Foreword

Each year the major international concerns of the world community are reflected in the activities of the United Nations—in its debates, resolutions, conferences and in the initiatives taken to deal with the global problems of our time. The present volume provides the record of those activities during 1977, the thirty-second year of the United Nations. It is a record neither of triumph nor of defeat, but rather a testimony to the immense problems facing us during this last quarter of the twentieth century and to the manifold and continuous efforts to deal with them.

It is my belief that this Yearbook, along with those which have preceded it and which will follow, can be of great value as a primary reference source on the state of our world. Here scholars and diplomats will find a comprehensive record of what has transpired within the United Nations and, in so doing, understand how this Organization can best serve to strengthen international peace and security and promote social progress and economic equity. It is a lesson which must be learned if our common survival is to be assured.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

To assist readers who wish to make a more detailed study of subjects discussed in Part One of this Yearbook of the United Nations, documentary references are provided at the end of each chapter and subchapter. These references give the symbols and titles of documents of the principal organs of the United Nations dealing with the subject concerned, records of voting and texts of adopted resolutions. Also listed are the numbers of the meetings of the various organs at which the subject dealt with was discussed. These meeting numbers indicate the relevant discussion records.

For those unfamiliar with United Nations documentation, the following information may serve as a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly; A/32/-, to documents issued for consideration at its thirty-second (1977) session; and A/32/1, to the first document in the series, A/32/2, to the second document, and so forth. A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.2/-, a document of the Second Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/AC.- documents are those of ad hoc bodies of the Assembly, e.g. A/AC.105/- refers to a document of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. Documents of limited circulation are so designated by "L", e.g. A/SPC/32/L.5 would refer to the fifth document that was of limited circulation issued by the Special Political Committee for the thirty-second session of the Assembly.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council. E/AC.- and E/C.- documents are those of Committees of the Council, e.g. E/AC.6/- refers to a document of the Economic Committee, and E/C.2/- to a document of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. E/CN.- documents are those of the Commissions of the Council, each of which also has its own number. E/ICEF/- indicates documents of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council.

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council.

DC/- refers to documents of the Disarmament Commission.

DP/- refers to documents of the United Nations Development Programme.

ID/- refers to documents of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

ITC/- refers to documents of the International Trade Centre.

TD/B/- refers to documents of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

UNEP/- refers to documents of the United Nations Environment Programme.

U.N.P. designates United Nations sales publications.

Full titles are given for documents of the International Court of Justice.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

Disarmament and related matters

During 1977, discussions and debates on disarmament and related matters continued to be held under the auspices of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) and in the United Nations General Assembly.

The Conference of the Committee on Disarmament held two sessions—from 15 February to 29 April and from 5 July to 30 August—at which it continued its discussion of matters relating to nuclear disarmament, non-nuclear and collateral measures, general and complete disarmament, and the organization of its own work.

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly had 17 disarmament items on its agenda and adopted 24 resolutions relating to them. Among the reports before the Assembly were those of CCD, the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, and the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament. Also, the Assembly had before it two reports of expert groups assembled to assist the Secretary-General with studies on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures and on the reduction of military budgets, as well as the Final Document of the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (held at Geneva in June/July 1977).

Many of these resolutions were concerned with nuclear disarmament. One called for the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests (resolution 32/78) while another dealt with matters relating to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons (resolution 32/87 F). Five resolutions were concerned with nuclear-free zones: ratification of Additional Protocols I and II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (resolutions 32/76 and 32/79); implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa (resolution 32/81); and the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in the Middle East (resolution 32/82) and in South Asia (resolution 32/83). A related resolution dealt with the security needs of non-nuclear-weapon States (resolution 32/87 B).

The Assembly also adopted a resolution concerning the strategic arms limitation talks (resolution 32/87 G), adopted resolutions by which it called for implementation of the objectives of the Disarmament Decade (resolution 32/80) and asked the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference to continue its work (resolution 32/89), and took various actions concerning the special Assembly session on disarmament in 1978 (resolutions 32/88 A and B and decisions 32/423 A and B).

Additional questions dealt with in resolutions were: implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace (resolution 32/86); chemical weapons (resolution 32/77); napalm and other incendiary weapons (resolution 31/152); banning of new weapons of mass destruction (resolutions 32/84 A and B); the Review Conference for the Treaty banning sea-bed weapons (resolution 32/87 A); reduction of military budgets (resolution 32/85); economic and social consequences of the arms race (resolution 32/75); preparation of a study on the interrelationship between disarmament and international security (resolution 32/87 C); regional aspects of disarmament (resolution 32/87 D); and publication of a disarmament periodical (resolution 32/87 E).

Report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament

The Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) was in session from 15 February to 29 April and from 5 July to 30 August 1977. During this period, the Committee held 39 formal meetings and 35 informal meetings on various subjects, including its schedule of work, its procedures, a comprehensive negotiating programme, cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, prohibition of chemical weapons, and prohibition of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons.

Representatives of the following 30 States continued their participation in the work of the Committee: Argentina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, India, Iran, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Romania, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States, Yugoslavia and Zaire. As in previous years, France, though a member of the Committee, did not participate.

In a message to CCD at the opening meeting of the session, the United Nations Secretary-General stressed that the arms race was a hazard to international security and that changes in the world had increased the need for release of resources through disarmament for economic and social development. Despite the conclusion of disarmament agreements negotiated by CCD during the past decade, the Secretary-General felt it was clear that no significant breakthrough to halt the ever-accelerating growth of the world's arsenal, whether nuclear or conventional, had been achieved. He considered it most unfortunate that the greatest increases in arms spending in recent years had been for conventional weapons in areas of the world where the arms race was as yet relatively unknown, and it was certainly most desirable and urgent that suppliers of arms to those regions, together with the countries of the regions themselves, find some mutually satisfactory means of curbing this dangerous trend.

Looking to the future, the Secretary-General believed there was general agreement that the most urgent attention in the disarmament effort should be directed towards an early halting of the nuclear arms race and the reduction and ultimate elimination of those weapons of mass destruction. He reviewed the most vital areas of work that would be taken up by the Committee at its 1977 session and expressed the view that its deliberations could contribute to setting the new and positive course in disarmament negotiations that the United Nations sought.

In accordance with its agenda, CCD continued to work on the following matters: (a) further effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament; (b) non-nuclear measures; (c) other collateral measures; and (d) general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control.

In its 1977 report to the General Assembly, the Committee provided a detailed account of the year's work; this is summarized below.

Nuclear disarmament

Members of the Committee continued their work in 1977 on several questions related to the halting of the nuclear arms race and to nuclear disarmament. This question was considered the priority goal of any disarmament effort and it was felt that the process should begin with the cessation of all nuclear-weapons testing.

In a statement at the opening meeting of the session, the United States cited passages from the inaugural address of President Jimmy Carter to the effect that armaments should be limited to those necessary for domestic safety and that the ultimate goal of the United States was the elimination of all nuclear weapons.

The USSR, at the same meeting, pointed out that one of the corner-stone items of the programme drawn up at the Twenty-fifth Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union in 1976 was to devise and apply international measures designed to halt the accelerating arms race and to reduce the accumulated stockpiles of weapons.

The United Kingdom also stressed the need to end the nuclear arms race and begin the reduction of nuclear weapons as the first step towards their elimination; it noted that, under article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons¹ (non-proliferation Treaty), three of the nuclear-weapon States (the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States) had assumed the obligation to work towards nuclear disarmament.

India said it considered the concepts of a nuclear balance-of-terror and arms control to be incorrect, as they implied a legitimization of the existence of nuclear weapons; they also implied that lasting world peace could be based on fear of such weapons. In Yugoslavia's view, developments in the application of nuclear energy for military purposes, as well as the advancement of military technology as a whole, had far outpaced the tempo of negotiations in CCD. Pakistan, maintaining that the tasks of prevention of further development and perfection of nuclear weapons and ultimately of their destruction and complete elimination were fundamental, held that the initiative towards those objectives must come from the major nuclear powers which possessed the preponderance of armaments.

Question of a comprehensive nuclear-weapon test-ban agreement

Bearing in mind the General Assembly's request of 10 December 1976 that CCD continue to give the highest priority to the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-weapon test-ban agreement,² members of the Committee continued to consider specific proposals relating to such an agreement.

In the discussions, many members, including Canada, Italy, Mexico, Mongolia, the Netherlands, Poland, Sweden and the USSR, specifically attached highest priority to the achievement of such an agreement. The German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iran, Japan and Mongolia said such a ban would be a decisive step towards the achievement of nuclear disarmament.

The USSR noted that its 1975 proposal calling for conclusion of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests had been referred by the General Assembly for consideration to a special negotiating body that was to include all the nuclear-weapon States.³ The USSR introduced in CCD an amendment to its proposed draft treaty; it had submitted the amendment to the General Assembly in 1976. The amendment added a provision (article II, paragraph 3) concerning the possibility of on-site inspection on a voluntary basis.⁴ The USSR believed this new provision opened the way to a generally acceptable understanding on the question of control. In view of the delay in beginning negotiations by the special body, CCD, in the USSR's view, could play a useful role in the preparation of a treaty.

On the verification question, the USSR noted that a number of States, including Canada, Egypt, Iran, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Mexico, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, had responded positively to its indication that it was prepared to take part in finding an acceptable solution to the problem of control. To assist in the solution, the USSR would participate in the work of the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, set up by CCD in 1976.

The United States and the United Kingdom continued to express the view that verification of a complete test-ban must be adequate.

Japan proposed the establishment of a verification committee, consisting of experts from both nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States, which could request additional seismic data if required and decide whether or not an on-site inspection was called for.

Canada hoped that the precedents on verification contained in the USSR/US Treaty on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, signed on 28 May 1976, which included both national means and, in some cases, on-site inspection, would assist in solving the verification problem.

Sweden submitted the text of a draft treaty banning nuclear-weapon-test explosions in all environments by which, it said, assurance of compliance was based on verification by challenge, i.e. an international exchange of seismological data and a verification procedure involving on-site inspection on a voluntary basis. Sweden noted that the draft proposed the creation of a consultative committee of parties to the treaty and contained a provision for appeal to the United Nations Security Council as the last step in the verification procedure.

The Swedish draft treaty consisted of a preamble and 11 articles. A number of protocols referred to therein were not annexed.

By article I, each party to the treaty would undertake not to carry out any nuclear-weapon-test explosion, or any explosion of other nuclear devices, in any environment; each party would undertake to refrain from causing, encouraging, assisting or in any way participating in the carrying out of any such explosions and to take any measures necessary in accordance with its constitutional process to prevent any such activity anywhere under its jurisdiction or control. An optional provision of article I for a transitional arrangement provided that provisions of a Protocol I were to be applicable to the United States and the USSR for a period ending on a date to be specified.

Article II stated that the provisions of article I did not apply to nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes carried out under international supervision and control which took place in conformity with a Protocol II.

By article III, each party to the treaty would undertake to co-operate to ensure full observance of the treaty; for that purpose they were to engage the services of a consultative committee, to be convened by the depositary either on his own initiative or within one month of receipt of a request from a party. Any party might appoint a representative to this committee, whose functions were to be set out in a Protocol III.

Article IV provided that each party would undertake to co-operate in good faith in an effective international exchange of seismological data in order to facilitate the detection, identification and location of underground events. Arrangements for technical supervision of compliance were to be laid down in a Protocol IV.

Further, article IV specified that each party would undertake to consult and co-operate for the clarification of all events pertaining to the subject-matter of the treaty. Each party would be entitled: (a) to make inquiries and receive information as a result of such inquiries; (b) to invite inspection on its territory or territory under its jurisdiction, to be carried out in the manner prescribed by the inviting party; and (c) to make proposals, if it deemed the information inadequate, as to suitable methods of clarification. Finally under article IV, if after consultation and co-operation there remained a serious question concerning fulfilment of treaty obligations, a party might bring the matter to the attention of the United Nations Security Council.

Article V specified that the protocols constituted an integral part of the treaty, and article VI described the amendment procedure.

Article VII called for a review conference in five years. Article VIII dealt with signature, ratification and depositary arrangements. The depositary was to be the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The treaty would enter into force upon the deposit of ratification instruments by [number to be specified] Governments, including the USSR and the United States. An optional provision for a transitional arrangement was included in this article. It stated that, pending the entry into force of this treaty, the USSR and the United States undertook to apply the provisions of Protocol I as from the date on which they signed the treaty.

Article IX specified that the treaty would be of unlimited duration. Each party in exercising its national sovereignty would have the right to withdraw if it decided that extraordinary events relating to the subject-matter of the treaty had jeopardized the supreme interests of its country.

Article X stated that if the treaty had not been adhered to by all nuclear-weapon States [number] years after its entry into force, each party would have the right to withdraw with immediate effect.

Article XI dealt with the depositing of authentic texts.

Comments on the question of participation in a comprehensive test-ban agreement were made by members. The USSR and other Eastern European States thought that the participation of all nuclear-weapon States would be a necessary condition to avoid impairing the security of any of the parties. Egypt, India, Japan and the Netherlands were among those which thought a test ban might be undertaken by the two major nuclear powers, at least for a time, while waiting for others to join. Sweden suggested a provision permitting withdrawal from the treaty if all nuclear powers had not adhered to it within a specified period.

On 5 July the United States and the USSR informed the Committee that they had held useful preliminary consultations and that they would be joined by the United Kingdom in negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban agreement. If such an agreement was reached, the United States noted, the Committee could then play an important role in the elaboration of an appropriate international treaty.

During the year, the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts on detecting seismic events held three sessions and submitted three progress reports to CCD.

Nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes

The issue most extensively discussed by CCD in connexion with the proposed comprehensive test ban was that of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes. A number of members expressed concern about the problem of peaceful nuclear explosions and the possible danger that, if such explosions were permitted under a comprehensive test-ban treaty, non-nuclear-weapon States might acquire a nuclear explosive capability in the name of peaceful purposes, or nuclear-weapon States might exploit a loophole in the treaty.

Canada, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Sweden were among those which believed no such explosions should be conducted under the treaty until some effective means could be found to make absolutely sure that there would be no weapons-related benefits.

The Eastern European States thought all States should be able to enjoy the benefits of peaceful nuclear explosions and that any solution to the problem must be based on article V of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.⁵ In the view of India, the proper forum for consideration of the problem was the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) rather than the nuclear test-ban negotiations; India believed that the question of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes was outside the scope of disarmament problems.

Non-proliferation of nuclear weapons

Many CCD members, including Czechoslovakia, Iran, Japan, Poland, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, spoke in support of the non-proliferation Treaty and called for universal adherence to it. The United Kingdom pointed out with regret that two nuclear-weapon States and some 30 non-nuclear-weapon States had not adhered to it.

Iran and India were among those which spoke of the close relationship between horizontal proliferation (the further spread) and vertical proliferation (the further development and stockpiling) of nuclear weapons; India said the true solution of the non-proliferation problem lay in halting the production of nuclear weapons and fissionable material for weapons purposes, with verification procedures applied to all States equally.

Pakistan said it shared the concern about the danger of nuclear proliferation but felt the non-proliferation Treaty could not be effective unless it was subscribed to by the major nuclear-threshold powers and unless the security of the non-nuclear States was effectively safeguarded. The Netherlands favoured the concept of an inherently safe nuclear fuel cycle, i.e. one that did not contain significant quantities of highly enriched uranium or plutonium in readily accessible form. The United Kingdom urged stringent controls, and accordingly it advocated the general application of the full fuel cycle safeguards developed by IAEA. It reported that the nuclear suppliers group had been concentrating on the harmonization of nuclear export policies as requested by the 1975 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

Japan set forth its basic policy on nuclear non-proliferation. It proposed, within the framework of the non-proliferation Treaty, that (a) positive measures be taken to guarantee the right of the non-nuclear-weapon States to peaceful uses of nuclear energy, (b) stricter safeguards requirements be placed on peaceful nuclear activities of States not parties, and (c) all nuclear-weapon States submit their civil nuclear activities to the IAEA safeguards system and that the role of IAEA be strengthened. Among the measures Japan proposed outside the Treaty framework were: (a) steps to prevent the accidental uses of nuclear weapons; (b) early conclusion of the second round and beginning of the third round of the strategic arms limitation talks between the USSR and the United States; (c) conclusion of a comprehensive test ban; (d) cut-off of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes; (e) strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States; (f) international arrangements for physical protection of nuclear materials during storage and transport; and (g) measures in the field of peaceful uses of nuclear energy effectively to control sensitive technologies.

Nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace

The question of nuclear-weapon-free zones and the decisions of the General Assembly on this matter were commented on. Romania favoured retaining the question on the agenda of CCD as a means of encouraging creation of such zones; it reaffirmed its interest in a zone of peace in the Balkans. India stressed the importance of voluntary participation in such zones by States of the region concerned, while Czechoslovakia and Poland hoped that the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof⁶ (scheduled to open on 20 June 1977 at Geneva) would stimulate interest in nuclear-weapon-free zones.

⁵ See footnote 1. Article V of the non-proliferation Treaty states: "Each Party to the Treaty undertakes to take appropriate measures to ensure that, in accordance with this Treaty, under appropriate international observation and through appropriate international procedures, potential benefits from any peaceful applications of nuclear explosions will be made available to non-nuclear-weapon States Party to the Treaty on a non-discriminatory basis and that the charge to such Parties for the explosive devices used will be as low as possible and exclude any charge for research and development. Non-nuclear-weapon States Party to the Treaty shall be able to obtain such benefits, pursuant to a special international agreement or agreements, through an appropriate international body with adequate representation of non-nuclear-weapon States. Negotiations on this subject shall commence as soon as possible after the Treaty enters into force. Non-nuclear-weapon States Party to the Treaty so desiring may also obtain such benefits pursuant to bilateral agreements."

Mexico called attention to the tenth anniversary of the opening for signature of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco). It welcomed the announcement of the United States that that country had signed, on 26 May 1977, Additional Protocol I of the Treaty, providing for the application of the Treaty within the area to territories of a country outside the area. Mexico called on France, the only country concerned by Protocol I that had not acceded to it, to make the Protocol complete. It also called on the USSR to accede to Additional Protocol II of the Treaty, providing for nuclear-weapon States to respect the objectives of the Treaty.

Iran stressed the need to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the area of the Middle East and expressed the hope that progress would be made towards a conference on a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean.

Pakistan again expressed its belief that a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia would be in the common interest of all countries of the region, while India held that the region was a subregion of Asia and the Pacific, in which a genuine nuclear-weapon-free zone could only follow from the total absence of nuclear weapons in the region as a whole. Pakistan urged that non-nuclear-weapon States take initiatives towards regional security against the nuclear threat from within or without their regions by establishing such zones, and that the nuclear-weapon States should take an active part in their establishment.

Japan, in respect of both nuclear-weapon-free zones and the proposed zone of peace in the Indian Ocean, maintained that a concrete and realistic way to assure non-nuclear-weapon States of their security was to explore a solution based on the prevailing political and military conditions in each region.

Other aspects of nuclear disarmament

Referring to the USSR/United States strategic arms limitation talks (SALT), Mexico said that the new spirit which was reflected in recent statements of the leaders of the two major nuclear powers should be demonstrated by further achievements at the talks. Sweden expressed concern over the slow pace of the negotiations, noting that the qualitative arms race threatened to undermine the very basis of those negotiations. Pakistan urged that the two major nuclear-weapon powers, which already enjoyed a preponderant position in military arms, make a beginning in nuclear disarmament through progress at those talks. In the view of the United Kingdom, progress at the talks was important because it could have a beneficial impact on the non-proliferation regime and on other arms control negotiations; the Netherlands felt that the further horizontal proliferation of nuclear weapons could not be stopped in the long run if the nuclear-weapon States did not enter into real nuclear disarmament.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR called attention to the proposal put forward by members of the Warsaw Pact in November 1976 that the States that had participated in the 1975 Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (Helsinki Conference) should undertake not to be the first to use nuclear weapons against one another. They also called attention to the draft world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations proposed by the USSR at the 1976 General Assembly session,⁷ and indicated their support for both proposals.

Japan pointed to the need for an effective system of control to reduce the chance of accidental warfare in the light of the great number of nuclear warheads in existence. It suggested consolidation and internationalization of the control systems of the USSR and the United States and prior notification of missile launchings and military exercises.

Question of chemical weapons

At the 1977 session of CCD, the question of a ban on chemical weapons continued to receive priority attention as requested by the General Assembly on 10 December 1976,⁸ and in accordance with the provisions of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction⁹ (bacteriological weapons Convention), which committed the States parties to seek early agreement on a similar ban on chemical weapons.

The Conference of the Committee on Disarmament had before it a number of documents, including the 1972 draft convention submitted by seven members—Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania and the USSR (along with the Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR which were not members of CCD)¹⁰—the 1973 10-member (Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Egypt, Ethiopia, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Sweden and Yugoslavia) working paper,¹¹ the 1974 Japanese draft convention¹² and the 1976 United Kingdom draft convention.¹³

Several working papers were submitted during the session and informal meetings were held in March and April and in August with the participation of technical experts. The main points of discussion were the scope and phasing of a ban, verification, and the draft convention of the United Kingdom.

Scope and phasing

The USSR and other Eastern European States, as indicated in their 1972 draft convention, held that any prohibition of chemical means of warfare should be comprehensive in scope, banning the development, production and stockpiling of all such weapons, even though the comprehensive goal might be achieved in phased stages. The USSR believed that its bilateral efforts with the United States under way since August 1976, concerning a ban on the most dangerous, lethal chemical means of warfare, could make a substantial contribution to that goal.

Romania and Yugoslavia expressed the view that the scope of the ban should be as broad as possible, should not hamper chemical research for peaceful purposes, and, if partial at the outset, should provide for the continuation of efforts to achieve further measures leading towards a comprehensive ban.

Egypt, supporting the comprehensive approach, suggested that an agreement on a chemical weapons ban should precisely define only highly lethal chemical agents, that a ban on production of chemical agents should not apply to such agents used as protection against chemical weapons, and that, while provisions for destroying stockpiles could become effective upon signature, in principle the obligations of parties under the agreement should be assumed only upon ratification.

The United States suggested that training and related programmes for the use of chemical weapons could usefully be prohibited; it hoped that this and other confidence-building measures would contribute to an effective ban. Also, in its view, any convention on the subject should not weaken but supplement the 1925 Geneva Protocol (Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925).

The Netherlands maintained that the reservations made by many countries to the 1925 Geneva Protocol concerning the right of retaliatory use of chemical weapons would have to be abandoned if the goal of strengthening the Protocol by a full prohibition of chemical weapons was to be achieved.

Japan considered that the prevailing view was that a chemical weapons ban should cover not only supertoxic compounds but also other lethal agents, and that the ban should be based on a general purpose criterion (i.e. it should pertain to agents that had no justification for protective or other peaceful purposes) supplemented by a toxicity criterion.

The Federal Republic of Germany held that a convention should from the outset embrace not only supertoxic but also other lethal and highly toxic chemicals, as well as incapacitants and binary weapons; it felt that that view had gained general support. Further, it believed that, over and above the general purpose criterion, the objective criterion of toxicity was generally accepted for the definition. Additional criteria should make the distinction between warfare agents and substances not suitable for military purposes as clear as possible, the Federal Republic of Germany added.

Verification

On the question of verification of compliance with a prohibition of chemical weapons, the Eastern European and a number of other CCD members continued to hold the view that national means of verification, supplemented by international measures, were sufficient for verification and that on-site inspection was not necessary. On the other hand, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, the United States and some other States generally maintained that on-site inspections were essential to control effectively both destruction of stockpiles and production.

The USSR continued to stress the need to maintain conditions in which the exercise of control measures for verification would not infringe the sovereign rights of States parties to a convention. At the same time, in an endeavour to ensure that agreement was reached as quickly as possible, it expressed readiness to examine the possibility of using additional supervision procedures. To that end, it submitted two working papers. The first paper was designed to explore the potentialities of national means of control; it pointed out that monitoring by satellite would be reliable and that that method was therefore of special interest. The second paper set forth the USSR position regarding monitoring of the destruction of declared stocks of chemical weapons; the USSR said the paper was a concrete expression of its readiness to discuss methods of such verification.

The flexibility indicated by the USSR position was welcomed by many members. Iran, Italy, Sweden and the United Kingdom stressed, however, the importance of further elaboration of the Soviet position.

The German Democratic Republic said it opposed the establishment of international control organs with excessive powers, as this would constitute a legitimatization of interference in the internal affairs of a State. Poland believed that all chemical weapons manufacturing facilities must be either dismantled or converted to peaceful uses rather than being "moth-balled."

The Netherlands introduced a working paper concerning verification of the presence of nerve agents; it held that the non-intrusive methods described in the paper permitted the detection of very small quantities of nerve gas downstream from a suspected plant. Also, the Netherlands considered that a declaration by all parties of their chemical weapons stocks would be an important confidence-building measure, and it recalled its proposal to establish an international disarmament agency whose initial task would be to supervise a chemical weapons treaty.

The Federal Republic of Germany stated that in the final analysis verification of a chemical weapons ban would not be sufficiently effective without international on-site inspection; it believed a system could be developed that would ensure the protection of commercial and military secrets. Sweden again stressed the importance of effective verification and proposed that, since no effective non-intrusive methods had been devised, additional ideas must be explored.

Draft convention of the United Kingdom

A great deal of the Committee's discussion during the year focused directly or indirectly on the draft convention which had been submitted to CCD by the United Kingdom in August 1976.¹⁴

With regard to the phasing-in of a ban, Sweden observed that the draft convention called, first, for the submission of information on chemical weapons by all signatories and the introduction of a moratorium on production before entry into force, and, second, for the destruction or conversion of all production facilities and weapon stockpiles. Sweden questioned whether countries having chemical weapons would accept such obligations before the entry into force of an agreement. Canada favoured such a phased approach, holding that it should lead, in agreed and verified stages, to an eventual total ban on all lethal chemical agents and munitions. The Federal Republic of Germany also favoured the proposed introduction of a ban on production, followed by the destruction of stockpiles.

The USSR, however, rejected the idea of accepting obligations before an agreement entered into force; it held that prohibition of production while stocks were preserved would put States not possessing stocks in an unacceptable position. The United States suggested that agreements to take certain action before the convention entered into force should be included in a document separate from, but linked to, the convention.

Commenting on the proposed scope of the ban, Japan considered that the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, as amended, would be useful as a model. It suggested that banned agents be listed in three annexed lists rather than attempting to ban a category of weapon. The first list would cover single-purpose supertoxic agents, the second would cover dual-purpose agents and the third would be for other chemical substances that had the dangerous characteristics of chemical weapon agents or that were precursors of binary weapons. Concerning the destruction of stockpiles, as detailed in article VII of the United Kingdom draft, Japan held that all single-purpose supertoxic agents should be destroyed within five years, and that dual-purpose agents should also be controlled to ascertain that their amounts did not exceed a State party's requirements for peaceful purposes.

The Federal Republic of Germany favoured the destruction of absolute quantities of stocks rather than percentages of total stocks.

Canada stated that, in view of the difficulty of defining chemical weapon agents precisely, it favoured, as an interim solution, a ban based on the general purpose criterion, together with negotiations on definition of the precise agents to be banned, based on further study.

The United States suggested elimination of the proposed ban on the use of chemical agents, since the 1925 Geneva Protocol already included a ban on use. It also believed that the ban should include incapacitating agents as well as lethal weapons.

This United States proposal to include incapacitating agents in a chemical weapons ban was welcomed by a number of members. Sweden requested further elaboration regarding a distinction between incapacitating agents and riot control weapons. It held that the need for use of the latter in peacetime was undisputed, and it should also be recognized that some uses of tear gases must be assured even in wartime.

The United States also favoured inclusion of toxins in a chemical weapons ban. The USSR and other Eastern European members opposed this on the grounds that toxins, whatever their origin, were already banned by the bacteriological weapons Convention.

Commenting on the reporting procedures proposed in article II of the United Kingdom draft convention, the United States held that it should be sufficient to report only on facilities producing, or designed to produce, single-purpose agents or their precursors, and those capable of producing toxic agents; if facilities producing less-toxic agents were to be included, they should be tied to a list of specific chemicals. Further, the United States preferred closing down or dismantling chemical production plants rather than converting them, since verification of the former action would be simpler than verifying conversion to peaceful uses.

Speaking on the establishment and functions of a consultative committee of States parties, as proposed in the draft convention, Canada and the United States held that the effective operation of a treaty should be the responsibility of the parties to it rather than be delegated to a separate international body. Iran favoured the establishment of a consultative committee and doubted that a system of safeguards similar to those applied by IAEA could be applied to the chemical area. Romania supported the idea that the control system should include an institutional framework that would give the less advanced countries a chance for direct participation.

The verification provisions of the proposed agreement were also commented on. Sweden supported control through a consultative committee but noted the need to solve questions concerning its mandate and procedures. It stressed the need to monitor military training activities as well as chemical production plants, and suggested that a system of verification by challenge might be used instead of on-site inspection. Canada and the United States supported the concept of on-site inspection by persons appointed by the consultative committee.

The USSR maintained that the proposed measures of control in the draft convention were mainly international in nature and disagreed with that concept on the grounds that it was tantamount to legalization of interference in the internal affairs of States and would lead inevitably to the disclosure of military, industrial and commercial secrets.

Responding to the comments on the draft convention, the United Kingdom pointed out that many years were required for the safe destruction of stockpiles and thus an immediate ban on production, such as it had proposed, was essential in order to prevent replenishment of stocks in parallel with their destruction. While the ban on chemical weapons should be as broad as possible, it was clear that the overlap with chemicals produced for peaceful purposes became increasingly greater, and the prohibition less absolute, as the scope was broadened. Accordingly, draft article I referred to agents which caused long-term physiological harm to man. With regard to the request of many members for a clear definition of the expression "long-term," the United Kingdom said a supplementary protocol to the convention giving detailed definitions would show a clear dividing line between riot control agents, which had effects lasting little longer than the period of exposure, and incapacitants, which had much longer-lasting effects. The United Kingdom agreed that binary weapons should be covered by the ban and believed its draft accomplished this.

The United Kingdom also said it considered the fears expressed on proposed verification provisions to be unjustified; while the possible disclosure of commercial secrets through inspections was an understandable concern, similar fears had been expressed with regard to the inspection of nuclear power plants under the safeguards system of IAEA, but such fears had not proved justified, even with extensive application of such safeguards. Because of the difficulty of monitoring the many chemical plants in industrialized countries, however, it might be better, as the Netherlands had suggested, to confine reporting and inspections in such countries to factories producing chemicals closely analogous to the most toxic nerve agents, with only random checks of those producing less-toxic chemicals. As for possible verification of the agreement by the use of space satellites, the United Kingdom concluded that, while technically feasible, such verification would not be adequate and would be too costly even for those few States to which satellites were available.

Ad hoc working group

Early in the session, Italy expressed the belief that significant progress could be made in 1977 if a pragmatic method of work was adopted, and accordingly it proposed the creation of an ad hoc working group of CCD, assisted by experts, with a view to seeking a concrete agreement on a chemical weapons ban; among those expressing support for this proposal were Canada, Egypt, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Romania and Sweden. The Netherlands hoped that such a group could formulate agreed principles for the desired agreement. The USSR and the United States, however, maintained that, since their bilateral consultations were at a crucial stage, the setting up of a working group prematurely would only complicate matters and be counter-productive.

At the final meeting of the session in August, the USSR and the United States stated that the most recent round of bilateral talks regarding their joint initiative on chemical weapons had just been completed, and that the talks would resume at an early date.

Question of new weapons of mass destruction

The question of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction was discussed by CCD in 1977, as requested by the General Assembly on 10 December 1976.¹⁵

On the initiative of the USSR, informal meetings on the subject were held from 14 to 17 March and from 9 to 12 August with the participation of experts from some 15 member States of the Committee.

The USSR and other Eastern European States, reaffirming the positions they had put forward at previous sessions, continued to urge early efforts to reach agreement on the subject. They maintained that the USSR draft agreement transmitted to CCD by the General Assembly on 11 December 1975 was a good basis for consideration of the question.¹⁶

India also supported the USSR proposal; it disagreed with criticism that it was amorphous, that new weapons of mass destruction were difficult to define and that verification would also be difficult. India contended that disarmament agreements already in existence did not contain precise definitions of the prohibited weapons and that the verification problem was a perennial one in all agreements.

Egypt stressed the need for agreement; however, along with Italy and the Netherlands, it held that the subject must not divert the Committee's attention from more pressing questions on existing weapons, particularly those concerning nuclear weapons.

On 9 August, the USSR submitted a revised version of its draft treaty reflecting a number of changes in article I and the addition of an annex, both relating to the scope of the proposed agreement. The USSR noted that a number of States had advanced constructive ideas and considerations which had brought agreement closer on some basic provisions of its proposal. It had taken into account, particularly, suggestions of Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, India, Italy, Pakistan, Poland, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The USSR said it had focused attention mainly on the question of the scope of the prohibition, without touching upon the sphere of existing types of weapons of mass destruction or the areas covered by existing agreements or by agreements which were being negotiated. It emphasized that it was using the 1948 formulation of the Commission for Conventional Armaments as a basis for elaborating a definition of new weapons of mass destruction. This definition, set forth in article I, stated:

"... the expression 'new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction' includes weapons which may be developed in the future, either on the basis of scientific and technological principles that are known now but that have not yet been applied severally or jointly to the development of weapons of mass destruction or on the basis of scientific and technological principles that may be discovered in the future, and which will have properties similar to or more powerful than those of known types of weapons of mass destruction in destructive and/or injuring effect."

Article I of the revised agreement, the USSR said, also contained a clause providing that, parallel to a general agreement, special agreements could be concluded banning particular types of weapons of mass destruction. It further specified that the list of types and systems of weapons of mass destruction was annexed to the agreement and that that list could be supplemented if new areas of development and manufacture of such weapons emerged after the entry into force of the agreement.

A representative list was annexed to the draft; it included radiological, infrasonic and other types of weapons.

The United States held that the best way to prevent the development and deployment of new types of weapons of mass destruction would be to keep the question under review, and develop specific agreements dealing with particular weapons when they were identified.

At the closing meeting of the 1977 session, the United States, reporting on the results of USSR/United States consultations on radiological weapons and other new weapons of mass destruction, said that considerable progress had been made on a joint initiative dealing with radiological weapons.

General and complete disarmament

As in past years, there was general recognition by CCD that general and complete disarmament was the ultimate goal of all disarmament efforts. Members referred to the subject either directly or in connexion with other questions, such as the elaboration of a comprehensive programme of disarmament in the context of the objectives of the Disarmament Decade (the 1970s), the 1978 special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, or the proposed world disarmament conference.

The USSR called attention to its willingness to proceed towards the realization of the final goal on a step-by-step basis, and submitted a memorandum outlining the main areas for co-ordinated action on disarmament which, it said, should be taken into account in the elaboration by CCD of a comprehensive programme of disarmament. This memorandum had also been submitted to the 1976 session of the General Assembly.¹⁷

The United States affirmed its intention to press for arms control agreements which would ensure a stable balance at every stage in the process, enhance its security and that of other countries, and include adequate verification arrangements.

The German Democratic Republic noted that the USSR memorandum as well as other initiatives had focused on nuclear disarmament as a first priority while keeping the ultimate objective in view. India favoured proceeding on a step-by-step basis, starting with nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, within the framework of the ultimate goal. This process must be based on the premise of arms limitation rather than arms control, which simply maintained a balance of terror. Italy stressed the need for a systematic programme of disarmament with both short- and long-term objectives.

Yugoslavia called for simultaneous action in three directions: acceleration of negotiations and conclusion of agreements on questions that had been discussed in CCD for a number of years; urgent measures to halt the arms race at its source; and full implementation of all provisions of disarmament agreements, not only those selected by individual preferences. In Yugoslavia's view, unless achievements were made in those areas, existing treaties would soon lose their validity.

On the question of elaborating a disarmament programme in the framework of the Disarmament Decade, Mexico maintained that the proposed comprehensive programme of disarmament which it had submitted to the Assembly jointly with Ireland, Morocco, Pakistan, Sweden and Yugoslavia in 1970¹⁸ should be used as a point of departure. It introduced a working paper containing a draft programme which, it said, largely reproduced the 1970 programme, with certain changes, including one concerning the responsibility of the principal nuclear-weapon States in implementing various measures.

Pakistan supported the Mexican paper, but wanted the question of security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States to be included in the measures for which the nuclear-weapon States bore responsibility.

India noted that the main elements of a comprehensive programme had been established in the USSR/United States Joint Statement of Agreed Principles for Disarmament Negotiations, of September 1961,¹⁹ which had been endorsed by the Assembly on 20 December 1961;²⁰ there could be no other agreed basis for developing such a programme.

Egypt expressed support for the disarmament programme tabled in 1970 by Mexico, Sweden and Yugoslavia.²¹ Italy called attention to the suggestions on the subject it had also put forward in 1970.²²

The USSR—noting that some members of CCD had expressed themselves in favour of the six-power programme submitted to the General Assembly in 1970 while others had suggested that the 1961 two-power Joint Statement of Agreed Principles should be taken as the starting point for further work—said that the various considerations expressed in CCD deserved careful examination in the search for a mutually acceptable solution. It suggested that the memorandum it had submitted on questions of ending the arms race and of disarmament might be taken as the basic document, or as one of the basic documents, for the elaboration of a concrete comprehensive disarmament programme; the memorandum was a comprehensive document containing a programme for those measures most urgent currently and in the foreseeable future.

The Committee held five informal meetings on the subject during March, following which a number of members, including Egypt, India and Nigeria, expressed regret that no comprehensive negotiating programme had been worked out. At the same time, others, including the United Kingdom and the United States, cautioned that CCD's approach to disarmament should be flexible and not forced into rigid and static guidelines. They observed that the desire for a comprehensive disarmament programme had been reflected in the provisional agenda of the forthcoming 1978 special General Assembly session on disarmament. The USSR noted that there was as yet no common view either on the content of the proposed disarmament programme or on the approach towards its elaboration; that was understandable, it said, because the implementation of a comprehensive disarmament programme must involve all States in the process of disarmament.

Nigeria held that the 1961 Joint Statement of Agreed Principles and the CCD agenda adopted in 1968²³ needed to be brought up to date in view of subsequent developments and the growing demand of world public opinion for an increase in the pace of disarmament. It recalled the Assembly's urgent request of 10 December 1976²⁴ that CCD adopt a comprehensive negotiating programme during its 1977 session. Nigeria maintained that the fact that CCD had not been able to tackle substantial disarmament issues in a systematic and comprehensive manner called for a review of its methods of approach. It opposed the view that the matter should be regarded as the responsibility of the USSR and the United States only, and stressed the direct relationship between the arms race and the new international economic order. Nigeria, therefore, proposed the setting up of an informal working group to prepare a draft programme for the Committee's consideration and adoption by consensus not later than the first part of the 1978 session and definitely before the Assembly's 1978 special disarmament session.

The Federal Republic of Germany subsequently orally submitted a draft decision to the effect that a working group should be established at the beginning of the next session of CCD. Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States supported the proposal.

Hungary considered that the establishment of an ad hoc working group could facilitate consideration of the question, but thought that due to lack of time CCD was not in a position to take an immediate decision. It might, however, consider the proposal at the beginning of its 1978 session.

On 25 August 1977, CCD took note of the consensus reached among its members that, at the beginning of the first part of the 1978 session, an ad hoc working group would be established to discuss and elaborate a draft comprehensive programme of disarmament to be submitted to CCD for consideration.

On the question of the Assembly's decision to convene a special session devoted to disarmament, a number of members, including Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Hungary, Iran, Italy, Romania, Sweden, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia, felt it would offer an opportunity for progress in disarmament. Bulgaria, Mexico, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United States maintained that it was important for CCD to achieve concrete progress prior to the special session, both to maintain its credibility and as a contribution towards the success of the session. Yugoslavia emphasized the international community's growing awareness of the dangers of the arms race, and believed the session should enable an authoritative appraisal to be made of the disarmament situation. The Eastern European countries generally regarded the special session as a step towards the subsequent convening of a world disarmament conference.

Other collateral non-nuclear measures

Among the collateral disarmament measures which received attention at the 1977 CCD meetings were the reduction of military budgets, the economic and social consequences of the arms race, limitations on conventional weapons and on the arms trade and related questions, particularly regional aspects of disarmament. Other matters discussed were the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques concluded in 1976,²⁵ and the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (sea-bed Treaty),²⁶ scheduled to open on 20 June 1977 at Geneva.

On the subject of the reduction of military budgets, the United Kingdom was among those which expressed the hope that the Secretary-General's Group of Budgetary Experts, which was to make recommendations based on an analysis of comments received from Governments, would be able to provide an agreed basis for measuring and comparing military expenditures so that reductions therein could be based on dependable criteria. The United Kingdom said such reductions must be universal to be an effective stimulant to economic and social progress of all countries. The USSR commented that its unilateral budget reduction for 1977 was further evidence of its desire to make a breakthrough in halting the arms race.

Speaking on the economic and social aspects of the arms race, the USSR said that there was universal concern that resources which could be used to eradicate poverty, illiteracy and disease were being used for arms production and the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race. In Italy's view, the diversion of resources to military ends was threatening detente by depriving mankind of capital for the development of its economic and social well-being. Mongolia noted the relationship between detente, disarmament and development, and hoped that resources devoted to the arms race would be diverted to peaceful uses, while Romania said that the continuing arms race was jeopardizing the correction of those international structures which had for centuries given rise to inequalities, suffering and disasters.

The United States said it placed great importance on achieving effective control over the transfer of conventional arms to other countries and the reduction of the international arms trade, and would work to encourage co-operation among States that were both suppliers and importers of arms to achieve a reduction in the world arms trade.

The United Kingdom stressed that disarmament must include not only weapons of mass destruction but also conventional weapons, and it urged international discussions concerning arrangements for multilateral restraint in transfers of conventional arms.

Italy suggested studies with a view towards reduction of military expenditures and the conversion of military industries, the publication by the United Nations of data on arms production and transfers, and the creation by the Security Council of a committee divided into regional sub-committees of suppliers and importers within each region. They would be entrusted with the task of maintaining conventional weaponry at the lowest possible level.

Pakistan said that third world States must provide impetus to the disarmament process through their own collective and regional initiatives. India, however, thought that developing countries needed conventional weapons to preserve their hard-won independence. Romania, referring to the military situation in Europe, where practical measures for disarmament and nuclear disengagement were being increasingly felt, held that CCD should devote special attention to that continent.

Many CCD members, including Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iran, Italy, Mongolia, the USSR and the United Kingdom, commented that the negotiation and successful conclusion of the 1976 Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques was a significant achievement for CCD. Mexico, however, maintained that the Convention was the kind of product that CCD should not duplicate because, by specifically prohibiting activities with widespread, long-lasting or severe effects, it legitimized undesirable military activities which did not have those effects.

The USSR held that the June/July 1977 Review Conference of the parties to the sea-bed Treaty had affirmed the importance of that Treaty as a link in the chain of international restrictions limiting the nuclear arms race. Several States of Eastern Europe, including Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, welcomed the Review Conference's position in favour of further measures for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed; Hungary proposed that CCD should prepare to consider that question, as requested by the Conference. Poland noted that there was international interest in expanding the scope of the agreement and felt that the Review Conference's recommendations would facilitate broader future agreements in the sea-bed area. The USSR favoured negotiations by CCD on practical steps leading to complete exclusion of the sea-bed from the arms race, while the United Kingdom believed that broader adherence to the sea-bed Treaty would contribute to international security, and suggested that an ad hoc expert group might be established to help keep technological developments under review.

Organization and procedures

In accordance with a decision taken at the end of its 1976 session, CCD held four informal meetings early in 1977 on the question of its organization and procedures, with a view to improving its effectiveness. Several suggestions, including proposals for both structural and procedural changes, were put forward by Mexico, primarily, and by some other members. Arguing against these proposals, the Western and the Eastern European members drew attention to the great flexibility which had been established in CCD through the years. They cautioned against change for the sake of change in view of the fact that the Committee's work was bound to remain difficult regardless of structural and procedural arrangements. By a compromise decision adopted without objection, CCD decided: (a) that it would continue to use ad hoc groups for specific negotiating and drafting purposes in a flexible manner, depending on needs as they arose; (b) that the drafting of CCD reports to the General Assembly would be effected by the United Nations Secretariat; (c) that verbatim records of plenary meetings and documents of CCD would be distributed to United Nations Members at United Nations Headquarters as soon as they become available; and (d) that the communiqués of plenary meetings would adequately reflect the substance of the proceedings of those meetings.

Consideration of disarmament questions by the General Assembly

When the General Assembly convened for its thirty-second session on 20 September 1977, it had 17 disarmament items on its agenda. All of these items were on the agenda by virtue of Assembly decisions taken in earlier years and had been discussed previously—except for the question of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, which was on the agenda for the first time.

The other items concerned the economic and social consequences of the armaments race, various matters relating to nuclear-free zones, and implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace. Also on the agenda were the urgent need for cessation of nuclear and thermonuclear tests and the conclusion of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests.

Additional topics were the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons; the question of incendiary and other specific conventional weapons; the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; the reduction of military budgets; the question of general and complete disarmament; the question of effective measures to implement the purposes and objectives of the Disarmament Decade; and the question of a world disarmament conference.

These disarmament items were referred by the Assembly for consideration to its First Committee.

Although the matter was not on the agenda, the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques was mentioned by many speakers, who noted and welcomed the opening for signature of that Convention on 18 May 1977.

The First Committee held a general debate on these items and then considered separately draft resolutions relating to each. Its deliberations took place at meetings held between 18 October and 25 November 1977.

The Assembly adopted 24 resolutions on disarmament questions. One of them, reflecting for the first time an agreed amalgam of two of the agenda items, concerned the cessation of nuclear and thermonuclear tests and the conclusion of a treaty on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests. Five of the resolutions dealt with various aspects of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones, one was related to the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, two dealt with the question of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new weapons of mass destruction, and two dealt with the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament.

Six further resolutions were on the questions of: chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons; prohibitions or restrictions of use of incendiary and other specific conventional weapons; the economic and social consequences of the arms race; the reduction of military budgets; the implementation of the purposes and objectives of the Disarmament Decade; and the world disarmament conference.

Under the item on general and complete disarmament, the Assembly adopted seven resolutions dealing with the following matters: the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof; security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States; a study on the interrelationship between disarmament and international security; a study on the regional aspects of disarmament; the publication of a disarmament periodical; matters relating to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, including the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes; and the strategic arms limitation talks between the USSR and the United States.

The discussions of these questions and the decisions taken are described in the sections below.

Questions relating to nuclear weapons

Prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests

At the 1977 session of the General Assembly, the question of the cessation of nuclear-weapon tests appeared on the agenda under two separate items: one was entitled "Urgent need for cessation of nuclear and thermonuclear tests and conclusion of a treaty designed to achieve a comprehensive test ban: report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD);" the other was entitled "Conclusion of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests." The former related to negotiation of a comprehensive test ban in CCD, as requested by the General Assembly on 10 December 1976,²⁷ and the latter concerned negotiation of a treaty by a special negotiating group, in accordance with an Assembly decision of 14 December 1976.²⁸ The Assembly referred these items to its First Committee.

In addition to the report of CCD, the Committee had a number of documents before it on this topic. Among them was a note from the USSR addressed to the Secretary-General on 17 February 1977 which referred to the fact that on 11 December 1975 the General Assembly had called upon all nuclear-weapon States to enter into negotiations, with a view to reaching agreement on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests, with the participation of 25 to 30 non-nuclear-weapon States,²⁹ and that on 10 December 1976³⁰ it had again declared that such negotiation should be held as soon as possible. The note also referred to the revised draft treaty on the subject submitted by the USSR to the 1976 Assembly session which, it said, had opened up new possibilities for reaching a generally acceptable understanding regarding supervision of compliance with an international agreement on the cessation of all types of nuclear-weapon tests.³¹ The USSR reaffirmed its readiness to participate in negotiations on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests.

Also before the Committee was a letter dated 3 June 1977 from Nigeria to the Secretary-General informing him that the group of 26 non-nuclear-weapon States appointed to participate in the negotiations had met informally and taken note of the communication of the USSR reaffirming its readiness to participate in the negotiations to conclude a nuclear test-ban treaty. Nigeria requested the Secretary-General to convene an official meeting of the appointed States to discuss the necessary measures to be undertaken for the implementation of the provisions of the Assembly's resolutions on this question.

On 4 November 1977, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that the nuclear-weapon States had been contacted by the Secretariat and the indications received corresponded to the positions as communicated the previous year, that is, that among the nuclear powers only the USSR was prepared to participate in those negotiations.

In the debate on the two agenda items, several States, including Ethiopia, India, Nepal, Nigeria, Peru and Turkey, expressed regret that failure of all the nuclear powers to agree to join in such negotiations had thus far prevented implementation of the USSR proposal. In addition, most speakers, encouraged by the beginning of trilateral negotiations on this subject by the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, stressed the urgency and importance of early cessation of all nuclear testing and completion of a draft treaty for consideration and action by CCD and by the 1978 special session of the General Assembly on disarmament.

The USSR told the Assembly that, under an arrangement with the United Kingdom and the United States, it had consented to suspend underground nuclear-weapon tests for a time even before the other nuclear powers acceded to a future treaty. That statement was welcomed by a number of Members, including Canada, Japan and several Eastern European States. Some Members expressed a desire for an earlier or wider moratorium. Cyprus, for instance, considered that a moratorium of three to five years would provide an auspicious climate for the special session. New Zealand hoped that after CCD presented a draft treaty to the special Assembly session the nuclear-weapon States would suspend tests without further delay pending the entry into force of the treaty. Australia thought it would have been an earnest of their political will if the three nuclear powers had ceased testing from the time at which they had decided to begin discussions. Chile believed that until the proposed treaty was approved the nuclear super-powers should undertake to cease their nuclear tests, while Pakistan thought it appropriate to expect those which possessed the overwhelming preponderance of nuclear technology to accept a moratorium on further testing.

Other topics of discussion on which there were long-standing differences of view were: the handling of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes under a comprehensive test ban; the question of verification (on-site inspection versus verification by national technical means); and the question of whether all nuclear powers would have to be parties to a comprehensive test ban.

The Assembly was informed that President Leonid I. Brezhnev had announced the readiness of the USSR to agree that, together with a ban on all nuclear-weapon tests, a moratorium be called on nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes. It was also told that President Jimmy Carter, speaking for the United States, had said that the time had come to end all explosions of nuclear devices, no matter what their claimed justification—peaceful or military.

Some form of moratorium or ban on nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes was favoured by Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. Other States, among them Bulgaria, Finland, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR, warned of potential damage to scientific, technological and economic progress if peaceful nuclear explosions were prohibited indefinitely.

On the question of verification, Bulgaria and Nigeria referred to the view held by an increasing number of States that national technical means might be sufficient. Bulgaria believed that the revised draft treaty submitted by the USSR at the 1976 Assembly session represented a good basis for elaboration of a comprehensive treaty.

Several Members cited other developments which, they felt, were likely to foster agreement on the verification question. Austria, for instance, mentioned the work of the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, convened by CCD to pool information on the matter. Sweden referred to progress made in developing the idea of a global network of monitoring stations, and Japan called attention to the idea of a consultative committee to consider requests for on-site inspections.

Discussing the question of participation by the nuclear powers in the proposed treaty, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and India, among others, considered that participation of all nuclear powers would be required to achieve an effective treaty. Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany were among a group of Members which felt that negotiation of a comprehensive test ban did not require the participation of all nuclear-weapon States, at least initially.

During the debate in the First Committee, two resolutions were submitted. However, after extensive consultations the sponsors withdrew them in favour of a single text. Subsequently, on 12 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted the compromise text as its resolution 32/78.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly inter alia reiterated its grave concern that in spite of its repeated resolutions related to nuclear-weapon testing in all environments, adopted by very large majorities, such testing had continued unabated during the past year. It noted with satisfaction that negotiations had begun among three nuclear-weapon States with a view to drafting an agreement on the subject and declared that the conclusion of such an agreement and its opening for signature would be the best possible augury for the success of the special 1978 session of the General Assembly on disarmament.

The Assembly then urged the three nuclear-weapon States to expedite their negotiations with a view to bringing them to a positive conclusion as soon as possible and to use their best endeavours to transmit the results for full consideration by CCD by the beginning of the first part of its session in 1978. It requested CCD to take up the agreed text resulting from the negotiations with the utmost urgency, with a view to the submission of a draft treaty to the Assembly at its special session.

Resolution 32/78 was adopted by a recorded vote of 126 to 2, with 1 abstention. The text was approved by the First Committee on 21 November by a recorded vote of 89 to 1, with 1 abstention. The resolution was sponsored by the following 22 States: Australia, Austria, Bulgaria, Canada, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Ireland, Japan, Mexico, Mongolia, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, the Philippines, Poland, Sweden and Venezuela. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

China, explaining its negative vote, stated that as it had announced time and again it conducted limited nuclear tests and developed nuclear weapons entirely for self-defence. It was ready at all times to halt its nuclear testing, but this could only happen on the day when the two super-powers and all nuclear countries completely prohibited and destroyed their nuclear weapons.

France, in explanation of its abstention, said that a test-ban agreement would not lead to any reduction in the volume of existing nuclear weapons nor interrupt current or future arms programmes, since improvement of nuclear weapons had taken place mainly in the area of delivery systems.

One of the two texts submitted in the First Committee and withdrawn in favour of the compromise text was sponsored by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia and Poland. By its operative paragraphs, the General Assembly would have: reaffirmed the need for early conclusion of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests; noted with satisfaction that tri-lateral (USSR, United Kingdom and United States) negotiations had begun and expressed the hope they would soon lead to the conclusion of a relevant international agreement; called upon other nuclear-weapon States to join in the efforts aimed at achieving the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests; and noted that non-nuclear States, within the framework of CCD and elsewhere, might make a substantial contribution towards solving the problem of the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests.

The second text submitted and later withdrawn was sponsored by Australia, Austria, Canada, Colombia, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Ireland, Japan, Mexico, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, the Philippines, Sweden and Venezuela. By the operative part of this text, the Assembly would have: reiterated its grave concern that nuclear testing continued unabated; noted that trilateral negotiations had begun on a comprehensive test ban; declared that conclusion of such an agreement would auger success for the special Assembly session; urged the three nuclear powers to expedite their negotiations and submit a text to the first part of the 1978 session of CCD; requested CCD to consider the matter urgently with a view to submitting a draft treaty to the special Assembly session; and once again proclaimed as its objective the complete cessation of all nuclear and thermo-nuclear tests in all environments.

Matters relating to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons

The question of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons was again discussed at the 1977 session of the General Assembly; in particular, attention was directed to the question of implementation of the provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.³² The main aspects of the subject covered in the debate were security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States (see also subsection below on this subject); the obligation of nuclear-weapon States, under article VI of the non-proliferation Treaty, to negotiate on measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race and to nuclear disarmament (see also subsection below entitled STRATEGIC ARMS LIMITATION TALKS); and the right of non-nuclear-weapon States to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes under appropriate safeguards (see also p. 103 covering the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to the General Assembly and Assembly resolutions 32/49 and 32/50).

On 12 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/87 F by which, in the preambular part, it: emphasized prevention of any further proliferation of nuclear weapons as an important element in the prevention of nuclear war; called attention to the report of IAEA and the work of the Agency in the non-proliferation area and towards the strengthening of safeguards over nuclear materials; emphasized the significance of the non-proliferation Treaty and of nuclear-weapon-free zones in connexion with the prevention of proliferation of nuclear weapons; and, taking note of various conferences on peaceful uses of nuclear power and on nuclear fuel cycles, recognized the need for a supply of nuclear technology, materials and facilities to meet the world's energy needs on a non-discriminatory basis and under appropriate IAEA safeguards.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly inter alia called upon all nuclear-weapon States for determined efforts to cease the nuclear arms race, undertake measures towards nuclear disarmament and discontinue all test explosions of nuclear weapons. It underlined the importance of ensuring the security of nuclear-weapon States, reaffirmed the right of States, as provided for inter alia by the non-proliferation Treaty, to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes under non-discriminatory safeguards, particularly to meet the needs of developing areas, and recognized the need for increased technical assistance by IAEA in this regard.

The Assembly then urged States that had not done so to adhere to the non-proliferation Treaty or to accept other safeguards arrangements that would provide satisfactory assurance against the dangers of proliferation while guaranteeing access to the peaceful benefits of nuclear energy. It emphasized the need for adequate safeguards over nuclear materials throughout the complete nuclear fuel cycle, citing in particular the need for physical protection of nuclear materials, facilities and transport, and requested IAEA to seek an international agreement for such protection. Finally, the Assembly asked IAEA to report on progress in these areas in 1978.

Resolution 32/87 F was adopted on 12 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 111 to 2, with 16 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 21 November by a recorded vote of 89 to 1, with 16 abstentions. The resolution was sponsored by Australia, the Bahamas, Canada, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, Japan, Nepal, Norway, Poland, Senegal, Tunisia and Zaire. Amendments submitted by Pakistan were withdrawn following revisions by the sponsors which took account of Pakistan's views.

During the debate, a number of States, including the nuclear-weapon States, stressed the importance of the non-proliferation Treaty as the corner-stone of the non-proliferation regime and called for universal adherence to it. On this point, many non-nuclear-weapon States, including for example Argentina, emphasized the relationship between horizontal proliferation (the further spread) and vertical proliferation (the further development and stockpiling) of nuclear weapons, and accordingly called for nuclear-weapon States to fulfil their commitments under article VI of the Treaty³³ to negotiate a cessation of the nuclear arms race and achieve nuclear disarmament. Somalia, for instance, said it was not surprising that horizontal proliferation had increased when vertical proliferation fostered a climate of mistrust and threatened the security of non-nuclear-weapon States.

Sweden said the two leading nuclear powers must start a process of eradicating nuclear weapons; otherwise there would be no balance in the fulfilment of the obligations undertaken in the Treaty by nuclear-weapon States, on the one hand, and non-nuclear-weapon States, on the other.

The USSR and the United States, during the course of the debate, reaffirmed their determination to limit and reduce nuclear weapons and called attention to their efforts in that regard, particularly to their negotiations on a new strategic arms limitation agreement.

With regard to the security of non-nuclear-weapon States, a number of Members, such as Burma, Pakistan and Portugal, believed that only security guarantees on the part of the nuclear-weapon States would provide incentive for adherence to the Treaty. Sweden pointed out that it had repeatedly stated its view that the Security Council's resolution of 19 June 1968 (255(1968))³⁴ was not a realistic answer to requests for security guarantees; Bangladesh suggested that such guarantees should be incorporated into the Treaty, and Turkey said that if nuclear proliferation was to be controlled the incentives to acquire nuclear weapons should be removed.

Finland, speaking for the sponsors of the resolution, commented that the text had been motivated by two factors: awareness of the importance of nuclear energy to the world's energy needs and particular needs of developing countries, and the belief that proliferation of nuclear weapons was a threat to the security of all nations. Accordingly, Finland said, the non-proliferation Treaty should be made universal or other assurances against proliferation should be adopted, including complete nuclear fuel cycle safeguards.

To meet objections by Pakistan that the text gave insufficient attention to the security of non-nuclear-weapon States and would permit a restrictive approach on the part of supplier countries, the sponsors revised their text to add a preambular provision emphasizing the importance of nuclear-weapon States' responding positively—by participating in material and technological exchanges pertaining to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy—to the proposals and preoccupation of non-nuclear-weapon States in order to facilitate the adherence of all non-nuclear-weapon States to the Treaty.

India, which did not participate in the vote, criticized the resolution for establishing a link between the non-proliferation Treaty and the right of States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. It also objected, as did Argentina, to the provisions concerning nuclear disarmament and the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States. They felt those provisions did not duly emphasize the responsibility of nuclear-weapon States in those areas.

The Eastern European and some Western countries generally held that the non-proliferation Treaty provided an appropriate basis for non-discriminatory international co-operation under appropriate safeguards against proliferation of nuclear weapons. Other States, however, both developed and developing, said that the provisions of the Treaty by which all States would be able to derive the same benefits as nuclear-weapon States from the peaceful applications of nuclear energy had not been realized. Italy, for instance, referred to the rights as well as the obligations of both non-nuclear and nuclear-weapon States as spelled out in the Treaty, not only from the disarmament standpoint but also with regard to peaceful uses of nuclear energy, and said that exercise of rights for peaceful uses of nuclear energy must be ensured by nuclear-weapon States. Belgium noted that the Treaty imposed the greater sacrifice of sovereignty on non-nuclear parties, and said that it was up to nuclear-weapon States to set an example to ensure that all current and future nuclear technology would be available to all States without discrimination. Nepal observed that the pledge of the nuclear powers to promote development of peaceful nuclear energy had not been given proper attention, while Iran held that the policies of some supplier nations hindered the flow of nuclear technology and States parties were as much affected as those which had not acceded to the Treaty.

Matters relating to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy were also discussed in the annual plenary debate on the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency. During this debate the need for improvement of safeguards was emphasized, along with the promotion of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy for economic and social development. The Assembly adopted two resolutions—32/49 and 32/50—which put forth its conclusions on the matter. By resolution 32/49, the Assembly inter alia noted with appreciation the contribution of IAEA towards a convention on the physical protection of nuclear materials, its study on regional nuclear fuel cycle centres, and the decision of the Board of Governors of IAEA to keep the question of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes under review. By resolution 32/50, the Assembly inter alia declared that the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes was of great importance for the economic and social ³⁴ See Y.U.N., 1968, pp. 21-22, for text of resolution 255 (1968). The operative part of the resolution states:

[The Security Council,]

"1. Recognizes that aggression with nuclear weapons or the threat of such aggression against a non-nuclear-weapon State would create a situation in which the Security Council, and above all its nuclear-weapon State permanent members, would have to act immediately in accordance with their obligations under the United Nations Charter;

2. Welcomes the intention expressed by certain States that they will provide or support immediate assistance, in accordance with the Charter, to any non-nuclear-weapon State Party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons that is a victim of an act or an object of a threat of aggression in which nuclear weapons are used;

3. Reaffirms in particular the inherent right, recognized under Article 51 of the Charter, of individual and collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security."

development of many countries, and it requested States to strengthen IAEA programmes in that regard. (For texts of resolutions 32/49 and 32/50, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS. See also p. 103.)

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly again discussed the question of the status of signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I and Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco). By Additional Protocol I, those States internationally responsible for territories within the zone of application of the Treaty (France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States) were committed to apply in those territories the Treaty's statutes of denuclearization, while Additional Protocol II committed adhering nuclear-weapon States to respect the denuclearized status of Latin America and not use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against parties to the Treaty.

On 12 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the two Protocols. By the first—resolution 32/76—the Assembly noted with satisfaction the signing of Additional Protocol I by the President of the United States on 26 May 1977 and the decision of the United States Government to take the necessary steps for its ratification. It again urged France to sign and ratify the Protocol, and it decided to take up the matter again at its regular 1978 session.

Resolution 32/76 was adopted by a recorded vote of 113 to 0, with 14 abstentions. The text was submitted by 22 Latin American and Caribbean countries and was approved on 16 November by the First Committee by a recorded vote of 100 to 0, with 16 abstentions. The sponsors of the resolution were the Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Surinam, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay and Venezuela.

By the second resolution—32/79—the Assembly, noting that China, France, the United Kingdom and the United States were already parties to Additional Protocol II and that the USSR had proposed to the Assembly at the current session (see p. 120) a draft resolution urging the establishment of and respect for nuclear-free zones, again urged the USSR to sign and ratify Additional Protocol II. It also decided to take up the matter again at its regular 1978 session.

Resolution 32/79 was sponsored by the same 22 Latin American and Caribbean States that had sponsored resolution 32/76. The Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 118 to 0, with 13 abstentions; the First Committee had approved the text on 16 November by a recorded vote of 105 to 0, with 12 abstentions. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The desirability of bringing the Treaty into full force was expressed during the discussion by Mexico, the United Kingdom and the United States, among others. Ecuador, Mexico and Peru noted that France had not signed Additional Protocol I and that the USSR had not signed Additional Protocol II, and Mexico expressed the hope that the forthcoming special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament would provide an incentive to those States to sign and ratify the Protocols.

Explaining its vote, Cuba said it had abstained on both resolutions because it felt they failed to reflect the fact that the only State possessing nuclear weapons in Latin America did not respect the status of the zone. Guyana noted, as it had in previous years, that a discriminatory exclusionary provision of the Treaty prevented it from becoming a party thereto and it therefore abstained in the voting.

The USSR, expressing support for efforts to establish nuclear-weapon-free zones, reiterated its view that the Treaty of Tlatelolco had serious deficiencies in that it did not ban nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes or transit of nuclear weapons, and the sphere of application covered the wide space of the open sea, which was not in keeping with norms of international law.

Denuclearization of Africa

On 12 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/81 by which it reaffirmed that implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity in 1964, would contribute to the security of all African States. It strongly reiterated its appeals to all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa as a nuclear-weapon-free zone. It then condemned any attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons in Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion on that continent or elsewhere.

The Assembly urgently requested the Security Council to take appropriate effective steps to prevent South Africa from developing and acquiring nuclear weapons, thereby endangering international peace and security. It also appealed to all States to refrain from such co-operation with South Africa in the nuclear field as would enable it to acquire nuclear weapons, and to dissuade corporations and other bodies within their jurisdiction from such co-operation.

Resolution 32/81 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 131 to 0, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved the text on 15 November by a recorded vote of 118 to 0. The text was sponsored by 39 African States. (For text of resolution, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the debate on this matter, a number of speakers called attention to the danger of nuclear proliferation represented by the allegation that South Africa was about to conduct a nuclear test in the Kalahari Desert. Benin, the Congo, Liberia and Mauritius were among those expressing such concern; they called for action by the United Nations to prevent the South African regime from acquiring nuclear capability and becoming a nuclear power. They called on all States to stop forthwith supplying South Africa with nuclear material, technology and assistance.

Mozambique warned that the introduction of nuclear weapons to the African continent would create a highly dangerous situation, escalate tensions and make difficult any attempt to find a peaceful settlement in South Africa. For Zambia, a South Africa armed with nuclear weapons was a threat not only to the security and independence of African countries but also to international peace and security. Cuba and the USSR also called on the United Nations to take appropriate measures to prevent South Africa from acquiring nuclear weapons and thereby threatening the security of the African States.

The United Kingdom believed it was in the interest of all that South Africa should sign the non-proliferation Treaty and agree to international inspection of all its nuclear installations. Finland felt that the nuclear developments in South Africa had added momentum to the efforts to exclude nuclear weapons on a regional basis.

Suggesting that without the intervention of the United States and the USSR, South Africa would have conducted its first nuclear test on the continent of Africa, Nigeria proposed that the initiative of the two powers should be formalized by the General Assembly, which should call on the Security Council to exercise surveillance with regard to the nuclear ambitions of South Africa and to take measures to prevent it from acquiring nuclear-weapon capability. Also, Nigeria said, the Assembly should urge all States to suspend forthwith any co-operation with South Africa in the nuclear field until that country placed its entire nuclear programme under international safeguards and became a party to the non-proliferation Treaty.

The United States said it shared the concern of the international community in connexion with South Africa's unsafeguarded nuclear facilities. Consultations with the South African Government had resulted in assurances that South Africa did not have or intend to develop nuclear explosives. The United States believed that nuclear co-operation under appropriate international safeguards did not contribute to the proliferation of nuclear weapons. It was urging South Africa to become a party to the non-proliferation Treaty and considered it unwise meanwhile to cut off peaceful, safeguarded nuclear co-operation with South Africa. It would not support proposals for the Security Council to take prohibiting steps.

France said that, while it supported the resolution, it could not accept injunctions by other States to denuclearize territories under its sovereignty and jurisdiction.

Nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly again considered the question of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East. On 12 December 1977, it adopted resolution 32/82, by which, reiterating anew the urgency of keeping the region free from involvement in a nuclear arms race and expressing the conviction that the possible development of nuclear capability would further complicate the situation and damage efforts to create an atmosphere of confidence in the area, it again urged all parties directly concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons. The Assembly recommended again that those States, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone under an effective system of safeguards, should: (a) proclaim solemnly and immediately their intention to refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons in their territory, or the territory under their control, by any third party; (b) refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from any other action that would facilitate the acquisition, testing or use of such weapons, or would be in any other way detrimental to the objective of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region under an effective system of safeguards; and (c) agree to place all their nuclear activities under IAEA safeguards. The Assembly also reaffirmed its recommendation to the nuclear-weapon States to refrain from any action contrary to the purpose of the resolution and the objective of establishing, in the region of the Middle East, a nuclear-weapon-free zone under an effective system of safeguards and to extend their co-operation to the States of the region to promote this objective. It again invited the Secretary-General to continue to explore the possibilities of making progress towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region.

Resolution 32/82 was adopted by a recorded vote of 131 to 0, with 1 abstention. The text, sponsored by Bahrain, Egypt, Iran, Kuwait, Qatar and Yemen, was approved by the First Committee on 16 November by a recorded vote of 117 to 0, with 1 abstention. In the First Committee, separate votes were taken at the request of Argentina, Brazil and India on the operative paragraphs by which the Assembly urged adherence to the non-proliferation Treaty (approved by a recorded vote of 98 to 0, with 14 abstentions) and called for a series of actions, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the area (approved by a recorded vote of 103 to 0, with 12 abstentions).

During the debate a number of speakers, including Egypt, Bahrain, Chile, China, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Pakistan, the Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic, supported the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East as a means of preventing nuclear proliferation and enhancing the security of the region.

Egypt said that a great deal of concern was warranted because the area suffered from aggression, Israeli occupation and nuclear intimidation. In view of the danger of nuclear proliferation, Egypt had called upon the countries concerned in the region to pledge not to acquire or possess nuclear weapons, to adhere to the non-proliferation Treaty and to place all activities under the control of IAEA. Egypt warned that if Israel ever obtained nuclear weapons Egypt could not be expected to stand idly by and it insisted that, in the context of a peace agreement, Israel should adhere to the non-proliferation Treaty, which had already been signed by Egypt.

Iran, which felt that the time had come to adopt practical measures for an effective system of safeguards, observed that the idea was consistent with the growing interest in the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones as a means of removing apprehension over the possible diversion to military purposes of nuclear fuels intended for peaceful purposes. Further, Iran said, the area could ill afford any complication in the form of the introduction of nuclear weapons.

Israel reiterated its belief that direct negotiations with its Arab neighbours to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the area should lead to the conclusion of a formal, contractual, multilateral convention between all States of the region. Unfortunately, the Arab States had totally rejected Israel's call for those negotiations. It expressed the hope that a text would be presented to the General Assembly in 1978 which would be consonant with the concept of negotiation and thus would be acceptable to all States in the region.

France, which abstained in the separate votes on paragraphs of the resolution, supported the text as a whole. France said it maintained reservations on the non-proliferation Treaty and could not urge other countries to do what it refused to do.

The United States said it supported the concept of nuclear-weapon-free zones under conditions that would assure the effectiveness of such zones. However, it continued to believe that the actual provisions should be negotiated and agreed among the potential participants in a zone before States could be expected to undertake commitments regarding the zone.

Nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

On 12 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted another resolution on nuclear-weapon-free zones; this—resolution 32/83—concerned a zone in South Asia.

By the preamble, the Assembly among other things noted the recent declarations by Governments of the South Asian States reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples. Also, it recalled that it had requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting for consultations and render any assistance required to promote the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed its endorsement in principle of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia; it again urged the States of South Asia, and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as might be interested, to continue all possible efforts to establish such a zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the meantime, from any action contrary to this objective. It called upon nuclear-weapon States which had not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to co-operate in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia. The Assembly renewed its request to the Secretary-General for assistance in these efforts and asked him to report on the subject both at its 1978 special session devoted to disarmament and at its regular 1978 session.

Resolution 32/83 was adopted by a recorded vote of 105 to 0, with 28 abstentions. The text, sponsored by Pakistan, was approved by the First Committee on 18 November 1977 by 71 votes to 0, with 28 abstentions.

Introducing its resolution, Pakistan said that all the States in South Asia had declared their intention not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, thus securing the necessary conditions for a viable arrangement for its denuclearization. Pakistan had confirmed that intention by accepting the application of IAEA safeguards. Other States in the region were committed to the objective of non-proliferation. India, too, had repeatedly affirmed that it would not manufacture nuclear weapons. It was Pakistan's hope that all States of the region would agree to join in consultations regarding arrangements for the denuclearization of the region. If the regional States could not evolve the modalities for such consultations, the Secretary-General might be able to play a part in assisting the efforts being made by one or more of the regional States.

A number of Members which abstained in the vote, including the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Sweden, supported in principle the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, but felt that the decision to establish such a zone should be taken freely and voluntarily by, and with the agreement of, all the States of the region.

The United States felt that effective nuclear-weapon-free zones could enhance the security of the parties and reinforce non-proliferation on a regional basis. It supported the objective of establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia under conditions that would ensure its effectiveness. The provisions for the establishment of such a zone must be negotiated and agreed on by the parties concerned before States could be expected to undertake commitments in that regard.

India again stated its opposition to nuclear weapons and said it had no intention of exercising the nuclear-weapon option. It was interested in nuclear technology for peaceful purposes and would not allow that limited interest to be impeded in any way. Furthermore, India remained opposed* to the non-proliferation Treaty and similar agreements that were discriminatory. India felt that regional nuclear-weapon-free zones would not help to combat the nuclear threat to the world at large but provided an advantage to nuclear-weapon States, since nuclear weapons and their delivery systems were intercontinental in nature. India remained opposed, as in the past, to declaring South Asia—an artificially restricted area—a nuclear-weapon-free zone, and thus it could not agree to co-operate in the implementation of Pakistan's proposal. However, since other countries in the region might have different views, India had abstained in the voting.

