirm CPC's role as the main subsidiary body of the Council and the Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination, and urge subsidiary bodies to refrain from making recommendations on the relative priority of the major programmes, but to propose, through CPC, relative priorities for various subprogrammes within their fields of competence. (For the General Assembly's consideration of CPC's report, see p. 1045.)

In other action, CPC expressed concern about the lack of compliance in some of the proposed programmes with the relative growth rates endorsed by the Assembly. In relating the programme budget to the medium-term plan for 1978-1981, CPC noted certain problems arising from a lack of clear direction in establishing relative growth rates, and set out some guidelines in an attempt to refine the methodology for determining those rates. It invited the Secretary-General to comment on those problems.

The Committee decided that, instead of studying the programmes of each specialized agency, it should do what those bodies could not do because their point of view was sectoral, namely, identify the co-ordination problems which arose in sectors of activity falling within the competence of several agencies; CPC would thus be shifting from the organization-by-organization approach to the sector-by-sector approach, as envisaged in its new terms of reference. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination approved the change proposed by CPC at the Joint Meetings of the two Committees in July (see section above). It also suggested that in future the sectors to be covered by CPC might be selected by the Joint Meetings on the basis of proposals submitted by ACC and reviewed by CPC immediately preceding the Joint Meetings. In addition, ACC would continue to submit to CPC reports on programme areas selected by CPC for in-depth consideration in connexion with the programme budget of the United Nations itself. These areas would be selected on the basis of considerations arising from CPC's programme review activities; the ACC reports were to assist

CPC in programme evaluation and in its review of proposed new programmes.

The Economic and Social Council, on 3 August 1977, having considered the reports of CPC and of the Joint Meetings, adopted without vote a three-part resolution on programming and co-ordination in the United Nations system.

By the first section, it endorsed CPC'S conclusions and recommendations, commended them to the organizations concerned and recommended that the Assembly take them into account in adopting the 1978-1979 programme budget.

By the second section, the Council endorsed the recommendations of the Joint Meetings relating to discontinuance of the submission of analytical summaries of agency reports and their replacement by in-depth studies using a programme-sector-by-programme-sector approach. It invited ACC to submit annually to CPC information needed for the selection of programme sectors to be reviewed in depth on a system-wide basis, and invited the agencies, through ACC, to co-operate in submitting these reports.

By the third section of the resolution, the Council asked ACC to specify obstacles to further harmonization of programme budgets and medium-term plans and make proposals for overcoming them. It asked the Secretary-General, as Chairman of ACC, to prepare for CPC a compendium of introductions to the most recent programme budgets of agencies and organizations in the system, and asked CPC to consider the compendium's utility, with a view to developing system-wide harmonization of budgets and plans; it also asked ACC'S views on the compendium and on ways to enhance its value.

The text of this resolution was proposed in the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee by Argentina, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Japan, Kenya, Mauritania, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines and Yugoslavia. The Committee approved the text, as orally amended by France, by the Netherlands and by the sponsors, without objection on 28 July 1977; the Council adopted the Committee's recommended draft as resolution 2098(LXIII). Review of relationship agreements

In 1973, the Economic and Social Council decided to review the existing agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency with a view to strengthening the coherence of the system and its capacity to fulfil, in particular, the objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade effectively and in a co-ordinated manner.⁶

At its April/May 1977 session, the Council had before it several documents on this subject which had been submitted during the intervening years: a descriptive and analytical report of the Secretary-General on the past and current relationship between the United Nations and the specialized agencies, IAEA and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, as well as a report containing the views of the executive heads of those agencies,⁷ and a 1975 interim report of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee on the question of reviewing the agreements.⁸

Inasmuch as several members of the Council expressed the view that the reports should be considered after the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System had concluded its work and after the Council had considered the Ad Hoc Committee's report, the President orally proposed, and the Council agreed without vote on 26 April 1977, by decision 217(LXII), to take a decision at the Council's organizational session for 1978 on the timing of the review of the agreements.

On 20 December 1977, the General Assembly, by its resolution 32/197 on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee. The recommendations regarding interagency co-ordination referred to the review of the relationship agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies. The review, it was stated, should be guided by the need to ensure that the agencies gave full and prompt effect, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and within the scope of their respective basic instruments, to the recommendations made by the Assembly and the Council for the co-ordination of their policies and activities.

International years and anniversaries

At its April 1977 session, ACC reviewed proposals for the celebration of international years and other special observances. It took note of the preparations for the International Year of the Child in 1979 (see p. 614)—which were being co-ordinated through an inter-agency advisory group which held its first meeting in March 1977—and the arrangements being made in designating 1981 the International Year for Disabled Persons (see p. 659). It was informed that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization had adopted a resolution accepting in principle a UNESCO-sponsored International Year for Science and Technology in 1981 (see p. 542) and that there were plans in the International Telecommunication Union to sponsor the proclamation of an International Communication Year and in the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization to sponsor an annual World Maritime Day.

In considering the demands made on the system by the preparatory process for international years, ACC concluded that in many respects the collective efforts required by international years closely paralleled that of recent or proposed world conferences. It felt that it would be important, in any analysis undertaken of the likely import of new international years, to take those conferences fully into account.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its seventeenth session and the recommendations of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination regarding co-ordination in the United Nations system,

Noting with satisfaction that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination has considered the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979, as well as the evaluation reports on selected programme areas,

Noting the recommendation of the Joint Meetings in favour of a programme-sector-by-programme-sector approach to co-ordination, as envisaged in the terms of reference of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination,

Convinced that the further harmonization of programme budgets and medium-term planning in the United Nations system is desirable,

I

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and commends them to the organs and institutions of the United Nations system concerned, and recommends that the General Assembly act upon the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee in adopting the programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979, taking into account the discussion at the sixty-third session of the Council;

II

1. Decides to discontinue the submission of analytical summaries of the reports of the specialized agencies requested in its resolution 1458(XLVII) of 8 August 1969 and related resolutions;

2. Endorses the recommendations of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination concerning in-depth studies on the basis of the programme-sector-by-programme-sector approach to co-ordination;

3. Invites the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to submit annually to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination the relevant elements and selected information for the selection of programme sectors to be reviewed in depth on a United Nations system-wide basis;

for consideration by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination;

III

1. Requests the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to specify the obstacles involved in further harmonizing programme budgets and medium-term plans and to make proposals for overcoming them to the Council at its sixty-fifth session, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, with a view to deriving the maximum benefits from such harmonization;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to provide the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its eighteenth session with a compendium of introductions to the most recent programme budgets of agencies and organizations within the United Nations system;

Co-ordination of programme activities

Institutional arrangements relating to nutrition

The Economic and Social Council at its July/August 1977 session had before it a supplementary statement by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) on institutional arrangements relating to nutrition, elaborating and modifying some recommendations it had made in 1976:⁹

— a standing Advisory Group on Nutrition composed of five or six members was proposed; the Protein-Calorie Advisory Group, sponsored by the United Nations and several specialized agencies, would complete its work at the end of 1977;

— all agencies would draw widely on the Group's consultant advice, without constituting formally a "nutrition advisory panel"; and

— the secretariat would be administered by one agency on behalf of the sponsors, rather than rotating among them.

An ACC recommendation to establish a Sub-Committee on Nutrition was also elaborated and its terms of reference set out. The programme of work of the Advisory Group on Nutrition would be formulated and approved by sponsoring agencies in the light of proposals from the ACC Sub-Committee and of the Group itself. Its members would be appointed by the Sub-Committee on the recommendation of the sponsoring agencies.

Pursuant to a request of the 1974 World Food Conference,¹⁰ informal tripartite meetings were recommended, involving members of the ACC Sub-Committee, the Advisory Group on Nutrition, international agencies and representative institutions active in nutrition, especially from developing countries. A small expert group was to review the evolution of the nutrition problem every two or three years. Budgetary provisions for these arrangements were to be provided by sponsoring agencies, which should comprise those agency members of the ACC Sub-Committee with a substantial concern for different aspects of nutrition; ACC would arrange to have a secretariat in Rome, administered by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO).

On 26 July 1977, the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee approved without vote a resolution sponsored by Denmark, Finland, Jamaica, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, the Philippines, Portugal, Sweden and the United Kingdom, concerning institutional arrangements relating to nutrition.

The Economic and Social Council on 3 August 1977 adopted the draft text without a vote as its resolution 2107(LXIII). By this resolution, the Council requested ACC to implement the proposals contained in its supplementary statement, bearing in mind that the new arrangements had no additional financial implications and that the World Food Council and other organizations concerned should take an active part in those arrangements. The Council also asked ACC for a progress report in two years' time. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Activities of the United Nations system in the field of human settlements

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination reported to the Economic and Social Council in 1977 on assistance to the Secretary-General by the organizations of the United Nations system in his task of preparing for discussions of the institutional arrangements for the system's work on human settlements, in order to implement the various proposals of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements held in 1976.¹¹ To this end, an ACC report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in July 1977 described the roles and mandates of the organizations in this field, their current activities, opportunities for harmonization, their approach towards carrying out the recommendations of the Habitat Conference and the interim co-ordination arrangements they had set up; it also proposed system-wide action in the field of human settlements.

The report summarized the activities of the institutions in the United Nations system with a primary concern in human settlements: the United Nations Centre for Housing, Building and Planning, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development was identified as the main source of financing of human settlement projects within the United Nations system. Other agencies and organizations of the system were involved with various sectoral aspects of human settlements, with the regional commissions having specific regional responsibilities.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination reported that it had periodically organized ad hoc meetings on housing and urbanization, and many of its subsidiary bodies were involved with human settlement programmes. It recommended that each organization should carry out an in-depth assessment of what its role should be in implementing Conference recommendations and what its contribution in terms of specific system-wide activities and programmes in the area could be. Pending the final decision of the General Assembly, ACC entrusted the functions of co-ordination at both the programme and operational levels to ad hoc interagency meetings convened by its Preparatory Committee; ACC would later make long-term co-ordination arrangements. The Committee considered that the organizations concerned should lay the foundation for concerted action at the country level in support of multidisciplinary national programmes. It also supported the Conference's view regarding the enhanced role of the regional commissions. It drew particular attention to the need to increase the technical knowledge available to the system in respect of human settlements and ensure that such information was more systematically exchanged and disseminated.

The Economic and Social Council's Ad Hoc Sessional Committee on human settlements, established to draft a resolution on institutional arrangements for international co-operation regarding human settlements, considered the subject at three formal and a number of informal meetings in July and August 1977. The resulting draft text was forwarded to the General Assembly for consideration at its regular 1977 session. A second draft resolution considered by the Ad Hoc Committee, concerning co-operation in the field of human settlements with organizations outside the United Nations system, was withdrawn (see p.515).

On 2 August the Ad Hoc Committee approved without vote an oral suggestion by its Chairman to recommend that the Council take note of the report of ACC on activities of the United Nations system in human settlements. On 4 August 1977, the Council did so in adopting, without vote, decision 263(LXIII).

The Ad Hoc Committee's draft text on establishing institutional arrangements in the field of human settlements was revised and resubmitted by 19 Member States in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, where it was approved. It was adopted by the Assembly on 19 December 1977 as resolution 32/162. The Assembly thereby set up a Commission on Human Settlements to assist in solving human settlements problems and to promote international co-operation in this field.

Co-operation in coastal area development and marine affairs

In its annual report for 1976/1977 to the Economic and Social Council, ACC reported that its Sub-Committee on Marine Science and its Applications had been given new terms of reference and renamed the Sub-Committee on Marine Affairs; its functions were enlarged to include promotion of prior consultations and joint planning programmes. At its session in January 1977, the Sub-Committee identified programme areas for interagency co-operation: marine science, marine environment, coastal area development, education and training, information systems, uses of the sea, and marine and coastal technology.

The Sub-Committee noted that the Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Information System, being developed by FAO and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC), could be made fully responsive to system-wide needs in the field of marine affairs, and drew the attention of all United Nations organizations to its potential. The Sub-Committee also hoped to arrive at a definition of regional or subregional areas specially amenable to coastal area management and development.

The annual report on the work of the Intersecretariat Committee on Scientific Programmes Relating to Oceanography could serve as a basis for the Sub-Committee's review of its marine science programme, ACC further reported. It also agreed to add UNEP to the original co-sponsors of the Global Exploration of Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution (the others being the United Nations, FAO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization and the International Atomic Energy Agency).

On 3 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2099(LXIII) on co-operation in coastal area development. The Council thereby asked the Secretary-General to co-operate with IOC, FAO and other United Nations organizations in the development of the Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Information System. It invited the Secretary-General and executive heads of agencies to assist Governments in developing coastal areas, to encourage more effective interaction between producers and users of marine and coastal technologies and to promote closer co-operation among developing countries in this field. The Secretary-General was to report through ACC on progress.

Other programme co-ordination

Rural development. The report of ACC to the Council described measures taken by the Task Force on Rural Development to implement various elements of ACCS interagency action programme in rural development, with special focus on rural poverty. The report outlined action initiated at the country level and steps taken to develop effective monitoring mechanisms, to elaborate and harmonize proposals for inclusion in programme planning documents, for the exchange and evaluation of research findings and the training and orientation of staff. The Committee arranged for the preparation of comprehensive inventories of activities, based on agreed criteria, and for biennial reports on the total resources being devoted to the alleviation of rural poverty within the system.

Action taken by resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to apprise Governments of the nature and objectives of the proposals were considered at a meeting of the Task Force in March 1977. The report noted that the International Labour Organisation (ILO) would continue to serve as the lead agency for the ACC exercise until the end of 1977 when FAO would assume that function.

A working group of the Task Force on joint action at the country level was convened by ILO and UNDP at New York in September 1977 to review the results of the first round of exploratory visits to countries (Bolivia, Lesotho, Liberia, Samoa and Somalia) which had, through UNDP, expressed interest in ACCS initiative. The main purpose was to ascertain the intentions and wishes of the countries and place the expertise of the system at their disposal.

International Year of the Child. All organizations concerned planned specific programmes and were co-operating with the United Nations Children's Fund, the lead agency for co-ordination of the International Year of the Child in 1979. An interagency advisory group, composed of representatives of United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations, met periodically following its first meeting in March 1977. A working party of the Joint United Nations Information Committee was also established to plan public information programmes relating to the Year on an inter-agency basis. (See also p. 614.)

Water resources development. The measures adopted by the March 1977 United Nations Water Conference (see p. 553) confirmed the need, ACC reported, to strengthen machinery for interagency co-operation in water resources development. To this end, ACC suggested setting up an interagency body to provide assistance at the intersecretariat level for monitoring progress in implementing Conference proposals and provide advice to countries on their water resources. It was envisaged that the regional commissions would play an active part in the interagency body.

Science and technology. The Committee met in April 1977 with the Secretary-General of the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, pledging support to the preparatory work, to be co-ordinated within the framework of ACCS Sub-Committee on Science and Technology.

The Inter-Agency Task Force on Information Exchange and Transfer of Technology was preparing a comprehensive analysis of existing information system networks for the preparation of a plan for the establishment of a network for the exchange of technical information.

(See also Chapter XIII on APPLICATION OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY TO DEVELOPMENT.)

Transnational corporations. A second ad hoc interagency meeting of officials responsible for programmes connected with transnational corporations was held in September 1977 under ACC auspices. It aimed at ensuring responsiveness to decisions, programmes and projects concerning such corporations, seeking organizational support for the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in carrying out its work programme, and assessing co-ordination achieved. Discussions focused on the formulation of a code of conduct, the establishment of a comprehensive information system, research and technical co-operation.

Integration of women in development. The inter-organizational programme linking the various development-oriented programmes of the system and the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985)¹² was completed in April 1977 and brought to the attention of several ACC subsidiary bodies, such as the Task Force on Rural Development, the Sub-Committee on Education and Training and the Sub-Committees, on Population and Statistics. Each organization agreed to designate a co-ordinating unit and to consider establishing interagency working groups for specific sectors or areas of activity to ensure adequate follow-up. Arrangements were also made for concerted efforts in the field of public information with special attention to the promotion of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year.¹³ Arrangements to ensure preparation for the 1980 World Conference on the United Nations Decade for Women on a system-wide basis included an ad hoc interagency meeting in July 1977 at Geneva to begin those preparations.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/138 on the inter-agency programme for the Decade.

(For further information see Chapter XXIV on THE STATUS OF WOMEN; for page reference to text of resolution 32/138, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Education and training. The ACC Sub-Committee on Education and Training identified a number of specialized subsectors of the education and training programme sector and considered in each case the kind of co-ordination arrangements needed for the activities of each. Whenever possible, informal and flexible arrangements should be worked out among the organizations most directly concerned in the particular subsector, ACC believed.

Special attention was given during the year to strengthening co-ordination of fellowship activities—ACC agreed to a Joint Inspection Unit suggestion for regular meetings of officers responsible for fellowship programmes—and activities relating to the migration of trained personnel.

Other programme activities. As ACC felt that the eradication of illiteracy was essential for the success of many components of development policy, it suggested that UNESCO's activities in this area should be linked to the objectives of a new development strategy and become an integral component of any new development decade. Further interagency consultations were arranged for the purpose.

An interagency task force met in March 1977 to discuss interagency action and co-operation on problems of unemployment and poverty. It considered a special report (see p. 418) on steps taken by ACC to promote and co-ordinate active participation by the various organizations in implementing the Programme of Action adopted by the World Employment Conference convened by ILO in June 1976.¹⁴

A new forum, the United Nations Advisory Committee on Co-ordination in the Field of Industrial Development—for intersecretariat consultation on matters in that field—was set up under the chairmanship of the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. Intersecretariat bilateral collaboration also continued through the creation of several task forces with specific mandates in selected sectoral activities. Consultations also took place on developing a joint approach for the development and transfer of technology as called for by the 1975 Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation.¹⁵

Resolution 2107(LXIII), as recommended by Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, E/6036 (part II), adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1977, meeting 2084.

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the supplementary statement by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on institutional arrangements relating to nutrition,

Recognizing that policy decisions in the field of nutrition are a prerogative of Governments,

Considering that co-ordinated action in the field of nutrition in the United Nations system is of vital importance,

Believing that co-ordinated action by the secretariats of the system would contribute to this,

Recognizing that independent expertise could also be valuable,

Requests the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination:

(a) To implement the proposals contained in its supplementary statement in the light of the discussion of this issue at the sixty-third session of the Economic and Social Council and the clarifications made by the Under-Secretary-General for Inter-Agency Affairs and Co-ordination during the debate, bearing in mind that the new arrangements have no additional financial implications and that the World Food Council and other organizations concerned should take an active part in these arrangements;

(b) To ensure that important substantive studies and recommendations in the field of nutrition are made available to Member States and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-seventh session on the progress achieved in this field under the new arrangements.

Co-ordination of administrative activities

Information systems

For the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems (IOB), a subsidiary of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), 1977 was a year of transition in which IOB received new terms of reference and adopted new programme objectives and methods of work. During 1977, its major task was to launch the new programme.

Within the over-all aim of monitoring and co-ordinating the development of common or comparable information systems, the Board's work was organized under three major programme objectives: (a) promotion of the exchange of information; (b) stimulation of awareness of opportunities and problems; and (c) promotion of co-operative efforts. To meet those objectives, four major programmes were adopted: (1) basic co-ordination and secretariat services; (2) documentation and data systems; (3) management information and administrative systems; and (4) computer facilities and operating systems.

In consultation with the ACC Inter-Agency Task Force on Information Exchange and the Transfer of Technology, IOB produced a user-oriented Directory of United Nations Information Systems and Services. In November 1977, the draft version was made available; the final version, to be issued in 1978, was to contain particulars of over 100 information systems and services, a statement of the functions and activities of all organizations of the United Nations family, and some 2,500 addresses, grouped by countries, showing representation of organizations in countries, input centres, United Nations Information Centres and depository libraries.

The Board in 1977 also carried out inventories of hardware and software within the United Nations system, summarized and issued as a Directory of United Nations Computer Facilities.

In the IOB programme dealing with management information and administrative systems, an inventory was carried out in 1977 of five major categories of systems (accounting, budget, payroll, personnel and project resources) in 14 major organizations of the United Nations family for issuance in a Directory of Administrative Support Systems. Simultaneously with this inventory, IOB carried out work concerned with the development of the interorganizational project register known as CORE (Common Register of Development Activities).

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination expedited the CORE project in 1977 by setting up a pilot IOB/CORE project in the International Computing Centre in Geneva. The work items included the preparation and distribution of revised data-gathering standards and procedures, incorporation in the pilot installation of all available input data, preparation of samples of output and their distribution, and the documentation of all cost implications as experience was gained.

In order to meet the needs of users more effectively, a working party on the indexing of documents was developing a framework for the description and indexing of documentary material produced throughout the United Nations system to facilitate the interchange of bibliographical information and reduce duplicate indexing.

(See also p. 1042.)

Expenditures in relation to programmes

The twelfth report of ACC on expenditures of the United Nations system in relation to programmes, submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1977, showed total expenditures by all organizations during 1975, 1976 and 1977 (estimated), broken down by year and main source of funds. It also showed for all organizations, together and broken down by separate organization, expenditures from regular budget funds and extraordinary funds under each of 17 sectors of activity for the three years under review.

The coverage of the report was enlarged to include 1975 and 1976 expenditures financed by the United Nations Development Programme for technical co-operation activities administered by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and those expenditures of the International Trade Centre which were financed by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. As the interorganization programme classification which served as a basis for the report had, except for minor adjustments, remained unchanged over a number of years, ACC felt the time had come for a full-scale review of existing programmes to establish a revised and improved classification which it hoped to introduce in future reports.

On 4 August 1977, by decision 277(LXIII), the Economic and Social Council took note without vote of the report of ACC on expenditures of the United Nations system in relation to programmes.

Other administrative co-ordination activities

Personnel questions. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination continued to sponsor close collaboration between the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) and the personnel services of the various organizations. Acting through its subsidiary body, the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ), ACC extended its co-operation to ICSC by preparing studies and surveys in support of the Commission's work. The Chairman of ICSC briefed ACC in April 1977 on the progress of that work, with particular reference to consideration of the conditions of employment of staff in the General Service category. Periodic consultations with the President of the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations, who appeared before ACC when taking up matters of concern to the staff, also assisted ACC discussions on personnel matters.

Financial and budgetary questions. Interorganization work on the harmonizing of programme budget presentation was accompanied by efforts to harmonize the calculation and presentation of cost data. On the recommendation of CCAQ, a common methodology for estimating costs due to inflation was worked out for presentation in budget documents (see p. 1026).

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination also concluded that cost calculations for United Nations conferences should be based on data on programme inputs determined through joint planning during prior consultations on medium-term plans and proposed programme budgets. Other financial and budgetary questions on which work was done during 1977 included the budgets of jointly financed administrative activities, programme support costs and other financial matters relating to extrabudgetary programmes.

Language and documentation facilities. Several new initiatives were taken which ACC hoped would lead to better management of the system's language and documentation facilities. A common work-measurement system, permitting costs of conference services to be calculated on a uniform basis throughout the system, was instituted, and arrangements for interagency co-operation on how to improve, expand and better co-ordinate terminology work and pave the way for the introduction in that work of new technologies, including electronic data-processing, were being studied.

Relations with the International Fund for Agricultural Development

The Economic and Social Council in 1976 decided that its Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies—for purposes of negotiating with the Preparatory Commission for the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) an agreement between the United Nations and IFAD with a view to constituting IFAD as a specialized agency—should be composed of Council members that notified the Secretary-General of their intention to become Committee members.¹⁶ Inasmuch as only a few countries had met the 1976 deadline for such notification, the Council extended the time-limit until 15 February 1977, to provide for a more representative membership. It further decided that the Committee would meet and conduct the necessary negotiations with IFAD during the Council's April/May 1977 session, and decided to appoint a new Committee Chairman, as the 1976 Chairman considered his mandate to have expired at year's end.

These actions comprised decision 205(ORG-77), drafted by the Council President and adopted without vote on 14 January 1977. The deadline for notification was later again extended to 15 March.

The Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies met between 14 April and 11 May, when it submitted its report to the Council. Annexed to the report was the text of a draft agreement between the United Nations and IFAD—consisting of a preamble and 18 articles—prepared by the Committee and the Chairman and the two Vice-Chairmen of the Preparatory Commission for IFAD. The Commission had prepared proposals in 1976 for bringing the Fund into relationship with the United Nations; the draft relationship agreement the Commission had prepared was before the Committee during preparation of its compromise text.

On 13 May, after considering the Committee's report, the Council—by decision 241(LXII) adopted without objection—took note with appreciation of the report and transmitted to IFAD for its approval the Committee's proposed draft relationship agreement and the record of the Council's discussion of the matter. The text of the decision was orally proposed by Argentina and amended by the Council President.

Algeria had proposed, but did not press, an amendment to a draft article calling for IFAD assistance to the United Nations, particularly for the accomplishment of the principles and purposes set forth in Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations; Algeria proposed to broaden that context by including Chapters IX, XI and XII¹⁷ and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.¹⁸ formed the Secretary-General that the Commission had accepted, during its fourth session currently in progress (held in Rome from 11 to 15 July), the draft relationship agreement proposed by the Committee.

At the Council's July/August 1977 session, Argentina, Jamaica, Nigeria and the Sudan introduced in the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee a draft resolution—which the Committee approved unanimously on 22 July—by which the Council would recommend that the Assembly approve the text of the draft agreement, annexed to the resolution, to bring the Fund into relationship with the United Nations. The Council adopted the four-power text without vote as resolution 2104(LXIII) on 3 August. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Council's recommendation was embodied in a resolution sponsored in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee later in the year by Argentina, Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, Iran, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia and the Sudan. The text was approved without vote by that Committee on 14 December 1977 and similarly adopted by the Assembly the following day as resolution 32/107. By that text the Assembly approved the Agreement between the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, annexed to the resolution. Thus, by article I, the United Nations recognized IFAD as a specialized agency with the objective of mobilizing additional resources to be made available on concessional terms for agricultural development in developing member States.

Similar in content to previous agreements between the United Nations and specialized agencies, the Agreement's 18 articles provided for, among other co-ordination and co-operative efforts, reciprocal representation at meetings (article II), consideration of certain agenda items and recommendations proposed by the other party (articles III and V), consultation (article V) and exchange of information and documents (article VI), including statistics (article X). Other articles related to budgetary, financial and administrative co-operation arrangements (articles VII and VIII)—including co-operation with the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (article IX)—and co-operation in technical assistance activities for agricultural development (article XII).

The Assembly authorized IFAD to request advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice (article XIII) and authorized IFAD officials to use the laissez-passer of the United Nations (article XV). The Fund agreed to inform the Economic and Social Council of any other formal agreement entered into (article XIV). Articles XVII and XVIII provided for amendment, revision and entry into force of the Agreement. It was to enter into force upon its approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the Governing Council of IFAD. (By a letter of 14 December, the President of IFAD had informed the Secretary-General that the Governing Council had on that day adopted a resolution by which it approved the Agreement).

Decisions relating to specific articles of the Agreement were also taken by the Assembly at its 1977 session.

By article IX, IFAD agreed to co-operate with ICSC on matters concerning the regulation and co-ordination of the conditions of service of staff. In its report to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, however, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) said it considered that that article was not sufficiently clear on the question of full participation by IFAD in the common system of salaries and allowances of the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

Bearing in mind the principle in ICSC's statute which aimed at the development of a single, unified international civil service through the application of common personnel standards, methods and arrangements, the Assembly—by resolution 32/102, adopted without vote on 13 December 1977—invited IFAD to participate in the common system for the regulation and co-ordination of the conditions of employment of staff and, in particular, to accept the statute of ICSC.¹⁹

Argentina, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Madagascar, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Spain, the Sudan, Turkey and Uruguay had proposed and amended the text in the Fifth Committee, which had approved it by consensus on 18 November.

On 13 December, Canada orally proposed that the Fifth Committee recommend that the Assembly take note of the report of ACABQ and the chapters of the report of the Economic and Social Council relating to the Agreement. In addition, in order to make the Assembly's position on the question of IFAD's participation in the common system quite clear, Canada urged the Committee to approve the individual articles VII (on budgetary and financial arrangements), VIII (on administrative co-operation) and IX (on personnel arrangements). The Fifth Committee did so without vote. The Assembly approved the recommendation without vote on 15 December by decision 32/428 A.

Article IX of the Agreement also contained a provision that IFAD might participate in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in accordance with the Pension Fund's Regulations. By section III of a five-part resolution (32/74) adopted on 9 December 1977, the Assembly decided to admit IFAD to membership in the Pension Fund with effect from the date on which it became a specialized agency. It was formally admitted to the Pension Fund on 1 January 1978.

The Assembly considered it desirable that any specialized agency brought into relationship with the United Nations should derive its privileges and immunities from the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies.²⁰ In their application to each agency, the standard clauses of the Convention were to operate subject to any modification which might be set forth in an annex relating to that agency. The Convention provided that the Secretary-General transmit to any agency not mentioned by name in the Convention a draft annex recommended by the Economic and Social Council containing such modifications. Such a draft annex was recommended and transmitted by the Council in resolution 2129(LXIII) of 31 October 1977. (See also p. 961; for page reference to text of resolution 2129(LXIII), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

The Fund agrees further to participate in the work of the United Nations aimed at enhancing such co-operation and co-ordination, in particular through membership in the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and, as appropriate, in the work of such other United Nations bodies that have been established or may be established for that purpose.

Article VIII ADMINISTRATIVE CO-OPERATION

1. The United Nations and the Fund recognize the desirability, in the interest of administrative and technical uniformity and of the most efficient use of personnel and resources, of avoiding, whenever possible, the establishment and operation of competitive or overlapping facilities and services among the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

2. Accordingly, the United Nations and the Fund shall consult together concerning the establishment and use of common administrative and technical services and facilities, in addition to those referred to in articles IV, V, IX, X and XII of the present Agreement in so far as the establishment and use of such services may from time to time be found practicable and appropriate.

3. The terms and conditions on which any facilities or services of the United Nations or the Fund in connexion with the matters referred to in the present article are to be extended to the other shall, where necessary, be the subject of subsidiary agreements concluded for this purpose.

Article X STATISTICAL SERVICES

The Fund recognizes the United Nations as the central agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics serving the general purposes of international organizations, without prejudice to the right of the Fund to concern itself with any statistics so far as they may be essential for its own purposes.

2. The United Nations and the Fund agree to strive for the maximum co-operation, the elimination of all undesirable duplication between them and the most efficient use of their technical personnel in their respective processes of collection, analysis, publication and dissemination of statistical information. They shall combine their efforts to secure the greatest possible usefulness and utilization of statistical information and to minimize the burden placed upon Governments and on other organizations from which such information may be collected.

3. The United Nations and the Fund agree to furnish each other promptly with all appropriate non-confidential statistical information.

4. The United Nations shall, in consultation with the Fund and other agencies within the United Nations system, continue to develop administrative instruments and procedures through which effective statistical co-operation may be secured among all these organizations.

Article XI ASSISTANCE TO THE UNITED NATIONS

Within the field of its competence and based upon its Agreement, the Fund shall co-operate with and render such assistance to the United Nations as the latter may request under its Charter, particularly for the accomplishment of the principles and purposes set forth in Article 55 thereof.

Article XII TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

1. The United Nations and the Fund shall co-operate in the provision of technical assistance for agricultural development, shall avoid undesirable duplication of activities and services relating to such technical assistance and shall take such action as may be necessary to achieve the effective co-ordination of their technical assistance activities, within the framework of co-ordination machinery in the field of technical assistance.

2. Within the field of its competence and based upon its relevant instruments, the Fund agrees to co-operate with the United Nations and its organs, as well as the agencies within the United Nations system, in promoting and facilitating the transfer of technology for food and agricultural development from developed to developing countries, the development of indigenous technology and technical co-operation among developing countries in such a manner as to assist these countries in attaining their objectives in these fields.

1. The Fund shall furnish any information that may be requested by the International Court of Justice pursuant to Article 34 of the Statute of the Court.

2. The General Assembly of the United Nations authorizes the Fund to request advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice on legal questions arising within the scope of the Fund's activities, other than questions concerning the mutual relationships of the Fund and the United Nations or other specialized agencies. Such requests may be addressed to the Court by the Governing Council of the Fund, or by its Executive Board acting pursuant to an authorization by the Governing Council. The Fund shall inform the Economic and Social Council of any such request it addresses to the Court.

United Nations work programmes in the economic, social and human rights fields

By virtue of its review of both the medium-term plan and the programme aspects of the programme budget, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) is the main subsidiary organ of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council for planning, programming and co-ordination. Its consolidated terms of reference, established and approved in 1976,²¹ required it, inter alia, to recommend amendments to, curtailment or termination of, and an order of priorities among United Nations programmes in the medium-term plan.

The role of CPC in this respect was further defined by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System, the recommendations and conclusions of which were endorsed by the Assembly on 20 December 1977 when it adopted resolution 32/197. (For further details, see Chapter II on RESTRUCTURING OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL SECTORS OF THE UNITED NATIONS SYSTEM; for text of resolution 32/197, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES following that Chapter.)

At its seventeenth session, held in May/June

1977, CPC considered this question at some length, presented a number of recommendations and conclusions pursuant to its mandate, and drafted a resolution for consideration by the General Assembly. As a result of negotiations on a number of proposals and amendments submitted in the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, a draft text was recommended for adoption; the Assembly approved it without vote on 21 December 1977 as resolution 32/206, section I of which contained, inter alia, the text proposed by CPC.

By section I, the Assembly confirmed the role of CPC and urged subsidiary bodies to refrain from making recommendations on the relative priority of major programmes, as outlined in the medium-term plan, while asking such bodies to propose, through CPC, relative priorities among various subprogrammes within their fields of competence. In order in particular to enable CPC to assess the implications of its recommendations, the Assembly also re-requested the Secretary-General to assist CPC in showing all existing or proposed subprogrammes or programme components in his draft programme budget, for programmes in the economic, social and humanitarian fields, which represented 10 per cent of the resources requested for the proposed programme, and to which the highest priority or the lowest priority was to be assigned.

By section II, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to implement the relative growth rates accepted by the Assembly as the framework of programme priorities; CPC, while proposing priorities in its programme review, should continue to limit its recommendations to ranges of growth. It was invited to review the medium-term plan at its next session in that light.

By section III, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to submit to it at its regular 1978 session programme proposals and revised estimates for increased activity in the transport programmes of four of the regional commissions. In the light of additional information and developments, the Assembly deferred consideration of CPC recommendations concerning programme transfers and reductions.

Developments regarding organizational questions

Rationalization of the work of the Economic and Social Council

During 1977, the Economic and Social Council took a number of decisions relating to the question of the rationalization of its work. On 13 January, at its organizational session, it adopted decision 209(ORG-77), without vote, on an oral proposal by its President, by which it decided to review the rules of procedure of its functional commissions at its April/May 1977 session in the context of the agenda item on restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system. It set a deadline for the submission of amendments to a set of draft revised rules of procedure prepared by the Secretariat, based on the revised rules of procedure of the Council, without prejudice to the right to make further proposals during discussion of the question.

On the same day, on an oral suggestion by France, the Council adopted, without vote, decision 210(ORG-77) by which it asked the Secretariat to undertake a review of the methods in use for the confirmation of representatives of the functional commissions—with a view to streamlining the process—and report to the Council's next session. Following the submission of a document reviewing the process and setting out possible alternative methods of confirmation, France on 29 April withdrew the request that had led to its preparation.

At its first regular 1977 session, the Council reviewed the draft revised text of the rules of procedure of its functional commissions, amended it to bring the rules more into line with those of the Council, and, on 26 April 1977, by decision 216(LXII), adopted the revised rules without a vote. France stated its reservations with regard to a rule concerning the participation of national liberation movements in deliberations.

On the same day, in view of the fact that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System had still to finish its work and report to it, the Council agreed to postpone a decision until its organizational session for 1978 on the timing of a review it had decided in 1976 to undertake of the terms of reference of the subsidiary bodies of the Council.²² This action was included in decision 217(LXII), adopted on an oral proposal of the Council President.

The Council returned to the consideration of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system on 14 December 1977 when it had before it the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and a draft of its own report to the General Assembly on the rationalization of its work, called for by the Assembly on 17 December 1974.²³ This report outlined the progress made by the Council in the rationalization of its work since 18 May 1973, when it had adopted a resolution by which it undertook to reorganize and reorient its activities and those of its subsidiary organs to strengthen their role in international economic and social co-operation.²⁴

The main subject-areas of the report were: the relationship agreements with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency; the structure of the Council's subsidiary machinery and institutional arrangements for programme and co-ordination; the rules of procedure of the Council and its subsidiary bodies; the Council's methods of work, including its programme of work and agenda, its pattern and calendar of meetings, and documentation; and the Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

On 14 December, the Council, by its decision 292(LXIII)—adopted, without vote, on an oral proposal of its President—took note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and transmitted it to the Assembly at its regular 1977 session with comments, and also submitted to the Assembly at that session the report on the rationalization of its work, in accordance with the Assembly's resolution of 17 December 1974 and its decision of 21 December 1976.²⁵

The Assembly took note of the Council's report on 20 December by decision 32/447, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved, also without vote, an oral suggestion to that effect by its Chairman, following the Committee's consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on restructuring.

Other economic and social questionsThe United Nations Institute for Training and Research*Activities in 1977

The United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), an autonomous organization within the framework of the United Nations, continued research, training and related activities under its mandate to increase the effectiveness of the United Nations system, especially in the maintenance of peace and security and the promotion of economic and social development. Several projects in the work programme focused on problems in the areas identified by the General Assembly at its sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions, particularly regarding the establishment of a new international economic order.¹ The Institute's training programmes continued to deal with subjects of practical value to members of permanent missions to the United Nations, both in New York and Geneva, and to national officials concerned with international activities.

The main programmes carried out in 1977 included seminars and training courses on: (1) United Nations documentation; (2) negotiating procedures and resolution-drafting in the United Nations; (3) the United Nations Water Conference, March 1977; (4) the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea (sixth session, May-July 1977); (5) multilateral diplomacy and the new international economic order; and (6) general systems and information networks.

The Institute organized special training programmes for two groups of fellows from the USSR, and two new five-month courses (Junior Professional Trainee Programme) for officials of French- and English-speaking African Member States, to acquaint them with the work of the United Nations system.

As in previous years, the Institute organized the United Nations/UNITAR Fellowship Programme in International Law, under which officials from 20 developing and developed countries attended courses at The Hague Academy of International Law (Netherlands) and received on-the-job training in various international organizations. A regional training and refresher course in international law for Caribbean countries was held in the Bahamas.

Collaboration with other agencies in the United Nations system was strengthened, with a view to increasing the role of UNITAR in organizing interagency training programmes for international staff.

In 1977, UNITAR'S research activities concentrated, to the extent possible, on problems connected with the establishment of a new international economic order.

Research was done on such subjects as: assessment of United Nations global conferences; the role of the United Nations in advance planning for disaster relief; career development in the United Nations system of organizations; the presidency of the Security Council; procedures and principles for preventing international controversies regarding the human environment; procedures and mechanisms for the settlement of disputes concerning ocean resources; the potential of non-governmental organizations in international co-operation for development; the United Nations and multilateral co-operation for development in west Africa; Arab development funds in the Middle East; the relationship between the United Nations and the European Communities; the Conference on International Economic Co-operation (1975-1977); science, technology and management for development; and guidelines for multinational-enterprise assessment in developing countries.

The Research Department of UNITAR organized a series of research colloquia and seminars. The subject of women and decision-making in the United Nations was discussed by senior-level international officials in Austria.

The Project on the Future continued its long-range empirical research on policy choices related to implementing a new international economic order, and on the meaning of physical limits and supply constraints in energy and natural resources.

As part of the former, a study analysing five world models was completed in 1977. A conference on Africa and the problematique of the future was organized in July in collaboration with the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning at Dakar, Senegal. A major project on technology, domestic distribution and North-South relations, consisting of a macro-economic model and qualitative analyses, was begun in 1977. Another project, started in 1977, examined obstacles and progress towards the establishment of a new international economic order.

In the field of energy and natural resources, the Project on the Future organized, in co-operation with the state of California (United States), an international conference on alternate strategies for desert development and management. Attended by experts and planners from 33 desert countries and 12 international organizations, the conference submitted a report of its conclusions to the 1977 United Nations Conference on Desertification. The Project on the Future continued producing a journal, Important for the Future (published five times a year), concerned with energy, natural resources, the environment and food.

Decision of the General Assembly

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly welcomed the emphasis and urged the continuation of the work of UNITAR in economic and social training and research, and the inclusion of specific projects on the problems in the areas identified by the Assembly at its sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions and in the relevant decisions of the Assembly at its 1974 regular session.

The Assembly expressed the hope that the Institute would have greater and wider financial support.

The Assembly's decisions were embodied in resolution 32/51, adopted, without vote, on 8 December 1977, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text without vote on 20 October. The text was sponsored by 36 Member States. (For text of resolution and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The United Nations University

Activities in 1977

During 1977, the United Nations University (UNU) formed or was negotiating associations with food and nutrition institutes in Chile, Ghana, India, Japan, Panama, the Philippines, the United Kingdom and Venezuela, to promote the objectives of its world hunger programme, one of three priority programmes. The programme had 26 fellows in training and had selected another 40. A workshop on the interfaces of agriculture, food and nutrition was held at the International Rice Research Institute at Los Banos, Philippines, in February 1977.

Also in February, UNU launched its programme on the use and management of natural resources, another of the priority programmes. Experts and advisers met in Tokyo in May and proposed that work be started on: the ecological basis for rural development in the humid tropics; assessment of the application of knowledge to arid land problems; and energy for rural communities.

Concerning the humid tropics, UNU associated itself with the Tropical Agricultural Research and Training Centre in Costa Rica, where research and training activities were to concentrate on agro-forestry systems for small farmers. Regarding energy for rural communities, UNU decided to conduct pilot and demonstration projects on the development and use of solar energy, geothermal energy and bioconversion.

The third priority, the human and social development programme, engaged UNU in operating three research projects by the end of 1977: a project on goals, processes and indicators of development, comprising 20 research units in both developing and industrialized countries; a project on research and development systems in rural settings, with research units in Ethiopia, Iran, Mexico and the Philippines; and a project on sharing native technology, with research units in Indonesia, Iran, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Thailand.

By the end of 1977, association agreements were being negotiated with sociological, scientific and development institutions in France, Mexico, Sri Lanka and Venezuela.

Consultative meetings concerning the nature and work of the University in general, its initial programmes and its possible future directions were held during 1977 in Paris (France), Bonn (Federal Republic of Germany), Stockholm (Sweden), Kuala Lumpur (Malaysia), Caracas (Venezuela), Washington, D.C. (United States), Ottawa (Canada) and Tokyo.

The Council of the University met at Tokyo in February and December 1977. In discussing the programmes proposed by the University staff, Council members stressed the importance of linkage among the three priority programmes and their supporting academic and communications services, to make the programmes intelligible to laymen and decision-makers, as well as to research workers in the field. Council members called for a close relationship between research and action, the pooling of experience among people working in different countries in situations where they were actively engaged in coping with their own development processes, and the study of global issues of concern to both developing and highly industrialized countries.

Legislative decisions

On 31 October 1977, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 287(LXIII), took note of the annual report of the Council of the University and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly for consideration. The decision was approved, without vote, on the suggestion of the Council President.

The General Assembly, on 8 December 1977, welcomed the fact that the programme activities of UNU were already operational and expressed the hope that the University would continue its efforts to produce tangible results consistent with expectations of Member States.

The Assembly invited the University to make renewed efforts to reflect in the formulation of its programmes the urgent concerns of Member States and to follow closely the activities of relevant United Nations bodies to develop co-operative and co-ordinated relationships with them.

It urged the University to continue to intensify its efforts to obtain financial support from all possible sources and appealed to all Member States to make substantial contributions to the Endowment Fund of the University and/or to give financial and other support to specific programmes of the University.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Rector and the Council of the University and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to explore more effective means of raising funds and to submit a report to the Assembly on the progress achieved in this regard.

These actions were taken by resolution 32/54, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The text had been considered in the Second Committee and approved without vote on 18 November 1977. It was sponsored by Austria, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Ghana, Greece, Iceland, India, Japan, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nepal, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Tunisia, Turkey, Venezuela and Zaire. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Pledges, and contributions without prior pledge, to the University's Endowment Fund totalled $125,915,860 as at 31 December 1977. Amounts received by that date totalled $78,066,012.

During 1977 the following States announced pledges or made contributions: Austria, Ghana, Greece, the Holy See, India, Japan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Netherlands, Norway, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sweden, Tunisia, Venezuela and Zaire.

Having considered the report of the Council of the United Nations University on the work of the University and the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting decision 5.2.2 of 29 September 1977 adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its one-hundred-and-third session, in which the Board, inter alia, recognized that the United Nations University required and deserved a far more significant measure of financial support and renewed its appeal to member States to contribute generously to the Endowment Fund of the United Nations University and/or to provide for specific project support,

1. Welcomes the fact that the programme activities of the United Nations University are now under way in all the three priority programme areas—world hunger, human and social development, and use and management of natural resources—and expresses the hope that the University will continue its efforts to produce tangible results as early as possible and thus respond to the expectations of Member States;

2. Invites the United Nations University to make renewed efforts to reflect in the formulation of its programmes the urgent concerns of Member States and to follow closely the important activities and conferences of relevant agencies and bodies of the United Nations system in order to develop co-operative and co-ordinated relationships with them;

3. Urges the United Nations University to continue to intensify its efforts to obtain financial support from all possible sources;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Rector of the United Nations University, the Council of the University and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to explore more effective means of raising funds and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the progress achieved in this regard.

Questions relating to youth

Technical activities in 1977

During 1977, the United Nations interregional technical adviser on youth policies and programmes undertook missions in Bahrain, Barbados, Fiji, Oman, the Philippines, Togo, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and Zambia. (See also pp. 450 and 455.)

Policies and programmes relating to youth

Youth in the contemporary world

Data on the problems confronting youth, and on the manner in which these problems were being treated by the organs and executive bodies of the United Nations system, were presented to the Economic and Social Council at its April/May 1977 session, and later in the year to the General Assembly. This information had been requested by the Assembly on 14 December 1973.²

The Secretary-General also made preliminary reports to the General Assembly on the establishment of a co-operative arrangement among youth research and information centres, and on the role of youth in promoting the objectives of the United Nations. The Assembly had requested the reports in 1976.³

The Commission for Social Development had also examined the reports at its January/February 1977 session, and asked the Secretary-General for a further progress report on the establishment of a co-operative arrangement among youth research and information centres, to be submitted for its 1979 session.

With the adoption of resolution 32/134, on 16 December 1977, the Assembly, inter alia, recognized the profound importance of the direct participation of youth in shaping the future of humanity and the necessity of consolidating the efforts of all States in carrying out specific programmes concerning youth. It affirmed the importance of current and projected United Nations activities designed to increase opportunities for the integration of youth into development activities and to assess the needs and aspirations of youth. It observed that an international youth year could usefully serve to mobilize efforts at local, national, regional and international levels, to promote the best educational, professional and living conditions for young people to ensure their active participation in the over-all development of society.

The Assembly invited all States to make known their views concerning the proclamation of an international youth year and to send their proposals and observations to the Secretary-General. It requested him to prepare a report containing the views of Member States on the proclamation of an international youth year, and to propose possible ways and means for its observance. It also requested the Secretary-General to prepare a brief synopsis of the legislative history and programme activities of the United Nations in the field of youth since 1965, to be further discussed at its 1978 session, when it would be given the highest priority, together with consideration of the idea of proclaiming an international youth year.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/134, without vote, on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 7 December 1977. The text was sponsored by 44 Member States.

Channels of communication with youth and youth organizations

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council to prepare, through the Commission for Social Development, appropriate recommendations concerning the best channels of communication between youth and youth organizations and the United Nations at the national, regional, interregional and international levels.⁴

⁴ Ibid., p. 668, text of resolution 31/132 of 16 December 1976.

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council recommended to the Assembly the adoption of guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations. It requested the Secretary-General to submit to it proposals for action-oriented guidelines, to help identify the policies and actions required to bring about more effective and widespread youth participation.

The Council also requested the Secretary-General to establish an interagency task force, drawn from the Secretariat of the United Nations and the specialized agencies concerned with youth policies and programmes, and to report to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the work of this task force.

The Secretary-General was further requested to increase the proportion of United Nations Professional staff members under the age of 30. The Council decided to bring to the attention of the Commission on Human Rights the reports of the Secretary-General on popular participation, women, youth and children and on problems facing youth.

These actions were expressed in resolution 2078(LXII), to which was annexed a set of national, regional and international guidelines for the improvement of communication with youth. The resolution had been approved by the Social Committee without vote on 28 April 1977, and was adopted by the Council without vote. The text had been drafted by the Commission for Social Development at its January/February 1977 session.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted the guidelines for improvement of communication channels, as approved by the Economic and Social Council, and requested the Secretary-General to transmit them for comments and suggestions to all Member States, regional commissions and regional and interregional youth organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to implement the guidelines, through consultations with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and through the new interagency youth task force, and asked him to report to the Assembly in 1978 on the matter.

These action were taken by resolution 32/135, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 9 December 1977; the text was sponsored by Bangladesh, the Central African Empire, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Egypt, Mali, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Romania, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

Included in the recommended guidelines on communication with youth was a proposal that the Administrator of UNDP should be requested to continue exploring, in consultation with the Governments concerned, ways to involve youth organizations in development activities of the United Nations at the national level. Similarly, the Secretary-General should seek to explore, in consultation with Governments, the feasibility of identifying a national liaison point with youth in each country, using established communications networks. In addition, the regional commissions should be asked to pay special attention to active participation of youth in national development, to assist Governments in this field and to establish contacts with youth.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the many previous resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on youth,

Wishing to improve and co-ordinate the efforts of the United Nations with regard to the participation of youth in achieving the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced of the imperative need to direct the energies, enthusiasm and creative abilities of young people to the task of nation building, to the economic, social and cultural advancement of peoples, the preservation of world peace, the protection and promotion of human rights and the promotion of international co-operation and understanding,

Aware of the continuing need to educate youth in the spirit of the ideals of peace, mutual respect and understanding between peoples and to foster among the youth respect for all peoples, irrespective of nationality, race, sex or religion, regard for human values and devotion to the ideals of peace, freedom and progress and to the cause of human rights,

Bearing in mind the valuable contribution that youth can make to the evolution of co-operation among States on the basis of equality and justice and to the ushering in of a new international economic order,

Noting the views on the subject of youth expressed in the report of the Commission for Social Development on its twenty-fifth session,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in the course of preparing the reports and documents called for in General Assembly resolutions 31/129 and 31/130 of 16 December 1976, to submit to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-sixth session, proposals for action-oriented guidelines which would help to identify the particular policies and actions required at national and international levels to bring about more effective and widespread youth participation;

ANNEX

Guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations

A. National

1. The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme should be requested to continue exploring, in consultation with the Government concerned, ways to involve youth organizations in development activities of the United Nations at the national level.

2. The United Nations Office of Public Information should continue to work in close co-operation with the Joint United Nations Information Committee to provide information on the issues on which the United Nations is working in such a way as to attract young people, at the national level, and interest them in the ideals and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

3. Bearing in mind proposals contained in his note on the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights, the Secretary-General should explore, in consultation with Governments, the feasibility of identifying a national liaison and focal point on youth within each country, taking into consideration the networks of national correspondents which have been set up to facilitate communication between countries and with the United Nations in allied fields of social development.

B. Regional

The regional commissions should be requested to pay special attention to the question of active participation of youth in the process of national development and to consider at their forthcoming sessions appropriate forms in which regional commissions can assist Governments in this field and establish contacts with youth and youth organizations.

C. International

1. The scope of the quarterly Youth Information Bulletin should be extended and it should be published in French and Spanish in addition to English, within the existing budgetary allocations. Both governmental and non-governmental bodies dealing with youth should be encouraged to provide material for dissemination through the Bulletin and to assist in its distribution so that it may be made available to as many young people and youth organizations as possible.

2. The work of the United Nations Office of Public Information and the Centre for Economic and Social Information in the creation of suitable radio and television programmes about the United Nations and its activities should be intensified, within their existing budgetary allocations.

3. The Secretary-General may continue to utilize the existing channels of communication between the United Nations and international and regional non-governmental youth organizations.

(b) The interagency task force drawn from the secretariats of the United Nations and the specialized agencies directly concerned with youth policies and programmes, established in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2078(LXII);

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session a report on comments and suggestions offered by Member States and regional commissions relating to the guidelines contained in the annex to the present resolution and on the progress achieved in their implementation with specific, action-oriented recommendations for the further development of the guidelines and of the co-operation between the United Nations system and national and international youth organizations.

ANNEX

Guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations

A. National

1. The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme should be requested to continue exploring, in consultation with the Governments concerned, ways to involve youth organizations in development activities of the United Nations at the national level.

2. The Office of Public Information of the Secretariat should continue to work in close co-operation with the Joint United Nations Information Committee to provide information on the issues on which the United Nations is working in a way as to attract young people, at the national level, and interest them in the ideals and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

3. Bearing in mind proposals contained in his note on the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights, the Secretary-General should explore, in consultation with Governments, the feasibility of identifying a national liaison and focal point on youth within each country, taking into consideration the networks of national correspondents which have been set up to facilitate communication between countries and with the United Nations in allied fields of social development.

B. Regional

4. The regional commissions should be requested to pay special attention to the question of active participation of youth in the process of national development and to consider at their forthcoming sessions appropriate forms in which regional commissions can assist Governments in this field and establish contacts with youth and youth organizations.

C. International

5. The scope of the quarterly Youth Information Bulletin should be extended and it should be published in French and Spanish in addition to English, within the existing budgetary allocations. Both governmental and non-governmental bodies dealing with youth should be encouraged to provide material for dissemination through the Bulletin and to assist in its distribution so that it may be made available to as many young people and youth organizations as possible.

6. The work of the Office of Public Information and the Centre for Economic and Social Information of the Secretariat, in the creation of suitable radio and television programmes about the United Nations and its activities, should be intensified within their existing budgetary allocations.

7. The Secretary-General should continue to utilize the existing channels of communication between the United Nations and international and regional non-governmental youth organizations.

Question of the elderly and the aged

The Economic and Social Council's Commission for Social Development, at its twenty-fifth session in January-February 1977, considered the question of the elderly and the aged. The Commission approved the text of a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. In a separate action, the Commission decided to take note of a report of the International Labour Organisation on social security developments and planning, and protection of the aged.

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted the recommended text without vote as its resolution 2077(LXII). By this, the Council noted and approved a progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the General Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1973 on the question of the elderly and the aged.⁵ The Council requested the Secretary-General to pursue, expand and consolidate his work on the status of the elderly, particularly with regard to research and exchanges of information, taking into account the views expressed in the debates on the subject at the January-February 1977 session of the Commission for Social Development.

The resolution had been approved without vote by the Social Committee on 28 April 1977. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly had before it a report by the Secretary-General on the steps taken to implement the 1973 resolution.

These included, inter alia: the establishment of an Information Exchange System on Aging; technical assistance activities; monitoring of changes in the number and population of the aging; training through seminars and study visits; co-operation with non-governmental organizations; and research on the aging in rural areas, slums and uncontrolled settlements.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/131 by which it took a number of actions on the question of the elderly and the aged. It recommended that Governments, in formulating their national policies and programmes, follow the recommendations made in 1973 and consider developing, as required and in accordance with their national priorities, policies and programmes for the welfare, including housing and social services, health, humanitarian well-being and economic security, of older people, as well as measures aimed at maximizing their economic independence and social integration, especially older people living in slums and uncontrolled settlements.

It requested the Secretary-General to continue and expand activities for the aged, specifically to: consider measures for strengthening the activities of the regional commissions for the aging; assist Governments, at their request, in the planning, establishment and expansion of programmes for the elderly; conduct seminars and workshops and undertake studies on special issues regarding the aging; conduct research into the possibility of strengthening the family unit, with a view to facilitating, where appropriate, the care of the elderly by their own families; and collect and disseminate information through the United Nations Information Exchange System on Aging.

The Assembly, among other things, requested the specialized agencies, other United Nations bodies and interested non-governmental organizations to join with the United Nations in these efforts. It also invited the United Nations Fund for Population Activities to provide financial assistance, on request and in accordance with its mandate, to developing countries to improve the conditions of the aging.

Finally, the Assembly decided to take up the matter again at its regular 1979 session.

The text had been approved without vote by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 6 December 1977 and was adopted without vote by the Assembly.

Resolution 32/131 was sponsored by 38 Member States. The sponsors accepted an oral Argentine amendment adding a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly recognized the growing interest for both developing and developed societies in the fuller participation of the elderly in the mainstream of national societies.

By a second resolution on the question—32/132—the Assembly invited all States to advise the Secretary-General by 1 July 1978 of their views on proclaiming an international year on aging, and on convening a world assembly on aging to permit national leaders and government specialists to exchange experiences, explore solutions and devise programmes for amelioration of problems unique to the elderly. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to report to it on these reactions.

Resolution 32/132 was approved by consensus by the Third Committee on 8 December 1977 and was adopted without vote by the Assembly on 16 December 1977. It was sponsored by the United States. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Emphasizing that in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development the General Assembly has proclaimed the necessity of protecting the rights and assuring the welfare of the aged,

Noting also that in the World Population Plan of Action all Governments were urged, when formulating their development policies and programmes, to take fully into account the implications of changing numbers and proportions of the aged, particularly where such changes are rapid, grammes for the aging sector of society as an important part of comprehensive plans for economic and social development.

Stressing the importance of the role that the United Nations system should play in providing assistance to countries in carrying out their economic and social development plans, including those concerning the elderly and the aged.

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of the elderly and the aged,

1. Recommends to the Governments concerned, in formulating their national policies and programmes, to take into account the recommendations contained in General Assembly resolution 3137(XXVIII) and to consider developing, as required and in accordance with their national priorities, policies and programmes for the welfare, including housing and social services, health, humanitarian well-being and economic security, of older people as well as measures aimed at maximizing their economic independence and their social integration into society, especially older people living in slums and uncontrolled settlements;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and to expand, within the limits of existing resources, activities in this field, in co-operation with the agencies concerned, particularly:

(e) To collect, collate and disseminate the information on aging through the Information Exchange System;

3. Requests the competent and concerned specialized agencies to give continued attention to regional and international meetings on the major problems of concern to the aging and suggests that these organizations should engage in regular exchanges of information about their plans and activities in this field, particularly at the regional level;

4. Requests the concerned United Nations bodies, organs and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies and interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to join with the United Nations in well-co-ordinated activities to assist all Governments concerned, especially those of the developing countries, in formulating and implementing policies and programmes for the welfare, including housing and social services, health and protection, of older people, aimed at maximizing their economic independence and maintaining a suitable role in society;

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and the emphasis therein on the dignity and worth of the human being and the rights of the aged,

Reaffirming its resolution 3137(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, entitled "Question of the elderly and the aged," and the recommendation therein to Governments on the need for well-designed policies and programmes relating to older people,

Noting Economic and Social Council resolution 2077(LXII) of 13 May 1977, by which the Council approved the progress report of the Secretary-General on the question of the elderly and the aged,

Recognizing that the concerns of aged persons in national populations must be addressed when considering economic and social development,

Convinced of the need for interchange and international review of policy alternatives affecting the elderly,

1. Invites all States to make known their views to the Secretary-General by 1 July 1978 concerning the usefulness of proclaiming an international year on aging for the purpose of calling world-wide attention to the serious problems besetting a growing portion of the populations of the world;

Restoring works of art to countries victims of expropriation

The Secretary-General, in 1977, reported to the General Assembly on the question of restitution of works of art to countries victims of expropriation. His report had been prepared in consultation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization

(UNESCO) and Member States, in accordance with an Assembly request of 19 November 1975.⁶

The Secretary-General's report included replies from 11 Governments: Bahrain, Finland, Iran, Kenya, the Netherlands, Norway, Oman, Panama, Poland, the United States and Zaire. Among the actions reported were bilateral programmes for exchange or return of cultural objects between the Netherlands and Indonesia, between Poland and France and between Poland and the Federal Republic of Germany. Iran and Poland noted that they were parties to UNESCO'S 1970 Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property, and Finland, Norway and the United States stated that their internal legal bodies were working towards its ratification. Oman stated that it desired the return of art objects removed from the Sultanate.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report was a report of the Director-General of UNESCO on the activities of that organization regarding restitution of works of art. A committee of museologists and legal experts, from 17 countries, had met in Venice in 1976 and had reached a consensus on principles that could govern the return of cultural property and the action UNESCO could take; the principal suggestions were included in UNESCO'S 1977-1978 programme. In addition, the UNESCO General Conference had adopted a recommendation in 1976 intended to encourage the international exchange of cultural property.

The Director-General noted that by 30 June 1977, 33 Governments had ratified or accepted the 1970 Convention.

In connexion with the restitution of art objects, Iraq sent the Secretary-General, on 25 November 1977, a list of 59 ancient Iraqi art objects which were in the museums of nine other countries, and requested that the list be distributed as an official document of the General Assembly.

On 11 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/18, by which it invited all Member States to sign and ratify the 1970 UNESCO Convention, and called on them to take all necessary steps to prevent, on their territories, any illicit traffic in works of art coming from any other country, especially from territories which were or had been under colonial or foreign domination and occupation. The Assembly affirmed that the restitution to a country of its objets d'art, monuments, museum pieces, manuscripts, documents and any other cultural or artistic treasures constituted a step forward towards the strengthening of international co-operation and the preservation and future development of cultural values.

Finally, the General Assembly decided to include the same item in the provisional agenda of its regular 1979 session, in order to review the progress achieved and, in particular, the action taken in this regard by UNESCO.

Resolution 32/18 was adopted by a vote of 105 to 0, with 12 abstentions. It was sponsored by Bahrain, Bangladesh, Burundi, the Central African Empire, Chad, the Congo, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Nigeria, Rwanda, Togo, Tunisia, the Upper Volta and Zaire. Humanitarian aid to Lebanon

As noted in the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, submitted to the 1977 session of the General Assembly, the United Nations during 1977 continued and increased its programme of humanitarian assistance to Lebanon, despite continuing unsettled conditions in that country.

This multiagency United Nations programme was established in 1976, following appeals for assistance made by the Secretary-General at the request of the Government of Lebanon.⁷ It provided emergency assistance and short-term rehabilitation to the thousands of Lebanese displaced or otherwise affected by civil strife in that country. (The emergency programme did not include assistance to Palestinian refugees registered with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) in Lebanon, for whom UNRWA had a long-established, separately funded programme. See p. 329.)

Assistance under the co-ordinated programme during 1977 totalled approximately $28 million (as compared with approximately $15 million in 1976) and included: substantial food aid; a major programme to provide medicines and restore water, sanitation and health delivery systems; emergency provision of shelter materials, blankets, clothing, basic household equipment and school supplies; the beginning of a modest village reconstruction programme; and measures to restore the poultry industry.

Participating directly in the assistance programme were the following United Nations organizations: the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme and the World Health Organization. A number of other agencies provided expert advice to the Government of Lebanon in its effort to restore essential public services.

The programme was carried out with the use of financial resources of the various programmes and agencies themselves, and voluntary contributions in cash and kind by Governments and non-governmental organizations to United Nations organizations, including the United Nations Trust Fund for Assistance to Lebanon.

Contributions to the Trust Fund, established to meet important relief needs for which there were no alternative forms of financial assistance, totalled more than $6.4 million by the end of 1977 (see table below).

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Lebanon, addressing the General Assembly on 3 October 1977, expressed his Government's gratitude for the assistance rendered by the Secretary-General and the United Nations system.

Transport questions

Technical activities in 1977

During 1977, the United Nations provided assistance in transport development, under technical co-operation programmes, to some 30 developing countries for the development of roads and highways, railways, ports, coastal shipping and inland water transport, ropeways and public works projects connected with transport development, and the development of the institutional framework for transport.

Thirteen large-scale projects involving pre-investment feasibility studies and comprehensive transport planning and management were under execution in Afghanistan, Argentina, Indonesia, Madagascar, Maldives, Nepal, Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

Several regional projects were continued in 1977: in Africa, the trans-Saharan road to link the port of Algiers (Algeria) to Arlit (Niger) and Gao (Mali), and the rehabilitation of roads in the Sahel, which included programmes in Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta, being executed within the programme of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel; in Europe, a navigable waterway between the Danube River and the Aegean Sea; and in Latin America, a study of the navigation of the Paraguay River south of Asuncion.

There were 55 experts in the field in 1977, of whom 32 provided advisory services to the following countries and territories: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Iran, Lesotho, Madagascar, Nepal, Paraguay, St. Lucia, the Sudan, the United Republic of Cameroon, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

Some 36 fellowships in the field of transport were awarded to nationals of the following countries: Afghanistan, Argentina, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, the Gambia, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Paraguay, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka, the United Republic of Cameroon, Yemen and Yugoslavia. The fellows were assigned to study various aspects of transport in, among other countries, Canada, Iran, the Netherlands, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Transport of dangerous goods

On 8 March 1977 the Secretary-General reported to the Economic and Social Council on the work programme concerning transport of dangerous goods. A new edition of Transport of Dangerous Goods was published, as prepared by the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods. Some 3,000 dangerous products were listed, classified according to degree of hazard.

The Secretary-General's report, among other things, referred to the intention of the Committee of Experts to draw up an international convention on the transport of dangerous goods by all modes of transport, and its adoption of proposals concerning establishment of a hazard information system.

By decision 218(LXII) of 5 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General. The decision was adopted, without vote, on the proposal of the Economic Committee, which had approved the text on 22 April.

On 5 May the Council also adopted resolution 2050(LXII), by which it took note of the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and its recommendations, which it requested the Secretary-General to publish and circulate. The Council invited comment on these recommendations by Member States and other concerned bodies.

The Council then invited the Committee of Experts to continue its study, in consultation with other bodies concerned, of an international convention on the transport of dangerous goods by all modes of transport. It also requested the Secretary-General to convene sufficient meetings of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies to permit satisfactory progress on outstanding tasks.

The resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which had approved the text on 22 April 1977; its sponsor was the United Kingdom.

Also on 5 May 1977, the Council decided that the next session of the Committee of Experts would be held in November 1978; that the Group of Experts on Explosives would meet for one week in 1977 and one week in 1978; and that the Group of Rapporteurs would hold a two-week meeting in 1977, and a two-week and a one-week meeting in 1978. This action was embodied in decision 213(LXII), adopted, without vote, on the proposal of the Economic Committee, which had approved the text on 22 April. (See also p. 1036.)

A second draft resolution, submitted by the United Kingdom in the Economic Committee, was withdrawn. It dealt with continuation of the study of an international convention on the transport of dangerous goods, and the necessity of additional meeting time.

The Group of Experts on Explosives met from 8 to 12 August 1977, and the Group of Rapporteurs of the Committee met from 15 to 19 August.

The Group of Experts considered new entries in the class of explosives, additions to packing recommendations and test criteria for inclusion of new substances or articles.

The Group of Rapporteurs considered questions relating to listing and classification, packing, labelling and forwarding procedures concerning the transport of dangerous goods. More than 80 new substances were proposed for insertion in the list of dangerous goods, as well as a number of amendments to existing items. Among problems concerning packing, the Group pursued the drafting of recommendations on multimodal tank containers.

Activities of the United Nations system in the field of transport

On 4 May 1977, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) decided, as requested by its Committee on Shipping, to ask the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to discuss with the United Nations Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) an approach to institutional arrangements for transport problems at the global level, when that body took up the analytical report on the activities of the United Nations system in the field of transport prepared by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. This report, which had been approved by the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, listed and described the activities of each organization in the United Nations concerned with transport. It also contained sections on the role of transport in development and on the roles and mandates and present activities of the organizations of the system, and conclusions.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination took up the question of transport at its May-June 1977 session, and recommended certain allocation of responsibilities. The implications of these recommendations were covered in the Secretary-General's report on the proposed budget for 1978-1979.

Acting on the recommendations of CPC, the General Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 32/206 on 21 December 1977, authorized the Secretary-General to submit, at its regular 1978 session, programme proposals for increased activity in the transport programmes of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Latin America, the Economic Commission for Western Asia and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and related revised budget estimates. It also decided to defer until the 1978 session consideration of CPC'S recommendations dealing with programme transfers and reductions. (See also p. 791.)

Container standards of international multimodal transport

On 5 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 219(LXII), decided without vote to take note of the report of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group on Container Standards for International Multimodal Transport, which had met in November 1976, and to transmit the report to the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD. The draft decision had been approved by the Economic Committee on 21 April and had been proposed by the Ad Hoc Group.

In September 1977, the Trade and Development Board decided to convene not later than the end of 1978 a second session of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group.

The Intergovernmental Preparatory Group on a Convention on International Multimodal Transport met twice in 1977, from 10 to 28 January and from 14 to 25 November. It reported significant progress on the proposed convention in the areas of documentation, scope of application and customs matters. It also agreed to embody consultation aspects in the convention.

Other transport decisions

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly took decisions relating to other transport matters.

On 19 December 1977, by resolution 32/160, it proclaimed a Transport and Communications Decade in Africa during the years 1978-1988, with a view to supporting the preparation and implementation of a strategy for development of transport and communications in Africa, and to mobilizing the required technical and financial resources. The Assembly called upon all Member States, in particular the developed countries and others in a position to do so, to participate effectively in the implementation of programmes for achieving the objectives of the Decade.

(For further details, see p. 601.)

On 16 December 1977, the Assembly, by decision 32/438, requested the Secretary-General to invite a number of non-governmental organizations to attend the United Nations Conference on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, to be held at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, from 6 to 31 March 1978. The decision was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee.

ANNEX

Agreement on Co-operation and Relationships between the United Nations and the World Tourism Organization

The General Assembly of the United Nations, in its resolution 2529(XXIV) of 5 December 1969, decided, inter alia, that an agreement should be concluded which would establish close co-operation and relationships between the United Nations and the future World Tourism Organization, define the modalities of such co-operation and relationships and recognize the decisive and central role that the World Tourism Organization was to play in the field of world tourism in co-operation with the existing machinery within the United Nations system.

Article 3, paragraph 3, of the statutes of the World Tourism Organization provides that the World Tourism Organization, in order to establish its central role in the field of tourism, shall establish and maintain effective collaboration with the appropriate organs of the United Nations and its specialized agencies.

Therefore, the United Nations and the World Tourism Organization agree as follows:

Article I Recognition of responsibilities

1. The United Nations recognizes the World Tourism Organization as being responsible for taking such action as may be appropriate under its statutes for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth therein, with due regard to the competence and responsibilities of the United Nations and its organs and of the agencies within the United Nations system.

2. The United Nations takes note that the World Tourism Organization, in pursuing its aims, is concerned to pay particular attention to the interests of the developing countries in the field of tourism.

Article II Recommendations of the United Nations

The World Tourism Organization, having regard to the obligations of the United Nations to promote the objectives set forth in Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations, agrees to arrange for the submission as soon as possible to its General Assembly or its Executive Council, as appropriate, of all formal recommendations that the United Nations may make to it and, in due course, to report to the United Nations on the action taken by it or its members in order to give effect to such recommendations or on the other results of their consideration.

Article III Relationship and co-ordination

1. The United Nations and the World Tourism Organization agree to strive for the maximum co-operation and the elimination of unnecessary duplication between them in their respective activities related to tourism.

2. The United Nations and the World Tourism Organization agree that the activities of the World Tourism Organization and the activities in respect of or related to tourism of the United Nations and other organizations within the United Nations system shall be co-ordinated by the Economic and Social Council through consultations and recommendations. Intersecretariat co-ordination shall be ensured through the machinery of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in the operation of which the World Tourism Organization shall participate in respect of matters of common interest.

3. The World Tourism Organization will seek separate arrangements for co-operation with individual agencies within the United Nations system engaged in tourism or tourism-related activities.

Article IV Reciprocal representation

1. The United Nations shall be invited to send representatives to attend in an observer capacity the meetings of the General Assembly and the Executive Council of the World Tourism Organization and any subsidiary bodies which may be established by the World Tourism Organization, as well as such conferences as the World Tourism Organization may convene, and to participate, with the approval of the body concerned and without the right to vote, in debates on questions of concern to the United Nations.

2. The World Tourism Organization shall be invited to send representatives to attend in an observer capacity meetings of the Economic and Social Council or its subsidiary organs, conferences convened by it and meetings of other United Nations bodies which deal with matters of common interest and to participate, with the approval of the body concerned and without the right to vote, in debates on questions of concern to the World Tourism Organization.

Article V Written statements

The United Nations may submit written statements to meetings of bodies of the World Tourism Organization and other meetings organized by it on matters of common interest which are relevant to the work of those bodies. The World Tourism Organization may submit written statements to the Economic and Social Council, to its subsidiary organs and to conferences convened by it, and also to the subsidiary organs of the General Assembly of the United Nations, on matters of common interest which are relevant to the work of those bodies.

Article VI Proposal of agenda items

Subject to such preliminary consultations as may be necessary, the secretariat of the World Tourism Organization may include in the provisional agenda of the General Assembly and the Executive Council of the World Tourism Organization items proposed to it by the United Nations. The Secretariat of the United Nations may include in the provisional agenda of the Economic and Social Council items proposed by the World Tourism Organization. In this connexion, the World Tourism Organization may make recommendations and proposals relating to international agreements to be drawn up in the field of tourism.

Article VII Exchange of information and documents

Subject to such arrangements as may be necessary for the safeguarding of confidential material, a full and prompt exchange of information and documents on matters concerning tourism shall be made between the United Nations and the World Tourism Organization. The World Tourism Organization agrees to transmit to the Economic and Social Council reports on its activities and programmes.

Article VIII Statistical services

1. The World Tourism Organization takes note that the United Nations is the central agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics on tourism as part of the statistics in respect of international travel, national accounting and other general statistical information.

2. The United Nations recognizes the World Tourism Organization as the appropriate organization for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics within the sphere of the World Tourism Organization, without prejudice to the right of the United Nations to concern itself with such statistics in so far as they may be essential for its own purposes or for the improvement of statistics throughout the world.

3. The United Nations and the World Tourism Organization agree to combine their efforts to secure the greatest possible usefulness and utilization of such statistical information and to minimize the burden placed upon national Governments and other organizations from which the information may be collected.

Article IX Implementation of the Agreement

The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization may enter into such supplementary arrangements for the implementation of this Agreement as may be found desirable.

Article X Entry into force and revision of the Agreement

Noting that the statutes of the World Tourism Organization, which were adopted at Mexico City on 27 September 1970, entered into force on 2 January 1975,

Noting further article 3 of the statutes of the World Tourism Organization, which states that the organization, in order to establish its central role in the field of tourism, shall establish and maintain effective collaboration with the appropriate organs of the United Nations and its specialized agencies,

Recalling its resolution 32/156 of 19 December 1977, by which it approved the Agreement on Co-operation and Relationships between the United Nations and the World Tourism Organization,

Bearing in mind article II of that Agreement, under which the World Tourism Organization agrees to submit as soon as possible to its General Assembly or its Executive Council, as appropriate, all formal recommendations that the United Nations may make to it and, in due course, to report to the United Nations on the action taken by it in order to give effect to such recommendations,

During 1977, 18 experts were assigned under United Nations programmes of technical assistance to Burundi, Fiji, Guyana, Iran, Jordan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, Madagascar, Nepal, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, and Trinidad and Tobago in such branches of cartography as hydrography, Photogrammetry, land and cadastral surveying, geodesy and map reproduction.

Under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) there were six large-scale projects, mostly devoted to institution strengthening, in Guyana, Iran, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nepal, the Philippines and Saudi Arabia, and six small-scale projects.

Following advisory technical assistance missions, future technical assistance projects were being studied for the Congo, Haiti, Liberia, Thailand and the Upper Volta.

Seven fellowships were awarded for studies in Photogrammetry and map reproduction to nationals of Argentina, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nepal, and Trinidad and Tobago for study in Canada, India, Switzerland and the United States.

A Group of Experts on Hydrographic Surveying and Nautical Charting met at United Nations Headquarters from 5 to 16 December 1977. Experts from eight countries participated and the International Hydrographic Organization (IHO) was represented in an advisory capacity. The experts identified hydrography's more important applications: marine transportation, coastal zone management, resource exploitation and environmental protection. Their report offered guidelines for the establishment and strengthening of hydrographic services and emphasized the availability of assistance. Attention was drawn to the importance of international co-operation in hydrography. Finally, the report noted that in the marine environment there could be no rational exploitation of resources without exploration and no adequate scientific exploration without hydrography.

Third United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names

The Third United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, held at Athens, Greece, from 17 August to 7 September 1977, was attended by 152 participants, representing 59 countries, and observers from 11 intergovernmental and international scientific organizations.

The agenda of the Conference had been prepared in co-operation with the United Nations Secretariat by the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names which met in March 1975 at United Nations Headquarters.⁹ Technical papers discussed, inter alia, national standardization, training courses in toponymy, gazetteers, automated data processing, terminology, exonyms, writing systems, international co-operation, technical assistance and policies, procedures and co-operative arrangements for the naming of features beyond a single sovereignty.

The Conference adopted 27 resolutions, 11 of which were recommendations to the Group of Experts on continuation of its work. One of these was to increase from 16 to 17 the number of geographical/linguistic divisions of the world, by changing Africa East and Africa West to Africa East, Africa Central and Africa West. Several resolutions concerned standards and studies for romanization of names in various languages, including Chinese, Arabic, Bulgarian, Serbo-Croatian, Macedonian, Urdu, Bangla and Hebrew. It was recommended that IHO establish guidelines for naming undersea features, and that when a geographical feature was shared by two countries that did not accept a common name, both names be acceptable for maps.

The Conference also recommended that the next conference be held in Iran before mid-1982.

Regional cartographic conferences

Eighth Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Far East

The Eighth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Far East met at Bangkok, Thailand, from 17 to 28 January 1977, with 221 representatives and observers from 40 countries and eight international organizations. Papers were presented on conventional and satellite geodesy; large-, medium- and small-scale mapping; thematic mapping and national atlases; geographical names; automation in cartography; cadastral surveying and mapping; hydrographic surveying; and nautical charting.

Twenty-three resolutions were adopted, with special attention to cadastral surveying and mapping, the convening of a group of experts on hydrographic surveying and nautical charting, thematic mapping, geographical names, conventional and satellite remote sensing, and the training of personnel in all disciplines relating to surveying, mapping and remote sensing.

Ninth Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

On 5 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to make arrangements to convene the Ninth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific in New Zealand in February 1980. At the same time, the Council asked the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations of the Eighth Conference, including convening a meeting of the Group of Experts on Hydrographic Surveying and Nautical Charting no later than March 1978.

This decision was embodied in resolution 2049(LXII), adopted, without vote, on the basis of a proposal by Bangladesh, Canada, Iran, Japan, Malaysia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, the United Kingdom and the United States. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Second Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas

On 5 May 1977, the Council requested the Secretary-General to make arrangements to convene the Second United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas at Mexico City for two weeks in 1979, and asked him to implement the recommendations of the First Conference, held in Panama City in March 1976.¹⁰

This decision was embodied in resolution 2048(LXII), adopted, without vote, on the basis of a proposal by Argentina, Bolivia, Canada, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Jamaica, Mexico, Peru, the United States and Venezuela. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By a note dated 14 September 1977 addressed to the Secretary-General, the USSR objected to the listing of an address in the report of the First Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas which had specified "D-1 Berlin, Burgherrenstrasse 7, Federal Republic of Germany." The USSR stated that it was well known that West Berlin was not an integral part of the Federal Republic of Germany, and considered that the listing could only be regarded as having been made with the intention of misusing the authority of the United Nations to promote illegitimate claims to West Berlin.

Questions relating to the Declaration on the granting of independence and to the International Trusteeship System

Chapter I

The International Trusteeship System

General aspects

Territory under the Trusteeship System

Under the International Trusteeship System established by the Charter of the United Nations, Member States administering Trust Territories are accountable to the United Nations for the discharge of their responsibilities and obligations in the administration of those Territories.

During 1977, there remained only one Trust Territory under the System: the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (a strategic area in accordance with Article 83 of the Charter of the United Nations)¹ administered by the United States.

Examination of annual report

In supervising the administration of the Trust Territory on behalf of the Security Council, the Trusteeship Council in 1977 examined the annual report submitted by the Administering Authority. It also examined, among other things, petitions and communications affecting the Territory, and heard petitioners.

Under the procedures followed by the Trusteeship Council, the Special Representatives of the Administering Authority made opening statements bringing the Trusteeship Council up to date on events in the Territory concerned. These statements were supplemented by comments of Special Advisers—representatives of the Territory, attached to the delegation of the Administering Authority. The Administering Authority's representative on the Council, the Special Representatives and the Special Advisers then replied to questions put to them by Council members. There followed a general debate in which Council members give their opinions on conditions in the Territory; a summary of the observations made by individual Council members was included in the Council's report.

The Trusteeship Council held its forty-fourth regular session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 6 to 23 June 1977, during which it examined the annual report submitted by the Administering Authority on the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and adopted conclusions and recommendations on it. (For further information, see subchapter below on CONDITIONS IN THE TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS.)

In accordance with its normal practice, the Council adopted a report to the Security Council which contained a section on conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

Composition of the Trusteeship Council

At its 1977 session, the Trusteeship Council was composed of one Administering Authority, the United States, and four non-administering members: China, France, the USSR and the United Kingdom, which sat on the Council by virtue of their being permanent members of the Security Council. China did not participate in the forty-fourth (1977) session of the Trusteeship Council.

Petitions and oral hearings

The examination of petitions concerning Trust Territories derives from Article 87 of the United Nations Charter, which provides that the General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, may accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the Administering Authority. Petitions relating to a strategic area are governed by Article 83 of the Charter and the terms of the relevant Trusteeship Agreement.

Under its rules of procedure, the Trusteeship Council considers petitions and communications concerning specific complaints, as well as general questions pertaining to a Trust Territory or to the operation of the International Trusteeship System. The Council considers these in the course of its examination of annual reports. Hearings may also be granted to petitioners.

At its 1977 session, the Trusteeship Council considered 12 written petitions and heard five petitioners with regard to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands; it also considered 19 communications.

Visiting mission

At its 1977 session, the Trusteeship Council noted and accepted in principle an invitation of the Administering Authority to dispatch a visiting mission to observe the referendum on the draft Micronesian Constitution which was scheduled to take place on 12 July 1978. It authorized its President to continue consultations with the Administering Authority, with other Council members and with the Secretary-General so that, in the light of any developments or agreements in the Trust Territory during 1978, the necessary arrangements could be made to prepare for such a mission and to enable the Council to take a formal decision on the dispatch of the mission at its 1978 ses-

Attainment of self-government or independence and implementation of the Declaration on granting independence to colonial countries and peoples

At its 1977 session, during the examination of conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Trusteeship Council considered the question of the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory, the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples² and co-operation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

During the Council's consideration of these matters, the USSR again put forward the view it had expressed the previous year³ on the question of whether the Council should address a report to the General Assembly or any of its committees. The USSR said that the Trusteeship Council should continue to co-operate both with the Special Committee and with the Assembly. In particular, the USSR referred to its argument that, according to Article 85, paragraph 2, of the Charter, the Council should assist the General Assembly in carrying out the functions entrusted to it. This applied not only to non-strategic territories but to all territories. In the view of the USSR, a refusal to co-operate with the Assembly and the Special Committee was wrong.

The United States referred to the views on this matter which it previously addressed to the Council, namely that in the light of Charter Article 83, paragraph 1, which vested all functions of the United Nations relating to the strategic Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands in the Security Council, and in view of the fact that there no longer existed any Trust Territory with respect to which the Assembly might exercise jurisdiction under Article 85, the question of co-operation by the Trusteeship Council with Assembly committees did not arise.

The United Kingdom believed that there was a question of competence involved, and was inclined to share the view expressed by the United States.

On 14 June 1977, the Council decided, without adopting a formal resolution, to draw the attention of the Security Council to the conclusions and recommendations adopted concerning the attainment, under the Council's guidance, of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory and to the statements made by the members of the Trusteeship Council on that question.

The Trusteeship Council's conclusions and recommendations with regard to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands are summarized in the following subchapter.

Offers of study and training facilities

Under procedures adopted by the Trusteeship Council for the administration of the programme of scholarships and fellowships for inhabitants of Trust Territories initiated by the General Assembly in 1952,⁴ the Secretary-General reported to the Council on the programme. The report covered the period from 1 June 1976 to 29 May 1977, and stated, among other things, that scholarships and training facilities had been offered in the past by the following 11 Member States: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, the USSR and Yugoslavia. In April 1977, the Secretary-General had requested up-to-date information on offers and the extent of the awards made; the USSR had responded that at that time no inhabitants of the Trust Territory were studying in the USSR.

During the Council's consideration of the report, the USSR said that, as had been heard repeatedly during the preceding session of the Council, the Territory, at the current decisive point in its political development, was very much in need of educated cadres at various levels. The USSR had been among the countries that had annually offered scholarships to nationals of Trust Territories, but it was disappointed by the reaction it had received to those offers.

The United States observed that as Micronesia approached the end of the Trusteeship period it was continuing to devote increased attention to assisting Micronesians to become active and productive citizens, and it continued to urge other Member States, particularly Micronesia's neighbours, to consider making scholarships available.

On 13 June 1977, the Council, without adopting a resolution, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Dissemination of information on the United Nations and the Trusteeship System

In accordance with decisions of the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly, the Secretary-General reported again to the Trusteeship Council on arrangements undertaken in co-operation with the Administering Authority for distributing official records of the United Nations and for disseminating information concerning the aims and activities of the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System in the Trust Territory.

The report submitted by the Secretary-General to the 1977 Council session, covering the period from 14 April 1976 to 30 April 1977, set out the activities carried out by the United Nations in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands during the year. Publications that had been distributed in the Territory included press releases, pamphlets on such issues as the attainment of independence, disarmament and human rights, posters, photographs and United Nations periodicals and other publications.

During the Council's consideration of this report, the United States said that the Government of the Trust Territory had continued its efforts to ensure the widespread dissemination of information on the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System.

The USSR considered that the report of the Secretary-General was of a very general nature which made it very difficult to judge specifically what kind of information was being disseminated. The USSR hoped that reports of the Secretary-General would in future contain more specific information, particularly on the question of whether or not the United Nations information was really reaching the population of the Trust Territory.

On 13 June 1977, without adopting a resolution, the Trusteeship Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General.

Action against racism and racial discrimination

At its 1977 session, the Trusteeship Council decided to consider together the questions of co-operation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the observance of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,⁵ which began on 10 December 1973.

During the Council's consideration of these items, the United States said that in the light of Article 83, paragraph 1, of the Charter, which vested in the Security Council all functions of the United Nations relating to the strategic Trust Territory, and in view of the fact that there no longer existed any Trust Territory with respect to which the General Assembly might exercise jurisdiction under the Charter, it believed that the question of co-operation by the Trusteeship Council with the committees of the Assembly did not arise. The United States further said that it remained unalterably and unequivocally opposed to racism and racial discrimination and was proud of the absence of both in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The USSR reserved its position on the view expressed by the United States and added that the General Assembly had done outstanding work in the struggle against colonialism. The decisions of that important organ and of its subsidiary bodies could not be disregarded. In that connexion, the USSR maintained the view that it was desirable that there should be co-operation between the United States and the Assembly, as well as the Security Council, in connexion with the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The USSR further commented that the 1976 report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to the General Assembly had stated, with reference to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, that the Committee had found itself unable to consider the application of the principles of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁶ to the specific situations on which it had requested information and hoped that such information would be provided as soon as possible.

The Trusteeship Council, without adopting a resolution, took note of the statements which had been made at its meeting on 13 June 1977.

Conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, administered by the United States, includes more than 2,100 islands and atolls scattered over an area of some 7.8 million square kilometres of the western Pacific Ocean, north of the Equator. The islands, which have a combined land area of some 1,850 square kilometres, form three archipelagos—the Marianas, the Carolines and the Marshalls—and are collectively known as Micronesia. (Guam, the largest island in the Marianas, is not part of the Trust Territory.) In 1973, the population of the Trust Territory totalled approximately 115,000 persons, of whom 14,500 resided in the Mariana Islands District (Northern Mariana Islands).

Pursuant to Secretarial Order No. 2989 of the United States Department of the Interior, the former Mariana Islands District was separated administratively from the Government of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands on 1 April 1976.

In other developments, Kosrae, in the Eastern Caroline Islands, separated from Ponape and became a district on 1 January 1977. The Caroline Islands and the Marshall Islands accordingly comprised six administrative districts in 1977: the Marshall Islands and—in the Caroline archipelago—Palau, Yap, Truk, Ponape and Kosrae. Further, the Government of the Trust Territory, by Public Law No. 6-133, designated Kolonia, in Ponape, as the new capital of the Trust Territory.

Executive and administrative authority for the Government of the Trust Territory and responsibility for carrying out international obligations undertaken by the United States with respect to the Territory are vested in a High Commissioner appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the United States Senate. Working under the High Commissioner is a headquarters staff and six district administrations. Legislative authority resides in the Congress of Micronesia, a bicameral legislature comprising a Senate and a House of Representatives.

The executive authority of the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands is vested in a United States Resident Commissioner appointed by the United States Secretary of the Interior. The Resident Commissioner is assisted in the administration of the Northern Mariana Islands by an executive officer.

In 1977, conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands were considered by the Trusteeship Council and by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁷

Consideration by the Trusteeship Council

The Trusteeship Council held its forty-fourth session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 6 to 23 June 1977, and heard statements by the Special Representatives of the Administering Authority of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and by three Special Advisers, two of whom were members of the Congress of Micronesia and the third a member of the Northern Mariana Islands Legislature.

The Trusteeship Council subsequently reported to the Security Council on the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, a strategic area in accordance with Article 83 of the Charter of the United Nations.⁸

A summary of the Council's discussion and main conclusions and recommendations follows.

Population movements

At its 1977 session, the Trusteeship Council was pleased to note the progress made in 1976/1977 on the issues relating to displaced population groups in the Marshall Islands District. It noted that funds for the Bikini Atoll aerial radiological survey had been approved by the Administering Authority and had been made available in the supplemental budget appropriation for fiscal year 1977.

The Council further noted with satisfaction that an initial increment of $4 million for a rehabilitation and resettlement programme for Enewetak Atoll had been approved in the supplemental budget for 1977/1978, and that the balance of some $8.4 million had been included in the 1978/1979 budget. With regard to the question of compensation for Rongelap and Utirik, the Council noted that, with the final approval of the 1978/1979 budget by the Government of the United States, the ex gratia compensation bill which had been presented as part of that budget could be implemented by the Department of the Interior.

War and post-war damage claims

Two broad categories of war damage claims by the inhabitants of the Trust Territory had been considered by the Trusteeship Council since the question was first raised in 1950: claims against the Japanese Government, mainly for damages sustained by the indigenous inhabitants during the Second World War, and post-war claims against the United States Government.

In this connexion, the Trusteeship Council at its 1977 session reiterated its recommendation that the necessary steps should be taken quickly for the final settlement of war damage claims. It noted that the authorizations for the payment of funds allocated by a United States Public Law of 1 July 1971 had been granted and the final payments had been made. The Council was gratified to note that the United States Congress was considering a bill authorizing full payment of the United States share (50 per cent) of the awards for damages sustained by the inhabitants during the Second World War (Title I) and full payment of the awards for damages sustained in the post-war period (Title II). It noted with satisfaction that the United States House of Representatives had passed the bill and the Council expressed the hope that the Senate would also act favourably on it.

The Council further noted that hope was expressed by the Special Advisers and by petitioners that Japan would follow the example of the United States and consider supplementing its earlier ex gratia payment in respect of Title I awards. It hoped that a satisfactory solution could be found to this matter.

Political advancement

The Trusteeship Council noted the active role that the Commission on Future Political Status and Transition, of the Congress of Micronesia, and the Micronesian delegation to the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea continued to play.

The Council noted with concern that the Administering Authority had not implemented its previous recommendation that necessary regulations should be adopted which would distinguish between the special interests of the Territory and the international obligations of the Administering Authority, with the ultimate objective of restricting as far as possible the occasions for the exercise of the power of veto by the High Commissioner.

The Council remained aware, however, that some of the difficulties associated with the use of the veto power resulted from the separation of powers between the legislative and executive branches, and that those difficulties were further exacerbated because that power was exercised by an appointed rather than an elected Chief Executive. Accordingly, it recommended that the Administering Authority give serious consideration to preparing Micronesians for assuming the highest executive functions.

The Council noted with satisfaction the steady increase in the number of Micronesian citizens in senior executive posts and reiterated its earlier appeals that the trend at the executive level should continue.

The Trusteeship Council noted with satisfaction that the High Commissioner had approved laws authorizing district legislatures to draft charters for district governments, and that the Administering Authority hoped it would be possible to hold popular elections for district administrators in 1978, soon after the various district charters had been approved.

It also noted with satisfaction that the Administering Authority had undertaken a systematic programme of decentralization designed to increase local autonomy and streamline the government bureaucracy.

The Council continued to urge that qualified Micronesians should be given greater opportunities in the judiciary. It reaffirmed the need for the Congress of Micronesia to be consulted before the appointment or removal of judges of the High Court.

During the Council's discussion, the USSR stated that, instead of strengthening the authority of the Congress of Micronesia as a central organ capable of carrying out the task of developing sovereignty, there had been in effect covert and overt erosion of that influence, and the possibility of that body's developing into a full-fledged legislative institution was being diminished.

France hoped that efforts would be continued for the political education of the people of Micronesia with a view to making them more aware of the options open to them when the time came to make a choice. It welcomed efforts to give increasing autonomy to the districts. The programme of decentralization that had been put into practice seemed necessary, it continued, given the geographical dispersion of the Trust Territory and the fact that there were specific situations in each district.

The United Kingdom welcomed the reported reduction in government employees and the prospect that the development of district charters would lead to greater devolution, but recognized that no far-reaching decisions could be taken on streamlining the bureaucracy or increasing local autonomy until the future political structure had been agreed upon.

Economic advancement

The Trusteeship Council remained concerned about the imbalances in the Micronesian economy and its considerable dependence on outside support. It noted with satisfaction that the Administering Authority was aware of the need to promote the development of the productive sectors and of basic infrastructure.

The Council welcomed the adoption by the Congress of Micronesia of a five-year indicative development plan and its approval by the Administering Authority. It hoped that the economic policy followed would be in keeping with the objectives of the plan and that the necessary means for implementation, especially financial means, would be available.

Considering it desirable to promote an increase in exports from the Trust Territory, the Council recommended that the Administering Authority examine carefully the possibility of extending to the Territory as a whole tariff advantages comparable to those envisaged for the Northern Mariana Islands.

The Council reaffirmed its desire to see the Congress of Micronesia given greater influence with respect to the budget process. It noted with satisfaction that the Joint Committee on Program and Budget Planning of the Congress of Micronesia had been recognized as the primary review body for the request for the annual grant from the United States.

The Council again expressed the hope that the Trust Territory would continue to develop its contacts with, and involvement in, international and regional bodies for developmental assistance, and noted in this connexion that a request for aid from the World Food Programme was being prepared and that a United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) country programme had been prepared.

It also noted that land identification and survey work in progress should be completed by the end of 1977, and hoped for satisfactory results from talks concerning indefinite land-use agreements.

The Council reiterated its recommendation that the Administering Authority should expand production of foodstuffs to enable the Territory to become more self-sufficient, without prejudice to current efforts to diversify crops, develop agriculture on a commercial scale and establish an agriculture-based industry. The Council also called for consideration of the possibilities of exploiting forestry resources and means of improving livestock production.

The Council reaffirmed that marine resources were crucial to the economy of Micronesia, and urged the Administering Authority to do everything possible to protect and develop those resources, while continuing to improve equipment and training.

The Council noted the strong views expressed by the Congress of Micronesia about Micronesian participation in the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, and the statement made at the current session by one of the Special Advisers who expressed concern at the veto by the Administering Authority of a bill passed by the Micronesian Senate which had provided for marine-space jurisdiction in Micronesia. The Council noted that the interests of Micronesia might not necessarily coincide with the interests of the Administering Authority.

Recalling its recommendation that consideration should be given to the possible effect on Micronesian unity of the development of a super-port, the Council noted that one of the petitioners from Palau had stated that the question was not related to their quest for separation. The Council continued to believe that attention should be given to the environmental impact of such a port and noted with satisfaction the commitment of the Administering Authority to consider the possible impact of the proposed super-port on the general welfare of the people, on the security of the area and on the environment, as well as its commitment not to approve development if the super-port was opposed by the people of Palau. The Council recommended that the Administering Authority give careful consideration to the views of the Congress of Micronesia on this matter.

France said it was pleased that the indicative development plan for 1976-1981 had been approved, and hoped that would make it possible to overcome the inadequacies of the past, allowing Micronesia to reduce its outside economic dependence and thus guarantee its real political freedom.

The United Kingdom observed that the economic problems which faced Micronesia were no less acute than the constitutional problems and that, unfortunately, long-term planning was difficult so long as its constitutional structure was undetermined. The United Kingdom had for some time been concerned about the Territory's almost total economic dependence upon the Administering Authority, despite the latter's generous financial support. It believed that great efforts had to be made to promote self-sufficiency and that priority should be given to infrastructure and income-producing activities.

The USSR said that, despite the many appeals by the Trusteeship Council and the promises of the Administering Authority to place the Territory's economy on the path to development, substantive changes had not taken place during 1976/1977 in Micronesia's economic situation. According to the representative of the Micronesian Congress, the USSR added, the Administering Authority viewed the Territory's development not as its duty in ensuring Micronesian economic independence but as an instrument of pressure for concluding an agreement on the Territory's future political status that would be beneficial to it.

On the question of a super-port at Palau, France felt that implementation should be subject to three conditions: economic viability, conformity with environmental standards, and acceptance by the population. The United Kingdom called for a feasibility study by an impartial body, which should take into account both environmental and economic considerations. The USSR said that the super-port would ensure profits for foreign corporations and for the Administering Authority but would raise new barriers in the way of the exercise of the legitimate rights of Micronesians, would place them in a position of greater dependence and also would have a harmful effect on the environment.

Social advancement

The Trusteeship Council noted with satisfaction the progress made in strengthening the health and hospital infrastructure of the Trust Territory and recommended that those efforts be continued, primarily with a view to improving health facilities in the periphery of the Territory.

The Council continued to be concerned about the imbalance between wage-earners employed in the public sector and those in the private sector. It noted the Administering Authority's announced intention to continue reducing the number of officials employed in the public sector.

The Council again welcomed the efforts made to combat delinquency in general, and juvenile delinquency in particular, and recommended that preventive efforts be continued.

Educational advancement

The Trusteeship Council reaffirmed its satisfaction with the excellent record of the Administering Authority in the field of education—universal instruction at the primary level, a high rate of secondary school attendance, a satisfactory number of post-graduate students in the Trust Territory and an increase in the number of Micronesian teachers. It welcomed the fact that students could obtain grants and loans from the Administering Authority for higher education.

The Council noted with interest the ideas expressed by the Administering Authority to the effect that the educational system in the Trust Territory did not need to be changed substantively but that it should develop greater emphasis on disciplines that would best prepare students for life in Micronesian society. It looked forward to receiving information on measures envisaged to achieve this.