Replying to India's point that South Asia was an artificially restricted area, Pakistan said it had no objection to the inclusion of such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as might be interested in participating in the zone.

The United Kingdom said it could support the resolution, as it considered that nuclear-weapon-free zones could make a positive contribution to national and regional security, to the cause of non-proliferation and to the reduction of the risk of nuclear war. The provisions of the resolution endorsed the concept of a South Asian nuclear-weapon-free zone in principle and called for efforts to establish a South Asian zone, but did not seek to impose one. Zonal arrangements were properly left for consideration by the States concerned. Noting India's views, the United Kingdom hoped that in due course a general agreement would evolve in the region on the subject.

Security of non-nuclear-weapon States

The question of strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States was further discussed by the Assembly in connexion with a draft resolution sponsored by Morocco and Pakistan. Introducing the draft resolution, Pakistan said that through the years the major nuclear-weapon powers, except China, had remained indifferent to, or had even opposed, guarantees not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States. Guarantees under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, Pakistan maintained, were not reliable; further, the nuclear powers had not lived up to their commitment under the Treaty to make progress towards genuine disarmament.

With the adoption of this resolution, the General Assembly reaffirmed the provisions of its resolution of 21 December 1976 on the subject³⁵ and urged the nuclear-weapon powers to take expeditious action in all relevant fora to strengthen the security of non-nuclear-weapon States. The Assembly recommended that all possible efforts be made at its 1978 special session devoted to disarmament to evolve binding and credible security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 32/87 B on 12 December 1977, by a recorded vote of 95 to 0, with 38 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 17 November by a recorded vote of 86 to 0, with 36 abstentions.

States which explained their abstentions included Belgium, Canada, France, New Zealand, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. While supporting the need to enhance the security of non-nuclear-weapon States, they cited, among other things, ambiguities in the text—for instance concerning existing regional security arrangements.

France said its nuclear force was solely for deterrence and did not threaten any State, particularly the non-nuclear-weapon States. The United Kingdom felt that the greatest security for all States lay in the widest possible adherence to the non-proliferation Treaty. Sweden said it supported guarantees for States that were parties to the non-proliferation Treaty and not members of military alliances possessing nuclear weapons.

Strategic arms limitation talks

On the question of the continuing strategic arms limitation talks (known as SALT) between the USSR and the United States, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/87 G) by which, regretting the absence of definitive results during the past three years, it noted with satisfaction recent pronouncements of the heads of State of the USSR and the United States on nuclear disarmament. It stressed the need and urgency that the USSR and the United States strive to implement as soon as possible those declarations of their respective heads of State and invited the Governments of both countries to adopt measures to achieve that objective.

Finally, the Assembly reiterated its invitation to those Governments to keep it informed in good time of the results of their negotiations and trusted it would receive appropriate information during its 1978 special session on disarmament.

Resolution 32/87 G was adopted on 12 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 134 to 2; the text was approved by the First Committee on 25 November by a recorded vote of 91 to 2. The sponsors were Argentina, Australia, Ghana, Jordan, Mexico, Morocco, New Zealand, Nigeria, Pakistan and Sweden.

Early in the Assembly's disarmament debates, the USSR and the United States informed United Nations Members that they would continue to observe the provisions of the first SALT agreements (SALT I) beyond their expiry on 3 October 1977. The Assembly was also informed of statements by the heads of State of both powers that they would seek agreements on further limitations on nuclear weapons and would work towards nuclear disarmament. On this point, a number of States, including for instance Argentina and Liberia, considered that the pace of the negotiations was slow and that results achieved thus far were meagre.

Canada spoke of the need for the USSR and the United States to pursue negotiations with renewed vigour; it believed the Assembly should leave them in no doubt about the profound concern of the international community that their talks should soon result in the conclusion of SALT II. India, too, hoped for an early agreement, adding that it would be meaningful only if it was seen as a first step towards the elimination of nuclear weapons. China maintained that SALT served to stimulate and promote the strategic arms race between the USSR and the United States. It opposed the resolution, as, in its view, the assessment therein of recent statements of the two powers was unacceptable.

The USSR and the United States for the first time voted for the resolution on the subject. The USSR said it had constantly striven to achieve agreements on the limitation of strategic arms and was doing everything in its power to bring this about. The United States said it hoped that current and future rounds of SALT would permit substantive reductions in the arsenals of both States and it intended to inform the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament of the results achieved.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its conviction that the cessation of nuclear-weapon testing by all States would be in the supreme interest of mankind, both as a major step towards controlling the development and proliferation of nuclear weapons and to relieve the deep apprehension concerning the harmful consequences of radioactive contamination for the health of present and future generations,

Recalling the determination of the parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons expressed in those treaties to continue negotiations to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject,

Taking note of that part of the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament relating to the question of a comprehensive test-ban treaty,

1. Reiterates its grave concern that in spite of the repeated resolutions of the General Assembly related to nuclear-weapon testing in all environments, adopted by very large majorities, such testing has continued unabated during the past year;

2. Notes with satisfaction that negotiations have begun among three nuclear-weapon States with a view to the drafting of an agreement on the subject of the present resolution;

3. Declares that the conclusion of such an agreement and its opening for signature would be the best possible augury for the success of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978;

4. Urges the three nuclear-weapon States to expedite their negotiations with a view to bringing them to a positive conclusion as soon as possible and to use their best endeavours to transmit the results for full consideration by the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament by the beginning of its spring session in 1978;

5. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to take up the agreed text resulting from the negotiations referred to in paragraph 4 above with the utmost urgency, with a view to the submission of a draft treaty to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to disarmament;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session an item relating to the implementation of the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the danger of nuclear warfare remains a grave threat to the survival of mankind,

Convinced that the prevention of proliferation of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, especially in those areas of the world where the maintenance of international peace and security is endangered, remains an important element in the efforts to avert nuclear warfare,

Recalling resolution 31/189D of 21 December 1976, in which the General Assembly requested the International Atomic Energy Agency to give special attention to its programme of work in the non-proliferation area and to give careful consideration to all relevant suggestions aimed at strengthening the safeguards regime that have been presented to the Agency, including the communication from the Government of Finland, and to report on the progress of its work on this question to the Assembly at its thirty-second session,

Noting the annual report for 1976 of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Recalling also its resolution 31/75 of 10 December 1976 on the implementation of the conclusions of the first Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the recommendations, proposals and statements made at the Conference,

Recalling its resolution 2373 (XXII) of 12 June 1968, in which it commended the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and expressed the hope for the widest possible adherence to that Treaty,

Noting that more than one hundred States are now parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, Underlining the importance of the nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons responding positively—by participating in the fullest possible exchange of equipment, materials and scientific and technological information for the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, as provided in article IV of the Treaty—to the proposals and preoccupation of the non-nuclear-weapon States in order to facilitate the adherence of all non-nuclear-weapon States to the Treaty,

Noting also the importance of the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various parts of the world as a possible means of contributing to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons as recognized by the General Assembly in its resolution 31/70 of 10 December 1976 on the comprehensive study of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in all its aspects,

Recognizing the need to ensure, on a non-discriminatory basis in accordance with article IV of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and in keeping with the promotion of peaceful uses of nuclear energy, a supply of nuclear technology, materials and facilities to meet the world's energy needs,

Noting the deliberations of the International Conference on Nuclear Power and Its Fuel Cycle, held at Salzburg, Austria, from 2 to 13 May 1977 under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency, and the Conference on the Transfer of Nuclear Technology, held at Persepolis, Iran, from 10 to 14 April 1977, which confirmed the important and growing contribution that nuclear energy will make to meeting the energy needs of all countries, including the developing countries,

Noting also that the Organizing Conference of the International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation, held in Washington, D.C., from 19 to 21 October 1977, recognized that nuclear energy should be made widely available for peaceful purposes, that effective measures could and should be taken at the national level and through international agreements to minimize the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and that the evaluation would not jeopardize the respective fuel cycle policies or international co-operation, agreements and contracts for the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, provided that agreed safeguard measures were applied,

Anxious that the accelerated spread and development of nuclear technology should not increase the danger of proliferation of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, and convinced that these two objectives are not contradictory,

Underlining again the important role of the International Atomic Energy Agency in promoting the contribution of nuclear energy to economic progress, bearing in mind the special needs of developing countries, and in implementing safeguards in the interest of non-proliferation,

Noting that the International Atomic Energy Agency has made further progress in its safeguards activities by increasing its preparedness to reach with States which are not parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, if they so desire, universal and non-discriminatory safeguards agreements no less effective than those concluded by the International Atomic Energy Agency with States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, by keeping under scrutiny the strengthening of its safeguards, by completing this year a study on the establishment of regional fuel cycle centres and by presenting a draft convention for physical protection of nuclear materials,

Determined that similar progress could be made in exploring possibilities of increased assistance to the developing areas of the world,

1. Urgently calls for determined efforts by all nuclear-weapon States:

(a) To bring about the cessation of the nuclear arms race;

(b) To undertake effective measures in the direction of nuclear disarmament;

(c) To find an early solution to the remaining problems in reaching agreement to discontinue all test explosions of nuclear weapons as a step towards the realization of these objectives;

2. Emphasizes in this connexion the particular responsibility of those nuclear-weapon States that have already accepted international obligations, namely in article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, with respect to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and the discontinuance of nuclear-weapon tests and notes as encouraging the recent efforts under way towards these ends;

3. Underlines the importance of determined efforts, especially by the nuclear-weapon States, to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States;

4. Reaffirms that all States have the right, as provided for, inter alia, in article IV of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes under effective and non-discriminatory safeguards against the proliferation of nuclear weapons, and underlines the importance of increased efforts in this field, particularly for the needs of the developing countries and areas;

5. Recognizes the importance of the technical assistance provided by the International Atomic Energy Agency to the developing countries and areas of the world within an effective and comprehensive safeguards system, and emphasizes the urgent need for common efforts towards an essential increase of this assistance;

6. Urges States that as yet have not adhered to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in the first instance, to do so at an early date or, at a minimum, to accept other arrangements involving the application of safeguards to their complete nuclear fuel cycle that would provide satisfactory assurances to the international community against the dangers of proliferation while guaranteeing to the States concerned unhindered and non-discriminatory access to the peaceful benefits of nuclear energy;

7. Emphasizes the importance of common efforts to study satisfactory arrangements for an adequate supply of nuclear fuels and other materials and facilities necessary to the efficient implementation and operation of national nuclear power programmes without jeopardizing the respective fuel cycle policies or international co-operation agreements and contracts for the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, provided that agreed safeguard measures are applied;

8. Solemnly affirms the following principles:

(a) States should not convert civil nuclear materials or facilities to the production of nuclear weapons;

(b) All States have the right, in accordance with the principle of sovereign equality, to develop their programmes for the peaceful use of nuclear technology for economic and social development in conformity with their priorities, interests and needs and should have, without discrimination, access to, and be free to acquire, technology and materials for the peaceful use of nuclear energy under effective and non-discriminatory safeguards against the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

9. Expresses its strong support for the efforts of the International Atomic Energy Agency to increase the effectiveness of its safeguards system in order to ensure that the peaceful uses of nuclear energy will not lead to the proliferation of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;

10. Recognizes the need adequately to ensure the physical protection of nuclear materials, facilities and transport;

11. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to continue the consideration of reaching an international agreement for such protection;

12. Expresses its support for the continuation of the studies by the International Atomic Energy Agency on the question of multinational fuel cycle centres and an international regime for plutonium management as possible means of promoting the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and the interests of the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;

13. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to report on the progress of its work on these questions to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2286 (XXII) of 5 December 1967, 3262 (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 3473 (XXX) of 11 December 1975 concerning the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) and its Additional Protocol I,

Taking into account that certain territories lying within the zone of application of that Treaty which are not sovereign political entities are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties,

Recalling with satisfaction that the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Kingdom of the Netherlands became parties to Additional Protocol I in 1969 and 1971, respectively,

1. Notes with satisfaction that Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) was signed on 26 May 1977 by the President of the United States of America and that the Government of that country has decided to take the necessary steps for its ratification;

2. Again urges France to sign and ratify Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) as soon as possible, in order that the peoples of the territories in question may receive the benefits which derive from the Treaty and which consist mainly in removing the danger of nuclear attack and sparing the squandering of resources on the production of nuclear weapons;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 32/76 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)."

Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Surinam, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela: draft resolution, approved by First Committee on 16 November 1977, meeting 34, by recorded vote of 105 to 0, with 12 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia

Against: None

Abstaining: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

A/32/372. Report of First Committee.

Resolution 32/79, as recommended by First Committee, A/32/372, adopted by Assembly on 12 December 1977, meeting 100, by recorded vote of 118 to 0, with 13 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia,

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

Against: None

Abstaining: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1911 (XVIII) of 27 November 1963, 2286 (XXII) of 5 December 1967, 2456 B (XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2666 (XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2830 (XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2935 (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3079 (XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3258 (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3467 (XXX) of 11 December 1975 and 31/67 of 10 December 1976, nine of which contain appeals to the nuclear-weapon States regarding the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Reiterating its firm conviction that, for the maximum effectiveness of any treaty establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone, the co-operation of the nuclear-weapon States is necessary and that such co-operation should take the form of commitments likewise undertaken in a formal international instrument which is legally binding, such as a treaty, convention or protocol,

Recalling with particular satisfaction that the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, France and the People's Republic of China are already parties to Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Noting that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session a draft resolution, in which it is "solemnly urged" that:

"All non-nuclear-weapon States should establish nuclear-weapon-free zones, which may cover entire continents or large geographical areas, as well as groups of States or individual States, and nuclear States should respect the status of such nuclear-free zones";

1. Again urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to sign and ratify Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco);

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 32/79 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)."

A/32/374. Report of First Committee.

Resolution 32/81, as recommended by First Committee, A/32/374, adopted by Assembly on 12 December 1977, meeting 100, by recorded vote of 131 to 0, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

Against: None.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/70 of 10 December 1976, in which it reiterated its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones could make a great contribution to the security of States in such zones and to the prevention of proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling its resolutions 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 3261 E (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3471(XXX) of 11 December 1975 and 31/69 of 10 December 1976, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, including the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Also recalling that, in its resolution 31/69, it drew attention to the development of the nuclear-weapon potential of South Africa,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 418 (1977) of 4 November 1977,

Gravely concerned that South Africa may detonate a nuclear explosion and acquire a nuclear-weapon capability,

Convinced that such a development would constitute a grave danger to international peace and security and would frustrate efforts to establish Africa as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Reaffirming that the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa would contribute to the security of all African States and to the maintenance of international peace and security,

1. Strongly reiterates its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, including the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

2. Condemns any attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa;

3. Demands that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion on the continent of Africa or elsewhere;

4. Urgently requests the Security Council to take appropriate effective steps to prevent South Africa from developing and acquiring nuclear weapons, thereby endangering international peace and security;

5. Appeals to all States to refrain from such co-operation with South Africa in the nuclear field as will enable the racist regime to acquire nuclear weapons, and to dissuade corporations, institutions and individuals within their jurisdiction from any such co-operation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance to the Organization of African Unity towards the realization of its solemn Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa."

S/12523. Letter of 10 January 1978 from Secretary-General to President of Security Council (transmitting text of General Assembly resolution 32/81 of 12 December 1977).

NUCLEAR-WEAPON-FREE ZONE IN THE MIDDLE EAST

A/C.1/32/L.27. Bahrain, Egypt, Iran, Kuwait, Qatar, Yemen: draft resolution, approved by First Committee on 16 November 1977, meeting 34, by recorded vote of 117 to 0, with 1 abstention, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Abstaining: Israel.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3263 (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, in which it overwhelmingly commended the idea of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also its resolution 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, in which it recognized that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East enjoys wide support in the region,

Further recalling its resolution 31/71 of 10 December 1976, in which it expressed the conviction that progress towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East would greatly enhance the cause of peace both in the region and in the world,

Mindful of the growing international desire for establishing a just and lasting peace in the region of the Middle East,

Conscious of the global apprehension over possible proliferation of nuclear weapons, in particular in the sensitive region of the Middle East,

Fully convinced that the possible development of nuclear capability would further complicate the situation and immensely damage the efforts to create an atmosphere of confidence in the Middle East,

Reiterating anew the particular nature of the problems involved and the complexities inherent in the situation in the Middle East, and the urgency of keeping the region free from involvement in a ruinous nuclear arms race,

Recognizing, as a consequence, the need to create momentum towards the goal of establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

1. Urges anew all parties directly concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons as a means of promoting this objective;

2. Reiterates its recommendation that the Member States referred to in paragraph 1 above, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone under an effective system of safeguards, should:

(a) Proclaim solemnly and immediately their intention to refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory or the territory under their control by any third party;

(b) Refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from any other action that would facilitate the acquisition, testing or use of such weapons, or would be in any other way detrimental to the objective of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region under an effective system of safeguards;

(c) Agree to place all their nuclear activities under the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Reaffirms its recommendation to the nuclear-weapon States to refrain from any action contrary to the purpose of the present resolution and the objective of establishing, in the region of the Middle East, a nuclear-weapon-free zone under an effective system of safeguards and to extend their co-operation to the States of the region in their efforts to promote this objective;

4. Renews its invitation to the Secretary-General to continue to explore the possibilities of making progress towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East."

NUCLEAR-WEAPON-FREE ZONE IN SOUTH ASIA

A/32/298. Note by Secretary-General.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975 and 31/73 of 10 December 1976 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures which can contribute most effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will strengthen the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the recent declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Recalling that in the above-mentioned resolutions the General Assembly called upon the States of the South Asian region and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as might be interested to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the meantime, from any action contrary to this objective,

Further recalling that, in its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) and 31/73, it requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting for the purpose of the consultations mentioned therein and to render such assistance as might be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as may be interested to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the meantime, from any action contrary to this objective;

3. Calls upon those nuclear-weapon States which have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary co-operation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render such assistance as may be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978, and at its thirty-third regular session;

5. Decides to consider this item at its special session devoted to disarmament and at its thirty-third regular session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/189 C of 21 December 1976, in which it requested the nuclear-weapon States, as a first step towards a complete ban on the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, to consider undertaking, without prejudice to their obligations arising from treaties establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones, not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States not parties to the nuclear security arrangements of some nuclear-weapon Powers,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear arms race, and the threat to mankind due to the possibility of the use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to devise effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Noting that the non-nuclear-weapon States have called for assurances from nuclear-weapon Powers that they will not use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against them,

Considering that the existence of credible and binding restraints against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States would contribute towards strengthening the international non-proliferation regime and creating a suitable climate for disarmament,

Recalling its resolution 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, in which it recommended that Member States should consider in all appropriate forums, without loss of time, the question of strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States,

1. Reaffirms the provisions of its resolution 31/189 C;

2. Urges the nuclear-weapon Powers to give serious consideration to extending the undertaking proposed by the General Assembly in its resolution 31/189 C and to take expeditious action in all relevant forums to strengthen the security of non-nuclear-weapon States;

3. Recommends that all possible efforts be made at its special session devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978, to evolve binding and credible security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, taking into account resolution 31/189 C.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2602 A (XXIV) of 16 December 1969 relating to the initiation of bilateral negotiations between the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the limitation of offensive and defensive strategic nuclear-weapon systems,

Recalling also its resolutions 2932 B (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3184 A and C (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3261 C (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3484 C (XXX) of 12 December 1975 and 31/189 A of 21 December 1976,

Regretting the absence of definitive results during the last three years of those bilateral negotiations,

1. Notes with satisfaction that, in his address to the General Assembly on 4 October 1977, the President of the United States of America stated, inter alia, the following:

"The United States is willing to go as far as possible, consistent with our security interests, in limiting and reducing our nuclear weapons. On a reciprocal basis we are willing now to reduce them by 10 per cent, 20 per cent or even 50 per cent. Then we will work for further reductions with a view to a world truly free of nuclear weapons.";

2. Notes with identical satisfaction that, in his address to the Joint Session of the Supreme Soviet and Central Committee of the Communist Party on 2 November 1977, the President of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics stated the following:

"Today we are proposing a radical step: that agreement be reached on a simultaneous halt in the production of nuclear weapons by all States. This would apply to all such weapons—whether atomic, hydrogen or neutron bombs or missiles. At the same time, the nuclear Powers could undertake to start the gradual reduction of existing stockpiles of such weapons and move towards their complete, total destruction.";

3. Stresses the necessity and urgency that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America strive to implement as soon as possible the foregoing declarations of their respective heads of State and invites the Governments of both countries to adopt without delay all relevant measures to achieve that objective;

4. Reiterates with special emphasis its invitation to both Governments to keep the General Assembly informed in good time of the results of their negotiations and trusts to be able to receive from them appropriate information in this regard during the special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978.

Question of chemical weapons

For its consideration of the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons at its 1977 session, the General Assembly had before it the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) (see preceding subchapter on CCD). During the Assembly's general debate held in its plenary meetings, and again in the First Committee debate, Members called for an early agreement on the prohibition of chemical weapons as an important step towards disarmament.

On 12 December 1977, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 32/77 dealing with this question. By the provisions of the resolution, it reaffirmed previous resolutions on the subject and again urged all States to reach early agreement on the prohibition and destruction of chemical weapons. The Assembly requested CCD to continue its negotiations and as a matter of high priority to undertake the elaboration of such an agreement, and report thereon to the special Assembly session on disarmament scheduled to open in May 1978, as well as its regular 1978 session.

The Assembly also invited all States that had not done so to accede to or ratify the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction³⁶ and the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925.

³⁶ See Y.U.N., 1971, pp. 19-21, resolution 2826 (XXVI) of 16 December 1971, annexing text of Convention.

The text was approved by the First Committee by consensus on 10 November. China announced its dissociation from the consensus. The sponsors of the resolution in the First Committee were Afghanistan, Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Hungary, India, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Poland, Sweden, Togo, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia.

In the course of the disarmament debate in the First Committee, many States, including Argentina, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia and Malaysia, stressed that prohibition of chemical weapons was one of the pressing issues related to curbing the arms race and achieving disarmament, and they urged early agreement on a chemical weapons ban. A number of Members also spoke of the importance of the bacteriological weapons Convention concluded in 1971 and called for universal adherence to it and to the 1925 Geneva Protocol on bacteriological warfare. Bulgaria, Cuba, Finland and Qatar were among those making such points.

The USSR and the United States noted the bilateral talks on this subject which they had held in 1977, considering that their exchange of views on all aspects of a possible joint initiative had been useful. The USSR said in consequence the two sides had a fuller understanding of the possible scope of the prohibition to be included in a convention and also of procedural aspects of implementation of an agreement, including the question of verification. The United States said this would be a genuine disarmament measure requiring the destruction of existing stocks and prohibiting any further production of the weapons coming under the ban. Because of the extreme toxicity of the chemicals involved and the complexity of the technical problems, the destruction of chemical warfare agents and munitions would take several years and involve substantial costs.

Many States, including Bulgaria, Canada, Finland, Italy, Liberia, Nigeria, Somalia, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR and the United Arab Emirates, felt that these bilateral talks were important to enable further progress in the negotiations in CCD; they looked forward to an early conclusion of the talks.

It was suggested by some Members—Austria, Ethiopia, Nepal and Sweden among them—that CCD might present a draft treaty to the 1978 special Assembly session on disarmament. The United Kingdom, while noting that agreement between the USSR and the United States was essential, held that it was equally important that CCD and the rest of the international community play a real role to ensure universal acceptance of a ban. Pending achievement of such a ban, the United Kingdom said, it would be useful if all nations would state their current policy with regard to possession of chemical weapons.

Speaking in support of the resolution, Canada believed it important to exhort CCD to press on with the elaboration of a convention and to report on its progress to the 1978 special Assembly session.

On the question of the scope of a chemical weapons ban, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR expressed the view that the draft convention which they and five others had submitted to CCD in 1972³⁷ remained the most acceptable basis for future work, particularly with regard to the scope of the prohibition (which had called for banning chemical agents of types and in quantities that had no justification for peaceful purposes). They said, however, that in circumstances where some States did not agree to an extensive ban of chemical weapons, they were ready to seek, as a first step, agreement on the prohibition and destruction of the most dangerous and lethal types of such weapons.

Belgium, speaking for the nine member States of the European Community, said they believed that a ban could be achieved which was comprehensive in scope with respect to the agents and to the activities to be prohibited. As a minimum, all lethal agents, including binary systems and incapacitants, would have to be covered.

Another question discussed was verification of compliance with a ban (national technical means as opposed to on-site inspection). The Eastern European States continued to hold that verification measures should not infringe the sovereign rights of participating States and should not result in disclosure of commercial secrets. To meet those requirements, they maintained, control must be based on national means of verification in combination with some additional international procedures. Hungary noted that, at the recent session of CCD, the USSR had expressed readiness to examine the possibility of using additional supervision procedures to supplement national procedures in connexion with verification of destruction processes, and felt this should contribute towards solving the problem.

The Ukrainian SSR said that verification problems should not be exaggerated. It noted that national means of detection could include satellite observation and it believed that destruction of stocks should be closely monitored, providing not only an accounting of quantity but also a qualitative accounting.

Bulgaria shared the view that technological developments assured adequate control by national means.

The Western States, as in past years, maintained that some international on-site inspection was required. The Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom believed that clarification of verification issues was crucial for real progress towards a chemical weapons agreement.

Noting that differences over the question of verification were still considerable, the Federal Republic of Germany said a convention must guarantee observance of the obligations agreed upon, and suggested that an efficient international verification system must provide for routine on-site inspections in order to ensure that warfare agents were destroyed and no new ones produced. It also believed that a system of that kind could be designed so as not to prejudice legitimate economic interests.

Speaking on behalf of the nine countries of the European Community, Belgium emphasized the need for adequate verification if an accord was to give the necessary assurance to States parties that its provisions were being faithfully observed. The nine countries believed that verification based on national means alone was not sufficient.

Resolution 32/77, as recommended by First Committee, A/32/370, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1977, meeting 100.

The General Assembly,
Reaffirming its resolutions 2454 A (XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2603 B (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2662 (XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2827 A (XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2933 (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3077 (XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3256 (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3465 (XXX) of 11 December 1975 and 31/65 of 10 December 1976,

Convinced that the continuing arms race calls for urgent disarmament measures and that the process of international detente is conducive to the achievement of progress towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Reaffirming the necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925,

Convinced that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction constitutes an important step towards early agreement on the effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their elimination from arsenals of all States,

Recalling in that connexion the undertaking contained in Article IX of the Convention to continue negotiations in good faith with a view to reaching early agreement on effective measures for the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for their destruction,

Stressing the importance of early agreement on the complete prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, which would contribute to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Noting the risk of continued development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons in the absence of such agreement,

Having considered the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,

Noting that drafts of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, as well as other working documents, proposals and suggestions, have been submitted to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament and constitute valuable contributions to reaching appropriate agreement,

Taking into account the comments made on this item and relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session,

Stressing the need for early submission of the joint initiative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament in order to assist it in achieving early agreement on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

Noting that sustained and intensive efforts in the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament have led to increased understanding in identifying practical approaches towards the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and towards their destruction,

Recognizing the importance of developing methods for providing adequate assurance of compliance with effective measures for the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons, including methods of verifying the destruction of stockpiles of such weapons,

Having in mind that agreement on the complete prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction should not impede the utilization of science and technology for the economic development of States,

Desiring to contribute to an early and successful conclusion of the negotiations on effective and strict measures for the complete prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for their destruction,

1. Urges all States to reach early agreement on the effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

2. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations and, as a matter of high priority, to undertake the elaboration of an agreement on effective measures for the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for their destruction, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives submitted for its consideration;

3. Invites all States that have not yet done so to accede to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin

Weapons and on Their Destruction, as well as to accede to or ratify the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and calls again for the strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of those instruments;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament all documents of the thirty-second session of the General Assembly relating to chemical weapons and to chemical means of warfare;

5. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to report on the results of its negotiations to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978, and at its thirty-third session.

A/32/383. Report of First Committee (containing index to statements by delegations on disarmament items in First Committee, 32nd session).

Prohibition of new weapons of mass destruction

The General Assembly continued in 1977 to consider the problem of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons. For the discussion, held in the Assembly's First Committee, it had before it the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) on the subject (see subchapter on CCD above).

In the course of the debate, the Eastern European and a number of other States—including Kenya and Nigeria—stressed the importance of banning the development of new weapons of mass destruction. They called for immediate negotiations on the question, recalling that the USSR had submitted a revised draft treaty to ban such weapons to CCD in 1977.

Most of the Western countries, on the other hand, believed that the best way to prevent the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction would be to keep the question under review and work for specific agreements dealing with particular new types of such weapons when they were clearly identified. Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom expressed views to this effect. Such a procedure, they pointed out, would permit the formulation of verification measures specifically tailored to the weapons in question. Reflecting this general view, the United States, referring to negotiations in progress between the USSR and the United States, stated that radiological weapons should be banned through an appropriate agreement.

Two draft resolutions representing the different points of view were submitted. Consultations were held among the sponsors but a compromise text was not achieved and the Assembly subsequently adopted the two texts as its resolutions 32/84 A and 32/84 B.

By the preambular provisions of resolution 32/84 A, the General Assembly inter alia recalled its previous resolutions on the question by which it had requested CCD to work out an agreement, and noted the negotiations under way between the USSR and the United States on the prohibition of radiological weapons.

By the operative provisions, the Assembly requested CCD to continue negotiations aimed at working out the text of an agreement, and, when necessary, specific agreements, on the subject, and to report to it on the results achieved. It urged all States to refrain from any action which would impede international talks aimed at working out such an agreement or agreements.

Resolution 32/84 A was adopted on 12 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 110 to 1, with 25 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 15 November by a recorded vote of 87 to 0, with 28 abstentions. The sponsors were the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia and the USSR. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the preambular provisions of resolution 32/84 B, the General Assembly inter alia recognized that new weapons might be evolved on the basis of scientific principles other than those used in the weapons named in the 1948 definition of weapons of mass destruction by the Commission for Conventional Armaments (atomic explosive weapons, radioactive-material weapons, lethal chemical and biological weapons and any weapons which might be developed with characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of the atomic bomb or other weapons listed) and noted the discussions in CCD on the question.

By the operative provisions, the Assembly: urged States to refrain from developing new weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles; called upon States to apply scientific discovery for the benefit of mankind; reaffirmed the definition of weapons of mass destruction by the Commission for Conventional Armaments; welcomed the continuation of negotiations relating to identified weapons of mass destruction; and requested CCD to keep under review the question of the development of new weapons of mass destruction and to consider formulating agreements on any specific weapons which might be identified.

Resolution 32/84 B was adopted on 12 December by a recorded vote of 102 to 1, with 28 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 15 November by a recorded vote of 80 to 0, with 35 abstentions. The sponsors were Belgium, Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Commenting on resolution 32/84 A, the German Democratic Republic said that the aim was to oppose the spread of the arms race by means of a comprehensive, all-embracing agreement. Further, the urgency of the matter was obvious in view of the development of new weapons, such as the neutron bomb. The German Democratic Republic expressed regret that a number of States with significant economic and technological potential had rejected the possibility of a comprehensive prohibition, though they supported the idea of concluding specific agreements.

The USSR observed that a specific list of types and systems of weapons of mass destruction to be prohibited could be annexed to the agreement; that list could be supplemented if new areas of development of such weapons emerged after the agreement's entry into force. Hungary stressed that the revised draft treaty proposed by the USSR would not exclude the possibility of establishing separate treaties covering specified types of weapons of mass destruction.

The United Kingdom did not believe that a general umbrella agreement would be effective in preventing the use of new scientific principles for military purposes, while Japan foresaw difficulties with the scope and methods of verification of a general prohibition. In this connexion, the United States said that methods of verification depended upon the nature of the threat posed and characteristics of a weapon.

Niger and Sweden regretted that the two proposals could not be amalgamated in view of the similarity of purpose. In the view of Jordan and Mexico, the texts were not incompatible in substance.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3479(XXX) of 11 December 1975 and 31/74 of 10 December 1976, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to work out an agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Recognizing that modern science and technology have reached a level where a serious danger arises of the development of new, still more destructive types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Conscious that the development and manufacture of such weapons are fraught with the most serious consequences for the peace and security of nations,

Convinced of the importance of concluding an agreement or agreements to prevent the use of scientific and technological progress for the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Noting the negotiations now under way between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the question of the prohibition of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction and in this context on the prohibition of radiological weapons,

Taking note of the discussion at the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament of the question of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Taking into account the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament with regard to this question,

1. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, aimed at working out the text of an agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and, when necessary, specific agreements on this subject;

2. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on the results achieved to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-third session;

3. Urges all States to refrain from any action which would impede international talks aimed at working out an agreement or agreements to prevent the use of scientific and technological progress for the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the discussion of this item by the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament."

The General Assembly,

Guided by the interests of strengthening international peace and security and desiring to promote confidence among nations and the further improvement of the international situation,

Restating its conviction that scientific discovery should be used for the benefit of mankind,

Recognizing that new weapons might be evolved on the basis of scientific principles other than those used in the weapons named in the 1948 definition of weapons of mass destruction,

Bearing in mind that recent years have seen the conclusion of a number of important agreements on the limitation of the arms race and disarmament, including some relating to the prohibition and limitation of identified weapons of mass destruction, and that negotiations for further agreements are continuing,

Noting the discussion at the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament on the question of the prohibition of the development of new weapons of mass destruction,

1. Urges States to refrain from developing new weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles;

2. Calls upon States to apply scientific discovery for the benefit of mankind;

3. Reaffirms the definition of weapons of mass destruction contained in the resolution of the Commission for Conventional Armaments of 12 August 1948, which defined weapons of mass destruction as atomic explosive weapons, radioactive material weapons, lethal chemical and biological weapons and any weapons developed in the future which might have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of the atomic bomb or other weapons mentioned above;

4. Welcomes the active continuation of negotiations relating to the prohibition and limitation of identified weapons of mass destruction;

5. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, while taking into account its existing priorities, to keep under review the question of the development of new weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles and to consider the desirability of formulating agreements on the prohibition of any specific new weapons which may be identified;

6. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to report on its review to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Questions concerning incendiary and certain other conventional weapons

Report of the Secretary-General

When the General Assembly, at its 1977 session, took up the question of incendiary and other conventional weapons which might be the subject of prohibition or restriction of use for humanitarian reasons, it had before it a report by the Secretary-General on pertinent aspects of the work of the fourth (final) session of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts (Geneva, 17 March to 10 June 1977).

The Secretary-General reported that the Conference continued to conduct this work in its Ad Hoc Committee on Conventional Weapons, which had established a Working Group in 1977 to consider in detail various proposals concerning prohibition or restriction of use of certain conventional weapons, including mines and booby traps, fragments not detectable by X-ray, and incendiary weapons. Six proposals pertained to incendiaries; others concerned fuel-air explosives and certain small-calibre projectiles.

The Working Group reported that it found an area of agreement concerning fragments not detectable by X-ray, that a wide measure of agreement existed concerning proposals on mines and booby traps and that it had not been possible to reconcile the proposals on incendiaries.

At a plenary meeting of the Conference, the report of the Ad Hoc Committee was approved by consensus without substantive discussion. The plenary also rejected a Philippine proposal to include the use of "dum dum" bullets and chemical and biological weapons in the list of breaches of Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 1949.

The question of follow-up to the work of the Diplomatic Conference with regard to limiting the use of conventional weapons was also discussed in plenary meetings. After considerable debate on and rejection of a proposal by Committee I of the Conference calling for creation of a committee of States parties to the Protocol or to the 1949 Geneva Conventions to consider and adopt recommendations regarding prohibition of the use of certain conventional weapons, the Conference decided: to send the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and the various proposals submitted to it to the Governments of States represented at the Conference and to the United Nations Secretary-General, and to request that early consideration be given to those documents; to recommend that a conference of Governments be convened not later than 1979 with a view to reaching agreements on the limitation of use of specific conventional weapons; and to urge that various consultations be undertaken on steps to be taken in connexion with the Conference and its preparation, including any action by the United Nations General Assembly at its 1977 session which might be necessary for the holding of the conference.

Although not opposing the adoption of this decision by consensus, a number of countries, including Brazil, France and the USSR, said they would have abstained had it been put to a vote. France and Brazil held that the decision prejudged the manner in which future decisions would be taken, while the USSR objected to convening a conference in 1979 with stated objectives and to the invitation to the General Assembly to take any further required action. The USSR reiterated its position that limitation on the use of certain weapons could only be decided in the general framework of disarmament.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 19 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution dealing with incendiary and other specific conventional weapons. By this resolution—32/152—it decided to convene in 1979 a United Nations conference with a view to reaching agreements on banning or restricting the use of specific conventional weapons, including those deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects, taking into account humanitarian and military considerations. The conference was also to consider a system of periodic review. The Assembly then decided to convene a preparatory conference, asking the Secretary-General to invite all States which had been invited to attend the Diplomatic Conference and recommending that the preparatory conference establish the best possible substantive basis for achieving the agreements envisaged.

Resolution 32/152 was adopted by a recorded vote of 115 to 0, with 21 abstentions. The First Committee had approved the text on 25 November by a recorded vote of 84 to 0, with 21 abstentions.

The sponsors of the resolution were Austria, Bangladesh, Egypt, Finland, Jordan, Mexico, New Zealand, Nigeria, Peru, Senegal, Sweden, Tunisia, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The work of the Diplomatic Conference was also discussed in the Assembly's Sixth (Legal)

Committee in connexion with the question of respect for human rights in armed conflicts.

On 8 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted resolution 32/44 by which it welcomed the successful conclusion of the Diplomatic Conference and noted the recommendation that a special conference be convened.

(For text of resolution 32/44, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

During the debate in the First Committee, Sweden and several other States strongly urged that the Assembly convene a conference on the subject in 1979. Sweden noted that the Diplomatic Conference had concluded its work, and held that the question had reverted to the United Nations. It observed that the Conference had made some progress in the area of land-mines and booby traps but believed new efforts were needed to curb other weapons, especially incendiaries.

The Ukrainian SSR and others did not favour a special conference and suggested that the question be resolved in appropriate disarmament fora.

The United States believed that progress could be made only under generally acceptable procedures, particularly that decisions be reached by consensus, and it felt there was not sufficient assurance of that. For that and other reasons, it abstained in the vote. Several other States, including Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Turkey and the United Kingdom, had similar reservations, some noting that agreements without the support of militarily significant States would be of little value. The USSR said it could not support the resolution and reiterated that the question should be considered in appropriate international disarmament fora; it also believed that decisions concerning the security of States should be taken by consensus.

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the suffering of civilian populations and combatants could be significantly reduced if general agreement can be attained on the prohibition or restriction for humanitarian reasons of the use of specific conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects,

Mindful that positive results as regards the non-use or restriction of use for humanitarian reasons of specific conventional weapons would serve, in addition, as encouragement in the broader field of disarmament and might facilitate subsequent agreement on the elimination of such weapons which were completely banned for use,

Recalling that the issue of prohibitions or restrictions for humanitarian reasons of the use of specific conventional weapons has been the subject of substantive discussion for a number of years, notably at the sessions of the Conference of Government Experts on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons held, under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross, at Lucerne from 24 September to 18 October 1974 and at Lugano from 28 January to 26 February 1976, and at four sessions of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts and in the General Assembly since 1971,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Diplomatic Conference relevant to the present resolution,

Having concluded from these reports that discussions have taken place primarily on the questions of prohibiting the use of conventional weapons, the primary effect of which is to injure by fragments not detectable by X-ray, of restrictions in the use of land-mines and booby traps, and of prohibitions or restrictions of use of incendiary weapons, including napalm, and that consideration was also given to other conventional weapons, such as small-calibre projectiles and certain blast and fragmentation weapons, and to the possibility of prohibiting or restricting the use of such weapons,

Noting resolution 22 (IV) on follow-up regarding prohibitions or restrictions of use of certain conventional weapons adopted by the Diplomatic Conference on 7 June 1977, in which the Conference recommends, inter alia, that a conference of Governments on such weapons should be convened not later than 1979,

1. Believes that the work on such weapons should both build upon the areas of common ground thus far identified and include the search for further areas of common ground and should in each case seek the broadest possible agreement;

2. Decides to convene in 1979 a United Nations conference with a view to reaching agreements on prohibitions or restrictions of the use of specific conventional weapons, including those which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects, taking into account humanitarian and military considerations, and on the question of a system of periodic review of this matter and for consideration of further proposals;

3. Decides to convene a United Nations preparatory conference for the conference referred to in paragraph 2 above and requests the Secretary-General to transmit invitations to all States and parties invited to attend the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts;

4. Recommends that the Preparatory Conference for the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects should meet once in 1978 for organizational purposes and, subsequently, with the task of establishing the best possible substantive basis for the achievement at the United Nations Conference of agreements as envisaged in the present resolution and of considering organizational matters relating to the holding of the United Nations Conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to assist the Preparatory Conference in its work;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session an item entitled "United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects: report of the Preparatory Conference."

Review Conference on the Treaty prohibiting nuclear weapons on the sea-bed

Report of the Review Conference

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly had before it the Final Document of the first Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (Sea-Bed Treaty),³⁸ held in Geneva, Switzerland, from 20 June to 1 July 1977. The Final Document had been transmitted to the Secretary-General for distribution to United Nations Member States at the Assembly's 1977 session by Eugeniusz Wyzner, Permanent Representative of Poland to the United Nations at Geneva, in his capacity as President of the Conference, who acted at the request of the Conference. It was circulated in connexion with the agenda item on general and complete disarmament.

The Conference had been convened in accordance with article VII of the Sea-Bed Treaty which provided for a review of the operation of the Treaty five years after its entry into force. On 12 December 1975, the Assembly had noted this Treaty requirement and had asked the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance to the parties in connexion with arrangements for the Review Conference.³⁹

The Conference report stated that 42 States parties to the Treaty had participated in the Conference: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Sweden, Switzerland, Tunisia, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia. Three signatories which had not ratified the Treaty participated but did not take part in decisions: these were Argentina, Brazil and Greece. One State, Nigeria, neither party nor signatory, was accorded observer status. Representatives of the United Nations, the International Atomic Energy Agency and several non-governmental organizations also attended.

During the 11 plenary meetings, there was a general debate followed by an article-by-article review of the Treaty. The Final Document adopted on 1 July 1977 consisted of three parts: (1) Organization and work of the Conference; (2) Final Declaration; and (3) Summary records of plenary meetings.

The text of the Final Declaration of the Review Conference follows:

FINAL DECLARATION

Preamble

The States Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof which met in Geneva in June 1977 in accordance with the provisions of Article VII to review the operation of the Treaty with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble and the provisions of the Treaty are being realized:

Recognizing the continuing importance of the Treaty and its objectives,

Affirming their belief that universal adherence to the Treaty would enhance international peace and security,

Recognizing that an arms race in nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed would present a grave threat to international security,

Recognizing also the importance of continuing negotiations concerning further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof,

Considering that the continuation of the trend towards a relaxation of tension in international relations provides a favourable climate in which more significant progress can be made towards the cessation of the arms race,

Reaffirming their conviction that the Treaty constitutes a step towards the exclusion of the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof from the arms race,

Emphasizing the common interest of mankind in the progress of the exploration and use of the sea-bed and the ocean floor for peaceful purposes,

Recognizing that the natural resources of the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, will have an increasing role in assuring the economic progress of States, particularly of developing countries, and recalling in this connexion General Assembly resolution 2749(XXV),⁴⁰

Appealing to States to refrain from any action which might lead to the extension of the arms race to the sea-bed and ocean floor, and might impede the exploration and exploitation by States of the natural resources of the sea-bed and ocean floor for their economic development,

Affirming that no measures which may be decided upon in the context of international negotiations on the Law of the Sea will affect the rights and obligations assumed by the States Parties under this Treaty,

Declare as follows:

Purposes

The States Parties to the Treaty reaffirm their strong common interest in avoiding an arms race on the sea-bed in nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction. They reaffirm their strong support for the Treaty, their continued dedication to its principles and objectives and their commitment to implement effectively its provisions.

Article I

The review undertaken by the Conference confirms that the obligations assumed under Article I of the Treaty have been faithfully observed by the States Parties. The Conference is convinced that the continued observance of this Article remains essential to the objective which all States Parties share of avoiding an arms race in nuclear weapons or any other type of weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed.

Article II

The Conference reaffirms its support for the provisions of Article II which define the zone covered by the Treaty.

Article III

The Conference notes with satisfaction that no State Party has found it necessary to invoke the provisions of Article III, paragraphs 2, 3, 4 and 5, dealing with international complaints and verification procedures. The Conference considers that the provisions for consultation and co-operation contained in paragraphs 2, 3 and 5 include the right of interested States Parties to agree to resort to various international consultative procedures, such as ad hoc consultative groups of experts and other procedures.

The Conference reaffirms in the framework of Article III and Article IV that nothing in the verification provisions of this Treaty should be interpreted as affecting or limiting, and notes with satisfaction that nothing in these provisions has been identified as affecting or limiting, the rights of States Parties recognized under international law and consistent with their obligations under the Treaty, including the freedom of the high seas and the rights of coastal States.

The Conference reaffirms that States Parties should exercise their rights under Article III with due regard for the sovereign rights of coastal States as recognized under international law.

Article IV

The Conference notes the importance of Article IV which provides that nothing in this Treaty shall be interpreted as supporting or prejudicing the position of any State Party with respect to existing international conventions, including the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone, or with respect to rights or claims which such State Party may assert, or with respect to recognition or non-recognition of rights or claims asserted by any other State, related to waters off its coast, including, inter alia, territorial seas and contiguous zones, or to the sea-bed and the ocean floor, including continental shelves. The Conference also notes that obligations assumed by States Parties to the Treaty arising from other international instruments continue to apply. The Conference agrees that the zone covered by the Treaty reflects the right balance between the need to prevent an arms race in nuclear weapons and any other types of weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed and the right of States to control verification activities close to their own coasts.

Article V

The Conference affirms the commitment undertaken in Article V to continue negotiations in good faith concerning further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof. To this end, the Conference requests that the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament in consultation with the States Parties to the Treaty, taking into account the proposals made during this Conference and any relevant technological developments, proceed promptly with consideration of further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof.

Article VI

The Conference notes that over the five years of the operation of the Treaty no State Party proposed any amendments to this Treaty according to the procedure laid down in this Article.

Article VII

The Conference notes with satisfaction the spirit of co-operation in which the Review Conference was held.

The Conference takes note of the fact that no information has been presented to it indicating that major technological developments have taken place since 1972 which affect the operation of the Treaty. The Conference, nevertheless, recognizes the need to keep such developments under continuing review and invites the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, in consultation with the States Parties to the Treaty, to consider establishing an ad hoc expert group under its auspices for this purpose. Such a group might facilitate the implementation of the purposes stated in the section dealing with Article V. It might also contribute to the orderly preparation of the next Review Conference.

In order further to facilitate the dissemination of information relevant to the Treaty to States for their assessment, the Conference invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations to collect such information from officially available sources and publish it in the United Nations Yearbook on Disarmament.

The Conference, recognizing the importance of the review mechanism provided in Article VII, decides that a further review conference should be held in Geneva in 1982 unless a majority of the States Parties indicate to the Depositaries that they wish it to be postponed. In any case a further review conference shall be convened not later than 1984. The next conference shall determine in accordance with the views of a majority of those States Parties attending whether and when an additional review conference shall be convened.

Article VIII

The Conference notes with satisfaction that no State Party has exercised its rights to withdraw from the Treaty under Article VIII.

Article IX

The Conference reaffirms its conviction that nothing in the Treaty affects the obligations assumed by States Parties to the Treaty under international instruments establishing zones free from nuclear weapons.

Article X

The Conference stresses that the five years that have elapsed since the date of entry of the Treaty into force have demonstrated its effectiveness. At the same time the Conference notes with concern that the Treaty has not yet achieved universal acceptance. Therefore the Conference calls upon the States that have not yet become Parties, particularly those possessing nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction, to do so at the earliest possible date. Such adherence would be a significant contribution to international confidence.

The summary records annexed to the report set forth the views of participating States on the issues involved. They indicated that discussion had centred on questions such as the scope of the Treaty, further negotiations, verification procedures, the review mechanism, the relation between the Treaty and the law of the sea, technological developments since the entry into force of the Treaty, and the collection, assessment and dissemination of information relevant to its operation.

The records annexed to the report detailed that in connexion with article III of the Sea-Bed Treaty, which dealt with verification procedures, some States, including Iran, Japan, Sweden and Switzerland, expressed the view that resort to an international mechanism should be provided for, other than the ultimate recourse to the Security Council. Those States drew attention to the consultative committee of experts provided for in the 1976 Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques;⁴¹ also, Japan proposed resort to the good offices of the Secretary-General. The Netherlands, Sweden and others noted that most countries did not have adequate means to verify compliance. Other States, among them the depositaries (the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States), felt that the provisions of the Treaty were broad enough to permit the use of various international procedures, including the services of a consultative committee. The States parties agreed with this view, incorporating it in the Final Declaration.

Several States raised the question of a connexion between the Treaty and developments in progress at the sessions of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. They discussed an Italian proposal by which the Review Conference, while recognizing the importance of the work on the law of the sea, would express the opinion that the legal regime which might ensue from that work would not in any way affect rights or obligations under the Sea-Bed Treaty or alter the delimitations set forth in article I thereof. Subsequently, as set forth in article IV of the Final Declaration, the Conference agreed that the zone covered by the Treaty reflected the right balance between the need to prevent an arms race on the sea-bed and the right of States to control verification activities close to their own coasts.

Discussing article V, which called for continued negotiation on further sea-bed disarmament measures, the USSR noted its consistent position in favour of complete demilitarization of the sea-bed and its willingness to pursue negotiations on implementation of article V or to enter into negotiations on additional international instruments concerning the prohibition of emplacement on the sea-bed of military objects not covered by the Treaty. Other Eastern European countries, as well as Cyprus, India and Jordan, concurred with the view that negotiations should be pursued. Also there was general agreement that the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) would offer the most suitable forum for such undertakings.

The United States, noting the effectiveness of the Treaty in preventing the emergence of an arms race on the sea-bed, held that further work on multilateral arms-control measures relating exclusively to the sea-bed area would not be appropriate at that time as there was little likelihood of an arms race on the sea-bed, and other on-going disarmament negotiations, by restraining development or use of certain weapons or methods of warfare, might serve to prevent such an arms race. Several other States, such as Australia, Canada and Denmark, were also sceptical about the desirability of such further negotiations at that time, believing either that such negotiations would not then be productive or that other disarmament issues had a higher priority.

The Conference decided to affirm the commitment undertaken by article V and requested CCD, in consultation with the parties, to proceed with consideration of further sea-bed disarmament measures.

Another issue of concern reflected in the records was the lack of information on official communications or papers on technological developments, military or peaceful, pertinent to the operation of the Treaty, as well as the notices to the Secretary-General by the three depositaries that they had no such communications or papers relevant to the review of the Treaty. Several States felt that this might hinder the Conference in fulfilling its mandate, since article VII required that it take relevant technological developments into account.

Sweden held that to assert that no such technological developments had taken place since 1972, without providing any basis for the assertion, could undermine the credibility of the Treaty. It hoped that a reasonable degree of military secrecy would not prevent a meaningful assessment of pertinent new developments and noted that the parties possessing the most developed underwater and military technology bore a special responsibility in respect of the operation of the Treaty.

Romania contended that it was difficult to assess the operation of the Treaty because it did not specify how information on technological progress should be made available to States. Accordingly, Romania suggested establishment of a system for dissemination, evaluation and assessment of such information and proposed that the Conference invite the United Nations to consider ways and means to meet those objectives. Some States, including the depositaries, opposed the proposal.

By the Final Declaration, the Conference noted that no information had been presented to it, invited CCD to consider establishing an ad hoc expert group to keep technological developments under review, and invited the Secretary-General to collect such information from officially available sources and publish it in the United Nations Disarmament Yearbook.

Yugoslavia, expressing reservations on the Declaration, felt that the Conference should have regretted, rather than noted, the lack of information, made provision for experts to assist the Secretary-General in the collection of information, and enabled the collection of information from all available sources and not solely from officially available sources.

The Conference also discussed, in connexion with article VII, the question of an additional review conference, with some States favouring a firm date and others favouring a flexible commitment along the lines of that contained in the Convention on environmental modification. It was decided to convene another review conference in 1982, or, if a majority of parties wished postponement, not later than 1984.

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly discussed the report of the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof. By resolution 32/87 A, adopted on 12 December, the Assembly noted with satisfaction that the Review Conference had concluded that the obligations assumed under the Treaty had been faithfully observed by the States parties, and that the parties had reaffirmed their support of the Treaty and their commitment to continue negotiations concerning further measures for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed.

The Assembly then welcomed the positive assessment of the effectiveness of the Treaty by the Conference, invited wider adherence to the Treaty; affirmed its interest in avoiding an arms race in nuclear weapons or any other weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed; and called upon all States to refrain from any action which might lead to the extension of the arms race to the sea-bed and the ocean floor. It also requested CCD to proceed promptly to consider further sea-bed disarmament measures.

Resolution 32/87 A was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 10 November. The resolution was sponsored by Bulgaria, Canada, Denmark, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, India, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Poland, Togo, Tunisia, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States, Yemen and Zaire.

During the debate in the First Committee, a number of countries, including Finland, Italy, Mongolia and Turkey, drew attention to the results of the Review Conference, noting, among other things, that the Conference had achieved its primary purpose—reaffirming that no violations of the Treaty had occurred during the period under review. Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland attached particular significance to the Conference's decision to request CCD to begin consideration of further measures for prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed. Poland noted that the sponsors of the resolution hoped to assure the adoption of further measures in the field of disarmament to prevent an arms race on the sea-bed because the Treaty, Poland said, was not the last word on disarmament in that vital area of the earth.

Resolution 32/87 A, as recommended by First Committee, A/32/380, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1977, meeting 100.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 2660(XXV) of 7 December 1970, in which it commended the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof,

Convinced that the Treaty constitutes a step towards the exclusion of the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof from the arms race,

Recalling that the States parties to the Treaty met at Geneva from 20 June to 1 July 1977 to review the operation of the Treaty with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble and the provisions of the Treaty were being realized,

Noting with satisfaction that the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof concluded that the obligations assumed under the Treaty had been faithfully observed by the States parties,

Noting that in its Final Declaration the Review Conference affirmed its belief that universal adherence to the Treaty would enhance international peace and security,

Noting furthermore that the States parties to the Treaty reaffirmed their strong support for and continued dedication to the principles and objectives of the Treaty, as well as their commitment to implement effectively its provisions,

Recognizing that in the Final Declaration the States parties to the Treaty reaffirmed the commitment undertaken in article V to continue negotiations in good faith concerning further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof,

Bearing in mind that, in this connexion, they have addressed specific requests to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,

Having considered the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,

Noting the comments with respect to further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof, as well as relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session,

1. Welcomes with satisfaction the positive assessment by the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof of the effectiveness of the Treaty since its entry into force;

2. Invites all States that have not yet done so, particularly those possessing nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction, to ratify or accede to the Treaty as a significant contribution to international confidence;

3. Affirms its strong interest in avoiding an arms race in nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed, the ocean floor or the subsoil thereof;

4. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament—in consultation with the States parties to the Treaty and taking into account the proposals made during the Review Conference and any relevant technological developments—to proceed promptly with the consideration of further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race in that environment;

5. Calls upon all States to refrain from any action which might lead to the extension of the arms race to the sea-bed and the ocean floor;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament all documents of the thirty-second session of the General Assembly relevant to further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof;

7. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to report on its negotiations to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

Report of the Ad Hoc Committee

The 18-member Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, established by the General Assembly in 1972 to study the implications of the Assembly's 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,⁴² continued its work in 1977 during 13 formal meetings between April and October. Reporting to the 1977 General Assembly session, the Committee noted that its Acting Chairman had held consultations with the USSR and the United States in the light of recent statements indicating the interest of the two powers in the question of military restraint in the Indian Ocean and the announcement, on 30 March 1977, that they were setting up a working group to initiate bilateral talks concerning military limitations in the area.

The Committee reported that there were divergent views among its members as to the significance of the bilateral talks. Several countries welcomed the Committee's contacts with the USSR and the United States and felt they were a positive development towards the realization of the goal of implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, while others voiced scepticism about the usefulness of the consultations.

After a second round of USSR/United States talks in September, the Chairman had been informed that both sides had expressed interest in achieving practical results, that the talks had entered into a practical stage, and that the possibility of step-by-step implementation of appropriate measures had been considered. Furthermore, both sides had agreed that these initial steps should contribute to preventing the build-up of an arms race in the Indian Ocean area.

The Committee also informed the Assembly of the results of its work concerning the convening of a conference on the Indian Ocean. In a letter of 14 April 1977, the Acting Chairman had invited the great powers and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean to participate in consultations concerning such a conference. Although only two of the Governments that responded—Greece and Panama—accepted the invitation, a number of others recognized the need for a conference on the question.

The report also referred to the expressed desire of Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Greece, Mozambique and Oman to become members of the Ad Hoc Committee, and to a letter from Israel expressing its interest and willingness, in principle, to participate in the meetings of the littoral and hinterland States or other relevant bodies.

Finally, the report forwarded a draft resolution which the Ad Hoc Committee unanimously recommended for adoption by the Assembly.

After considering the report of the Ad Hoc Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/86, by which it: renewed its invitation to the great powers and other major maritime users of the Indian Ocean to co-operate with the Ad Hoc Committee; decided that, as the next step towards convening a conference on the Indian Ocean, a meeting of the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean be convened in New York at a suitable date; requested the Ad Hoc Committee to make preparations for such a meeting; decided to enlarge the Ad Hoc Committee by the addition of Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Greece, Mozambique and Oman; and renewed its mandate.

The Assembly also inter alia noted that talks between the USSR and the United States regarding their military presence in the Indian Ocean had been initiated, and that those countries had established contact with the Committee through its Chairman. It expressed the hope that those talks would contribute to the attainment of the objectives of the Declaration and lead to co-operation on their part with the Ad Hoc Committee and the littoral and hinterland States.

Resolution 32/86 was adopted on 12 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 123 to 0, with 13 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text by 95 votes to 0, with 13 abstentions, on 18 November. The text proposed by the Ad Hoc Committee was amended by the Chairman of that Committee to add New York as the venue of the conference and to enlarge the membership of the Committee.

many Members expressed support for the objective of transforming the Indian Ocean into a zone of peace, but a number of them, including China, Democratic Yemen, Indonesia, Iraq, Kenya, Madagascar, Mozambique and Zambia, expressed dissatisfaction with the lack of progress and expressed concern over military leases and military rivalry in the region. They felt the blame should be placed primarily on the major powers.

Australia, Japan and the United Kingdom referred to the talks between the USSR and the United States, welcoming them as a positive development. Other States, among them Sri Lanka, expressed the hope that the bilateral talks would not be limited to a mere freezing of the military presence of the two powers, but would be the first step towards fulfilment of the objectives of the Declaration.

The USSR stressed the need for the elimination of foreign military bases in the area, and declared that it had none. The United States considered that there had been positive movement on the question of reducing tensions in the Indian Ocean through bilateral talks aimed at stabilizing the level of military activity. It understood the desire of the littoral States to strengthen security and develop co-operation in the area; nevertheless, it was abstaining in the vote, as the Declaration, in its view, gave the littoral States the right to establish a legal regime for the seas in that region, and the United States could not accept such an understanding. Further, it did not agree that a multilateral conference would be the best way to achieve the desired goal.

In other interventions on the subject, mainly by States of the region such as Bangladesh, Iran and Madagascar, support was expressed for the proposal for a meeting of the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, and for the dual objective of the Declaration—namely, to exclude great-power military rivalry and at the same time to strengthen regional co-operation and security and prevent military competition among regional powers.

The United Kingdom said it had maintained its abstention on the question as it believed that the definition of the limits of the zone and the activities which should be excluded should precede, rather than follow, the declaration of a peace zone.

The Federal Republic of Germany said it abstained because it felt that the proposed designation of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace could adversely affect the principle of the freedom of the seas embodied in international law. Similar views were expressed by Italy.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975 and 31/88 of 14 December 1976,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action in furtherance of the objectives of the Declaration would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Encouraged by the support extended to the concept of zones of peace by non-aligned countries at the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976,

Recalling its resolution 3259 A (XXIX), in which it requested the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean to enter, as soon as possible, into consultations with a view to convening a conference on the Indian Ocean,

Considering that the continued military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean, conceived in the context of great Power rivalry, with the danger of a competitive escalation of such a military presence, makes the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration an even more imperative necessity,

Considering also that the creation of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean requires co-operation among the regional States to ensure conditions of peace and security within the region as envisaged in the Declaration, and the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the littoral and hinterland States,

Noting that talks between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America regarding their military presence in the Indian Ocean have been initiated and that the two countries have established contacts with the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean through its Chairman,

Expressing the hope that those talks between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America will contribute to the attainment of the objectives of the Declaration and lead to practical and effective co-operation on their part with the Ad Hoc Committee and the littoral and hinterland States,

Noting the reactions of certain great Powers and other major maritime users of the Indian Ocean to the invitation extended to them by the Ad Hoc Committee, in pursuance of paragraphs 2 and 3 of resolution 31/88 by which the General Assembly requested the Committee and the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean to continue their consultations with a view to formulating a programme of action leading to the convening of a conference on the Indian Ocean,

1. Renews its invitation to the great Powers and other major maritime users of the Indian Ocean that have not so far seen their way to co-operating effectively with the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean to enter with the least possible delay into consultations with the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean in pursuance of paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 3468 (XXX);

2. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and in particular the stage reached in the Committee's deliberations in regard to the convening of a conference on the Indian Ocean;

3. Decides that, as the next step towards the convening of a conference on the Indian Ocean, a meeting of the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean be convened in New York at a suitable date, which other States not falling within this category, but which have participated or have expressed their willingness to participate in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, could attend;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to make the necessary preparations for the meeting referred to in paragraph 3 above;

5. Decides to enlarge the composition of the Ad Hoc Committee by the addition of Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Greece, Mozambique and Oman;

6. Renews the general mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions;

7. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session a full report on its work;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary provision for the meeting referred to in paragraph 3 above and to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the preparation of summary records.

A/32/383. Report of First Committee (containing index to statements by delegations on disarmament items in First Committee, 32nd session).

General and complete disarmament

The question of general and complete disarmament was again on the agenda of the General Assembly in 1977. A number of topics were taken up in that connexion and the Assembly ultimately adopted seven resolutions on the agenda item. They concerned: the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (resolution 32/87 A, see p. 44); strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States (resolution 32/87 B, see p. 25); a study on the interrelationship between disarmament and international security (resolution 32/87 C); a study on the regional aspects of disarmament (resolution 32/87 D); publication of a disarmament periodical (resolution 32/87 E); safeguards on peaceful uses of nuclear energy in relation to non-proliferation of nuclear weapons (resolution 32/87 F, see p. 20); and the strategic arms limitation talks (resolution 32/87 G, see p. 26).

During the debate in the Assembly's First Committee, general and complete disarmament was frequently referred to as the necessary goal, and a number of States spoke in terms of setting priorities and proceeding by steps towards that goal, generally starting with nuclear disarmament. They also noted that there was a link between the various disarmament questions on the agenda and the ultimate goal. In particular, many States regarded the decision to convene the Assembly's special session on disarmament in 1978 as offering a unique opportunity and renewed hope for concrete progress towards general and complete disarmament.

Disarmament and international security

By resolution 32/87 C, adopted without vote on 12 December 1977, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to initiate a study on the interrelationship between disarmament and international security, and to submit to it a progress report at its 1978 special disarmament session. The text was approved by the First Committee by consensus on 17 November, on the basis of a proposal by Bangladesh, Colombia, Cyprus, Egypt, Ghana, Mexico, Nigeria, Panama, the Philippines, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

The proposal for a study on the interrelationship between disarmament and international security was initiated by Cyprus which, noting the connexion between disarmament and development, held that, if the new disarmament order expected to result from the special Assembly session was to be meaningful, the vicious circle of the arms race would first have to be halted. By studying the relationship between disarmament and international security it might become possible to find the means to halt the arms race, and the linking of disarmament to development could be realized.

Regional aspects of disarmament

On 12 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/87 D on the subject of regional aspects of disarmament. Reaffirming the right of each State to determine the conditions and to take the necessary measures for ensuring its security, the Assembly invited all States to inform the Secretary-General of their views and suggestions concerning the regional aspects of disarmament, including measures to increase confidence and stability and means to promote disarmament on a regional basis. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit the replies to it at its 1978 special disarmament session, and decided to consider at its regular 1978 session the desirability of a comprehensive study of all the regional aspects of disarmament, bearing in mind decisions which might be adopted at the special session.

Resolution 32/87 D was adopted by a recorded vote of 91 to 0, with 40 abstentions. The text, sponsored by Belgium, was approved by the First Committee on 18 November 1977 by a recorded vote of 71 to 0, with 41 abstentions. China stated that it had not participated in the vote.

Speaking in support of the regional approach to disarmament, Belgium stressed that the regional and global approaches were complementary; a regional approach would entail no relaxing of efforts towards general and complete disarmament. Belgium said that the United Nations should devote systematic attention to the numerous possibilities for disarmament at the regional level. Noting that the initiative for regional measures should come from the States of the regions concerned, Belgium cited several elements of a regional approach which it considered advantageous: specifically, security needs were more easily understood among States in the same region and it would be easier to identify the elements of negotiation; also, the regional approach offered application both in nuclear and conventional fields.

A number of Members, including Israel, Romania and Spain, spoke in support of the Belgian initiative. Romania, for instance, considered that achievement of general and complete disarmament required not only worldwide but also regional and individual actions. The regional approach offered certain advantages in that negotiations would take place under homogeneous geopolitical conditions, the security interests of the States involved would be similar, the number of States involved would be small and the States involved would be well known to each other.

Jordan, on the other hand, together with other developing countries, felt that the initiative was unsuitable at the moment when attention should be focused on nuclear disarmament and the elimination of weapons of mass destruction and when countries were facing problems caused by aggression and therefore needed continually to defend themselves.

Disarmament periodical

In recommendations made in 1976, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Disarmament had proposed the publication of a disarmament periodical, after publication of the United Nations Disarmament Yearbook was begun, to present a selection of current facts and developments and summaries of publications in the field of disarmament in highly readable form in all the working languages of the United Nations. The Assembly had endorsed these recommendations on 14 December 1976.⁴³

By resolution 32/87 E, adopted on 12 December 1977, the Assembly recalled its endorsement of the proposals of the Ad Hoc Committee, and noted the report of the Secretary-General on the measures taken in respect of those proposals and the publication of the first volume of the United Nations Disarmament Yearbook. It emphasized the need for a disarmament periodical and requested the Secretary-General to initiate the publication in all the working languages of the General Assembly.

Resolution 32/87 E was adopted by the Assembly without vote. The text was approved by the First Committee on 18 November by consensus, as sponsored by Austria, Denmark, Finland, Italy, Jordan, Norway, Romania, Sweden, Tunisia and Venezuela. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A Saudi Arabian amendment to the resolution, by which the General Assembly would recommend consideration of making a United Nations film portraying the devastation and miseries brought about by war, was not put to the vote on the understanding that the idea would be studied and reported on by the Secretary-General at the regular 1978 session.

Resolution 32/67 C, as recommended by First Committee, A/32/380, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1977, meeting 100.

The General Assembly,
Mindful that, according to Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Charter, the primary purpose of the United Nations is to maintain international peace and security,
Convinced that the relationship of international peace and security to disarmament is a close one and that a determination of this relationship can promote peace, security and disarmament,

Considering that for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978, the Preparatory Committee proposed that one agenda item be a review and appraisal of the close interrelationship between disarmament, international peace and security and economic development,

Considering further that it has examined at the current session a proposal for a study of experts on the interrelationship between disarmament and development,

Bearing in mind the need for a parallel study of the interrelationship between disarmament and international security,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate a study on the interrelationship between disarmament and international security;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report thereon to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to disarmament.

The General Assembly,

Concerned at the fact that the armaments race is accelerating and that the world figure for expenditures on armaments continues to increase,

Convinced of the need to intensify and diversify the efforts to promote general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Reaffirming the right of each State, in the exercise of its sovereignty, to determine the appropriate conditions, and to take all the necessary measures, for ensuring its security, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Mindful of the importance which new regional measures taken on the initiative of the States concerned may have,

Convinced of the usefulness for the international community of a study on all regional aspects of disarmament,

1. Invites all States to inform the Secretary-General, not later than 15 April 1978, of their views and suggestions concerning the regional aspects of disarmament, including measures designed to increase confidence and stability as well as means of promoting disarmament on a regional basis;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the communications received by him from Governments as official documents to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978;

3. Decides to consider at its thirty-third session the desirability of requesting the Secretary-General to prepare, with the collaboration of a special group of qualified governmental experts, a comprehensive study of all the regional aspects of disarmament, bearing in mind, inter alia, the decisions and recommendations that may be adopted by the General Assembly at its special session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/90 of 14 December 1976, in which it endorsed the agreed proposals made by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Disarmament,

Having considered the report on the measures taken by the Secretary-General as recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee,

Noting that the Secretary-General has carried out the request in resolution 31/90 to implement as soon as possible the measures recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee falling within his area of responsibilities,

Noting with satisfaction the publication of the first volume of the United Nations Disarmament Yearbook,

Recognizing the vital interest of all Governments and world public opinion to be kept properly informed on all efforts in the field of disarmament,

Recalling the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee to the effect that the General Assembly, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General, should consider publication of a disarmament periodical,

1. Emphasizes the need for a disarmament periodical presenting in highly readable form current facts and developments in the field of disarmament, such as summaries of new proposals, of important relevant statements and communications and of in-depth studies undertaken by the United Nations or the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, annotated bibliographies and brief summaries of important books and articles on disarmament questions and related matters;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate the publication of a disarmament periodical in all the working languages of the General Assembly.

Reduction of military budgets

The question of the reduction of military budgets was again discussed at the 1977 session of the General Assembly. Comments were directed both to the general aspects of the matter—the material and human resources absorbed by military activities, some of which could be channelled to economic and social development—and to proposals, studies and decisions taken on the matter in the past.

One of the difficult aspects of the question pointed out by Members was the variation among States in the methods of reporting military expenditures and the implications of different monetary systems, fluctuations in exchange rates and inflation.

For this discussion, the Assembly had before it a report by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of an intergovernmental Group of Budgetary Experts which met between March and August 1977. The report analysed comments received from Member States on a proposed standardized reporting instrument, among other things.

Also before the Assembly was a letter from the USSR expressing the view that, among other things, efforts of States must be directed not towards abstract research but towards the implementation of genuine effective measures to reduce military budgets. The USSR was prepared to adopt a flexible position and seek mutually acceptable specific decisions concerning the figures by which military budgets might be reduced initially.

On 12 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/85) on the subject. By the preambular part, the Assembly recalled its resolution of 14 December 1976⁴⁴ by which it requested an expert analysis of the comments of States on suggestions in the 1976 report of the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets.⁴⁵ The Assembly recognized the value of a satisfactory instrument for standardized reporting of military expenditures and observed that the work on the subject had reached a decisive stage at which practical steps for testing and refining the proposed reporting instrument could be taken. Further, it noted inter alia that, at its forthcoming (1978) special session devoted to disarmament, matters related to the reduction of military expenditures would be considered, and reaffirmed its conviction that there was an urgent necessity for reductions in the military budgets of the permanent members of the Security Council and others with comparable military expenditures, and that part of the resources thus released should be utilized for social and economic development.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly: expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Group of Budgetary Experts which had assisted him; requested the Secretary-General to ascertain which States would be prepared to participate in a pilot test of the reporting instrument and asked him to report thereon at its 1978 special disarmament session; and asked him further to prepare a background report for the special session compiling earlier proposals and recommendations of experts on this matter and transmit it to all Member States.

Resolution 32/85 was adopted by a recorded vote of 120 to 2, with 13 abstentions. The text, sponsored by Mexico and Sweden—and amended jointly by the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States—was approved by the First Committee on 18 November by a recorded vote of 109 to 2, with 11 abstentions.

Three amendments by the four powers were approved. The first, approved by a recorded vote of 103 to 1, with 17 abstentions, added the preambular paragraph by which the Assembly recognized the value of an instrument for standardized reporting on military expenditures.

The second and third amendments were approved together by a recorded vote of 40 to 4, with 76 abstentions. They added the provisions asking the Secretary-General to ascertain which States would participate in a test of the reporting instrument and to report on progress to the Assembly.

Mexico, speaking for the sponsors of the resolution, said that the General Assembly had exhausted the possibilities for study of the technical aspects of the question and finally had a satisfactory instrument to enable States to report effectively on their military expenditures. The next step should be to set in motion the practical process for testing and refining the proposed reporting instrument. But, first and foremost, there had to be a clear indication that the permanent members of the Security Council and other States with comparable military expenditures would be prepared to carry out reductions in their military budgets.

The sponsors of the resolution did not accept the four-power amendments, believing that their adoption would be contrary to the sponsors' objectives and might harden the negative attitude of some States regarding participation in a test of the reporting instrument.

Many States, including for instance the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba and the United Arab Emirates, pointed out that it had been four years since the Assembly had called for the reduction, by 10 per cent, of the military budgets of the permanent members of the Security Council, and there had been no implementation. The Byelorussian SSR commented that the USSR had long been proposing an agreement on practical measures to reduce military budgets and had effected unilateral reductions while other States had stepped up military appropriations. Romania suggested that part of the funds saved as a result of reductions should be placed at the disposal of a United Nations development fund for the support of the developing countries, priority being given to those with a national per capita income below $200.

Sri Lanka urged that the Assembly, at its special disarmament session, should give attention to the question of reducing military budgets for the purpose of freeing resources for economic and social development. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya shared this view and called for the working out of a timetable for reduction of military budgets. Nepal suggested freezing the level of military spending so there would be a limit beyond which expenses could not be increased.

Discussing how reductions might be achieved, Austria said that agreement on military expenditure concepts, including definition and measurement procedures and an international reporting structure, would seem to be a prerequisite.

The United Kingdom noted that failure in the past to implement proposals to limit military expenditures had been attributed to a lack of trust between countries and their unwillingness to provide the kind of information necessary to maintain confidence in the observance of expenditure limits. It suggested that success would depend upon finding a satisfactory system of measurement and comparison of military expenditures, and it appealed to the countries of Eastern Europe to support an early start of the pilot test of reporting procedures. The Netherlands shared the view that a worldwide system of reporting and verifying military budgets would strengthen confidence between States; it expressed willingness to test such a system.

The USSR said it had abstained in the voting because it believed that efforts should be devoted not to comparisons of technical reports but to the main purpose—reducing military budgets.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in its resolution 31/87 of 14 December 1976, it requested the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of an intergovernmental group of budgetary experts appointed by him, a report containing an analysis of the comments provided by States in the light of the suggestions set forth in the 1976 report of the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in response to the aforementioned resolution,

Recognizing the value of the availability of a satisfactory instrument for standardized reporting on the military expenditures of Member States, particularly of the States permanent members of the Security Council as well as any other State with comparable military expenditures,

Recognizing that the work set in motion by the General Assembly on the reduction of military budgets has reached a decisive stage and that successive reports of groups of experts have moved the whole exercise to a position where practical steps for testing and refining the proposed reporting instrument could now be taken,

Noting that the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978, will provide an opportunity to consider the disarmament problem in a broad perspective,

Noting further that at the special session several matters related to the reduction of military expenditures will be considered,

Reaffirming its conviction that part of the resources thus released should be utilized for social and economic development, particularly that of the developing countries,

Reaffirming also its conviction of the urgent necessity that the States permanent members of the Security Council, as well as any other State with comparable military expenditures, carry out reductions in their military budgets,

Conscious that, without an accompanying process of co-operation among such States, it will not be possible to accomplish the ultimate objectives,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the Group of Budgetary Experts which assisted in the preparation of the report;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ascertain those States which would be prepared to participate in a pilot test of the reporting instrument and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to disarmament;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a background report for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament and transmit it to all Member States not later than 1 April 1978, compiling the proposals and recommendations put forward by the groups of experts appointed by the Secretary-General and under Assembly resolutions 3463 (XXX) and 31/87, and containing information concerning the progress made in carrying out the task referred to in paragraph 2 above;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets."

Economic and social consequences of the arms race

The Secretary-General submitted to the 1977 session of the General Assembly a report by a group of consultant experts on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures. The report brought up to date a 1971 report and had been requested by the Assembly on 11 December 1975.⁴⁶ Also submitted were the views of Governments and international bodies on the matter; these had been communicated to the Secretary-General in pursuance of the same 1975 Assembly decision.

The Secretary-General reported that the experts had affirmed that the conclusions of the 1971 report had retained their validity: the threat of ultimate self-destruction as a result of nuclear war was the greatest peril facing the world; effective security could not be achieved by further armament; the cost of the arms race was enormous; and the military forces of the largest powers and the immense destructiveness of the weapons with which they were equipped cast the greatest shadow over the world.

The experts had cited some of the costs of the current arms race. They said that for a number of years the world had been diverting annually about $350,000 million in current prices to military purposes. The leading six countries, in terms of military expenditure, accounted for three fourths of the total. Altogether, 5 to 6 per cent of the world's total output of goods and services was diverted to military ends. The arms race, they had observed, was increasingly a world-wide phenomenon, but the competition in armaments between the largest military powers was the most important as it involved the greatest diversion of resources and inherent dangers and was the principal driving force of the world-wide arms race.

Discussing the question in terms of resources, the experts had stated that while the massive diversion of resources to military ends had continued unabated, what was fundamentally new in evaluating the situation in the perspective of the latter half of the 1970s was the changed frame of reference: there was a much greater awareness that the world was facing urgent problems of decisive importance for the progress of all States. Over the past half century, world military expenditure had increased in real terms by a factor of 10, corresponding to an annual increase of nearly 5 per cent. The most massive diversion of resources to military ends took place in the field of scientific and technological capability. It was estimated that some 25 per cent of the world's scientific manpower was engaged in military-related pursuits, and that since the Second World War some 40 per cent of research-and-development spending had been directed at achieving military ends. Military expenditures in developing countries had doubled in constant prices over the first half of the decade. Although small in the global context, the arms budgets of those countries loomed larger in relation to their limited resources and urgent social and economic needs.

The experts had further pointed out that the high level of military spending not only diverted resources urgently needed for economic development but also helped to exacerbate economic growth problems. Large military expenditures contributed to the depletion of natural resources, tended to aggravate inflationary tendencies and added to existing balance-of-payments problems. If half the funds spent on armaments throughout the world in the period from 1970 to 1975 had instead been invested in the civilian sector, annual output at the end of the period could have been perhaps $200,000 million larger than it was.

The experts had also emphasized that the arms race undermined national, regional and international security. It involved the constant risk of war, including nuclear war, engaging the largest powers, and was accompanied by an endless series of wars at lower levels.

Among the conclusions and recommendations of the experts were: the relationship between armament and disarmament on the one hand, and other aspects of social, economic and political development on the other, had received too little attention; peace and security could not be preserved while large and growing economic gaps existed between countries; only disarmament, co-operation, growing exchange and interdependence and diminishing inequalities could assure genuine security; and substantial progress in disarmament would represent a decisive turning-point with regard to development, primarily through release of resources—human, material and financial.

Referring to the shortcomings of disarmament efforts, the experts had pointed to the lack of a comprehensive scheme—a strategy for disarmament—and had reaffirmed general and complete disarmament as the necessary ultimate goal. Nuclear disarmament required the highest priority, but regional disarmament was also a necessary element of the comprehensive approach.

In closing, the experts had said that progress would require systematic co-ordination and planning with the participation of all States, and had referred to the need for more research and evaluation as well as for better functioning of the United Nations in its role.

Some 70 Members raised the question of the economic and social consequences of the arms race during the General Assembly's disarmament debates. They pointed out, among other things, that military expenditures represented a heavy burden on all peoples, and had extremely harmful effects on the efforts aimed at development assistance to developing countries.

They also expressed concern at the lack of meaningful progress towards disarmament and general agreement that a quicker pace in disarmament negotiations was imperative. Among other points frequently mentioned was the discrepancy between military expenditures and international development assistance. Malaysia, for example, stated that progressive global disarmament would eventually release resources in both the developed and developing countries to supplement the efforts of the international community in realizing the establishment of a new international economic order. Poland said that annual global military spending was roughly equivalent to projected foreign aid at the current rate to developing countries for the next 25 years. Turkey observed that the arms race was incompatible with efforts aimed at establishing a new international economic order and, in addition, was in contradiction with the policy of detente. Norway noted that expenditures on arms were still rising apparently independently of political detente; it commented that no country could in the long run achieve greater security by devoting more and more of its resources to armament.

Venezuela stressed that it was necessary to make known the dangers inherent in a continued arms race and dispel the illusion that peace and security could coexist with immense stockpiles of means of destruction.

Ghana pointed to the stockpiling of arms, both nuclear and conventional, as one of the most dangerous developments in international relations, while Mexico felt that the accumulative destructive power of the nuclear arsenal was such that its existence constituted a danger of universal suicide.

Romania considered that the Secretary-General's study represented a warning issued with the authority of the United Nations about the consequences of the arms race and an explicit expression of the fact that the world did not contemplate placidly this harmful phenomenon.

On 12 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/75 dealing with this question. By the preamble, the Assembly among other things: expressed deep concern that the arms race had continued to increase at an alarming speed; considered that the arms race was incompatible with United Nations efforts aimed at establishing a new international economic order; and noted the need for all Governments and peoples to be informed about the arms race.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly welcomed the updated report of the Secretary-General on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and decided to transmit it to the 1978 special disarmament session. It recommended that the conclusions of the report be taken into account in future disarmament negotiations. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to give the report the widest possible publicity and recommended that all Governments give it the widest possible distribution, including translation into their national languages. It invited the specialized agencies and other international, national and non-governmental organizations to make the report widely known and decided to keep the question under review and include it in the provisional agenda of its 1980 regular session.

Resolution 32/75 was adopted without vote. The text was approved by the First Committee on 11 November 1977 by consensus. The sponsors were Benin, Colombia, India, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Liberia, Madagascar, Mexico, Nigeria, Peru, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, the Sudan, Sweden, the United Republic of Cameroon, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire. Resolution 32/75, as recommended by First Committee, A/32/367, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1977, meeting 100.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security,"

Recalling its resolutions 2667 (XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2831 (XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 3075 (XXVIII) of 6 December 1973 and 3462 (XXX) of 11 December 1975,

Deeply concerned that, despite the repeated requests by the General Assembly for the implementation of effective measures aimed at its cessation, the arms race, particularly of nuclear armaments, has continued to increase at an alarming speed, absorbing enormous material and human resources from the economic and social development of all countries and constituting a grave danger for world peace and security,

Considering that the ever spiralling arms race is not compatible with the efforts aimed at establishing a new international economic order, as defined in the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, and in other resolutions of the Assembly, and that these efforts imply more than ever the resolute action of all States to achieve the cessation of the arms race and the implementation of effective measures of disarmament, particularly in the nuclear field,

Conscious that disarmament is a matter of grave concern to all States and that consequently there is a pressing need for all Governments and peoples to be informed about and to understand the situation prevailing in the field of the arms race and disarmament,

Recalling that the Secretary-General was requested by the General Assembly, in resolution 3462 (XXX), to bring up to date, with the assistance of qualified consultant experts appointed by him, the 1971 report entitled Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and of Military Expenditures, covering the basic topics of that report and taking into account any new developments which he would consider necessary, and to transmit it to the Assembly in time to permit its consideration at the thirty-second session,

1. Welcomes with satisfaction the updated report of the Secretary-General entitled Economic and Social Consequences of the Arms Race and of Military Expenditures and expresses the hope that it will help to focus future disarmament negotiations on nuclear disarmament and on the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the consultant experts as well as to the Governments and international organizations that have rendered assistance in the updating of the report;

3. Decides to transmit the report to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to disarmament, to be held in New York between 23 May and 28 June 1978;

4. Recommends that the conclusions of the updated report on the economic and social consequences of the arms race and of military expenditures should be taken into account in future disarmament negotiations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the reproduction of the report as a United Nations publication and to give it the widest possible publicity in as many languages as is considered desirable and practicable;

6. Recommends to all Governments the widest possible distribution of the report, including its translation into the respective national languages;

7. Invites the specialized agencies as well as intergovernmental, national and non-governmental organizations to use their facilities to make the report widely known;

8. Reaffirms its decision to keep the item entitled "Economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security" under constant review and decides to include it in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session.

Special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

Report of the Preparatory Committee

A special General Assembly session on disarmament, to open in May 1978, was to be convened by the terms of an Assembly decision of 21 December 1976.⁴⁷ At the same time, the Assembly established a 54-member Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, charging it with examining all relevant questions relating to the special session, including its agenda, and with submitting appropriate recommendations in 1977.

The Assembly also invited the views of Member States on questions relating to the special session; 58 States communicated such views to the Secretary-General.

The Preparatory Committee held an organizational session from 28 to 30 March, and two substantive sessions from 9 to 20 May and from 31 August to 9 September 1977. In connexion with the composition of the Committee, in February 1977 the Chairman of the Eastern European group of Member States expressed disagreement with the allocation of six instead of eight seats to that group and reserved the right to raise the question at the thirty-second (1977) session of the Assembly.

In accordance with decisions of the Committee, additional Member States were invited to participate in plenary meetings without the right to vote. Thus, Bulgaria, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Honduras, Ireland, Israel, Lebanon, Mongolia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal and the Syrian Arab Republic took part on this basis; representatives of the Holy See, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization attended as observers. In addition, representatives of non-governmental organizations were permitted to attend, and lists of communications received from organizations and institutions known to be conducting research in the field of disarmament were circulated.

Among the papers requested by the Committee and prepared by the Secretariat were: studies dealing with historical and statistical data on disarmament matters, including, for example, the principles and proposals for the conduct of disarmament negotiations; a synopsis of disarmament negotiations, and their results, carried out within the United Nations framework since 1945; a comparative study of global military expenditures and development assistance since 1945; and a list of disarmament and related proposals officially submitted to the United Nations. In addition, a number of States and groups of States submitted working papers dealing with substantive questions, including, for example, one entitled "Some preliminary ideas concerning preparations for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament" submitted by Sri Lanka on behalf of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries; three, entitled "Declaration on disarmament," "Programme of measures and action" and "Negotiating machinery for disarmament problems," submitted by Romania; and one entitled "Disarmament and development: proposal for a United Nations study" submitted by Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden.

In its report to the General Assembly, the Preparatory Committee outlined the proposed organization of the work of the special session and the organization of its own future work (suggesting two further sessions in early 1978), proposed a provisional agenda for the special session, and recommended that the Assembly initiate a study on disarmament and development as proposed in the working paper submitted by Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden.

In addition to procedural items, the provisional agenda provided for a general debate and the following four substantive items: review and appraisal of the current international situation in the light of the pressing need to achieve substantial progress in the field of disarmament, the continuation of the arms race and the close interrelationship between disarmament, international peace and security and economic development; adoption of a declaration on disarmament; adoption of a programme of action on disarmament; and review of the role of the United Nations in disarmament and of the international machinery for negotiations on disarmament, including, in particular, the question of convening a world disarmament conference.

the Committee on Disarmament and the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference to submit special reports on the state of their respective endeavours as part of the documentation for the special session. It also proposed that the special session should be held between 23 May and 28 June 1978 in New York, and set out recommendations as to officers and committees, rules of procedure, level of representation, public information activities and the role of non-governmental organizations. The Committee recommended that every effort be made to adopt decisions by consensus.

Finally, the Committee reported that it had reached consensus, in principle, and without excluding other possibilities, that the main elements of the principal document or documents of the special session should be: (a) an introduction or preamble; (b) a declaration on disarmament; (c) a programme of action; and (d) machinery for disarmament negotiations.

Discussion of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the special session took place in the Assembly's First Committee. Also before the First Committee were: a letter from the USSR to the Secretary-General concerning the special session which cited the importance of the memorandum on questions of ending the arms race and of disarmament which the USSR had submitted to the Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session,⁴⁸ and expressed the view that the special session could constitute a stage on the path towards a world disarmament conference; and a letter from the German Democratic Republic to the Secretary-General in which it expressed the view, among others, that the session should give priority to working towards the holding of a world disarmament conference.

On the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted two resolutions concerning the special session.

By resolution 32/88 A, the Assembly endorsed the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee that it should initiate a study on the relationship between disarmament and development, and requested that the Secretary-General appoint an ad hoc group of governmental experts to elaborate a possible framework and terms of reference for the study. This Ad Hoc Group on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development was to report by 1 April 1978 and its report was to be transmitted to Member States at least one month before the special session.

By the preambular part of the resolution the Assembly inter alia: expressed its concern that vast human and material resources were spent on armaments; reaffirmed that curtailment of expenditures on armaments would facilitate the availability of greater resources for economic and social development, particularly in the developing countries; and noted the declaration on the matter made by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August 1976.

Resolution 32/88 A was adopted on 12 December without vote. The text, sponsored by 38 States, was approved by the First Committee by consensus on 15 November. China stated that it dissociated itself from the consensus. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By resolution 32/88 B, the Assembly inter alia endorsed the report of the Preparatory Committee and its recommendation that the special session be held between 23 May and 28 June 1978 at United Nations Headquarters, and requested the Preparatory Committee to continue its work in order to prepare a draft final document or documents for consideration and adoption by the General Assembly.

Resolution 32/88 B was adopted on 12 December without vote. The text, sponsored by 57 States, was approved by the First Committee by consensus on 18 November. China stated that it dissociated itself from the consensus. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly adopted other decisions relating to the special session. By decision 32/423 A, it agreed that verbatim records should be provided for the plenary meetings and the meetings of the committee of the whole, and that summary records should be provided for meetings of any subsidiary body. By decision 32/423 B, it agreed that the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency should be invited to make a statement to the Assembly at the special session. These decisions were adopted without objection on 12 December 1977, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved them without objection on 18 November. They were proposed by the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee and by the Netherlands, respectively.

Among those States speaking in support of the special session on disarmament were Indonesia, Iran, Kuwait, Portugal and Sri Lanka, which emphasized their disappointment with results thus far achieved in disarmament; the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy and Thailand, which noted the enormous waste reflected in the arms race; and Cyprus, Jordan, Kenya and Yugoslavia, which called attention to the adverse effects of the arms race on both security and development.

Members also referred to their expectations for the special session. Among those most frequently mentioned were that the session would generate new enthusiasm for disarmament efforts, and that it would enable review and reassessment of problems and examination of the interrelationships between disarmament, peace and security, and economic development. Also noted in this discussion was the central role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament as well as the special responsibilities of nuclear and major military powers. A number of Members, including Botswana, Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, Hungary, Indonesia, Mozambique and the Ukrainian SSR, expressed the hope that the special session would lead towards the convening of a world disarmament conference.

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned that vast human and material resources are spent on armaments,

Reaffirming the need to allocate greater resources to economic and social progress, particularly having in mind the needs of the developing countries,

Firmly believing that a curtailment of expenditures on armaments in keeping with the objectives of the Disarmament Decade would facilitate the availability of greater resources for economic and social development, particularly to the developing countries,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the aforementioned matters and the specific studies carried out at its request,

Noting the declaration made by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, on this matter,

Noting also the proposal for a United Nations study presented to the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament,

Sharing the view that decisions on concrete action would be facilitated through an in-depth analysis on the relationship between disarmament efforts and measures to achieve economic and social progress,

1. Endorses the recommendation by the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament that the General Assembly should initiate a study on the relationship between disarmament and development, the terms of reference of the study to be determined by the Assembly itself at its special session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint, at the earliest possible date, an ad hoc group of governmental experts with the task of elaborating a possible framework and terms of reference for the above-mentioned study;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Ad Hoc Group on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development all the relevant materials, including proposals made by Member States, as well as previous and current United Nations studies on the subject;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Group to report on its work not later than 1 April 1978;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the report of the Ad Hoc Group to Member States not later than a month before the opening, on 23 May 1978, of the special session.

World disarmament conference

Report of the Ad Hoc Committee

The Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference held four formal meetings between April and September 1977. Reporting to the 1977 General Assembly session, the Committee advised that, in compliance with its mandate from the Assembly, it had maintained close contact with the nuclear-weapon States through its Chairman. It reported on each of these contacts.

With respect to China, that State had maintained its position that a world disarmament conference could only be convened or preparations taken if certain prerequisites were met, namely, that all the nuclear-weapon States, in particular the two nuclear-weapon powers, would undertake an obligation (a) not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, particularly against the non-nuclear-weapon States, and (b) to end all forms of military presence on the territory of others by those concerned. If such conditions were met, a world disarmament conference could be convened with a clear aim, namely, to consider the question of the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of all nuclear weapons.

France, the Committee reported, had noted that the holding of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, with its particular objectives, did not in any way lessen France's interest in the convening of a world disarmament conference. It hoped that the necessary prerequisites for such a gathering, in particular endorsement by all the nuclear powers, could be met in the near future.

The USSR, the Committee continued, had attached exceptional importance to the question of convening a world disarmament conference, at which all countries of the world, without exception and on an equal basis, could state and compare their views on the whole range of disarmament problems. If properly organized, and with working bodies available to ensure a thorough preparation and practical agreement in taking appropriate decisions with due regard for the interests of all States, a world disarmament conference could work out specific, effective measures aimed at curbing the arms race. In the USSR's view, the Ad Hoc Committee could recommend to the Assembly that the latter entrust it with preparation of a report for the special session on the item of convocation of a world disarmament conference.

The Committee went on to report that the United Kingdom had stated there was no change in the position it had expressed on many occasions in the past, namely, that the participation of all militarily significant States, including all nuclear-weapon States, remained an essential element in convening a world disarmament conference.

The position of the United States had not changed, according to the Committee's report. The United States believed that it was not the lack of a suitable forum but the lack of political agreement that constituted the principal obstacle to progress on disarmament. A world disarmament conference would be unlikely to overcome this lack of agreement and thus would more probably hinder, rather than assist, efforts to reach concrete arms-control agreements. The United States therefore felt it would be premature at this time to convene, to set a date, or to start preparations for a world disarmament conference.

In conclusion, the Committee suggested that the General Assembly, in considering the advisability of the continuation of the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, might wish to bear in mind the recommendation made to it by the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament that it request the Ad Hoc Committee to submit a special report to the special session.

Annexed to the report of the Ad Hoc Committee were excerpts from statements made in that Committee by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR. These States had expressed strong support for the convening of a world disarmament conference and had indicated that they considered the Assembly's special session on disarmament as a stage towards, rather than a substitute for, such a conference.

Following consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference by the General Assembly's First Committee, the Assembly, on 12 December 1977, adopted resolution 32/89 by which it requested the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to it at the 1978 special disarmament session a special report on the state of its work and deliberations. It requested the Ad Hoc Committee to maintain close contact with the representatives of the nuclear-weapon States, to consider any relevant comments which might be made to it, and to submit a report to the Assembly at the regular 1978 session.

Resolution 32/89 was adopted without vote. The text was approved by the First Committee by consensus on 18 November on the basis of a proposal by Burundi, Cuba, Iran, Jordan, Mongolia, Peru, Poland and Spain. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the debate in the First Committee, the Eastern European States expressed strong support for a world disarmament conference, maintaining that only such a forum, vested with broad powers, would be sufficiently large and authoritative for the co-ordination, elaboration and adoption of effective measures in the field of disarmament. The USSR said that the task of implementing the decisions of the Assembly's special session on disarmament could best be carried out through a world disarmament conference. Many other States, including Afghanistan, the Congo, Indonesia, Jamaica, Morocco, Mozambique, Qatar, Spain and the Syrian Arab Republic, also supported the concept of a world disarmament conference. Several of these States made the points that such a conference would be based on equality and would require the participation of all nuclear-weapon States.

In the view of Italy, any such conference should be preceded by adequate preparation, in the light of the outcome of the special session. Full participation of the main military powers, particularly the nuclear-weapon powers, should be ensured. China suggested that viewing the special session as an intermediate phase for a world disarmament conference would turn it into the sphere of the USSR, making it a part of sham detente and sham disarmament. Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine members of the European Community, said that any decision to convene a world disarmament conference could not properly be examined until after the special session. The nine States continued to believe that a world disarmament conference could have significant results only if carefully prepared and if all of the major military powers, particularly the nuclear military powers, participated.

Resolution 32/89, as recommended by First Committee, A/32/382, adopted without vote by Assembly on 12 December 1977, meeting 100.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2833 (XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2930 (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3183 (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3260 (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3469 (XXX) of 11 December 1975 and 31/190 of 21 December 1976,

Reiterating its conviction that all peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that all States should be in a position to contribute to the adoption of measures for the achievement of this goal,

Stressing anew its belief that a world disarmament conference, adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time, could promote the realization of such an aim and that the co-operation of all nuclear-weapon Powers would considerably facilitate its attainment,

Taking into account the provisional agenda of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978, and the recommendations proposed in the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, endorsed by the Assembly in its resolution 32/88 A and B of 12 December 1977,

1. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference to submit to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to disarmament a special report on the state of its work and deliberations;

2. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to maintain close contact with the representatives of the States possessing nuclear weapons in order to remain currently informed of their respective attitudes, as well as to consider any relevant comments and observations which might be made to the Committee and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "World Disarmament Conference."

Implementation of the objectives of the Disarmament Decade

When the General Assembly at its 1977 session took up the question of effective measures to implement the purposes and objectives of the Disarmament Decade (the 1970s), it had before it a report by the Secretary-General which stated that he had sought through the years to contribute to decision-making by the world community on the relation between the two goals of disarmament and development. The interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination had examined the co-ordination of disarmament and development activities within the United Nations system and it had been concluded that there was no need to change the methods of co-ordinating disarmament activities since they were working satisfactorily. Note had been taken of the steps taken by the Assembly to enhance the disarmament role of the United Nations, and the Secretary-General suggested that the situation might be reviewed from time to time.

Also before the Assembly was the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD), which dealt in part with the Disarmament Decade.

On 12 December 1977, the Assembly adopted resolution 32/80 on this question. By the preambular part of the resolution, the Assembly, recalling its resolutions declaring and reaffirming the 1970s as the Disarmament Decade, inter alia deplored that the objectives and purposes of the Decade had not been fulfilled. It reaffirmed the incompatibility of the arms race and the will of the international community to achieve healthy economic co-operation among States; observed that the peaceful use of the resources given annually to the arms race would have positive effects for the future of mankind; believed that aid to developing countries would serve its purpose only in a healthy, peaceful atmosphere characterized by mutual respect; and affirmed the urgent need for promotion of negotiations on effective measures for the cessation of the arms race.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly took note of the decision of CCD to set up an ad hoc working group to elaborate a comprehensive programme for disarmament and requested it to submit a progress report to the Assembly's special disarmament session in May 1978. The Assembly also called upon Member States and the Secretary-General to intensify their efforts in support of the link between disarmament and development envisaged in its resolution of 16 December 1969 proclaiming the Disarmament Decade,⁴⁹ and urged that the unparalleled technical possibilities currently available to mankind be exploited for the purpose of combating poverty, ignorance, disease and hunger throughout the world.

Resolution 32/80 was adopted by a recorded vote of 130 to 0, with 1 abstention. The text, as amended, was approved by the First Committee by 121 votes to 0 on 17 November. The sponsors of the resolution were Bangladesh, Finland, India, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Morocco, Nigeria, Romania, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Amendments to the resolution sponsored by the Niger were approved by a recorded vote of 96 to 0, with 22 abstentions. They added three preambular paragraphs concerning: the incompatibility between the arms race and the will of the international community to promote healthy economic co-operation; the positive effects that peaceful use of resources allocated to armaments would have upon mankind; and the belief that aid to developing countries would promote a healthy, peaceful atmosphere and mutual respect. Also added was the operative paragraph by which the Assembly urged that current technical possibilities be exploited to combat poverty, ignorance, disease and hunger.

During the debate, many speakers expressed regret that there had been no tangible results in the area of disarmament measures, even though the Disarmament Decade had passed its half-way mark. They deplored the fact that the purposes and objectives of the Decade had not been fulfilled in terms of effective disarmament agreements and that the arms race, especially the nuclear arms race, continued unabated.

The Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR expressed the view that a comprehensive programme of the most urgent disarmament measures was contained in the USSR memorandum on questions of halting the arms race and of disarmament submitted to the General Assembly at its regular 1976 session.⁵⁰

Mexico referred to the preliminary draft comprehensive programme of disarmament which it submitted to CCD in August 1977 (see p. 13). It believed that the most important new point therein was the breakdown of disarmament measures into two subsections, namely, measures for whose implementation the political will of the two principal nuclear-weapon States was essential, and measures for which the political will of the States directly concerned might be sufficient. Among the questions which would require the assent of the two major nuclear powers were those relating to nuclear weapons, to chemical weapons, to new types of weapons of mass destruction, to regulation of international transfer of conventional armaments, to elimination of foreign military bases and to reduction of military budgets, among others. Areas for which the political will of the States directly concerned might be sufficient would include nuclear-weapon-free zones, regional conferences for the prevention and limitation of armaments, and conclusion of regional non-aggression, security and disarmament treaties. In Mexico's view, the comprehensive programme of disarmament requested by CCD should be general, while the programme of action to be elaborated at the special session should be the result of a very careful selection containing only measures which, apart from their extreme urgency and particular importance, might justifiably be expected to be followed up either immediately or at an early date.

Nigeria, speaking for the sponsors of the resolution, also distinguished between the programme of action to be adopted by the special session, which would be limited, and the comprehensive programme for disarmament to be elaborated by CCD, which should be all-embracing and general, leading progressively to the ultimate goal of general and complete disarmament.

Chile believed that a comprehensive disarmament programme must include: a legally binding instrument establishing an international organ, under United Nations control, with authority to ascertain the actual arms situation in each country; machinery which could make available, on request, accurate information required by States and world public opinion; machinery to regulate the transfer of arms and to promote the channelling of military industry into peaceful pursuits; reduction of military budgets; elimination of nuclear weapons, including immediate cessation of all nuclear tests; agreement on conventional weapons, including elimination of weapons of mass destruction and of environmental warfare; and the establishment of an international peace-keeping force under United Nations control.

Among others expressing views on the content or implementation of a comprehensive programme of disarmament were Bangladesh, Peru, Poland and Romania.

Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine States of the European Community, referred to the link between disarmament and development which the Assembly had, by the operative part of the resolution, urged States to support. Belgium said the nine States believed that effective disarmament measures would make it possible to release vast human, technological, economic and financial resources, and that a part of such resources could be used to satisfy other needs, more particularly in the developing countries. It was in this perspective that they could accept a link between disarmament and development, though not an automatic link. Each had its own characteristics and dynamics, and progress in one area did not depend on progress in the other.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2602 E (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it declared the decade of the 1970s the Disarmament Decade and envisaged a link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Also recalling its resolution 31/68 of 10 December 1976, in which it reaffirmed the purposes and objectives of the Disarmament Decade, and its resolution 31/189 B of 21 December 1976, in which it decided to convene a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament,

Deploping that these purposes and objectives have not been fulfilled in terms of effective disarmament agreements and that the arms race, especially the nuclear arms race, continues unabated,

Deeply concerned at the continued wastage of resources on armaments and the consequent detrimental effect on international security and the achievement of the objectives of the new international economic order,

Reaffirming the incompatibility between the unbridled arms race and the will of the international community, proclaimed and repeatedly reaffirmed, to promote healthy economic co-operation among all States,

Convinced that the peaceful use of the human and material resources allocated every year to the manufacture of armaments of all kinds will have very positive effects for the future of mankind,

Believing that the aid made available to developing countries, in all its forms, will serve its purpose only in a healthy, peaceful atmosphere characterized by mutual respect,

Affirming the urgent need for the promotion of negotiations on effective measures for the cessation of the arms race, especially in the nuclear field, for the reduction of military expenditures and for general and complete disarmament,

Having considered the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,

1. Takes note of the decision of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to set up an ad hoc working group to elaborate a comprehensive programme for disarmament;

2. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to continue its work on this subject and to submit a progress report to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to disarmament, to be held in May and June 1978;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

4. Calls upon Members States and the Secretary-General to intensify their efforts in support of the link between disarmament and development, envisaged in General Assembly resolution 2602 E (XXIV) on the Disarmament Decade, so as to promote disarmament negotiations and to ensure that the human and material resources freed by disarmament are used to promote economic and social development, particularly in the developing countries;

5. Urges that the unparalleled technical possibilities now available to mankind should be exploited for the purpose of combating poverty, ignorance, disease and hunger throughout the world;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Effective measures to implement the purposes and objectives of the Disarmament Decade."

Chapter II

The peaceful uses of outer space

Questions relating to the legal as well as the scientific and technical aspects of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space continued to be discussed during 1977 in the General Assembly, in its Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and in the latter's two sub-committees.

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space reported to the Assembly at its 1977 session that its Legal Sub-Committee had continued work on the draft treaty relating to the moon, on the principles governing State use of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting and on the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, as well as on the definition and/or delimitation of outer space, on satellites in geostationary orbit and on accession to and ratification of international space treaties.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee had reported on its discussion of the organizational and technical aspects of remote sensing by satellites, on the United Nations programme on space applications, on a possible international conference on outer space matters, and on other scientific and technical questions.

On 20 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions dealing with international co-operation in outer space affairs. Resolution 32/195 commemorated the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies.¹ Resolution 32/196 A concerned the work of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its sub-committees, and resolution 32/196 B provided for an increase in the membership of the Committee.

United Nations Member States launching objects into orbit or farther into space continued to supply information to the United Nations in 1977 on such launchings.

Details of these and other topics are set out in the following sections.

¹ See Y.U.N., 1966, pp. 41-43, resolution 2222 (XXI) of 19 December 1966, annexing text of Treaty.

Legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Outer Space Committee) held its sixteenth session at Headquarters, New York, from 14 March to 8 April 1977. It concentrated on the three priority items of its agenda—the preparation of a draft treaty relating to the moon, the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, and the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space—and pursued work on the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities.

The Sub-Committee took no decision on requests by Colombia, Ecuador and Guyana to participate in its meetings, since the granting of observer status was a prerogative of its parent Committee, but agreed that their representatives could attend its formal meetings.

The Outer Space Committee considered the report of the Legal Sub-Committee at its twentieth session at Vienna, Austria, from 20 June to 1 July 1977, and recommended that the Sub-Committee continue its work on those items with the same priority it had been giving them, and also bear in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit. The Committee also welcomed the adoption by the Legal Sub-Committee of a draft resolution on the tenth anniversary (on 10 October 1977) of the entry into force of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies² (Outer Space Treaty), and forwarded the draft text to the General Assembly for adoption.

On 20 December 1977, the Assembly adopted without vote the resolution pertaining to the tenth anniversary of the Treaty. By resolution 32/195, the Assembly invited States to become parties to the Treaty as soon as possible and asked the Secretary-General for a research report on the experience gained in its application. The Outer Space Committee was asked to consider measures to encourage maximum participation in the Treaty

States were also invited to become parties to that Treaty, as well as several other multilateral treaties relating to the peaceful uses of outer space, by resolution 32/196 A adopted on the same date, also without vote. By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the work of the Outer Space Committee and adopted several provisions relating specifically to the work of the Legal Sub-Committee.

It noted the Sub-Committee's work and progress in 1977 on the priority and other items it was considering, including its work in formulating a tentative text of a principle of consultation and agreements between States and a draft preamble. The Assembly also noted with appreciation a Legal Sub-Committee resolution of 8 April 1977 paying tribute to Eugeniusz Wyzner for 10 years of service as Sub-Committee Chairman.

Further, the Assembly recommended priorities for the Sub-Committee's work in 1978. High priority was to be given to completion of the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, to formulation of draft principles on the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, and to consideration of a draft treaty relating to the moon. The Sub-Committee was also to continue to discuss questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space activities, and bear in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit.

Other provisions of the resolution pertained to various aspects of the work of the Outer Space Committee and its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee (see subchapter below).

Resolution 32/196 A was proposed in the Assembly's First Committee by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela. It was approved by consensus in that Committee on 1 December 1977.

Direct-broadcast satellites

The Legal Sub-Committee re-established at its 1977 session Working Group II to continue consideration of the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements. The Working Group held 14 meetings between 28 March and 8 April, seven informal meetings and a number of informal consultations.

The Working Group, which had completed the texts of nine principles in 1976,³ considered the formulation of the three remaining principles—consent and participation, programme content, and unlawful/inadmissible broadcasts—on the basis of the texts contained in the 1976 report of the Chairman of the Working Group. The Group had before it a United Kingdom working paper, several informal working papers submitted by other members, and the results of the World Administrative Radio Conference (WARC) for planning the broadcasting-satellite service held by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) in January/February 1977 at Geneva, Switzerland.

In an effort to harmonize the differing views and facilitate general agreement, the Working Group formulated a proposed text of a principle of "consultation and agreements between States" and a draft preamble.

Presenting this Group's report to the Legal Sub-Committee, the Chairman of the Working Group expressed his appreciation in particular to Austria, Canada and Sweden for compromise texts that could provide a sound basis for the parent Committee to conclude work on the draft principles governing State use of satellites for direct television broadcasting. The Group expressed the hope that, in view of the progress made, the remaining differences could be overcome and the task entrusted to the Sub-Committee would be fulfilled at the forthcoming session of the Outer Space Committee in June/July.

The statements made on this subject in the Sub-Committee principally concerned the questions of prior consent and free flow of information. Chile, France, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Mexico, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, the USSR and Venezuela, among others, remained of the view that the principle of consultation and agreements between States was an indispensable provision, embodying respect for sovereignty of States and non-interference in their internal affairs, proclaimed by international law.

In this connexion, most of them held the opinion that the work done by ITU on this subject was technical and they considered that it was compatible with the principle of consultation and agreements between States.

That viewpoint was not shared by the United

³ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 63.

Kingdom, which held that, as a result of the World Agreement and Associated Plan concluded at WARC and of other ITU instruments, State-to-State direct television broadcasting and spill-over problems would be minimal. Belgium also said it was necessary to bear in mind the ITU rules, which assigned each State or group of States a specific frequency framework within which they could sovereignly carry out broadcasting, either directly or by means of authorization. Consequently, the requirement of prior consent for the use of frequencies could contravene international law and violate accepted rules.

Sweden considered that the ITU regulations were important technically, but noted they did not solve legal problems that might arise between States. It favoured a provision on agreement between broadcasting and receiving States based on a Swedish-Canadian proposal which called for formal agreements and consultations on proposed broadcasting. In Sweden's view, its proposal did not contravene the principle of freedom of information and made unnecessary the principle of the duty and right to consult, already formulated, as well as texts concerning programme content and unlawful broadcasts.

Belgium suggested that the principle of prior consent be replaced by a principle in accordance with which States should encourage reception of information compatible with their security and public order requirements. Japan strongly doubted the need for the principle of prior consent, although in its view legitimate concern of States over direct television broadcasting should be taken into account. Austria, France, Indonesia and Iran were among those members which called for a compromise solution securing both free flow of information on the one hand and respect for sovereign rights of States on the other.

The Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States continued to favour the principle of freedom of information and spoke against the principle of prior consent. In that connexion, the United Kingdom stated that the free flow of information, regardless of national frontiers, was a basic human right set forth in United Nations and other instruments relating to universal human rights.

The opinion was also expressed, on the other hand, that the use of direct broadcast satellites for direct television broadcasting belonged to the field of relations between States and not to the field of human rights.

The principles of programme content and unlawful/inadmissible broadcasts, although not discussed separately at length, were specifically commented on by Czechoslovakia, India and Romania, among others.

At its June/July 1977 session, the Outer Space Committee noted that the Legal Sub-Committee had made considerable progress in the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting. It noted with satisfaction in particular the Sub-Committee's success in formulating a tentative text of a principle of consultation and agreements between States and a draft preamble. The Committee noted the hope expressed by the Sub-Committee that the task entrusted to it by the General Assembly in 1976⁴ would be fulfilled at the Committee's current session.

For this purpose, the Outer Space Committee established a working party of the whole, which held four meetings. The working party concentrated on finalizing tentative wording contained in the draft preamble and the draft principle of consultation and agreements between States formulated by the Legal Sub-Committee; it also discussed separate paragraphs proposed by members for inclusion in the preamble. Owing to lack of time, it did not complete this discussion. No agreement was reached on the paragraphs proposed for inclusion in the draft preamble, and, although some agreement was reached on the principle of consultation and agreements between States, it was decided that the texts of the provisions should remain tentative/undecided for the time being.

The Outer Space Committee, having heard the views of its members on the outstanding issues and taking into account the progress achieved, recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee, at its 1978 session, should continue to consider, as a matter of high priority, the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions of 9 November 1972⁵ and 8 November 1976.⁶

During the general discussion of the item on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space in the First Committee at the 1977 session of the General Assembly, some Members, including Algeria, Bulgaria, Chile, the German Democratic Republic, India, Iran, Kuwait, Mongolia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Venezuela, upheld the principle of consultation and agreements among States as a step forward which would defend sovereign rights of receiving States against foreign interference in their internal affairs through direct television broadcasting, and promote international co-operation and understanding.

Brazil, Indonesia, Madagascar and Yugoslavia said that States should have the right to regulate the inflow of information received through space. Afghanistan, Ghana, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Philippines, Sierra Leone and the Sudan favoured a compromise solution which would combine the principle of sovereignty with the concept of free flow of information. Austria and Norway believed that such a compromise was possible along the lines of the Swedish-Canadian approach. The Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States stressed the importance of the principle of free flow of information and ideas, particularly with regard to the right of the individual to receive and impart information. Australia, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom emphasized the relevance of ITU decisions on direct television broadcasting, which, in their view, made the principle of prior consent unnecessary; the United States considered that principle incompatible with free exchange of information.

On 20 December 1977, in adopting resolution 32/196 A, the General Assembly inter alia noted with satisfaction the progress achieved by the Legal Sub-Committee and its working party in elaborating draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, as well as the work done to formulate a tentative text of a principle of consultation and agreements between States and a draft preamble; it recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue, at its 1978 session as a matter of high priority, its efforts to complete the elaboration of draft principles.

Remote sensing

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space re-established its Working Group III in 1977 to continue the consideration of legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the particular aim of formulating draft principles on the basis of common elements identified by the Sub-Committee. The Group held 13 meetings and one informal meeting open to all members of the Sub-Committee.

The Working Group had before it as the basis of its work the 1976 report of its Chairman, a working paper submitted by Mongolia, three draft international instruments submitted previously—one by France and the USSR, one by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico and Venezuela, and one by the United States⁷—and a number of informal working papers. The Working Group noted that the subject of remote sensing was also an item on the agenda of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its February 1977 session (see subchapter below).

The Working Group, at its 1977 meetings, formulated six draft principles which were added to the five formulated in 1976. They contained, as did those previously drafted, some tentative wording upon which no agreement was reached.

No agreement was reached on whether the text on remote sensing should refer to full and permanent sovereignty of all States and peoples over their wealth and natural resources as well as their inalienable right to dispose of those resources and of information with respect thereto. The text of a draft principle was prepared, however, and included in the report as an unagreed text.

The Working Group also deliberated on the question of a review clause but decided that a decision regarding such a clause would be premature at that time.

The Working Group was not able because of lack of time to discuss the definition of the terms "data" and "information" formulated by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee or a Swedish informal working paper on the question.

The Legal Sub-Committee took note of the Working Group's progress in formulating principles.

In the course of the discussions in the Legal Sub-Committee, the questions relating to transfer of information obtained through remote sensing were, as in previous years, considered in some detail.

Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Poland, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States shared the position that remote sensing from space did not require prior consent of sensed States in view of the principle of freedom of outer space laid down in the 1967 Outer Space Treaty.⁸ Belgium suggested that a compromise formula be sought that would permit a distinction to be made between information of national interest and of international interest.

Some members, including Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Mongolia, Romania, Sierra Leone, the USSR and Venezuela, remained of the view that sensed States had sovereign rights over their natural resources and over information regarding them, and that such information could be distributed to other countries only with the prior consent of sensed States. Other representatives expressed the view that the concept of State sovereignty did not include sovereignty over information concerning natural resources and that, consequently, no such principle was required.

In this connexion, the USSR, supported by Bulgaria, Hungary and Poland, suggested the establishment of specific criteria for the division of remotely sensed data into two categories: data which could be freely disseminated and published for general use, and data which could be disseminated only with the agreement of the sensed State. The USSR also believed that a spatial resolution [the smallest detail on the ground that can be seen in a photograph taken from space] of 50 square metres could be used as the criterion for dividing data into the two categories. The United Kingdom expressed the view that spatial resolution could not be the sole criterion for data classification.

Egypt and India felt that it would be better to wait for the results of consideration of data classification by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.

Sweden called for the adoption of the terms "primary data" and "analysed information" as defined at the February 1977 session of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee (see sub-chapter below). It also drew attention to the importance of an organizational structure, within which remote sensing would be carried out, for solving some difficult legal aspects of the question.

The United States, supported by the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom, favoured free dissemination of remotely sensed data, being of the view that a restrictive data-dissemination policy could lead to a severe curtailment of the benefits derived from remote-sensing activities. The Federal Republic of Germany said participation by developing countries in remote sensing activities should be explored. The Federal Republic of Germany and Japan agreed with others that some conditions should be introduced so that sensed States could receive information sooner than third parties. Iran held the opinion that critical information should be withheld from third parties. Indonesia considered that sensing States should be required to inform the sensed States of their activities.

At its June/July 1977 session, the Outer Space Committee noted with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee had been able to formulate six additional draft principles on this item, and recommended that the Sub-Committee continue, on the basis of high priority, to give detailed consideration to the question.

During the general exchange of views on outer space items in the First Committee of the General Assembly at its 1977 session, Afghanistan, Chile, Ecuador and Egypt were among those which supported the idea of prior consent by States to be sensed. Algeria, Argentina, Chile, Ecuador, Indonesia, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mexico, Mongolia, Romania, Sierra Leone, the USSR, Venezuela and Yugoslavia expressed the view that all States had permanent sovereignty over their resources and information on those resources. In keeping with that approach, most of these Members, along with some others, considered that data and information on natural resources obtained through remote sensing could not be disseminated to third parties without the consent of sensed States. In this connexion, the USSR recalled its earlier proposals on data classification based on spatial resolution. Argentina, Hungary and India called for further study of the spatial resolution approach.

Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, Norway and the Sudan considered that access to data and information by sensed States should be an integral part of any agreement. Sweden called for free and timely availability of data on reasonable terms to all States.

The principle of free collection and dissemination of information continued to be supported by the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Pakistan, the United Kingdom and the United States. The majority of these Members, along with Norway, also emphasized the importance of using remote sensing for the control of pollution. Austria and India called for a balance to be found between the principle of sovereignty over natural resources and benefits for all to be derived from remote sensing.

In adopting resolution 32/196 A on 20 December 1977, the Assembly noted with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee had achieved significant progress by formulating six additional draft principles relating to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, and recommended that the Sub-Committee at its 1978 session continue, as a matter of high priority, its detailed consideration of those implications, with the aim of formulating draft principles.

Questions relating to the moon

The Legal Sub-Committee on 14 March 1977 re-established its Working Group I to continue consideration of a draft treaty relating to the moon.

The Working Group held three meetings during the session, as did an informal group it established for consultations, open to all interested delegations. Of the three main outstanding issues—the scope of the treaty, the information to be furnished on missions to the moon, and the natural resources of the moon—the Working Group decided, as before, to give priority to the third question, which was generally regarded as the key issue whose solution could facilitate an agreement on the remaining two. The Working Group used as a basis for its work three reference papers containing all the draft proposals and working papers submitted by States and the texts formulated or approved by the Working Group and/or the Legal Sub-Committee on the three outstanding issues during the past five sessions. The Working Group also had before it a working paper submitted by Australia and Canada to facilitate the informal consultations, and an informal proposal for drafting an additional optional protocol on the question of the legal regime applicable to natural resources of the moon and other celestial bodies.

The Working Group was unable to arrive at a consensus on the question of the legal status of the natural resources of the moon, the subject on which the discussions in the Legal Sub-Committee were principally centred. As in previous years, some members, including Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Kenya, Mexico, Nigeria, Romania, Sierra Leone and Venezuela, continued to hold the view that the moon and its natural resources were a common heritage of mankind and that the draft treaty should contain a separate article proclaiming this concept. The establishment of an international regime to govern the exploitation of the moon's resources when such exploitation became possible or commercially practicable was, in their opinion, important.

The view was also expressed by India and Romania, among others, that the draft treaty should include provisions by which the States parties to the treaty undertook to establish a future international regime, although Romania accepted deferring work on such a regime until commercial exploitation became practicable. France considered that the formulation of such a regime was still premature. The United Kingdom stated that its position on the matter was flexible, though it was of the view that the sharing of resources should be equitable. The Federal Republic of Germany emphasized the importance of preserving the right of freedom of exploration and exploitation.

Other members of the Sub-Committee, including Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR, remained of the view that "the common heritage of mankind" as a concept was unresolved and needed to be defined, since it lacked clear legal content and led to untenable conclusions. The USSR suggested in this connexion that the formula "the province of all mankind" be used in new legal instruments on outer space. Some members—Chile, India and Indonesia, for example—also referred to the scope of the treaty, favouring, or not objecting to, its extension to all celestial bodies.

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, in considering the report of the Legal Sub-Committee, noted that the Working Group had been unable to reach a compromise solution and agreed that the Legal Sub-Committee should continue its work on the draft treaty relating to the moon as a matter of high priority in 1978.

The statements made in the First Committee of the General Assembly at its thirty-second (1977) session on the question of the draft treaty principally concerned the question of the legal status of the moon and its natural resources. Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cyprus, Egypt, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Kuwait, Madagascar, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, the Philippines, Romania, Sierra Leone, Spain, the Sudan, Sweden and Venezuela maintained that the treaty should proclaim the moon and its natural resources the common heritage of mankind; most of them called for the establishment of an international regime to regulate the exploitation of those resources. Chile and Pakistan said it was time for the Assembly to debate thoroughly and resolve the question of a definition of the concept of common heritage, as it was important to the new international economic order. Italy suggested that the natural resources of the moon might be used by anyone in loco, but that they should be subject to equitable distribution among all the world's peoples when they were brought to earth.

The USSR, supported by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Mongolia, suggested that the most appropriate way of resolving issues relating to the natural resources of the moon would be to regulate them by a separate protocol to the treaty. The German Democratic Republic was of the view that the concept of "common heritage of mankind" was a term used in civil law implying the recognition of the status of ownership and ran counter to the 1967 Outer Space Treaty. These Members considered, however, that whatever the decision to be arrived at, it must in any case be in keeping with the interests of all countries and peoples on earth.

On 20 December 1977, by resolution 32/196 A, the General Assembly inter alia noted with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee had continued its efforts to complete the draft treaty relating to the moon and recommended that the Sub-Committee at its next session continue, as a matter of high priority, its consideration of the draft treaty.

Other matters

Definition and/or delimitation of outer space

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Outer Space Committee considered in plenary meetings the question of the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities. The Sub-Committee had before it on the subject a document bringing up to date the information contained in a 1969 background paper, and a synoptic table of proposals and suggestions. Statements in the Sub-Committee touched on a number of aspects. Some members—among them Argentina, Belgium, Chile and France—expressed the view that the establishment of a boundary between air space and outer space was a matter requiring more detailed and thorough consideration. Poland and Romania also considered that there was a need for delimitation.

In this connexion, Argentina, Belgium and Italy stated their support for an earlier proposal to establish such a boundary at an altitude of around 100 kilometres. Mexico was of the view that sovereignty could not be exercised beyond the minimum perigee of an orbiting satellite. These members, along with Brazil, Chile, France and Iran, expressed the hope that this item would receive higher priority, possibly after completion of other priority items.

Other members, including Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the United Kingdom, were of the view that it was premature to define a lower boundary of outer space. Japan considered that it would be incorrect to try to define a regime for outer space in general terms or to formulate a definition applicable to all types of outer space activities.

There were also references to the question of the geostationary orbit in relation to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space. In the view of Indonesia and Kenya, which shared the position of other equatorial States, there was a close link between the questions of the geostationary orbit and definition of outer space. Colombia and Ecuador, speaking as observers at the invitation of the Chairman, stated that equatorial States had sovereign rights over segments of the geostationary synchronous orbit—which constituted a limited natural resource—above their national territories and thus did not recognize it as being in outer space. Brazil expressed the hope that the subject would be further discussed in the Outer Space Committee.

Australia, Canada, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy,

Japan, Poland, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States were among members which considered that the geostationary orbit lay clearly in outer space and its use was governed by the provisions of the Outer Space Treaty of 1967—in accordance with which outer space was not subject to national appropriation—and that all States had an equal right to the use of the geostationary orbit on the basis of co-operation and bearing in mind the relevant recommendations and decisions of ITU. Belgium expressed readiness to discuss whether certain orbits constituted a limited resource, but considered that this matter and whether rules for the use of the orbit were needed were separate questions.

At its session held in June/July 1977, the Outer Space Committee noted the discussion of the Legal Sub-Committee on the definition and/or delimitation of outer space activities and decided it should pursue its work on those questions. Noting a working paper submitted to it by the USSR on the legal status of geostationary orbits, the Committee recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee should also bear in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit.

During the 1977 debate on outer space items in the First Committee of the General Assembly, some Members—Australia, Chile, the Federal Republic of Germany, Kuwait, Pakistan and Panama among them—stated that the question of definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities had been made more urgent by claims of equatorial States to sovereignty over segments of the geostationary orbit. In the opinion of these and other Members, these two related matters required a more detailed and deeper study by the Outer Space Committee. Kuwait suggested a study by stages, beginning with technical aspects.

Brazil, Colombia and Ecuador, in accordance with the position of equatorial States, called for recognition of the sui generis character of the geostationary orbit. The Netherlands favoured additional regulation for border-line cases carried out in both air space and outer space, as exemplified by the planned United States space shuttle. The German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the USSR were among those Members which spoke in opposition to sovereignty claims to the geostationary orbit.

On 20 December 1977, by resolution 32/196 A, the General Assembly noted with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee had discussed questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, and recommended that the Sub-Committee at its 1978 session continue its discussion of those questions, and also bear in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit.

International space treaties

At a meeting on 6 April 1977, the Legal Sub-Committee, noting that 10 October 1977 would be the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,⁹ approved a draft resolution on the subject and recommended that it be forwarded by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to the General Assembly for consideration and adoption at its 1977 session. The Outer Space Committee did so at its June/July session.

On 20 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted the text, without vote, as resolution 32/195, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which had approved it on 1 December by consensus.

By that resolution, the Assembly inter alia invited States which were not parties to the Outer Space Treaty to ratify or accede to it as soon as possible and requested the Secretary-General to undertake research analysing the experience gained in the application of the Treaty over the past 10 years, showing its importance for the development of international co-operation in the practical application of space technology. The Assembly recommended that the Outer Space Committee should consider at its 1978 session possible measures to encourage the maximum number of States to participate in the Treaty. (For text of resolution 32/195, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In addition, by resolution 32/196 A, adopted without vote on 20 December 1977, the General Assembly inter alia invited States which had not become parties to the Outer Space Treaty, or to the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space,¹⁰ the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects,¹¹ or the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space,¹² to give early consideration to ratifying or acceding to those international agreements.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 31/8 of 8 November 1976,
Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Reaffirming the common interest of mankind in furthering the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to interested States the benefits derived therefrom, as well as the importance of international co-operation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming also the importance of international co-operation in developing the rule of law in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space,

Commemorating the twentieth anniversary since the launching into orbit of the first man-made object, Sputnik, which marked the beginning of the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and of international co-operation in this field,

Recalling with satisfaction its resolution 32/195 of 20 December 1977 concerning the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Invites States which have not yet become parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space, the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects and the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space to give early consideration to ratifying or acceding to those international agreements;

3. Notes with satisfaction the considerable progress achieved by the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and by a working party of that Committee in the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, and the work done in formulating a tentative text of a principle of "consultation and agreements between States" and a draft preamble;

4. Further notes with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee:

(a) Achieved significant progress by formulating six additional draft principles relating to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space;

(b) Continued its efforts to complete the draft treaty relating to the moon;

(c) Discussed questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the resolution adopted by the Legal Sub-Committee paying tribute to its Chairman, Mr. Eugeniusz Wyzner, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of his assumption of office;

6. Recommends that the Legal Sub-Committee at its seventeenth session should:

(a) Continue, as matters of high priority:

(i) Its efforts to complete the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting;

(ii) Its detailed consideration of the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles;

(iii) Its consideration of the draft treaty relating to the moon;

(b) Continue to discuss questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, and also bear in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit;

A/32/20. Report of Committee on Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. (Chapter II A, para. 34: draft resolution forwarded to General Assembly for consideration and adoption.)

A/C.1/32/L.39 and Corr.1. Draft resolution recommended by Committee on Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, approved by consensus by First Committee on 1 December 1977, meeting 50.

A/32/418. Report of First Committee, draft resolution I.

Resolution 32/195, as recommended by First Committee, A/32/418, adopted without vote on 20 December 1977, meeting 108.

The General Assembly,

Noting that ten years have passed since the entry into force of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, Confirming the great importance of the Treaty for the development of international co-operation in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies, and for developing the rule of law in this sphere of human activity,

Convinced that, during the decade in which the Treaty has been in force, it has played a positive role in the implementation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the progressive development of the law of outer space, including the elaboration and adoption of other international instruments governing the outer space activities of States,

Noting that seventy-five States have become parties to the Treaty,

Recognizing that participation in the Treaty contributes to the peaceful exploration and use of outer space for the benefit of all mankind, regardless of the degree of economic or scientific development of States, and to the development of mutual understanding and the strengthening of friendly relations among States and peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 2260(XXII) of 3 November 1967, 2453(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2601(XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2733(XXV) of 16 December 1970, 2776(XXVI) of 29 November 1971, 2915(XXVII) of 9 November 1972, 3182(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3234(XXIX) of 12 November 1974, 3388(XXX) of 18 November 1975 and 31/8 of 8 November 1976, in which it invited States which had not yet become parties to the Treaty to give early consideration to ratifying or acceding to it,

Expressing the belief that the participation in the Treaty of all States and the application of this international instrument by them can contribute to enhancing the effectiveness of international co-operation in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies,

1. Invites States which have not yet become parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, to ratify or accede to it as soon as possible;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake research analysing the experience gained in the application of the Treaty over the past ten years and showing its importance for the development of international co-operation in the practical application of space technology;

3. Recommends that the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space should consider at its next session possible measures to encourage the largest possible number of States to participate in the Treaty.

Scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

As in previous years, consideration of various scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space continued during 1977 in the General Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Outer Space Committee), its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, and in the Assembly itself.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee met at Headquarters, New York, from 14 to 25 February 1977, giving priority to the consideration of items dealing with remote sensing of the earth by satellites, the United Nations programme on space applications, and a possible United Nations conference on outer space matters.

The Outer Space Committee, which held its twentieth session at Vienna, Austria, from 20 June to 1 July 1977, considered the report of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that it continue to give priority during its fifteenth (1978) session to the same three items. It also recommended that the Sub-Committee examine the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit.

By a comprehensive resolution—32/196 A—on those and other aspects of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space, the Assembly, on 20 December 1977, inter alia endorsed the report of the Outer Space Committee, including its recommendation on consideration of priority items, and noted with satisfaction that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee had further examined both the current pre-operational/experimental phase of remote sensing of the earth from space as well as a possible future global/international operational phase. It endorsed the recommendation of the Outer Space Committee that further studies and reports on remote sensing be prepared by the Secretariat, including a factual study on the geostationary orbit to facilitate examination of different aspects of its utilization. It also endorsed the recommendation to strengthen the role of two remote sensing centres in Rome, expressing appreciation to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the Italian Government for holding training courses on the application of remote sensing for developing countries, and to all Governments which had hosted, offered fellowships for or assisted in holding international training seminars and workshops on space applications.

The Assembly recommended that the Sub-Committee set up a working party to consider all relevant factors and information concerning a possible United Nations conference on outer space matters.

It commemorated the twentieth anniversary since the launching of the first man-made object—Sputnik—into orbit in October 1957, endorsed the United Nations 1978 programme on space applications, approved continuing United Nations sponsorship of rocket launching stations in India and Argentina, and asked the specialized agencies to continue providing progress reports on their related work on outer space activities.

A report by the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) on its tropical cyclone project and on the World Weather Watch programme was welcomed and WMO was called on to intensify its efforts in this field.

The Outer Space Committee was asked to continue work on current and new projects and to submit a report in 1978 on subjects to be studied in the future.

Other provisions of the resolution pertained to the work of the Legal Sub-Committee of the Outer Space Committee (see subchapter above).

Resolution 32/196 A was adopted without vote by the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which had approved it by consensus on 1 December 1977. The text was sponsored by 35 Member States.

Also on 20 December, by its resolution 32/196 B, the Assembly expanded the membership of the Outer Space Committee from 37 to 47 (see section below).

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Outer Space Committee had before it several studies prepared by the Secretariat on the organizational aspects of international co-operation in the area of remote sensing of the earth by satellites, working papers by Belgium, Canada and Sweden (jointly), France, Sweden, the USSR and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, as well as information papers and other reports; all were submitted in response to the view that study of organizational, technical and financial matters should progress together with consideration of the legal aspects. To facilitate its work, the Sub-Committee set up an open-ended working group presided over by Canada to consider issues on remote sensing.

In accordance with an Outer Space Committee recommendation and in light of a proposal by Sweden, the Sub-Committee gave detailed examination to the question of the definition of the terms "data" and "information" used in describing the system elements and data flow involved in remote sensing from satellites. The Sub-Committee decided that the term "primary data" would mean those data acquired by satellite-borne remote sensors and transmitted to a receiver from a satellite either by telemetry in the form of electromagnetic signals or physically in any form, such as photographic film or magnetic tape, and the pre-processed products derived from those data which might be used for later analysis. The term "analysed information" would mean the end-product resulting from the analytical process performed on the primary data combined with data and knowledge obtained from sources other than remote sensing satellites. The Sub-Committee suggested that the formulation of the terms "data" and "information" used by the Working Group of the Legal Sub-Committee¹³ should be changed to conform with these definitions. The Sub-Committee concluded, however, that any definitions arrived at would be relevant only for the current state of technology.

The USSR elaborated on a proposal classifying remote sensing data as "global," "regional" and "local" information. Depending on the category, data might be disseminated openly or else by permission of the sensed State. The classification system was based on a range in metres or kilometres of spatial resolution and on distance covered.

The USSR and several other members, among them Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Mongolia, were of the view that a sensing country possessing primary data about a sensed country finer than a certain spatial resolution—up to

50 metres in the view of the USSR—should not disseminate such data to a third country without the permission of the sensed country.

Other members—including Australia, Austria, Japan, Nigeria, the United Kingdom and the United States—felt that satellite-sensed primary data, irrespective of their spatial resolution, ought to be openly disseminated.

France considered that resolving power was not a satisfactory criterion on which to base a distinction between data which might and might not be disseminated. It favoured free dissemination of raw data, but felt that analysed information drawn from data with spatial resolution finer than 10 metres should be made subject to legal regimes.

Australia, Belgium and France suggested an alternative way might be used to classify data, by inventory or relating to the usefulness or purposes for which data were used.

There was no general agreement in the Sub-Committee that classifications were necessary, that they should be made on the basis of spatial resolution, or on appropriate numerical ranges to be applied for each category.

The Sub-Committee felt that an attempt should be made to provide a technical definition of spatial resolution and to determine what aspects of data—e.g. resolution, spectral characteristics, polarization, etc.—might correspond to particular applications, so that the Legal Sub-Committee and the Outer Space Committee might more easily decide what, if any, should be the limitations on dissemination of primary data without the permission of the sensed State. A Secretariat study was requested for discussion at the next session.

As in previous years, the Sub-Committee also considered the current pre-operational/experimental phase of remote sensing, as well as a possible future global/international operational remote sensing system or systems.

Noting that several operational remote-sensing systems with quite different operational roles, and different but perhaps compatible characteristics, would one day be implemented by various nations or agencies, the Sub-Committee was of the view that there would be an important role for the United Nations to play in encouraging compatibility of the technical features of such systems as well as complementarity in terms of capabilities and roles.

The Sub-Committee noted that there were several pre-operational space segments functioning or planned, and that information had been received concerning a number of existing or planned national and regional ground stations for direct reception of remote sensing from satellites. It recommended strengthening the role of a remote sensing centre in FAO in Rome in the area of renewable resources, and establishing a centre in the United Nations Centre for Natural Resources, Energy and Transport of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs in the area of non-agricultural resources.

Taking into account a proposal by the USSR, the Sub-Committee asked for a study assessing the current situation in the area of remotely sensed data collected by space platforms. It noted that, while the United Nations co-ordinating functions should involve co-ordination between existing and planned systems, co-operative bilateral or multilateral arrangements should remain outside the purview of such United Nations co-ordinating functions.

The Sub-Committee was of the opinion that the question of detecting and monitoring pollution of the environment by means of remote sensing from space should be included in its future programme and asked for a state-of-knowledge study on this subject. With regard to a proposal by Sweden, it also agreed to explore other problem areas where international solutions were warranted or international action might be required, especially areas in relation to the establishment of operational systems in the future and how such problems could best be solved.

India suggested that in future the Sub-Committee might consider the concept of a "minimum needs" programme of satellite-based remote sensing for developing countries which emphasized evolving systems addressing themselves to those countries' resource problems without necessarily requiring very sophisticated equipment and highly trained manpower.

Indonesia expressed the view that solar energy and materials processing in space should be the next areas of attention. Others agreed with the United Kingdom, however, that it was premature to deal with the subject of space energy.

The Outer Space Committee, at its June/July 1977 session, considered the views of the Sub-Committee and endorsed its recommendations, including those requesting the Secretary-General to prepare the various studies to be considered by the Sub-Committee at its 1978 session.

The Committee recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee should adopt the definitions of the terms "primary data" and "analysed information" developed by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and bear them in mind in its work. Noting the inconclusive discussion which took place in the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee on dissemination of remote sensing data, the Committee endorsed the view that there was no scientific or technical basis for a sensed State not having timely and non-discriminatory access to data concerning its territory.

The Committee endorsed also the Sub-Committee's conclusion that international co-operation was needed, as that was the only cost-effective approach for acquiring the benefits of satellite remote sensing for the majority of countries, keeping in mind the special needs of the developing countries. It agreed that there would be an important role for the United Nations to play in encouraging compatibility and complementarity of systems, capabilities and roles. It reaffirmed its endorsements and recommendations on the use and regional co-operation in use of systems such as the pre-operational United States LANDSAT system. It also endorsed strengthening remote sensing operations in the United Nations system.

Finally, the Committee endorsed the future work programme of the Sub-Committee and considered that particular attention should be given to co-ordination between the Legal and the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committees.

The General Assembly considered the recommendations of the Outer Space Committee at its thirty-second (1977) session. Speaking during discussion of outer space subjects in the Assembly's First Committee, Czechoslovakia, as well as Chile, Pakistan and others, were of the opinion that, in view of the existence of several remote sensing systems, there was a need for the co-ordinating role of the United Nations in remote sensing, which applied to both the current pre-operational as well as the future operational phase.

Austria said it considered the proposal to classify remote sensing data in three categories based on spatial resolution to be reasonable and logical.

Ghana and Kuwait shared the opinion that the establishment of an international agency to control remote sensing and outer space activities might be the most effective means of involving the developing countries in such activities. Sweden reminded Members that it had for a number of years advocated the establishment of an international organizational framework for remote sensing.

By resolution 32/196 A, the Assembly inter alia noted with satisfaction that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee had continued to examine both the current pre-operational/experimental and possible future global/international operational phase of remote sensing of the earth from space. It recommended that the Sub-Committee continue to give priority to the three items it had considered with priority in 1977.

The Assembly endorsed the recommendations for studies and documentation on the classification of remote sensing data, on detecting and monitoring pollution of the environment, and on the current situation in the area of remotely sensed data collected by space platforms. It also recommended that the Secretary-General prepare a study on the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit for examination by the Sub-Committee at its 1978 session, to facilitate preparation of a study on different aspects of its utilization. (See also p. 74.)

The Assembly also endorsed the recommendation to strengthen, within available resources, the role of the remote sensing centres referred to by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and expressed appreciation to FAO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and Italy for holding international training courses on the application of remote sensing for the benefit of developing countries. It also endorsed the Committee's invitation to the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of continuing, expanding and co-ordinating United Nations-related programmes involving the use of satellite remote sensing data, particularly for the benefit of developing countries.

Space applications

Continuing its review of the United Nations programme on space applications, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and later the Outer Space Committee commended the work of the expert on space applications—who reported on the United Nations programme and on existing training facilities in remote sensing—and expressed appreciation to Governments and international and other organizations which, during 1976 and 1977, had hosted or provided assistance to United Nations-sponsored seminars on the practical applications of space technology.

The seminars and training courses included those on remote sensing held or planned in the United Kingdom in July-August 1976 and in the Federal Republic of Germany in August 1976 (both sponsored jointly with FAO), in Italy in October-November 1976 and April-May 1977 (sponsored jointly with FAO and UNESCO), in Pakistan in January 1977 and in the USSR in October 1977, as well as the SITE (Satellite Instructional Television Experiment) seminar and panel meeting in India in January 1976 and in November 1977 (sponsored jointly with UNESCO) and workshops on remote sensing in Bolivia in November 1977 and in the United States in September-October 1976.

Chile, Cyprus, Egypt, India, Pakistan, Romania and the Sudan were among the Members in the First Committee which considered that the United Nations programme on space applications should be expanded and should receive greater financial support to meet the needs of the developing countries.

On 20 December 1977, when it adopted resolution 32/196 A, the Assembly noted with satisfaction that the Sub-Committee had continued to make progress in implementing the United Nations programme on space applications and recommended that it continue to be considered as a priority item. Endorsing the proposed United Nations programme on space applications for 1978, the Assembly expressed appreciation to all Governments which had acted as hosts to, offered fellowships for or otherwise assisted in holding international training seminars and workshops on space applications, particularly for the benefit of developing countries.

International conference on outer space

The Outer Space Committee, acting on a recommendation of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, decided that the establishment of a task force to consider the options involved in convening a United Nations conference on outer space matters would be useful, and it recommended that the Secretariat invite Member States to submit suggestions to the Sub-Committee.

Speaking in the General Assembly's First Committee, Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Cuba, Egypt, Indonesia, Israel, Japan, Mongolia, Pakistan, Romania, Sierra Leone, Spain, the Sudan, Turkey and Venezuela were among those which supported the idea of convening an international conference on space questions, with careful preparation. Algeria, Bulgaria and the United States said that such a conference might be designed on the basis of needs shown by and with due regard for the results of the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development. Yugoslavia believed that its convening should not be linked to, or conditioned by, other conferences. The United Kingdom, on the other hand, expressed reservations on the usefulness of such a conference.

By resolution 32/196 A, the General Assembly inter alia recommended that the matter continue to be given priority in the work of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, and that the Sub-Committee set up a working party to consider all the factors and any further relevant information concerning such a conference.

Other scientific and technical questions

A number of other questions were considered and acted upon by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, the Outer Space Committee and the General Assembly.

The Outer Space Committee shared the satisfaction expressed by its Sub-Committee on the work carried out at the Thumba Equatorial Rocket Launching Station in India and the CELPA (Centro Experimental para el Lanzamiento de Projectiles Autopropulsados) Mar del Plata Station in Argentina relative to the use of sounding-rocket facilities for international co-operation and training in the peaceful scientific exploration of outer space, and recommended that the Assembly continue sponsorship of those two ranges.

The Committee welcomed a report by the World Meteorological Organization on its tropical cyclone project and World Weather Watch programme, and WMO's efforts to obtain basic meteorological data and to discover ways to mitigate tropical storms and minimize their destructive potential. In particular, it noted that the expected availability of five geostationary satellites by 1978 would mean that all the tropical areas of the world would be under surveillance for cyclones.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee considered questions relating to the co-ordination of activities between itself and the Legal Sub-Committee and relating to co-ordination of relevant work among the organizations within the United Nations system. The Sub-Committee noted that the first meeting of the sub-committee on outer space activities of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination had discussed those matters.

The Outer Space Committee noted that the Sub-Committee was satisfied with interagency co-ordination procedures and noted in particular the International Telecommunication Union's decision to convene in 1979 a World Administrative Radio Conference to review the Radio Regulations.

The recommendations and views of the Outer Space Committee on the scientific and technical aspects of outer space, as well as those relating to its legal aspects, were endorsed by the Assembly at its thirty-second (1977) session by resolution 32/196 A of 20 December 1977.

The Assembly thereby approved a continuing sponsorship of the two rocket launching stations in India and Argentina. It welcomed the WMO report, noting in particular that the satellite had revolutionized the initial detection of tropical cyclones and that the success of the project depended on continued and increased committal of essential resources to the programme; WMO was asked to intensify its efforts in this field and report thereon. The other specialized agencies were also to continue to provide the Outer Space Committee with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space.

Expansion of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space

By a second resolution on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space adopted on 20 December 1977, the General Assembly increased the membership of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space from 37 to 47, asked the President of the Assembly to appoint the new members by 31 January 1978 in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical distribution, and asked the Secretary-General to ascertain the views of Member States on ways and means of allowing participation of additional Member States and, after having received the opinion of the Committee, to report thereon in 1978.

The resolution was based on a proposal in the First Committee by 32 States.

The text was approved by that Committee on 1 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 95 to 0, with 13 abstentions. The vote was requested by Canada, the USSR and the United States. The Assembly adopted it as resolution 32/196 B by a recorded vote of 110 to 0, with 10 abstentions.

(For list of sponsors, voting details and text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

withdrawn a text by which the Assembly, noting the desire of additional States to participate in the work of the Outer Space Committee, would have asked that Committee to examine ways and means by which it could accommodate the desire for wider participation and to report thereon to the Assembly in 1978, at which time the matter would be taken up and decided upon.