France commented on the substantial efforts made, but believed there was still a long way to go, particularly in the areas of primary and secondary education, if young people were to be better adapted to the realities of Micronesian society and culture.

Attainment of self-government or independence

The Trusteeship Council noted with satisfaction that the Administering Authority had affirmed its intention to help Micronesia to move swiftly towards a new status based on self-determination, not excluding independence if that was their expressed wish.

While recognizing that it was for the Micronesians themselves to decide upon their future relations with each other, the Council recalled its earlier conviction that the political unity of the Caroline Islands and the Marshall Islands should if possible be maintained. It also noted the expressed desire of Palau and the Marshall Islands for separate political-status negotiations with the United States. It noted with satisfaction the view of the Administering Authority that the interests of Micronesians would best be served by the maintenance of some form of unity, and expressed the hope that it would continue its efforts to seek practical and mutually beneficial relationships among the districts.

The Council noted with satisfaction the convening by the Administering Authority of an informal meeting at Honolulu, Hawaii, in May 1977 which had been attended by representatives of the Congress of Micronesia, the Executive Branch of the Trust Territory Government and the districts of the Caroline and the Marshall Islands, at which subjects of common interest had been discussed, including the manner of proceeding with future status negotiations. The Council welcomed the fact that the parties had agreed to hold a further meeting not later than July 1977 to continue those discussions.

Sharing the view of the 1976 Visiting Mission,⁹ the Council did not wish to make precise recommendations on the future status best suited to the Caroline and the Marshall Islands, or to commit itself on the question of free association. It noted that the status of free association under consideration, if endorsed by the population, would not be inconsistent with the aims of the Trusteeship Agreement.

The Council welcomed the invitation issued by the Administering Authority to observe the constitutional referendum in the Marshall and the Caroline Islands scheduled for 12 July 1978. It noted, however, that negotiations on the future political status of those islands could affect issues to be decided by the referendum and also the precise timing. The Council hoped that the Congress of Micronesia would do its utmost to ensure that when the draft constitution was put to a referendum, it would be in a form likely to be acceptable to all the districts in the Caroline and the Marshall Islands, and calculated to preserve a degree of unity among them.

The Council noted with satisfaction that delegates of the Northern Mariana Islands signed a completed constitution on 5 December 1976, and that the voters approved the constitution on 6 March 1977. The constitution was currently under review by the Administering Authority and, unless it was rejected as a result of that review, it would be deemed fully approved not later than 23 October 1977. The Council also noted that certain sections of the constitution would be held in abeyance until the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement, and welcomed the statement by the Administering Authority of its intention to terminate that Agreement simultaneously for the entire Trust Territory.

The Council urged that social, economic and cultural links be maintained between the Northern Mariana Islands and the other districts, and, in that context, commended the statements made by the Administering Authority and by the Resident Commissioner of the Northern Mariana Islands on such future collaboration.

The Council welcomed the reaffirmation by the Administering Authority of its desire to find, in consultation with the Micronesians, a mutually satisfactory basis for the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement by 1981.

During the Council's discussion, the Administering Authority said that at the Honolulu conference it had reaffirmed its desire to find a mutually satisfactory basis for the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement by 1981, and had pressed for an early resumption of formal negotiations. It had expressed the belief that free association along the lines negotiated over the past six years provided the most promising basis for ensuring a mutually satisfactory relationship between it and the peoples of the Marshall and the Caroline Islands. The Administering Authority had stated that its basic aim was to help Micronesians to move rapidly towards a new status based on self-determination without excluding the possibility of talks leading to forms of government other than free association, including independence, if that were their wish. It believed that the interests of the Micronesians would best be served by the maintenance of some form of unity.

The Special Adviser to the Administering Authority stated that one of the concerns of the Micronesian representatives in approaching the Honolulu meetings was the fact that the Commission on Future Political Status and Transition, the Micronesian body legally mandated to discuss status negotiations, had not been a direct invitee. Consequently, the position of those representatives, who had attended the conference at the invitation of the Congress of Micronesia, had been to reiterate that Micronesia's legal institutions were the only proper instruments through which such negotiations might be conducted.

The Special Adviser stated that although the Congress preferred that the Trusteeship Agreement end as soon as possible, it believed that termination depended on the achievement of the goals set forth in the United Nations Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement. The timing of the termination of that Agreement must take into account the resolution of the major issues. It believed that there was still time to bring the initialled draft compact into conformity with the constitution and to preserve Micronesian unity, and that it was possible to amend the constitution once adopted.

Referring to the separatist tendencies existing particularly in the Marshall Islands and Palau, France said it was not for the Trusteeship Council to impose any conclusion; at the very most it could suggest that anything militating in favour of a certain form of unity among the districts should be encouraged. France noted that the Administering Authority was convinced that free association provided the most promising basis for ensuring a mutually satisfactory relationship between it and the Trust Territory. However, France felt that all the options, including independence, had to remain open. On that point, Article 76 of the Charter of the United Nations¹⁰ and Article 6 of the Trusteeship Agreement¹¹ were totally unambiguous.

The United Kingdom believed that the retention of some degree of unity after the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement would be in the general interest of the Micronesians. However, it also recognized that it was for the Micronesians themselves to define the nature of their relations with each other. It would deeply regret but would not ultimately oppose separate status for the Marshall Islands or Palau any more than it had opposed separate status for the Northern Mariana Islands, if it were proved by democratic process. But it believed that before so serious a step was contemplated further negotiations should take place between the various parties. The United Kingdom welcomed the fact that the Honolulu conference was to be followed by a further series of talks between the United States and Micronesia, on a bilateral as well as on a multi-lateral basis.

The USSR stated that the correct and just path for Micronesia was described in the United Nations Charter, the Trusteeship Agreement and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The Administering Authority must promote the Territory's progress in all areas, including progress towards self-government and independence, it added, and the Council must firmly condemn any attempts to fragment the Territory and impose on an individual part of the Territory a different status of dependence on the United States. The USSR further said that under the Charter only the Security Council could solve the question of the political future of the Trust Territory, including the question of changing the situation of a particular integral part of that Trust Territory.

Report of the Trusteeship Council

On 23 June 1977, the Council, by a vote of 2 to 1, with 1 abstention, approved the text of its conclusions and recommendations concerning conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The United States, in explaining its abstention, said it was customary for the Administering Authority to abstain in the vote on the conclusions and recommendations inasmuch as they were addressed to the Administering Authority. It assured the Council, however, that they would be studied carefully and would be given full consideration.

On the same date, the Council adopted its report to the Security Council by a vote of 3 to 1.

In explanation of vote, the USSR stated that it had voted against adoption of the conclusions and recommendations and of the report since the USSR disagreed with those conclusions and recommendations. It was concerned with, among other things, the fact that the report did not sufficiently reflect the views of the Congress of Micronesia. The USSR had frequently stated that the measures taken by the Administering Authority to split up the Territory, and then to absorb it, were contrary to the United Nations Charter, the Trusteeship Agreement and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The situation in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands was also discussed in 1977 by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, at meetings held on 1 and 2 August. The Administering Authority did not participate in the work of the Special Committee during consideration of the matter.

On 2 August, the Special Committee endorsed, without objection, the conclusions and recommendations on the subject submitted by its Sub-Committee on Small Territories. Among other things, the Special Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the Trust Territory to self-determination in conformity with the Assembly's Declaration on the granting of independence.

The Special Committee continued to note with regret the refusal of the Administering Authority to co-operate with it on this matter by declining to participate in the examination of the situation in the Trust Territory. It called once more upon the United States to comply with the Committee's repeated requests that a representative be present to provide information which would assist the Committee in formulating its conclusions and recommendations.

The Special Committee noted with satisfaction that the Administering Authority had affirmed its intention to help the Micronesians to move swiftly towards a new political status based on self-determination. It shared the view of the Trusteeship Council that the people should be given the fullest opportunity to inform themselves about the future political status and constitutional alternatives open to them, including independence. The Committee noted the reaffirmation of the Administering Authority that it continued to desire to find, in consultation with the Micronesians, a mutually satisfactory basis for the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement by 1981. It again stressed its view that the unity of the Trust Territory should be preserved until it achieved self-determination.

The Special Committee reiterated its concern that the Administering Authority had still not implemented its previous recommendation that necessary regulations should be adopted which would make paramount the special interests of the Trust Territory vis-a-vis the international obligations of the Administering Authority, with the ultimate objective of restricting as far as possible the occasions for the exercise of the power of veto by the High Commissioner.

The Special Committee continued to regret the lack of significant economic development in the Trust Territory. It welcomed the adoption by the Congress of Micronesia of the five-year indicative development plan and its approval by the Administering Authority. It expressed the hope that the Administration of the Trust Territory would adhere to the plan and that financial support, in particular, would be available for its implementation.

With regard to the proposals for a superport at Palau, the Special Committee endorsed the Trusteeship Council's recommendation that the Administering Authority should give careful consideration to the views of the Congress of Micronesia on the matter.

The Special Committee noted with satisfaction that UNDP had prepared a continuing programme of assistance to the Trust Territory. It also noted with satisfaction that the Congress of Micronesia continued to enjoy observer status at the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea.

General questions

International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia

On 17 December 1976,² the General Assembly decided that the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia should be held in 1977 for the purpose of mobilizing world-wide support for and assistance to the peoples of those territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia, to organize the Conference at Maputo, Mozambique, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

The Assembly's decision was based on a June 1976 recommendation of the Special Committee.

The Conference was held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977. A total of 91 United Nations Member States participated: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, the Netherlands, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Attending as observers were one United Nations Member State (Brazil) and five non-member States—the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Holy See, the Republic of Korea, the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam and Switzerland.

One Member State—Chile—informed the Secretary-General on 5 May 1977 that it would not participate in the Conference because the

President of Mozambique had referred to the Government and President of Chile in terms which Chile could not accept.

Also participating in the Conference were three United Nations bodies—the Special Committee on granting independence, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Special Committee against Apartheid.

The Organization of African Unity participated in the Conference, as did five national liberation movements—the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe), the African National Council of Zimbabwe, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania.

A number of specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system were represented at the Conference as observers. They were the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Development Programme.

Intergovernmental organizations attending as observers were the Commonwealth Secretariat, the European Economic Community (EEC), the League of Arab States and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The following non-governmental organizations attended the Conference as observers: the African-American Institute, the Afro-Asian Peoples' Solidarity Organization, the All Africa Conference of Churches, the American Committee on Africa, Amnesty International, Centro de Estudos Africanos, the Clergy Committee against Mercenaries in Africa, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa, the International University Exchange Fund, the Japan Anti-Apartheid Committee, the Lutheran World Federation, the Organisation of African Trade Union Unity, the Pan African Women's Organization, the Patrice Lumumba Coalition, the Portuguese National Committee for the World Conference against Apartheid, Racism and Colonialism in Southern Africa, the Soviet Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee and the Washington Office on Africa.

The officers of the Conference were: Joaquim Alberto Chissano (Mozambique) (President); Salim Ahmed Salim (Chairman of the Special Committee), Dunstan Weston Kamana (President of the United Nations Council for Namibia), Cornel Pacoste (Romania), Thorvald Stoltenberg (Norway) and Jorge E. Illueca (Panama) (Vice-Presidents); and Narendra P. Jain (India) (General Rapporteur). Pursuant to the guidelines for the Conference, Peter Onu, Assistant Secretary-General of OAU, was an ex-officio officer; Sam Nujoma, President of SWAPO, was designated an ex-officio officer by the Conference President.

On the opening day, the Conference adopted the agenda and established a Committee of the Whole, under the chairmanship of Mr. Salim, to undertake the preparation of the texts of a political declaration and a programme of action for the liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

Opening the Conference, the Secretary-General of the United Nations said that the issues before the Conference were fundamental, not only for the realization of the inalienable rights of the peoples of southern Africa but also for the preservation of international peace and security. The situation in Namibia was an unparalleled challenge to the authority of the United Nations, but its position on the issue was clear and unequivocal—the United Nations would not acquiesce in any move by South Africa which would compromise the unity and integrity of the territory.

On Zimbabwe, the Secretary-General said that the United Kingdom, as administering power, had the primary responsibility for re-establishing constitutional government based on the principle of majority rule. In that connexion, he was glad to note that the United Kingdom had renewed its efforts to accomplish this goal and that the leaders of the front-line African States were doing all in their power to find an acceptable solution.

Also addressing the Conference, President Samora Moises Machel of Mozambique said, among other things, that the aim of the Conference was to find the fastest and most efficient means of ending colonialism in Zimbabwe and Namibia. Peace and stability in the region, he said, could be achieved either by the military defeat of the colonialists or by their acceptance of the right of Zimbabwe and Namibia to total independence and full territorial integrity, based on the principle of equal rights for all citizens, regardless of race or colour.

To be successful, the President said, negotiations for independence had to take place between the colonial power and the patriotic forces, not the rebels. Those wishing to prevent such negotiations often justified their case by maintaining on the one hand that SWAPO—as the only nationalist movement in Namibia—was unrepresentative, while on the other claiming that the existence of many nationalist movements in Zimbabwe precluded negotiations. The reality, he said, was that the only obstacle to independence was colonialism.

During the general debate, statements were made by representatives of 80 Governments, by chairmen of United Nations bodies, by representatives of national liberation movements and observers attending the Conference, and by the special guests who had been invited to participate. The special guests were Prime Minister Michael Manley of Jamaica; Olof Palme, former Prime Minister of Sweden; Lord Caradon (United Kingdom); the Chairmen of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and of the Commission on Human Rights; and a representative of the Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries.

A committee consisting of the officers of the Conference and of the Committee of the Whole, together with representatives of OAU and of the liberation movements of Zimbabwe and Namibia, drafted a declaration and programme of action on Zimbabwe and Namibia. These were submitted to the Conference by the Rapporteur of the Committee of the Whole and were adopted by consensus on 21 May.

By the Declaration, the Conference affirmed that the development of the armed struggle, the isolation of the illegal minority regimes in southern Africa, and international support for the national liberation movements in Zimbabwe and Namibia were factors creating conditions for a negotiated settlement leading to majority rule and genuine independence in those territories. Despite the actions of South Africa, aided by certain other powers, the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia were on the threshold of freedom.

Referring to the liberation of Zimbabwe, the Conference proclaimed full support for the people of Zimbabwe in their struggle for independence and reaffirmed that there should be no independence before majority rule and that any settlement relating to the future of the territory had to be worked out with the full participation of the Zimbabwe people represented by their national liberation movement. It strongly condemned the illegal racist minority regime and denounced its brutal and repressive measures.

The Conference noted that all reasonable and meaningful proposals which would have secured a negotiated settlement for an independent Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule had been totally rejected by the illegal racist minority regime, so that the freedom fighters, confronted with this intransigence, had intensified the armed struggle.

The Conference noted that the development of the armed struggle and the concerted efforts of the international community were creating positive conditions for a negotiated settlement based on majority rule. It considered that the international community should intensify those efforts, and in this regard took note of the efforts of the United Kingdom to achieve a negotiated settlement with the objective of securing independence for Zimbabwe under majority rule in 1978.

The Conference considered that strict enforcement of existing mandatory sanctions was an important element in the collective effort of the international community, and it deplored the fact that some States continued to violate those sanctions and thus limited their effect on the economy of Zimbabwe.

The Conference strongly condemned South Africa for its support of the illegal regime. It also condemned the persistent acts of aggression committed by the illegal regime against Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia, through which, the Conference declared, the illegal regime sought both to intimidate the front-line States and to internationalize the conflict.

The Conference declared that the natural resources of Zimbabwe were the birthright of its people; the exploitation of those resources by the illegal regime, in association with foreign economic interests, violated the principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

Regarding Namibia, the Conference proclaimed its full support for the struggle of the people of Namibia under the leadership of SWAPO. It recognized that the Namibian people had been forced to resort to armed struggle after many years of trying to find a peaceful solution and it reaffirmed their right to decide on the means of their struggle, which had, with the efforts of the international community, created positive conditions for a negotiated settlement.

The Conference condemned the colonial and illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, and the policies of apartheid and homelands which had been extended to Namibia. It considered that all possible pressure should be brought to bear on the Pretoria regime to cease its barbaric repression of the Namibian people.

Recognizing Walvis Bay as an integral part of Namibia, the Conference rejected South Africa's attempts to separate it from the rest of Namibia with which it was inextricably linked. It also strongly condemned the increasing militarization of Namibia by South Africa, strongly denounced the Turnhalle tribal talks as a South African stratagem to perpetuate its ruthless colonial and racist policies, and reaffirmed that, in order that the people of Namibia should be enabled freely to determine their own future, free elections should be held urgently under the supervision and control of the United Nations in the whole of Namibia as one political entity.

The Conference solemnly reaffirmed the responsibility of the United Nations for Namibia until the territory attained full independence and it recognized the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority of Namibia until that independence was attained. It also solemnly proclaimed its support for the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, whereby the General Assembly initiated a comprehensive assistance programme for Namibia, both during its struggle for independence and afterwards.³ It condemned the plunder of Namibian natural resources by foreign economic interests and reaffirmed the right of the people to control their own natural resources. Finally, the Conference appealed to all United Nations Members and to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their assistance to SWAPO at this crucial and final stage in the emancipation of Africa.

In the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, the Conference among other things, called upon all Governments, specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to provide and increase political, material and moral support to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and their national liberation movements. The Conference urged that special assistance should be given to the front-line States bordering on Zimbabwe and Namibia to enable them to implement more effectively United Nations decisions supporting the liberation struggle and, in particular, to provide for the increasing number of refugees from Namibia and Zimbabwe.

Regarding Zimbabwe, the Conference called on Governments to refrain from any collaboration with the illegal regime, to observe strictly the arms embargo and to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, assembly, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories to be punishable as a criminal act.

The Conference further called on all Governments: to take measures against corporations and trade interests operating in violation of sanctions; to prevent companies registered in their territories from supplying oil, directly or indirectly, to the illegal regime; to take measures to ensure compliance with the sanctions by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction and to prohibit any form of collaboration by them with the illegal regime; and to take steps to prevent or discourage emigration to Zimbabwe by any individuals under their jurisdiction.

The Conference also called on Governments to discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the regime by, inter alia, invalidating passports for travel to Zimbabwe and refusing landing rights to airlines making stopover flights in Zimbabwe.

The Conference called on the United Nations to, among other things, reiterate its conviction that the scope of sanctions against the illegal regime had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the United Nations Charter⁴ and it asked the Security Council urgently to consider taking the measures necessary in that regard (see also p. 183).

Regarding Namibia, the Conference inter alia called upon Governments: to reject and denounce all manoeuvres by which South Africa might seek to impose its will on the Namibian people; to reject decisively all attempts by South Africa to dismember the territory, especially the design to annex Walvis Bay; and to refrain from recognizing any regime which South Africa might install in the territory.

The Conference called on Governments to respect fully the terms of Security Council resolutions relating to ending economic activity and consular representation in Namibia, and to implement the arms embargo against South Africa without reservation or exception.

The Conference also called on the Security Council to impose, under Chapter VII of the Charter,⁵ a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa (see also p. 205).

Reservations on the Maputo Declaration and the Programme of Action were made by the United States on behalf of five members of the Security Council (Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States). The United States said that these members, while endorsing the bulk of the two documents adopted by consensus, could not associate themselves with a number of the provisions therein because, by doing so, they might prejudice the results of negotiations taking place as a result of Security Council initiatives.

The United Kingdom, speaking on behalf of those members of EEC who were represented at the Conference (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom), said that the members of EEC approved the objectives of the Declaration and the Programme of Action. They committed themselves to use all their efforts to achieve early independence and majority rule in Zimbabwe and Namibia. Nevertheless, for various reasons, in some cases constitutional ones, they were unable to associate themselves with a number of the provisions of the two documents, since those provisions were inconsistent with statements they had made nationally and with previous positions they had adopted at the United Nations.

On 7 December 1977, the General Assembly, having considered the report of the Conference, adopted a resolution by the preambular part of which it reiterated the special responsibility of the United Nations to support the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

By the operative provisions, the Assembly approved the report of the Conference and invited all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization to accord priority to the full implementation of the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration and the Programme of Action.

The Assembly expressed its gratitude to the Government and people of Mozambique for their contribution to the success of the Conference, and its particular gratitude to OAU for its assistance and co-operation. It also expressed appreciation to those Governments which had contributed towards the cost of the Conference.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to give wide publicity to the results of the Conference and requested its Special Committee on granting independence and the Council for Namibia to follow closely the implementation of the Maputo Declaration and the Programme of Action.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/41, which was adopted without vote. The resolution was sponsored by 103 States. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Belgium, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, while supporting the resolution, repeated the reservations they had expressed at the Maputo Conference.

General aspects of implementation of the Declaration

System of examination

During 1977, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples continued to use the methods of work developed in preceding years and endorsed by the General Assembly. Under this procedure, it examined special questions relating to the implementation of the Declaration, as well as its implementation with regard to specific territories, the order of priority being decided on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee's working group in the light of the related developments.

To assist in its examination of conditions in each territory, the Special Committee normally has before it an information paper prepared by the United Nations Secretariat describing recent political and constitutional developments as well as current economic, social and educational conditions in the territory concerned. This information is derived from published sources and, in relevant cases, from information transmitted by administering powers under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations.⁶

In addition, the Special Committee requests the administering powers to submit information on political and constitutional developments in the territories they administer. The Committee hears statements from the administering powers, inviting those which are not members of the Committee to participate in its examination of the territories under their administration; similar invitations may be extended to other States which are not members of the Committee. Representatives of national liberation movements of colonial territories in Africa also participate in the proceedings of the Committee concerning their countries. Petitions are circulated and the Committee may decide to hear petitioners at its meetings. In addition, the Committee is empowered by the General Assembly to send visiting groups to territories for the purpose of obtaining first-hand information, and to hold meetings away from United Nations Headquarters whenever required for the effective discharge of its functions.

The Special Committee adopts its recommendations either in the form of a consensus formulated by its Chairman, or of a resolution adopted by vote. It establishes subsidiary bodies whenever it considers it necessary.

Each year, the Special Committee submits to the General Assembly a report containing an account of its consideration of the situation in each territory or group of territories coming under its purview, as well as of such special questions which it has decided to take up separately. It is on the basis of this report that the Assembly considers the implementation of the Declaration in general and with respect to individual territories.

Between 12 January and 20 September 1977, the Special Committee held 43 plenary meetings and its working group and subsidiary bodies a total of 43 meetings.

The Committee considered general aspects of the implementation of the Declaration and also its implementation with respect to the following territories: American Samoa, Antigua, Belize, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Brunei, the Cayman Islands, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Dominica, East Timor, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), French Somaliland (Djibouti), Gibraltar, the Gilbert Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Namibia, the New Hebrides, Pitcairn, St. Helena, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, the Solomon Islands, Southern Rhodesia, Tokelau, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Turks and Caicos Islands, Tuvalu, the United States Virgin Islands and Western Sahara. The Committee also carried out other tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly.

At the beginning of its 1977 session, the Special Committee decided to maintain its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance and to allocate to it consideration of the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. The Committee also decided to maintain its Sub-Committee on Small Territories.

During 1977, the Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance considered one communication which contained a request for a hearing concerning the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and decided to circulate the communication as a petition.

Consideration by the Special Committee

In carrying out the tasks entrusted to it by the General Assembly or arising from its own previous decisions, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples gave particular attention at its 1977 session to the major colonial problems. At the same time, the Committee, as in previous years, considered a number of general questions arising in connexion with the implementation of the Declaration and other related Assembly decisions, including the activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the Declaration in colonial territories (see subchapter below) and the military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration which were incompatible with the provisions of the relevant Assembly resolutions.

The Committee further continued its examination of the question of the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations (see subchapter immediately following), the question of sending visiting missions to colonial territories, and the question of the publicity to be given to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization.

In the context of General Assembly resolutions by which the Special Committee was authorized to meet elsewhere than at United Nations Headquarters whenever required for the effective discharge of its functions, the Committee held a meeting at Maputo, Mozambique, on 21 May 1977, at the end of the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia (see subchapter immediately preceding).

In conformity with relevant decisions of the General Assembly and in accordance with established practice, representatives of the national liberation movements of the colonial territories in Africa again were invited to participate as observers in the Special Committee's proceedings both in New York and away from Headquarters. They provided the Committee with information on the situation in their respective countries.

During the year, the Special Committee also paid close attention to the implementation of the Declaration with respect to colonial territories in other parts of the world, and in this context approved a series of recommendations and proposals in regard to specific territories which are described elsewhere in this chapter.

In the same context, the Special Committee, at the invitation of the United Kingdom, the administering power, dispatched in April 1977 a visiting mission, whose members were Fiji, Trinidad and Tobago, and Tunisia, to the Cayman Islands. Also in April, in response to an invitation by the United States, the administering power, the Special Committee dispatched a visiting mission consisting of four of its members—Fiji, Mali, Trinidad and Tobago, and Tunisia—to the United States Virgin Islands, in order to secure first-hand information regarding their future status. On the basis of the conclusions and recommendations of the missions, the Special Committee subsequently made a number of recommendations concerning the problems confronting the territories and their peoples (see pp. 865 and 879).

During its consideration of the question of sending visiting missions to colonial territories, the Special Committee had before it a report by its Chairman on his consultations with representatives of the administering powers. The Chairman reported that the representatives of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom had reiterated the readiness of their Governments to continue to provide the Committee with all relevant information on the territories and to participate in the work of the Committee. The Chairman also reported that the representative of the United States had reiterated the assurances of his Government that it would continue to co-operate with the Committee in the consideration of the territories under its administration. With regard to the receiving of visiting missions, the Chairman noted with satisfaction the positive attitude maintained by the Governments concerned.

On 2 August 1977, the Special Committee adopted a resolution by which it expressed appreciation for the co-operation extended to the United Nations by the Governments of Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States with regard to visiting missions. It stressed the need to continue to dispatch missions to colonial territories in order to facilitate the full, speedy and effective implementation of the Declaration, and called on the administering powers concerned to co-operate, or continue to co-operate, with the United Nations by permitting the access of visiting missions to the territories. The Committee requested the Chairman to continue his consultations with the administering powers.

On the question of military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration, the Special Committee, after consultations, adopted a decision by consensus on 3 August 1977.

By this decision, the Special Committee said it remained convinced that such activities and arrangements in a number of instances constituted an impediment to the implementation of the Declaration. It considered that such obstruction was most evident in the case of Southern Rhodesia and Namibia where the occupying racist minority regimes were employing armed force in an effort to maintain their domination and to oppose the struggle of the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements for freedom and independence.

The Committee therefore noted with regret that the colonial powers concerned had taken no steps to implement the Assembly's repeated request to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial territories and to refrain from establishing new ones. The Committee further observed that a particularly grave situation prevailed in southern Africa, where the illegal racist regimes had greatly increased their military expenditures and had expanded their armed forces. In this connexion, the Special Committee expressed its concern at the continuing co-operation of certain Western countries and other States with South Africa in supplying it with arms and military equipment as well as technology, including technology in the nuclear field capable of being utilized for military purposes.

The Committee appealed to all States to increase their moral and material assistance to the peoples of southern Africa and condemned all military activities and arrangements which denied to the peoples their right to self-determination, particularly the use of massive armed force by the illegal regimes in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia, and the military and political collaboration of South Africa with the regime in Southern Rhodesia. It also condemned South African military reinforcement in Namibia, which was seen as a means of consolidating its illegal occupation of the territory.

The Committee reiterated the appeal by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia (Maputo Conference) that the Security Council should impose a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa as an important step towards ensuring South Africa's compliance with United Nations resolutions and decisions on Namibia.

The Committee deplored the establishment and maintenance by colonial powers and their allies of military bases in the territories under their administration, and condemned all military activities and arrangements in such territories which were detrimental to the interests of those peoples, especially their right to self-determination and independence. It called on the colonial powers concerned to terminate these activities and eliminate the bases in accordance with United Nations decisions. In particular, the Committee deplored the continued alienation of land for military purposes, considering it detrimental to the economic development of the colonial territories.

The Committee requested the Secretary-General to undertake an intensified publicity campaign to inform world opinion of the facts concerning the military activities and arrangements in colonial territories.

On the question of publicity given to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, the Special Committee on 8 July endorsed recommendations of its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance, reiterating the importance of the widest possible dissemination by the United Nations of information on all aspects of the decolonization process, as a means of mobilizing world public opinion in support of the struggle against colonialism.

The Sub-Committee had recommended that the Office of Public Information should: place special emphasis on the struggle for liberation in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia; improve its contacts with the mass media in Western Europe and North America; intensify the activities of United Nations information centres, particularly in certain countries of Western Europe and North America; give greater publicity to the adverse effects of the activities of foreign economic interests and the military activities of colonial powers in colonial territories; establish closer co-operation with the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe and Namibia through the Organization of African Unity (OAU); continue to publicize widely the Maputo Conference and the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the Conference; and strengthen its relationship with the information pool of the non-aligned countries.

In another action, the Special Committee asked that Sub-Committee to consider, as a matter of urgency, the most effective ways of publicizing the work of the Maputo Conference.

The Special Committee took part in a public rally at the end of the Maputo Conference in connexion with the observance of the Week of Solidarity with the Colonial Peoples of Southern Africa Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Equal Rights. The rally was addressed by the Committee's Chairman and by other prominent participants in the Conference.

In connexion with its review of the list of territories to which the Declaration was applicable, the Special Committee decided on 2 September 1977 to adjourn until 1978 the debate on the item entitled "Special Committee decision of 7 September 1976 concerning Puerto Rico."⁷

Consideration by the General Assembly

General aspects of the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples were considered by the General Assembly at plenary meetings held between 5 and 7 December 1977, during which some 40 speakers explained the position of their respective Governments on the question.

The Assembly had before it the report of the Special Committee covering its work in 1977. Chapters of the Special Committee's report dealing with specific territories were allocated by the Assembly to its Fourth Committee for consideration and report.

The Assembly also had before it a letter of 5 October 1977, addressed to the Secretary-General, from the Permanent Representative of the USSR, in which he transmitted the text of a USSR statement concerning the implementation of the Declaration. In the statement, the USSR said that the system of violence and repression used as a matter of policy by the racist regimes in southern Africa had created a situation which posed a direct threat to international peace and security. The prolonged existence of those regimes, it continued, was due to the broad systematic support they were receiving from imperialist monopolies and a number of Western powers, chiefly members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The USSR reaffirmed its readiness to apply effective sanctions against the regimes in Southern Rhodesia and South Africa, as provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,⁸ and as proposed by certain African countries. It also said the time had come for the United Nations to set specific deadlines for the decolonization of all remaining colonial territories, for which the administering powers should be made responsible.

In conformity with previous General Assembly decisions and in accordance with established practice, representatives of the national liberation movements of colonial territories in Africa recognized by OAU participated as observers in the proceedings of the Fourth Committee relating to their respective countries.

On 5 December, speaking in his capacity as Chairman of the Special Committee, the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania said that the highlight of the Special Committee's work during 1977 had been the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

For the first time, he said, a broadly representative assembly, including 92 Member States and many international governmental and non-governmental organizations, had reached a consensus on an important and far-reaching declaration in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia. The Declaration adopted by the Conference had recognized that the development of the armed struggle, the isolation of the minority regimes and the support of the international community for the national liberation movements were factors in the creation of conditions where settlements could be negotiated leading to majority rule and genuine independence for the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

The Chairman condemned those countries which were still continuing to give covert and sometimes overt support to the minority regimes in southern Africa and emphasized the need to support not only the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia but also the Governments of Angola, Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia, which were playing their part in resisting aggression by the colonial racist regimes.

It was essential to find further ways and means of bringing pressure to bear on the minority regimes, the Chairman added, and also to provide all moral and material assistance in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

Turning to other aspects of the colonial situation, the Chairman referred to the problems of the smaller territories in the Caribbean and the Asian and Pacific regions.

⁷ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 690.

⁸ For text of Chapter VII of the Charter, see APPENDIX II.

Measurable progress had been made during the year, the Chairman said, but there was still* a long way to go before the responsibilities of the United Nations were fully discharged.

During the debate, the majority of the speakers stressed the gravity of the situation in southern Africa; some, including Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Romania and Yugoslavia, considered it a serious threat to international peace and security. Ghana, the Niger, Pakistan, Romania, Tunisia and the USSR said they recognized the legitimate right of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia to resort to armed struggle.

Equatorial Guinea, Ghana, India, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR were among those States which considered that sanctions against Southern Rhodesia should be strengthened and extended, while Ghana, Nigeria and the USSR, among others, thought that the means provided for under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter should be employed to extend economic sanctions to South Africa.

Afghanistan, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nigeria, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yugoslavia were among those which considered that one of the main obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration in southern Africa continued to be the direct or indirect support given to the colonial and racist regimes by foreign companies engaged in exploiting the resources of the territories concerned.

The Maputo Conference and the Declaration adopted there were welcomed by Australia, Madagascar, Pakistan and the Syrian Arab Republic, among others. Zambia said that the Conference was an example of the kind of productive co-operation that was necessary between the various organs and institutions of the United Nations, whose tasks were interrelated and inseparable. Support for the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia had meant postponing development plans in Zambia, and the country had suffered attacks by the racist minority regimes. Zambia therefore had a right to demand that the international community should pay its share of the price for liberation.

Members also referred to colonial territories in other parts of the world. India and Tunisia, for instance, considered that the United Nations should examine ways to take a more active role in aiding those territories which were so small as to be incapable of independence on their own. Mexico spoke of the economic dependency of newly emergent States. Ghana did not consider that all foreign investment in colonial territories was necessarily harmful, but that harm ensued where foreign investors extorted unreasonable concessions from the people. The Syrian Arab Republic thought the administering powers of the non-self-governing territories should do more to ensure the sovereignty of the peoples over their natural resources and warned of a new form of colonialism which was emerging through the activities of multinational corporations.

A number of Members, of which Mauritania was one, commended the progress achieved in some of the non-self-governing territories, while Australia considered that the Special Committee, in developing techniques for dealing with the complexities of small territories, had shown an understanding of their needs and sympathy with their wishes.

On 7 December 1977, the General Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 32/42, took a series of decisions on the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed its 1960 resolution by which it had adopted the Declaration, together with all its other resolutions on decolonization. It called upon the administering powers to take all the necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

The Assembly again affirmed that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid, the exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources, and the waging of colonial wars to suppress the national liberation movements of the colonial territories in Africa—was incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁹ and the Declaration on the granting of independence and posed a serious threat to international peace and security. It reaffirmed its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of those instruments.

Further, the Assembly reaffirmed its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal.

The Assembly approved the report of the Special Committee covering its work during 1977, including the programme of work the Committee envisaged for 1978. It also reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration and the Programme of Action as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid (held at Lagos, Nigeria, from 22 to 26 August 1977—see p. 148).

The Assembly called upon all States, in particular the administering powers, and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to give effect to the recommendations contained in the reports of the Special Committee and of the Maputo Conference for the speedy implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations.

It condemned the intensified activities of foreign economic and other interests which were impeding the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the colonial territories, particularly in southern Africa, and strongly condemned all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with the Government of South Africa. It called upon all States concerned to cease forthwith all such collaboration.

The Assembly also requested all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of South Africa and from the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia until they had restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. It called upon all States to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those regimes.

The Assembly called upon the colonial powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial territories and to refrain from establishing new ones. It also urged all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe and, with respect to the other territories, requested the administering powers, in consultation with the Governments of the territories under their administration, to take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in strengthening the economies of those territories.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration in all territories and, in particular: to formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism; to make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial territories likely to threaten international peace and security; to continue to examine compliance by Member States with the Declaration and with other resolutions on decolonization, particularly those relating to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia; to continue to pay particular attention to the small territories, including the sending of visiting missions as appropriate, and to recommend to the Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable their populations to exercise their right to self-determination, freedom and independence; and to take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization, in the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly as concerned the oppressed peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe.

The Assembly then called upon the administering powers to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and, in particular, to permit the access of visiting missions to the territories in order to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants.

General Assembly resolution 32/42 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 134 to 0, with 9 abstentions, on the proposal of 77 States. (For list of sponsors, text of resolution and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Explaining its decision to abstain on the resolution, the United States said it had not voted against the resolution because of the importance it attached to the policy of helping to bring about internationally acceptable solutions to the problems of southern Africa; nevertheless the United States had reservations on several paragraphs. In particular, the resolution did not sufficiently recognize the right of the people in colonial territories to determine their own status. The United States regarded the decision of the Special Committee to take up the questions of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and of Puerto Rico as being particularly inappropriate, since neither fell within the jurisdiction of the General Assembly or the Special Committee.

Further, the United States could not agree that all contacts with South Africa were to be condemned. Nor could it accept the assertion that military bases in non-self-governing territories necessarily interfered with the right to self-determination.

Recalling the reservations it had already expressed about the Maputo Declaration and the Programme of Action, the United States said that the resolution did not adequately convey the principle that self-determination should be sought by peaceful means wherever possible. The politicization of the specialized agencies was also to be deplored.

The United Kingdom said that it would abstain because of its commitment to peaceful solutions in southern Africa, while Belgium explained a similar intention because it did not believe that it was in the interests of the people of South Africa to be cut off from all contacts with the outside world.

Despite their positive vote, a number of Members expressed reservations on certain aspects of the resolution. Finland (speaking also for Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), Ireland and Italy felt that the resolution could be interpreted as endorsing the use of violence, while Canada could not accept that normal political and economic relations with South Africa necessarily constituted collaboration. Ireland also felt that any decision to withhold all assistance from South Africa was outside the competence of the General Assembly.

Italy rejected the assertion that colonial status was in all cases a threat to international peace and security and felt that the language of the resolution regarding military and economic activities in colonial territories was inadmissible because it made no distinction between cases, a view that was supported by Canada and Ireland. Australia and Portugal particularly objected to references to military installations in the resolution, while Australia also would have preferred the reference to nuclear collaboration with South Africa to have been confined to nuclear weapons only.

Viet Nam qualified its approval of the report of the Special Committee on the ground that one paragraph appeared to imply a certain recognition of American military bases in Guam, a recognition which Viet Nam had repeatedly rejected.

On 7 December 1977, the General Assembly also took decisions on the question of dissemination of information on decolonization. Among other things, the Assembly approved the chapter of the report of the Special Committee relating to publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization and reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration and the Programme of Action as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid.

The Assembly reaffirmed the importance of effecting the widest possible dissemination of information on the evils and dangers of colonialism, on the determined efforts of the colonial peoples to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence and on the assistance being provided by the international community towards the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in all its forms.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, having regard to the suggestions of the Special Committee and of the Maputo Conference, to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization and, inter alia: to continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles relating to the problems of decolonization and, in particular, to continue to publish Objective: Justice and other publications, special articles and studies, and to select from among them appropriate material for wider dissemination by means of reprints in various languages; to seek the full co-operation of the administering powers concerned in the discharge of the tasks referred to above; to intensify the activities of all information centres, particularly those located in Western Europe; to maintain a close working relationship with OAU by holding periodic consultations and by systematically exchanging relevant information with that organization; and to enlist the support of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization in the dissemination of the relevant information.

The Assembly invited all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of the information referred to above.

The decisions were taken when the General Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 32/43 on the proposal of 82 States. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Also on 7 December, by resolution 32/41, the General Assembly approved the report of the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia. The Assembly invited all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, as well as interested non-governmental organizations, to give priority to the implementation of the Maputo Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia. (See also p. 832; for text of resolution 32/41, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

On the same date, the Assembly adopted a resolution—32/14—concerning the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to give maximum publicity to the Declaration and to the struggle being waged by oppressed peoples for the realization of their self-determination and national independence. The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Taking into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular resolution 31/143 of 17 December 1976, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Condemning the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans, in Namibia by the Government of South Africa through its persistent, illegal occupation of the international Territory, and in Zimbabwe by the illegal racist minority régime,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need to take all the necessary measures to bring about the speedy and complete elimination of the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly with respect to Namibia and Zimbabwe where efforts to perpetuate illegal racist minority rule have brought untold suffering and bloodshed to the peoples of those Territories,

Strongly deprecating the policies of those States which, in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, continue to collaborate with the Government of South Africa and with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, thus perpetuating their domination of the peoples in the Territories concerned,

Aware that the success of the national liberation struggle and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in Africa,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee with a view to securing the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting also with satisfaction the co-operation and active participation of the administering Powers concerned in the relevant work of the Special Committee, as well as the continued readiness of the Governments concerned to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Reiterating its conviction that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples in colonial Territories will be achieved most expeditiously by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular in Namibia and Zimbabwe, and by the speediest possible complete elimination of the presence of the racist minority regimes therefrom,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 1514(XV) and 2621 (XXV) and all other resolutions on decolonization and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all the necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid, the exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources, and the waging of colonial wars to suppress the national liberation movements of the colonial Territories in Africa—is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a serious threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the guiding principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1977, including the programme of work envisaged for 1978;

6. Reaffirms the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid;

7. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to give effect to the recommendations contained in the reports of the Special Committee and of the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for the speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

8. Condemns the intensified activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples with respect to the colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa;

9. Strongly condemns all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with the Government of South Africa and calls upon all States concerned to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

10. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of South Africa and from the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia until they restore to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the Territories by those regimes;

11. Calls upon the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones;

12. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe and, with respect to the other Territories, requests the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, to take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

13. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) in all Territories which have not yet attained independence and, in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

(b) To make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial Territories that are likely to threaten international peace and security;

(c) To continue to examine the compliance of Member States with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and with other relevant resolutions on decolonization, particularly those relating to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia;

(d) To continue to pay particular attention to the small Territories, including the sending of visiting missions thereto, as appropriate, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination, freedom and independence;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization, in the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and in the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly as concerns the oppressed peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe;

14. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and, in particular, to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories in order to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the various resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

Resolution 32/43, as proposed by 82 powers, A/32/L.37 and Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 7 December 1977, meeting 96.

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question of publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Taking into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Reiterating the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the aims and purposes of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and mindful of the pressing need for taking all possible steps to acquaint world public opinion with all aspects of the problems of decolonization with a view to assisting effectively the peoples of the colonial Territories to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence,

Aware of the increasingly important role being played in the widespread dissemination of relevant information by a number of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization,

2. Reaffirms the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid;

3. Reaffirms the importance of effecting the widest possible dissemination of information on the evils and dangers of colonialism, on the determined efforts of the colonial peoples to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence and on the assistance being provided by the international community towards the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in all its forms;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, having regard to the suggestions of the Special Committee and of the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization and, inter alia:

(a) To continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles relating to the problems of decolonization and, in particular, to continue to publish the periodical Objective: Justice and other publications, special articles and studies and to select from among them appropriate material for wider dissemination by means of reprints in various languages;

(e) To enlist the support of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization in the dissemination of the relevant information;

(f) To report to the Special Committee on the measures taken in the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Invites all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of the information referred to in paragraph 3 above;

6. Requests the Special Committee to follow the implementation of the present resolution and report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and other associated international institutions

Consideration by the Special Committee

In 1977, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples examined the question of the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. The Committee considered the question at meetings held between 1 and 8 August 1977.

The Special Committee had before it two reports by the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with an Assembly resolution of 29 November 1976,¹⁰ containing replies on implementation of the Declaration from specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations. Replies were received from the International Labour Organisation (ILO); the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO); the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); the World Health Organization (WHO); the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank); the International Monetary Fund (IMF); the Universal Postal Union; the World Meteorological Organization; the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO); the International Atomic Energy Agency; the United Nations Industrial Development Organization; the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF); the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR); the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); and the World Food Programme (WFP) (see below).

During its discussions, the Committee took into account the views expressed by representatives of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the national liberation movements of the colonial territories concerned who participated in its work during the year and in the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo, Mozambique, in May 1977 (see subchapter above).

The Special Committee also had before it a report of its Chairman on his consultations with the President of the Economic and Social Council concerning measures to co-ordinate the policies and activities of the specialized agencies (see below), as well as a report of its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance containing the Sub-Committee's conclusions and recommendations on the question, together with an account of the consultations held by the Sub-Committee during its 1977 session with representatives of OAU, the national liberation movements concerned, and ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, UNDP and UNICEF.

On 8 August, the Committee adopted without objection a resolution by which, among other things, it endorsed the observations and suggestions contained in the report of its Chairman (see section below) and approved the report of the Sub-Committee.

Reaffirming that recognition by the United Nations of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve independence entailed the extension of all moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements, the Committee reiterated the appeal contained in the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, which had emerged from the Maputo Conference, to redouble assistance to the peoples of those two territories.

Expressing its appreciation to certain specialized agencies for their co-operation, the Committee expressed concern that the assistance rendered to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, was far from adequate in relation to needs. It regretted that the World Bank and IMF had not taken the necessary measures towards the full implementation of the Declaration, and it requested the specialized agencies and other international institutions to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples in Africa.

The Committee recommended that the organizations concerned should initiate or broaden contacts with the colonial peoples, in consultation with OAU, and review their procedures on formulating assistance programmes and projects. It urged the executive heads of the specialized agencies to submit to their governing bodies concrete proposals on programmes of assistance, formulated in co-operation with OAU.

The Committee requested the specialized agencies and other organizations to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia and to discontinue all support to them until they restored the right to self-determination and independence to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

Noting with satisfaction the arrangements made by several organizations to enable representatives of the national liberation movements to participate in their proceedings, the Committee called on other organizations to follow that example. It requested the General Assembly to recommend that all Governments intensify their efforts to ensure that the specialized agencies fully and effectively implemented the Declaration on the granting of independence and other United Nations resolutions, according priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to peoples in the colonial territories and to their national liberation movements.

After the Special Committee had adopted the resolution, China reiterated its objection to the fact that the World Bank and IMF continued to pursue a two-China policy in defiance of the General Assembly's decision of 25 October 1971.¹¹

Consideration by Economic and Social Council

The implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations was considered by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular 1977 session held in July/August.

The Council had before it the report of the Secretary-General containing replies received from specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations concerning their actions in implementing the Declaration (see section below).

It also had before it a report of the Council President on his consultations with the Chairman of the Special Committee concerning the co-ordination of the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system.

In his report, the Council President stated that he had reviewed with the Chairman the results of a meeting of representatives of the agencies, the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the general secretariat of OAU, held in Paris on 23 March 1977. The two presiding officers noted that the meeting had provided useful guidance to the agencies on the priorities and procedures of OAU concerning assistance to the national liberation movements in Africa, and that it had clarified a number of issues of mutual concern.

The President said that the Chairman had informed him of the consultations held by the Committee's Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance, and also of the consultations which had taken place at the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia between a number of specialized agencies and organizations on the one hand, and OAU and the national liberation movements on the other.

The two presiding officers agreed that a number of important points directly relevant to the work of the specialized agencies had arisen from the Conference. Among other things, the agencies and institutions had been asked: to give priority to the formulation of assistance programmes for the peoples of southern Africa; to assist the United Nations Council for Namibia in the discharge of its mandate; and to help the front-line States, particularly with assistance for refugees. The United Nations had also been asked to consider the possibility of establishing a University of Namibia, with the assistance of UNESCO.

The two presiding officers agreed that the intensification of the independence struggle in Namibia and Zimbabwe had created an urgent need for all forms of assistance. After expressing satisfaction that several agencies and organizations, UNDP in particular, had expanded the volume and scope of their assistance, they stressed that the support of the major funding organizations within the United Nations system, including the World Bank and IMF, as well as UNDP, was essential in securing the flow of funds required for the preparation of extended programmes of assistance. They also considered that those agencies and organizations that had thus far depended mainly on extrabudgetary sources for the financing of assistance projects should endeavour to make provision for them in their regular budgets.

The presiding officers welcomed the closer contacts established by the agencies and organizations within the United Nations system with the national liberation movements, OAU and the Council for Namibia, and in particular the arrangements made for the participation in their meetings of representatives of the liberation movements as well as the admission of the Council for Namibia to associate membership in some agencies.

Noting that these closer contacts had resulted in increased assistance by the agencies and organizations, the presiding officers expressed the view that the practice of dispatching periodic missions, in consultation with OAU, should be continued so that the needs of the peoples concerned could be identified in terms of specific assistance programmes and could receive appropriate priority. They particularly welcomed the increased assistance provided by a number of agencies and organizations to the United Nations Institute for Namibia, including the award by UNDP in 1976 of $3.73 million to assist in financing its budgetary requirements, as well as the contacts established between the Director of the Institute and a number of agencies.

The two presiding officers noted with satisfaction that there had been an international response to the call for increased assistance made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees following a large increase in the number of refugees from Zimbabwe and Namibia. The number of those refugees, estimated at 51,000 by June 1977, and the needs of South African student refugees, had led the High Commissioner to seek $16 million for aid in 1977. The presiding officers also noted that between 1974 and 1976 WFP had committed about $26.7 million in food aid to colonial and former colonial countries in Africa.

The two presiding officers, after noting the measures adopted by a number of agencies to withhold all assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, expressed the hope that such measures would be strengthened so as to bring about the maximum isolation of those regimes, in keeping with the Maputo Declaration.

On 3 August 1977, the Council adopted a resolution by which, inter alia, it endorsed the observations and suggestions contained in its President's report. The Council reaffirmed that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples entailed moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements, and it endorsed the appeal contained in the Maputo Declaration to redouble assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

The Council expressed its concern that the assistance extended by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, was far from adequate and it urged the organizations concerned to do everything possible to increase assistance to the peoples of those territories and their national liberation movements.

The Council requested the agencies to withhold assistance to the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, to discontinue all support to them until they restored to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal domination of the territories by those regimes.

The Council noted with satisfaction arrangements made by some specialized agencies and United Nations institutions to include representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by OAU in their deliberations and urged the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations to formulate proposals for specific programmes of assistance to the peoples in the colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

The Council drew the attention of the Special Committee to its resolution, and requested the Council President to continue his consultations with the Special Committee's Chairman.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2101(LXIII), which was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee. In the Committee, the text was approved, without vote, on 21 July 1977, on a proposal by Yugoslavia, acting on behalf of the members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

Consideration by the General Assembly

During its 1977 regular session, the General Assembly discussed the role of the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in implementing the Declaration on the granting of independence.

The Assembly had before it two reports of the Secretary-General outlining the measures he had taken to assist the agencies and institutions concerned to work out appropriate measures to implement the Assembly's instructions of 29 November 1976,¹² and the replies which had been before the Special Committee and the Council on activities of specialized agencies and international institutions in implementing the Declaration. The Secretary-General reported on, among other things, assistance the agencies had given to national liberation movements in Africa.

The International Labour Organisation had reported that it had established contact with the African National Council of Zimbabwe (ANC (Zimbabwe)) and the United Nations Institute for Namibia concerning the training of individuals from those territories. It was also sending a high-level mission to southern Africa to discuss with OAU and the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia possible ways of assisting the liberation movements.

The Food and Agriculture Organization had earmarked funds under its Technical Co-operation Programme to assist refugees from South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe. It was also considering a request from ANC (Zimbabwe) for training scholarships in agriculture and for the provision of agricultural equipment and food. The World Food Programme had provided $26.7 million in aid between 1974 and 1976 to Angola, Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique for emergency relief, for the feeding of vulnerable groups and for food-for-work rural development projects. Since being authorized to send assistance to peoples still under colonial domination, WFP had also begun operations in the territories concerned.

The World Health Organization had reported that it had been very active in the implementation of the Declaration, particularly with respect to the newly independent States in Africa, in immunization programmes and disease control, primary health care services, environmental health, training and provision of expert equipment and supplies. It was currently serving as executing agency for the establishment of a health training centre in the United Republic of Tanzania for national liberation movements, a joint UNDP/WHO/UNICEF project.

The World Bank had been in communication with officials of the United Nations Institute for Namibia to discuss ways of providing assistance to train Namibians in economic management and in technical fields. It had kept in close contact with UNHCR officials concerning the situation of refugees and stood ready to consider loans to its member States harbouring refugees.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization had contributed $220,000 towards the education of refugees from southern Africa in 1977-1978. It had supported literacy campaigns conducted by the national liberation movements in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, and had published a number of studies on, among other subjects, the effects of apartheid on culture and education. It had also contributed to the travel and subsistence expenses of representatives of national liberation movements invited to a number of meetings and conferences in 1976 and 1977.

In February 1977, the Council of Ministers of OAU approved a Co-operation Agreement between WIPO and OAU proposed by the executive heads of the two organizations. The Agreement entered into force on 24 May 1977. Discussions were currently taking place in the light of this Agreement on proposals for assistance to colonial peoples in Africa and their liberation movements and on observer status for those movements.

The Universal Postal Union had reported on its continuing programme of missions to newly independent countries to help plan the development of postal services and on a proposal for a programme of courses for nationals of Namibia, Zimbabwe and South Africa, in co-operation with the United Nations.

The United Nations Children's Fund had reported that it had provided about $1.7 million in assistance since 1974 to people under the care of liberation movements in southern Africa—mostly drugs, medical supplies, vaccines, health transport, blankets, tents, teaching materials and training. Direct aid worth $9.5 million to newly independent countries of Africa was recommended for 1977-1979, and $1.2 million was recommended for aid in 1977 and 1978 to children and mothers of liberation movements in host countries.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees had reported that in 1976 UNHCR had provided over $850,000 for assistance to refugees from Zimbabwe and Namibia. The money was used for providing emergency relief, farm equipment, educational programmes and the construction of dispensaries and schools.

The United Nations Development Programme had reported that in 1976 its Governing Council had authorized the UNDP Administrator to spend up to $6 million on assistance to national liberation movements recognized by OAU. The money was to be expended on educational and development projects, including a self-help housing project being developed by the South West Africa People's Organization on its farm in Zambia.

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization had reported that, in co-operation with OAU, it planned to organize training programmes in industrial management for individuals from Zimbabwe and Namibia.

A communication of 28 October 1977 from the World Bank stated that the Assistant Director of the United Nations Institute for Namibia had visited the Bank's Economic Development Institute in Washington D.C., and that talks were taking place concerning co-operation between the two institutes.

The Chairman of the Special Committee transmitted to the Assembly the chapter of his Committee's report on the question and the report of the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia; the Assembly also had before it a report of the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos, Nigeria, from 22 to 26 August 1977 (see p. 148).

On 28 November 1977, the Assembly adopted a resolution by which, in the preambular part, it took into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia adopted by the Maputo Conference, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the Lagos Conference.

The Assembly also expressed its conviction that the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for self-determination and independence had entered its final and most crucial stage and that consequently it was incumbent upon the entire international community to intensify concerted action in support of the peoples of those territories and their national liberation movements. Deeply conscious of the critical need of the peoples of those and other colonial territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the United Nations-associated international institutions, the Assembly reaffirmed the responsibility of those agencies and organizations to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence and other relevant United Nations resolutions.

It noted with concern that, although there had been progress in the extension of assistance to refugees from the colonial territories in Africa, the action taken by the organizations concerned continued to be far from adequate, and expressed its hope that closer contacts and consultations between those organizations and OAU and the national liberation movements would help to overcome procedural and other difficulties which had impeded or delayed implementation of some assistance programmes.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly, inter alia, approved the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the question and reaffirmed that the recognition by United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entailed, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and to their national liberation movements.

The Assembly reiterated the appeal contained in the Maputo Declaration to redouble assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and expressed its appreciation to certain specialized agencies and organizations which had continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations in the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence. It also expressed concern that the assistance extended by the specialized agencies and other organizations to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their liberation movements, was far from adequate in relation to their needs.

The Assembly regretted that the World Bank and IMF had not taken the necessary measures towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and deplored, in particular, that these agencies continued to maintain co-operation with the colonialist racist minority regime of South Africa. It urged the executive heads of the two agencies to draw the attention of their governing organs to the resolution with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia.

The Assembly requested the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations to render or to continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples in Africa struggling for their liberation. In that connexion, it recommended that they should initiate or broaden contacts with the colonial peoples in consultation with OAU, review their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes, and make their procedures more flexible so as to be able to help the colonial peoples without delay to exercise their right to self-determination and independence. To further this end, the Assembly urged that the organizations include the question as a separate item on the agenda of their governing bodies.

The Assembly again urged the organizations in the system to take all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, and to discontinue all support to them until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. It urged them to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those regimes.

The Assembly noted with satisfaction the arrangements made by several of the agencies to enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by OAU to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries and called upon those agencies and organizations which had not done so to follow this example.

The Assembly recommended that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the agencies and organizations in the system of which they were members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration and other resolutions, according priority to providing emergency assistance to peoples in the colonial territories and to their national liberation movements.

In order to facilitate such action, the Assembly urged the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to formulate and submit to their respective governing and legislative organs, as a matter of priority and in co-operation with OAU, concrete proposals for the full implementation of relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples in colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to assist those organizations in working out measures to implement the resolution, and it requested the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee, appropriate measures for co-ordinating the implementation policies and activities of those agencies and organizations.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/36, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, by a recorded vote of 139 to 0, with 4 abstentions. In the Fourth Committee, where a recorded vote had been requested by the Syrian Arab Republic, the text was approved by 130 to 0, with 4 abstentions. The resolution was sponsored by 50 States.

At the time of the vote in the Fourth Committee, the United States said it had reservations about calling on the agencies to extend all material assistance to liberation movements and also about the references to the World Bank and IMF. Such references, it said, were inconsistent not only with the agreements concluded between the United Nations and the agencies but also with the basic instruments governing the activities of several United Nations organizations.

Austria, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Greece, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Liberia, New Zealand and Portugal shared the misgivings on this provision, despite their vote in favour. Australia said that if the United Nations wanted the World Bank and IMF to withhold co-operation from South Africa, the matter should be pursued collectively within the framework and regulations of those organizations. Supporting this view, the Federal Republic of Germany said that the attempt to politicize the specialized agencies undermined their effectiveness and did nothing to promote the cause of decolonization. Chile also considered that the General Assembly lacked competence to impose sanctions against a Member State; that was the Security Council's prerogative.

France believed that the specialized agencies should not undertake work outside their own particular spheres of competence, while Denmark—speaking also on behalf of Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden—and the United Kingdom thought that the specialized agencies, in carrying out their work, should preserve their universal character, otherwise practical and constitutional difficulties would arise.

The USSR said that it could not accept the argument that institutions were bound by their articles of agreement to work with the racist regimes of southern Africa. What should be a matter of concern was not the politicization of the agencies but the failure of some agencies to carry out the wishes of the United Nations.

Introducing the draft resolution, Bulgaria said that the activities of the specialized agencies were still inadequate to meet the needs of the peoples of the non-self-governing territories, but it was hoped that closer contacts between them and OAU would make it possible to overcome procedural and other difficulties which had impeded or delayed certain assistance programmes. The efforts of certain agencies, such as UNESCO, FAO, WHO and ILO, had achieved results, but the World Bank and IMF, bodies with considerable resources, had manifested a totally unjustifiable attitude. Poland expressed a similar view.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council, and the annual report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination for 1976/77 concerning the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,"

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions adopted by United Nations bodies on this subject, including in particular General Assembly resolution 31/30 of 29 November 1976 and Council resolution 2015(LXI) of 3 August 1976,

Taking into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977,

Convinced that the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for self-determination and independence has entered its final and most crucial stage and that it is therefore incumbent upon the entire international community to undertake concerted international action in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and their national liberation movements for the attainment of this goal,

Deeply conscious of the critical need of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and of other colonial territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule and in their efforts to consolidate their national independence, tence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, particularly in the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements,

Noting with concern that, although progress has been maintained in the extension of assistance to refugees from the colonial territories in Africa, the action taken hitherto by the Organizations and agencies concerned in the provision of assistance to the peoples of the territories through their national liberation movements still remains inadequate to meet the urgent and growing needs of those peoples,

Hopeful that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and United Nations institutions and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements of the colonial territories will contribute to overcoming procedural and other difficulties which have impeded or delayed the implementation of some assistance programmes,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance extended by it to the organizations within the United Nations system in connexion with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies,

5. Expresses its concern that the assistance extended so far by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements, is still far from adequate in relation to the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

6. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and Namibia, to do everything possible as a matter of urgency to render increased assistance to the peoples of those territories and their national liberation movements in their struggle for liberation, and in particular, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to work out and implement, as expeditiously as possible, concrete programmes of assistance within their fields of competence, with the active collaboration of the national liberation movements concerned;

7. Urges further those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress made by those organizations in their implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the other relevant United Nations resolutions;

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,"

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, contained in its resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, as well as all other relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council on this subject, including in particular Assembly resolution 31/30 of 29 November 1976,

Having examined the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as the related report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Taking into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Convinced that the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for self-determination and independence has entered its final and most crucial stage and that it is therefore incumbent upon the entire international community to intensify concerted action in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and their national liberation movements for the attainment of this goal,

Deeply conscious of the critical need of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and of other colonial Territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule and in their efforts to consolidate their national independence,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly in the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements,

Noting with concern that, although there has been progress in the extension of assistance to refugees from the colonial Territories in Africa, the actions taken hitherto by the organizations concerned in providing assistance to the peoples of the Territories through their national liberation movements continue to remain inadequate to meet the urgent needs of these peoples,

Expressing its confident hope that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements of the colonial Territories will help to overcome procedural and other difficulties which have impeded or delayed the implementation of some assistance programmes,

Welcoming with satisfaction the report of the mission dispatched by the United Nations Council for Namibia to specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system with headquarters in Europe and the recommendations contained therein, to which reference is made in the Maputo Declaration,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance extended by it to the organizations within the United Nations system in connexion with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Mindful of the necessity to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in the implementation of the various decisions relating to decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the organizations within the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

3. Reiterates the appeal contained in the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia to the international community to redouble its assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and their national liberation movements during this crucial phase in their struggle for freedom and independence;

Expresses its concern that the assistance extended so far by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements is far from adequate in relation to the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

6. Regrets that the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund have not yet taken the necessary measures towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, deplores in particular the fact that those agencies continue to maintain co-operation with the colonialist racist minority regime of South Africa and urges the executive heads of those agencies to draw the particular attention of their governing organs to the present resolution with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial Territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia;

7. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to render or continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples in Africa struggling for their liberation from colonial rule;

8. Requests once again the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue to provide all moral and material assistance to the newly independent and emerging States;

9. Recommends that the organizations concerned should initiate or broaden contacts with the colonial peoples in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, review their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects and introduce greater flexibility in these procedures so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

13. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connexion, should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to peoples in the colonial Territories and to their national liberation movements;

14. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, having regard to the recommendations contained in paragraph 9 above, to formulate with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples in the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the present resolution and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and other organizations, a report on the action taken since the circulation of his previous report in implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, including the present resolution;

16. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee, appropriate measures for co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

17. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine this question and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests

Consideration by the Special Committee

In 1977, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples continued to examine the activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the Declaration in Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and all other territories under colonial domination, and impeding efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa.

The matter was discussed at meetings held between 17 June and 2 August 1977, at which the Committee had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat containing information on the activities of foreign economic and other interests in Southern Rhodesia, Namibia, Bermuda, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the Cayman Islands. The Committee also took into account the Maputo Declaration adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held in May 1977 (see subchapter above).

During the debate, a number of Committee members noted with regret that certain States with economic interests in colonial territories had continued to disregard United Nations decisions calling for an end to those activities. Bulgaria, for example, said that the actions of foreign monopolies continued to be the main impediment to the achievement of independence by colonial countries and peoples. Foreign interests had in recent years been able to raise their level of investment in Southern Rhodesia, while denying that they controlled such investment. In Namibia, the increase in foreign investment was directly affecting the political future of that country.

India, among others, considered that in both countries foreign economic interests had continued to defy United Nations decisions and resolutions; in particular, they had made a mockery of mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. Cuba commented that Southern Rhodesia had been able to continue hostilities against the patriots because of the support it received from major oil companies.

Several countries, including the USSR, considered that the prime responsibility lay with a number of powers which refused to implement General Assembly recommendations that they should control the activities of organizations and individuals under their jurisdiction. Proof of this was that in Namibia, for example, South Africa had in 1976 been able to obtain 1 billion rand of foreign investment. Sierra Leone said that in Southern Rhodesia the United Kingdom claimed that no British firms had operated there since 1974; however, it was well known that parent companies in Britain continued to invest capital in that country through South African subsidiaries. For instance, of the 74 companies in the insurance industry in Southern Rhodesia in 1974, 29 had their headquarters in South Africa, 25 in the United Kingdom, 12 in Southern Rhodesia and eight in other (unnamed) territories.

Foreign exploitation of mineral resources in colonial territories was a prime cause of continuing dependence, in the view of some members. China observed that in Southern Rhodesia, 80 to 90 per cent of mining enterprises were owned by Western capital, while in Namibia such capital was engaged in exploiting the abundant resources of copper, lead, zinc, uranium, chromium and diamonds. Bulgaria said that since 1965, more than £100 million of foreign capital had been invested in mining in Southern Rhodesia, a clear sign that there had been no decrease in the activities of foreign economic interests.

Exploitation of the people in colonial territories also concerned Committee members. Yugoslavia commented that while more than 25 per cent of the gross national product of Namibia flowed out of the country, the workers themselves continued to receive low wages. The Syrian Arab Republic maintained that a marked wage differential between whites and Africans applied to Southern Rhodesia as well as Namibia; in both territories high salaries were given to Europeans in order to encourage white immigration and force blacks to seek employment elsewhere.

Referring to similar disparities in South Africa, the United Republic of Tanzania rejected the argument that economic ties and trade with South Africa helped to raise the standard of living of the African people. In fact, it meant greater enslavement and exploitation of the black majority, who were merely used as cheap labour, and who were without civil, political and trade union rights. The creation of bantustans was designed to ensure that the system was perpetuated.

Exploitation was not confined to southern Africa, in the view of several members. The USSR said that there was no doubt that such exploitation continued in the numerous small colonial and dependent territories scattered throughout the world; such exploitation exhausted the natural resources of such territories and provided enormous profits, enabling foreign interests to dominate economic life and prevent genuine independence. In this connexion, reference was made by Iraq to the situation in Bermuda where a large amount of land and property was being acquired by non-Bermudians. Sierra Leone added that although the Bermudian Government had tried to restrict such purchases, foreigners continued to buy land. A close examination of the building industry revealed that the entire enterprise was geared towards tourism, controlled by outside interests owning land in areas suitable for hotel and commercial development.

The Cayman Islands, Sierra Leone said, provided a tax haven to foreign financial companies, while in the Turks and Caicos Islands, investors from Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States had a dominant role in various sectors of the economy, namely property development, tourism and fish farming.

On 2 August 1977, the Special Committee, by a vote of 18 to 0, with 1 abstention, adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the right of the peoples of dependent territories to dispose of their own natural resources and reiterated that any administering or occupying power which deprived the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over those resources or subordinated the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violated the solemn obligations it had assumed under the Charter of the United Nations.

The Committee condemned the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial territories as impeding the implementation of the Declaration as well as efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination. It also condemned the policies of Governments which continued to support or collaborate with those foreign economic and other interests engaged in exploiting the natural and human resources of the territories concerned, thus violating the political, economic and social rights and interests of the indigenous peoples and obstructing the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration.

The Committee strongly condemned all collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field by certain Western countries and other States which, by supplying the racist regime with nuclear equipment and technology, enabled it to increase its nuclear capability. It called upon all Governments to refrain from extending facilities, directly or indirectly, to South Africa, which might enable it to undertake the production of uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment.

The Committee called again upon all Governments which had not done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction who owned and operated enterprises in colonial territories, particularly in southern Africa, which were detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that ran counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those territories. It requested all States to refrain from any investments in, or loans to, the minority racist regimes in southern Africa and to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with them.

The Committee also condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions, as being contrary to the obligations assumed by them under Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations,¹³ and it expressed its conviction that the scope of sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia should be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter. It expressed the hope that the Security Council would consider adopting appropriate measures in that regard.

The Committee requested all States to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to those regimes which used such assistance to repress the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements, and it called again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial or trade relations with the racist minority regime of South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into economic, financial or other relations with South Africa, acting on behalf of or concerning Namibia, which might lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that territory.

Further, the Committee strongly condemned the policy of the Government of South Africa, which, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and in open contravention of its specific obligations under Article 25 of the Charter, continued to collaborate with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia. It called upon that Government to cease immediately all forms of collaboration with the illegal regime in Salisbury.

It invited all Governments and organizations within the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order¹⁴ and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,¹⁵ to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial territories over their natural resources was fully respected and safeguarded.

The Committee requested the Secretary-General to undertake a sustained and wide publicity campaign to inform world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources and the exploitation of the indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and the support they rendered to colonialist and racist regimes.

After the vote, Norway said that there was ample evidence to suggest that the activities of certain economic and other interests, including transnational and multinational corporations, did impede the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence and that Norway remained firmly opposed to those interests whose activities perpetuated a colonial situation. However, despite its positive vote, Norway did not share all the opinions and concepts expressed in the resolution and, moreover, it considered that some of the requests in the resolution were only within the competence of the Security Council.

The question of the activities of foreign economic interests in colonial territories was discussed at the 1977 session of the General Assembly, mainly in the Fourth Committee.

The majority of the Member States taking part in the debate supported the views expressed in the report of the Special Committee. Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Kenya and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, among others, thought that exploitation by foreign economic interests in the remaining colonial territories constituted the greatest violation of human rights, combining political repression with economic denial.

In the view of other States, including Benin, the Byelorussian SSR, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, India, Iraq, Madagascar, Mongolia, Pakistan and the Sudan, the activities of those economic interests not only violated human rights but also impeded the attainment of independence by the colonial peoples. India said that 11 years after the United Nations had terminated South Africa's mandate over Namibia, nothing meaningful had been done by the international community to end South Africa's illegal occupation. The apartheid system provided the framework for the systematic and ruthless exploitation of African labour and thus for an increase in the profits of foreign companies.

A number of countries, among which were China, Czechoslovakia, Guinea, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nepal, Nigeria, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, were concerned that a large proportion of new investment in southern Africa was still attributable to foreign-owned interests. Nigeria said that despite sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, new foreign investment amounting to some £10 million a year had taken place since the unilateral declaration of independence. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya added that repeated appeals by the General Assembly to those countries with economic and other interests in southern Africa to limit such investment had been unsuccessful. Despite universal condemnation of the racist regimes, corporations of the colonial and capitalist countries simply concealed their activities by registering their subsidiaries in Southern Rhodesia. For instance, the United Kingdom corporations Rio Tinto Zinc and Lonrho claimed not to have any control over their subsidiaries in Southern Rhodesia because they had technically become Southern Rhodesia firms. Czechoslovakia believed that without the active support of foreign economic and other interests, the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia could not have survived.

The USSR found the fact of continuing long-term investment by certain Western powers deplorable. Those countries, the USSR said, while co-operating with the racist minority regimes, were at the same time making proposals to South Africa and Southern Rhodesia with the alleged aim of resolving the situation which they themselves had created.

The German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the Sudan and Zambia, among others, observed that oil continued to be supplied to Southern Rhodesia. The Sudan said that the supply to that country was being maintained while Zambia was deprived of supplies.

Poland said certain Western countries were supplying South Africa with the material and technology which could increase its nuclear capability and considered this an extremely serious threat to international peace and security. In this connexion, Mozambique said that certain countries which were signatories to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons¹⁶ were supplying nuclear equipment to the apartheid regime despite the injunctions of the international community. Although it was maintained that such equipment was only for peaceful purposes, South Africa had declared that, if necessary, nuclear armaments would be used to defend its territory against the independent African States which supported the national liberation movements.

Algeria, the Congo, Egypt and Hungary were among those deploring the fact that foreign investment in Namibian uranium mines had produced a situation enabling South Africa to produce nuclear weapons. Such co-operation by foreign investors, Algeria said, was a criminal plot which history would certainly condemn.

Bulgaria, Guinea, Haiti, Madagascar, the Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic were among those expressing support for the liberation movements in southern Africa. Bulgaria accused foreign monopolies of seeking to exclude the Patriotic Front and the South West Africa People's Organization from participation in drafting constitutions for Southern Rhodesia and Namibia. Guinea said that the liberation movements in those two territories had no other choice but armed struggle; Guinea firmly supported all United Nations decisions promoting the unconditional liberation of all oppressed peoples.

The representative of the USSR reiterated his Government's solidarity with the colonial peoples and demanded the speedy elimination of all forms of colonialism. All power in Zimbabwe, he said, should be transferred to the Patriotic Front, which was the sole representative of the people; Namibia also should be assured the right to independence and territorial integrity.

Others, including the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba and Iraq, deplored the continued exploitation of the natural wealth of the smaller territories. Iraq observed that Bermuda was a victim of economic sabotage since its economy was dependent on foreign military bases; this was also the case in the Turks and Caicos Islands, the Cayman Islands and Puerto Rico, which were dominated by foreign investment from Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States.

China said that the economic aggression of imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism against southern Africa and the developing countries must be sternly condemned. The United Nations should adopt effective measures to implement the Declaration on the granting of independence.

The United States rejected the allegation that Puerto Rico was being exploited against the will of the people. Because Puerto Rico was self-governing and had a free association with the United States, any discussion on the status of the territory was inappropriate. The United Kingdom, rejecting similar allegations regarding the Cayman Islands, said that it was for the people of the islands to decide upon the way in which they wished to develop their economy.

Australia, Austria and Canada drew a sharp distinction between foreign economic activities in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia and those in other territories. The representative of Australia said that his Government rigorously enforced the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council against Southern Rhodesia and it had no economic interests in Namibia. As for the other territories, several factors distinguished the situation there from that prevailing in southern Africa. The territories in the Caribbean and the Pacific had their own elected representatives and, in some cases, representative Governments which had a voice in the decisions affecting the economy of those territories. However, in Zimbabwe and Namibia, the resources of the peoples were being exploited without regard for the interests of the majority and with no consultation.

Austria considered that it was important to avoid generalizations. It was not convinced that the activities of foreign economic and other interests were in all cases detrimental or that they were impeding implementation of the Declaration. While the rights and interests of colonial peoples must not be subordinated to foreign economic and financial interests, neither should they be subordinated to foreign political or ideological interests.

Canada commented that foreign economic investment could be, and frequently was, beneficial; the non-self-governing territories should not be denied the right to seek such investment if they considered it compatible with their aspirations.

Venezuela was concerned that foreign investment in the Caribbean was mainly devoted to tourism. While that sector offered large profits, there was a need to provide a more stable and solid economic basis for the future of those territories. Incentives must be created to divert investment to other sectors of economic activity, such as agriculture, education, sanitation, roads and manufacturing.

On 28 October 1977, the Fourth Committee approved a draft resolution concerning the question, which was subsequently adopted by the General Assembly on 28 November as resolution 32/35.

By this resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests. It also reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid (see p. 148). It reiterated that any administering or occupying power which deprived the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinated the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violated the obligations it had assumed under the Charter of the United Nations.

The Assembly then reaffirmed that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the entrenchment of colonial domination over those territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests constituted a major obstacle to political independence.

The Assembly strongly condemned all States which collaborated politically, diplomatically, economically and militarily with South Africa in flagrant violation of the relevant United Nations resolutions, particularly the United States, France, the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Japan, Belgium and Italy. It also strongly condemned the United States, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel for collaborating with South Africa in nuclear matters. It requested all Governments to refrain from supplying the South African regime, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment.

The Assembly called on all Governments that had not done so to take action to put an end to the activities of their nationals and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction operating enterprises in colonial territories detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those territories, particularly in Africa.

The Assembly then requested all States to refrain from making any investments in, or loans to, the minority regimes in southern Africa and expressed the hope that the Security Council would consider expanding the scope of sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia so as to encompass all the measures contemplated in Article 41 of the Charter. It condemned the violations of sanctions against that regime, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions.

The Assembly requested all States to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to regimes which used such assistance to repress the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements. It called on all States to discontinue relations with South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from relations lending support to South Africa's illegal occupation of that territory, and called for an end to all exports of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist regimes of southern Africa. It further condemned the racist minority regime of South Africa, which continued to collaborate with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, and it called for an end to such collaboration.

Among other things, the Assembly then called on the administering powers to abolish every discriminatory and unjust wage system that prevailed in the territories under their administration and to apply to each territory a uniform system of wages, without any discrimination.

Finally, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to undertake, through the Office of Public Information, a sustained and wide publicity campaign designed to inform world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources and the exploitation of the indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and the support those monopolies rendered to colonialist and racist regimes.

Resolution 32/35 was adopted by a recorded vote of 101 to 12, with 28 abstentions. The Fourth Committee approved the text by a roll-call vote of 96 to 12, with 23 abstentions. The draft was sponsored by 33 States.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Canada, Ireland, Italy and Japan said they could not support the resolution because it failed to distinguish between activities which were injurious to colonial territories and those which were essential to the development of such territories, particularly the smaller ones. Canada felt that the resolution was not a report of findings but a bill of indictment. France, Italy and Japan also objected strongly to being singled out in the resolution. Italy said that it had no economic or other interests whatsoever in the non-self-governing territories which could impede their independence. Italy had always supported United Nations decisions on southern Africa and no charges against it had ever been substantiated.

The United Kingdom took exception to a preambular paragraph which claimed that foreign economic interests in the Caribbean and Pacific regions deprived the indigenous populations of their rights over the wealth of their countries. The United Kingdom reiterated that almost all of the dependent territories under its administration had complete control over investment policy and land legislation.

Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel objected to being singled out in the resolution for alleged military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa. Israel said that petro-dollars far in excess of Israel's trade found their way by devious routes to South Africa.

A number of States voting for the resolution expressed reservations on the condemnation of specific States. Among these were Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Burma, Colombia, Ecuador, the Gambia, Jamaica, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Thailand, and Trinidad and Tobago. Argentina said that its reservations related to the way in which the same degree of condemnation had been meted out to all the countries named, even though there were substantial differences between the levels of their association with South Africa. Ecuador felt that there had not been sufficient proof in all the cases of countries expressly condemned. Also, some of them had shown a willingness to co-operate with United Nations initiatives.

The majority of countries abstaining on the vote also did so because they objected to condemnation of specific States. Zaire said that such action was discriminatory because the list omitted certain countries which had also collaborated with South Africa. Denmark, Norway and Sweden maintained that the arbitrary naming of certain countries was not justified by the working papers before the Committee. Australia said that it could not accept the practice of condemning individual States, especially when some of them were carrying out negotiations on Zimbabwe and Namibia which might achieve the objectives sought by the international community. Austria said that the maintenance of relations by a State with certain other States did not necessarily imply approval of their policies.

The United States referred to the comments by speakers in the Assembly debate that the eco-conomic relations with South Africa of the United States and other Western countries gave them the economic leverage to force solutions. The United States saw a contradiction between that view and the hope expressed by the same speakers for the success of Western efforts to negotiate a peaceful solution. The United States would continue to use its influence in what it judged to be the ways best calculated to bring about a rapid transition to majority rule in southern Africa.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa,"

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to this question,

Taking into consideration the parts of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia relating to this question,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and its resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the item,

Taking into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Taking note of the decision concerning the export of oil to the illegal racist regimes in southern Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 2 to 5 July 1977,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming that any economic or other activity which impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories violates the political, economic and social rights and interests of the peoples of the Territories and is therefore incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Affirming that the natural resources of all colonial Territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia, are the heritage of the peoples of those Territories and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests in conjunction with the illegal racist minority regimes constitutes a direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles stated in the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting with profound concern that the colonial Powers and certain States, through their activities in the colonial Territories, have continued to disregard United Nations decisions relating to the item and that they have failed to implement in particular General Assembly resolutions 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970 and 31/7 of 5 November 1976, by which the Assembly called upon the colonial Powers and those Governments which had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in order to put an end to enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are owned by their nationals or bodies corporate under their jurisdiction, whenever such enterprises are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, and to prevent new investments which run counter to such interests,

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, particularly in southern Africa, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the support which the racist minority regime of South Africa and the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia continue to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests which are collaborating with them in their exploitation of the natural and human resources of, and in the further entrenchment of their illegal and racist domination over, the international Territory of Namibia and the Non-Self-Governing Territory of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe), respectively,

Strongly condemning the investment of foreign capital in the illegal production of uranium and the collaboration by certain Western countries and other States with the racist minority regime of South Africa in the nuclear field which, by providing that regime with nuclear equipment and technology, enables the latter to develop nuclear and military capabilities, thereby promoting South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia as well as its growth as a nuclear Power,

Deeply concerned at the fact that foreign economic, financial and other interests continue to deprive the indigenous populations of other colonial Territories, including those in the Caribbean and Pacific Ocean regions, of their rights over the wealth of their countries, and at the continued loss of ownership of land by the inhabitants of those Territories as a result of the failure of the administering Powers to take effective steps to safeguard such ownership,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories, particularly in Africa,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Reaffirms the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid;

3. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power which deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the entrenchment of colonial domination over the Territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories of southern Africa constitute a major obstacle to political independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

5. Condemns the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial Territories that impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

6. Strongly condemns all States which collaborate politically, diplomatically, economically and militarily with South Africa in flagrant violation of the relevant United Nations resolutions, particularly the United States of America, France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Japan, Belgium and Italy;

7. Strongly condemns the United States, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel for collaborating with South Africa in nuclear matters and requests all Governments to refrain from supplying the racist minority régime of South Africa, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

8. Calls once again upon all Governments which have not done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction who own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

9. Requests all States to refrain from making any invest-merits in, or extending loans to, the minority racist regimes in southern Africa and to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with them;

10. Expresses its conviction that the scope of the sanctions adopted against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia should be expanded to cover all the measures contemplated in Article 41 of the Charter and expresses the hope that the Security Council will envisage adopting appropriate measures to this end;

11. Condemns all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council against the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions, as being contrary to the obligations assumed by them under Article 25 of the Charter;

12. Requests all States to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to those regimes which use such assistance to repress the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

13. Calls once again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial or trade relations with South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into economic, financial or other relations with South Africa, acting on behalf of or concerning Namibia, which may lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that Territory;

14. Requests all oil-producing or oil-exporting countries which supply crude oil and petroleum products to the racist regime of South Africa to cease forthwith all exports of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist regimes in southern Africa and to take the necessary measures against oil companies which, in violation of the United Nations resolutions on sanctions, continue to deliver oil to those regimes;

15. Strongly condemns the racist minority regime of South Africa which, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and in open contravention of its specific obligations under Article 25 of the Charter, continues to collaborate with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, and calls upon that Government to cease immediately all forms of collaboration with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia;

19. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued during 1977 to grant scholarships for education and training to persons from Namibia, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia and territories formerly under Portuguese administration. Awards of scholarships for inhabitants of territories formerly under Portuguese administration were discontinued in 1976, following the attainment of independence by those territories, but scholarships granted earlier were continued until completion of the course of study for which they had been granted.

In his report to the General Assembly on the progress of the Programme, covering the period from 23 October 1976 to 24 October 1977, the Secretary-General stated that 25 States had contributed $1,971,760 to the Programme, and pledges from 13 Member States totalling $92,726 were outstanding. Total contributions to the Programme since its establishment in 1967 amounted to $11,731,275. In addition, the following 21 States had offered scholarships for study in their own countries: Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Israel, Jamaica, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, the Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and the USSR.

As at 24 October 1977, the total number of scholarship holders was 1,386. There were 143 from Angola, 18 from Cape Verde, 37 from Guinea-Bissau, 21 from Mozambique, 191 from Namibia, 11 from Sao Tome and Principe, 460 from South Africa and 505 from Southern Rhodesia.

On 28 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without objection, resolution 32/37, by which it reaffirmed that the Programme had been a significant and worthwhile effort of the international community and that its continuation and expansion during this crucial period was desirable. It recognized that additional funds were essential if the Programme was to continue in operation at a satisfactory level. It expressed its appreciation to all those who had made voluntary contributions to the Programme, commended the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa for strengthening and expanding it, and again appealed to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions.

Questions concerning individual territories

The following pages give brief accounts of the decisions taken on various individual territories in 1977 by the General Assembly and by its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.¹⁷ (See also other chapters of this segment for details on questions concerning Namibia and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. For details on the question of Southern Rhodesia, see p. 179.)

For each of the territories considered, the Special Committee had before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat containing information on action previously taken and on the latest developments concerning the territory. The working papers and the Special Committee's report on the individual territories were submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, which opened in September 1977.

On 28 November, the Assembly adopted a number of decisions regarding the various territories.

American Samoa

On 7 July 1977, the Special Committee approved the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning American Samoa, which is administered by the United States, and accepted the Sub-Committee's conclusions and recommendations.

The Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of American Samoa to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence, and its view that questions of territorial size, geographical location, population and limited resources should not delay the implementation of the Declaration.

The Committee expressed its appreciation for the co-operation of the administering power in participating actively in its work, thereby enabling it to conduct a more informed and more meaningful examination of the territory.

Having studied reports of the possibility of the United States Congress enacting an organic act defining the relationship of the territory to the United States Government and having heard the statements of the representative of the administering power, the Committee was of the view that the administering power ought not to proceed with any such legislation without having informed the people of the territory of the options open to them consistent with the Declaration, having consulted fully with the people and having obtained their consent. In this connexion, the Committee noted the statement of the representative of the administering power that since it was felt that an organic act could jeopardize traditional land-holding patterns in the territory, there was little support among the people of the territory for consideration by the United States Congress of such an act. There was consequently no immediate prospect of the Congress approving an organic act for American Samoa.

The Special Committee noted with satisfaction the decision of the people of the territory in favour of electing their own Governor and Lieutenant-Governor. It urged the administering power to grant the elected Governor as wide a range of powers and responsibilities as possible, consistent with its obligations under Article 73 b of the Charter of the United Nations¹⁸ to advance self-government in its dependent territories. At the same time, the Committee considered that there should continue to be close consultation between the legislative and the executive branch of the Government on the one hand, and the traditional consultative and leadership structure of the Samoan people on the other, so that the culture and identity of those people could be preserved.

The Committee was concerned about recent reverses suffered by the economy of the territory, in particular by the fishing industry, which constituted one of its strongest pillars. It also noted that over-all unemployment was estimated at 7.4 per cent of the labour force and that it consisted largely of the young and unskilled. It expressed the hope that the administering power, in consultation with the representatives of the people, would take the necessary steps to expand the economy so as to provide over-all employment in the territory.

The Committee noted the positive attitude of the Government of the United States towards receiving United Nations visiting missions, and expressed the hope that an early visit by such a mission would be accepted.

Having considered the Special Committee's report on American Samoa, the General Assembly approved the relevant chapters of the Committee's report and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of American Samoa to self-determination and independence. It called upon the United States, as the administering power, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people, to continue to take all the steps necessary to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in the Declaration.

The Assembly urged the administering power to continue its efforts to ensure that the culture and identity of the territory's people continued to be reflected in the territory's Government and administration and preserved to the fullest extent, to take all possible steps to diversify the economy, to work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development for the territory, and to safeguard its people's right to the enjoyment of their natural resources.

The Assembly welcomed the positive attitude of the administering power with respect to receiving United Nations visiting missions and requested the Chairman of the Special Committee to continue consultations with a view to the dispatch of such a mission to the territory. It also requested the administering power to continue to enlist the assistance of the organizations in the United Nations system to accelerate progress in all sectors of the national life in American Samoa.

The Assembly took these decisions by adopting resolution 32/24, without objection, on 28 November, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, where the text was approved on 9 November without vote. The sponsors were Australia, Canada, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the Upper Volta (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee, the United States reaffirmed its view that independence was only one of the possible results of the exercise of the right to self-determination.

Belize

The Special Committee considered the question of Belize on 17 August 1977 and, following a statement by the Chairman, decided without objection to consider the item in 1978, subject to any directives the General Assembly might give at its 1977 session.

When the territory was discussed in the Fourth Committee, two draft resolutions were introduced. The first, sponsored by Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Paraguay, and subsequently revised by the sponsors, would have had the Assembly urge the Governments of Guatemala and the United Kingdom to expedite negotiations currently taking place concerning Belize, with a view to arriving at a settlement before the Assembly's 1978 session, would have recommended that the settlement take due account of the vital interests of the people of Belize in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence and would have requested the two Governments to report to the Special Committee and the General Assembly in 1978 on the results achieved.

A second draft resolution was introduced by 51 States. Having been unable in informal meetings to reach a compromise on the two texts, the Committee decided, without objection, on a proposal by Trinidad and Tobago, to vote first on the 51-power draft. At the request of Guatemala, a roll-call vote was taken on both texts.

The sponsors of the 51-power text orally added a preambular paragraph to note that the Assembly had heard petitioners' statements. Other oral amendments to the preamble, by El Salvador, were rejected by the Committee. One would have replaced an Assembly notation that a passage quoted in the Bogota Declaration¹⁹ had been agreed by one noting that the passage containing the statement of agreement had been stated in the Declaration; El Salvador also offered a slightly different verbatim text of the passage from that quoted in the 51-power draft. The amendment was rejected by 96 votes against to 21 in favour, with 23 abstentions.

A second oral amendment by El Salvador—which would have replaced a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly regretted the interruption of the negotiations and the continued failure of the parties to negotiate an agreement by one recording that the Assembly had learned that significant progress had been made in the negotiations, thus giving grounds for hope for an early settlement—was also rejected, by 102 votes against to 13 in favour, with 19 abstentions.

The 51-power text was approved by 115 votes to 5, with 16 abstentions; the seven-power draft was rejected by 91 votes against to 18 in favour, with 26 abstentions.

On 28 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the text as its resolution 32/32 by which, among other things, it noted that, in the Bogota Declaration of 6 August 1977, it was agreed that "a solution of the Belize question should be found by the peaceful methods consecrated in the charters of the Organization of American States and the United Nations, and in accordance with respect for its territorial integrity and with the principle of the free self-determination of peoples."

The Assembly reaffirmed the right of the people of Belize to self-determination and independence and that the inviolability and territorial integrity of Belize must be preserved. It urged all States to respect the right of the people of Belize to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity and to render all assistance necessary for the secure and early exercise of that right. It called on the Government of the United Kingdom—as the administering power—acting in close consultation with the Government of Belize, and the Government of Guatemala to pursue vigorously their negotiations in conformity with the principles of the Assembly's resolution of 8 December 1975,²⁰ in consultation as appropriate with other especially interested States in the area, with a view to concluding negotiations before the Assembly's 1978 session. The Assembly asked the Governments concerned to report to the 1978 session on the outcome of the negotiations.

Resolution 32/32 was adopted by a recorded vote of 126 to 4, with 13 abstentions. (For text of resolution, list of sponsors and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Bolivia said in explanation of vote that it had abstained on both draft resolutions because neither entirely reconciled independence for Belize, justice for Guatemala and the exclusion of non-American interests. Among others which abstained, Colombia said that a statement of position by the United Nations might prejudice future negotiations, which should not be subject to any restrictions.

Cuba said its vote in favour did not mean it had withdrawn its reservations concerning the provision containing the reference, unnecessary in its view, to the charter of the Organization of American States.

During discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom said that, although at the 1976 session it had been hoped that an early settlement would be reached, this had not been the case. During the year, the United Kingdom had had to reinforce its armed forces in Belize to provide security for the territory. Nevertheless, some progress had been achieved. There had been a meeting between Guatemala and the United Kingdom in Washington D.C. in July, and shortly afterwards the United Kingdom Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office had held constructive talks with the Guatemalan President and Minister for Foreign Affairs.

On the international scene, there had been two important moves towards assisting the parties in reaching a settlement. In June, the Heads of Commonwealth Governments had met in London and reaffirmed their full support for the aspirations of the people of Belize and had agreed to establish a ministerial committee to assist the parties concerned in finding early and effective arrangements for the independence of the territory. In August, six Heads of Government of countries in the area, following talks in Bogota, had issued a communique which agreed that a solution to the problem of Belize should be found.

The United Kingdom repeated that any settlement reached between it and Guatemala must be acceptable to the Government and people of Belize. It was ready to set in hand the appropriate constitutional arrangements for Belize to move to full independence, and would pursue negotiations flexibly and constructively. It urged Guatemala to do the same.

Guatemala reiterated its view that Belize was an occupied part of the American continent and an integral part of Guatemala. The conflict over Belize between Guatemala and the United Kingdom had existed for more than a century and, since Guatemala had become a Member of the United Nations, it had repeatedly proposed to the United Kingdom that the question should be submitted to arbitration, but the proposal had been rejected. However, more encouraging prospects had appeared over the past two years in the negotiations between the two Governments, in which representatives of the local administration and the political parties had also participated. The negotiations had led to specific agreements on various fundamental questions, which formed part of the general framework of an agreement which, it was hoped, would settle all aspects of the dispute. The United Kingdom had said it was prepared to resume negotiations and to take into account the interests of Guatemala, and on this basis Guatemala said it was also prepared to resume the talks.

On 11 November, the Committee heard a statement from George C. Price, Premier of Belize, who reviewed the territorial Government's participation in negotiations over the past year and the concessions offered to Guatemala towards a settlement of the dispute. These proposals had not been acceptable to Guatemala, he said, which was insisting on territorial cession as a basis for settlement—in effect, exercising a veto over Belizean independence. The people of Belize were committed to independence and would not consider annexation by Guatemala. Belize was prepared to assume its independence with suitable security arrangements for the safety of its people and for the preservation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity. It was prepared to continue efforts to achieve a solution both before and after independence and to live in peace and harmony with Guatemala.

Meanwhile, he added, Belize was heartened by the commitment of the United Kingdom not to agree to any solution which did not have the consent of the Government and people of Belize, and by the well-established United Nations doctrine that sovereignty over a non-self-governing territory was never vested in the administering power but in the people of that territory, for whom the administering power held the territory in trust.

Two petitioners, Anthony Martinez and Alejandro Vernon, Chairman and Secretary-General, respectively, of the Toledo Progressive Party of Belize, also addressed the Committee. In their statements, the petitioners stressed the community of interest existing between the population in the southern area of Belize with the surrounding region, including Guatemala. They expressed the view that independence should be delayed until all Belizeans were satisfied that a solution satisfactory to all parties had been achieved, including the indigenous population of the territory.

The Bahamas and Jamaica said that Belize had been unable to achieve independence because of the territorial claims of Guatemala. Guyana said that Guatemala's claims to the territory had no basis. Any settlement of the controversy between the United Kingdom and Guatemala should in no way compromise the territorial integrity of Belize. Guyana considered that once the question of cession of territory was removed from the negotiations, a just settlement could be achieved.

Sri Lanka, Trinidad and Tobago, and Zambia were also among those States which supported a solution which would preserve the territorial integrity of Belize.

In a note verbale addressed to the Secretary-General on 18 November, Guatemala transmitted a telegram containing a complaint that Mr. Martinez, Chairman of the Toledo Progressive Party of Belize, had been arrested on his return to Belize. In a reply of 23 November, the United Kingdom stated that Mr. Martinez had been questioned, but not detained, by the police because he had no travel documents in his possession. The United Kingdom said that no action was being taken against the petitioners to the Fourth Committee. By a letter from the Premier of Belize forwarded by the United Kingdom on 28 November, the Premier also denied that Mr. Martinez or any of the petitioners had been arrested or their liberty infringed. The representative of Guatemala, in a letter of 28 November, noted the assurances given.

Brunei

On 20 June and 6 July 1977, the Special Committee considered the question of Brunei, which had been referred to its Sub-Committee on Small Territories. The Committee adopted without objection the report of the Sub-Committee and approved the draft consensus statement contained therein.

By the statement, the Committee noted again that no progress had been achieved thus far in the implementation of the Assembly resolutions of 8 December 1975²¹ and 1 December 1976,²² by which the Assembly had called upon the United Kingdom, consistent with its responsibility as the administering power, to facilitate holding free and democratic elections by governmental authorities in Brunei in consultation with and under the supervision of the United Nations, and further called for, prior to the elections, the lifting of the ban on all political parties and the return of all political exiles to Brunei so that they could participate in those elections.

The Committee noted with regret that the administering power had not participated in the Committee's consideration of the territory.

²² See Y.U.N., 1976, pp. 745-46, text of resolution 31/56.

It called once more on all parties concerned to work towards an early implementation of the Assembly's resolutions and decided to continue consideration of the question in 1978, taking into account the results of consultations between the Committee's Chairman and the administering power.

On 28 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted a resolution by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Brunei to self-determination and independence. It approved the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee and noted again that no progress had been achieved in implementing the Assembly resolutions of 1975 and 1976.

The Assembly called again on the Government of the United Kingdom to take all steps within its competence to facilitate the holding of free and democratic elections by the appropriate governmental authorities in Brunei, in consultation with and under the supervision of the United Nations, in accordance with the inalienable right of the people of Brunei to self-determination and independence, and further called for, prior to the elections, the lifting of the ban on all political parties and the return of all political exiles to Brunei.

The Assembly noted that the administering power had not participated in the Special Committee's consideration of the territory and called on it to extend full co-operation to the Committee.

The Assembly took these decisions by adopting resolution 32/27 by a recorded vote of 127 to 0, with 14 abstentions. In the Fourth Committee, the resolution was sponsored by Egypt, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mozambique, the Philippines, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and the United Republic of Tanzania, and approved on 10 November by a recorded vote, taken at the request of the United Kingdom and Malaysia, of 117 to 0, with 15 abstentions. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Speaking before the vote, the United Kingdom said that it would not participate in the vote because it was its position that Brunei was not a dependent territory and that the United Kingdom did not have the function of administering power in this case. Under the terms of an agreement concluded in 1959, as modified in 1971, the United Kingdom had surrendered such advisory functions in relation to the internal affairs of Brunei as had been conferred upon it in previous agreements. The United Kingdom's responsibilities were therefore confined to the conduct of Brunei's external relations and to a commitment to consult with its Government in the event of external attack. The United Kingdom was negotiating with the Government of Brunei with a view to reaching an agreement on a new treaty which would place the relations between the two Governments on a different footing.

Burma said it had reservations concerning the operative paragraph which would have the Assembly call upon the United Kingdom Government to take steps consistent with its responsibility as administering power and call for lifting the ban on political parties and the return of political exiles to Brunei. Norway also said that it had reservations concerning certain references to the administering power.

Although the Fourth Committee granted a request from the Partai Rakyat Brunei (People's Party of Brunei) for a hearing, by a communication of 7 November the Committee was informed that petitioners would be unable to attend.

During the discussion in the Committee, Malaysia said it was guided by the report and recommendations of the Special Committee, which confirmed that Brunei was still a dependent territory of the United Kingdom and that its people had not exercised their inalienable rights in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly.

Zaire considered that the territory was a protectorate in which the local authorities exercised all powers, rather than a colony of the classical type; the administering power played only a minor role limited to foreign relations. Zaire felt that any condemnation of Brunei's internal policy therefore represented interference in the internal affairs of the country. It believed that the United Kingdom should use its influence to induce the Brunei authorities to organize free elections and permit the return of political exiles.

Algeria said that Brunei was another example of unsatisfactory decolonization which could lead to serious unrest both among the people and on a wider scale. Benin condemned the unacceptable policies of the administering power which it said were preventing the people of the territory from exercising their right to self-determination.