A number of States spoke in explanation of vote. Australia and Poland objected to the haste with which action was taken. The United States said it abstained because of concern that the work of the Committee might be impeded by further enlargement, while Canada considered that the objectives of the resolution could have been accomplished without immediately increasing the membership by the arbitrary number of 10. Israel suggested that the principle of rotation should form the basis of further action on the composition of the Committee. Zambia was concerned that the phrasing of the text might give the Outer Space Committee veto power regarding future expan-

Resolution 32/196 A, as recommended by First Committee, A/32/418, adopted without vote by Assembly on 20 December 1977, meeting 108.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 31/8 of 8 November 1976,
Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Reaffirming the common interest of mankind in furthering the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to interested States the benefits derived therefrom, as well as the importance of international co-operation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming also the importance of international co-operation in developing the rule of law in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space,

Commemorating the twentieth anniversary since the launching into orbit of the first man-made object, Sputnik, which marked the beginning of the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and of international co-operation in this field,

Recalling with satisfaction its resolution 32/195 of 20 December 1977 concerning the tenth anniversary of the entry into force of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Invites States which have not yet become parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space, the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects and the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space to give early consideration to ratifying or acceding to those international agreements;

3. Notes with satisfaction the considerable progress achieved by the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and by a working party of that Committee in the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, and the work done in formulating a tentative text of a principle of "consultation and agreements between States" and a draft preamble;

4. Further notes with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee:

(a) Achieved significant progress by formulating six additional draft principles relating to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space;

(b) Continued its efforts to complete the draft treaty relating to the moon;

(c) Discussed questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the resolution adopted by the Legal Sub-Committee paying tribute to its Chairman,

Mr. Eugeniusz Wyzner, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of his assumption of office;

6. Recommends that the Legal Sub-Committee at its seventh session should:

(a) Continue, as matters of high priority:

(i) Its efforts to complete the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting;

(ii) Its detailed consideration of the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles;

(iii) Its consideration of the draft treaty relating to the moon;

(b) Continue to discuss questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, and also bear in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit;

7. Notes with satisfaction that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at its fourteenth session continued:

(a) To consider in detail both the current pre-operational/experimental phase and a possible future global/international operational phase of remote sensing of the earth from space;

(b) To make progress in the implementation of the United Nations programme on space applications;

(c) To consider in detail the options relating to a possible United Nations conference on outer space;

8. Recommends that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its fifteenth session should continue its work on the matters before it, giving priority to the three items mentioned in paragraph 71 of the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

9. Further recommends that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at that session should set up a working party to consider, in accordance with paragraph 75 of the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, all the factors and any further relevant information concerning a possible United Nations conference on outer space matters;

10. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space:

(a) That the Secretary-General, for consideration by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its fifteenth session, should:

(i) Undertake the studies and prepare the documentation on questions relating to remote sensing of the earth from space, as referred to in paragraphs 40, 44 and 49 of the Committee's report;

(ii) Prepare a factual study on the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit with a view to enabling a study to be made of the different aspects of its utilization;

(b) That the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, at its fifteenth session, should examine the subject-matter referred to in subparagraph (a) (ii) above;

11. Further endorses the recommendation to strengthen, within available resources, the role of the two remote sensing centres referred to in paragraph 73 of the report of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, and, in this connexion, expresses its appreciation to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Government of Italy for the holding of international training courses on the application of remote sensing for the benefit of developing countries;

12. Endorses the invitation to the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 48 of the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, to explore, within the existing resources, the possibility of continuing, expanding and co-ordinating programmes of the United Nations and its agencies involving the use of satellite remote sensing data, particularly for the benefit of developing countries, and to report thereon to the Committee;

13. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments which acted as hosts to, offered fellowships for, or otherwise assisted in the holding of, international training seminars and workshops on space applications, particularly for the benefit of developing countries;

14. Endorses the proposed United Nations programme on space applications for 1978;

15. Approves a continuing sponsorship by the United Nations of the Thumba Equatorial Rocket Launching Station in India and the CELPA Mar del Plata Station in Argentina;

16. Requests the specialized agencies to continue to provide the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

17. Welcomes the report submitted by the World Meteorological Organization on its tropical cyclone project and the World Weather Watch, in response to General Assembly resolution 31/8, and notes in particular that the satellite has revolutionized the initial detection of tropical cyclones, that the availability of five meteorological geostationary satellites by 1978 would mean that all tropical areas of the world would be under constant surveillance and that the success of the project depends upon continued and increased commitment of essential resources to this programme, and calls upon the World Meteorological Organization to intensify its efforts in this field and to report thereon in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Assembly;

18. Requests the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to continue its work, in accordance with the present and previous resolutions of the General Assembly, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities and to submit a report to the Assembly at its thirty-third session, in which would be included its views on which subjects should be studied in the future;

19. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Government and people of Austria for making possible the holding of the twentieth session of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at Vienna and for their generous hospitality in this regard.

The General Assembly,

(XVI) of 20 December 1961 and 3182(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973,

Noting that the advance of science and technology has enhanced the knowledge of, and interest in, the peaceful uses of outer space and international co-operation in this important field, to the benefit of mankind and to the advantage of all States, whatever their level of economic and scientific development,

Recognizing the importance of participation in the work of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space of States from all regional groups on the basis of equitable geographical distribution,

Welcoming in this connexion the fact that States belonging to all regional groups have expressed interest in becoming members of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Aware of the need to ensure that the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space carries out its work in the most effective way,

Having discussed the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

1. Decides to expand the membership of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space from thirty-seven to forty-seven;

2. Requests the President of the General Assembly, taking due account of the present membership of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, to appoint the new members not later than 31 January 1978, in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ascertain the views of Member States on ways and means of allowing participation of additional Member States in the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and, after having received the opinion of the Committee, to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

A/32/499. Appointment of members of Committee on Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. Note by Secretary-General.

Registration of space launchings

In 1977, United Nations Member States launching objects into orbit around the earth or further into space continued to supply information on space launchings to the United Nations in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 20 December 1961,¹⁴ as well as with the provisions of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space of 15 September 1976.¹⁵

Twenty notifications on launchings were received in 1977 and distributed as documents. (Notifications included objects launched during the latter part of 1976, as well as during 1977.)

Japan submitted information on the launchings of three space vehicles, and the USSR reported on 116 space objects.

On 9 February 1977, the United States informed the United Nations Secretary-General that it had established, under the terms of the 1976 Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, a registry of the space objects it launched. In accordance with the provisions of that Convention, the United States in 1977 transmitted registration data concerning 88 objects launched in 1976 and 1977.

Chapter III

Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the SeaSixth session of the Conference on the Law of the Sea

The sixth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea was held from 23 May to 15 July 1977 at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

The first session of the Conference, held in New York from 3 to 15 December 1973, was devoted primarily to organizational and procedural matters.¹ The second session, held at Caracas, Venezuela, from 20 June to 29 August 1974, began substantive work on the questions of ocean law before the Conference.² At the third session, held at Geneva, Switzerland, from 17 March to 9 May 1975, the Chairmen of the three main committees of the Conference prepared a single negotiating text for a proposed convention on the law of the sea; the text was issued on 7 May 1975 and presented to the Conference at the final plenary meeting on 9 May. After the third session, the President circulated a fourth part of the single negotiating text on the question of settlement of disputes.³

At the fourth session, held at United Nations Headquarters from 15 March to 7 May 1976, the Chairmen of the main committees revised the single negotiating text and the President prepared a first revision of the part on the settlement of disputes.⁴ Later in 1976, following the fifth session, held from 2 August to 17 September at United Nations Headquarters, the President prepared a second revision of the part on the settlement of disputes.⁵

A total of 146 States participated in the sixth session. In addition, two territories, nine specialized agencies or United Nations bodies, 11 intergovernmental organizations, 32 non-governmental organizations having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, and four national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity or the League of Arab States participated as observers.

The States which participated were Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, the Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape

Verde, the Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, the Holy See, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nauru, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

The two territories which sent observers, in accordance with invitations issued in consequence of a General Assembly decision of 17 December 1974,⁶ were the Netherlands Antilles and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The specialized agencies and United Nations bodies which were represented at the sixth session were the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and the United Nations Environment Programme.

The Conference also agreed without objection to invite a delegation from the United Nations Council for Namibia to participate in the work of the Conference.

The intergovernmental organizations that participated as observers were the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the Commonwealth Secretariat, the Council of Europe, the European Communities, the Inter-American Development Bank, the League of Arab States, the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of American States, the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the Saudi Sudanese Red Sea Joint Commission.

The national liberation movements that participated as observers were the African National Council (Zimbabwe), the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (South Africa) and the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO).

The officers of the Conference were elected at its first session. The President was H. S. Amerasinghe (Sri Lanka); the Chairmen of the three main committees, which dealt with the substantive work of the Conference, were Paul Bamela Engo (United Republic of Cameroon), Andres Aguilar (Venezuela) and Alexander Yankov (Bulgaria). The Rapporteur-General was Kenneth O. Rattray (Jamaica) and the Chairman of the Drafting Committee was J. Alan Beesley (Canada). There were 31 Vice-Presidents, and a Chairman, Rapporteur and three Vice-Chairmen for each of the main committees. In addition, there was a 48-member General Committee to assist the President in the general conduct of the business of the Conference; a 23-member Drafting Committee to formulate draft texts and give drafting advice as requested; and a nine-member Credentials Committee. The only change made to the officers or members elected at the first to the fifth sessions was that Belgium replaced Ireland as a Vice-President of the Conference.

The rules of procedure of the Conference remained as adopted at the second session and amended at the third, as did the "gentlemen's agreement" annexed to the rules, by which the Conference was to make every effort to reach agreement on substantive matters by consensus, and by which there was to be no voting on such matters until all efforts at consensus had been exhausted.

The aim of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea was to have a comprehensive convention on all ocean issues, including those which were outstanding from the first two Conferences, held in 1958 and 1960.⁷ In particular, the Conference was to try to establish a definition of an international regime for the seabed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and to ensure that the resources of the marine environment would be exploited for the benefit of mankind. This involved questions of who might exploit the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond national jurisdiction and what the basic conditions of exploration and exploitation should be. These subjects were assigned to the First Committee. Definitions of and regimes for such concepts as the territorial sea, international straits, the continental shelf and an exclusive economic zone were dealt with by the Second Committee; regulations to cover the preservation of the marine environment, marine scientific research and the development and transfer of technology were covered by the Third Committee.

The subject of the settlement of disputes was dealt with in plenary meetings and, as relevant to their mandates, by each of the committees. Other subjects dealt with in plenary meetings were the preamble and final clauses and the peaceful uses of the sea.

The basis for the work of the Conference at its sixth session was the revised single negotiating text of a proposed Convention on the Law of the Sea (Law of the Sea Convention) drawn up at the fifth session in 1976.

On 23 May 1977, the Conference adopted a programme of work providing that the first three weeks would be devoted to First Committee matters but the Second and Third Committees could meet if they decided to do so. Negotiations were to proceed through informal meetings, as at previous sessions.

The Conference also agreed to authorize its President, after the fifth week of the session, to prepare an informal composite text that would serve as a basis for further negotiations. This text was to be prepared by the President with the Chairmen of the three main committees, adopting the collegiate method, in consultation with the Chairman of the Drafting Committee and the Rapporteur-General. It was to consolidate and replace the existing revised single negotiating text.

⁷ See Y.U.N., 1958, pp. 377-83, and Y.U.N., 1960, pp. 542-44.

Work of the First Committee

The First Committee, under the chairmanship of Paul Bamela Engo, held three formal meetings.

On 25 May 1977, the Committee agreed on a programme of work, having heard a proposal from the Chairman that it should concentrate on reaching agreement on the following three issues, which might constitute a package deal:

(1) the problems of exploitation, notably the modalities of the system, including its duration, basic conditions of exploration and exploitation, the viability of the Enterprise and the resource policies of the International Sea-Bed Authority;

(2) institutional questions relating to the Authority;

(3) the dispute settlement system for matters relating to this part of the Convention.

At that same meeting, the Committee decided to set up an informal Chairman's working group of the whole, later renamed the Chairman's negotiating group. Jens Evensen (Norway) acted as the Chairman's special Co-ordinator of this group, which dealt with the first of the above issues. The group held 46 closed meetings from 26 May to 6 July 1977.

At a meeting held on 14 June, the Chairman said that the group had examined the four main elements in the system of exploitation, but, unfortunately, it had not been possible to reach consensus. Fundamental differences still existed on the issue of resource policy. They had centred on two aspects: the first was a definition of the general objectives, guidelines or principles governing all sea-bed activities; and the second was the specific limitation that should, in the interest of protecting developing land-based producers of the minerals concerned, be imposed on the total volume of production of such minerals from the sea-bed area. Other matters dealt with were the costs of the Sea-Bed Authority and contractual means of financing its activities, and the settlement of disputes. The Committee decided that issues relating to dispute settlement should be considered in conjunction with and incorporated in the general provisions of the Convention on the subject.

Work of the Second Committee

The Second Committee, under the chairmanship of Andres Aguilar, held two formal meetings. On the basis of a proposal by Colombia, as modified by Austria, the Committee, on 29 June, decided to ask the Secretariat to prepare a preliminary study, including maps, whose purpose would be to show both on maps and in figures the difference in area between various approaches to the problem of the limit of national jurisdiction over the continental shelf.

The map would show: a 200-mile line around all elevations permanently above the surface of the sea, a line showing a 500-metre isobath, a line showing the outer edge of the margin and lines illustrating the effect of a formula proposed informally by Ireland at the fourth session (this offered a coastal State a choice of two criteria for establishing the outer edge of its continental margin—which comprises the submerged prolongation of the land mass—wherever the margin extended beyond 200 miles from the shore: one criterion was based on the thickness of sedimentary rocks, which should be at least 1 per cent of the shortest distance from such point to the foot of the continental slope; the other fixed the outer edge of the margin to points not more than 60 nautical miles from the foot of the continental slope). The 200-mile line on the maps would be drawn utilizing known baselines or, where baselines either had not been established or were not known, the line would be based on the configuration of the coast.

The Committee noted that the Secretariat would have to use such information as it might be able to secure in the public domain or information furnished by delegations. The Secretariat would not be expected to assume responsibility for the information so obtained beyond identifying its source.

Argentina proposed that the edge of the continental margin should be shown in all cases, even where that margin was within the 200-mile limit. It also asked that the map show the extent to which the area was exploitable, and asked to know the financial implications of the proposed study.

From 13 June to 13 July 1977 the Committee pursued its work through informal meetings of the Committee, meeting as a committee of the whole, and of negotiating groups: one group on the legal status of the exclusive economic zone and the rights and duties of the coastal State and other States in that zone; another on the definition of the outer edge of the continental margin and payments and contributions in respect of the exploitation of the continental shelf beyond 200 miles; and the third on the delimitation of the territorial sea, the exclusive economic zone and the continental shelf between States adjacent to one another or facing one another across a body of water.

Work of the Third Committee

The Third Committee, under the chairmanship of Alexander Yankov, held one formal meeting, on 13 June 1977, to organize its programme of work.

It was agreed that all negotiations should again be informal. This was to apply to consultations either within the Committee as a whole or in smaller negotiating groups.

The Chairman said the major outstanding issues were the following:

- pollution from vessels, in particular the establishment of international and national rules and standards for the prevention and control of such pollution and the enforcement of such rules and standards by States, as well as States' ensuring compliance with such rules and standards by vessels flying their flag or of their registry;

- the regime for the conduct of marine scientific research and related matters; and

- the development and transfer of technology, in particular the functions and powers of the International Sea-Bed Authority and the definition of the rights and duties of holders, suppliers and recipients of technology.

The Chairman proposed close co-ordination and harmonization with the First and Second Committees, particularly on matters relating to procedures for the settlement of disputes.

The Committee continued its negotiations through two working groups: one on the protection of the marine environment, under the chairmanship of Jose Luis Vallarta (Mexico); and the other on marine scientific research, under the chairmanship of Mr. Yankov.

Work in plenary meetings

Settlement of disputes

At informal plenary meetings presided over by the President of the Conference, negotiations were conducted on the subject of settlement of disputes, based on Part IV of the revised single negotiating text prepared by the President at the fifth session. The First Committee had considered the subject of settlement of disputes relating to the sea-bed Area and had decided, in the interests of uniformity and clarity, that those issues should be considered in conjunction with and incorporated in the general provisions on the settlement of disputes.

These informal plenary meetings were centred on the following main issues: (1) the freedom of choice of forum by States and the forum having jurisdiction where the parties to a dispute had not agreed on the forum; (2) the question of whether there should be a choice of alternative fora for disputes relating to the Area, or whether a chamber of the Law of the Sea Tribunal would have compulsory jurisdiction over such disputes; (3) applications for the expeditious release of vessels detained by a coastal State; (4) provisional measures pending final settlement of disputes; (5) delimitation disputes between States with opposite or adjacent coasts; (6) optional exceptions from the compulsory settlement of disputes being dealt with by the Security Council, and those concerning military and law enforcement activities in the exclusive economic zone; and (7) the exception from compulsory jurisdiction of disputes relating to the exercise of sovereign rights by coastal States in the exclusive economic zone.

From 6 June to 8 July, informal plenary meetings were devoted to a reading of the President's revised text on procedures for the settlement of disputes. This was the second article-by-article discussion on that subject; the first was held at the fifth session of the Conference.

Preparation of an informal composite negotiating text

On 28 June 1977, the President proposed, and the Conference approved, a procedure for the preparation of an informal composite negotiating text. He was to undertake the preparation of the text jointly with the Chairmen of the main committees; the Chairman of the Drafting Committee and the Rapporteur-General would be associated with the endeavour. The President was to be free to suggest what modifications were likely to have the desired effect of promoting a consensus on those matters where it was evident to him that a consensus had not been reached in the committees.

In presenting these proposals, the President said it was important that all interest groups be able to see to what extent the provisions of a composite text were in conformity with their views and to what extent they fell short of their expectations. It would thus be clear to all participants what mutual concessions and compromises were needed to reach consensus. The composite negotiating text would be informal in character and would have the same status as the informal single negotiating text and the revised single negotiating text, which meant that it would serve purely as a procedural device and provide only a basis for further negotiations. He added that the informal composite negotiating text would not have the character or status of a text prepared by the International Law Commission such as that presented to the Geneva Conference on the Law of the Sea of 1958.

During the session, Fiji became the third country offering to provide the site for the proposed International Sea-Bed Authority. Jamaica had offered its capital, Kingston, in 1974. Malta had made a similar offer in 1975.

Portugal offered facilities in Lisbon for the proposed Law of the Sea Tribunal. This was the first offer received concerning the Tribunal.

Seventh session

On 15 July 1977, the Conference by secret ballot decided to hold the seventh session in Geneva; the vote was 81 votes in favour of Geneva, 47 in favour of Jamaica and 3 in favour of Malta.

It was further decided that the session would be scheduled from 28 March to 12 May 1978, with a possible extension to 19 May 1978.

The informal composite negotiating text

The informal composite negotiating text contained a preamble, 16 parts consisting of 303 articles, a transitional provision, and seven annexes. Part I dealt with use of terms, Parts II to X with the general aspects of the law of the sea, Part XI with the sea-bed regime and machinery, Part XII with the protection and preservation of the marine environment, Part XIII with marine scientific research, Part XIV with the development and transfer of marine technology, Part XV with the settlement of disputes, and Part XVI contained the final clauses.

A brief summary of these parts and of new articles or changes from the revised single negotiating text follows.⁸

Preamble

The preamble recalled the Declaration of Principles Governing the Sea-Bed and Ocean Floor, and the Subsoil Thereof, beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction.⁹ It expressed the belief that the codification and progressive development of the law of the sea achieved in the Convention would promote the purposes of the United Nations. It affirmed that the rules of customary international law would continue to govern matters not expressly regulated by the provisions of the Convention.

No preamble had appeared in previous versions of the negotiating text.

Part I. Use of terms

Article 1, which comprised Part I, did not appear in previous texts; it contained five definitions of terms for the purposes of the Convention. The first four of these, relating to the proposed International Sea-Bed Authority, the sea-bed Area, activities in the Area and pollution of the marine environment, were moved without change from other parts of the revised single negotiating text, except that the definition of pollution covered harm to marine life as well as to living resources. The fifth definition, of dumping, had not been included in the revised single negotiating text. Dumping meant any deliberate disposal, including incineration, of wastes or other matter from vessels, aircraft, platforms or other man-made structures at sea, or any deliberate disposal of vessels, aircraft, platforms or other man-made structures at sea.

Part II. Territorial sea and contiguous zone

Articles 2 to 33 were contained in Part II. Two of these articles were changed, both of them in the section dealing with innocent passage of foreign ships through the territorial sea.

Article 21 concerned the laws and regulations of the coastal State relating to innocent passage, specifying that those laws and regulations would not apply to the design, construction, manning or equipment of foreign ships unless they were giving effect to generally accepted international rules or standards. In the list of subjects on which the coastal State might make laws and regulations on innocent passage, reduction and control of pollution was added.

Article 27, on the special rules applicable to merchant ships and government ships operated for commercial purposes, dealt with criminal jurisdiction of the coastal State on board a foreign ship. It provided for two exceptions to the previously stated rule forbidding the coastal State from arresting persons or conducting investigations on board such a ship in connexion with a crime committed before the ship entered the territorial sea, when the ship was coming from a foreign port and only passing through a State's territorial sea without entering internal waters. The new exceptions related to the coastal State's rights under the Convention to protect and preserve the marine environment, and its rights when its laws and regulations concerning the exclusive economic zone were violated.

Part III. Straits used for international navigation

The only substantial change in Part III (articles 34 to 45), dealing with straits used for international navigation, was the addition of article 40 on research and survey activities of foreign ships passing through such straits. It would forbid such activities without the prior consent of the States bordering straits.

Also in that part, "reduction" of pollution was added to passages which formerly referred only to prevention and control, as in article 43, which stated that user States and States bordering a strait should co-operate in regard to pollution from ships.

⁹ See Y.U.N., 1970, pp. 78-79, resolution 2749 (XXV) of 17 December 1970, containing text of Declaration.

Part IV. Archipelagic States

Part IV, in articles 46 to 54, was concerned with archipelagic States. Three articles were altered.

A provision of article 47 on archipelagic baselines stated that if a certain part of the archipelagic waters of an archipelagic State lay between two parts of an immediately adjacent neighbouring State, existing rights and all other legitimate interests which the latter State had traditionally exercised in such waters and all rights stipulated under agreement between those States were to continue and be respected. Also, in drawing the baselines which defined the outer limits of its archipelagic waters, an archipelagic State could use lines up to 100 nautical miles long (rather than 80 in the revised single negotiating text) joining the archipelago's outermost islands and drying reefs, and up to 3 per cent (as opposed to 1 per cent in the revised single negotiating text) of such lines could extend up to 125 miles.

In article 49, on the juridical status of archipelagic waters and the area above and below them, a new paragraph was added specifying that the rules on passage through archipelagic sea lanes would not in other respects affect the status of those waters or the State's exercise of sovereignty over them or their resources.

Article 53, dealing with the right of passage through archipelagic sea lanes, specified that such lanes would be defined by each archipelagic State in terms of axis lines from which ships and aircraft could not deviate by more than 25 nautical miles on either side. The definition of this right of passage was the exercise of the rights of navigation and overflight solely for the purpose of continuous, expeditious and unobstructed transit from one part of the high seas or exclusive economic zone to another.

Former article 127 of Part II of the revised single negotiating text, forbidding unauthorized research or survey activities by foreign ships passing through archipelagic waters, was deleted. (A similar provision relating to international straits was inserted as article 40 and applied to archipelagic sea lane passage as well.)

Part V. Exclusive economic zone

Articles 55 to 75 set forth provisions concerning an exclusive economic zone. New article 55 defined the exclusive economic zone as an area beyond and adjacent to the territorial sea, subject to the specific legal regime established in Part V, under which the rights and jurisdictions of the coastal State and the rights and freedoms of other States were governed by the relevant provisions of this Convention.

Article 56 gave a list of the rights, jurisdiction and duties of coastal States in that zone, giving those States sovereign rights with regard to natural resources and economic activities, such as the production of energy from water and wind, and jurisdiction as provided for in the Convention with regard to artificial islands, marine scientific research and preservation of the marine environment.

In setting out the rights and duties of other States in that zone, article 58 mentioned internationally lawful uses of the sea such as those associated with the operation of ships, aircraft and submarine cables and pipelines, and compatible with the other provisions of this Convention.

Article 49 of Part II of the revised single negotiating text was deleted; it provided for the consent of the coastal State for any research concerning the economic zone. Instead, that subject was dealt with in Part XIII of the composite text (marine scientific research).

Article 67, dealing with catadromous species, was also changed. Harvesting such species would be conducted only in waters landwards of the outer limits of exclusive economic zones.

New article 71 stated that when a coastal State's economy was overwhelmingly dependent on the exploitation of the living resources of its exclusive economic zone, it would not be bound by provisions in the Convention giving neighbouring landlocked and developing coastal States the right to participate in exploiting the living resources of the zone.

Concerning the participatory rights of neighbouring landlocked and developing coastal States, article 72 mentioned that such rights would not be transferred to third States or their nationals by lease or licence, by establishing joint collaboration ventures or in any other manner which had the same effect unless otherwise agreed upon by the States concerned.

Part VI. Continental shelf

Provisions concerning the continental shelf were contained in articles 76 to 85 of Part VI. Article 82, dealing with payments and contributions to be made by coastal States to the international community in connexion with the exploitation of their continental shelf beyond 200 miles from shore, specified that the rate of such payments, beginning after the first five years of production at a given site, would be 1 per cent of the value or volume of production for the sixth year with an additional 1 per cent annually thereafter until the tenth year, after which it would stay at 5 per cent. By a new paragraph, an exemption was made for developing countries which were net importers of a mineral resource produced from their continental shelf; they would be exempt from making payments on the resource.

Payments derived from continental shelf exploitation would be distributed by the International Sea-Bed Authority to the States parties to the Convention on the basis of equitable sharing criteria, taking into account the interests of developing countries, particularly the least developed and the land-locked among them.

Article 73 of Part II of the revised single negotiating text was deleted. It would have required the consent of coastal States for any research on the continental shelf. That subject was dealt with in Part XIII (marine scientific research).

Part VII. High seas

Provisions concerning the high seas were contained in articles 86 to 120 of Part VII. Section 1 comprised the general provisions, and section 2, those relating to management and conservation of the living resources of the high seas. New article 86 stated that the provisions of Part VII would apply to all parts of the sea not included in the exclusive economic zone, territorial sea, internal waters or archipelagic waters.

One sentence was taken from the former article on freedom of the high seas and became new article 89. It stated that no State might validly purport to subject any part of the high seas to its sovereignty.

Parts VIII and IX

Part VIII (article 121) dealt with the regime of islands and Part IX (articles 122 and 123) with enclosed or semi-enclosed seas. There were no changes in these articles.

Part X. Right of access of land-locked States to and from the sea and freedom of transit

The right of access of land-locked States to the sea was covered in nine articles (124 to 132).

Article 125 said that land-locked and transit States should together agree on the terms and modalities for exercising freedom of transit, and that transit States had the right to take all necessary measures to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for land-locked States did not infringe their legitimate interests.

Article 127, exempting from taxes the means of transport in transit used by land-locked States, extended this exemption to other facilities provided for and used by such States.

Article 129 and 130 stated that transit and land-locked States might co-operate in constructing or improving means of transport, and that transit States were to take all appropriate measures to avoid delays or other difficulties of a technical nature in transit traffic.

Former article 131 of Part II of the revised single negotiating text on dispute settlement was deleted.

That subject was dealt with in Part XV (settlement of disputes) of the composite text.

Part XI. International sea-bed Area

Part XI of the composite text comprised 60 articles (133 to 192) arranged in six sections. Section 1 included some general provisions and section 2 set forth principles to govern activities in the Area. Section 3, which was concerned with the conduct of activities in the Area, called for co-operation in marine scientific research, conservation of natural resources and promotion of transfer of technology, as well as promotion of the effective participation of developing countries in sea-bed activities.

Section 4 dealt with the development of sea-bed resources. It set out three means of protecting mineral-producing developing countries from adverse effects on export earnings if production of minerals from the sea-bed led to a drop in prices. These means were commodity arrangements, production control and compensatory economic assistance. The section also contained a revised article on the functions of the Authority and two new articles on the review mechanism.

Annex II to the Convention set out the basic conditions of exploration and exploitation. It provided that title to sea-bed minerals would normally be transferred when the minerals were recovered from the sea bottom pursuant to a contract with the Authority.

Prospecting, when permitted by the Authority, would not confer any preferential, proprietary or exclusive rights over resources. As to exploration and exploitation, every contract between the Authority and a sea-bed operator was to ensure control by the Authority at all stages of operations and would confer exclusive rights on the contractor in the contract area.

Section 5 concerned the proposed International Sea-Bed Authority. The proposed statutes of the Enterprise, the operating arm of the Authority, were contained in annex III to the text.

Section 6 of Part XI dealt with the settlement of disputes.

In section 2, on principles governing the Area, a paragraph stating that all rights in the resources of the Area were vested in mankind as a whole was moved to article 137 from an annex to Part I of the revised single negotiating text.

Article 144, on transfer of technology, called for such transfer to benefit the Enterprise in addition to developing countries.

In article 148, on the participation of developing countries in activities in the Area, access to and from the sea-bed was mentioned as among the special needs of land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States which should be taken into account when promoting the effective participation of developing countries in sea-bed activities.

With regard to policies for the development of sea-bed resources, article 150 said that they should be aimed at ensuring: the transfer of revenues and technology to the Authority; just, stable and remunerative prices for raw materials; the enhancement of the opportunities of all States parties to the Convention to participate in the development of sea-bed resources; and the protection of developing countries from any adverse economic effects of sea-bed production. That article also spelled out a formula for limiting sea-bed mineral production by linking it to the projected increase in demand for nickel, allowing deep-sea mining to supply up to 100 per cent of the annual rise in demand for the first seven years and up to 60 per cent thereafter.

Article 151, on the functions of the Authority, specified that sea-bed activities would be carried out on behalf of the Authority either by the Enterprise or, in association with the Authority, by States parties to the Convention or by entities sponsored by States parties. It added that national and private entities engaged in such activities must undertake through contractual or other arrangements to contribute the technological capability, financial and other resources necessary to enable the Authority to fulfil its functions.

Among the revised or new provisions concerning basic conditions of exploration and exploitation set out in annex II to the text was one requiring all applicants to undertake to negotiate, if the Authority so requested, an agreement making available to the Enterprise under licence the technology to be used in carrying out activities on the sea-bed. Another provision required the Authority, when an area was considered for possible exploitation, first to determine that the area was large enough and valuable enough to reserve half of it for mining by the Authority itself or in association with developing countries. A new provision set out financial terms for contracts.

Article 151 further provided that the Authority would exercise such control over activities in the Area as was necessary for securing compliance with Part XI of the Convention concerning the Area and with the rules and regulations to be adopted by the Authority and the contracts and plans of work approved for individual operations. Contracts between the Authority and other entities would provide for security of tenure.

The Authority would be obliged to establish a system for the equitable sharing of benefits derived from the sea-bed, taking into special consideration the interests and needs of the developing countries, particularly the land-locked and geographically disadvantaged among them, and peoples which had not attained full independence or other self-governing status.

Two new articles provided for the review of the system for exploiting the sea-bed. Article 152 called for a review every five years, by the Assembly of the Authority, of the way in which the system was operating in practice. Article 153 called for a review conference, 20 years after the Convention entered into force, to consider the provisions of the Convention governing the system of exploitation. That conference would have the power to amend the existing system, though not its basic elements such as the principle that sea-bed resources were the common heritage of mankind.

As to the Sea-Bed Authority, article 156 stated that each of its organs, in exercising its powers and functions, should act in a manner compatible with the distribution of powers and functions among the organs as spelled out in the Convention.

Article 157, dealing with the Assembly, would require a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting to take a decision on a question of substance, provided that that majority included a majority of the members participating in a given session. A vote could be deferred once for five days if at least one fifth of the members requested deferral.

Among the new powers and functions proposed for the Assembly in article 158 were selection of the 11 members of the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber from among the members of the Law of the Sea Tribunal, establishment of a compensation system for countries economically affected by sea-bed mining, and final adoption of rules, regulations and procedures for sea-bed mining provisionally adopted by the Council.

Article 159 spelled out the categories of countries that were to constitute the 36-member Council: four from among those which had made the greatest contributions to sea-bed exploration and exploitation, as measured by investments or technology; four of the major importers of the same minerals found on the sea-bed; four of the major exporters of such minerals; six developing countries with special interests, such as the land-locked, major mineral-importers and the least developed; and 18 countries elected to ensure geographical balance. Substantive decisions would be taken by a three-fourths majority which included a majority of the members participating in a given session.

Among the new or revised powers and functions proposed for the Council in article 160 were: proposal to the Assembly of a list of candidates for election as Secretary-General of the Authority; issuance of directives to the Enterprise and the exercise of control over its activities; and provisional adoption of sea-bed mining rules and regulations pending final adoption by the Assembly. The Council was to act expeditiously on plans of work submitted by contractors for the conduct of sea-bed activities.

According to article 162, the Economic Planning Commission, an organ of the Council, would make its recommendations to the Council by a majority of its 18 experts present and voting. Any State party could bring to the attention of the Commission any situation resulting from sea-bed mining that was likely to lead to adverse effects on its economy.

The Technical Commission, an organ of the Council dealt with in article 163, would have two new functions: to advise the Council and other bodies on financial aspects of their work, and to review formal work plans (including contracts) for sea-bed activities.

The Enterprise, the organ authorized to explore and exploit the sea-bed directly, would act in accordance with the general policies laid down by the Assembly and under the directives and control of the Council, according to article 169.

Under the proposed statute of the Enterprise (annex III of the composite text), the Enterprise was to act in accordance with the resource policy set forth in the Convention and the decisions of the Authority in implementation of that policy. It was to have a 15-member Governing Board.

A paragraph of an annex of the revised single negotiating text stating that the members of the Enterprise would be the members of the Authority was deleted, as was a provision permitting the suspension of a member for persistent violations of its obligations.

A provision of annex III of the composite text on the allocation of income stated that, until the Enterprise became self-supporting, the Council, on the recommendation of the Governing Board, would determine what part of the net income would be transferred to the Authority. After that initial period, all net disposable income generated by the Enterprise would be transferred quarterly to the Authority, which would determine how to distribute the proceeds.

A paragraph on finance provided for two additional sources of funds for the Enterprise: amounts received through its participation in contractual relationships with other entities for sea-bed activities, and net income after revenues were transferred to the Authority. Also included were provisions that States parties were to make every effort to support applications by the Enterprise for loans in capital markets and advance funds directly to secure loans for the Enterprise to the extent that its regular sources of income did not cover the cost of its first mine site.

The products of the Enterprise, the annex mentioned, would be made available on a non-discriminatory basis to States parties. A provision in the former text which would have permitted the Enterprise to sell at lower prices to developing countries was deleted.

Revised provisions on the legal status, immunities and privileges of the Enterprise would: give it the capacity to enter into contracts, forms of association or other arrangements, including agreements with States and international organizations; require it to respect local laws and regulations wherever it did business; oblige States parties to accord it the same kind of preferential treatment they granted to developing countries; and permit States to provide special incentives, rights, privileges and immunities to the Enterprise without being obliged to provide the same to other commercial entities.

With regard to finance for the Authority, article 173 was enlarged by a new paragraph specifying that the Assembly was to take account of the need to earmark part of the funds received by the Authority from sea-bed contractors in order to enable the Enterprise to carry on its work of exploration and exploitation.

Provisions of section 6 on settlement of disputes relating to the sea-bed established the jurisdiction of a Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber as part of the Law of the Sea Tribunal, in place of the separate tribunal (provided for in the revised single negotiating text) which would have been an organ of the Authority.

That Chamber, according to article 187, would have jurisdiction over five categories of disputes: allegations by a State party against the Authority that it had violated Part XI of the Convention (on the sea-bed Area) or any rules and regulations promulgated in accordance with the Convention, or that it lacked jurisdiction or had misused its power; similar allegations by a national of a State party when the act he complained of had been directed specifically at him or was of direct concern to him as a contractor or potential contractor; other types of disputes between the Authority and a State party, or one of its nationals, relating to the interpretation or application of a sea-bed contract; disputes between the Authority and a State party over alleged violations by the State of a provision of Part XI of the Convention, and disputes over the international character of the Authority's secretariat or the suspension of a State from the exercise of privileges or membership rights in the Authority.

Article 188 would permit the parties to such a dispute to submit it to arbitration if they so agreed.

The Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber, as provided in article 189, would also have jurisdiction over disputes between States parties to the Convention concerning the interpretation or application of the sea-bed part of the Convention in respect of activities in the Area, as well as over contract disputes involving a State and a national of another State, or nationals of different States.

Article 190 would authorize the Chamber to give advisory opinions at the request of an organ of the Authority.

Limitations on the jurisdiction of the Chamber were set out in article 191, which prohibited it from pronouncing on the exercise of discretionary powers by an organ of the Authority or on the validity of any rules, regulations or procedures adopted by the Assembly or the Council, as opposed to their application to individual cases.

Article 192 would give States parties the right to intervene in the proceedings if one of their nationals was a party to a dispute.

Article 63 of Part I of the revised single negotiating text, which would have provided for provisional application of the Law of the Sea Convention before it was ratified by the required number of States, was deleted.

Part XII. Protection and preservation of the marine environment

Eleven sections, comprising articles 193 to 238, dealt with the protection of the marine environment.

Article 197, on the use of technologies, provided that States were to take all necessary measures to prevent, reduce and control pollution of the marine environment resulting from the use of technologies under their jurisdiction or control.

In the sections on global and regional co-operation, technical assistance, and monitoring and environmental assessment, the words "global and regional" were added to several references to international organizations.

Article 203, on scientific and technical assistance to developing States, called for the promotion of such assistance for the protection and preservation of the marine environment and the prevention, reduction and control of marine pollution.

Article 209 would oblige coastal States to legislate against marine pollution arising from or in connexion with sea-bed activities under their jurisdiction.

With respect to pollution from sea-bed activities in the Area beyond national jurisdiction, article 210 provided that international anti-pollution rules, standards and recommended practices and procedures would be established in accordance with the sea-bed part of the Convention. A new paragraph would oblige States to legislate against marine pollution from sea-bed exploration and exploitation activities undertaken by vessels, installations, structures and other devices flying their flag or of their registry.

According to article 212, the coastal State could submit evidence to the competent international organization, which must determine whether conditions in the area warranted special area status. If the organization so determined, the coastal State might establish pollution control measures for the area, implementing the applicable international rules and standards or navigational practices for special areas. However, those measures would not become applicable in relation to foreign vessels until 15 months after the coastal State had communicated with the organization concerned. Coastal States would have to inform the competent international organization if they intended to establish additional laws in that regard, laws which might relate to discharges or navigational practices but which could not require standards in design, construction, manning or equipment more stringent than generally accepted international rules and standards.

Articles 217 and 218, on enforcement, specified that anti-pollution measures referred to legislation or standards for the prevention, reduction and control of pollution. One of the provisions in the latter article, which concerned enforcement by flag States of regulations pertaining to vessels carrying their flag, required States to ensure that their vessels were periodically inspected in order to verify their conformity with pollution control standards.

Article 219, on enforcement by port States, specified that the port State might investigate or bring proceedings against a ship with regard to a discharge that took place outside the internal waters, territorial sea or exclusive economic zone of that State. Another provision said that as far as practicable a port State should, when requested by another State, investigate discharge violations believed to have occurred in, or caused or threatened damage to, the waters of that other State. Another clause provided that the records of any investigation carried out by a port State under those circumstances would be transferred to the flag State or coastal State at their request, and that proceedings initiated by the port State on the basis of such an investigation might be suspended.

Article 220, on measures relating to seaworthiness of vessels to avoid pollution, said that the State should, as far as practicable, take administrative measures to prevent a vessel in violation from sailing. It might permit the vessel to proceed only to the nearest appropriate repair yard, but if the causes of the violation were rectified the vessel was to be permitted to continue immediately.

As for enforcement by coastal States, article 221

spelled out the kind of action such a State should take when there were clear grounds for believing that a ship in its exclusive economic zone or territorial sea had violated anti-pollution strictures in the form of applicable international rules and standards or national laws and regulations conforming and giving effect to such international rules and standards. Flag States would be bound to take legislative, administrative and other measures to ensure compliance by their ships with requests by a coastal State for information required to establish whether a violation had occurred. Where there were clear grounds for believing that a ship in the exclusive economic zone or territorial sea had committed a flagrant violation resulting in major damage or threat of such damage to the coastal State's interests, that State could start proceedings against the ship. Whenever procedures had been established for ensuring a ship's compliance with requirements for posting a bond or other financial security, any coastal State bound by such procedures would have to let the ship proceed.

Article 229 mentioned circumstances in which the institution of proceedings to impose penalties against an allegedly offending ship could be suspended or restricted.

A new article, 230, provided that nothing in the Convention would affect the institution of civil proceedings in respect of any claim for loss or damage resulting from pollution of the marine environment.

Article 231 stated that only monetary penalties could be imposed with respect to violations of national anti-pollution laws and regulations or international rules and standards committed by foreign vessels beyond a State's internal waters.

Article 232, requiring notification to flag States and other States concerned when measures were taken against foreign vessels for alleged pollution violations, limited that obligation in regard to violations committed in the territorial sea by requiring the coastal State to report only such measures as were taken in proceedings.

A new provision in article 234, dealing with international straits, would permit States bordering a strait to take appropriate enforcement measures against a violation by a commercial ship threatening major damage to the marine environment of the strait.

Provisions on the settlement of disputes with respect to the preservation of the marine environment were dropped from the text.

Part XIII. Marine scientific research

Provisions on marine scientific research were set forth in articles 239 to 266, arranged in six sections: general provisions; global and regional co-operation; conduct and promotion of marine scientific research; legal status of research installations and equipment; responsibility and liability; and dispute settlement.

The definition of marine scientific research contained in former article 48 of Part III of the revised single negotiating text was dropped from the text.

In the section on conduct and promotion of marine scientific research, article 246, on research in the territorial sea, said coastal States had the exclusive right to regulate, authorize and conduct such research; research activities could be conducted only with the express consent of that State.

By article 247, coastal States had the right to regulate, authorize and conduct research in their exclusive economic zone and on their continental shelf; research activities there were to be conducted with the consent of the coastal State. Coastal States, in normal circumstances, were to grant their consent when the research was exclusively for peaceful purposes and in order to increase scientific knowledge of the marine environment for the benefit of all mankind. Coastal States could withhold their consent to projects which were of direct significance for the exploration and exploitation of natural resources, or which involved drilling or the use of explosives or involved artificial islands and installations. Consent could also be withheld if the researching State or organization sent inaccurate information or had outstanding obligations to the coastal State from a prior research project.

A new article, 248, concerning research by international organizations, provided that when an organization of which a coastal State was a member wanted to do research in that State's economic zone or on its continental shelf, the State would be deemed to have authorized the project if it had approved the project when the organization decided to undertake it or if it was willing to participate.

Article 249, specifying the duty of the would-be researcher to provide information to the coastal State, required a description of the project to be sent to the State at least six months before the project got under way.

Article 250, on the duty of the researcher to comply with certain conditions such as full access for coastal State scientists to the data obtained, contained a new paragraph stating that the article was without prejudice to the conditions established by the laws and regulations of the coastal State for the granting of consent where the coastal State, notwithstanding the provisions of article 247, nevertheless granted its consent to the project in question.

Article 253, concerning implied consent, said that research might proceed once six months had elapsed after the researcher provided information to the coastal State about the project, unless within four months of the receipt of such information the coastal State had informed the researcher that it was withholding its consent because the information was manifestly faulty, that more information was required or that outstanding obligations existed with respect to a previous research project.

The coastal State, under article 254, would have the right to require the cessation of any such research if it was not being conducted in accordance with the information initially communicated or if the researcher failed to comply with the rights of the coastal State with regard to the project.

Article 256, on measures to facilitate research, said that, for the purpose of giving effect to international agreements, coastal States were to adopt reasonable and uniformly applied rules, regulations and administrative procedures applicable to States and organizations wishing to conduct research in the economic zone or on the continental shelf.

Article 265, on the settlement of disputes, provided for the use of the regular settlement procedures of the Convention in regard to disputes over research, except that a coastal State would not be obliged to submit to such settlement a dispute arising out of the exercise of its right or discretion to grant or withhold consent for a research project, or a dispute over its decision to terminate a project. This article ran parallel to article 296 of Part XV on the settlement of disputes.

Part XIV. Development and transfer of marine technology

Four sections—general provisions, international co-operation, regional marine scientific and technological centres, and co-operation among international organizations—contained 12 articles (267 to 278) on development and transfer of marine technology.

Article 274 called for States to co-operate actively with competent international organizations, as well as with the International Sea-Bed Authority, for the transfer of marine technology to developing States.

In article 275, on the objectives of the Authority with respect to the transfer of technology, an addition to the text made it clear that the functions of the Authority in relation to the transfer of technology concerned the exploration of the Area and the exploitation of its resources. Three subparagraphs on the work of the Authority in that sphere provided that assistance should be rendered to all States, in particular developing States.

Part XV. Settlement of disputes

In Part XV of the composite text (articles 279 to 297), concerning settlement procedures and machinery for settling law-of-the-sea disputes (former Part IV), article 281 set forth the obligation of States parties to proceed expeditiously to exchange views when a dispute arose between them so as to settle the dispute through negotiations in good faith or other peaceful means.

A new paragraph in article 287 specified that if a State had not made a declaration accepting in advance one of the alternative means to settle a specific type of dispute, it would be deemed to have accepted arbitration. Where the parties, in their declarations, had not accepted the same procedure for the settlement of a dispute, it was to be referred to arbitration.

Article 288, concerning the competence of various tribunals to deal with disputes, provided that the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber of the Law of the Sea Tribunal, along with an arbitral tribunal, would have jurisdiction over any of the kinds of sea-bed disputes listed in the dispute settlement provisions of the part of the Convention dealing with sea-bed issues. A new paragraph in article 287—the article giving States a choice of procedure for settling disputes—provided that their declaration of choice was not to affect or be affected by their obligation to accept the jurisdiction of the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber.

Changes were also made in article 292, which provided for a judicial mechanism to ensure the prompt release of foreign vessels detained by a coastal State. Whereas the earlier text covered the failure of a coastal State to release promptly a vessel or its crew on posting a bond, the new text covered also the neglect or refusal to do so. A question of release from detention might be brought before any court or tribunal agreed upon by the parties; if there was no such agreement within 10 days from the time of detention, it might be brought before any court or tribunal accepted by the detaining State in its declaration on a choice of tribunal, or before the Law of the Sea Tribunal. The article permitted the authorities of the detaining State to release the vessel or its crew at any time.

A new article, 294, provided in effect that remedies available before national tribunals of a State must be exhausted as required by international law before there could be resort to an international tribunal.

Additional provisions were inserted in article 296, which specified the kinds of disputes the Convention did not oblige States to submit to compulsory settlement as well as other circumstances under which these settlement procedures did not apply. Two new procedural pre-conditions would be applied. First, disputes relating to the exercise by a coastal State of sovereign rights would be subject to compulsory settlement procedures only after the tribunal concerned was satisfied that the party submitting the dispute had established prima facie that the claim was well founded; only then would the other party be called on to respond.

A second condition was that the tribunal should not entertain any application which in its opinion constituted an abuse of legal process or was frivolous or vexatious. It should immediately notify the other party that the dispute had been submitted, and that party would be entitled to raise objections to having the court entertain the application.

Two more new paragraphs applied these two conditions to disputes about marine scientific research and the living resources of the sea. They also prohibited calling into question a coastal State's discretion to grant consent with regard to research by others in the economic zone or on the continental shelf, any decision it might take to stop foreign research activity in that area, and any exercise of its discretion in regard to the conservation and use of the living resources of its economic zone. The text added that the court or tribunal was not to substitute its discretion for that of the coastal State. Any dispute excluded by these provisions might be submitted to binding settlement only by agreement of the parties.

Several changes were also made in article 297, which listed three categories of disputes which a State party to the Convention would not be obliged, at its option, to submit to the dispute settlement machinery.

First, in stating as the former text did that a State could exclude from compulsory settlement under the Convention a dispute over sea boundary limits, it would require the State taking that position to accept a regional or other third-party procedure entailing a binding decision. A new element in the current text was the proviso that such procedure or decision was to exclude the determination of any claim to sovereignty or other rights with respect to continental or insular land territory.

Also, in excluding disputes concerning military activities, the new text excluded certain law enforcement activities as well.

Third, disputes being dealt with by the United Nations Security Council were to be excluded unless the Security Council decided to remove the matter from its agenda or called upon the parties to settle it by the means provided for in the Convention.

Another paragraph added to this article provided that when a dispute was pending before a tribunal, the fact that a State changed its declaration regarding its acceptance of a dispute procedure would not affect the pending proceedings unless the parties agreed to it.

ANNEXES ON DISPUTE SETTLEMENT

Four annexes (IV to VII) set out the details of proposed settlement procedures. Annex IV on conciliation provided for the creation of a five-member conciliation commission; a statute for the Law of the Sea Tribunal was set out in annex V and general arbitration procedures were described in annex VI. Annex VII detailed special arbitration procedures for disputes relating to fisheries, protection and preservation of the marine environment, marine scientific research and navigation.

There were no changes in annex IV except in article 4, which provided that the conciliation commission was to decide its own procedure unless the parties otherwise agreed.

Annex V set forth the statute for the proposed Law of the Sea Tribunal in 42 articles arranged in five sections: organization of the Tribunal; competence of the Tribunal; procedure; Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber; and amendment procedure. Among the changes were one in article 14, which provided for a quorum of 11 (rather than 9) members of the 21-judge Tribunal; another, in article 16, would authorize the Tribunal to form special chambers as it deemed necessary for dealing with particular categories of disputes, in place of the earlier provision which would have obliged the Tribunal to form specific chambers for specified periods.

The expenses of the Tribunal would be borne by the States parties to the Convention and by the Sea-Bed Authority, according to article 20.

By article 27, both the Tribunal and its Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber would have the power to prescribe provisional measures before handing down a final decision on a dispute. Such measures might be adopted at the request of any party to the dispute.

A new section—section 4—of the Tribunal's statute dealt with the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber and specified the various powers and functions of the Chamber as distinguished from those of the Tribunal as a whole. This Chamber, according to article 37, would be composed of 11 members, selected by the Assembly of the Authority for three-year terms from among the members of the Tribunal. The Assembly would be required to assure representation of the principal legal systems of the world and equitable geographical distribution in the Chamber. Vacancies would be filled by the Tribunal, subject to Assembly approval.

By article 38, the Chamber would be open to States parties to the Convention, and, unlike the Tribunal itself, would be open to the Authority and to corporations and nationals of States parties. It would apply the rules, regulations and procedures adopted by the Assembly or the Council, as well as the terms of contracts for sea-bed activities (article 39). Its judgements would be enforceable in the territories of States parties in the same manner as judgements or orders of the highest court of the State where enforcement was sought (article 40). As to procedure, article 41 stated that the provisions of the Tribunal's statute not incompatible with this section on the Chamber would apply to the Chamber.

The only substantive change in annex VI, which concerned arbitration, was the addition of a final article (13) stating that the provisions of the annex would apply mutatis mutandis to any dispute involving entities other than States parties.

Finally, the only substantive change in annex VII, which contained five articles on special arbitration procedure, was the addition of vessel source pollution to the navigation category, rather than to the pollution category, of disputes that would be handled by special arbitral tribunals.

Part XVI. Final clauses

Part XVI of the composite text (articles 298 to 303), containing the final clauses of the Convention, appeared for the first time in a negotiating text. These clauses had not yet been debated.

Article 298 stated that the Convention was subject to ratification and that the instruments of ratification were to be deposited with the Secretary-General. According to article 299, the Convention would remain open for accession by any State.

Article 300, when completed, was to indicate how many ratifications by States would be needed to bring the Convention into force.

Article 301 stated that the annexes formed an integral part of the Convention. According to article 302, the authentic original texts of the Convention, in six languages, would be deposited with the Secretary-General.

Finally, article 303 was to specify the date on which the Convention was to be signed at Caracas, Venezuela.

Transitional provision

At the end of the text appeared an unnumbered provision carried over from the previous text, stating that the rights recognized or established by the Convention to the resources of a dependent territory or one under foreign domination were to be vested in the inhabitants, and that the foreign administering or occupying power must not exercise, profit or benefit from or infringe such rights.

Decisions of the General Assembly on the Conference on the Law of the Sea

On 20 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/194 concerning the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. By that resolution the Assembly noted a letter of 29 September 1977 from the President of the Conference to the President of the General Assembly regarding the decisions reached at the sixth session of the Conference. It approved the convening of the seventh session at Geneva from 28 March to 12 May 1978, with a possible extension to 19 May if the Conference so decided, and empowered the Conference, if the progress of its work warranted, to decide at that stage to hold further meetings under arrangements to be determined in consultation with the Secretary-General.

The Assembly also authorized the Secretary-General to make available appropriate facilities as well as those necessary for informal consultations between sessions among States participating in the Conference.

Resolution 32/194 was adopted by the Assembly by consensus. It was sponsored by Canada, the German Democratic Republic, Papua New Guinea, the United Republic of Cameroon and Venezuela.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 3067 (XXVIII) of 16 November 1973, 3334 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3483 (XXX) of 12 December 1975 and 31/63 of 10 December 1976,

Noting the letter dated 29 September 1977 from the President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea to the President of the General Assembly regarding the decisions reached at the sixth session of the Conference, held in New York from 23 May to 15 July 1977,

Having considered the decision of the Conference, as conveyed in the letter from its President, that its seventh session should be convened at Geneva on 28 March 1978 for a period of seven weeks, with a possible extension to eight weeks should the Conference so decide,

Bearing in mind the request of the Conference, referred to in the letter from its President, that the Secretary-General should provide the appropriate facilities for private consultations by members of the Conference between the sixth and seventh sessions,

1. Approves the convening of the seventh session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea at Geneva for the period from 28 March to 12 May 1978, with a possible extension to 19 May should the Conference so decide, and empowers the Conference, if the progress of its work warrants, to decide at that stage to hold further meetings under arrangements to be determined in consultation with the Secretary-General;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to make available appropriate facilities to that end as well as the necessary facilities for informal consultations between sessions among delegations of States participating in the Conference.

Chapter IV

Questions concerning the uses of atomic energyThe effects of atomic radiation

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its twenty-sixth session in Vienna from 13 to 21 April 1977 and approved a report to the General Assembly in which it reviewed comprehensively the sources and effects of ionizing radiation.

In its report the Committee noted that, during the five years that had elapsed since the publication of the Committee's previous comprehensive report, a considerable amount of new information had become available, not only on the frequency with which certain harmful effects might be induced by ionizing radiation but also on the amounts of radiation exposure involved in various circumstances. It had become possible, therefore, to estimate with rather more confidence than previously the types and frequencies of detrimental effects resulting from human exposure to radiation. The major conclusions of the Committee's report are summarized below.

Carcinogenic effects of radiation. The Scientific Committee reported that it had become clear that the most important late somatic effect of low doses of radiation was the occasional induction of malignant diseases, as shown by their increased incidence in exposed populations. Extensive and careful studies of survivors of the atomic bombs in Hiroshima and Nagasaki, which had been conducted for over 30 years since exposure, still showed no excess in mortality rate from conditions other than malignant disease in those who were irradiated. The word "carcinogenic" was used to include the induction of all forms of malignancy—whether of leukaemia or of the focal types of cancer developing in the different body organs or tissues.

The report noted that experimental studies in animals were of great value in establishing the greater carcinogenic effect of alpha radiation or of neutrons than of other types of radiation, and in suggesting the relationship between the incidence of cancer and the radiation dose. For alpha radiation and for neutrons, which caused dense ionization along a path of short length in tissues, the frequency of cancer induction often appeared to be more strictly proportional to the size of the dose than in the case of other types of radiation. Studies in animals were also of value in assessing the significance of the rate at which a given dose was delivered.

According to the report, estimates of risk to man from radiation were derived from several surveys, conducted over extended time periods, on the frequency with which cancers of various types developed in certain irradiated human populations in excess of that observed in comparison populations which had not been similarly irradiated. The most important of these surveys was that of the atomic-bomb survivors at Hiroshima and Nagasaki, in which a large number of persons were closely examined with regard to both the development of malignant diseases and death from all diseases, including different types of malignant disease.

The report also noted that extensive information on lung cancer induction could be obtained in a number of countries from the increased mortality from this disease in uranium miners who inhaled radioactive gases in the course of their work. A number of other carcinogenic risk estimates were obtainable from studies made on groups of patients who had been irradiated, either in the course of frequently repeated diagnostic examinations or during treatment of their diseases by radiotherapy.

In general, it appeared that relatively high cancer induction rates applied to the breast in females and to the thyroid, although the majority of the induced thyroid cancers were curable. The induction rates for lung cancer and for leukaemia were somewhat lower, while those for other organs for which estimates were obtainable appeared to be lower still. Several sources of information indicated that the total risk for all fatal malignancies as an average for both sexes and all ages was likely to be about five times that for leukaemia alone, and that the corresponding risk for leukaemia was about 20 per million persons who had received a dose of 1 rad of X-rays and gamma radiation. The estimated risks for individual organs and tissues appeared consistent with the total, and indicated that no organ with a high induction rate was likely to have been omitted from these estimates.

It was necessary to emphasize, however, that such estimates were derived predominantly from observations following large doses. At low doses, akin to those received annually from natural sources, no direct information was available as to the level of induction of malignancies that might apply.

Radiation effects on pre-natal development. The Committee stated that experiments on animals showed that irradiation of the embryo or foetus might cause defects of a wide range of severity. Some were so profound that they caused death of the animal while still within the uterus; others caused structural changes recognizable at birth; and still others were manifested only after birth as functional deficiencies. It was also shown, the report continued, that the types of changes produced and the sensitivity to the induction of these effects differed considerably at different stages of pre-natal development.

The report acknowledged that while it was evident that radiation-induced malformations occurred in man, of types depending upon the stage of development at which the exposure occurred, there was little information indicating the likely frequency, particularly at low dose levels. In a previous report, the Committee had estimated a possible incidence of mental retardation, associated with small head size (microcephaly), in the region of 0.1 per cent for each rad of dose, for doses over 50 rad delivered at high dose rate. Recent data demonstrated an increased incidence of microcephaly and mental retardation as a function of dose at Nagasaki following exposures within three to 17 weeks to gestation. At Hiroshima, where the neutron component was appreciably higher, a comparable incidence was observed at lower doses. However, the report continued, various studies of the effects of embryonic exposure during radiological procedures, usually in the region of a few rad, failed to show a significantly increased incidence of malformations.

From experimental studies in animals it might be concluded that the developing embryo and foetus showed a pronounced sensitivity to the induction of malformations by radiation, particularly during the main phases of organogenesis, according to the Scientific Committee. The pattern of response in various species was so similar that man might not be expected to be an exception in this respect. However, as yet no satisfactory data were available for deriving reliable quantitative estimates of the risk from pre-natal human irradiation at comparable developmental stages, particularly at the low doses and dose rates. The Committee emphasized the importance of further studies on a number of special aspects of this subject.

Genetic effects of radiation. The Committee report stressed that in estimating the genetic risks of radiation, particularly for low doses, very little quantitative information was available from observations of the effects of human exposure. To a large extent, therefore, these estimates were based upon the effects observed in studies on animals, and particularly on the mouse, in which the genetic effects of radiation had been extensively investigated. In using such data, it must be assumed that the amounts of genetic damage induced by radiation under a given set of conditions was equal in mouse and human germ cells, and that physical and biological variables affected the magnitude of the damage in similar ways and to similar extents. In some instances these assumptions could be checked by data obtained in man or in other primates.

The Committee estimated that, in a million live-born children in the first generation of offspring of a population exposed to 1 rad at low dose rate during the generation, there would be 20 cases suffering from dominant or X-linked diseases, 38 with chromosomally determined diseases and five with diseases of complex aetiology, induced by the radiation. The total genetic damage expressed over all generations was estimated to be 185. The kinds of genetic damage discussed and the risk estimates derived did not take full account of the class of mutations leading to minor deleterious effects but which, by their large number, might impose a significant total genetic burden on the population.

Sources of human radiation exposures. The report pointed out that man had always been exposed to ionizing radiation from various natural sources. A distinguishing characteristic of this natural irradiation was that it involved the entire population of the world and it had been experienced at a relatively constant rate over a very long period of time. On the other hand, even the normal natural exposure varied substantially from place to place, as well as locally—for example, even within one building.

Exposure to natural radiation could be enhanced by human activities such as high-altitude flights, construction of buildings using materials of high radium content, reduction of the ventilation rate in homes, and boring deep wells into radon-rich water. Enhanced exposures to natural radiation, the Committee found were also variable, ranging from slight increases to those of considerable magnitude. The Committee also provided estimates of exposures involving medical uses of radiation, electric-power generation from nuclear fission, nuclear explosions and radiation-emitting consumer products.

The Committee's report dealt in detail with sources of human radiation exposure, assessing the resulting annual per capita doses for several organs and tissues. Most of the assessments were expressed as collective dose—the product of the number of people in the exposed population and their average dose. To take account of all radiation exposures caused by a given practice, the future dose contributions committed by the practice were added to obtain collective dose commitments.

The following table summarizes the collective dose commitments for different radiation sources discussed in the Committee's report, expressed in terms of the number of days of exposure of the world population to natural radiation which would cause the same commitment.

One-year exposure to natural sources	365.0
One year of commercial air travel	0.4
Use of one year's production of phosphate fertilizers at the current production rate	0.04
One-year global production of electric energy by coal-fired power plants at the current global installed capacity	0.02
One-year exposure to radiation-emitting consumer products	3.0
One-year production of nuclear power at the current global installed capacity	0.6
One year of nuclear explosions averaged over the period 1951-1976	30.0
One year's use of radiation in medical diagnosis	70.0

The highest man-made contribution to the global collective dose was found to be caused by the medical uses of radiation, and in particular by diagnostic X-ray procedures. It was considered to be important in many countries that facilities for the medical uses of radiation should be increased, and such increases would be associated with the increases in dose commitment in those countries. The Committee urged, however, that the exposure of patients involved in the course of radiological procedures should be kept to the minimum required for the medical purposes concerned.

The production of nuclear power, the Committee noted, was subject to national regulations, usually based on internationally agreed principles. It found that the global dose commitment corresponded to 0.6 days of natural radiation exposure for one year of energy production at the current installed capacity. Assuming that existing nuclear technology remained the same, one year of energy production at the projected nuclear installed capacity in the year 2000 would lead to a global dose commitment equivalent to about 15 days of natural radiation exposure.

The collective dose commitment from nuclear explosions carried out up to 1976 was found to be equivalent to about two years of natural radiation exposures, if the contribution from carbon-14 was not included. If this contribution was included, the collective dose commitment was twice as high. The contributions from atmospheric explosions since 1970—that is, after the period covered by the Committee's previous report—had increased the dose commitments from strontium-90 and caesium-137 in the northern hemisphere by about 2 per cent and in the southern hemisphere by about 6 per cent.

Decisions of the General Assembly

The General Assembly considered the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation later in the year. The Assembly commended the Scientific Committee for the valuable contribution it had made to the knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation. It requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordination activities, to increase knowledge of the levels and effects of radiation, and to review at its next session the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the 1978 Assembly session.

The Assembly also expressed its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations.

These decisions, among others, were embodied in resolution 32/6, adopted without vote by the General Assembly on 31 October 1977. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Special Political Committee, which, on 19 October, had approved the resolution without vote. The text was sponsored by Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, El Salvador, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, the Sudan, Sweden and the United Kingdom. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion in the Special Political Committee, Czechoslovakia praised the high scientific level of the Committee's report; it believed that the evaluation by the Scientific Committee of the global dose commitments of radiation from various sources would assist decision-making in both governmental and non-governmental bodies. Canada also commended the Committee's work, noting especially the comparisons made between exposure of populations to doses of radiation from different sources.

Australia cited the continuing need to monitor radioactive contamination from nuclear tests.

The USSR said the Committee had achieved positive results, which would help to improve the world situation, particularly in the matter of putting an end to nuclear-weapon tests. It agreed that there was need to study further the somatic and genetic impact on man of radiation in small doses, particularly with regard to artificial radiation resulting from production of nuclear energy, the use of radiation in medicine and nuclear-weapon tests.

The German Democratic Republic and the Byelorussian SSR called for preventive measures against the development and production of new weapons of mass destruction, such as the neutron bomb, and for the end of nuclear-weapon tests in the atmosphere. El Salvador and Iran were among others which criticized the continued production of nuclear weapons. In this connexion, the USSR called attention to the draft treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests which it had submitted to the General Assembly in 1975.¹

at the hazards of horizontal and vertical seepage of radioactive contamination from these underground nuclear explosions.

New Zealand noted that it was opposed to nuclear-weapon testing in all environments; it therefore felt concern about the possible environmental effects of underground testing in the Pacific atolls. New Zealand would be interested to know what studies France had undertaken concerning the environmental effects of its underground testing at Mururoa Atoll.

France, in reply, referred to comments in the provisional reports of the Scientific Committee in recent years to the effect that, since the cessation of French nuclear tests in the atmosphere three years previously, short-lived radioactive products, such as iodine-131, had practically disappeared and long-lived products, such as strontium-90 and caesium-137, had also steadily decreased in the area.

Resolution 32/6, as recommended by Special Political Committee, A/32/309, adopted without vote by Assembly on 31 October 1977, meeting 53.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 31/10 of 8 November 1976,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need for compiling information about atomic radiation and for analysing its effects on man and his environment,

1. Notes with appreciation the comprehensive report submitted by the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation;

2. Commends the Scientific Committee for the valuable contribution it has made since its inception to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordination activities, to increase knowledge of the levels and effects of atomic radiation from all sources;

4. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations;

5. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

6. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing for the effective conduct of the Scientific Committee's work and for the dissemination of its report and scientific annexes to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

7. Requests the Scientific Committee to review at its twenty-seventh session the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

8. Requests all Member States and the United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue to supply to the Scientific Committee further data relevant to its work with a view to facilitating the preparation by the Committee of its report.

Annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) was presented to the General Assembly at its thirty-second (1977) session by the Director-General of IAEA, Sigvard Eklund, on 4 November 1977.

The Director-General noted that in 1977 the Agency celebrated its twentieth anniversary, and gave a brief account of the major achievements of the Agency from its inception to date. He referred to the International Conference on Nuclear Power and its Fuel Cycle, held at Salzburg, Austria, in May 1977, in continuance of the four major United Nations conferences on the peaceful uses of atomic energy held in 1955, 1958, 1964 and 1971. This Conference reviewed the entire spectrum of nuclear power and its fuel cycle, as well as the attendant problems of safety and proliferation. It confirmed that nuclear power was a necessary and irreplaceable source of energy supply for both the short and the long term. It also made clear that nuclear power would continue to be a significant energy component in most developed countries, where electricity produced by nuclear energy had reached some 10 to 20 per cent of the total and where commercial use of nuclear power was considered practically routine.

According to papers presented, nuclear programmes from developing countries demonstrated a high degree of maturity. Having taken full account of alternative energy sources available, they nevertheless concluded that for large-scale electricity production in countries lacking indigenous coal, nuclear power and imported oil were the only available choices, with the exception of solar energy or biomass for small-scale local energy needs. It was obvious, the Director-General said, that suppliers and recipients of nuclear technology must work together to give nuclear power a meaningful role in the developing countries, whose share of the world's total nuclear capacity would increase to about 9 per cent by 1985.

Turning to the major trends in the work of IAEA, the Director-General said that the Agency's technical programmes were increasingly concerned with the economic and technical aspects of power reactors and with helping member States to train the necessary personnel. The Agency's main work in this field was the manpower development programme, with on-the-job training and a series of extended training courses.

The second trend noted by the Director-General was the increased emphasis on the Agency's responsibilities in nuclear safety and safeguards, non-proliferation and related questions. The Agency's safeguards work was greatly expanded, extending to all phases of the nuclear fuel cycle, plutonium management and physical protection. Since 1974, the Nuclear Safety Standards Programme had developed safety guides, codes and standards covering all aspects of the design, construction and operation of nuclear power plants.

With regard to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,² the Director-General said that there were 102 parties to this Treaty, and that almost all of the main industrial non-nuclear-weapon States had submitted the totality of their nuclear programmes to IAEA safeguards. Even among States not parties to the Treaty, nearly all significant nuclear plants outside the nuclear-weapon States were currently under Agency safeguards, but with some significant exceptions.

With regard to safeguards, the IAEA Board of Governors had reviewed for the first time in depth the effectiveness of safeguards on the basis of a special safeguards implementation report covering 1976 operations. The safeguards report showed the need for better national systems for accounting and control of fissile material and for new measures to improve safeguards in certain types of nuclear power reactors and other fuel cycle facilities.

The Director-General stated that there was practically no way of stopping the spread of nuclear technology among nations. The question was not how to stop nuclear development, but how to make the best use of it and how to apply effective safeguards to that end.

The Director-General referred to specific activities, such as the continuing studies on multinational fuel cycle centres and on an international regime for plutonium storage. He said it was up to member States to take initiatives for setting up such centres.

The Agency would soon complete its study on plutonium management. Both this concept and that of multinational fuel cycle centres, as well as others intended to strengthen the non-proliferation regime, would be studied within the framework of the International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation programme.

² See Y.U.N., 1968, pp. 16-19, resolution 2373 (XXII) of 12 June 1968, annexing text of Treaty.

The Director-General informed the Assembly that the ad hoc committee set up by the Agency's Board of Governors had submitted a comprehensive report on the technical, safety, economic and legal aspects of the uses of nuclear explosives for peaceful purposes.

The Agency was also preparing an international convention for the protection of nuclear materials against forcible seizure, sabotage and other acts of violence.

The Director-General said nuclear power must be seen against a background of limited oil and gas reserves which would certainly decrease and might be exhausted before the end of the century. All energy sources currently available must be used, and new sources, such as solar energy, breeder reactors and fusion, must be developed as quickly as possible.

Among other things, the Agency had continued to provide a means for the exchange of information on the development of a new generation of reactors, such as the fast breeder and the high-temperature reactor, particularly on the potential of the latter for the use of thorium as fuel. Assistance was also given to promoting and coordinating research on fusion, to facilitating the introduction and safe use of nuclear power in developing countries, and to finding and developing new uranium deposits.

The Director-General pointed out that many other IAEA activities were designed to help developing countries. While direct contributions and United Nations Development Programme assistance had expanded resources in recent years, the rate of growth must increase in the future.

Following the Director-General's statement, the General Assembly, on 8 December 1977, adopted two resolutions relating to the IAEA report and the peaceful use of nuclear energy for economic and social development.

By the first resolution, 32/49, the Assembly inter alia took note of the IAEA report and expressed satisfaction with the Agency's work in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, in developing internationally acceptable standards for the safe operation of nuclear facilities, including transportation and storage of nuclear materials, and in maintaining a system of international safeguards as an integral part of this activity.

The Assembly noted with satisfaction the Agency's work in the realization of the provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to protect mankind from the perils resulting from the misuse of nuclear energy.

The Assembly requested IAEA to strengthen technical assistance to developing countries, commended its role in the survey of uranium resources and production, urged prompt completion of the convention on the physical protection of nuclear materials, and noted with appreciation a study on regional fuel cycle centres published by IAEA. The Assembly invited the Agency to give due consideration to the request of developing countries for an increase in their representation on the Board of Governors.

Resolution 32/49, sponsored by Czechoslovakia, the Federal Republic of Germany and Malaysia, was adopted by consensus.

Italy submitted an amendment to the provision on increasing representation of developing countries on the Board of Governors; this would have called for consideration to be given to increasing the designated seats also in order to facilitate the full contribution of all countries more advanced in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy to the fulfilment of the tasks of the Agency.

Italy did not press for a vote on its amendment, stating that it was confident that considerations therein would be taken into account by the Board of Governors of IAEA.

An amendment by Algeria, Nigeria, Pakistan and Yugoslavia, proposing alternative wording for the provision on increased representation on the Board of Governors, was withdrawn by the sponsors.

Belgium and France, although they did not oppose the consensus on the resolution, were of the opinion that the General Assembly should not intervene in the decision-making process of IAEA, as they felt was suggested by the provision on increasing the membership of the Board of Governors.

By the second resolution, 32/50—on the peaceful use of nuclear energy for economic and social development—the Assembly declared, among other things, that all States had the right to develop their programme for the peaceful use of nuclear technology and that all States should have access to and be free to acquire technology, equipment and material for the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Also, the Assembly declared that international co-operation in this field should be conducted on the basis of agreed and appropriate international safeguards applied through IAEA on a non-discriminatory basis in order effectively to prevent proliferation of nuclear weapons. The Assembly requested States to support the efforts of IAEA in this field, and invited them to consider convening an international conference or conferences aimed at promoting international co-operation in the peaceful use of nuclear energy.

Resolution 32/50, sponsored by 11 States—Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Iraq, Malaysia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Romania and Yugoslavia—was also adopted by consensus.

The Netherlands expressed reservations with regard to the prematurity of convening an international conference or conferences aimed at promoting international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. It stated that with the large-scale development of nuclear industry throughout the world and the prospect of the development of commercial reprocessing and consequent security problems, the international community was faced with the question of whether the nuclear industry should be further expanded and spread without restraints as to the technologies involved, or whether alternatives should first be sought which were more proliferation-resistant. However, the Netherlands was willing to participate in the consensus. Similar reservations with regard to a proposed conference were expressed by Canada, which said that the International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation programme should be taken into consideration in planning conferences.

Sweden also supported the consensus on the resolution; however, it expressed reservations on the following grounds. The resolution failed to take into sufficient account the difficult considerations of safety and protection of the environment in relation to all aspects of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, as well as efforts to prevent nuclear-weapons proliferation, which were directly linked to arms control and to nuclear disarmament. Sweden also stated that it attached great importance to efforts to increase the availability of energy, especially to developing countries, and believed that the industrialized countries had a responsibility to take the lead in over-all energy conservation and in developing better alternative energy sources.

The United States, while also supporting the consensus, stressed the twin goals of ensuring access to peaceful nuclear technology and minimizing the dangers of nuclear proliferation, and believed that these could be reconciled by such efforts as the International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation.

During the Assembly's discussion, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iran, Japan, Malaysia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, the USSR and Yugoslavia suggested that highest priority should be given to the Agency's work in connexion with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and asserted that more States should be encouraged to accede to the Treaty. The German Democratic Republic, Romania and Yugoslavia stressed the vital importance of disarmament measures.

Austria, Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, India, Japan and Romania, among others, commented favourably on the Agency's co-operation in the International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation programme.

Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR commended the Agency's work on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, particularly with reference to the non-proliferation Treaty, but Malaysia was of the opinion that not enough was being done with regard to the transfer of nuclear technology from the developed to the developing countries.

In connexion with technical assistance and the transfer of technology, Yugoslavia expressed concern about the decrease of resources allocated to technical assistance; voluntary contributions were below the agreed target. Yugoslavia suggested the creation of an international pool for the nuclear fuel cycle, with contributions of material, financial and technological resources, as well as some types of fuels and natural nuclear resources such as uranium in order to enable developing countries to become equal partners. Other States which called for the strengthening of technical assistance activities and safeguards were Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, India, Iran, Japan, Nigeria, Pakistan, Romania, the USSR and Venezuela.

The General Assembly,
Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1976,

Recalling that 1977 marks the twentieth anniversary of the founding of the International Atomic Energy Agency, and expressing satisfaction with the productive and valuable work in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and in developing internationally acceptable standards for the safe operation of nuclear facilities, including transportation and storage of nuclear materials, and in maintaining a system of international safeguards as an integral part of this activity,

Bearing in mind the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance by the International Atomic Energy Agency in order to enlarge the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development,

Noting the decision adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its twenty-first session by which the General Conference requested the Board of Governors to give further consideration to the representation of the areas of Africa, the Middle East and South Asia on the Board of Governors and to submit its observations on this matter to the General Conference at its twenty-second session,

Noting with satisfaction the positive inputs of the International Atomic Energy Agency in the realization of the provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to protect mankind from the perils resulting from the misuse of nuclear energy,

Aware that the statement of the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 4 November 1977 provides additional information on the main developments in the Agency's activities, in particular the results of the major International Conference on Nuclear Power and Its Fuel Cycle held by the Agency at Salzburg, Austria, from 2 to 13 May 1977 to assess the overall role played by nuclear energy as an alternative energy source presently available,

Considering the important role played by the International Atomic Energy Agency in the field of nuclear energy, which is at present the main alternative source of energy available, and the increased demand which will be placed upon the Agency in the future,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;
2. Urges all States to support the endeavours of the International Atomic Energy Agency in the fulfilment, in accordance with its statute, of its tasks in the various fields of the peaceful uses of atomic energy, in the development and application of safeguards and in assisting Member States, particularly developing countries, in planning and realizing programmes in the field of energy and various applications of nuclear techniques;
3. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to strengthen activities in the field of technical assistance to developing countries, particularly by expanding its training programmes and increasing further the target level of voluntary contributions;
4. Commends the International Atomic Energy Agency on the role it played in the survey of uranium resources, production and demand and urges that this survey be kept under constant review;
5. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the international community in facilitating the elaboration of a convention on the physical protection of nuclear materials and urges prompt completion of the work on this convention;
6. Also notes with appreciation the study on regional nuclear fuel cycle centres recently published by the International Atomic Energy Agency, the intention of the Agency to continue its research in this field, especially with regard to economic and non-proliferation implications, and the decision of the Board of Governors to keep the matter of peaceful nuclear explosions under review, seeking the services of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, as required;
7. Invites the International Atomic Energy Agency to give due consideration to the request of developing countries for an increase in their representation on the Board of Governors in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical distribution;
8. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director-

General of the International Atomic Energy Agency the records of the thirty-second session of the General Assembly relating to the Agency's activities.

A/32/L.15. Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Iraq, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Yugoslavia: draft resolution.

A/32/L.15/Rev.1 and Rev.1/Add.1. Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Iraq, Malaysia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Romania, Yugoslavia: revised draft resolution.

Resolution 32/50, as proposed by 11 powers, A/32/L.15/Rev.1 and Rev.1/Add.1, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 8 December 1977, meeting 97.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1976,

Recognizing the need to strengthen the role of the International Atomic Energy Agency in the promotion of the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and to augment its resources for technical assistance to the developing countries in this field,

Bearing in mind the need to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons,

Having in mind the significance of nuclear energy for economic development and, in particular, its important role in accelerating the development of developing countries,

Convinced that the transfer of technology for the peaceful use of nuclear energy for development can greatly contribute to progress in general,

Taking into consideration the legitimate right of States to develop or acquire technology for the peaceful use of nuclear energy in order to accelerate their economic development,

Affirming the responsibility of States that are advanced in the nuclear field to promote the legitimate nuclear energy needs of the developing countries by participating in the fullest possible transfer of nuclear equipment, materials and technology under agreed and appropriate international safeguards applied through the International Atomic Energy Agency on a non-discriminatory basis in order to prevent effectively proliferation of nuclear weapons,

Recalling the obligation assumed under international agreements and contracts by a number of such States to facilitate the fullest possible exchange of equipment, materials and scientific and technological information for the peaceful use of nuclear energy,

Convinced that the objectives of the full utilization of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons can be promoted by the establishment of universally acceptable principles for international co-operation in the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

1. Declares that:

(a) The use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes is of great importance for the economic and social development of many countries;

(b) All States have the right, in accordance with the principle of sovereign equality, to develop their programme for the peaceful use of nuclear technology for economic and social development, in conformity with their priorities, interests and needs;

(c) All States, without discrimination, should have access to and should be free to acquire technology, equipment and materials for the peaceful use of nuclear energy;

(d) International co-operation in the field covered by the present resolution should be under agreed and appropriate international safeguards applied through the International Atomic Energy Agency on a non-discriminatory basis in order to prevent effectively proliferation of nuclear weapons;

2. Invites all States as well as the international organizations concerned to respect and observe the principles set forth in the present resolution;

3. Requests States to strengthen the existing programmes of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the development of the peaceful use of nuclear energy in the developing countries, the acquisition of installations, equipment and nuclear materials and information, as well as the training of personnel in the peaceful use of nuclear energy;

4. Invites all States to consider convening, at an appropriate stage, an international conference or conferences, under the auspices of the United Nations system, aimed at promoting international co-operation in the peaceful use of nuclear energy in accordance with the objectives of the present resolution;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to invite all States to communicate to him their views, observations and suggestions on such a conference and requests him to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Chapter V

Strengthening of international securityImplementation of the Declaration on Strengthening International Security

During 1977, the implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security¹ was again the subject of a number of communications from Member States, and the General Assembly adopted two resolutions directed towards that objective. In addition, the Secretary-General issued two reports on this subject.

Communications and reports of the Secretary-General

Pursuant to General Assembly requests of 14 December 1976, the Secretary-General, on 8 February 1977, addressed notes to the Governments of States Members of the United Nations and members of specialized agencies asking for their views on ways by which greater respect for the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States could be assured² and asking for relevant information and suggestions regarding the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security.³

His reports to the General Assembly set forth:

— the substantive parts of the replies he had received from the following Members on non-interference in the internal affairs of States: Barbados, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, Guyana, Hungary, Iraq, Madagascar, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Romania, Seychelles, Surinam, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United States, Venezuela and Yugoslavia; and

— the substantive parts of the replies he had received from the following States on implementation of the Declaration: Barbados, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iraq, Kuwait, Malta, Mongolia, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Seychelles, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia.

Member States also addressed a number of other communications to the Secretary-General on this subject during 1977, most of them transmitting texts for issuance as United Nations documents. The texts consisted primarily of communiqués of official international meetings. They included also joint communiqués issued during the visits of the President of the Council of State of Cuba in March 1977 to Angola, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique and Somalia.

In a letter of 5 May 1977, Oman referred to the joint Cuba/Democratic Yemen communique and expressed the belief that falsifications which, it said, characterized the communique constituted an overt intervention in the internal affairs of Oman.

Communications received during the year also included:

— the final communique of the Conference of Foreign Ministers of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi, India, from 7 to 11 April 1977, and a resolution adopted by the Conference on a Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities;

— two joint communiqués issued at the conclusion of talks between the Secretary-General of the General People's Congress of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Chief of the Government of the Republic of Panama during the latter's visit to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya from 12 to 16 April, and between the Libyan leader and the President of the Supreme Council of the Revolution and President of the Republic of Burundi during the latter's visit to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya from 30 August to 2 September 1977;

— a statement on the Panama Canal question made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Panama on 15 June 1977, at a plenary meeting of the General Assembly of the Organization of American States;

— a report of the mission of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to witness the plebiscite on the Panama Canal treaties held in Panama on 23 October 1977 and the Act of the extraordinary meeting of the Electoral Tribunal concerning the final count of the votes in that plebiscite;

— a four-power joint communique issued on 22 March 1977 following the conclusion of the Quadripartite Summit Conference at Taiz, Yemen, between the Chairman of the Presidential Council of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, the President of the Somali Democratic Republic, the President of the Democratic Republic of the Sudan and the President of the Supreme Command Council and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of the Yemen Arab Republic; and

— a joint communique issued at the conclusion of talks between the First Secretary of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party and the General Secretary of the National Front United Political Organization of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, during the latter's visit to Hungary between 18 and 21 April 1977.

In a letter of 27 June 1977, Oman drew attention to the Hungary/Democratic Yemen joint communique, stating that the Omani Government rejected the contents of the communique, in particular certain paragraphs which, it said, constituted interference in the internal affairs of Oman. On 21 December 1977, Oman transmitted a joint communique issued on the occasion of the State visit of His Imperial Majesty, Shahanshah Aryamehr of Iran, to the Sultanate of Oman from 5 to 8 December.

Three communications transmitted declarations of friendship and co-operation. Two Declarations on the Deepening of Friendship and the Development of Fraternal Co-operation were forwarded on 18 and 22 July 1977: one between the Socialist Unity Party of Germany and the Romanian Communist Party, signed in Berlin on 10 June 1977 by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany and Chairman of the Council of State of the German Democratic Republic and the General Secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and President of the Socialist Republic of Romania; and another between the Romanian Communist Party and the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia, signed at Bucharest on 24 June 1977 by the same Romanian leader and by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia and President of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic.

A joint letter of 8 November 1977 transmitted a Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance between the German Democratic Republic and the People's Republic of Bulgaria, signed on 14 September 1977 in Sofia by the General Secretary of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany and Chairman of the Council of State of the German Democratic Republic and the First Secretary of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party and President of the State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria.

The remaining three communications were of a different nature. One was a note verbale dated 2 August 1977 from the USSR expressing views in the areas of foreign policy, international detente, disarmament, the Middle East, Cyprus, and African situations, as well as the strengthening of international security.

The two other communications concerned the situation in the Middle East. By a letter dated 6 December 1977, the representative of Israel drew attention to extracts from an interview conducted on a United States television network programme on 4 December 1977 with the President of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. By a letter of 20 December, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, referring to Israel's letter, placed on record his country's over-all point of view concerning the questions of Palestine and of international terrorism.

The General Assembly at its 1977 session took up the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security. The item was allocated to the First Committee, which considered the issue at 11 meetings held between 29 November and 9 December 1977.

By a decision of the First Committee, the debate on this question was combined with those on agenda items dealing with the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations (see the following subchapter) and with the deepening and consolidation of international detente and prevention of the danger of nuclear war (see the following chapter).

Following the debate, two draft resolutions were approved and subsequently adopted by the General Assembly.

Resolution 32/153 dealt with non-interference in the internal affairs of States. By this resolution, the General Assembly urged all States to abide by the provisions of its 1976 resolution⁴ which denounced any form of interference in the internal or external affairs of other States and condemned all forms and techniques of coercion, subversion and defamation aimed at disrupting the political, social or economic order of other States. By other operative provisions, the Assembly: called once again upon all States to undertake necessary measures to prevent any hostile act or activity taking place within their territory and directed against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of another State; considered that a declaration on non-interference in the internal affairs of States would be an important contribution to the further elaboration of the principles for strengthening equitable co-operation and friendly relations among States, based on sovereign equality and mutual respect; and requested the Secretary-General to invite all Member States once again to express their views on the question.

This text was approved by the First Committee on 8 December 1977 by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 88 to 0, with 13 abstentions. The Assembly adopted it on 19 December by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 14 abstentions. The sponsors were Algeria, Angola, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Botswana, the Congo, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guinea, Guyana, India, Iraq, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

By resolution 32/154, the General Assembly called upon all States to adhere fully to, and implement consistently, the purposes and principles of the United Nations and all the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and to contribute effectively to the increasing peace-keeping and peace-making role of the United Nations.

By the preambular paragraphs, the Assembly, inter alia: noted with satisfaction current efforts to strengthen international peace and security, to realize arms limitation and disarmament measures, to universalize the relaxation of tension and to promote peaceful co-operation; noted with concern the continuing existence of crises and hotbeds of tension, the continuation and intensification of the arms race, acts of aggression, foreign occupation, threat or use of force, alien domination, foreign interference, colonialism, neo-colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid—in particular the danger arising from South Africa's attempts to acquire nuclear weapons; and recognized the need for objective dissemination of information about developments in various fields of all countries and the role and responsibility of the mass media in this respect.

By the operative provisions, the Assembly: reiterated with emphasis its recommendation that the Security Council should consider appropriate steps towards carrying out effectively, as provided in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security; reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples to achieve self-determination and independence and urged States to increase their support and solidarity with them and their national liberation movements and undertake urgent and effective measures for the speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁵ and of the other resolutions of the United Nations on the final elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid; and called for the extension of the process of relaxation of tension to all regions of the world and the implementation of the principle of non-use of force or the threat thereof in order to help bring about just and lasting solutions to international problems with the participation of all States, so that peace and security would be based on effective respect for the sovereignty and independence of all States and the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own destiny freely and without outside interference, coercion or pressure.

Further, the Assembly reaffirmed that any measure or pressure directed against any State while exercising its sovereign right freely to dispose of its natural resources constituted a flagrant violation of the right of self-determination and the principle of non-intervention which, if pursued, would constitute a threat to international peace and security. It urged effective measures to end the arms race and to promote disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, the creation of zones of peace and co-operation, the withdrawal of foreign military bases and the achievement of tangible progress towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control and the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in this regard.

The Assembly expressed the hope that further positive results would be achieved at the Belgrade meeting by participants of the 1975 Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe concerning the full implementation of the Final Act of that Conference, which would be conducive also to the strengthening of world security, bearing in mind the close interrelation of the security of Europe to the security of all other regions of the world. In this respect, the Assembly supported the conversion of the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and co-operation in the interests of peace and security. Finally, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on this subject and asked him to submit another in 1978.

The resolution was sponsored in the First Committee by Algeria, the Congo, Cyprus, Guyana, ⁵ See Y.U.N., 1960, pp. 49-50, resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing text of Declaration.

India, Iraq, Madagascar, Mali, Nigeria, Sri Lanka, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The First Committee approved the text on 9 December 1977, by a recorded vote of 94 to 1, with 19 abstentions. The Assembly adopted it on 19 December by a recorded vote of 118 to 2, with 19 abstentions.

Most Members which spoke on the subject expressed their support of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security; on the other hand, almost all of them also stressed that it had not been fully implemented and that much further action was needed to ensure peace and security in the world.

One of the aspects of this subject on which Members expressed their views was the question of non-interference in the internal affairs of States.

Sri Lanka considered that this issue had special importance in the era of decolonization. Instead of the blatant and direct control of colonialism, covert and subtle forms of domination were playing a crucial role. Interference in internal affairs was becoming more important, complex and difficult to control because of the increasing interdependence of the world. Sri Lanka reminded Members that the participants in the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, meeting in August 1976 in Colombo, had attached so much importance to the question that they had for the first time devoted a special chapter of the summit declaration to this item. The USSR similarly considered non-interference a cardinal principle in international relations.

In support of the Declaration, the Ukrainian SSR said that the strengthening of international security had always been and remained the most important task of the United Nations. Every year since the Declaration's adoption there had been a growing development of the process of the strengthening of international security. The task was to ensure implementation of its requirements in their full scope.

In a similar vein, Yugoslavia called for a review of the implementation of the Declaration with submission by Member Governments of their views on the progress made.

Several other States pointed out that the Declaration had not been fully implemented and that further action was needed to ensure peace and security. Romania, for instance, cautioned that the new course towards the relaxation of tension was still fragile and needed strengthening. The Ivory Coast commented that no declaration, however beautiful, could satisfy, let alone reassure, the developing countries in a rapacious world where personal and selfish interests determined the positions taken.

A number of speakers were critical of the failure to implement the Declaration. The United Arab Emirates, for example, stated that the resolution adopting the Declaration had not been implemented in practice because of the lack of political will of Member States. Bangladesh said that the thrust towards strengthening security through the collective will of Member States had never generated the necessary momentum, and that it was in the developing States collectively constituting the third world that the regulatory principles underlined in the Declaration were apparent more in their breach than in the fulfilment of their obligations.

In Albania's view, this Assembly agenda item was but a hoax, an attempt to use the work of international organizations for political and propaganda purposes, and to camouflage attempts to provoke conflicts and disorder.

Several States stressed the importance for international security they attached to the successful conclusion of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, and to the current European review conference in Belgrade. Malta, however, felt that, despite the high-sounding declarations of intent contained in the Mediterranean chapter of the Helsinki Final Act, no visible progress could be recorded in that region, least of all in security.

Many speakers cited specific threats to international security existing in the world. Most frequently mentioned were the Middle East, southern Africa and Cyprus. Liberia considered that priority should be accorded the African continent as an area to implement the Declaration, as it was the only continent on which war was a daily growing threat to world peace.

Several States proposed specific actions they considered necessary to ensure implementation of the Declaration's provisions. One of the most frequently mentioned of these actions was arms control and disarmament. The Congo, the German Democratic Republic, Iran, Kenya and Senegal were among those which considered the arms race the most serious of all problems relating to peace and security.

Other specific action proposed to implement the Declaration included renunciation of the threat or use of force, eradication of colonialism, imperialism and racial discrimination, integration of developing countries into the decision-making process, deepening ties of human communication and exchanges in various fields. According to Burundi, the withdrawal of foreign troops and the establishment of zones of peace—particularly nuclear-weapon-free zones—were conditions sine qua non for peace and security. Bangladesh and Chile added the progressive development and codification of international law to the priority areas. Kenya considered that the mass media could play a constructive role in enhancing the cause of peace through objective dissemination of information.

A number of speakers, particularly those representing the developing countries, stressed the need for reform of international economic relations. For example, Nepal said that any effort towards strengthening international security would be meaningless unless the ever-widening gap between the developed and developing countries was closed and the deteriorating position of the least developed countries was reversed. Neither political nor military peace was possible, said Liberia, without economic detente.

Some speakers also emphasized the need to strengthen and reform the role of the United Nations in world events. Kenya, for example, spoke of the importance of evolving effective measures for enforcing the decisions of the Organization, especially those concerning the all-important question of security and peace. It suggested that implementation of the Declaration could not succeed without the involvement of the good offices of the Secretary-General. Cyprus, Nepal and Niger pointed out that the Security Council must play a central role in the attainment and maintenance of international peace and security. Trinidad and Tobago added that it must function effectively and its decisions must be respected scrupulously; the injudicious use of the veto minimized its effectiveness. Tunisia said threats to international security stemmed principally from weakening respect for the Charter as well as from the ineffectiveness of the Security Council as the organ responsible for maintaining peace and security.

Despite widespread expressions of support for the Declaration and for greater efforts towards its implementation, some speakers expressed doubts about the usefulness of an annual debate on the question; these included Turkey, the United States and the members of the European Community. Chile believed the debate had lost its original meaning and a different approach should be considered. On the other hand, Bangladesh, Cuba and the USSR stressed the usefulness of yearly consideration, pointing out that it helped in measuring the achievements and failures of the world community in its search for peace and security. The Byelorussian SSR and Mongolia thought the debate made it possible to focus world attention on the most vital problem of the time—strengthening international peace and security.

Concern about the usefulness of an annual resolution on the Declaration was among the reasons given for reservations when States explained their votes. Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine members of the European Community, said the unanimity with which the Declaration had been adopted had ensured its authority, but that unanimity had been gradually weakened by yearly repetitive discussion. For reasons explained in previous years on similar resolutions the nine members would abstain. Turkey had a similar view.

The United States said that, in so far as the resolution simply restated or misleadingly paraphrased the Charter, it contributed little to strengthening international security. Moreover, it contained elements with which the United States did not agree, such as the reference to the role of the mass media in the strengthening of international security and, among others, the reference to the Mediterranean zone of peace, which interfered with collective security arrangements. The United States was opposed to the resolution. Israel considered the resolution remarkable for glaring omissions; for example, nowhere were States urged to initiate dialogues or enter into direct negotiations.

Austria and Sweden said they could not support new elements introduced in the resolution, particularly those intending to regulate the role and responsibility of the mass media and the dissemination of information. Both States also had reservations on the operative paragraph referring to the Belgrade meeting and supporting the conversion of the Mediterranean into a zone of peace. Despite its positive vote, Finland said it also found those paragraphs at variance with its position and not wholly acceptable.

Albania said it would not participate in the vote; the spirit and decisions of the Helsinki Conference referred to, in its view, could have no positive effect in the Mediterranean or in other areas.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/91 of 14 December 1976 on non-interference in the internal affairs of States,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General containing the views of Member States on ways by which greater respect for the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States can be assured,

1. Urges all States to abide by the provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 31/91, which denounce any form of interference in the internal or external affairs of other States and condemn all forms and techniques of coercion, subversion and defamation aimed at disrupting the political, social or economic order of other States;

2. Calls once again upon all States, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, to undertake necessary measures in order to prevent any hostile act or activity taking place within their territory and being directed against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of another State;

3. Considers that a declaration on non-interference in the internal affairs of States would be an important contribution to the further elaboration of the principles for strengthening equitable co-operation and friendly relations among States, based on sovereign equality and mutual respect;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to invite all Member States once again to express their views on the question of non-interference in the internal affairs of States, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,"

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly concerning the implementation of the Declaration,

Noting with satisfaction current efforts towards the strengthening of international peace and security, the realization of arms limitation and disarmament measures, the universalization of the process of relaxation of tension and the promotion of peaceful co-operation in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the close link existing between the strengthening of international security, disarmament, decolonization and development, and stressing the need for concerted action to achieve progress in those areas and also the importance of the early implementation of the decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions on the establishment of the new international economic order,

Noting with profound concern the continuing existence of crises and hotbeds of tension in various regions endangering international peace and security, the continuation of intensification of the arms race as well as acts of aggression, foreign occupation, the threat or use of force, alien domination, foreign interference and the existence of colonialism, neo-colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid, which remain the main obstacles to the strengthening of peace and security, and in particular the danger arising from the attempts of South Africa to acquire nuclear weapons,

Recognizing the need for objective dissemination of information about developments in the political, social, economic, cultural and other fields of all countries and the role and responsibility of the mass media in this respect, thus contributing to the growth of trust and friendly relations among States,

1. Calls upon all States to adhere fully to, and implement consistently, the purposes and principles of the United Nations and all the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and to contribute effectively to the increasing peace-keeping and peace-making role of the United Nations;

2. Reiterates with emphasis its recommendation that the Security Council should consider appropriate steps towards carrying out effectively, as provided in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial and alien domination to achieve self-determination and independence and urges States to increase their support and solidarity with them and their national liberation movements and to undertake urgent and effective measures for the speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and of the other resolutions of the United Nations on the final elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid;

4. Calls for the extension of the process of relaxation of tensions, which is still limited, to all regions of the world and the implementation of the principle of non-use of force or the threat thereof in order to help bring about just and lasting solutions to international problems with the participation of all States so that peace and security will be based on effective respect for the sovereignty and independence of all States and the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own destiny freely and without outside interference, coercion or pressure;

5. Reaffirms that any measure or pressure directed against any State while exercising its sovereign right freely to dispose of its natural resources constitutes a flagrant violation of the right of self-determination of peoples and the principle of non-intervention, as set forth in the Charter, which, if pursued, would constitute a threat to international peace and security;

6. Urges effective measures to put an end to the arms race and to promote disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, the creation of zones of peace and co-operation, the withdrawal of foreign military bases and the achievement of tangible progress towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control and the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in this regard;

7. Expresses the hope that further positive results will be achieved at the meeting at Belgrade of representatives of States participating in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe concerning the full implementation of the Final Act of the Conference, which will be conducive also to the strengthening of world security, bearing in mind the close interrelation of the security of Europe to the security of the Mediterranean, the Middle East and all other regions of the world, and supports the conversion of the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and co-operation in the interests of peace and security;

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, requests him to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session a report on the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security."

Proposed treaty on the non-use of force in international relations

For the second year the General Assembly took up the question of the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations. Both the First Committee and the Sixth (Legal) Committee discussed the issue and the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the subject recommended to it by the latter Committee. Also, a number of communications and a report by the Secretary-General on the proposed treaty were before the Assembly.

Communications and report of the Secretary-General

Pursuant to a General Assembly request of 8 November 1976,⁶ the Secretary-General requested Member States to provide their views and suggestions on a proposal for the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations.

On 12 September 1977, the Secretary-General issued a report, with a subsequent addendum, in which he set forth the substantive parts of the replies he had received from the following States: Australia, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mongolia, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Senegal, Seychelles, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Upper Volta.

Nine of the replies from Governments were issued separately. These were letters transmitted in May and June 1977 from the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, and comments of the Government of Mongolia. They emphasized the necessity and importance of supporting the proposal of the USSR for the conclusion of such a treaty—a draft text of which it had submitted to the General Assembly at its 1976 session.⁷ They stated variously that:

— such a treaty would have a fruitful impact on the solution of basic international problems and, in particular, would help to create favourable conditions for the cessation of the arms race and the implementation of effective disarmament measures (the USSR);

— the draft treaty submitted by the USSR represented comprehensive background material for arriving at a final text (Czechoslovakia);

— the treaty would constitute an important measure for eliminating the threat of war and aggression, would strengthen the guarantees of security for all States, and would permit intensification of the process of detente in international relations (the Byelorussian SSR);

— the signing and ratification of such a treaty by a considerable number of States would serve to make renunciation of the use or threat of force a more clearly defined legal obligation of States (Hungary);

— the elaboration and adoption of this major project had become practical because of profound changes that had taken place in the world and developments in international relations, and the urgency of such action was becoming ever more obvious (the German Democratic Republic);

— the General Assembly at its 1977 session would be fully in a position to proceed with the proposed world treaty (Bulgaria);

— the proposed treaty would create additional guarantees for the observation of United Nations principles and would contribute to the advancement of the cause of disarmament, the economic development of States, the reorganization of the international economic order and the increase of assistance to developing countries (Poland);

— such a treaty would permit the further intensification of the process of international detente, the deepening of mutual trust and understanding among peoples and the strengthening of peace and universal security (Mongolia); and

— it was essential to take practical action without delay to elaborate and conclude such a treaty and thus transform the principle of the non-use of force into a treaty obligation (the Ukrainian SSR).

Of the other Governments which replied to the Secretary-General's note, some supported the USSR's initiative, others expressed qualifications or proposed additions and still others conveyed a negative or doubtful reaction. Those in the last-named group—which included Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Portugal, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States—pointed out that the principle of the non-use of force in international relations was already included among the essential purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and had been reaffirmed on several occasions in texts adopted by the General Assembly. Most of these Governments felt therefore that it would serve no useful purpose to adopt a world treaty on the subject, which would merely reiterate obligations that all Member States were bound to accept under the Charter. With specific reference to the draft treaty submitted by the USSR at the Assembly's 1976 session, several of these Governments expressed the view that by restating selectively some of the provisions of the Charter the proposed draft involved the risk of detracting from the clarity of the Charter and hence undermining its authoritative nature. Others, including Barbados, Kuwait, Pakistan and the Syrian Arab Republic, were concerned that the draft did not provide for an enforcement mechanism.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly decided that the proposed treaty on the non-use of force in international relations should be discussed by both the First and Sixth Committees.

Some 20 States spoke on this subject in the First Committee debate. With the exception of Albania, they supported or did not oppose the proposed treaty and expressed the hope that its conclusion would bring numerous benefits to the world, particularly that it would contribute to strengthening international peace and security.

The USSR, for instance, said that the conclusion of the treaty would constitute an important step forward in contemporary international relations. It would also have a profound and beneficent influence on the solution of fundamental international problems, create favourable conditions for the cessation of the arms race, further ease international tension and promote concentration on solving the problems of economic and social development.

In the view of Czechoslovakia, the treaty would accelerate the process of detente, significantly strengthen the security of the newly independent and developing States, favourably influence efforts by non-self-governing territories to gain freedom and independence, and strengthen the position and international prestige of the United Nations. Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Poland had similar views.

Some speakers emphasized that the conclusion of such a treaty should not and would not diminish the right of every country to self-defence. For example, Pakistan said that the prohibition on the use of force was to be without prejudice to the inherent right of self-defence as laid down in the United Nations Charter. Panama and Rwanda also said that the legitimacy of self-defence and of the struggle of people under colonialism or racial domination for the restoration of freedom, independence and dignity should be unambiguously reconfirmed. Cyprus, Nepal and Pakistan were among those which suggested that such a treaty could be effective only if it provided safeguards and enforcement action against the use of force and for securing compliance with United Nations decisions. Cuba said the treaty should prohibit not only armed force but also other ways of using force, such as economic blockades and efforts to overthrow Governments. Senegal stressed that such an instrument could not be dissociated from the task of establishing justice and order among States.

A few speakers opposed the criticism of the treaty proposal. For example, Mongolia said it found incomprehensible the position taken by certain States that the conclusion of a treaty on the non-use of force was an unnecessary duplication and a selective reiteration of a principle already established in the United Nations Charter.

Nepal and Tunisia did not consider that a further elaboration of the principles of Article 2 of the Charter⁸ would in any way undermine the importance of the Charter.

Bangladesh, the Congo and the Syrian Arab Republic were among others commenting that reaffirmation of Charter principles in the proposed treaty would serve to strengthen those principles.

Albania opposed the treaty proposal, saying that the agenda item was a hoax and an attempt to use the work of international organizations for political and propaganda purposes.

On 7 December 1977, the First Committee—in view of the fact that the Sixth Committee, which was also discussing the agenda item, was expected to approve an appropriate decision for submission to the General Assembly—concluded its consideration of the question without putting forward recommendations.

On 19 December, by decision 32/442 adopted without vote, the Assembly took note of the First Committee's decision.

During the debate in the Sixth Committee, held between 6 and 12 December, treaty supporters, including Benin, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stressed variously that the conclusion of a treaty on the principle of the non-use of force would be a natural extension of United Nations efforts to strengthen international peace and security, would ensure compliance with that repeatedly violated principle, would be instrumental in curbing the arms race and promoting detente, would lessen the danger of the outbreak of a new world war and wars of aggression, would strengthen Charter provisions prohibiting the use of force in international relations and providing for the rights of individual and collective self-defence and of the struggle for freedom and independence, would strengthen the authority of the United Nations, would enhance the codification and progressive development of international law, would strengthen confidence among nations, would help to consolidate the advances made in international relations in recent years, and release substantial resources for the economic and social development of developing countries.

The United Nations Charter, Cuba added, had already provided the basis for numerous international treaties and agreements in various fields; these instruments had not diminished the legal force of Charter provisions. Codification of the principle of the non-use of force, recognized as a rule of jus cogens, in a broadly based multilateral treaty could help to promote by legal means a more effective application of that principle.

Other Members—including Canada, France, Italy, Japan, Mexico, the United Kingdom and the United States—while agreeing with the importance of the principle of the non-use of force in international relations and with the desirability of strict compliance with it by all States, questioned the need for a new treaty on the matter. An effort to secure or strengthen the obligation already set forth in Article 2, paragraph 4, of the United Nations Charter⁹ by reiterating it in an ad hoc instrument merely indicated uncertainty as to whether the Article was still fully in force, Mexico said; Italy felt it might give the mistaken impression that the authority of the Charter had been so weakened that it was found necessary to renew a commitment already made. France cautioned that there was a risk that the treaty might upset the harmonious balance achieved in the Charter by taking the dangerous step of isolating a single provision and according it special treatment. Canada added that a highly selective use in the treaty of Charter principles might weaken the authority of the obligations imposed by the Charter; the treaty as proposed did not mention the principle of the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence nor the role which the Security Council should play in case of a threat to peace.

Problems concerning the extent of obligations under the Charter and the proposed treaty would also arise if the legal obligations arising from the proposed treaty were not identical with those in the Charter regarding the non-use of force, or if all United Nations Member States did not become parties to the treaty, Japan and others maintained. Any effort to ensure genuine observance of the principle of the non-use of force, Italy stressed, should ensure that disputes were settled in accordance with international law and justice. A system of peaceful settlement of disputes, in Mexico's view, should not consist merely of an enumeration of means at the disposal of States which were envisaged in the Charter, but it should be compulsory so that no dispute would remain unresolved.

The United States said there was not a lack of understanding of the scope and meaning of the prohibition of the use of force laid down in Article 2 (4), but disputes were left to fester so long that they simply exploded into violence. The weak point of the Charter system was thus the peaceful settlement of disputes.

China said it firmly opposed the USSR's proposal. The treaty as proposed would have results directly contrary to the avowed aim, for the superpowers would inevitably make use of such an agreement to camouflage their arms expansion and war preparations, lull the vigilance of the peoples of the world and sap their fighting spirit.

Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands maintained that it was pointless to prepare a treaty on the non-use of force when the Charter contained mandatory provisions on the matter. The Ivory Coast wondered if a simple declaration would not suffice.

A number of other Members—including Brazil, Cyprus, El Salvador, Greece, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nepal, the Niger, Nigeria, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Spain—suggested specific points which they felt any new treaty should take into account.

Among these considerations were: definition of the threat or use of force, including its expansion to include types of force other than military; measures for dealing with all types of aggression, pressure or coercion, and for ensuring compliance with those measures; prohibition of war propaganda; acceleration of disarmament and arms control; non-interference in the domestic affairs of States; reaffirmation of the just struggle of peoples for self-determination and independence; strengthening the legitimate right of self-defence; prohibition of occupation of the territory of another State and the right to liberate land occupied as a result of acts of aggression; prohibition of recourse to force to appropriate or exploit natural resources; world-wide co-operation to reduce economic disparities between States; settlement of differences by peaceful means; United Nations machinery for the maintenance of peace; and provision of machinery for enforcement of the treaty's obligations.

Following the debate, the Sixth Committee considered a resolution sponsored by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, Iraq, Mongolia, Morocco, Poland, Romania, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Venezuela which would have the General Assembly establish a 35-member Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations.

The Sixth Committee approved the text on 12 December 1977, by roll call at the request of the USSR, by 85 votes to 4, with 24 abstentions.

The General Assembly, by a recorded vote of 111 to 4, with 27 abstentions, adopted it on 19 December as resolution 32/150.

The new Special Committee was to be appointed by the Assembly President on the basis of equitable geographical distribution and representing the principal legal systems of the world. It was instructed to consider proposals and suggestions submitted by any State, as well as the Assembly's debates on this item, with the goal of drafting a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations as well as the peaceful settlement of disputes, or such other recommendations as the Committee deemed appropriate.

The General Assembly,

Considering that, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the need for universal and effective application of this principle in international relations and for assistance by the United Nations in this endeavour,

Recalling its resolution 31/9 of 8 November 1976, in which it invited Member States to examine further the draft World Treaty on the Non-Use of Force in International Relations submitted by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics as well as other proposals and statements made during the consideration of this item,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General which contains views and suggestions of Member States on the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations,

1. Decides to establish a Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations, composed of thirty-five Member States to be appointed by the President of the General Assembly on the basis of equitable geographical distribution and representing the principal legal systems of the world;

2. Instructs the Special Committee to consider proposals and suggestions submitted by any State, bearing in mind the views expressed during the debates on this item at the thirty-first and thirty-second sessions of the General Assembly, with the goal of drafting a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations as well as the peaceful settlement of disputes or such other recommendations as the Committee deems appropriate;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the necessary facilities and services, including the preparation of summary records of the meetings of the Committee;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session an item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations."

A/32/500. Appointment of members of Special Committee on Enhancing Effectiveness of Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations. Note by Secretary-General.

Chapter VI

Deepening and consolidation of international detente and prevention of the danger of nuclear war

At its thirty-second (1977) session, the General Assembly, at the request of the USSR, included in its agenda a new item entitled "Deepening and consolidation of international detente and prevention of the danger of nuclear war."

The Assembly's First Committee discussed the item at 15 meetings held between 17 October and 8 December 1977; several of the discussions were held in conjunction with two other questions, namely, the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations and the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security (see preceding chapter).

In an explanatory memorandum accompanying its request, the USSR noted that current developments in the world had demonstrated that the process of international detente and the expansion of beneficial co-operation among States had determined to an increasing extent the pattern of international relations. The success achieved in the sphere of detente had met with the approval of broad segments of world public opinion and had been reflected in many United Nations decisions. In recent years, substantial steps had been taken to curb the nuclear arms race and achieve disarmament, which had been a useful contribution to solving the problem of preventing another war. While noting such success in easing international tension, it had to be realized that it was only a beginning in the process of restructuring international relations. There was no reasonable alternative to the policy of international detente: it was a prerequisite for the solution of problems of the utmost importance to all mankind. It was necessary for all States—and first and foremost all nuclear-weapon States—to build their relations in such a manner as to reduce and ultimately eliminate the danger of a nuclear war. The USSR believed that the United Nations, whose main objective was to ensure international peace and security, should make a new and substantial contribution to international detente and the prevention of the danger of such a war.

A draft declaration on the deepening and consolidation of international detente and a draft resolution on the prevention of the danger of nuclear war accompanied the explanatory memorandum.

By the USSR draft declaration, the General Assembly would urge all States to continue and intensify their efforts to deepen and consolidate international detente and, to that end, among other things: to promote actively the implementation of multilateral treaties and agreements as well as United Nations declarations and resolutions which served the interests of strengthening international security and developing peaceful relations; to take decisive initiatives towards curbing the stockpiling of arms and implementing disarmament measures with the ultimate goal of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control; to facilitate the speedy, peaceful settlement of conflict situations and prevent their recurrence; to pursue a policy of non-interference in each other's internal affairs; to settle disputes by peaceful means; to ensure that the development of detente was not impeded by bloc policies; to maintain a favourable atmosphere in relations among States while taking into account other States' legitimate interests; to measure State action against the requirements of detente; to facilitate the liberation of all colonial countries and peoples and the elimination of racist regimes, national oppression and inequality in international relations; to develop equitable and mutually beneficial economic relations, with due regard to the interests of developing countries, and co-operate for fuller use of natural resources and advancement of knowledge; to foster mutual understanding among peoples and promote friendship and mutual trust among them; and to encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Assembly would also express the hope that States would join efforts in the process of detente, taking into account the peculiarities and diversity of their views.

By the operative provisions of the USSR draft resolution on the prevention of the danger of nuclear war, the Assembly would urge all States, among other things: to act in such a way as to avert situations which could cause a dangerous aggravation of relations between them and to avoid military confrontations which could lead to a nuclear war; and to observe strictly the principle of the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations and enter into negotiations to that effect.

The Assembly would also urge the nuclear-weapon States always to exercise restraint in their mutual relations, show a willingness to negotiate and settle differences by peaceful means, and do all in their power to prevent situations which could exacerbate international tension. Nuclear-weapon States also would be urged to negotiate to conclude agreements on withdrawal of ships carrying nuclear weapons and on other measures to limit the nuclear arms race in certain ocean areas, and to conclude agreements to diminish and avert the danger of nuclear war and prevent accidental or unauthorized use of nuclear weapons.

All States would be urged to: accede to—and, pending accession, act as if they had acceded to—treaties on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests, on non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and on nuclear emplacement; prevent nuclear proliferation while ensuring access to nuclear energy for peaceful purposes; refrain from impeding nuclear limitation talks, while States participating in such talks should bring them to the earliest conclusion and reach agreement on the renunciation of the development of new systems; and negotiate to adopt additional measures to prevent nuclear war, prohibit nuclear tests, reduce nuclear weapons and promote nuclear disarmament.

Non-nuclear-weapon States would be urged to establish nuclear-weapon-free zones, and nuclear States to respect those zones.

During the debate on the subject in the Assembly's First Committee, the representative of the USSR noted that in the past few years there had been a turn away from explosive confrontation towards mutually beneficial co-operation, and from the cold war to the peaceful coexistence of States with different social systems. Significant progress had been achieved with regard to the most important task facing States, namely, the prevention of the danger of another world war. The improvement of the international atmosphere had resulted in expanded bilateral and multilateral co-operation among States in economic and other fields and that, in turn, had contributed to the successful solution of political problems. The world was increasingly coming to realize that detente was the only reasonable way of developing international relations.

However, the process of detente, if it was to be successful, required that a greater number of States be involved and that new initiatives be advanced. At the current stage of world development, it was necessary that the policy of international detente be given fresh impetus. The United Nations, as the most universal and influential international forum, should provide such an impetus by spelling out the content of the policy, of detente and by determining the priority spheres of application of peaceful efforts by States. Detente would be best served by taking steps towards ending the arms race and achieving disarmament, speeding peaceful settlement of conflict situations, lessening military confrontation, completing the process of decolonization, eliminating racism and apartheid, and restructuring international economic relations on an equitable and democratic basis.

The majority of the States which spoke welcomed the USSR initiative and emphasized that international detente should be further strengthened and extended to all regions of the world.

Benin, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iraq, Mongolia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR were among those which supported the draft declaration and the draft resolution submitted by the USSR and stressed the need to enlarge the role of the United Nations in promoting detente.

Cuba, Ethiopia, Hungary, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Ukrainian SSR endorsed the timeliness of the Soviet initiative.

The representative of the Byelorussian SSR said his country considered detente to be the central problem of international relations: it implied exclusion of force from relations between countries, prevention of another world war and creation of conditions enabling the world's peoples to face tomorrow without fear. He added that detente benefited all nations by limiting the lawless acts of imperialist and reactionary forces and dealt powerful blows to colonial policies; it also contributed to bringing closer the restructuring of international relations on a just and democratic basis.

The German Democratic Republic believed that the USSR's proposals were acceptable to most States as they reflected fundamental obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations and other bilateral and multilateral instruments.

The representative of Poland said that international detente, shaped by world developments and experiences of the past several years, was an historic necessity, occurring through a basic change in the world relationship of forces and becoming the dominant trend. International peace and security, a paramount objective of the Organization, closely coincided with the main imperatives of the current era: to deepen and consolidate detente, making it irreversibly rooted in the texture of international relations and bringing about effective arms reduction and disarmament measures.

According to Czechoslovakia, detente was a complex and sensitive process which had to be continuously revived. It believed that normalization of relations among the nuclear powers which were permanent members of the Security Council was of particular importance for international detente.

Cuba and Hungary said the course of detente had advanced first in Europe, culminating in the signing in 1975 of the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. To make the process stable and irreversible it must be extended beyond the political sphere to the military field.

Democratic Yemen, India, the Ivory Coast, Saudi Arabia and Sri Lanka also emphasized the need to extend detente to the military sphere.

The representative of Saudi Arabia indicated that a United Nations declaration on international detente could only be effective if it was based on mutual trust, particularly between the major powers. In order to build such trust, it was important that the nuclear powers disclose to the United Nations their arsenal of weapons and then declare that they would not be the first to use it.

Sri Lanka said that the world had been obsessed all these years with nuclear war and that had distracted its attention from the real problem: general and complete disarmament. Therefore, what should be expected from those in possession of nuclear weapons was their total and categorical renunciation of the use of such weapons, their manufacture, the freezing of stockpiles of nuclear weapons, and, finally, an agreed programme for the dismantling of the apparatus of nuclear terror. Declarations were no substitute for action; the possibility of effective preventive action lay mainly with the two super-powers.

India noted that the vast majority of countries in the world were developing countries not members of military alliances. They had on several occasions expressed their views on detente, disarmament, foreign military bases, interference in internal affairs, sovereignty over natural resources, foreign occupation, economic equality and respect for human rights; those views should be reflected in any declaration on detente. India considered that nuclear disarmament should be given the highest priority, because it was through nuclear disarmament that nuclear war could be prevented. While it had on several occasions declared it would not manufacture nuclear weapons, it would also not be party to any treaty which was discriminatory and unequal and which was unable to prevent vertical proliferation (i.e. the further development and stockpiling) of nuclear weapons.

Detente, according to India, Iran, Kenya and Nigeria, should cover much more than the current condition of relations between the two superpowers. It was equally important that relations between other countries be improved independently of super-power relations.

Romania viewed the new movement towards detente as still fragile. A true policy of peace and security, it said, could be promoted only by resolute disarmament measures, the withdrawal of troops and bases located on the territory of other States, bridging the gap between rich and poor countries, and the eradication of colonial domination and racial discrimination.

The representative of Yugoslavia also believed that the process of relaxation of international tension was not stable, nor had it been extended to all regions and issues. At the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, from 16 to 19 August 1976, the participants had expressed support for the results achieved by the policy of relaxation of tension but had also pointed to the shortcomings and limited scope of detente. The forces of imperialism, neo-colonialism, racism and other forms of foreign domination continued to try to prevent the emancipation of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, the Palestinians and others.

The representatives of Algeria, Benin, Cyprus, Ethiopia, India, Iran, Kenya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Rwanda, and others from developing States, believed the USSR proposal deserved careful examination and expressed the view that the strengthening of detente would lessen the risk of war. They called for the elimination of nuclear weapons and considered that nuclear powers had a special responsibility in this regard. Several agreed with the view, expressed by Ethiopia, that the group known as non-aligned States had been the driving force which had encouraged the evolution and the implementation of detente in recent times, and that detente should be viewed within the over-all framework of the cardinal principles of non-alignment, which included, among other matters, respect for the Charter of the United Nations.

A number of States felt that detente should have a direct bearing on such hotbeds of conflict as Cyprus, the Middle East and southern Africa and on the policy of apartheid. Algeria warned that there could be no detente as long as hotbeds of tension existed, and as long as the independence and territorial integrity of countries were at stake. Thus detente went hand in hand with disarmament and establishment of a new international economic order.

Finland also endorsed the idea of an inter-connexion between detente, development and disarmament. Rwanda believed that tensions arising from injustice in economic relations were no less explosive or dangerous than situations of conflict born of political differences.

The representatives of Cyprus, Greece and the Syrian Arab Republic submitted that measures should be taken by all States to ensure respect and implementation of Security Council and General Assembly resolutions. Cyprus said it was the duty of the Security Council, and particularly of the big powers, to take the measures necessary for the implementation of Council resolutions so that detente would become meaningfully effective. Detente was not an end in itself, Cyprus added, but the means to an end. The goal to be attained was effective co-operation between nations in order to give to the United Nations the means required under the Charter for establishing international legal order, security and peace in the world.

The Security Council could only discharge its responsibilities in an atmosphere of detente, Jordan observed. Greece and Kenya submitted that the USSR draft resolution should also include prevention of the danger of conventional war and that it should be placed clearly within the context of the Charter.

Some spokesmen, including those of Chile, Mauritius and Nigeria, suggested that the term "detente" and the concept underlying it should be more clearly defined and that the views of developing countries on this matter should be carefully studied. Nigeria said the term was defined differently; those differences could give rise to misunderstanding regarding the nature and content of the process of detente. The General Assembly was the best forum for adopting a generally acceptable definition.

The representative of Malta did not see a positive change as likely to be brought about by theoretical dissertation on the value of detente. In his view, despite high-sounding declarations of intent contained in the Mediterranean chapter of the Helsinki Final Act, which was supposed to set the seal of permanent co-operation and improved security in the region, no visible progress had been made. If detente was to have any meaning, then the policy of automatic and perpetual military confrontation had to be discarded.

The representative of the United States said that real progress had been made in recent years in escaping from the dialogue of suspicion and hostility which had marked the cold war. To the extent that East-West negotiations on arms control had broadened to include additional issues of urgent concern to the world community, detente had become increasingly relevant to the entire United Nations membership. If the United States and the USSR were able to avoid a military build-up in some areas, all the world would benefit. If the current negotiations by the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States resulted in a comprehensive ban on all nuclear explosive tests acceptable to all, the danger of nuclear war would visibly recede.

The principles of the Charter, he continued, demanded more than avoidance of conflict; they demanded unity to meet the obligations created by a common fate and growing interdependence. Dedication to principle could be a catalyst for peace, but without precise efforts to carry principles into practice, tension could be exacerbated.

The United States, he said, was committed to a constructive pursuit of detente which would translate the principles of the Charter into real progress, first of all in four broad areas: political settlement of regional disputes, arms control and disarmament, North-South economic relations and human rights. An essential element of detente, the representative continued, must be a new effort to isolate East-West competition from regional and internal conflicts in Africa in order to develop African solutions to African problems.

France also proposed specific steps to promote world-wide detente. States, it said, should: take decisive initiatives towards disarmament; act so that the spirit of detente would not be thwarted by considerations of bloc policy; respect human rights and fundamental freedoms; and take into consideration the legitimate interests and points of view of other States, an idea to be especially applied to problems between North and South in the range of economic questions.

The representative of China rejected the validity of the item before the Committee as a fraud of sham detente and sham disarmament, stating that the treaties and agreements concluded between the United States and the USSR did not prevent the development of nuclear weapons by those two super-powers. As their arms expansion continued to escalate, their rivalry for world hegemony and war preparations were growing ever more intense. The item before the Assembly was in fact an appeal in the wrong direction, that is, the super-powers, which possessed huge quantities of nuclear and conventional weapons, were appealing to all the non-nuclear States to implement the so-called disarmament measures.

The representative of Albania said that detente was no more than a slogan invented by the two super-powers to misguide peoples; behind all their talk about peace and detente, they were disguising their aggressive designs and war preparations.

While the item was debated before the First Committee, Iran, at the request of the Committee Chairman, conducted informal consultations with a view to producing a text acceptable to the majority of the Committee's Members. As a result of those consultations, Iran introduced a draft Declaration on the Deepening and Consolidation of International Detente.

The USSR supported the Iranian text and stated that it would not press for a vote on its draft declaration and on its draft resolution dealing with prevention of the danger of nuclear war, having noted that some Members wished to consider the resolution more thoroughly.

On 8 December 1977, the First Committee approved the Iranian text by consensus, and the General Assembly adopted the Declaration by consensus on 19 December, as resolution 32/155.

Recognizing that confrontation and rivalry was incompatible with the relaxation of international tension—in which there was a growing interest and to which confidence-building measures could contribute—and that ever-increasing harmony and co-operation among nations was called for, Member States of the United Nations, by the Declaration, expressed their interest in working towards the removal of all sources of tension and friction and creating conditions whereby all States could employ all their resources in improving living conditions without fear of coercion, threat or use of force.

Member States also expressed their conviction: that progress in arms control and disarmament negotiations and elimination of the threat of war were of great importance for the continued relaxation of tension and development of friendly relations; that more effort was urgently needed to extend this trend to encompass all regions and facilitate the settlement of international problems by peaceful means; that just and equitable economic relations were important conditions for genuine and lasting peace; and that the elimination of aggression, colonialism, foreign occupation and interference in the internal affairs of other States were necessary, as were ensurance of respect for human rights and the eradication of racism, apartheid and other forms of injustice.

Member States also reaffirmed their commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter, their resolve to ensure conditions in which all could live and prosper in peace with justice, and the indivisibility of peace and security in the world.

Guided by the need further to reduce tension, promote better relations and strengthen and widen detente, States Members declared their determination to:

(1) adhere firmly to and promote the implementation of the Charter provisions and other universally accepted principles and declarations aimed at enhancing world peace and development of friendly and co-operative relations among States;

(2) consider taking new and meaningful steps in bilateral and multilateral arms control negotiations forums aimed at achieving cessation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear arms race, at an early stage, with the ultimate objective of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control;

(3) facilitate the peaceful and speedy settlement of outstanding problems and strive to remove both causes and effects of international tension;

(4) strengthen the role of the United Nations as a primary instrument in maintaining international peace and security;

(5) refrain from the threat or use of force, and abide by the principles of sovereign equality, territorial integrity, inviolability of frontiers, inadmissibility of acquisition or occupation of territory by force, peaceful settlement of disputes, non-intervention and non-interference in internal affairs, respect for human rights and the right to choose internal systems freely and to develop external relations in the way they deemed best;

(6) ensure free exercise of the right of peoples under colonial domination to self-determination and to promote majority rule;

(7) work to establish just and balanced economic relations among States and narrow the gap between developed and developing countries;

(8) promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(9) foster mutual understanding and trust among peoples by facilitating cultural exchanges, freer movement and contacts; and

(10) further develop relations and co-operation among States in conformity with the Charter.

Albania and China dissociated themselves from the consensus. Belgium (on behalf of the nine members of the European Community), Canada, Japan, Somalia, Sweden and the United States had reservations regarding certain parts of the Declaration.

Belgium said that the States of the Community could not accept the interpretation that appeared to underlie references to economic relations. Among other reservations, they would also have preferred a reference to carrying out obligations or changes in accordance with international law and a more complete reference to respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Canada expressed general reservations on adopting declarations of intent, while Japan felt that the concept of detente was not sufficiently clear, and extraneous problems not directly related to detente had been brought into the text.

Somalia said a number of important principles, such as self-determination, had been omitted; others had been set out ambiguously, such as the principle relating to the inviolability of international frontiers.

Sweden also had doubts about the need for declarations of this kind; in its view, particular emphasis on some Charter principles but not on others did not facilitate a clear and unambiguous interpretation of the Charter.

The United States said it had reservations about the accuracy of the Declaration and the definition of the concept it endorsed. Also, the United States maintained its views on the establishment of the new international economic order.

The General Assembly
Adopts the following Declaration:

Declaration on the Deepening and Consolidation of International Detente

The States Members of the United Nations,
Reaffirming their full commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and their resolve to ensure conditions in which all peoples can live and prosper in peace with justice,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations of 24 October 1970, the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security of 16 December 1970, as well as the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples of 14 December 1960 and the Definition of Aggression of 14 December 1974,

Recognizing that, in order to resolve effectively international problems, an ever-increasing degree of harmony and co-operation among nations is called for,

Anxious to create conditions whereby all States can put all their resources to the task of improving the living conditions of their peoples without fear of coercion, threat or use of force,

Noting with satisfaction a growing interest in and increased desire for relaxation of tension in recent years,

Convinced of the urgent need to exert additional efforts to extend this trend to encompass all regions of the world and facilitate the settlement of outstanding international problems by peaceful means through participation of and co-operation among States,

Recognizing that the continuation of the policies of confrontation and rivalry among States or groups of States is incompatible with the relaxation of international tension,

Reaffirming the indivisibility of peace and security in all parts of the world and the increasing interdependence among nations, and anxious therefore to work towards the removal of all sources of tension and friction,

Convinced that confidence-building measures could contribute to the relaxation of international tension,

Convinced also that progress in arms control and disarmament negotiations, particularly in the nuclear field, and the elimination of the threat of war are of great importance for the continued relaxation of tension and for further development of friendly relations among States,

Convinced that the establishment of just and equitable economic relations among States is an important condition for genuine and lasting peace and for harmony among nations,

Convinced also of the need to eliminate all forms of aggression, foreign occupation and interference in the internal affairs of other States, to ensure respect for human rights, to eliminate colonialism through the free exercise of the right of self-determination and to eradicate racism and apartheid and other forms of injustice,

Guided, therefore, by the need for all States, in the supreme interest of peace and the future of mankind, to continue their efforts towards further reduction of tension, the promotion of better relations among themselves and the strengthening and widening of detente, and, to that end,

Declare their determination:

1. To adhere firmly to and promote the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the universally accepted principles and declarations aimed at enhancing world peace and security and the development of friendly and co-operative relations among States, and to fulfil their obligations arising from multilateral treaties and agreements serving the achievement of these objectives;

2. To consider taking new and meaningful steps, both in bilateral and multilateral arms control negotiation forums, aimed at achieving the objective of a cessation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear arms race, at an early stage and realization of disarmament measures, especially nuclear disarmament, with the ultimate objective of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control;

3. To facilitate the peaceful and speedy settlement of outstanding international problems and to strive to remove both causes and effects of international tension so that relations among all States may evolve in the direction of co-operation and friendship in order to prevent the recurrence of situations which might endanger international peace and security;

4. To strengthen the role of the United Nations as a primary instrument in the maintenance of international peace and security by reinforcing both the peace-making and peace-keeping capabilities of the Organization;

5. To refrain from the threat or use of force and to abide in their relations with other States by the principles of sovereign equality, territorial integrity, inviolability of international frontiers, inadmissibility of the acquisition and occupation of the territories of other States by force, settlement of disputes—including frontier disputes—strictly by peaceful means, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of other States, respect for human rights, respect for the right of all nations to choose freely their social, political and economic systems and to develop their external relations in the way they deem best for the interest of their respective peoples in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

6. To ensure the free exercise of the right of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to self-determination and to promote majority rule, especially where racial oppression, in particular apartheid, has deprived peoples from exercising their inalienable rights;

7. To work towards the establishment and development of just and balanced economic relations among States and to strive to narrow the gap between the developed and developing countries, in accordance with the resolutions of the General Assembly adopted by consensus at its sixth and seventh special sessions on the establishment of the new international economic order;

8. To encourage and promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all in conformity with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other relevant international treaties and instruments, including the International Covenants on Human Rights;

9. To foster mutual understanding and trust among peoples by promoting and facilitating cultural exchanges, freer movement and contacts among them both on an individual and a collective basis;

10. To develop further their relations and co-operation in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to observe the principles set forth above which derive from the Charter, recognizing that nothing in the present Declaration could either alter or detract from obligations they might have undertaken in relation to other States in accordance with the principles of international law and the Charter.

Chapter VII

Review of the question of peace-keeping operations

Consideration by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations

The question of United Nations peace-keeping operations was again considered in 1977 by the General Assembly's 33-member Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations and by the Assembly itself.

The Special Committee held three meetings, on 14 February, 17 June and 1 December, respectively, and its Working Group held 25 meetings, between 18 April and 28 November 1977. The Special Committee received two reports from the Working Group which it annexed to its own report to the General Assembly.

In an interim report covering its activities during the months of April, May and June 1977, the Working Group reported that, without prejudice to the primary importance of reaching agreement on the guidelines for peace-keeping operations, it had devoted its April meetings to consideration of specific measures relating to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations. It had before it a paper on the subject sponsored by six States (Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Italy and Sweden).

Meetings in May and June had been devoted to the completion of draft articles on agreed guidelines for future peace-keeping operations. A working document which had been annexed to the Group's tenth (1976) report served as the basis of discussions. Although it had not been possible to complete an agreed set of articles, the Working Group advised that it had produced a draft text covering articles 5 to 13, which were to be discussed further. These draft articles, annexed to the report, dealt with, inter alia, the delegation of responsibility by the Security Council, the administration of peace-keeping operations by the Secretary-General, the authority of the force commander, the geographical composition of a force, the financing of peace-keeping operations and preparedness arrangements.

In its eleventh report, which covered September and October meetings, the Working Group had further elaborated some of the draft formulas of the guidelines. It stated that these represented a set of tentative and preliminary drafts, were not necessarily exhaustive and were subject to further consideration.

The Working Group had also reported that no agreed conclusions could be reached on suggestions concerning specific questions related to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations. It had agreed, however, that discussions and negotiations should continue on the guidelines and on practical aspects of peace-keeping operations.

In its report, the Special Committee, regretting that it had not yet been possible to fulfil the difficult task of formulating agreed guidelines on peace-keeping operations, felt that a demonstration of political will and greater conciliation were needed to fulfil its mandate. It also felt that further efforts should be made to intensify negotiations for an early completion of agreed guidelines and that the specific questions relating to their practical implementation should form part of the renewed mandate by the General Assembly.

At the 1977 session of the General Assembly, the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations was discussed in the Special Political Committee.

The discussion, in which 29 Members took part, centred around four main issues, namely: an assessment of the work of the Special Committee, including its working methods; the role of the Security Council in peace-keeping operations; the financing of the operations; and questions relating to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations.

Members were divided in their assessment of the results of the work of the Special Committee. Egypt, speaking as Rapporteur of the Special Committee, said that ways and means should be found to improve the working methods of the Committee and the Working Group and it called for a demonstration of political will and greater conciliation to make possible the fulfilment of the Special Committee's mandate.

Afghanistan, Austria and the United Kingdom spoke of a widespread feeling of frustration and impatience with the slow rate of progress. In the view of France, the Working Group's efforts had been fruitless. The United States, on the other hand, believed that differences among members of the Special Committee had been narrowed substantially and it seemed that an agreement was within reach.

Nigeria, noting that progress had been virtually non-existent, suggested that modalities other than the consensus approach should be worked out in order to eliminate the situation in which one member could negate the collective will of the Working Group.

Japan, however, believed that the consensus procedure was of fundamental importance to this kind of work, since any guidelines adopted without it would be neither useful nor applicable. Peru felt the time for regrets had passed and called for innovative formulas that would permit progress.

The USSR again emphasized its view that peace-keeping operations must be in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, under which only the Security Council was empowered to decide to undertake them. It would be very dangerous to try to distort the fundamental provisions of the Charter.

On the role of the Security Council and other main organs of the United Nations in peace-keeping operations, Czechoslovakia said that the mechanism of the Security Council envisaged in Chapter VII of the Charter¹ was sufficient for the development of the practical aspects of peace-keeping operations.

Indonesia believed that in the interests of efficiency the Secretary-General should be given authority to oversee day-to-day operations. Canada considered it desirable that the Secretary-General be in a position to direct the operations under the broad authority of the Security Council. Pakistan held a similar view: responsibility and ultimate control must rest with the Security Council, but the Secretary-General within the over-all mandate established by the Council should direct the activities of the forces.

A number of Members referred to the establishment of a subsidiary organ of the Security Council as provided for in Article 29 of the Charter.² France recalled its suggestion that the article of the proposed guidelines dealing with this organ and establishing a Security Council committee to supervise the handling of day-to-day details of peace-keeping operations could be completed without waiting for the entire set of guidelines. Poland expressed satisfaction with the text of the draft guideline for this subsidiary organ.

There was general agreement that the composition of the peace-keeping forces should be based on the principle of equitable geographical distribution. Greece said that the forces should be made up of contingents as widely representative of the international community as possible.

On the question of financing the peace-keeping operations, a number of Members stressed the need to eliminate the deficit of certain operations. Ghana called for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, while Australia referred to the growing debt of the peace-keeping operation in Cyprus. Finland, Norway and Sweden expressed support for the principle of collective financial responsibility.

Practical questions relating to the implementation of peace-keeping operations, such as the training of the forces, training manuals or the establishment of stand-by forces, were also discussed. Austria recalled the six-power paper on this subject submitted to the Working Group. Italy noted that this paper had been repeatedly mentioned in the current debate as a valid basis for negotiations and regretted that it had not been examined in depth by the Working Group. Norway felt it would be useful if Member States considered the possibility of establishing stand-by national forces. On this point, Yugoslavia felt that the existing practice of organizing United Nations peace-keeping operations met the needs of Member States and the United Nations.

On 15 December 1977, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted a resolution by which it requested Member States to submit observations and suggestions on peace-keeping operations in all their aspects to the Secretary-General by 30 April 1978. It asked the Secretary-General to prepare a compilation of those observations and suggestions and submit it to the Special Committee and its Working Group. The Assembly then requested the Special Committee to expedite its work, to accord priority to the completion of agreed guidelines, to devote attention to specific questions relating to the implementation of peace-keeping operations, and to report to the thirty-fourth (1979) Assembly session.

The Assembly's decision was embodied in resolution 32/106, adopted without vote. The Special Political Committee adopted the text by consensus on 12 December. It was sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, France, the German Democratic Republic, Italy, Japan, Nigeria, Pakistan, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia. Questions concerning the United Nations Charter and the strengthening of the role of the Organization

Report of the Special Committee

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization met at United Nations Headquarters from 14 February to 11 March 1977 and submitted a report on its work to the General Assembly.

At these meetings, the Special Committee had before it various reports and proposals relating to questions dealt with under its mandate, i.e., those concerning the Charter itself and the enhancement of the ability of the United Nations to achieve its purposes in three broad areas: the maintenance and consolidation of international peace and security; the development of co-operation among all nations; and the promotion of rules of international law in relations between States. Among the reports was the analytical study prepared by the Secretary-General in 1976 reflecting Governments' views, suggestions and proposals of a general nature, those with respect to the various aspects of the functioning of the United Nations, and those relating specifically to the Charter.

Also, there were additional observations of Governments submitted in 1976 and 1977 and the proposals of Committee members submitted at the 1976 and 1977 sessions. The 1977 papers were: proposals regarding the Charter of the United Nations and strengthening of the role of the Organization, submitted by 18 States (Algeria, Argentina, Barbados, Colombia, the Congo, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Kenya, Mexico, Nigeria, the Philippines, Romania, Sierra Leone, Tunisia, Yugoslavia and Zambia), and others submitted jointly by Italy and Spain; and a suggestion by Mexico for the organization of future work of the Committee.

The 18-power proposals were divided into three parts. Part I contained joint proposals for strengthening the role of the United Nations without amending the Charter. Part II set forth 36 proposals for amending Charter Articles, put forward separately by various of the 18 States. Part III outlined proposals for additions to the Charter proposed separately by the Philippines, Romania and Yugoslavia. These papers were not considered at the 1977 session of the Special Committee.

The Special Committee established an open-ended Working Group, as it had done the previous year. The Working Group completed consideration of the Secretary-General's analytical study which it had begun in 1976. Considered in 1977 were sections on: maintenance of international peace and security (those parts not considered in 1976); means, methods and procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes; economic and social questions; decolonization; rationalization of existing procedures; administrative, financial and other aspects of the functioning of the United Nations; and other matters, including admission to and expulsion from the Organization and the effectiveness of United Nations decisions. A brief account of the preliminary comments on various views, suggestions and proposals submitted by Governments, as well as additional comments submitted by some members in the Working Group, was included in the report submitted by the Working Group to the Special Committee.

The Special Committee, after an exchange of views on this report, decided to take note of it and to annex it to its 1977 report to the General Assembly. It also decided, by a roll-call vote of 30 to 8, with 5 abstentions, to annex to the report the documents submitted by members of the Committee at its 1976 and 1977 sessions, the analytical study prepared by the Secretary-General, and the summary records of the 1977 session of the Special Committee. The draft report was then adopted by 31 votes to 4, with 2 abstentions. It was indicated that four members of the Special Committee (Belgium, France, the United Kingdom and the United States) had not taken part in that vote. The United Kingdom was among members of the Committee which regretted that the Committee had been unable to reach a consensus on the question of annexing the 18-power proposals to the Committee's report. The USSR considered that annexing the document in question ran counter to the Committee's mandate, was designed to mislead the Assembly and worked to the detriment of members not sponsoring it.

The report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization was considered by the Sixth (Legal) Committee at the thirty-second (1977) session of the General Assembly. Also before the Assembly was a report by the Secretary-General containing observations by Member States received in recent months. The discussion was mainly concerned with evaluation of the work of the Special Committee, the extension of its mandate and the content of such a mandate.

Many of those who spoke, including the representatives of Algeria, Australia, Brazil, China, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Spain, Sri Lanka, Yugoslavia and Zaire, considered that progress had been made by the Special Committee at its 1977 session and supported a renewal of its mandate.

Colombia and Japan suggested that the Special Committee at its next session should identify those areas in which there was the greatest measure of agreement in seeking changes and reforms within the broad scope of the United Nations rules. They, and others, thought that the widest possible agreement was required in the Special Committee if it was to achieve practical results, taking full advantage of the benefits of constructive dialogue.

Some other Members, including Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia and the USSR, criticized the departure in the work of the Special Committee from the principle of consensus, noting that it had proceeded to voting in connexion with the approval of its report. Under the circumstances, they had serious doubts as to the advisability of continuing the work of the Special Committee.

France, the United Kingdom and the United States believed it was imperative for the Special Committee to work on the basis of consensus if a useful outcome was to be expected and to avoid a recurrence of the difficulties which arose at the close of the Committee's 1977 session.

During the debate on a 65-power draft resolution, many Members again expressed opinions on the question of reviewing the United Nations Charter. Opposed to such review were, among others, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, the USSR, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia.

The USSR noted that it had consistently favoured increasing the role and effectiveness of the United Nations on the basis of strict observance of the Charter; it rejected any attempts to review the Charter, which had withstood the test of time and fully met the interests of maintaining and strengthening peace and international security. The United Kingdom reiterated its misgivings about review of the Charter, but favoured strengthening the role of the United Nations. The United States contended that the great strength of the Charter was that it was a flexible document which permitted evolutionary change; it felt it was important to exhaust all possibilities within the existing framework before making proposals involving changes in the Charter.

Brazil, Burundi, China, Jamaica, the Niger, Peru and the United Republic of Cameroon were among those which called for review of the Charter. Several of these States noted that they did not support extreme proposals, but felt, among other things, that it was essential to enlarge the membership of the Security Council and extend the prerogatives of permanent members to other important areas of the international community.

Japan did not oppose a review of the Charter, but felt that its purposes and principles should not be changed. Several other States—including Cyprus, Greece, India, Pakistan and Saudi Arabia—suggested that the need was to observe the Charter and use the potential in the United Nations. Egypt saw two urgent problems—to study the means to implement Chapter VII of the Charter (Action with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace, and acts of aggression) and to study the means to implement United Nations resolutions.

Following the debate, the Sixth Committee approved the draft resolution and, on 8 December 1977, the Assembly adopted it without vote as its resolution 32/45. By the preamble to the resolution, the Assembly: noted that the Special Committee had examined in detail the observations received from Governments contained in the Secretary-General's analytical study; considered that the Committee had not completed the mandate given to it; and reaffirmed support for the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly took note of the 1977 report of the Special Committee and decided that the Committee should continue its work in pursuance of the following tasks: to list the proposals which had been made or would be made in the Committee and to identify those which had awakened special interest; and to examine proposals which had been made or would be made in the Committee with a view to according priority to the consideration of those areas on which general agreement was possible.

The Assembly also, inter alia: requested the Special Committee to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement whenever it had significance for the outcome of its work; urged

Committee members to participate fully in its work in fulfilment of its mandate; and invited Governments to submit, or bring up to date, their observations and proposals on this question.

The Sixth Committee had approved the text without vote on 28 October. An amendment by Cyprus was withdrawn and Cyprus became a sponsor. By this amendment, the Assembly would have asked the Special Committee to concentrate first on those proposals which strengthened the role of the United Nations without requiring amendment of the Charter.

Chapter IX

Matters relating to AfricaMatters concerning South Africa's apartheid policies

The policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa, and ways and means of intensifying international action to secure the elimination of apartheid, were reviewed during 1977 by various United Nations bodies.

On 4 November, the Security Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,¹ adopted a resolution (418(1977)) by which it called on all States to cease the provision to South Africa of arms and related materiel of all types. It was noted by the Secretary-General that the Council's action marked the first time in the 32-year history of the Organization such action had been taken under Chapter VII against a Member State.

In other actions, the Council, following events of 19 October in South Africa, condemned that country for its resort to massive violence and repression and demanded an end to repressive measures. It also established a committee to examine progress in implementing the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

The Special Committee against Apartheid submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council reports on its activities for the year and on the major developments in South Africa during that period. Its annual report to the Assembly contained a number of recommendations on ways of intensifying concerted and effective international action against the apartheid regime. The Committee also submitted special reports: on the Second International Trade Union Conference for Action against Apartheid, held in Geneva in June 1977; on a proposed International Anti-Apartheid Year in 1978; and on relations between Israel and South Africa. Also during the year, the Special Committee, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, organized the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held in Lagos, Nigeria, from 22 to 26 August.

The Secretary-General submitted a report on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which was annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Fund.

At its thirty-second (1977) session, the General Assembly adopted a number of resolutions relating to various aspects of apartheid, namely: the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa; political prisoners in South Africa; International Anti-Apartheid Year; trade union action against apartheid; relations between Israel and South Africa; military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa; economic collaboration with South Africa; dissemination of information on apartheid; the programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid; assistance to the national liberation movements of South Africa; the situation in South Africa; the World Conference for Action against Apartheid; an International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports; bantustans; investments in South Africa; and assistance to South African student refugees.

Details of these and other related decisions are given in the sections that follow.

Political and related developmentsSecurity Council consideration of the question of South Africa

Communications to Security Council (March 1977)

On 9 March 1977, the representative of Nigeria, Chairman of the Africa group of Member States at the United Nations for the month of March, asked that a meeting of the Security Council be convened to consider the question of South Africa, in conformity with previous General Assembly and Security Council resolutions—in particular, the Assembly's decisions of 26 October and 9 November 1976 (contained in the various sections of resolution 31/6)² and the Council's resolution of 19 June 1976 (392(1976)).³

² See Y.U.N., 1976, pp. 134-44, texts of resolutions 31/6 A and 31/6 C-K.

On 21 March, the Liberian representative transmitted the text of a message from the President of Liberia, stating that the Liberian Government and people appealed to the Security Council and all Member States to demonstrate through action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,⁴ in particular Article 41, that apartheid was a crime against humanity, which contravened the Charter as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁵ and which was increasingly leading to a racial conflagration in southern Africa.

On 18 March, the Acting Executive Secretary of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to the United Nations transmitted a message from the OAU Administrative Secretary-General to the effect that OAU expected the Security Council to impose economic sanctions and a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

Consideration by Security Council (March 1977)

The Security Council considered the question of South Africa at nine meetings held between 21 and 31 March 1977. The representatives of the following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote: Algeria, Bahrain, Botswana, Burundi, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mongolia, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. An invitation was also extended to the President and four members of the United Nations Council for Namibia.

The Council also agreed, at the request of Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and Mauritius, to extend invitations to Mfanafuthi Johnstone Makatini of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), Potlako Leballo of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC), Olof Palme of Socialist International, Abdul S. Minty of the British Anti-apartheid Movement, and William P. Thompson of the World Council of Churches.