Cayman Islands

Following consultations with the administering power of the Cayman Islands, the United Kingdom, the Chairman of the Special Committee announced on 25 February 1977 that the Committee had been invited to send a three-member visiting mission to the territory. On the same date, the Committee accepted the invitation.

On 20 September 1977, the Special Committee accepted the report of the mission (Fiji, Trinidad and Tobago, and Tunisia), which had visited the territory from 17 to 22 April and London from 22 to 25 May, and drew the attention of the administering power to the mission's observations, conclusions and recommendations.

The mission noted that general elections had been held in the three islands, Grand Cayman, Cayman Brac and Little Cayman, in November 1976. No political parties had emerged, but a group of candidates supported each other on their individual platforms. Following the elections, four new members were appointed to the Executive Council and were working as a team in consultation with other members of the Legislative Assembly, whose meetings were presided over by the Governor.

The mission noted that the vast majority of the people it met in the Cayman Islands did not want independence at this stage, preferring to continue in British Crown Colony status; consequently they did not desire full internal self-government either, since this would lead to independence within 18 months. Their attitude was due to fear of disturbing the two fragile pillars of the economy, tourism and international finance. The mission was of the view, however, that there was room for constitutional advancement short of full internal self-government, which would be in harmony with the expressed wishes of the islanders and with the economic constraints of the territory. It recommended that the administering power work out appropriate constitutional changes, in co-operation and consultation with the inhabitants.

The mission observed that there was general satisfaction with the performance of the economy. There was some concern, however, that tourism and international finance were very dependent on external factors; the mission recommended that the possibility of developing small-scale industries, such as boat building and jewellery making, should be investigated.

The mission noted that free and compulsory education from the age of five to 15 years existed in the Cayman Islands. However, it felt that the quality and output of the Cayman Islands High School needed improvement so as to provide candidates for the training of the skilled people needed to run both the civil service and the private sector.

The mission observed that teacher training and vocational training were being given more prominence and a manpower study on needs for the next decade was being launched. The mission noted that the Cayman Islands would appreciate scholarship assistance.

Although medical services were of high quality and readily accessible, the mission urged the World Health Organization and the Pan American Health Organization to provide assistance for a study on genetic disease in the islands.

The mission welcomed the formation of the National Council for Social Services, which was making every effort to cope with the social problems which economic development had brought in its train, notably juvenile delinquency and the care of the elderly. It also noted that comprehensive labour legislation was being drafted with the help of the International Labour Organization.

While considering the visiting mission's report, the Special Committee welcomed the Governor of the Cayman Islands and heard statements from a member of the Executive Council for Health, Education and Social Services and a member of the Legislative Assembly.

The visiting mission included a number of other recommendations in a draft resolution, which the Special Committee adopted without objection on 20 September. By this resolution, the Special Committee requested the administering power to undertake measures, in accordance with the expressed wishes of the people of the Cayman Islands, to expedite the process of decolonization. It recommended that attention be given to diversification of the economy, particularly in the agricultural sector, where expansion would provide employment opportunities and conserve foreign exchange, and endorsed the mission's view concerning the importance of giving high priority to training and localization of the civil service, the educational system and the private sector. It recommended that the administering power and the territorial Government continue efforts to publicize the work of the United Nations, and asked that power to continue enlisting the aid of the specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system in developing and strengthening the economy of the territory.

On 28 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted a resolution by which, inter alia, it drew the attention of the United Kingdom to the observations, conclusions and recommendations of the visiting mission, and expressed its appreciation to the members of the mission for their work and to the administering power and the Government of the Cayman Islands for their co-operation and assistance.

The Assembly requested the administering power to take all necessary measures, in consultation with the Cayman Islands Government, to expedite the process of decolonization and asked it to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations in the development and strengthening of the economy of the territory. It endorsed the view of the visiting mission that urgent attention be given to diversification of the economy and requested the United Kingdom to pay particular attention to the training of qualified local personnel. The Assembly asked the Special Committee to continue its examination of the question in the light of the findings of the visiting mission, including the possible dispatch of a further mission, and to report thereon to the Assembly in 1978.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/30, adopted by the Assembly without objection. The resolution, sponsored by Australia, Belgium, Fiji, India, Jamaica, Liberia, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, and Tunisia, was approved without vote by the Fourth Committee on 15 November. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Cocos (Keeling) Islands

On 8 July and 1 August 1977, the Special Committee considered the question of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, which had been referred to the Sub-Committee on Small Territories. On 1 August, the Committee adopted without objection the report of the Sub-Committee and approved the consensus statement contained therein.

The Committee noted with appreciation the continuing co-operation of Australia, the administering power, in reporting on the implementation of the Declaration concerning the territory and its continued preparedness to receive a further visiting mission there at an appropriate time. It noted with interest the decisions taken thus far by Australia in the light of the conclusions and recommendations of the 1974 visiting mission to the territory.²³

The Committee further noted the Australian Government's decision in principle to establish an animal quarantine station in the territory. The Committee considered that the station could play a useful role in diversifying the economy, expanding employment opportunities and enabling the acquisition by the people of new and valuable skills. It suggested that attention should also be given to the development of a commercial fishing industry.

The Committee expressed the view that there was a continued need for a programme of political education so that the people of the territory might exercise their right to self-determination in accordance with the principles of the United Nations Charter and the Declaration.

On 28 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted, without objection, decision 32/408—a consensus statement by which the Assembly expressed its appreciation for the continuing co-operation of the administering power in reporting on the implementation of the Declaration regarding the Cocos (Keeling) Islands. The Assembly welcomed Australia's continued preparedness to receive a further mission in the territory and noted with interest the decisions taken by the Australian Government in accordance with the recommendations of the 1974 visiting mission.

In the Fourth Committee, the draft consensus statement was approved without objection on 9 November. During discussions in the Committee, Australia said that its Government had completed a comprehensive review of the situation in the Cocos (Keeling) Islands and it outlined a number of policy decisions on the political, social and economic advancement of the islands designed to place the territory in a position where an act of self-determination could take place.

East Timor

When considering the question of East Timor, at meetings held between 1 and 4 August 1977, the Special Committee heard, on 4 August, José Ramos-Horta, representative of the Frente Revolucionaria de Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN). Indonesia expressed strong reservations with regard to the granting of a hearing to the representative of FRETILIN.

Also on 4 August, the Special Committee decided, without objection, to transmit to the General Assembly its available information on East Timor in order to facilitate the Assembly's consideration of the question and, subject to any directives the Assembly might give, to consider the question again in 1978.

During the debate on the question of East Timor at the Assembly's 1977 session, the Fourth Committee had before it a letter from the representative of Mozambique to the Secretary-General transmitting a communication from Mr. Ramos-Horta, who said he had been entrusted by the Central Committee of FRETILIN and by the Government of the Democratic Republic of East Timor to draw the attention of the United Nations to the continuing Indonesian armed aggression against the people and territory of East Timor. He gave an account of the effects of the aggression and described administrative accomplishments of the Government of the Democratic Republic in liberated areas.

The Committee heard a statement from Mari Bin Hamud Alkatiri, also of FRETILIN, on 1 November. As Indonesia opposed the granting of permission to Mr. Ramos-Horta for a further hearing, a recorded vote was taken on the request; by 67 votes to 24, with 38 abstentions, the Committee decided on 9 November to grant the request.

Mr. Alkatiri said that the people of East Timor were determined to continue their struggle. In the two years since the military and expansionist regime in Indonesia had launched large-scale armed aggression against the capital of the new Democratic Republic of East Timor—Dili—and other towns, he charged, some 100,000 East Timorese had been massacred by Indonesian forces—10 per cent of the population. But 85 per cent of the national territory remained under the control of FRETILIN, he added. The Indonesian Government had pursued its war of aggression in flagrant defiance of the international community. The reasons were that the regime could not tolerate a truly free State adjacent to Indonesia and that East Timor had great national resources, such as oil, and was strategically located from a military standpoint.

Mr. Ramos-Horta refuted Indonesia's assertion of the limited extent of resistance in East Timor; contrary to Indonesia's claims, the civil war had not ended in December 1975. He said that FRETILIN would welcome a United Nations mission to East Timor to appraise the situation there.

Portugal reaffirmed that its policy on East Timor was based on the recognition that the 1960 Declaration on the granting of independence was fully applicable to the territory, that the people of East Timor should be allowed to choose freely their political future, and that the necessary conditions should be created for a genuine act of self-determination in the territory. Portugal did not recognize de jure the forced integration of East Timor with Indonesia, and believed that the withdrawal of Indonesian armed forces from the territory was a necessary prerequisite for the exercise of self-determination.

Portugal said it maintained formal responsibilities with respect to East Timor and had no claims or interests there other than the wish to conclude the process of decolonization. That could only be achieved through respect for the right of the people to self-determination and independence in accordance with the United Nations resolutions on this question.

Indonesia recounted events leading to the current situation in East Timor and described recent developments. It reaffirmed its position that the question of East Timor had ceased to exist as a problem of decolonization at the time of accession of the territory to independence, declared on 30 November 1975, and integration with Indonesia, completed on 17 July 1976. With the completion of the decolonization process, law and order had gradually been restored and the people were concentrating their efforts on reconstruction and development. Claims by FRETILIN that it controlled 85 per cent of the territory were fantastic, Indonesia added, and the figure of 100,000 killed was grossly exaggerated. As East Timor had become part of its national territory, Indonesia considered any discussion thereon inappropriate and rejected any interference in its internal affairs by any State or organization.

Indonesia's position was supported by several Members. Iran, Malaysia and the Philippines said they believed that the people of East Timor had freely exercised their right to self-determination, in accordance with their own wishes; the international community, Malaysia added, should recognize that fact, and the people of the territory should be allowed to pursue their own destiny without outside interference.

Zaire said Timor was an integral part of the Indonesian entity on ethnic, cultural and linguistic grounds.

Japan was convinced that one-sided resolutions, putting the blame for developments solely on Indonesia, would not be helpful in solving the problem; only the people concerned could, through negotiations, achieve a final solution. Supporting Indonesia's position, Saudi Arabia said that the United Nations should be very clear about whether it was serving its high ideals or only the purposes of activists who were secret agents of the super-powers, even if action was taken in those powers' name without bidding.

A large number of States, however, did not consider the matter settled and believed that the people of East Timor had not exercised their right to self-determination. Barbados strongly supported previous resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly on the question and stressed the necessity of securing the co-operation both of the Government of Indonesia and of FRETILIN when seeking a solution. Algeria was convinced that the only solution worthy of Indonesia and East Timor lay in the implementation of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in particular of those relating to the withdrawal of troops from the territory, in order to enable the people of East Timor to exercise freely their right to self-determination. Members sharing this view included Angola, Burundi, Cape Verde, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Guyana and Haiti.

The need to ensure the applicability of the General Assembly's Declaration on the granting of independence and all other relevant United Nations resolutions to East Timor was also expressed by Jamaica, Madagascar, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

Benin said the United Nations should renew its condemnation of Indonesia's aggression and demand the unconditional withdrawal of the military occupation forces. Guinea-Bissau said the time had come to go beyond appeals and condemnations and take measures to end Indonesia's aggression. Niger hoped that the belligerent parties would settle their differences through negotiations, while Zambia urged the holding of a referendum under United Nations supervision to determine the future of the territory.

China expressed its support for the struggle of the people of East Timor, a sovereign country which had just won its independence at the time of annexation. China hoped that Indonesia would end its aggression and expansion against East Timor immediately and develop normal good-neighbourly relations.

On 28 November, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it reaffirmed previous resolutions on the subject and also reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of East Timor to self-determination and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to achieve that right. The Assembly rejected the claim that East Timor had been integrated into Indonesia, inasmuch as the people of the territory had not been able to exercise freely their right to self-determination and independence.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee to keep the situation in the territory under active consideration, to follow the implementation of this resolution, and to dispatch a visiting mission to the territory as soon as possible, with a view to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Chairman of the Special Committee, in the meantime to send urgently a special representative to East Timor to make a thorough, on-the-spot assessment of the situation there and to contact the representatives of FRETILIN and the Government of Indonesia, as well as the Governments of other States concerned, to prepare the ground for a visiting mission of the Special Committee, and to report thereon to that Committee.

The Assembly drew the attention of the Security Council to the critical situation in the territory and recommended that it should take all effective steps to implement its resolutions of 22 December 1975²⁴ and 22 April 1976²⁵ with a view to securing the full exercise by the people of East Timor of their right to self-determination and independence.

The Assembly called upon the Government of Indonesia and the leadership of FRETILIN to facilitate the entry into East Timor of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and other relief organizations.

These decisions were taken with the adoption of resolution 32/34, by a recorded vote of 67 to 26, with 47 abstentions.

The Fourth Committee approved the draft resolution on 10 November by a recorded vote, requested by Mozambique, of 61 to 26, with 47 abstentions. The draft was sponsored by Algeria, Angola, Barbados, Benin, Cape Verde, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam and Zambia.

(For voting details and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Explaining its vote, Indonesia declared its categorical and total opposition to the resolution, which it said was completely unrelated to the situation in East Timor, and reaffirmed the claim that the territory had become independent as an inseparable part of Indonesia.

Explaining its negative vote, India said that when the former colonial power withdrew voluntarily from East Timor, civil war had broken out between the competing political parties. The party favouring integration with Indonesia had emerged victorious, and popular consultations had subsequently endorsed the territory's final integration with Indonesia. The Philippines and Thailand also held the view that the people of East Timor had already exercised their right to self-determination.

The Netherlands said it abstained from voting on the ground that the resolution did not make a positive contribution to the solution of the problems of East Timor, but it stressed that the Government of Indonesia had a moral obligation to satisfy the need of the international community for information. Australia abstained because, in its view, the resolution was neither realistic nor constructive.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Special Committee considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) on 17 August 1977. The Committee decided, without objection, to transmit the working paper prepared by the Secretariat to the General Assembly in order to facilitate consideration of the item, and, subject to any directives the Assembly might give, to consider the item again in 1978.

In addition to the relevant chapter of the Special Committee's report, the Assembly had before it two letters dated 8 June 1977 from Argentina and the United Kingdom respectively, and two letters dated 16 August from those two Governments. The letters of 8 June forwarded the text of a joint communique of 26 April 1977 stating that the two Governments had agreed to hold negotiations from June or July 1977 concerning future political relations, including sovereignty, of the Falkland Islands, (Malvinas), South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, and economic co-operation. The negotiations would be devoted to working out a peaceful solution to the dispute on sovereignty existing between the two States, and also the establishment of a framework for Anglo-Argentine economic co-operation which could contribute substantially to the development of the islands and the region as a whole. The United Kingdom undertook to consult the people of the territories in the course of the negotiations.

In the letters of 16 August, the Secretary-General was informed that representatives of the two States had met in Rome from 13 to 15 July, and planned to meet again in November.

On 28 November, the General Assembly decided, without a vote, to defer consideration of the question until 1978 and requested the Special Committee to keep the situation under review. The decision—32/412—was adopted on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, where the text was approved, without objection, on 10 November, on a proposal of the Chairman.

During discussion in the Fourth Committee, Ghana and Zaire asserted the right of the inhabitants of the territory to self-determination. Argentina said that three General Assembly resolutions had established that the dispute over the islands should be resolved exclusively through negotiations between the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom. The resolutions took into account the interests of the inhabitants of the Malvinas, but there was no mention in them of the principle of self-determination.

In letters dated 30 January 1978, the representatives of Argentina and the United Kingdom transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a joint communique dated 15 December 1977. The Communique followed from a meeting between representatives of the two Governments held in New York from 13 to 15 December 1977, and recorded their decision to set up two working groups, one dealing with political relations, including sovereignty, and the other with economic co-operation. The two Governments also announced that a further round of negotiations would be held in the second quarter of 1978.

French Somaliland (Djibouti)

Guided by the report of a three-member (Norway, Sri Lanka and Venezuela) United Nations Mission to Observe the Referendum and Elections in French Somaliland²⁶ (Djibouti), which took place on 8 May 1977, the Special Committee considered the question of the territory on 24 June. The mission reported that the referendum had shown that 98.7 per cent of those voting were in favour of independence for the territory. The elections for the Chamber of Deputies, held on the same date, showed that 92.4 per cent of those voting were in favour of the single list of candidates which had been established by all the political groups in the territory.

On a proposal by the Chairman, the Special Committee adopted without objection the text of a statement concerning the accession of the territory to independence as the Republic of Djibouti. In the statement, the Special Committee expressed its satisfaction that the territory would attain independence on 27 June 1977 and paid tribute to the Government and people of Djibouti on their achievement. It extended to them its warm congratulations and best wishes for peace, happiness and prosperity.

The Committee voiced its confidence that the international community would render all possible assistance to the Government and people of Djibouti for the consolidation of their independence and expressed the hope that all States would respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the new State.

On 20 September 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Security Council, adopted by acclamation resolution

32/1 by which it admitted the Republic of Djibouti to membership in the United Nations (see p. 370).

Gibraltar

The Special Committee considered the question of Gibraltar on 17 August 1977. The Committee decided, without objection, to transmit the working paper, containing information on developments in the territory, prepared by the Secretariat, to the General Assembly and, subject to any directives that the General Assembly might give in that connexion, to consider the question in 1978.

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted, without objection, a consensus statement, recommended by its Fourth Committee, whereby the Assembly noted that, since the adoption of its resolution on 13 December 1974,²⁷ talks—which were still continuing—had been held between the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom on the question of Gibraltar. It urged both Governments to make possible without delay, taking due account of current circumstances, the initiation of the negotiations envisaged in the consensus statement it had adopted on 14 December 1973,²⁸ with the object of reaching a lasting solution to the problem of Gibraltar, in the light of relevant Assembly resolutions and in the spirit of the United Nations Charter.

The consensus statement was set forth in decision 32/411. The Fourth Committee had approved the text without objection on 11 November.

Gilbert Islands

On 4 August 1977, the Special Committee endorsed without objection the conclusions and recommendations of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning the Gilbert Islands, administered by the United Kingdom.

The Committee, among other things, reiterated its view that the special circumstances of the Gilbert Islands should in no way delay the speedy implementation of the process of self-determination, and expressed its appreciation to the United Kingdom Government for enabling it to conduct a more informed and more meaningful examination of conditions in the territory, with a view to accelerating decolonization, by increasing its co-operation with the Committee, including its willingness to receive visiting missions in its territories.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that the Gilbert Islands had attained full internal self-government on 1 January 1977, to be followed by a general election and a constitutional conference before independence. It commended the consultative process whereby recommendations relating to an independence constitution were considered during April and May. It noted that a constitutional conference was to be held in 1978 and welcomed the fact that representatives of the Banaban community would be invited. It expressed the hope that the conference would lead to independence in 1978.

The Committee also noted a recent decision by the British Phosphate Commissioners to establish a fund to assist the Banaban community to secure their economic future.

The Committee noted that the islands' public service was being progressively "localized," which it viewed as a positive step towards enabling the Gilbertese to assume control of their own administration.

Bearing in mind that the phosphate resources on the territory would be exhausted in two or three years, the Committee remained concerned about the need to diversify the economy. In this context, it welcomed the willingness of the administering power to continue economic assistance after independence and welcomed assistance by other Governments and by organizations within the United Nations system. It also noted approaches made to Japan for aid in developing commercial fishing, and efforts made in this area by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Kingdom.

The General Assembly, on 28 November, adopted a resolution by which, inter alia, it approved the chapters of the report of the Special Committee relating to the Gilbert Islands.

The Assembly expressed the hope that the constitutional conference, to be held in 1978, would lead the territory to independence in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence and that the constitution to be agreed upon would respect the special rights and interests of the Banaban community. It asked that steps be taken to diversify the economy of the territory, with the help of United Nations organizations and regional bodies. It also requested the Special Committee to continue to seek the best ways and means for the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the Gilbert Islands, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission, in consultation with the administering power.

These decisions were contained in resolution 32/23, adopted, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee. In the Fourth Committee, the resolution was sponsored by Afghanistan, Australia, Canada, India, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Thailand, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the Upper Volta, and approved without vote on 9 November. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom said that talks were currently taking place between the Banabans and the Government of the Gilbert Islands. Mexico said it was concerned over the difficulties presented by the question of the rights of the Banabans of Ocean Island who wished to have special status within the Gilbert Islands. Sierra Leone welcomed the steps taken to provide additional guarantees for the Banaban community, and in particular the plan for a special autonomous position for Ocean Island within the Gilbert Islands.

Guam

On 1 August 1977, the Special Committee adopted the report on Guam of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations. The Committee thereby reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Guam to self-determination and independence and reiterated the view that, despite the special circumstances of the territory, these should in no way delay the speedy implementation of the process of self-determination in conformity with the Declaration on the granting of independence.

The Committee noted the co-operation of the administering power concerned—the United States—in participating actively in the work of the Committee, thereby enabling the Committee to conduct a more informed and more meaningful examination of Guam, with a view to accelerating decolonization. It expressed its appreciation for the assistance provided to the territory by the administering power and ICRC for repairing substantial typhoon damage and for minimizing the effects of such natural disasters.

The Special Committee noted that, on 4 September 1976, a political status referendum had been held in the territory in which a majority of those voting had opted to remain a territory of the United States with a separate constitution. As a result, in April 1977, 32 delegates had been elected to a Constitutional Convention, to meet from July to October, to draft a constitution for the future Government of the territory. It further noted that the constitution would be submitted to the people of the territory for acceptance or rejection through an island-wide referendum, and urged that political education programmes be continued.

The Special Committee reiterated its strong view that the presence of United States bases on Guam should not be allowed to inhibit the people of the territory from exercising freely their right to self-determination in accordance with the Declaration and with the principles and objectives of the United Nations Charter.

The Special Committee noted the measures being pursued by the administering power, in consultation with the people of Guam and their representatives, to strengthen and diversify the economy of the territory, including education, training and health programmes, encouraging tourism, new business and industry, developing natural resources and increasing agricultural production. It considered that the establishment of a development bank for Guam could further encourage the growth of new economic activity. The Special Committee also noted that the administering power had indicated awareness of the need to diversify the economy in order to reduce economic dependence on the military installations in the territory. It urged the administering power to intensify its efforts to that end.

The Committee noted the positive attitude of the United States towards receiving visiting missions, and expressed the hope that an early visit to Guam by such a mission would be accepted.

When the General Assembly took up the question in the Fourth Committee, the United States said, among other things, that the Constitutional Convention in Guam had produced a preliminary draft constitution providing for a system of self-government within political union with the United States, a republican form of government, a local court system and a bill of rights. The United States was fully committed to the principle of self-determination and felt that the presence of its bases should not—and did not—inhibit the people of the territory from freely exercising their rights. The legislature, freely elected by the population of Guam, had in December 1976 adopted a resolution expressing its support for the continued presence of United States military personnel on Guam. The United States was convinced that its administration of Guam and its military presence there were fully consistent with the United Nations Charter, its obligations thereunder, and with the will of the people of Guam.

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted without objection a resolution by which, inter alia, it noted the opinion expressed by the representative of the administering power concerning the presence of United States military bases in the territory; it considered that the policy of maintaining military bases and installations in non-self-governing territories which inhibited the right of self-determination of peoples was incompatible with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations.

The Assembly approved the chapter relating to Guam in the report of the Special Committee. It reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Guam to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence and reaffirmed its conviction that questions of territorial size, geographical location and limited resources should not delay the implementation of that Declaration.

The Assembly called upon the United States Government, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people, to continue taking all necessary steps to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in the Declaration. It reaffirmed its strong conviction that the presence of United States bases on Guam should not prevent the people of the territory from freely exercising their right to self-determination in accordance with the Declaration and the principles of the United Nations Charter. It also took note of the attitude of the United States regarding visiting missions and requested the Chairman of the Special Committee to continue consultations with a view to gaining access for such a mission to the territory.

The Assembly called upon the administering power to take all steps to diversify the economy and work out concrete aid and economic development programmes and urged it, in co-operation with the Government of Guam, to take effective measures which would guarantee the right of the people to own and dispose of the natural resources of Guam. It requested the United States to continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations to accelerate progress in all sectors of the national life.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/28, adopted by the Assembly on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Fourth Committee's recommended text was based on a draft submitted by Angola, Cuba, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mozambique and Viet Nam. The five-power draft, however, contained a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly would have deplored the policy of continuing to maintain military installations on Guam in contravention of relevant Assembly resolutions. It also differed from the text adopted in that it would have had the Assembly reaffirm its strong conviction that the presence of United States bases on Guam was preventing, rather than should not prevent, the people from freely exercising their right to self-determination.

A second draft resolution, sponsored by Australia, Japan, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Samoa and Sierra Leone, was withdrawn. The six-power draft also generally accorded with that approved by the Assembly except that: the preambular paragraph by which the Assembly considered that the policy of maintaining military installations in non-self-governing territories which inhibited the right of self-determination was incompatible with United Nations resolutions was omitted; the Assembly would have expressed its strong view that the presence of United States bases there should not be allowed to inhibit the people from freely exercising their right to self-determination, rather than reaffirming its strong conviction that the presence of such bases should not prevent the people from doing so; and the Assembly would have welcomed the positive attitude of the administering power with respect to receiving United Nations visiting missions rather than taking note of its attitude regarding such missions.

Amendments and subamendments—all proposing alternative wording to the preambular paragraph relating to the policy of maintaining military bases and installations in non-self-governing territories—were proposed jointly by Australia, Japan, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea and Sierra Leone, jointly by Benin, Madagascar and Zambia, and by India. They were withdrawn following consultations, and a consensus text without sponsors was agreed on 14 November.

Reservations on the consensus, based on opposition to the presence of military bases in the territory and on the view that the resolution could be interpreted in such a way as to be incompatible with relevant Assembly resolutions, were expressed by China, the German Democratic Republic and Viet Nam. Angola, the Congo, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mozambique, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic and the USSR also recorded their opposition to the presence of military bases on foreign territories. Cuba said that such bases affected not only the right of self-determination in the territory in which they were based but also that right in neighbouring countries.

The United States explained that it had supported the consensus because it noted the general policy that, if a military base did in fact inhibit the exercise of the right to self-determination, then its presence was incompatible with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, a view with which the United States concurred. The United Kingdom supported this view.

New Hebrides

When the Special Committee considered the report on the New Hebrides of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories, it had before it a working paper on the territory prepared by the Secretariat. The working paper, among other things, outlined political developments in the territory and noted that at the first meeting of the 1977 session of the Representative Assembly, the New Hebrides National Party—subsequently known as the Vanua aku Pati—had introduced a motion to abolish the six seats of the Chamber of Commerce in the Assembly on the ground that representation of economic interests was undemocratic.

The motion having been defeated, the members of the Vanua aku Pati had absented themselves for the remainder of the session and the President of the Assembly had eventually been forced to declare the session closed.

The Special Committee also had before it a letter dated 3 June 1977 to the Secretary-General from the two administering powers, France and the United Kingdom, annexing a joint statement of 26 March, giving details of the decisions of a conference of customary chiefs, members of the Representative Assembly and representatives of political parties, which had been convened in March 1977 following the closure of the Assembly to seek a solution to the political difficulties.

On 7 July 1977, the Committee adopted without objection the report of the Sub-Committee and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations. By this decision, the Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the New Hebrides to self-determination and reiterated the view that the circumstances peculiar to the New Hebrides, including its being a condominium, should in no way delay the process of self-determination and the speedy implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence. Commending the co-operation of the two administering powers, the Committee took particular note of the presence of a representative of France for the first time during its consideration of the territory, and welcomed the joint commitment of the administering powers to independence for the territory.

The Special Committee noted with satisfaction that the administering powers had taken significant steps to end the impasse which had developed in the territory in 1976-1977, following the decision of the Vanua aku Pati not to participate in the Representative Assembly while it maintained its current composition. The Committee noted that the conference held in the New Hebrides in March 1977 had recommended that a ministerial meeting should be held in Europe in July 1977, to which, among others, representatives of the parties in the Representative Assembly would be invited. The meeting would be held to work out the steps necessary to bring the New Hebrides to independence and to fix the date for an election, based on universal suffrage, for a new Representative Assembly.

The Committee welcomed the way in which representatives of the people of the New Hebrides were being fully involved in consultations on its future, and noted that the Representative Assembly had been dissolved and that a temporary council, including members nominated by political groups, had been established to assist the administering powers to administer the territory, to prepare for the July meeting and to organize the proposed elections. It also welcomed the fact that United Kingdom and French experts, in consultation with a committee of the former Representative Assembly, were drawing up proposals for the unification of the territorial administration.

The Committee hoped that economic and social development would keep abreast of political advancement in the territory. In particular, copra and livestock production and marketing and other industries, including fisheries, were all in need of development. It hoped that the benefits of associate membership in the European Economic Community would be felt in the New Hebrides. The Committee also urged the administering powers to safeguard the people's right to own and dispose of their land and natural resources.

The Committee noted that the illiteracy rate was 15 per cent of the total population of 10 years of age and over, and again urged the administering powers to make a combined effort to promote a unitary system of education which would meet the needs of the territory. It asked those powers to consult with the new Representative Assembly, when constituted, particularly concerning the dispatch of a visiting mission.

When the General Assembly took up the question of the New Hebrides at its 1977 session, it had before it, as well as the letter dated 3 June from France and the United Kingdom, a further letter dated 3 August. In this letter, the two Governments transmitted the text of a joint statement on future constitutional developments, prepared after a meeting held in Paris from 19 to 21 July between the two Governments and a delegation from the New Hebrides consisting of representatives of political groups in the territory and of the chiefs of the Malfatu Mauri; leaders of the Vanua aku Pati had decided not to attend.

At the meeting, it had been decided that new elections would be held for the Representative Assembly before 1 December 1977, but because of a lack of time, the current electoral rules and voting age would be maintained. A system of internal self-government would be set up in the first months of 1978. New elections and a referendum would be held during the second half of 1980, in which the population would be asked to decide whether they wished to proceed to independence. If they so decided, independence would be proclaimed.

Another ministerial conference would be held in December 1977 or January 1978 to consult the members of the new Representative Assembly and to decide on a timetable for independence and on the composition of the Council of Ministers.

On 28 November, the Assembly adopted a resolution, whereby it recalled previous Assembly resolutions relating to the territory and reaffirmed the territorial integrity and national unity of the New Hebrides. The Assembly welcomed the joint commitment of the two administering powers to independence for the territory and urged them to continue their efforts towards its independence, in full consultation with its people.

The Assembly requested the administering powers to take all appropriate steps to strengthen the economy of the New Hebrides, to continue taking steps on a priority basis to unify its administration and to work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development so as to ensure that economic and social development kept abreast of political development. It asked them to enlist the help of United Nations organizations in accelerating progress. It also urged France and the United Kingdom to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee and to consider permitting access by a United Nations visiting mission to the New Hebrides. It asked the two Governments to report on this aspect to the Special Committee, when next it considered the question of the New Hebrides.

The Assembly took these decisions by adopting resolution 32/26, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee. The text was approved without vote by that Committee on 9 November. The sponsors were Australia, Canada, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the Upper Volta.

mittee, France outlined the progress of constitutional development in the territory, including the outcome of the conferences held in March and July 1977. Although France would be pleased to join in a consensus on the resolution before the Committee, it expressed reservations on a preambular paragraph recalling previous Assembly resolutions not supported by France. France also had reservations concerning the appropriateness of sending a visiting mission to the territory at a delicate period of constitutional development. It was felt necessary to avoid any move that might jeopardize progress towards self-government.

The United Kingdom said that both Governments fully intended to introduce internal self-government with an executive Council of Ministers immediately following the election for the new Assembly in November 1977. The powers retained by the two metropolitan Governments would be reduced progressively and the two Governments had agreed on a programme which would allow for independence in 1980.

Papua New Guinea, while welcoming the decision of France to participate in the work of the Special Committee and the co-operation of both administering powers with the Committee, said that the majority party in the territory would not be taking part in the forthcoming election because its request that only natives of the New Hebrides should be allowed to vote had not been met. Nevertheless, Papua New Guinea felt that that party should form the Government, and power should be transferred to it as soon as possible, not in 1980.

St. Helena

The Special Committee, on 7 July 1977, endorsed without objection the conclusions and recommendations of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning St. Helena.

The Committee noted the commitment of the United Kingdom, the administering power, to respect the wishes of the people concerning their advance towards self-determination and to carry out a policy aimed at implementing the consensus on the territory adopted by the General Assembly in 1976.²⁹ It reaffirmed that continued development assistance from the administering power, together with assistance from the international community, constituted an important means of developing the economic potential of the territory and enhancing the capacity of the people to realize goals set forth in the provisions of the United Nations Charter.

²⁹ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 726.

The Committee noted the commitment of the administering power to foster the social and economic development of the territory in close co-operation with elected representatives of the people and also the positive attitude of the administering power on the question of visiting missions. The Committee decided to keep under review the possibility of dispatching such a mission at an appropriate time, taking into account the wishes of the people of St. Helena.

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted a consensus statement on the question of St. Helena. The Fourth Committee had approved and recommended the text without objection on 10 November.

By this statement (decision 32/410), the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination in conformity with the 1960 Declaration on the granting of independence. Noting the commitment of the Government of the United Kingdom to respect the wishes of the people of the territory in relation to their advance towards self-determination and to carry out a policy aimed at implementing the 1976 Assembly decision on St. Helena, the Assembly reaffirmed that continued development assistance from the administering power, together with any assistance that the international community might provide, constituted an important means of developing the economic potential of the territory and of enhancing the capacity of its people to realize fully the goals set forth in the relevant provisions of the Charter.

In this connexion, the Assembly noted the commitment of the administering power to foster the social and economic development of St. Helena, in close co-operation with the elected representatives of the people, and also the positive attitude of the administering power concerning visiting missions. It requested the Chairman of the Special Committee to continue his consultations in that regard.

Solomon Islands

On 14 June 1977, the Special Committee adopted without objection the report of its Subcommittee on Small Territories on the Solomon Islands and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations. By this decision, the Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the Solomon Islands to self-determination and independence and reiterated the view that, despite the special circumstances of the territory, these should in no way delay the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence.

ing power—the United Kingdom—in participating actively in the work of the Committee. It also took note of the approval by the Legislative Assembly of the Solomon Islands of the outline of a draft unitary constitution for independence which would allow for effective devolution of power and responsibility to local government. The Committee, while noting with regret that the plans for independence in 1977 had had to be postponed, expressed the hope that future talks relating to the territory's transition towards independence would be fully guided by the wishes and aspirations of the people and that independence would follow at a time acceptable to the parties directly concerned.

The Special Committee noted that the territory had made some progress towards diversifying its economy beyond an agricultural base and had also had some success in avoiding dependence on one or two exports as the major source of revenue. It felt, however, that transportation and communications facilities should be improved and the development of light industry should be encouraged so that more consumer goods could be produced locally.

The Committee noted that several of the new enterprises established in the islands were joint ventures between the Solomon Islands and foreign interests. The Committee reiterated its view that it was most important that the indigenous people of dependent territories should not be forced to relinquish control of economic resources and institutions as the price for attaining a degree of economic progress.

The Special Committee took note of the expectation of the Solomon Islands Government that it would require increased economic development assistance in the initial years of independence and expressed the hope that the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, as well as regional organizations, would continue to render assistance. It welcomed the willingness of the United Kingdom to continue development aid after independence and noted with satisfaction that Australia and New Zealand were also providing aid. It called attention to the need to increase wages and improve and standardize working conditions.

The Committee noted that a free public education system had been established and expressed the hope that efforts to promote vocational and technical training would be pursued.

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted without objection a resolution concerning the Solomon Islands. By the resolution, the Assembly noted with satisfaction that, at a constitutional conference held in London in September 1977, agreement had been reached between the administering power and the Solomon Islands delegation whereby the territory would achieve independence in July 1978.

The Assembly noted with satisfaction that the United Kingdom would continue to assist the territory after independence. It welcomed the comprehensive way in which the Government of the Solomon Islands had approached the preparation of a sound political and economic foundation for independence. It requested that further steps be taken to diversify the economy, enlisting the particular assistance of United Nations organizations and regional bodies.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/25 on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, where the text had been approved without vote on 9 November. The sponsors of the resolution were Australia, Austria, Canada, Fiji, India, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the Upper Volta.

During discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom said that the Governments of the United Kingdom and the Solomon Islands had agreed upon a financial settlement of £26 million in aid, to be disbursed over the first four years of independence. The United Kingdom hoped shortly to welcome the Solomon Islands as an independent member of both the Commonwealth and the United Nations.

Tokelau

On 14 June 1977, the Special Committee adopted without objection the report of its Subcommittee on Small Territories on Tokelau, administered by New Zealand, and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

The Special Committee commended the administering power for its continued co-operation, including its invitation to the Committee to send a visiting mission to the territory in 1976,³⁰ by means of which the Committee had gained insight into the hopes and aspirations, as well as the fears and concerns, of the people of the territory regarding their future and their current wish to maintain close ties with New Zealand.

The Committee noted the declared policy of the New Zealand Government to disturb as little as possible the internal institutions making up the Tokelauan way of life, as well as the complementary measures it had taken to strengthen those institutions. It also took note of the statement contained in the annual report of the administering power that, as a result of that policy, the islands already exercised a great degree of practical self-government. Moreover, it was pleased that the administering power had taken effective steps to inform the inhabitants of the options, consistent with the Declaration on granting independence, open to them, thus ensuring that they were fully able to determine their political future.

The Special Committee also noted the steps taken since the visit of the mission to strengthen and expand the Tokelau public service and to increase the number of Tokelauans in that service. It noted that a Tokelauan administrative officer had been appointed to each village. It welcomed the fact that qualified Tokelauans had been encouraged to return to the territory from New Zealand and thereby to apply their skills to the welfare of the Tokelauan community.

Drawing attention to the opposition expressed by the people of Tokelau to nuclear testing in the Pacific Ocean, the Committee called on the Government of the country concerned to heed the sentiments of those people and the provisions of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and to cease all such testing.

The Special Committee noted the various measures taken in the economic field to assist the development of the territory, among which were the establishment of co-operative retail outlets on each island, the eradication of plant pests, and steps to encourage the cultivation of crops other than coconut and to improve pig and poultry stock. Water-collection facilities had also been improved, as well as access to the sea by reef blasting.

The Committee considered that further improvements might be effected by drawing up, in consultation with the people, an over-all development plan for the territory and by taking steps to diversify sources of revenue. In particular, the Committee considered that the establishment of a commercial fishing industry could be a promising avenue of economic development.

The Committee expressed its appreciation for the work of the specialized agencies, other organizations within the United Nations system and the regional organizations in rendering assistance to Tokelau. It hoped that the educational reforms discussed in the report of the 1976 visiting mission would include training in modern vocational skills designed to meet the needs of the people. The Committee considered that the possibility of sending a second visiting mission to the territory should be kept under review.

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted a consensus statement on Tokelau,

whereby it commended the administering power for its continued co-operation, in particular the invitation which enabled the Special Committee to send a visiting mission to the territory in 1976. The Assembly noted the declared policy of the New Zealand Government to disturb the internal institutions of Tokelau as little as possible, as well as the fact that the territory already exercised a great degree of practical self-government.

The Assembly noted the economic measures taken to develop the territory and the steps being taken, in consultation with the people of the territory, to formulate an over-all development plan. It urged the administering power to continue to explore ways of diversifying sources of revenue; in this connexion, it expressed appreciation for the assistance of the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations, in particular UNDP, and of the regional organizations. It drew their attention to its 1976 resolution³¹ requesting them to consider the methods and scale of their operations and to ensure that they could respond appropriately to the requirements of such small and isolated territories as Tokelau.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue to seek the best ways and means of implementing the Declaration on the granting of independence, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to the territory.

The consensus statement was embodied in decision 32/409, adopted, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, where the text was approved without objection on 9 November 1977.

In the Fourth Committee, New Zealand reported on the measures which had been taken to intensify programmes of political education on Tokelau. A three-point programme had been drawn up which involved: (a) the circulation of a newsletter in English and Tokelauan, providing news of political and administrative developments, including United Nations action on Tokelau; (b) the broadening of political contact with Tokelau's Pacific neighbours; and (c) intensification of discussions of political questions and problems between the administering power and the people's representatives.

In the economic sphere, apart from the measures noted by the Special Committee, encouragement was being given to the fishing industry, for which UNDP had provided freezers, co-operative stores had been established, a sales and marketing centre for Tokelauan handicrafts had been set up in Samoa and the possibility of establishing a garment industry was under discussion.

In view of the reluctance of the population of certain territories—of which Tokelau was one—to visualize their future in terms of political independence, the Ivory Coast said it had divided feelings on whether the principle of self-determination should be strictly implemented or whether some other formula reflecting the wishes of the people should be adopted.

Tuvalu

On 6 July 1977, the Special Committee adopted without objection the report of its Subcommittee on Small Territories on Tuvalu, administered by the United Kingdom, and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

By this decision, the Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Tuvalu to self-determination and reiterated the view that the special circumstances of the territory should in no way delay the speedy implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence. The Committee expressed its appreciation to the Government of the United Kingdom for enabling the Committee to conduct a more informed and meaningful examination of conditions in the territory and for having invited a United Nations visiting mission to Tuvalu (then the Ellice Islands) in 1974.³²

The Committee welcomed the fact that, following the recommendation of a local constitutional committee to opt for independence for the territory, a general election would be followed by independence in 1978. It also welcomed the establishment in the territory of positive patterns of consultations and a programme of political education.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the rapid establishment in Tuvalu of a new public service, composed almost entirely of Tuvaluans. It considered that appropriate training and guidance might continue to be necessary in order to promote the effectiveness of the new service.

The Special Committee reiterated its concern over the fragility of the economy of the territory, but noted that prospects seemed brighter if ongoing feasibility studies on industrial and agricultural development proved positive. It welcomed the willingness of the administering power to continue to give assistance to Tuvalu following independence and noted with satisfaction the development assistance being provided by other Governments. The Committee called on regional bodies and United Nations organizations to pay special attention to Tuvalu's development needs.

The General Assembly on 28 November adopted a consensus statement concerning Tuvalu. The Assembly thereby welcomed the fact that general elections had been held in Tuvalu in August 1977 and that independence would be achieved in 1978. It requested that further steps be taken towards diversifying the economy, and that the administering power continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, as well as of regional bodies, in developing and strengthening the economy of the territory. The Assembly requested the Special Committee, in continued co-operation with the administering power, to keep the situation in the territory under review.

The consensus statement was set forth in decision 32/407, adopted, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, where the text was approved without vote on 9 November.

During discussions in the Fourth Committee, the representative of the United Kingdom said that, following the recent elections in the territory, there was to be a constitutional conference in London in February 1978, and independence was to be achieved in October 1978.

United States Virgin Islands

In April 1977, the Special Committee, on the invitation of the administering power, decided to send a visiting mission to the United States Virgin Islands. The mission, composed of Fiji, Mali, Trinidad and Tobago, and Tunisia, visited the territory from 24 to 30 April, and Washington, D.C., from 30 June to 2 July.

The mission, in the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained in its report, noted that the constitution of the United States Virgin Islands provided for a separation of powers between the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government. The executive branch was controlled by the Independent Citizens Movement, whose political leader had been elected Governor of the Virgin Islands in November 1974. The legislative branch was controlled by the Democratic Party of the Virgin Islands, which won 13 out of the 15 seats in the Legislature at the elections held in November 1976. Administration was carried on through an assignment of portfolios to individuals nominated by the Governor, covering all areas of domestic government activity.

The mission said that no desire was expressed by the people of the territory for independence, but there was, nevertheless, much interest by elected officials in achieving the greatest possible measure of self-government, so that the territorial Government could exercise jurisdiction over certain governmental activities currently reserved to the federal Government. In this connexion, the Governor had recently signed a bill, passed by the Legislature, to set up a constitutional convention. The convention was to draft a new constitution as a further measure of local self-government, but it could not, by its terms of reference, effect any changes in the constitutional relationship between the administering power and people of the territory.

The mission noted that there had been only one opportunity to discuss political options in the Virgin Islands since 1917, when the United States purchased the islands from Denmark; this was in 1972, when the second Constitutional Convention was convened to draft a new constitution and a federal relations act. However, its proposals had not been presented to the United States Congress.

The mission therefore urged the United States, in consultation with the Government of the territory, to hold open discussions on all the political options open to the Virgin Islands, and suggested that it then submit the issues to a referendum or plebiscite under United Nations observation. The mission noted that the United States had repeatedly said that it was willing to respect the wishes of the people regarding their constitutional status.

The mission noted that there was some concern in the islands over unrestricted immigration which, it was felt, unsettled society in the Virgin Islands and led to severe strains on the social services. In order to improve relations between residents and immigrants, it invited the administering power to make adjustments in the application of immigration laws to the Virgin Islands.

The mission observed that the economy of the territory was based on the tourist industry and on industrial enterprises owned and controlled by continental United States interests. While not wishing to appear to be advocating a change in the economic system, the mission nevertheless felt that measures designed to foster and promote entrepreneurship among the people of the territory should be encouraged.

The mission found that there were serious problems associated with the high cost of land. It therefore invited the administering power to consult with the local authorities to find ways and means of helping those who were having difficulties in acquiring land.

The mission noted that the Government of the territory had experienced difficulty in balancing the budget in recent years. It considered that the Government should seek to bring about savings in expenditure throughout the governmental establishment. It also noted that unemployment was a problem, mainly because of a slump in the construction industry. The mission thought that, although public works projects envisaged would be valuable, other measures should be undertaken to provide a steady growth of jobs of all types.

The mission considered that the overloading of the educational system brought about by heavy immigration into the islands should be offset by building additional schools with funds provided by the federal Government. It also felt that more attention should be given, both by the administering power and by local enterprises, to training the population in the skills needed to manage all sectors of the economy.

The mission noted with satisfaction the expansion of medical facilities in the Virgin Islands, but noted that the difficulty of recruiting qualified local staff was a major obstacle to effecting improvement in medical services. It hoped that every effort would be made to train more physicians and nurses and to encourage them to work in the territory. It also reported that the local public health authorities were anxious to modernize the health-care system in the islands. It considered that the administering power should provide assistance to those authorities to enable them to carry out this task.

The mission found that some of the people of the territory were fearful of losing their cultural identity. It therefore recommended that the administering power take steps to promote and encourage the growth of the indigenous culture.

On 20 September, the Special Committee adopted a consensus statement submitted by the members of the visiting mission. By this statement, the Committee took note of the mission's report and its observations, conclusions and recommendations, noted with satisfaction the work it had accomplished, and expressed appreciation to the administering power and the territorial Government for their co-operation. The Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the territory to self-determination in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence and asked the administering power to assure its full implementation and implementation of the relevant provisions of the United Nations Charter with respect to the territory. The Committee decided to continue examination of the question in 1978.

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the United States Virgin Islands by which, among other things, it approved the relevant chapter of the Special Committee's report. It reaffirmed the right of the people to self-determination, took note of the observations, conclusions and recommendations of the mission, and expressed its satisfaction to the members for their constructive work and to the administering power and the Government of the territory for their co-operation and assistance.

The Assembly requested the Government of the United States to continue to take all necessary measures, in consultation with the territorial Government, to enable the people of the territory to exercise their right to self-determination, and also to encourage further discussion on the political and constitutional status of the territory. The administering power was also requested to take measures to preserve the identity and cultural heritage of the people.

The Assembly urged the administering power to take the measures necessary to guarantee the right of the people to own and dispose of their natural resources. It expressed the view that measures to promote the economic development of the islands were an important element in the process of self-determination, and called upon the administering power and the territorial Government to take the measures necessary to achieve a viable and stable economy.

The Assembly asked the administering power to continue to enlist the aid of United Nations organizations in the development and strengthening of the territory's economy; it also asked the Special Committee to continue to examine the situation in the United States Virgin Islands in the light of the mission's findings, including the possibility of sending a further mission to the territory.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/31, adopted by the Assembly, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which approved the text without vote on 25 November. The sponsors were Australia, the Bahamas, Fiji, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Mali, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Trinidad and Tobago, and Tunisia.

During discussion in the Fourth Committee, the United States said that a territory-wide Constitutional Convention had met on 3 October 1977 to begin work on drafting a new constitution. The draft constitution, when complete, would be put to a vote in a referendum before taking effect.

Western Sahara

Communications

During 1977, the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received a number of communications from Algeria, France, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania and Morocco relating to the situation in Western Sahara. These were circulated to members of the Security Council and the General Assembly (see also p. 246).

By a letter of 9 May 1977, the representative of Algeria transmitted a message from the Minister for Foreign Affairs in which the Minister informed the Secretary-General that Algeria had actively co-operated with the United Nations special envoy appointed by the Secretary-General to investigate conditions in Western Sahara, but that the negative attitude of the Moroccan and Mauritanian authorities had interrupted the mission. Renewed fighting demonstrated that there could be no peace in Western Sahara until the right of the people to self-determination was achieved.

Noting with approval the decision of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to hold a general summit meeting on Western Sahara, the Minister reiterated that Algeria was prepared to co-operate with any new initiative taken by the United Nations.

On 21 October, the representative of Madagascar transmitted to the Secretary-General a memorandum dated 5 October from the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el Hamra y Río de Oro (Frente POLISARIO). In the memorandum, POLISARIO reviewed events in Western Sahara leading to the Madrid Agreement of November 1975 between Spain, Morocco and Mauritania³³ as well as developments since that date. It condemned the Agreement, which had been followed by the withdrawal of Spain and the invasion of the territory by Morocco and Mauritania. Spain, as the appointed agent of the United Nations, had no competence to dispose of the territory as it wished, but should have carried out a policy of decolonization in accordance with United Nations decisions.

Noting the postponement of the OAU summit meeting on Western Sahara, which it deplored, POLISARIO said that it was confident that the African Heads of State would be able to implement their decisions and do justice to the Saharan people.

In its memorandum, POLISARIO also recalled that the Special Representative appointed by the Secretary-General in 1975 to undertake an exploratory mission in Western Sahara had been prevented from concluding his mission, but applauded the attempts made by the Secretary-General to implement Assembly resolutions on the territory. It asked the United Nations to assume its responsibilities towards Western Sahara by condemning the aggression of Mauritania and Morocco and by reaffirming the right of the Saharan people to self-determination.

By a letter of 10 November, the representative of Algeria transmitted to the Secretary-General a further letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs in which the Minister said that the most authoritative voice of Morocco had stated that Morocco would no longer hesitate to violate the borders of Algeria when invoking the right of hot pursuit. The Minister added that the French Government, while officially assuming an attitude of neutrality, no longer concealed its bias and its involvement on the side of the aggressor States. The belligerent attitude of the French Government and the aid given to Moroccan and Mauritanian armed forces were evidence of a clear intent to fan the flames of conflict and encourage its escalation, the letter added.

When the Special Committee considered the question of Western Sahara in August 1977, it had before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat on the situation there which said, among other things, that among several armed clashes which had taken place between the forces of POLISARIO and those of Morocco and Mauritania there had been an incident on 1 May 1977 in which two French citizens had been killed and six French civilians abducted. This incident had been the subject of diplomatic exchanges, in the course of which France had said that it could not accept the use of civilian hostages as a means of putting pressure on France to support POLISARIO. Reports from POLISARIO stated that the operation had been planned in order to attract world-wide attention to the conflict.

Following a statement by the Chairman, the Special Committee decided without objection on 4 August, subject to any directives which the General Assembly might give, to consider the question of Western Sahara in 1978, and to transmit the relevant documentation on the subject to the Assembly for its consideration.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly considered the question of Western Sahara in its Fourth Committee. The Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General, dated 26 October, informing the Assembly that the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU had decided at a session in July 1977 to hold a special summit meeting on the question of Western Sahara at Lusaka, Zambia, in October, but that the meeting had been postponed because Zambia had subsequently indicated that it was unable to host the meeting at that time.

On 31 October, the Fourth Committee heard a statement by a representative of POLISARIO. Reviewing recent events in Western Sahara, he recalled that on several occasions Spain, Morocco and Mauritania had stated that they upheld the principle of self-determination for the territory. The United Nations fact-finding mission of 1975³⁴ had confirmed the wishes of the people in this respect and the International Court of Justice had stated clearly that there was no tie of territorial sovereignty between the territory and Morocco or Mauritania. The representative said that after the Moroccan and Mauritanian aggression, the General Assembly had intervened, deciding that the right to independence should be preserved. In order to implement that decision, the Secretary-General had appointed a special envoy to investigate the situation, who had, however, been prevented from fulfilling his mission. The representative asked that the Secretary-General submit a full report on the circumstances relating to this mission to the Assembly.

The POLISARIO representative said that Mauritania and Morocco had contributed to the postponement of the OAU summit meeting by making their participation contingent upon the exclusion of representatives of the Saharan people. However, the responsibility of the United Nations could not be confused with that of another organization; it should therefore fully assume its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations relating to the decolonization of Western Sahara.

Following the statement, Gabon proposed that, since OAU intended to hold a summit meeting on Western Sahara at some future date, it would be premature and discourteous if the Fourth Committee discussed the question in depth before that meeting. Gabon therefore proposed that the Committee should postpone consideration of the question after it had heard statements from the interested parties. The Committee decided, on a proposal by the Chairman, to defer any decision on the question of procedure until the statements had been heard.

Algeria said that the Saharan territory had been and remained separate and distinct from Spanish territory. Spain could not, therefore, annex the territory or cede it to other States. The Madrid Agreement was invalid on three counts: first, because it constituted an executive rather than a purely administrative act; second, because its purpose was the alienation of a foreign people and territory; and, finally, because the other parties to the Agreement were third States—a territory and its people that had been perfectly united for centuries were suddenly declared to have never existed as a result of the expansionism of certain States, the administering power's abdication of its responsibilities and the divide-and-rule policy of certain States. The attempt to impose a military fait accompli was a flagrant violation of the United Nations Charter.

Mauritania reaffirmed its ancient rights over the territory of the former Spanish Sahara. The people living on both sides of the artificial colonial frontier which for several decades had arbitrarily divided Mauritanian territory into "French Mauritania" and "Spanish Mauritania" were one people, belonging to the same tribes and with a common language and culture.

Mauritania therefore viewed the problem in terms of national unity and territorial integrity. Although Mauritania had later advocated self-determination for Western Sahara in order to take account of the claims of Morocco, it could not accept that Algeria was a directly interested party. Mauritania condemned the acts of aggression against its territory and said that it would accept no solution imposed by force.

Spain said that it had informed the Secretary-General in 1975 that it considered itself free of any international responsibility with regard to the administration of the territory, and that decolonization would be complete when the opinion of the Saharan population had been validly expressed. The accusations made against Spain were categorically repudiated.

Morocco questioned statements which had been made on the sovereignty of Western Sahara. While it was true that the International Court of Justice had stated that it had not found legal ties between Morocco and the Sahara, it had, on the other hand, confirmed the existence of legal ties of allegiance between the Sultan of Morocco and the Saharan population.

Morocco supported the efforts of OAU to convene a summit conference on the territory. Although the meeting at Lusaka had been postponed, information recently received gave reason to hope that the summit meeting could be held in the coming months, since OAU was perfectly conscious of the dangers of failing to solve this explosive problem. Morocco was prepared to abide by any decision the summit meeting might make and would wait until that meeting took place.

France said that the representative of POLISARIO had invoked lofty principles even though his organization was flouting fundamental principles by taking hostages and detaining persons not involved in an armed conflict for political ends. France had appealed to organizations and Governments, including Algeria, to help free the hostages and had the impression that Algeria would be able to achieve positive results.

Many Committee Members expressed support for the right to self-determination of the people of Western Sahara and for the recognition of POLISARIO. Among them was Guinea-Bissau, which said that the territory had been divided between two neighbouring countries with the support of the colonial power, which had attempted to exercise a right to which it had no claim. The principles of international law were being disregarded and the risks to the whole region were becoming more apparent every day.

Madagascar said that the United Nations must keep in mind three essential conditions, which had been continually reaffirmed since 1966, namely, the organization of a referendum in Western Sahara, the role of the United Nations in the conduct of the referendum and the free exercise by the people of Western Sahara of their right to self-determination and independence.

A number of Members, while supporting the principle of self-determination, shared the view that the outcome of the OAU special summit meeting should be known before any decision was taken on the territory. Zaïre, for instance, was convinced that OAU would be able to find an equitable solution to a purely African problem. Also, Zambia hoped OAU would shortly be able to find a formula for settling the conflict within the framework of self-determination.

On 9 November 1977, the Committee approved by consensus a draft resolution prepared following consultations between the Committee Chairman and interested parties. A draft text submitted by Gabon, which would have referred consideration of the question of Western Sahara to the OAU extraordinary summit meeting, was withdrawn.

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted the recommended text without objection as resolution 32/22, which it reaffirmed its commitment to the principle of self-determination of peoples in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence. It expressed the hope that a just and lasting solution to the problem of Western Sahara would be speedily achieved at the extraordinary session of OAU devoted to this question, to be held in accordance with decisions taken by the Heads of State and Government of OAU.

The Assembly decided to resume consideration of the question of Western Sahara at its 1978 session and requested the Special Committee to keep developments in the matter under review. It further requested the Administrative Secretary-General of OAU to inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the progress achieved in the implementation of OAU'S decisions concerning Western Sahara.

On 21 December, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted to the Secretary-General a communication dated 20 December from the Secretary for Foreign Affairs in which the latter referred to a bombardment by the French air force against the Sahrawi people in Saguia el Hamra and Rio de Oro. He asked the Secretary-General to intervene and to take the necessary measures to put an end to the French action.

Other territories

In 1977, the General Assembly and its Special Committee also considered the situation in the following territories: Antigua, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

On 31 January, the Special Committee decided, inter alia, to refer to its Sub-Committee on Small Territories the questions of Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Montserrat, Pitcairn, and the Turks and Caicos Islands for consideration and report.

On 17 August, the Special Committee decided, without objection, to transmit to the General Assembly its documentation on Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent in order to facilitate consideration of the item and, subject to any directives the Assembly might give, to consider the territories in 1978. At an earlier meeting, on 17 June, the Committee had heard a statement by the Premier of Dominica.

BERMUDA

On 20 June 1977, the Special Committee adopted without objection the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning Bermuda and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

In so doing, the Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Bermuda to self-determination and independence. It expressed appreciation of the co-operation of the administering power—the United Kingdom—and expressed the hope that this attitude would pave the way for the speedy realization of the objectives of the Declaration on the granting of independence.

The Committee welcomed the statement of the administering power that it would respect the wishes of the peoples of the territories under its administration, including Bermuda, and that it would not delay independence for those territories wishing it, or force it on those which did not.

The Committee noted that in June 1976 an opposition party motion proposing the appointment of a select committee to consider the desirability of amending the Parliamentary Election

Act, 1963, had been rejected. The Committee nevertheless believed that a mechanism, such as a joint parliamentary group drawn from the two political parties in the territory, would provide a forum for in-depth discussion on this issue.

The Committee also considered it important that the electoral system should accurately reflect the wishes of the majority of Bermudians. It considered that measures might be necessary to ensure that the expatriate vote did not decisively influence the question of the territory's future status. In this connexion, it noted the statement of the administering power that if the Government of Bermuda decided to seek independence, the United Kingdom would convene a constitutional conference where the question of voting rights would be on the agenda.

The Special Committee noted with satisfaction the Bermuda Government's proposal to undertake a limited census so that a review of electoral constituencies could take place in 1979 and improvement of other aspects of the electoral process. It congratulated the Bermuda Government on its approach to the question of independence by popular consultation.

The Committee again recommended that leading representatives of the political parties should inform the Sub-Committee on Small Territories of their positions on problems concerning political and constitutional questions. It also hoped that the administering power would find it possible to invite a visiting mission to Bermuda in the near future.

The Committee was of the view that particular attention was needed to remedy the increasing evidence of crime in the territory. It expressed the hope that the presence of foreign military bases in Bermuda would not constitute an inhibiting factor in permitting the people of the territory to exercise their right to self-determination. The Committee welcomed measures to ensure the people's control over their natural resources and urged continued measures to guarantee their rights to own and dispose of those resources.

The Committee welcomed measures aimed at further integrating local people into the mainstream of the territory's economic life. Noting the high level of prosperity, the Committee remained concerned that Bermuda's almost complete dependence on tourism and financial institutions made its economy vulnerable and in need of diversification. It also noted with concern that farming was no longer profitable and hoped greater attention would be given to the problem of a high level of imported foodstuffs and to the establishment of light industries with increased Bermudian management.

It stressed the desirability of introducing reforms in the educational system to provide equal opportunities and ensure that curricula were in keeping with requirements and conditions in Bermuda. The Committee also hoped that the Bermuda Government would be able to reverse the shortage of well-trained Bermudians with managerial and technical skills by providing training facilities and offering more scholarships for training abroad.

BRITISH VIRGIN ISLANDS, MONTSERRAT, AND THE TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS

On 6 July 1977, the Special Committee adopted the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories on the British Virgin Islands, Montserrat, and the Turks and Caicos Islands, and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

Reaffirming the inalienable right of the people of these territories to self-determination and independence, and expressing awareness that the special circumstances of the territories should not delay the speedy implementation of self-determination, the Committee noted that it remained the policy of the administering power, the United Kingdom, to grant independence to those territories that wished it, and expressed its appreciation for the continued active participation of the United Kingdom in the Committee's work.

Noting with satisfaction the participation of the Governor and the Chief Minister of the British Virgin Islands in discussions in the Committee on the report of the 1976 visiting mission to that territory,³⁵ the Committee urged the administering power to encourage and facilitate similar participation by representatives of the other Governments of territories under its administration.

The Committee urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, as well as regional organizations, to continue to pay special attention to the development needs of the territories under consideration, and considered that the possibility of sending a visiting mission to the Turks and Caicos Islands and of sending a second mission to the British Virgin Islands and Montserrat should be kept under review.

Regarding the British Virgin Islands, the Special Committee took note of the constitutional advances which had resulted from an order incorporating a new constitution which came into force in April 1977, under which financial responsibility passed from the Governor to an elected minister, and the number of elected members of the new Legislative Council would be increased from seven to nine in 1979. It also noted that the next step forward, involving a move from a ministerial system of government to full internal self-government or independence, would only be taken after full consultation with the people.

The Committee noted the desire of the British Virgin Islands Government to "localize" the public service. In this connexion, the Committee emphasized the need to train personnel to fill positions in both the public and private sectors of the economy. The Special Committee reiterated its view on the need to diversify the territory's economy so that it did not always have to rely on the fishing and tourist industries. It also noted with satisfaction the establishment of air links with neighbouring islands.

Concerning Montserrat, the Special Committee took note of the statement of the territory's Chief Minister in February 1976 that the territory would continue under its current constitutional arrangements until a viable alternative emerged. It expressed pleasure that Montserrat was developing contacts with neighbouring States, and, in this connexion, noted with satisfaction the financial and technical assistance being granted to the territory by the administering power, by Canada and by regional institutions. It urged the administering power, in particular, to maintain development aid to Montserrat.

With regard to the Turks and Caicos Islands, the Committee welcomed the entry into force of the new constitution in August 1976 and the election of the islands' first Chief Minister. It noted the participation of political parties in the elections held in 1976 and expressed the hope that such parties would grow in significance in the political development of the territory. The Committee reiterated the hope that the presence of foreign military bases would not be an inhibiting factor in the exercise of the people's right to self-determination. It noted the increased economic activity in the territory, but expressed the hope that greater attention would be paid to the development of industries such as fishing and tourism. It urged the administering power to continue to help develop the economy of the territory, in particular in the area of employment creation.

PITCAIRN

On 14 June 1977, the Special Committee adopted without objection the report on Pitcairn of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories and endorsed the consensus statement contained therein.

The Committee took note of the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom reaffirming the policy of that Government, as the administering power, to preserve the island community life for as long as the people of the territory wished and were physically able to remain on the island. The Committee welcomed the substantial efforts which had been made to improve the territory's communications facilities, particularly by improving the harbour, and took note of the plans to provide Pitcairn with an air strip, to install solar- and wind-powered generators and to improve the water supply.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 28 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted without objection a resolution concerning Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Montserrat, and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly approved the chapters of the Special Committee's report relating to those territories, reaffirming the right of their peoples to self-determination, and reaffirmed its conviction that questions of territorial size, geographical isolation and limited resources should not delay implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence. The Assembly called upon the United Kingdom Government, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the peoples, to continue to take the necessary steps to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in that Declaration, to diversify and strengthen the economies of the territories and work out aid and economic development programmes.

The Assembly urged the administering power to safeguard the inalienable right of the peoples to the enjoyment of their natural resources by guaranteeing their rights to own those resources and to control future development of them. It also requested the administering power to pay particular attention to the training of qualified local personnel, and to continue to enlist the assistance of United Nations organizations in accelerating progress.

The Assembly welcomed the positive attitude of the administering power concerning visiting missions in the territories and requested the Chairman of the Special Committee to continue his consultations with a view to the dispatch of such missions.

The Assembly adopted resolution 32/29 on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, where the text was approved without vote on 15 November. The sponsors of the resolution were Australia, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Canada, India, Jamaica, Liberia, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Kingdom.

Also on 28 November, the General Assembly deferred until its 1978 session consideration of the question of Pitcairn and asked the Special Committee to continue to keep the situation in the territory under review and report thereon (decision 32/412); it also deferred until 1978 consideration of the question of Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent (decision 32/413). The actions were recommended by the Fourth Committee, where the texts were approved, without a vote, on the Chairman's suggestion, on 10 and 15 November respectively.

(For information on assistance to Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent, see p. 418; for text of resolution 32/186 on this subject, see pp. 429-30.)

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Belize,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 3432(XXX) of 8 December 1975 and 31/50 of 1 December 1976,

Having heard the statements of the representatives of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and of Guatemala,

Having heard the statement of the representative of Belize,

Having also heard the statements of the petitioners,

Reaffirming the principles established in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, set out in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, in particular that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Noting that, in the Bogotà Declaration of 6 August 1977, it was agreed that "a solution of the Belize question should be found by the peaceful methods consecrated in the charters of the Organization of American States and the United Nations, and in accordance with respect for its territorial integrity and with the principle of the free self-determination of peoples,"

Noting that, in July 1977, negotiations took place between the Government of the United Kingdom, as the administering Power, acting in close consultation with the Government of Belize, and the Government of Guatemala, pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 4 of resolution 31/50,

Deeply regretting the interruption of the negotiations and the continued failure of the parties concerned to negotiate an agreement in conformity with the principles established in resolutions 3432(XXX) and 31/50,

Concerned that the obstacles placed in the way of the people of Belize to prevent them from exercising their right to self-determination and independence without fear have not yet been removed,

Convinced that the people of Belize should be assisted in a practical manner to exercise freely and without fear their inalienable right to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Belize to self-determination and independence;

2. Reaffirms that the inviolability and territorial integrity of Belize must be preserved;

3. Calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, acting in close consultation with the Government of Belize, and the Government of Guatemala to pursue vigorously their negotations in strict conformity with the principles of General Assembly resolution 3432(XXX), in consultation as appropriate with other especially interested States in the area, with a view to concluding the negotiations before the thirty-third session of the General Assembly;

4. Also calls upon the parties involved to refrain from any threats or use of force against the people of Belize or their territory;

5. Urges all States to respect the right of the people of Belize to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity, and to render all practical assistance necessary for the secure and early exercise of that right;

6. Requests the Governments concerned to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the outcome of the negotiations referred to above;

7. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to remain seized of the question and to assist the people of Belize in the exercise of their inalienable rights.

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Conscious of the need to accelerate progress towards the full implementation of the Declaration with respect to Guam,

Having heard the statement of the administering Power,

Noting the opinion expressed by the representative of the administering Power concerning the presence of United States military bases in the Territory,

Considering that the policy of maintaining military bases and installations in Non-Self-Governing Territories which inhibit the right of self-determination of peoples is incompatible with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Calls upon the Government of the United States of America, as the administering Power, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people, to continue to take all the necessary steps to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in the Declaration with respect to Guam;

5. Reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of United States bases on Guam should not prevent the people of the Territory from freely exercising their right to self-determination in accordance with the Declaration and the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Calls upon the administering Power to take all possible steps to diversify the economy of the Territory and to work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development for Guam;

7. Takes note of the attitude of the Government of the United States regarding visiting missions and requests the Chairman of the Special Committee to continue his consultations with a view to gaining access for such a mission to the Territory;

8. Urges the administering Power, with the co-operation of the Government of Guam, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people of the Territory to the enjoyment of its natural resources by taking effective measures which guarantee the right of the people to own and dispose of those natural resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development;

9. Requests the administering Power to continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of Guam;

10. Chapter III

The question of Namibia

The question of Namibia again received consideration in 1977 by various United Nations bodies. The General Assembly, the Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,¹ and the United Nations Council for Namibia all took decisions on the matter. Related decisions were taken by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Economic and Social Council.

On 14 March, the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence adopted a consensus statement on general aspects of the situation in the territory by which, among other things, it denounced the South African regime for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, considered that the war being waged there by South Africa constituted a threat to international peace and security, and recommended to the Security Council that it declare mandatory the arms embargo against South Africa without any qualifications whatsoever.

The Special Committee reaffirmed the need to hold free elections under United Nations supervision and control in the whole of Namibia, as one political entity, and stressed that the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) had to take part in any negotiations leading to independence. The Special Committee categorically rejected all manoeuvres, such as tribal talks, by which the South African regime might seek to impose its will upon the Namibian people. Should South Africa seek to transfer any powers to a puppet interim regime, the General Assembly should meet in special session to determine what action might be required.

The International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo, Mozambique, from 16 to 21 May, approved the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and a Programme of action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

In its 1977 report, the United Nations Council for Namibia said it had: intensified its efforts in support of self-determination, freedom and national independence for the Namibian people under their sole and authentic liberation movement, SWAPO; denounced South Africa's militarization of Namibia; condemned as illegal the activities of all foreign corporations operating there; and condemned South Africa's decision to administer Walvis Bay as part of South Africa's Cape Province.

The Council for Namibia also continued to serve as trustee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia—the main vehicle through which the Council channeled assistance to Namibians—and to sponsor the Institute for Namibia in Lusaka, Zambia, which provided both training and employment for Namibians; it was expected that 300 students would be enrolled there by 1980. Also during 1977, the Council developed the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, which was intended to provide comprehensive assistance to the territory from within the United Nations system during both the pre-independence period and the initial period of independence.

The Council's report to the General Assembly also contained a review of the activities of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, and included a number of recommendations for action by the Assembly.

Later in 1977, at its thirty-second session, the General Assembly on 4 November adopted eight resolutions—which for the most part embodied the recommendations of the Council for Namibia—on the following aspects of the question: implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; the United Nations Fund for Namibia; dissemination of information on Namibia; the situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa; action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to Namibia; the programme of work of the Council for Namibia; intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia; and a decision to hold a special session on the question of Namibia before the Assembly's thirty-third (1978) session.

Details of these and related decisions are given in the sections that follow.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Namibia at meetings held in New York between 25 February and 14 March 1977.

In conformity with relevant General Assembly resolutions and in accordance with established practice, the Special Committee, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), invited the national liberation movement of Namibia, SWAPO, to participate in an observer capacity in its consideration of the question and heard a statement by SWAPO Vice-President Mishake Muyongo. The President of the United Nations Council for Namibia also participated in the work of the Special Committee and made a statement.

On 14 March, the Special Committee adopted by consensus the text of a statement by which, among other things, it emphatically denounced the South African regime for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia in defiance of repeated demands by the Security Council for its withdrawal, for its outright violation of obligations under the Charter of the United Nations in respect of Namibia, and for its attempt to perpetuate its domination over the Namibian people by creating an atmosphere of terror and intimidation throughout the territory and by employing tactics meant to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia and deny the genuine aspirations of its people.

The Special Committee went on to note that the South African regime was continuing its efforts to fragment the territory in accordance with its policy of bantustanization. The tribal talks being held at Windhoek, among hand-picked "representatives" chosen from various tribal groups, were nothing less than an attempt by the South African regime to perpetuate its apartheid and bantustan policies. Proposals submitted to those tribal talks, the Special Committee charged, sought to give a semblance of validity to South Africa's continued illegal occupation of the territory, but would in fact result in the establishment of a "government" in Namibia based on apartheid principles and wholly dependent upon South Africa.

In its consensus statement, the Special Committee noted that the true aspirations of the Namibian people had been evidenced by widespread demonstrations of support for SWAPO. In its efforts to suppress those manifestations, the South African regime had resorted increasingly to arrests, intimidation and violence and had placed large areas of Namibia under military rule. The Special Committee strongly condemned such measures, in particular arrests and sentencing of Namibians by courts having no legal jurisdiction in the territory. It again demanded the release of Aaron Mushimba, Hendrik Shikongo and all other Namibian political prisoners.

The Special Committee condemned the activities of foreign corporations operating in Namibia which were exploiting the human and natural resources of the territory. It demanded that such exploitation cease and it reaffirmed that the activities of those corporations were illegal.

In view of South Africa's massive military build-up in Namibia, its increasing resort to force and its refusal to comply with the terms of the Security Council's resolution of 30 January 1976,² the Special Committee asked the Council to consider taking measures under the United Nations Charter, including those provided for under Chapter VII.³ The Special Committee said it was mindful not only that Namibia, as an international territory, was a special responsibility of the United Nations but also that the war being waged there by South Africa constituted a threat to international peace and security.

The Special Committee went on to call on States to terminate, and abstain from entering into in the future, military arrangements of any kind which involved collaboration with the South African regime in respect of Namibia, and to desist from the sale or supply of all arms and military materiel to South Africa. In that connexion, the Special Committee recommended to the Security Council that it declare mandatory the arms embargo against South Africa without any qualifications whatsoever.

Also by this consensus statement, the Special Committee called on States to take effective measures to prevent the recruitment of mercenaries for service in Namibia or South Africa.

The Special Committee reaffirmed that the only political solution for Namibia had to be one based on the free exercise by all Namibians of their right to self-determination and independence within a united Namibia. To that end, it reaffirmed the need to hold free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations in the whole of Namibia as one political entity; any negotiations leading to independence had to be entered into by the South African regime with SWAPO, as the only authentic representative of the Namibian people, for the sole purpose of deciding the modalities of the transfer of power. Accordingly, the Special Committee rejected all manoeuvres, such as the tribal talks, by which the South African regime might seek to impose its will upon the Namibian people and it urged States to refrain from according any recognition to any authority or regime which South Africa might install in Namibia by such means. The Special Committee believed that, should South Africa seek to transfer any powers to such a puppet interim regime, the General Assembly should meet in special session to determine what action might be required.

The Special Committee also reaffirmed its continued support for the people of Namibia, led by SWAPO, and it appealed to the international community for moral and material support for them. It also asked Member States of the United Nations to contribute to the United Nations Fund for Namibia and, through it, to the Institute for Namibia, to continue and expand the training of Namibians in the skills needed for an independent Namibia.

The Special Committee reaffirmed its support for activities of the United Nations Council for Namibia—the only legal authority for Namibia until independence—and endorsed the policies and programmes defined by the Council in co-operation with SWAPO to promote the independence of the Namibian people.

The Chairman of the Special Committee, opening the Committee's discussion, said that the record of developments in Namibia during the eight months since the Committee last examined the question revealed a state of rapidly mounting confrontation. The racist regime of South Africa refused to terminate its illegal occupation of Namibia and there was no indication that it was prepared to yield to international pressure by relaxing its stranglehold over the territory and its suffering and exploited people. Faced with almost unanimous opposition from the Namibian people, he said, the South African regime had had to resort increasingly to intimidation and violence in order to bolster its illegal presence. Large areas of Namibia had been placed under military rule, and there was ample testimony of widespread brutality and ill-treatment of civilians by units of the South African armed forces. However, the liberation forces had continued to grow in strength and had enjoyed success in many parts of the territory. That and the increasingly overt support for SWAPO among all sections of the non-white population were encouraging aspects of the situation, he added.

The representative of Zambia, President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, told the Special Committee that South African manoeuvres with respect to Namibia were centred on the Turnhalle tribal talks: the tribal puppets and the white-minority supporters of apartheid were, he said, about to propose a so-called charter, on the basis of which South Africa intended to perpetuate its racist and colonial exploitation of Namibia. He also charged that South Africa and its allies were continuing their plunder of the natural wealth of the territory in complete disregard for the legitimate interests of the Namibian people. Available estimates, he said, indicated that 25 per cent of Namibia's gross domestic product was transferred abroad in profits, dividends and interest payments. The large uranium deposits at Rossing had already led to large contracts being entered into to export the output to the United Kingdom, Japan and France.

Behind its false promises of independence for the territory, he continued, South Africa continued to expand its military presence there. Its main military base had underground hangars for combat aircraft and facilities for 20,000 soldiers. The militarization of Namibia revealed with more clarity than any words the true intentions of South Africa.

The United Nations Council for Namibia was, he said, firmly supporting the struggle of the Namibian people in their efforts to achieve self-determination and independence in a united Namibia. In the past year the Council had opened in Lusaka the Institute for Namibia to train Namibians in the skills needed for an independent State. The resources of the Fund for Namibia and the indicative planning figure established by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had assisted the Council in increasing its programmes in support of Namibia.

In his statement to the Special Committee, Mishake Muyongo of SWAPO said that the situation in southern Africa had long since passed the merely critical or explosive stage and that total war had been declared by both sides. He enumerated an eight-point programme on which SWAPO believed action was imperative: (1) the Security Council should impose a mandatory arms embargo against the illegal occupation regime; (2) the international community should firmly denounce, by the convening of a special session of the General Assembly, the so-called interim regime to be imposed on Namibia in the near future; (3) the international community should refrain from according any recognition to any authority or regime that the Pretoria regime might install through the Turnhalle tribal talks; (4) as urged by the Assembly, all States should cease and desist from any form of direct or indirect military consultation, co-operation or collaboration with the Pretoria regime; (5) all States should take effective measures to prevent the recruitment of mercenaries for service in Namibia or South Africa; (6) the international community should increase its financial contributions to the Institute for Namibia through the United Nations Fund for Namibia; (7) any independence talks regarding Namibia had to be between the South African regime and SWAPO, under the auspices of the United Nations, for the sole purpose of discussing the modalities of the transfer of power to the people of Namibia; and (8) the international community was urged to make adequate financial contributions to the forthcoming international conference in Maputo to mobilize support for and assistance to the people of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

He said in conclusion that SWAPO was resolved to continue to wage military armed struggle. The People's Liberation Army of Namibia was scoring remarkable successes as it widened its operations inside Namibia, and there were currently semi-liberated areas in the northern operational zones.

During the discussion in the Special Committee, the majority of speakers agreed that no progress had been made during the past year towards the attainment of independence for Namibia and that, in fact, South Africa was continuing to consolidate its position in the territory. It had not only increased its militarization of the territory, but had imposed martial law and escalated its repression by policies of torture and arbitrary arrest. Members denounced the so-called constitutional conference being held in Windhoek, from which SWAPO had been excluded. In that connexion, the spokesman for Australia expressed reservations as to the nature and procedures of the constitutional conference, and did not accept that the conference and the South African Government had the right to exclude SWAPO, which Australia recognized as being of major political importance as the voice of Namibians seeking independence.

Australia was also concerned, he said, that the ethnic variety of Namibia and traditional tribal jealousies and rivalries had been exploited to generate divisions among Namibians to the clear benefit of the white minority. The tribal groupings were being developed into entities reminiscent of the bantustans of South Africa itself. Even more disturbing were the suggestions that the constitutional conference would request the South African defence forces to remain within Namibia after "independence." Having excluded SWAPO from its deliberations, the constitutional conference clearly feared that SWAPO might displace it by armed means.

A number of speakers said they could not recognize any action by South Africa which compromised the unity and territorial integrity of Namibia. Norway's representative, for example, stressed that no constitutional arrangements for the territory could have any validity unless they were based on the genuine wishes of the people freely expressed. Furthermore, any constitutional arrangements, including the holding of elections, had to be conducted under the supervision and control of the United Nations.

It was pointed out, by Norway and others, that the repressive policies of the white minority regimes had indeed created an explosive situation in southern Africa, a situation which threatened international peace and security. A guerrilla war was developing in Namibia, and peaceful solutions to the problem had to be sought. In Norway's view, a violent liberation of Namibia could only exact an appalling toll in lives, inflict terrible physical and moral damage upon all parties, poison relations among races in Namibia for decades, and possibly encourage unwanted intervention by outside powers.

Many States, including Bulgaria and Cuba, maintained that the liberation of the territory could be achieved only by the continuation and intensification by SWAPO of the armed struggle. The Chinese representative agreed, and observed also that because of its strategic importance and rich resources, Namibia had increasingly become a place of fierce rivalry between the two super-powers, which had added greatly to the difficulties and complexity of the liberation struggles of the people in Namibia and the rest of southern Africa. The Namibian people's struggle for independence and liberation was a component part of the world peoples' current struggles against imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism.

The representatives of Cuba and the United Republic of Tanzania said that South Africa's intention to retain control of the territory was also evidenced by its increased military build-up along the Angolan border and its use of the territory as a base for aggression against neighbouring African States. In view of these developments, a number of speakers, including Afghanistan, China and Norway, urged the Special Committee to recommend to the Security Council that it impose mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter. The representatives of the Congo, Iran and the USSR, among others, felt that the Security Council had been prevented from taking effective action by three of its permanent members—France, the United Kingdom and the United States—which had vast investments in the territory. The spokesman for Trinidad and Tobago felt that the co-operation of the Western countries with South Africa was based on a fear of jeopardizing their strategic interests in the south Atlantic.

India's representative said that his Government would support a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa and any other measures in accordance with the Charter which would exert pressure on South Africa to hand over the territory to the United Nations and withdraw peacefully. He recalled that when the question of sanctions was discussed in the Security Council in October 1976, certain countries had justified their opposition on the ground that delicate negotiations were then going on to persuade South Africa to grant majority rule and independence to Namibia. Those delicate negotiations, he said, seemed to have evaporated into thin air; in their place there was an intensification of the armed struggle. India hoped that the next round of discussions in the Security Council would yield results in the direction of the common objective of majority rule and independence in Namibia.

Communication (April 1977)

In a letter dated 29 April 1977 to the Secretary-General, the representative of South Africa charged that on 20 April a group of SWAPO terrorists had abducted 121 Ovambo school children, as well as six staff members, from a Roman Catholic mission school at Onamulenga in Ovambo, taking them across the border into Angola. The letter said that this act was yet another illustration of the lengths to which SWAPO would go in its attempts to subvert the people of South West Africa to its cause. It could only serve to exacerbate feelings at a time when efforts were being made to find a peaceful solution to the problems of the territory.

Decisions of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

On 4 March 1977, at its thirty-third session, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution on the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa by which, among other things, it noted that the South African authorities continued to occupy Namibia illegally, to strengthen their military presence there and to perpetuate their policies of apartheid and racial discrimination. The Commission reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence and their right to enjoy all the rights recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁴ and other international instruments. It requested the Ad Hoc Working Group to institute an inquiry in respect of any person in Namibia guilty of the crime of apartheid, or of a serious violation of human rights, and bring the results to the Commission's attention.

The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council draw the attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council to the desirability of adopting specific measures—including those provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter—to put an end to South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia. It also condemned the activities of countries which were helping to perpetuate the current situation in Namibia. Further, it demanded the release of all political prisoners, especially those suspected of sympathizing with SWAPO, and requested that, while awaiting release, they be protected in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949.

The Commission also, among other things: condemned the so-called Windhoek constitutional conference; recommended that the competent international organs and Member States support SWAPO; and requested that the General Assembly invite the United Nations Council for Namibia to study, in consultation with SWAPO, the possibility of Namibia becoming a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights⁵ and to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.⁶ (See also p. 687.)

Africa—the Commission among other things reaffirmed that arms sales, nuclear co-operation agreements and the economic activities of national and multinational companies in South Africa and Namibia constituted blatant acts of complicity in the crime of apartheid and represented a direct cause of the persistence of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and of the build-up of its military presence on Namibian territory in order to commit acts of aggression against neighbouring African States. (See also p. 691.)

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2086(LXII)) by which, among other things, it expressed grave concern at the increased use of arrests and bannings to suppress legitimate trade union activities among African workers in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe and condemned continued gross infringements of trade union rights in those areas.

It called for the immediate release of all trade unionists under detention in southern Africa and for the lifting of all banning orders imposed on persons engaged in trade union activities, and it demanded full recognition of all trade union rights of African workers. (For details, see p. 726.)

Also on 13 May, by its decision 232(LXII), the Council endorsed the recommendation made by the Human Rights Commission on 4 March and decided to draw the attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council to the desirability of adopting measures under Chapter VII of the Charter with a view to putting an end to the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa. (See also p. 687.)

By resolution 2101(LXIII), adopted on 3 August, the Council among other things: endorsed an appeal addressed to the international community in the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia to redouble assistance to the peoples of those territories and their national liberation movements; expressed its concern that the assistance thus far extended by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system was far from adequate; and urged those bodies to increase their assistance and, in consultation with OAU, to work out concrete programmes of assistance with the active collaboration of the national liberation movements concerned.

The Council also requested the specialized agencies and other organizations to continue to withhold assistance to the Government of South Africa and refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal domination of Namibia by South Africa. (For details, see p. 845.)

International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia

In accordance with a decision of the General Assembly of 17 December 1976,⁷ the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia was organized, and met from 16 to 21 May 1977 at Maputo, Mozambique. Its aim was to mobilize international support for, and assistance to, the peoples of the two territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence.

The Conference was attended by about 500 representatives of 92 Member States and a number of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, specialized agencies and national liberation movements. At the conclusion of its meetings it adopted the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and a Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

Regarding Namibia, the Conference in its Declaration proclaimed its support for the struggle of the people of the territory under the leadership of SWAPO, condemned the colonial and illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, condemned the policies of apartheid and homelands which had been extended to Namibia, and considered that all possible pressure should be brought to bear on the Pretoria regime to cease its barbaric repression of the Namibian people.

Recognizing that Walvis Bay was an integral part of Namibia, the Conference rejected South Africa's attempts to separate that port from the rest of Namibia, with which it was inextricably linked. It also condemned the increasing militarization of Namibia by South Africa, denounced the Turnhalle tribal talks as a South African stratagem to perpetuate its colonial and racist policies, and reaffirmed that, in order that the people of Namibia should be enabled freely to determine their own future, free elections should be held urgently under the supervision and control of the United Nations in the whole of Namibia as one political entity.

The Conference reaffirmed the responsibility of the United Nations for Namibia until the territory attained full independence and recognized the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority until independence was attained. It also proclaimed its support for the Nationhood Programme contained in the General Assembly's resolution of 20 December 1976,⁸ declared that the natural resources of Namibia were the birthright of the Namibian people and said that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests was illegal and contributed to the maintenance of the illegal occupation.

In the Programme of Action, the Conference among other things called on Governments to provide increased material and financial support to the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, urged all Member States and specialized agencies to extend material assistance to the front-line States to enable them more effectively to implement United Nations resolutions supporting the liberation struggle, and called upon the United Nations to increase its support for the Council for Namibia and to consider the possibility of establishing a University of Namibia.

The Conference also, among other things, called on Governments: to reject and denounce all manoeuvres by which South Africa might seek to impose its will on the Namibian people; to refrain from recognizing any regime which South Africa might install in the territory; to end foreign economic activities and consular representation there; and to implement the arms embargo against South Africa without exception. It also called on the Security Council to impose, under Chapter VII of the Charter, a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa and called on the General Assembly to convene a special session on Namibia.

Report of United Nations Council for Namibia

The United Nations Council for Namibia reported to the General Assembly at its 1977 session on developments concerning the territory and on the Council's activities from 21 October 1976 to 5 October 1977. The Council's report also contained a number of recommendations which were subsequently approved by the Assembly when it adopted resolutions 32/9 A-H on 4 November 1977 (see section below).

The Council reported that it had continued during 1977 to exercise its responsibilities both as a policy-making organ of the United Nations and as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia. It had intensified its efforts in support of self-determination, freedom and national independence for the Namibian people under their sole and authentic liberation movement, SWAPO; it had also denounced South Africa's militarization of Namibia and condemned in the strongest terms South Africa's decision to administer the enclave of Walvis Bay as part of its Cape Province.

During the year, the Council continued to hold consultations with Governments to ensure the implementation of United Nations resolutions on Namibia and to work for compliance by Member States with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971.⁹ A mission of the Council visited Canada in March 1977 to discuss, among other things, the question of private investments in Namibia by Canadian companies. In April and May, another mission visited 11 specialized agencies and organizations with headquarters in Europe to seek concrete and practical ways to increase assistance to Namibians, particularly through the Nationhood Programme, and to discuss such questions as the dissemination of information and assistance to Namibians. As a result of the mission, the Council obtained associate membership in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Health Organization (WHO) and observer status in the World Meteorological Organization.

The Council was also represented at meetings of the OAU Co-ordinating Committee for the Liberation of Africa in January/February, at the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU in June/July and, as in previous years, continued to co-operate with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and with the Special Committee against Apartheid. The Council was a sponsor of the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia held at Maputo in May, and participated with full status in the World Conference for Action against Apartheid held at Lagos, Nigeria, in August. The Council also represented Namibia at the United Nations Conference on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties in Vienna in April/May, the sixth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in New York in May/July, and the United Nations Conference on Desertification in Nairobi in August/September, at the last two of which the Council participated with full status.

The Council was again concerned with the question of foreign economic interests operating in Namibia. Among other things, it decided to hold a series of hearings on the exploitation, marketing and processing of Namibian uranium. The purpose of the hearings would be, among other things, to discourage States and their nationals from engaging in the illegal exploitation of Namibian uranium and to collect information concerning any relationship between Namibian uranium and the production of nuclear weapons by South Africa.

Continuing its activities to give effect to the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by it in 1974,¹⁰ the Council held consultations with Governments and specialized agencies, and the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia arranged for legal studies to be undertaken in selected countries on problems which might arise in giving effect to the Decree.

Also during the year, the Council sought further practical long-term and short-term forms of assistance to Namibians. In addition to the United Nations Fund for Namibia, which continued to serve as the main vehicle through which the Council channelled its assistance (see section below), the Council continued to sponsor the Institute for Namibia in Lusaka which provided both training and employment for Namibians. One hundred full-time students were enrolled at the Institute and it was expected that there would be 300 students by 1980. The Council also proceeded to develop the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, intended to provide comprehensive assistance from within the United Nations system, covering both the pre-independence period and the initial period of independence. As a first step, the Council carried out a review of the assistance given by the specialized agencies.

In its report, the Council also reviewed the activities of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, noting that, among other things, the Office of the Commissioner had issued 130 new travel documents and renewed 25, had continued to collect and analyse information relating to Namibia and to follow internal political and legal developments in South Africa concerning Namibia, had assisted in preparing the Namibia Bulletin, and had begun publication in February of a weekly newsletter entitled Namibia in the News. The Commissioner carried out intensive fund-raising activities to ensure the financing of the activities of the Institute for Namibia and other programmes and had attended a number of international conferences and meetings. Also during the year, the Regional Office of the Commissioner at Lusaka was reorganized and consolidated under a regional representative.

The Council marked the fifth observance of Namibia Day on 26 August with a special commemorative meeting at United Nations Headquarters.

It also considered and defined the political factors to be taken into account in the preparation of a United Nations map of Namibia, reflecting the territorial integrity of Namibia, in response to a request by the General Assembly at its 1976 session.¹¹

General aspects

At its thirty-second (1977) session, the General Assembly considered the question of Namibia at plenary meetings held between 18 October and 4 November. The Assembly had before it the reports of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and of the United Nations Council for Namibia, including the report of its Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

The Assembly also had before it a report of the Secretary-General dated 19 October submitted in response to an Assembly request to report on the implementation of its resolution of 20 December 1976¹² on the situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa. The Secretary-General noted in his report, among other things, that detailed information about the situation in Namibia was contained in the report of the Council for Namibia.

Also before the Assembly were: a letter from Egypt dated 15 March transmitting documents of the First Conference of Heads of State and Government of OAU and the League of Arab States, held at Cairo from 7 to 9 March 1977; a letter dated 23 September from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitting resolutions adopted by the eighth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Tripoli from 16 to 22 May 1977; a letter dated 5 October from the representative of the USSR transmitting the text of a statement by his Government on the elimination of the vestiges of colonialism, racism and apartheid, which, among other things, called for the withdrawal from Namibia of the occupation forces of South Africa; and a letter dated 5 October from Sri Lanka transmitting a statement, issued by the Foreign Ministers of non-aligned countries at an extraordinary meeting in New York on 30 September, in support of the right of the peoples of southern Africa to self-determination and independence, of the front-line States, and of the liberation struggle, and suggesting that a campaign should be launched for the total isolation of the apartheid minority regimes there; and a communique of 21 October issued by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries on recent repressive measures, including the banning of newspapers, by the South African regime against black organizations and their supporters struggling against apartheid.

During its meetings, the General Assembly heard statements by Sam Nujoma, President of the South West Africa People's Organization, and Theo-Ben Gurirab, SWAPO'S Permanent Observer to the United Nations, who participated in an observer capacity.

During the discussion in the General Assembly, Members deplored South Africa's continuing defiance of the authority of the United Nations. It had not only maintained its illegal occupation of the territory, they noted, but had further increased its military presence and had proceeded further with the creation of bantustans and the application of apartheid. The annexation of the enclave of Walvis Bay was deplored, as was the enactment of new, draconian laws banning public meetings and providing for arbitrary arrest.

A number of Members, including Angola, Benin, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic and others, maintained that South Africa had succeeded in defying United Nations decisions only because of the support it continued to receive from Western countries which, they said, were engaged in exploiting the territory's vast resources of minerals, including uranium. It was pointed out also that Western countries were providing South Africa with military support and helping it to develop its nuclear potential.

The representative of Canada, speaking also on behalf of France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, described the efforts of the five Governments, as members of the Security Council, to help bring about the independence of Namibia. The five Governments, he said, were aware of the need to implement the Security Council's resolution of 30 January 1976 (385(1976)),¹³ which was the culmination of a long series of efforts by the Council to bring about a settlement of the issue. It constituted a comprehensive plan of action to achieve, in an orderly fashion, full independence for Namibia. Consistent with that resolution, he said, any proposed solution had to provide for free elections, under the supervision and control of the United Nations, for the whole of Namibia as one political entity, and open to the genuine participation of all Namibians, including those currently being detained or in exile.

The representative of Canada said that discussions with the parties had begun in April. There had thus far been three rounds of discussions with the South African Government, and a second round of discussions with SWAPO was currently in progress. The five Governments, he said, had kept the Secretary-General and the Council for Namibia informed of their efforts and had also been in close touch with the front-line States and other African States. Some progress had been made, he said, and the five Governments believed that their initiative had forestalled the plan to establish an interim government on the basis of the Turnhalle constitution and that they had laid the foundations for United Nations involvement. They would persevere in their efforts to remove the remaining obstacles to the implementation of resolution 385(1976), which contained the elements of a solution.

The Australian representative noted that as a result of the initiative of the five Governments South Africa had abandoned its plans to press ahead with the Turnhalle conference and had given other signs that it had at last accepted the need for an early transfer to the people of Namibia of control of their own destiny.

The Western initiative was supported by a number of Members, including Argentina, Belgium—speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Economic Community—Bhutan, Jamaica, Japan, Lesotho, Mexico, Sierra Leone, and Trinidad and Tobago. The representative of Sierra Leone observed that the Western countries were well placed to achieve results in view of the hold they had on South Africa economically, politically and militarily; it was only practical, therefore, to call on them to take full advantage of their special position and use their power in the interests of the oppressed Namibian people.

Several speakers expressed concern that the concessions by South Africa might represent yet another manoeuvre by that country and the Western powers to allow it to retain control of the territory. The representative of the Byelorussian SSR said his Government was in favour of peace initiatives if they were truly designed to achieve the speedy and unconditional transfer of all power to the genuine representatives of the Namibian people, but it suspected that the widely publicized initiative of the Western powers actually reflected their desire to fragment and weaken the national liberation forces and protect the interests and privileges of those powers in that part of the world, as well as to legitimize colonial and racist domination in a new form.

The representative of the Congo said his Government had no illusions about an enterprise in which commercial and strategic considerations played a larger part than genuinely political or humanitarian concerns. He was convinced that if the overt or covert allies of Pretoria really wanted to they could bring decisive pressure to bear on their proteges and spare the people of Namibia the moral and physical sufferings they were undergoing.

A number of Members—among them Botswana, Finland, Greece, Morocco and Yugoslavia—said that a peaceful settlement called for withdrawal of South African troops, release of political prisoners, elections for the whole of Namibia as one political entity under United Nations supervision and control, recognition of the territorial integrity of Namibia, including Walvis Bay, and an end to all discriminatory legislation. Zambia noted that the importance of resolution 385(1976), which contained these provisions, was that it was an omnibus resolution reflecting all the basic positions of the United Nations and that no selective interpretation was possible.

Many States, including Afghanistan, Barbados, the Comoros, Equatorial Guinea, Iraq, Kenya and Norway, shared the view that further action by the Security Council, particularly the imposition of a mandatory arms embargo under Chapter VII of the Charter, would be required before South Africa would finally comply with resolution 385(1976). A number of Members, Cuba and Viet Nam among them, maintained that, in view of the clandestine support South Africa was receiving from capitalist countries, the only way of compelling it to withdraw from Namibia was for SWAPO to intensify the armed struggle.

On 4 November 1977, following its discussion of the question, the General Assembly adopted an eight-part resolution (32/9 A-H). One of these—32/9 B—on the United Nations Fund for Namibia, is dealt with in a separate section below. A description of the others follows.

One resolution (32/9 A) concerned the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. It was sponsored by 63 Members and adopted by the Assembly without a vote. By the preambular provisions of the text, the Assembly recalled its resolution of 27 October 1966,¹⁴ by which it decided to assume direct responsibility for Namibia, as well as its resolutions of 19 May 1967,¹⁵ by which it established the United Nations Council for Namibia to administer the territory until its independence, and of 20 December 1976,¹⁶ by which it decided to establish a comprehensive assistance programme within the United Nations system, covering both the period of struggle for independence and the initial years of independence of Namibia. The Assembly said it was aware of the decisive stage achieved in the struggle of the Namibians under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization and recognized that the United Nations and its Member States had also assumed responsibility for assisting the people of Namibia morally and materially.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly called on the Council for Namibia, as the legal Administering Authority of the territory, to continue and intensify, in consultation with SWAPO, the direction and co-ordination of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. It expressed its appreciation of the efforts of the specialized agencies and other bodies within the United Nations system which had contributed to the planning of the Nationhood Programme and called on them and other United Nations bodies to elaborate further their plans for assistance to the Namibian people to enable the Council for Namibia to consolidate all assistance measures in a comprehensive and sustained plan of action, and in particular requested: (a) WHO to assist the Council for Namibia regarding contingency medical plans; (b) the International Labour Organisation, in consultation with the Council and SWAPO, to prepare a training programme; (c) the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization to assist the Council in enacting a decree on navigation in Namibian waters which would further the cause of the liberation struggle led by SWAPO, and to prepare training programmes in maritime skills for Namibian candidates; (d) the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) to assist the Council in preparing legislation on the protection of Namibia's fishery resources; (e) the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to take urgent measures to ensure that South Africa did not in any way represent Namibia in IAEA and to assist the Council for Namibia in hearings in 1978 on the question of the exploitation and commercialization of Namibian uranium; (f) the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to co-operate with the Council in the preparation of an industrial development assistance programme for Namibia; and (g) UNESCO to intensify its assistance to the Council in the preparation and implementation of the Nationhood Programme.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to provide the necessary assistance to the Council for Namibia for the effective planning and implementation of the Nationhood Programme and asked the Council to report to the Assembly at its thirty-third (1978) session on the implementation of this resolution.