During the Council's discussion, a large number of speakers criticized South Africa's policies of apartheid as violating the provisions of the Charter. They called for action by the Council along the lines of General Assembly resolution 31/6,⁶ in various sections of which the Assembly had called upon the Security Council to, among other things: take urgent action, under Chapter VII of the Charter, to ensure the complete cessation by all States of the supply of arms or military equipment to South Africa; call upon all Governments to take specific steps to implement fully the arms embargo against South Africa; and consider steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investment in South Africa. Among those taking this position were Benin, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mongolia, Panama, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Togo, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Specific points made by speakers during the debate included the following.

The representative of Mauritius, opening the discussion, said he felt compelled to draw the Council's attention to the imminent danger of a general war in southern Africa. South Africa, he declared, possessed an awesome military power and was continuing to develop its military capabilities at a rapid rate, building the most powerful military machine in Africa south of the Sahara for the purpose of maintaining and protecting its system of minority rule. This military power, he said, constituted a threat to neighbouring States and other States farther afield; it had mounted a full-scale invasion of Angola, imposed an occupying army on Namibia, attacked Zambia and given and continued to give military assistance to the Ian Smith regime in Southern Rhodesia. Its policy was inflexible and aggressive, he asserted, and it had, through foreign investment and foreign loans, created a garrison State to prevent, not promote, change.

The representative of Nigeria, speaking as current Chairman of the African group of Member States and Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, noted that the Security Council continued to adopt resolutions on mandatory sanctions against Rhodesia but would not apply them against South Africa, which, he said, provided the main loophole in those sanctions. It was easy for the Council to apply Chapter VII of the Charter against Rhodesia because Western vested interests there had been limited at the time of Ian Smith's unilateral declaration of independence in 1965, and because Rhodesia was not a major source of raw materials and was of little strategic importance.

He went on to say that with every passing day South Africa, with the assistance of Western States, was building itself into one of the world's important military and economic powers. He said that in 1960, at the time of the Sharpeville massacre, the military budget of South Africa had been only 44 million rand; at the time of the events in Soweto in 1976, it had risen to 1,350 million rand.

Foreign investment in South Africa had risen from 3,000 million rand in 1960 to 10,000 million rand in 1976.

The Nigerian representative noted that the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, meeting in Port Louis, Mauritius, in July 1976, and the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, meeting in Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August 1976, had called for effective sanctions against the South African regime, as had numerous non-governmental organizations and a great number of Governments. The General Assembly had appealed to the Governments of France, the United Kingdom and the United States to desist from using their veto power to protect the apartheid regime and to facilitate the adoption of effective measures, under Chapter VII, to deal with the grave situation in South Africa. He hoped that those powers, which had in the past vetoed mandatory arms embargoes against South Africa, would heed the appeals from the overwhelming majority of Member States.

According to the representative of Lesotho, the system of apartheid practised by the white minority Government of South Africa was a direct threat to the peace of southern Africa and international security. South Africa had built legal, social and political institutions based on the belief that the Afrikaaner was a chosen race, a superior breed with a God-given right to suppress other peoples. The African in South Africa was confronted, he said, with a whole series of laws that circumscribed his every activity, that denied his very humanity.

With regard to South Africa's relationship with Lesotho, he said that since October 1976, when Pretoria granted its bogus independence to the bantustan Transkei, Lesotho had faced serious problems which continued to threaten its very existence as an independent State. (For details about Lesotho's complaint against South Africa, see p. 226.)

The representative of Botswana also termed the situation in southern Africa as a threat to international peace and security, noting that the Rhodesian regime was, with the full support of South Africa, engaging in vicious attacks against independent neighbouring African States. South Africa boasted of a flourishing munitions industry and reports indicated that it might soon acquire nuclear weapons. It was heavily militarizing the international territory of Namibia, and had amended its Defence Law so that when it felt threatened its armed forces could strike anywhere up to the Equator. Within South Africa itself, he said, oppression was the order of the day as more Draconian legislation was passed and the police and the army treated the African people with utter disregard for human life.

The representative of Sri Lanka, who said he was speaking also as the representative of the current Chairman of the 86 countries comprising the non-aligned group, said that the South African Government's policies of apartheid continued to be a threat to peace. The world was told that measures were being taken to eliminate what was described as petty apartheid, but there was, on the other hand, clear enough evidence that the regime was determined to safeguard and perpetuate the hard core of apartheid. The policy of bantustans, for example, was intended to preserve the best land and resources within apartheid South Africa; impoverished and isolated shells were earmarked for bantustans. Tangible action should be taken, he went on to say, to ensure and hasten the observance of human rights in South Africa; those who had the capacity should use the power at their disposal to compel the South African Government to give its black people—the vast majority of the population—at least a modicum of human rights.

The spokesman for PAC said that for the Azanian national liberation movement there was great significance in the fact that the Council's debate had opened on 21 March, the anniversary of the Sharpeville-Langa massacres in 1960. Whether the traditional supporters of apartheid South Africa wished to acknowledge it or not, he said, the whites in that country were confronted by a tide of black anger. Those who were temporizing had to bear the full consequences of the inevitable catastrophe impending for whites in South Africa. Regarding the statements of those who sought to portray African liberation movements as mere pawns for other powers, he said that such crass nonsense was an unmitigated insult to the dignity of the men, women and children who had risen to restore their birthright in their own lands, whose objective was a non-racial, democratic and non-aligned Azania. They were not struggling so that they could become a sphere of influence for any foreign power, he declared.

The ANC spokesman said that the United Nations had still to take effective action against apartheid. The flow of noble words and resolutions continued unceasingly, but nothing followed from it, he said; no real action had been taken. As a result, South Africa had gained invaluable time to build its economic and military strength. Far from abandoning apartheid, it had shown itself absolutely determined to preserve the status quo, he said. Today, faced with a greatly intensified struggle on the part of the South African people, it had become a volatile and dangerous force on the African continent, a standing threat to every independent State south of the Equator. The representative of ANC went on to say that, paradoxically, as the situation became more and more unusual, the doctrine of "business as usual" had taken command. The successes of the liberation struggle had been seen less as part of a process of ending injustice and oppression than as a threat to the interests of certain powers, particularly the major Western powers. Those countries believed that by arming and protecting South Africa they were also protecting their own interests in the southern African region. Thus, he said, South Africa had been made a surrogate colonial power and was expected to perform the function of local gendarme.

The representative of Sweden recalled that, during the 1976 session of the General Assembly, his country and others had sponsored a resolution by which the Assembly urged the Security Council to consider steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments in South Africa. Now, he said, the Council had an opportunity to consider such action, which would have a serious impact on South Africa's ambition to attain economic self-sufficiency and continue its stunningly rapid military expansion programme. Sweden, he continued, applied the voluntary arms embargo against South Africa strictly, and it urged the Security Council to make that embargo mandatory. He noted that the Foreign Ministers of the five Nordic States—Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden—had declared on 23 March 1977 that they would welcome a decision by the Council on a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa and on the prevention of new foreign investments in that country.

The representative of Venezuela said that the question of foreign investments in southern Africa was the central issue of the debate. A report prepared by the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations on the activities of such corporations in southern Africa—in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe), Namibia and South Africa—noted that foreign investments in southern Africa, besides increasing from day to day in violation of United Nations resolutions, constituted the most open and effective material support which the policy of apartheid enjoyed. Among the most serious aspects, he said, was the mining and processing of uranium and the development of nuclear energy carried out with the help of technology and foreign capital furnished by transnational corporations.

The representative of China said that since the Soweto massacre in June 1976, the heroic Azanian people had started a mammoth struggle against violent repression, directing their spearhead against the criminal system of racial discrimination and apartheid. This was, he said, an important hallmark of the new awakening of the Azanian people since the Sharpeville carnage in 1960. The people were demanding an end to the system of apartheid in South Africa; they wanted to see black power attained.

To sustain its tottering reactionary rule, he continued, the racist regime of B. John Vorster was stepping up its counter-revolutionary dual tactics. The South African reactionary authorities, while continuing their political manoeuvres, had intensified their violent repression of the Azanian and Namibian peoples and their armed provocations against the neighbouring independent African countries. While the peoples of southern Africa were waging fierce struggles against the racist regimes, he went on, the two super-powers were locked in intensified rivalry over southern Africa. One super-power was trying by every possible means to preserve its enormous vested interests there. The other super-power, which paraded itself as a natural ally of the African people and flaunted the signboards of "opposing racism" and "supporting the national liberation movement," was bent on dividing the national liberation movements and undermining the militant unity of the African countries in an intensified effort to effect infiltration and expansion in southern Africa and thus to establish its hegemony there. China, he said, considered that the Security Council should adopt resolutions strongly condemning the crimes of the South African authorities, applying a mandatory arms embargo and economic sanctions against South Africa, enjoining the South African authorities to stop all repression and persecution of the Azanian people, and calling upon all peoples and Governments to support and assist the peoples of Azania and the rest of southern Africa in their just struggle for independence and liberation.

The representative of Bahrain, speaking as current Chairman of the Arab group of Member States, observed that his participation on behalf of the Arab group was not only a manifestation of the Afro-Arab solidarity that had been expressed at the historic First Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the League of Arab States, held at Cairo, Egypt, at the beginning of March 1977, but was also an integral part of their joint struggle against racism, exploitation and foreign domination. A similar view was expressed by the Syrian Arab Republic, which recalled that the Assembly, by one of the sections of resolution 31/6, had strongly condemned the ever-increasing collaboration of the Zionist regime with the racist regime of Pretoria.

The spokesman for Egypt said his Government had always drawn attention to the danger of the ever-increasing ties between the racist regime in South Africa and its counterpart in Israel. Those regimes had become full-fledged arsenals of the most advanced and sophisticated destructive weapons situated in the south and to the north of the African continent.

According to the Cuban spokesman, the liberation of the oppressed African masses was a visible goal the attainment of which could not be prevented or postponed. The emancipation of the former Portuguese colonies, the defeat of the racist mercenary aggression against the people of Angola and the flourishing struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe, South Africa and Namibia revealed a process, he said, which would inevitably lead to the total elimination of the last vestiges of colonialism and racism on the African continent. The complete victory of the African peoples would be achieved. The only question was how long it would take, how long the imperialists would continue their support of the racist regimes. The struggle against colonialism and racism, now entering its decisive stage, required the unity of all progressive forces. Attempts to use "anti-communist" arguments against the struggle would fail. The African peoples welcomed the support given to their cause by the socialist countries. Whatever the agents of imperialism and their lackeys did, the Cuban representative said, Africa would be free.

According to the representative of the German Democratic Republic, there was no longer a question of whether there would be a racial war in southern Africa but how to avert an even greater disaster. The armaments of South Africa had, he said, increased dramatically through assistance from certain imperialist countries and institutions under their control, with the assistance of certain North Atlantic Treaty Organization circles. The foreign monopolies which obtained profits by exploiting the black workers of South Africa would never voluntarily give up the possibilities offered them by the apartheid regime. In South Africa, he said, there were more than 500 branches of United Kingdom monopolies, 400 branches of monopolies of the Federal Republic of Germany and more than 350 branches of United States monopolies. The first necessity, he declared, was a mandatory and full arms embargo against South Africa and an end to all co-operation in the nuclear field.

The spokesman from the British Anti-apartheid Movement said that the international arms embargo against South Africa was considered the only effective action taken by the United Nations to counteract apartheid, but it was essentially voluntary, relying on the good will and national discretion of Member States. South Africa was currently able to obtain a wide range of military equipment directly from several countries, and continued to expand its domestic arms industry with the active and often enthusiastic co-operation of certain Western countries and their arms firms. He expressed hope that the Western powers would enforce a strict arms embargo against South Africa and vote to make it mandatory, and also that they would ban future loans and investments in South Africa. These were minimum measures, he said. The question was whether the Western powers had the political will to confront apartheid.

The representative of Canada believed that the core of the complex of problems comprising the question of South Africa was the policy of apartheid of the South African Government. In one area of human rights the United Nations could point to real progress, he said: the colonial era was virtually ended. The change of regime in Portugal in 1974 foreshadowed the end of that period of African history wherein the fate and future of African peoples were decided by foreign minorities, and in southern Africa there remained to be resolved only the colonial situations of Namibia and Southern Rhodesia. These, he said, were on their way to solution, whether by the peaceful means called for by the United Nations Charter or by violence if the United Nations failed in its efforts. The situation in South Africa, however, was not a colonial situation but one in which people of different origins had been sharing for some 300 years a large and prosperous land but had not been sharing the privileges and obligations of common citizenship.

Canada believed that the Security Council had at the moment the power to take a significant and constructive step, he said, by adopting a declaration of principles on southern Africa which would serve as a statement of purpose for all members of the Council in terms of their objectives in that region of the world. The adoption by consensus of such a declaration would, he added, serve as an unequivocal declaration to South Africa of the Council's intentions and as a vehicle to mobilize public opinion towards the Council's objectives.

Also calling for a declaration of principles by the Council was the representative of the Federal Republic of Germany. His Government, he said, was determined to back solutions which guaranteed respect for equal rights without racial distinction but was deeply convinced that the use of force had to be avoided at all costs. It had therefore joined the other four Western members of the Security Council in advocating a new approach, and proposed that the Council, in a solemn declaration, proclaim those principles concerning southern Africa on which all were agreed.

The representative of France said that the Council and the world community had three basic complaints against South Africa: its apartheid policies; its illegal occupation of a territory with international status, Namibia; and its failure to comply with the mandatory measures imposed by the Security Council against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. With regard to apartheid, he said, Pretoria had to understand that the Council was calling for precise changes, a re-examination in depth of its apartheid policy. The current repression was not only humiliating but also dangerous. South Africa should avoid a fatal escalation of tension by abolishing as soon as possible all traces of racial separation and by co-operating with all those working to that end in the churches, in business groups and in other organizations. It should recognize that all its inhabitants had a right to decide their own future. It should renounce the system of bantustans, which France and the countries of the European Community had totally condemned. Above all, the very philosophy which underlay the situation in South Africa should be abandoned and replaced by an egalitarian political and economic system. The time had come, he said, to strive to break the stalemate and to obtain from South Africa the first really significant concessions.

Four draft resolutions were submitted to the Council, each sponsored jointly by Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and Mauritius. They were not put to a vote.

By the preamble to the first of these, the Council would have, among other things, recalled its resolution of 19 June 1976⁷ concerning events in Soweto and other areas of South Africa and noted with deep anxiety and indignation that the South African racist regime had continued violence and massive repression against the black people and all opponents of apartheid in defiance of the Council's resolutions. It would have expressed its concern over reports of torture of political prisoners and the deaths of a number of detainees, and its conviction that the violence and repression by the South African racist regime had greatly aggravated the situation in South Africa and would certainly lead to violent conflict and racial conflagration with serious international repercussions.

By the operative part of this text, the Council would have:

(1) strongly condemned the South African racist regime for its resort to massive violence and repression against the black people, who constituted the great majority in the country, as well as all other opponents of apartheid;

(2) expressed its support for, and solidarity with, all those struggling for the elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination and all victims of violence and repression by the South African racist regime;

(3) demanded that that regime (a) end violence and repression against the black people and other opponents of apartheid, (b) release all persons imprisoned under arbitrary security laws and all those detained for their opposition to apartheid, (c) cease forthwith its indiscriminate violence against peaceful demonstrators against apartheid, murders in detention and torture of political prisoners, (d) abolish the "Bantu education" system and all other measures of apartheid and racial discrimination, and (e) abolish the policy of bantustanization, abandon the policy of apartheid and ensure majority rule based on justice and equality;

(4) requested all Governments and organizations to take all appropriate measures to secure the implementation of the paragraph immediately preceding;

(5) further requested all Governments and organizations to contribute generously for assistance to the victims of violence and repression, including educational assistance to student refugees from South Africa; and

By the preamble to the second text, the Security Council would, among other things, have expressed its concern over the situation in South Africa and southern Africa as a whole, and reaffirmed that the imposition of apartheid in South Africa and the massive violence and repression by its racist regime against the majority of the population was seriously disturbing international peace and security. Inasmuch as the South African racist regime continued to occupy Namibia illegally and through its military occupation forcefully prevented the United Nations from exercising its responsibility for the territory and its people, the Council would have considered the regime to be in a state of war against the United Nations. It also would have considered that the acts of violence and aggression, and defiance of the United Nations, by the South African regime had resulted from its efforts to perpetuate the inhuman policy of apartheid and consolidate oppression of the black majority in South Africa.

By the operative part of the text, the Council would have:

(1) declared that the South African racist regime had flagrantly and persistently violated the principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations;

(2) further declared that the policies and actions of the regime had seriously disturbed peace in the region and constituted a grave threat to international peace and security;

(3) urgently called on the regime to take steps to comply with its obligations under the Charter and the provisions of relevant resolutions of the Security Council;

(4) requested the Secretary-General to follow the situation and report on the implementation of this resolution not later than 31 August 1977; and

(5) decided that, in case of non-compliance with the third operative paragraph above, the Security Council would consider appropriate action under all the provisions of the Charter, including Articles 39 to 46 of Chapter VII.⁸

By the third three-power draft resolution, the Security Council—expressing regret that some Governments had failed to implement the arms embargo fully, recognizing that that embargo had to be strengthened and universally applied to prevent a further aggravation of the grave situation in South Africa, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, and recognizing that the military build-up and persistent acts of aggression by the South African racist regime against the neighbouring States posed a grave threat to the security and sovereignty of independent African States and to the security of the great majority of the people of South Africa—would have:

(1) decided that all States were to cease forthwith the sale and shipment to South Africa of arms, ammunition of all types and military equipment and vehicles, and equipment and materials for the manufacture and maintenance of arms, ammunition and military equipment and vehicles;

(2) further decided that all States were to (a) implement fully the provisions of the paragraph of the Council's resolution of 23 July 1970⁹ by which the Council called on all States to strengthen the arms embargo, (b) refrain from any co-operation with the South African racist regime in nuclear development, and (c) take steps necessary to prevent corporations under their jurisdiction from providing any form of direct or indirect assistance to the South African Government in its military build-up;

(3) requested all States to report to the Secretary-General not later than 31 July 1977 on measures taken to implement this resolution;

(4) requested the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the progress of the implementation of this resolution not later than 31 August 1977; and

(5) decided to maintain this item on its agenda for further action as appropriate in the light of developments.

By the fourth draft resolution, the Security Council, considering that the cessation of foreign investment in South Africa and other measures to discourage economic co-operation with South Africa would be an important step in dissuading the South African racist regime from pursuing its abhorrent policy of apartheid, and taking note of a General Assembly resolution of 9 November 1976¹⁰ concerning investments in South Africa, would have:

(1) called upon all Governments (a) to refrain from any investments in, or loans to, the South African racist regime or companies registered in South Africa, (b) to take all appropriate steps to ensure that companies and financial institutions within their jurisdiction ceased all further investments in, or loans to, that regime or companies registered in South Africa, and (c) to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with South Africa;

(2) further called upon all specialized agencies and other international institutions of the United Nations to refrain from any loans, credits or assistance to the South African racist regime or companies registered in South Africa;

(3) requested all States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies to report to the Secretary-General by 31 July 1977 on measures taken to implement this resolution;

(4) requested the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council, not later than 31 August 1977, on the progress of the implementation of this resolution; and

(5) decided to maintain this item on its agenda for further action as appropriate in the light of developments.

In connexion with the debate in the Security Council, the representative of Italy, in a letter dated 29 March, said that Italy had imposed upon its arms industry strict adherence to the voluntary arms embargo called for by the Security Council in its resolution of 4 February 1972.¹¹ All shipments of military aircraft had halted and the export of spare parts for all such aircraft had ceased, the letter stated. An ad hoc committee had been set up to control export licences.

Communications (March-October 1977)

On 22 March 1977, the representative of Ghana transmitted the text of a resolution adopted by the Executive Committee of the World Federation of United Nations Associations at its session held in Accra, Ghana, from 19 to 21 March 1977, by which the Security Council was asked to consider steps to ensure that no State, multinational or other body, or person was allowed to provide South Africa or Southern Rhodesia with any equipment, technology or production of nuclear weapons of any kind.

By a letter dated 5 October, the representative of Sri Lanka transmitted a statement on the situation in southern Africa issued by Foreign Ministers of non-aligned countries at a meeting held in New York on 30 September. The Ministers among other things again declared their firm commitment to the complete elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Zimbabwe, Namibia and South Africa to self-determination and independence and the legitimacy of the struggle of their national liberation movements to secure the enjoyment of that right by all means at their disposal. The Ministers further reiterated their firm support to the front-line States which faced the continuous aggressions of the racist regimes of Salisbury and Pretoria, and considered that a campaign should be launched for the total isolation of the apartheid racist minority regimes; all efforts should be made to support effectively the liberation struggle of the oppressed peoples.

On 20 October, the representative of Tunisia, as current Chairman of the group of African Member States, requested the convening of the Security Council as soon as possible to resume consideration of the question of South Africa. He stated that the African States considered that the question required urgent consideration in the light of a series of repressive measures which the racist regime of Pretoria had taken recently against the South African people.

On 21 October, the representative of Sri Lanka transmitted the text of a communique issued by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-aligned Countries condemning recent repressive measures adopted by the South African regime involving a ban on major black organizations and their supporters and on a large number of South African publications, including the country's largest newspaper for blacks. The regime justified the action on the pretext that the reports published by the newspapers and the activities of the organizations mentioned endangered the maintenance of law and order.

The Co-ordinating Bureau said it rejected the findings of the "inquiry" conducted by committees appointed by the Pretoria regime under the disreputable Internal Security Act of South Africa, a spurious legislative device for the repression of all dissent and for the stifling of the demand for freedom in South Africa.

The statement continued by pointing out that the measures had been taken at the very moment when five Western powers, which were among the major trading partners of the Pretoria regime, were endeavouring to arrive at a negotiated settlement of the problem of Namibia on the basis of a complete withdrawal of South Africa from the territory. The recent action by the Pretoria regime also coincided with the current debate on Namibia in the General Assembly in which almost 100 Members of the United Nations had denounced that regime's conduct and had called for urgent action against it. The two situations were inextricably linked, according to the statement by the Co-ordinating Bureau.

By a letter dated 24 October, the representative of Finland transmitted a statement issued on 23 October by his Government concerning repressive measures taken by the South African Government on 19 October 1977, which were aimed at depriving the African and Coloured population of South Africa of its only remaining possibility to express its views on the inhuman policies of apartheid and to try to achieve, through peaceful means, a pluralistic society based on racial equality. The Finnish Government believed that it would be fatal if the South African Government, through its continued measures of suppression of the basic human rights of the vast majority of the population of the country, would force that population to resort to the use of force as its only means for defending its inalienable rights. The international community had every right to demand that South Africa, as a United Nations Member State, revoke forthwith its recent decisions.

On 27 October, the Chinese representative transmitted a statement issued on 24 October by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of China noting that, on 19 October, the Vorster racist regime had flagrantly banned 18 anti-apartheid organizations in South Africa, shut down two newspapers run by black people and searched for, arrested and detained leaders of black people's mass movements all over the country. This was another barbarous act of suppression committed by the reactionary South African regime against the Azanian people, and the Chinese Government and people expressed their utmost indignation at and strong condemnation of this grave new crime perpetrated by the reactionary Vorster regime.

Consideration by Security Council (October-November 1977)

The Security Council met on 24 October 1977 to continue its consideration of the question of South Africa and held 10 meetings on the item between 24 October and 4 November. The following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote: Algeria, Botswana, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Lesotho, Mauritania, the Niger, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, Togo, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Viet Nam. The Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, at his request, was also invited to participate in the discussion.

The Council also agreed, at the request of Benin, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mauritius, to extend invitations to Mfanafuthi Johnstone Makatini of ANC, David M. Sibeko and Elias L. Ntloedibe of PAC, and Horst Gerhard Kleinschmidt of the Christian Institute of Southern Africa.

The representative of Tunisia recalled that the General Assembly, by its decisions of 9 November 1976, had asked the Security Council to take action under Chapter VII of the Charter to implement military sanctions against South Africa, and to consider steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments there. Those appeals had remained unheeded, he noted. Seven months had elapsed since the Council had met, without any concrete action having been taken. Once again, he said, the Council was faced with massive measures of repression, even more brutal than before. The South African Government had taken certain measures against various organizations of the black population and their press agencies which were a follow-up to the Soweto killings and the assassination in prison of Stephen Biko—a black nationalist leader. The situation in South Africa was deteriorating rapidly, and the Council had to abandon its wait-and-see policy. The African group of Member States, he said, wanted him to express its hope that the Council would give unanimous approval to the four draft resolutions which had been submitted to it in March by its three African members.

During the Council's discussion, a large number of speakers condemned the recent actions of the South African Government and called on the Council to take measures under Chapter VII of the Charter. Among those taking this position were Botswana, Ghana, Guyana, India, Lesotho, Mauritania, Pakistan, Panama, Romania, Togo and Viet Nam.

Many speakers, among them the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Niger, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Venezuela, called for adoption of the four three-power draft resolutions, revised versions of which were submitted in the course of the Council's discussion.

The representative of Nigeria said that, to his Government, the recent acts of repression by South Africa were indefensible, particularly at a time when South Africa was reported to be negotiating with the five Western members of the Security Council on modalities for independence for Namibia. He said the Council should impose an oil and arms embargo under Chapter VII and all Member States should promptly halt new investments in South Africa and take steps to dismantle their existing investments there. All nations which had been collaborating with the South African regime either in terms of trade or in the exchange of nuclear technology should review those relations and join in the concerted efforts of the international community to isolate South Africa. Nigeria, he added, was taking appropriate steps to identify those transnational corporations which were doing business with Nigeria while giving support to the apartheid system in South Africa.

Mr. Sibeko said that the Vorster regime had taken drastic measures against at least 16 organizations of the Azanian people and two white-led anti-apartheid groups. It had carried out wholesale arrests and detentions, and closed down two newspapers published for blacks. With these measures, he said, Vorster was blackmailing the Western members of the Council, its traditional trading partners and allies, who needed him to secure satisfactory results for their initiatives over Namibia and Zimbabwe. If they refrained from casting their customary negative votes, thus leaving the way open for mandatory resolutions, Vorster's threat was that he would not "play ball" over the decolonization of Namibia and Zimbabwe. His ransom price was another triple veto to prevent the Security Council from taking action under Chapter VII of the Charter.

Mr. Makatini said that the Council's debate gave the States whose record of collaboration with South Africa was well known an opportunity to end that policy and make common cause towards crushing the cancerous system of apartheid. It was up to the Western countries, he felt, to take the initiative in expanding the punitive measures contained in the draft resolutions before the Council. Nothing less than immediate imposition of economic sanctions and an oil and arms embargo would be an adequate response to the challenge, he said.

Mr. Kleinschmidt said that on 19 October his organization, together with 17 others, had been officially declared a banned organization. All his colleagues in executive positions had been banned and it had become impossible for them and the members to meet in the name of the Christian Institute of Southern Africa. All countries which were offended by the regime should recognize and support the liberation movement, ANC.

According to the spokesman for the USSR, the system of violence and repression had been elevated by the South African regime to the level of State policy. The regime's military machine was being continuously improved; its intention of acquiring weapons of mass destruction was a challenge to Africa and to the whole world and was contrary to the decisions of the United Nations and OAU urging that the continent of Africa be regarded as a nuclear-free zone.

He went on to note that the African proposals before the Council rightly demanded, among other things, that South Africa cease its violence and repression of opponents of apartheid, release political prisoners, desist from the policy of bantustanization and end its attacks against African countries. However, he wondered if South Africa would heed the demands of the Security Council unless they were backed by sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, a step that he considered long overdue. He charged that some Western countries still refused to comply with the United Nations call for an end to all military, economic and other co-operation with South Africa. Calling for a dialogue with the South African Government was tantamount to connivance with racism and the policy of apartheid. Unless effective measures were taken now, the States preventing action would bear a heavy responsibility for the future. The USSR, he said, supported the proposals of the African States on this issue. It favoured a mandatory arms embargo and economic and other sanctions against South Africa. Not in words but in deeds, it was prepared to take effective measures to bring about an end to apartheid.

China's representative said his Government firmly supported the just positions expressed by the African States. The Security Council should adopt a resolution to condemn strongly the atrocities committed by the South African authorities, impose a mandatory arms embargo and economic sanctions against South Africa and call on all Governments and peoples to render powerful support and assistance to the people of Azania and the rest of southern Africa in their just struggle for independence and liberation.

The representative of Saudi Arabia proposed that, first of all, Namibia should be declared free so that any "disgruntled blacks" in South Africa could go and live there. Namibia should have an open door, but at the same time white economic interests should not be jeopardized. The whites of South Africa should be allowed to carve for themselves a state in South Africa and the blacks to carve a state in the other part, he said. The two states could be federalized if necessary. It seemed to him that sanctions would not work and that a solution could be found this way. What was wanted was action, not resolutions, he said.

According to the spokesman for India, the regime in South Africa was not an obscure and small society with outlandish habits; it was a self-righteous and vicious maverick among the nation-States of modern time. Five generations of Africans had endured injustice peacefully in the hope that the international community would be able to bring about a change. The African people of South Africa had now apparently no hope of any peaceful change for the better. Only two options were open—armed struggle or mandatory action by the Security Council. The Council should take steps to convert, the existing voluntary arms embargo into an immediate mandatory arms embargo against South Africa. At the same time, it should begin the process of examination, study and legislation for the progressive imposition of economic sanctions in the months to come, in what was going to be essentially a struggle between the Pretoria regime and those who traded with it. Thus, the willingness and capacity of the Western world to maintain the tempo of sanctions in the military and economic fields had to be taken into account and India had no doubt that Western co-operation would be forthcoming.

The Canadian representative observed that the fact that the Council's debate on South Africa and its apartheid policy had been suspended for several months did not reflect any lack of interest but, on the contrary, was the result of intensive international diplomatic efforts directed towards the resolution of the problems of southern Africa. At the conclusion of the March meetings, the five Western members of the Council had joined together in an initiative designed to bring about the independence of Namibia; in addition, he said, the United Kingdom and the United States had been involved in the elaboration of proposals designed to bring about early independence and majority rule in Zimbabwe. He noted also that in August 1977 the World Conference for Action against Apartheid had been convened at Lagos, Nigeria—the most significant such conference yet held on the subject.

In the wake of all these deliberations, he went on, the Government of South Africa could have no illusions as to how it was seen by the rest of the world: it had been advised by voices within and without that it had set its country on a road to disaster, which only a commitment in favour of fundamental change could avert. But the response had been uncompromising. The Canadian Government, he said, was prepared to support the imposition of a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa under Chapter VII and to support a call to all Governments to review their economic relations with South Africa.

The representative of the United Kingdom observed that the Council was meeting in the shadow cast by the death of Stephen Biko, the recent bannings of South African citizens and organizations and the closures of South African newspapers. The United Kingdom, he said, wanted a peaceful and democratic transformation in South Africa rather than a disintegration into violence. For many years his Government had observed a voluntary arms embargo against South Africa and did not co-operate in the nuclear field. It had come to the conclusion that the acquisition by South Africa of arms and related material in the current situation constituted a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security and it would therefore accept and vote in favour of a mandatory arms embargo under Chapter VII of the Charter. He added that it would be naive, however, to believe that complex negotiations on the peaceful, democratic transition to independence elsewhere in southern Africa could take place in a situation where South Africa had decided to isolate itself totally from the international community. That Government, he said, had to begin to take serious steps to dismantle apartheid. Cosmetic changes were not enough. Those who believed in a graduated response to the situation rather than in isolation and revenge had a major responsibility for seeking those changes which could avert a terrible tragedy in South Africa.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany said that the events of 19 October were a challenge to all who had worked consistently for a peaceful change in South Africa; his Government had urged South Africa to rescind the measures it had taken, which had dealt a heavy blow to all endeavours to halt the escalation of force in southern Africa. The acquisition of arms by South Africa in the current circumstances constituted a threat to peace and security, in the Federal Republic's view, and consequently it was ready to accept and vote in favour of a mandatory arms embargo under Chapter VII.

The representative of France said that the partitions of the policy of apartheid could lead South Africa to catastrophe. The Security Council had to take account of the feelings aroused throughout the world, particularly in Africa, by the recent repressive measures taken by the South African authorities. The international community had to take measures to make South Africa understand that it had to end its reprehensible and dangerous practices. In strictly legal terms, he said, no country could be denied the right of self-defence provided for in Article 51 of the Charter;¹² but the intention here, in the aftermath of the recent crackdown by the South African Government, was to protest against the stockpiling of weapons intended for purposes of internal repression. The French Government had therefore decided to vote in favour of a mandatory embargo on arms shipments to South Africa.

The representative of the United States said his Government was prepared to join with others in supporting Security Council action to establish a mandatory arms embargo. The existing voluntary arms embargo had not stopped the flow of arms to South Africa, and the United States would join in measures requiring all States to cut off all sales or transfers of arms, spare parts for previously delivered equipment, paramilitary police equipment, and material for the maintenance and production of arms and munitions. He also said that the United States strongly believed that Africa should remain free of nuclear weapons and it was urging South Africa, as well as others which had not signed the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,¹³ to do so promptly and to put all their nuclear facilities under full international safeguards.

At its meeting on 31 October, the Security Council proceeded to vote on the four draft resolutions before it, which had been submitted in March by Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic (subsequently the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya) and Mauritius, and revised by them—in general, to update the texts and set new dates for the submission of reports to the Council. In some cases new provisions were added.

The first text (see p. 138)—by which the Council among other things strongly condemned the South African regime for its resort to massive violence and repression against the black majority and demanded that the regime end such practices—was revised to make reference to events since 19 October 1977, to add a demand for abrogation of bans on organizations and news media and to change the date by which the Secretary-General was to report.

The Security Council adopted this revised three-power text, by 15 votes to 0, as resolution 417(1977). By its preambular provisions, the Council among other things recalled its resolution of 19 June 1976¹⁴ concerning events in Soweto and other areas of South Africa, and noted with deep anxiety and indignation that the South African racist regime had continued violence and massive repression against the black people and all opponents of apartheid in defiance of the Council's resolutions. The Council expressed its concern over reports of torture of political prisoners and the deaths of a number of detainees, as well as the mounting wave of repression against individuals, organizations and the news media since 19 October 1977, and its conviction that such violence and repression had greatly aggravated the situation in South Africa and would certainly lead to violent conflict and racial conflagration with serious international repercussions.

By the operative part of this text, the Council:

(1) strongly condemned the South African racist regime for its resort to massive violence and repression against the black people, who constituted the great majority of the country, as well as all other opponents of apartheid;

(2) expressed its support for, and solidarity with, all those struggling for the elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination and all victims of violence and repression by that regime;

(3) demanded that the racist regime of South Africa (a) end violence and repression against the black people and other opponents of apartheid, (b) release all persons imprisoned under arbitrary security laws and all those detained for their opposition to apartheid; (c) cease forthwith its indiscriminate violence against peaceful demonstrators against apartheid, its murders in detention and its torture of political prisoners; (d) abrogate the bans on organizations and the news media opposed to apartheid; (e) abolish the "Bantu education" system and all other measures of apartheid and racial discrimination; and (f) abolish the policy of bantustanization, abandon the policy of apartheid and ensure majority rule based on justice and equality;

(4) requested all Governments and organizations to take all appropriate measures to secure the implementation of the above demands;

(5) further requested all Governments and organizations to contribute generously for assistance to the victims of violence and repression, including educational assistance to student refugees from South Africa; and

(6) requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to follow the situation and report to the Security Council, as appropriate, on the implementation of this resolution, and to submit a first report not later than 17 February 1978.

By the second three-power text (for summary, see p. 138), the Council would have, among other things, declared that the policies and actions of the South African regime constituted a grave threat to international peace and security and called upon it to comply with its obligations under the Charter and resolutions of the Council. In the event of non-compliance, the Council would consider appropriate action under the Charter, including Articles 39 to 46 of Chapter VII.

This text was revised by the sponsors so that the Council would request the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the resolution by 17 February 1978 rather than by 31 August 1977. It received 10 votes in favour and 5 against (Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States), and was not adopted owing to negative votes by permanent members of the Council.

By the third three-power draft resolution (for summary, see p. 139), the Council would have, among other things, expressed regret that some Governments had failed to implement the arms embargo fully and recognized that it had to be strengthened and universally applied. It would have decided: that all States would cease forthwith the sale and shipment to South Africa of arms, ammunition of all types and military equipment and vehicles, and equipment and materials for the manufacture and maintenance of arms, ammunition and military equipment and vehicles; and that all States would implement measures for strengthening the arms embargo, refrain from co-operating with South Africa in nuclear development, and take steps to prevent corporations under their jurisdiction from assisting the South African Government in its military build-up.

In the revised text, two preambular paragraphs were added so that the Council would take note of the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid adopted at the World Conference in August 1977, and would express grave concern that South Africa was at the threshold of producing nuclear weapons.

A new operative paragraph was added to the text in its revised version by which the Council would call on all States to take measures to revoke contractual arrangements with South Africa and all existing licences granted to South Africa relating to the manufacture and maintenance of arms, ammunition of all types and military equipment and vehicles.

The date by which States were to report to the Secretary-General on their measures of implementation was changed from 31 July 1977 to 1 April 1978; that by which the Secretary-General was to report to the Council, from 31 August 1977 to 1 May 1978.

This text also received 10 votes in favour and 5 against (Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States), and was not adopted owing to negative votes by permanent members of the Council.

The fourth draft resolution submitted by the three African members (for summary, see p. 139), by which the Security Council would have called on Governments to refrain from making investments in or loans to the South African racist regime and to take other measures to discourage economic co-operation with South Africa, was revised so that the Council would call on Governments to refrain from any investments in, loans to, "or any export and import credits" to the South African racist regime. The date by which Governments and specialized agencies were to report to the Secretary-General on implementation was changed from 31 July 1977 to 1 April 1978; that by which the Secretary-General was to report to the Security Council was changed from 31 August 1977 to 1 May 1978.

The text received 10 votes in favour to 5 against (Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States), and was not adopted owing to negative votes by permanent members of the Council.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the USSR representative said that the USSR had from the very outset endorsed the demand of the African countries for an embargo on arms shipments to South Africa and for the adoption of economic and other sanctions. It was a matter for regret, he said, that the negative votes of the Western powers had blocked the application of the sanctions proposed by the three African countries; he added that it was perfectly clear who was responsible for the fact that the Security Council had been unable to take the decision expected of it by world opinion.

The Tunisian representative, who said he was speaking at the request of a number of African States, expressed the deep disappointment and disenchantment of the African group of Member States at the completely negative attitude of the Western powers to the African initiatives.

Following a suspension of the meeting, a draft resolution was submitted by Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany, by the preambular part of which the Security Council would recall that on 19 June 1976 it had strongly condemned the South African Government for its resort to massive violence against and killings of African people, including schoolchildren, students and others opposing racial discrimination, and calling upon that Government urgently to end violence against the African people and to take urgent steps to eliminate apartheid and racial discrimination. It would express its grave concern over the severe acts of repression perpetrated by that Government on 19 October 1977 in banning individuals and organizations opposed to apartheid and struggling for self-determination, and in detaining large numbers of persons without trial in disregard of their fundamental rights. The Council then would strongly condemn the South African Government for its acts of repression, its defiant continuance of the system of apartheid, and its attacks against neighbouring independent States.

Expressing its view that the policies and acts of the South African Government were fraught with danger to international peace and security, and recalling its resolution of 7 August 1963¹⁵ and other resolutions concerning a voluntary arms embargo against South Africa, the Council would then express its conviction that a mandatory arms embargo needed to be universally applied against South Africa in the first instance. Stating that it was acting therefore under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council would:

(1) determine, having regard to the policies and acts of the South African Government, that the acquisition by South Africa of arms and related material constituted a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security;

(2) direct all States to cease forthwith any provision of arms to South Africa, including the sale and transfer of arms, ammunition of all types, military vehicles, and equipment and material for the manufacture and maintenance of arms and ammunition, paramilitary police equipment, and spare parts for the aforementioned;

(3) call upon all States not Members of the United Nations to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of this resolution;

(4) request the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the progress of the implementation of this resolution, the first report to be submitted not later than 1 May 1978; and

(5) decide to keep this item on its agenda for further action as appropriate in the light of developments.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany said that the Council's debate had shown a wide margin of agreement, if not consensus, that all 15 members favoured mandatory action with regard to an immediate and effective arms embargo against South Africa, under Chapter VII. Canada and his Government had therefore submitted a draft resolution which, he said, had the support of all five Western members of the Council and which the sponsors hoped would gain the approval of all Council members.

At the next meeting of the Council, on 4 November, the draft resolution was withdrawn by its sponsors. Before the Council was the text of a new draft resolution on the subject of an arms embargo which the President said had been prepared in the course of intensive consultations.

The new draft resolution was adopted unanimously on 4 November as resolution 418(1977).

By its preamble, the Security Council recalled its resolution of 19 June 1976 strongly condemning the South African Government for its resort to massive violence against and killing of African people, including schoolchildren, students and others opposing racial discrimination, and calling upon that Government urgently to end violence against the African people and take urgent steps to eliminate apartheid and racial discrimination.

The Council said it recognized that the military build-up and persistent acts of aggression by South Africa against the neighbouring States seriously disturbed the security of those States. It further recognized that the existing arms embargo had to be strengthened and universally applied, without any reservations or qualifications whatsoever, in order to prevent a further aggravation of the grave situation in South Africa. The Council took note of the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid. It said further that it was gravely concerned that South Africa was at the threshold of producing nuclear weapons.

Also by the preambular provisions, the Council strongly condemned the South African Government for its acts of repression, its defiant continuance of the system of apartheid and its attacks against neighbouring independent States, and considered that the policies and acts of the South African Government were fraught with danger to international peace and security.

Recalling its resolution of 7 August 1963 and other resolutions concerning a voluntary arms embargo against South Africa, the Council said it was convinced that a mandatory arms embargo needed to be universally applied against South Africa in the first instance.

After stating that it was acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council then, by the operative provisions of the text:

(1) determined, having regard to the policies and acts of the South African Government, that the acquisition by South Africa of arms and related materiel constituted a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security;

(2) decided that all States were to cease forthwith any provision to South Africa of arms and related materiel of all types, including the sale or transfer of weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, paramilitary police equipment, and spare parts for them, and were to cease as well the provision of all types of equipment and supplies and grants of licensing arrangements for the manufacture or maintenance of them;

(3) called on all States to review, having regard to the objectives of this resolution, all existing contractual arrangements with and licences granted to South Africa relating to the manufacture and maintenance of arms, ammunition of all types and military equipment and vehicles, with a view to terminating them;

(4) further decided that all States were to refrain from any co-operation with South Africa in the manufacture and development of nuclear weapons;

(5) called upon all States, including States non-members of the United Nations, to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of this resolution;

(6) requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the progress of the implementation of this resolution, the first report to be submitted not later than 1 May 1978; and

(7) decided to keep the item on its agenda for further action, as appropriate, in the light of developments.

In a statement following the vote, the Secretary-General said the adoption of the resolution marked the first time in the 32-year history of the Organization that action had been taken under Chapter VII of the Charter against a Member State. He asked that all Governments provide him with the most complete information as quickly as possible on the measures taken by them to comply with this binding decision.

Council members generally expressed satisfaction at the adoption of the resolution and several speakers also noted that this was the first time in the history of the United Nations that mandatory sanctions had been imposed against a Member State. Romania said the vote was the expression of the will of Member States not to ease the political pressure on the racist regime of Pretoria until it abandoned its policies of apartheid and aggression.

The spokesman for the United States said the Council had sent a clear message to the South African Government that its measures announced on 19 October had created a new situation in South Africa's relationship with the rest of the world. The vote of the Council had been accompanied, he said, by a vote of 347 to 54 in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress expressing its concern and condemnation of the acts in South Africa. At the same time, he wished to make clear to South Africa the desire of his Government for reconciliation, provided South Africa was willing to begin progress towards the end of apartheid and the full participation of all South Africans in the political and economic life of their country.

The representative of the United Kingdom said his Government viewed the Council's action as a warning to South Africa that the international community was in earnest about the need for change and the desire to see a peaceful and democratic transformation rather than a disintegration into violence; it was also an appeal to it to heed the views of the international community before matters deteriorated further.

According to the representative of the USSR, the resolution bore the traces of compromise and thus did not go as far as might have been wished. Nevertheless, the USSR was able to support it since, by its adoption, the Security Council was in essence taking the first definite step forward in the matter of the application to South Africa of mandatory sanctions in accordance with Chapter VII.

The representative of Benin also observed that the text was a compromise and did not entirely satisfy his country. He said his Government and Africa as a whole attached enormous importance to the establishment in the near future of an appropriate committee to control the implementation of the resolution. He added that Africa impatiently awaited a Council decision to impose an economic embargo because—when all was said and done—that was the weapon that could most effectively and peacefully be wielded against the racists of South Africa. Pakistan's representative expressed a similar view.

On 26 October, the Security Council decided to issue as a document of the Council the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, which proposed several courses of action to be taken by Governments and by the Security Council with a view to bringing an end to the policies of apartheid of the South African Government, South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, its aggression against neighbouring States and its assistance to the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia.

Communication from South Africa

By a letter dated 4 November, the representative of South Africa transmitted a statement by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa in which he declared that the two resolutions adopted by the Security Council said more about the state of the world than about the state of South Africa; they were, he said, a supreme example of the hypocrisy threatening the international community because the members of the Security Council, while reserving the right to take the steps deemed necessary to preserve order within their own borders, would deny that right to South Africa. Also, the expressions of pious concern for the peoples of South Africa were belied by the fact that it was the international community's policies of intervention that encouraged violence within South Africa and made a peaceful solution more difficult.

The resolution adopted under Chapter VII, he said, would serve to stiffen the resolve of South Africans to do what was necessary to defend their country and increase their resistance to the dictates of outsiders about their own affairs. The arms embargo and the censure were not intended to serve the well-being of the peoples of South Africa. The invocation of high principles of moral rectitude and human rights served merely as a pretext to hide a motley variety of less worthy motivations, the Foreign Minister stated.

He went on to express regret that the resolutions had been sponsored and supported by countries of the Western world from which a greater sense of responsibility might have been expected. He deplored their callous exploitation of a vulnerable situation extending far beyond the confines of South Africa and he wondered whether they had considered the implications of their action and were prepared to accept full responsibility for what could only be termed incitement to violence.

Consideration by Security Council (December 1977)

On 5 December, the representative of the United Republic of Cameroon, current Chairman of the African group of Member States, requested that a meeting of the Security Council be convened as soon as possible to consider the establishment of a body to supervise the implementation of Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November, concerning the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

The Security Council held two meetings on 9 December, at which Saudi Arabia and the United Republic of Cameroon were invited, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. An invitation was also extended to the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, and to Mfanafuthi Johnstone Makatini of the African National Congress as requested by the representatives of Benin, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mauritius.

The Council had before it a draft resolution—sponsored by Benin, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mauritius—which the representative of the United Republic of Cameroon said was an extension of resolution 418(1977) and was intended to set up machinery to provide the Secretary-General with additional means of discharging the mission entrusted to him by the Council in that resolution.

The three-power text was adopted unanimously on 9 December as resolution 421(1977). By its preambular paragraphs the Security Council among other things said it was aware of the need to have appropriate machinery in order to examine the progress of implementation of the measures envisaged by the provisions of resolution 418(1977), and noted that it had asked the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the progress of the implementation of that resolution.

By the operative provisions, the Council:

(1) decided to establish a Committee of the Security Council, consisting of all Council members, to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations: (a) to examine the report on progress in implementing resolution 418(1977) to be submitted by the Secretary-General, (b) to study ways and means by which the mandatory arms embargo could be made more effective against South Africa, and to make recommendations to the Council, and (c) to seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of the provisions laid down in resolution 418(1977);

(2) called upon all States to co-operate fully with the Committee and to supply such information as the Committee might seek;

(3) requested the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for that purpose, including the provision of appropriate staff.

The representative of China said that, since the adoption of the Council's resolution of 4 November, the Vorster racist regime had ignored the Council's decisions and instead had stepped up its brutal repression of the Azanian people's just struggle against racism and for national liberation. Among other things it had recently stage-managed a so-called general election, which excluded black and Coloured people—comprising 83 per cent of the population—and the farce of the sham independence of the bantustan Bophuthatswana. It had arrested a large number of black people, including schoolchildren. Also, it was trying to shirk responsibility for the crime of torturing to death the black nationalist leader, Stephen Biko. The implementation of the Council's resolution would be by no means an easy matter, given the open contempt shown by the Vorster authorities towards the Council's resolution of 4 November, and in that sense, he said, China supported the proposal of the African States for a body to supervise the progress of the mandatory arms embargo. The Committee to be established should be enabled to exercise effective supervision over the implementation of the resolution and also to consider the question of economic sanctions against South Africa.

The Canadian representative recommended that when the Committee began its work it should adopt procedures similar to those evolved over the years by the Committee on sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. The representatives of France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom shared that view.

The spokesman for the USSR said his Government looked on the Council's decision on a mandatory arms embargo as the basis for the adoption of further effective measures in the struggle against apartheid and as a point of departure for the application of effective economic and other mandatory sanctions.

Subsequent communications

As at 31 December 1977, the following countries had responded to a note sent by the Secretary-General on 10 November concerning compliance with the provisions of resolution 418(1977). They were Belgium, Bolivia, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guyana, Hungary, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Nauru, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Seychelles, Sweden, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Reports of Special Committee against Apartheid

On 1 November 1977, the Special Committee against Apartheid submitted its annual report to the General Assembly and the Security Council. It also submitted three special reports during 1977 on the June 1977 Second International Trade Union Conference for Action against Apartheid; International Anti-Apartheid Year (to begin during 1978); and relations between Israel and South Africa.

In its annual report, the Special Committee reviewed its work for the year and submitted a number of conclusions and recommendations. An annex contained a review of developments in South Africa since September 1976.

Included in the annual report was an account of the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held in Lagos, Nigeria, from 22 to 26 August 1977, in conformity with a decision taken by the General Assembly on 9 November 1976.¹⁶

The Conference was organized by the Special Committee in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and the Government of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, and in consultation with the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU. It was attended by more than 400 participants representing 112 States Members of the United Nations and members of specialized agencies, as well as representatives of a number of intergovernmental organizations, other United Nations bodies dealing with the problems of southern Africa, liberation movements of South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, anti-apartheid movements, trade unions and non-governmental organizations active in the struggle against apartheid.

Participants discussed a number of proposals on ways and means of promoting effective international action against apartheid, and the Conference, on 26 August, adopted the Lagos Declaration on Action against Apartheid, in which it called upon all Governments and peoples of the world to lend their full support to international efforts, under the auspices of the United Nations and in co-operation with OAU and the liberation movements recognized by it, to eliminate apartheid and enable the South African people as a whole to attain their inalienable right to self-determination. The Special Committee transmitted the Declaration to the General Assembly and the Security Council.

As in previous years, the Special Committee promoted the observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, held to commemorate the incident at Sharpeville, South Africa, on 21 March 1960 in which 69 demonstrators against pass laws were killed and 180 wounded. On 21 March 1977, the Special Committee held a solemn meeting at United Nations Headquarters which was attended by the representatives of permanent missions to the United Nations, specialized agencies, other United Nations bodies dealing with southern African questions, OAU and South African liberation movements.

By a decision taken at its 1976 session, the General Assembly proclaimed 16 June the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa,¹⁷ to commemorate the killings at Soweto on 16 June 1976. The Special Committee held a meeting on 21 June 1977 in connexion with the observance of the International Day.

On 11 and 12 October 1977, the Special Committee held meetings in observance of the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners.

The Special Committee continued its efforts to promote ratification of or accession to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,¹⁸ which came into force on 18 July 1976. As at 30 September 1977, the Convention had been signed and ratified or acceded to by 49 countries. (See also p. 686.)

The Special Committee's report also contained an account of its consideration of developments relating to apartheid, in particular: military, nuclear, economic and other collaboration with South Africa; repression against the opponents of apartheid; assistance to South African student refugees in neighbouring countries; bantustans; and apartheid in sports. Other sections of the report dealt with: missions to and consultations with Governments; co-operation with other United Nations organs dealing with southern African problems; association of the South African liberation movements with the work of the Special Committee; co-operation with OAU; and co-operation with non-governmental organizations.

The Special Committee concluded that the year under review had been a momentous period in the long struggle of the South African people against racist domination, and represented a new stage in international solidarity with the national liberation movement of South Africa. According to the Special Committee, the militant nation-wide resistance against apartheid which had come in the wake of the Soweto massacre of 16 June 1976 had encompassed larger segments of the oppressed people than ever before, and reflected the solidarity of all black people in the struggle for liberation. Demonstrations of black students against discrimination in education had developed into a mass movement against all aspects of apartheid.

The Special Committee made recommendations on a number of aspects of the apartheid question and the steps which it felt should be taken by the international community to provide moral, political and material assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movement. These included: a solemn commitment to international action; recognition of the right of the oppressed people to resort to armed struggle; cessation of collaboration with the apartheid regime, including military, nuclear and economic collaboration and collaboration in cultural, educational, sporting and other fields; action against bantustans; assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement; implementation of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid; the release of political prisoners in South Africa; and dissemination of information against apartheid. The Special Committee also made detailed recommendations about its own programme of work, the need to strengthen Secretariat services in the campaign against apartheid, and the question of co-operation with other United Nations bodies. The General Assembly acted on these recommendations when it adopted the various sections of resolution 32/105 later in 1977 (see below).

The Special Committee also emphasized what it called the imperative need for action by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter to avert the threat to peace in South Africa, and in southern Africa as a whole, resulting from the policies and actions of the apartheid regime.

The Special Committee also submitted three special reports during the year. The first of these, adopted by the Committee on 21 June 1977 and addressed to the General Assembly and the Security Council, concerned the Second International Trade Union Conference for Action against Apartheid, which was held in Geneva, Switzerland, on 10 and 11 June 1977, and attended by representatives of over 300 international, regional and national trade union organizations representing about 200 million workers. The participants included five representatives of trade unions from South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe.

The Conference unanimously adopted a resolution which constituted a programme of action against apartheid. The Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly support the resolution and commend it to all Governments and organizations. In particular, the Special Committee drew the Assembly's attention to a provision recommending annual meetings between the Special Committee and a group of trade unionists charged with reviewing developments in southern Africa and recommending action by the trade union organizations.

On 28 October, the Special Committee adopted and transmitted to the General Assembly a second special report, on the International Anti-Apartheid Year proposed to begin during 1978, to which was annexed a proposed programme for the Year providing for action by the United Nations, Governments, the specialized agencies, other intergovernmental bodies, trade unions, churches, anti-apartheid and solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations, and by the Special Committee against Apartheid. The programme was endorsed by the General Assembly when it adopted resolution 32/105 B on 14 December 1977 (see below).

The Special Committee submitted a third special report, adopted on 28 October, concerning relations between Israel and South Africa, in which it noted with concern the increasing collaboration by the Government of Israel with the apartheid regime in South Africa in the military, nuclear, political, economic and other fields, and considered that the General Assembly should once again condemn Israel and demand that it cease collaboration with South Africa in all fields forthwith. The Assembly acted on these recommendations when it adopted resolution 32/105 D on 14 December (see below).

Decisions of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

World Conference for Action against Apartheid

On 13 May 1977, in adopting resolution 2087(LXII) without vote, the Economic and Social Council welcomed the offer of the Government of Nigeria to host the World Conference for Action against Apartheid at Lagos in August 1977. The Council urged the international community and non-governmental organizations to lend their maximum co-operation to ensure the success of the Conference, and invited the Special Committee against Apartheid to submit the documents of the Conference to the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in 1978.

The text of resolution 2087(LXII) was sponsored by Algeria, the Philippines, Uganda and Yugoslavia.

Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2056(LXII) on 12 May 1977 which concerned the implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. It contained the text of a draft resolution which the Council recommended for adoption by the General Assembly at its thirty-second session later in 1977. (For details, see p. 674.)

World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

On 12 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2057(LXII)) concerning arrangements for the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination to be held in August 1978. The resolution also included the text of a draft resolution recommended for adoption by the General Assembly at its session later in 1977. (For details, see p. 675.)

Infringements of trade union rights in southern Africa

By a resolution adopted on 13 May 1977 (2086(LXII)), the Economic and Social Council among other things expressed its concern at the increased use of arrests and bannings to suppress legitimate trade union activities among African workers in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe and demanded full recognition of the trade union rights of those workers. (For details, see p. 726.)

Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts

On 4 March 1977, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution concerning the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa by which, among other things, the Commission recognized the contribution made by the Working Group to United Nations efforts to combat apartheid and racial discrimination which continued unabated in South Africa, as well as in Namibia and Zimbabwe, and decided to renew the Group's mandate. The Economic and Social Council, by its resolution 2082 A (LXII), adopted on 13 May 1977, approved that decision and decided that the Ad Hoc Working Group, in conjunction with the Special Committee against Apartheid, should examine the treatment of prisoners in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, including the deaths of a number of detainees, as well as police brutality during peaceful demonstrations against apartheid in South Africa since the Soweto massacre of 16 June 1976.

By section B of the same resolution, the Council noted with indignation that the South African racist regime had continued to employ violence and massive repression against the black people and all opponents of apartheid in defiance of General Assembly resolutions. It recommended that the Assembly declare 1978 International Anti-Apartheid Year.

General aspects

An item entitled "Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa" was included in the agenda of the thirty-second (1977) session of the General Assembly. On the recommendation of the General Committee, the Assembly decided on 23 September 1977 that representatives of the Organization of African Unity and of national liberation movements recognized by OAU should be permitted to participate in the discussion in plenary meetings and that organizations having a special interest in the question be permitted to be heard by the Special Political Committee.

The Assembly discussed the question at plenary meetings held between 14 and 21 November and on 14 and 16 December. The Special Political Committee, at a meeting on 16 November, heard statements by: Vassos Lyssarides, Secretary-General of the Continuation Committee of the World Conference against Racism, Apartheid and Colonialism in Southern Africa; Charlene Mitchell, Executive Secretary of the National Alliance against Racist and Political Repression; Romesh Chandra, President of the World Peace Council; Guenther Drehfuhr and Abe Feinglass, representatives of the World Peace Council; Lennox Hinds, National Director of the National Conference of Black Lawyers; and Generali Ulimwengu, representative of the Pan-African Youth Movement.

By decision 32/406, adopted without vote on 16 November 1977 on a suggestion by the Assembly President, the Assembly took note of the report of the Special Political Committee on its hearings of organizational representatives.

Statements were made during the Assembly's deliberations by, among others, the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, and the Rapporteur, who introduced the Special Committee's annual report and its three special reports; the President and the Rapporteur of the World Conference for Action against Apartheid; the Rapporteur of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports; Mfanafuthi Johnstone Makatini, of the African National Congress of South Africa; David M. Sibeko, of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania; and Zehdi Labib Terzi, observer for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

During the discussion in the Assembly, the majority of Members strongly condemned the inhuman policy of apartheid and stressed the need for effective measures by the international community to eliminate racial discrimination and repression in South Africa. They deplored the sudden death in detention, in suspicious circumstances on 12 September, of the African leader, Stephen Biko, and the recent wave of banning orders and other repressive measures. Many Members welcomed the recent unanimous decision by the Security Council to impose a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa under Chapter VII, but the view was also expressed that mandatory economic sanctions were necessary to facilitate the speedy eradication of apartheid.

Condemnation of South Africa's bantustan policy was expressed by most speakers; the continuing fragmentation of South Africa through the establishment of so-called independent homelands was deplored, and the majority declared that they had not, and would not, recognize them.

It was noted that a growing number of States were supporting effective international action against the South African regime. The Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid noted that the South African regime and the South African people should be aware that the drive for international action came not alone from third world countries and socialist States, but from all groups of States.

The General Assembly adopted 15 resolutions on the apartheid policies of South Africa—one of which (resolution 32/105 A) concerned the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and is described in the subchapter that follows—and one on assistance to South African refugee students.

INTERNATIONAL ANTI-APARTHEID YEAR

On 14 December 1977, the General Assembly proclaimed the year beginning on 21 March 1978 International Anti-Apartheid Year, and endorsed the programme for the Year recommended by the Special Committee against Apartheid in its special report to the Assembly. The Assembly took this action when it adopted resolution 32/105 B—sponsored by 68 Members—by a recorded vote of 141 to 0.

By the preamble to the text, the Assembly among other things expressed recognition of the imperative need for stepping up the international campaign against apartheid, in pursuance of the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, and took note of the Economic and Social Council's recommendation of 13 May 1977 that the Assembly declare 1978 International Anti-Apartheid Year.

By the operative part of the resolution, after proclaiming the Year, the Assembly requested all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, information media and educational institutions to co-operate in the effective observance of the Year and asked the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to participate. The Special Committee against Apartheid was invited by the Assembly to take all appropriate measures to promote world-wide observance of the Year in solidarity with the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement. Member States were called upon to report to the Secretary-General on the activities organized to mark the Year.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to encourage the widest possible observance of International Anti-Apartheid Year by Governments and organizations and to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Committee. The Assembly also by this resolution decided to make a special budgetary allocation of $300,000 to the Special Committee for special projects in connexion with the Year.

An annex to the resolution contained the programme for the International Anti-Apartheid Year recommended by the Special Committee against Apartheid (see section above).

TRADE UNION ACTION AGAINST APARTHEID

A resolution (32/105 C) on trade union action against apartheid was adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December by a recorded vote of 138 to 0. The text was sponsored by 63 Members.

By the preambular part of the resolution, the Assembly among other things expressed itself as strongly convinced of the importance of action by the trade union movement, at the national and international levels, for the eradication of apartheid. By the operative part of the text it commended the resolution adopted on 11 June 1977 by the Second International Trade Union Conference for Action against Apartheid to the attention of all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations; expressed its appreciation to the trade union organizations for their action against apartheid, particularly the world-wide observance of a Protest Week against Apartheid in January 1977; and invited the trade union organizations to continue and intensify their support for the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement for the eradication of apartheid.

The Special Committee against Apartheid was authorized by the Assembly to hold annual meetings with trade unions, as the Committee had recommended in its special report, and to arrange for the participation of representatives of trade union organizations from southern Africa. It was asked to take all appropriate steps to promote and publicize trade union action against apartheid.

RELATIONS BETWEEN ISRAEL AND SOUTH AFRICA

A resolution on relations between Israel and South Africa, sponsored by 52 Member States, was adopted as resolution 32/105 D by the General Assembly on 14 December by a recorded vote of 88 to 19, with 30 abstentions.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things recalled its repeated condemnations of the intensification of relations and collaboration by Israel with the racist regime of South Africa in the political, military, economic and other fields, noted that Israel had continued to strengthen those relations, and expressed the view that the collaboration had constituted an encouragement to the racist regime of South Africa to persist in its criminal policy of apartheid and was a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and the entire African continent.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly: again strongly condemned Israel for its continuing and increasing collaboration with the racist regime; demanded once again that Israel desist forthwith from such collaboration and, in particular, terminate all collaboration in the military and nuclear fields; and requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review and report to the Assembly and Security Council as appropriate.

POLITICAL PRISONERS IN SOUTH AFRICA

A resolution on political prisoners in South Africa was adopted without a vote by the General Assembly on 14 December as resolution 32/105 E. It was sponsored by 79 States.

By this resolution, the Assembly among other things expressed its grave concern over the continuing repression in South Africa, including the killings of peaceful demonstrators and innocent school children, mass arrests and bannings, and trials under arbitrary repressive laws, as well as ill-treatment, torture and killings of political detainees. The Assembly then strongly condemned the racist regime of South Africa for its killings and ruthless repression of opponents of apartheid and racial discrimination, and for its banning orders against organizations and the information media, and again pledged its solidarity with all political prisoners and detainees in South Africa.

It reiterated its proclamation of 28 November 1975¹⁹ that the United Nations and the international community had a special responsibility towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements and towards those imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their struggle against apartheid. It asked the Special Committee against Apartheid, in co-operation with the Centre against Apartheid and all appropriate organizations, to publicize as widely as possible the cause of the political prisoners, detainees and restrictees in South Africa and to promote campaigns for their unconditional release.

MILITARY AND NUCLEAR COLLABORATION WITH SOUTH AFRICA

On 14 December, a resolution on military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa was adopted by the General Assembly by a recorded vote of 113 to 7, with 17 abstentions, as resolution 32/105 F. It was proposed by 52 Members.

By the text, the Assembly expressed its concern over the continued and rapid military build-up in South Africa, and its alarm at the frantic efforts by the racist regime of South Africa to acquire nuclear-weapon capability. It condemned the regime for, among other things, its massive violence against the oppressed people of South Africa and its repeated acts of aggression against independent African States; it recognized that South Africa's growing militarization and its plans for nuclear development greatly aggravated the threat to international peace and security.

Also, the Assembly condemned the continued collaboration by certain Governments and transnational corporations with the racist regime in defiance of repeated resolutions of the United Nations, enabling it to develop its military arsenal and to undertake nuclear development.

The Assembly recalled its requests to the Security Council to take mandatory measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter, to secure the full implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa and a cessation of all military co-operation with the racist regime of South Africa, and noted the adoption by the Council of its resolution 418(1977) on 4 November.

After expressing regret that three permanent members of the Security Council—France, the United Kingdom and the United States—had continued to resist a comprehensive embargo on military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime, the Assembly:

(1) called on all Governments to implement Security Council resolution 418(1977) without any reservations and qualifications whatsoever and irrespective of any existing contracts and licences already issued, and to ensure that all corporations, organizations, and individuals within their jurisdiction abided by its provisions;

(2) called on all States, in particular France, the United Kingdom and the United States, to co-operate fully in effective international action, in accordance with Chapter VII, to avert the grave menace to the peace resulting from the policies and actions of the racist regime of South Africa;

(3) requested the Security Council, in particular, to call upon all States, under Chapter VII and irrespective of any existing contracts, to, among other things, refrain from supplying arms, ammunition, military equipment or vehicles, or spare parts thereof, to South Africa, without any exceptions; revoke all licences and terminate all technical assistance for the manufacture of military equipment and supplies in South Africa; and prohibit companies, institutions or agencies within their jurisdiction from any co-operation with South Africa, directly or through participation in companies registered in South Africa, in its military build-up or nuclear development;

(4) further requested the Security Council to establish machinery for supervising the implementation of the measures referred to above;

(5) invited all Governments and organizations to take all appropriate action to promote the purposes of this resolution; and

(6) authorized the Special Committee against Apartheid to follow and publicize all developments concerning military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa and to report to the Assembly and the Security Council all alleged violations of Council resolution 418(1977), and to consult with experts, hold hearings and encourage conferences and campaigns to promote a total cessation of such collaboration with the racist regime.

ECONOMIC COLLABORATION WITH SOUTH AFRICA

A resolution on economic collaboration with South Africa—sponsored by 63 Members—was adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1977 by a recorded vote of 111 to 7, with 22 abstentions.

By the preamble to the resolution, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed that any collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa constituted a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa, and expressed its conviction that mandatory economic sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter were essential to facilitate the speedy eradication of apartheid. It also condemned the increased collaboration by certain Governments and transnational corporations with the racist regime.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly:

(1) requested the Security Council urgently to consider mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa;

(2) called on all States to cease economic collaboration with South Africa and take effective action to prevent such collaboration by corporations within their jurisdiction;

(3) requested States in particular to prohibit all loans to and investments in South Africa, to terminate all incentives for trade and exchanges of trade missions with South Africa, to impose an embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to and on investment in the petroleum industry in South Africa; and to deny facilities to airlines and shipping companies providing services to and from South Africa;

(4) encouraged trade unions, churches, anti-apartheid movements and other organizations in their campaigns against collaboration with South Africa;

(5) requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to: publicize all collaboration by transnational corporations with the racist regime; promote an oil embargo against and termination of airline and shipping services to and from South Africa; and take all other appropriate steps to promote implementation of this resolution; and

(6) requested all Governments and organizations to co-operate with the Special Committee in that implementation.

DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION ON APARTHEID

On 14 December 1977, a resolution on dissemination of information on apartheid was adopted by the General Assembly by a recorded vote of 140 to 0, as resolution 32/105 H. It was sponsored by 61 countries.

The Assembly thereby appealed to all Governments to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid and requested the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Centre against Apartheid to utilize the Trust Fund particularly for the production of audio-visual material and for assistance to appropriate organizations, with a view to disseminating information material on apartheid. Governments and organizations were asked to co-operate with the Special Committee and the Centre.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to undertake, in co-operation with Member States whose transmitters could be heard in southern Africa, regular radio broadcasts directed at South Africa, concerned with United Nations efforts against apartheid and in support of the right of self-determination as well as with related matters of interest to the peoples of southern Africa. Those Member States were also urged to make transmission facilities available.

The Assembly asked the Centre against Apartheid, in co-operation with the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat, to lend assistance for these transmissions, in particular to African radio stations broadcasting to South Africa, to expand the production and distribution of information material in various languages, giving special attention to the production of audio-visual material; and to organize essay competitions on apartheid. The Secretary-General and Member States were asked to issue special postage stamps on apartheid.

The Assembly commended the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for their studies and information activities on apartheid, and requested all the specialized agencies to co-operate with the Centre against Apartheid towards co-ordinated efforts for the widest possible dissemination of information on apartheid.

PROGRAMME OF WORK OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 136 to 0, with 4 abstentions, resolution 32/105 I on the programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid, which was sponsored by 58 Members.

By this resolution, the Assembly among other things approved the recommendations of the Special Committee on its programme of work and on co-operation with other United Nations bodies. The Special Committee was authorized to send missions to Member States and to the headquarters of the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to promote international action against apartheid and the observance of International Anti-Apartheid Year; to intensify co-operation with the movement of non-aligned countries and OAU, to participate in conferences concerned with apartheid; to invite representatives of the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU and those of other organizations active in opposition to apartheid, as well as experts, for consultations on various aspects of and on international action against apartheid; and to associate representatives of the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU with its missions.

The General Assembly further requested and authorized the Special Committee, in co-operation with international and national organizations, to organize or promote the organization of conferences against apartheid, and to promote assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements. The Committee was authorized to send representatives to attend meetings of the Governing Board of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and other bodies concerned with apartheid and assistance to South Africans. It was encouraged to promote international campaigns for: cessation of military, nuclear, economic and other collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa; unconditional release of all persons imprisoned or restricted for their opposition to apartheid; and public collections to assist the oppressed people of South Africa and the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU.

ASSISTANCE TO THE NATIONAL LIBERATION MOVEMENT OF SOUTH AFRICA

The Assembly on 14 December adopted—by a recorded vote of 112 to 9, with 17 abstentions—a resolution (32/105 J) on assistance to the national liberation movement of South Africa, which was sponsored by 65 powers.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things noted that the racist regime of South Africa had further aggravated racial discrimination, domination and exploitation of the great majority of the people of South Africa and had intensified ruthless repression in order to enforce its criminal policy. The Assembly recognized that the policies and action of the racist regime had aggravated a threat to the peace in southern Africa, that their continuation would lead to a wider conflict, and that the eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial society in South Africa were essential for peace and security in southern Africa.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly: (1) reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, to determine, on the basis of majority rule, the future of South Africa; (2) further reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement for the eradication of apartheid and the exercise of their right of self-determination; (3) declared that, in view of the intransigence of the racist regime, its defiance of resolutions of the United Nations and its continued imposition of the criminal policy of apartheid, the national liberation movement had an inalienable right to continue its struggle for the seizure of power by all available and appropriate means of its choice, including armed struggle; and (4) further declared that the international community should provide all assistance to that movement in its legitimate struggle, and exercise all its authority, under the provisions of the Charter, including Chapter VII, to facilitate the transfer of power from the minority racist regime to the genuine representatives of all the people of South Africa.

SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the situation in South Africa, sponsored by 61 Member States and adopted by a recorded vote of 113 to 0, with 27 abstentions, as resolution 32/105 K.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things expressed its awareness of the special responsibility of the United Nations and the international community towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement and towards those imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their struggle against apartheid. It commended the heroic struggle of those people for their inalienable rights, and noted that the racist regime was continuing its policy of apartheid, repression, bantustanization and aggression, in flagrant defiance of United Nations resolutions, thereby gravely aggravating the threat to international peace and security.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Assembly: (1) strongly condemned the illegitimate minority racist regime of South Africa for its criminal policies and actions; (2) declared that South Africa belonged to all its people, irrespective of race, colour or creed; (3) proclaimed its full support of the national liberation movement as the authentic representative of the South African people, in its just struggle; (4) again condemned the establishment of bantustans and called upon all Governments to implement fully the provisions of its resolution of 26 October 1976;²⁰ (5) declared that any collaboration with the racist regime and apartheid institutions was a hostile act against the purposes and principles of the United Nations; (6) commended all Governments and organizations which had taken action against apartheid and in support of the South African national liberation movement in accordance with United Nations resolutions; and (7) invited all States and organizations to take all appropriate measures to persuade Governments, transnational corporations and other institutions which continued to collaborate with the racist regime of South Africa to abide by the resolutions of the United Nations.

WORLD CONFERENCE FOR ACTION AGAINST APARTHEID

A resolution (32/105 L) on the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos, Nigeria, from 22 to 26 August 1977, was adopted on 14 December by the General Assembly by a recorded vote of 140 to 0, on a proposal by 74 States.

By the text, the Assembly said it considered that the World Conference had been an important event in promoting international action in support of the struggle of the South African people to eradicate apartheid and racial discrimination and to build a society based on the principle of equality of all persons, irrespective of race, colour or creed. It expressed its awareness of the special responsibility of the United Nations and the international community towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements and towards those imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their struggle against apartheid.