A resolution on dissemination of information on Namibia—32/9 C—sponsored by 62 Members, was adopted by the General Assembly by a recorded vote of 135 to 0, with 5 abstentions.

The Assembly thereby, among other things, decided that the map of Namibia prepared by the Council for Namibia pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 20 December 1976¹⁷ was the official United Nations map of Namibia and superseded any South African map of Namibia or "South West Africa." The Secretary-General was asked to direct the Office of Public Information (OPI) of the Secretariat to continue to make every effort to generate publicity and disseminate information to mobilize public support for the independence of Namibia. All specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations were asked to intensify the dissemination of information on Namibia in consultation with the Council for Namibia. The Council was requested to send a mission to the headquarters of specialized agencies not visited in 1977 to discuss the questions of dissemination of information and assistance to Namibians.

The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to direct OPI, in consultation with the Council: (a) to continue publicity through radio, newspaper, television and other media in major Western countries in order to mobilize support for the genuine national independence of Namibia; and (b) to contract with qualified individuals to make films on the contemporary situation in Namibia, including South Africa's military build-up there.

The Assembly called for the speedy completion of action undertaken by the Secretary-General on the question of a United Nations radio transmitter for Namibia and asked the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) to assign to the Council for Namibia an adequate number of frequencies for broadcasting inside Namibia. The Council, pending the establishment of its own broadcasting service, was authorized to assign to the Governments of neighbouring African countries, for use inside Namibia, frequencies allocated to the Council by ITU, which was asked to investigate the jamming by South Africa of radio broadcasts inside Namibia, with a view to instituting legal proceedings against South Africa before the International Frequency Registration Board.

The Secretary-General was asked by the Assembly: to direct OPI to distribute widely, particularly to television stations, a film on Namibia made by OPI in 1977; to assist in the dissemination of information on activities undertaken by the Council for Namibia; and to direct OPI to prepare a programme of publications on military, political, economic and social conditions in Namibia, with ample photographic material.

The Council for Namibia was asked to report to the Assembly at its 1978 regular session on the implementation of this resolution.

A text (resolution 32/9 D) concerning the situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa, sponsored by 57 powers, was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 117 to 0, with 24 abstentions.

By the operative provisions of this text, the General Assembly, after approving the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and relevant resolutions of the Assembly and the Security Council, and the legitimacy of their struggle by all means at their disposal against the illegal occupation of their territory by South Africa. It reiterated that that occupation constituted an act of aggression against the Namibian people, as well as against the United Nations as the legal Administering Authority of the territory until independence. All Member States were asked to co-operate with the Council for Namibia, the sole legal authority for the territory until independence, in discharging the mandate entrusted to it.

The Assembly reiterated that the illegal occupation of Namibia and the war of repression waged there, as well as the acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African States from bases in Namibia, constituted a serious threat to international peace and security.

South Africa's decision to annex Walvis Bay was an act of colonial expansion which was illegal, null and void, the Assembly declared; Walvis Bay was an integral part of Namibia with which it was inextricably linked by geographical, historical, economic, cultural and ethnic bonds, and South Africa's decision to annex the enclave was categorically condemned.

Also by the resolution, the Assembly declared that, in order that the people of Namibia were enabled freely to determine their own future, it was imperative that all South African armed forces be completely withdrawn so that free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations might be held urgently in the whole of Namibia as one political entity.

The Assembly reiterated that SWAPO was the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, and it supported the armed struggle of those people, led by SWAPO, to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia.

Any independence talks regarding Namibia had to be between the representatives of SWAPO and South Africa, under the auspices of the United Nations, for the sole purpose of discussing the modalities for the transfer of power to the people of Namibia, the Assembly decided, and it appealed to all Member States to grant all necessary support and assistance to SWAPO in its struggle.

South Africa was condemned by the Assembly for its refusal to withdraw, for its manoeuvres to consolidate its illegal occupation and for its persistent refusal to comply with the pertinent resolutions of the Security Council. The illegal South African administration was condemned for its massive repression of the people of Namibia and their liberation movement with the intention of establishing, among other things, an atmosphere of intimidation and terror for the purpose of imposing a political arrangement aimed at subverting the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia and perpetuating a ruthless policy of racial segregation.

The Assembly also condemned South Africa for its military build-up in Namibia, its recruitment and training of agents to carry out its policy of military adventurism against Angola, its threats and acts of aggression against independent African countries and the forceful removal of Namibians from the northern border of the territory for military purposes; the Assembly demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all South African military and paramilitary forces from Namibia.

The racist regime of South Africa was also condemned for the preparations which had brought it—with the co-operation of certain Western countries—to the threshold of exploding a nuclear device for military and aggressive purposes in the Kalahari Desert region. The Assembly declared that, in view of South Africa's consistent defiance of the United Nations, its illegal occupation of Namibia, its persistent policy of aggression against independent African countries, its current policy of colonial expansionism and its policy of apartheid, any development of nuclear weapons by it constituted a serious threat to international peace and security. Western States which had assisted South Africa in developing a nuclear weapons capability were condemned by the Assembly, which again urged all Member States, individually and/or collectively, to frustrate the attempts by South Africa to develop such weapons.

Also condemned by the Assembly were the activities of all foreign corporations operating in Namibia which were exploiting illegally the human and natural resources of the territory; the Assembly demanded that transnational corporations comply with all pertinent United Nations resolutions by immediately abstaining from any new investments in Namibia, by withdrawing from the territory and generally by putting an end to their co-operation with the illegal South African administration there.

The Assembly said that South Africa was liable to pay reparations to Namibia for the damage caused by its illegal occupation and its acts of aggression against the Namibian people and demanded that South Africa: put an end to extending apartheid in Namibia and to its policy of bantustanization of the territory; release all Namibian political prisoners, including those imprisoned or detained in connexion with offences under the so-called internal security laws, whether such Namibians had been charged or tried or were held without charge, and whether held in Namibia or South Africa; and accord unconditionally to all Namibians in exile for political reasons full facilities for their return without risk of arrest, detention, intimidation or imprisonment.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly called on the international community, especially all Member States, to refrain from recognizing or co-operating with any regime which the illegal South African administration might impose upon the Namibian people, and requested all States to cease and desist from any form of direct or indirect military consultation, co-operation or collaboration with South Africa and to take effective measures to prevent the recruitment of mercenaries for service in Namibia or South Africa. All States were asked to take steps to ensure the termination of all arms licensing agreements with South Africa, to prohibit the transfer to South Africa of information relating to arms and armaments, and to cease and prevent any supply of arms and ammunition, any aircraft, vehicles, military equipment or spare parts, any dual-use aircraft, vehicles or equipment which could be converted to military use, any oil and petroleum products or other fuel, any activities in their countries which promoted the supply of arms, ammunition, military aircraft or military vehicles, or any co-operation or activities by public or private corporations in conjunction with South Africa in the development of nuclear technology or of a nuclear capability.

The Assembly urged the Security Council to take up the question of Namibia again, and to consider the application of sanctions against South Africa in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter. It endorsed the Maputo Declaration Programme of Action and commended to Member States the Programme for their consideration and action; and it asked the United Nations Council for Namibia to report to the Assembly at its 1978 session on the implementation of this resolution.

Another resolution (32/9 E) adopted by the Assembly dealt with action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to Namibia. It was proposed by 58 Members and adopted by a recorded vote of 136 to 0, with 4 abstentions.

By this text, the Assembly among other things:

(1) requested the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies within the United Nations system to participate, in co-operation with the United Nations Council for Namibia, in the planning and implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

(2) requested UNDP to consider the requirements of the Nationhood Programme in revisions of the indicative planning figure for Namibia and requested it to continue to co-operate with the Council for Namibia in the elaboration of programmes of assistance to Namibians;

(3) requested all specialized agencies and other organizations and conferences within the United Nations system to grant full membership to the Council for Namibia so that it might participate in that capacity as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia in the work of those agencies, organizations and conferences;

(4) requested the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to grant a waiver of the assessment of Namibia during the period in which it was represented by the Council;

(5) requested all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, bodies and conferences to ensure that the rights and interests of Namibia were protected and to invite the Council for Namibia to participate in their work as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia whenever such rights and interests were involved; and

(6) requested the Council to report to the Assembly at its 1978 session on the implementation of this resolution.

(For text of resolution 32/9 E, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A number of reservations regarding the status and role of the Council for Namibia were put forward in explanation of vote by Members. Ireland's spokesman, for example, said that his Government, although recognizing the outstanding achievements of the Council in protecting and promoting the interests of the people of Namibia, had some problems in accepting all the provisions relating to its status, and also found the dual representation of Namibia at the international level by both the Council and SWAPO somewhat anomalous. Belgium also had misgivings as to the manner in which the resolution dealt with the complex matter of the statutory authority of the Council internationally. The Italian representative shared the view that by granting full membership to the Council for Namibia in all specialized agencies and other organizations and conferences, and by having already granted observer status to SWAPO, the Assembly would be confronted with the paradoxical situation of double representation of the same territorial entity and the same people by two different bodies.

Reservations on some provisions were also expressed by Japan as well as by Canada, speaking on behalf of the Governments of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States.

With regard to the programme of work of the Council for Namibia, the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 136 to 0, with 5 abstentions, adopted resolution 32/9 F, which was sponsored by 62 States.

By this text the Assembly, after among other things noting with appreciation the efforts of the Council for Namibia to obtain the withdrawal of South Africa from the territory and to promote the compliance of Member States with the resolutions of the Assembly and the Security Council:

(1) approved the report of the Council for Namibia, including the recommendations contained therein, and decided to make adequate financial provisions for their implementation;

(2) requested the Council for Namibia, in implementing its responsibilities as a United Nations organ: (a) to continue to mobilize international political support in order to press for the withdrawal of the illegal administration of South Africa from Namibia, (b) to maintain under continuous review the political, military, economic and social conditions affecting the struggle of the Namibian people and, to that effect, request the Secretary-General to submit to the Council reports in the above-mentioned fields to contribute to the formulation of policies and recommendations in support of Namibian independence, (c) to represent Namibia to ensure that its rights and interests were protected, as appropriate, in all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, bodies and conferences, (d) to formulate and co-ordinate policies of assistance to Namibians provided by United Nations agencies and other bodies within the system, (e) to act as trustee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia and in that capacity to administer and manage the Fund, and (f) to function as the policy-making organ of the United Nations in respect of Namibia;

(3) requested the Council for Namibia, in implementing its responsibilities as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia: (a) to hold a series of plenary meetings in Africa in 1978 at the highest possible level, as and when required, and asked the Secretary-General to defray their cost and provide the necessary staff and services for them, (b) to denounce all fraudulent constitutional schemes through which South Africa might attempt to perpetuate the colonial oppression and exploitation of the people and resources of Namibia, (c) to endeavour to ensure non-recognition of any administration installed in Windhoek not issuing from free elections in all of Namibia, under the supervision and control of the United Nations, in accordance with Security Council resolution 385(1976) of 30 January 1976,¹⁸ (d) to protect the territorial integrity of Namibia, in particular by carrying out all possible activities denouncing the attempts of South Africa to annex Walvis Bay, (e) to counter South Africa's acts of aggression against the people of Namibia and against the United Nations and the Council for Namibia, (f) to consult with SWAPO as appropriate in the formulation and implementation of its work programme, and in any matter of interest to the Namibian people, and (g) to continue to entrust such executive and administrative duties as it deemed necessary to the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia who, in the performance of his tasks, was to report to the Council;

(4) decided to increase the financial provisions in the budget of the Council for Namibia to finance the Office of SWAPO in New York, to ensure proper representation of the people of Namibia through SWAPO at the United Nations;

(5) decided to continue to defray the expenses of a representative of SWAPO whenever the Council for Namibia so required; and

(6) requested the Secretary-General to implement speedily the measures adopted as a result of the consultations proposed in the Assembly's resolution of 20 December 1976,¹⁹ with due regard to the need to include an adequate number of staff members from developing countries, in particular from Africa.

A resolution concerning the intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia (32/9 G) was sponsored by 61 powers and adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 130 to 0, with 11 abstentions.

The Assembly thereby, among other things, affirmed that the natural resources of Namibia were the birthright of the Namibian people; the depletion of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the repressive illegal administration of South Africa violated the United Nations Charter and resolutions of the Assembly and the Security Council. The Assembly deplored the policies of States which continued to maintain diplomatic, economic, consular and other relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, as well as military or strategic collaboration, all of which had the effect of supporting or encouraging South Africa in its defiance of the United Nations.

The Assembly called on States which had not done so to comply with the relevant United Nations resolutions concerning Namibia and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971; it urged them to break off economic relations with South Africa that concerned Namibia and to take measures to compel it to withdraw immediately from Namibia, and appealed to Governments to discourage private investors from participating in business ventures in Namibia which benefited the South African regime by making available additional resources to meet the military costs of its repressive policies in Namibia.

The Assembly also asked the United Nations Council for Namibia to urge corporations supplying arms, ammunition and oil to South Africa to cease doing so. It again asked Member States to take all appropriate measures to ensure the full application of, and compliance with, the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia and asked the Secretary-General to make adequate financial appropriations to facilitate the continued implementation of that Decree.

The Assembly took note of the progress report of the Council for Namibia on the hearings regarding the exploitation and purchase of Namibian uranium and authorized the necessary budgetary allocations for its full implementation during 1978; it authorized the Council to notify States whose corporations, whether public or private, operated in Namibia of the illegality of such operations and of the Council's position; and it also authorized the Council to contact administering and managing bodies of foreign corporations operating in Namibia to warn them of the illegal basis on which they were operating and of the position of the Council.

The Council for Namibia was asked to report to the General Assembly in 1978 on the implementation of this resolution.

(For text of resolution 32/9 G, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly also adopted a resolution (32/9 H), sponsored by 58 Members, by which it decided to hold a special session on the question of Namibia before its next regular session in 1978, on a date to be determined by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Council for Namibia. The recorded vote was 135 to 0, with 6 abstentions.

(For text of resolution 32/9 H, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 6 December 1977, Benin, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mauritius submitted a draft resolution on the consequences of the admission of Namibia as a member nation of the Food and Agriculture Organization. By this text, the General Assembly would have welcomed the decision of the Conference of FAO on 14 November 1977 to admit Namibia as a member nation of FAO and requested the Secretary-General to be guided regarding Namibia, represented provisionally by the Council for Namibia, by the established United Nations practice that the term "all States" included any State member of a specialized agency or member of IAEA or party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, and to take the necessary steps to place Namibia on the Secretariat's list of all States.

On 14 December, the representative of Benin informed the Assembly that the sponsors had been informed by the Secretariat that no difficulty existed in implementing the FAO decision and that the necessary steps had been taken to include Namibia on the Secretariat list containing the names of all States. Since the goal sought by the sponsors had been achieved, he said, they did not insist that the draft resolution be put to the vote.

Appointment of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia

On 4 November 1977, acting on a proposal of the Secretary-General, the General Assembly, by decision 32/307 adopted without vote, decided to extend the appointment of Martti Ahtisaari (Finland) as United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for a further one-year term beginning on 1 January 1978.

United Nations Fund for Namibia

The General Assembly had before it a report of the Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia submitted by the United Nations Council for Namibia in its capacity as trustee of the Fund.

In its report, the Committee noted that since 1972, when it became operational, the Fund had increased and broadened in accordance with available resources. It continued to serve as the main vehicle through which the Council channelled its assistance to Namibians in the main areas of remedial, technical and vocational training, primary and secondary education, as well as college and university education. For administrative reasons, the funds allocated for technical and vocational training of Namibians in different fields were divided and distributed among country programmes in Kenya, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire and Zambia, where large numbers of Namibian refugees lived. The Fund also continued to award scholarships to Namibians living in Europe, Canada, Papua New Guinea and the United States who were unable to obtain other funds.

The Council had consulted with several Governments in Africa, particularly Zambia and Botswana, on the possibility of developing in those countries, in co-operation with the specialized agencies, concrete projects in education and health, as well as farm schools in collaboration with SWAPO. The Fund had already financed the construction of a health clinic in Makunda, Botswana, where a considerable number of Namibians were living.

The main project of the Fund, however, was the Institute for Namibia at Lusaka, which was established by the Council to enable Namibians to undertake research, training, planning and related activities, with special reference to the struggle for the freedom of Namibia and the establishment of an independent State. The report noted that the expansion of the Institute's activities in the field of training, and its programmes of assistance, required examination in the light of their efficiency.

In its report, the Committee noted that the Fund was supported by voluntary contributions from Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, the regular budget of the United Nations, UNDP, special contributions earmarked for the Institute, and national organizations and institutions. During the period 1 January to 30 June 1977, 30 Governments had made pledges or contributions to the Fund, and 20 Governments and three organizations had made pledges or contributions to the Institute, bringing the total resources of the Fund to $759,821, including the contribution of $300,000 from the regular budget of the United Nations.

During the year, the Committee reported, the Fund had granted assistance, amounting to $279,095, to 94 Namibian students and had earmarked $100,000 to the Institute, which was financed mainly from the indicative planning figure for Namibia established by UNDP ($3,750,000 for the period 1977-1981). Other expenditures for assistance included $88,000 for broadcast and information services, and $30,000 for scholarships.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Committee noted that there was a need for better co-ordination of the assistance granted to Namibians by United Nations bodies and specialized institutions. It was also important to examine the possibilities of increasing the Fund's allocations and contributions to enable it to concentrate on its main projects for assisting the Namibian people. An evaluation of the Council's experience had indicated, in this connexion, the need to prepare a more complete and precise list of activities for which the Fund might be utilized.

On 4 November, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 32/9 B, sponsored by 62 Members, on the United Nations Fund for Namibia. By this text, the Assembly among other things: took note of the report of the Council for Namibia on the United Nations Fund for Namibia and approved the conclusions and recommendations contained therein; expressed its appreciation to all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, governmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that had made voluntary contributions to the Fund; decided that the utilization of resources of the Fund should be considered also in the context of the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; decided to allocate as a temporary measure to the Fund the sum of $500,000 from the regular budget of the United Nations for 1978.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General and the Council for Namibia to intensify appeals for generous voluntary contributions to the Fund, invited Governments to appeal once more to their national organizations and institutions for voluntary contributions, and appealed to all States, specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations, as well as to governmental and non-governmental organizations, to make financial contributions to the Institute through the Fund.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation to the organizations within the United Nations system for their assistance to Namibians, requested them to give priority to the allocation of funds for material assistance, and also to provide such assistance as was within their competence, including financial assistance, to the Institute, as well as to provide specialists, lecturers and researchers in accordance with the needs of the Institute. It expressed its appreciation of the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to assist Namibian refugees and decided that Namibians would continue to be eligible for assistance through the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa. The United Nations Council for Namibia was asked to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third (1978) session on the implementation of this resolution.

Related General Assembly decisions

At its thirty-second session in 1977, the General Assembly adopted a number of resolutions concerning aspects of the question of Namibia. These are described briefly below.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE IN SUPPORT OF THE PEOPLES OF ZIMBABWE AND NAMIBIA

On 7 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 32/41 on the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, which was held at Maputo, Mozambique, from 16 to 21 May 1977. By this text, the Assembly among other things approved the report of the Conference and asked the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia to follow closely the implementation of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia in the discharge of the mandates entrusted to them by the Assembly.

(For details, see p. 832.)

IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION ON THE GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

A resolution (32/42) on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples was adopted by the General Assembly on 7 December, by the preambular paragraphs of which it, among other things: condemned the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans in Namibia by South Africa; said it was deeply conscious of the urgent need for the elimination of the last vestiges of colonialism in Namibia; and deprecated the policies of States which continued to collaborate with South Africa, thus perpetuating domination of the people of the territory.

By the operative provisions of this resolution, the Assembly among other things: requested all States to withhold assistance from South Africa until it restored to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territory by that regime; urged all States to provide assistance to the oppressed people of Namibia; and requested the Special Committee to enlist world-wide support among Governments in the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration on the granting of independence and in the implementation of relevant United Nations resolutions concerning the oppressed people of Namibia.

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

On 28 November, the Assembly adopted a resolution (32/35) on the activities of foreign economic and other interests which were impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence. By the preambular provisions of the text, the Assembly among other things affirmed that the natural resources of all colonial territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia, were the heritage of their peoples, and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests in conjunction with the illegal racist minority regimes constituted a direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles stated in the United Nations Charter and all relevant United Nations resolutions. The Assembly also condemned the support South Africa continued to receive from foreign interests which were collaborating with it in its exploitation of Namibia's resources, and condemned the investment of foreign capital in the illegal production of uranium and the collaboration of certain Western countries and other States with South Africa in the nuclear field, enabling South Africa to develop nuclear and military capabilities, thereby promoting its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its growth as a nuclear power.

By the operative paragraphs of the text, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration and called again on States to discontinue all economic, financial or trade relations with South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into economic, financial or other relations with South Africa, acting on behalf of or concerning Namibia, which might lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that territory.

IMPLEMENTATION BY SPECIALIZED AGENCIES OF THE DECLARATION ON GRANTING INDEPENDENCE

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/36) on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. The Assembly thereby, among other things, expressed its conviction that the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for self-determination and independence had entered its final and most crucial stage and it was therefore incumbent upon the entire international community to intensify concerted action in support of those peoples and their national liberation movements for the attainment of this goal. It said it was conscious of the critical need of those peoples for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and associated United Nations institutions and welcomed the report of the mission dispatched by the Council for Namibia to specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations with headquarters in Europe.

By this text the Assembly also, among other things, reiterated the appeal contained in the Maputo Declaration to the International community to redouble assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and their national liberation movements and expressed its concern that the assistance extended thus far by the specialized agencies and other organizations was far from adequate in relation to needs. It also expressed regret that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund had not taken the necessary measures towards implementing the Declaration, deplored the fact that they continued to co-operate with South Africa, and urged their executive heads to draw the particular attention of their governing organs to the present resolution with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia.

The Assembly also again urged the specialized agencies and other organizations to withhold assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, to discontinue all support to them until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those regimes.

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE ORGANIZATION OF AFRICAN UNITY

On 11 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/19 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, by which, among other things, it again asked United Nations bodies to continue to take measures to associate OAU regularly with all their work concerning Africa. It also invited the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue and intensify their co-operation with OAU and, through it, with the national liberation movement of Namibia.

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF THE RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

On 7 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/14 on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights. By this text, the Assembly, among other things, expressed its indignation at the continuation of the illegal occupation of Namibia and at South Africa's attempts to dismember the territory, and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

By its resolution 32/70 of 8 December, on assistance to refugees in southern Africa, the General Assembly, noting with deep concern the increasing number of refugees from Namibia, South Africa and Zimbabwe, and recognizing the burden thus imposed on the receiving countries, commended the programmes of assistance being implemented by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and requested him further to strengthen measures for the benefit of refugees in southern Africa.

PROTECTION OF PERSONS DETAINED FOR THEIR STRUGGLE AGAINST APARTHEID

On 16 December, the Assembly adopted a resolution (32/122) concerning the protection of persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle against apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, colonialism, aggression and foreign occupation and for self-determination, independence and social progress for their people. By this resolution, the Assembly among other things expressed concern regarding the continuing denial of the right to self-determination of the people of Namibia and insisted that racist minority regimes in southern Africa immediately and unconditionally release all individuals detained or imprisoned because of their struggle for self-determination and national independence and against apartheid, all forms of racism and racial discrimination, colonialism and foreign occupation.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1977, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued to provide scholarships to Namibians. During the period from 1 October 1976 to 30 September 1977, the Programme granted 42 new awards to Namibians and extended 149, making a total of 191 scholarship holders studying in 19 foreign countries. Also during the period, 14 awards were completed.

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly reviewed the Programme and, by resolution 32/37 adopted on 38 November, expressed its appreciation to all who had made voluntary contributions and appealed again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to ensure the Programme's continuation and expansion in the light of increased needs.

Situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statement of the President of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling, in particular, its resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967 and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to the question of Namibia, as well as the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, delivered in response to the request addressed to it by the Council in its resolution 284(1970) of 29 July 1970,

Taking into consideration the relevant resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-ninth ordinary session, and subsequently endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 2 to 5 July 1977,

Reaffirming that the Territory and people of Namibia are the direct responsibility of the United Nations and that the Namibian people must be enabled to attain self-determination and independence within a united Namibia,

Strongly condemning South Africa's continued refusal to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its brutal repression of the Namibian people and its persistent violation of their human rights, as well as its effort to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia,

Strongly condemning, as an act of colonial expansion, the decision of South Africa to annex Walvis Bay, thereby undermining the territorial integrity of Namibia,

Strongly deploring the policies of those States which, despite the relevant decisions of the United Nations and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, continue to maintain diplomatic, economic, consular and other relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, as well as military or strategic collaboration, all of which has the effect of supporting or encouraging South Africa in its defiance of the United Nations,

Strongly condemning the racist regime of South Africa for its efforts to develop a nuclear capability for military and aggressive purposes,

Gravely concerned at the militarization of Namibia by the illegal occupation regime of South Africa, its threats and acts of aggression against independent African countries and the forceful removal of Namibians from the northern border of the Territory for military purposes,

Recognizing that the situation in Namibia constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Declaring that the natural resources of Namibia are the birthright of the Namibian people and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the repressive racist colonial administration, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, of the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, is illegal and contributes to the maintenance of the illegal occupation regime,

Noting with satisfaction the opposition of the Namibian people to South Africa's illegal presence in the Territory and to its oppressive racist policies and, in particular, the progress of their struggle in all its forms for national liberation under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Walvis Bay is an act of colonial expansion in violation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and that such annexation is illegal, null and void;

7. Declares that Walvis Bay is an integral part of Namibia with which it is inextricably linked by geographical, historical, economic, cultural and ethnic bonds;

8. Categorically condemns South Africa for the decision to annex Walvis Bay, thereby attempting to undermine the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia;

9. Declares that, in order that the people of Namibia shall be enabled freely to determine their own future, it is imperative that all South African armed forces be completely withdrawn so that free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations may be held urgently in the whole of Namibia as one political entity;

15. Strongly condemns South Africa for its persistent refusal to comply with the pertinent resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 385(1976) of 30 January 1976;

Strongly condemns the illegal South African administration for its massive repression of the people of Namibia and their liberation movement with the intention of establishing, among other things, an atmosphere of intimidation and terror for the purpose of imposing upon the Namibian people a political arrangement aimed at subverting the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia and perpetuating a ruthless policy of racial segregation;

17. Strongly condemns South Africa for its military build-up in Namibia, its recruitment and training of Namibians and other agents to carry out its policy of military adventurism against Angola, its threats and acts of aggression against all independent African countries and the forceful removal of Namibians from the northern border of the Territory for military purposes;

18. Demands the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all South African military and paramilitary forces from Namibia;

20. Declares that, in view of South Africa's consistent defiance of the United Nations, its illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia, its persistent policy of aggression against independent African countries, its present policy of colonial expansionism and its policy of apartheid, any development of nuclear weapons by South Africa constitutes a serious threat to international peace and security;

21. Condemns those Western States which have assisted South Africa in developing a nuclear weapons capability and urges again all Member States, individually and/or collectively, to frustrate the attempts by South Africa to develop nuclear weapons;

22. Strongly condemns the activities of all foreign corporations operating in Namibia under the illegal administration of South Africa which are exploiting illegally the human and natural resources of the Territory, and demands that transnational corporations comply with all pertinent resolutions of the United Nations by immediately abstaining from any new investments in Namibia, by withdrawing from the Territory and generally by putting an end to their co-operation with the illegal South African administration in Namibia;

23. 24. Demands that South Africa put an end to extending apartheid in Namibia and to its policy of "bantustanization" of the Territory, aimed at destroying the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia;

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Namibia,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967, as well as subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly relating to Namibia,

Affirming that the natural resources of Namibia are the birthright of the Namibian people and that the depletion of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the repressive illegal administration of South Africa is in violation of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Strongly deploring the policies of those States which, despite the relevant decisions of the United Nations and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of

21 June 1971, continue to maintain diplomatic, economic, consular and other relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, as well as military or strategic collaboration, all of which has the effect of supporting or encouraging South Africa in its defiance of the United Nations,

Strongly condemning the support which the illegal South African administration continues to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests which are collaborating with it in its exploitation of the human and natural resources of, and in the further entrenchment of its illegal and racist domination over, the international Territory of Namibia,

1. Approves the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

2. Calls upon those States which have not yet done so to comply with the relevant provisions of the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council concerning Namibia and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971;

3. 4. Appeals to Governments to discourage private investors from their countries from participating in business ventures in Namibia which benefit the South African regime by making available additional resources to meet the military costs of its repressive policies in Namibia;

5. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to communicate with corporations supplying arms, ammunition and oil to South Africa and to urge them to cease doing so;

6. Requests once again all Member States to take all appropriate measures to ensure the full application of, and compliance with, the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and such other measures as may be necessary to assist in the protection of the natural resources of Namibia;

Having heard the statement of the President of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Strongly condemning the illegal South African administration in Namibia for its massive repression of the Namibian people and their liberation movement with the intention of establishing, among other things, an atmosphere of intimidation and terror, with the purpose of imposing upon the Namibian people a political arrangement in violation of Security Council resolution 385(1976),

Strongly condemning South Africa for its persistent refusal to withdraw from Namibia and for its manoeuvres to consolidate its illegal occupation of the Territory in violation of all pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Chapter IV

The situation in Southern Rhodesia

Various aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) continued during 1977 to receive consideration by a number of United Nations bodies.

In May, the Security Council considered a recommendation by its Committee on sanctions, established pursuant to a Council resolution of 29 May 1968,¹ that the flow of capital from Southern Rhodesia for certain purposes be included within the scope of the mandatory sanctions against the territory. The Council unanimously decided on 27 May that Member States were to prohibit the use or transfer of funds in their territories by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia.

On 29 September, after having received proposals by the United Kingdom for a settlement in Southern Rhodesia, the Security Council decided, at the request of the United Kingdom, to ask the Secretary-General to appoint a representative to enter into discussions with the British Resident Commissioner-designate, and with all the parties, concerning the military and associated arrangements necessary to effect a transition to majority rule in Southern Rhodesia. The Council's Committee on sanctions submitted an interim report later in 1977 and, early in 1978, it submitted its tenth regular report, covering its activities from 16 December 1976 to 15 December 1977.

For details of Security Council action in 1977, see pp. 180, 188 and 200.

Two resolutions on the situation in Southern Rhodesia were adopted on 8 August by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples²—one on general aspects of the situation, the other on the question of sanctions.

Later in 1977, at its thirty-second regular session, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions incorporating many of the Special Committee's recommendations. Among other things, it reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in the territory and reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the liberation of the two territories adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia earlier in the year. The Assembly also condemned Governments which continued to collaborate with the illegal regime, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce strictly the sanctions called for by the Security Council. The Assembly also deemed it imperative that the scope of the sanctions be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter of the United Nations³ and again asked the Council to consider taking measures in that regard. The Council was also asked to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and its products to South Africa, since such products were transported from that country into Southern Rhodesia.

During the year, decisions on Southern Rhodesia were also taken by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Details of these decisions are described in the sections that follow.

Decisions of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

On 4 March 1977, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution on the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa. The Commission thereby, among other things: reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe to self-determination and independence and their right to enjoy all the rights recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the various international instruments on human rights; condemned the activities of countries which, either directly or through their nationals, were helping to perpetuate the current situation in Namibia, Zimbabwe and South Africa, and urged them to refrain from such activities; recommended that the United Nations intensify its co-operation in ² See Y.U.N., 1960, pp. 49-50, resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing text of Declaration.

³ Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter reads as follows: "The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations."

the humanitarian field by supplying the countries neighbouring on Zimbabwe with assistance, particularly medicines and foodstuffs; and decided that the Working Group should continue to study the policies and practices which violated human rights in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe. (For details, see p. 687.)

On 4 March, the Commission also adopted a resolution on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of various forms of assistance given to colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa. Among other things, by this text it denounced and condemned the political, military, economic and other assistance given by certain States to South Africa and to the illegal minority regime of Southern Rhodesia, either directly or through national or multinational companies. It also reaffirmed that arms sales, nuclear co-operation agreements and the economic activities of such companies in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia constituted blatant acts of complicity in the crime of apartheid and encouragement of the continuation of the policy of racial discrimination and colonialism. (For details, see p. 691.)

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2082 A (LXII)) on the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, by which, among other things, it decided that the Working Group, in conjunction with the Special Committee against Apartheid, should examine the treatment of prisoners in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, including the deaths of a number of detainees. (For details, see p. 687.)

On 13 May, the Council also adopted a resolution (2086 (LXII)) on infringements of trade union rights in southern Africa, by which it expressed its concern at the increased use of arrests and bannings to suppress legitimate trade union activities among African workers in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, condemned the continued gross infringements of trade union rights there, called for the immediate release of all trade unionists under detention in southern Africa and for the lifting of all banning orders imposed on persons engaged in trade union activities, and demanded full recognition of all trade union rights of African workers in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe. (For details, see p. 726.)

On 3 August, the Council adopted resolution 2101 (LXIII) on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations. By this text, the Council among other things expressed its concern that assistance by those organizations to colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements, was far from adequate in relation to their needs. In this connexion, the Council urged those organizations, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and Namibia, to do everything possible to increase assistance to the peoples of those territories in their struggle for liberation, and, in particular, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), to work out and implement programmes of assistance within their fields of competence, with the active collaboration of the national liberation movements concerned.

The Council also requested the specialized agencies and other United Nations-related organizations to continue to withhold any assistance to South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, to discontinue all support to them until they restored to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal domination of the territories. (For details, see p. 845.)

International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia

In accordance with a decision of the General Assembly of 17 December 1976,⁴ the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia was organized, and met from 16 to 21 May 1977 at Maputo, Mozambique. Its aim was to mobilize international support for, and assistance to, the peoples of the two territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence.

The Conference was attended by about 500 representatives of 92 Member States and a number of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, specialized agencies and national liberation movements. At the conclusion of its meetings it adopted the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and a Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

In the Declaration, the Conference among other things proclaimed its full support for the people of Zimbabwe in their struggle for independence, reaffirmed that there should be no independence before majority rule and that any settlement relating to the future of the territory had to be worked out with the full participation of the Zimbabwe people represented by their national liberation movement. It strongly condemned the illegal racist minority regime and denounced its brutal and repressive measures.

The Conference noted that all reasonable and meaningful proposals which would have secured a negotiated settlement for an independent Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule had been totally rejected by the illegal racist minority régime, and the freedom fighters, confronted with the intransigence of that regime, had intensified the armed struggle.

The Conference considered that strict enforcement of existing mandatory sanctions was an important element in the collective effort of the international community, and it deplored the fact that some States continued to violate those sanctions and thus limit their effect on the economy of Southern Rhodesia. The persistent acts of aggression committed by the illegal regime against Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia were condemned by the Conference. It declared that the natural resources of Zimbabwe were the birth-right of its people; the exploitation of those resources by the illegal regime, in association with foreign economic interests, violated the Charter and United Nations resolutions.

In the Programme of Action, the Conference among other things called for political, material and moral support for the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and their national liberation movements. It called on Governments: to refrain from any collaboration with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia; to observe strictly the arms embargo; to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, assembly, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories to be punishable as a criminal act and to discourage and prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries; to take measures against corporation and trade interests operating in violation of sanctions; to prevent companies registered in their territories from supplying oil, directly or indirectly, to the illegal regime; to take measures to ensure compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions and to prohibit any form of collaboration by them with the illegal regime; and to prevent or discourage the emigration to Southern Rhodesia of any individuals or groups of individuals under their jurisdiction.

The Conference called upon the United Nations among other things to reiterate its conviction that the scope of sanctions against the regime had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter, and it asked the Security Council urgently to consider the necessary measures in that regard.

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held in New York between 19 April and 8 August 1977, with the participation of Chakanyuka Chikosi of the African National Council of Zimbabwe (ANC), Callistus Nkobi Ndlovu of the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe African People's Union), and Mukudzei Mudzi of the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe African National Union), who made statements. Garfield Todd, former Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, was also invited to make a statement.

The representative of the United Kingdom told the Special Committee that his Government remained committed to attaining a just and lasting settlement in the territory and he expressed the hope that the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia would see that it had to make the necessary compromises in order to achieve an early, orderly and peaceful transition to majority rule. The efforts his Government had made to arrive at a peaceful settlement of the Southern Rhodesian problem were continuing, he said; he described the proposals his Government had put forward to the concerned parties at the Geneva conference in the latter part of 1976 and which had been rejected by Ian Smith on 24 January 1977.

The proposals, he went on to say, had included the following points, among others: guerrilla activity would cease as soon as agreement had been reached on the setting up of the transitional government; and British readiness to continue to play a part in the agreed transitional arrangements would be conditional upon all other parties abiding by that agreement. The transitional government, to have been headed by an interim commissioner appointed by the British Government after due consultations, was to have had three principal organs: a council of ministers, an advisory council of senior ministers, and a national security council.

The council of ministers, he said, was to have contained an equal number of members from each of the political groups represented by the delegations to the Geneva conference and a further similar number of members appointed by the interim commissioner from among members of the European minority. It would thus have had a substantial African majority. The council of ministers was to have had full executive and legislative competence subject to the interim commissioner's reserve powers. Defence and internal security would have been the responsibility of the national security council, and the day-to-day organization and operational control of the armed forces and the police would have been the responsibility of the respective chiefs of staff and the commissioner of police.

Further, the council of ministers was to have been responsible for the implementation of the programme for independence and in particular for the working out of the independence constitution. It would have appointed a constitutional committee—to include representatives of the various political parties, with the task of formulating recommendations to the council of ministers—which would have been presided over by the interim commissioner.

Following the rejection of the proposals, the representative went on to say, the United Kingdom Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had held discussions with the various parties in co-operation with the United States and hoped to be able to report soon whether it would be worth while for the two countries to co-sponsor a conference on Southern Rhodesia, with the aim of developing a timetable for achieving majority rule in the territory in 1978.

Mr. Chikosi said that the nationalists were not surprised at the illegal regime's rejection of the proposals put forward at the Geneva conference because they had not been convinced that the regime had been ready to hand over power to the majority. His organization, he said, believed that armed struggle remained the nationalists' only course. The African National Council of Zimbabwe was totally opposed to any internal settlement, which would no doubt turn the future Zimbabwe into a neo-colonial State. It was not opposed in principle to constitutional talks if they were designed to hand over power. However, he said, the hand-over must be complete and unconditional, and must involve all parties to the dispute. He then outlined his party's five-point plan for the attainment of a peaceful settlement in the territory: that Ian Smith unequivocally surrender political power to the black majority; that all detainees and political prisoners be released; that the United Kingdom assume its decolonization role in the territory; that all Zimbabweans participate in a national referendum; and that the United Kingdom convene a full constitutional conference to work out the details of the independence constitution.

Mr. Ndlovu said that his party rejected the idea of a conference convened and co-chaired by the United Kingdom and the United States. It could not accept any direct United States involvement as that would risk internationalizing the problem. He said that the war in the territory was not against white people but against a system of racism which kept African people in a state of slavery.

Mr. Mudzi said that imperialist powers were seeking to frustrate the march of the Zimbabwe people to true freedom and independence and the Anglo-American plan was a deadly scheme contrived behind the backs of the Zimbabwe people. The Smith regime must hand over State power to the African people without any further delay. He said that the armed struggle was intensifying and the enemy's losses were growing.

The representative of Australia observed that Ian Smith, by rejecting the United Kingdom's Geneva proposals and announcing his intention to seek an internal settlement, had brought to a standstill negotiations that had been warmly welcomed by the international community as offering the best path to peaceful decolonization in Zimbabwe. The situation had since deteriorated: the guerrilla war had grown in intensity, with tragic losses on all sides; young Zimbabweans, denied adequate expression of their nationalist sentiments, were leaving Southern Rhodesia to join their compatriots already outside the territory.

Australia, he went on, was encouraged by the concern of the United States for developments in southern Africa, expressed at the highest levels of the United States Administration, and it hoped that all parties would bear in mind the potential of the United States for assisting the United Kingdom in the search for genuine majority rule. He reiterated that his Government's objective was peaceful, genuine decolonization in Zimbabwe, with a genuinely democratic government elected by the Zimbabwean people, and Australia believed that no substantial element of political opinion, inside or outside Zimbabwe, should be excluded from negotiations, provided they accepted the principle of majority rule.

According to the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, the Geneva conference had failed because of the calculated obstruction of the Smith regime, which had attended the conference not to negotiate seriously but to get an endorsement for leaving power in the hands of the white minority. While the negotiations were going on, Smith intensified his acts of aggression against the neighbouring independent African States of Zambia, Botswana and Mozambique. Repressive measures against the black majority inside Zimbabwe were increased. Wanton mass killings of innocent Africans and continued detentions were the order of the day.

The Tanzanian representative went on to say that the international community had waited long enough: Smith had to be removed from power; the period for appeasing and tolerating the racist minority regime should be over. Her Government, she said, had no objection to the reconvening of the conference for a negotiated settlement in Zimbabwe, but it wished to reiterate that Rhodesia was a responsibility primarily of the United Kingdom Government as the legal authority and decolonizing power.

The Organization of African Unity, she said, had pledged its full support to the armed struggle until there was majority rule in Zimbabwe; sanctions should be intensified and extended to include all the provisions of Article 41 of the United Nations Charter. In that respect, she commended the step taken by the United States Government to repeal the so-called Byrd amendment, which had allowed the United States to buy chrome from Rhodesia.

Other speakers also called attention to the United Kingdom Government's responsibility for the territory, which the representative of Ethiopia, for example, said was as valid as it had been in 1965. The United Kingdom had to show decisiveness in dealing with the continued rebellion of Ian Smith against the British Crown, and, while it was free to get help from any quarter in dealing with the problem, such help should not compromise the legal and constitutional basis of its continued responsibility.

India's spokesman said it was tragic that a small minority of white racists had been allowed to usurp power physically from the colonial power, but what was important was that the United Kingdom had never disowned its responsibility or, indeed, its liability. On the contrary, he said, it had continued its efforts to correct that deviation and it deserved to be assisted in the complex task of discharging its legal responsibility, as well as the sacred trust it had assumed in terms of the Charter for the well-being of the inhabitants of the territory.

The representative of Czechoslovakia said it was a well-established fact that the Smith regime could not exist even for a day without the military, economic and political assistance extended to it by the imperialist States, particularly the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). He charged, among other things, that mercenaries from Australia, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States were fighting in the army of Southern Rhodesia. The participation of those mercenaries in military operations against the national liberation movements attested clearly to the military assistance of imperialism to the racist regime. Even if regular units of the aforementioned Western countries had not been used, the mercenaries were equipped with weapons from imperialist countries and most had already fought in other parts of the world—Asia and Latin America—against nations struggling for their liberation.

The Australian representative said that while his Government was not empowered to prevent Australians from leaving Australia, it had strongly discouraged the recruitment or training of mercenaries for service in any country. Draft legislation was currently before its Parliament to prohibit recruitment in Australia for any armed service outside the country.

The Bulgarian representative charged that the arms expenditures of the regime had risen dramatically in recent years, thanks to financial assistance from imperialist circles and from international institutions under their influence. With NATO assistance, strong military forces in Southern Rhodesia had been created and a large industrial complex had been built up. It was obvious, he added, that the enormous natural resources, the cheap labour and the extremely high profits derived from the exploitation of the Zimbabwean people, as well as global military-strategic interests, were the basic reasons for the particular interest of Western countries and their monopolies in the preservation of the Smith regime. He said that Bulgaria, like so many other States, believed that it was time to adopt more decisive and effective international measures against the racist regime, pursuant to Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

The USSR representative said that the illegal regime of Ian Smith, with the overt support of the racists of South Africa and the connivance of imperialist circles, continued its racist policy of violence, exploitation and aggression and was guilty of gross and mass violations of the human rights of the African population. The numerous decisions of the United Nations, including resolutions of the Security Council, were ignored and flouted. The racist regime continued to perpetrate mass slaughter of innocent people and to put behind bars without trial Zimbabweans who favoured the transfer of power to the African majority.

The Chinese representative said that, during the preceding year, the patriotic armed forces of Zimbabwe had continued to grow in strength and had expanded their areas of operation from the north-eastern region to the northern, eastern, north-western and south-eastern regions, covering more than half of Zimbabwe. The freedom fighters had caused heavy casualties among the colonial troops, winning continuous victories. In their struggle against the Smith regime, he said, the people of Zimbabwe had gained a profound understanding that the independence and liberation of Zimbabwe could be won only through their unrelenting struggle, that the revolutionary people must in all circumstances use revolutionary tactics to deal with the counter-revolutionary tactics, that armed struggle was the reliable means for overthrowing colonial and racist rule and for achieving national liberation, that negotiations had to be based on fighting, and that, until the enemy had laid down his arms and real independence was won, armed struggle had to be strengthened and not weakened.

The representative of Yugoslavia and others said that the racist regime had been attempting, by a series of aggressive military actions against Zambia, Mozambique and Botswana, to internationalize the conflict and to obtain military assistance and protection from abroad on the pretext of an alleged threat of international communism. However, that attempt would not succeed, and Smith's minority regime seemed aware of that fact, as shown by the exodus of increasing numbers of white emigrants from Southern Rhodesia. The era of colonialism and racism had become historically obsolete, and their vestiges in southern Africa could not endure.

A number of speakers called for increased unity among the nationalist leaders, which Norway called a prerequisite for new progress. Australia urged that all nationalist elements work to minimize their differences, so that all might contribute their respective strengths to the nationalist movement as a whole; a united nationalist front would strengthen the hand of those working for a resumption of genuine negotiations.

The representative of India wondered how there could be majority rule when the majority seemed to be divided and its components at cross purposes. It was sad indeed that the unity of the majority should be eroded at a time when the need for unity and solidarity was vitally important.

The USSR said that the patriots of Zimbabwe had scored a number of major successes and caused severe losses to the enemy both in manpower and technology. Those who were participating in the armed struggle had closed their ranks and turned themselves into a single united liberation army. The Patriotic Front enjoyed growing support from the front-line African States, many of the countries of OAU and socialist and other progressive forces throughout the world.

The Norwegian representative urged continued efforts by the international community to solve the Rhodesian conflict at the negotiating table. She observed that every day, as new lives were lost, the differences between the white minority and the African majority widened and the possibilities for a negotiated solution became fewer. Norway, she said, hoped that the latest British-American initiative would lead to resumed negotiations between all parties concerned and that the front-line States could be drawn in to the preparatory work. She also said that South Africa bore the main responsibility for the ineffectiveness of the sanctions against the Smith regime: without supply lines to South Africa, the minority regime would be forced to come to the negotiating table in a very short time. The Norwegian Government also believed that the sanctions against Rhodesia should be broadened.

On 8 August 1977, the Special Committee unanimously adopted two resolutions, one of which related to the question of Southern Rhodesia in general. By its terms, the Special Committee among other things: reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right; condemned the continued war of repression and the intensified oppressive measures against those people by the illegal racist minority regime; condemned the regime for the repeated acts of aggression and threats against Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia; and condemned South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime in contravention of United Nations resolutions.

By this text, the Special Committee also: reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the territory had to be worked out with the full participation of the people of the territory and in accordance with their true aspirations; called on the United Kingdom, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population, and under no circumstances to accord to the illegal regime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty.

The Special Committee also: firmly supported the people of Zimbabwe under the leadership of their national liberation movement in their struggle to achieve majority rule, and emphasized the importance of maintaining a united leadership within that movement. It reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, in particular those provisions calling for assistance to the front-line States which were victims of aggression.

Also by the resolution, the Special Committee demanded: (a) the termination of all repressive measures perpetrated by the regime against the people of Zimbabwe and in particular the wanton killings and executions, the arbitrary closure of African areas, the eviction, transfer and resettlement ment of Africans and the creation of concentration camps; (b) the unconditional and immediate release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, the removal of all restrictions on political activity and the establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, as well as the restoration of fundamental human rights; (c) the cessation of the influx of immigrants into the territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom; and (d) the immediate cessation of all acts of aggression and threats against neighbouring African States.

The Special Committee then: appealed to all States to take all necessary and effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia; requested all States to give immediate and substantial material assistance to enable Mozambique to strengthen its defence capability; requested all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes, to extend, in consultation with OAU, to the people of Zimbabwe and their liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle for their inalienable rights; invited all Governments, the specialized agencies, other organizations and the Secretary-General to publicize through all media information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant decisions and actions of the United Nations, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal regime; and decided to keep the situation in the territory under review.

By the text of the second resolution, which dealt with sanctions, the Special Committee among other things: strongly condemned the policies of the Governments, particularly that of South Africa, which, in violation of United Nations resolutions and in open contravention of their specific obligations under Article 25 of the United Nations Charter, continued to collaborate with the illegal regime, and called upon them to cease such collaboration; condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions strictly, as being contrary to their Charter obligations; and condemned South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime.

The Special Committee also called upon all Governments which had not done so: to ensure strict compliance with the sanctions by all entities under their jurisdiction; to prevent or discourage emigration to Southern Rhodesia by individuals or groups; to discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal regime, inter alia by forbidding the operation and activities of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board and the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravened the aims and purposes of the sanctions; and to invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the territory.

The Special Committee also requested all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes, to extend to Mozambique financial, technical and material assistance to enable it to overcome economic difficulties in connexion with its application of economic sanctions against the regime and the severe economic loss and destruction of property brought about by the acts of aggression committed by the regime. The Security Council was asked to undertake a periodic review of economic assistance to Mozambique and to Zambia. Finally, the Special Committee deemed it imperative that the scope of the sanctions be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41, and reiterated its request that the Security Council urgently consider taking the necessary measures in that regard.

Consideration by the General Assembly

General aspects

At its thirty-second session in 1977, the General Assembly referred the question of Southern Rhodesia to its Fourth Committee, which considered the item at meetings held between 15 November and 12 December.

During the Fourth Committee's consideration, Tirivafi Kangai and Callistus Nkobi Ndlovu, representatives of the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe), participated as observers and made statements. Requests for a hearing were also granted to: the Reverend Ndabaningi Sithole, of the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU); Elton Razemba, of ANC; Romesh Chandra, Gordon Schaffer, Karen Talbot and Camillo Perez, of the World Peace Council; the Reverend Michael Scott, of the International League for Human Rights; and Bernard Rivers, of the Haslemere Group.

The Rapporteur of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples introduced the chapter of the Special Committee's report dealing with Southern Rhodesia and expressed the hope that the recommendations contained therein would be endorsed by the Fourth Committee.

The representative of the United Kingdom noted that intensive negotiations over the Rhodesian problem had been going on elsewhere while the General Assembly was in session, and he gave the Committee an account of recent efforts by his Government.

He said that following a visit to southern Africa in April 1977 by David Owen, the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary of the United Kingdom, to discuss a new approach with all the interested parties, a joint Anglo-American consultative group had visited southern Africa in May and again in July for discussions with representatives of the main nationalist groupings and the Rhodesian front in Southern Rhodesia, as well as with officials of the front-line States and South Africa. The consultations had centred on the possible contents of an independence constitution, on the democratic electoral process needed to bring about transition to majority rule by 1978, and on the measures necessary to support the future economy of Zimbabwe—in particular, how to retain in that country the skills and commitment of the white population. It was accepted by the British and United States Governments, he said, that violence would be likely to continue until the nationalists were confident that the Rhodesian front would hand over power.

He said that Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the leader of the united ANC, and the Reverend Sithole both had expressed support for the new initiative. Joshua Nkomo, speaking for the Patriotic Front on 5 July, had said that the front was unwilling to discuss a constitution until negotiations for the hand-over of power had been completed. Ian Smith, however, had said in Salisbury on 18 July that he did not believe that there would be a successful outcome to the negotiations, and had announced that a general election would be held on 31 August to seek the electorate's support for an internal settlement. Mr. Owen had told the House of Commons on 25 July that an internal settlement did not satisfy the prime commitment to fair elections; it would allow a continuation of the armed struggle, making it difficult to hold elections. Any Government in Zimbabwe, either black or white, needed to have recognition by the international community. Furthermore, to exclude any nationalist leaders from a fair electoral process would be a recipe for continued strife. Mr. Owen had also informed the House of Commons that the Anglo-American consultative group was close to producing proposals which, although not consensus, were proposals on which it was possible to reach some measure of agreement.

The representative then went on to describe the United Kingdom's proposals for a settlement which were published on 1 September (see p. 188), and said the administering power could not presume to decide what political answers were to be given by the people of the country after independence. But it had a real responsibility, which his Government had almost without exception been able to discharge in its other colonies, to ensure that at independence power and legality were transferred to a government which the people themselves had chosen. In Southern Rhodesia the pre-conditions for discharging that responsibility had simply not existed. Past elections had been confined to all intents and purposes to the white minority of the population, and in recent years the illegal character of the regime and consequent isolation of its society had produced an abnormal political climate, so that even the apparently overwhelming support given to Mr. Smith might not reflect accurately what the white minority really thought on some of the basic issues.

Continuing, he said that the absence of elections had not simply prevented the black majority from having a proper say in the destiny of their own country; it had also meant that the majority had not been able to select their own leaders, or to prove clearly what leaders they did support. The frustration of the black population, confronted with a situation in which the peaceful path to change through the ballot-box seemed irrevocably blocked, had inevitably led to the armed struggle currently taking place, and those who had taken up arms had established an undeniable claim to a voice in framing the terms of an eventual settlement. He added that it was no secret that there were disputes over who genuinely spoke for the majority in Rhodesia; the United Kingdom had been severely handicapped in its efforts by disunity among some of the nationalist leaders concerned. It was obvious that the illegal regime would continue to seek to exploit such disputes.

The representative of the United Kingdom then gave a detailed account of the negotiations which Field-Marshal Lord Carver—the British Resident Commissioner-designate—and the Secretary-General's representative, General Prem Chand, had been conducting on the basis of the Security Council's resolution 415(1977) of 29 September (see p. 202 for text). His Government was continuing to work urgently on the elaboration of its proposals and to remain in touch with the various parties.

In connexion with a recent announcement of Mr. Smith's acceptance of the principle of majority rule, he said the small print might need careful examination, and it remained to be seen whether Mr. Smith had unequivocally accepted the principle of one person, one vote.

Independence for Zimbabwe had to involve a genuine transfer of power to a government representing the majority of the people of Southern Rhodesia following elections on the basis of universal adult suffrage, he declared, and all peoples and parties who intended to live in a future Zimbabwe had to be free to participate if they wished to do so, whether they were currently living inside or outside Rhodesia. It was very important for Zimbabwe, he said, that its new government should win wide acceptance in the world and that the world should not cast doubt on the validity of the result.

The representative of the United States said that his Government would continue to seek a settlement that took account of the interests of all parties and Governments concerned and constituted the best solution to enable the people of Zimbabwe to choose their political leaders and bring freedom and majority rule to that country. Although the various parties had expressed reservations concerning the United Kingdom's proposals, none had rejected them, he noted. The position of the United States was that independence for Zimbabwe had to involve a genuine transfer of power to a government representing the majority of the people and selected on the basis of fair elections involving the participation of all parties, namely the nationalists outside, as well as inside, the country. Negotiations which intended to exclude certain nationalist forces were destined to fail and could only aggravate the conflict.

He went on to say that the United States was prepared to take the necessary steps to secure the implementation of the proposals and to support a consensus resolution based on the recommendations of the Special Committee on granting independence. He noted that a number of Members believed that an immediate expansion of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia was advisable. The United States agreed that the sanctions, and also the armed struggle, had been an important factor that could lead to the eventual downfall of the Smith regime, but it urged that such action be postponed so that the negotiating process could take its course.

Support for the efforts being made was expressed by a number of speakers, including Argentina, Austria, Iran, Italy, Japan, the Sudan and Zaire, Belgium's representative, for example, speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Economic Community (EEC), said the Anglo-American settlement proposals, which had been patiently put forward in continuous consultations with all the parties concerned, deserved consideration and support. The EEC countries, he said, welcomed the fact that the United Nations had recently assumed a more direct role in the search for a final and peaceful solution to the Southern Rhodesian problem. The Council's resolution of 29 September 1977 calling for the appointment of a representative to enter into talks with the British Resident Commissioner-designate and with all the parties was a clear indication of the international community's acquiescence in the Anglo-American endeavours to bring about a peaceful settlement and accession to independence. The EEC countries, he added, would certainly abide strictly by the Security Council sanctions, and they awaited the time when they would be able to establish links with the government of an independent Zimbabwe to which they would offer their support, co-operation and friendship.

The French representative said that France subscribed to the principles motivating the authors of the Anglo-American plan, and hoped that the temporary setbacks they had recently suffered would not prevent their proposals from serving as a basis for negotiations. The plan had already clearly had some effects, since Mr. Smith had recognized that privileged voting was not the only way to ensure the survival of the white community and had given grounds for believing that he subscribed to the principle that all men and women had the right to vote. It was important not to take hasty decisions which might jeopardize the United Kingdom's initiative.

The spokesman for Ghana said that the Anglo-American proposals deserved better success than they had thus far achieved. For the first time in a very long period, the administering power had seemed ready and willing to assume its full responsibilities within the territory during an interim period. The idea of a United Nations force to support the maintenance of internal law and order during the transition seemed basically a very sound one, though it needed to be defined more precisely. The package was not perfect, he said, but it could provide a basis for negotiation.

The representative of Zambia said that her country welcomed the fact that the United Kingdom had at last decided to assume its responsibilities in Southern Rhodesia. Zambia's position was that the Anglo-American proposals were acceptable only to the extent that they constituted a basis for negotiations; they were not in themselves an agreement. The Patriotic Front had the right to accept, amend or reject any part of the proposals. The only point which was not negotiable, she said, was the principle of independence on the basis of majority rule. She also noted that at their summit conference held in Maputo, Mozambique, in September, the front-line States had accepted the Anglo-American proposals as a basis for negotiations.

According to Kenya, the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security. In the face of the intensification of the guerrilla war, the racist regime was expanding the armed forces, improving their weapons and egging them on to take terrible vengeance on the guerrillas. One army unit, the Selous Scouts, even posed as guerrillas and inflicted acts of brutality on the African civilian population. The illegal regime hoped in that way to convince the African population and the international community that the national liberation movements perpetrated acts of brutality against their own people, the Kenyan representative said.

The Anglo-American proposals were very laudable, he said, but the administering power had to ensure that Ian Smith was forced out. Until he was, Kenya would continue to support the armed struggle and the strict application of sanctions. Kenya was in favour of the presence of a representative of the Secretary-General in the territory, but took the view that it was still the responsibility of the administering power to ensure a rapid and complete transfer of power to the black majority.

The spokesman for Madagascar said that the responsibility for the current serious situation in Zimbabwe lay primarily with the United Kingdom which, as administering power, should understand its role clearly and fulfil its obligations honestly. It should not seek to shift its responsibility to another country; the participation of the United States in the so-called Anglo-American proposals could only internationalize the conflict and make it more complex. The United States had no constitutional responsibility in Zimbabwe and it was not for it to preside over negotiations concerning the decolonization of the territory. The United Kingdom should implement the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by transferring power to the Zimbabwean people through the Patriotic Front without restriction. He said he failed to understand why the administering power, in submitting the so-called Anglo-American settlement plan, rather than recognize the existence of the nationalist armed forces and negotiating directly with the Patriotic Front, had proposed a transitional system which entirely violated the fundamental principles of the Declaration. The United Kingdom's move sought to put down the popular revolution in Zimbabwe and to maintain in the region a new bastion of imperialism and neo-colonialism.

The USSR representative said that while the Anglo-American proposals might contain some seemingly attractive features, they were actually designed to impose a neo-colonialist settlement of the problem. They did indeed recommend the departure of Smith, but they also contained provisions which in reality provided for the capitulation of the armed forces of the Patriotic Front. The authors of the proposal had tried to conceal that neo-colonialist aspect by inviting the United Nations to participate in the execution of the project. Bulgaria said that the negotiations were clearly being used by Smith to gain time for the consolidation of his illegal occupation of Zimbabwe. Others making this point were Guyana, Hungary, Iraq, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah.

The spokesman for Mongolia condemned the Smith regime for disregarding world public opinion and the resolutions of the General Assembly, for perpetrating acts of repression and violence against the people of Zimbabwe, and for launching attacks against neighbouring sovereign States, which had suffered enormous material damage.

He and others also strongly condemned the military assistance received by the regime from South Africa and certain Western powers. These speakers maintained that attempts to reach a settlement in Southern Rhodesia had failed as a result of that assistance and the oppressed peoples had the right to obtain freedom, even by means of armed struggle. The unity of the liberation movements and the support of progressive countries throughout the world, including the socialist countries, would ensure the triumph of their just cause. Among those making these points were Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Romania.

Kenya, the Sudan, the USSR and others said that the natural resources of the territory were being drained by multinational corporations.

Many speakers, including Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Nepal, Norway and Sri Lanka, observed that many States had not fully implemented Security Council resolutions by which sanctions against Southern Rhodesia had been called for. A number of Members called for the full application of sanctions under Article 41 of the Charter and for the extension of comprehensive sanctions against South Africa, which they charged with aiding and abetting Southern Rhodesia in violating sanctions.

The Reverend Ndabaningi Sithole, speaking as founding President of ZANU, referred to repeated statements that power should be transferred to the Patriotic Front and asked how the Patriotic Front could represent the majority of Zimbabweans when it did not exist as such in Zimbabwe. He challenged Members to send investigators to Zimbabwe to look into the presence of the Patriotic Front there. They would find ZANU and the Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU)— both of which had been banned—and the united ANC. The Patriotic Front was not a political reality but an international political gimmick designed to impose leaders on Zimbabwe. If power was transferred to the Patriotic Front it would mean that it had simply been transferred from one minority to another.

Mr. Kangai, observer for the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe), said that the Reverend Sithole was no longer the President of ZANU, a function which was exercised by Robert Mugabe; ZANU had allied itself with ZAPU in the Patriotic Front and, despite their differences, those two organizations were united in the fight against the common enemy. The Reverend Sithole was no longer a guerrilla leader; the fact he had been well received in South Africa and by Ian Smith proved that. He and Bishop Muzorewa were actually recruiting Zimbabweans into Smith's army. Mr. Kangai said that the Patriotic Front did not shoot civilians; it attacked the Rhodesian army, army posts, police and farmers who were military reservists and who used their farms as intelligence posts for the enemy. If the United Kingdom and Smith handed over power to a few black puppets who would continue to exploit the black majority, the revolution would continue, he said.

Mr. Razemba, of ANC, observed that the Zimbabwe liberation struggle had been troubled in recent years by a lack of unity and by changes in leadership. Issues dividing factions of the liberation movement included the question of constitutional talks with the illegal regime, ideology and the relationship between the military cadres and the political leadership. In that connexion, he stressed that the so-called Patriotic Front, which had been devised by the leaders of certain front-line States and imposed by them on the liberation struggle, was a club of outsiders with strong backing from abroad but entirely unknown in Zimbabwe. It was also a regrettable fact that the military cadres fighting in Zimbabwe were as divided as the political leadership.

On 12 December 1977, the Fourth Committee approved two draft resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia, both of which were sponsored by the same 43 Members. The first text related to the territory as a whole and was approved by consensus. The second concerned the question of sanctions and was approved by 112 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions. Both texts were adopted by the General Assembly on 16 December 1977—the first without vote, as resolution 32/116 A, the second by a recorded vote of 113 to 0, with 10 abstentions, as resolution 32/116 B.

By the preambular part of the first text, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed that any attempts to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal regime on the basis of independence before majority rule would be in contravention of the inalienable rights of the people of the territory and contrary to provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and of the Declaration on the granting of independence. It condemned the deliberate sabotage by the illegal racist minority regime of the numerous, intensive efforts being made to secure a negotiated settlement in Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule, and stressed the grave responsibility of the international community to take all possible measures in support of the people of Zimbabwe in their liberation struggle and in minimizing their hardship and suffering. The Assembly expressed its indignation at the arbitrary imprisonment and detention of political leaders and others, the massacre of freedom fighters and the continued denial of fundamental human rights, including in particular the wanton beating, torture and murder of innocent villagers, arbitrary criminal measures of collective punishment and measures designed to create an apartheid State in Zimbabwe. In addition, the Assembly commended the firm determination of the people of Zimbabwe, under the leadership of their national liberation movement, to achieve freedom and independence; it expressed its conviction that their unity and solidarity were fundamental to the rapid attainment of that objective; and it expressed its outrage over acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African States, including the most recent aggression against Mozambique.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly: reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right; reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the territory had to be worked out with the full participation of the people of Zimbabwe and in accordance with their true aspirations; condemned the continued war of repression and the intensified oppressive measures by the illegal regime, as well as its continuing acts of aggression and threats against Mozambique, Zambia and Botswana; and strongly condemned South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime.

The Assembly also, by this text: called on the United Kingdom, as the administering power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population and not to accord to the illegal regime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty; firmly supported the people of Zimbabwe in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence by all means at their disposal; and reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

The Assembly demanded: that all repressive measures perpetrated by the illegal regime be terminated, in particular the wanton killings and executions of Africans and their freedom fighters, the brutality committed in the "operational area," the arbitrary closure of African areas, the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of concentration camps; the unconditional and immediate release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, the removal of all restrictions on political activity and the establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, as well as the restoration to the population of fundamental human rights; the cessation of the influx of foreign immigrants into the territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom; and the immediate cessation of all acts of aggression and threats against neighbouring African States.

States were called on to: take effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia; give material assistance to Mozambique and Botswana to strengthen their defence capability; extend to the people of Zimbabwe and their liberation movement all the assistance necessary in their struggle for their inalienable rights; and give publicity through all the media to information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular the application of sanctions against the illegal regime.

The Assembly also by this text asked the United Kingdom to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee on granting independence and to report to the Special Committee and to the Assembly at its regular 1978 session. The Special Committee was asked to keep the situation under review as a matter of priority and also to report to the Assembly in 1978.

By the preambular part of resolution 32/116 B, the Assembly among other things: deplored the increasing collaboration of certain States, particularly South Africa, with the illegal regime, thus impeding the effective application of sanctions; considered that developments in the area called for concerted international action to impose maximum isolation on the regime; and expressed its concern that the measures approved by the Security Council had thus far failed to bring an end to the illegal regime, and its conviction that sanctions would not put an end to that regime unless they were comprehensive, mandatory and strictly supervised and unless measures were taken against States which violated them.

By the operative provisions of this resolution, the Assembly:

(1) condemned the policies of those Governments, particularly the Government of South Africa, which, in violation of United Nations resolutions and in open contravention of specific obligations under the Charter, continued to collaborate with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, and called on them to cease such collaboration;

(2) condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce the sanctions strictly;

(3) condemned South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime in contravention of Council resolutions on sanctions;

(4) called on all Governments which had not done so (a) to ensure strict compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions and to prohibit any collaboration by them with the illegal regime, (b) to prevent or discourage emigration to the territory by any individuals or groups of individuals under their jurisdiction, (c) to discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal regime by, among other things, forbidding the operation and activities of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board and the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravened the aims and purposes of the sanctions, (d) to invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the territory, and (e) to take measures against international companies and agencies which supplied petroleum and petroleum products to the illegal regime;

(5) requested all States, directly and through the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes within the United Nations system, to extend to Mozambique and Zambia all forms of financial, technical and material assistance for overcoming economic difficulties stemming from the application of economic sanctions against the illegal regime and the economic loss and destruction of property brought about by the acts of aggression committed by the regime, and asked the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to the two Governments;

(6) deemed it imperative that the scope of the sanctions be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter, and reiterated its request that the Council consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency;

(7) requested the Security Council to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa, since such products were transported from there into Southern Rhodesia; and

(8) requested the Special Committee on the granting of independence to follow the implementation of this resolution, and invited the Security Council's Committee on sanctions to continue to co-operate in the related work of the Special Committee.

(For text of resolution 32/116 B, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom proposed the addition to the preamble of the first draft resolution of a paragraph by which the Assembly would take note of the negotiations following Security Council resolution 415(1977) and the current initiative of the administering power for the accession of Zimbabwe to independence. After a suspension of the meeting to consider the proposal, the United Kingdom withdrew it in view, it said, of the difficulties it caused.

Several Members—Denmark, France, Israel, Japan, New Zealand, Portugal and Uruguay among them—in explaining their votes, expressed reservations about some of the provisions of the draft resolution on sanctions.

The representative of Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of EEC, said that the operative paragraph by which Governments were called on to take certain specific measures to reinforce the sanctions did not take into account that, for humanitarian reasons, total suppression of services affecting personal relations between individuals should not be recommended; moreover, some of those measures were not compatible with certain constitutional provisions of EEC countries. They also had reservations about the operative paragraphs requesting Security Council action, since it was for the Council to decide on the desirability of widening the scope of sanctions and applying them to South Africa. The United States expressed a similar reservation.

The representative of the United Kingdom agreed with the position taken by Belgium on behalf of EEC and said it was ironic that the Fourth Committee should have ignored the Anglo-American proposals; they represented a balanced package and the only coherent basis for a settlement, which recent raids by the illegal regime into Mozambique had made more urgent than ever. If the proposals were accepted and put into effect, he said, the illegal regime could not survive.

Related General Assembly decisions

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly took a number of decisions having a bearing on various aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia. These are described briefly below.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DECLARATION ON THE GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

On 7 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/42) on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by which, among other things, it condemned the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans, in Namibia by South Africa and in Zimbabwe by the illegal regime, and stressed the need to take all necessary measures to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly with respect to Namibia and Zimbabwe. It deprecated the policies of States which continued to collaborate with South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. It asked all States to withhold assistance of any kind from South Africa and the illegal regime until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of their domination of the territories. It also urged all States to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee on granting independence to continue to examine compliance by Member States with resolutions relating to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and to take all necessary steps to enlist worldwide support in achieving the objectives of the Declaration on the granting of independence and implementing resolutions concerning the oppressed peoples of the two territories.

The General Assembly also adopted a resolution (32/36) on the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations. By this text, adopted on 28 November, the Assembly said, among other things, that the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for self-determination and independence had entered its final and most crucial stage and it was therefore incumbent upon the entire international community to intensify concerted action in support of them. It expressed concern that the assistance extended thus far by the agencies and organizations to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, was far from adequate. It regretted that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund had not taken the necessary measures towards implementing the Declaration and other relevant resolutions and continued to co-operate with South Africa, and urged those agencies to formulate specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of colonial territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia. It also urged the agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to withhold assistance from South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those regimes.

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

On 28 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/35 by which, among other things, it affirmed that the natural resources of all colonial territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia, were the heritage of the peoples of those territories and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests in conjunction with the illegal regimes constituted a direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants. The Assembly condemned the support which the regimes continued to receive from foreign interests which were collaborating in the exploitation of the natural and human resources of, and in the entrenchment of domination over, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia. The Assembly expressed its conviction that the scope of the sanctions adopted against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia should be expanded to cover all the measures contemplated in Article 41 of the Charter, and expressed the hope that the Security Council would envisage adopting appropriate measures to that end. The Assembly, further, condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions, and it strongly condemned the racist minority regime of South Africa for its continued collaboration with the regime in Southern Rhodesia, calling on it to cease such collaboration immediately.

(For details, see p. 856.)

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF THE RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

On 7 November, the Assembly adopted a resolution (32/14) relating to the importance of the realization of the right to self-determination, by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, of the Palestinian people and of all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference. (For details, see p. 703.)

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE ORGANIZATION OF AFRICAN UNITY

On 11 November, the Assembly adopted a resolution (32/19) relating to co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity by which among other things it declared its awareness of the urgent need to give increased assistance and support to the victims of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid resulting from intensified acts of aggression against neighbouring countries by the apartheid régime in South Africa and Namibia and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. It invited the specialized agencies and other organizations to intensify their co-operation with OAU and, through it, with the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe and Namibia. (For details, see p. 258.)

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1977, a total of 505 Southern Rhodesian students were studying abroad in 19 countries on scholarships granted under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, which was established by the General Assembly in 1967. Between 21 October 1976 and 30 September 1977, the Programme received 1,498 applications from Southern Rhodesians, granted 239 new awards and extended 266 awards.

On 28 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/37, by which, among other things, it recognized that, because of the continuing influx of refugee students from southern Africa into neighbouring States and the significant increases in the cost of educational and training awards, additional funds were essential if the Programme was to continue in operation at a satisfactory level, and it appealed once again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to the Programme in order to ensure its continuation and expansion in the light of increased needs.

(For further information about the Programme, see p. 261.)

The General Assembly,
Having considered the question of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Taking into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the administering Power,

Having heard the statements of the representatives of the national liberation movement who participated in an observer capacity in the consideration of the item,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions relating to the question of Southern Rhodesia adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Special Committee,

Bearing in mind that the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, has the primary responsibility for putting an end to the critical situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) which, as repeatedly affirmed by the Security Council, constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming that any attempts to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal regime on the basis of independence before majority rule would be in contravention of the inalienable rights of the people of the Territory and contrary to the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and of resolution 1514(XV),

Condemning the deliberate sabotage by the illegal racist minority regime of the numerous, intensive efforts being made to secure a negotiated settlement in Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule,

Bearing in mind the resolutions on Zimbabwe adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 2 to 5 July 1977,

Stressing the grave responsibility of the international community to take all possible measures in support of the people of Zimbabwe in their liberation struggle and in minimizing the hardship and suffering of Zimbabweans in that regard,

Indignant at the arbitrary imprisonment and detention of political leaders and others, the massacre of freedom fighters and the continued denial of fundamental human rights, including in particular the wanton beating, torture and murder of innocent villagers, arbitrary criminal measures of collective punishment and measures designed to create an apartheid State in Zimbabwe,

Commending the firm determination of the people of Zimbabwe, under the leadership of their national liberation movement, to achieve freedom and independence, and convinced that their unity and solidarity are fundamental to the rapid attainment of that objective,

Outraged and deeply concerned by the continuing acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African States, including the most recent aggression against Mozambique which resulted in loss of human lives and destruction of property,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in conformity with the objectives of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

2. Reaffirms the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the Territory must be worked out with the full participation of the people of Zimbabwe and in accordance with their true aspirations;

3. Condemns the continued war of repression and the intensified oppressive measures against the people of Zimbabwe by the illegal racist minority regime;

4. Strongly condemns the illegal racist minority regime for its continuing, brutal acts of aggression and threats against Mozambique, Zambia and Botswana;

5. Strongly condemns South Africa for its continued support of the illegal racist minority regime in contravention of the provisions of all the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Southern Rhodesia;

6. Calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering Power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population and not under any circumstances to accord to the illegal regime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty;

7. Firmly supports the people of Zimbabwe in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence by all means at their disposal;

8. Reaffirms the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, in particular the provisions calling for assistance to those front-line States which are victims of repeated acts of aggression by the racist minority regime;

9. Demands:

(a) The termination forthwith of all repressive measures perpetrated by the illegal racist minority regime against the people of Zimbabwe, in particular the wanton killings and executions of Africans and their freedom fighters carried out by that regime, the brutality committed in the "operational area," the arbitrary closure of African areas, the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of concentration camps;

(b) The unconditional and immediate release of all political prisoners, detainees and reestricted, the removal of all restrictions on political activity and the establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, as well as the restoration to the population of fundamental human rights;

(c) The cessation of the influx of foreign immigrants into the Territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom;

(d) The immediate cessation of all acts of aggression and threats against neighbouring African States;

10. Calls upon all States to take all necessary and effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia;

11. Requests all States to give immediate and substantial material assistance to enable the Governments of Mozambique and Botswana to strengthen their defence capability in order to safeguard effectively their sovereignty and territorial integrity;

12. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members, as well as the non-governmental organizations concerned and the various programmes within the United Nations system, to extend, in consultation and co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to the people of Zimbabwe and their national liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable rights;

13. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, the United Nations bodies concerned and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization, as well as the Secretary-General, to take steps, as appropriate, to give widespread and continuous publicity through all the media at their disposal to information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant decisions and actions of the United Nations, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal regime;

14. Requests the Government of the United Kingdom to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in the discharge of the mandate entrusted to the latter by the General Assembly, and to report thereon to the Special Committee and to the Assembly at its thirty-third session;

15. Requests the Special Committee to keep the situation in the Territory under review as a matter of priority and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

The General Assembly,

Having adopted resolution A above on the question of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Strongly deploring the increasing collaboration, in violation of Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations and of the relevant decisions of the United Nations, which certain States, particularly South Africa, maintain with the illegal racist minority regime, thereby seriously impeding the effective application of sanctions and other measures taken thus far against the illegal regime,

Deeply disturbed at widespread violations of United Nations sanctions, including the operation of Southern Rhodesian aircraft for international passenger and cargo traffic, as well as the continued functioning of information and airline offices of the illegal regime outside Southern Rhodesia and the resultant influx of foreign tourists into the Territory,

Considering that developments in the area call in particular for positive, concerted international action with a view to imposing maximum isolation on the illegal regime,

Deeply concerned that the measures approved by the Security Council have so far failed to bring an end to the illegal regime and convinced that sanctions cannot put an end to that regime unless they are comprehensive, mandatory and strictly supervised and unless measures are taken against States which violate them,

Reaffirming the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, in particular those provisions relating to sanctions against the illegal regime,

Conscious of the urgent and special economic needs of Mozambique and Zambia arising from their full implementation of the relevant decisions of the Security Council,

1. Strongly condemns those Governments, particularly the Government of South Africa, which, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and in open contravention of their specific obligations under Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations, continue to collaborate with the illegal racist minority regime, and calls upon those Governments to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

2. Condemns all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce the sanctions strictly, as being contrary to the obligations assumed by them under Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter;

3. Condemns South Africa for its continued support of the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia in contravention of the resolutions of the Security Council on sanctions against that regime;

4. Calls upon all Governments which thus far have not done so:

(a) To take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions imposed by the Security Council and to prohibit any form of collaboration by them with the illegal regime;

(b) To take effective steps to prevent or discourage the emigration to Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) of any individuals or groups of individuals under their jurisdiction;

(c) To discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal regime, inter alia, by forbidding the operation and activities of "Air Rhodesia," the "Rhodesia National Tourist Board" and the "Rhodesian Information Office," or any other activities which contravene the aims and purposes of the sanctions;

(d) To invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the Territory;

(e) To take all effective measures against international companies and agencies which supply petroleum and petroleum products to the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia;

5. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members, and the various programmes within the United Nations system to extend to the Governments of Mozambique and Zambia all forms of financial, technical and material assistance in order to enable those Governments to overcome economic difficulties in connexion with their application of economic sanctions imposed against the illegal regime and the severe economic loss and destruction of property brought about by the acts of aggression committed by the regime, and requests the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to the two Governments;

6. Deems it imperative that the scope of sanctions against the illegal regime must be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter and reiterates its request that the Security Council consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency;

7. Requests the Security Council to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa in view of the fact that petroleum and petroleum products are transported from South Africa into Southern Rhodesia;

8. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to follow the implementation of the present resolution and invites the Security Council Committee established in pursuance of resolution 253(1968) concerning the question of Southern Rhodesia to continue to co-operate in the related work of the Special Committee.

Chapter V

Other questions relating to non-self-governing territoriesTransmission of information

Territories on which information was submitted in 1977

In accordance with Chapter XI, Article 73 e, of the Charter of the United Nations, Members responsible for the administration of territories whose peoples have not attained a full measure of self-government have the obligation to send each year to the Secretary-General information on economic, social and educational conditions in the territories for which they have responsibilities, subject to such limitations as security and constitutional considerations might require.¹

Australia, France, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States regularly include information on constitutional developments in the territories on which they transmit information. Additional information on political and constitutional developments in the territories under their administration is also given by these States during meetings of the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Supplementary information is also made available by the United Kingdom concerning territories under its administration.

During 1977, information was transmitted to the Secretary-General with respect to the following territories:

Australia: the Cocos (Keeling) Islands

France: the New Hebrides (condominium with the United Kingdom)

New Zealand: the Tokelau Islands

United Kingdom: Belize, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, the Gilbert Islands, Montserrat, the New Hebrides (condominium with France), Pitcairn, St. Helena,² the Solomon Islands, Southern Rhodesia, the Turks and Caicos Islands, Tuvalu

United States: American Samoa, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly at its 1977 regular session that he had received no information concerning Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia or St. Vincent. In that connexion, the United Kingdom had declared at previous sessions of the Assembly that, having achieved the status of Associated States, those territories had attained a full measure of self-government.

The Secretary-General also reported that he had received no information concerning Brunei. On 18 September 1972, the Government of the United Kingdom had notified the Secretary-General that this territory had attained full internal self-government and, consequently, the transmission of information thereon was, in its view, no longer appropriate.

The Secretary-General had also received no information concerning Western Sahara. On 26 February 1976, the representative of Spain had informed the Secretary-General that the Spanish Government, as of that date, definitively terminated its presence in the territory of Sahara and deemed it necessary to place on record that Spain considered itself exempt from any responsibility of an international nature in connexion with the administration of the territory, in view of the cessation of its participation in the temporary administration established for the territory.

With respect to East Timor, the Government of Portugal informed the Secretary-General on 20 April 1977 that, since August 1975, owing to the presence in the territory of armed forces of the Republic of Indonesia, the Portuguese Government had been unable to exercise the effective administration of East Timor. The Portuguese Government was therefore de facto prevented from transmitting any information concerning the territory under Article 73 e of the Charter.

Following the communication by Portugal, Indonesia in a note verbale of 11 May 1977 restated its claim that the people of East Timor had already exercised their right to self-determination. They had by their own choice integrated their territory with the Republic of Indonesia and therefore the provisions of the Articles of the Charter relating to non-self-governing territories no longer applied to the territory.

Study of information from administering Members

Up to 1963, information transmitted by administering Members on non-self-governing territories was examined by the General Assembly's Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories. When the Assembly decided, on 16 December 1963, to discontinue that Committee,³ it requested the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to study the information and take it fully into account in examining the situation in each of the non-self-governing territories.

On 3 August 1977, the Special Committee approved a resolution on this question, the provisions of which were subsequently incorporated in General Assembly resolution 32/33.

On 28 November 1977, the Assembly approved the chapter of the report of the Special Committee relating to information from non-self-governing territories, transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter. It deplored the fact that some Member States responsible for the administration of those territories had ceased to transmit information under the Article.

The Assembly reaffirmed that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a non-self-governing territory had attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e with respect to that territory.

The Assembly requested the administering powers concerned to transmit, or continue to transmit, to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in the Article, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those territories.

The Assembly also requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under the Assembly's resolution of 16 December 1963, in accordance with established procedures.

The Assembly took these decisions by adopting resolution 32/33, by a recorded vote of 138 to 0, with 4 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which approved the text on 9 November 1977 by a recorded vote of 111 to 0, with 5 abstentions.

The draft text was sponsored by Angola, Brazil, Burundi, the Congo, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Kenya, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Pakistan, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta and Viet Nam. (For text of resolution 32/33 and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Offers of study and training facilities

In 1977, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that, up to 30 September 1977, the following 31 Member States had made scholarships available to persons from non-self-governing territories for secondary, vocational and post-graduate studies: Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Israel, Italy, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United States and Yugoslavia.

On 28 November 1977, the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report on the subject, expressed appreciation to those Member States which had made scholarships available. It invited all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to inhabitants of non-self-governing territories, particularly those in southern Africa, including, whenever possible, the provision of travel funds.

The Assembly further requested the administering powers to give widespread publicity, in the territories under their administration, to offers of study and training and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/38 adopted by the Assembly, without objection, on 28 November 1977, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee. That Committee, on 7 November 1977, had approved the text, without objection, on a proposal by 32 Members.

Legal questions

Chapter I

The International Court of Justice

Aegean Sea continental shelf

In 1976, Greece had instituted proceedings against Turkey before the International Court of Justice in a dispute concerning the delimitation, exploration and exploitation of the continental shelf in the Aegean Sea.¹ It had founded the jurisdiction of the Court on article 17 of the General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes (Geneva, 1928) and on a joint Greco-Turkish communique issued at Brussels, Belgium, on 31 May 1975. After Turkey had expressed the view, in written observations, that the Court was not competent to entertain the dispute, the Court directed that the written pleadings be first addressed to the question of its jurisdiction.

Time-limits for a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial on this question were fixed at 18 April and 24 October 1977.

On 18 April 1977 the Court, in response to a request by Greece, made an Order by which, having regard to negotiations referred to by both Greece and Turkey, it extended these time-limits to 18 July 1977 and 24 April 1978, respectively.

The Memorial of Greece on the question of jurisdiction was filed within the extended time-limit so fixed.

Chapter II

Questions concerning the International Law Commission

The International Law Commission held its twenty-ninth session at Geneva, Switzerland, from 9 May to 29 July 1977. At the session, work continued on the draft articles for conventions on State responsibility, on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties, and on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations. The Commission also considered the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, relations between States and international organizations, and the Commission's programme and methods of work. The General Assembly, at its 1977 session, considered the Commission's report and adopted a resolution on its work.

Report of the International Law CommissionState responsibility

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1976,¹ the Commission in 1977 continued its work on State responsibility and provisionally adopted three additional articles for a convention on the topic, on the basis of a sixth report submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Roberto Ago (Italy). This brought to a total of 22 the number of draft articles provisionally adopted on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

The three articles, contained in chapter III (breach of an international obligation) of part I of the draft (relating to the origin of international responsibility), deal with: breach of an international obligation requiring the adoption of a particular course of conduct (article 20); breach of an international obligation requiring the achievement of a specified result (article 21); and exhaustion of local remedies (article 22). The chapter laid down one of the two essential conditions for the existence of an internationally wrongful act, namely, the objective element. The other condition—the subjective element—was incorporated in chapter II, provisionally completed at the Commission's 1975 session.²

Succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties

States in respect of matters other than treaties. After provisional adoption, in 1976, of the draft articles constituting part I of the draft (relating to succession to State property), the Commission in 1977 began work on part II of the draft (concerning succession to State debts). On the basis of the ninth report by the Special Rapporteur, Mohammed Bedjaoui (Algeria), the Commission adopted provisionally six additional articles on the succession of States to State debts. As of 1977, the Commission had thus adopted 22 draft articles on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties.

Four of the six new draft articles constituted section 1 (general provisions) of part II: scope of the articles (article 17); definition of State debt (article 18); obligations of the successor State in respect of State debts passing to it (article 19); and effects of the passing of State debts with regard to creditors (article 20). Under section 2 of part II of the draft (provisions relating to each type of succession of States), the Commission adopted two draft articles: transfer of part of the territory of a State (article 21); and newly independent States (article 22).

Treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between two or more international organizations

At its 1977 session, the Commission continued its preparation of draft articles on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations. It provisionally adopted 22 additional articles of the draft (as well as one subparagraph concerning the use of terms), on the basis of the fourth, fifth and sixth reports submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Paul Reuter (France). This brought to 39 the total number of draft articles provisionally adopted on this topic.

Under section 2 (reservations) of part II, the draft articles related to: formulation of reservations in the case of treaties between several international organizations (article 19); formulation of reservations by States and international organizations in the case of treaties between States and one or more international organizations or between international organizations and one or more States (article 19 bis); objection to reservations (article 19 ter); acceptance of reservations in the case of treaties between several international organizations (article 20); acceptance of reservations in the case of treaties between States and one or more international organizations or between international organizations and one or more States (article 20 bis); legal effects of reservations and of objections to reservations (article 21); withdrawal of reservations and of objections to reservations (article 22); procedure regarding reservations in treaties between several international organizations (article 23); and procedure regarding reservations in treaties between States and one or more international organizations or between international organizations and one or more States (article 23 bis).

Section 3 (entry into force and provisional application of treaties) of part II contained draft articles on: entry into force of treaties between international organizations (article 24); entry into force of treaties between one or more States and one or more international organizations (article 24 bis); provisional application of treaties between international organizations (article 25); and provisional application of treaties between one or more States and one or more international organizations (article 25 bis).

The Commission, at its 1977 session, also began consideration of part III of the draft. It provisionally adopted draft articles for section 1 (observance of treaties) dealing with: pacta sunt servanda (article 26); and internal law of a State, rules of an international organization and observance of treaties (article 27). During consideration of article 27, the Commission also adopted a definition for rules of the organization (article 2, subparagraph 1(j)).

Section 2 (application of treaties) of part III contained draft articles on the following aspects: non-retroactivity of treaties (article 28); territorial scope of treaties between one or more States and one or more international organizations (article 29); and application of successive treaties relating to the same subject-matter (article 30).

The draft articles of section 3 (interpretation of treaties) included: general rule of interpretation (article 31); supplementary means of interpretation (article 32); and interpretation of treaties authenticated in two or more languages (article 33).

Further, the Commission began consideration of section 4 (treaties and third States or third international organizations) of part III, provisionally adopting an article on the general rule regarding third States and third international organizations (article 34).

Other topics

After completion, at its 1976 session, of the first reading of the draft articles on the most-favoured-nation clause, the Commission, in 1977, appointed N. A. Ushakov as Special Rapporteur for the topic, to succeed Endre Ustor (Hungary).

Concerning the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses, the Commission appointed Stephen M. Schwebel (United States) as Special Rapporteur for the topic to succeed Richard D. Kearney (United States).

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 13 December 1976,³ the Commission considered proposals on the elaboration of a protocol concerning the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier. It established a working group which submitted a report recommending, inter alia, that the question be included in the 1978 programme of work of the Commission for study. The conclusions of the working group were approved by the Commission.

Also at its 1977 session, the Commission considered a preliminary report on the second part of the question of relations between States and international organizations, submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Abdullah El-Erian (Egypt). The first part (dealing with the status, privileges and immunities of representatives of States to international organizations) had been completed in 1975 with the adoption of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character.⁴ The second part of the topic dealt with the status, privileges and immunities of international organizations, their officials, experts and other persons engaged in their activities not being representatives of States. The Commission authorized the Special Rapporteur to continue with his study of the question, to submit a further report thereon and to seek additional information.

A planning group composed of six Commission members was again entrusted with the task of considering the future programme and methods of work of the Commission. In connexion with possible additional topics for study following the implementation of the current programme of work, the Commission drew particular attention to: international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law; jurisdictional immunities of States and their property; and the draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the International Law Commission was considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-second (1977) session, mainly by the Sixth (Legal) Committee.

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted a resolution by which it approved the programme of work planned by the Commission for 1978 and recommended that it should complete at its 1978 session the second reading of the draft articles on the most-favoured-nation clause. The Commission was also asked to:

— continue on a high priority basis its work on State responsibility with the aim of completing at least the first reading of the set of articles constituting part I of the draft articles on the topic by 1981;

— proceed with the preparation, on a priority basis, of draft articles on the succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties, in an endeavour to complete the first reading of the set of articles concerning State property and State debts, and on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations; and

— to continue its work on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

The Assembly endorsed the conclusions of the Commission to study proposals on the elaboration of a protocol concerning the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, as well as its conclusions regarding the second part of the topic of relations between States and international organizations.

Further, the Assembly invited the Commission, at an appropriate time and in the light of progress made on the draft articles on State responsibility and on other topics in its current programme of work, to commence work on the topics of international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law and on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property.

The Assembly also expressed confidence that the Commission would continue to keep the progress of its work under review and to adopt the methods of work best suited to the speedy completion of the tasks entrusted to it.

In addition, the Assembly, among other things, expressed the wish that seminars continue to be held and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries be given the opportunity to attend.

These decisions were set forth in Assembly resolution 32/151, adopted by consensus on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee. In that Committee, the text was sponsored by Algeria, Austria, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Colombia, Finland, India, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Mali, Mexico, Morocco, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Niger, Singapore, Spain, the Sudan, Thailand, Turkey and Yugoslavia, and approved by consensus on 9 December 1977.

Chapter III

Succession of States in respect of treaties

In accordance with a General Assembly decision of 15 December 1975,¹ the United Nations Conference on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties was convened at Vienna, Austria, from 4 April to 6 May 1977. At the Conference, the following 89 States were represented: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guyana, the Holy See, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire. The Governments of Iran and the Republic of Korea were represented by observers.

By a decision of 24 November 1976,² the General Assembly had also invited organizations with a standing invitation from the Assembly to participate in its sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices, in the capacity of observers. The following organizations were represented: the Palestine Liberation Organization and the South West Africa People's Organization.

In accordance with a General Assembly decision of 20 December 1976³ and a letter of 6 April 1977 addressed to the President of the Conference by the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Conference, on 14 April 1977, granted full membership to the Council so that it might participate in the work of the Conference.

Further, the General Assembly had invited the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), as well as interested regional intergovernmental organizations, to send observers to the Conference. The following agencies attended: the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the International Monetary Fund and IAEA. Intergovernmental organizations represented were the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the Commonwealth Secretariat and the Council of Europe.

The Conference had before it, as the basic proposal for its consideration, the draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties approved by the International Law Commission in 1974, an analytical compilation of comments of Governments on the draft articles and related documentation prepared by the United Nations Secretariat.

In addition, the International Law Commission's Special Rapporteur on the topic, Sir Francis Vallat (United Kingdom), acted as Expert Consultant to the Conference.

After having established a General Committee, a Credentials Committee, a Committee of the Whole and a Drafting Committee, the Conference assigned to the Committee of the Whole, in which all participants were represented, the consideration of the final draft articles adopted by the International Law Commission. The draft consisted of 39 articles on succession of States in respect of treaties.

State succession—the replacement of one State by another in the responsibility for the international relations of a territory—covered cases in which dependent territories gained independence as well as cases involving the transfer of territory and the uniting, dissolution and separation of States.

The draft articles were divided into five parts: part I, general provisions (articles 1 to 13); part II, succession in respect of part of territory (article 14); part III, newly independent States (articles 15 to 29); part IV, uniting and separation of States (articles 30 to 37); and part V, miscellaneous provisions (articles 38 and 39).

The Committee of the Whole also had before it proposed new articles and some 48 amendments. It completed discussion of 25 of the 39 articles contained in the basic proposal, namely, articles 1, 3 to 5, 8 to 11 and 13 to 29, and considered the proposed new articles 9 bis and 16 bis. It started consideration of articles 2, 6, 7 and 12 and of a proposed new article 22 bis but, due to the complexity of the subject-matter, was not able to complete them in the time available. The Committee was also unable to begin consideration of articles 30 to 39 of the basic proposal and of new articles and amendments relating thereto.

Work of the Committee proceeded by way of an article-by-article discussion of the draft articles and amendments, and decisions were taken by a majority of representatives present and voting. The articles recommended by the Committee of the Whole to the Conference for adoption, to form part of a convention, retained the basic structure of those adopted by the International Law Commission.

The texts adopted by the Committee of the Whole were referred to the Drafting Committee, which was responsible for preparing drafts, giving advice on drafting, and co-ordinating and reviewing the drafting of all texts adopted. In addition, the Committee of the Whole entrusted to the Drafting Committee the preparation of drafts for submission to the plenary concerning the preamble and the final clauses of the convention to be adopted.

The Conference decided to proceed with consideration at the plenary level of the articles whose examination had been completed by the Committee of the Whole, and adopted articles 1, 3 to 5, 8 to 11 and 13 to 29, without prejudice to any consequential adjustments that might be required in the light of decisions on articles yet to be considered. The Conference took decisions in plenary meetings on the texts of the articles by a two-thirds majority of those present and voting.

The draft articles adopted by the Conference dealt with: the scope of the convention; cases to which it would not apply; treaties constituting international organizations and those adopted within such an organization; obligations imposed by international law independently of a treaty; agreements for the devolution of treaty obligations or rights from a predecessor State to a successor State; unilateral action by successor States; treaties providing for the participation of such States; boundary regimes; the validity of treaties; succession in respect of part of territory; and the position of newly independent States in respect of treaties of predecessor States.

Also dealt with were articles on: participation in multilateral treaties in force, those not in force and those which were subject to ratification at the time of succession; reservations; possibilities for newly independent States to be bound only by part of a treaty; notification of succession and effects of such notification; conditions under which a bilateral treaty was considered as being in force; treaty relations between predecessor States and newly independent States; termination or amendment of those treaty relations; the provisional application of multilateral and bilateral treaties as well as termination of such application; and newly independent States formed from two or more territories.

Consideration of the draft articles contained in parts IV and V was postponed until the resumed session of the Conference in 1978.

At its last plenary meeting on 6 May, the Conference noted, inter alia, that due to the intrinsic complexity of the subject-matter it had not been possible to conclude its work and adopt an international convention and other appropriate instruments. It recommended that the General Assembly decide to reconvene the Conference in 1978 for a final session of four weeks.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 8 December 1977, on the recommendation of its Sixth (Legal) Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which, inter alia, it took note of the report of the United Nations Conference on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties and approved the convening of a resumed session at Vienna for a period of three weeks, from 31 July to 18 August 1978, with a possible extension of up to one further week should this prove necessary in the view of the Conference. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements and expressed its firm conviction that the Conference would conclude its work.

The Assembly's decisions were embodied in resolution 32/47, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, which had approved the text by consensus, on 11 November 1977. The text was sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Bulgaria, Canada, Egypt, Finland, India, Italy, Jamaica, Morocco, the Niger, Norway, the Philippines, Spain, the Sudan, Sweden, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Resolution 32/47, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/32/366, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 97.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3496(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it decided to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries in 1977 to consider the draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties, adopted by the International Law Commission at its twenty-sixth session, and to embody the results of its work in an international convention and such other instruments as it might deem appropriate,

Recalling further its resolution 31/18 of 24 November 1976, by which, after noting that an invitation had been extended by the Government of Austria to hold the United Nations Conference on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties at Vienna, it had decided that the Conference would be held in that city,

Noting that the Conference met at Vienna from 4 April to 6 May 1977, in accordance with the above-mentioned resolutions, but that it was not possible in the time available for the Conference to conclude its work and to adopt an international convention and other appropriate instruments, as requested by the General Assembly,

Noting further the view of the Conference that one more session would enable it to conclude its work as envisaged by the General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the recommendation unanimously adopted by the Conference that it should be reconvened at Vienna for a final session of four weeks,

Taking into account the invitation of the Government of Austria, accepted by the General Assembly in resolution 31/18, which extends also to a resumed session of the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations Conference on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties;

2. Approves the convening of a resumed session of the United Nations Conference on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties at Vienna for a period of three weeks, from 31 July to 18 August 1978, with a possible extension of up to one further week should this prove necessary in the view of the Conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements, as provided under General Assembly resolution 31/18, for the efficient servicing of the Conference;

4. Expresses its firm conviction that the Conference will thus conclude its work and adopt an international convention and other appropriate instruments as requested by the General Assembly.

Chapter IV

International trade law

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) held its tenth session at Vienna, Austria, from 23 May to 17 June 1977, during which, among other things, it approved a draft convention on the international sale of goods. The General Assembly, on 16 December 1977, adopted a resolution on the work of the Commission. These actions and others relating to international trade law are described below.

United Nations Conference on the Carriage of Goods by Sea

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly decided that an international conference of plenipotentiaries would be convened in 1978 in New York, or any other suitable place for which the Secretary-General received an invitation, to consider the question of the carriage of goods by sea and conclude a convention and such other instruments as it deemed appropriate.¹ A draft convention had been approved by UNCITRAL at its 1976 session. Subsequently, the Secretary-General accepted an invitation from the Federal Republic of Germany to hold the United Nations Conference on the Carriage of Goods by Sea at Hamburg from 6 to 31 March 1978.

On 9 December 1977, the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft text, which the Assembly, on 16 December, adopted without a vote as decision 32/438.

By this decision, the Assembly expressed the understanding that it was for the United Nations Conference on the Carriage of Goods by Sea to decide on the invitation and status of non-governmental organization participants. The Assembly took note that the Commission, at its 1977 session, had decided to draw the Assembly's attention to the desirability of requesting the Secretary-General to invite also interested governmental and non-governmental organizations, in particular those organizations that had participated in the Commission's work on the subject. The Assembly then requested the Secretary-General to invite to the Conference the organizations referred to by the Commission.

During consideration of this item, the Assembly also had before it a draft resolution sponsored by Austria, Cyprus, Ghana, Greece, Kenya and Sierra Leone, by which the Assembly would have expressed its appreciation to the Federal Republic of Germany for its offer to host the Conference and would have requested the Secretary-General to invite to the Conference, as observers, in addition to the organizations, national liberation movements, agencies and United Nations organs referred to in the Assembly's 1976 resolution,² interested intergovernmental organizations, and non-governmental organizations which had participated in the related work of UNCITRAL.

Following consultations, the sponsors decided not to press for a vote on the draft resolution.

Other activities of UNCITRAL

International sale of goods

The draft convention on the international sale of goods, which had been prepared by the Commission's working group on this topic, was approved by UNCITRAL at its tenth session. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to prepare a commentary on the provisions of the draft convention, to circulate the draft convention, together with the commentary, to Governments and interested international organizations for comments and proposals, and to prepare an analytical compilation of those comments and proposals. The Commission also recommended that the General Assembly convene an international conference of plenipotentiaries to conclude a Convention on the International Sale of Goods.

The draft convention, comprising 68 articles, was divided into six chapters. Inter alia, chapter I (sphere of application) established the scope of application of the draft convention and provided that it applied to contracts of sale of goods entered into by parties whose places of business were in different States as long as certain conditions were satisfied. Chapter II (general provisions) dealt with the effect of usage, the definition of fundamental breach and the formal requirements for contracts of sale. Chapter III (obligations of the seller) dealt with the seller's obligations regarding delivery of the goods and handing over of documents, conformity of the goods to the requirements of the contract and the remedies for a breach of the contract by the seller. Chapter IV (obligations of the buyer) concerned the obligations of the buyer to pay the price for the goods and to take delivery, and the remedies for a breach of the contract by the buyer. Chapter V (provisions common to the obligations of the seller and of the buyer) among other things dealt with anticipatory breach of the contract, exemptions from the duty to perform contractual obligations in certain cases, the effects of avoidance of the contract, the measure of damages for breach of contract and obligations to preserve the goods. Chapter VI (passing of risk) regulated the time when risk of loss passed from seller to buyer.

General conditions of sale

The Commission postponed to 1978 work on general conditions of sale.

International payments

The Commission considered the subject of security interests in goods. It had before it a note by the Secretariat and a report by the Secretary-General containing a general survey of the existing law on security interests, proposals for reform and the conclusions of a consultative working group.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to prepare a further report on the feasibility and possible content of uniform rules on security interests and to carry out the work in consultation with international organizations and banking and trade institutions.

The Commission also considered the subject of contract guarantees and decided to review this item at its 1978 session. At that time, it was expected that the work of the International Chamber of Commerce on the preparation of uniform rules on contract guarantees would be concluded.

International commercial arbitration

The Commission considered a recommendation of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, by which the Committee invited the Commission to consider the possibility of preparing a protocol to the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (New York, 1958), with a view to clarifying certain questions that arose in the practice of international commercial arbitration. The Commission expressed the view that this matter deserved thorough study and consideration, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with interested organizations and arbitration centres, studies on these questions.

Liability for damage

A report of the Secretary-General and an analysis of replies by Governments to a questionnaire on the subject of liability for damage caused by products intended for or involved in international trade were before the Commission. It decided not to continue its work on the subject of products liability at that time and to review the matter in the context of its future programme of work.

Training and assistance

The Commission noted that the second UNCITRAL symposium on international trade law, scheduled to take place during the current session, had had to be cancelled due to insufficient voluntary contributions and recommended to the General Assembly that it consider the possibility of funding future UNCITRAL symposia, in whole or in part, out of the regular budget of the United Nations. The Commission also decided that, subject to the availability of sufficient funds, the second UNCITRAL symposium should be held in connexion with the Commission's twelfth (1979) session.

Action by the General Assembly

The report of UNCITRAL to the General Assembly on the work of its tenth session was considered by the Sixth (Legal) Committee at the Assembly's 1977 session.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without a vote, resolution 32/145, by which it inter alia: noted with satisfaction that a draft convention on the international sale of goods had been prepared and that the Commission intended to place before the Assembly, at its 1978 session, draft provisions on the formation and validity of contracts for the international sale of goods. The Assembly expressed the view that both the draft convention and the draft provisions on formation and validity of contracts should be considered by a conference of plenipotentiaries at an appropriate time.

Further, the Assembly noted with regret that the second symposium on international trade law could not be held owing to insufficient voluntary contributions, appealed to all Governments and to organizations, institutions and individuals to consider making financial and other contributions, and requested the Secretary-General to study the problem of providing adequate financial resources for the biennial symposia on international trade law.

The Assembly recommended that UNCITRAL continue its work on the topics included in its programme of work and its work on training and assistance in the field of international trade law, taking into account the special interests of the developing countries. The Commission was also asked to maintain close collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to continue to maintain liaison with the Commission on Transnational Corporations, to continue to give special consideration to the interests of developing countries and to bear in mind the special problems of land-locked countries.

In addition, the Assembly called upon UNCITRAL to take account of the relevant provisions of the resolutions of the sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions of the General Assembly that laid down the foundations of the new international economic order, and welcomed the decision of the Commission to review, in the near future, its long-term programme of work.

On 16 November 1977, the Sixth Committee had approved the text by consensus as sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Canada, Cyprus, Egypt, Finland, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, Indonesia, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Morocco, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, the Sudan, Turkey, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

(f) Keep its programme of work and working methods under review with the aim of further increasing the effectiveness of its work;

6. Calls upon the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law to continue to take account of the relevant provisions of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions that laid down the foundations of the new international economic order, bearing in mind the need for United Nations organs to participate in the implementation of those resolutions;

7. Welcomes the decision of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law to review, in the near future, its long-term programme of work and, in this connexion, requests Governments to submit their views and suggestions on such a programme;

8. Expresses the view that both the draft Convention on the International Sale of Goods and the draft provisions on the formation and validity of contracts for the international sale of goods, referred to in paragraph 3 above, should be considered by a conference of plenipotentiaries at an appropriate time;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to study the problem of how adequate financial resources can be provided for the symposia on international trade law which are organized biennially by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, taking into account the availability of voluntary contributions and the relevant recommendation of the Commission adopted at its 185th meeting on 17 June 1977, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

Treaties and multilateral conventions

Review of multilateral treaty-making process

By a letter dated 19 July 1977 addressed to the Secretary-General, the representatives of Australia, Egypt, Indonesia, Kenya, Mexico, the Netherlands and Sri Lanka requested the inclusion in the provisional agenda of the 1977 session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Review of the multilateral treaty-making process."

The memorandum attached to the letter stated that the purpose of the initiative was to occasion examination of the methods of multilateral treaty-making employed in the United Nations and under its auspices. The consideration was to be directed towards an assessment of whether the methods employed were as efficient and economical as the needs of the community required or circumstances permitted. The initiative, it was explained, was in no way concerned with the substantive content of treaties nor was it intended to extend beyond the process of multilateral treaty preparation.

The pace of international legislative activity was intense, the memorandum continued. In the course of any single year, Members of the United Nations were expected to participate in the preparation of one stage or another of at least a score of treaties. Members discussed the texts at meetings and also had to consider in their capitals the policies to be adopted towards drafts, as well as the ratification and often the legislative implementation of treaties upon completion and acceptance. The burden these processes placed upon the administrative machinery of all States, and especially new or small States, required no elaboration, it was pointed out. Furthermore, the methods used for the initial preparation and subsequent development of draft conventions in the United Nations varied widely according to the organ within which the subject-matter was being handled and sometimes even within the same organ.

It was suggested, inter alia, that the item should be referred to the Sixth (Legal) Committee for debate, with a view to the adoption of a resolution seeking a detailed study of the subject. This report, it was stated, should examine in detail the treaty-making methods which had actually been used in the United Nations since its inception as well as comparable techniques used in specialized agencies and the methods of legislation employed in States.

The next step, it was suggested, might be to create a small ad hoc committee and then perhaps to draft a manual of recommended practices to aid the organs of the United Nations in the selection of the most suitable techniques of treaty-making. The contents of such a manual would serve as guidelines, it was pointed out, with the objective of simplifying for States their participation in the treaty-making process.

After allocation to it by the General Assembly, the Sixth Committee considered the item between 15 and 18 November 1977.

During the discussions, the initiative to review the multilateral treaty-making process was generally welcomed. Sri Lanka recalled that of the 124 items on the Assembly's 1977 agenda, 17 had involved multilateral treaties. The timeliness of the introduction of the item was also stressed by Cyprus, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Madagascar, Nigeria and Yemen which emphasized the difficulties posed by the current system of the multilateral treaty-making process to developing countries. They lacked the qualified personnel and financial means required to participate in all the activities of the United Nations, including the growing number of diplomatic conferences organized each year, Ethiopia pointed out, and could therefore not participate on an equal footing with other States which had the advantage of possessing infinitely greater material resources.

Some Members, including France, Jamaica, Romania and the USSR, stressed the need for enhancing the role of the Sixth Committee. Romania underlined the Committee's important role in the codification and progressive development of international law and supported the establishment of working groups to perform specific tasks.

Cyprus, Italy, Paraguay, the USSR and the United Kingdom stressed that the initiative should not aim at the standardization of the treaty-making process. Codification methods and procedures, it was held, were determined in each case by the specific character of the treaty concerned.

Another point of concern raised during the discussion was the lack of ratification of international instruments. The United States proposed a study of that problem in order to determine its cause. Egypt, Iran and Spain expressed similar concerns and the Ukrainian SSR considered that the fate of treaties depended on the political will of States.

Several Members expressed reservations on the proposal. Japan said it was not quite sure where the review would lead. It was of the opinion that the essential problems Governments faced in the matter of multilateral treaty-making might not be of a procedural nature but rather due to the complex and interdependent nature of world society. To a large extent, Japan held, the difficulties were inevitable.

Greece supported the review with some hesitation, saying it feared that it would most likely be only an academic exercise. Israel suggested limiting the scope of the proposed study in the preliminary phase to the techniques and procedures used in the elaboration of multilateral treaties within or under the auspices of the General Assembly and its organs. It agreed with the proposal, but was concerned that the result not be a mere academic thesis.

On 18 November, the Sixth Committee approved, by consensus, a draft resolution sponsored by 48 powers.

By this text, the General Assembly would:

- request the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the techniques and procedures used in the elaboration of multilateral treaties, taking also into consideration the debates at the Assembly's current session and observations received thereon, with a view to its submission to the Assembly at its 1979 session;

- invite Governments and the International Law Commission to submit their observations by 31 July 1979, for inclusion in the Secretary-General's report;

- request those specialized agencies and other interested organizations which were active in the preparation and study of multilateral treaties, and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, upon request, to lend any necessary assistance; and

- decide to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fourth (1979) session the item entitled "Review of the multilateral treaty-making process."

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted the text, without vote, as resolution 32/48.

Computerization of treaty information

In accordance with a General Assembly decision of 18 December 1973,¹ the Secretary-General reported to the 1977 Assembly session on the computerization of treaty information. He stated that the United Nations Treaty Information System, currently operating solely for the purpose of registering treaties and international agreements pursuant to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations,² was expected to become fully operational by the beginning of 1978, at which time its functions were also to include automatic production of documents and research.

He noted that as at 31 July 1977, there was a two-year delay in processing the registration documents and a four-year delay in publication of the volumes of the United Nations Treaty Series, and he proposed measures to reduce the delay.

On 31 October 1977, the Sixth Committee established an informal working group to consider the question of computerization of treaty information. On the recommendation of the working group, the Committee, on 7 December 1977, approved by consensus a draft text by which the Assembly would:

- emphasize anew the importance of having every treaty and every international agreement registered and published as soon as possible;

- request the Secretary-General to initiate forthwith such measures as would contribute towards the reduction of the current arrears, both in the field of registration and in the field of publication of treaties and international agreements;

- approve, as a temporary measure, proposals outlined by the Secretary-General with regard to the publication of treaties and international agreements;

- request him to approach the Governments and international organizations concerned, in order to ascertain the best means of putting the United Nations Treaty Information System to full use for the benefit of the international community; and

- request him to report to the Assembly at its 1978 session on implementation.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted the text without vote as resolution 32/144.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its duty under Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations to initiate studies and to make recommendations for the purpose, inter alia, of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Observing that, in the period since the inception of the United Nations, many important multilateral treaties have been prepared by a number of different United Nations organs,

Bearing in mind the important contribution of the International Law Commission to the preparation of multilateral treaties during the past twenty-nine years,

Aware of the heavy burdens which active involvement in the process of multilateral treaty-making places upon Governments,

Conscious of the desirability of assessing the efficiency and adequacy of the procedures followed by the United Nations in the formulation of the texts of multilateral treaties with a view to the improvement of such procedures,

Bearing in mind the need for the United Nations to exercise economy in the use of its resources,

Taking into account that in certain important and specialized areas the interested parties have developed methods of negotiation of proved and continued value,

Recalling the publication by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research of a study on the wider acceptance of multilateral treaties,

Recalling those resolutions of the General Assembly urging the greater participation of States in multilateral conventions concluded under the auspices of the United Nations,

Observing that the United Nations has not hitherto given comprehensive consideration to the techniques and procedures used in the preparation of multilateral treaties,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the techniques and procedures used in the elaboration of multilateral treaties, taking also into consideration the debates in the General Assembly at the current session and the observations referred to in paragraph 2 below, with a view to its submission to the Assembly at its thirty-fourth session;

2. Invites Governments and the International Law Commission to submit by 31 July 1979, for inclusion in the report referred to above, their observations on this subject;

3. Requests those specialized agencies and other interested organizations which are active in the preparation and study of multilateral treaties, and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, upon request, to lend any necessary assistance;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fourth session the item entitled "Review of the multilateral treaty-making process."

Resolution 32/144, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/32/432, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General concerning the computerization of treaty information and the registration and publication of treaties and international agreements pursuant to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the regulations to give effect to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations—adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 97(II) of 14 December 1946, as modified by resolutions 364 B (IV) of 1 December 1949 and 482(V) of 12 December 1950—as well as its resolutions 254 A and B (III) of 3 November 1948, 364 A (IV) of 1 December 1949 and 1092(XI) of 27 February 1957,

Also recalling its recommendation, made on 14 December 1974 at its 2319th plenary meeting, concerning the notifications that States and international organizations* depositaries of multilateral treaties are called upon to send to the United Nations Secretariat,

Noting that the United Nations Treaty Information System, which is expected to become fully operational at the beginning of 1978, has been conceived as an open system, capable of utilizing not only the data resulting from the registration process under Article 102 of the Charter, but all data relating to treaties and international agreements, regardless of their origin,

Recalling that the General Assembly has consistently taken the view that treaties and international agreements should be published with the least possible delay and that, in this respect, an interval of one year between registration and publication has generally been held to be reasonable,

Noting in this connexion that, according to the information provided by the Secretary-General, the interval between registration and publication of treaties and international agreements had reached five years as an average at 31 July 1977, while the delay in the administrative process of registration itself amounted to twenty months,

1. Emphasizes anew the importance of having every treaty and every international agreement registered and published as soon as possible in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations and the General Assembly regulations to give effect thereto;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate forthwith, within the means available and in co-operation, as appropriate, with the specialized agencies and other international organizations concerned, such measures as would contribute towards the reduction of the current arrears, both in the field of registration and in the field of publication of treaties and international agreements;

3. Approves, as a temporary measure, the proposals of the Secretary-General contained in paragraphs 29 to 34 of his note with regard to the publication of treaties and international agreements;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to approach as soon as possible the Governments and international organizations concerned, especially those that act as depositaries of multilateral treaties and agreements, in order to ascertain the best means of putting the United Nations Treaty Information System to full use for the benefit of the international community;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session an item entitled "Registration and publication of treaties and international agreements pursuant to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations."

* Wherever it appears in the resolution, the term "international organizations" is understood, in the light of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 1969, as applying to intergovernmental organizations.

Chapter VI

Other legal questionsMeasures to prevent international terrorism*Report of the Ad Hoc Committee

In accordance with a General Assembly decision of 15 December 1976,¹ the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism continued the work entrusted to it by the Assembly in 1972.² The Ad Hoc Committee met at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 14 to 25 March 1977 and held a general debate on the subjects outlined in its mandate. The Committee approved a report to the General Assembly containing a summary of the views of Committee members. It also decided to annex to the report the summary records of its meetings so as to ensure that the views of all its members were fully reflected.

The summary of views indicated that the debate had revealed that the members of the Ad Hoc Committee shared the concern of the international community at the development of international terrorism. The inalienable right to self-determination and independence of all peoples under colonial and racist regimes and other forms of alien domination was reaffirmed by many members, and the legitimacy of the struggle of those peoples was upheld, in particular the struggle of national liberation movements. In this regard, the view was expressed that there could be no exception to the condemnation and suppression of international terrorist activities, and reference was made to the right to life, liberty and security of individuals which was enunciated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.³

It was also considered by some that the terrorist methods used by certain Governments and certain States should constitute one of the categories of acts which threatened the lives of innocent people and therefore came within the general condemnation of terrorism. It was observed that this matter, among others, had long been the concern of the instruments and mechanisms adopted by the United Nations to protect fundamental human rights and freedoms. In this context it was pointed out that human rights questions did not fall within the mandate of the Committee and in that connexion the relevant principles of the Charter of the United Nations were emphasized.

Although the need to condemn and repress acts of international terrorism falling within the "common law" (relevant du droit commun) was considered obvious, there was divergence of views as to what other acts should be included in the expression of "international terrorism."

In the summary of views, the opinion was reaffirmed by some members that condemnation and repression of international terrorism should take place without any qualification.

The need to concentrate on specific categories of acts which threatened the lives or safety of innocent individuals and to evolve practical international and concerted national action to deal with these categories of acts was emphasized by some members, while others considered that only a precise definition of the acts to be condemned and in-depth study of the underlying causes of terrorism could remove the misunderstandings that had thus far blocked any effective action by the international community.

The summary of views also noted statements on the importance of measures to be taken against acts of international terrorism at the national level, particularly for ensuring the functioning of diplomatic and other representations, for taking effective measures to prevent terrorist acts against them and for prohibiting unlawful activities of the organizations or groups that incited, encouraged and engaged in the perpetration of terrorist acts against diplomatic and other foreign representations and their personnel.

Also stressed by some was the importance of States becoming parties to the conventions which had already been drafted for the protection of individuals. Finally, the members of the Committee held the view that the General Assembly had to continue its efforts with a view to combating international terrorism, and they stressed the need for international co-operation to tackle this problem by studying its underlying causes and by putting into practice measures to combat terrorism.

The question of measures to prevent international terrorism was considered by the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee at the Assembly's 1977 session.

On 16 December 1977, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the Assembly adopted a resolution on the question, thereby expressing its deep concern over increasing acts of international terrorism which endangered or took innocent human lives or jeopardized fundamental freedoms, and urging States to continue to seek just and peaceful solutions to the underlying causes which gave rise to such acts of violence.

The Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right to self-determination and independence of all peoples under colonial and racist regimes and other forms of alien domination and upheld the legitimacy of their struggle, in particular the struggle of national liberation movements, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant resolutions of United Nations organs. It condemned the continuation of repressive and terrorist acts by colonial, racist and alien regimes in denying peoples their legitimate right to self-determination and independence and other human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Assembly appealed to States which had not done so to examine the possibility of becoming parties to the existing international conventions which related to various aspects of the problem of international terrorism and invited States to take all appropriate measures at the national level with a view to the speedy and final elimination of the problem. Further, the Assembly invited the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism to continue its work in accordance with the mandate entrusted to it in 1972,⁴ first by studying the underlying causes of terrorism and then by recommending practical measures to combat terrorism, and it invited the States which had not done so to submit their observations and concrete proposals as soon as possible to the Secretary-General so as to enable the Ad Hoc Committee to carry out its mandate more efficiently.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to transmit to the Ad Hoc Committee an analytical study of the observations of States and requested the Ad Hoc Committee to consider these observations and to submit its report with recommendations for possible co-operation for the speedy elimination of the problem to the Assembly at its thirty-fourth session in 1979. Finally, the Assembly decided to consider the item again in 1979.

Resolution 32/147 was adopted by a recorded vote of 91 to 9, with 28 abstentions. In the Sixth Committee, the text was approved on 9 December 1977 by a roll-call vote of 89 to 9, with 24 abstentions. Its sponsors were Afghanistan, Algeria, Burundi, the Congo, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Kenya, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mali, Morocco, the Niger, Nigeria, Somalia, the Sudan, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Zaire and Zambia.

(For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the debate in the Sixth Committee, many States expressed their condemnation of international terrorism. Democratic Yemen, the USSR and Uruguay expressed the view that a global approach was needed to combat terrorism. Bangladesh, Ecuador, Oman, Somalia and the Syrian Arab Republic were among those which suggested the drafting of a definition of international terrorism by the Ad Hoc Committee. A study of the causes of terrorism was called for by the Congo, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar and Yemen. Italy noted, in this connexion, that the causes of terrorism lay in political, economic and social tensions and a detailed study would therefore involve an analysis of most of the current problems of mankind.

India held the view that, rather than trying to define terrorism, concrete measures of co-operation should be devised to prevent or deter international terrorism. It proposed that attention be given to certain specific and typical cases of terrorism and that a convention or code for dealing with them be prepared. The United Kingdom was also of the opinion that a study was not a substitute for positive steps against terrorism.

Other States, including Afghanistan, Burundi, Cuba, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the USSR and Viet Nam, while expressing their concern over international terrorism, emphasized that any international instrument to be drawn up should provide adequate safeguards for national liberation movements.

Concern at what was termed State terrorism was expressed by Cyprus, Ethiopia and Somalia, among others. On this, Democratic Yemen held that State terrorism was the gravest form of international terrorism and represented a flagrant violation of the Charter of the United Nations when it involved annexation of territory by force, racial discrimination, expropriation and acts of terrorism against the population, expulsion of populations and establishment of foreign settlements.

The need for wider adherence to existing international instruments was stressed by many States, including Bangladesh, Chile, the Congo, Cuba,

Ecuador, Nicaragua, the USSR and Viet Nam. Afghanistan, India and the USSR emphasized the importance of action at the national level. In this context, India said that States had a special responsibility to ensure normal conditions for the functioning of diplomatic and other representatives, to take effective measures to prevent terrorist acts against them, and to prohibit in their territories unlawful activities of organizations or groups that incited or engaged in terrorist acts against other States and their representatives. The USSR noted that this responsibility was particularly important in the case of host countries of international organizations.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Belgium, Canada, Israel, Japan and the United Kingdom said they voted against the resolution as it did not contain the elements essential for the suppression of international terrorism and was a distortion of the measures needed to combat it. Another point made was that the priority given to the study of the underlying causes of international terrorism rather than to practical measures to combat it had increased the difficulties in accepting the text. The United Kingdom commented that there was nothing to be gained by reconvening the Ad Hoc Committee until a more favourable climate existed for consideration of the question.

Austria, France, Greece, Italy, Nicaragua, Sweden and Uruguay, which abstained in the voting, considered that the resolution lacked a specific condemnation of all acts of international terrorism. Austria pointed out that international terrorism could only be fought by concrete measures and not by learned studies, while Nicaragua observed that the study of the underlying causes of terrorism should not be used as a pretext for postponing action to protect innocent victims.

Communications

Several communications were addressed to the Secretary-General on the subject of terrorism. A letter dated 20 October 1977 from Venezuela transmitted a communication from the Minister of Foreign Affairs, who stated that his Government had been following with deep concern the recent international developments produced by terrorist acts, especially the distressing sequence of holding up and killing pilots and passengers as a consequence of such acts. Acts of this kind, he stated, demanded a concerted, effective and immediate international response. On behalf of the Government of Venezuela, he expressed the strongest support for the call of the International Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations for the United Nations to consider this issue as a matter of urgency.

By a letter dated 6 December 1977 addressed to the Secretary-General, Israel transmitted extracts from a television interview, held on 4 December 1977 in the United States, in which the President of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Colonel Mu'ammār Qathafi, replied to questions on the situation in the Middle East. The extracts concerned the subjects of a Palestinian homeland and terrorism.

On 20 December 1977, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya addressed a letter to the Secretary-General. Referring to Israel's letter of 6 December, he stated that he wished to place on record the position of his Government concerning the questions of Palestine and of international terrorism. It did not oppose peace in the Arab region and did not resist a just settlement of the question of Palestine; rather, it believed that the only peace that could possibly be achieved was one based on justice and which would eliminate the effects of Zionist colonialist aggression.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the letter stated, shared the international community's concern about the serious and worsening phenomenon of terrorism, and declared that it condemned and deplored all forms of international terrorism, particularly the terrorism exercised by colonialist and racist regimes. In this respect, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had not only condemned international terrorism but also translated this condemnation into concrete facts and actions, such as national laws, support for United Nations resolutions, active participation in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Taking of Hostages (see following section), and accession to international conventions.

Proposal for an international convention against the taking of hostages

Report of the Ad Hoc Committee

In accordance with a General Assembly decision of 15 December 1976,⁵ the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Taking of Hostages held its first session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 1 to 19 August 1977.

⁵ See Y.U.N., 1976, pp. 835-36, text of resolution 31/103.

In its consideration of this item, the Committee had before it 13 working papers, including a 14-article draft convention against the taking of hostages submitted by the Federal Republic of Germany.

The text of the draft convention would: make the offence of taking hostages punishable; define the act of taking a hostage as the seizure or detainment of any person, when accompanied by the threat of death, severe injury or continued detention, for the purpose of compelling any third person, corporate body, nation or international organization or conference to do or abstain from doing anything; define persons who merely attempted to take hostages or who were accomplices to such acts as offenders; call upon contracting States to co-operate in the prevention of such offences by taking all practicable measures to prevent preparation for the commission of such offences and by exchanging information and co-ordinating administrative and other measures, and, in the event of an actual offence, take appropriate measures to secure the release of hostages held within their territory.

Further, the contracting State within whose territory the alleged offender was present would be obligated to take appropriate measures to prosecute or extradite that person and to notify the interested parties; the taking of hostages would be considered an extraditable offence; and the convention was not to apply in cases where the offence was committed in a single State and where the hostage, offender and party subjected to demands were all nationals of that State and where the offender was apprehended in the territory of that State. It would apply, however, if an international organization or conference on the territory of that State was involved.

During the discussion in the Ad Hoc Committee, the initiative of the Federal Republic of Germany in placing the question before the General Assembly in 1976 was generally welcomed. The discussion revealed, however, considerable differences of view concerning the scope and/or definition in the draft convention—issues which, some argued, should be resolved at an early stage of the Committee's work.

Several members took the position that actions taken by recognized national liberation movements, in the course of their struggles against racist regimes or foreign domination, should be specifically exempted from the prohibition of the convention. Working papers embodying this idea in various forms were submitted by Algeria, by Lesotho and the United Republic of Tanzania and by Mexico. The Syrian Arab Republic submitted a paper amending the proposal by Lesotho and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Committee members objecting to such exemptions did so mainly on the grounds that struggles for national liberation had been defined as armed conflicts in the additional protocols adopted on 8 June 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 (see p. 706). As such, they would not fall under the scope of a convention intended to apply to offences in time of peace.

Algeria, Egypt, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania, among others, considered that the Committee should not concern itself with the details of a convention until the issue of national liberation movements was resolved. Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States, on the other hand, expressed the opinion that lack of agreement on one issue should not prevent progress in those areas which could be resolved more easily.

Mexico and Venezuela suggested inserting a provision allowing contracting States the right to grant asylum, while Sweden and the United States observed that such a provision might cause confusion about the terms of previous conventions, which did not explicitly guarantee the right to grant asylum, but whose signatories were assumed to have retained that right.

Concern was expressed by France, the Netherlands and Nicaragua that the provision mandating severe penalties for hostage-takers might deprive authorities of a necessary flexibility in negotiations with hostage-takers. Proposals to permit the mitigation of penalties in cases where hostages were released voluntarily were submitted by France and Nicaragua.

Working papers were also submitted by France and the Netherlands, putting forward the opinion that States which received no requests for extradition of an offender apprehended in their territory should not necessarily be required to prosecute. Algeria, Guinea, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria and the United Republic of Tanzania submitted a proposal that would prohibit the use or threat of force by one State against another as a means of rescuing hostages. Several members considered, however, that this proposal was unnecessary, as it merely restated a principle embodied in the Charter of the United Nations.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya suggested that the word "hostages" should also include those populations under colonial, racist or foreign domination.

Action by the General Assembly

The General Assembly allocated the question of drafting a convention against the taking of hostages to the Sixth (Legal) Committee, which considered it between 30 November and 12 December 1977.

On 16 December, on the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted a resolution (32/148) by which it, inter alia: took note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Taking of Hostages; decided that the Ad Hoc Committee, as constituted, should continue to draft at the earliest possible date an international convention against the taking of hostages and should consider suggestions and proposals from any State, bearing in mind the views expressed during the debate on this item at the current session of the General Assembly; invited Governments to submit, or to bring up to date, suggestions and proposals for consideration by the Ad Hoc Committee; requested the Ad Hoc Committee to make every effort to submit a draft convention against the taking of hostages to the regular 1978 Assembly session; and decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of that session.

Resolution 32/148 was adopted without a vote. The Sixth Committee had approved the text by consensus on 12 December 1977; the text was sponsored by 62 Members.

During the debate in the Sixth Committee, Members confirmed the general desire to create international norms against the taking of hostages. Japan considered that efforts by individual countries were not sufficient, while Australia, India and Iran noted that existing international instruments did not cover all possible situations and welcomed the initiative to close the gaps in that sphere of contemporary international law.

In this context, many Members, including Canada, Colombia, the Netherlands, Nigeria, the United States and Yugoslavia, welcomed the draft convention submitted by the Federal Republic of Germany as a framework and basis for discussion. They noted that while agreement had been achieved on a number of points, the scope of the draft convention remained unsettled. Spain suggested limiting the scope to cases of genuine international significance and to the law of peace, since precise rules already existed for armed conflicts. Yemen proposed first to define the word "hostage" before determining the scope of the draft convention.

Afghanistan, the Byelorussian SSR, El Salvador, Romania, the Syrian Arab Republic and the USSR were among those which emphasized that the question of combating the taking of hostages could not be examined separately from the general problem of international terrorism and its causes, of which hostage-taking was one aspect.

The USSR expressed the view that measures to combat terrorism should not interfere with the activities of national liberation movements, a view that was shared by many others, including Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, China, India, Iraq, Kenya, Mongolia, Morocco, the Philippines and Yugoslavia.

Afghanistan and the Niger believed it was necessary to distinguish clearly between criminals who were pursuing their own personal ends and freedom fighters who were waging a legitimate struggle against colonial and racist regimes. Such struggles should be exempted from the application of the proposal convention. Afghanistan added that it was important for States to undertake not to resort to the threat or use of force vis-à-vis other States in order to obtain the release of hostages.

Canada, while endorsing the principle of self-determination, said it did not support the use of violence as a means of settling political differences, and Nicaragua and Norway held that the international community could not apply a double standard by tolerating the taking of hostages on the part of some and condemning it on the part of others. Australia said it was a matter for serious doubt whether the cause of any oppressed group or people could be enhanced by conferring on anyone the right to commit an act which was recognized in all countries as a crime against humanity.

Other aspects of the question discussed in the Sixth Committee included the problem of the safety of international aviation, the extradition and prosecution of offenders, the right of asylum and the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States.

Among the documents before the Sixth Committee when it considered this item was the letter dated 20 October 1977 from Venezuela transmitting a communication from the Minister of Foreign Affairs (see p. 970).

Resolution 32/148, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/32/467, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 31/103 of 15 December 1976,
Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Taking of Hostages,

Considering that the Ad Hoc Committee has been unable to complete the mandate given to it within the allocated time,

Mindful of the need to conclude, under the auspices of the United Nations, an international convention against the taking of hostages, taking into account the urgency of formulating effective measures to put an end to the taking of hostages,

Bearing in mind the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee that it should continue its work in 1978,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Taking of Hostages;

2. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee, as constituted, should continue, in accordance with paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 31/103, to draft at the earliest possible date an international convention against the taking of hostages and, in the fulfilment of its mandate, to consider suggestions and proposals from any State, bearing in mind the views expressed during the debate on this item at the thirty-second session of the Assembly;

3. Invites Governments to submit, or to bring up to date, suggestions and proposals for consideration by the Ad Hoc Committee;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render all assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the preparation of summary records of its meetings;

5. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit its report and to make every effort to submit a draft convention against the taking of hostages to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Drafting of an international convention against the taking of hostages."

Relations with the host country

Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country held three meetings in 1977. It retained the following list of topics provisionally adopted in 1972: security of missions and the safety of their personnel; comparative study of privileges and immunities; obligations of permanent missions to the United Nations and of individuals protected by diplomatic immunity; exemption from taxes levied by states other than New York; the possibility of establishing a commissary at United Nations Headquarters to assist diplomatic and Secretariat personnel; housing; transportation; insurance; the public relations of the United Nations community in the host city and the encouragement of the mass media to publicize the functions and status of permanent missions to the United Nations; education and health; identity documents; acceleration of customs procedures; entry visas issued by the host country; a study of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations; and consideration of and advice to the host country on issues arising from the implementation of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations (signed on 26 June 1947).

The Committee received communications containing complaints about incidents affecting the security and the safety of personnel from Democratic Yemen, France, Tunisia, the USSR and Yugoslavia. The incidents involved fire-bombings, thefts, armed attacks, demonstrations and assaults.

The Committee took a decision strongly condemning terrorist and other criminal acts in relation to any mission, its personnel and property.

Some Committee members, including Iraq, the USSR and Yugoslavia, drew attention to what they termed the persistent character of terrorist acts against missions. Yugoslavia said that the situation was clearly at variance with the applicable norms of international law, and Iraq held that terrorist acts would continue to occur in the future unless adequate preventive measures were taken by the host country. The United Kingdom, while stressing the gravity of armed attack, recalled that it was necessary to understand the difficulty of dealing with such incidents in a democratic society characterized by freedom of speech and association.

The host country—the United States—expressed deep regret over the incidents and stated that it would continue to make every effort to meet its responsibilities with respect to the protection of missions and their personnel. In addition, the United States recalled that it had frequently demonstrated earnestness in dealing with international terrorism.

Also, the Committee was informed by the United States of the prosecution of five members of the Jewish Defense League, who in 1976 had pleaded guilty to charges that included the firing of shots into the USSR residence at Riverdale. The five individuals in question received prison sentences of from three to six years, and in one case a suspended sentence.

The Committee adopted a decision by which it, inter alia: expressed concern over the various incidents; recalled the obligations of the host country to ensure secure conditions for all missions; strongly condemned the terrorist acts against the Mission of Yugoslavia and the other criminal and unlawful acts; and urged the host country to take all necessary measures to prosecute those responsible and called upon it to take urgently all the necessary measures to prevent similar incidents in the future.

The Committee also considered a report from the New York City Commission for the United Nations and for the Consular Corps on the question of the indebtedness of missions to the United Nations and of their personnel. From May 1974 to 1 June 1977 the debts reported to the Commission amounted to more than $803,000 of which some $551,000 had been collected, leaving a balance of about $252,000 of outstanding claims.

In a series of recommendations approved on 12 October 1977, the Committee noted the assurances given by the authorities of the host country concerning the security of missions and the safety of their personnel and it recognized the usefulness of the various measures taken to this end. It expressed deep concern over the serious acts of terrorism against missions to the United Nations and other criminal acts, including demonstrations, picketing, violence, threats, malicious harassment, attacks and insults against personnel of missions. The Committee, condemning such acts, urged the host country to take all necessary measures to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel, and to ensure normal conditions for the existence and functioning of all missions. The host country was urged to bring to justice and punish all those responsible for criminal acts and to prohibit illegal activities of organizations and persons that organized, instigated, encouraged or engaged in the perpetration of terrorist or other acts of violence against missions or their personnel.

The Committee further called on the missions to co-operate as fully as possible with the Federal and local United States authorities in cases affecting the security of those missions and their personnel. It expressed the hope that efforts would be continued to acquaint the citizens of New York City with diplomatic privileges and immunities and with the importance of the international functions performed by mission personnel, and called on all diplomats to respect the laws and regulations of the host country.

Noting that there had been difficulties concerning the unpaid bills of certain missions and individual diplomats, the Committee suggested that the Secretariat and others concerned work together to solve those difficulties.

The Committee also expressed its appreciation to the New York City Commission for the United Nations and for the Consular Corps and those bodies which contributed to its efforts to assist the diplomatic community, to provide hospitality and to promote mutual understanding between the diplomatic community and the local population.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country was considered at the 1977 session of the General Assembly by the Sixth (Legal) Committee. On 8 December 1977, the Assembly adopted a resolution, recommended by the Sixth Committee, by which it accepted the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country and decided that the Committee should continue its work.

The Assembly adopted this resolution (32/46) by consensus. The text, sponsored by Cyprus, was approved by the Sixth Committee on 30 November, also by consensus. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the debate in the Sixth Committee, Yugoslavia pointed out that the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country once again justified that body's existence as a useful forum for examination of various problems and for the adoption of helpful recommendations. The attack on its Mission had been considered a particularly serious incident and the apprehension and conviction of the perpetrators by the competent United States authorities showed that it was possible to take resolute action to protect missions and their personnel. Hoping that the sentences would be exemplary, Yugoslavia stressed that terrorist activity called not for comment but for urgent action to prohibit and prevent such activity.

In the view of the Byelorussian SSR, working conditions in New York City continued to be difficult and at times unsafe, as was apparent from the numerous cases of violence and hostile acts brought to the Committee's attention. It pointed out that, according to international law, the host country was completely responsible for the security and working conditions of missions and their personnel and deplored the acts of provocation against the Byelorussian Mission.

The USSR observed that the Committee on Relations with the Host Country had again had to deal with questions relating to the security of missions and the safety of their personnel, since numerous incidents involving terrorism, violence and other unlawful acts had occurred during the year. One of the reasons for the continual attacks on missions and their personnel, the USSR maintained, was the tolerant attitude of the host country to the activities of various organizations and the atmosphere of impunity in which the perpetrators of terrorist acts operated. It therefore called on the host country authorities to apply the legal rules adopted for the purpose of protecting foreign officials. The Ukrainian SSR expressed similar views.

In addition, the USSR expressed its concern about a bill before the United States Congress to adopt an act supplementing the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations which would, among other things, require confirmation of the right to diplomatic immunity by a competent court or administrative body on the basis of an application from the individual or mission in question.

Chile and Togo emphasized the need to ensure an atmosphere of complete normality in which the staff of missions could carry out their activities. Chile felt the authorities of the host country had made every effort to fulfil their obligations, and the short-comings reported had, in most cases, been a product of the climate of violence currently affecting mankind. The Federal Republic of Germany also believed that even the best security measures were often ineffective, as in a metropolis like New York isolated incidents were bound to occur.

France called attention to the principle of the inviolability of missions which, it said, should be observed, without it being necessary for the mission to bring formal charges or to have its personnel appear in court.

The United Kingdom expressed its sympathy with the victims of serious incidents during the year. It noted, however, that the host country could not guarantee absolute protection and was not so obliged under international law which only required that appropriate measures and precautions be taken, and that had been done. In addition, the United Kingdom stressed the obligation of all members of the diplomatic community to act with a certain modesty and self-criticism in view of their privileged status. Local laws should be respected and, in particular, unpaid bills should not be ignored.

Togo said it supported the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country, in particular the recommendation to intensify efforts to acquaint the population of New York with the privileges and immunities of the personnel of missions and the importance of the international functions performed by them. It also commented on the need to increase the number of parking spaces reserved for diplomats on the streets of New York.

The United States associated itself with the unreserved condemnation of all who attacked diplomatic premises. While it was prepared to accept the recommendations of the Committee, it felt the report tended to over-emphasize the security problem. The United States joined with others in condemning terrorism in any form or place. It would do its utmost to act on the recommendations, and the serious gaol sentences imposed in connexion with the incidents at the USSR Mission and the convictions of those responsible for the attack on the Yugoslav Mission testified to its determination. The people of the United States, however, would not restrict the right of free expression and assembly or the due process of law. The United States also noted that some of the recommendations of the Committee called for actions on the part of other Member States, such as full co-operation in the investigation and prosecution of cases affecting the security of their missions.

Resolution 32/46, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/32/406, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 97.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

1. Accepts the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 26 of its report;

2. Decides to continue the work of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971, with the purpose of examining on a more regular basis all matters falling within its terms of reference and requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee with all necessary assistance;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

Offences against the peace and security of mankind

By a letter dated 9 November 1977 addressed to the Secretary-General, Barbados, Fiji, Mexico,

Nigeria, Panama, the Philippines and the Syrian Arab Republic requested the inclusion in the agenda of the 1977 session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind." In the explanatory memorandum annexed to the request, reference was made to the draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind prepared by the International Law Commission in 1954, as well as an Assembly resolution of 11 December 1957,⁶ by which the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the question of the draft code of offences until such time as it agreed on a definition of aggression. Mention was also made of the definition of aggression adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1974.⁷

The memorandum went on to state that, in the light of those developments, it was appropriate and expedient that the Assembly take up consideration of a code of offences against the peace and security of mankind. It was pointed out that such a code would be a vital link in the series of legal instruments towards a measure of international legal order and security, so direly needed in the current state of world affairs.

After allocation by the General Assembly to the Sixth (Legal) Committee, that Committee, on 12 December 1977, agreed that, because of the lack of time, consideration of the item should be deferred until the thirty-third (1978) session of the General Assembly.

On 16 December 1977, by decision 32/441, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, decided, without taking a vote, that the item entitled "Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind" should be included in the provisional agenda of the thirty-third session.

Teaching and knowledge of international law

Activities under the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law were continued during 1977 in accordance with a General Assembly decision of 15 December 1975.⁸

Under the fellowship scheme jointly administered by the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), 19 fellowships were awarded to young Government officials and university teachers from the following countries and territories: Argentina, Bangladesh, Belize, Bhutan, the Comoros, Ecuador, Greece, the Ivory Coast, Mali, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Thailand, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago and Zaire.

The fellows attended courses of the Hague Academy of International Law and lectures and seminars organized by UNITAR at The Hague, Netherlands. About half of the fellows also received practical training at the legal departments of the United Nations and its associated agencies.

In 1977, one regional training and refresher course in international law was organized by UNITAR at Nassau, Bahamas, with participants from the Caribbean countries, nine of whom received travel grants from the United Nations.

The International Law Commission continued to sponsor the International Law Seminar at Geneva, Switzerland, during its annual session. Twenty advanced students and junior Government officials, each from a different country, attended the seminar. Because of the voluntary contributions from seven Governments, 13 participants received scholarships.

The second international symposium on international trade law, which had been scheduled for 1977, was rescheduled owing to lack of funds.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued to contribute to the Programme through assistance to institutions of higher education and non-governmental bodies and provision of fellowships to advanced students and young teachers. Further, UNESCO started a programme of publications relating to new challenges to international law.

Consideration by the General Assembly

In a report on the Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, the Secretary-General described its execution during 1976 and 1977 and proposed that it be continued in 1978 and 1979 along the same lines as in previous years. The Secretary-General's proposals were endorsed by the Advisory Committee on the Programme, which met in November 1977.

The Sixth (Legal) Committee considered the Secretary-General's report at the General Assembly's 1977 session.

On 16 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 32/146 on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 5 December, as proposed by Algeria, Austria, Bangladesh, Cyprus, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Mali, the Niger, Norway, Qatar, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey and the United Republic of Tanzania.

By this resolution, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to carry out in 1978 and 1979 the activities specified in his report, including the provision of a minimum of 15 fellowships each year, at the request of Governments of developing countries, and assistance in the form of travel grants for participants from developing countries; these activities were to be financed from the regular budget and also voluntary financial contributions.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General, UNESCO and UNITAR for their efforts to promote training and assistance in international law and it expressed its appreciation to the Governments of the Bahamas, Bangladesh and Qatar for providing host facilities for the regional training and refresher courses held in 1976 and 1977.

In addition, the Assembly: urged all Governments to encourage the inclusion of courses on international law in the programmes of legal studies at institutions of higher learning; requested the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme; reiterated its request to Member States, interested organizations and individuals to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme or to assist otherwise in its implementation and possible expansion; requested the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly at its 1979 session on the implementation of the Programme and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee, to submit recommendations for the subsequent years.

The General Assembly,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law and the recommendations made to the Secretary-General by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, which are contained in that report,

Considering that international law should occupy an appropriate place in the teaching of legal disciplines at all universities,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by States at the bilateral level to provide assistance in the teaching and study of international law,

Convinced, nevertheless, that States, international organizations and institutions should be encouraged to give further support to the Programme and to increase their activities to promote the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, in particular those activities which are of special benefit to persons from developing countries,

Recalling that, in the conduct of the Programme, it is desirable to use as far as possible the resources and facilities made available by Member States, international organizations and others,

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General to carry out in 1978 and 1979 the activities specified in his report, including the provision of:

(a) A minimum of fifteen fellowships in 1978 and 1979, at the request of Governments of developing countries,

(b) Assistance in the form of a travel grant for one participant from each developing country who will be invited to the regional courses to be organized in 1978 and 1979, to be financed from provisions in the regular budget and also voluntary financial contributions which would be received as a result of the requests set out in paragraphs 7 and 8 below;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his constructive efforts to promote training and assistance in international law within the framework of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law in 1976 and 1977;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for its participation in the Programme, in particular for the efforts made to support the teaching of international law;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for its participation in the Programme, particularly in the organization of regional meetings and in the conduct of the fellowship programme in international law sponsored jointly by the United Nations and the Institute;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the Bahamas, Bangladesh and Qatar for providing host facilities for the regional training and refresher courses held in 1976 and 1977;

6. Urges all Governments to encourage the inclusion of courses on international law in the programmes of legal studies offered at institutions of higher learning;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme and to invite periodically Member States, universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, as well as individuals, to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme or otherwise assisting in its implementation and possible expansion;

8. Reiterates its request to Member States and to interested organizations and individuals to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme and expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have made voluntary contributions for this purpose;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session on the implementation of the Programme during 1978 and 1979 and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, to submit recommendations regarding the execution of the Programme in subsequent years;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fourth session the item entitled "United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law."

Legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee continued in 1977 to work on three priority items: the preparation of a draft treaty relating to the moon; the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting; and the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space. Work was also continued on an item concerning the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities.

On 20 December 1977, the General Assembly unanimously adopted resolution 32/196, by which it noted with satisfaction the progress achieved by the Legal Sub-Committee and recommended that it should continue at its next session, as matters of high priority; its efforts to elaborate draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting; to give detailed consideration to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles; and to consider the draft treaty relating to the moon.

The Assembly also recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue to discuss questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities and also bear in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit.

By the same resolution, the Assembly invited States not yet parties to ratify or accede to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (Outer Space Treaty), the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space, the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects and the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space.

By another resolution (32/195), the Assembly noted the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the Outer Space Treaty and asked the Secretary-General to analyse the experience gained in the application of the Treaty.

Methods of fact-finding

By a resolution of 18 December 1967⁹ on the question of methods of fact-finding, the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to prepare a register of experts in legal and other fields whose services the States parties to a dispute might use by agreement for fact-finding in relation to the dispute, and requested Member States to nominate up to five of their nationals to be included in such a register.

In accordance with that resolution, the Secretary-General submitted a note dated 12 August 1977 indicating the changes and additions which Member States had expressed a desire to make in the register. The note supplemented registers previously submitted by the Secretary-General on 7 November 1969 and 18 November 1970.

United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations

The General Assembly included in the agenda of its 1977 session an item concerning two resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations, held at Vienna, Austria, in February and March 1975.¹⁰ The resolutions related to the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States and to the application of the Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character, adopted by the Conference, in future activities of international organizations. The item was allocated to the Sixth (Legal) Committee for consideration and report.

On 12 December 1977, the Sixth Committee decided to recommend to the General Assembly that, due to lack of time, consideration of the item be deferred until the Assembly's 1978 session. On 16 December, the Assembly, by decision 32/439, endorsed that recommendation without vote.

Questions relating to rules of procedure of United Nations organs

The Economic and Social Council, at its April/May 1977 session, considered a draft revised set of rules of procedure of its functional commissions in order that they conform to the revised rules of the Council. The draft was prepared by the Secretariat.

On 26 April 1977, the Council, having received the draft revised text of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions, adopted them without vote as orally revised at the meeting.

This action was taken by decision 216(LXII), which was approved, without objection, on a proposal by the Council President.

On 14 December 1977, the General Assembly decided to enlarge the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and increased its membership from 13 to 16 members. The Assembly also decided to amend the relevant rules of procedure of the General Assembly, namely rules 155, 156 and 157, with effect from 1 January 1978.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/103, which the Assembly adopted, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which had approved the text without objection on 13 December 1977, as proposed by Algeria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Ecuador, Egypt, Ghana, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Pakistan, Panama, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia. Oral drafting amendments by the United Kingdom and the Controller were accepted by the sponsors.

Administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

Administrative arrangements

The composition of the United Nations Secretariat

After considering the 1977 report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat, the General Assembly decided to urge him to intensify his efforts to attain the recruitment objectives it had set out in previous resolutions, within the framework of Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations,¹ and to provide the Assembly at its thirty-third (1978) session with full data on their implementation—particularly its resolution of 29 November 1976.² The Assembly also urged the Secretary-General to make greater efforts to appoint younger people to senior posts and recommended that the attention of the appointment and promotion bodies be drawn to the special need to appoint and promote qualified women, particularly at the more senior levels. Welcoming the establishment of a panel to investigate allegations of discriminatory treatment, the Assembly urged the Secretary-General to take measures to facilitate the task of its members.

Report of the Secretary-General

In his report to the Assembly, the Secretary-General provided information on the number of staff occupying posts subject to geographical distribution—by nationality, region and level—and the distribution of such staff at the senior level. It also gave the distribution of staff by age and occupation, and described the position of women in the Secretariat. Statistical tables contained in the report analysed the geographical distribution of staff on the basis of the new method of establishing the desirable range of representation for each Member State, adopted by the General Assembly in 1976.³

represented. In addition, 17 Member States were under-represented, 54 were within their desirable range and 52 were over-represented. An influential factor concerning these figures was the new method of establishing desirable ranges, as a result of which some Member States had become under-represented, while others which had been under-represented had come within their range.

The Secretary-General noted that the major problem of the Secretariat in seeking candidates from unrepresented and under-represented States was to identify those who were qualified in the occupation fields for which there were available posts. Discussions had been held with representatives of the most seriously under-represented States to review recruitment sources, types of posts for which suitable candidates might be found and the possibility of secondment of nationals of these States from their government service. In addition, recruitment missions had been sent to a number of countries to seek candidates, as well as to identify possible sources for the recruitment of women and young people.

By previous resolutions, the General Assembly had called for appropriate representation of all developing countries at the senior levels of the Secretariat.⁴ A statistical table giving the distribution of staff in senior posts was included in the report.

The report reviewed the question of increasing the proportion of young people in the Secretariat, and provided statistical data on the distribution of the staff by age and on the average age of staff.

It also included information on the number of staff who were about to retire and those whose appointments had been extended beyond the retirement age of 60 years. In view of the qualifications and experience required of candidates, the report stated that only posts for which little experience was necessary could be filled with recruits below the age of 30. The report also stated that, in order to provide greater opportunities for outside recruitment as a means to improve the age distribution as well as the geographical distribution of the Secretariat, the Secretary-General would review policy guidelines with respect to retaining staff in active service beyond the age of 60.

In connexion with the employment of women, the report addressed itself to two questions: recruitment and conditions of service. The Secretariat had continued to encourage Member States to put forward women candidates but, out of 387 candidates recommended by Member States during the year ending 30 June 1977, only 41 were women. In order to expand this number, other means were being explored to identify women candidates. Tables included in the report showed that the number of women in the Professional category and above had risen from 698 to 752 between 30 June 1976 and 30 June 1977. Women accounted for 20.9 per cent of these staff in 1977 as compared with 19.9 per cent in 1976.

As for conditions of service, the report noted that the Secretary-General, pursuant to the Assembly's resolution of 29 November 1976, had established a panel to investigate allegations of discriminatory treatment. He had also directed departments to report annually on efforts to establish conditions of equality and an equitable balance between men and women, and required particular attention to be paid, in the annual review of promotion, to the selection of female staff members who were qualified for promotion as well as to their assignment to positions of greater responsibility.

During discussion of the item on the composition of the Secretariat in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, a number of representatives, including those of Chad, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Japan, Spain, the USSR and Venezuela, expressed dissatisfaction at the number of Member States that were still unrepresented or under-represented. Several of these countries, as well as the Bahamas, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, among others, commented upon specific cases of inadequate representation, in particular their own.

Afghanistan called attention to the urgent need to bridge the gap between over-represented and under-represented countries, and added that, as long as Member States continued to exert pressure on the Secretariat to recruit their nationals, full equitable geographical distribution could not be expected to be attained.

The representatives of Japan and New Zealand, among others, observed that no recruitment missions had been sent to many unrepresented or under-represented Member States. On the other hand, Australia and India pointed out that missions had been sent to several States which were not under-represented. Afghanistan, Greece and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stressed that priority in the sending of recruitment missions should be attached to unrepresented and under-represented States. The Byelorussian SSR, which supported this view, noted that many nationals of over-represented States held permanent contracts. The Ukrainian SSR said that permanent contracts should be abolished, and the USSR suggested that recruitment of Professionals from over-represented countries should be halted.

The Ukrainian SSR was particularly concerned by the constant, automatic increases in staff, which, it said, led to a reduction of the individual's workload and discouraged efforts to improve managerial techniques or increase responsibilities.

A number of delegations, including Barbados, Ghana and Trinidad and Tobago, pointed out that minimal progress had been made in increasing the number of staff from developing countries in senior and policy-making posts. Algeria and the USSR observed that some high-level posts seemed to be reserved for nationals from a certain category of countries; Algeria said that since those posts were of vital importance to developing countries, it was essential to observe the principle of rotation. Algeria and Mongolia were also among those which considered that the Secretariat should seek the consent of Governments regarding the recruitment of staff members.

The United States said that while the Committee in previous decisions had paid lip-service to the standards of efficiency, competence and integrity referred to in Article 101 of the Charter, it had tended to over-emphasize the element of geographical distribution; the issue was not national quotas but the quality and ability of the Secretariat.

The Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the United States felt that rotation of Professional staff between offices and departments, as well as between Headquarters and the field, would enlarge the experience of the staff and enhance efficiency and morale.

The need to attract younger people to the service of the Organization was reaffirmed by many Members, including Ghana, Japan, Nepal, Portugal and Venezuela. Barbados, Chad, Colombia and India found that little progress had been made in lowering the average age of the staff. Australia said that efforts to attain this objective depended on the willingness of the Secretariat to appoint to senior posts relatively young people who had demonstrated, through formal training and experience, that they were able to occupy responsible positions.

The difficulties encountered in increasing the proportion of young people in the Secretariat were linked by Colombia, Ghana, India, Japan, Trinidad and Tobago, and others with the practice of retaining staff members who were above the retirement age of 60. This group, as well as Mongolia, Poland, the USSR and Venezuela, was in favour of a stricter enforcement of the rule relating to retirement. Pakistan and the Philippines, on the other hand, held that the Secretary-General should be allowed flexibility in the exercise of his authority in this respect.

The representative of the Secretary-General stated that the Secretariat was facing real difficulties with respect to increasing the number of women in the staff, particularly at the senior levels. Not only were most candidates recommended by Member States men, but most women candidates known to the United Nations were qualified chiefly in social sciences and information work, fields for which there were fewer vacancies than in the administrative, economic and language fields. The assistance of Member States was urgently needed in identifying women candidates for all occupations in the Secretariat.

The representative of Austria pointed out that responsibility for putting forward women candidates did not lie with States alone; indeed the ultimate responsibility for improvements lay with the Secretary-General. Along with Sweden, Austria and others suggested means to obtain better results in the recruitment of women, including the use of contacts developed by Secretariat units with institutions, universities and other organizations and the possible provision of day-care centres for children of staff members.

Austria had serious doubts that it would be possible to comply with Assembly resolutions setting 1980 as the target date for the achievement of an equitable balance between men and women in the Secretariat. If the rate of progress continued to be below 1 per cent a year, it would take another 30 years to attain that goal. Similar views were expressed by others, including Barbados and New Zealand. Pakistan, on the other hand, believed that the difficulties with respect to the increase in the number of women in the Secretariat referred to by the representative of the Secretary-General were indeed genuine, and that the solution to the problem might not be as simple as it appeared. Among those believing that some progress had been achieved were the Byelorussian SSR and Portugal.

The need to continue efforts to establish an equitable balance between men and women in the Secretariat was reaffirmed by many Members. Afghanistan, Ghana, Japan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, the USSR and others stressed that this objective should be attained within the principle of equitable geographical distribution. The view that priority in recruitment should be given to women from unrepresented or under-represented Member States was put forward by Mongolia, while Colombia, India and Venezuela believed that women from developing countries should also be given preference.

Following the debate, two draft resolutions were placed before the Fifth Committee, both of which were approved by consensus by the Committee and adopted by consensus by the Assembly on 11 November 1977.

The first one was sponsored by Ghana, India, Japan, Kenya and Trinidad and Tobago. Their text, as revised, incorporated or took account of oral amendments proposed by Iraq, by Panama and by Sweden.

By this text, adopted as resolution 32/17 A, the Assembly expressed the view that the Secretary-General's report did not entirely meet the requirements of previous directives, and noted his assurances that he would provide in 1978 a full report on the implementation of the Assembly's 1976 resolutions on the composition of the Secretariat and on personnel policy reforms.⁵ It urged him to intensify his efforts to implement those directives as well as previous decisions on the employment of women and on recruitment of nationals of developing and under-represented countries. It also requested him to provide full data, including comparative numerical data, on the implementation of previous resolutions, taking into account the views and suggestions expressed in the current debate. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

An oral amendment by New Zealand requesting information also on the results of recruitment missions was withdrawn and the Fifth Committee approved the text by consensus on 12 October.

The United Kingdom and the United States stated that they could not participate in the consensus on the grounds that the resolution referred to previous resolutions in which promotions within the Secretariat were linked to geographical distribution.

Although the Bahamas and Barbados joined in the consensus, they said they felt the resolution was not sufficiently detailed.

A second draft resolution was submitted by these two Members and Nigeria. The text was twice revised by the sponsors, to take into account the comments of a number of Members, and further amended to incorporate an oral proposal by Ghana to add—to a provision urging greater efforts to appoint young people to senior posts—that such efforts be made in the context of the Assembly's 1976 resolution on the composition of the Secretariat (31/26).⁶ The text was then approved by consensus by the Fifth Committee on 19 October 1977.

Adopted as resolution 32/17 B, the text expressed the Assembly's belief that greater efforts could be made to recruit younger persons; the Secretary-General was asked to make greater efforts, in the context of Assembly resolution 31/26, to appoint to senior posts, through recruitment and promotion, younger people of outstanding ability and demonstrable potential, and to report separately on the recruitment of staff below 27 years of age in future reports.

The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General: to report in detail on all recruiting missions during the coming year and thereafter annually; to submit an analysis of the ages of staff on appointment and on promotion in each Professional grade and above over the past two 10-year periods, in order to formulate policy guidelines in this area; and to submit a breakdown of staff by grade and sex at the divisional level, including information on departmental efforts to establish conditions of equality and balance between men and women staff members.

The Assembly recommended that the Secretary-General draw the attention of the appointment and promotion bodies to the need to appoint, in the context of equitable geographical distribution, and promote qualified women, particularly at the senior levels. It welcomed the establishment of the panel to investigate allegations of discriminatory treatment, urged that its members be given the necessary time and facilities, and asked the Secretary-General to include an account of the panel's work in his annual report on personnel questions.

Mexico said it had not opposed the resolution because of the consensus within the Committee but considered that a number of the studies proposed were excessive in scope or even unrealistic. The Byelorussian SSR said it had certain difficulties with respect to the broad terms of references given to the panel, whose membership it did not consider representative of the Secretariat staff.

The United Kingdom and the United States said they regretted that they had been unable to join the consensus, owing to references to Assembly resolution 31/26, some provisions of which they disapproved.

The sponsors considered that the United Kingdom and United States statements that they had not participated in the consensus were unconstitutional; they should rather have said they would have abstained if there had been a vote.

A draft decision submitted by Nepal proposed to ask the Secretary-General to ascertain and report on the views of the Secretariat staff on how to intensify their efforts to contribute to the attainment of the aims and objectives of the Charter, particularly the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of social and economic development of the developing countries, and on how staff morale could be improved to this end. The draft was withdrawn, but the text was to be included in the Fifth Committee's report to the Assembly.

Amendments to the Staff Rules

On 11 November 1977, the Assembly adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decision 32/405, by which it took note of the amendments made by the Secretary-General to the Staff Rules of the United Nations during the period from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977. The changes were made in consequence of an Assembly resolution of 17 December 1976,⁷ by which the Assembly amended the Staff Regulations with respect to the United Nations salary system, necessitating consequential changes in the Staff Rules. The decision had been approved without objection by the Fifth Committee on 28 September 1977.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the composition of the Secretariat, in particular resolution 31/26 of 29 November 1976,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat,

Noting that little progress has so far been achieved in respect of the implementation of resolution 31/26,

Reaffirming that the paramount consideration in the employment of staff at every level is the necessity for the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, and convinced that this is compatible with the principles of equitable geographical distribution,

Noting with satisfaction the indication in the Secretary-General's bulletin of 8 March 1977 that particular attention will be paid, in the annual promotion review, to the selection of female staff members who are qualified for promotion or for assignment to positions of greater responsibility,

Believing that greater efforts can be made to recruit younger persons to the Secretariat in order to reduce the average age of appointment at the base Professional grade, in a manner compatible with the requirements of geographical distribution,

Welcoming the establishment of the panel to investigate allegations of discriminatory treatment and to recommend appropriate action in accordance with paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 31/26,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to report separately on the recruitment of young people below twenty-seven years of age in future reports on the composition of the Secretariat;

2. Urges the Secretary-General to make greater efforts, in the context of General Assembly resolution 31/26, to appoint to senior posts, both through recruitment and promotion, younger people of outstanding ability and demonstrable potential;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report on all recruiting missions undertaken from now until the thirty-third session of the General Assembly, giving details of each mission, including publicity, groups contacted, meetings held, the number interviewed by age and sex, the number of candidates added to the roster and the number of candidates appointed, and thereafter to report on this matter annually;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session an analysis of the ages of staff on appointment and on promotion in each of the Professional grades and above over the past twenty years, separately for each of the ten-year periods 1959-1968 and 1969-1978, in order to evaluate and to formulate such policy guidelines as may be necessary in this area;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a breakdown of staff composition by grade and sex at the divisional level within departments and to include information on efforts made within each department to establish conditions of equality and an equitable balance between men and women staff members;

6. Recommends that the Secretary-General should draw the attention of the appointment and promotion bodies to the special need to appoint, in the context of equitable geographical distribution, and promote qualified women, particularly at the more senior levels;

7. Urges the Secretary-General, in order to enable the members of the panel established to investigate allegations of discriminatory treatment to discharge their duties with the utmost confidentiality and expedition, to make the maximum time necessary available to them without prejudice to their other functions and to make the necessary facilities available, including direct access to files necessary to the execution of their task, with the proper safeguards;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in his annual report on personnel questions, to include an account of the work of the panel, including the number and categories of cases dealt with, whether they were satisfactorily resolved and the main problems encountered.

The United Nations salary system

Report of International Civil Service Commission

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) submitted its annual report to the General Assembly at its 1977 session, the third such report since the establishment of the Commission in 1974. The report was also submitted to the governing organs of the other organizations participating in ICSCs work, and to staff representatives.

The report covered the work of ICSC during its two sessions in 1977: the fifth, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 22 February to 11 March; and the sixth, held at the headquarters of the International Atomic Energy Agency at Vienna, Austria, from 16 August to 2 September. In addition, a working party composed of the Chairman, the Vice-Chairman and four members of the Commission met at Geneva, Switzerland, from 16 to 20 May in connexion with a survey of General Service salaries there. Also, the Commission's Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions (ACPAQ) held its second session from 13 to 19 July at the headquarters of the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal, Canada.

The report reflected the fact that the major part of the Commission's activity in 1977 was devoted to the beginning of its study of the conditions of service of the General Service category and, in particular, to the survey of local employment conditions which it carried out in Geneva in response to an Assembly request of 22 December 1976.⁸

The report of the Commission on that survey, including the recommendation regarding the salary scale for the General Service category in Geneva, was presented separately to the executive heads of the seven organizations having their headquarters or major offices there, and reproduced in the annual report, together with the salary scales recommended by the Commission.

Other sections of the report contained information on the Commission's continuing study of a number of subjects, dealt with either in the course of the Commission's progressive assumption of the full range of functions entrusted to it by its statute or in response to an Assembly resolution of 17 December 1976.⁹ On most of these matters, ICSC indicated that it expected to submit recommendations to the General Assembly at its regular 1978 session. Only one recommendation calling for Assembly action was submitted at the 1977 session: that relating to a change in the post adjustment system¹⁰ (see below).

The Commission continued to keep under review the relationship between the level of remuneration of the comparator national civil service (currently the United States Federal Civil Service) and that of the United Nations common system, in particular with respect to any divergencies which might result from the operation of the post adjustment system. Also, in order to carry out a comparison of total compensation between the comparator civil service and the United Nations salary system at all levels, the Commission had initiated a study of the methodology for evaluating "total compensation" (i.e. all financial benefits provided by the employer to employees), combined with a study on the comparison of the value of United Nations pension benefits with those of the comparator country's civil servants. Another study in progress concerned grade equivalencies between the comparator civil service and the United Nations system. The Commission expected to report on these studies at the Assembly's 1978 regular session. In the meantime, the comparison would continue to be made on the basis of net remuneration and of the grade equivalencies adopted by the Commission for the purposes of the 1975-1976 review.¹¹

The Commission gave priority to a 1976 request of the General Assembly¹² that the Commission report to it on the feasibility of establishing a modified system of post adjustments. It studied the possibility that the application of the post adjustment system might lead to excessive divergencies in the ratio between the remuneration paid by the United Nations and that paid by the comparator country, and particularly to an excessively wide margin if the increases in the post adjustment for New York, based on the movement of the cost-of-living index, exceeded the level of increments granted practically every year to the comparator country's civil servants.

The Commission's subsidiary body, ACPAQ, noted that, since the majority of the Commission's members had agreed in 1976 that it would not be appropriate to define a precise optimum margin, any modification in the post adjustment system which might be recommended need not be designed to maintain a rigid margin. It noted further that over a period of years—with the exception of the years of high inflation, 1973-1975—the annual increases in salaries of the comparator civil service had equalled or exceeded the rise in the cost of living. Thus the risk of a major widening of the margin as a result of the application of the post adjustment system seemed rather remote. In the circumstances, it did not appear essential to introduce major modifications.

When the Commission considered the report of ACPAQ, the representatives of the executive heads and of the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA) recognized the need to keep the margin under review but emphasized that attention should be given to undue narrowing as well as to undue widening of the margin. The Commission recognized that it would be possible for the margin to narrow (if, for example, the comparator civil service salaries were increased by an amount greater than the increase in the cost of living) but observed that in that case a correction, if deemed justified, could be made only by means of a revision of the base salary scale, which was within the sole competence of the General Assembly. An undue widening of the margin, on the other hand, might be corrected through the post adjustment system.

¹¹ See Y.U.N., 1976, pp. 855-59, text of resolution 31/141 B of 17 December 1976, esp. part II.

In conclusion, the Commission recalled that it had been requested by the Assembly in 1976 to keep under continual review the relationship between the level of remuneration of the comparator civil service and that of the United Nations system, and to take such urgent corrective action as it might deem necessary or to recommend action to the Assembly. The Commission was of the opinion that it already had the necessary authority and means to deal with any divergency which might appear and that no additional measures were required of the Assembly.

In continuation of its study of possible further reforms in the salary system, the Commission had requested ACPAQ to submit a full report in 1977 on the implications of basing changes in classes (the bases for cost-of-living adjustments at different duty stations) of post adjustment on index movements of 5 per cent in relation to the preceding class, rather than, as currently, on movements of five points in relation to the base 100 (currently New York, November 1973). Such a change had been recommended by the Special Committee for the Review of the United Nations Salary System, whose report had been referred to the Commission by the General Assembly.¹³ The Commission, in its 1976 report, had stated the opinion that the proposal offered definite advantages, particularly in reducing the frequency of changes of class at high index levels.

In its report, ACPAQ warned against the spiraling feature of the existing system of post adjustments under which the higher the class, the smaller the percentage movement in the cost of living required to trigger a change of class. Changes in class occurred with increasing frequency as the level rose. For some duty stations, the very high classes of post adjustment produced by the existing system had led to distortions in the functioning of the system. Moreover, the frequency of changes of class had given rise to the further criticism that the post adjustment system was excessively sensitive in compensating for cost-of-living increases. Finally, the proposed new

5 per cent rule would facilitate control over the evolution of the margin between United Nations remuneration and that of the comparator country.

Opposition to the 5 per cent method was stated by FICSA before both ACPAQ and the Commission; FICSA considered that the new system would introduce an extension of the waiting period in qualifying for a new class and that the differential treatment imposed on staff at different duty stations would be disadvantageous to those in high post adjustment areas.

The Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions, the subsidiary body of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) which considered the matter, agreed with ACPAQ that the change was feasible but believed that any basic change in the post adjustment system should be considered with caution; it concluded that it would be preferable to retain the existing method.

The Commission observed that the main argument in favour of the change to the 5 per cent method was not the slight economy it might produce but the effect it would have of ensuring that an equal amount of movement in the cost of living would be required to produce a change of class at all levels of post adjustment. Consequently, it recommended that the General Assembly should: decide that, with effect from 1 July 1978, the system of post adjustments be revised to provide that changes in classes of post adjustment be based on index movements of 5 per cent rather than of five points; amend the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, with effect from the same date, replacing the existing schedule with new tables (reproduced below) showing the amount of post adjustment for one index point at each grade and step (the amount being identical with those currently in force) [the amount of post adjustment for a new class consisting, for example, of five points would be five times those amounts, for a class of six points, six times those amounts, and so on]; and authorize the Commission to take all necessary measures to implement the change.

The Commission also conducted a survey of the conditions of service in the General Service category at Geneva, as requested by the Assembly in 1976,¹⁴ with a view to recommending salary scales in the light of the best prevailing local conditions of employment, including conditions of service other than remuneration. The Commission took cognizance of the views of the executive heads and representatives of staff concerned at all stages of its work, from the establishment of the principle, methodology and plan of operation for the conduct of the survey to the consideration of the data collected. It also took into account various comments and recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit.¹⁵

The salary scale recommended by the Commission involved an average reduction of 17 per cent compared with the existing scale. It was the Commission's expectation that appropriate transitional arrangements would be worked out for the new scale to come into force from 1 January 1978.

The representatives of the staff stated the conviction that the method used for the survey was not valid; it suffered from limitations that vitiated the quality of its data. In particular—as they had declared before the Commission's working party established to take cognizance of the views of representatives of the executive heads and of the staff at Geneva—they did not accept the method of survey (pre-selection of a sample of presumed best employers), considering it to be less valid than the method of sample survey, and took issue with how the data were applied.

Inasmuch as it had been obliged to give priority to the specific task of carrying out a survey and recommending salary scales for a particular duty station—Geneva—the Commission was able to make only a preliminary study of the general question of conditions of service of the General Service category, the broad principle determining those conditions on which ICSC was to make recommendations, and the methodology for the application of that principle. It decided therefore that it would reach its final conclusions on the general issues involved in the light of the experience it would acquire in conducting surveys in a number of headquarters' duty stations.

When the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee of the General Assembly considered the report of ICSC at the Assembly's 1977 session, it had before it: notes by the Secretary-General transmitting the comments of ACC; a statement on the ICSC report by the United Nations Staff Council at Geneva, which also reflected the views of the staff councils and committees of the other Geneva-based organizations participating in the United Nations common system of salaries, allowances and benefits; and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

Regarding the recommended change in index-movement base for post adjustment classification, ACC criticized the change proposed, first, on the ground that the new system would be more difficult to understand and more complicated to operate than the current system, and that the task of making the post adjustment work under conditions of floating currencies and varying rates of inflation would become more exacting. Moreover, because the new rule would slow down the response of the post adjustment system to changes in the cost of living, it would have the same effect on the adjustment of those pensions in payment which were governed by the movement of the weighted average of post adjustments. Since the system of adjusting pensions after award was currently under study (see sub-chapter below), it would seem inopportune to introduce a change which would adversely affect that system before the study was completed and acted upon by the General Assembly.

As for ACABQ, it noted that, should the Assembly approve the Commission's recommendation, the impact on the programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979 would not be significant enough to call for the revision of estimates under individual sections; ACABQ expressed its intention, however, to monitor the question in 1978 and 1979 in the light of developments in the course of the biennium.

With respect to the General Service staff at Geneva, ACABQ noted the basic agreement reached by the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the Geneva-based agencies regarding the introduction of the new salary scale, the implementation procedures outlined and the amount of savings which would result provided that arrangements were strictly adhered to. The United Nations Staff Council at Geneva, however, denounced the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission, criticizing its methodology and citing the International Labour Organisation's Recommendations on collective bargaining.

The ICSC Chairman introduced the Commission's report to the Fifth Committee on 22 November 1977. At a meeting later that day, the Secretary-General outlined, in a statement before the Committee, the implementation procedures agreed among the executive heads: staff would be placed on the new scale on 1 January 1978; staff would be given full protection with respect to attained levels of net remuneration through a personal transitional allowance, which would also safeguard their attained levels of pensionable remuneration; staff would be eligible to receive annual step increments, and increases through promotion, based on the new scale; once on the scale, any increase for cost-of-living adjustments would be subject to a corresponding reduction in the personal transitional allowance; the arrangement would remain in effect for a limited period, subject to review by the executive heads; and a new survey was to be initiated in 1979 for presentation in 1980.

Discussion was adjourned while ACABQ examined the budgetary implications and an open-ended ad hoc working group especially appointed by the Fifth Committee met to give preliminary consideration to the ICSC report. The debate was resumed in the Fifth Committee on 5 December.

Those Members—among them Belgium, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, the Philippines, Spain, the USSR and the United Kingdom—which made specific references to the new post adjustment formula supported the proposal.

With respect to the General Service staff at Geneva, the same Members, as well as Argentina, the Federal Republic of Germany, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United States, accepted the Commission's survey and its findings and rejected the staff's criticisms. Most of these Members accepted the implementation measures announced by the Secretary-General, but some—including Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the United States—expressed disappointment that the full implementation of the new scale would be spread over so many years and regretted the financial burden for Member States of paying transitional allowances to maintain a level of payment which had been determined to be excessive.

The USSR said it had doubts about the legality of the measures proposed by the Secretary-General, who had no right to introduce transitional allowances, since decisions with regard to allowances and benefits of staff members should be made only by the Assembly on the recommendation of ICSC.

A three-part draft resolution presented by Ghana, the Chairman of the ad hoc working group, was sponsored by 30 Member States from all regional groups except Eastern Europe.

An oral drafting amendment proposed by the Philippines was accepted by the sponsors; a second amendment was not and was withdrawn.

The Ukrainian SSR presented an amendment which would have deducted payments resulting from within-grade increments and promotions from the proposed personal transitional allowances, invoking both budgetary and legal considerations. The amendment was withdrawn after the sponsors announced that they could not accept it, mainly because it would disrupt the equilibrium of the compromise solution worked out by the Secretary-General with the other executive heads. The sponsor of the amendment announced that it would thus be unable to vote in favour of the draft resolution.

The draft resolution was approved by the Fifth Committee on 9 December 1977 by 81 votes to 8.

The text was adopted on 21 December by the General Assembly by a vote of 125 to 9, and became resolution 32/200.

By the provisions of section I, the General Assembly noted the assurance given by ICSC that it would keep under review the levels of remuneration of the comparator national civil service and of the United Nations common system—in particular with respect to any divergencies which might result from the operation of the post adjustment system—and requested the Commission to report on such review at the Assembly's 1978 regular session. The review was to include in particular the feasibility of establishing a modified system of post adjustments, and ICSC was to report on steps taken to bring about corrective action either under its own authority or by submitting a recommendation to the Assembly.

By section II, the Assembly approved, with effect from 1 July 1978, the system of post adjustments recommended by the Commission, i.e. changes in class of post adjustment were to be based on index movements of 5 per cent rather than of five points.

By section III, the Assembly noted with appreciation the report on the action taken by ICSC with respect to the salaries of the staff in the General Service category at Geneva, and the statement by the Secretary-General on the basic agreement reached by him and the executive heads of the Geneva-based agencies, as well as his intention to implement the decision; the Assembly invited the executive heads of all the other Geneva-based organizations to follow the same implementation procedure. The Assembly noted the Commission's intention to advance the date of its next survey and report on General Service salaries at Geneva so as to make the results available during 1980. It asked the Secretary-General to make maximum efforts to cover the cost of the transitional payments by savings in the implementation of the United Nations budget for 1978-1979 (at least 20 per cent of such payments were to be financed by savings), and to confine the recruitment of staff in the General Service category at Geneva to priority areas, keeping ACABQ informed of the situation there.

By another resolution (32/201) adopted on 21 December 1977, which related inter alia to salaries at Geneva, the Assembly recalled that, by a resolution of 22 December 1976 relating to salaries and conditions of service for Secretariat members,¹⁶ it had decided that all financial implications of a decision to raise salaries at Geneva should be covered by savings in the implementation of the 1976-1977 budget, including reductions in General Service posts; it had also asked the Secretary-General to report to it in 1977 on any reduction made. Noting with deep concern that those provisions had not been implemented, the Assembly urged the Secretary-General to ensure such implementation in the preparation of the proposed budget for 1980-1981 and the performance report on the 1978-1979 budget. (For details, see p. 1009.)

Agreement between the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development

When the General Assembly discussed the draft Agreement between the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), by which IFAD was to be brought into relationship with the Organization as a specialized agency, it adopted on 13 December 1977 a resolution (32/102) bearing on co-operation between IFAD and ICSC.

Bearing in mind the principle contained in the statute of ICSC which aimed at developing a single, unified international civil service through common personnel standards, methods and arrangements, the Assembly invited IFAD, when constituted, to participate in the United Nations common system for the regulation and co-ordination of the conditions of employment of staff and, in particular, to accept the ICSC statute. (For details, see p. 787.)

Compensation for full-time ICSC Commissioners

In accordance with a decision taken by the General Assembly in 1974 endorsing administrative and budgetary arrangements for the International Civil Service Commission¹⁷ the remuneration paid to the two full-time officers of the Commission, i.e. its Chairman and Vice-Chairman, was to be a fixed amount to which the post adjustment system did not apply and which was therefore to be reviewed by the Assembly at appropriate intervals.

On the proposal of ICSC, endorsed by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, the Secretary-General in his projected budget proposals for 1978-1979 provided for an increase of $9,000 in the amount of the officers' honoraria established in 1974, to $54,000 per annum as from 1 January 1978. That proposal was favourably commented upon by ACABQ and accepted by the Fifth Committee.

On 17 December 1977, the United States introduced, and the Fifth Committee approved by consensus, a draft decision by which the Committee recommended that the General Assembly consider the Secretary-General's proposals and ACABQ's comments on a priority basis at its 1978 regular session, without prejudice to the possibility of retroactive action on these proposals. The Secretary-General was also to be asked to prepare, in the context of a comprehensive study of honoraria (see p. 1061), a study of the conditions of service and compensation appropriate for those officers serving the General Assembly, other than Secretariat officials, whose terms and conditions of selection, duties and responsibilities precluded active engagement by governmental, intergovernmental and other specified entities.

The United States text took into account, or included, oral amendments proposed by Ghana, by Japan, by Turkey and by the United Republic of Cameroon.

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted the Fifth Committee's recommendation without a vote, incorporating it as section XI of its 11-part resolution 32/212.

1. Decides to consider on a priority basis at its thirty-third session the proposals of the Secretary-General with regard to compensation for the two full-time Commissioners of the International Civil Service Commission and the relevant comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions without prejudice to the possibility of retroactive action on these proposals;

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

In 1977, 12 organizations were members of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund. They were: the United Nations (including the Registry of the International Court of Justice); the International Atomic Energy Agency; the International Labour Organisation; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; the World Health Organization; the International Civil Aviation Organization; the International Telecommunication Union; the World Meteorological Organization; the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization; the World Intellectual Property Organization; and the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization.

During the year ending 31 December 1977, the number of participants in the Fund increased from 42,917 to 43,176.

The principal of the Fund increased during the year from $1,243,267,659 to $1,409,091,888. The income of the Fund from interest and dividends during the year, less investment management costs, was $63,476,000.

As at 31 December 1977, 4,071 retirement benefits, 3,630 early and deferred retirement benefits, 1,405 widow's and widower's benefits, 278 disability benefits, 2,654 children's benefits, and 29 secondary dependant's benefits were in payment by the Fund.

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board held its twenty-third session at Nairobi, Kenya, under the auspices of the United Nations Environment Programme, from 18 to 29 July 1977. Its subsequent report to the General Assembly contained: the audited accounts of the Fund for the year ended 31 December 1976, together with the report of the Board of Auditors on the annual audit of the Fund; a summary of the Fund's investments as at that date; various statistical tables reflecting the operation of the Fund during the year; and recommendations to the Assembly with respect to the future operation of the Emergency Fund, the administrative expenses for 1978 (including supplementary expenses for 1977), admission of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) as a member organization of the Pension Fund, concurrence in a proposed agreement for the transfer of pension rights between the Fund and the Commission of the European Communities, and continuation of temporary measures applicable to current pensioners.

The report gave an account, at the same time, of decisions taken or recommendations made by the Board within its own authority under the regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, including those relating to the annual review of the Fund's investment position and investment policy, the results of the actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1976, the implementation of an Assembly decision of 22 December 1976¹⁸ on temporary measures for the relief of existing pensioners in respect of loss of purchasing power of their pensions, voluntary deposits, the maximum length of contributory service, and the further study being given to the question of pension adjustment pending submission of new proposals to the regular 1978 session of the Assembly.

Finally, the report annexed a draft resolution for adoption by the Assembly containing provisions relating to: (i) approval of the administrative expenses of the Fund; (ii) continuation of the Emergency Fund; (iii) admission of IFAD to membership; (iv) transfer of pension rights between the Commission of the European Communities and the Fund; and (v) further implementation of temporary measures applicable to existing pensioners.

The Joint Staff Pension Board's proposed text was subsequently modified to incorporate a recommendation of the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) to decrease the administrative expenses for 1978 by $9,800, and to concur with ACABQ's comments and recommendations on those expenses as detailed in its report.

With the amendments recommended by ACABQ and after discussion of the pension system in the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the text emerged as a draft resolution with five operative parts corresponding to those recommended by the Board in its draft text.

The Fifth Committee approved the modified text as a whole by consensus on 25 November 1977; on 5 December, it further amended the section relating to administrative expenses.

The Assembly approved the resolution as a whole without vote on 9 December 1977 as its resolution 32/74. (For details, see sections below; for texts of preamble and sections I to V of resolution 32/74, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A two-part draft resolution on Fund investments in transnational corporations and in developing countries was also approved by the Fifth Committee and adopted by the Assembly on 9 December 1977 as resolutions 32/73 A and B. The Assembly also took note of reports on the implications of extending Pension Fund coverage to certain former staff members of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). (For details, see sections below.)

Annual report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board

Extension of temporary adjustment measures

In accordance with a 1976 decision of the General Assembly¹⁹ to authorize supplementary adjustment payments during 1977—in a total amount not to exceed $500,000, under certain prescribed conditions—to compensate pensioners whose pensions in their country of residence had declined in purchasing power to a significant extent, the Board gave details in its report of the criteria established in order to determine those qualified to receive the supplements, as well as of the payments being made. However, in the light of problems which had arisen in establishing the entitlements, in particular with respect to pensioners who had opted for the system of weighted average of post adjustments and those in receipt of "flat-rate" benefits, the Board reported that completion by the end of 1977 of all payments authorized under the resolution would not be possible. It thus proposed that outstanding payments should be continued in 1978, and that any balance remaining after completion of these payments should be utilized to make additional payments, pro rata, in respect of similar losses during that year.

The Fifth Committee approved the Board's recommendation, including it as section V of the draft resolution it approved on 25 November and submitted to the Assembly for adoption. The Assembly adopted the resolution as a whole on 9 December as resolution 32/74.

Emergency Fund

The Board reported that it believed that the Emergency Fund, established in 1973 for the purpose of alleviating individual hardship among pensioners, continued to be justified even though the total amount disbursed had been relatively small, and recommended that its authorization to supplement voluntary contributions to the Fund, up to an annual amount of $100,000, should be continued for a further one-year period. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions concurred in the Board's recommendation. The Fifth Committee raised no objection and forwarded the recommendation as embodied in a section of the draft resolution it approved on 25 November; the Assembly adopted it as section II of its resolution 32/74.

(For text of section II of resolution 32/74, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Administrative expenses

The Joint Staff Pension Board, in its report, estimated administrative expenses (including those chargeable to investments) at $3,373,200 (net) for 1978 and supplementary expenses at $49,800 (net) for 1977. These were expenses for the administration of the Fund which, under its Regulations, are a charge on the Fund itself and require approval by the General Assembly. The Board's recommendation for approval of its estimates was embodied in section I of the draft resolution which it submitted to the Assembly for adoption.

The Board also recommended the incorporation of certain posts currently financed under temporary assistance into the regular establishment, which, however, would not increase the expenses of the Fund.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions observed that the estimates for 1978 showed an increase over the two preceding years, in part due to the proposed establishment of one Professional and three General Service posts, and in part to certain reclassifications proposed in both of these categories. On the understanding that the introduction of a new mechanization process which had prompted the increases should at the same time result in staff economies, ACABQ recommended that one new post in the General Service category not be approved. It also recommended postponement of a decision on the incorporation of the temporary assistance posts into the regular establishment, pending action by the Assembly at its regular 1978 session on the dual pension-adjustment system, as the posts in question related essentially to that operation. Subject to its amendment, which would result in an over-all reduction of $9,800, ACABQ recommended approval of the 1978 expenses and had no objection to the supplementary estimates submitted for 1977.

The Fifth Committee decided without objection on 5 December 1977, on an oral proposal by its Chairman, to revise the Board's draft resolution in accordance with ACABQ's recommendations by reducing the amount requested for 1978 and by adding an operative paragraph concurring with the relevant comments and recommendations of ACABQ. The Assembly adopted the Fifth Committee's proposed text of section I when, on 9 December, it adopted resolution 32/74 as a whole.

(For text of section I of resolution 32/74, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Transfer of pension rights

The Board submitted, as an addendum to its report, a proposed agreement with the Commission of the European Communities for the transfer of pension rights, reciprocally, between participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and officials of the Communities, under certain conditions, and invited the General Assembly's concurrence in the agreement.

The agreement was dealt with directly by the Fifth Committee. During the discussion, the representative of the USSR expressed concern that, should the agreement be entered into, additional liabilities might result for Member States. The USSR subsequently stated that it would not object to approval of the agreement by the Assembly, provided that its comments were taken into account and that any possible negative effects of the agreement would not lead to an increase in the contributions of Member States.

The Fifth Committee then decided to recommend that the Assembly concur in the agreement and a proposal to that effect was included as section IV of the draft resolution it approved by consensus on 25 November 1977 and referred to the Assembly. The Assembly adopted the text as section IV of resolution 32/74, which it adopted as a whole on 9 December.

Other matters

The Board reported on the results of the actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1976, which had shown an imbalance of $211 million. The 1976 actuarial valuation, however, was prepared in accordance with a new procedure and based upon different actuarial assumptions from the previous (1974) valuation. Nevertheless, on the advice of the Committee of Actuaries, the Board concluded that the actuarial status of the Fund was reasonably satisfactory and recommended to the General Assembly that there was no need at that time to invoke article 27 of its Regulations requiring member organizations to make good the deficiency. It accepted, at the same time, the advice of the Committee of Actuaries that no significant liberalization should be made in the benefit provisions of the Fund unless additional financing became available.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions noted the Board's views and endorsed its recommendations on the status of the Fund and the level of benefits, expressing agreement with the Committee of Actuaries on the Fund's status.

While some Members of the Fifth Committee expressed concern at the imbalance shown in the valuation, it was generally agreed that the situation did not, for the time being, require resort to article 27 of the Regulations. However, no further liberalization of benefits could be considered at that time.

On the question of a unified system of pension adjustment, which the Assembly had in 1976 requested the Board to study further and submit new recommendations thereon in 1978,²⁰ the Board reported that it had noted the various considerations raised in the discussions in Assembly organs in 1976, and the guidelines contained in the Assembly's 1976 resolution covering the Board's report of that year—in particular, that any new scheme of adjustment should not increase the current or future liabilities of Member States—and was carrying the study forward with all possible expedition.

The Board reported that it had studied also, in consultation with the Committee of Actuaries, the question of the voluntary deposits still held in the Fund under the scheme available for this purpose. The scheme, which had been discontinued in 1970, enabled participants to make deposits, supplementary to their regular contributions, in order to increase benefits ultimately payable to them. The Board had reached the conclusion that because of the relatively low rate of interest (3.25 per cent) payable on these deposits, it was reasonable to return them, before separation, to any participant who so desired. It proposed to advise the participants concerned accordingly.

On the subject of the maximum length of contributory service—and its relationship to the conditions of regular, early and deferred retirement—the Board reported that, because the cost factors of any such proposals needed to be considered in conjunction with those of the revised system of adjustments to benefits in payment, currently under study, it had decided to defer definitive recommendations to the Assembly until 1978, when the cost aspects of the pension adjustment scheme would be more precisely known.

During discussion of the Board's report in the Fifth Committee, the representative of the United States proposed that the Board be requested at its next session to consider deleting from the Fund's Regulations the provisions for one-third lump-sum commutations of retirement benefits into cash, and for the payment of pensions to survivors without reducing the annuitant's pension, since these provisions did not appear in the United States Federal Civil Service retirement system. The Chairman of the Board agreed that the Board would study these two points, in the light of the current examination by the International Civil Service Commission of the relationship between total compensation for the international civil service and that of the United States Civil Service, and report its conclusions to the Assembly at the 1978 session. The representative of the United States drew attention again to his proposal when the pension item reached the Assembly, in order to ensure that the importance which his Government attached to the question was reflected in the record.

Investments in transnational corporations and in developing countries

In response to a request from the General Assembly at its 1976 session,²¹ the Secretary-General submitted in 1977 a report on United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund investments in transnational corporations and in developing countries.

The report stated that, in the appraisal of investments for the Fund, the considerations applied were those which seemed pertinent to the attainment of the principal investment objectives of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility. Bearing in mind that all investments, whether in developed or developing countries, must be made within the context of a prudent over-all investment strategy, the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Investments Committee, would continue to explore opportunities to invest directly in developing countries and to diversify the Pension Fund portfolio in a manner considered most likely to preserve and increase the Fund's assets.

This report, together with the Board's views on Pension Fund investments in developing countries and investments in general contained in its own report, were noted by ACABQ. The Advisory Committee also noted the Board's request that a study of the adequacy of existing advisory arrangements for investment in both developing and developed countries be made before the Board's 1979 session, in the context of a comprehensive examination of investment policies and practices, including the desirability of strengthening the staff engaged in investment activities. At the same time, ACABQ recalled its earlier observation that the Secretary-General should be guided in his choice of investments exclusively by the soundness of the investment itself. The Advisory Committee found the objectives and investment criteria set forth in the Secretary-General's report to be compatible with that view. It noted the Board's endorsement of those criteria as satisfactory for its purposes; it also noted the Board's belief that they could be applied equally to investments in both developed and developing countries and that, where the criteria were equally satisfied, priority should be given to investment in developing countries.

When the matter reached the Fifth Committee, considerable discussion took place, some Members holding the view that the resolution on Fund investments of the previous year had not been adequately complied with by the Secretary-General. The representative of Cuba accordingly introduced a draft resolution which inter alia called for compliance with that resolution and, requested that no further investments in transnational corporations be made.

Other Members of the Committee, however, including Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Ireland, Italy, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, felt that the resolution as proposed would severely curtail the freedom of the Secretary-General in his choice of investment possibilities.

The Federal Republic of Germany and New Zealand were among those which had some reservations regarding the references to investments in transnational corporations; an end to Pension Fund investments in such corporations would entail the loss of one of the Fund's main investment opportunities.

As ultimately adopted—after being revised three times to take into account proposals and comments of Member States—the resolution, co-sponsored by Madagascar and Mexico, recorded the Assembly's request that the Secretary-General redouble his efforts in consultation with the Investments Committee to ensure that—subject to careful observance of the requirements of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility, and in strict conformity with the Fund's Regulations—a larger proportion of the investment of the resources of the Fund would be made in developing countries. A report was to be submitted to the 1978 regular session of the Assembly on the implementation of this resolution.

The resolution was approved by the Fifth Committee on 15 November 1977 by 92 votes to 0, with 22 abstentions, and was forwarded for approval to the Assembly. The Assembly adopted the text on 9 December as resolution 32/73 A, by 94 votes to 0, with 15 abstentions.

During the debate in the Fifth Committee, a number of speakers—among them Algeria, Chad, Ethiopia, the Philippines, Togo and Zambia—expressed concern over the fact that there appeared to be little, if any, investment of the Fund's resources in Africa. The representative of Nigeria introduced a draft resolution—sponsored also by Algeria, Burundi, Chad, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Togo, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia—by which, in essence, the Assembly would request the Secretary-General to initiate negotiations with financial institutions in Africa, in particular the African Development Bank, with a view to direct investment there of some of the portfolio of the Fund. This was amended orally, on the proposal of the Federal Republic of Germany, to delete the specific reference to the African Development Bank, and, on the proposal of Japan, to add the words "on safe and profitable terms" with reference to direct investments in Africa. The resolution, as thus amended, was approved by consensus on 15 November by the Fifth Committee and adopted by the Assembly on 9 December, without a vote, as resolution 32/73 B.

Questions relating to participation in the Pension Fund

Admission of IFAD to membership

The Board reported on an application it had received from the Preparatory Commission of the International Fund for Agricultural Development for admission to membership in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund under the Regulations of the Pension Fund and recommended that it should be so admitted with effect from the date on which it became a specialized agency of the United Nations. This recommendation was submitted as section III of a draft resolution proposed by the Board for adoption by the Assembly. The Board also proposed certain interim arrangements to cover any interval which might occur between the establishment of IFAD and such admission.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions queried the interpretation to be placed on the words "participates in the common system of salaries, allowances and other conditions of service of the United Nations and the specialized agencies" in article 3 (b) of the Regulations of the Pension Fund.²² It appeared that if the draft relationship agreement negotiated by the Economic and Social Council with IFAD were to be approved (see p. 785), IFAD would become the first specialized agency which need not participate fully in the common system. The Advisory Committee was of the opinion that action by the Assembly would therefore involve a pronouncement on the eligibility for admission of such an agency under article 3 (b) of the Fund's Regulations, as well as on whether IFAD, if deemed eligible nevertheless, should as a matter of policy be admitted to the Pension Fund.

In the Fifth Committee, the representative of France proposed, but subsequently withdrew, a clause to be added to section III of the Board's draft resolution to the effect that IFAD should be required to participate in the common system of the international civil service as a condition of admission. The representative of Madagascar proposed an amendment which would have had the effect of inviting IFAD, once constituted, to join the Pension Fund, rather than deciding to admit IFAD to membership on the date it became a specialized agency (see p. 787). This amendment was not accepted. Section III, together with the draft resolution as a whole, was approved by consensus by the Fifth Committee on 25 November 1977, essentially as submitted by the Board, and subsequently adopted by the General Assembly as section III of its resolution 32/74, adopted as a whole, without vote, on 9 December.

The International Fund for Agricultural Development became a specialized agency on 15 December 1977 and was admitted to the Pension Fund on 1 January 1978.

Participation of certain UNRWA staff for the period 1950-1960

The Secretary-General submitted in 1977 a report on the implications of extending Pension Fund coverage for service with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East during the period 1950 to 1960 to certain former staff members who would have been eligible for coverage under a 1975 decision²³ had they not recently retired. The report was limited to meeting a request for information²⁴ and made no proposals as to how the question of equity should be decided.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions was of the opinion that the implications were broader than the Secretary-General had indicated: the potential group of retirees who would be affected would be greater than the 25 identified as having "recently" retired, and,

²² Article 3 (b) of the Fund's Regulations reads as follows: "Membership in the Fund shall be open to the specialized agencies referred to in Article 57, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations and to any other international, intergovernmental organization which participates in the common system of salaries, allowances and other conditions of service of the United Nations and the specialized agencies."

²³ For text of Article 57 of the Charter, see APPENDIX II.

in a broader context, extending eligibility to retired staff could have implications beyond the specific UNRWA question and could lead to the establishment of the principle that former staff members were affected by Assembly decisions traditionally taken with only serving staff in mind.

On 21 December 1977, the Assembly took note of the reports of the Secretary-General and of ACABQ when it adopted, without vote, section III of its 11-part resolution 32/212 on questions relating to the programme budget for the 1978-

1979 biennium. The text was based on a proposal by the United States, which amended its original proposal taking note of the Secretary-General's report by adding a provision taking note of ACABQ'S report as well, and by deleting—as suggested by France and Pakistan—a provision to take no further action on the matter. The Committee then approved the draft on 2 November by consensus.