The Assembly then: (1) endorsed the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid adopted at the Conference and commended it to all Governments and organizations for appropriate and urgent action; (2) requested the Secretary-General to ensure maximum publicity to that Declaration and all other Conference documents and records; (3) expressed its great appreciation to the Government of Nigeria, OAU, the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU and all others concerned for their co-operation in ensuring the success of the Conference; and (4) encouraged the Special Committee against Apartheid to take all appropriate steps, within its mandate, towards the effective implementation of the Lagos Declaration.

INTERNATIONAL DECLARATION AGAINST APARTHEID IN SPORTS

The General Assembly on 14 December adopted—by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 14 abstentions—resolution 32/105 M and proclaimed an International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports, as proposed by 56 countries.

By this text, the Assembly, after reaffirming the importance of effective international action to abolish apartheid in sports and in all other fields, adopted the International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports (which it annexed to the resolution), which had been recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports. The Ad Hoc Committee was asked to draft an international convention against apartheid in sports for submission to the Assembly at its regular 1978 session. It was authorized to consult with representatives of the organizations concerned and experts on apartheid in sports. The Secretary-General was asked to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee. The International Declaration annexed to the resolution contained a preamble and 18 articles.

BANTUSTANS

A resolution on bantustans, sponsored by 63 Members, was adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December by a recorded vote of 140 to 0, as resolution 32/105 N.

By the preamble part of this text, the Assembly among other things reiterated its view that the bantustan policy was designed to divide the African people of South Africa and deprive them of their inalienable rights in the country. It also expressed its conviction that the racist regime of South Africa sought to establish bantustans as reservoirs of cheap labour, strategic hamlets and buffer zones against the struggle for freedom in the country as a whole, and noted that the African people of South Africa had rejected and opposed bantustans and the tribal chiefs who had collaborated with the regime in their creation.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly: (1) again denounced the establishment of bantustans as designed to consolidate the inhuman policy of apartheid, to destroy the territorial integrity of the country, to perpetuate white minority domination and to deprive the African people of South Africa of their inalienable rights; (2) denounced the declaration of the so-called independence of Transkei and that of Bophuthatswana and any other bantustans which might be created by the racist regime and declared them totally invalid; (3) reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the African people of South Africa in the country as a whole; (4) declared its firm support to Lesotho and any other State which might be subjected to threats and pressures by the racist regime in the pursuit of its bantustan policy; (5) again called on all Governments to deny any recognition to the so-called independent bantustans, to refrain from any dealings with them and to reject travel documents issued by them; and (6) again requested all States to take effective measures to prohibit all individuals, corporations and other institutions under their jurisdiction from having any dealings with those bantustans.

INVESTMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA

The General Assembly on 16 December adopted—by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 5 abstentions—a resolution on investments in South Africa, sponsored by 29 countries and adopted as resolution 32/105 O.

By the preamble part of this text, the Assembly among other things expressed its conviction that a cessation of new foreign investments in South Africa would constitute an important step in the struggle against apartheid, as such investments abetted and encouraged the apartheid policies of that country. The Assembly, while noting with regret that the Security Council had been unable to reach agreement on steps to achieve the cessation of such investments, welcomed as positive steps governments' decisions on measures to achieve the cessation of investments from their countries in South Africa. The Assembly also noted that while there had been some decrease in the flow of new foreign investments into South Africa since the Assembly's decision of 9 November 1976²¹ a number of foreign economic and financial interests had continued and increased their investments.

By the operative paragraph of this resolution, the Assembly urged the Security Council, when studying the problem of the continued struggle against the apartheid policies of South Africa, to consider again steps to achieve, at an early date, the cessation of foreign investments in South Africa.

ASSISTANCE TO SOUTH AFRICAN STUDENT REFUGEES

On the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly on 16 December adopted, without vote, resolution 32/119, on assistance to South African student refugees. The text was proposed in the Third Committee by 38 Members and approved by it by consensus on 7 December.

By the preamble part of this text, the Assembly among other things: expressed deep concern that the Government of South Africa continued to take more and more repressive measures against students in that country; noted with concern the continuing influx of South African refugees, including students in particular, into neighbouring countries; and expressed concern over the pressure on the educational systems of the three host countries—Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland—as a result of the continued influx of children from South Africa seeking freedom from repression and also an opportunity to further their studies.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly endorsed the measures taken by the Secretary-General and UNHCR for the mobilization of a programme of assistance to South African student refugees in Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland. It noted with appreciation the generous contributions of the Governments of those three countries in providing asylum and making available educational facilities for student refugees, and the contributions made by Member States, organizations and United Nations agencies. It expressed concern, however, that the total assistance received fell short of needs and urged all Governments, organizations and United Nations agencies to contribute generously towards the assistance programmes for these student refugees, both through financial support and by offering care and subsistence, education and vocational training.

The Assembly also requested all agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, including in particular UNESCO, UNDP, the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, to assist the High Commissioner in carrying out the humanitarian task entrusted to him. It asked the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to strengthen their efforts to mobilize emergency financial and other assistance for these student refugees in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia. It further asked the Secretary-General to undertake a similar programme of assistance for South African student refugees in Zambia, to arrange for a review of the matter in time for it to be considered by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular 1978 session, and to report to the General Assembly in 1978.

Related Assembly decisions

The General Assembly at its regular 1977 session adopted a number of resolutions which had a bearing on the question of apartheid. The relevant portions of these are described briefly below.

STATUS OF THE CONVENTION ON THE CRIME OF APARTHEID

By its resolution 32/12, adopted on 7 November 1977, on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the General Assembly among other things: took note of a report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention; expressed its satisfaction with the increase in the number of ratifications and accessions; and requested States not parties to the Convention to accede to it as soon as possible.

(For details, see p. 686.)

TORTURE OF POLITICAL PRISONERS AND DETAINEES IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

The General Assembly on 8 December 1977 adopted resolution 32/65 on torture of political prisoners and detainees in southern Africa, by which, among other things, it condemned the South African regime for its continuing violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Assembly's 1975 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.²² It reiterated its aversion to subjecting opponents of apartheid to summary banning, detention, imprisonment and sometimes murder, and condemned the practice of subjecting political detainees and other victims of apartheid to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

The Assembly condemned in particular the arbitrary arrest, detention and torture which led to the murder of Stephen Biko by agents of the South African regime.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly demanded that the apartheid regime: release all political prisoners without pre-condition; lift all banning and house arrest orders imposed on opponents of apartheid; and end the indiscriminate use of violence against peaceful demonstrators against apartheid and the persistent recourse to torture of political detainees.

(For details, see p. 712.)

PROTECTION OF PERSONS DETAINED FOR STRUGGLING AGAINST APARTHEID

By its resolution 32/122, adopted on 16 December 1977, on protection of persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle against apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, colonialism, aggression and foreign occupation and for self-determination, independence and social progress for their people, the General Assembly recalled that the Security Council had strongly condemned the policy of apartheid as a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind and a serious breach of international peace and security, and had emphasized the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination.

The Assembly among other things demanded the release of all such individuals and asked the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give particular attention to the question of their release.

DECADE FOR ACTION TO COMBAT RACISM AND RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

By a resolution (32/10) which it adopted on 7 December 1977 concerning the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, the General Assembly among other things reaffirmed its resolve to achieve the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and noted that, despite the support given to the Programme for the Decade by the international community, intolerable conditions continued to prevail in southern Africa and elsewhere, including the inhuman and odious application of apartheid and racial discrimination. It was convinced that a serious threat was posed to international peace and security by the defiance of United Nations decisions relating to apartheid by the racist regimes of southern Africa.

The Assembly condemned once again the policies of apartheid, racism and racial discrimination which prevailed in southern Africa and renewed its strong support for oppressed peoples struggling to liberate themselves. It further urged United Nations organs, specialized agencies and other organizations to increase their material and moral support to the national liberation movements and the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid.

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF THE RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

By resolution 32/14, adopted on 7 November 1977—on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights—the General Assembly among other things affirmed that bantustanization was incompatible with genuine independence, unity and national sovereignty and would have the effect of perpetuating the power of the white minority and the racist system of apartheid in South Africa. It condemned bantustanization and reiterated its support for the oppressed people of South Africa in their struggle against the racist minority regime in Pretoria.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DECLARATION ON THE GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

By resolution 32/42, adopted on 7 December 1977, on implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the General Assembly among other things strongly condemned all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with the Government of South Africa and called upon all States concerned to cease forthwith all such collaboration.

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

By resolution 32/35, adopted on 28 November 1977, on the activities of foreign economic and other interests which were impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence, the General Assembly strongly condemned all States which collaborated politically, diplomatically, economically and militarily with South Africa in flagrant violation of the relevant United Nations resolutions, particularly the United States, France, the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Japan, Belgium and Italy.

The Assembly also strongly condemned the United States, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel for collaborating with South Africa in nuclear matters and requested all Governments to refrain from supplying the South African regime, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment. It also requested all countries which supplied crude oil and petroleum products to cease forthwith all such exports to the racist regimes in southern Africa and to take the necessary measures against oil companies which continued to deliver oil to those regimes in violation of United Nations resolutions on sanctions.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DECLARATION ON THE DENUCLEARIZATION OF AFRICA

By resolution 32/81, adopted on 12 December 1977, on implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa (adopted in 1964 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU), the General Assembly among other things: condemned any attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa; demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion on that continent or elsewhere; and requested the Security Council to take appropriate effective steps to prevent South Africa from developing and acquiring nuclear weapons, thereby endangering international peace and security. The Assembly appealed to all States to refrain from any co-operation with South Africa in the nuclear field that would enable it to acquire nuclear weapons, and to dissuade corporations, institutions and individuals within their jurisdiction from any such co-operation.

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE ORGANIZATION OF AFRICAN UNITY

By resolution 32/19, adopted on 11 November 1977, on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, the General Assembly among other things reaffirmed the determination of the United Nations, in co-operation with OAU, to intensify efforts to end colonialism and racial discrimination and to end apartheid in southern Africa. It requested the Secretary-General to continue taking measures necessary to strengthen co-operation at all levels between the two organizations in accordance with relevant resolutions, particularly with regard to assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in South Africa; in this connexion, it drew attention to OAU's Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1977, a total of 460 South African students were studying abroad—in 18 countries—on scholarships granted under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, which the General Assembly established in 1967.

In the period from 1 October 1976 to 30 September 1977, 459 applications were received from South Africans, 205 new awards were granted and 255 awards were extended.

When the General Assembly reviewed the Programme at its 1977 session, it adopted resolution 32/37 on 28 November by which, among other things, it appealed again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to the Programme in order to ensure its continuation and expansion in the light of the increased needs.

Resolution 417 (1977), as proposed by 3 powers, S/12309/Rev.1, adopted unanimously (15 votes to 0) by Council on 31 October 1977, meeting 2045.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 392(1976) of 19 June 1976, strongly condemning the racist regime of South Africa for its resort to massive violence against and wanton killings of the African people, including schoolchildren and students and others opposing racial discrimination, and calling upon the South African racist regime urgently to end violence against the African people and to take urgent steps to eliminate apartheid and racial discrimination,

Noting with deep anxiety and indignation that the South African racist regime has continued violence and massive repression against the black people and all opponents of apartheid in defiance of the resolutions of the Security Council,

Gravely concerned over reports of torture of political prisoners and the deaths of a number of detainees, as well as the mounting wave of repression against individuals, organizations and the news media since 19 October 1977,

Convinced that the violence and repression by the South African racist regime have greatly aggravated the situation in South Africa and will certainly lead to violent conflict and racial conflagration with serious international repercussions,

Reaffirming its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination,

Affirming the right to the exercise of self-determination by all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed,

Mindful of its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

1. Strongly condemns the South African racist regime for its resort to massive violence and repression against the black people, who constitute the great majority of the country, as well as all other opponents of apartheid;

2. Expresses its support for, and solidarity with, all those struggling for the elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination and all victims of violence and repression by the South African racist regime;

3. Demands that the racist regime of South Africa:

(a) End violence and repression against the black people and other opponents of apartheid;

(b) Release all persons imprisoned under arbitrary security laws and all those detained for their opposition to apartheid;

(c) Cease forthwith its indiscriminate violence against peaceful demonstrators against apartheid, murders in detention and torture of political prisoners;

(d) Abrogate the bans on organizations and the news media opposed to apartheid;

(e) Abolish the "Bantu education" system and all other measures of apartheid and racial discrimination;

(f) Abolish the policy of bantustanization, abandon the policy of apartheid and ensure majority rule based on justice and equality;

4. Requests all Governments and organizations to take all appropriate measures to secure the implementation of paragraph 3 of the present resolution;

5. Further requests all Governments and organizations to contribute generously for assistance to the victims of violence and repression, including educational assistance to student refugees from South Africa;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to follow the situation and report to the Security Council, as appropriate, on the implementation of the present resolution, and to submit a first report not later than 17 February 1978.

Resolution 418 (1977), as proposed following consultations among Council members, S/12436, and as orally corrected by Council President, adopted unanimously (15 votes to 0) by Council on 4 November 1977, meeting 2046.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 392 (1976) of 19 June 1976, strongly condemning the South African Government for its resort to massive violence against and killings of the African people, including schoolchildren and students and others opposing racial discrimination, and calling upon that Government urgently to end violence against the African people and to take urgent steps to eliminate apartheid and racial discrimination,

Recognizing that the military build-up by South Africa and its persistent acts of aggression against the neighbouring States seriously disturb the security of those States,

Further recognizing that the existing arms embargo must be strengthened and universally applied, without any reservations or qualifications whatsoever, in order to prevent a further aggravation of the grave situation in South Africa,

Taking note of the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, Gravely concerned that South Africa is at the threshold of producing nuclear weapons,

Strongly condemning the South African Government for its acts of repression, its defiant continuance of the system of apartheid and its attacks against neighbouring independent States,

Considering that the policies and acts of the South African Government are fraught with danger to international peace and security,

Recalling its resolution 181(1963) of 7 August 1963 and other resolutions concerning a voluntary arms embargo against South Africa,

Convinced that a mandatory arms embargo needs to be universally applied against South Africa in the first instance,

Acting therefore under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Determines, having regard to the policies and acts of the South African Government, that the acquisition by South Africa of arms and related materiel constitutes a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security;

2. Decides that all States shall cease forthwith any provision to South Africa of arms and related materiel of all types, including the sale or transfer of weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, paramilitary police equipment, and spare parts for the aforementioned, and shall cease as well the provision of all types of equipment and supplies and grants of licensing arrangements for the manufacture or maintenance of the aforementioned;

3. Calls upon all States to review, having regard to the objectives of the present resolution, all existing contractual arrangements with and licences granted to South Africa relating to the manufacture and maintenance of arms, ammunition of all types and military equipment and vehicles, with a view to terminating them;

4. Further decides that all States shall refrain from any co-operation with South Africa in the manufacture and development of nuclear weapons;

5. Calls upon all States, including States non-members of the United Nations, to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the progress of the implementation of the present resolution, the first report to be submitted not later than 1 May 1978;

7. Decides to keep this item on its agenda for further action, as appropriate, in the light of developments.

Resolution 421 (1977), as proposed by 3 powers, S/12477, adopted unanimously (15 votes to 0) by Council on 9 December 1977, meeting 2052.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, in which it determined, having regard to the policies and acts of the South African Government, that the acquisition by South Africa of arms and related materiel constituted a threat to the maintenance of international peace and security and established a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa,

Mindful of the need to have appropriate machinery in order to examine the progress of implementation of the measures envisaged in resolution 418(1977),

Noting that it requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the progress of the implementation of resolution 418(1977),

1. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council, consisting of all the members of the Council, to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(a) To examine the report on the progress of the implementation of resolution 418 (1977) which will be submitted by the Secretary-General;

(b) To study ways and means by which the mandatory arms embargo could be made more effective against South Africa and to make recommendations to the Council;

(c) To seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of the provisions laid down in resolution 418 (1977);

2. Calls upon all States to co-operate fully with the Committee in regard to the fulfilment of its tasks concerning the effective implementation of the provisions of resolution 418 (1977) and to supply such information as may be sought by the Committee in pursuance of the present resolution;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for that purpose, including the provision of appropriate staff for the servicing of the Committee.

Resolution 2087 (LXII), as proposed by 4 powers, E/L.1764, as orally amended by sponsors, adopted without vote by Council on 13 May 1977, meeting 2060.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3057 (XXVIII) of 2 November 1973 and its own resolution 1990 (LX) of 11 May 1976,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 31/6 G of 9 November 1976, authorized the Special Committee against Apartheid to organize a World Conference for Action against Apartheid in 1977,

Recalling further its resolution 2082 B (LXII) in which it recommended that the General Assembly should declare 1978 International Anti-Apartheid Year,

Conscious of the imperative need for effective international action against apartheid during the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

1. Welcomes the generous offer made by the Government of Nigeria to act as host to the World Conference for Action against Apartheid at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977;

2. Urges all Member States, specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations concerned, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to lend their maximum co-operation to ensure the success of the World Conference for Action against Apartheid;

3. Invites the Special Committee against Apartheid to submit the report and documents of the World Conference for Action against Apartheid to the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

International Anti-Apartheid Year

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the imperative need for stepping up the international campaign against apartheid, under the auspices of the United Nations and in pursuance of the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2082 B (LXII) of 13 May 1977, in which the Council recommended that the General Assembly should declare 1978 International Anti-Apartheid Year,

Further taking note of resolution CM/Res.591 (XXIX) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-ninth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 23 June to 3 July 1977, regarding the International Anti-Apartheid Year,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid concerning the proposed International Anti-Apartheid Year,

1. Proclaims the year beginning on 21 March 1978 International Anti-Apartheid Year;

2. Endorses the Programme for the International Anti-Apartheid Year recommended by the Special Committee against Apartheid in its special report, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Requests all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, information media and educational institutions to co-operate in the effective observance of the International Anti-Apartheid year;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular, to participate fully in the observance of the International Anti-Apartheid Year, in accordance with their mandates and in co-operation with the United Nations;

5. Invites the Special Committee to take all appropriate measures to promote the world-wide observance of the International Anti-Apartheid year, in full solidarity with the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement;

6. Calls upon Member States to report to the Secretary-General on the activities organized to mark the International Anti-Apartheid year;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage the widest possible observance of the International Anti-Apartheid year by Governments and organizations and to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Committee in the discharge of its responsibilities;

8. Decides to make a special allocation of $300,000 to the budget of the Special Committee from the budget of the United Nations, to be utilized for special projects to be decided upon by the Committee in observance of the International Anti-Apartheid year in consultation with the Secretary-General.

ANNEX

Programme for the International Anti-Apartheid Year

I. PURPOSE OF THE INTERNATIONAL YEAR

1. The main objective of the International Anti-Apartheid Year should be to make world opinion fully aware of:

(a) The inhumanity of apartheid and its wider dangers to international peace;

(b) The struggle of the oppressed people, under the leadership of their liberation movements, to attain freedom and human equality;

(c) The noble objectives of the liberation movements of the South African people and their contribution to the purposes of the United Nations;

(d) The cause of all those imprisoned, banned, banished and otherwise persecuted for their opposition to apartheid;

(e) The imperative need for the cessation of any collaboration with the South African regime in the military, political, economic or other fields which encourages it to persist in the policies of apartheid;

(f) The need for international assistance to enable the South African people to eradicate apartheid and establish a new society, based on the exercise of the right to self-determination by all the people of the country as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed.

2. The observance of the International Anti-Apartheid year should promote:

(a) Further isolation of the South African regime;

(b) Intensification of the international campaign against apartheid;

(c) Greatly increased assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements by Governments and organizations as well as the public in general;

(d) Maximum publicity to the inhumanity of apartheid and the international efforts for its elimination.

3. During the International Anti-Apartheid year, efforts should be made to promote the establishment of anti-apartheid and solidarity movements or committees, with broad public support, in all regions where they do not exist and to encourage practical arrangements for closest liaison among such organizations and between them and the United Nations.

II. PROGRAMME FOR THE INTERNATIONAL ANTI-APARTHEID YEAR

A. General

4. The President of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General and the Chairmen of all United Nations bodies concerned (Special Committee against Apartheid, Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, United Nations Council for Namibia and Commission on Human Rights), as well as the executive heads of the specialized agencies, should be invited to issue messages in connexion with the International Anti-Apartheid Year. These messages should be widely disseminated all over the world.

5. The United Nations bodies concerned should be invited to consider, as early as possible, their contribution to the observance of the International Anti-Apartheid Year.

6. All Heads of State and Government should be invited to issue special messages in connexion with the International Anti-Apartheid Year.

7. All Governments and organizations should be invited to ensure the most effective observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (21 March), the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa (16 June) and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October).

8. All those Governments which have not done so should be urged to cease completely all kinds of collaboration with the apartheid regime in military, political, economic, cultural and any other fields and to implement the corresponding decisions and resolutions of the United Nations.

9. All those Governments which have not done so should be urged to become parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid during the International Anti-Apartheid Year.

10. The General Assembly should devote a special meeting on 11 October or 10 December 1978 to the International Anti-Apartheid Year.

B. Action by the Secretary-General

11. The Secretary-General should be requested to publicize as widely as possible, through the Centre against Apartheid and the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat, and through all media:

(a) Actions taken by the United Nations and the specialized agencies for the eradication of apartheid;

(b) Information on political prisoners in South Africa;

(c) Documents on the struggle for liberation in South Africa.

12. He should be requested to take all appropriate steps to promote the full implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations on apartheid and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid.

13. He should further be requested to make appropriate arrangements, in consultation with the agencies concerned, for the co-ordination of plans for the observance of the International Anti-Apartheid Year by the United Nations system of organizations.

C. Action by Governments

14. All Governments should be requested:

(a) To proclaim the International Anti-Apartheid Year and encourage cities and non-governmental organizations to proclaim the Year;

(b) To encourage parliaments to hold special sessions devoted to the International Anti-Apartheid Year, for instance on 21 March 1978, the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

(c) To establish national committees for the International Anti-Apartheid Year to ensure maximum publicity for its objectives, or to designate the anti-apartheid movements or similar organizations, where they exist, as the national committees for the Year;

(d) To encourage the information media to give maximum publicity to the International Anti-Apartheid Year and its purposes and; in this connexion, to the just struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements;

(e) To promote the widest dissemination of information against apartheid in educational institutions;

(f) To review actions taken in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations on apartheid and to consider further action, particularly for the full implementation of the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid concerning the cessation of military, nuclear, economic and other collaboration with South Africa;

(g) To increase moral, material and political assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements;

(h) To invite leaders of the liberation movements and other opponents of apartheid in South Africa in order to publicize the objectives of the struggle for freedom and human dignity in South Africa;

(i) To arrange, wherever practicable, public collections for assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements;

(j) To make generous special contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid for the observance of the International Anti-Apartheid Year, and to increase contributions to funds for assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa.

D. Action by specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations

15. The specialized agencies and other institutions within the United Nations system, as well as other intergovernmental organizations, should be requested:

(a) To publicize, each within its mandate, the inhumanity of apartheid and the international efforts for its elimination;

(b) To publicize more widely, or initiate, studies on apartheid, within their mandates, in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid.

16. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in particular, should be invited, in co-operation with the United Nations, to publicize the actions of all United Nations agencies against apartheid and to pay special attention to material for educational institutions and to audio-visual information.

17. The International Labour Organisation should be invited to co-operate closely with the Special Committee against Apartheid with regard to the observance of the International Anti-Apartheid Year by the trade union movement at the international and national levels.

18. The Universal Postal Union should be invited to encourage the issuance of special stamps for the International Anti-Apartheid year.

19. The World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations should be invited, in co-operation with the United Nations, to publicize widely the effects of apartheid within their respective mandates.

20. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees should be invited, in co-operation with the United Nations and other agencies, to publicize the needs for assistance of the refugees from South Africa and the inhumanity of the apartheid system which caused the efflux of refugees.

21. The specialized agencies and other institutions within the United Nations system, as well as other intergovernmental organizations, should be requested to review assistance provided by them to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements and consider means to increase such assistance as required.

E. Action by trade unions, churches and other non-governmental organizations

22. Trade unions, churches, anti-apartheid and solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations should be requested:

(a) To undertake further action against apartheid in the light of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly General Assembly resolution 31/6 J of 9 November 1976 entitled "Programme of Action against Apartheid";

(b) To give priority during the International Anti-Apartheid Year to action against apartheid and formulate concrete programmes for that purpose;

(c) To co-operate with the Special Committee against Apartheid in promoting the widest and most effective observance of the International Anti-Apartheid Year.

F. Action by the Special Committee against Apartheid

23. The Special Committee against Apartheid should be requested to take any appropriate action to promote the widest and most effective observance of the International Anti-Apartheid Year and, in this connexion:

(a) To maintain close co-operation with the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies, the Organization of African Unity and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned;

(b) To take active steps to promote increased assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements—through funds of the United Nations and of the Organization of African Unity and other channels—and, in this connexion, to encourage public collections for this purpose;

(c) To promote the cessation of any political, military, nuclear, economic and other collaboration with the apartheid regime;

(d) To arrange, in co-operation with Governments and appropriate organizations, regional seminars and seminars for workers, students, women and churchmen on aspects of apartheid;

(e) To participate effectively in the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

(f) To promote accession by all States which have not yet done so to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.

24. The Special Committee against Apartheid should be authorized to send delegations to meet with the executive heads of specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to consult on plans for the International Anti-Apartheid Year. It should be authorized further to send representatives to various regions of the world to consult with Governments, organizations and the information media to promote the Year.

25. Under the guidance of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Centre against Apartheid should be requested and authorized:

(a) To increase publicity against apartheid and give special emphasis to audio-visual material;

(b) To publish, in co-operation with the Office of Public Information, a bulletin on the observance of the International Anti-Apartheid Year;

(c) To take any other appropriate action to promote the observance of the International Anti-Apartheid year in all countries.

Trade union action against apartheid

The General Assembly,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid concerning the Second International Trade Union Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Geneva on 10 and 11 June 1977,

Strongly convinced of the importance of action by the trade union movement, at the national and international levels, for the eradication of apartheid,

1. Commends the resolution adopted by the Second International Trade Union Conference for Action against Apartheid on 11 June 1977 to the attention of all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the trade union organizations for their action against apartheid, particularly the worldwide observance of the Protest Week against Apartheid in January 1977;

3. Invites the trade union organizations to continue and intensify their active support for the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement for the eradication of apartheid;

4. Authorizes the Special Committee against Apartheid to hold annual meetings with trade unions, as recommended in paragraph 11 of its special report, and to arrange for the participation of representatives of trade union organizations from southern Africa;

5. Requests the Special Committee to take all appropriate steps to promote and publicize trade union action against apartheid.

Relations between Israel and South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its repeated condemnations of the intensification of relations and collaboration by Israel with the racist regime of South Africa in the political, military, economic and other fields, in particular resolution 31/6 E of 9 November 1976,

Taking note of the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid concerning recent developments in relations between Israel and South Africa,

Recalling Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977,

Noting with grave anxiety that Israel has continued further to strengthen its relations with the racist regime of South Africa in defiance of the resolutions of the General Assembly,

Considering that the collaboration by Israel has constituted an encouragement to the racist regime of South Africa to persist in its criminal policy of apartheid and is a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and the entire African continent,

1. Again strongly condemns Israel for its continuing and increasing collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa;

2. Demands once again that Israel desist forthwith from such collaboration and, in particular, terminate all collaboration in the military and nuclear fields;

3. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review and report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

A/32/L.24 and Add.1. Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia: draft resolution.

Resolution 32/105 E, as proposed by 79 powers, A/32/L.24 and Add.1, and as orally amended by sponsors, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1977, meeting 102.

Political prisoners in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Gravely concerned over the continuing repression in South Africa, including the killings of peaceful demonstrators and innocent schoolchildren, mass arrests and bannings, and trials under arbitrary repressive laws, as well as ill-treatment, torture and killings of political detainees,

Noting the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights, as well as Security Council resolution 417 (1977) of 31 October 1977,

Recalling its resolution 31/6 C of 9 November 1976 on solidarity with South African political prisoners,

Considering that the killings and repression by the racist regime of South Africa further aggravate the threat to international peace and security,

1. Strongly condemns the racist regime of South Africa for its killings and ruthless repression of opponents of apartheid and racial discrimination, and its banning orders against organizations and the information media;

2. Again pledges its solidarity with all political prisoners and detainees in South Africa;

3. Reiterates its proclamation, in resolution 3411 C (XXX) of 28 November 1975, that the United Nations and the international community have a special responsibility towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements, and towards those imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their struggle against apartheid;

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid, in co-operation with the Centre against Apartheid and all appropriate organizations, to publicize as widely as possible the cause of the political prisoners, detainees and restrictees in South Africa and to promote campaigns for their unconditional release.

A/32/L.25 and Add. 1. Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Chad, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Hungary, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nigeria, Qatar, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yemen, Zambia: draft resolution.

Resolution 32/105 F, as proposed by 52 powers, A/32/L.25 and Add.1, adopted by Assembly on 14 December 1977, meeting 102, by recorded vote of 113 to 7, with 17 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia

Against: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Luxembourg, United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Canada, Central African Empire, Costa Rica, Denmark, Guatemala, Iceland, Ireland, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Surinam.

Military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa

The General Assembly,
Gravely concerned over the continued and rapid military build-up in South Africa,

Alarmed at the frantic efforts by the racist regime of South Africa to acquire nuclear-weapon capability,

Strongly condemning the racist regime of South Africa for its massive violence against the oppressed people of South Africa, its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its assistance to the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia and its repeated acts of aggression against independent African States,

Recognizing that the growing militarization of South Africa and its plans for nuclear development greatly aggravate the threat to international peace and security,

Condemning the continued collaboration by certain Governments and transnational corporations with the racist regime in defiance of repeated resolutions of the United Nations, enabling that regime to develop its military arsenal and to undertake nuclear development,

Recalling its requests to the Security Council to take mandatory measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to secure the full implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa and a cessation of all military co-operation with the racist regime of South Africa,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 418 (1977) of 4 November 1977,

Expressing serious regret that three permanent members of the Security Council—France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America—have continued to resist a comprehensive embargo on military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa,

Considering the need for urgent measures to secure the full implementation of Security Council resolution 418 (1977) and to promote its extension to cover all co-operation with the racist regime of South Africa which, directly or indirectly, facilitates its military buildup and nuclear development, as well as all military and nuclear co-operation with it,

Taking note of the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

1. Calls upon all Governments forthwith to implement Security Council resolution 418(1977) without any reservations and qualifications whatsoever and irrespective of any existing contracts and licences already issued and to ensure that all corporations, organizations and individuals within their jurisdiction abide by its provisions;

2. Calls upon all States, in particular France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, to co-operate fully in effective international action, in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to avert the grave menace to the peace resulting from the policies and actions of the racist regime of South Africa;

3. Requests the Security Council, in particular, to call upon all States, under Chapter VII of the Charter and irrespective of any existing contracts:

(a) To refrain from any supply of arms, ammunition, military equipment or vehicles, or spare parts thereof, to South Africa, without any exceptions;

(b) To ensure that such supplies do not reach South Africa through other countries;

(c) To refrain from importing any military equipment or supplies manufactured by, or in collaboration with, South Africa;

(d) To cease any exchange of military, naval or air attaches with South Africa;

(e) To terminate any form of military co-operation with South Africa;

(f) To revoke all licences and terminate all technical assistance for the manufacture of military equipment and supplies in South Africa;

(g) To end all transfer of nuclear equipment or fissionable material or technology to South Africa;

(h) To prohibit companies, institutions or agencies within their jurisdiction from any co-operation with South Africa, directly or through participation in companies registered in South Africa, in its military build-up or nuclear development;

(i) To prevent their nationals from working in South Africa in establishments producing supplies for military and police forces, or engaged in nuclear development;

(j) To deny visas to South African military and police personnel and persons engaged in nuclear research and development;

4. Further requests the Security Council to establish machinery for supervising the implementation of the measures referred to in paragraph 3 above;

5. Invites all Governments and organizations to take all appropriate action to promote the purposes of the present resolution;

6. Authorizes the Special Committee against Apartheid:

(a) To follow and publicize all developments concerning military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa and to report to the General Assembly and the Security Council all alleged violations of Council resolution 418(1977) that may come to its notice;

(b) To consult with experts, to hold hearings and to encourage conferences and campaigns in order to promote a total cessation of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa.

A/32/L.26 and Add.1. Algeria, Angola, Bahrian, Bangladesh, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Chad, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia: draft resolution.

Resolution 32/105 G, as proposed by 63 powers, A/32/L.26 and Add.1, adopted by Assembly on 14 December 1977, meeting 102, by recorded vote of 111 to 7, with 22 abstentions, as follows:

Economic collaboration with South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/6 H of 9 November 1976,

Reaffirming that any collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa constitutes a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and a contemptuous defiance of the United Nations and the international community,

Firmly convinced that mandatory economic sanctions, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, are essential to facilitate the speedy eradication of apartheid,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, Condemning the continued and increased collaboration by certain Governments and transnational corporations with the racist regime of South Africa,

1. Requests the Security Council urgently to consider mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa;

2. Calls upon all States to cease economic collaboration with South Africa and to take effective action to prevent such collaboration by corporations within their jurisdiction;

3. Requests all States, in particular:

(a) To prohibit all loans to and investments in South Africa;

(b) To terminate all incentives for trade with South Africa;

(c) To end exchanges of trade missions with South Africa;

(d) To impose an embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa and on investment in the petroleum industry in South Africa;

(e) To deny facilities to airlines and shipping companies providing services to and from South Africa;

4. Encourages trade unions, churches, anti-apartheid movements and other organizations in their campaigns against collaboration with South Africa;

5. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid:

(a) To publicize all available information on collaboration by transnational corporations with the racist regime of South Africa in its pursuit of apartheid, in order that Governments and organizations may take appropriate action to secure a termination of such collaboration;

(b) To take all appropriate steps, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to promote an oil embargo against South Africa;

(c) To promote action towards the termination of airline and shipping services to and from South Africa;

(d) To take all other appropriate steps to promote the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Requests all Governments and organizations to co-operate with the Special Committee in the implementation of the present resolution.

Dissemination of information on apartheid

The General Assembly,

Strongly convinced of the need to intensify greatly the efforts to acquaint world public opinion with the imperative need for the eradication of apartheid in South Africa,

Noting the insidious propaganda activities of the racist regime of South Africa and its supporters, as well as its repressive measures designed to silence all opposition to apartheid and racial discrimination inside South Africa,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Commending the Centre against Apartheid for its efforts, in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to promote the dissemination of information against apartheid,

Expressing its appreciation to all Governments which have contributed to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid,

Recognizing the important contribution of the specialized agencies to the dissemination of information against apartheid,

1. Appeals to all Governments to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid;

2. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Centre against Apartheid to utilize the Trust Fund particularly for the production of audio-visual material and for assistance to appropriate organizations with a view to disseminating information material on apartheid;

3. Requests all Governments and organizations to co-operate with the Special Committee and the Centre against Apartheid towards the widest possible dissemination of information on apartheid;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, in co-operation with Member States whose transmitters can be heard in southern Africa, a regular programme of radio broadcasts directed at South Africa and concerned with United Nations efforts against apartheid and in support of the right of self-determination, as well as with related matters of interest to the peoples of southern Africa;

5. Urges Member States whose radio transmitters can reach South Africa and adjacent territories to make available transmission facilities for these broadcasts;

6. Requests the Centre against Apartheid, in co-operation with the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat:

(a) To lend all appropriate assistance for these transmissions, in particular to African radio stations broadcasting to South Africa;

(b) To expand the production and distribution of information material in various languages and give special attention to the production of audio-visual material;

(c) To organize essay competitions on apartheid;

7. Requests the Secretary-General and Member States to issue special postage stamps on apartheid;

8. Commends, in particular, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for their studies and information activities on apartheid;

9. Requests all the specialized agencies to co-operate with the Centre against Apartheid towards co-ordinated efforts by the agencies and institutions within the United Nations system for the widest possible dissemination of information on apartheid.

Programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and its special reports,

Commending the Special Committee for its activities in the discharge of the mandate given to it by the General Assembly,

Considering the need for the intensification and expansion of the activities of the Special Committee during the International Anti-apartheid Year and in view of the urgent need for effective and co-ordinated international action to eradicate apartheid and to enable the South African people as a whole, on the basis of equality, to exercise its right to self-determination,

Recognizing the importance of adequate assistance by the Centre against Apartheid to the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate,

Reiterating its determination, as expressed in General Assembly resolution 3411 C (XXX) of 28 November 1975, to devote increasing attention and all necessary resources to concert international efforts, in close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, for the speedy eradication of apartheid in South Africa and the liberation of the South African people,

1. Encourages the Special Committee against Apartheid to intensify its activities to promote the implementation of the Programme of Action against Apartheid, the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977, and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations in the light of paragraph 309 of the report of the Special Committee;

2. Approves the recommendations of the Special Committee on its programme of work and on co-operation with other United Nations bodies;

3. Authorizes the Special Committee:

(a) To send missions to Member States and to the headquarters of the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as required, to promote international action against apartheid and the observance of the International Anti-Apartheid Year;

(b) To intensify co-operation with the movement of non-aligned countries, the Organization of African Unity and other appropriate organizations;

(c) To participate in conferences concerned with apartheid;

(d) To invite representatives of the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and those of other organizations active in opposition to apartheid, as well as experts, for consultations on various aspects of apartheid and on international action against apartheid;

(e) To associate representatives of the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity with its missions;

4. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee, in co-operation with the international and national organizations concerned, to organize or promote the organization of conferences against apartheid;

5. Requests the Special Committee to promote assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements in accordance with the recommendations contained in its report;

6. Requests all specialized agencies and other institutions within the United Nations system to review and expand their programmes of assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa, in consultation with the Special Committee;

7. Authorizes the Special Committee to send representatives to attend meetings of the Governing Board of the United Nations Development Programme, the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other bodies concerned with apartheid and assistance to South Africans;

8. Encourages the Special Committee to promote international campaigns for:

(a) Cessation of military, nuclear, economic and other collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa;

(b) Unconditional release of all persons imprisoned or restricted for their opposition to apartheid;

(c) Public collections to assist the oppressed people of South Africa and the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity;

9. Requests all specialized agencies and other institutions within the United Nations system to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its task;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Special Committee, to strengthen the Centre against Apartheid and provide it with the necessary resources for the performance of its responsibilities, in the execution of the decisions of the Special Committee, for promoting more effective and co-ordinated action against apartheid;

11. Decides that verbatim records should be provided for special meetings held by the Special Committee in observance of the international days designated by the General Assembly.

Assistance to the national liberation movement of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Noting that the racist regime of South Africa has further aggravated racial discrimination, domination and exploitation of the great majority of the people of South Africa and has intensified ruthless repression in order to enforce its criminal policy,

Recognizing that the policies and action of the racist regime of South Africa have aggravated a threat to the peace in southern Africa and that their continuation would lead to a wider conflict,

Further recognizing that the eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial society in South Africa are essential for peace and security in southern Africa,

Recalling its resolutions on the policies of apartheid of the racist regime of South Africa,

1. Strongly reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, to determine, on the basis of majority rule, the future of South Africa;

2. Further reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement for the eradication of apartheid and the exercise of the right of self-determination by the people of South Africa as a whole;

3. Declares that, in view of the intransigence of the racist regime, its defiance of resolutions of the United Nations and its continued imposition of the criminal policy of apartheid, the national liberation movement has an inalienable right to continue its struggle for the seizure of power by all available and appropriate means of its choice, including armed struggle;

4. Further declares that the international community should provide all assistance to the national liberation movement of South Africa in its legitimate struggle and exercise all its authority, under the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, including Chapter VII, to facilitate the transfer of power from the minority racist regime to the genuine representatives of all the people of South Africa.

Situation in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the report of the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Mindful of the special responsibility of the United Nations and the international community towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement and towards those imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their struggle against apartheid,

Commending the heroic struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for their inalienable rights,

Conscious of the crucial stage of the struggle for freedom in South Africa and its international significance,

Noting that the racist regime of South Africa is continuing its policy of apartheid, repression, "bantustanization" and aggression, in flagrant defiance of United Nations resolutions, and is thereby gravely aggravating the threat to international peace and security,

1. Strongly condemns the illegitimate minority racist regime of South Africa for its criminal policies and actions;

2. Declares that South Africa belongs to all its people, irrespective of race, colour or creed;

3. Proclaims its full support of the national liberation movement of South Africa, as the authentic representative of the South African people, in its just struggle;

4. Again condemns the establishment of bantustans and calls upon all Governments to implement fully the provisions of its resolution 31/6 A of 26 October 1976;

5. Declares that any collaboration with the racist regime and apartheid institutions is a hostile act against the purposes and principles of the United Nations;

6. Commends all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations which have taken action against apartheid and in support of the South African national liberation movement in accordance with resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Invites all States and organizations to take all appropriate measures to persuade those Governments, transnational corporations and other institutions which continue to collaborate with the racist regime of South Africa to abide by the resolutions of the United Nations.

International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/6 F of 9 November 1976 on apartheid in sports,

Reaffirming the importance of effective international action to abolish apartheid in sports and in all other fields,

Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports,

1. Adopts and proclaims the International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports, recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports and annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to draft an international convention against apartheid in sports for submission to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

3. Authorizes the Ad Hoc Committee to consult with representatives of the organizations concerned and experts on apartheid in sports;

4. Decides that summary records should be provided for meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee in the discharge of its task.

ANNEX

International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in which Member States pledge to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion,

Considering the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in the Declaration without distinction of any kind such as race, colour or national origin,

Recalling that, in accordance with the principles of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, States undertake not to sponsor, defend or support racial discrimination,

Recalling further that the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid declares that apartheid is a crime violating the principles of international law, in particular the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and constituting a serious threat to international peace and security,

Recalling that the General Assembly has adopted a number of resolutions in which the policies and practices of apartheid, including the application of apartheid in the field of sport, and collaboration with the racist regime in all areas, are condemned,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of South Africa for the total elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination,

Recognizing that the eradication of apartheid and rendering of assistance to the South African people to establish a non-racial society is one of the primary concerns of the international community,

Convinced that more effective measures must be taken as a matter of priority, during the International Anti-Apartheid Year and the Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to eliminate apartheid in all its manifestations,

Reaffirming its unqualified support for the Olympic principle that no discrimination be allowed on the grounds of race, religion or political affiliation and its belief that merit should be the sole criterion for participation in sports activities,

Considering that international representative sporting contacts based on the Olympic principle can play a positive role in promoting peace and the development of friendly relations among nations of the world,

Recognizing that there can be neither adherence to the principle of merit selection nor fully integrated non-racial sport in any country practising apartheid until the apartheid system itself is eradicated,

Condemning the enforcement, by the racist regime of South Africa, of racial discrimination and segregation in sports,

Commending the sportsmen inside South Africa who are struggling against apartheid and upholding the principle of non-racialism in sport,

Condemning the repressive measures taken by the racist apartheid regime against the non-racial sports bodies and their leaders in South Africa,

Rejecting the policy of so-called "multinational" sport, enunciated by the South African racist regime, as no more than a device for perpetuating apartheid in sports and an attempt by the regime to mislead international public opinion in order to gain acceptance for participation in international sport,

Recognizing the importance in the international campaign against apartheid of the boycott of South African sports teams selected on the basis of apartheid,

Convinced that an effective campaign for the total boycott of South African sports teams can be an important measure in demonstrating the abhorrence of apartheid by Governments and peoples,

Commending all Governments, sportsmen, sports bodies and other organizations which have taken action against apartheid in sports,

Noting with concern that some national and international sports bodies have continued contacts with racist apartheid sports bodies in violation of the Olympic principle and resolutions of the United Nations,

Recognizing that participation in sports exchanges with teams selected on the basis of apartheid violates the fundamental human rights of the great majority of the people of South Africa and directly abets and encourages the commission of the crime of apartheid, as defined in the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and encourages the racist regime in its pursuit of apartheid,

Condemning sports contacts with any country practising apartheid and recognizing that participation in apartheid in sports condones and strengthens apartheid and thereby becomes the legitimate concern of all Governments,

Convinced that an international declaration against apartheid in sports would make it possible to take more effective measures at the international and national levels, with a view to completely isolating and eliminating apartheid,

Proclaims this International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports:

Article 1

States affirm and support this Declaration as an expression of international condemnation of apartheid and as a measure to contribute towards the total eradication of the system of apartheid, and to this end resolve to take strong action and to exert the greatest possible influence in order to ensure the total elimination of apartheid in sports.

Article 2

States shall take all appropriate action to bring about the total cessation of sporting contacts with any country practising apartheid and shall refrain from official sponsorship, assistance or encouragement of such contacts.

Article 3

States shall take all appropriate action towards the exclusion or expulsion of any country practising apartheid from international and regional sports bodies. They shall give full support to national sports bodies attempting to exclude such countries from membership of international and regional sports associations or to prevent such countries from participation in sports activities.

1. States shall publicly declare and express total opposition to apartheid in sports as well as full and active support for the total boycott of all teams and sportsmen from the racist apartheid sports bodies.

2. States shall pursue a vigorous programme of public education aimed at securing strict adherence to the Olympic principle of non-discrimination in sports and widespread national acceptance for the spirit and letter of United Nations resolutions on apartheid in sports.

3. Sports bodies shall be actively encouraged to withhold any support from sporting events organized in violation of the Olympic principle and United Nations resolutions. To this end, States shall convey the United Nations resolutions on apartheid in sports to all national sports bodies, urging them:

(a) To disseminate such information to all their affiliates and branches;

(b) To take all necessary action to ensure strict compliance with those resolutions.

Article 5

States shall take appropriate actions against their sporting teams and organizations whose members collectively or individually participate in sports activities in any country practising apartheid or with teams from a country practising apartheid, which in particular shall include:

(a) Refusal to provide financial or other assistance to enable sports bodies, teams or individuals to participate in sports activities in countries practising apartheid or with teams and individual sportsmen selected on the basis of apartheid;

(b) Refusal to provide financial or other assistance for any purpose to sports bodies whose team members or affiliates participate in such sporting activities;

(c) Withdrawal of access to national sporting facilities to such teams or individuals;

(d) Non-recognition by States of all professional sporting contracts which involve sporting activities in any country practising apartheid, or with teams or individual sportsmen selected on the basis of apartheid;

(e) Denial and withdrawal of national honours or awards to such teams or individuals;

(f) Denial of official receptions to teams or sportsmen participating in sports activities with teams or individual sportsmen from any country practising apartheid.

Article 6

States shall deny visas and/or entry to representatives of sports bodies, members of teams or individual sportsmen from any country practising apartheid.

Article 7

States shall establish national regulations and guidelines against participation with apartheid in sports and shall ensure that effective means exist for bringing about compliance with such guidelines.

Article 8

States shall co-operate with anti-apartheid movements and other organizations which are engaged in promoting the implementation of the principles of this Declaration.

Article 9

States undertake to encourage actively and publicly all official bodies, private enterprises and other groups engaged in promoting, organizing or servicing sports activities to refrain from undertaking any action which in any way supports, assists or enables the organization of activities involving apartheid in sports.

Article 10

States shall urge all their regional, provincial and other authorities to take whatever steps are necessary to ensure the strict compliance with the provisions of this Declaration.

Article 11

States agree to use their best endeavours to terminate the practice of apartheid in sports, in accordance with the principles contained in this Declaration and, to this end, States agree to work towards the prompt preparation and adoption of an international convention against apartheid in sports based on the principles contained in this Declaration which would include sanctions for violation of its terms.

Article 12

1. States and international, regional and national sports bodies shall actively support projects, undertaken in collaboration with the Organization of African Unity and the South African liberation movements recognized by it, towards the formation of non-racial teams truly representative of South Africa.

2. To this end, States and all appropriate organizations shall encourage, assist and recognize genuine non-racial sports bodies in South Africa endorsed by the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Organization of African Unity and the South African liberation movements recognized by it.

3. States shall also give active support to sportsmen and sports administrators in their opposition to apartheid in sports.

Article 13

International, regional and national sports bodies shall uphold the Olympic principle and cease all sports contact with the racist apartheid sports bodies.

Article 14

International sports bodies shall not impose financial or other penalties on affiliated bodies which, in accordance with United Nations resolutions and the spirit of the Olympic Charter, refuse to participate in sports contact with any country practising apartheid.

Article 15

National sports bodies shall take appropriate action to persuade their international federation to exclude racist apartheid sports bodies from membership and from all international activities.

Article 16

All national Olympic committees shall declare their opposition to apartheid in sports and to sports contact with South Africa, and shall actively encourage all affiliates and constituent members to end all sports contact with South Africa.

Article 17

The provisions of this Declaration concerning the boycott of South African sports teams shall not apply to non-racial sports bodies endorsed by the Special Committee against Apartheid the Organization of African Unity and the South African liberation movements recognized by it and their members.

Article 18

All international, regional and national sports bodies and Olympic committees shall endorse the principles of this Declaration and support and uphold all provisions contained therein.

Bantustans

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/6 A of 26 October 1976, entitled "The so-called independent Transkei and other bantustans,"

Condemning the racist regime of South Africa for its threats against Lesotho for having refused recognition of the so-called "independent" Transkei,

Further condemning the racist regime of South Africa for its stubborn pursuit of the bantustan policy and its plans to declare the so-called "independence" of Bophuthatswana,

Reiterating that the bantustan policy is designed to divide the African people of South Africa and deprive them of their inalienable rights in the country,

Convinced that the racist regime seeks to establish bantustans as reservoirs of cheap labour, strategic hamlets and buffer zones against the struggle for freedom in the country as a whole,

Noting that the African people of South Africa have rejected and opposed bantustans and the tribal chiefs who have collaborated with the racist regime in the creation of these bantustans,

1. Again denounces the establishment of bantustans as designed to consolidate the inhuman policy of apartheid, to destroy the territorial integrity of the country, to perpetuate white minority domination and to deprive the African people of South Africa of their inalienable rights;

2. Denounces the declaration of the so-called "independence" of the Transkei and that of Bophuthatswana and any other bantustans which may be created by the racist regime of South Africa and declares them totally invalid;

3. Reaffirms the inalienable rights of the African people of South Africa in the country as a whole;

4. Declares its firm support to Lesotho and any other States which may be subjected to threats and pressures by the racist regime in the pursuit of its bantustan policy;

5. Again calls upon all Governments to deny any form of recognition to the so-called "independent" bantustans, to refrain from any dealings with them and to reject travel documents issued by them;

6. Again requests all States to take effective measures to prohibit all individuals, corporations and other institutions under their jurisdiction from having any dealings with the so-called "independent" bantustans.

Investments in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/6 K of 9 November 1976,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Convinced that a cessation of new foreign investments in South Africa would constitute an important step in the struggle against apartheid, as such investments abet and encourage the apartheid policies of that country,

Noting with regret that the Security Council has been unable to reach agreement on steps to achieve the cessation of such investments in South Africa,

Welcoming as positive steps the decisions of those Governments which have taken measures to achieve the cessation of further investments from their countries in South Africa,

Noting that while there has been some decrease in the flow of new foreign investments into South Africa since resolution 31/6 K was adopted, a number of foreign economic and financial interests have continued and increased their investments,

Urges the Security Council, when studying the problem of the continued struggle against the apartheid policies of South Africa, to consider again steps to achieve, at an early date, the cessation of further foreign investments in South Africa.

A/32/458. Report of Third Committee (on report of Economic and Social Council), draft resolution III.

Resolution 32/119, as recommended by Third Committee, A/32/458, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/126 of 16 December 1976, in which it requested the Secretary-General to take immediate steps to organize and provide emergency financial and other appropriate forms of assistance for the care, subsistence and education of South African student refugees,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 417 (1977) of 31 October 1977, in which the Council, inter alia, requested all Governments and organizations to contribute generously for assistance to the victims of violence and repression, including educational assistance to South African student refugees,

Noting the appointment by the Secretary-General of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees as Co-ordinator of assistance within the United Nations system to South African student refugees, Expressing deep concern that the Government of South Africa continues to take more and more repressive measures against students in that country,

Noting with concern the continuing influx of South African refugees, including in particular students, into neighbouring countries,

Concerned over the pressure on the educational systems of the three host countries—Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland—as a result of the continued influx of children from South Africa seeking freedom from repression and also an opportunity to further their studies,

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General on the progress achieved in regard to the assistance required by and provided to these refugees in Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland,

Recognizing that the needs of South African student refugees are also imposing serious pressures on Zambia,

1. Endorses the measures taken by the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the mobilization of a programme of assistance to South African student refugees in Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland;

2. Notes with appreciation the generous contributions of the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland in providing asylum and making available educational facilities for student refugees;

3. Notes with satisfaction the contributions so far made by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and United Nations agencies;

4. Expresses concern, however, that the total assistance received to date falls short of the needs;

5. Urges all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and United Nations agencies to contribute generously towards the assistance programmes for these student refugees, both through financial support and by offering the necessary opportunities for their care and subsistence, education and vocational training;

6. Requests all agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, including in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, to assist the High Commissioner in carrying out the humanitarian task entrusted to him;

7. Requests the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner to strengthen their efforts for the mobilization of emergency financial and other appropriate forms of assistance for these student refugees in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To undertake a similar programme of assistance for South African student refugees in Zambia;

(b) To arrange for a review of the matter in time for it to be considered by the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

The United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

Reports of the Secretary-General and of the Committee of Trustees

On 28 October 1977, the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa reported to the General Assembly on the operation of the Fund since October 1976. Contributions had been received from Governments of 45 Member States totalling $1,269,217; pledges from 19 Governments totalling $75,538 were outstanding. In accordance with decisions of the Committee of Trustees, seven grants totalling $915,000 had been made from the Fund during the period under review. Total contributions to the Fund since its inception, including interest, amounted to $5,679,275, and the total of grants made was $5,226,950.

The Fund, made up of voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals, was established by the General Assembly in 1965 to be used for grants to voluntary organizations, Governments of host countries of refugees from South Africa, and other appropriate bodies, towards relief, education and assistance to persons persecuted under the repressive and discriminatory legislation of South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia and to their families, and towards relief for refugees from South Africa.

In its report, the Committee of Trustees said it had been gravely concerned over the widespread and escalating repression in South Africa during the period under review. Many hundreds of persons had been killed and thousands wounded as a result of the shooting of peaceful demonstrators by police. Thousands of persons, especially youths, had been imprisoned for participation in demonstrations. Hundreds of others had been detained and charged under the Terrorism Act and other arbitrary repressive legislation. The situation in Namibia and Southern Rhodesia had also continued to deteriorate, the Committee said.

In its report, the Committee noted with satisfaction a substantial increase in contributions to the Trust Fund during the year, enabling larger grants to be made for assistance inside South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia and for assistance to refugees. But it stressed that the needs continued to grow constantly and that even larger contributions were indispensable in the coming period.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At the General Assembly's thirty-second (1977) session, the reports of the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees were discussed during the Assembly's consideration of the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa.

On 14 December 1977, the Assembly adopted, without a vote, resolution 32/105 A, sponsored by 45 Members, by which, among other things, it expressed grave concern over the widespread repression against all opponents of apartheid in South Africa, including frequent shootings of peaceful demonstrators and the series of deaths of detainees. It reaffirmed that humanitarian assistance to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia was appropriate and essential.

The Assembly then: (1) commended the Committee of Trustees for its efforts to promote humanitarian assistance; (2) expressed its appreciation to contributors and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination; and (3) appealed for continued and increasing contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned.

(For text of resolution 32/105 A and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa,

Gravely concerned over the widespread repression against all opponents of apartheid in South Africa, including frequent shootings of peaceful demonstrators and the series of deaths of detainees,

Reaffirming that humanitarian assistance to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia is appropriate and essential,

Considering the need for increased contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned, in order to enable them to meet the growing needs resulting from escalating repression,

1. Commends the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa for its efforts to promote humanitarian assistance;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination;

3. Appeals for continued and increasing contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned.

The situation in Southern Rhodesia

Various aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) continued during 1977 to receive consideration by a number of United Nations bodies.

In May, the Security Council considered a recommendation by its Committee on sanctions, established pursuant to a Council resolution of 29 May 1968,²³ that the flow of capital from Southern Rhodesia for certain purposes be included within the scope of the mandatory sanctions against the territory. The Council unanimously decided on 27 May that Member States were to prohibit the use or transfer of funds in their territories by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia.

On 29 September, after having received proposals by the United Kingdom for a settlement in Southern Rhodesia, the Security Council decided, at the request of the United Kingdom, to ask the Secretary-General to appoint a representative to enter into discussions with the British Resident Commissioner-designate, and with all the parties, concerning the military and associated arrangements necessary to effect a transition to majority rule in Southern Rhodesia. The Council's Committee on sanctions submitted an interim report later in 1977 and, early in 1978, it submitted its tenth regular report, covering its activities from 16 December 1976 to 15 December 1977.

Two resolutions on the situation in Southern Rhodesia were adopted on 8 August by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples²⁴—one on general aspects of the situation, the other on the question of sanctions.

Later in 1977, at its thirty-second regular session, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions incorporating many of the Special Committee's recommendations. Among other things, it reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in the territory and reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the liberation of the two territories adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia earlier in the year. The Assembly also condemned Governments which continued to collaborate with the illegal regime, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce strictly the sanctions called for by the Security Council. The Assembly also deemed it imperative that the scope of the sanctions be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter of the United Nations²⁵ and again asked the Council to consider taking measures in that regard. The Council was also asked to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and its products to South Africa, since such products were transported from that country into Southern Rhodesia.

²⁴ See Y.U.N., 1960, pp. 49-50, resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, containing text of Declaration.

²⁵ Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter reads as follows: "The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations."

For full text of Chapter VII, and other Charter Articles mentioned herein, see APPENDIX II.

During the year, decisions on Southern Rhodesia were also taken by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Details of these and other related decisions on the territory taken by United Nations bodies in 1977 are described in the sections that follow.

Communications to and consideration by the Security Council (February-June 1977)

Communications (18-29 March)

On 28 February 1977, the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Security Council to the General Assembly's resolution of 20 December 1976²⁶ by which, among other things, it had reiterated its conviction that the scope of the sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the United Nations Charter, and had asked the Security Council to consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency.

On 18 March, by a letter addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Acting Executive Secretary of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to the United Nations conveyed a message from the Administrative Secretary-General of OAU to the effect that OAU expected from the Council nothing short of a widening of the existing economic sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and the imposition of economic sanctions and a mandatory arms embargo against apartheid South Africa.

The representative of Ghana on 22 March transmitted the text of a resolution which had been adopted at a session of the Executive Committee of the World Federation of United Nations Associations, held in Accra, Ghana, from 19 to 21 March 1977. By the resolution, the Executive Committee requested that the Security Council urgently consider taking immediate steps to ensure that no State, multinational or other body or person be allowed to provide South Africa or Southern Rhodesia with any equipment, technology, experts or material for development or production of nuclear weapons of any kind.

In a letter dated 29 March, the representative of Italy gave details of, among other things, the stand and action taken by Italy on implementation of measures against Southern Rhodesia: following the adoption of the Security Council's resolution of 29 May 1968,²⁷ the Italian Parliament had adopted a bill which stipulated that any individual caught in commercial or financial transactions of any kind with Southern Rhodesia was liable to punishment by imprisonment of up to two years and by a fine of up to four times the amount of the transaction in question.

The letter went on to say that Italy had been among the first to open embassies in the two newly independent "front-line" countries, Angola and Mozambique. The Italian authorities had recently decided to supply concrete aid, through OAU, to the liberation movements of Zimbabwe, and were considering in a positive light contributing to and participating in the forthcoming Maputo (Mozambique) International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, in May 1977.

Meeting of the Security Council (27 May)

The Security Council discussed the second special report of the Committee on sanctions at a meeting on 27 May. In that report, which had been submitted on 31 December 1976,²⁸ the Committee—bearing in mind the reservations expressed by some of its members—decided to recommend to the Security Council that the flow of capital from Southern Rhodesia for certain purposes be included within the scope of mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia.

The Council had before it a draft resolution sponsored by all 15 members. By the preamble to this text, the Council would, among other things, reaffirm that the measures provided for in its earlier resolutions on the question of sanctions, as well as the measures initiated by Member States in pursuance thereof, were to continue in effect. It would also reaffirm that the current situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security. The Council would then, stating that it was acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations:

(1) decide that all Member States were to prohibit the use or transfer of any funds in their territories by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, including any office or agent thereof, or by other persons or bodies within Southern Rhodesia, for the purposes of any office or agency of the regime that was established within their territories other than one established exclusively for pensions purposes;

(2) urge States not Members of the United Nations to act in accordance with the provisions of this resolution, having regard to this principle as stated in Article 2, paragraph 6, of the Charter; and

(3) decide to meet not later than 11 November 1977 to consider the application of further measures under Charter Article 41, and meanwhile request the Committee on sanctions to examine, in addition to its other functions, the application of such measures and to report to the Council thereon as soon as possible.

The representative of Mauritius, in introducing the draft resolution, said that the recommendation of the Committee on sanctions was aimed at suppressing the propaganda, promotional and similar activities performed abroad by the various offices and agencies of the illegal regime that depended on funds transmitted to them by that regime. The draft resolution, he said, despite its inadequacies, was a step in the right direction and would, if adopted, be the eighth resolution by the Security Council imposing progressive sanctions—most of them mandatory—against the rebel regime in Southern Rhodesia.

He regretted that the absence of consensus in the Committee and the Council resulted in the adoption of mandatory measures only progressively or in doses, thus affording the illegal regime an opportunity to adjust its economic programme. The process also provided convenient loopholes through which the sanctions could be effectively evaded. The draft resolution, for instance, did not appear to cover transfers of funds by individuals or bodies in Southern Rhodesia, or even by the illegal regime itself, for use by, or benefit of, persons or bodies abroad not connected with the regime. It was such loopholes, he said, that contributed to the subsistence of the illegal regime.

Council members generally agreed that the draft resolution represented a further step in increasing the scope of the sanctions against the illegal regime by imposing additional restrictions on the movement of capital, enabling States to take action to frustrate the operations of offices or agencies maintained by the regime outside the territory. Several speakers, however, felt that the draft resolution was inadequate and they expressed dissatisfaction with another round of what they considered to be half-hearted measures by the Council.

Pakistan's spokesman, for example, said that the sanctions that had been imposed thus far had been limited and had not succeeded in achieving their objective, namely, the dislodging of the illegal regime of Ian Smith, which continued to defy the will of the international community and persisted in short-sighted and repressive policies directed at keeping the majority of the people of Zimbabwe in a state of subjugation and domination.

However, several speakers welcomed the provision of the draft resolution by which the Council would undertake to meet later in 1977 to consider the application of further measures under Article 41. The representative of the USSR and others considered that, although that provision was a step in the right direction, it was only through the application of all measures under that Article, including the complete or partial interruption of road, sea, air, postal and other means of communication, that the just demands of the Zimbabwe people could be satisfied.

China, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Romania said the Council should seriously consider expanding the sanctions to cover South Africa, which they said continued to support the illegal regime in disregard of decisions of the Council and in defiance of appeals by the international community.

With regard to the paragraph referring to further action which the Council might take under Article 41, the representative of the United Kingdom said that some elements of that Article posed difficulties for some members of the Council, including the United Kingdom; however, there were many elements in the Article and his Government would be ready to seek ways in which the application of the economic sanctions which the Council adopted could be improved.

The French representative said that in adopting the draft resolution the Council would be taking another step towards tightening the circle of sanctions around Rhodesia. His Government believed that the international community had to keep up its pressure against the Salisbury authorities and even intensify it. However, he observed, the application of sanctions would not in itself put an end to the ongoing rebellion and bring about the independence of Zimbabwe and the introduction of majority rule. The Council should not lose sight of the political dimensions of the problem.

The Security Council unanimously adopted the draft resolution on 27 May 1977, without a vote, as resolution 409(1977). (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Communication (June 1977)

In a letter dated 2 June 1977, the representative of Australia said, in connexion with the Security Council's resolution of 27 May (409(1977)), that the Australian Government fully supported the application of sanctions in respect of Southern Rhodesia and would continue to comply with the requirements of mandatory resolutions voted by the Council. The letter further stated that the Secretary-General would be kept informed of the progress of legislation to be introduced in the Australian Parliament to give effect to the resolution.

Decisions of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

On 4 March 1977, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution on the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa. The Commission thereby, among other things: reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe to self-determination and independence and their right to enjoy all the rights recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the various international instruments on human rights; condemned the activities of countries which, either directly or through their nationals, were helping to perpetuate the current situation in Namibia, Zimbabwe and South Africa, and urged them to refrain from such activities; recommended that the United Nations intensify its co-operation in the humanitarian field by supplying the countries neighbouring on Zimbabwe with assistance, particularly medicines and foodstuffs; and decided that the Ad Hoc Working Group should continue to study the policies and practices which violated human rights in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe. (For details, see p. 687.)

On 4 March, the Commission also adopted a resolution on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of various forms of assistance given to colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa. Among other things, by this text it denounced and condemned the political, military, economic and other assistance given by certain States to South Africa and to the illegal minority regime of Southern Rhodesia, either directly or through national or multinational companies. It also reaffirmed that arms sales, nuclear co-operation agreements and the economic activities of national and multinational companies in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia constituted blatant acts of complicity in the crime of apartheid (a crime against humanity) and encouragement of the continuation of the policy of racial discrimination and colonialism. (For details, see p. 691.)

On 13 May 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2082 A (LXII)) on the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, by which, among other things, it decided that the Working Group, in conjunction with the Special Committee against Apartheid, should examine the treatment of prisoners in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, including the deaths of a number of detainees. (For details, see p. 687.)

On 13 May, the Council also adopted a resolution (2086(LXII)) on infringements of trade union rights in southern Africa, by which it expressed its concern at the increased use of arrests and bannings to suppress legitimate trade union activities among African workers in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, condemned the continued gross infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, called for the immediate release of all trade unionists under detention in southern Africa and for the lifting of all banning orders imposed on persons engaged in trade union activities, and demanded full recognition of all trade union rights of African workers in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe. (For details, see p. 726.)

On 3 August, the Council adopted resolution 2101(LXIII) on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations. By this text, the Council among other things expressed its concern that assistance by those agencies and organizations to colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements, was far from adequate in relation to their needs. In this connexion, the Council urged those agencies and organizations, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and Namibia, to do everything possible to render increased assistance to the peoples of those territories in their struggle for liberation, and, in particular, in consultation with OAU, to work out and implement programmes of assistance within their fields of competence, with the active collaboration of the national liberation movements concerned.

The Council also requested the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance to South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, to discontinue all support to them until they restored to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal domination of the territories. (For details, see p. 845.)

International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia

In accordance with a decision of the General Assembly of 17 December 1976,²⁹ the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia was organized, and met from 16 to 21 May 1977 at Maputo, Mozambique. Its aim was to mobilize international support for, and assistance to, the peoples of the two territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence.

The Conference was attended by about 500 representatives of 92 Member States and a number of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, specialized agencies and national liberation movements. At the conclusion of its meetings it adopted the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and a Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

In the Declaration, the Conference among other things proclaimed its full support for the people of Zimbabwe in their struggle for independence, reaffirmed that there should be no independence before majority rule and that any settlement relating to the future of the territory had to be worked out with the full participation of the Zimbabwe people represented by their national liberation movement. It strongly condemned the illegal racist minority regime and denounced its brutal and repressive measures.

The Conference noted that all reasonable and meaningful proposals which would have secured a negotiated settlement for an independent Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule had been totally rejected by the illegal racist minority regime, and the freedom fighters, confronted with the intransigence of that regime, had intensified the armed struggle.

The Conference considered that strict enforcement of existing mandatory sanctions was an important element in the collective effort of the international community, and it deplored the fact that some States continued to violate those sanctions and thus limit their effect on the economy of Southern Rhodesia. The persistent acts of aggression committed by the illegal regime against Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia were condemned by the Conference. It declared that the natural resources of Zimbabwe were the birthright of its people; the exploitation of those resources by the illegal regime, in association with foreign economic interests, violated the Charter and United Nations resolutions.

In the Programme of Action, the Conference among other things called for political, material and moral support for the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and their national liberation movements. It called on Governments: to refrain from any collaboration with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia; to observe strictly the arms embargo; to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, assembly, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories to be punishable as a criminal act and to discourage and prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries; to take measures against corporation and trade interests operating in violation of sanctions; to prevent companies registered in their territories from supplying oil, directly or indirectly, to the illegal regime; to take measures to ensure compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions and to prohibit any form of collaboration by them with the illegal regime; and to prevent or discourage the emigration to Southern Rhodesia of any individuals or groups of individuals under their jurisdiction.

The Conference called upon the United Nations among other things to reiterate its conviction that the scope of sanctions against the regime had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter, and it asked the Security Council urgently to consider the necessary measures in that regard.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held in New York between 19 April and 8 August 1977, with the participation of Chakanyuka Chikosi of the African National Council of Zimbabwe (ANC), Callistus Nkobi Ndlovu of the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe African People's Union), and Mukudzei Mudzi of the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe African National Union), who made statements. Garfield Todd, former Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, was also invited to make a statement.

The representative of the United Kingdom told the Special Committee that his Government remained committed to attaining a just and lasting settlement in the territory and he expressed the hope that the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia would see that it had to make the necessary compromises in order to achieve an early, orderly and peaceful transition to majority rule. The efforts his Government had made to arrive at a peaceful settlement of the Southern Rhodesian problem were continuing, he said; he described the proposals his Government had put forward to the concerned parties at the Geneva conference in the latter part of 1976 and which had been rejected by Ian Smith on 24 January 1977.

The proposals, he went on to say, had included the following points, among others: guerrilla activity would cease as soon as agreement had been reached on the setting up of the transitional government; and British readiness to continue to play a part in the agreed transitional arrangements would be conditional upon all other parties abiding by that agreement. The transitional government, to have been headed by an interim commissioner appointed by the British Government after due consultations, was to have had three principal organs: a council of ministers; an advisory council of senior ministers; and a national security council.

The council of ministers, he said, was to have contained an equal number of members from each of the political groups represented by the delegations to the Geneva conference and a further similar number of members appointed by the interim commissioner from among members of the European minority. It would thus have had a substantial African majority. The council of ministers was to have had full executive and legislative competence subject to the interim commissioner's reserve powers. Defence and internal security would have been the responsibility of the national security council, and the day-to-day organization and operational control of the armed forces and the police would have been the responsibility of the respective chiefs of staff and the commissioner of police.

Further, the council of ministers was to have been responsible for the implementation of the programme for independence and in particular for the working out of the independence constitution. It would have appointed a constitutional committee—to include representatives of the various political parties, with the task of formulating recommendations to the council of ministers—which would have been presided over by the interim commissioner.

Following the rejection of the proposals, the representative went on to say, the United Kingdom Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had held discussions with the various parties in co-operation with the United States and hoped to be able to report soon whether it would be worth while for the two countries to co-sponsor a conference on Southern Rhodesia, with the aim of developing a timetable for achieving majority rule in the territory in 1978.

Mr. Chikosi said that the nationalists were not surprised at the illegal regime's rejection of the proposals put forward at the Geneva conference because they had not been convinced that the regime had been ready to hand over power to the majority. His organization, he said, believed that armed struggle remained the nationalists' only course. The African National Council of Zimbabwe was totally opposed to any internal settlement, which would no doubt turn the future Zimbabwe into a neo-colonial State. It was not opposed in principle to constitutional talks if they were designed to hand over power. However, he said, the hand-over must be complete and unconditional, and must involve all parties to the dispute. He then outlined his party's five-point plan for the attainment of a peaceful settlement in the territory: that Ian Smith unequivocally surrender political power to the black majority; that all detainees and political prisoners be released; that the United Kingdom assume its decolonization role in the territory; that all Zimbabweans participate in a national referendum; and that the United Kingdom convene a full constitutional conference to work out the details of the independence constitution.

Mr. Ndlovu said that his party rejected the idea of a conference convened and co-chaired by the United Kingdom and the United States. It could not accept any direct United States involvement as that would risk internationalizing the problem. He said that the war in the territory was not against white people but against a system of racism which kept African people in a state of slavery.

Mr. Mudzi said that imperialist powers were seeking to frustrate the march of the Zimbabwe people to true freedom and independence and the Anglo-American plan was a deadly scheme contrived behind the backs of the Zimbabwe people. The Smith regime must hand over State power to the African people without any further delay. He said that the armed struggle was intensifying and the enemy's losses were growing.

The representative of Australia observed that Ian Smith, by rejecting the United Kingdom's Geneva proposals and announcing his intention to seek an internal settlement, had brought to a standstill negotiations that had been warmly welcomed by the international community as offering the best path to peaceful decolonization in Zimbabwe. The situation had since deteriorated: the guerrilla war had grown in intensity, with tragic losses on all sides; young Zimbabweans, denied adequate expression of their nationalist sentiments, were leaving Southern Rhodesia to join their compatriots already outside the territory.

Australia, he went on, was encouraged by the concern of the United States for developments in southern Africa, expressed at the highest levels of the United States Administration, and it hoped that all parties would bear in mind the potential of the United States for assisting the United Kingdom in the search for genuine majority rule. He reiterated that his Government's objective was peaceful, genuine decolonization in Zimbabwe, with a genuinely democratic government elected by the Zimbabwean people, and Australia believed that no substantial element of political opinion, inside or outside Zimbabwe, should be excluded from negotiations, provided they accepted the principle of majority rule.

According to the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, the Geneva conference had failed because of the calculated obstruction of the Smith regime, which had attended the conference not to negotiate seriously but to get an endorsement for leaving power in the hands of the white minority. While the negotiations were going on, Smith intensified his acts of aggression against the neighbouring independent African States of Zambia, Botswana and Mozambique. Repressive measures against the black majority inside Zimbabwe were increased. Wanton mass killings of innocent Africans and continued detentions were the order of the day.