Resolution 32/73 A, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/32/421, adopted by Assembly on 9 December 1977, meeting 99, by 94 votes to 0, with 15 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 31/197 of 22 December 1976 it requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the resources which the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund holds invested in shares of transnational corporations are invested on safe and profitable terms and, to the greatest extent practicable, in sound investments in developing countries,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund investments in transnational corporations and in developing countries,

Noting that since the adoption of resolution 31/197 United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund investments in transnational corporations have risen to $772 million in bonds and equities as at 31 March 1977, while direct bond investments in the developing countries have only increased to $22 million,

Recalling that the third preambular paragraph of resolution 31/197 took into account that investments by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in shares of transnational corporations might contradict the objectives and purposes of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Recalling also the resolutions adopted by the United Nations and other international organizations concerning the new international economic order and the transnational corporations,

Noting with satisfaction the decision of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board that, where investments in the developed and the developing world equally satisfy the criteria of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility, priority should be given to investment in developing countries,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to redouble his efforts in consultation with the Investments Committee, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 31/197, to ensure that, subject to careful observance of the requirements of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility, and in strict conformity with the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, a larger proportion of the investment of the resources of the Fund is made in developing countries;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Resolution 32/73 B, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/32/421, adopted without vote by Assembly on 9 December 1977, meeting 99.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and of the Secretary-General with regard to the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in transnational corporations and in developing countries,

Recalling that in its resolution 3527(XXX) of 16 December 1975 it requested the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to increase the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund directly in developing countries on safe and profitable terms,

Noting that the efforts of the Secretary-General to increase the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in developing countries as indicated in his report do not cover the continent of Africa,

Requests the Secretary-General to initiate negotiations with financial institutions in Africa with a view to investing some of the portfolio of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund directly in Africa on safe and profitable terms and to report on the matter to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Implications of extending to certain former staff members coverage by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund for service with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the implications of extending to certain former staff members coverage by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund for service with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East during the period 1950 to 1960 inclusive;

2. Takes note also of the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

Other administrative and personnel questions

Administrative and management control

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) considered the Secretary-General's proposed arrangements for a merger of the Administrative Management Service (AMS) and the Internal Audit Service into a combined Internal Audit and Management Improvement Service²⁵ in connexion with its review of the budget estimates for 1978-1979, which provided for a 2.5 per cent reduction in over-all staff resources for the combined service. In its review, ACABQ recalled General Assembly resolution 31/94 C of 14 December 1976,²⁶ which reflected the Assembly's conviction of the need for an effective and continuing management improvement programme, and requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the existing role and functions of AMS. The Advisory Committee also recalled that a unit providing expert management advice had existed in one form or another since 1946 and that the Secretary-General was of the opinion that there was a continuing need for such expert and independent advice. The Committee's report to the 1976 session of the General Assembly had expressed a similar view and indicated that, in the interest of safeguarding its independence, AMS should be directly responsible to the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management, acting on behalf of the Secretary-General.

With these considerations in mind, ACABQ felt that the maintenance of a capable management improvement service, as intended in Assembly resolution 31/94 C, might require a different arrangement from that proposed by the Secretary-General; the concept of a small corps of experts whose independence and effectiveness was assured through a line of direct responsibility to the Under-Secretary-General might become more difficult to sustain within a combined service.

The majority of the Members that spoke on the subject in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee—including France, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, the Philippines, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States—were in favour of retaining the units as two separate and independent services. Brazil and Japan, however, were among those that felt a merger would enhance the efficiency of the two services by permitting more co-ordinated mutual support and closer integration of their activities.

On 17 December 1977, the Fifth Committee, without a vote, decided, on the basis of an oral proposal by Japan after consultations with interested delegations, to recommend that the General Assembly should: (a) take note of the observations of ACABQ and the views expressed in the Fifth Committee, which the Secretary-General was invited to take into account, and meanwhile to maintain the present organizational arrangements; and (b) decide to consider in 1978 the questions raised by ACABQ and by Member States, in the context of the review of the question of administrative and management control of the United Nations, it being understood that all options on the matter would be open to the Assembly.

The Fifth Committee's recommendation was subsequently approved without a vote by the Assembly on 21 December 1977, and included as section X of its 11-part resolution 32/212.

(For text of section X of resolution 32/212, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

First-class travel

On 21 December 1977, on the recommendation of its Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/198, by which it set out the conditions under which first-class air travel would be authorized for official travel in the Organization.

When the Fifth Committee considered the subject, it had before it a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on first-class travel in the United Nations organizations which dealt with the current use of first-class travel by air in the United Nations, the International Atomic Energy Agency and nine specialized agencies, and concluded that there was a need for further economy and a more uniform approach in this area. The Inspectors recommended that first-class air travel be authorized only (a) for presidents or chairmen of legislative or governing bodies, (b) for executive heads of organizations, and, in exceptional cases, when an executive head decided that officials accompanying him should travel first class, (c) for medical reasons, or (d) when the executive head determined that because of age and/or position a non-staff member should travel first class.

The Fifth Committee also had before it a note by the Secretary-General transmitting the joint comments of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) on the report of JIU. With reference to travel of secretariat officials, ACC was doubtful whether any revisions of the standards of accommodation adopted by the General Assembly in 1973²⁷ was warranted. The Secretary-General proposed that the current entitlement to first-class travel for Assistant Secretaries-General and above be maintained, as determined in 1973.

In its related report, ACABQ saw no reason to question the Secretary-General's conclusions and felt that if reimbursements by the Organization were limited to economy-class travel, the real savings to the membership would be minimal, for individual States would then have to pay the difference between economy-class and first-class travel when the latter was prescribed by national practice.

Introducing a text which they said represented a compromise between the complete abolition of first-class travel for United Nations officials (except the Secretary-General) and the continuation of the current practice, Barbados, Canada, Nepal, Panama, Senegal and the United States proposed inter alia: that first-class travel be authorized for (a) the Secretary-General and one representative of each Member State attending regular, special or emergency special sessions of the General Assembly, and (b) other persons previously entitled under resolutions of 20 December 1966²⁸ and 18 December 1973;²⁹ and that those chairmen of intergovernmental committees currently entitled to travel paid by the United Nations were to be entitled to first-class travel only when the duration of the particular flight exceeded nine hours (by the most direct and economical route), including scheduled stops for such purposes as change of planes or refuelling, but excluding travel time to and from airports. The Secretary-General would be authorized to exercise his discretion in making exceptions, on a case-by-case basis, and would be asked to report annually on implementation of the resolution and savings achieved, noting all exceptions and reasons therefor.

Egypt, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Niger, the Syrian Arab Republic and Togo also introduced a draft resolution by which inter alia the Secretary-General would have been requested to study ways and means of implementing more economy in travel appropriations (i.e. authorization of strictly necessary travel, possibility of chartered flights, excursion tickets, etc.) and report to the Assembly's regular 1978 session.

On 19 December 1977, the Committee rejected, by 47 votes against to 36 in favour, with 18 abstentions, a motion by the Niger to give priority in the vote to the latter draft resolution. It then approved the other six-power draft resolution by a recorded vote of 64 to 12, with 26 abstentions. The sponsors of the second draft subsequently withdrew it.

When the Assembly considered the draft resolution on 21 December, Uruguay, on behalf of some members of the group of Latin American States, introduced an oral amendment which would have had the effect of adding to those entitled to first-class travel the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, the Under-Secretaries-General and the Assistant Secretaries-General. Saudi Arabia, Spain and the United Kingdom spoke in support of the amendment, which was rejected by the Assembly by a vote of 57 against to 56 in favour, with 21 abstentions. The Fifth Committee's recommended text was then adopted by a recorded vote of 98 to 7, with 130 abstentions, as Assembly resolution 32/198.

(For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Immediately following the vote in the Assembly, Saudi Arabia orally proposed a draft resolution by which the Assembly would decide that delays—such as those caused by weather conditions and engine problems which might delay air travellers from taking off or landing—should be taken into account by having them added to the travel period of less than eight hours so that a rectification could be made accordingly by enabling the Secretary-General to take administrative action until the question could be brought up by the Assembly at its next session. The proposal was not put to the vote, on the understanding that the Secretary-General might take the considerations advanced in the Saudi Arabian proposal into account in implementing resolution 32/198 which the Assembly had just adopted.

Status of classification projects

In accordance with a 1974 decision of the General Assembly³⁰ and a resolution of 22 December 1976,³¹ studies were undertaken of the classification of posts in the Secretariat at the Professional level for all offices and at the General Service level for the United Nations Office at Geneva.

The Secretary-General's note submitted to the Assembly's 1977 session on the status of these classification projects was an interim report, prepared in response to interest expressed in the Fifth Committee, the purpose of which was to inform the Assembly of the forms of the classification systems being established for the above-mentioned categories before the systems were implemented. A full report was to be submitted to the regular 1978 session pursuant to a 1976 General Assembly resolution.³²

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fifth Committee, decided without a vote to take note of the Secretary-General's note on the status of classification projects. The text of this decision became section VII of an 11-part Assembly resolution (32/212). The Fifth Committee had approved the recommendation on 19 December, without objection, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

Recalling further its resolution 3198(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973 on the standards of accommodation for official travel of United Nations staff,

Aware of the desirability for economy in the conduct of operations of the United Nations,

Conscious of the considerable cost differential between first-class, economy class and other air fares,

Desiring to achieve substantial savings by reducing as far as possible the amount expended on travel by the United Nations,

1. Notes the report on first-class travel in the United Nations organizations submitted by the Joint Inspection Unit and the comments thereon of the Administrative Committee on Coordination as well as the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides that the principle of seeking the most economical air-fare structures shall be implemented as follows:

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on the implementation of the present resolution, noting all exceptions made under paragraph 3 above, the reasons therefor and the savings achieved through utilization of economy and other air fares.

Chapter II

Budgetary arrangementsThe United Nations programme budget*Programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979

On 21 December 1977, at its thirty-second session, the General Assembly voted appropriations totalling $985,913,300, to meet the expenses of the United Nations for the biennium 1978-1979. It also approved estimates of income in the amount of $174,118,200 (which included $154,304,600 to be derived from staff assessment on wages and salaries).

In accordance with the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, for each of the two years of the financial period the contributions of Member States were to be assessed on the basis of half the appropriations approved by the Assembly for the biennium, except that certain adjustments would be made, mainly with respect to miscellaneous income and credits in the Tax Equalization Fund.

Accordingly, the gross amount to be contributed by Member States for 1978 was set by the Assembly at $498,512,650; this amount included supplementary appropriations for 1976-1977 totalling $5,556,000 and took into account certain revisions to the income estimates for 1976-1977 as well as contributions of new Member States for those years. The gross assessment on Member States was to be offset by their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund in a total amount of $84,812,500.

These decisions were embodied in a three-part Assembly resolution (32/213 A-C). (For texts and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly's action was taken on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, on the basis of reports of the Secretary-General and recommendations thereon by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

The original expenditure estimates for the biennium 1978-1979 submitted by the Secretary-General amounted to $941,702,000. The Advisory Committee recommended expenditure estimates amounting to $914,992,000, a reduction of $26,710,000 from the Secretary-General's estimates. Income estimates originally submitted by the Secretary-General were $166,477,000; the Advisory Committee recommended a reduction of $704,000 in these estimates. The final figures approved by the Assembly—$985,913,300 for expenditure and $174,118,200 for income—were the consequence of revisions made subsequent to the submission of the initial estimates as well as inclusion of additional appropriations to meet the financial implications of decisions taken by the Assembly during its 1977 session.

The estimates were voted on, section by section, in first and second readings in the Fifth Committee.

The total budget appropriations for 1978-1979 were approved by that Committee in second reading on 20 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 89 to 9, with 6 abstentions; the income estimates were approved on the same date by a recorded vote of 102 to 0; and the resolution on financing of appropriations for 1978 was approved, also on 20 December, by a recorded vote of 90 to 0, with 15 abstentions. All three resolutions were then voted on as a whole and approved by a recorded vote of 90 to 9, with 6 abstentions.

The Assembly adopted the resolution on appropriations by a recorded vote of 119 to 9, with 6 abstentions, that on income estimates without a vote, and that on financing appropriations for 1978 by a recorded vote of 122 to 0, with 13 abstentions.

In the course of the general discussion of the Secretary-General's proposed programme budget estimates for the 1978-1979 biennium, Bulgaria, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR reiterated their objections to the inclusion in the regular budget of provision for the payment of amortization costs in respect of the 1966 United Nations bond issue. They stated that they were unwilling to contribute to these costs since the bonds were used for financing United Nations peace-keeping operations in the [former] Congo and in the Middle East which, in their opinion, were carried out in violation of the Charter of the United Nations; the majority of these Members stated that the related costs should be borne by those countries which they considered had imposed the operations on the Organization.

The USSR and others said they could not be responsible for the implications of the second Egyptian-Israeli agreement,¹ concluded outside the framework of the Geneva Peace Conference, and therefore would not pay that part of the contribution to the United Nations Emergency Force which was intended to cover expenses incurred in connexion with that agreement.

Afghanistan reiterated its view that the cost of peace-keeping operations should not be met through the regular budget, and that the costs related to the repayment of the bonds should be apportioned on the basis of a different scale from that used for regular budget expenditure.

Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and others objected to the inclusion in the regular budget of provision for technical assistance. They believed that, in keeping with Article 17 of the United Nations Charter,² the regular budget should be used exclusively for administrative purposes and that technical assistance costs should be met entirely by voluntary contributions. Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR reiterated their intention to pay their share of these costs in their national currencies as in previous years.

France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States also opposed the practice of funding the technical assistance programme from assessed contributions, believing that technical assistance should be financed by voluntary contributions.

Almost all who spoke in the general debate on the budget expressed concern over rising expenditures caused by inflation; the Secretary-General's proposed estimates for the biennium included an amount of over $56 million to meet the projected impact of inflation over the two-year period. A number of Members, among them Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said they could not support the Secretary-General's proposal and believed that he should instead take effective measures to absorb the impact of inflation through economies. Moreover, several of these States said they believed that the losses incurred should be borne by those developed countries where United Nations offices were located, since, in their opinion, those countries were responsible for inflation and benefited from the income generated by the presence of those offices.

A number of other representatives, including those of France, the Federal Republic of Germany,

Japan, New Zealand, Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, and Venezuela, expressed reservations or concern with regard to the automatic inclusion in the budget of provision for inflationary costs—i.e. "full budgeting," where provision was included in the budget estimates for inflation costs projected over the two-year budgetary period—and were prepared to consider some system of "semi-full budgeting."

There was also considerable reservation expressed with regard to the Secretary-General's proposal to transfer a number of staff posts previously funded from extrabudgetary (voluntary) resources to the regular-budget staff establishment. Concern in that connexion was voiced by, among others, Belgium, Bulgaria, France, Ghana and Spain. Japan, as well as the German Democratic Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and others, believed that such action should be limited to cases for which there was clear legislative authorization. The USSR, moreover, suggested that it might consider withholding the amount to be used to cover those transfers from its assessed contribution to the regular budget.

Israel objected to the inclusion in the budget of funds to support a number of what it called biased committees, conferences and reports. It particularly saw as unjustifiable the expenditure for the Economic Commission for Western Asia; Israel, it observed, was expected to contribute to the funding of a commission from which it was illegally barred.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1978-1979

The General Assembly, in adopting resolution 32/214 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the biennium 1978-1979, established the conditions under which the Secretary-General was authorized to enter into commitments to meet any unforeseen expenses which might arise during the biennium and for which no provision had been made in the biennial budget. The Assembly approved this resolution on 21 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 123 to 9, with 3 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Fifth Committee—which had approved the text on 20 December by a recorded vote of 91 to 10, with 3 abstentions, on a proposal of the Secretary-General.

The resolution adopted by the Assembly followed the same pattern as that adopted in 1975 for the previous biennium³ except for certain adjustments in the amounts paid for the maintenance in office of judges of the International Court of Justice who were not re-elected (an increase of $5,000—to $75,000), and for the payment of pensions and travel and removal expenses of retiring judges, travel and removal expenses of new members of the Court in 1978 and pension payments of retiring judges in 1979 (not to exceed $130,000 in either case, compared with previous amounts of $113,000 in 1976 and $137,000 in 1977, respectively).

(For voting details and text of resolution 32/214, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Fifth Committee, on 22 November 1977, decided, without objection, to postpone to the regular 1978 session consideration of a report by the Secretary-General in which he had proposed to revise the financial regulation of the United Nations dealing with the question of commitments for future financial periods as well as for the current biennium. In this context, he had also proposed a rewording of the first paragraph in the resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses which would require that the concurrence of ACABQ be secured in all commitments to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenditure (including future periods), except for the prescribed and limited areas in which its concurrence was not required during a current biennium—i.e. for the maintenance of peace and security not exceeding a total of $2 million and for certain expenses of the Court. (See also p. 1057.)

Working Capital Fund for 1978-1979

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly established the level of the Working Capital Fund for the 1978-1979 biennium at $40 million, the same level as for the 1976-1977 biennium.

The Assembly, by resolution 32/215, also set forth terms under which Member States would make advances to the Fund, the credits and advances to be set off against these amounts (the credit amount to Members resulting from transfers in 1959 and 1960 from the surplus account to the Fund was adjusted to $1,025,092, compared to $1,079,158 for the previous biennium),⁴ and the conditions under which the Secretary-General was authorized to make advances from the Fund to finance certain expenditures.

The resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 122 to 0, with 13 abstentions. The Fifth Committee had approved the text of the resolution, submitted by the Secretary-General, on 20 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 92 to 0, with 14 abstentions.

(For voting details and text of resolution 32/215, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Federal Republic of Germany said it did not find it easy to continue to agree to the reconstitution of the Fund, whose resources were continually being depleted to fill the gap created by the withholding of contributions.

Budget and programme performance

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolutions 32/202 A and B by which it approved, respectively, final budget appropriations for the 1976-1977 biennium amounting to $789,488,900 (representing an increase of $5,556,000 over the amount appropriated by its resolution of 22 December 1976)⁵ and revised estimates of income in the amount of $135,158,000 (representing an increase of $8,270,700 over the original estimates).⁶

The Fifth Committee acted on the basis of a budget and programme performance report of the Secretary-General and recommendations of ACABQ. The purpose of the Secretary-General's report was to indicate the main programme and budget developments during the 1976-1977 biennium and to provide a reassessment of total anticipated resource requirements and estimates of income, based on expenditure trends up to the time the estimates were prepared, and the best available projections for the balance of the financial period.

The report annexed: a summary of revised estimates for 1976-1977 by budget section and by main determining factor (i.e. inflation, exchange-rate fluctuations, decisions of policy-making organs and various other changes); the distribution of estimated additional requirements or decreases by budget section and by main object of expenditure (i.e. salaries and staff costs, travel, printing and other contractual expenses, operating expenses, supplies and equipment, and other costs); detailed revised estimates of expenditure and income for 1976-1977; a summary of revised adjusted estimates for the biennium, by section, including estimated additional requirements due to revaluation of the Swiss franc; and an analysis of additional requirements attributed to decisions of policy-making organs.

In its related report, ACABQ made a number of observations on the revised appropriations, but raised no objections to the Secretary-General's proposals. It noted, however, that, although his report contained information on programme developments in the biennium, it did not respond to the provision of the General Assembly's resolution of 17 December 1975 by which the Assembly decided that budget performance reports should include information on the staff and resources released as a result of the completion, reduction, reorganization, merging, elimination or otherwise of United Nations programmes, projects and activities⁷ (see also the section immediately below).

On an oral suggestion by its Chairman put forward on 20 December, the Fifth Committee followed the practice established in 1975 of not voting on each section, but voting only on the global expenditure amount and income amount indicated in the ACABQ report. The revised appropriation for 1976-1977 was approved by 77 votes to 8, with 3 abstentions; the revised income estimate was approved without vote.

The Assembly adopted the final budget appropriations for 1976-1977, as resolution 32/202 A, by 122 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions. The final income estimates for the biennium were adopted without vote as resolution 32/202 B.

Also on 21 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note of the final performance report on the programme budget for the 1976-1977 biennium of the joint International Trade Centre (ITC) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (see also p. 490), submitted separately from the Secretary-General's final performance report for that biennium.

In addition, the Assembly decided that the Secretary-General, in the context of budget performance reports, should ensure that important elements thereof requiring detailed consideration by the Fifth Committee were reported on separately; these special reports should be circulated sufficiently in advance to permit adequate consideration. The Secretary-General should also ensure that final performance reports were made available not later than the end of the first week of December each year.

The decision on future budget performance reports was proposed to the Fifth Committee by Ghana and approved without vote by the Committee on 20 December 1977. The Committee Chairman orally proposed taking note of the report on ITC, which the Committee approved without objection on the same date.

The Assembly adopted the recommendations, also without objection, as decision 32/449.

Presentation of the budget

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions dealing with the form and substance of the United Nations programme budget, its presentation, and performance reports on the budget.

By the first of these—resolution 32/211—the Assembly among other things requested the Secretary-General, with reference to the preparation of his budget estimates, inter alia to make a study of ways to resolve such matters as: (a) the need to identify in the budget those programmes, projects and activities that were obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective; (b) the method to be used for determining the amount which would correspond to "maintenance of programmes" and the composition of that amount; and (c) the advantages or disadvantages of semi-full budgeting, as opposed to full budgeting where provision was automatically included in the estimates for such elements as inflation projected over the two-year budgetary period. The Assembly considered that other problems of major importance concerned the best way of dealing with inflationary trends and currency instability, refinement of the methods of calculating absolute and real growth of the budget, and the need for an in-depth study of problems relating to the implementation of the budget. These and other points of interest and agreement, and suggested areas of study, with a view to improving budgetary procedures, had been expressed in statements in the Fifth Committee and in the reports of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) (see p. 1043) and ACABQ.

The study, as well as ACABQ'S observations and recommendations on the Secretary-General's conclusions, were to be considered prior to the preparation of the 1980-1981 programme budget.

The resolution was introduced in the Fifth Committee by Argentina, Australia, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Mauritania, New Zealand, Pakistan, Portugal, Venezuela and Zaïre. The sponsors accepted oral amendments proposed by Austria, Poland and the USSR; they did not, however, accept an amendment by Austria to request the Secretary-General to submit the requested study results through both ACABQ and CPC for observations and recommendations. The Committee, on 15 December 1977, approved the resolution, as amended, by consensus. The General Assembly adopted the text without vote. (For text of resolution 32/211, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the second resolution—32/201—the Secretary-General was urged, when preparing his budget estimates for the 1980-1981 biennium and the performance report on the budget for 1978-1979, to ensure the implementation of General Assembly resolutions adopted on 17 December

1975,⁸ and 14 December 1976.⁹ These resolutions dealt with the responsibility of the Secretary-General to identify in his budget performance reports those programmes, projects or activities that were completed, obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective, indicating the consequent release or possible release of staff or resources. The General Assembly also noted with deep concern that its resolution of 22 December 1976¹⁰—by which, inter alia, it had decided that all financial implications of a decision to raise salaries at the Geneva Office of the United Nations should be covered by savings in the budget for the 1976-1977 biennium, including reductions in General Service posts—had not been implemented.

The above resolution (32/201) was introduced in the Fifth Committee by the USSR during the consideration of the final performance report of the budget for the 1976-1977 biennium (see section above) and was approved by the Committee on 20 December 1977 without vote. The General Assembly adopted the resolution without objection. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The third resolution under this heading—resolution 32/210—concerned the form of presentation of the United Nations budget. The Assembly thereby requested the Secretary-General to endeavour, in preparing the budget for the 1980-1981 biennium, to improve its form, content and structure, taking into account comments made in the Fifth Committee during discussion of the proposed programme budget for 1978-1979 and, in particular, to provide the following information, as far as practicable, in a summary of the budget: the same sort of information as in the foreword [which contained a summary of the basic features of the budget] and tabular annexes of the 1978-1979 budget; additional information, including that proposed by ACABQ in the chapter of its report which analysed the budget; and expenditures by programme and subprogramme in absolute figures, by programme and organizational unit, and by programme and object of expenditure.

Resolution 32/210 was introduced in its draft form in the Fifth Committee by the representative of Cuba, who noted that a number of comments on the form of the budget had been made during the Committee's general debate on the presentation of the budget, which had not yet arrived at the stage of true programme budgeting; his draft, he said, aimed at encouraging the Secretariat to take a further step towards that goal.

An oral amendment by the representative of the Federal Republic of Germany was accepted by Cuba; adding the words "as far as practicable," he said, would enable the Controller to determine how far he could implement the resolution and the Committee could pass judgement on the result.

The Committee on 15 December 1977 approved the draft resolution by 36 votes to 7, with 35 abstentions. The General Assembly adopted the text by a recorded vote of 123 to 1, with 11 abstentions. (For text of resolution 32/210, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Machinery dealing with formulation, review and approval of programmes and budgets

Enlargement of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions

On 14 December 1977, the General Assembly decided to increase the membership of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions from 13 to 16 members and, accordingly, to amend the applicable rules of procedure of the Assembly with effect from 1 January 1978.

The draft resolution on which the Assembly acted was sponsored in the Fifth Committee by Algeria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Ecuador, Egypt, Ghana, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Pakistan, Panama, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

The sponsors accepted a United Kingdom oral amendment to a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly—rather than expressing its desire that the application of the principle of equitable geographical distribution should be strengthened by increased participation of developing countries in the Advisory Committee—would express itself mindful of the rule of procedure dealing with the composition of ACABQ (rule 156) and desirous, accordingly, of increasing the participation of members from developing countries in that Committee.

The Fifth Committee decided, without objection, that revised wording proposed by the Controller for rules 155 (relating to appointment of ACABQ), 156 and 157 (on the functions of ACABQ) should be added to the last operative paragraph of the draft resolution. It then approved the resolution as amended, without objection, on 13 December 1977; the Assembly adopted it in like manner as resolution 32/103. Review of intergovernmental and expert machinery dealing with the formulation, review and approval of programmes and budgets

On 22 November 1977, the Fifth Committee decided without vote to postpone to the regular 1978 session its consideration of the item concerning the review of intergovernmental and expert machinery dealing with the formulation, review and approval of programmes and budgets. The Assembly took note of the action on 21 December without adopting a formal decision.

Consideration of the item had also been postponed by the Fifth Committee in 1976, although the Economic and Social Council had taken several decisions relating to this question.¹¹ Certain aspects of the question were also dealt with in 1977, in the context of the Council's and the Assembly's consideration of the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (see p. 1043).

Also, on 20 December 1977, in adopting resolution 32/197, the Assembly endorsed the conclusions and recommendations in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System; section VI of the text annexed to the resolution contained a number of recommendations designed to enhance the effectiveness of the planning, programming, budgetary and evaluation processes within the system, with special reference to the responsibilities and methods of work of CPC.

(For further details, see p. 431; refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS for text of Assembly resolution 32/197.)

Other matters pertaining to the United Nations budget

Cost of United Nations services to activities financed from extrabudgetary funds

On 22 November 1977, the Fifth Committee postponed to the regular 1978 session its consideration of two reports of the Secretary-General, as well as the related report of ACABQ, on the cost of United Nations services to activities financed from extrabudgetary funds. One of the Secretary-General's reports had been submitted in 1976;¹² the second brought up to date the information on developments during the intervening period.

The Secretary-General recalled that the question of what programme support costs should be borne by the regular budget was still unresolved, although the Assembly had endorsed the principle that a certain amount in support of extrabudgetary activities should be borne by the regular budget. He differentiated between several kinds of services provided to extrabudgetary activities: direct services in support of the administrative structure of such activities, mainly the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which were identifiable and towards which progress had been made in establishing a basis of cost sharing; costs of supporting substantive services financed by extrabudgetary resources—relatively small in the total context of the subject; and overhead costs of technical co-operation activities—the most expensive type of support costs, on which a clear decision, he said, would benefit the United Nations and all executing agencies.

The Committee adopted a United Kingdom oral proposal that—since the problem was being discussed by the intergovernmental Working Group on Overhead Costs, of the Governing Council of UNDP—consideration of the question should be postponed, on the understanding that an ultimate decision on the subject would rest with the governing bodies of the executing agencies, and primarily with the General Assembly, and that the subject would be given priority consideration at the 1978 regular session.

The Assembly took note of the Fifth Committee's action on 21 December without adopting a formal decision.

Revised estimates for the Office of Financial Services

On 19 December 1977, the Fifth Committee, on an oral proposal by the USSR given final expression by the Chairman, decided without objection to postpone to the 1978 session consideration of the proposals in a report of the Secretary-General on revised estimates under the budget section relating to the Office of Financial Services for the 1978-1979 biennium, on the understanding that the item would be given priority at the Assembly's 1978 regular session.

The Secretary-General's report, which had not yet been considered by ACABQ, dealt with recommendations of the Board of Auditors; it proposed additional appropriations for the Office of Financial Services pursuant to proposals made by the Board as a result of its 1977 general evaluation of the financial management and control systems of the Organization.

The Assembly took note of this action on 21 December, when it approved the Fifth Committee's report on the proposed programme budget for 1978-1979, but did not adopt a formal decision.

The General Assembly,

Having noted that, during the consideration of the item entitled "Proposed programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979," and especially during the general debate in the Fifth Committee on that item, important problems of principle and method were raised,

Having observed that there is a large measure of agreement concerning the interest in some of these problems and the need to study them further with a view to improving budgetary procedures in the light of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee,

Recalling, in that connexion, the statement made by the Chairman of the Fifth Committee at the Committee's 16th meeting, as well as the relevant comments of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in its report on the work of its seventeenth session and the relevant passages of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Considers that the most important of the aforementioned problems relate to:

(a) The need to apply effectively the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 3534(XXX) of 17 December 1975 and 31/93 of 14 December 1976 concerning programmes, projects and activities that are obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective;

(b) The need to assess more accurately the resources required for programme implementation and especially the method to be followed in determining the amount corresponding to "maintenance of programmes" and the composition of that amount;

(c) The best way of dealing with inflationary trends and currency instability in a biennial programme budget;

(d) Refinement of the methods of calculating absolute and real growth of the budget;

(e) The need for a study in depth of problems relating to the implementation of the budget;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to make a study of the aforementioned matters and to submit to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, a report which shall contain proposals relating to:

(a) The aforementioned provisions of General Assembly resolutions 3534(XXX) and 31/93;

(b) The method to be followed in making a satisfactory determination of the amount corresponding to "maintenance of programmes" and the composition of that amount, for example by proposing the adoption of a zero base for the calculation of some elements thereof, and in making a more accurate assessment of staff costs;

(c) A study of the advantages and disadvantages of "semi-full budgeting" and the methods used or proposed to apply this system; and requests the Advisory Committee to submit its observations and recommendations on the Secretary-General's conclusions to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

3. Decides to consider at its thirty-third session the reports of the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as a preliminary to the preparation of the programme budget for the biennium 1980-1981.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3534(XXX) of 17 December 1975, in which it requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to include in the performance reports on the United Nations programme budgets relevant information on the staff and resources released as a result of the completion, reduction, reorganization, merging, elimination or otherwise of United Nations programmes, projects or activities,

Recalling also its resolution 31/93 of 14 December 1976, in which it stressed the responsibility of the Secretary-General to draw to the attention of the competent intergovernmental bodies activities that are obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective, indicating the resources which could be released so that the bodies concerned may take the necessary action,

Recalling further its resolution 31/193 B of 22 December 1976, in which, inter alia, it decided that all financial implications of a decision to raise salaries at Geneva should be covered by savings in the implementation of the United Nations budget for 1976-1977, including reductions in General Service posts, and requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on such reductions as may have been made,

Noting with deep concern that the above-mentioned provisions of its resolutions 3534(XXX), 31/93 and 31/193 have not been implemented,

Urges the Secretary-General to ensure the implementation of the above-mentioned provisions of General Assembly resolutions 3534(XXX) and 31/93 in the preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1980-1981 and the performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979,

Taking into account that, by its resolution 3043(XXVII) of 19 December 1972, it approved on an experimental basis the new form of presentation of the United Nations budget directed towards the establishment of programme budgeting,

Recalling the statement in the second preambular paragraph of that resolution that the new form of presentation constitutes a useful basis for proceeding towards the introduction of a system of programme budgeting in the United Nations,

Recalling also the decision in that resolution to keep under continuous review the progress achieved in the implementation by the Secretary-General of the new form of presentation of the United Nations budget,

Recognizing that an over-all view of the programme budget is essential for a global analysis thereof,

Requests the Secretary-General to endeavour, in preparing the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1980-1981, to improve its form, content and structure, taking into account the opinions expressed and suggestions made in the Fifth Committee during the general debate on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979, and in particular to submit a summary of the proposed budget containing, inter alia, the following information as far as practicable:

(a) The information contained in the foreword and annexes of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979;

(b) Additional relevant information, including that proposed in chapter I of the first report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979;

Financial emergency of the United Nations

On 14 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted resolution 32/104 dealing with the financial emergency of the United Nations.

The deficit of the United Nations, which in 1977 amounted to approximately $120 million, had arisen as a result of a number of factors which had been outlined in the report of the Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations,¹³ submitted to the 1976 session of the Assembly but deferred to the 1977 session for consideration.¹⁴

The Negotiating Committee, created in 1975 for the purpose of bringing about a comprehensive settlement of the critical financial situation of the Organization,¹⁵ reported that it had been unable to reach a consensus on a solution to the financial difficulties of the Organization because of the fundamental objections of certain Member States to some of the elements of the guidelines put forward towards a comprehensive settlement.

¹⁵ See Y.U.N., 1975, p. 957, text of resolution 3538(XXX) of 17 December 1975.

During discussion in the Fifth Committee at the 1977 session, the Chairman of the Negotiating Committee explained that his Committee had not held any meetings during 1977 because of an apparent absence of any prospects of success. Accordingly, the report it had made to the preceding session remained unchanged.

A number of Fifth Committee Members—including Australia, Canada, Chile, Ghana, Ireland, Japan and Venezuela—agreed to the concept of collective responsibility for the expenses of the Organization; Canada stated that the financial integrity of the United Nations depended on the willingness of Member States to uphold the Charter of the United Nations.

The USSR and the United States agreed, but for different reasons, that the late payment of assessed contributions, identified by the Negotiating Committee as one of the causes of the liquidity crisis, had nothing to do with the financial emergency. The United States and others claimed that the emergency was caused solely by the withholding of assessments and the making of payments in non-convertible currencies for technical assistance expenditures under the regular budget.

The USSR, as well as the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia and some other States, in accordance with their long-standing position of principle, maintained that the problem existed largely as a result of peace-keeping activities undertaken by the United Nations in contravention of the Charter, for which they refused to share financial responsibility for a deficit of $86 million.

Ghana spoke in favour of charging interest on assessed contributions which were late; Benin could not support that idea.

Another reason for the Organization's financial difficulties, according to the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia and the USSR, was the unjustifiably rapid growth of the budget.

The Byelorussian SSR and the USSR stated that they could not accept the continued inclusion of technical assistance programmes in the regular budget, which meant financing them in United States dollars, since they maintained that the budget was intended to cover only administrative costs. They also considered that national currencies paid in respect of this expenditure were not put to sufficient use and that there was therefore no justification for including the unused balance of such contributions either as sums due or as part of the deficit. Czechoslovakia expressed similar views. The German Democratic Republic felt that the United Nations Development Programme, financed by voluntary contributions, should be made responsible for all technical assistance. Although the German Democratic Republic was prepared to contribute to economic and social development, it opposed compelling Member States to grant aid in a pre-determined fashion. Canada, too, was among those which believed that the regular programme of technical assistance should be financed from voluntary contributions; Benin, however, said it was glad that such assistance was included in the regular budget.

Regarding the United Nations bonds issued in connexion with peace-keeping operations, the Byelorussian SSR, China, the German Democratic Republic, the USSR and others reiterated their opinion that provision for amortization costs should not be included in the budget. The Byelorussian SSR and the USSR also felt that developed countries holding bonds should waive their right to repayment and that developing countries holding bonds should be reimbursed by means of voluntary contributions. Canada expressed the view that removal from the regular budget of expenditure related to the bonds was hardly consistent with the position according to which the amortization constituted a legitimate expense of the Organization. Nevertheless, Canada was prepared to support such a measure provided that all bond-holders were reimbursed, fully and on a regular basis, for the amounts and in the time originally provided.

With reference to a proposal contained in the Negotiating Committee's guidelines regarding the holding of a pledging conference to enable States to make voluntary contributions to liquidate the Organization's deficit, the United States said it would not be interested in participating in such a conference unless there was prior assurance that those responsible for creating the deficit would make appropriately substantial payment of their arrearages, discontinue withholdings and make all payments in usable currencies. Chile and Sierra Leone welcomed convening such a conference.

Italy and the United Kingdom were among those which stressed the importance of voluntary contributions to remedy the financial emergency. Denmark, however, said that, without a willingness of all Members to carry their fair share of the burden, to count on voluntary contributions to cover the deficit would be wishful thinking.

Some Member States, including Australia, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan and Sierra Leone, felt that the mandate of the Negotiating Committee should be extended. Canada stated that it could accept the guidelines set out in the Committee's report despite difficulties it had with certain provisions. Venezuela, however, expressed the view that the Committee's mandate should not be extended until the major countries involved had agreed on a solution to the crisis. The Federal Republic of Germany, too, said that, until Member States decided to apply the rules in force or alter them, there would be no point in extending the mandate.

China reiterated its opposition to the peace-keeping operations of the United Nations, which, it maintained, constituted interference in the internal affairs of countries by the two super-powers and for which it refused to assume any obligations. It also repeated its position of principle regarding the unpaid assessments of the "Chiang Kai-shek clique"—which amounted to over $16 million and was one of the elements included in the deficit; the unpaid assessments had nothing to do with the Chinese Government and it therefore bore no responsibility for them. Czechoslovakia, the Byelorussian SSR and the USSR agreed saying that those responsible for that debt were those who had tried to keep that regime in the United Nations.

Turkey said it would like a solution to be found on the basis of prompt and full payment of assessed contributions, charging interest for unpaid assessments, reorganization of the payment time-table, establishment of a proper instalment pattern, short-term action with regard to the Working Capital Fund, authorization to borrow from trust funds or other resources, authorization to liquidate accumulated non-convertible currencies and establishment of an atmosphere conducive to voluntary contributions.

Japan and the United States were convinced that replenishing or increasing the Working Capital Fund could be only a stop-gap measure; the long-term solution to the financial emergency required a comprehensive approach.

Saudi Arabia recalled its proposal for a tax on the value of a State's arms production to resolve the financial crisis.¹⁶ Another solution, it believed, would be to call on Governments to levy a small value-added type of tax for the benefit of the United Nations.

On 9 December 1977, the representative of Pakistan introduced a draft resolution—on behalf also of Australia, Canada, Denmark, Indonesia, Ireland, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey and Uruguay—which the Fifth Committee approved on the same day by consensus and which the Assembly subsequently adopted without a vote as resolution 32/104.

By the preambular paragraphs, the Assembly inter alia reaffirmed the collective responsibility of Member States for the financial security of the United Nations and their determination to arrive at a lasting solution to the Organization's financial problems, keeping in mind the positions of principle of Member States. It then, by the operative provisions, inter alia: took note of the report of the Negotiating Committee and the views of Member States in the Fifth Committee; expressed concern that the Negotiating Committee had not been able to reach a consensus on a solution; urged all Member States, especially those whose efforts could promote an accord, to negotiate with the aim of bringing about a lasting solution; and requested the Negotiating Committee to keep the financial situation under review, to continue its efforts towards arriving at a comprehensive settlement and to submit a further report to the regular 1978 session, if necessary.

The effect of currency instability on budgets of the organizations of the United Nations system

Impact of inflation on budgets

The Secretary-General submitted to the 1977 General Assembly session a report on the impact of inflation on budgets of the organizations of the United Nations system. The report was submitted pursuant to an Assembly decision of 17 December 1975¹⁷ by which he was requested to consult with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) with a view to reaching a common methodology among the United Nations organizations for estimating the cost of inflation on proposed programme budgets and for including such costs in those budgets.

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that ACC, in its annual report for 1976-1977 (see p. 773), had informed the Economic and Social Council that a common methodology for estimating costs due to inflation, aimed at ensuring that proposed programme increases or decreases could be distinguished from increased budgetary provisions required to meet the impact of inflation, had been worked out. In this connexion, ACC recalled that it had already taken a position in favour of full budgeting, under which expenditure estimates included provision for all foreseeable cost changes resulting from the projection of trends up to the end of the period covered, thus avoiding or minimizing the need for supplementary estimates. A summary of ACC action leading up to its recommendation was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

During the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee's consideration of the report, the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) stated that his Committee had concluded that the report was not an adequate response to the request made by the Fifth Committee on the question of inflation. The Advisory Committee felt that the report should be considered as an interim submission and that the Secretary-General might submit another report in 1978 or 1979 taking into account any guidelines which the Fifth Committee might give.

The representatives of Pakistan and Turkey favoured full budgeting, whereby the estimated inflation rates were compounded over the two-year cycle, rather than semi-full budgeting, requiring further calculations at the end of a year, which they felt would in effect worsen the Organization's financial problems.

The representative of Australia questioned the methodology used by the Secretary-General in calculating the cost of inflation. With regard to semi-full budgeting, he suggested that if the Fifth Committee approved appropriations that were 10, 15 or 20 per cent lower than the estimates for inflation, it would provide an incentive for the Secretariat to make better use of resources without adversely affecting programme implementation.

The representative of the USSR observed that the Secretary-General's report contained no information regarding steps taken by the Secretariat to make economies and thus counteract the effect of inflation. Moreover, the information supplied concerning the question of arriving at a common methodology to be applied throughout the system to deal with the impact of inflation on budgets was incomplete and fragmentary.

When the Chairman of the Fifth Committee suggested that the Committee approve the recommendations of ACABQ, the USSR proposed, and the Committee accepted, that specific mention be made that the opinions expressed in the Fifth Committee at the current session be taken into account.

The Chairman's suggestion, as amended, was approved without vote on 28 October 1977 and forwarded to the General Assembly.

Thus, on 21 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee and without a vote, took note of the report of the Secretary-General, considering it to be an interim report, and asked him to report in 1978 on progress achieved on the question, taking into account views expressed in the Fifth Committee at the Assembly's 1977 session. The Assembly incorporated this decision as section II of its 11-part resolution 32/212. (For text of section II, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Effects of inflation and monetary instability

Also on 21 December 1977, the General Assembly took note of a decision by the Fifth Committee to postpone to the regular 1978 session its consideration of a draft resolution proposed by Cuba on the effects of inflation and monetary instability, intended to establish a special procedure for covering losses resulting from inflation.

By the operative paragraphs of that text, the Assembly would have decided that the losses sustained by the United Nations as a result of inflation and monetary instability in the developed countries in which it had headquarters would be covered in the following way:

(a) 80 per cent of such losses would be borne by those countries in proportion to the expenditures incurred there; and

(b) 20 per cent would be borne by the other countries, pro-rated in shares determined by the scale of assessments approved by the Assembly for the corresponding period.

Losses sustained as a result of internal inflation in, and readjustments and fluctuations in the exchange rates of the currencies of, the developing countries in which the United Nations had headquarters would be absorbed by the United Nations regular budget.

The provisions of the resolution were not to apply to developed countries in which the United Nations had headquarters and which made voluntary contributions in order to offset United Nations losses sustained as a result of inflation and monetary instability, provided that those contributions were at least equivalent to the amount that would be payable by them as a result of their own internal inflation and readjustments and fluctuations in the exchange rates of their currencies.

Based on an oral proposal by the Federal Republic of Germany, the Fifth Committee's recommendation was approved on 12 December 1977 by 56 votes to 20, with 15 abstentions. The Assembly took note of the Committee's action without adopting a formal decision.

Budgetary provision for inflation and exchange-rate movements

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly took note of another decision of the Fifth Committee to postpone to 1978 its consideration of a revised draft resolution sponsored by Australia and Singapore dealing with budgetary provision for inflation and exchange-rate movements.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly would have decided that, in issuing allotments to programme managers, the Secretary-General should during 1978-1979 and subsequent biennia satisfy himself that movements in inflation and currency exchange rates were in accordance with budget projections, and if the actual rates were favourable by comparison reduce the allocations accordingly.

If additional allocations were requested by programme managers because of higher rates of inflation or unfavourable movements in exchange rates, the Secretary-General should ascertain whether savings were possible from other sources and reduce the allocations accordingly.

If proposals for additional appropriations were made to cover higher rates of inflation or less favourable exchange rates than those budgeted for at various duty stations, detailed information should be provided on: (a) savings resulting from lower inflation rates or favourable currency variations at other duty stations; and (b) attempts to cover these additional costs by means of savings from other sources, for example, economies achieved in executing programmes or the completion of programmes earlier than anticipated.

Cuba orally proposed that the draft resolution be deferred, and the Committee agreed on 14 December 1977 by 37 votes to 28, with 18 abstentions. The Assembly took note of the action without adopting a formal decision.

Scale of assessments for apportionment of United Nations expenses

The expenses of the United Nations are apportioned among Member States on the basis of a percentage scale of assessments adopted by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Committee on Contributions. The scale is normally approved for a three-year period. However, on 14 December 1976, the Assembly adopted the scale proposed by the Committee for 1977, 1978 and 1979 for the year 1977 only.¹⁸ At the same time it decided that the scale should be reviewed by an enlarged Committee on Contributions during 1977, following which a report was to be submitted to the Assembly.

The enlarged Committee met in April and August 1977. Its report to the Assembly's 1977 session contained the Committee's studies on criteria for the measurement of capacity to pay, together with a draft resolution on a scale of assessments for 1978 and 1979, on rates of assessment for States admitted to membership in the Organization during the 1976 session (Angola, Samoa and Seychelles), and on rates of assessment for States not Members of the United Nations for contributions towards United Nations activities in which they participated.

In referring to the draft resolution proposed by the Committee on Contributions, its Chairman explained to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee that, as Viet Nam had been admitted to membership in the Organization on 20 September 1977, the recommended rates of assessment for it in the draft resolution as a non-member State should be deleted, pending reconsideration of the matter by the Committee in 1978. Following a representation made by the representative of Viet Nam as to rates of assessment for 1976 recommended by the Committee for the former Republic of South Viet-Nam and for the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam as non-member States, the Fifth Committee decided that these rates should also be deleted from the draft resolution, pending reconsideration of the matter by the Committee on Contributions. The Fifth Committee then, on 24 October 1977, approved the amended text by a roll-call vote of 90 to 2, with 12 abstentions. The text was adopted by the General Assembly on 2 December by a recorded vote of 101 to 1, with 12 abstentions, as resolution 32/39.

The Chairman of the Committee on Contributions, in introducing the report of his Committee and in describing the studies it had undertaken, stated that the Committee had always striven to formulate its recommendations with impartiality and objectivity and with full recognition of the importance of a fair and equitable scale. It had been guided in these efforts by the principles and directives enunciated by the Assembly. However, the diverse and often conflicting views voiced during the debate in the Fifth Committee the previous year, particularly as to the intrinsic meaning of capacity to pay, had made the Committee's task one of great difficulty.

Recognizing that it was difficult to measure capacity to pay merely by statistical means and that it was impossible to arrive at any definite formula, it had been decided that comparative estimates of national income appeared prima facie to be the fairest guide. It had also been stated, however, that national income failed to take full account of economic realities and that the time had come to redefine the criteria used for the measurement of relative capacity to pay. Thus, at its most recent session, a major proportion of the Committee's time had been allocated to a search for ways and means of improving the statistical measurement of capacity to pay.

For example, the Committee had explored in depth the possibility of combining with national income other economic and social indicators, with a view to establishing a composite indicator which would reflect the relative level of development of countries or their socio-economic status. However, many problems were associated with the establishment of a composite indicator, such as the selection of indicators, the weight to be attached to each and the lack of adequate data for the broad spectrum of the membership (particularly for indicators such as national wealth and net national welfare). On the other hand, the almost universal adoption of standardized systems of national accounts, their regular publication and the general international understanding that the aggregate of national income portrayed the totality of the national production of goods and services had compelled the Committee to conclude that, in the current stage of statistical science, national income represented the only single indicator which could be statistically compiled for all countries and, therefore, utilized as the principal measure of capacity to pay.

Referring to the criticism levelled against the Committee's recommendations of the previous year, to the effect that they had failed to take account of sharp declines in export prices of countries with commodity-oriented economies and of the increasing price of imports, the Chairman drew attention to the fact that, as was true of any other element affecting a country's economy, such factors formed an intrinsic determinant of its national income and were thus automatically taken into account in compiling national income data.

Having agreed that its current recommendations would be based principally on the relative national incomes of Member States, the Committee had given consideration to expressing such income in constant, rather than in current, prices in order to eliminate distortions resulting from inflation. Conceptual and practical difficulties, however, barred the use of constant prices. As an alternative to converting income expressed in national currencies into a common currency unit—the United States dollar—it had also examined the possibility of using purchasing-power parities or conversions into a common unit comprising a basket of currencies. Again, both alternatives posed complex problems in view of the widely varying economic systems and stages of development of the membership as a whole, but the Committee had agreed to explore the subject in greater depth at its next session.

Much of the debate at the previous session, the Chairman continued, had been centred on the avoidance of extreme variations between scales. In connexion with a proposal that individual increases be limited to a fixed percentage, the Committee had been unable to develop a workable method of applying universally fixed limitations that would operate not only downward but also upward. It had turned its attention, therefore, to the effect of substituting a variety of base periods for the three years it normally used for the formulation of scales. The scale for 1977, it was recalled, had been based on statistics relating to 1972-1974, a period when the economies of many countries had suffered severe reverses and when the monetary system and price mechanism of the market economies had experienced serious disturbances. Following a review of a number of possibilities, the Committee had agreed that its recommendations for a scale for 1978-1979 would be based on averages of national income for the seven years 1969-1975, a time span which, it determined, would serve best to temper the variations characteristic of the 1977 scale. In keeping with normal practice, it had also paid particular attention to the least developed and most seriously affected countries and others generally considered to be developing.

The scale recommended for 1978-1979 incorporated the new floor of 0.01 per cent. The resulting averages had been adjusted by the application of the lower per capita income allowance formula (based on an upper limit of $1,800 per capita income and a maximum deduction of 70 per cent), which had transferred 5.81 per cent of the scale from low to higher per capita income countries. Wherever possible, downward adjustments had been made in the rates of developing countries designated by the World Bank (the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development) as having had to devote a substantial portion of foreign earnings to the servicing of external public debt and which had suffered exceptional difficulties such as natural disasters and wars. Representations of Member States and the special circumstances of other States had been carefully considered by the Committee and, again, downward adjustments had been made to the extent possible.

The Chairman added that with the best of intentions it was not easy to formulate a scale which was acceptable to and met the changing economic circumstances of all Members. However, the Committee's proposals, which had not met with the unqualified and unreserved approval of all its members, represented an intensive effort to bridge the gap between opposing and often mutually incompatible views.

With regard to a request by a Member State to appear before the Committee on Contributions, the Committee had held the view that, if representatives of Member States were given the opportunity of appearing before it, not only would this call for longer sessions but it also would raise constitutional problems in that the Committee would be transformed into a negotiating body.

In the ensuing debate in the Fifth Committee, the Committee on Contributions was commended by a number of Members for the scope and depth of its report and for its efforts in seeking a solution to a technically complex and politically sensitive problem. Some States, such as the Byelorussian SSR, Costa Rica, Democratic Yemen, Greece, Mongolia, Somalia, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, had no difficulty in endorsing the Committee's recommendations, which they felt were well-founded. Others, such as Argentina, Austria, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Malaysia and Pakistan, supported the new scale in the interests of a consensus or compromise. Still others, notably Australia, the Central African Empire, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Nigeria, the United Arab Emirates and the United Kingdom, were prepared to accept the scale with certain reservations. Poland and Singapore, on the other hand, were among those which maintained that appropriate recognition had not been given to capacity to pay; accordingly, they were unable to accept the recommendations made. The United States observed that Member States should accept the responsibilities as well as the benefits of the United Nations and that it was unable to vote for a scale of assessments which accorded insufficient responsibilities to those countries whose incomes had risen dramatically.

In referring to the statistical measurement of capacity to pay, a number of representatives, including those of Argentina, Brazil, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Mongolia, the Philippines and the United Kingdom, shared the view of the Committee on Contributions that, pending the availability of a uniform body of statistics on national wealth, national income should continue to be utilized as the principal measure of capacity to pay. It was suggested by Portugal, Romania and others, however, that while it had not been possible to combine national income with other economic and social indicators, such other indicators should be given greater weight in the granting of relief. The representative of Spain, on the other hand, stated that it should not be impossible to establish a composite indicator which would combine net national income with certain other economic and social indicators, duly selected, weighted and examined so as to eliminate any considerations which might militate against a fair evaluation of capacity to pay. The matter, he felt, was one which should be explored in greater depth by the Committee on Contributions.

In Cuba's view, Members' capacity to pay in foreign currencies should also be examined. Some States, such as Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United Arab Emirates, reiterated their concern that national income failed to take account of the level of a country's development or of its dependence on one non-renewable national resource.

At the same time, some States, such as Argentina, Brazil, Poland and Yugoslavia, believed that the low per capita allowance should be adjusted so that its corrective function might be more pronounced.

The decision of the Committee on Contributions to continue its use of national income in current prices was supported by some States, such as the Byelorussian SSR, Turkey and the USSR, in the light of the difficulties involved in the use of constant prices. Others, including Cuba, Japan, the Netherlands, Sierra Leone and the United Kingdom, welcomed the study which the Committee intended to undertake on the conversion of national currencies into a common unit. As was pointed out by the Netherlands, the practice of converting national income into United States dollars produced anomalies because of fluctuations in exchange rates and variations in national inflationary trends. Conversion into a common unit comprising a basket of currencies and the introduction of purchasing-power comparability might achieve some of the refinements required.

Referring to the use by the Committee on Contributions of a seven-year rather than a three-year base period for the formulation of the new scale, several States, such as Costa Rica, Greece, Japan, Mauritania, Sierra Leone, Turkey and Yugoslavia, supported the use of the extended statistical base, which they were satisfied had served to reduce to some extent the sudden and sharp increases which had been characteristic of the previous scale. Others, such as Australia, Belgium, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast and the United Kingdom, pointed out that the extended base imposed a considerable time-lag between the years comprising the base period and the year in which Member States would be required to pay their contributions. In fact, contributions would be based in part on economic conditions prevailing as much as 10 years earlier, thus imparting undue weight on the rates of assessment of countries with deteriorating economies and insufficient emphasis on the rates of those with rapidly expanding economies. Moreover, as was pointed out by Spain, distortions had been created by the reuse of statistics which had formed the basis of previous scales.

While Canada was not convinced that assessments should be shielded from capacity to pay, the Federal Republic of Germany indicated that it was prepared, in a spirit of compromise, to accept the extended base, considering it preferable to absolute or percentage limitations on changes in the rates of assessment between successive scales. This view was not shared by Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Singapore or the United Arab Emirates, in whose opinions the recommendations before the Fifth Committee were not sufficiently responsive to the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1976.⁹

In response to a question raised by Italy as to whether the extended seven-year base period would be retained in formulating future scales, the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions explained that, since there had been divisions of opinion on the matter within the Committee, it was impossible to prejudice any recommendations it might make in the future.

In the view of the Ukrainian SSR, the Committee's action in doubling the base period for the formulation of the new scale should not establish a precedent for the future. Similarly, Australia and Zambia believed that in the future the base period should be no longer than three years and that capacity to pay should be measured in terms of the current capacity of States to pay.

Argentina, on the other hand, maintained that once it was decided to adopt a seven-year base, the same approach should be continued until the reasons which had prompted its adoption no longer existed. The United Kingdom stressed that whatever base period was chosen, it should become a constant feature of future scales in order to avoid arbitrary and irrational results. In the opinion of Greece and the Philippines, the matter was one which should be left to the discretion of the Committee on Contributions.

Referring to the question of the continuing disparity or widening gap between the economies of developed and developing countries, some Members, including Argentina, Brazil, Iraq and Yugoslavia, reiterated their position that, as long as that gap persisted, the total share of the scale borne by developed countries should not decrease at the expense of developing countries. The opposite view was posited by others, who expressed their concern over the growing imbalance between the financial responsibilities shared by Member States and their participation in the decision-making process. For example, the Federal Republic of Germany stated that it was not in the best interests of the Organization for each country or group of countries to attempt to reduce their contributions to the extent possible. Nor was it equitable, in the view of the Ivory Coast, for the scale to be formulated on the basis of groups of States. In Japan's opinion, it was unsound and contrary to the principle of collective financial responsibility for a small number of countries to finance such a large share of the Organization's budget. As was pointed out by the United States, 27 developed countries would pay 89.04 per cent in the proposed scale—a situation which might have serious consequences for the financial sovereignty of the Organization.

As to the classification of "developing" countries, Argentina and Sierra Leone noted that the economic organs of the United Nations had sufficient experience to allow them to define the term "developing." In that connexion, the representative of Iraq recalled that he had indicated at the preceding session that developing countries were those belonging to the "Group of 77."

In the context of the debate on the methods used by the Committee on Contributions to formulate the proposed scale, the treatment of certain developing countries gave rise to misgivings on the part of some Member States. For example, Australia, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, whose views were shared by Ireland and to some extent by France, noted that—aside from the systematic relief afforded low per capita income countries through the application of the low per capita allowance formula, the ad hoc adjustments for countries with very low per capita income and the benefits conferred on countries with rapidly rising economies as a consequence of the extension of the base period to seven years—further downward adjustments had been made to the rates of assessment of the more prosperous developing countries with sizable amounts of foreign currencies, to the detriment of other countries with severely depressed economies. In their opinion, those adjustments were at variance with the principles of capacity to pay and the sovereign equality of all Member States proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations.

Australia believed that the assessments of all countries should flow from the statistical data and that the best defence against allegations of capricious action was for the Committee on Contributions to inform the Fifth Committee of the extent of, and reasons for variations from, the rate derived from the statistics and the application of the low per capita allowance. In response to Australia's question as to the extent of further discretionary adjustments made by the Committee on Contributions, its Chairman stated that they had amounted to substantially less than 1 per cent in the new scale.

During the course of the debate, dissatisfaction was expressed by the representatives of a number of Member States as to the rates of assessment recommended for their countries in the new scale. Angola, for example, stated that the statistical base related to a period which preceded its independence. It was a newly independent country with a massive task of reconstruction, yet its assessment was twice that of some countries in far more favourable economic circumstances. The representative of Angola requested, therefore, that his country's case be re-examined, as did the representative of Bangladesh, who pointed out that his country's rate of assessment would be four times that of other countries most seriously affected by economic crises.

As the representative of Italy pointed out, the weight of the indicators corresponding to 1973 to 1975—years in which his country had faced a critical economic situation—had been diluted by being encompassed by the new broader seven-year statistical base. Furthermore, there was a contradiction in that the international community was requesting the Italian Government to reduce its public expenditures on the one hand and to pay an increased assessment on the other.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also maintained that his country was over-assessed in the new scale; account had not been taken of the fact that, although his country's national income had risen steadily in recent years, it had incurred a considerable trade deficit as a result of the sharp rise in the cost of imported goods and services necessary to its development.

The Netherlands representative recalled his Government's previously expressed doubts about the continuing upward trend of its assessment. He was not convinced that the rate had been calculated correctly or that it reflected his country's capacity to pay.

Pakistan stated that, while the increase in its proposed rate of assessment, occurring at a time when its per capita income had decreased, might be due largely to the extension of the base period, such extension ignored the serious reverses suffered by Pakistan in the past year.

The representative of Poland said that the Committee on Contributions had failed to take account of the extent of Poland's access to foreign currency or its less favourable terms of trade; moreover, Poland's national income, for the purpose of the formulation of the scale, had been converted into dollars in an over-simplified manner.

In expressing serious reservations concerning the prolongation of the base period, the representative of Portugal was unable to understand why the Committee on Contributions had not taken account of the economic hardships experienced by his country during the past two years, hardships which had erased the gains of the previous five years; the proposed reduction of 0.01 percentage points was purely symbolic, he said.

The representative of Singapore, objecting to the rate of assessment proposed for his country, stated that, in measuring Singapore's capacity to pay, the Committee on Contributions had taken into account neither the appreciation against the United States dollar of the Singapore dollar nor his country's abnormally high rate of inflation, which had artificially inflated its income in current prices. Moreover, Singapore's trade balance showed a large deficit.

The indisputable deterioration in the economy of Spain in recent years had been negated by the use of the seven-year statistical base, the representative of that State pointed out. The rate of assessment recommended for his country was thus not a reflection of its real capacity to pay.

In referring to the serious economic and financial difficulties of his country and to the consequences of war, the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic stated that his country, in addition to being a developing country, had also been classified a geographically disadvantaged country at the sixth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in June/July 1977. He trusted that the Committee on Contributions would bear these facts in mind in establishing the Syrian rate of assessment.

Responding to those representatives who had expressed the view that the proposed rates of assessment for their countries did not reflect their capacity to pay, the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions assured them that their views would be brought to the attention of his Committee at its next session.

Chapter III

Other administrative and budgetary questionsPattern of United Nations conferences

The preparation of the detailed calendar of conferences and meetings of United Nations bodies continued in 1977 to be the responsibility of the 22-member Committee on Conferences, which included such a calendar, for the first time covering a biennium (1978-1979), in its 1977 report to the General Assembly. The Assembly decided at its 1977 session to retain the Committee, which had been established in 1974 on an experimental basis,¹ and at the same time redefined its terms of reference.²

In preparing the calendar of conferences, the Committee benefited from the fact that the Economic and Social Council, by its decision 281 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977, had already approved a provisional calendar of conferences for itself and its subsidiary bodies, which comprised a large part of the total programme of meetings.

By the same decision—which the Council approved, without a vote, on the recommendation of its sessional Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee—the Council also adopted, on a regular basis, a biennial cycle of meetings to correspond to the programme budget cycle. By other provisions, the Council authorized its standing Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, in exceptional circumstances, to hold brief extraordinary meetings during Council sessions in years when the Committee would not normally meet. The Council also took note with satisfaction of a United Nations Development Programme recommendation that the Assembly authorize a change in the basic pattern of sessions of the Governing Council: beginning in 1978, on an experimental basis, one annual session was proposed, with a three-day meeting in January to consider and approve country and intercountry programmes and projects.

The Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee had amended and approved the provisional calendar, item by item, without objection on 1 and 2 August 1977 (subject to pending recommendations of the Economic Committee on items still under consideration), and on 2 August approved the text of the decision without vote, as proposed by its Chairman, with oral drafting amendments by Mexico.

The Committee on Conferences and the Economic and Social Council also approved a number of intersessional departures from the previously approved calendars for 1977 and 1978. Thus, by decision 211(ORG-77), the Council, without objection on 14 January 1977, approved a change of venue for the 1977 regular session of the Committee on Natural Resources, to accommodate the sixth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, and postponed to April the second session of the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct for Transnational Corporations, to allow Governments more time to prepare views.

By decision 213(LXII), approved without vote on 19 April, the Council approved date changes for 1977 meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and for the Joint Meetings of CPC and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, authorized a change of venue for a working group of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development, and authorized a resumed session of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Problem of Corrupt Practices. By the same decision, but on 5 May 1977, the Council also approved a date change for a working group of the Statistical Commission and provided for the 1978 session of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and for the 1977 and 1978 sessions of its subgroups. These decisions were either recommended by the Secretariat and approved directly by the Council or recommended by the Economic Committee, which had approved the last two provisions, concerning the Statistical Commission and the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, without objection and by consensus on 21 and 22 April, as proposed by the Commission and by the Committee of Experts, respectively.

On 4 August, by decision 280(LXIII) adopted without vote, the Council authorized changes in meeting dates for the Preparatory Committee for the 1978 United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and for the 1978 sessions of the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct for Transnational Corporations; it also deferred to 1978 for further review the scheduled 1977 session of the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning. These decisions were proposed by the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee Chairman and, orally, by Uganda, respectively, and approved without vote by that Committee on 2 August.

By decision 279(LXIII), also adopted on 4 August, by 33 votes to 4, with 6 abstentions, the Council requested its subsidiary bodies, before submitting proposed calendar changes to the Council, to seek the advice of the Committee on Conferences, through the Bureau of the Council. Canada had proposed this decision in the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee and accepted drafting changes by Algeria and the Philippines; the Committee approved it on 2 August by 26 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions.

After discussion of the report of the Committee on Conferences in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, during which a number of changes were made in the calendar for 1978-1979, the Assembly on 9 December adopted without vote a four-part resolution (32/71), proposed by the Committee on Conferences, by which inter alia it approved the calendar proposed by that Committee. It also called for a minimum of intersessional departures from that calendar, urged all bodies to conclude their work within the allotted time, and adopted guidelines proposed by the Committee on Conferences for reducing the wastage resulting from cancellation of scheduled meetings.

The guidelines embodied: (i) circulation, before sessions, of the agenda and time-table for the consideration of items; (ii) including in meeting programmes alternative agenda items that could be discussed; (iii) more precise scheduling of speakers; (iv) advance circulation of documentation; (v) leaving at least one of the final days of each session without meetings, to prepare draft reports, resolutions and decisions; (vi) identification of overlapping committee memberships to reduce the likelihood of conflicting meeting schedules; and (vii) advance notification of all conference resources available to each body, as well as periodic sessional reports of the use being made of those resources.

The Fifth Committee agreed without vote to an oral drafting amendment by New Zealand. The text also incorporated an amendment by the USSR—approved by the Fifth Committee by 51 votes to 7, with 18 abstentions—that the Assembly decide that sessions of the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space be held alternately at Geneva and New York. The decision to vote on the USSR amendment before voting on a Canadian sub-amendment followed a procedural debate concerning the order of voting; the Committee therefore did not vote on the Canadian amendment to the USSR text to refer the question of venue back to the Committee on Conferences.

One section (section II) of resolution 32/71 concerned meeting records (see following subchapter).

The Fifth Committee approved the text on 2 November 1977 by consensus.

The Fifth Committee also endorsed by consensus, on 2 November 1977, three additional recommendations of the Committee on Conferences not included in its draft resolution; these the Assembly adopted without vote on 9 December as decision 32/420. Noting that the meetings schedule at Geneva was sometimes below capacity in December and January, the Assembly proposed that the same arrangement approved for New York should be applied at Geneva, i.e. allowing for more meetings during off-peak periods and for fewer during peak periods. The Assembly also authorized the Secretary-General to over-programme meetings and interpretation services during 1978 to ensure maximum utilization of permanent staff and reduce temporary staff, in order to avoid wasting resources brought about by unavoidable cancellation of meetings. The third recommendation pertained to documentation (see following subchapter).

The Fifth Committee also approved by consensus on 2 November, the following changes in the calendar of conferences: on a proposal by Argentina, it specified the dates of the 1978 United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries; and on proposals by Belgium and Italy, it left undetermined the dates for the 1978 United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology and of the 1978 session of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. The Assembly took note of the Fifth Committee's action, without vote and without adopting a formal decision, on 9 December 1977.

The Fifth Committee further recommended—and the General Assembly adopted without vote on 9 December—resolution 32/72, by which the Committee on Conferences, which had been established for an initial three-year period, would be retained under amended terms of reference, which included: advising the Assembly on the calendar of conferences, on current and future requirements for conference services, facilities and documentation, and on means to ensure improved co-ordination of conferences, services and facilities within the United Nations system, conducting consultations in that regard; acting on behalf of the Assembly in dealing with departures from the approved calendar if such departures had administrative and financial implications; and recommending means to provide the optimum apportionment of conference resources, facilities and services, including documentation.

The draft text was proposed in the Fifth Committee by Austria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Canada, Costa Rica, Egypt, Ghana, India, Japan, Kenya, New Zealand, Nigeria, the Philippines, Peru and the United States, and was approved by consensus on 23 November 1977.

Place of meeting of the thirty-third session of the Assembly

At the same meeting at which it considered the item on conferences, 9 December 1977, the Assembly had before it, under a separate agenda item, a letter of 1 December 1977 containing a proposal by Fiji, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Samoa, Singapore and Thailand that the first part of the thirty-third (regular 1978) session of the Assembly, consisting of the ceremonial opening, organization of work and general debate, should be held at Manila, Philippines. This proposal was a continuation and modification of an invitation originally made on 30 September 1977, during the general debate, by the Special Envoy of the President of the Philippines to hold the full regular thirty-third session at Manila, in the interest of a deeper understanding of the problems and conditions of the third world.

The President of the Assembly announced that the sponsors had decided not to press the draft resolution to a vote and requested the Philippine delegation to convey to its Government the appreciation of the entire membership for its offer (decision 32/421).

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1202(XII) of 13 December 1957, 1851 (XVII) of 19 December 1962, 1987(XVIII) of 17 December 1963, 2116(XX) of 21 December 1965, 2239(XXI) of 20 December 1966, 2361 (XXII) of 19 December 1967, 2478(XXIII) of 21 December 1968, 2609(XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2693(XXV) of 11 December 1970, 2834(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, 2960(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3351 (XXIX) of 18 December 1974, 3491 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/140 of 17 December 1976,

Concerned at the magnitude of the additional costs incurred as a result of intersessional departures from the approved calendar of conferences and at the continued waste of resources through the cancellation of meetings,

I

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Conferences established by its resolution 3351 (XXIX);

2. Decides that sessions of the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space will be held alternately at Geneva and New York;

3. Approves, bearing in mind paragraph 2 above, the draft calendar of conferences and meetings for 1978-1979 set forth in annex I.A to the report of the Committee on Conferences;

II

1. Takes note of the successful application of the one-stage system of meeting records with corrigenda, which made savings possible;

2. Expresses the hope that this system will be administered so as to provide continued substantial savings to the Organization;

3. Urges bodies entitled to meeting records to dispense with them for particular discussions, whether of an informal nature or otherwise, when they are not absolutely necessary;

4. Decides that the criteria, which were adopted on an experimental basis for the current biennium, should be continued and used more widely;

III

1. Calls upon all bodies to keep to a minimum the intersessional departures from the approved calendar of conferences;

2. Affirms that, if and when intersessional departures are granted, the servicing should be financed from the approved appropriations for conference services;

3. Urges all bodies to conclude their work within the time allotted to them;

IV

Sets forth the following guidelines for reducing the wastage resulting from cancellation of scheduled meetings:

1. The substantive secretariat of each body should circulate to the members before the first meeting of each session a draft agenda and time-table for the completion of consideration of items, taking into account the availability of documentation.

2. The programme for each meeting should include more than one agenda item so that, if consideration of an item is interrupted or completed, the members may pass on to another item.

3. In order that delegations may initiate substantive discussion at the first meeting, after the organization of work, committee secretaries should consult with delegations before the opening of the session to ascertain whether some representatives would be prepared to speak on the first substantive item at the opening meeting. As is the practice of the General Assembly, a list of speakers should be compiled several days in advance of the debate on each item. It would in general be advisable to convene meetings only when there are a sufficient number of speakers to ensure adequate utilization of available resources.

4. The secretariat of each body should make sure that documentation is made available to all members sufficiently in advance of the session to permit proper study of it and, in consultation with the chairman, should schedule meetings only when the documentation has been available for an adequate period.

5. In planning the requirements for a given session, allowance should be made for at least one day towards the end of the session without meetings so that draft reports, resolutions and decisions can be prepared without interfering with the committee's business.

6. Committee secretaries should identify any possible overlapping in the membership of their committee with that of certain others, particularly those in the same field of activity, with a view to reducing the likelihood of conflicting meeting schedules; the Committee on Conferences, in its own examination of the proposed calendars, should also pay particular attention to this point.

7. The secretary of each body should bring to the attention of members, as appropriate, any resolutions and decisions on the regulation of meetings and conferences, including directives on the allocation and utilization of conference resources.

8. The secretary of each body should inform the members, at the beginning of each session, of the conference resources, including the number of meetings and the extent of interpretation services, made available to the body and should give them a brief account, at appropriate intervals during the session, of the use they have been making of those resources.

4. Requests its subsidiary bodies to seek the advice of the Committee on Conferences with regard to the scheduling of their regular meetings and with regard to any proposed changes in their established pattern of sessions.

Publications and documentation of the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee maintained a continued interest in 1977 in the control and limitation of documentation in view of the heavy expense in issuing it in the various working languages and the limits on the capacity of Member States to absorb its volume.

At its organizational session in 1977, on the proposal of its President, the Council decided that, before the opening of each regular 1977 session, the Bureau of the Council should suggest whether substantive consideration of certain reports submitted to the Council could be dispensed with. This directive was contained in decision 204(ORG-77), adopted without vote on 14 January.

At the Assembly's 1977 session, there was no specific item covering documentation; the question was discussed, however, in connexion with the report of the Committee on Conferences and the proposed programme budget (see preceding subchapter).

Under its previous terms of reference, an explicit task of the Committee on Conferences relating to documentation was to monitor the application of the new system of issuing in one stage, validated by subsequent corrigenda, the records of meetings other than the plenary meetings of the principal organs, rather than, as formerly, in two stages—provisional and final. On the Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly, by section II of resolution 32/71, noted the successful application of the new system and the resulting savings, urged bodies entitled to meeting records to dispense with them when they were not absolutely necessary, and decided that the system should be continued and expanded.

Other operative sections of resolution 32/71 dealt with United Nations conferences and meetings (see subchapter above).

The Fifth Committee approved the text of the resolution, which had been submitted by the Committee on Conferences, by consensus on 2 November 1977; the Assembly adopted it on 9 December without a vote.

Section IV of the same resolution set forth guidelines for reducing wastage resulting from the cancellation of scheduled meetings; one such guideline called for assurance that documentation was made available to members of each body sufficiently in advance of the session to permit proper study of it. Meetings were to be scheduled only when documentation had been available for an adequate period.

(For discussion of other guidelines and other sections of resolution 32/71, see subchapter immediately preceding, PATTERN OF UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCES; for text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES following that Subchapter.)

When the Assembly on the same date approved new terms of reference for the Committee on Conferences by its resolution 32/72, it provided inter alia that the Committee would recommend to the Assembly means to provide the optimum apportionment of conference resources, including documentation, in order to ensure their most efficient and effective use, and would advise the Assembly on current and future requirements for conference services, facilities and documentation. (For further details, see subchapter immediately preceding, PATTERN or UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCES; for text of resolution 32/72, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES following that subchapter.)

By decision 32/420 of 9 December 1977, the Assembly adopted without vote three recommendations of the Committee on Conferences, one of which contained a proposal that a schedule of distribution of documents should be issued during each session for the following session; documents would bear the distribution date in addition to the date of registration. Decision 32/420 was endorsed by the Fifth Committee by consensus on 2 November 1977. (For further details, see subchapter on PATTERN OF UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCES immediately above.)

As a particular question considered in connexion with the approval of the proposed programme budget for the 1978-1979 biennium, the Fifth Committee had before it a revised version of a report submitted in 1976, but not considered because of lack of time, on technological innovations in the production of publications and documentation.³ As part of a gradual introduction of a range of interrelated modern computer-assisted equipment for the production of documents, the Secretary-General presented proposals for the rental of text-processing machines and related equipment and the purchase of new reproduction and photocomposition equipment, as well as for studies and equipment for a glossary subsystem for translation terminology.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) concurred with the proposals of the Secretary-General, but considered that the necessary costs should be voted only for the first year of the forthcoming biennium. The resources needed for the second year could be determined at the 1978 regular session in the light of experience gained.

The Fifth Committee approved by 69 votes to 10 an additional appropriation of $314,700 for this purpose. It also submitted to the Assembly a draft resolution proposed by Canada, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Singapore, and Trinidad and Tobago; the Assembly adopted it without objection, thereby: concurring with the proposed innovations; commending the Secretary-General for his efforts to improve documentation and publications services; and asking him to explore and recommend additional measures to improve the production and distribution of documentation and to report in 1978 on progress achieved in implementing the approved measures, on the results of further studies and on recommendations for further measures to improve documentation and publications services. He was particularly asked to study means of ensuring publication of the full official records of Assembly sessions, increased revenue from the sale of publications, limitations on free distribution, and installation of facilities to improve the in-session availability of documents.

The Fifth Committee approved the text without objection on 29 November 1977. The United Kingdom had requested that the Secretary-General be asked, as ACABQ had recommended, to submit through ACABQ a clear estimate of the timing and quantifiable costs and benefits of the project, indicating the financial advantage for each component element. It subsequently withdrew this amendment in the light of revisions made by the sponsors, making it implicit that the role of ACABQ in connexion with budget examination would be maintained and on the understanding that a cost-benefit analysis was implicit in the provision concurring with ACABQ'S recommendations.

The Assembly adopted the text without objection on 21 December 1977 as resolution 32/207. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination

Report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) again during 1977 examined general budgetary trends among the specialized agencies and, in its annual report to the General Assembly, commented on the individual budgets of the agencies—except the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, whose agreements with the United Nations did not provide for transmittal of their budgets for examination.

The report indicated that in 1976 the organizations in the United Nations system had spent $2,299 million. The regular budgets of the organizations taken together had grown more rapidly (30 per cent) than extrabudgetary resources (17 per cent) in the period 1975-1977. There was also a trend towards the growth of regular-budget contributions to technical co-operation activities. The report discussed efforts to streamline liaison arrangements and offices, a topic suggested by Members of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee the previous year for study by ACABQ.

Suggestions and topics proposed during 1977 in the Fifth Committee—which again discussed ACABQ'S report—for comment or study in future reports included: full and semi-full budgeting; a uniform methodology for formulation and presentation of budget submissions; improvement in the presentation of information on budgets; detailed analyses of agencies; the use made of the ACABQ report; the exact number of staff in the system; defining the spheres of competence of the agencies and departments to avoid duplication; consideration of agency activities on a sector-by-sector rather than on an agency basis; and the question of excess of overheads over reimbursement in connexion with technical co-operation programmes.

On 2 December 1977, by decision 32/415, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note of the report of ACABQ on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and concurred with the observations and comments contained therein. It also requested the Secretary-General to refer to the executive heads of the organizations in the United Nations system, through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), matters arising out of the report and the related discussions in the Fifth Committee. The Assembly decided to transmit the report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), the Board of Auditors, the members of the Panel of External Auditors and the Joint Inspection Unit for their information.

The decision had been approved by the Fifth Committee without vote on 25 November 1977, on an oral suggestion by its Chairman. The Assembly adopted it by consensus.

Electronic data-processing and information systems

The General Assembly's Fifth Committee considered during 1977 the Secretary-General's report, postponed from 1976,⁴ on the establishment of an information services unit in the Department of Economic and Social Affairs for the purpose of making accessible to the Department and other users selected information of lasting value contained in unpublished reports available in the Department.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions reported that in June 1977 it had been informed that the interdepartmental Information Systems Board—established pursuant to a 1976 decision⁵ inter alia to review, evaluate and approve computer-based information systems in use or contemplated—had reviewed a proposal put forward by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs for a three-year pilot project and had recommended approval. The Advisory Committee agreed that access to such information was desirable, but felt that the first step should be to draw up an inventory of existing material and select that of continuing value.

In answer to a request by ACABQ for additional information on the volume and nature of such data, the Secretary-General reported in 1977 that about 20,000 pieces of material had accumulated during the past five years, to be processed and stored for retrieval. He proposed that, while an inventory of that material was being conducted, the information should be processed in such a way as to be "computer-ready", should such a technique prove appropriate in due course.

While the need for a special unit during a two-year trial period proposed by the Secretary-General had not been demonstrated to its satisfaction, ACABQ indicated it had no objection to proceeding as the Secretary-General had proposed; it also made a number of suggestions that were subsequently endorsed by the Fifth Committee and approved by the Assembly by its decision on the matter (section V of resolution 32/212).

Thus, on 7 December, the Fifth Committee decided without vote, on an oral proposal by its Chairman, to recommend that the Assembly: take note of the reports of ACABQ on the question; decide that acceptance by the Secretary-General of an offer of voluntary funds for the project in 1978-1979 would not imply any commitment on the part of the Organization subsequently to transfer the costs of the operation to the regular budget; authorize him to proceed in accordance with his proposed method of conducting the inventory; and ask him to submit a progress report in 1978, so that the Assembly could then pronounce itself on whether computerization should be undertaken.

The Assembly approved the Fifth Committee recommendation without vote on 21 December and incorporated it as section V of its 11-part resolution on questions relating to the 1978-1979 programme budget.

The Fifth Committee also had before it a report of the Secretary-General in which he submitted revised estimates under the biennial programme budget for the Electronic Data-Processing and Information Systems Service (EDPIS), following a review by the Information Systems Board of all current systems. Also considered by the Committee was a report of the Secretary-General summarizing the 1978 budget estimates of the International Computing Centre (ICC) at Geneva, Switzerland. The ICC budget estimates—as well as those of the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems and Related Activities—were submitted for approval to the Assembly for the first time in 1977 in accordance with a 1976 directive.⁶

The Advisory Committee recommended against the upward reclassification of the post of Director of . . . Inasmuch as use of current equipment might well reach the saturation point by 1979, it recommended that plans to deal with the situation be formulated and submitted for review in the context of ice's 1979 budget estimates.

On 17 December, the Fifth Committee rejected, by 19 votes in favour to 35 against, with 40 abstentions, a proposal by Austria to reinstate $48,500 in respect of overtime for EDPIS, an amount which ACABQ had recommended be deleted. At the same time, the Committee also rejected, by 15 votes in favour to 32 against, with 42 abstentions, a proposal by the USSR that a decision on the additional appropriation of $854,500 recommended by the Secretary-General and ACABQ for the budget section relating to EDPIS appropriations be postponed to the 1978 session. These actions preceded Committee approval on first reading of the estimates for the budget section on administration, management and general services.

In another action, by a resolution adopted on 16 December 1977 (32/144) relating to computerization of treaty information and registration and publication of treaties and international agreements, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to approach Governments and organizations concerned to ascertain the best means of putting to full use, for more timely publication, the United Nations Treaty Information System, which was designed to computerize the production of documents and research as well as register treaties and international agreements. (For details, see p. 960.)

Recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

In 1976 the General Assembly had decided that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

would function as the main subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination, and had instructed it, inter alia, to examine the major programmes of the medium-term plan, to recommend amendments, curtailment or termination of programmes, if appropriate, and to assess the degree of programme co-ordination within the United Nations system.⁷

The role of CPC in this respect was further defined by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System, the recommendations and conclusions of which were endorsed by the Assembly on 20 December 1977 when it adopted resolution 32/197 annexing the recommendations. Section VI of that text contained a number of recommendations designed to enhance the effectiveness of the planning, programming, budgetary and evaluation processes within the system, with special reference to the responsibilities and the methods of work of CPC. (For further details, see p. 431; refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS for text of Assembly resolution 32/197.)

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 204(ORG-77), taken without vote at an organizational meeting on 14 January 1977, referred to CPC for consideration at its seventeenth session in May/June 1977 the provisions of its 1976 resolution relating to procedures for preparing medium-term plans, to CPC'S mandate and to representation on the Committee. The Council also drew to the attention of its functional commissions and standing committees that dealt with sectoral matters those provisions of the 1976 resolution relating to their involvement in the planning process.

When the Fifth Committee considered this subject, it had before it the report of CPC on the work of its seventeenth session which contained its conclusions and recommendations pursuant to its mandate set out by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

With regard to setting priorities, CPC recommended that, for programmes in the economic, social and humanitarian fields, the General Assembly should instruct the Secretary-General to show, in respect of each programme in his draft programme budget, all existing or proposed subprogrammes or programme components which represented 10 per cent of the resources requested for the proposed programme and to which the highest priority or the lowest priority was to be assigned.

It expressed concern about the lack of compliance in some of the proposed programmes with the relative growth rates endorsed by the General Assembly when it approved CPC recommendations on 14 December 1976.⁸ In relating the proposed programme budget for 1978-1979 to the medium-term plan for 1978-1981, CPC noted certain problems arising from lack of clear direction in establishing relative growth rates, and set out some guidelines for its future use in an attempt to refine the methodology it employed in determining those rates. It invited the Secretary-General to comment on those problems in advance of its consideration in 1978 of the medium-term plan for 1980-1983.

The Committee set out its recommendations on three of the four programmes which it had reviewed in depth: public information, transport and environment. The Committee made no recommendations on the human settlements programme, since the institutional consequences of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements were still under consideration by the Council (see p. 515). It also recommended guidelines for general improvement of the evaluation of programmes and decided on the programmes it would consider in depth at its next session (ocean economics and technology, public administration and finance, and social development and humanitarian affairs).

The Committee included in its report a draft resolution which it recommended for adoption by the General Assembly. By the operative part of this text, the Assembly would confirm that CPC, by virtue of its review of both the medium-term plans and the programme aspects of the budget, was the main subsidiary body of the Council and the Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination, with the perspective necessary to make recommendations on relative priorities of United Nations programmes. It would urge subsidiary bodies to refrain from making recommendations on the relative priority of the major programmes, as outlined in the medium-term plan, while asking such bodies to propose, through CPC, relative priorities for various subprogrammes within their fields of competence.

A related report was submitted to the Economic and Social Council by the Chairmen of CPC and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on their Joint Meetings at Geneva, Switzerland, in July 1977. Reporting on their discussion of ways and means of strengthening the contributions of United Nations organizations to the work of CPC and the Council, the two Committees agreed to recommend that existing CPC/Council procedures for the review of the activities of the specialized agencies, including the arrangements for the Council's in-depth study of selected agencies, should be discontinued in favour of in-depth reviews of activities of the United Nations system in selected areas; analytical agency reports could thus be dispensed with and replaced by system-wide reports on specific sectors. It was suggested that the sectors might be selected by the Joint Meetings on the basis of proposals submitted by ACC and reviewed by CPC at its session immediately preceeding the Joint Meetings. In addition, ACC would continue to submit to CPC reports on programme areas selected by CPC for in-depth consideration in connexion with the programme budget of the United Nations itself. These areas would be selected on the basis of considerations arising from CPC'S programme review activities; the ACC reports were to assist CPC in programme evaluation in its review of proposed new programmes.

The Joint Meetings also discussed development objectives of the United Nations system and ACC'S initiative to engender in intergovernmental bodies the maximum compatibility of those objectives and their implementation and to contribute to the flexibility and responsiveness of the system to development policies. (See also p. 774.)

The Economic and Social Council, on 3 August 1977, having considered the reports of CPC and of the Joint Meetings, adopted without vote a three-part resolution on the subject of programming and co-ordination in the United Nations system.

By the first section, it endorsed CPC'S conclusions and recommendations, commended them to the organizations concerned and recommended that the General Assembly take them into account in adopting the programme budget for the 1978-1979 biennium.

By the second section, the Council endorsed the recommendations of the Joint Meetings relating to discontinuance of the submission of analytical summaries of agency reports and their replacement by in-depth studies using a programme-sector-by-programme-sector approach. It invited ACC to submit annually to CPC the necessary information for the selection of programme sectors to be reviewed in depth on a system-wide basis, and invited the specialized agencies, through ACC, to co-operate in the timely submission of these reports for CPC'S consideration.

By the third section of the resolution, which dealt with co-ordination, the Council: requested ACC to specify obstacles to further harmonization of programme budgets and medium-term plans and make proposals for overcoming them; requested the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of ACC, to prepare for CPC a compendium of introductions to the most recent programme budgets of agencies and organizations in the United Nations system; requested CPC to consider the compendium's potential utility, with a view to developing system-wide harmonization of budgets and plans; and requested the views of ACC on the compendium and on ways to enhance its value.

The text of this resolution had been proposed in the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee by Argentina, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Japan, Kenya, Mauritania, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines and Yugoslavia, which had revised their draft to take account of oral amendments by France and by the Netherlands and some additional drafting amendments of their own. The Committee approved the text without objection on 28 July 1977. The Council adopted the Committee's recommended draft as resolution 2098(LXIII).

Poland, on behalf also of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, reserved the right to raise again the matter of some CPC recommendations recommending curtailment or termination of several elements of the social development programme—i.e. that programme elements at Headquarters on youth, and on youth and the aged and any other activities at the Geneva Office of the Division of Social Affairs concerned solely with Europe, should be terminated; and that resources budgeted for Headquarters programme elements on providing information on rural-development organizations, on integrating youth in development activities and on monitoring world crime trends and prevention policies should be curtailed. They interpreted the recommendations to mean that the Geneva Division should be reorganized according to agreed priorities, but not that it should terminate the activities indicated. The observer for Hungary associated himself with that statement.

When the Assembly's Fifth Committee considered this subject, in addition to the above-mentioned reports it also had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the implications of CPC'S recommendations, as well as a related report of ACABQ.

In his report, the Secretary-General submitted his programme and budget proposals in respect of the 1978-1979 biennium for implementing the specific programme recommendations of CPC, as endorsed by the Council, referring particularly to the four programmes (social development and humanitarian affairs, international drug control, human rights and public information) for which the relative growth rates did not comply with those recommended by CPC and endorsed by the Assembly and the Council, and indicating the reasons for the divergencies. In arriving at his recommendations, the Secretary-General had also taken into account reductions recommended by ACABQ for three of the programmes in question; the Secretary-General's estimate of the minimum deduction required to meet target growth in the human rights programme was not affected by reductions recommended by ACABQ.

In addition, the Secretary-General included in his report proposals regarding a CPC recommendation that the responsibilities performed by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs at United Nations Headquarters with respect to the transport field should be decentralized to the regional commissions in Asia, Africa and Latin America; Headquarters would then be responsible for studies on new transport technologies and on land transport institutions concerning more than one region, for providing an inventory of related studies and reports within the United Nations system, and for the substantive co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system in the transport field. (See also p. 808.)

The Advisory Committee observed, inter alia, that the whole operation of the rating system was based on an over-all average rate of real growth proposed by the Secretary-General, which the General Assembly in all probability would alter. Ratings assigned to programmes were thus, in the opinion of ACABQ, indicative of how much a particular programme should be permitted to grow in relation to other programmes rather than of how much it should be permitted to grow in absolute terms. The Advisory Committee felt that the emphasis should therefore be on the establishment of clear priorities rather than on the mechanical and precise assignment of specific levels of growth.

Commenting on the modalities of the proposed transfer of resources to the regional commissions, ACABQ noted the Secretary-General's proposal that resources involved in the transfer would not be included in appropriations for current Assembly approval, but he would be authorized to submit, through CPC and ACABQ to the 1978 session, programme proposals for increased activities in the transport programmes of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Latin America, the Economic Commission for Western Asia and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and revised estimates up to the total amount available for this purpose.

During the discussion in the Fifth Committee, a number of draft resolutions and other decisions on the recommendations of CPC were introduced. Austria, Egypt, Italy, Mexico, the Netherlands, Panama, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Senegal and Yugoslavia proposed a draft decision by the terms of which the General Assembly would decide to defer consideration of the recommendations relating to termination or curtailment of elements of the programme of social development and humanitarian affairs.

Colombia, Ecuador, Egypt, Ghana, Guatemala, India, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Madagascar, Nepal, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey and Venezuela proposed a draft resolution. By this text, the General Assembly would decide, with reference to CPC's recommendations on public information programmes, (a) to continue the publication of the Chronicle on a monthly basis, while ensuring the timely issuance of its French and Spanish versions, (b) to defer consideration of CPC's recommendation on short-wave broadcasting to Africa, the Middle East and Europe, and (c) to invite the Consultative Panel for Public Information to consider this question and make its views known to CPC, through the Secretary-General, at CPC's 1978 session. Belgium proposed an amendment to the effect that the Chronicle was to be issued simultaneously in English, French and Spanish.

Belgium also introduced its own draft resolution under the terms of which, inter alia, the General Assembly would: (a) request subsidiary bodies to propose, through CPC, relative priorities to be accorded to the various subprogrammes within their respective fields of competence, but not to make recommendations on the relative priority of the major programmes; (b) authorize CPC, if necessary, to hold resumed sessions between the Council's first regular semi-annual session and the Assembly's regular annual session to provide a programme review of proposals specifically designated as responding to a pressing need of an unforeseeable nature; (c) request the Secretary-General to implement, in the light of recommendations of CPC and in the most appropriate manner, the relative growth rates adopted by the Assembly, and to show, for each programme in the proposed budget, programme elements representing a total of approximately 10 per cent of the resources requested, to which the highest priority and the lowest priority were to be assigned; (d) request the Secretary-General to include in final budget-performance reports an analysis of any significant discrepancies between the output in his proposed programme budget and that actually delivered; and (e) approve the remaining recommendations of CPC as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 3 August 1977 by resolution 2098(LXIII).

India orally proposed that the Fifth Committee: (a) approve the draft resolution recommended by CPC in its report; (b) decide not to take any decision on CPC recommendations which had financial implications; and (c) decide not to vote on the three other draft resolutions before it.

India subsequently revised the second oral proposal it had made—whereby no decision would be taken on any of the CPC recommendations with financial implications—replacing it with a draft decision by which the Committee would recommend acceptance of the CPC recommendation on decentralization of transport, in the light of comments of ACABQ, and authorize the Secretary-General to submit, to the Assembly's regular 1978 session, programme proposals for increased activity in the transport programmes of the four regional commissions concerned and revised estimates up to the total value of resources released by redeployment of resources.

On 14 December 1977, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Nepal, the Netherlands, and Trinidad and Tobago sponsored a draft resolution which they said was the result of protracted negotiations and represented a consensus among interested parties; it thus replaced all the other draft proposals before the Fifth Committee on this question.

The USSR then orally proposed the deletion of a provision of the six-power draft resolution; this provision reflected the Indian proposal on the decentralization of transport programmes. Consequently, by the USSR amendment, consideration of the CPC recommendations dealing with programme transfers and reductions would be deferred.

The sponsors proposed instead to amend the paragraph: asking the Assembly to authorize the Secretary-General, in consultation with the executive secretaries of the four regional commissions concerned, to submit to it at its regular 1978 session, through the Council—in the light of the CPC recommendations and observations of ACABQ on the modalities for the proposed transfer of resources to those commissions—programme proposals for increased activity in the commissions' transport programmes and revised estimates to that end. The revision incorporated an oral subamendment by Algeria to include reference to the CPC recommendations. The consequential USSR amendment deferring consideration of CPC recommendations on programme transfers and reductions was also accepted. The draft resolution, as amended, was then approved without objection.

The General Assembly, on 21 December 1977, adopted the text without vote as its resolution 32/206.

By section I of the three-part resolution, the Assembly adopted the text proposed by CPC as well as an additional provision by which it asked the Secretary-General to give all assistance to CPC in its work, inter alia in connexion with CPC recommendations on setting priorities, so CPC could assess the implications of its recommendations.

The Assembly noted by section II the methodology described by CPC for improving its determination of relative growth rates. It asked the Secretary-General to implement, in the light of CPC recommendations and comments and in the most appropriate manner, the relative growth rates accepted by the Assembly as the framework of programme priorities; it also considered that CPC, while proposing priorities in its programme review, should continue to limit its recommendations to ranges of growth, and invited CPC to take account of that consideration in its review of the medium-term plan at its 1978 session.

Section III contained the authorization for submission of programme proposals for increased transport-programme activity of the regional commissions. In addition, the Assembly decided to defer until 1978 consideration of CPC recommendations dealing with programme transfers and reductions.

Resolution 32/206, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/32/490, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1977, meeting 110.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Economic and Social Council, in the annex to its resolution 2008(LX) of 14 May 1976, set out the terms of reference of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, in paragraph 2 (a) (ii) of which it is stated that the Committee shall recommend an order of priorities among United Nations programmes as defined in the medium-term plan,

Recalling also paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 31/93 of 14 December 1976 on the medium-term plan,

Noting Economic and Social Council resolution 2098(LXIII) of 3 August 1977 dealing with the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its seventeenth session,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implications of the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the relevant comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

I

1. Confirms that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, by virtue of its review of both the medium-term plan and the programme aspects of the programme budget, is the main subsidiary body of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination with the perspective necessary to make recommendations on the relative priorities of United Nations programmes;

2. Urges subsidiary bodies to refrain from making recommendations on the relative priority of the major programmes, as outlined in the medium-term plan;

3. Requests such bodies to propose, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, relative priorities to be accorded to the various subprogrammes within their respective fields of competence;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to give all assistance to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on its work, inter alia in connexion with the recommendation in paragraph 2 of the report of the Committee on its seventeenth session, in particular to enable the Committee to assess the implications of its recommendations;

II

1. Notes the methodology described by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in paragraph 3 of the report on its seventeenth session for improving its determination of relative growth rates;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to implement, in the light of the relevant recommendations and comments of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and in the most appropriate manner, the relative growth rates accepted by the General Assembly as the framework of programme priorities;

3. Considers that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, while proposing priorities in its programme review, should continue to limit its recommendations to ranges of growth;

4. Invites the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, in its review of the medium-term plan at its eighteenth session, to take into account the above-mentioned consideration;

III

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General, in consultation with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions concerned, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session through the Economic and Social Council, in the light of the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and of paragraph 16 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, programme proposals for increased activity in the transport programmes of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Latin America, the Economic Commission for Western Asia and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and revised estimates to that end;

2. Decides, in the light of additional information provided to the General Assembly and of subsequent developments, to defer until its thirty-third session consideration of the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination dealing with programme transfers and reductions.

The United Nations Postal Administration

In 1977, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and overseas offices exceeded $7.225 million. (Revenue derived from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes is retained by the United Nations; revenue from stamps used for postage purposes from United Nations Headquarters in New York is retained by the United States Postal Service, in accordance with an agreement between the United Nations and the United States Government. Similarly, revenue from stamps used for postage from the Palais des Nations, Geneva, Switzerland, is retained by the Swiss Postal, Telephone and Telegraph Enterprise in accordance with an agreement between the United Nations and the Swiss Government.)

During 1977, five commemoratives, two air mails, four items of postal stationery and two souvenir cards were issued.

The first commemorative issue, on 11 March, commemorated the World Intellectual Property Organization, in denominations of 13 and 31 cents, and 0.80 Swiss francs. A souvenir card accompanied this issue.

Joint Inspection Unit

Reports of the Joint Inspection Unit

The Economic and Social Council, without vote—on the recommendation of its Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee—took note on 3 August 1977, by decision 261(LXIII), of three reports of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU); it also noted comments thereon by the Secretary-General and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and by executive heads of the specialized agencies concerned, or reports thereon on action taken by the governing bodies of those agencies. The JIU reports dealt with: (i) fellowships in the United Nations system (which had been submitted in 1976);⁹ (ii) a report on the technical co-operation provided by the United Nations system with regard to Latin American integration (which had also been submitted the previous year);¹⁰ and

(iii) a report on the technical co-operation provided by the United Nations system to the regional and subregional integration and co-operation movements with regard to Asia and the Pacific.

The purpose of the last-mentioned report was to assess the assistance rendered by the United Nations system to regional and subregional inter-governmental organizations and to study ways and means of forging a closer relationship with them. Recommendations made to this end included: increasing collaboration with the regional and subregional integration and co-operation movements, in particular helping them strengthen their secretariats, elaborating regional projects with the aid of relevant movements and the regional commission concerned, and permitting the movements to act as executing or co-ordinating agencies for certain UNDP-funded regional projects; reaching a system-wide consensus in the programming and execution of regional projects, taking account of the need to decentralize their programming and administration from United Nations Headquarters to the field; and consideration by the UNDP Governing Council of allocating to the integration movements their own indicative planning figure and formulating guidelines for collaboration between UNDP and these movements in support of technical co-operation among developing countries.

The Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee had approved the decision without vote on 1 August, on an oral suggestion by its Chairman.

Two other JIU reports were submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1977: on evaluation in the United Nations system, and on the technical co-operation provided by the United Nations system to regional and subregional integration and co-operation movements with respect to Africa and Western Asia.