The Tanzanian representative went on to say that the international community had waited long enough: Smith had to be removed from power; the period for appeasing and tolerating the racist minority regime should be over. Her Government, she said, had no objection to the reconvening of the conference for a negotiated settlement in Zimbabwe, but it wished to reiterate that Rhodesia was a responsibility primarily of the United Kingdom Government as the legal authority and decolonizing power.

The Organization of African Unity, she said, had pledged its full support to the armed struggle until there was majority rule in Zimbabwe; sanctions should be intensified and extended to include all the provisions of Article 41 of the United Nations Charter. In that respect, she commended the step taken by the United States Government to repeal the so-called Byrd amendment, which had allowed the United States to buy chrome from Rhodesia.

Other speakers also called attention to the United Kingdom Government's responsibility for the territory, which the representative of Ethiopia, for example, said was as valid as it had been in 1965. The United Kingdom had to show decisiveness in dealing with the continued rebellion of Ian Smith against the British Crown, and, while it was free to get help from any quarter in dealing with the problem, such help should not compromise the legal and constitutional basis of the continued responsibility of the United Kingdom.

India's spokesman said it was tragic that a small minority of white racists had been allowed to usurp power physically from the colonial power, but what was important was that the United Kingdom had never disowned its responsibility or, indeed, its liability. On the contrary, he said, it had continued its efforts to correct that deviation and it deserved to be assisted in the complex task of discharging its legal responsibility, as well as the sacred trust it had assumed in terms of the Charter for the well-being of the inhabitants of the territory.

The representative of Czechoslovakia said it was a well-established fact that the Smith regime could not exist even for a day without the military, economic and political assistance extended to it by the imperialist States, particularly the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). He charged, among other things, that mercenaries from Australia, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom, South Africa and the United States were fighting in the army of Southern Rhodesia. The participation of those mercenaries in the military operations against the national liberation movements attested clearly to the military assistance of imperialism to the racist regime. Even if regular units of the aforementioned Western countries had not been used, the mercenaries were equipped with weapons from imperialist countries and most of them had already fought in other parts of the world—Asia and Latin America—against nations struggling for their liberation.

The Australian representative said that while his Government was not empowered to prevent Australians from leaving Australia, it had strongly discouraged the recruitment or training of mercenaries for service in any country. Draft legislation was currently before its Parliament to prohibit recruitment in Australia for any armed service outside the country.

The Bulgarian representative charged that the arms expenditures of the regime had risen dramatically in recent years, thanks to financial assistance from imperialist circles and from international institutions under their influence. With NATO assistance, strong military forces in Southern Rhodesia had been created and a large industrial complex had been built up. It was obvious, he added, that the enormous natural resources, the cheap labour and the extremely high profits derived from the exploitation of the Zimbabwean people, as well as global military-strategic interests, were the basic reasons for the particular interest of Western countries and their monopolies in the preservation of the Smith regime. He said that Bulgaria, like so many other States, believed that it was time to adopt more decisive and effective international measures against the racist regime, pursuant to Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

The USSR representative said that the illegal regime of Ian Smith, with the overt support of the racists of South Africa and the connivance of imperialist circles, continued its racist policy of violence, exploitation and aggression and was guilty of gross and mass violations of the human rights of the African population. The numerous decisions of the United Nations, including resolutions of the Security Council, were ignored and flouted. The racist regime continued to perpetrate mass slaughter of innocent people and to put behind bars without trial those Zimbabweans who favoured the transfer of power to the African majority.

The Chinese representative said that, during the preceding year, the patriotic armed forces of Zimbabwe had continued to grow in strength and had expanded their areas of operation from the north-eastern region to the northern, eastern, north-western and south-eastern regions, covering more than half of Zimbabwe. The freedom fighters had caused heavy casualties among the colonial troops, winning continuous victories. In their struggle against the Smith regime, he said, the people of Zimbabwe had gained a profound understanding that the independence and liberation of Zimbabwe could be won only through their unremitting struggle, that the revolutionary people must in all circumstances use revolutionary tactics to deal with the counter-revolutionary tactics, that armed struggle was the reliable means for overthrowing colonial and racist rule and for achieving national liberation, that negotiations had to be based on fighting, and that, until the enemy had laid down his arms and real independence was won, armed struggle had to be strengthened and not weakened.

The representative of Yugoslavia and others said that the racist regime had been attempting, by a series of aggressive military actions against Zambia, Mozambique and Botswana, to internationalize the conflict and to obtain military assistance and protection from abroad on the pretext of an alleged threat of international communism. However, that attempt would not succeed, and Smith's minority regime seemed aware of that fact, as shown by the exodus of increasing numbers of white emigrants from Southern Rhodesia. The era of colonialism and racism had become historically obsolete, and their vestiges in southern Africa could not endure.

A number of speakers called for increased unity among the nationalist leaders, which Norway called a prerequisite for new progress. Australia urged that all nationalist elements work to minimize their differences, so that all might contribute their respective strengths to the nationalist movement as a whole; a united nationalist front would strengthen the hand of those working for a resumption of genuine negotiations.

The representative of India wondered how there could be majority rule when the majority seemed to be divided and its components at cross purposes. It was sad indeed that the unity of the majority should be eroded at a time when the need for unity and solidarity was vitally important.

The USSR said that the patriots of Zimbabwe had scored a number of major successes and caused severe losses to the enemy both in manpower and technology. Those who were participating in the armed struggle had closed their ranks and turned themselves into a single united liberation army. The Patriotic Front enjoyed growing support from the front-line African States, many of the countries of OAU and socialist and other progressive forces throughout the world.

The Norwegian representative urged continued efforts by the international community to solve the Rhodesian conflict at the negotiating table. She observed that every day, as new lives were lost, the differences between the white minority and the African majority widened and the possibilities for a negotiated solution became fewer. Norway, she said, hoped that the latest British-American initiative would lead to resumed negotiations between all parties concerned and that the front-line States could be drawn in to the preparatory work. She also said that South Africa bore the main responsibility for the ineffectiveness of the sanctions against the Smith regime: without supply lines to South Africa, the minority regime would be forced to come to the negotiating table in a very short time. The Norwegian Government also believed that the sanctions against Rhodesia should be broadened.

On 8 August 1977, the Special Committee unanimously adopted two resolutions, one of which related to the question of Southern Rhodesia in general. By its terms, the Special Committee among other things: reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right; condemned the continued war of repression and the intensified oppressive measures against those people by the illegal racist minority regime; condemned the regime for the repeated acts of aggression and threats against Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia; and condemned South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime in contravention of United Nations resolutions.

By this text, the Special Committee also: reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the territory had to be worked out with the full participation of the people of the territory and in accordance with their true aspirations; called on the United Kingdom, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population, and under no circumstances to accord to the illegal regime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty.

The Special Committee also: firmly supported the people of Zimbabwe under the leadership of their national liberation movement in their struggle to achieve majority rule, and emphasized the importance of maintaining a united leadership within that movement. It reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, in particular those provisions calling for assistance to the front-line States which were victims of aggression.

Also by the resolution, the Special Committee demand: (a) the termination of all repressive measures perpetrated by the regime against the people of Zimbabwe and in particular the wanton killings and executions, the arbitrary closure of African areas, the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of concentration camps; (b) the unconditional and immediate release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, the removal of all restrictions on political activity and the establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, as well as the restoration of fundamental human rights; (c) the cessation of the influx of immigrants into the territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom; and (d) the immediate cessation of all acts of aggression and threats against neighbouring African States.

The Special Committee then: appealed to all States to take all necessary and effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia; requested all States to give immediate and substantial material assistance to enable Mozambique to strengthen its defence capability; requested all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes, to extend, in consultation with OAU, to the people of Zimbabwe and their liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle for their inalienable rights; invited all Governments, the specialized agencies, other organizations and the Secretary-General to publicize through all media information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant decisions and actions of the United Nations, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal regime; and decided to keep the situation in the territory under review.

By the text of the second resolution, which dealt with sanctions, the Special Committee among other things: strongly condemned the policies of the Governments, particularly that of South Africa, which, in violation of United Nations resolutions and in open contravention of their specific obligations under Article 25 of the United Nations Charter, continued to collaborate with the illegal regime, and called upon them to cease such collaboration; condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions strictly, as being contrary to their Charter obligations; and condemned South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime.

The Special Committee also called upon all Governments which had not done so: to ensure strict compliance with the sanctions by all entities under their jurisdiction; to prevent or discourage emigration to Southern Rhodesia by individuals or groups; to discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal regime, inter alia by forbidding the operation and activities of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board and the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravened the aims and purposes of the sanctions; and to invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the territory.

The Special Committee also requested all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes, to extend to Mozambique financial, technical and material assistance to enable it to overcome economic difficulties in connexion with its application of economic sanctions against the regime and the severe economic loss and destruction of property brought about by the acts of aggression committed by the regime. The Security Council was asked to undertake a periodic review of economic assistance to Mozambique as well as to Zambia. Finally, the Special Committee deemed it imperative that the scope of the sanctions be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41, and reiterated its request that the Security Council urgently consider taking the necessary measures in that regard.

Communications to and consideration by the Security Council (September 1977)

Communications (1-23 September)

On 1 September, the representative of the United Kingdom communicated to the President of the Security Council the text of proposals for the restoration of legality in Southern Rhodesia and the settlement of the Southern Rhodesian problem. The letter said that the proposals had been drawn up by the United Kingdom Government with the full agreement of the United States Government and after consulting all the parties concerned.

The proposals, which were attached to the letter, were described in a foreword as being based on the following elements:

- (1) the surrender of power by the illegal regime and a return to legality;
- (2) an orderly and peaceful transition to independence in the course of 1978;
- (3) free and impartial elections on the basis of universal adult suffrage;
- (4) the establishment by the British Government of a transitional administration, with the task of conducting the elections for an independent government;
- (5) a United Nations presence, including a United Nations force, during the transition period;

(6) an independence constitution providing for a democratically elected government, the abolition of discrimination, the protection of individual human rights and the independence of the judiciary; and

(7) a development fund to revive the economy of the country which the United Kingdom and the United States viewed as predicated upon the implementation of the settlement as a whole.

While it was impossible at that stage, the foreword stated, to lay down an exact timetable, it was the intention of the British Government that elections would be held, and that Rhodesia would become independent, as Zimbabwe, not later than six months after the return to legality. To achieve that end, it would be necessary to proceed, as quickly as possible after the return to legality, to the registration of voters, to the delimitation of constituencies, to the detailed drafting of the independence constitution and to its enactment under the authority of the British Parliament.

A detailed account of the proposals was given, followed by annexes containing the principal points of the proposed constitution, the constitutional arrangements during the transition period, and details of the development fund. The precise provisions of the independence constitution were to be elaborated in further detailed discussions with the parties and in due course were to be considered at a constitutional conference to be held during the transition period.

A section on the transition stated among other things that the British Government would place before the Security Council its proposal for the independence constitution and for the administration of the territory during the transition period leading up to independence. The latter was to comprise the following elements:

(a) the appointment by the British Government, either under existing statutory powers or under new powers enacted for the purpose, of a Resident Commissioner and a Deputy. The role of the Resident Commissioner would be to administer the country, to organize and conduct the general election which, within a period not exceeding six months, would lead to independence for Zimbabwe, and to take command, as Commander-in-Chief, of all armed forces in Rhodesia, apart from a United Nations Zimbabwe Force;

(b) the appointment, by the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the authority of the Security Council, of a special representative whose role would be to work with the Resident Commissioner and to observe that the administration of the country and the organization and conduct of the elections were fair and impartial;

(c) the establishment, by resolution of the Secu-riety Council, of a United Nations Zimbabwe Force whose role could include: the supervision of the cease-fire; support for the civil power; and liaison with the existing Rhodesian armed forces and with the forces of the liberation armies. The Secretary-General would be invited to appoint a representative to enter into discussions, before the transition period, with the British Resident Commissioner-designate and with all the parties, with a view to establishing in detail the respective roles of all the forces in Rhodesia;

(d) the primary responsibility for the maintenance of law and order during the transition period was to lie with the police forces. They were to be under the command of a Commissioner of Police, to be appointed by and responsible to the Resident Commissioner. The special representative of the Secretary-General might appoint liaison officers to the police forces;

(e) the formation, as soon as possible after the establishment of the transitional administration, of a new Zimbabwe National Army which would in due course replace all existing armed forces in Rhodesia and would be the army of the future independent State of Zimbabwe; and

(f) the establishment by the Resident Commissioner of an electoral and boundary commission, with the role of carrying out the registration of voters, the delimitation of constituencies and the holding of a general election for the purposes of the independence constitution.

It was stated in conclusion that the United Kingdom and United States Governments believed that the proposals provided security, but not privilege, under the rule of law for all the citizens of independent Zimbabwe, equal political rights without discrimination, and the right to be governed by a government of their own choice. The two Governments also believed that the proposed arrangements for the transfer of power were calculated to ensure a quick, orderly and peaceful transition to independence and had agreed to use their joint influence to the full to put the proposals into effect.

On 8 September, the United Kingdom representative transmitted a statement issued by the United Kingdom Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, David Owen, in Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, on 1 September, regarding the proposals published that day. The statement dealt with the basic proposals, their implementation, the role of the various forces, the Zimbabwe National Army and the United Nations Zimbabwe Force.

Among other things, the Foreign Secretary said that the agreed results of the discussions on the cease-fire, on the transition period and on the Zimbabwe National Army would be brought before the Security Council by the British Government to secure the necessary mandate for the establishment of the United Nations Zimbabwe Force. He hoped that the Council, by providing for the United Nations role in Zimbabwe, would at the same time endorse the agreements reached and thus put the weight of the international community behind them. He went on to say that the British and United States Governments, while not underestimating the intense difficulties that still needed to be faced, believed that it was possible to achieve an internationally accepted negotiated settlement on the basis of the proposals, and intended to go forward on that basis.

On 23 September, the United Kingdom, referring to its previous letters, requested that a meeting of the Security Council be convened and noted that, under the proposals for settlement of the Rhodesian problem, it was stated that the Secretary-General of the United Nations would be invited to appoint a representative to enter into discussions, before the transition period, with the British Resident Commissioner-designate and with all the parties, with a view to establishing in detail the respective roles of all the forces in Rhodesia. The United Kingdom Government currently wished to extend that invitation to the Secretary-General through the Security Council, the letter stated.

In accordance with a request contained in a letter dated 28 September from the representative of Benin, a statement issued at Maputo on 12 September 1977 by the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe on the British proposals for a settlement in Southern Rhodesia was issued as a document of the Security Council.

Meetings of the Security Council (28 and 29 September)

The Security Council considered the situation in Southern Rhodesia at meetings on 28 and 29 September. The representatives of Gabon and Kenya, at their request, were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. At the request of Benin, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mauritius, the President of the Council also extend an invitation to Joshua Nkomo and Callistus Nkobi Ndlovu of the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe.

The Council had before it the text of a draft resolution sponsored by the United Kingdom, by the preambular part of which the Security Council would take note of the letters dated 1 September and 8 September 1977 from the United Kingdom, as well as the invitation to the Secretary-General in the letter dated 23 September, to appoint a representative.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Council would:

(1) request the Secretary-General to appoint a representative to enter into discussions with the British Resident Commissioner-designate and with all the parties concerning the military and associated arrangements that were considered necessary to effect the transition to majority rule in Southern Rhodesia;

(2) further request the Secretary-General to transmit a report on the result of these discussions to the Council as soon as possible; and

(3) call upon all parties to co-operate with the representative of the Secretary-General in the conduct of the discussions.

David Owen, Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary of the United Kingdom, said that his Government had striven within the international community to bring about an end to the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and to achieve at the earliest possible date a transfer to majority rule and an independent, free Zimbabwe. There were many different views about the form of a settlement; in his judgement it was impossible to reach a total agreement among all the parties. The crucial issue at the current stage was to try to end the fighting and bring about a cease-fire. The principles involved, he said, were that Ian Smith and the illegal regime had to "stand down" before a transitional administration was set up, that there be free and fair elections, and that they be conducted on the basis of one person, one vote. The United Kingdom had advocated a role for the United Nations because it believed it offered an assurance to the nationalist leadership by guaranteeing the impartiality of elections and by guarding against any fears they might have of recolonization because of the presence of a resident commissioner under the British Government.

The Security Council was not being asked at this stage to pass judgement on the proposals, he said, but only to take a limited step regarding the appointment of a special representative of the Secretary-General.

The spokesman for the United States said that the United States supported the proposals, which he referred to as Anglo-African-American proposals, which had come about because of initiatives on the part of nations and peoples of Africa themselves. The appointment of the Secretary-General's representative as a first step would offer a chance to explore the possibilities of a permanent solution, and give Zimbabwe an opportunity to move towards independence and majority rule without the in-fighting and dissension inevitably accompanying the struggle for freedom when not accompanied by the support of the international community.

Mr. Nkomo said that the Patriotic Front, the liberation movement of Zimbabwe, recognized the positive role of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the process of decolonization. However, the proposed United Nations role in Zimbabwe was different from what it had been: this time, it was the colonizer who was requesting the Security Council to come to his aid. If the United Kingdom's motive was to make the United Nations play the role of partner in the furtherance of colonial interests, he and his movement vehemently opposed the move. If, on the other hand, the United Nations presence was sought to facilitate the complete decolonization of Zimbabwe, the Patriotic Front would have nothing against it. In other words, unless the role of the United Nations representative was specifically defined, there was a danger that he might be seduced into playing a role inimical to the interests of the United Nations and of the people of Zimbabwe.

He continued by stating that if the United Nations were to fulfil the objective of decolonization in Southern Rhodesia, its representative's role had to be defined in terms which advanced that objective in a concrete and practical way; the instrument by which he was appointed should make clear, first, that his appointment was made by the Secretary-General acting in close consultation with the members of the Security Council and the parties to the armed conflict, and, second, that his duties, powers and functions were determined in close consultation with those same members and parties.

Support for the United Kingdom proposal for appointment of a United Nations representative was expressed by a number of speakers, among them Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Pakistan, Panama and Venezuela. The representative of France added that the Council, after receiving the expected report from the representative, would be in a position to decide whether or not to go ahead with the application of the latest proposals.

Benin, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius, and Romania generally supported the proposal to appoint a representative of the Secretary-General as an exploratory and limited step. The representative of Benin insisted that the mandate of the representative be defined in such a way as not to undermine the national liberation movement of Zimbabwe. The Romanian representative emphasized that the appointment of the special representative was in no way to be used as justification for evading previous Security Council and General Assembly resolutions concerning Southern Rhodesia, or as a pretext for putting off a settlement. The spokesman for the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also wished to ensure that the representative was not committed to the acceptance of any matter of substance in the Anglo-American proposals. His Government, he said, would not accept any interpretation of the representative's mission that would imply support for the suspension of the just struggle of the people of Zimbabwe.

The USSR representative said his Government categorically favoured the earliest possible transfer of State power in Zimbabwe to the genuine representatives of the people—the national liberation movement headed by the Patriotic Front. The external policy of the USSR, he added, was aimed at the total elimination of all remnants of colonial oppression, of the infringement of the equality and independence of peoples, and of all hotbeds of colonialism and racism. It sought no privileges for itself in Africa, nor did it covet concessions or bases, nor did it impose on African countries its own world outlook.

He went on to say that if the racist regime still dared to defy the world community it was only because the appropriate measures and sanctions had not been observed by certain Member States of the United Nations. As for the recent Anglo-American plan for a settlement in Southern Rhodesia, he said the USSR could accept neither direct nor indirect forms of recognition of that plan as a possible basis for a settlement. The representative of the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe and a number of African countries had pointed to the neo-colonialist tendencies of its provisions, and the USSR categorically objected to the fact that the United Nations should be involved in measures connected with a Rhodesian settlement which might be prejudicial to the national liberation struggle of the people of Zimbabwe. Even though the Foreign Secretary of the United Kingdom had said that a decision of the Council to appoint a representative of the Secretary-General would in no way mean approval of the Anglo-American plan, nevertheless the USSR feared that such a decision might be used to approach the plan by the back door. It could not therefore support the draft resolution, but would not impede its adoption.

According to the Chinese representative, the substance of the proposals was not in accord with the spirit of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, and was in some respects even contradictory. Although the proposals were only preliminary, the Council was being requested to confirm one of them—that is, the appointment of a representative of the Secretary-General—which could create the impression that the Council had basically approved or confirmed the proposals themselves, and thereby weaken and disrupt the armed struggle of the Zimbabwe people. He said that China could not support the draft resolution and would not participate in the vote.

The representative of Gabon, speaking on behalf of the current Chairman of the Organization of African Unity, agreed with Mr. Nkomo that the representative of the Secretary-General should be chosen and his mandate determined in close consultation with the members of the Council and the parties to the conflict. For free and independent Africa, the negotiations which were about to begin could be productive only if no pre-conditions were set and if they were held between the colonial power—the United Kingdom—and the Patriotic Front, the latter being the only organization qualified to represent the interests of the Zimbabwe people. The appointment of a representative of the Secretary-General in Southern Rhodesia, which OAU accepted, should not be a delaying tactic that would make it possible for the Smith regime to get its second wind and annihilate the aspirations of the Zimbabwe people.

The representative of Kenya did not feel that the United Nations should take any action that would shift, however briefly, the responsibility of the administering power to the United Nations, which should not be called upon to undertake negotiations which had been going on between that power and the rebel regime for the past 12 years.

Amendments to the text put forward by Benin, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mauritius were accepted by the United Kingdom: one proposed the addition of a new preambular paragraph by which the Council would state that it had heard the statement of Joshua Nkomo, co-leader of the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe; by another, the Council would request the Secretary-General to appoint his representative in consultation with the members of the Security Council.

The Council, at its meeting on 29 September, adopted the revised draft resolution—by 13 votes to O, with 1 abstention (USSR)—as resolution 415(1977). China did not participate in the vote.

The Secretary-General said he would immediately take the necessary action to appoint a personal representative, paying particular attention to experience and the special circumstances. He added that he was under no illusion as to the complexities and difficulties of the task entrusted to him and his representative. Success would depend on the co-operation and understanding of the parties concerned and on the degree of their determination to find a solution to the problem by peaceful means. He said he would report to the Council as soon as possible on the results of his representative's discussions with the British Resident Commissioner and with all the parties concerned.

In a note dated 4 October 1977, the President of the Security Council said he had been informed on 30 September of the Secretary-General's intention to appoint Lieutenant-General Dewan Prem Chand as his representative in accordance with the Security Council's resolution of 29 September (415(1977)). The President said he had informed the Secretary-General, after consultations, that the appointment was acceptable to 14 members of the Council; China dissociated itself from the matter. The President also said that, in a further communication of 4 October, the Secretary-General had informed him that in the light of those consultations, he had appointed General Prem Chand as his representative and had asked him to come to United Nations Headquarters to consult with the Secretary-General and to organize his mission.

Interim report of the Committee on sanctions

On 18 November 1977, the Security Council's Committee on sanctions (established in pursuance of Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968)³⁰ submitted an interim report regarding the implementation of two decisions taken by the Security Council earlier in 1977 on the expansion of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. The first of these decisions was taken on 27 May when the Council adopted resolution 409(1977) (see above), by the third operative paragraph of which the Council requested the Committee to examine, in addition to its other functions, the application of further measures under Article 41 of the Charter and report thereon as soon as possible. The other decision was taken on 30 June, when the Council, after considering a complaint by Mozambique (see p. 237), adopted resolution 411(1977), by an operative paragraph of which it had requested the Committee to examine as a matter of priority further effective measures to tighten the scope of sanctions in accordance with Article 41 and urgently submit its recommendations to the Council.

Accordingly, the Committee reported, it had considered the subject of the expansion of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia together with the implementation of the two Security Council decisions. Proposals submitted by Benin, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the USSR were annexed to the report. The Committee said, among other things, that, while all the members shared the conviction that a further expansion of sanctions was an important weapon against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, no consensus had been achieved on the measures proposed.

With regard to the question of submitting a report, the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States took the position that, in view of the current developments concerning Southern Rhodesia as a whole, it would be prudent to defer that action. They were supported by Canada, France and the Federal Republic of Germany. Bearing in mind the current negotiations, in some of which the representative of the Secretary-General was also involved, they felt that the time was not opportune for recommending any further specific measures before the outcome of those negotiations was known.

The other 10 members of the Committee felt, however, that it was obliged, under the provisions of the relevant Security Council resolutions, to submit the requested report as soon as possible. They were of the opinion that further sanctions were indispensable. Besides, the question of the timing for considering further measures against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia was for the Council to decide when the Committee's report was before it. Benin, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius, Pakistan, Panama, Romania, the USSR and Venezuela said that the Committee had a specific mandate entrusted to it by the Security Council and should fulfil it. The representative of China was in favour of strengthening and expanding sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, and believed that the Committee should proceed with its work.

The Committee reached consensus to the effect that it should submit to the Security Council an interim report which would reflect the current status of the Committee's deliberations as to the proposals before it and as to the timing of the submission of a full report.

Consideration by the General Assembly

General aspects

At its thirty-second session in 1977, the General Assembly referred the question of Southern Rhodesia to its Fourth Committee, which considered the item at meetings held between 15 November and 12 December.

During the Fourth Committee's consideration, Tirivafi Kangai and Callistus Nkobi Ndlovu, representatives of the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe), participated as observers and made statements. Requests for a hearing were also granted to: the Reverend Ndabaningi Sithole, of the Zimbabwe African National Union; Elton Razemba, of the African National Council of Zimbabwe; Romesh Chandra, Gordon Schaffer, Karen Talbot and Camillo Perez, of the World Peace Council; the Reverend Michael Scott, of the International League for Human Rights; and Bernard Rivers, of the Haslemere Group.

The Rapporteur of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples introduced the chapter of the Special Committee's report dealing with Southern Rhodesia and expressed the hope that the recommendations contained therein would be endorsed by the Fourth Committee.

The representative of the United Kingdom noted that intensive negotiations over the Rhodesian problem had been going on elsewhere while the General Assembly was in session, and he gave the Committee an account of recent efforts by his Government.

He said that following the visit to southern Africa in April by David Owen, the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary of the United Kingdom, to discuss a new approach with all the interested parties, a joint Anglo-American consultative group had visited southern Africa in May and again in July for discussions with representatives of the main nationalist groupings and the Rhodesian front in Southern Rhodesia, as well as with officials of the front-line States and South Africa. The consultations had centred on the possible contents of an independence constitution, on the democratic electoral process needed to bring about transition to majority rule by 1978, and on the measures necessary to support the future economy of Zimbabwe—in particular, how to retain in that country the skills and commitment of the white population. It was accepted by the British and United States Governments, he said, that violence would be likely to continue until the nationalists were confident that the Rhodesian front would hand over power.

He said that Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the leader of the united African National Council, and the Reverend Sithole both had expressed support for the new initiative. Joshua Nkomo, speaking for the Patriotic Front on 5 July, had said that the front was unwilling to discuss a constitution until negotiations for the hand-over of power had been completed. Ian Smith, however, had said in Salisbury on 18 July that he did not believe that there would be a successful outcome to the negotiations, and had announced that a general election would be held on 31 August to seek the electorate's support for an internal settlement. Mr. Owen had told the House of Commons on 25 July that an internal settlement did not satisfy the prime commitment to fair elections; it would allow a continuation of the armed struggle, making it difficult to hold elections. Any Government in Zimbabwe, either black or white, needed to have recognition by the international community. Furthermore, to exclude any nationalist leaders from a fair electoral process would be a recipe for continued strife. Mr. Owen had also informed the House of Commons that the Anglo-American consultative group was close to producing proposals which, although not consensuses, were proposals on which it was possible to reach some measure of agreement.

The representative then went on to describe the United Kingdom's proposals for a settlement which were published on 1 September (see p. 188), and said the administering power could not presume to decide what political answers were to be given by the people of the country after independence. But it had a real responsibility, which his Government had almost without exception been able to discharge in its other colonies, to ensure that at independence power and legality were transferred to a government which the people themselves had chosen. In Southern Rhodesia the pre-conditions for discharging that responsibility had simply not existed. Past elections had been confined to all intents and purposes to the white minority of the population, and in recent years the illegal character of the regime and consequent isolation of its society had produced an abnormal political climate, so that even the apparently overwhelming support given to Mr. Smith might not reflect accurately what the white minority really thought on some of the basic issues.

Continuing, he said that the absence of elections had not simply prevented the black majority from having a proper say in the destiny of their own country; it had also meant that the majority had not been able to select their own leaders, or to prove clearly what leaders they did support. The frustration of the black population, confronted with a situation in which the peaceful path to change through the ballot-box seemed irrevocably blocked, had inevitably led to the armed struggle currently taking place, and those who had taken up arms had established an undeniable claim to a voice in framing the terms of an eventual settlement. He added that it was no secret that there were disputes over who genuinely spoke for the majority in Rhodesia; the United Kingdom had been severely handicapped in its efforts by disunity among some of the nationalist leaders concerned. It was obvious that the illegal regime would continue to seek to exploit such disputes.

The representative of the United Kingdom then gave a detailed account of the negotiations which Field-Marshal Lord Carver—the British Resident Commissioner-designate—and the Secretary-General's representative, General Prem Chand, had been conducting on the basis of the Security Council's resolution 415(1977) of 29 September (see above). His Government was continuing to work urgently on the elaboration of its proposals and to remain in touch with the various parties.

In connexion with a recent announcement of Mr. Smith's acceptance of the principle of majority rule, he said the small print might need careful examination, and it remained to be seen whether Mr. Smith had unequivocally accepted the principle of one person, one vote.

Independence for Zimbabwe had to involve a genuine transfer of power to a government representing the majority of the people of Southern Rhodesia following elections on the basis of universal adult suffrage, he declared, and all peoples and parties who intended to live in a future Zimbabwe had to be free to participate if they wished to do so, whether they were currently living inside or outside Rhodesia. It was very important for Zimbabwe, he said, that its new government should win wide acceptance in the world and that the world should not cast doubt on the validity of the result.

The representative of the United States said that his Government would continue to seek a settlement that took account of the interests of all parties and Governments concerned and constituted the best solution to enable the people of Zimbabwe to choose their political leaders and bring freedom and majority rule to that country. Although the various parties had expressed reservations concerning the United Kingdom's proposal, none of them had rejected it, he noted. The position of the United States was that independence for Zimbabwe had to involve a genuine transfer of power to a government representing the majority of the people and selected on the basis of fair elections involving the participation of all parties, namely the nationalists outside, as well as inside, the country. Negotiations which intended to exclude certain nationalist forces were destined to fail and could only aggravate the conflict.

He went on to say that the United States was prepared to take the necessary steps to secure the implementation of the proposals and to support a consensus resolution based on the recommendations of the Special Committee on granting independence. He noted that a number of Members believed that an immediate expansion of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia was advisable. The United States agreed that the sanctions, and also the armed struggle, had been an important factor that could lead to the eventual downfall of the Smith regime, but it urged that such action be postponed so that the negotiating process could take its course.

Support for the efforts being made was expressed by a number of speakers, including Argentina, Austria, Iran, Italy, Japan, the Sudan and Zaire. Belgium's representative, for example, speaking on behalf of the nine members of the European Economic Community (EEC), said the Anglo-American settlement proposals, which had been patiently put forward in continuous consultations with all the parties concerned, deserved consideration and support. The EEC countries, he said, welcomed the fact that the United Nations had recently assumed a more direct role in the search for a final and peaceful solution to the Southern Rhodesian problem. The Council's resolution calling for the appointment of a representative to enter into talks with the British Resident Commissioner-designate and with all the parties was a clear indication of the international community's acquiescence in the Anglo-American endeavours to bring about a peaceful settlement and accession to independence. The EEC countries, he added, would certainly abide strictly by the Security Council sanctions, and they awaited the time when they would be able to establish links with the government of an independent Zimbabwe to which they would offer their support, co-operation and friendship.

The French representative said that France subscribed to the principles motivating the authors of the Anglo-American plan, and hoped that the temporary setbacks they had recently suffered would not prevent their proposals from serving as a basis for negotiations. The plan had already clearly had some effects, since Mr. Smith had recognized that privileged voting was not the only way to ensure the survival of the white community and had given grounds for believing that he subscribed to the principle that all men and women had the right to vote. It was important not to take hasty decisions which might jeopardize the United Kingdom's initiative.

The spokesman for Ghana said that the Anglo-American proposals deserved better success than they had thus far achieved. For the first time in a very long period, the administering power had seemed ready and willing to assume its full responsibilities within the territory during an interim period. The idea of a United Nations force to support the maintenance of internal law and order during the transition seemed basically a very sound one, though it needed to be defined more precisely. The package was not perfect, he said, but it could provide a basis for negotiation.

The representative of Zambia said that her country could not but welcome the fact that the United Kingdom had at last decided to assume its responsibilities in Southern Rhodesia. Zambia's position was that the Anglo-American proposals were acceptable only to the extent that they constituted a basis for negotiations; they were not in themselves an agreement. The Patriotic Front had the right to accept, amend or reject any part of the proposals. The only point which was not negotiable, she said, was the principle of independence on the basis of majority rule. She also noted that at their summit conference held in Maputo, Mozambique, in September, the frontline States had accepted the Anglo-American proposals as a basis for negotiations.

According to Kenya, the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security. In the face of the intensification of the guerrilla war, the racist regime was expanding the armed forces, improving their weapons and egging them on to take terrible vengeance on the guerrillas. One army unit, the Selous Scouts, even posed as guerrillas and inflicted acts of brutality on the African civilian population. The illegal regime hoped in that way to convince the African population and the international community that the national liberation movements perpetrated acts of brutality against their own people, the Kenyan representative said.

The Anglo-American proposals were very laudable, he said, but the administering power had to ensure that Ian Smith was forced out. Until he was, Kenya would continue to support the armed struggle and the strict application of sanctions. Kenya was in favour of the presence of a representative of the Secretary-General in the territory, but took the view that it was still the responsibility of the administering power to ensure a rapid and complete transfer of power to the black majority.

The spokesman for Madagascar said that the responsibility for the current serious situation in Zimbabwe lay primarily with the United Kingdom which, as administering power, should understand its role clearly and fulfil its obligations honestly. It should not seek to shift its responsibility to another country; the participation of the United States in the so-called Anglo-American proposals could only internationalize the conflict and make it more complex. The United States had no constitutional responsibility in Zimbabwe and it was not for it to preside over negotiations concerning the decolonization of the territory. The United Kingdom should implement the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by transferring power to the Zimbabwean people through the Patriotic Front without restriction. He said he failed to understand why the administering power, in submitting the so-called Anglo-American settlement plan, rather than recognize the existence of the nationalist armed forces and negotiating directly with the Patriotic Front, had proposed a transitional system which entirely violated the fundamental principles of the Declaration. The United Kingdom's move sought to put down the popular revolution in Zimbabwe and to maintain in the region a new bastion of imperialism and neo-colonialism.

The USSR representative said that while the Anglo-American proposals might contain some seemingly attractive features, they were actually designed to impose a neo-colonialist settlement of the problem. They did indeed recommend the departure of Smith, but they also contained provisions which in reality provided for the capitulation of the armed forces of the Patriotic Front. The authors of the proposal had tried to conceal that neo-colonialist aspect by inviting the United Nations to participate in the execution of the project. Bulgaria said that the negotiations were clearly being used by

Smith to gain time for the consolidation of his illegal occupation of Zimbabwe. Others making this point were Guyana, Hungary, Iraq, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

The spokesman for Mongolia condemned the Smith régime for disregarding world public opinion and the resolutions of the General Assembly, for perpetrating acts of repression and violence against the people of Zimbabwe, and for launching attacks against neighbouring sovereign States, which had suffered enormous material damage.

He and others also strongly condemned the military assistance received by the regime from South Africa and certain Western powers. These speakers maintained that attempts to reach a settlement in Southern Rhodesia had failed as a result of that assistance and the oppressed peoples had the right to obtain freedom, even by means of armed struggle. The unity of the liberation movements and the support of progressive countries throughout the world, including the socialist countries, would ensure the triumph of their just cause. Among those making these points were Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Romania.

Kenya, the Sudan, the USSR and others said that the natural resources of the territory were being drained by multinational corporations. Many speakers, including Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Nepal, Norway and Sri Lanka, observed that many States had not fully implemented Security Council resolutions by which sanctions against Southern Rhodesia had been called for. A number of Members called for the full application of sanctions under Article 41 of the Charter and for the extension of comprehensive sanctions against South Africa, which they charged with aiding and abetting Southern Rhodesia in violating sanctions.

The Reverend Ndabaningi Sithole, speaking as founding President of the Zimbabwe African National Union, referred to repeated statements that power should be transferred to the Patriotic Front and asked how the Patriotic Front could represent the majority of Zimbabweans when it did not exist as such in Zimbabwe. He challenged Members to send investigators to Zimbabwe to look into the presence of the Patriotic Front there. They would find ZANU and ZAPU—both of which had been banned—and the united African National Council. The Patriotic Front was not a political reality but an international political gimmick designed to impose leaders on Zimbabwe. If power was transferred to the Patriotic Front it would mean that it had simply been transferred from one minority to another.

Mr. Kangai, observer for the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe), said that the Reverend Sithole was no longer the President of ZANU, a function which was exercised by Robert Mugabe; ZANU had allied itself with ZAPU in the Patriotic Front and, despite their differences, those two organizations were united in the fight against the common enemy. The Reverend Sithole was no longer a guerrilla leader; the fact he had been well received in South Africa and by Ian Smith proved that. He and Bishop Muzorewa were actually recruiting Zimbabweans into Smith's army. Mr. Kangai said that the Patriotic Front did not shoot civilians; it attacked the Rhodesian army, army posts, police and farmers who were military reservists and who used their farms as intelligence posts for the enemy. If the United Kingdom and Smith handed over power to a few black puppets who would continue to exploit the black majority, the revolution would continue, he said.

Mr. Razemba, of the African National Council of Zimbabwe, observed that the Zimbabwe liberation struggle had been troubled in recent years by a lack of unity and by changes in leadership. Issues dividing factions of the liberation movement included the question of constitutional talks with the illegal regime, ideology and the relationship between the military cadres and the political leadership. In that connexion, he stressed that the so-called Patriotic Front, which had been devised by the leaders of certain front-line States and imposed by them on the liberation struggle, was a club of outsiders with strong backing from abroad but entirely unknown in Zimbabwe. It was also a regrettable fact that the military cadres fighting in Zimbabwe were as divided as the political leadership.

On 12 December 1977, the Fourth Committee approved two draft resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia, both of which were sponsored by the same 43 members. The first text related to the territory as a whole and was approved by consensus. The second concerned the question of sanctions and was approved by 112 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions. Both texts were adopted by the General Assembly on 16 December 1977—the first without vote, as resolution 32/116 A, the second by a recorded vote of 113 to 0, with 10 abstentions, as resolution 32/116 B.

By the preambular part of the first text, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed that any attempts to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal regime on the basis of independence before majority rule would be in contravention of the inalienable rights of the people of the territory and contrary to provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and of the Declaration on the granting of independence. It condemned the deliberate sabotage by the illegal racist minority regime of the numerous, intensive efforts being made to secure a negotiated settlement in Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule, and stressed the grave responsibility of the international community to take all possible measures in support of the people of Zimbabwe in their liberation struggle and in minimizing their hardship and suffering. The Assembly expressed its indignation at the arbitrary imprisonment and detention of political leaders and others, the massacre of freedom fighters and the continued denial of fundamental human rights, including in particular the wanton beating, torture and murder of innocent villagers, arbitrary criminal measures of collective punishment and measures designed to create an apartheid State in Zimbabwe. In addition, the Assembly commended the firm determination of the people of Zimbabwe, under the leadership of their national liberation movement, to achieve freedom and independence, it expressed its conviction that their unity and solidarity were fundamental to the rapid attainment of that objective, and it expressed its outrage over acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African States, including the most recent aggression against Mozambique.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly: reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right; reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the territory had to be worked out with the full participation of the people of Zimbabwe and in accordance with their true aspirations; condemned the continued war of repression and the intensified oppressive measures by the illegal regime, as well as its continuing acts of aggression and threats against Mozambique, Zambia and Botswana; and strongly condemned South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime.

The Assembly also, by this text: called on the United Kingdom, as the administering power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population and not to accord to the illegal regime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty; firmly supported the people of Zimbabwe in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence by all means at their disposal; and reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

The Assembly demanded: that all repressive measures perpetrated by the illegal regime be terminated, in particular the wanton killings and executions of Africans and their freedom fighters, the brutality committed in the "operational area," the arbitrary closure of African areas, the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of concentration camps; the unconditional and immediate release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, the removal of all restrictions on political activity and the establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, as well as the restoration to the population of fundamental human rights; the cessation of the influx of foreign immigrants into the territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom; and the immediate cessation of all acts of aggression and threats against neighbouring African States.

States were called on to: take effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia; give material assistance to Mozambique and Botswana to strengthen their defence capability; extend to the people of Zimbabwe and their liberation movement all the assistance necessary in their struggle for their inalienable rights; and give publicity through all the media to information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular the application of sanctions against the illegal regime.

The Assembly also by this text asked the United Kingdom to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee on granting independence and to report to the Special Committee and to the Assembly at its regular 1978 session. The Special Committee was asked to keep the situation under review as a matter of priority and also to report to the Assembly in 1978.

By the preambular part of resolution 32/116 B, the Assembly among other things: deplored the increasing collaboration of certain States, particularly South Africa, with the illegal regime, thus impeding the effective application of sanctions; considered that developments in the area called for concerted international action to impose maximum isolation on the regime; and expressed its concern that the measures approved by the Security Council had thus far failed to bring an end to the illegal regime, and its conviction that sanctions would not put an end to that regime unless they were comprehensive, mandatory and strictly supervised and unless measures were taken against States which violated them;

By the operative provisions of this resolution, the Assembly:

(1) condemned the policies of those Governments, particularly the Government of South Africa, which, in violation of United Nations resolutions and in open contravention of specific obligations under the Charter, continued to collaborate with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, and called on them to cease such collaboration;

(2) condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce the sanctions strictly;

(3) condemned South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime in contravention of Council resolutions on sanctions;

(4) called on all Governments which had not done so (a) to ensure strict compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions and to prohibit any collaboration by them with the illegal regime, (b) to prevent or discourage emigration to the territory by any individuals or groups of individuals under their jurisdiction, (c) to discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal regime by, among other things, forbidding the operation and activities of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board and the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravened the aims and purposes of the sanctions, (d) to invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the territory, and (e) to take measures against international companies and agencies which supplied petroleum and petroleum products to the illegal regime;

(5) requested all States, directly and through the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes within the United Nations system, to extend to Mozambique and Zambia all forms of financial, technical and material assistance for overcoming economic difficulties stemming from the application of economic sanctions against the illegal regime and the economic loss and destruction of property brought about by the acts of aggression committed by the regime, and asked the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to the two Governments;

(6) deemed it imperative that the scope of the sanctions be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter, and reiterated its request that the Council consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency;

(7) requested the Security Council to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa, since such products were transported from there into Southern Rhodesia; and

(8) requested the Special Committee on the granting of independence to follow the implementation of this resolution, and invited the Security Council's Committee on sanctions to continue to co-operate in the related work of the Special Committee.

(For text of resolution 32/116 B, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom proposed the addition to the preamble of the first draft resolution of a paragraph by which the Assembly would take note of the negotiations following Security Council resolution 415(1977) and the current initiative of the administering power for the accession of Zimbabwe to independence. After a suspension of the meeting to consider the proposal, the United Kingdom withdrew it in view, it said, of the difficulties it caused.

Several Members—Denmark, France, Israel, Japan, New Zealand, Portugal and Uruguay among them—in explaining their votes, expressed reservations about some of the provisions of the draft resolution on sanctions.

The representative of Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine countries of EEC, said that the operative paragraph by which Governments were called on to take certain specific measures to reinforce the sanctions did not take into account that, for humanitarian reasons, total suppression of services affecting personal relations between individuals should not be recommended; moreover, some of those measures were not compatible with certain constitutional provisions of EEC countries. They also had reservations about the operative paragraphs requesting Security Council action, since it was for the Council to decide on the desirability of widening the scope of sanctions and applying them to South Africa. The United States expressed a similar reservation.

The representative of the United Kingdom agreed with the position taken by Belgium on behalf of EEC and said it was ironic that the Fourth Committee should have ignored the Anglo-American proposals: they represented a balanced package and the only coherent basis for a settlement, which recent raids by the illegal regime into Mozambique had made more urgent than ever. If the proposals were accepted and put into effect, he said, the illegal régime could not survive.

Related General Assembly decisions

At its 1977 session, the General Assembly took a number of decisions having a bearing on various aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia. These are described briefly below.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DECLARATION ON THE GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

On 7 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/42) on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by which, among other things, it condemned the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans, in Namibia by South Africa and in Zimbabwe by the illegal regime, and stressed the need to take all necessary measures to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly with respect to Namibia and Zimbabwe. It deprecated the policies of States which continued to collaborate with South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. It asked all States to withhold assistance of any kind from South Africa and the illegal regime until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of their domination of the territories. It also urged all States to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee on granting independence to continue to examine compliance by Member States with resolutions relating to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and to take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support in achieving the objectives of the Declaration on the granting of independence and implementing resolutions concerning the oppressed peoples of the two territories.

The General Assembly also adopted a resolution (32/36) on the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations. By this text, adopted on 28 November, the Assembly said, among other things, that the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for self-determination and independence had entered its final and most crucial stage and it was therefore incumbent upon the entire international community to intensify concerted action in support of them. It expressed concern that the assistance extended thus far by the agencies and organizations to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, was far from adequate. It regretted that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund had not taken the necessary measures towards implementing the Declaration and other relevant resolutions and continued to co-operate with South Africa, and urged those agencies to formulate specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia. It also urged the agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to withhold financial, economic, technical or other assistance from South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those regimes.

(For details, see p. 847.)

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

On 28 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/35, by which, among other things, it affirmed that the natural resources of all colonial territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia, were the heritage of the peoples of those territories and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests in conjunction with the illegal regimes constituted a direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants. The Assembly condemned the support which the regimes continued to receive from foreign interests which were collaborating in the exploitation of the natural and human resources of, and in the entrenchment of domination over, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, respectively. The Assembly expressed its conviction that the scope of the sanctions adopted against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia should be expanded to cover all the measures contemplated in Article 41 of the Charter, and expressed the hope that the Security Council would envisage adopting appropriate measures to that end. The Assembly, further, condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions as well as the continued failure of certain

Member States to enforce those sanctions, and it strongly condemned the racist minority regime of South Africa for its continued collaboration with the regime in Southern Rhodesia, calling on it to cease such collaboration immediately.

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF THE RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

On 7 November, the Assembly adopted a resolution (32/14) relating to the importance of the realization of the right to self-determination, by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, of the Palestinian people and of all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference. (For details, see p. 703.)

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE ORGANIZATION OF AFRICAN UNITY

On 11 November, the Assembly adopted a resolution (32/19) relating to co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity by which among other things it declared its awareness of the urgent need to give increased assistance and support to the victims of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid resulting from intensified acts of aggression against neighbouring countries by the apartheid regime in South Africa and Namibia and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. It invited the specialized agencies and other organizations to intensify their co-operation with OAU and, through it, with the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe and Namibia. (For details, see p. 258.)

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1977, a total of 505 Southern Rhodesian students were studying abroad in 19 countries on scholarships granted under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, which was established by the General Assembly in 1967. Between 21 October 1976 and 30 September 1977, the Programme received 1,498 applications from Southern Rhodesians, granted 239 new awards and extended 266 awards.

On 28 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/37, by which, among other things, it recognized that, because of the continuing influx of refugee students from southern Africa into neighbouring States and the significant increases in the cost of educational and training awards, additional funds were essential if the Programme was to continue in operation at a satisfactory level, and it appealed once again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to the Programme in order to ensure its continuation and expansion in the light of increased needs.

(For further information about the Programme, see p. 261.)

Tenth report of the Committee on sanctions

On 24 January 1978, the Committee on sanctions submitted its tenth report, covering its work from 16 December 1976 to 15 December 1977.

The Committee reported that during the period under review, the Committee had continued the examination of 90 cases of suspected violations of sanctions carried over from previous reports and 37 new cases, including four cases that were opened on information supplied by individuals and non-governmental organizations. It had also received information from Governments on actions they had taken to prevent violations or actions taken against violators. The Committee had decided that 27 cases should be closed.

Also reviewed in the report were activities involving the Committee aimed at promoting more effective implementation of sanctions through continuing co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and with the Commonwealth Secretariat in London. The Committee also considered matters relating to: consular and other representation in Southern Rhodesia and representation of the illegal regime abroad; airlines operating to and from Southern Rhodesia; and immigration and tourism.

Annexes to the tenth report included: a report of the Chairman of the Committee on his personal visits with representatives of Governments from which replies were pending; reports on cases carried over from previous reports, and new cases; and correspondence conducted with Governments, non-governmental organizations and individuals concerning all the cases considered. A note and statistical data on Southern Rhodesian trade for the year 1976 was in preparation.

Resolution 32/116 A, as recommended by Fourth Committee, A/32/461, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1977, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Taking into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the administering Power,

Having heard the statements of the representatives of the national liberation movement who participated in an observer capacity in the consideration of the item,

Recalling its resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions relating to the question of Southern Rhodesia adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Special Committee,

Bearing in mind that the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, has the primary responsibility for putting an end to the critical situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) which, as repeatedly affirmed by the Security Council, constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming that any attempts to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal regime on the basis of independence before majority rule would be in contravention of the inalienable rights of the people of the Territory and contrary to the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and of resolution 1514 (XV),

Condemning the deliberate sabotage by the illegal racist minority regime of the numerous, intensive efforts being made to secure a negotiated settlement in Zimbabwe on the basis of majority rule,

Bearing in mind the resolutions on Zimbabwe adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 2 to 5 July 1977,

Stressing the grave responsibility of the international community to take all possible measures in support of the people of Zimbabwe in their liberation struggle and in minimizing the hardship and suffering of Zimbabweans in that regard,

Indignant at the arbitrary imprisonment and detention of political leaders and others, the massacre of freedom fighters and the continued denial of fundamental human rights, including in particular the wanton beating, torture and murder of innocent villagers, arbitrary criminal measures of collective punishment and measures designed to create an apartheid State in Zimbabwe,

Commending the firm determination of the people of Zimbabwe, under the leadership of their national liberation movement, to achieve freedom and independence, and convinced that their unity and solidarity are fundamental to the rapid attainment of that objective,

Outraged and deeply concerned by the continuing acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African States, including the most recent aggression against Mozambique which resulted in loss of human lives and destruction of property,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in conformity with the objectives of General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV);

2. Reaffirms the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the Territory must be worked out with the full participation of the people of Zimbabwe and in accordance with their true aspirations;

3. Condemns the continued war of repression and the intensified oppressive measures against the people of Zimbabwe by the illegal racist minority regime;

4. Strongly condemns the illegal racist minority regime for its continuing, brutal acts of aggression and threats against Mozambique, Zambia and Botswana;

5. Strongly condemns South Africa for its continued support of the illegal racist minority regime in contravention of the provisions of all the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Southern Rhodesia;

6. Calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering Power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population and not under any circumstances to accord to the illegal regime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty;

7. Firmly supports the people of Zimbabwe in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence by all means at their disposal;

8. Reaffirms the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, in particular the provisions calling for assistance to those front-line States which are victims of repeated acts of aggression by the racist minority regime;

9. Demands:

(a) The termination forthwith of all repressive measures perpetrated by the illegal racist minority regime against the people of Zimbabwe, in particular the wanton killings and executions of Africans and their freedom fighters carried out by that regime, the brutality committed in the "operational area," the arbitrary closure of African areas, the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of concentration camps;

(b) The unconditional and immediate release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, the removal of all restrictions on political activity and the establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, as well as the restoration to the population of fundamental human rights;

(c) The cessation of the influx of foreign immigrants into the Territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom;

(d) The immediate cessation of all acts of aggression and threats against neighbouring African States;

10. Calls upon all States to take all necessary and effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia;

11. Requests all States to give immediate and substantial material assistance to enable the Governments of Mozambique and Botswana to strengthen their defence capability in order to safeguard effectively their sovereignty and territorial integrity;

12. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members, as well as the non-governmental organizations concerned and the various programmes within the United Nations system, to extend, in consultation and co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to the people of Zimbabwe and their national liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable rights;

13. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, the United Nations bodies concerned and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization, as well as the Secretary-General, to take steps, as appropriate, to give widespread and continuous publicity through all the media at their disposal to information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant decisions and actions of the United Nations, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal regime;

14. Requests the Government of the United Kingdom to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in the discharge of the mandate entrusted to the latter by the General Assembly, and to report thereon to the Special Committee and to the Assembly at its thirty-third session;

15. Requests the Special Committee to keep the situation in the Territory under review as a matter of priority and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

The General Assembly,

Having adopted resolution A above on the question of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Strongly deploring the increasing collaboration, in violation of Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations and of the relevant decisions of the United Nations, which certain States, particularly South Africa, maintain with the illegal racist minority regime, thereby seriously impeding the effective application of sanctions and other measures taken thus far against the illegal régime,

Deeply disturbed at widespread violations of United Nations sanctions, including the operation of Southern Rhodesian aircraft for international passenger and cargo traffic, as well as the continued functioning of information and airline offices of the illegal regime outside Southern Rhodesia and the resultant influx of foreign tourists into the Territory,

Considering that developments in the area call in particular for positive, concerted international action with a view to imposing maximum isolation on the illegal regime,

Deeply concerned that the measures approved by the Security Council have so far failed to bring an end to the illegal regime and convinced that sanctions cannot put an end to that regime unless they are comprehensive, mandatory and strictly supervised and unless measures are taken against States which violate them,

Reaffirming the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, in particular those provisions relating to sanctions against the illegal regime,

Conscious of the urgent and special economic needs of Mozambique and Zambia arising from their full implementation of the relevant decisions of the Security Council,

1. Strongly condemns those Governments, particularly the Government of South Africa, which, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and in open contravention of their specific obligations under Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations, continue to collaborate with the illegal racist minority regime, and calls upon those Governments to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

2. Condemns all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce the sanctions strictly, as being contrary to the obligations assumed by them under Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter;

3. Condemns South Africa for its continued support of the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia in contravention of the resolutions of the Security Council on sanctions against that regime;

4. Calls upon all Governments which thus far have not done so:

(a) To take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions imposed by the Security Council and to prohibit any form of collaboration by them with the illegal regime;

(b) To take effective steps to prevent or discourage the emigration to Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) of any individuals or groups of individuals under their jurisdiction;

(c) To discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal regime, inter alia, by forbidding the operation and activities of "Air Rhodesia," the "Rhodesia National Tourist Board" and the "Rhodesian Information Office," or any other activities which contravene the aims and purposes of the sanctions;

(d) To invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the Territory;

(e) To take all effective measures against international companies and agencies which supply petroleum and petroleum products to the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia;

5. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members, and the various programmes within the United Nations system to extend to the Governments of Mozambique and Zambia all forms of financial, technical and material assistance in order to enable those Governments to overcome economic difficulties in connexion with their application of economic sanctions imposed against the illegal regime and the severe economic loss and destruction of property brought about by the acts of aggression committed by the regime, and requests the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to the two Governments;

6. Deems it imperative that the scope of sanctions against the illegal regime must be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter and reiterates its request that the Security Council consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency;

7. Requests the Security Council to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa in view of the fact that petroleum and petroleum products are transported from South Africa into Southern Rhodesia;

8. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to follow the implementation of the present resolution and invites the Security Council Committee established in pursuance of resolution 253(1968) concerning the question of Southern Rhodesia to continue to co-operate in the related work of the Special Committee.

The question of Namibia

The question of Namibia again received consideration in 1977 by various United Nations bodies. The General Assembly, the Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and the United Nations Council for Namibia all took decisions on the matter. Related decisions were taken by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Economic and Social Council.

A detailed account of the deliberations of these bodies and their decisions is given on pp. 897-924.

On 14 March, the General Assembly's Special Committee on implementation of the Declaration on granting independence adopted a consensus statement on general aspects of the situation in the territory by which, among other things, it denounced the South African regime for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia; considered that the war being waged there by South Africa constituted a threat to international peace and security; and recommended to the Security Council that it declare mandatory the arms embargo against South Africa without any qualifications whatsoever.

The Special Committee reaffirmed the need to hold free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations in the whole of Namibia as one political entity, and stressed that any negotiations leading to the independence of the territory had to be entered into by the South African regime with the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), for the sole purpose of deciding the modalities of the transfer of power to the people of Namibia. The Special Committee categorically rejected all manoeuvres, such as tribal talks, by which the South African regime might seek to impose its will upon the Namibian people, and strongly urged all States to refrain from according any recognition to any authority or regime which the South African regime might install in Namibia by such means. Should South Africa seek to transfer any powers to such a puppet interim regime, the General Assembly should meet in special session to determine what action might be required. The Special Committee also reaffirmed its continued support for the people of Namibia, led by their national liberation movement, SWAPO, and it appealed to Members to contribute to the United Nations Fund for Namibia and, through it, to the Institute for Namibia.

The International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo, Mozambique, from 16 to 21 May, approved the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and a Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

The Conference proclaimed its full support for the struggle of the people of Namibia under the leadership of SWAPO, strongly condemned the colonial and illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, condemned the policies of apartheid and homelands which had been extended to Namibia, and considered that all possible pressure should be brought to bear on the Pretoria regime to cease its barbaric repression of the Namibian people.

In the Programme of Action, the Conference among other things called upon Governments to provide increased material and financial support to the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement; urged all Member States and specialized agencies to extend assistance to the front-line States to enable them to implement United Nations resolutions supporting the liberation struggle more effectively; and called upon the United Nations to increase its support for the Council for Namibia and to consider the possibility of establishing a university of Namibia.

As measures to be taken against the illegal South African administration in Namibia, the Conference among other things called on Governments: to reject and denounce all manoeuvres by which South Africa might seek to impose its will on the Namibian people; to refrain from recognizing any regime which South Africa might install in the territory; to end foreign economic activities or consular representation there; and to implement the arms embargo against South Africa without exception. It also called on the Security Council to impose, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, and called on the General Assembly to convene a special session on Namibia.

The report of the United Nations Council for Namibia, covering the period from 21 October 1976 to 5 October 1977, summarized the Council's activities in exercising its responsibilities both as a policy-making organ of the United Nations and as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia. It reported that during the year it had: intensified its efforts in support of self-determination, freedom and national independence for the Namibian people under their sole and authentic liberation movement, SWAPO; denounced South Africa's militarization of Namibia; condemned as illegal the activities of all foreign corporations operating there under the illegal administration of South Africa; and condemned South Africa's decision to administer Walvis Bay as part of South Africa's Cape Province. It had also condemned South Africa's brutal and massive repression of the Namibian people.

The Council for Namibia also sought further practical forms of assistance to Namibians: in addition to serving as trustee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia, which continued to serve as the main vehicle through which the Council channelled assistance to Namibians, it continued to sponsor the Institute for Namibia in Lusaka, Zambia, which provided both training and employment for Namibians; it was expected that 300 students would be enrolled by 1980. The Council continued to co-ordinate its own scholarship programme with the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa. Also during 1977, the Council developed the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, which was intended to provide comprehensive assistance to the territory from within the United Nations system during both the pre-independence period and the initial period of independence. As a first step, the Council carried out a review of the assistance given by the specialized agencies.

The Council's report also contained a review of the activities of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, and included a number of recommendations for action by the General Assembly.

Later in 1977, at its thirty-second session, the General Assembly on 4 November adopted eight resolutions—which, for the most part, embodied the recommendations of the Council for Namibia—on the following aspects of the question: implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; the United Nations Fund for Namibia; dissemination of information on Namibia; the situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa; action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to Namibia; the programme of work of the Council for Namibia; intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia; and a decision to hold a special session on the question of Namibia before the Assembly's thirty-third (1978) regular session.

Questions concerning Angola

Complaint by Angola against South Africa

By a letter of 20 July 1977, the representative of Angola transmitted to the Secretary-General a message of the previous day from the Minister for External Relations of Angola in which the Minister stated that, on 12 July, armed South African forces concentrated in Namibian territory had shot down an aircraft while it was landing at the Angolan village of Cuangar. As a result, 12 persons had lost their lives. On 13 July, the Calueque Dam had been attacked with heavy enemy artillery, causing a number of casualties.

In the face of the permanent state of tension along its southern frontier, the Minister continued, Angola reserved its legitimate right to strike back and, if necessary, to appeal to the solidarity of friendly countries in order to safeguard its national sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On 22 July, the representative of South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa strongly and categorically denying the Angolan allegations. The South African Government invited the Secretary-General to send a representative to South West Africa to investigate the two incidents.

Assistance to Angola

At its July/August 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the question of assistance to Angola. The Council was informed that, in accordance with a General Assembly decision of 21 December 1976 calling for an international programme of assistance and the establishment of an international fund for Angola,³¹ the Secretary-General intended to send a mission to Angola to evaluate the country's reconstruction needs.

On 29 July 1977, the Council adopted decision 252(LXIII), by which it took note of statements made on behalf of the Secretary-General in the Economic and Social Council on assistance in emergency situations; it also noted the observations made regarding Angola in the 1977 report of the Committee for Development Planning, which had been requested to consider the inclusion of Angola in the list of the least developed among the developing countries. The Committee for Development Planning had pointed out that, although the per capita gross domestic product of Angola appeared to be higher than the limiting value used by the Committee, in view of the serious difficulties facing Angola it would examine more recent and detailed information at its next session.

In addition, by decision 252(LXIII), which was proposed by the Council President and adopted without a vote, the Council reaffirmed the Assembly's request that the Secretary-General continue his efforts to mobilize assistance for Angola from Member States and the United Nations system.

Reporting to the regular 1977 session of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General said he had transmitted the text of the Assembly's 1976 appeal for assistance to Angola to Member States and to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system. He noted as well his willingness to send a mission to Angola to consult with the Government on the nature of its needs at a time deemed appropriate by that Government.

On 13 December 1977, the Assembly, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted decision 32/425, whereby it took note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Angola.

The text of the decision was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 22 November on a proposal by its Chairman.

Complaint by Benin

Communications (January-February 1977)

In a letter dated 26 January 1977, the representative of Benin requested that a meeting of the Security Council be convened to consider a "cowardly and barbarous aggression committed by the imperialists and their mercenaries against the People's Republic of Benin." According to the letter, on 16 January 1977 a commando unit of mercenaries, brought by a military aircraft, had attacked the airport and city of Cotonou but had been forced to retreat, abandoning a considerable quantity of weapons and ammunition after causing some loss of life and material damage.

The President of the Council received four letters in this connexion: from the President of Guinea; from Sri Lanka on behalf of the Coordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries; from Jordan on behalf of the Arab group of Member States at the United Nations; and from Rwanda on behalf of the African group of Member States. All said they supported Benin's request for action by the Council against the activities of international mercenaries.

Consideration by the Security Council (7 and 8 February 1977)

The Security Council met on 7 and 8 February 1977 to consider Benin's complaint. The representatives of Algeria, Cuba, Guinea, Madagascar, Mali, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia and Togo were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The representative of Benin said that on 16 January, at 0703 hours local time, a pirate DC-7 aircraft landed at the airport in Cotonou. It had on board a gang of mercenaries who, once disembarked, ruthlessly attacked the airport with automatic weapons. They took up a position, then advanced towards the city of Cotonou in columns, performing a drag-net operation and then concentrating all their equipment and weapons on the Palace of the Presidency of the Republic, which clearly had been one of their principal targets. Severe damage, the representative said, had been inflicted on several buildings, including those at the airport, the television building, the Hall of Congress, the new Embassy of Nigeria and the Palace of the Presidency. The weapons and equipment of the gang of mercenaries were extremely sophisticated and were mainly of French and Belgian manufacture. After approximately three hours of fierce fighting, he continued, the attackers were repulsed and retreated to their aircraft. In the course of their hasty take-off, the mercenaries left behind certain documents, on the basis of which it could be asserted that they were mainly whites who had been recruited, trained and equipped by the secret services of powerful financial circles.

On the basis of this tangible proof, it could be concluded that the attack was a case of foreign aggression directed against Benin's people and its democratic and popular revolution, the Beninese representative went on to say. That view had been supported by the testimony of accredited diplomatic representatives in Benin, including the Ambassadors of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Egypt, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Zaire. He said that his Government demanded that light be shed on this foreign aggression and it wished the Security Council to dispatch a special mission to Cotonou to ascertain the facts objectively, determine who had been responsible and help Benin assess the damage. Benin hoped that appropriate action would subsequently be taken to repair material damage and to prevent a recurrence of such barbaric acts of aggression by foreign mercenaries.

The representative of Mauritius said that the attack against Benin had been an attack against the whole of Africa, and the Council had to act quickly and with foresight by assisting Benin in pinpointing responsibility for this barbarous and illegal act. He introduced a draft resolution, on behalf of Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic (subsequently the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya) and Mauritius, by the preambular part of which the Council among other things would note that all Member States had to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or from any manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Council would: affirm that the territorial integrity and political independence of Benin had to be respected; decide to send to Benin a special mission of three Council members, to be appointed after consultations between the President and the members of the Council, to investigate and to report at the end of February 1977; and decide to remain seized of the question.

During the Security Council's discussion, general support for the draft resolution was expressed. Several representatives cited repeated instances of the use of mercenaries in Africa during recent years. The representative of Togo, for example, said that mercenaries had operated in most parts of Africa—in Zaire, Guinea, Nigeria and elsewhere. It was high time that the international community heeded the repeated appeals of African States, realized the universal dimension of the problem and took account of the resolutions by which, for many years, the Organization of African Unity had been calling on all States to cease to tolerate the recruitment, training and equipping of mercenaries in their territories and not to allow their nationals to serve in their ranks. Merely to condemn the use of mercenaries was not enough, he said; the machinery of that practice had to be dismantled, and it was important that specific steps be taken to eradicate it utterly.

The spokesman for Somalia called for an international convention that would effectively prevent recruitment, arming and training of mercenaries.

The representative of the USSR said that the events in Benin were further evidence of the fact that peace and security on the African continent were under a constant threat. They bore out the correctness of the warning by progressive forces in Africa to be vigilant with regard to imperialism and neo-colonialism, and indicated the grave danger represented by international mercenary forces to the sovereignty and independence of those States. The USSR favoured the complete and immediate liberation of Africa by the liquidation of all hotbeds of racism, colonialism and apartheid. The territorial integrity and political independence of Benin had to be respected, he asserted. The Security Council should support Benin's request that a special mission be sent to the spot to elucidate the facts.

The representative of France joined with all those States had that expressed abhorrence at the intervention of which Benin had been the victim. He added that his country had been particularly devoted to the principle of respect for the independence of States and non-interference in their internal affairs; there must be no exceptions to that principle. Reference had been made to some munitions of French origin, he continued. So that no link might be established, even by implication, between that reference and responsibility for the intervention in question, France, he said, reasserted its belief that the principle of non-interference in internal affairs was an absolute principle, regardless of the ideological or political choices of Member States of the United Nations. For that reason France would support the dispatch by the Council of a fact-finding mission to Benin.

The representative of China said that the incident in Cotonou constituted an encroachment by imperialism and its mercenaries on the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of Benin. China was convinced that the Beninese Government and people would continue to safeguard their national independence and State sovereignty, and it would support the dispatch by the Security Council of a special mission to Benin.

The sponsors of the three-power draft resolution revised their text to incorporate some drafting changes and to add a provision whereby the Secretary-General would provide the special mission with the necessary assistance.

On 8 February 1977, the Council adopted the text by consensus as resolution 404(1977).

In a note issued on 10 February 1977, the President of the Security Council stated that after consultations agreement had been reached that the Council's Special Mission to Benin would be composed of India, the Libyan Arab Republic and Panama. The representative of Panama would serve as Chairman.

In a note of 23 February, the Council President indicated that the Special Mission had requested an extension until 8 March of the deadline for submission of its report, and that, following consultations with Council members, the date had been extended accordingly.

Report of the Special Mission to Benin

On 7 March 1977, the Security Council Special Mission to the People's Republic of Benin reported that it had visited Benin from 16 to 25 February and had met with the President of Benin, interviewed members of the diplomatic corps, taken testimony from witnesses and a member of the attacking force who had been taken prisoner, inspected the sites where the events of 16 January had occurred, and examined material evidence and documentation that had been left behind by the attacking force. In annexes to its report, the Special Mission published the texts of the testimony it had heard, photocopies of the documentation left at Cotonou by the attacking force, and an inventory of the abandoned armaments, munitions and supplies.

The Special Mission said it had concluded, on the basis of its on-the-spot investigations, that the following events had occurred at Cotonou. At about 0700 hours on Sunday, 16 January 1977, a four-engine aircraft with no identification marks had made an unauthorized landing at Cotonou international airport. An attacking force of about 100 persons in military uniform had disembarked, the majority of whom were white and spoke French. They carried a large quantity of various types of arms and ammunition.

After landing, the bulk of the attacking force had marched in three separate columns towards the city of Cotonou, firing indiscriminately at civilians and non-military establishments along the way. The Beninese armed forces had repulsed the attack, but had been unable to prevent the retreating attackers from taking off. The whole episode had lasted about three hours, during which time two members of the attacking force had been killed—one European and one African. The casualties on the Benin side were six dead and 51 wounded. During the fighting, a number of foreigners of different nationalities residing in Benin had also been wounded. The Beninese forces had captured one member of the attacking force, a national of Guinea, who was currently being held prisoner. The fighting had also resulted in substantial damage to a number of public and private buildings, including the premises of some diplomatic missions at Cotonou and a hospital.

The report concluded that, on the basis of the testimony received and evidence examined by the Special Mission, Benin had been subjected to an armed attack with the primary objective of overthrowing the Government. There was no doubt that Benin had been subjected to aggression and most of the attackers, not nationals of Benin, had acted for pecuniary motives and thus were mercenaries.

The report further stated that according to the testimony of the prisoner held in Benin and parts of the documentation left behind by the attacking force, the attackers, who had been recruited in Europe and Africa, had come to Morocco from Paris, Dakar (Senegal) and Abidjan (Ivory Coast), had been trained at a base near Marrakesh (Morocco), had been transported from Morocco to Gabon on 15 January and, from there, had embarked on their mission to Benin in a different aircraft, arriving at Cotonou the following morning. The same sources indicated that a Colonel Maurin was in charge of the operation; he had been hired by an organization called the Front de liberation et de rehabilitation du Dahomey, whose objective was to overthrow the Government of Benin and establish in its place a regime of its own choice. According to the documents, a French national, Gilbert Bourgeaud, who had been employed as an adviser to the President of Gabon since 3 August 1976, had been identified by photograph by the prisoner as Colonel Maurin. However, the Special Mission stated that the terms of its mandate, as well as the time at its disposal, had not permitted it to investigate further and verify the testimony of the prisoner or the suggestive evidence contained in the documentation.

Communications (March-April 1977)

On 28 March 1977, the Secretary-General circulated the text of a telegram from the President of Gabon in which the President expressed his astonishment at the conclusion contained in the report of the Security Council Special Mission to Benin and his disappointment at the cursory manner in which the inquiry had been conducted. He invited members of the Special Mission to visit Gabon to supplement their information and added that his country had at no time been involved in the alleged aggression.

On 4 April, the Secretary-General circulated the text of a letter dated 23 March by which the President of Gabon requested authorization for another mission to visit Gabon to conduct a full counter-investigation and ascertain the veracity of the information given to the Special Mission.

By two letters dated 4 April, the representative of Benin transmitted two reports prepared by his Government. The first report contained an evaluation of damages and losses incurred as a result of the aggression of 16 January. The total figures were: 5 million CFA francs for damage to buildings; 622 million CFA francs for national defence losses; and 362 million CFA francs for bodily injury. The second report was on the armed aggression committed on 16 January against the People's Republic of Benin; it had been adopted by a joint special session of the Central Committee of the Party of the People's Revolution of Benin, the National Council of the Revolution and the Revolutionary Military Government. The second report concluded, among other things, that the aggression had been carefully prepared, financed and perpetrated by French imperialism in collaboration with the Governments of Morocco, Gabon and Togo and with the complicity of the Governments of the Ivory Coast and Senegal.

In a letter dated 8 April, the representative of the Ivory Coast stated that Benin's second report of 4 April 1977 contained serious accusations against his country, in reply to which he submitted a statement which had been issued on 16 March by the Political Bureau of the Democratic Party of the Ivory Coast, denying any knowledge of mercenaries having been recruited in the Ivory Coast. It pointed out that 1.2 million non-Ivory Coast Africans were living in the Ivory Coast, and they had all been officially advised not to abuse the hospitality of the country nor to engage in any activities from the Ivory Coast directed against their countries of origin.

Consideration by the Security Council (April 1977)

The Security Council considered the report of its Special Mission to Benin at six meetings held between 6 and 14 April 1977. At their request, the following States were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Algeria, Botswana, Cuba, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Guinea, the Ivory Coast, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, the Niger, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the Upper Volta.

The representative of Panama, Chairman of the Special Mission, introduced the report. He drew attention to the conclusions of the Special Mission that Benin had indeed been subjected to aggression, and that a majority of the attacking force were mercenaries. He added that the Mission had concluded that a similar operation could be conducted elsewhere against small defenceless countries for similar purposes.

The representative of Benin said that the Special Mission's report had confirmed the following: Benin had been subjected to an aggression on 16 January by mercenaries; most of the members of the armed force were white; their lingua franca was French; their chief of staff was a French officer; their point of departure and arrival was