The main purpose of the first report was to outline the current status of evaluation in the United Nations system and to attempt to determine what should be done in the future. Some conclusions were drawn and actions recommended. Among them were that the United Nations organizations and JIU should try to: exchange information and techniques in the field of evaluation; develop a glossary of terms and an agreed definition of, categories of and principles for evaluation; establish effective internal evaluation systems within each organization with broad guidelines for use by all agencies; and establish a training programme to provide the needed evaluation skills. It was recommended that JIU should conduct periodic reviews of evaluation systems' effectiveness and make recommendations thereon, prepare a biennial report on the status of each evaluation system, develop a guide for creating and operating internal evaluation systems, and undertake ad hoc evaluation concentrating on system-wide problems and issues. All United Nations organizations should give priority to developing such systems, seeking JIU advice and keeping JIU informed of the development of and changes in their internal evaluation systems.

The purpose of the second report was similar to that of the report on the same subject relating to Asia and the Pacific. Many of the conclusions reached in the previous report were equally relevant to Africa and Western Asia, as well as the main recommendations. Neither the report on evaluation nor that on technical co-operation to African and Western Asian regional movements was considered by the Council during the year.

Three other JIU reports were submitted to the General Assembly during 1977: (i) on the implications of additional languages in the United Nations system; (ii) on first-class travel paid by United Nations organizations; and (iii) on General Service staff of the United Nations and Geneva-based specialized agencies.

The first report contained a study of the financial and administrative implications of adding new language services to those already being provided and a survey of possible measures to reduce the cost of providing such services in the United Nations system. Recommendations were put forward relating to the provision or improvement of language services on the basis of, inter alia: flexibility; indispensability; selectivity (i.e. interpretation and translation only for specified meetings and documents); reduction and control of documents; reimbursement of costs; referral of important meetings-related questions to the Committee on Conferences; increasing permanent staff to reduce dependence on temporary staff; economies in work methods; interagency co-operation and provision of common language services; Government establishment of language training centres; extending arrangements for Government printing and translation of publications; and further investigation of the potentialities of technical developments, especially facsimile transmission. This report was not considered by the Assembly during the year.

The second report, on the use of travel funds, was considered by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee and the General Assembly before adoption of resolution 32/198 of 21 December 1977 (see p. 1002).

The purpose of the third report was to investigate the situation concerning the use of General Service staff by United Nations organizations in order to identify shortcomings and to make proposals for a more rational use of this category of staff. The main recommendations included, among other proposals, suggestions pertaining to: establishing broad common occupational groups for all organizations; restricting non-local recruitment; giving clerical examinations; establishing rosters of candidates; creating a common recruitment service for Geneva-based organizations; requiring a minimum period in grade before promotion; wider use of fixed-term appointments; standardizing rules for short-term staff; competitive examinations for promotion to the Professional category; flexible working hours; introduction of productivity standards; more use of modern, efficient office equipment; and studying the cost-effectiveness of carrying out some work (maintenance and repair, gardening, catering, cleaning, etc.) by staff or outside contract or establishing common services for such work. This report also was not considered by the Assembly by year's end.

Activities of the Joint Inspection Unit and implementation of its recommendations

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted without objection resolution 32/199, by which it decided that future reports of the Secretary-General in implementation of the recommendations of JIU should provide concise information only with regard to those reports which the Unit indicated were of interest to the General Assembly, one of its Main Committees or its other subsidiary organs. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

This decision was proposed by Belgium and adopted without vote by the Fifth Committee on 19 December 1977.

In discussing this question, the Committee had before it: the ninth report of JIU on its activities for the period 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977; the annual report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of JIU, enumerating those which had been acted upon or upon which further information had become available since the last annual report, and those which still required action; and a report by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) commenting on the Secretary-General's report.

The Advisory Committee recommended discontinuance of the current procedure whereby a compendium of information on implementation of all JIU reports for a certain period was prepared annually and submitted to the Fifth Committee. It recommended adoption of essentially the system reflected in the above resolution (32/199).

During the period under review, eight inspection reports and two notes were issued. One note, prepared at the request of the International Civil Service Commission, concerned recruitment of Professional staff; the other dealt with health insurance schemes in the United Nations system. In addition, JIU began work on nine other reports and notes.

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fifth Committee, took note without objection of the ninth report of JIU on its activities and of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ on the implementation of the recommendations of JIU (decision 32/448). The decision was orally suggested in the Fifth Committee by its Chairman and approved, also without objection, on 12 October 1977.

The Fifth Committee also had before it the work programme of JIU for 1977, outlining broad problems for study and report by the Unit, drawn up after consultations and taking account of suggestions by heads of participating organizations. Revised budget estimates of JIU were also submitted, necessitated by the establishment, as from 1 January 1978, of the Unit as a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly and of the legislative bodies of its other participating organizations, in accordance with its statute approved in 1976.¹¹

Office accommodation and extensions to United Nations conference and office facilities

Expansion and improvement of facilities at United Nations Headquarters

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly had approved a number of recommendations of the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the expansion of meeting rooms and improvement of conference servicing and delegate facilities at United Nations Headquarters in New York.¹² A decision on the seating arrangement to be used in the reconstruction of the General Assembly Hall, however, was left to be determined by Member States after the closure of the Assembly's 1976 session in December, following consultations by the Assembly President with the regional groups at the United Nations.¹³ On the basis of the seating arrangement selected, the Secretary-General proceeded with preparatory work for reconstruction of the Assembly Hall in accordance with a schedule he had proposed to the Assembly in 1976.

The schedule was modified on 14 October 1977, when the Assembly, by decision 32/403, decided to reverse the phases of construction work at Headquarters to make the Hall available for the Assembly's special session on disarmament due to be held in May/June 1978 (see p. 60). The decision had been recommended by the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, endorsed without vote by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 13 October 1977 and approved without objection by the Assembly.

In his report to the 1977 session, the Secretary-General indicated the status of the approved projects and submitted a set of revised proposals which included projects that had not been authorized by the Assembly at its previous session; these included proposals relating to remodelling of small conference rooms, extension of the north end of the Conference Building, expansion of delegates' dining facilities and construction of a new main conference room. The report was based on a new study, which accompanied the report, prepared by the architectural consultants to the United Nations. The revised cost estimates for these proposals amounted to $28.4 million over the four-year period 1977-1980.

In its report, ACABQ recommended approval, in full or with slight modifications, of most of the projects proposed by the Secretary-General. However, with regard to a proposal for a new cafeteria and kitchen and the expansion of delegates' dining facilities, ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General review the plan for these projects and submit a comprehensive report to the Assembly at its regular 1978 or 1979 session. The Advisory Committee's recommendations resulted in a reduced cost estimate of $15.9 million.

On 5 October 1977, the Chairman of the Fifth Committee suggested that the Committee should recommend that the General Assembly take note of the two reports and concur with the observations and recommendations of ACABQ. The suggestion was approved by 82 votes to 9, with 1 abstention. The Assembly endorsed the Fifth Committee's recommendation on 21 December by a recorded vote of 126 to 10, and incorporated it as section I of an 11-part resolution—32/212.

United Nations accommodation in Nairobi

On 21 December 1977, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly decided inter alia to approve in principle the construction of permanent headquarters facilities for the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and accommodation for other United Nations offices in Nairobi, Kenya.

Concurring in the observations and recommendations of ACABQ, the Assembly accepted with appreciation the generous grant of Kenya of a construction site at Gigiri, Nairobi, subject to a suitable agreement between the Secretary-General and the Kenyan Government. The Secretary-General was authorized to proceed in accordance with recommendations contained in a 1977 report he had submitted on United Nations accommodation in Nairobi, bearing in mind ACABQ's recommendations and observations in its related report. He was to report annually on the status of the project.

The Secretary-General's report on this subject to the 1977 Assembly session had proposed approval of the construction of UNEP headquarters at Gigiri Estate, on approximately 100 acres (40 hectares) of land. The total cost of the project—for which plans, elevations and sectional drawings of the proposed buildings were attached to the report—including the cost of a related headquarters planning unit, was estimated by the Secretary-General at $24,233,500, to be phased out over a period of three biennia, beginning with an appropriation of $4.5 million for 1978-1979. The headquarters facilities were expected to be ready for occupancy in mid-1982.

The Advisory Committee indicated in its report that, on the basis of information it had received in answer to inquiries, it had no objection to the construction of the conference facilities proposed by the Secretary-General. In addition, ACABQ had no objection to his proposal that construction costs be charged to the United Nations regular budget, on the understanding that rent, calculated to amortize those costs over 15 years, be charged for space occupied by staff paid from extrabudgetary resources and staff of specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations.

Subject to the observations in its report, ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve in principle the construction project and that it take note of the estimated total construction cost of $23,547,000 (excluding the cost of the headquarters planning unit) as proposed by the Secretary-General.

On 29 November 1977, during discussion of the item in the Fifth Committee, the United States orally proposed that the report of ACABQ be returned to that Committee for a more thorough review of the subject, and that the question be deferred to the regular 1978 session, at which time ACABQ would submit a new report.

On 1 December, Bangladesh, Brazil, Canada, Chad, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Jordan, Kenya, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Senegal, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta and Zambia proposed the draft resolution that was ultimately approved—after an oral drafting amendment by the Philippines, which was subamended by India, was adopted by the Committee.

The United States announced on 6 December that it would defer to the wishes expressed by other representatives and withdraw its oral proposal, but requested a separate vote on the operative paragraph of the draft resolution by which the Assembly would approve the observations and recommendations of ACABQ.

On the same date, the Fifth Committee voted, by 97 votes to 10, to adopt that paragraph. It then approved the 22-power text by 98 votes to 9, with 1 abstention. The General Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 122 to 9, with 2 abstentions, as resolution 32/208.

Major maintenance of premises at the United Nations Office at Geneva

On 21 December 1977, when the General Assembly voted on the appropriations for the 1978-1979 biennium, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee it approved revised estimates relating to major maintenance of premises at the United Nations Office at Geneva in the amount of $70,000.

The Secretary-General had requested an appropriation of $85,900 in his programme budget for 1978-1979 for renovations to the residence of the Director-General of the Office.

On 15 December in the Fifth Committee, the Chairman of ACABQ stated that his Committee had concluded that the Secretary-General should review the estimates with a view to making economies; it recommended a reduced appropriation of $70,000. The Fifth Committee approved the ACABQ proposal without objection.

The General Assembly approved the Fifth Committee's recommendation on 21 December when it considered and approved the budgetary appropriations for the 1978-1979 biennium (see p. 1006).

Financial reports and accounts and reports of the Board of Auditors for 1976

On 11 November 1977, the General Assembly accepted the financial reports and accounts for the year ended 31 December 1976 and the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors for the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

The Assembly also took note of the observations and comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and requested the executive heads of the organizations and programmes concerned to take any remedial action required by the comments of the Board of Auditors in its reports.

The Assembly also asked the Board to include a chapter in all its future reports drawing attention to the failure of any of the organizations concerned to rectify inadequate financial management practices commented on by the Board to the extent that the comments were endorsed by the Assembly. This last provision was the result of an amendment by Ghana—incorporating an oral subamendment by the Federal Republic of Germany—to the draft text proposed by the Chairman of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee during that Committee's examination of the reports of the Board of Auditors.

The United Kingdom orally proposed that the Assembly should accept the Board's audit opinions "as qualified by the observations and comments of the Advisory Committee," but subsequently withdrew its amendment.

On 6 October 1977, the Fifth Committee decided, without objection, to approve the text proposed by its Chairman, as amended; the Assembly adopted it without objection as resolution 32/16. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Introducing the reports of the Board of Auditors in the Fifth Committee, the Board Chairman, whose statement was augmented by that of a spokesman for the Board's newly established Audit Operations Committee, said that some of the observations in the seven financial reports reflected the early results of the transition from transaction-based auditing to system-based auditing, intended to identify weaknesses in internal control and encourage corrective action. During the year, system-based audits had been completed at United Nations Headquarters and at the United Nations Office at Geneva, Switzerland; the report on those audits was to be considered jointly by the Board, ACABQ and Secretariat officials later in the year.

Revision of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations

On 2 December 1977, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly approved without objection, by decision 32/414, several revisions to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations that had been proposed by the Secretary-General. The revisions were a direct consequence of the change from an annual to a biennial budget cycle by the United Nations; the proposals were made to enable the closure and certification of accounts on a biennial basis. Consideration of the Secretary-General's report containing the proposals had been postponed from the 1976 session.¹⁴

On 28 September 1977, the Fifth Committee, without objection, recommended that the General Assembly approve the Secretary-General's proposed revisions, as amended for reasons of clarity by ACABQ.

On 21 December 1977, the Assembly also took note of a decision of the Fifth Committee—taken without vote on 22 November on a proposal by its Chairman—to postpone to the regular 1978 session consideration of a second report of the Secretary-General containing proposed revisions to the Financial Regulations.

The report had been prepared pursuant to a request ACABQ had made—when commenting on the Secretary-General's earlier report on revisions to the Financial Regulations—for a draft revision to the Regulations, which currently restricted the Secretary-General's authority to make forward commitments against future financial periods, i.e. they did not cover the possibility, for example, that he might be required to enter into commitments in connexion with building programmes or the acquisition of furniture or equipment which did not involve expenditure during the financial period in which the commitments were made.

The Secretary-General's proposals included a proposed concomitant change to be made to Assembly resolution 32/214 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1978-1979 (see p. 1007) to carry out the provisions of the new regulation with respect to such expenses for the biennium, as well as other proposed related changes in financial regulations pertaining to terms of reference governing the audit of the United Nations.

By another action taken on 21 December (decision 32/451), the Assembly approved an addition to the Financial Regulations of a regulation to authorize borrowings for seeding operations of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation under certain conditions and to authorize loans from the Foundation's resources to implement its programmes. (For details, see p. 515.)

Use of experts and consultants

On 21 December 1977, on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/203) by which it requested the Secretary-General to submit, at the Assembly's regular 1978 session, a full and comprehensive report on the use of experts and consultants in the United Nations. It expressed the view that the report the Secretary-General had submitted in response to its resolution of the previous session¹⁵—by which the Assembly, inter alia, reaffirmed previous decisions outlining principles and guidelines for the use of experts and consultants,¹⁶—called for prompt and full implementation of those principles and guidelines, and asked for a further report on their implementation—had not adequately responded to the Assembly's requirements and reflected deficiencies in implementation. It also asked that his report should contain detailed comparative data as well as a statement evaluating the status of implementation of those principles and guidelines.

In his report, the Secretary-General had included information on the number of persons engaged as experts, consultants and contractors between 1 January 1976 and 30 June 1977, on the nationality of the persons employed, as well as on their age, their qualifications and an evaluation of their work. It also referred to the travel entitlements of experts and consultants, indicating the instances when the Secretary-General had had to deviate from the established regulations, on an individual basis, when he considered it was warranted.

During the examination of the report in the Fifth Committee, the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management, the Assistant Secretary-General for Personnel Services and the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) all indicated that the report should be regarded as a progress report, or as an initial attempt to provide the required data, and it was hoped that future reports would be more complete.

On 6 October 1977, the representative of Poland introduced a draft resolution, on behalf also of the Philippines and Trinidad and Tobago, which was orally amended by the Fifth Committee Chairman and by the sponsors, and approved without vote the same day by the Fifth Committee; the Assembly adopted it on 21 December without objection.

Introducing the text, Poland stated that it was hoped that, in preparing the comprehensive report, the Secretary-General would make use of data collected in pursuance of existing administrative instructions laying down the procedures for the use of experts and consultants, as well as data gathered previously by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU),¹⁷ in order to illustrate the broad trends in the use of outside expertise in recent years.

Later in the year, when the Fifth Committee was considering the proposed programme budget for the 1978-1979 biennium, Argentina, Australia, Ghana, Italy, Kenya, Madagascar, New Zealand, the Philippines, Portugal, Singapore and Venezuela proposed for adoption a resolution relating to expenditure with respect to experts and consultants. It was approved by consensus by the Fifth Committee on the same day it was introduced, 14 December, and adopted without vote by the Assembly on 21 December as resolution 32/209.

The Assembly thereby noted with concern that the aggregate appropriation for experts and consultants proposed by the Secretary-General for 1978-1979 was $4,639,000 more than the approved appropriations for the same item for the 1974-1975 biennium. He was asked to re-examine the proposed expenditure following approval of the budget with a view to achieving savings in the allocation and to report in 1978; he was also asked to ensure that no supplementary estimates were presented for such services during the 1978-1979 biennium.

Use of Arabic in the United Nations

On 21 December 1977, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly (a) adopted a resolution dealing with Arabic language services in the United Nations and (b) approved the inclusion of Arabic as an official language of the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) in 1980.

When the Fifth Committee considered the question of Arabic language services in the United Nations, it had before it a progress report of the Secretary-General in which he indicated steps taken in conformity with the authorization the General Assembly had given at its 1976 session for the establishment of an Arabic Interpretation Service at the United Nations Office at Geneva, the recruitment of six or seven Arabic interpreters during 1977, the setting up of a training programme for young interpreters, and the establishment of priorities in the provision of Arabic interpretation services.¹⁸

On 19 October 1977, Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen introduced a draft decision, the principal aim of which they said was to facilitate the solution of the problems referred to in the Secretary-General's report, including the imbalance in the workload at different times of the year, by separating the Arabic language services provided to the Assembly and its Main Committees in New York from those provided to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in Geneva.

The draft decision was twice revised, reintroduced ultimately as a draft resolution, and sponsored also by Ecuador, Ghana, Indonesia, Kenya, Pakistan and Saudi Arabia.

The Fifth Committee approved the text on 6 December by 89 votes to 0, with 13 abstentions; the Assembly adopted it as resolution 32/205 by a recorded vote of 123 to 0, with 12 abstentions.

By this text, the Assembly noted that the Secretary-General's progress report made it clear that the organizational arrangements approved in 1976 had not sufficiently achieved their objectives with regard to UNCTAD and the Assembly and its Main Committees. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General, while continuing the speedy implementation of the arrangements concerning Arabic interpretation services, to establish on a permanent basis, as from 1 January 1978, an Arabic Translation Section at Geneva primarily to service UNCTAD bodies.

The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to prepare proposals to be submitted in 1979 for the full implementation of UNCTAD resolution 86(IV),¹⁹ approved by the Assembly in 1976,²⁰ by which Arabic was to be included among the official and working languages of UNCTAD. Further, he was asked to continue his search for the application of methods to ensure the timely provision of Arabic translation services to the Assembly and its Main Committees.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions noted that by the provisions of the resolution the Secretary-General was to provide the staff requirements for the new section principally by transferring to it posts already established by the Assembly under its resolution of 22 December 1976.²¹

During the Fifth Committee's discussion of the administrative and financial implications of a Second (Economic and Financial) Committee draft resolution on the proposed programme budget for the Third General Conference of UNIDO, scheduled for 1980 in New Delhi, India, Egypt orally proposed that Arabic also be included as an official language of the Conference. The Fifth Committee approved the proposal without objection on 15 December 1977, and the Assembly adopted the recommendation on 21 December, without a vote, incorporating it as section VIII of its 11-part resolution 32/212.

The United States introduced a draft decision in the Fifth Committee by which the Secretary-General would be requested to make a study of the organizational and functional implications of improving language services as a whole in the Organization, and of alternate means of defraying the related costs, including a "user pay" system. After a short discussion, the United States withdrew its proposal on the understanding that, when the report of JIU on the implications of additional languages in the United Nations system (see p. 1051) and the related reports of the Secretary-General were discussed at the Assembly's 1978 regular session, account would also be taken of the discussion which had taken place on the United States draft proposal.

Honoraria payable to members of United Nations organs

Honorarium for the Chairman of ACABQ

In response to an Assembly request of 22 December 1976²² to review the amount of honorarium received by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary questions, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly in 1977. [The honorarium currently paid to the Chairman had been established in 1971 at $25,000 net per annum.²³]

In his report, the Secretary-General examined the position of three groups of officials who served on a full-time basis and were not members of the Secretariat: the members of JIU and the International Court of Justice and the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC). The Secretary-General also proposed that the level of the post of Executive Secretary of the Advisory Committee be reclassified from D-1 to D-2.

Algeria, Austria, Bangladesh, Colombia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Panama, Sierra Leone, Senegal, Togo, Turkey and the Upper Volta introduced in the Fifth Committee a draft resolution by which it was recommended that the Assembly establish the honorarium of the Chairman at the level of $59,000 annually, effective 1 January 1978. The sponsors subsequently replaced the figure $59,000 by $50,000 in light of a decision the Committee had taken earlier on compensation for officers other than Secretariat officials (i.e. certain officers of ICSC) serving the General Assembly on a continuing basis (see section below), and on the understanding that the honorarium would be reviewed in the context of the comprehensive study of honoraria (see also section below) and without prejudice to the possibility of retroactive action on these proposals.

On 17 December 1977, the Fifth Committee approved the draft text by consensus. It also decided, without objection, to approve the proposed reclassification of the post of Executive Secretary of ACABQ.

On 21 December 1977—in adopting, without vote, section VI of an 11-part resolution (32/212)—the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on this subject and established the honorarium of the Chairman of ACABQ in accordance with the Fifth Committee's recommendation.

(For text of section VI of resolution 32/212, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Honoraria for members of the Human Rights Committee

Also on 21 December 1977, acting on the recommendation of its Fifth Committee, the General Assembly decided inter alia that the lump-sum payment per annum of honoraria for members of the Human Rights Committee be established at $2,500 for the Chairman and $1,000 for the other members, commencing on 1 January 1977.

The Fifth Committee approved the decision on 2 December 1977, as orally suggested by its Chairman, by a vote of 66 to 10, with 6 abstentions, acting on a proposal by the Secretary-General in a note on the financial implications of article 35 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights concerning the emoluments of the members of the Human Rights Committee which had been established by the provisions of the Covenant.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions stated that it had no objection to the Secretary-General's proposal, pending a decision at the Assembly's regular 1978 session on a comprehensive study of honoraria (see section below).

The Assembly adopted the Fifth Committee's recommended text, as section IV of resolution 32/212, by a recorded vote of 123 to 12.

(For text of section IV of resolution 32/212 and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Study of the question of honoraria

On 21 December 1977, the General Assembly took note of a decision of the Fifth Committee—approved, without vote, the day before, on a suggestion by its Chairman—to postpone to the 1978 session consideration of a report of the Secretary-General on a comprehensive study of the question of honoraria payable to members of organs and subsidiary organs of the United Nations.

The Assembly's request for the report, originally submitted in 1976 pursuant to a 1975 Assembly resolution,²⁴ derived from the Secretary-General's view that some reasonable adjustments needed to be made to the honoraria currently payable to certain United Nations organs, taking into account inflation and other economic factors that had changed since the honoraria were established. Consideration of the report had also been deferred in 1976.²⁵

Organizational nomenclature in the Secretariat

The Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly at its 1977 session the second progress report on the adoption of a standardized and uniform organizational nomenclature for the Secretariat* submitted pursuant to an Assembly decision adopted in 1975.²⁶

In his report, the Secretary-General proposed a six-level nomenclature: level 1 — Department, secretariat or office; 2 — Centre; 3 — Division; 4 — Branch; 5 — Section; and 6 — Unit. These were intended to apply to all organizational units fully or partly financed by the regular budget, excluding the International Court of Justice and organizational elements of a non-permanent nature, such as special missions.

In its related report, ACABQ welcomed the report of the Secretary-General as a first step in the direction of a logical organizational framework for the Secretariat, agreed that some flexibility in application of the guidelines must be allowed and noted that his proposals would have no financial implications.

Following discussion in the Fifth Committee, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Malaysia, New Zealand, Panama, the Philippines, Singapore, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey and Venezuela sponsored a draft resolution on the subject. The Fifth Committee approved their text on 14 November by 82 votes to 13, with 5 abstentions.

On 21 December 1977, by a recorded vote of 122 to 9, the General Assembly adopted the Fifth Committee's recommended text as resolution 32/204, by which inter alia it endorsed the general direction of reform in nomenclature proposed by the Secretary-General. It encouraged him to proceed expeditiously with the application of the measures envisaged, taking into account observations made by ACABQ and the views expressed in the Fifth Committee. The Assembly welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to report on the application of the proposed measures and decided to consider the question in 1978 on the basis of that report. Finally, it urged intergovernmental bodies to avoid recommendations giving particular designations to organizational units or their heads which might not be in conformity with the proposed nomenclature.

Before approving the text, the Fifth Committee rejected, by 22 votes in favour to 34 against, with 41 abstentions, amendments proposed by the USSR to three operative paragraphs. They would have had the Assembly: endorse the organizational nomenclature proposed by the Secretary-General at levels 1 and 2, while encouraging him to prepare final proposals on levels 3 to 6, taking into account ACABQ's observations and views expressed in the Fifth Committee; welcome the Secretary-General's intention to submit a progress report on organizational nomenclature to its 1978 regular session; and decide to consider the question then.

Conditions of service and compensation for officers other than Secretariat officials

On 21 December 1977, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General, with such advice as he deemed desirable, to prepare, in the context of the comprehensive study of the question of honoraria (see section above), a study of the conditions of service and compensation appropriate for the officers serving the General Assembly, other than Secretariat officials, whose terms and conditions of selection, duties and responsibilities precluded active engagement by governmental, intergovernmental or other specified entities.

The draft decision was proposed in the Fifth Committee by the United States during the Committee's consideration of a report of the Secretary-General on revised budget estimates for the International Civil Service Commission. The decision also provided for reconsideration of proposals for compensation for ICSC Commissioners (see p. 993).

The final text proposed for adoption incorporated or took account of a number of oral amendments proposed by Ghana, by Japan, by Turkey and by the United Republic of Cameroon. The Fifth Committee approved the amended draft decision by consensus on 17 December. The Assembly included the text as a provision of section XI of its 11-part resolution 32/212, which was adopted without a vote.

(For text of section XI of resolution 32/212, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

United Nations International School

On 17 December 1977, the United Kingdom introduced in the Fifth Committee a draft resolution by which the General Assembly would have affirmed its opposition to any form of subsidy to the United Nations International School, and would decide that the provision in the United Nations regular budget for the servicing of the Board of Trustees of the School was a special case which did not constitute a subsidy.

The United Kingdom withdrew its proposal, stating that a basis had not been established for arriving at a consensus on the draft. It nevertheless reiterated its support for the opinion of ACABQ that the one-time grant of $2 million to the School authorized in 1974²⁷ precluded any other assistance to the School from the regular budget.

Resolution 32/203, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/32/490, adopted without objection by Assembly on 21 December 1977, meeting 110.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision of 18 December 1974, taken at its twenty-ninth session, by which it outlined principles and guidelines for the use of experts and consultants in the United Nations, and its decision of 17 December 1975, taken at its thirtieth session, in which it reaffirmed the aforesaid principles and guidelines, which should be implemented promptly, fully and effectively,

Recalling further its resolution 31/205 of 22 December 1976, in which it reaffirmed the decisions taken at its twenty-ninth and thirtieth sessions and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, a report on the implementation of the aforementioned decisions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Expressing the view that the above-mentioned report does not adequately respond to the requirements of the relevant decisions of the General Assembly and still reflects deficiencies in the implementation of the principles and guidelines on the use of experts and consultants,

Taking note of the assurances of the Secretary-General that future reports will fully and adequately reflect the existing practice in the use of experts and consultants in the United Nations,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session a full and comprehensive report, showing his efforts to eliminate existing deficiencies in the implementation of principles and guidelines on the use of experts and consultants in the United Nations;

2. Requests further that such a report should contain detailed comparative data as well as a statement evaluating the status of implementation of the principles and guidelines set by the General Assembly.

Resolution 32/209, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/32/490, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1977, meeting 110.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that its decision of 18 December 1974, taken at its twenty-ninth session, by which it outlined principles and guidelines for the use of experts and consultants in the United Nations, provided, inter alia, that:

(a) The Secretary-General should ensure that expenditure for consultant services is maintained within the approved figure 1974-1975 and that no supplementary estimates are presented,

(b) The estimates under this heading in future biennial programme budgets should be prepared with determined restraint, with a view to achieving reductions in the funds requested for this field of activities,

Noting with concern that the aggregate appropriation for experts and consultants proposed by the Secretary-General for the biennium 1978-1979 totals $11,423,000, compared with approved appropriations for 1974-1975 of $6,784,000,

Noting that the commendable reduction in proposed expenditure on consultant services envisaged in the estimates for the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, in section 5A of the programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979, arising from greater utilization of staff resources available within the Secretariat and highly selective recourse to external assistance, has not been reflected in the estimates for certain other budget sectors,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to re-examine proposed expenditure on experts and consultants in 1978-1979 following approval of the programme budget with a view to achieving savings in the aggregate allocation for such activities and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that no supplementary estimates are presented for expenditure on experts and consultants during the biennium 1978-1979.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/159 of 21 December 1976, in paragraph 18 of which it decided to include Arabic among the official and working languages of the machinery of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, particularly all sessions of the Conference, the Trade and Development Board and its main committees,

Noting that the rules of procedure of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Trade and Development Board and some of its main committees have already been amended accordingly,

Recalling that, in section VIII of its resolution 31/208 of 22 December 1976, it approved the organizational arrangements proposed by the Secretary-General in his report to the General Assembly at its thirty-first session with a view to providing an initial target level of Arabic language services to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development while simultaneously alleviating some of the chronic problems facing the provision of such services to the Assembly and its Main Committees,

Noting, however, that, as far as Arabic translation services are concerned, the Secretary-General in his progress report makes it clear that those organizational arrangements have not sufficiently achieved their purported objectives with regard to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and to the General Assembly and its Main Committees, while admitting the uncertain nature of their future prospects,

Recognizing the great importance which the Arab States Members of the United Nations attach to the work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as well as their expressed need for having its documentation issued in Arabic in time to enable their delegations to participate constructively in its deliberations and activities,

Convinced that an efficient, timely and less costly provision of Arabic translation services to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development can be achieved only by the installation of an adequately staffed service at its headquarters,

Bearing in mind the magnitude and urgency of the efforts needed to enable such a service to meet adequately the Arabic translation requirements of the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to be held in 1979,

1. Takes note of the progress report of the Secretary-General concerning Arabic language services in the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, while continuing the speedy implementation of the organizational arrangements contained in paragraphs 15 to 21 of his report, to replace the present arrangement set out in paragraph 25 of his report by establishing, as from 1 January 1978, on a permanent basis, an Arabic Translation Section in the United Nations Office at Geneva primarily to serve the bodies of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and, as an initial step, to provide the staff requirements for the biennium 1978-1979 for this Section, by transferring to it the posts already established under section VIII of General Assembly resolution 31/208, with the addition of a post of Chief of Section;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in close consultation and co-operation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, proposals aimed at the full implementation of Conference resolution 86(IV) of 28 May 1976, endorsed by the General Assembly in paragraph 18 of its resolution 31/159, and to submit those proposals to the Assembly at its thirty-fourth session;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue his search for and to apply adequate methods, including advance translation of appropriate documentation and provision of temporary assistance when necessary, to ensure the timely provision of Arabic translation services to the General Assembly and its Main Committees, and to report on the results to the Assembly as appropriate.

The intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

Chapter I

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In 1977, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)¹ continued its activities, in accordance with the objectives laid down in its statute, to accelerate and enlarge the contribution of atomic energy to peace, health and prosperity throughout the world.

In its annual report, IAEA stated that 1977 presented a mixed picture for the nuclear power industry. Orders for new nuclear power stations increased over the preceding year and the safety record continued to be excellent, but concern was expressed in some countries about the risks of further proliferation of nuclear weapons. The year 1977 saw a marked increase in the number of national and international evaluative studies covering the entire nuclear fuel cycle or major parts of it, and the view was reaffirmed that, in the longer term, nuclear power continued to be attractive to almost all oil-importing countries in terms of both economic advantage and energy independence.

During the year, IAEA continued its activities relating to the application of isotopes and radiation in medicine and life sciences, in food and agriculture, in the development of water resources and in industry. The Agency also continued its work concerning the safety and standardization of nuclear reactors, the nuclear safety standards programme. Since its inception in 1974, some 25 safety codes and guides for nuclear plants had been or were being prepared under this programme.

An International Conference on Nuclear Power and its Fuel Cycle was held from 2 to 13 May 1977 at Salzburg, Austria. The Conference discussed the over-all role to be played by nuclear energy with particular reference to the nuclear fuel cycle and the need for its integration.

The Agency supported the two-year International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation—intended to evaluate means for developing and operating the nuclear fuel cycle in ways that minimize risks of nuclear proliferation—by providing technical and secretariat assistance, and intended to continue support, particularly in the area of technical co-ordination, thus emphasizing IAEA'S dual responsibility in promoting and safeguarding nuclear activities.

The twenty-first session of the IAEA General Conference was held at Vienna, Austria, from 26 to 30 September 1977. Having withdrawn in 1970, Nicaragua was readmitted as a member on 25 March 1977; the membership of IAEA was thus 110.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

As at 31 December 1977, 100 non-nuclear-weapon States had ratified or acceded to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (Non-Proliferation Treaty).²

Sixty-six of these States, including seven members of the European Communities, had concluded safeguards agreements with the Agency. Fifty-five of the agreements had entered into force.

In 20 States, IAEA safeguards were applied under agreements other than those in connexion with the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

By the end of 1977, safeguards applied by IAEA under all types of agreements covered nuclear material in 100 power reactors, 169 research reactors and critical facilities, 44 conversion, fabrication, enrichment and reprocessing plants and 229 other nuclear installations.

Twelve safeguards agreements concluded with IAEA, eight of which were already in force, consisted of comprehensive arrangements satisfying the requirements of both the Non-Proliferation Treaty and the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco).³

With the increase in IAEA safeguards activities, further standardization of safeguards agreements was pursued and safeguards techniques were improved, in particular with respect to the application of portable, non-destructive assay instrumentation and television surveillance systems.

Nuclear power

At the end of 1977, nuclear power plants with a total capacity of 95,000 megawatts (electrical) (MW) accounted for 5.3 per cent of the world's electricity-generating capacity. The record of operating nuclear power plants continued to be excellent, with 1,500 reactor years accumulated without any significant spread of radio-activity to the environment or any radiation-induced fatality.

In May 1977, IAEA organized the International Conference on Nuclear Power and its Fuel Cycle which confirmed the interest of countries in nuclear power as a necessary and irreplaceable source of future energy supply and as an immediate substitute for oil and gas in electricity production. For the year 2000, nuclear power capacity was forecast at 1,300,000 MW, or some 35 per cent of electrical energy and 15 per cent of primary energy.

The Agency continued during the year to carry out several major programmes aimed at assisting developing member States in introducing nuclear power in their systems of electricity production. In six developing countries, nuclear power planning surveys and detailed analyses of the prospects of nuclear power were carried out; in 1977, studies were completed for Jamaica and Venezuela. Substantial progress was recorded during the year in the development of an IAEA energy data bank, and 27 developing countries requested IAEA'S assistance in uranium exploration and processing. Also, IAEA prepared a comprehensive study of the economic aspects of reprocessing nuclear fuel in a regional fuel-reprocessing centre.

During the year, IAEA held special training courses and continued to provide assistance related to nuclear manpower development. A project financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on manpower development was under way in Brazil and joint studies on this subject were initiated with Argentina and the Philippines. In addition, IAEA served as a focal point for the dissemination of information concerning technology and reliability of nuclear power plants of the proven and advanced types.

Environment

The Agency continued its expanded programme relating to the protection of man and the environment. During 1977, environment-related activities included studies of: monitoring of radio-active airborne and liquid releases from nuclear facilities; handling of radiation accidents; application of environmental impact analysis to the nuclear power industry; and procedures for establishing limits for the release of radio-active materials into the environment.

The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) provided support for studying the methodology of radiation-effects experiments with aquatic organisms and ecosystems. Co-operation with UNEP also included the preparation of panels on the environmental impact of fossil fuel, nuclear power and renewable sources of energy, the development of recommendations concerning radio-active releases in the Mediterranean area, and environmental protection in the Danube catchment area.

Nuclear information

The International Nuclear Information System (INIS) was initiated in 1970 to provide a comprehensive abstracting and indexing service of the literature dealing with all aspects of the peaceful uses of atomic energy; a retrospective file of over 350,000 document references and 100,000 reports in microfiche format has been built up. Work commenced in 1977 on the establishment of an experimental facility permitting IAEA member States to retrieve information directly from INIS files by remote computer terminals.

The Agency's nuclear data programme continued to serve as an international data centre, offering nuclear and atomic data centre services at no cost to all member States.

Technical assistance

During 1977, 69 countries received IAEA technical assistance in the form of expert services or equipment, or both. A total of 457 fellowships was awarded for individual studies and 444 persons participated in 19 group training projects. The technical assistance provided by IAEA in 1977 exceeded $9 million.

In addition, IAEA served as the executing agency for 18 large-scale UNDP projects: applied nuclear physics (Morocco); development of nuclear technology (Romania); irradiation sterilization of medical products (Hungary); a national nuclear energy centre (Chile); non-destructive testing and quality control (Argentina); nuclear energy development programme (Peru); nuclear power programme manpower development (Brazil); nuclear research in agriculture (Brazil and Indonesia); nuclear techniques in animal production (Nigeria); radiation-processing demonstration facilities (Egypt, Republic of Korea and Yugoslavia); tsetse fly eradication (Nigeria); and uranium exploration (Chile, Greece, Pakistan and Turkey).

The Agency also provided assistance to a project in Bangladesh for the use of nuclear techniques in agricultural research, which was financed by Sweden.

The target for voluntary contributions for IAEA'S technical assistance programme was increased from $6 million for 1977 to $7 million for 1978. The programme was financed by donations from member States, UNDP, multilateral and bilateral funds, and moneys provided under funds-in-trust arrangements.

Life sciences

In co-operation with the World Health Organization (WHO), IAEA continued its programme to foster the development of methods and techniques for the application of radiation and radio-nuclides in medicine, biology and health-related environmental research and to promote techniques for improving accuracy in radiation dosimetry.

Symposia and seminars in 1977 covered the following subjects: radio-immunoassay and related procedures in medicine; national and international standardization of radiation dosimetry; and basic methods and techniques in radio-biological and environmental health research.

Technical committees and advisory group meetings dealt with: the uses of radio-isotopes in haematology; the radiation sensitivity of pathogenic organisms in sewage; the clinical applications of particle radiation and the role of radio-sensitivity modifiers; the radio-biological equivalents of chemical pollutants; facilities for in-vitro radio-assays; and stable isotopes in the life sciences.

Under IAEA'S research contract programme, 14 co-ordinated programmes of research in relation to the life sciences were continued. Co-ordination meetings were held in Austria, Finland, Norway, Poland and Thailand, discussing, inter alia: maintenance of nuclear medicine instrumentation in developing countries; medical application of activation analysis; comparative methods for the study of trace elements in human nutrition; radiation-induced chromosomal aberrations for genetic risk evaluation in man; and improvement in radio-therapy of cancer.

In the field of dosimetry, the number of participating laboratories in the IAEA/WHO Secondary Standards Dosimetry Laboratories network increased from nine to 29.

Physical sciences and laboratories

The Agency's physics programme continued to promote co-operation among scientists throughout the world and to assist developing countries in the areas of physics, chemistry, industrial applications of isotopes, isotope hydrology and nuclear data.

Research programmes in 1977 included the development of methods for the application of Mössbauer spectroscopy in mineralogy, soil sciences and ceramics, and elemental analysis using proton-induced X-ray fluorescence. A symposium was held at Vienna on new areas of applicability of neutron scattering techniques. Research reactor utilization in developing countries was the subject of different meetings.

The Agency continued to co-ordinate research on controlled nuclear fusion through the work of the International Fusion Research Council, which updated the status-of-fusion report at a meeting held at the International Centre for Theoretical Physics at Trieste, Italy. The report assessed the potentials of fusion reactors, considered environmental effects and suggested goals which might be reached. A meeting on fusion reactor concepts considered potential designs and engineering details of future fusion reactors, and an advisory group meeting on cross-field conduction and transport was held, at which plasma theorists exchanged views on observed losses of energy and particles in magnetic confinement systems.

In chemistry, a symposium was held to review the current status of nuclear techniques in exploration, extraction and processing of mineral resources. Five projects on the use of nuclear techniques for mineral prospecting and trace-element analysis were completed during the year and the preparation and control of radio-pharmaceuticals and radiation processing of industrial products continued. Also, the programme continued on the critical assessment and compilation of thermodynamic data for the actinide elements and their compounds.

With IAEA co-operation, isotope hydrology programme subcontractual services were provided for UNDP projects in Ecuador, Guatemala, India and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Eight countries received advisory services and assistance, including laboratory services and help in the establishment of environmental isotope analytical facilities. The Agency also collaborated with UNEP and the World Meteorological Organization in meetings on isotope hydrology.

In the nuclear data area, IAEA distributed targets and sample materials in response to requests by nuclear physics laboratories in developing countries. Also, under a programme on atomic and molecular data required for fusion, IAEA in 1977 began publication of a quarterly International Bulletin on Atomic and Molecular Data for Fusion. The Agency continued its nuclear data programme in co-operation with regional data centres and published its comprehensive annual reference index on neutron data (called CINDA).

The IAEA laboratory at Seibersdorf, Austria, continued its work, including analytical quality-control services for member States and provision of radio-nuclide research on seed protein improvement and sterile-insect release techniques.

The International Laboratory of Marine Radio-activity in Monaco continued its research in radioactive pollution of the marine environment. It participated in UNEP'S Mediterranean Action Plan and provided intercalibration and intercomparison services on the pollution of the marine environment by selected heavy metals and chlorinated hydrocarbons.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics at Trieste provided courses on: physics and technology; physics and frontiers of knowledge; applicable mathematics and planning models; physics and energy; and the physics of natural resources and the environment.

Food and agriculture

Under joint programmes of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and IAEA, work was continued on ways and means of increasing food production, reducing food losses, and upgrading the nutritional quality of agricultural products through the application of isotope and radiation methodology. Attention was also focused on minimizing the hazards of contamination of food and the environment resulting from intensive use of agricultural chemicals for crop production.

Co-ordination and support of research was furthered through approximately 25 co-ordinated research programmes, in which scientists from developing and developed parts of the world were brought together to co-operate in the solution of practical agricultural problems relevant to the developing countries by means of isotope and radiation techniques.

In 1977, the joint FAO/IAEA programme had technical responsibility for over 50 small-scale and several large-scale technical assistance projects in developing countries. The projects aimed at applying isotope and radiation techniques as an integrated part of ongoing agricultural training, research and extension. Training continued to be an important factor; in addition to training courses, the joint FAO/IAEA programme held symposia and seminars, and published and distributed findings, laboratory training manuals and newsletters.

Among the main priorities of the programme were the reduction of post-harvest losses through food irradiation, and the control of African trypanosomiasis through practical field application of the sterile-insect technique for the control of tsetse flies.

Other projects under the joint programme dealt with isotope and radiation applications to selected studies of fertilizer- and water-use efficiency, biological fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, genetic improvement of food-crop plants, animal nutrition, reproduction, adaptation and diseases, chemical residues and pollution, and integrated insect-pest management.

Secretariat

As at the end of 1977, 1,485 staff members were employed by IAEA. Of these, 477—drawn from 64 countries—were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,008 were in the General Service and Maintenance and Operatives Service categories.

Budget

The twenty-first General Conference of IAEA, at its September 1977 session, adopted a regular budget of $51,379,000 for 1978.

Chapter II

The International Labour Organisation (ILO)

During 1977, the International Labour Organisation (ILO)¹ continued its activities to promote better conditions in: employment policy; the working environment; technical and management training; the protection of freedom of association; social security; and the status of women workers.

Membership in ILO rose to 134 during the year, with the admission of Guinea-Bissau on 24 February, Bahrain on 20 April and Seychelles on 25 April. The United States withdrew from membership on 6 November 1977.

Meetings

The International Labour Conference held its sixty-third session at Geneva, Switzerland, from 1 to 22 June 1977, attended by about 1,400 delegates, advisers and observers from 126 countries. The Conference had before it the annual report of the Director-General of ILO and the thirteenth special report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment in South Africa.

The Conference also considered four technical items: employment conditions of nurses; protection against occupational hazards caused by air pollution, noise and vibration; labour administration; and freedom of association and procedures for determining working conditions in the public service. The Conference adopted a Convention and Recommendation on each of the first two items, and discussed the other two with a view to adopting international labour standards at its 1978 session.

In accordance with usual practice, the Conference set up a tripartite committee to examine the application by member States of the 147 Conventions and 155 Recommendations adopted since 1919. The Conference, for lack of a quorum, did not adopt the report of the committee.

The committee also reviewed an ILO survey on the application of the Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962. The Conference adopted a resolution calling on ILO to reinforce tripartite co-operation between Governments, employers and workers in member countries, both in carrying out technical co-operation and in supervising observance of ILO Conventions and Recommendations.

The African Regional Conference, held at Abidjan, Ivory Coast, from 27 September to 6 October 1977, discussed employment problems, the improvement and harmonization of social security systems in Africa, education for development and the implementation of international labour standards.

The Asian Advisory Committee held its seventeenth session at Manila, Philippines, from 29 November to 8 December 1977, to consider the strengthening of co-operation between Asian countries and ILO for the further development of social and labour policies. Also in November, the Governing Body of the International Labour Office adopted a Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy.

The Building, Civil Engineering and Public Works Committee, which met at Geneva from 12 to 20 January, discussed the industry's instability of employment and earnings, and the training of building workers and managers.

The Metal Trades Committee, meeting from 20 to 28 April, considered safety and health hazards to metal-workers, the employment consequences of scientific and other developments in the metal trades, and the impact of efforts previously made to improve working conditions in the industry.

A Tripartite Meeting on Conditions of Work and Employment of Professional Workers adopted a compendium of principles and good practices for these workers at its meetings at Geneva from 22 to 29 November.

The Tripartite Technical Meeting for Civil Aviation, held from 7 to 15 December, considered working conditions, employment, and safety and health in the industry. It underlined the importance for civil aviation of sound labour/management relations and of guarantees of full exercise of trade union rights.

Other expert meetings were held to discuss: accident prevention on ships and in port; use of the computer in industrial relations; social security and the rising cost of medical care; safety problems in the construction and operation of offshore drilling installations in the petroleum industry; and limits of occupational exposure to dangerous airborne substances.

Working environment

The International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment, approved by the ILO Governing Body in 1976, continued to encourage member States to set definite objectives for improving working conditions and the working environment. The Programme included standard-setting and operational activities, studies and tripartite meetings, and clearing-house activities. The approach also included the dispatch of multidisciplinary teams to member States and the design of an international alert system to detect potential hazards to the health of workers. As at the end of 1977, more than 30 member States had requested visits by multidisciplinary teams.

World Employment Programme

The World Employment Programme was launched in 1969 as ILO'S principal contribution to the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.² The Programme was designed to assist Governments in reshaping their policies and plans in order to achieve their employment and income-distribution objectives more effectively.

The Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the 1976 World Employment Conference³ was to serve as the basis for research activities and technical assistance under the World Employment Programme during the remaining years of the Decade.

Field activities

During 1977, ILO spent more than $48 million on technical co-operation activities (a decrease of about 5.8 per cent from the $51 million spent in 1976) to promote employment, development of human resources and social institutions, and improvement in living conditions and working conditions.

Most of this expenditure ($27 million) continued to be financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The ILO regular programme provided $4.4 million in 1977. Funds placed at ILO'S disposal by multilateral and bilateral aid agencies and other special programmes rose to $13.7 million in 1977. Activities financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) increased in 1977, with expenditures of $3.3 million as against expenditures of $2.5 million in 1976.

A breakdown of expenditures by field of activity showed that training received the largest share of funds ($26.4 million), followed by employment planning and promotion ($11.7 million), development of social institutions ($8.2 million), working conditions and environment ($1.1 million) and social security ($800,000).

By region, Africa received the largest percentage of the funds (39.9), followed by Asia (27.4), the Americas (15.9), interregional projects (10.5), the Middle East (5.2) and Europe (1.1).

A breakdown of expenditure on technical co-operation by field of activity, source of funds, type of assistance, and country, territory or region is shown in the tables below.

Educational activities

The International Institute for Labour Studies at Geneva, an ILO centre for advanced study in the labour and social fields, included in its 1977 programme nine educational activities for 199 participants.

An international study course on labour and social policy and an international internship course on active labour-policy development were held at Geneva. The major topics studied were: economic and social change for development; manpower, employment and population; industrial relations and the working environment; and the role of ILO in shaping labour and social policy.

A second study course for social leaders from Portuguese-speaking African countries was organized at the African Regional Labour Administration Centre at Yaounde, United Republic of Cameroon.

The Government of Kuwait financed an inter-regional study course on labour and social development policy for participants from Asian and Arab countries. The course was held at Geneva and in Kuwait.

With the financial support of the Swedish International Development Authority, the International Institute, under its programme for English-speaking countries of eastern and western Africa, held a workshop on the social aspects of employment promotion and industrial relations at Accra, Ghana.

Students from the Administrative Training Centre at Cotonou, Benin, took part in a seminar on social and development policy held at Geneva and at Bordeaux, France, which was organized by the Institute.

Other activities during the year included: a regional study course on the economic and social development of southern Africa, held at Lusaka (Zambia), Nairobi (Kenya) and Geneva; a training programme at Geneva for research officers from professional organizations in Africa and Asia, focusing on the practical aspects of research on labour issues for policy-making; and an advanced training course on international documentation, organized jointly with the Association of International Libraries, held at Geneva.

International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training

In 1977, the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, Italy, conducted 64 residential training courses for 1,370 vocational trainers, managers and trade union officials. These courses were specifically designed to provide the advanced training essential for effective development.

The Centre continued its efforts to assist developing countries to establish and operate their national training systems and institutions. It also furnished technical support services to other agencies in the preparation, design, implementation and revision of training projects.

Publications

Dissemination of the results of research carried out by ILO and expected to be of value to ILO's constituents, as well as to scholars and practitioners in the social policy and labour fields, continued in 1977 with the publication of over 30 books in English, French and Spanish, in addition to such periodicals as the bi-monthly International Labour Review and Legislative Series and the quarterly Bulletin of Labour Statistics and Social and Labour Bulletin.

Publications issued within the framework of ILOS International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment included: Adapting Working Hours to Modern Needs; Night Work; a revised edition of Safety and Health in Dock Work; and a code of practice on Protection of Workers Against Noise and Vibration in the Working Environment.

Publications relating to human rights were the following: Freedom of Association and Economic Development; Tenure of Trade Union Office; The Right to Organize; Labour and Discrimination in Namibia; and Labour Conditions and Discrimination in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe).

Two new volumes on multinational enterprises were issued, namely: Social and Labour Practices of Multinational Enterprises in the Petroleum Industry and Social and Labour Practices of Some US-Based Multinationals in the Metal Trades.

New titles in the World Employment Programme series of studies included: Manual on the Planning of Labour-intensive Road Construction; Technology for Basic Needs; Poverty and Landlessness in Rural Asia; and Agrarian Reform and Rural Poverty, Egypt, 1952-1975.

Two volumes were issued dealing with aspects of social security: Social Security for Migrant Workers and Pensions and Inflation.

In the field of industrial relations, Grievance Arbitration: A Practical Guide was issued.

The 1977 edition of the Yearbook of Labour Statistics was issued at the close of the year.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1977, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, indefinite, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and at area, branch and other offices was 2,629. Of these, 1,456 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 106 nationalities), and 1,173 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the professional staff, 650 were assigned to technical co-operation projects.

Budget

The gross expenditure budget of ILO for the biennium 1976-1977 amounted to $160,616,406.⁴ This included $14,534,406 for the purpose of restoring to the Working Capital Fund amounts withdrawn in 1974-1975 under supplementary credits approved by the Governing Body.

Expenditures in 1976-1977 amounted to $161,972,145 including $1,355,739 charged to supplementary credits approved by the Governing Body, principally to meet increases in staff salaries and allowances. Budgetary income amounted to $146,461,711. The difference between income and expenditure, including the amount charged to supplementary credits, was financed by funds withdrawn from the Working Capital Fund.

In June 1977, the International Labour Conference adopted a budget of expenditure for the 1978-1979 biennium amounting to $169,074,000. Of this amount, $87,037,000 was to be assessed member States for 1978 and $82,037,000 for 1979. It also included an amount of $5 million for reimbursement in 1978 to the Working Capital Fund of part of the amount estimated to be required to cover the expected net shortfall of contributions in 1978-1979.

Final arrangements for financing in 1979 were left for consideration at the session of the Conference scheduled to be held in June 1978. The Conference decided at midyear 1977 that, in the event of a sharp reduction of resources resulting from a decision by the United States to withdraw from ILO with effect from November 1977, the Governing Body should be authorized to abolish regular-budget posts so that the Director-General would be in a position to achieve savings by making the necessary staff cuts.

Chapter III

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

During 1977, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)¹ continued its efforts against hunger and malnutrition and for an equitable distribution of the benefits accruing from agricultural development. At the same time, efforts were made to increase the food supply by reducing post-harvest and crop losses.

The FAO Conference, at its nineteenth session at Rome, Italy, in November, reviewed progress made towards achievement of the objectives set at its 1975 session. These objectives, which had included a yearly increase of at least 4 per cent in developing countries' food production, an increase in the flow of financial and other resources into agricultural production, and provision in the national policies of developing countries of incentives for farmers, had been furthered, the Conference considered, but at a disappointingly slow pace.

The Conference, in its programme of work for the 1978-1979 biennium, emphasized the need to remove constraints to increased production in developing countries. Activities of FAO were to include: promotion of improved nutrition at the grass-roots level; reduction of food losses; improvement of the daily life of rural women; provision of improved seeds; an attack on tick-borne diseases in Africa; training and credit programmes; and expansion of research and applied technology to help farmers, fishermen and foresters. The Conference approved steps which had been taken to decentralize operations and develop the Technical Co-operation Programme, which was financing 216 small-scale, quick-action programmes at a cost of $15.5 million.

At its nineteenth session, on 14 November 1977, the FAO Conference admitted eight new members—Angola, the Comoros, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Mozambique, Namibia, Sao Tome and Principe, and Seychelles—bringing FAO's membership to 144.

World food and agricultural situation

World food production appeared to have risen by 1.5 per cent in 1977, or less than the 2 per cent growth in population. Progress was slowest in Africa and in general in the poorest developing regions. Large food deficits were again faced in a number of countries.

World cereal stocks were expected to reach 160 million tons (not including China and the USSR, for which no information was available) by the end of the 1977/1978 crop season, or about 18 per cent of annual food consumption, which was regarded by FAO as a minimum level for world food security.

The recovery in forest production begun in 1976 appeared to be continuing, and fertilizer consumption increased as prices fell well below the earlier high levels. Pesticide supplies appeared to be adequate.

Total world export earnings from agricultural, fishery and forestry products increased due to an over-all improvement in prices, mostly to the benefit of developing market economies. These countries had met the target, set at the 1974 World Food Conference, of an annual 4 per cent increase in food production during 1974-1976, but the rate of increase in the developing countries as a whole between 1970 and 1976 was considerably lower. At the same time, total official commitments of external assistance to agriculture declined, amounting in 1976 to less than half the estimated annual requirements of the developing countries.

Assistance given in the form of food increased and was expected to rise to 9.6 million metric tons during 1977-1978; this was still below the target of 10 million tons set by the World Food Conference.

Concern was expressed at the FAO Conference over the slow progress towards the establishment of the International Undertaking on World Food Security, and it was pointed out that the improvement in world reserves provided the opportunity for more vigorous implementation of a co-ordinated system of nationally held stocks.

Activities in 1977

Field programmes

In 1977, FAO's funds amounted to $218 million, of which approximately two thirds were spent on field activities. The largest source of finance was the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) which accounted for about $90 million disbursed by FAO. Field activities were also financed by FAO's regular budget which committed more than $6 million under the Technical Co-operation Programme.

The FAO Office for Special Relief Operations committed $3.8 million in 1977 for the supply of pesticides, cereals, seeds, transport and equipment to the drought-stricken countries of the Sahel (Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta) and to Cape Verde, which was similarly affected. The Office also assisted these countries in the evaluation of the drought damage by organizing multidonor missions and by implementing emergency projects. Relief operations outside the Sahelian region amounted to about $1 million in 1977, benefiting Afghanistan, Bolivia, Burma, the Comoros, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Mozambique, Pakistan, Somalia, Togo and Yemen.

Donor Governments continued to channel funds for development and training through the FAO/Government Co-operative Programme. Total allocations at the end of 1977 were estimated at $120 million, compared to $92 million in 1976.

Under the Associate Expert Scheme, the assignment of some 365 associate experts engaged in field work and research was financed by donor countries and a further 63 were under recruitment at the end of 1977.

By the end of the year, pledges under the FAO/Near East Co-operative Programme totalled $32 million. Six regional and 20 national projects had been approved for financing.

World Food Programme

The resources committed by the United Nations/FAO World Food Programme since its inception in 1963 reached more than $3,200 million during 1977. The Programme's food-aid pledges for the 1977-1978 biennium exceeded $610 million as at the end of the year, or 81 per cent of the target of $750 million.

New projects were approved in 1977 for a total of $300 million. Among the recipients were India ($28 million), Egypt ($18 million) and the Philippines ($18 million) for nutrition projects for vulnerable groups (children, pregnant women and nursing mothers).

Emergency aid during 1977 totalled about $47 million for 23 operations in 19 countries. The Programme was also responsible for co-ordinating food aid in Angola, Ethiopia, Lebanon and the Sahel.

FAO Investment Centre

Developing countries seeking capital continued to turn to FAO for assistance in preparing pre-investment projects to attract multilateral, regional and national financing. Such projects in 1977 ranged from settlement schemes to credit for small farmers, irrigation and drainage, storage and marketing, forestry, fisheries and training.

Under FAO's co-operative programme with regional banks, assistance was extended to the African Development Bank and Fund for a number of projects; three new projects were approved in 1977 for total investment costs of $101 million.

Nuclear energy in agriculture

Under a programme jointly operated by FAO and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to apply nuclear techniques to improve agriculture, more than 170 agricultural research projects were undertaken during 1977 in national institutes of developing countries. Research subjects included agronomy, soil science, irrigation, plant breeding, animal husbandry, protection of the environment, food preservation and chemical residues.

Scientists of developing countries were given advanced training in isotopes and radiation applied to agriculture, and more than 60 technical assistance projects were implemented in 36 developing countries. Nigeria and IAEA agreed to a joint project to eradicate a tsetse fly species by means of the sterile-fly technique. A training course—sponsored by FAO, IAEA and the Swedish International Development Authority—on nuclear techniques for studying pesticide residues and other trace contaminants was held in Sri Lanka.

Land and water management

In 1977, FAO continued to assist members to evaluate crop production potential, assess land resources by agro-ecological zones, develop new irrigation and rehabilitate existing systems. Training programme workshops were held in Ghana, Peru, the Republic of Korea and Thailand and eight soil reclamation studies were carried out in the Near East and Latin America.

New criteria for speedier implementation of land reclamation projects were applied in Iraq, where FAO helped to restore productivity to land abandoned due to soil salinity. Work was done on drainage and water conveyance structures, and tests involving engineering design, performance of heavy equipment, cropping patterns, fertilizer application and irrigation techniques were carried out on units of 500 to 800 hectares. Similar techniques were applied in India with the aim of increasing food production over an area of 13 million hectares. Support for this project came from FAO and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank).

During the agricultural year 1976/1977, the FAO Fertilizer Programme was involved in 3,600 trials, 7,750 demonstrations and group training for 162,000 farmers. In addition, nine distribution and credit schemes affecting about 12,500 small farmers were established in 1977.

The International Fertilizer Supply Scheme helped 18 countries with the shipment of 76,700 metric tons of fertilizer. The proceeds from the sale of donated fertilizer were set aside by the Governments of 10 countries for the improvement of fertilizer distribution, credit facilities and extension services.

Plant production and protection

The seed improvement and development programme of FAO provided technical guidance to 80 experts in 23 field projects during 1977, with a production target of 130,000 tons of certified seed of improved varieties of food, industrial, vegetable and pasture crops. Sixteen Governments were assisted in drawing up national seed programmes and some 40,000 seed samples were distributed for experimental purposes during the year.

A regional project designed to enhance field crop production in the Near East and Africa helped 22 countries to develop high-yielding varieties of wheat, barley, maize, sorghum, millet and food legumes, and to familiarize themselves with irrigation methods and rain-fed agronomy.

Other activities during the year included: an industrial crop survey conducted in 20 Latin American countries; the replanting of 35,000 hectares in Thailand under a World Bank-financed rubber rehabilitation programme; assistance to 51 countries relating to out-of-season crops and home-grown produce; and the launching of a programme for the ecological management of arid and semi-arid rangelands, which was to focus on training, plant selection and testing, and increased seed production. Switzerland sponsored a forage plant project for the Sahelian countries. Also, a five-year action programme at a total cost of $68.5 million was approved by the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and by the Club des amis du Sahel. The programme was to include training of plant protection personnel, a pest surveillance and forecasting system, post-harvest food protection and strengthening of infrastructure.

Additional activities included training in plant quarantine (Nigeria and Pacific island countries), plant protection (India), control of coffee pests (El Salvador and Honduras), and food storage methods (Bangladesh).

A possible new locust outbreak in the Near East, forecast because of plentiful rains in the past three years, was prevented by the timely detection and destruction of the locusts before they could swarm. In 1977, the locust population in the major breeding areas was the lowest since 1972, and the locust recession entered its sixteenth year.

Forestry

In 1977, 270 FAO forestry specialists, 45 of them from developing countries, were helping to operate 135 field projects in 63 countries. Emphasis continued to be placed on the establishment of small-scale forest industries, the combined production of food and wood through systems of agrisilviculture, and the supply of fuel-wood, particularly for cooking in subtropical and arid regions.

Farmers and their families were resettled and given employment on reforestation work, soil conservation and road construction, under an FAO/UNDP watershed rehabilitation project in Honduras. Malaysia received assistance from FAO for drawing up a forestry development plan.

The FAO pulp and paper industries development programme continued in 1977, with field surveys carried out in 31 developing countries. Twenty-seven domestic market-oriented projects were identified, calling for a total investment of approximately $6,800 million over the next 20 years.

In Nigeria, a detailed inventory of more than 2 million hectares of tropical high forest was completed with FAO assistance.

Following studies on the development of forest resources and the establishment of forest industries, two FAO projects demonstrated a method of mechanized planting in northern Turkey. Another project aimed at the development of forest industries in the north Aegean, Marmara and Black Sea regions.

Livestock

In 1977, FAO's five-year programme for the control of African trypanosomiasis, a disease which affects humans (sleeping-sickness) and livestock, borne by the tsetse fly, continued with preparations for large-scale area development. A training seminar on trypanosomiasis was held at Nairobi, Kenya, sponsored by FAO, the World Health Organization (WHO) and the International Laboratory for Research on Animal Diseases. A post-graduate course in trypanosomiasis and tsetse ecology, consisting of three months' instruction in France and six months' field work in the Upper Volta, was carried out by the Institut d'ele-vage et de médecine vétérinaire des pays tropicaux in collaboration with the Federal Republic of Germany. A survey of trypano-tolerant livestock was initiated jointly by FAO, the International Livestock Centre for Africa and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), with a view to developing multiplier herds of the proper breeds.

When an exotic strain of foot-and-mouth disease virus appeared in two north African countries during the year, FAO sent vaccine for immediate use and helped to set up a pilot unit for vaccine production in Egypt.

Member Governments of FAO's Animal Production and Health Commission for Asia, the Far East and the South-West Pacific committed more than $4.5 million for a 12-project research programme aimed at promoting livestock production.

Through the FAO Artificial Insemination and Breeding Development Programme, regional seminars for high-level technicians were conducted in Egypt, Kenya and Sri Lanka, and approximately 100,000 doses of frozen bull-semen were donated by 14 countries.

With the assistance of Denmark and Sweden, courses were given on animal science, food hygiene and veterinary public health, and animal reproduction.

The FAO International Meat Development Scheme and the International Scheme for the Co-ordination of Dairy Development sent advisory missions to Afghanistan, Egypt, Iraq, Mali, Somalia and Uganda. As at the end of 1977, $270 million had been committed under those two schemes, including a $200-million project in the Sudan financed with Arab funds.

Fisheries

The world fish catch had increased in 1976, exceeding 73 million tons.

An FAO report to its 1977 Conference stated that 46 coastal States, including the major fishing countries, had enacted 200-nautical-mile limits and 21 had set limits of from 12 to 200 miles. Although the 200-mile zones as a whole represented some 35 per cent of the oceans, they comprised fully 90 per cent of sea fisheries under commercial exploitation. It was noted that the new regime of the sea posed scientific, jurisdictional and technical problems concerning which Governments would seek FAO advice.

Fishery projects numbered 196 in 1977; of these, three were global, eight interregional, 30 regional and 155 local. Under FAO's Indian Ocean Programme, projects were operating from the Near East to the Bay of Bengal, aimed at improving the quality of life and increasing the earnings of the fishing community. A concerted attack on the subsistence-level plight of fish-dependent communities in the Bay of Bengal was launched in 1977. Under a five-year project sponsored by the Swedish International Development Authority, FAO also assisted Bangladesh, India, Malaysia, Sri Lanka and Thailand to cope with the technical as well as the social and economic problems besetting fisheries in the area.

Bahrain, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates participated in a regional survey of fish species, in which biologists and master fishermen collected data through 1,300 survey stations and transmitted them to FAO for computer analysis. These countries also set up a subregional training centre in Kuwait, which offered two-year courses for skippers, mates, engine operators and extension workers.

With FAO assistance, training courses were held during the year on the management of small-scale fishery enterprises, echo-sounding and sonar techniques for fishermen, fish handling, processing and quality control. Canada contributed $1 million to a project to train fishing industry personnel for 16 western African countries.

The first of the regional marketing information services started operating in 1977 in Latin America, providing information to exporters of fish and fish products on marketing opportunities and channels, product and quality requirements, and trading conditions.

Also during the year, FAO launched the main phase of an Aquaculture Development and Co-ordination Programme with the objective of doubling world production within 10 years. Assistance was extended to Brazil and Nigeria for the establishment in 1978 of two regional centres for aquaculture research and training to service Latin America and Africa. A 1,200-hectare pilot project in Egypt was started with assistance from FAO's Technical Co-operation Programme and was expected to produce some 3,000 tons of fish annually.

Nutrition

Support continued in 1977 to enable developing countries to acquire the skills, infrastructure and capacity to pursue national policies governing long-term food and nutrition problems. Administrative and technical support for national programmes, for instance, went to Bangladesh, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Tunisia and the Upper Volta.

Training institutions were strengthened in Morocco and Uruguay, in-service training was provided in Kenya, Rwanda, Senegal, the Sudan and Zambia, and fellowships for study abroad were awarded in Mauritania, Togo and Zambia.

The FAO/WHO Codex Alimentarius Commission, set up to protect consumers against health hazards and fraud and to facilitate food trade through the acceptance of international standards, increased its membership to 115 countries. Fifteen more standards were proposed for submission to Governments, together with maximum limits for pesticide residues in food and codes of hygienic practice.

In co-operation with UNEP, FAO organized a six-month training course in India to qualify nationals of developing countries for participation in a co-ordinated food-contamination monitoring system, jointly sponsored by FAO and WHO.

Agricultural services

Protection against post-harvest losses continued to be one of FAO's priorities during the year. Remedial assistance focused on improved methods of crop harvesting, drying, storage, pest and weed control, and on processing, adequate infrastructure, and training at all levels. The FAO Conference voted $10 million and called for voluntary contributions of another $10 million to help developing countries reduce post-harvest losses which, according to FAO estimates, represented 10 per cent of their production. Plans called for the introduction of small-farm storage arrangements, community storage, small-scale grain driers and rice mills, pest-control training for storekeepers, and integrated rodent-control programmes.

During 1977, an FAO mission visited seven African countries to advise on low-cost storage and rural structures. A workshop held at Nairobi, Kenya, was attended by 30 participants from developing countries.

Other projects supported by FAO during the year included: an agricultural diversification programme in Jordan; an asparagus canning operation in Lesotho; fruit juice production in Rwanda; and cashew nut projects in Nigeria and Uganda.

Training programmes in food science and technology were established with FAO assistance at the University of Bogota, Colombia, and the Universidad Autónoma Metropolitana, Mexico. In Sri Lanka, an FAO/UNDP project helped to set up a training centre for rice grading and processing. Students from Asia and the Far East attended courses on food technology at Mysore, India, and training facilities in rice post-harvest technology were established at the West African Rice Development Association.

Other activities included feasibility studies for natural silk in Nepal and the Upper Volta, silk development in Colombia, Iran, the Ivory Coast and Sri Lanka, and assistance in planning a sericulture research institute in Turkey.

Freedom from Hunger Campaign

The Freedom from Hunger Campaign/Action for Development, a programme devised to promote personal participation in rural development and stimulate critical awareness of the issues involved, continued to channel funds from non-governmental sources. As at October 1977, 125 projects were operational in 60 countries. They were responsible for $11.4 million in contributions from international sources, and $9.6 million in contributions from local sources.

Agricultural statistics

The organization continued to encourage national participation in the 1980 World Census of Agriculture. A questionnaire on the status of preparations for the Census was issued to all members. As at the end of 1977, summary results from 45 out of 102 countries participating in the 1970 Census had been published in 18 issues of FAO's Census Bulletin.

Publications

In order to reach a wider audience with documents formerly issued in limited quantities, a new series of FAO Technical Papers was started in 1977. In addition to the existing series of FAO Agricultural Services Bulletins, Irrigation and Drainage Papers, and Soils Bulletins, the new series included Food and Nutrition, Forestry, Animal Production and Health, and Plant Production and Protection Papers and Conservation Guides.

Other publications issued in 1977 included: The State of Food and Agriculture; the Animal Health Yearbook; the Trade Yearbook; the Production Yearbook; the annual Commodity Review and Outlook; the Yearbook of Forest Products; the Yearbook of Fishery Statistics; the Annual Fertilizer Review; and the Monthly Bulletin of Food and Agricultural Statistics. Quarterlies included the World Animal Review; the Plant Protection Bulletin; and Unasylva, the forestry magazine. Ceres, a review of agricultural, economic and social aspects of development, appeared on a bi-monthly basis; and Food and Nutrition was issued twice a year.

Nineteen new depository libraries were appointed in 1977, 17 of them in developing countries.

Secretariat

The total number of staff employed by FAO at the end of 1977 at its headquarters and regional and country offices stood at 4,088, of whom 1,509 (drawn from more than 120 countries) were in the Professional and higher categories and 2,579 in the General Service category. Field project personnel, working in 118 countries and territories, comprised 1,805 in the Professional and higher categories and 359 in the General Service category.

Budget

The nineteenth session of the FAO Conference, meeting in November 1977, approved a budget of $211,350,000 to finance the FAO regular programme for the 1978-1979 biennium.

Chapter IV

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

During 1977, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)¹ gave priority to encouraging the development of cultural policies in many of its member States. A broad range of activities in the humanities, natural sciences, social sciences and communications continued.

During the year, two States joined UNESCO, bringing the number of member States to 142: Angola (11 March) and the Comoros (22 March). The organization also had two associate members, the British Eastern Caribbean Group and Namibia.

Education

The renovation of education continued to be of major concern to UNESCO, focusing on the promotion of human rights and the strengthening of international understanding, co-operation and peace. An important part of this renovation was the increasing orientation towards education rooted in the needs and lives of the people, respecting their cultural identities and responding to the exigencies of economic and social development. In this context, UNESCO undertook education programmes for Palestinian refugees and for refugees of the Middle East in collaboration with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East. Programmes for African refugees were carried out in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity.

In collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), UNESCO organized, at Tbilisi, USSR, an Intergovernmental Conference on Education Relative to the Environment, which defined the role of education in relation to the environment.

The struggle against illiteracy continued in 1977. The organization intensified its programmes of integrated rural development and devised new methods of literacy and post-literacy training in rural areas within the framework of national development plans. During the year, UNESCO also developed programmes to stimulate the adoption of innovations in national education plans. It assisted in the development of a world system of exchange of educational information based on the improvement of national institutions and their incorporation into regional or subregional networks.

The thirty-sixth International Conference on Education, organized by the International Bureau of Education, discussed the problem of information at the national and international levels as created by the improvement of systems of education. The Conference adopted a resolution inviting the Bureau to develop a plan for a world network for educational information.

Support continued during the year for regional institutions such as the Asian Programme for Educational Innovations for Development, the Network for Educational Innovations and Development in Africa, and the Educational Innovations and Programmes of Development in the Arab States. Preliminary work was begun on the establishment of similar networks in south-east Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean.

In accordance with its policy of decentralization, the functions of UNESCO's regional offices increased in studies and research, information and documentation, and support for operational programmes. In 1977, UNESCO contributed to 213 national, regional and subregional educational projects with financial assistance from sources such as the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, various regional banks for development, and funds-in-trust operations. These projects were carried out with the assistance of 250 specialists and 13 associated experts in developing countries.

Natural sciences

The programme, "Science in the Contemporary World: Human Implications of Scientific Advance," completed its third year with a symposium held at Madrid, Spain, and Oporto, Portugal, on problems and positive results of scientific research in genetics. Preparations were made to co-ordinate international activities that were to mark the Einstein centennial celebrations in 1979.

The number of countries linked to the international system for scientific and technical information rose to more than 70 during 1977. Projects costing more than $2 million were launched to improve science information services in Bulgaria, Colombia, Guinea, India and the Sudan.

The Intergovernmental Programme on Man and the Biosphere continued in 1977, concentrating on field activities at the regional level. The International Co-ordinating Council for the Programme, which met at Vienna, Austria, in October, considered that the Programme was making overall progress and was now fully operational in a large number of countries.

The Intergovernmental Council of the International Hydrological Programme held its second session in June in Paris to establish a work plan until the end of the Programme's first phase in 1980, and to co-ordinate the tasks of 110 specialists working on eight major projects. About 90 member States actively participated in the Programme. During the year, emphasis was laid on the follow-up of the United Nations Water Conference and the United Nations Conference on Desertification (both held in 1977) and on increased efforts to provide assistance to member States.

Progress continued on the International Geological Correlation Programme; over 600 groups of scientists in 114 countries participated in 62 research projects. In the marine sciences, a special effort was made to develop scientific research projects dealing with coastal ecosystems of particular interest to developing countries. Participating countries included Ecuador, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mexico and Thailand.

Two regional seminars on housing science and appropriate technology were held at Dakar, Senegal (April 1977), and Cairo, Egypt (November 1977), providing training and information on the application of appropriate technology to housing for the lowest-income population groups in developing countries. Also started in 1977 was a joint UNESCO/UNEP project aiming at the development of basic and continuing education on environmental aspects for engineers.

Social sciences

Work in the social sciences converged increasingly on basic problems of the contemporary world, particularly those related to socio-economic development. The social sciences programme was expanded and intensified, and priority was given to developing the capacity of member States to build up their own capabilities for objective analysis of social situations and the definition of collective goals.

Within UNESCO, additional activities were allocated to the Division of Human Rights and Peace, which organized meetings and carried out studies and research projects on themes relating to the International Women's Year (1975). Fundamental and interdisciplinary research on questions of philosophy continued and the results of several studies undertaken by specialists in culture were published. In co-operation with the International Bureau of Education, research continued into educational goals and theories.

In Asia, UNESCO continued to support the establishment of social science councils. Co-operation also continued with the European Co-ordination Centre for Research and Documentation in Social Sciences at Vienna, with the Latin American Social Science Council, a non-governmental organization for the co-ordination of social sciences, and with the Latin American Social Science Faculty, an intergovernmental organization concerned with post-graduate training and research.

Social science information and research results were provided by the International Social Science Journal, distributed in more than 80 countries in English, French and Spanish. Selections of the articles were also published in Arabic.

In addition, population communication projects were under way in six countries, and assistance and advisory services in the training and research fields continued to be offered through UNESCO'S four regional population communication units.

Culture

In 1977, studies of African, Arab, European and Latin American cultures continued and an advisory committee for the study of Oceanic cultures was created. The scope of studies covered Arctic cultures and the civilization of the Indus Valley.

The project to safeguard Venice, Italy, continued during the year. Additional contributions were received for restoration work at Philae (Egypt), Borobudur (Indonesia) and the Hanuman Dhoka Palace at Kathmandu (Nepal). Extrabudgetary contributions (including those from UNDP and the World Food Programme) were obtained for a number of operational projects.

Programmes for the development of museums continued with the training of technicians through lectures and regional in-service courses. An issue of the periodical Museums was published dealing with the museum and agriculture.

Communications

In the field of communications, an international congress on the improvement of national bibliographic control in the standardization of cataloguing practice was held in 1977.

In response to the increasing difficulty of acquiring adequate newsprint and other printing paper in developing countries, UNESCO continued to collaborate with other United Nations agencies, principally the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, on studies of the causes and effects of paper shortages. A study on the concept of free and balanced flow of information was begun and a book on the structure of the international news agency network was published.

A long-term programme of regional co-publication of children's books was started during the year and regional book-development centres continued to promote books and reading. Also continued was the exchange and fellowship programme between communication research institutions, including the promotion of the International Network of Documentation Centres on Communication Research and Policies.

The organization assisted the Union of African National Broadcasting Organizations in the establishment of a system of programme exchanges and television co-productions. The first stages of the scheme involved the television organizations of Ghana, Kenya, Nigeria, Sierra Leone and Zambia among English-speaking countries, and the Ivory Coast, Senegal, the Upper Volta and Zaire among French-speaking countries.

In Asia, the Asia-Pacific Institute for Broadcasting Development was incorporated as an intergovernmental institution with a membership of 12 countries and continued to expand both its regional training programme at the Malaysian centre and in-country courses through the regional committee of the Association of South-East Asian Nations.

A project to improve rural development through communication was begun in Honduras, with UNESCO providing assistance in the form of equipment and expertise.

A new activity was communication planning. In 1977, a tentative planning framework for the development of national communication systems was evaluated in a survey in Afghanistan, which projected mass media needs over an eight-year period, and in a simulation planning exercise, offered as part of an Asian regional workshop for communication specialists, held in Malaysia. Also, studies were made of the transfer of broadcasting technology from the developed to the developing world, and research and experimentation in the field of community media and development continued.

Technical assistance

Participation Programme

Under the UNESCO Participation Programme, member States, associate members, and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations continued to participate in the implementation of its objectives. As at 31 December 1976, a total of 1,107 projects was approved for the period 1976-1977. The largest number (469) was in the field of culture and communication, followed by education projects (220), co-operation with national commissions (159), social sciences (145), natural sciences (96), copyright and statistics (11) and training abroad (7).

Projects executed for UNDP

In 1976, projects for which UNESCO served as executing agency for UNDP and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities amounted to over $42 million, as shown in the table below.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1977, the total number of full-time staff employed by UNESCO on permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments was 3,230, drawn from 128 nationalities. Of these, 1,411 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,819 were in the General Service and Maintenance Worker categories.

Of the Professional staff, 550 were experts serving in the field; 346 of the General Service and Maintenance Worker categories were also employed in the field.

Budget

The 1976 session of the General Conference of UNESCO approved a budget of $224,413,000 for the two-year period 1977-1978. The Conference fixed the level of the Working Capital Fund at $16,800,000; amounts to be advanced by member States were to be calculated according to their percentage contribution.

Chapter V

The World Health Organization (WHO)

In 1977, the membership of the World Health Organization (WHO)¹ remained at 150, with two associate members.

The thirtieth World Health Assembly met at Geneva, Switzerland, from 2 to 19 May 1977.

The year was the final one of WHO'S general programme of work adopted for 1973-1977. Preparations were made during the year for the next programme of work for the years 1978 to 1983, which was to include the following main categories: development of comprehensive health services; disease prevention and control; promotion of environmental health; health manpower development; promotion and development of biomedical and health services research; and programme development and support.

The thirtieth World Health Assembly approved changes in the programme budget strategy and the adoption of biennial budgeting. These changes were to enhance the co-ordinating role of WHO and the reorientation of its work towards increased, effective technical co-operation with Governments. The Health Assembly also decided that the main social target of Governments and of WHO in the coming decades should be the attainment by all citizens of the world, by the year 2000, of a level of health that would permit them to lead a socially and economically productive life.

Strengthening of health services

During the year, WHO began to develop new approaches and new programmes with the aim of strengthening health infrastructures in order to meet fundamental needs of member States.

There was increasing evidence that many countries had accepted the primary health care approach. In the Africa region, some 17 countries had accepted this approach, and the South-East Asia region reported that eight countries had formulated primary health care projects as an integral part of basic health services. Seven countries in the Eastern Mediterranean region were also interested in this approach. In the Sudan, a primary health care programme was developed in co-operation with several bilateral agencies, and Iran was carrying out research on the development of health services, stressing primary health care delivery. Also during the year, many member States in the Western Pacific region initiated primary health care programmes, with particular emphasis on the development of health care workers.

As a member of the Task Force on Rural Development, established by the interagency, Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, WHO participated in country studies in integrated rural development, focusing on Bolivia, Lesotho, Liberia, Samoa and Somalia. Account was being taken of the need to use traditional systems of medicine to complement modern medicine, so as to provide communities with the best elements of both.

Other activities during the year included: a programme of appropriate technology for health; a project for the development of ambulatory services in Nicaragua; and the establishment of a simplified health-technology literature bank in the Regional Office for Africa.

Problems of rising costs of medical care under social security and possible cost containment measures were discussed at an expert meeting organized by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) in May 1977, in which WHO participated.

Assistance was provided by WHO to country health programming in Burma, Guinea-Bissau, Nigeria and the Sudan. Related training workshops were held in Burma, Mozambique and Nigeria.

Family health

The organization continued its efforts to assist the developing countries to strengthen the maternal and child health care component of health services, with family planning as an integral part. With emphasis on primary health care, the programme focused on priority health problems related to the interactions of malnutrition, infection and the consequences of unregulated fertility, which were considered to be the major factors contributing to high levels of mortality in women and children.

In four WHO regions, action was taken to improve the utilization, training and supervision of traditional birth attendants in broader maternal and child health care. The organization also assisted with the training of national administrators, for example with the School of Public Health of Mexico and the University of the West Indies in a programme to improve the administration of family health and planning programmes.

The first phase of an international study on breast feeding was completed in nine countries. Consultations were held on other aspects of family health, including reproductive health in adolescents, child-bearing, child-rearing practices, hypertensive diseases of pregnancy (toxaemia), and perinatal technologies. In addition, studies were begun on child-bearing and child-rearing practices and their implications for health education in maternal and child health activities.

Nutrition

The importance of nutrition as part of primary health care was emphasized by the thirtieth World Health Assembly, which urged that higher priority be given to nutrition-oriented programmes.

Operational methodology in the delivery of nutrition and nutrition-related activities such as family planning was studied in India, Somalia, Thailand and the United Republic of Tanzania, with the support of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) and the International Planned Parenthood Federation. Special attention was given to operational needs for the control of protein-energy malnutrition, nutritional anaemia, vitamin-A deficiency and endemic goitre.

Health education

Efforts to build national capabilities for health education activities continued in 1977. In Afghanistan, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippines and Sri Lanka, existing services in health education were strengthened, while in Antigua, Qatar, St. Lucia and St. Vincent, WHO assisted with developing such services. Work was also started on health educational aspects of rural water supply.

Human reproduction

Scientists from 69 member States, including 45 developing countries, participated in a research programme on human reproduction, which received financial support from Canada, Denmark, Finland, Norway and the United Kingdom. Contributions were also received from UNFPA.

The programme emphasized research in fertility regulation, but also included research in infertility and pregnancy wastage. Its main objectives were: to make current methods and techniques of fertility regulation safer, more effective and acceptable, and simpler to use and provide; to make available to family planning programmes entirely new birth-control modalities that would extend acceptance and use, such as drugs for men, vaccines, post-coital preparations and abortifacient drugs; and to strengthen in developing countries national capabilities for research in human reproduction and family planning.

Due to the importance of the acceptability to users of different methods of fertility regulation, of their providers and of service settings, the scope of service research was broadened in 1977 at the request of Governments to cover more general service issues, such as the integration of family planning with other services in primary health care.

Mental health

The integration of mental health components into national health policies was emphasized in 1977. Mechanisms for planning and co-ordinating mental health activities at and between national, regional and global levels were strengthened and developed. In response to a request of the thirtieth World Health Assembly to deal with the urgent problems arising from the severe psychosocial stresses facing populations of developing countries, particularly the high-risk populations in southern Africa, the formation of an African mental-health action group was initiated. Also, mental-health resource centres were established in South-East Asia and Latin America.

Work continued during the year on: the control of alcohol-related problems; prevention and treatment of drug dependence, with support from the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC); mental health legislation; psychosocial factors affecting health and health care; research on the biological basis of neuropsychiatric disorders and the effects of psychoactive drugs; mental health care for specified population groups, such as the elderly and children; epidemiological studies of determinants of mental health in different socio-cultural settings; and simple information systems to monitor mental health needs. Development of training programmes for primary health care workers in basic mental health prevention and treatment techniques was undertaken in a collaborative study in which it was shown that 15 per cent of all patients seeking health care at the primary level suffered from definite mental disorders.

Drug quality control

In 1977, strategies in formulating national drug policies and implementing the programme for improving national management capabilities in the pharmaceutical supply system were elaborated.

An expert committee considered the selection of drugs to meet the basic needs of health services, and drew up a model list of about 200 essential active substances.

A WHO seminar on the use of medicinal plants in health care, sponsored by Japan, discussed the identification of the most useful medicinal plants, their effective utilization and appropriate technology for efficient delivery and use.

As at the end of 1977, 25 member States had informed WHO of their readiness to adhere to a revised certification scheme on the quality of pharmaceutical products moving in international commerce.

Disease prevention and control

Cancer

An ad hoc committee established by the Executive Board in January 1977 considered WHO's activities in the field of cancer, including those of the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC), at Lyons, France. A consultation was held to formulate a strategy for strengthening cancer health services in developing countries. A further meeting, on standardizing the reporting of results of cancer treatment, drew up guidelines for standard calculations and evaluation of survival rates, the objective effect of treatment and its duration.

Implementation of the WHO programme on standardized hospital-based cancer registries was begun in a number of countries, including Italy, Kenya, Liberia, Pakistan, Poland, Uganda, the USSR and the United Republic of Cameroon.

A monograph on the techniques of cancer registration was being published by IARC in collaboration with the International Association of Cancer Registries.

Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela participated in a system for providing information on existing research and resources in cancer, in order to identify programme areas, priorities and co-operative projects.

Continuing its comprehensive programme on the international histological classification of tumours, WHO published volumes on the histological typing of testis, gastric and oesophageal tumours, and on the cytology of non-gynaecological sites. A directory of research in cancer epidemiology was published by IARC.

Cardiovascular diseases

The establishment of comprehensive community-control programmes for cardiovascular diseases in defined experimental population areas continued, with 18 communities in 11 areas participating. Seven other areas were preparing to join the project.

To prevent rheumatic heart disease, the major cardiovascular problem in many developing countries, a multicentre project using a community approach was in progress in four WHO regions (Africa, the Americas, South-East Asia and the Eastern Mediterranean).

A consultation was held in October 1977 on the prevention of atherosclerosis precursors in childhood and youth. The organization promoted investigations in this field and acted as a clearing-house for information, in order to help to prevent ischaemic heart disease in developing countries that were free of this health problem.

Cerebrospinal meningitis

Further use was made in 1977 of recently developed meningococcal vaccines, which proved to be safe and effective in the control of meningococcal cerebrospinal meningitis.

Cholera

Recrudescence and extension of cholera again caused public health problems in several countries in Africa, the WHO Eastern Mediterranean region and the Gilbert Islands. An increasing number of countries were using oral rehydration for treatment of acute diarrhoeal diseases, including cholera.

Immunization programme

With the participation of UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund and other agencies, an expanded programme was established to provide immunizations for children against diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, poliomyelitis, measles and tuberculosis. Its policies were established by the thirtieth World Health Assembly in May 1977, and emphasis was placed on training national staff in programme management and vaccine quality control and production, and on improving vaccines and the vaccine cold chain. Some 60 countries were collaborating in this programme.

Influenza

In late 1977, an influenza epidemic occurred in Hong Kong and the USSR; it was caused by strains similar to the group of influenza-A viruses that were prevalent from 1947 to 1956.

Malaria

The number of reported malaria cases increased from 3.2 million in 1972 to 7.5 million in 1976.

In South-East Asia, reported cases increased from 1.9 million in 1972 to 6.5 million. Malaria re-established itself at the former endemic levels in several areas of Bangladesh, India and Sri Lanka, and the situation worsened in Thailand.

Drug-resistant falciparum malaria established itself in areas with a population of nearly 45 million; areas with about 90 million inhabitants were in danger of being invaded by resistant strains of the parasite.

Priority areas of applied field malaria research included: base-line assessment and monitoring of drug sensitivity in Plasmodium falciparum; evaluation of community participation in antimalarial activities; chemoprophylaxis in children of malaria-endemic areas; approaches towards malaria control in problem areas; impact of pattern application of insecticides; and strain distribution of Plasmodium falciparum.

An applied research project was under way in 1977 in Bendel State, Nigeria, to analyse, with special reference to tropical Africa, which malaria control strategy was optimal, with currently used methods.

Onchocerciasis

The large-scale programme for the control of onchocerciasis, or river blindness, continued in the Volta River basin area of western Africa. In collaboration with the sponsoring agencies—WHO, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)—seven countries participated (Benin, Ghana, the Ivory Coast, Mali, the Niger, Togo and the Upper Volta). The programme covered an area of 700,000 square kilometres, and approximately 4,000 kilometres of river were surveyed and treated weekly during the rainy season. During the year, concern arose over the reinvansion of parts of the controlled area by the vector blackfly, and over the definition of criteria by which areas previously deserted due to onchocerciasis could be judged safe for human resettlement.

Polio-myelitis

It was found that the epidemiology of polio-myelitis was changing. Active surveillance of the disease necessitated serological surveys and laboratory identification of "wild" type and attenuated strains of poliovirus.

Prevention of blindness

Data on blindness in a number of countries were collected in collaboration with the International Agency for the Prevention of Blindness and the World Council for the Welfare of the Blind. An intercountry ministerial committee was established in the WHO Eastern Mediterranean region to study measures for the prevention of blindness.

Rabies

The spread of rabies gave rise to emergency situations and WHO assisted in such instances, particularly in Africa. Several South American countries reported some success in rabies control.

Respiratory infections

Acute respiratory infections continued to be one of the principal causes of morbidity and mortality in many countries. A study showed that 88 countries reported more than 660,000 deaths from acute respiratory infections each year.

Schistosomiasis

Schistosomiasis, a parasitic disease transmitted by a snail living in lakes and waterways, occurs in tropical and subtropical regions, affecting millions of people. The organization collaborated in evaluating Schistosomiasis control programmes in Tunisia and Saudi Arabia and provided technical advice in other member States. Trials of a new drug were conducted at the WHO Tropical Diseases Research Centre at Ndola, Zambia, and a scientific working group studied the strategy for future research.

Under WHO'S programme on man-made lakes, work continued on elaborating guidelines for the prevention of Schistosomiasis and other health hazards in water development schemes. A mission was sent to South America to assess health problems in all types of current and planned water development projects.

Sexually transmitted diseases

Most countries again noted in 1977 an increase in the incidence of sexually transmitted diseases and a recrudescence of the resistance of pathogenic agents to antibiotics due to their indiscriminate use.

Smallpox

During 1977, smallpox was limited to the Horn of Africa. There were 3,229 smallpox cases reported from Somalia and five from northern Kenya. No further cases were detected after the end of October, but two years' additional surveillance was required to permit eradication certification. Eradication was certified in five countries in Asia and nine countries in central Africa during the year. The certification of eradication in Bangladesh marked the end of variola major, the most virulent form of the disease. Without further cases of smallpox, global certification of eradication was expected at the end of 1979.

Trypanosomiasis

The UNDP/WHO applied research programme on African trypanosomiasis (sleeping-sickness) at Bobo-Dioulasso, Upper Volta, was providing satisfactory technical results in the low-dosage application of insecticides against Glossina, the vector of this disease. A network of medical centres in Africa was being created to provide facilities for clinical trials of new drugs and studies on histopathology and pathogenesis, in accordance with standard protocols designed by scientific working groups.

A meeting of a scientific working group on the American form of trypanosomiasis was held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1977. A programme for research on the development of new control methods was established, including work on methods for longitudinal studies of epidemiology, new chemotherapeutic agents, and immunology and vector control.

Viral diseases

The WHO viral diseases programme consisted of surveillance activities, support to laboratory development for viral diagnosis, support for prevention and control measures, and encouragement of applied research.

Environmental health

Water supply and sanitation continued to be the focus of WHO's programme for the promotion of environmental health in the six WHO regions, with activities continuing in about 100 member States.

Co-operative programmes with the World Bank and the African Development Bank were under way, and activities were undertaken or planned with several bilateral aid organizations.

The organization participated in the 1977 United Nations Water Conference and assisted in the preparation of a document on water supply and sanitation. In addition, WHO completed the preparatory phase of a global water-quality monitoring project by the end of 1977 and sampling locations were selected in about 70 member States.

Concerned at the acute, chronic and delayed toxic effects resulting from exposure to chemicals in air, water, food and consumer products, the thirtieth World Health Assembly asked the WHO Director-General to study the problem and long-term strategies in this field and to examine possible options for international co-operation to provide more effective evaluation of health risks from chemicals.

During 1977, the FAO/WHO Codex Alimentarius Commission reappraised its programme of work and priorities, giving more attention to the needs of developing countries. Codex co-ordinating committees were established in Africa, Latin America and Asia with the aim of developing a concerted approach to instituting modern food laws and regulations and other aspects of food control infrastructure.

An occupational health information system was designed, based on the completion of inventories at the country level, to identify health problems of workers. Such inventories were prepared by the Governments of 76 countries. During the year, WHO assisted in the co-ordination of research on simultaneous exposure to multiple hazards at work, with the assistance of collaborating centres in Bulgaria, Egypt, Japan and the United States.

In the field of radiation medicine, a meeting on the long-term effects of radium and thorium in man considered that the experience gained from studies of thorium dioride and other alpha emitters was essential in forecasting the potential dangers from transuranic nuclides, whose public health implications 'Were of' great importance in view of the growing uses of nuclear energy.

The fourth volume of a manual on radiation protection in hospitals and general practice, jointly sponsored by ILO, WHO and the International Atomic Energy Agency, was published. The volume dealt with radiation protection in dentistry.

Health manpower development

A global programme for health manpower development for the years 1978-1983 was formulated during the year. The programme defined the main problems facing countries in relation to health manpower planning, production and management, and proposed a step-by-step process to tackle them.

A long-term international programme of training in health management was prepared by WHO and a meeting of national managers at Geneva in October completed a plan of action to assist member States in training their own health managers.

Also, a health team approach was formulated, with emphasis on the training and use of auxiliaries and community health workers, including, where appropriate, those practising traditional medicine.

A project on the use of non-verbal communication in disseminating health messages in developing countries with different languages and cultures was implemented and an animated film was produced and tested in urban and rural areas of Egypt.

In 1977, WHO provided 3,363 fellowships for study, in addition to 2,269 grants awarded for participation in meetings and national courses.

Health services research

The year 1977 saw greater emphasis on goal-oriented research, particularly in the fields of research and training in tropical diseases, health services research, the expanded programme on immunization, primary health care, and appropriate technology for health. Also, research was further decentralized; advisory committees on medical research operated in all the WHO regions. The volume of WHO'S research efforts increased substantially during the year. Voluntary contributions to the Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction and the Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases, for example, amounted to about $20 million in 1977.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1977, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO stood at 4,226 on permanent and fixed-term contracts. Of these, 1,707 staff members, drawn from 110 nationalities, were in the Professional and higher categories and 2,519 were in the General Service and related categories. Of the total number of staff members, 228 were employed in projects financed by UNDP, UNFPA, UNFDAC and the United Nations Environment Programme.

Budget

No supplementary budget was required in 1977 and the effective working budget for the year remained $147,184,000.

The thirtieth World Health Assembly approved a 1978 budget of $165 million, allocated as follows:

Chapter VI

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)¹ and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), continued, during the fiscal year 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977, to emphasize assistance for rural development. At the 1977 Board of Governors' meetings in Washington, D.C. (United States), the President of the Bank reported that during 1975-1977 the Bank had supported rural development projects which were expected to double the income of about 40 million rural poor. He urged policy shifts by all countries to increase trade, especially in exports of manufactured goods from developing countries, which would benefit the middle-income countries in particular. The poorest countries would continue to need increased amounts of concessional aid if the goal of abolishing absolute poverty by the end of the century was to be achieved, he added.

Membership in the Bank rose to 129 during the year with the admission of Guinea-Bissau on 24 March 1977.

Lending operations

In the fiscal year ending 30 June 1977, the Bank made 161 loans amounting to some $5,759 million to 54 countries, an increase of $720 million over fiscal year 1976. This brought the cumulative total of loan commitments by the Bank since its inception in 1946 to $38,610 million.

The following tables summarize World Bank lending during fiscal year 1977 by area and by purpose.

Three loans totalling $42.5 million were granted for population and nutrition projects in fiscal year 1977. A $5 million loan to the Dominican Republic helped to provide health and family planning services to 800,000 people in rural areas. Indonesia received a $24.5 million loan for a second population project to support its national family planning programme in Java, Bali and 10 provinces in other islands. Another $13 million loan to Indonesia was to help develop a national nutrition programme, research and staff training.

Telecommunications

Two loans totalling $140 million were made by the Bank to improve telecommunications and telephone services during fiscal year 1977. Colombia received a loan of $60 million to expand telephone-exchange facilities, particularly in small towns and rural areas, and install new microwave and multiplex equipment. The Inter-American Development Bank also made a loan of $29 million for this project.

An $80 million loan to India was made to finance part of the Posts and Telegraphs Department's expansion programme.

Tourism

The Bank granted $98.6 million for four tourism loans in fiscal year 1977. A $17 million loan was to help Kenya conserve its wildlife resources and develop tourism so as to benefit the development of the economy, and specifically the income of rural inhabitants.

Mexico was assisted with a loan of $42 million to develop two areas in Baja California for tourism. The proceeds from the loan were to be used for the building of infrastructure and other facilities, improvement of airport facilities and construction of two hotels, each with a 250-bed capacity.

A $13.6 million Bank loan to Senegal was used to develop infrastructure and facilities for a 2,500-bed hotel development at Sali Portudal, carry out renovation work on historic sites and provide technical assistance and training.

An integrated tourism project in South Antalya, Turkey, with facilities provided at four project sites, was being supported with a $26 million loan. After completion, net foreign exchange earnings were expected to total $29.3 million a year and employment created for about 13,000 people.

Transportation

Twenty-two countries received loans amounting to $875.6 million for transportation projects during fiscal year 1977.

Bolivia received a $25 million loan to build two new domestic airports and improve two others. The project, at a total cost of $39.5 million, was to improve access to four towns, only one of which was connected by road to other parts of the country, with reliable air transport for passengers and agricultural goods.

Algeria was assisted with an $80 million loan for the construction of a new deep-water port near Jijel to serve a new steel complex. A $67 million loan to the Republic of Korea was the second one to increase the port of Busan's capacity to handle a growing volume of containerized cargo. Mauritius was expanding Port Louis with a second Bank loan of $3.6 million.

Bolivia was granted a $35 million loan to rehabilitate railroad tracks, freight cars and workshop equipment with tools, equipment and technical assistance. A $12 million loan to the Sudan was to improve the railway system.

Kenya used a $4 million loan to help implement the first phase of a 15,000 kilometre rural access roads programme with the goal of increasing rural employment and cash crop and livestock production. Ecuador received a $17.5 million loan to construct civil works and a road between Puerto Ila and Doblones, and 75 kilometres of feeder roads for access to an area of high agricultural potential. An access highway was also being built to Guayaquil, Ecuador's largest export-import centre.

Urban development

Four loans totalling $128.2 million were made for urban development during fiscal year 1977, an increase of 50 per cent over the previous year. A $6.7 million loan was granted to El Salvador's second urban development project. India received a $25 million loan to improve bus services in greater Bombay.

The improvement of social and physical infrastructure in slums and low-income neighbourhoods was assisted in Jakarta and Surabaya, Indonesia, with a $52.5 million loan, and in Abidjan, Ivory Coast, with a $44 million loan. Both loans included technical assistance components.

Water supply and sewerage

The Bank made nine loans totalling $262.5 million for water supply and sewerage projects in fiscal 1977, a slight increase over the previous year.

A $10 million loan to the Bahamas was to improve and expand the water supply and the sanitary sewer system in New Providence island. In Egypt, a $56 million loan was to help avert acute water-shortages and related health hazards, and improve service to 2.6 million inhabitants of Alexandria and an additional 1.4 million inhabitants and new industries elsewhere.

Water supply in Aleppo, Syrian Arab Republic, was to be increased and expanded to serve the poor, and sewage treatment projects were planned for Aleppo and Lattakia. In the United Republic of Tanzania, the water supply for Morogoro was to be expanded to meet the needs of a growing city, including those of industrial and commercial users.

Technical assistance

The consultation process between the Bank and its borrowers continued to be a major vehicle for providing technical assistance to developing member countries on socio-economic development policies, national and regional planning, and project work. Technical assistance was also provided under the Bank's loans and credits. In fiscal year 1977, 162 lending operations included provision for technical assistance. In addition to this, Oman received a $1.5 million loan specifically for technical assistance purposes—to prepare an investment programme in the power and water supply sectors, for both rural and urban areas.

Oil-exporting developing countries continued to receive technical assistance on a reimbursable basis. Recipients were Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela for projects in agriculture, industry, education and transportation.

The Bank continued to encourage its member countries to seek grant financing for technical assistance from other sources and, in particular, from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The Bank continued to serve as executing agency for UNDP and, in fiscal year 1977, there were 10 new projects, for which UNDP committed $11.4 million. The projects included: a $5.2 million grant to strengthen Malaysia's capacity for project identification, preparation and implementation; $1.3 million for water resources development and use in Egypt; $860,000 for a major irrigation study in Nepal; and $500,000 for technical assistance to the National Development Bank of Paraguay.

A significant component of technical assistance projects was the strengthening of planning institutions. The Bank served as executing agency for planning assistance projects in Indonesia, Liberia, Malaysia, the Philippines, the Sudan, Swaziland, Uganda and Zaire.

Pre-investment studies and feasibility assessments carried out with UNDP financing resulted in Bank loans and credits for projects with an estimated cost of $1,600 million during fiscal year 1977.

Economic Development Institute

During fiscal year 1977, the Economic Development Institute conducted 11 courses in Washington, D.C., for 290 participants. It also sponsored or supported 24 courses overseas for 621 officials concerned with economic affairs in developing countries. Since its establishment in 1955, more than 5,000 officials had attended courses in Washington and overseas.

During the year, the Institute continued its efforts to transfer teaching capacity to developing countries. To this end, the Institute included in its courses held in Washington an increasing number of participants concerned with in-service training in their own countries.

Also during the year, the Institute co-operated with organizations in developed countries. At Paris, it joined the International Institute for Educational Planning to sponsor an education programme and projects course for officials from French-speaking countries, and with the International Development Centre of Japan it organized an industrial projects course for officials from several Asian, Middle Eastern and Latin American countries.

Development aid co-ordination

The Bank continued its efforts to organize various aid co-ordination mechanisms for developing countries receiving assistance from bilateral and multilateral sources. In fiscal year 1977, the Bank sponsored meetings of 12 groups co-ordinating aid for Bolivia, Burma, Colombia, Egypt, Kenya, Nepal, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Thailand, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zaire. The Bank also participated in a meeting of the Inter-Governmental Group for Indonesia, for which the Netherlands served as Chairman.

Financing activities

During fiscal year 1977, the Bank sold 39 issues amounting to the equivalent of $4,721 million, an increase of $910 million over the previous year. The principal source of borrowed funds was the investment markets, on which the Bank sold 28 issues totalling the equivalent of $3,545 million. Governments and central banks purchased $1,138 million of Bank issues, which was $213 million less than in fiscal year 1976.

Borrowings in the petroleum-exporting countries, amounting to $395 million, were $50 million below fiscal year 1976. The Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency purchased the equivalent of $179.5 million of the Bank's obligations, and $216 million of two-year United States dollar bonds were placed with Governments and official agencies of 13 petroleum-exporting countries, including Saudi Arabia.

The Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and Yugoslavia purchased $743 million equivalent of Bank obligations; $434 million of two-year United States dollar bonds were sold to Governments and official agencies in 69 countries, and to regional and international organizations.

Sales of issues in the investment market were made in the Federal Republic of Germany, Switzerland and the United States. Of these, $2,302 million was distributed by means of public offerings and $1,243 million by private placements with financial institutions.

The investment market in the United States was the largest source of borrowed funds in fiscal year 1977: eight issues, totalling $1,850 million were sold in three public offerings. The market in the Federal Republic of Germany absorbed issues valued at $1,192 million, and in the Swiss market issues worth about $502 million were placed.

The Bank also borrowed $37.5 million from the Interest Subsidy Fund (which was made up of contributions of various member countries to finance the differential between the Bank's standard rate and a lower rate charged certain borrowers on so-called Third Window loans). This brought the cumulative total of borrowings from the Subsidy Fund to $167 million as at 30 June 1977 at an interest rate of 8.5 per cent, with maturities ranging from 1977 to 2001.

Sales of Bank obligations in the year included $3,805 million in new borrowings, while $916 million replaced obligations that had matured during the year. Debt maturities in fiscal year 1977 amounted to $1,385 million equivalent. An additional $78 million of debt was retired in fiscal year 1977 by means of sinking fund and purchase fund operations.

Outstanding obligations of the World Bank as at 30 June 1977 stood at $18,478 million, of which investors in the United States held about 28 per cent, those in the Federal Republic of Germany 24 per cent, in Japan 9 per cent, in Switzerland 8 per cent and in Saudi Arabia 7 per cent. About 24 per cent of outstanding borrowings were held by investment institutions, including central banks and Government agencies in more than 80 countries.

Income and reserves

The Bank's gross income increased $287 million in fiscal year 1977 to a record level of $1,617 million. Net income was $209 million, a decrease of $11 million from the previous year.

Total expenses amounted to $1,408 million, including administrative costs of $141 million.

The General Reserve of the Bank amounted to $1,733 million as at 30 June 1977, with $120 million derived from net income in 1976 allocated to it during fiscal year 1977. As a result of net translation adjustments arising from currency appreciations and depreciations, $10 million was debited from the Bank's General Reserve compared with a similar debit of $151 million in fiscal year 1976.

Capitalization

Senegal increased its capital subscription during the fiscal year 1977. This increase, plus the original subscriptions of the Comoros and Guinea-Bissau which had become members during the period, brought the Bank's subscribed capital to $30,869 million in terms of current United States dollars as at 30 June 1977.

Discussions continued in 1977 on the question of increasing the subscribed capital of the Bank.

In May 1977, the Board of Governors formally approved the resolutions forwarded to it by the Executive Directors. The first resolution increased the Bank's authorized capital to $41,016 million; the second authorized an allotment to 125 members of up to $8,340 million of selective increases in subscriptions to capital stock.²

By another action, members were permitted to exercise, in lieu of the selective increases authorized for them, pre-emptive rights as stockholders to maintain the proportion of their equity and voting power in the Bank.

Nine countries indicated during fiscal year 1977 their intention to exercise their pre-emptive rights, and thus the total of increased subscriptions to be allotted rose by about $189 million to $8,529 million.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1977, the staff of the World Bank and IDA numbered 4,459, drawn from 106 nationalities.

The International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC)¹ was established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to assist developing member countries by helping them to promote the private sector of their economies. The principal objectives of IFC were: to provide risk capital for productive private enterprise, in association with private investors and management; to encourage the development of local capital markets; and to stimulate the international flow of private capital.

The Corporation, which made investments in the form of share subscriptions and long-term loans, carried out stand-by and underwriting arrangements, and provided financial and technical assistance to privately controlled development finance companies. It neither required nor accepted guarantees by Governments in its operations. Generally, IFC invested on a mixed equity and loan basis, with other investors providing the bulk of the funds required for any given project.

Two States joined IFC in 1977: Guinea-Bissau (25 March) and the United Arab Emirates (30 September), thus increasing the number of member countries to 107.

Investments in loan and equity totalling $206.7 million were made by IFC during the fiscal year ending 30 June 1977. These commitments were made to 33 enterprises in 20 developing countries. Concurrently with IFC, others invested $894 million in the same enterprises. Taking into account $68 million to be financed by cash generation, the total cost of the projects to which these commitments were made was $1,169 million.

Of the $206.7 million committed by IFC during the fiscal year, $82.5 million went to eight projects in Latin America, $62.5 million to six projects in Europe, $28.5 million to 11 projects in Asia, and $33.2 million to eight projects in Africa.

The Corporation's operations in the fiscal year 1977 brought the cumulative gross total of its investments to $1,712 million in 292 enterprises in 62 developing countries. Others had concurrently invested $7,262 million in these same enterprises.

Operating income in the fiscal year ending 30 June 1977 was $54.5 million, including $45.9 million in interest and commitment charges and $8.6 million in dividends. Income from loans exceeded borrowing costs by $16.2 million, which more than covered administrative expenses of $13.1 million. Net income, including gains on sales of investments of $1.2 million, and after deducting a provision for losses on investments of $5.9 million, amounted to $8.9 million. (See statement below.)

Chapter VIII

The International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA)¹ is an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank). Its purpose is to promote economic development by supporting productive, high-priority projects in developing member countries.

The Association lends for the same kinds of projects as the World Bank, using the same appraisal criteria and the same staff, but it obtains its funds from different sources and lends on different terms; its capital and assets are entirely separate from those of the Bank.

The Bank obtains the larger part of its funds in the capital markets and lends on roughly conventional terms. The bulk of the resources of IDA are contributed by member Governments, enabling it to lend to the poorest countries on more flexible terms which weigh less heavily on their balances of payments.

In general, a country eligible to receive IDA credits must have a low per capita income—not more than $520 per capita per year; emphasis is on assistance to the poorest countries within this category. A further eligibility requirement is a difficult balance-of-payments problem with little prospect of earning sufficient foreign exchange to justify borrowing all the external funds needed for development on conventional terms. The country must also have sufficient economic, financial and political stability to warrant long-term development lending and a genuine commitment to development.

The Association's credits are interest-free, with a service charge of 0.75 per cent on disbursed and outstanding credit balances. The credits are repayable over 50 years, with an initial grace period of 10 years before repayment begins.

Unlike the Bank, which may lend to public and private entities with Government guarantees, IDA lends only to Governments. In the case of revenue-producing projects, IDA credits are re-lent by the Governments on terms reflecting the local cost of capital. Thus, IDA terms help Governments to finance economic development without distorting the local credit structure.

From the start of operations in 1960 to the end of fiscal year 1977 (30 June), IDA's resources totalled the equivalent of $11,789 million. Usable subscriptions and supplementary contributions amounted to $1,052 million and $9,412 million respectively.

In addition, the World Bank provided $1,125 million in grants out of its net income for the fiscal years beginning in 1964, of which some $25.9 million was earmarked for agricultural research and for the control of onchocerciasis (river blindness). Switzerland, which is not a member of IDA, made two interest-free 50-year loans totalling $70 million. Cumulative net earnings of IDA totalled $90 million and repayments on development credit amounted to $30 million. Participations by Norway under an aid co-operative agreement with the World Bank and IDA made a further $18 million available.

Aside from initial subscriptions in usable form totalling $984 million, the bulk of IDA funds for lending have been provided by its Part I (richer) member countries and several Part II (developing) members under a series of replenishment agreements. The first replenishment of IDA's resources took effect in 1964, the second in 1969, the third in 1972 and the fourth in 1975.

On 16 June 1977, the Board of Governors of IDA adopted a resolution providing for a fifth replenishment of IDA resources, amounting to the equivalent of $7,638 million. Contributions were to be made by 21 Part I countries, four Part II countries and one non-member country—the United Arab Emirates.

Membership in IDA rose to 117 during the year with the admission of Guinea-Bissau on 25 March 1977.

By 30 June 1977, IDA had made cumulative net commitments totalling $11,398 million. Commitments in fiscal year 1977 amounted to $1,307.5 million, of which $770 million, or 59 per cent, went to six countries in South Asia and $260.5 million, or 20 per cent, went to 11 countries in East Africa. India, with nine credits amounting to $481 million, was the largest borrower from IDA in the year, followed by Bangladesh with credits of $122 million.

The tables below summarize IDA lending in fiscal year 1977 by area and by purpose.

Agriculture and rural development

Credits for agricultural and rural development accounted for the largest portion of IDA lending in fiscal year 1977, as they did in the previous three years. Thirty-eight agricultural credits totalling the equivalent of $670.1 million were committed in 20 countries, representing 51 per cent of total credits granted in fiscal year 1977 and $251.7 million more than the previous year.

India borrowed a total of $307 million from IDA to finance the reorganization and strengthening of a system of agricultural extension and adaptive research. A $200 million credit was extended to the Agricultural Refinance and Development Corporation to make credit available to 1 million farmers, with one half of the amount reserved for lending to small farmers.

Small farmers and livestock producers in several African countries, including Kenya, Liberia, Mali, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zaire, were assisted with IDA-financed projects to meet key needs and to provide credit and extension services.

Development finance companies

Five credits amounting to $25.5 million were granted in fiscal year 1977 to development finance companies in Lesotho, Nepal, Rwanda, Somalia and Zaire. The Somali Development Bank received a $5 million credit—the first such credit in that country; it was to be used for medium- and long-term financing of projects. A $4 million credit to Nepal supplied the foreign exchange requirements of the Nepal Industrial Development Corporation for loans to private sector industries, including tourism enterprises.

Education

Credits totalling $78.5 million were granted during fiscal year 1977 for educational projects in eight countries. In Afghanistan, a $6 million credit was to provide practical agricultural education and increase greatly the number of extension workers. Four new agricultural secondary schools were being built and three others expanded, increasing the number of student places from 1,000 to 6,000.

Madagascar received a $14 million credit to improve the quality and efficiency of its basic education. Five new regional education centres and a national teaching-materials production centre were also established; textbook development and pre-investment studies for future projects were supported during the year.

In Pakistan, a $15 million credit was to improve access to primary and secondary education, particularly for women and in rural areas, by increasing the number of qualified teachers and the supply of skilled personnel for agricultural services. About 96,000 villagers were to benefit from the second phase of an adult literacy programme financed as part of this project.

Electric power

Financing for electric power amounted to $167 million for three credits in fiscal year 1977, a 36 per cent decline from the previous fiscal year.

Ghana received a $9 million IDA credit (and a World Bank loan of equal amount) to implement another phase of the development programme of the Electricity Corporation of Ghana in order to meet the growing demand for electricity. A $150 million credit to India financed the construction of the first phase of a 2,000 megawatt thermal power station and transmission facilities in Uttar Pradesh state. In Malawi, IDA provided an $8 million credit (and the Bank a $17 million loan) to finance the second stage of the Nkula Falls Hydroelectric Plant on the Shire River. Co-financiers for this project included the African Development Bank, the Commonwealth Development Corporation, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Fonds Européen de Développement.

Industry

A credit of $16 million to Burma was provided for a project to rehabilitate the mining sector, increase tin and tungsten production and finance consultant services for a study of the future development of its mining sector.

Non-project

Credits totalling $75 million were given to Bangladesh to finance foreign exchange costs of industrial goods, raw materials, spare parts and packaging materials, so that selected industries could maintain and expand production.

The United Republic of Tanzania received a $15 million credit to import essential capital, intermediate goods and raw materials for private and public sector enterprises.

Population

A supplementary credit of $4.8 million was provided to Tunisia during the fiscal year to implement a population project approved in April 1971.

Technical assistance

Five credits totalling $15.4 million were provided for technical assistance projects during fiscal year 1977 to Benin, Mauritania, Nepal and the United Republic of Cameroon. A $3.5 million credit supported Mauritania's efforts to finance a three-year programme to strengthen and improve the Société Nationale pour le Développement Rural. A second credit to Mauritania of $2.7 million financed a team of economic and sectoral advisers seconded to the Ministry of Planning to formulate an effective development programme and to identify and prepare specific investment projects.

Transportation

Fourteen credits totalling $172 million were approved during fiscal year 1977 for transportation projects, a drop of $84.2 million from the previous fiscal year.

A $10 million credit was provided to Burma to deepen the access channel to the port of Rangoon. In Mali, the first three years of a railway investment plan were being financed with the help of a $10.5 million credit. In the Sudan, an $8 million credit was also used for the improvement of the railway.

Roads and highways were being built or upgraded with the proceeds of IDA credits in Benin, Ethiopia, Kenya, Papua New Guinea, Somalia, Togo and the Upper Volta.

Urban development

During fiscal year 1977, IDA provided $30 million in credits for two urban development projects. A $6 million credit (and a $6.7 million Bank loan) financed a second urban development project in El Salvador. Some 8,000 lots, of which about 70 per cent were located in San Salvador, were provided with services; in addition, the loan was to help upgrade squatter settlements, extend credit to small businesses and provide technical assistance.

A $24 million credit to India provided residential sites and services to 240,000 slum dwellers in Madras, created jobs in small-scale and cottage industries, and provided or improved nutrition, health and family-planning education services. Water and sewerage systems and roads and traffic were being improved as well.

Water supply and sewerage

A total of $38.2 million in IDA credits was provided for water supply and sewerage projects in Malawi, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Yemen.

In Malawi, a $7 million IDA credit was extended to improve potable water supply in Blantyre. The project was also assisted with loans from the African Development Fund and the Commonwealth Development Corporation of $6 million and $700,000 respectively.

Adequate supply of safe water was provided for 200,000 people and sewerage facilities for 35,000 people in Nepal as a result of a project assisted by an $8 million IDA credit. Another IDA credit of $4 million provided supplementary funds to a previous project approved in 1974.

Some 1.2 million residents of Colombo, Sri Lanka, and five other towns were to receive improved water supply and new water supply systems were built for 410,000 people with an IDA credit of $9.2 million. Also, plans to improve sewerage services were financed and technical assistance was provided to strengthen the National Water Supply and Drainage Board. Canada assisted this project with a sum of $5 million (Canadian) administered by IDA.

Chapter IX

The International Monetary Fund (IMF)

Drawings on the resources of the International Monetary Fund (IMF)¹ during 1977 amounted to more than 3,400 million special drawing rights (SDR), or little less than half the drawings in 1976. A record volume of repurchases reduced the total net drawings for the year to SDR 427 million, bringing total net drawings outstanding to the equivalent of SDR 15,450.3 million as at the end of 1977.

The year also saw agreement on the terms of the Fund's supplementary financing facility, which was intended to provide financial assistance to members whose payments imbalances were large in relation to their economies and to their quotas in IMF.

A comprehensive second amendment to the Fund's Articles of Agreement and a proposal to increase members' quotas from a total of SDR 29,200 million to SDR 39,000 million were in the process of acceptance by members. The second amendment (the first provided for the introduction of special drawing rights in IMF) was to allow members greater flexibility in the choice of exchange-rate arrangements, subject at all times to several general obligations and to surveillance by IMF. On 29 April 1977, the Fund's Executive Directors reached agreement on the principles and procedures for the guidance of members' exchange-rate policies and for their surveillance after the second amendment went into effect.

The proposal to increase quotas provided that the increase in a member's quota was not to become effective unless the member had consented to and paid the increase in full. The member was to have the option to pay the entire increase in its own currency, or 25 per cent of the increase in SDR or the currencies of other members specified—with their concurrence—by IMF and the balance of the increase in the Fund member's own currency.

The second amendment to the Fund's Articles of Agreement represented a revision and updating of the Articles, introducing, inter alia: new and flexible provisions dealing with exchange arrangements; a gradual reduction in the role of gold in the international monetary system; changes in the characteristics and expansion of the uses of the SDR to enhance its status as an international reserve asset; simplification and expansion of the Fund's financial operations and transactions; the possible establishment of a Council to be composed of Governors of IMF; and improvements in a number of organizational aspects.

Also during 1977, IMF continued its gold sales programme, whereby one sixth (or 25 million fine ounces) of its gold holdings was to be sold at public auctions for the benefit of developing countries and another sixth was to be sold to members at SDR 35 per ounce. In accordance with the provisions of the trust fund, established in 1976 to provide additional balance-of-payments assistance on concessionary terms to developing member countries from the profits from the sale of gold, IMF, in February 1977, announced its first trust fund disbursements to 12 of 61 eligible member countries and in July disbursements were made to 24 of the eligible members. The total of these disbursements was equivalent to SDR 152.2 million.

During 1977, three new members joined IMF, bringing total membership to 132. Guinea-Bissau became a member on 24 March; its quota was set at SDR 3.2 million. Seychelles joined on 30 June, with a quota set at SDR 1.0 million, and on 30 September Sao Tome and Principe became a member, its quota being set at SDR 1.6 million.

Fund operations

The Fund's member countries made credit tranche drawings of SDR 2,895.2 million in 1977, accounting for the major portion of the SDR 3,424.6 million in total purchases from IMF during the year. This was less than half—about 49 per cent—of members' total purchases of SDR 7,009.9 million in 1976.

Purchases during the year raised the cumulative total since 1947 to SDR 44,600 million (or to SDR 37,700 million, net of the oil facility).² However, repurchases by members in 1977 amounted to an unprecedented SDR 2,934 million, compared with SDR 1,266 million in 1976. Thus, net drawings outstanding as at 31 December 1977 were SDR 15,450.30 million (or SDR 9,026.5 million, net of the oil facility), only slightly more than the SDR 15,023.7 million of net drawings at the end of 1976.

The large-scale use of the credit tranches in 1977 raised the amount of total credit tranche purchases outstanding at the end of 1977 to SDR 4,414.27 million, compared with SDR 3,405.24 million in 1976, SDR 2,213.75 million in 1975, and SDR 1,726.75 million in 1974. Thus, from 1974 to 1977, members' outstanding credit tranche purchases from IMF increased by some 156 per cent.

According to preliminary data, industrial countries accounted for the preponderant share of members' 1977 purchases, while purchases by developing countries dropped sharply, from SDR 2,749 million in 1976 to an estimated SDR 700 million in 1977. In 1976, the purchases of industrial countries and of developing countries had been roughly comparable at SDR 2,478.3 million and SDR 2,749.0 million, respectively.

During 1977, members' purchases under the compensatory financing facility fell to SDR 240.5 million from their 1976 peak of SDR 2,308.1 million. A review of the use of the facility was planned for 1979 — or earlier if drawings under it exceeded SDR 1,500 million in any 12-month period, or if outstanding drawings exceeded SDR 4,000 million. The countries and the amounts of their purchases under the facility are listed in the following table.

Gold sales programme

During 1977, the second year of its four-year programme to sell 50 million fine ounces of gold, IMF sold 6,027,600 ounces at public auction, which brought total sales to 9,926,800 ounces.

The proceeds from the auctions held during 1977 amounted to $644 million. The lowest average price at which gold was awarded to successful bidders in 1977 was $133.26 and the highest was $161.86 per ounce.

The Fund also carried out gold sales to members at SDR 35 per ounce under its restitution programme. Under the first phase, 112 members received 5,998,431 ounces of gold, with a total value of SDR 209.95 million. The second phase was started in December 1977, when 5,913,442 ounces, equivalent to SDR 206.917 million, were sold to 106 members.

Supplementary financing facility

The supplementary financing facility was agreed to in April 1977 to enable IMF, on a temporary basis, to expand its financial assistance to those members facing payments imbalances that were considered large in relation to their economies and to their quotas in the Fund. In August, 13 members and the Swiss National Bank expressed their willingness to make resources available to finance purchases under the facility up to the equivalent of SDR 8,710 million and, in September, the Fund's Executive Directors defined the terms and conditions under which resources were to be made available to members.

Provisions under this facility were to give members access either under stand-by arrangements or under an extended arrangement. The facility was to come into effect after agreements had been concluded for a total amount of not less than SDR 7,750 million, including at least six agreements exceeding SDR 500 million.

Publications

Publications issued by IMF in 1977 included: Annual Report, Annual Report on Exchange Restrictions, International Financial Statistics, Balance of Payments Yearbook, Government Finance Statistics

Yearbook, Summary Proceedings of the Annual Meeting, and the periodicals Direction of Trade, IMF Survey, Staff Papers and Finance and Development, which was published jointly with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1977, the total number of full-time staff employed by IMF under permanent, fixed-term, and short-term appointments was 1,472, drawn from 90 nationalities.

Chapter X

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)¹ reported total traffic of the world's scheduled airlines to be 100,400 million tonne-kilometres during 1977, an increase of 8 per cent over 1976, continuing the growth recovery. The airlines carried about 620 million passengers at a load factor of 61 per cent. Air freight increased by 9 per cent to 23,280 million tonne-kilometres and air mail traffic amounted to 3,150 million tonne-kilometres, an increase of 4 per cent over the previous year.

The twenty-second session of the ICAO Assembly met at Montreal, Canada, from 13 September to 4 October 1977 and adopted the organization's work programme and budget for 1978-1980.

During 1977, membership of ICAO rose to 142 with the admission of Mozambique on 5 January, Sao Tome and Principe on 28 February, Angola on 11 March, Seychelles on 25 April, the Gambia on 13 May, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 16 August and Guinea-Bissau on 15 December.

Activities in 1977

Air navigation

During 1977, the main efforts of ICAO in the air navigation field continued to be directed to updating and implementing ICAO Specifications and ICAO Regional Plans. The Specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices, contained in 16 technical Annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, and of Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS), contained in three PANS documents. The Regional Plans set forth the air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in the nine ICAO regions.

The Specifications in 10 Annexes and three PANS documents were amended during 1977. The Regional Plans were kept current through amendments processed in consultation with States.

To promote the uniform application of the Specifications, ICAO made available guidance material in the form of technical manuals and circulars.

The ICAO regional offices assisted States in implementing the Regional Plans. Their efforts were supplemented by the work of experts who advised States on the installation of new facilities and services and on the operation of existing ones.

Five air navigation meetings were held in 1977 at which special attention was given to the following: airworthiness of aircraft; aircraft operations; aircraft accident prevention; aerodrome physical characteristics; visual aids; automated data interchange systems; air traffic control; aeronautical communications; unification of units of measurement; aircraft/infrastructure compatibility; the impact of civil aviation development on the human environment; aviation security; and air transport of dangerous goods.

Air transport

A world-wide air transport conference, held at ICAO headquarters at Montreal from 13 to 26 April 1977, considered four subjects: tariff enforcement; policy concerning international non-scheduled air transport; regulation of capacity in international air transport services; and machinery for the establishment of international air transport fares and rates. The conference adopted 20 recommendations, which proposed, inter alia, that States: make the violation of tariffs punishable, investigate violations and take necessary corrective measures; further the development of international air transport as a whole and provide reasonable opportunities for the travelling public to take advantage of non-scheduled flights without undermining the economic viability of scheduled services; and co-ordinate their policies and regulations with regard to capacity control.

Later in the year, the ICAO Assembly endorsed these recommendations, considered their implementation and set future priorities. The Assembly further recommended more frequent publication of inventories of major air transport problems, the dissemination of information on the future availability of aviation fuel and the convening of a second air transport conference.

Publications in 1977 included reports on various aspects of air transport, including a review of the economic situation of air transport for the period 1966-1976 and a survey of regional differences in fares and costs for international scheduled passenger transport in 1975. The series of digests of civil aviation statistics and the airport and air navigation facility tariffs manual continued to be issued. In addition, the first yearbook on world civil aviation statistics was published.

A study of the problem of traffic peaks at international airports was completed during the year, and a regional study of air passenger and air freight development in Latin American and Caribbean countries was in preparation. Assistance was also provided to the Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee of the Economic Commission for Latin America in a study of air transport.

In 1977, ICAO continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies: the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

A panel of experts was appointed to examine the machinery of the establishment of international fares and rates. It made recommendations on tariff matters concerning Government reservations and modifications, Government orders and the need to review such orders at intervals.

Informal regional meetings were held during 1977 on economics of airports and route facilities (Mexico City, Mexico, and Rome, Italy), statistics (Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, and Dakar, Senegal) and facilitation (in Mauritius).

The organization continued to administer the joint financing agreement on air navigation services in Greenland and the Faeroe Islands and the agreement for services in Iceland.

Legal matters

The ICAO Legal Committee had established a general work programme, later approved by the ICAO Council, to study the following subjects: lease, charter and interchange of aircraft in international operations; consideration of the report of its sub-committee on the problem of liability for damage caused by noise and sonic boom; liability of air traffic control agencies; aerial collisions; consolidation of the instruments of the Warsaw Convention of 1929 as amended by the Hague Protocol of 1955 (relating to liability of air carriers) into a single convention; legal status of the aircraft commander; consolidation of international rules contained in the Rome Convention (on damage caused by foreign aircraft to third parties on the surface, 1952); the draft convention on aerial collisions and the liability of air traffic control agencies; the legal status of aircraft; aspects other than those found in the Tokyo Convention (on offences and certain other acts committed on board aircraft, 1963); and proposed simplification of convention-making procedures.

The Council considered two draft texts prepared by the ICAO secretariat: the first consolidated the provisions of those instruments of the Warsaw system which were in force and the second consolidated all the instruments of that system. Both texts were submitted to States for comments.

An international conference of plenipotentiaries was convened by ICAO to consider the authentic text of the Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation, 1944, and amendments thereto in the Russian language. At its meeting at Montreal from 19 to 30 September, the conference adopted the Protocol on the Authentic Quadrilingual Text of the Convention. As at the end of 1977, 18 States had signed the Protocol and 16 States had signed but not deposited instruments of acceptance.

The Special Sub-Committee of the ICAO Legal Committee met at Montreal from 23 March to 5 April 1977 to study the problems raised by articles 12, 31 and 32 of the Chicago Convention, concerning the operation of an aircraft registered in one State by an operator belonging to another State. It was also to formulate a draft protocol for amendment of the Rome Convention of 1952 and the Tokyo Convention of 1963 in order to solve the problems raised under the same circumstances with regard to those two Conventions.

With regard to the Chicago Convention, the Special Sub-Committee considered it necessary to find a solution whereby the State of registry would be permitted to transfer its functions and duties to the State of the operator and would thus be relieved of responsibility in respect of the functions and duties transferred. It did not recommend the adoption of a separate multilateral convention and therefore drafted an amendment to the Chicago Convention.

With respect to the Rome Convention, the Sub-Committee adopted several amendments in order to cover the case of lease, charter, interchange or any similar arrangement, the applicability of which was related to the State of registry. The Sub-Committee also noted that the Tokyo Convention might require an amendment to confer criminal jurisdiction not only to the State of registry but also to the State of the operator.

At its 1977 session, the Legal Committee invited all contracting States to review the provisions of their laws to remove any inhibitions to the lease, charter and interchange of aircraft in international operations in order better to enable them to exercise the new functions and duties which would be placed upon them as the State of the operator.

The Legal Committee, considering the preparation of a digest of judicial decisions, decided that a repertory would be published in all official ICAO languages. The Assembly endorsed the decision.

The ICAO Assembly, at its 1977 session, also adopted a resolution on the strengthening of measures to suppress acts of unlawful interference with civil aviation. Later in the year, the Council considered the resolution and urged those States which had not already done so to ratify or accede to the Tokyo Convention of 1963, the Hague Convention of 1970 and the Montreal Convention of 1971, to adopt adequate measures against persons committing acts of unlawful seizure of aircraft or unlawful acts against the safety of civil aviation and to take adequate measures relating to the extradition or prosecution of such persons by adopting appropriate provisions in law or treaty for that purpose.

During 1977, the following ratifications and accessions to conventions concluded under ICAO auspices were made:

Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft (Tokyo, 1963)

Afghanistan, Mauritania, Oman, Uruguay and Zaire

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft (The Hague, 1970)

Kenya, Uruguay and Zaire

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation (Montreal, 1971)

Ecuador, Kenya, Lebanon, Uruguay and Zaire

Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, 1944)

Angola, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, and Seychelles

Technical assistance

During 1977, ICAO provided technical assistance to 102 States, 54 of which had resident missions of one or more experts. Assistance was also provided in the form of equipment, fellowships, scholarships and short missions by experts.

Eighteen new large-scale projects for which ICAO was to be the executing agency, each costing more than $500,000, were approved by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Four large-scale projects were financed under funds-in-trust assistance.

The organization employed 404 experts from 46 countries during 1977, 275 on assignments under UNDP, 127 on funds-in-trust projects and two under the associate experts programme. There were also seven United Nations Volunteers. The number in the field at the end of 1977 was 276 compared with 222 at the end of 1976.

A total of 655 fellowships (including 79 extensions) were awarded in 1977 as against 499 the previous year.

Equipment purchases represented a substantial proportion of ICAO technical assistance, with deliveries in 1977 amounting to $5.5 million. Some 16 Governments or organizations formally registered with ICAO under the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service, with commitments during 1977 of $619,000.

Expert services, fellowships and equipment were provided during the year under funds-in-trust and cost-sharing arrangements to Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria, Peru, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, the Sudan, Surinam and Yemen.

Total UNDP funds disbursed by ICAO in 1977 for the execution of short- and long-term projects amounted to $14.9 million; disbursements under funds-in-trust projects amounted to $7 million.

As at 31 December 1977, the total number of staff members employed in the ICAO secretariat was 770. Of these, 275 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 64 nationalities) and 495 were in the General Service and related categories. Among them were 167 persons employed at the regional offices. In addition, there were 165 in the Professional category serving as technical assistance experts on UNDP projects in the field.

Chapter XI

The Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU),¹ established at Berne, Switzerland, in 1874 for the reciprocal exchange of postal services between nations, is one of the oldest international intergovernmental organizations. Its aim is to promote the organization and improvement of postal services and to further the development of international collaboration in this sphere. It also participates in various forms of postal technical assistance requested by its member States.

In 1977, the number of member States increased from 156 to 157 following the removal of the United States Territories and the French Overseas Territories from membership and the admission of the following countries: Angola (3 March), Sao Tome and Principe (22 August) and Seychelles (7 October).

Activities of UPU organs in 1977Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, composed of all member States, is the supreme legislative authority of UPU. As a rule, the Congress meets every five years. The most recent Congress (the seventeenth since the establishment of the Union) met at Lausanne, Switzerland, in 1974, and the next meeting was to be held at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 1979. The work of the Congress consists mainly of examining and revising the Acts of the Union on the basis of proposals submitted by member States, by the Executive Council of UPU or by the Consultative Council for Postal Studies. The Congress also decides on administrative matters relating to the activities of UPU. The Acts in force since 1 January 1976 were those of the 1974 Congress of Lausanne.

Executive Council

The 40-member Executive Council of UPU is responsible for carrying out the work of UPU during the five-year intervals between meetings of the Congress. During its annual session, held at Berne from 2 to 18 May 1977, the Council considered administrative affairs and examined several studies concerning international mail that had been referred to it by the Congress of Lausanne.

Among the other questions reviewed by the Executive Council were technical assistance for developing countries, vocational training, international postal co-operation, relations with the United Nations and other international organizations, and improvement and simplification of various international postal services.

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

The 35-member Consultative Council for Postal Studies is responsible for organizing the study of technical, operational, economic and technical co-operation problems concerning the Postal Administrations of UPU member States, and matters of particular interest to new and developing countries.

During its annual session held at Berne from 8 to 20 November 1977, the Consultative Council reviewed its organization and laid down guidelines for its work programme for the 1979-1984 period.

International Bureau

The International Bureau of UPU, which is under the general supervision of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, constitutes the secretariat of UPU and serves the Postal Administrations of UPU member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation.

The International Bureau is responsible for collecting, co-ordinating, publishing and distributing information relevant to the international postal service. It also conducts inquiries requested by Postal Administrations and acts as a clearing-house in the settlement of certain accounts between Postal Administrations.

As at 31 December 1977, the total number of permanent and temporary staff members employed at the International Bureau was 130, of whom 55 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 37 countries) and 75 were in the General Service category. Also, 10 officials were employed in the translation services.

Technical co-operation

Technical co-operation was provided by UPU in 1977 under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), by the UPU Special Fund, and stricken Sahelian region of Africa. The budget for the 1977 programme was $330,850.

The expenditures of UPU are borne in common by all member countries, which, for the purpose of assessment, are divided into classes. The following table shows how the assessments for 1977 were apportioned among the various classes.

The Union provided assistance in the form of equipment, training, scholarships for vocational and advanced training, and the services of experts, consultants and development experts, who carried out missions in different regions of Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East, to examine questions of postal organization and training and to make forecast studies. The experts were also associated with the formulation of UNDP training projects and the organization of seminars, study courses and vocational training courses.

In 1977, projects supported by UNDP included 29 relating to postal services on the national, regional and international levels, 22 expert missions and 26 scholarships. In addition, 46 scholarships were awarded to students to attend training courses. Several projects received assistance in the form of equipment.

The Government of the Swiss Confederation advances the necessary funds and supervises the keeping of financial accounts.

The Executive Council of UPU approved budget estimates for 1977 in a gross amount of 15,973,200 Swiss francs, or approximately $7,947,000, and for 1978 in a gross amount of 16,160,400 Swiss francs, or approximately $8,040,000.

Within the framework of direct, bilateral technical assistance, several countries again received aid in the form of equipment, expert services, vocational and advanced training and advisory services. Several Postal Administrations also exchanged the results of experiments, inquiries or experiences obtained in various fields.

The UPU Special Fund, which is maintained by voluntary contributions in cash and in kind from member States, carried out a programme in 1977 that included fellowships, the provision of teaching materials and an assistance project for the drought-

Chapter XII

The International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

In 1977, the following countries became members of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU):¹ San Marino (25 March) and Djibouti (22 November), bringing total membership to 154.

From 10 January to 13 February 1977, a World Administrative Radio Conference for planning the broadcasting-satellite service was held at Geneva, Switzerland.

The Conference established a plan for the broadcasting-satellite service in the whole world except the Americas, which was to enter into force on 1 January 1979 with a duration of at least 15 years. Provisions were also adopted for the broadcasting-satellite service in the Americas, pending the establishment of a detailed plan.

Administrative Council

The thirty-second session of the Administrative Council of ITU was held from 23 May to 10 June 1977 at ITU headquarters at Geneva. The Council reviewed administrative matters and approved a schedule of conferences.

The international consultative committees

Study groups of the two ITU international consultative committees—the International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) and the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT)—held numerous meetings during the year.

Much of the work done by the CCIR study groups during the year was technical preparation for the 1978 World Administrative Radio Conference on the Aeronautical Mobile (R) Service for regular airlines.

Plan committees

Four regional plan committees of ITU were responsible for preparing plans for circuit and routing requirements for international telecommunications and for estimating the growth of international traffic. The plan committees also continued to work with the World Plan Committee, which was concerned with interregional relations.

The committees held no meetings in 1977; the CCITT secretariat processed questionnaires in order to publish a supplement to the 1975 World Plan and a supplement to the Regional Plan for Africa.

International Frequency Registration Board

The International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB) continued to register the frequencies that countries assigned to their radio stations in the Master International Frequency Register. During 1977, IFRB dealt with 79,033 frequency assignment notices and undertook a technical examination of 45,257 frequency assignments.

The Board also worked on the development of planning methods in preparation for the World Administrative Radio Conference on the Aeronautical Mobile (R) Service, and the organization of a world-wide monitoring programme on the utilization of the high-frequency bands allocated to the Aeronautical Mobile (R) Service.

Technical co-operation

In 1977, under various ITU programmes of technical co-operation in developing countries, 526 expert missions were carried out, 423 fellows were trained abroad and equipment valued at $4,174,868 was delivered, mainly to telecommunication training centres. The total cost of this assistance was $17,095,503. Countries and territories aided were the following:

Africa: Algeria, Angola, Botswana, Cape Verde, Central African Empire, Chad, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Mauritania, Morocco, Namibia, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Tunisia, United Republic of Cameroon, Upper Volta, Zaire, Zambia.

Americas: Argentina, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Jamaica, Mexico, Netherlands Antilles, Peru, Trinidad and Tobago.

Asia and Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, India, Indonesia, Iran, Maldives, Mongolia, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Tonga.

Europe and Middle East: Bahrain, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Jordan, Lebanon, Oman, Poland, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

The three main objectives of ITU activity in the field of technical co-operation continued to be:

¹ For further information on the activities of ITU prior to 1977, see also annual reports of ITU.

(a) promoting the development of regional telecommunication networks in Africa, the Americas, Asia and the Pacific, and the Middle East; (b) strengthening the telecommunication technical and administrative services in developing countries; and (c) developing the human resources required for telecommunications.

The Union continued to promote the development of telecommunication networks with a view to their integration into a world-wide telecommunication system, in accordance with objectives established by the World Plan Committee and regional plan committees. Studies and surveys were carried out by experts working in collaboration with member States.

In September 1977, ITU organized a meeting at Geneva of the Pan-African Telecommunications Network (PANAFTEL) Co-ordinating Committee, comprising the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa, the African Development Bank and ITU, to review progress made in the financing and implementation of the network. Further, a start was made on the review and application of recommended tariffs.

The PANAFTEL team assisted a number of countries (Guinea, Kenya, Liberia, Malawi, the Niger, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia) in the preparation of specifications and tender analysis for their transmission networks.

A survey of additional links was started in November 1977 by ITU experts, assisted by engineers and technicians from the United Republic of Tanzania. The surveyed routes were in Burundi, Malawi, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia, covering a total of 1,150 kilometres.

Co-operation with and assistance to the Telecommunication Commission for Central America and its member States concentrated in 1977 on the organization of technical meetings: in Costa Rica, on electronic switching and digital techniques; in Guatemala, on the accounting aspects of the Central American telecommunication network; in Honduras, on management and organization of a telecommunication administration; and in Nicaragua, on outside plant.

In the Caribbean area, a regional project was under way which aimed at providing assistance and advice in administration, regulations and tariffs to Antigua, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Grenada, Montserrat, St. Kitts, St. Lucia and St. Vincent. A technical meeting was held in St. Lucia in May 1977 which considered radio-frequency management and subregional integration in this field.

In Asia, ITU continued its effort to assist countries in establishing a regional telecommunication network.

Project assistance included a survey for a troposcatter link between Afghanistan and India, a route survey for a microwave link between Afghanistan and Pakistan, finalization of the type of transmission systems for the routes between India and Pakistan, formulation of proposals for inter-country circuits and supergroup allocations, co-ordination and servicing of intergovernmental technical-level meetings for network implementation and the servicing of meetings dealing with telecommunications for the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

In the Pacific region, ITU, jointly with the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Co-operation, assisted a feasibility study project for a South Pacific telecommunication network. Identification of needs and basic traffic data were updated and assistance was provided in the development of satellite systems, including site selection, cost calculations, cost-benefit analysis, tariff questions and specifications for satellite stations.

Work continued on the feasibility study and pre-investment survey for a Middle East telecommunication network. A survey of work in the region was being carried out by a team of experts working in co-operation with the countries concerned (all Arab League countries, as well as Bulgaria, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Greece, Malta, Turkey and Yugoslavia), the Arab Telecommunication Union and the Arab States Broadcasting Union. The survey included a detailed study of regional telephone, telegraph and broadcasting requirements and was to provide general specifications concerning routes, circuits, transmission systems, switching and signalling systems and tariffs. It was also to include a comprehensive study of the requirements for territorial and satellite circuits, both ARABSAT and INTELSAT.

Also under this project, several courses were held during the year. A course on the introduction to electronic switching systems was conducted at Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, in October and two seminars on signalling and tariffs were held in September and October at Amman, Jordan.

In 1977, 61 expert missions were carried out in connexion with the promotion of development of telecommunication networks in Africa, the Americas, Asia and the Pacific, and the Middle East.

The improvement and modernization of telecommunication facilities made it necessary to re-organize or to reinforce administrative and technical services in many developing countries. In 1977, 168 expert missions provided assistance in this area.

As in previous years, almost two thirds of total field expenditures were utilized for training in order to meet demands for human resources in various sectors of telecommunications.

Chapter XIII

The World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

During 1977, three States became members of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO): Malta (27 January), Seychelles (17 March) and Angola (15 April). The territory of St. Pierre and Miquelon withdrew from membership due to its change of status from an overseas territory to an overseas department of France and the resulting incorporation of its meteorological service into the French national meteorological service. Thus, total membership in WMO as at 31 December rose to 146—139 States and 7 territories. Guinea-Bissau deposited its instrument of accession to the Convention of WMO on 15 December 1977; its membership became effective 30 days thereafter. Djibouti was provisionally retained on the membership list in its former status as a territory pending action by the Government of Djibouti for membership consonant with its status as an independent State.

The Executive Committee of WMO held its twenty-ninth session at Geneva, Switzerland, in May and June 1977.

The twenty-second International Meteorological Organization Prize was awarded to George P. Cressman (United States) for his outstanding contributions to the science of the atmosphere and his prominent part in the activities of WMO as President of the former Commission for Aerology and as Chairman of the former WMO Advisory Committee.

Activities in 1977World Weather Watch

The World Weather Watch is the basic operational programme of WMO. Its primary aim is to make available to members basic meteorological and other information needed to provide the most efficient and effective meteorological and related environmental services.

Weather and environmental conditions over the continents and oceans continued to be monitored by the Global Observing System which incorporated advanced observing techniques such as the use of satellites, unmanned stations, ocean buoys and other automatic devices. Information was obtained from about 9,000 land stations, 7,000 mobile ship stations, 3,000 aircraft, 100 ocean buoys, 90 background air pollution stations and seven ocean weather stations. Two satellites were launched in the geostationary satellite scheme which, in conjunction with the polar-orbiting satellite system, was to observe the earth's atmosphere. Meteorological satellite data were collected by about 200 ground receiving stations.

Processing of the data occurred at the three world meteorological centres (in Australia, the USSR and the United States) and 23 regional centres which prepared and distributed weather analyses, warnings and forecasts to some 150 national meteorological centres. Daily, some 2,000 weather charts were prepared and disseminated.

To speed up transmission of meteorological information, the circuits of the Global Telecommunication System were improved: new point-to-point links were established and existing ones were upgraded to higher modulation rates during the year. A regional facsimile broadcast facility was established in Asia.

Research and development

In 1977, WMO embarked on the planning of a World Climate Programme which was to undertake studies for an improved understanding of climate, the impact of climatic change and variability on human activities and the effects of man's activities on climate. Preparations were made for a 1979 World Climate Conference and, in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), WMO initiated a research and monitoring project on atmospheric carbon dioxide to establish the trend in global concentrations of this gas and predict the consequences on climate.

Another activity during the year included planning for the precipitation enhancement project: experimental cloud-seeding operations were scheduled to begin in 1980. Initial studies were undertaken on the feasibility of an international project on hail suppression and on the possibility of moderating the violence of tropical storms. The second annual register of national weather modification projects, for the year 1976, was issued.

A work plan was established and studies were under way in a research programme in tropical meteorology, including aspects of the tropical cyclone project.

The Global Atmospheric Research Programme, a joint project of WMO and the International Council of Scientific Unions, is a world-wide scientific undertaking to improve the physical and mathematical basis of long-range weather prediction and understanding of the climate. During 1977, assistance by members was provided in the form of ships, buoys, aircraft and satellites needed to obtain the observational data during the first global weather experiment, scheduled for 1978-1979. The scientific and observational plans for two regional experiments concerning Asian and West African monsoons were also completed.

Meteorological applications and environment programme

The WMO programme on meteorological applications and environment includes all activities aimed at applying meteorological knowledge to human activities. In 1977, as part of agrometeorological activities to aid food production, the developing countries were assisted with the strengthening of their national agrometeorological services. Under this programme, expert missions were organized and technical conferences and training seminars in agricultural meteorology were held, two of them in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). Also, the exchange of meteorological and climatological data required for agricultural purposes was further improved.

The second phase of an agroclimatic survey in the Sudan was completed and a regional training seminar was held on the application of meteorology and hydrology to drought problems in the Sahelian zone and other parts of Africa. As a participant in the 1977 United Nations Conference on Desertification (see p. 509), WMO prepared, jointly with UNEP, FAO and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), a world map of desertification which was one of the main documents of the Conference.

The Commission for Special Applications of Meteorology and Climatology continued its work, focusing in 1977 on meteorology and energy problems, the climatic atlas project and urban and building climatology. Work in the energy field included the preparation of technical notes on meteorological aspects of solar energy utilization and on the meteorological and hydrological aspects of the siting and operation of nuclear power plants, in co-operation with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

The global network of background air pollution monitoring stations was further expanded during the year; it consisted of about 100 stations of various types. Co-operation with international organizations, in particular with IAEA and the World Health Organization, intensified in monitoring and training activities, and collaboration was extended to the Economic Commission for Europe's programme on the long-range transmission of air pollutants.

Work also continued on the pilot project on marine pollution (petroleum) monitoring, which was extended until the end of 1978. Under the aegis of WMO, an interagency working group on interchange of pollutants between the atmosphere and oceans was established during the year.

Activities in marine meteorology and ocean affairs were related mainly to the promotion of marine meteorological services in all spheres of marine activity, ...especially in developing countries.

The Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology studied the question of specialized instruments and observations needed at airports. Progress was also made in the field of aeronautical climatology.

Hydrology and water resources development

The WMO Commission for Hydrology continued its activities during the year, which included the development of technical projects and the preparation of material for the planning of a hydrological operational multipurpose system. The system was intended to be an operational hydrological facility which was to integrate observing, transmitting, processing and modelling subsystems into a comprehensive modular system. During 1977, seven working groups of the Commission continued to work on implementation of the operational hydrology programme in such fields as improvement and standardization of instruments and methods of observation for hydrological purposes, hydrological data transmission, processing and retrieval and project design data. Rapporteurs of the Commission studied water-quality monitoring, forecasting of ICC conditions, hydrological aspects of weather modification and training of hydrological personnel.

The six WMO regional associations continued, through their working groups on hydrology, to implement technical and regulatory aspects of the hydrology and water resources development programme. Close co-operation continued during the year with international organizations, in particular with UNESCO in the implementation of its International Hydrological Programme. Several joint projects were undertaken with UNEP and other organizations in the fields of natural disasters and environmental aspects of hydrology, such as the water-quality monitoring system of the Global Environmental Monitoring System. The World Meteorological Organization also participated in the 1977 United Nations Water Conference (see p. 553), and took steps to target its activities in hydrology and water resources to meet the aims set by the Conference.

Education and training

The education and training activities of WMO continued to expand during 1977. These activities included preparation of training publications, such as compendiums of lecture notes in specialized meteorological fields, compendiums listing the available training facilities in meteorology and on protection of the environment and syllabi for training meteorological personnel. New meteorological training centres were also established.

Seven training seminars and conferences were held on specialized fields of meteorological application such as agrometeorology, meteorological telecommunications, flood forecasting, potential economic benefits of agricultural meteorology, applications of meteorology and hydrology to drought problems, air pollution monitoring and meteorological aspects of atmospheric pollution and related environmental problems.

Work continued on the establishment of a new regional meteorological training centre at Baghdad, Iraq, and was expected to be completed in 1978.

A total of 187 students received graduate or post-graduate training under fellowships in 1977: 125 through the Voluntary Assistance Programme, 32 through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and 30 through the WMO regular budget.

Technical co-operation

In 1977, WMO continued to provide assistance to developing countries in the establishment and improvement of national meteorological and hydrological services, the application of meteorological data to national economic development, and the training of personnel, through its regular budget and Voluntary Assistance Programme as well as through UNDP, UNEP, and funds-in-trust arrangements.

Sixty-nine countries received technical assistance under the UNDP programme at a total cost of nearly $6.5 million. Of this amount, approximately $2.5 million was spent on equipment, 165 students from 46 countries and territories received training under fellowships and 113 expert missions were carried out in 37 countries.

Four new large-scale projects were approved in 1977: strengthening and development of the national meteorological services in Algeria and Angola; establishment of a regional meteorological training centre at Baghdad; and establishment of a meteorological training and research institute in Nigeria. Assistance was also given to the intercountry tropical cyclone project in the Bay of Bengal and the Arabian Sea and to the Tropical Cyclone Panel of WMO and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP).

Projects were under way for development, improvement and expansion of meteorological and hydrological services in Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Ecuador, Guinea (two projects), Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Iran, Mongolia, Nepal, Uruguay, Yemen, the Sahelian countries (Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta) and the Central American isthmus.

Projects establishing or supporting training and research institutions were operating in Algeria, Egypt, Kenya, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Caribbean and the Sahel, and water resources assessment projects were under way in Colombia and the Lake Malawi catchment. Other projects were: a cyclone and thunderstorm warning system in Burma; hydrology and climatology of the Brazilian Amazon River basin; improvement of the flood forecasting system in Pakistan; technical support to the regional typhoon programme for the ESCAP region; and a hydro-meteorological survey of the catchments of Lakes Victoria, Kyoga and Mobutu Sese Seko in Africa.

Eight funds-in-trust projects, in Algeria, Iran (two projects), Iraq, Pakistan, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia and the Sahelian countries, were implemented or approved for implementation during the year. Three associate experts, sponsored by Belgium, Sweden and Switzerland, assisted UNDP projects executed by WMO in Lesotho and the Niger.

The first three United Nations Volunteers to work in WMO-executed projects started assignments in 1977, one in Nepal and two in Yemen.

Assistance provided through the Voluntary Assistance Programme consisted of expert missions, equipment and supplies and fellowships for the training of meteorological and hydrological personnel. During the year, 221 projects were being implemented, of which 49 were completed and 60 were started.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1977, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding 68 Professionals on technical assistance projects) under permanent and fixed-term appointments stood at 277. Of these, 116 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 37 nationalities) and 161 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1977 was the second year of the seventh financial period (1976-1979), for which the seventh World Meteorological Congress (1975) established a maximum expenditure of $40,542,000, while also authorizing additional expenditures, not to exceed $1 million, to provide for particular circumstances such as losses resulting from changes in currency exchange rates.

The regular budget for 1977 amounted to $10,353,900. The 1977 budget for technical co-operation activities, financed from overhead allocations and other extrabudgetary sources amounted to an additional $1,721,500.

At its May/June 1977 session, the Executive Committee approved a regular budget of $11,824,000 for 1978:

Chapter XIV

The Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO)

During 1977, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) continued to pursue its aims of facilitating intergovernmental co-operation and exchange of information on technical matters affecting international shipping, and of achieving the highest practicable standards of maritime safety and efficient navigation, with special emphasis on the safety of life at sea and on the prevention of marine pollution.

Membership of IMCO rose to 105 with the admission of the following States in 1977: Qatar (19 May), Angola (6 June) and Guinea-Bissau (6 December). This total included one associate member (Hong Kong).

The tenth regular Assembly of IMCO, meeting from 7 to 17 November 1977, adopted amendments to the IMCO Convention designed to give the Committee on Technical Co-operation the same juridical status as the Maritime Safety Committee.

It also elected 24 members of Council, six of which were to take their seats on 1 April 1978—the date on which the 1969 amendments to the IMCO Convention were to enter into force. These amendments were also to open the Maritime Safety Committee to all IMCO member States.

International conventions

The organization was the depositary authority for the following international conventions most of which resulted from conferences called by IMCO in fulfilment of its statutory functions:

International Conventions for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1948, 1960 and 1974

International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil, 1954, as amended in 1962

Convention on Facilitation of International Maritime Traffic, 1965

International Convention on Load Lines, 1966

International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, 1969

International Convention on Tonnage Measurement of Ships, 1969

International Convention relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties, 1969

Convention on International Compensation Fund for Oil Pollution Damage, 1971

Special Trade Passenger Ships Agreement, 1971

Convention on International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972

International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973

Athens Convention relating to the Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea, 1974

Convention on Limitation of Liability for Maritime Claims, 1976

Convention on the International Maritime Satellite Organization, 1976

Torremolinos Convention for the Safety of Fishing Vessels, 1977

Activities in 1977

Marine pollution

The Marine Environment Protection Committee of IMCO continued its work on the control and elimination of marine pollution from ships. To reduce the numerous casualties to tankers, the Committee held a joint meeting with IMCO'S Maritime Safety Committee to prepare draft instruments for submission to an international conference on tanker safety and pollution prevention to be held in February 1978.

Radiocommunications

After the completion, in 1976, of a plan for a world-wide system of navigational warnings, a number of regional systems based on this plan came into operation during 1977. In November, the IMCO Assembly adopted a recommendation on operational standards for very high frequency radio-telephone installations.

Training

Preparations continued for an international conference, to be held in June 1978, to conclude a convention on the training and certification of seafarers, in co-operation with the International Labour Organisation.

Safety of fishing vessels

In March and April 1977, a conference was held by IMCO at Torremolinos, Spain, at which the Torremolinos Convention for the Safety of Fishing Vessels was concluded.

Ship design and equipment

At its 1977 session, the IMCO Assembly adopted a code for dynamically operated craft (such as air-cushion vehicles), recommendations on performance standards for magnetic compasses and operational standards for ship-borne navigational equipment.

Procedures for the control of ships were also approved, including measures for the control of ships which did not meet standards set by international conventions relating to safety and marine pollution.

Legal questions

During 1977, the Legal Committee of IMCO worked on the extension of the 1969 International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage to include substances not covered by that Convention. The Committee also considered a number of subjects for future study, such as the legal status of air-cushion vehicles, jurisdiction in respect of collisions and other maritime incidents, and promotion of wider acceptance of the 1910 Convention relating to Stowaways.

Technical co-operation

In addition to small-scale projects, work continued on large-scale projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme in several African countries, Brazil, Bulgaria and the Republic of Korea. During the year, IMCO appointed regional advisers for Africa and Latin America and interregional advisers on maritime safety administration and maritime legislation. In November, the IMCO Assembly adopted amendments to the IMCO Convention which institutionalized the Committee on Technical Co-operation.

Chapter XV

The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

During 1977, the membership of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) increased by five States. These States and the dates on which they deposited instruments of ratification of or accession to the Convention Establishing the World Intellectual Property Organization were: Burundi (30 December 1976); Italy (20 January 1977); Zambia (16 February 1977); Malta (7 September 1977); and Pakistan (6 October 1977). The number of States party to the WIPO Convention was 78 at the end of 1977.

Burundi deposited its instrument of accession to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property. As at 31 December 1977, there were 88 members party to this Convention.

The Central African Empire, Egypt, Mali and Malta deposited instruments of accession to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works and became party to this Convention on 3 September, 7 June, 5 December and 12 December 1977, respectively. As at 31 December 1977, the number of States members of the Berne Union was 70.

During 1977, five States—the Congo, France, Switzerland, the USSR and the United Kingdom—deposited instruments of ratification of or accession to the Patent Co-operation Treaty (PCT).

[The Patent Co-operation Treaty, with the exception of chapter II, entered into force: on 24 January 1978 with respect to the Central African Empire, Chad, the Congo, Gabon, the Federal Republic of Germany, Madagascar, Malawi, Senegal, Switzerland, Togo the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon and the United States; on 25 February 1978 with respect to France; and on 29 March 1978 with respect to the USSR.]

The following five governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by it held their sessions in September/October 1977: the WIPO Co-ordination Committee, the Paris Union Executive Committee, the Berne Union Executive Committee, the Madrid Union Assembly and the Madrid Union Committee of Directors.

The WIPO Co-ordination Committee approved an agreement of co-operation between WIPO and the Commission of the European Communities. It noted that the Co-operation Agreement between WIPO and the Organization of African Unity had entered into force on 24 May 1977.

The Co-ordination Committee also decided, by a vote of 22 in favour to 14 against, to request the Director General not to invite South Africa to any meeting of WIPO and its bodies and Unions and to include in the agenda of the WIPO General Assembly and other governing bodies, for the 1979 sessions, an item entitled "The exclusion of the racist regime of South Africa from any participation in WIPO and its bodies and Unions."

The 1978 programme of the International Bureau was approved, as were the budgets of WIPO and the Unions administered by it for 1978; these projected an income of 25,068,000 Swiss francs and expenditures of 25,511,000 Swiss francs.

Activities in 1977

Development co-operation activities

In 1977, the main programme activities of WIPO (as distinguished from those of the Unions administered by it) were those concerned with development co-operation.

The objectives of these activities were to promote in developing countries creative intellectual activity and to facilitate access to, and selection, adaptation and use of, technological, scientific and other information and literary and artistic works of all kinds for the purposes of economic and social development. Activities were aimed at strengthening national infrastructures in developing countries for the achievement of these objectives.

During 1977, WIPO gave assistance to the following developing countries or groups of developing countries on the topics listed:

Algeria, Bolivia, Honduras and Sri Lanka. Modernization of industrial property legislation.

Brazil. Continuation of a project financed by the United Nations Development Programme for modernization of the patent system.

Cuba. Training in the use of the International Patent Classification.

Senegal. Planning of specialized training of staff of the Scientific and Technical Research Administration and the functioning of that Administration in relation to other units of Government; expert services and training of an official in industrial property, transfer of technology and development of research.

Sudan. Implementation of a new patent law; preparation of draft regulations and training of staff.

Venezuela. Study tour for a group of officials of different units of the Government to acquaint them with the main tasks of an industrial property office and of a registry for transfer of technology agreements.

African Intellectual Property Organization. Co-operation in respect of the revision of the agreement establishing the organization; co-operation in the establishment of a centre providing documentation and information services.

English-speaking countries in Africa: Patent Documentation Centre. Preparatory mission on the feasibility of establishing a patent documentation centre within the framework of the Industrial Property Organization for English-speaking Africa.

African Regional Centre for Technology. Participation in a mission to 17 African countries concerning a proposed African regional centre for technology.

Arab Centre for the Transfer and Development of Technology. Participation in a mission to 21 Arab countries to determine the basic guidelines for the establishment of an Arab centre for the transfer and development of technology.

Industrial property

The fourth session of the Permanent Committee (Industrial Property), held in March 1977, reviewed past and current activities and made recommendations on the following matters.

It approved a plan for the study of existing arrangements in the field of industrial property for the promotion of technological innovation and called for recommendations concerning action which could be taken nationally, regionally and internationally for the strengthening of capabilities in developing countries, for the creation of suitable local technology and for the selection and adaptation of foreign technology.

At the request of the Expert Working Group on Information from Patent Documents, the International Bureau in December 1977 asked the patent offices of 12 countries for information on the principles followed by them in the exchange of patent documents, on whether they regularly transmitted such newly published documents to developing countries that did not publish patent documents themselves, and on the conditions under which they might be willing to supply currently issued patent documents, either on paper or in microform, to developing countries on a free-of-charge basis.

The Permanent Committee noted the progress made at the fourth and fifth sessions of the Working Group on the Model Law for Developing Countries on Inventions and Know-How and approved procedures for the completion of the work.

Later in the year, the Working Group discussed draft model provisions dealing with inventors' certificates, transfer of technology patents, registration of contracts, innovations and common provisions.

The Permanent Committee also considered a plan for the preparation of a new model law for developing countries which would replace, at least in part, the 1967 Model Law for Developing Countries on Marks, Trade Names and Acts of Unfair Competition. It recommended that, for the time being, the new model law should deal with marks and trade names, but not with geographical indications or with protection against unfair competition.

The Licensing Guide for Developing Countries, prepared by the International Bureau, was published in English, French and Spanish. It dealt with the legal aspects of negotiation and preparation of industrial property licences and technology transfer agreements.

Under the programme for 1977, 36 fellowships in the field of industrial property were awarded to officials from the following 35 countries and one intergovernmental organization: Algeria, the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, the Congo, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, the Gambia, Guatemala, Kenya, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Senegal, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Venezuela, Zaire and the Industrial Development Centre for Arab States (IDCAS).

A regional meeting on industrial property was organized by WIPO with the assistance of the Government of Sri Lanka at Colombo in February 1977. Discussed were questions relating to patents, trade marks and the role of industrial property (including know-how and licensing) in the transfer of technology.

This was followed by the World Symposium on the Importance of the Patent System to Developing Countries, also held at Colombo. Lectures dealt with questions concerning the transfer of technology and the role of industrial property in such transfer. Seven Asian developing-country Government officials and 10 officers of transnational corporations from industrialized countries delivered these lectures.

Another meeting, held among the countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations on the role of industrial property in technological and economic development dealt with: arrangements in the field of industrial property for the promotion of innovative capacity; questions relating to the subjects of industrial property, industrial property licences and technology-transfer agreements appropriate to the needs of developing countries; documentation and information related to industrial property and the transfer of technology; and industrial property and the technological and economic aspects of development in the countries of the region.

The Conference on Industrial Property and Transfer of Technology for Arab States was organized jointly by IDCAS, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, WIPO and the Government of Iraq at Baghdad in March 1977. The Conference discussed the role of industrial information systems in the process of transfer of technology, licensing problems related to industrial property and selected problems concerning the organization of industrial property and transfer of technology.

The Round Table on the Establishment of a WIPO Latin American Data Service on Industrial Property and Technology Transfer was organized by WIPO and the Ministry of Economic Development of Colombia at Bogota in July 1977. The Round Table recommended that WIPO establish such a service, publishing a quarterly bulletin containing certain specified data relating to patents, marks, technology-transfer contracts and offers and requests for the supply of technology. In October 1977, the WIPO governing bodies approved this recommendation.

The Latin American Seminar on Patent Information, organized by WIPO, the United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America and the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, discussed technological information as contained in patent documents. It adopted recommendations calling for, among other things, the establishment of centres for the transfer and development of technology suitably equipped with mechanisms for the exchange of technological information contained in patent documents.

Copyright and neighbouring rights

The first session of the Permanent Committee (Copyright) was held in March 1977. It considered such topics as international treaties in the field of copyright and neighbouring rights, support of national authors and performers, a model law on copyright for developing countries, a copyright glossary and manual for developing countries and protection of folklore.

Under the programme for 1977, 12 fellowships in the field of copyright were awarded to officials from the following 10 countries and one organization: Bolivia, Costa Rica, Ghana, India, Mali, Mexico, Rwanda, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Zaire and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Publications

Among publications issued by WIPO in 1977 were: the monthly reviews Industrial Property and Copyright published in English and French, and the quarterly La Propiedad Intelectual in Spanish; a collection of the lectures given at the World Symposium on the Importance of the Patent System to Developing Countries (February 1977); the Licensing Guide for Developing Countries published in English, French and Spanish; and Major Provisions on Trade Mark Legislation in Selected Countries—Summary Tables, published in English and French.

Budget

The principal financial resources of WIPO are ordinary and special contributions from member States and income derived from international registration services.

Ordinary contributions are paid on the basis of a class-and-unit system by members of the Paris, Berne, Nice and Locarno Unions and by member States of WIPO that are not members of any of the Unions.¹

States members of the Paris, Berne, Nice and Locarno Unions are placed in seven classes (I to VII) for the purpose of determining the amounts of their ordinary contributions. States members of WIPO that are not members of any of the Unions are placed in three classes (A, B or C) for the same purpose. States in Class I or A pay the highest contributions of their group and those in Class VII or C the lowest. The class in which any given State is placed is solely a matter for the State itself to decide. The rights of each State are the same, irrespective of the class chosen.

The contribution class for each member State of WIPO and of the Paris or Berne Unions, together with the amount of the ordinary contribution of each State, is given in ANNEX I to this chapter. (The class indicated for the Paris Union also applies to the Nice, Locarno and International Patent Classification (IPC) Unions.) Members of one or more Unions do not pay separate contributions to WIPO since the Unions themselves contribute towards the costs of WIPO'S International Bureau.

The amounts of ordinary contributions for 1978 are given in the tables below.

Chapter XVI

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

On 15 December 1977, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) became a specialized agency of the United Nations by virtue of an agreement concluded between them, approved by the Governing Council of IFAD on 14 December 1977 and by the United Nations General Assembly on 15 December 1977. (See also p. 786.) It was the fifteenth specialized agency brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter of the United Nations.¹

The first step to establish IFAD was taken in June 1976, when the Final Act of the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of an International Fund for Agricultural Development was signed by 91 States. The Agreement establishing IFAD was opened for signature and ratification on 20 December 1976, as pledges of contributions had reached the required target of $1,000 million in freely convertible currencies. On 30 November 1977, the Agreement entered into force, after the required number of ratifications were received by IFAD.

The creation of IFAD was one of the major recommendations of the World Food Conference held in 1974.² Under article 1 of the Agreement between the United Nations and IFAD, the United Nations recognized IFAD as a specialized agency with the objective of mobilizing additional resources to be made available on concessional terms for agricultural development in developing member States.

Objectives

The Agreement establishing IFAD provided that the objective of the Fund was to mobilize additional resources to be made available on concessional terms for agricultural development in developing member States. The Fund was to provide financing primarily for projects and programmes specifically designed to introduce, expand or improve food-production systems and to strengthen related policies and institutions within the framework of national priorities and strategies. It was to take into consideration the need to increase food production in the poorest food-deficit countries, the potential for increasing food production in other developing countries and the importance of improving the nutritional level of the poorest populations in developing countries and the conditions of their lives.

Eligibility for assistance was to be on the basis of objective economic and social criteria, with special emphasis on the needs of the low-income countries and their potential for increasing food production as well as due regard to a fair geographic distribution in the use of such resources.

The priority objective of IFAD was to assist the small farmer and landless labourers and their families. Emphasis was to be placed on quick-maturing projects based on an increased and improved use of inputs, such as water, fertilizers and pesticides. Longer-term projects in major land and water development programmes were also to receive IFAD assistance.

All projects in the field of food production—including fisheries, livestock, storage and processing—would qualify for IFAD financing. The dissemination of technologies and labour-intensive inputs was to be encouraged and opportunities for employment and higher incomes for rural populations provided.

The process of formulating and implementing projects was to involve close co-operation between the borrowing Government, IFAD and the co-operating institutions. While IFAD would delegate a number of technical and operational functions to the co-operating institutions, it was to ensure that the proceeds of any financing were used only for the purposes for which the financing was provided.

Structure

The organizational structure of IFAD is similar to that of the other specialized agencies of the United Nations. It has three organs: a Governing Council, an Executive Board and a secretariat.

The Governing Council, the highest administrative organ, consists of all States party to the IFAD Agreement. It meets annually. A Chairman of the Governing Council and two Vice-Chairmen are elected for a term of two years.

The Executive Board, which meets as often as the business of IFAD may require, consists of 18 members (and 17 alternates) elected by the Governing Council. The Executive Board is responsible for the conduct of the general operations of IFAD and, in particular, for the approval of loans and grants for projects.

² See Y.U.N., 1974, pp. 494-95.

The President of IFAD is elected by the Governing Council by a two-thirds majority for a term of three years. The President is responsible for conducting the business of IFAD and is eligible for re-election. He is the Chairman of the Executive Board and, as head of the secretariat, is assisted by a Vice-President and three Assistant Presidents (see below).

The secretariat of IFAD was to number less than 100 Professional and support staff members during the first two years of operation.

Membership

Membership in IFAD is open to any State which is a member of the United Nations, of any of its specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency. As at 31 December 1977, 91 States were members of IFAD. (For details, see ANNEX I below.)

Member countries are classified in one of three categories: category I—member countries of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development; category II—member countries of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries; and category III—the developing recipient countries.

During the year, applications of the following 23 States (in category III) were approved by the first session of the Governing Council: Benin, the Central African Empire, the Comoros, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Fiji, the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Lebanon, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Nepal, the Niger, Oman, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Togo, the Upper Volta, Viet Nam and Yemen.

Voting rights are shared equally between the three categories of membership. The total number of votes in each of the two main bodies of IFAD, i.e. the Governing Council and the Executive Board, is 1,800, with 600 votes for each category.

In the Governing Council, votes are distributed among members of categories I and II partly on the basis of relative contributions and are shared equally among members of category III. The same voting pattern is reflected in the Executive Board whose 18 members (six of each category) are entitled to the number of votes of countries which elect them.

Contributions

Each original member of IFAD in category I or II was required to contribute a specified amount to the initial resources of the Fund, while each original member in category III might do so. The same provisions were to apply to non-original members.

Pledges of initial contributions to IFAD amounted to $1,022,145,591, of which $567,316,017 was received from category I member States, $435,500,000 from category II States and $19,329,574 (of which the equivalent of $10,369,574 was in non-convertible currencies) from category III States. (For details, see ANNEX I below.) In accordance with the Agreement, the Governing Council was required to review within three years the adequacy of these resources and make recommendations for replenishment in order to ensure continuity of IFAD operations.

Activities in 1977

During most of 1977, preparatory work was undertaken to make IFAD operational. The 18-member Preparatory Commission (with six members from each constituent category) held sessions during the year to deal with the following items of work: rules of procedure of the Governing Council and of the Executive Board; by-laws for the conduct of the business of IFAD; financial regulations; lending policies and criteria; personnel policies manual; administrative budget for 1978; general conditions applicable to loan and guarantee agreements; relationship agreement between the United Nations and IFAD; agreement with the Government of Italy for the provisional headquarters of IFAD at Rome; and co-operation agreements with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the African Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank.

The Governing Council of IFAD held its first session at Rome from 13 to 16 December 1977 and elected Abdelmuhsin M. Al-Sudeary (Saudi Arabia), the former Chairman of the Preparatory Commission, as President of IFAD. The Council adopted the financial regulations and the by-laws for the conduct of the business of IFAD as submitted by the Preparatory Commission. It also requested the Executive Board to review the Preparatory Commission's report on proposed lending policies and criteria and to make recommendations thereon. After recommendation by the Executive Board, the Council, to enable IFAD to begin operations, provisionally adopted the lending policies and criteria. The Council also approved the draft agreement with the Government of Italy to establish IFAD'S provisional headquarters at Rome.

The Executive Board held its first session on 14 and 15 December. It reviewed the lending policies and criteria and approved the co-operation agreements with the international organizations.

In addition, the administrative budget proposed by the Preparatory Commission for the first fiscal year of IFAD was submitted to the Council through the Executive Board. The Council adopted the budget, including a special contingency element of 7 per cent, bringing the total amount to $6,535,000 for 1978. Total initial resources of IFAD for financing agricultural projects and programmes amounted to $1,022,145,591, the amount of initial contributions.

Article 7 Operations

Section 1—Use of resources and conditions of financing

(a) The resources of the Fund shall be used to achieve the objective specified in Article 2.

(b) Financing by the Fund shall be provided only to developing States that are Members of the Fund or to intergovernmental organizations in which such Members participate. In the case of a loan to an intergovernmental organization, the Fund may require suitable governmental or other guarantees.

(c) The Fund shall make arrangements to ensure that the proceeds of any financing are used only for the purposes for which the financing was provided, with due attention to considerations of economy, efficiency and social equity.

(d) In allocating its resources the Fund shall be guided by the following priorities:

- (i) the need to increase food production and to improve the nutritional level of the poorest populations in the poorest food-deficit countries;
- (ii) the potential for increasing food production in other developing countries. Likewise, emphasis shall be placed on improving the nutritional level of the poorest populations in these countries and the conditions of their lives.

Within the framework of the above-mentioned priorities, eligibility for assistance shall be on the basis of objective economic and social criteria with special emphasis on the needs of the low income countries and their potential for increasing food production, as well as due regard to a fair geographic distribution in the use of such resources.

(e) Subject to the provisions of this Agreement, financing by the Fund shall be governed by broad policies, criteria and regulations laid down, from time to time, by the Governing Council by a two-thirds majority of the total number of votes.

Section 2—Forms and terms of financing

(a) Financing by the Fund shall take the form of loans and grants, which shall be provided on such terms as the Fund deems appropriate, having regard to the economic situation and prospects of the Member and to the nature and requirements of the activity concerned.

(b) The proportion of the Fund's resources to be committed in any financial year for financing operations in either of the forms referred to in subsection (a) shall be decided from time to time by the Executive Board with due regard to the long-term viability of the Fund and the need for continuity in its operations. The proportion of grants shall not normally exceed one eighth of the resources committed in any financial year. A large proportion of the loans shall be provided on highly concessional terms.

(c) The President shall submit projects and programmes to the Executive Board for consideration and approval.

(d) Decisions with regard to the selection and approval of projects and programmes shall be made by the Executive Board. Such decisions shall be made on the basis of the broad policies, criteria and regulations established by the Governing Council.

(e) For the appraisal of projects and programmes presented to it for financing, the Fund shall, as a general rule, use the services of international institutions and may, where appropriate, use the services of other competent agencies specialized in this field. Such institutions and agencies shall be selected by the Executive Board after consultation with the recipient concerned and shall be directly responsible to the Fund in performing the appraisal.

(f) The loan agreement shall be concluded in each case by the Fund and the recipient, which shall be responsible for the execution of the project or programme concerned.

(g) The Fund shall entrust the administration of loans, for the purposes of the disbursement of the proceeds of the loan and the supervision of the implementation of the project or programme concerned, to competent international institutions. Such institutions shall be of a world-wide or regional character and shall be selected in each case with the approval of the recipient. Before submitting the loan to the Executive Board for approval, the Fund shall assure itself that the institution to be entrusted with the supervision agrees with the results of the appraisal of the project or programme concerned. This shall be arranged between the Fund and the institution or agency in charge of the appraisal as well as with the institution to be entrusted with the supervision.

(h) For the purposes of subsections (f) and (g) above, references to "loans" shall be deemed to include "grants."

(i) The Fund may extend a line of credit to a national development agency to provide and administer subloans for the financing of projects and programmes within the terms of the loan agreement and the framework agreed to by the Fund. Before the Executive Board approves the extension of such a line of credit, the national development agency concerned and its programme shall be appraised in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e). Implementation of the said programme shall be subject to supervision by the institutions selected in accordance with the provisions of subsection (g).

(j) The Executive Board shall adopt suitable regulations for procuring goods and services to be financed from the resources of the Fund. Such regulations shall, as a general rule, conform to the principles of international competitive bidding and shall give appropriate preference to experts, technicians and supplies from developing countries.

Section 3—Miscellaneous operations

In addition to the operations specified elsewhere in this Agreement, the Fund may undertake such ancillary activities and exercise such powers incidental to its operations as shall be necessary in furtherance of its objective.

Article 8

Relations with the United Nations and with other organizations, institutions and agencies

Section 1—Relations with the United Nations

The Fund shall enter into negotiations with the United Nations with a view to concluding an agreement to bring it into relationship with the United Nations as one of the specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations. Any agreements concluded in accordance with Article 63 of the Charter shall require the approval of the Governing Council, by a two-thirds majority of the total number of votes, upon the recommendation of the Executive Board.

Section 2—Relations with other organizations, institutions and agencies

The Fund shall co-operate closely with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system. It shall also co-operate closely with other intergovernmental organizations, international financial institutions, non-governmental organizations and governmental agencies concerned with agricultural development. To this end, the Fund will seek the collaboration in its activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the other bodies referred to above, and may enter into agreements or establish working arrangements with such bodies, as may be decided by the Executive Board.

Article 9

Withdrawal, suspension of membership, termination of operations

Section 1—Withdrawal

(a) Except as provided in Section 4 (a) of this Article, a Member may withdraw from the Fund by depositing an instrument of denunciation of this Agreement with the Depositary.

(b) Withdrawal of a member shall take effect on the date specified in its instrument of denunciation, but in no event less than six months after deposit of such instrument.

Section 2—Suspension of membership

(a) If a Member fails to fulfil any of its obligations to the Fund, the Governing Council may, by a three-fourths majority of the total number of votes, suspend its membership. The Member so suspended shall automatically cease to be a Member one year from the date of its suspension, unless the Council decides by the same majority of the total number of votes to restore the Member to good standing.

(b) While under suspension, a Member shall not be entitled to exercise any rights under this Agreement except the right of withdrawal, but shall remain subject to all of its obligations.

Section 3—Flights and duties of States ceasing to be Members

Whenever a State ceases to be a Member, whether by withdrawal or through the operation of Section 2 of this Article, it shall have no rights under this Agreement except as provided in this Section or in Section 2 of Article 11, but it shall remain liable for all financial obligations undertaken by it to the Fund, whether as Member, borrower or otherwise.

Section 4—Termination of operations and distribution of assets

(a) The Governing Council may terminate the Fund's operations by a three-fourths majority of the total number of votes. After such termination of operations the Fund shall forthwith cease all activities, except those incidental to the orderly realization and conservation of its assets and the settlement of its obligations. Until final settlement of such obligations and the distribution of such assets, the Fund shall remain in existence and all rights and obligations of the Fund and its Members under this Agreement shall continue unimpaired, except that no Member may be suspended or may withdraw.

(b) No distribution of assets shall be made to Members until all liabilities to creditors have been discharged or provided for. The Fund shall distribute its assets to contributing Members pro rata to the contributions that each Member has made to the resources of the Fund. Such distribution shall be decided by the Governing Council by a three-fourths majority of the total number of votes and shall be effected at such times, and in such currencies or other assets as the Governing Council shall deem fair and equitable.

Article 10

Section 1—Legal status

The Fund shall possess international legal personality.

Section 2—Privileges and immunities

Representatives of Members, the President and the staff of the Fund shall enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connexion with the Fund.

(b) The privileges and immunities referred to in paragraph (a) shall:

- (i) in the territory of any Member that has acceded to the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies in respect of the Fund, be as defined in the standard clauses of that Convention as modified by an annex thereto approved by the Governing Council;
- (ii) in the territory of any Member that has acceded to the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies only in respect of agencies other than the Fund, be as defined in the standard clauses of that Convention, except if such Member notifies the Depositary that such clauses shall not apply to the Fund or shall apply subject to such modifications as may be specified in the notification;
- (iii) be as defined in other agreements entered into by the Fund.

(c) In respect of a Member that is a grouping of States, it shall ensure that the privileges and immunities referred to in this Article are applied in the territories of all members of the grouping.

Article 11

Interpretation and arbitration

Section 1—Interpretation

(a) Any question of interpretation or application of the provisions of this Agreement arising between any Member and the Fund or between Members of the Fund, shall be submitted to the Executive Board for decision. If the question particularly affects any Member of the Fund not represented on the Executive Board, that Member shall be entitled to be represented in accordance with regulations to be adopted by the Governing Council.

(b) Where the Executive Board has given a decision pursuant to subsection (a), any Member may require that the question be referred to the Governing Council, whose decision shall be final. Pending the decision of the Governing Council, the Fund may, so far as it deems necessary, act on the basis of the decision of the Executive Board.

Section 2—Arbitration

In the case of a dispute between the Fund and a State that has ceased to be a Member, or between the Fund and any Member upon the termination of the operations of the Fund, such dispute shall be submitted to arbitration by a tribunal of three arbitrators. One of the arbitrators shall be appointed by the Fund, another by the Member or former Member concerned and the two parties shall appoint the third arbitrator, who shall be the Chairman. If within 45 days of receipt of the request for arbitration either party has not appointed an arbitrator, or if within 30 days of the appointment of two arbitrators the third arbitrator has not been appointed, either party may request the President of the International Court of Justice, or such other authority as may have been prescribed by regulations adopted by the Governing Council, to appoint an arbitrator. The procedure of the arbitration shall be fixed by the arbitrators, but the Chairman shall have full power to settle all questions of procedure in any case of disagreement with respect thereto. A majority vote of the arbitrators shall be sufficient to reach a decision, which shall be final and binding upon the parties.

Article 12

bear to the aggregate of the contributions of category I Members.

3. In determining voting power under paragraph 2, contributions shall be valued in terms of their equivalent in Special Drawing Rights as of the date of the entry into force of the Agreement and thereafter whenever there is an increase in the aggregate of the contributions of category I Members as a result of a new Member in category I, an increase in the contribution of a category I Member or additional contributions by category I Members.

4. In the Governing Council each Governor representing a Member in category I shall be entitled to cast the votes of that Member.

B. Election of members of the Executive Board and their alternates

1. All of the members and alternate members of the Executive Board from category I shall serve for a term of three years, including those elected at the first election of members of the Executive Board.

2. In balloting for the election of members of the Executive Board representing Members in category I, each Governor representing such a Member shall cast for one nominee all of the votes to which the Member which appointed that Governor is entitled.

3. When on any ballot the number of nominees equals the number of members to be elected, each nominee shall be deemed to be elected by the number of votes received by him on such ballot.

4. (a) When on any ballot the number of nominees exceeds the number of members to be elected, the six nominees receiving the highest number of votes shall be elected, except that no nominee who receives less than 9 per cent of the total voting power of category I shall be considered as elected.

(b) If six members are elected on the first ballot, the votes that were cast for the nominees not elected shall be deemed to have counted towards the election of any of the six members, as chosen by each Governor having such votes.

5. When six members are not elected on the first ballot, a second ballot shall be held in which the Member which received the lowest number of votes in the preceding ballot shall be ineligible for election and in which there shall vote only:

(a) those Governors who voted in the preceding ballot for a nominee not elected, and

(b) those Governors whose votes for a member elected are deemed under paragraph 6 to have raised the votes cast for that member above 15 per cent of the eligible votes.

6. (a) In determining whether the votes cast by a Governor are to be deemed to have raised the total of any member above 15 per cent of the eligible votes, the 15 per cent shall be deemed to include, first, the votes of the Governor casting the largest number of votes for such member, then the votes of the Governor casting the next largest number, and so on until 15 per cent is reached.

(D) If on any ballot two or more Governors having an equal number of votes shall have voted for the same nominee and the votes of one or more, but not all, of such Governors could be deemed to have raised the total votes above 15 per cent of the eligible votes, who shall be entitled to vote on the next ballot shall be determined by lot.

7. Any Governor, part of whose votes must be counted in order to raise the total of any member above 12 per cent, shall be considered as casting all of his votes for such member even if the total votes for such member thereby exceed 15 per cent.

8. If, after the second ballot, six members have not been elected, a further ballot shall be held on the same principles until six members have been elected, provided that after five members are elected, the sixth may be elected by a simple majority of the remaining votes and the remaining votes shall be deemed to have counted towards its election.

9. Each member elected to the Executive Board may appoint an alternate from among the Members whose votes are deemed to have elected it.

C. Distribution of votes in the Executive Board

1. In the Executive Board a member elected by a Governor or Governors representing a Member or Members in category I shall be entitled to cast the votes of that Member or Members. Where the member represents more than one Member it may cast separately the votes of the Members it represents.

2. If the voting rights of a Member of category I should change between the times provided for the election of members of the Executive Board:

(a) there shall be no change in such members as a result thereof;

(b) voting rights of each member of the Executive Board shall be adjusted as of the effective date of the change in voting rights of the Member or Members it represents;

(c) the Governor of a new Member of category I may designate an existing member of the Executive Board to represent it and cast its votes until the next election of members of the Board. During such period a member so designated shall be deemed to have been elected by the Governor which so designated it.

D. Amendments

1. The Governors representing category I Members may by a unanimous decision amend the provisions of sub-parts A and B. Unless otherwise decided, the amendment shall have immediate effect. The President shall be informed of any amendment to sub-parts A and B.

2. The Governors representing category I Members may amend the provisions of sub-part C by a decision taken with a majority of 75 per cent of the total voting power of such Governors. Unless otherwise decided, the amendment shall have immediate effect. The President shall be informed of any amendment to sub-part C.

Part II: Category II

A. Distribution of votes in the Governing Council

1. 25 per cent of the votes of category II shall be distributed equally among the Members of that category.

2. The remaining 75 per cent of the votes shall be distributed among the Members of category II in the proportion that each Member's contribution (made in accordance with Section 5 (c) of Article 4) bears to the aggregate of the contributions of the category II Members.

3. In the Governing Council each Governor representing a Member in category II shall be entitled to cast the votes of that Member.

B. Election of members of the Executive Board and their alternates

1. All of the members and alternate members of the Executive Board from category II shall serve for a term of three years, including those elected at the first election of members of the Executive Board.

2. Each nominee for membership of the Executive Board may, in consultation with all the other Members of category II, agree with another Member in that category that the latter be a nominee as its alternate. A vote for the nominee for membership shall also be counted as a vote for its alternate.

3. In balloting for members and alternate members of the Executive Board, each Governor shall cast for his nominees all of the votes to which the Member which appointed that Governor is entitled.

4. When on any ballot the number of nominees receiving votes:

(a) is equal to the number of places to be filled, all such nominees shall be considered elected;

(b) is fewer than the number of places to be filled, all such nominees shall be considered elected, and additional ballots shall be held to fill the remaining places;

(c) exceeds the number of places to be filled, the nominee (or the nominees receiving the same number of votes) receiving the fewest votes shall be eliminated and, if the remaining nominees having received votes:

(i) are equal to the number of places to be filled, all such nominees shall be considered elected;

(ii) are fewer than the number of places to be filled, all such nominees shall be considered elected and additional ballots shall be held to fill the remaining places, participation in which shall be limited to those Governors whose votes did not count towards the election of any member already elected;

(iii) exceed the number to be filled, additional ballots shall be held, participation in which shall be limited to those Governors whose votes did not count towards the election of any member already elected.

C. Distribution of votes in the Executive Board

1. In the Executive Board a member elected by a Governor or Governors representing a Member or Members in category II shall be entitled to cast the votes of that Member or Members. A member of the Board representing more than one Member may cast separately the votes of the Members it represents.

2. If the voting rights of a Member of category II should change between the times provided for the election of members of the Executive Board:

(a) there shall be no change in such members as a result thereof;

(b) the voting rights of a member of the Executive Board shall be adjusted as of the effective date of the change in voting rights of the Member or Members it represents;

(c) the Governor of a new Member of category II may designate an existing member of the Executive Board to represent it and cast its votes until the next election of members of the Board. During such period a member so designated shall be deemed to have been elected by the Governor which so designated it.

D. Amendments

The provisions in sub-parts A-D may be amended by a vote of the Governors representing two thirds of the category II Members whose contributions (made in accordance with Section 5 (c) of Article 4) amount to 70 per cent of the contributions of all category II Members. The President shall be informed of any amendments.

Part III: Category III

A. Distribution of votes in the Governing Council

The 600 votes of category III shall be distributed equally among the Members of that category.

Chapter XVII

The Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, held at Havana, Cuba, from November 1947 to March 1948, drew up a charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the organization (ICITO). Because of lack of acceptance of the charter, establishment of ITO was postponed indefinitely. However, while the charter was in preparation, the Preparatory Committee's members, deciding to proceed with tariff negotiations among themselves, also drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The Agreement—a multilateral treaty embodying reciprocal rights and obligations—entered into force on 1 January 1948, with 23 Contracting Parties. Since that date, ICITO has provided the GATT secretariat.

In 1977, the number of Contracting Parties to GATT remained at 83 and 25 other countries applied GATT rules in their trade. It was estimated that the Contracting Parties conducted about 85 per cent of all international trade.

Multilateral trade negotiations

The substantial reduction of tariffs and other barriers to trade is a main aim of the General Agreement. It has been the objective of a series of negotiations or "rounds" held within the framework of GATT, the latest of which was launched in Tokyo, Japan, in September 1973 by the Tokyo Declaration.¹ The Declaration among other things called for a review of the basic trading rules of GATT. Developed countries were expected to negotiate on a basis of reciprocity, while this was not expected from developing countries in the form of any contributions inconsistent with individual financial, trade and development needs.

Seven negotiating groups, under the guidance of a Trade Negotiations Committee, covered the main areas laid down in the Tokyo Declaration: tariffs, non-tariff measures, sectoral approach to negotiations, safeguards, agriculture, tropical products and improvements in the international framework for the conduct of world trade.

In 1977, over 70 developing countries, including 28 non-members of GATT, were among the 98 participants in the Tokyo-round negotiations.

A special assistance unit in the GATT secretariat continued to help the developing countries in the multilateral trade negotiations.

During the year, the negotiating groups on agriculture and on non-tariff measures agreed on a procedure whereby participants would submit requests for concessions by 1 November 1977 and would submit their offers of concessions by 15 January 1978. Draft texts or codes were agreed upon for multilateral action on such issues as international trade in meat and dairy products, technical barriers to trade, customs valuation, import licensing and Government procurement practices.

The progress of the negotiating groups in the Tokyo round in 1977 is outlined in the following sections.

Tariffs

During 1977, the tariff negotiating group examined several proposed formulae for a reduction of customs duties. For the final negotiations among developed country participants, a single formula was discussed which provided for a substantial reduction in industrial tariffs, with larger proportionate reductions in high than in low tariffs.

Non-tariff measures

Negotiations on non-tariff measures on trade were based on a comprehensive inventory of some 900 notifications by Governments of measures that they believed had either hampered their exports or provided unfair advantage to their competitors. Major categories of non-tariff measures for which solutions were being negotiated in 1977 included technical standards, customs questions, subsidies and countervailing duties, quantitative restrictions and Government procurement practices.

Sectoral approach

During the year, the possibilities for co-ordinated reduction or elimination of barriers to trade on the basis of trade and other data for the ores and metals sector were examined. The negotiating group also looked at a number of sectors of interest to exporters in developing countries, and for this purpose examined information regarding: handicrafts; fish and fish products; hides, skins and leather products; pulp and paper; and wood and wood products.

Safeguards

During 1977, the negotiating group on safeguards examined the possibility of revising the multilateral safeguard system and in particular article XIX of the General Agreement, which specified the circumstances in which member countries might take emergency action of a non-discriminatory character to restrict imports of particular products when those products caused or threatened serious injury to domestic producers.

During the discussion, the group considered the view held by some Governments that wide-ranging trade liberalization would be easier to achieve if safeguard measures could be taken selectively. Other group participants observed, however, that selective application would carry the danger of allowing easy or arbitrary establishment of trade barriers and that the principle of non-discriminatory application should be maintained.

Agricultural products

Due to the dependence of many countries on the export of farm goods, agriculture, as in past negotiations, presented some of the most difficult problems facing the negotiators. During 1977, three subgroups, dealing with cereals, dairy products and meat, examined negotiating possibilities under three headings: liberalization, stabilization and particular problems of developing countries. By the end of the year, the GATT secretariat had prepared two texts which were to serve as working hypotheses for the final negotiation phase on meat and dairy products.

Tropical products

In accordance with the priority called for in the Tokyo Declaration, most developed countries implemented during 1977 their concessions or contributions to developing countries on exports of tropical products. These were the first concrete results of the multilateral trade negotiations. Many of the products concerned were primary products, and others, semi-processed and processed goods.

Framework for conduct of world trade

The "framework" group, established in November 1976 to seek to negotiate improvements in the international framework for the conduct of world trade, particularly with respect to trade between developed and developing countries and differential and more favourable treatment to be adopted in such trade, held detailed discussions on these issues during 1977.

Preferential agreement

In 1977, Romania applied for accession to the agreement embodying the exchange of preferential tariff concessions, which had entered into force in February 1973 among 16 developing countries. Concessions were exchanged on some 500 tariff headings or subheadings, one third of which referred to agricultural products and raw materials.

Other GATT activities

Balance-of-payments consultations

The general prohibition on the use of quantitative restrictions on imports, together with the rule of non-discrimination, is one of the basic principles of GATT. The main exception allows a Contracting Party to apply import restrictions for the purpose of safeguarding its balance of payments and monetary reserves. Countries introducing new restrictions or substantially intensifying existing ones are required to hold consultations with their trade partners. In 1977, a number of countries whose balance-of-payments difficulties obliged them to restrict imports consulted with the Committee on Balance-of-Payments Restrictions. These countries included Egypt, Finland, Indonesia, Pakistan, Peru and Sri Lanka.

Regional trading arrangements

Several regional trading arrangements under the terms of article XXIV of the General Agreement, which deals with such matters, were examined during the year.

Special working groups were set up to examine the conformity of agreements with GATT rules, ensuring that such agreements eased trade among the countries concerned without raising trade barriers to the outside world. A group was also established to examine the conformity with GATT rules of the preferential trading arrangements of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (between Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand) which entered into force in August 1977. Also examined was the Caribbean Common Market as well as the trade agreement between Australia and Papua New Guinea which entered into force in February 1977.

Trade in textiles

The GATT Textiles Committee continued in 1977 its review of the operation of the four-year

1973 Arrangement Regarding International Trade in Textiles.²

In December 1977, the signatory Governments of the Arrangement—which accounted for over four fifths of the $50,000 million annual world trade in textiles and clothing—decided to extend the Arrangement for a further four years, beginning on 1 January 1978. No changes were made in the text of the Arrangement, but reference was made to certain conclusions adopted by the Textiles Committee on 14 December 1977.

Consultative Group of Eighteen

In 1975 a high-level Consultative Group, providing balanced representation of GATT's membership, was established to help members follow international trade developments more effectively, to forestall or deal with sudden disturbances in world trade and to fulfil their role in the international adjustment process.

The Group's main concern in 1977 was the growing incidence of protectionist pressures and the related threat of a retreat from the principles and practices of a liberal and open trading system. Also discussed were improvements in GATT rules and procedures for dealing with trade measures taken for balance-of-payments purposes. The Group exchanged views on problems of world trade in agricultural products, GATT's role in settling international trade disputes and the definitive application of the General Agreement.

Training programme

The GATT secretariat held two trade policy courses in 1977 at Geneva, Switzerland, for officials from developing countries who contributed to the formulation and implementation of the foreign trade policies of their countries. Since 1955, 606 officials from 100 countries had attended these courses.

International Trade Centre

In 1964, GATT established the International Trade Centre to provide trade information and trade promotion advisory services for developing countries. Since January 1968 the Centre has been jointly operated by GATT and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

The Centre's work for the developing countries was directed, in broad terms, to helping them formulate and implement viable trade promotion programmes and activities and to become progressively self-reliant in doing so. In 1977, special attention continued to be directed to providing aid through integrated national programmes.

(For further information about the Centre, see p.490.)

Publications

Publications in 1977 included the annual volumes of GATT Activities and International Trade.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1977, the GATT secretariat employed 213 staff members; of these, 96 were in the Professional and higher categories and 117 were in the General Service category. They were drawn from 29 nationalities.

Financial arrangements

Governments party to GATT participate financially in accordance with a scale of contributions assessed on the basis of their share in the total trade of the Contracting Parties and associated Governments. The GATT budget for 1977 was 36,320,000 Swiss francs. The scale of contributions for 1978 is given below.

resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

² By a letter of 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

The Charter of the United Nations and the Statute of the International Court of Justice

The Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our life-time has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.

2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.

3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 37

2. In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court shall be given in French and English. In this case the Court shall at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.

3. The Court shall, at the request of any party, authorize a language other than French or English to be used by that party.

2. The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 47

1. Minutes shall be made at each hearing and signed by the Registrar and the President.

2. These minutes alone shall be authentic.

Article 48

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.

2. The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.

3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.

2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.

5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.

2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.

2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 66

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.

2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.

3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.

4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case.
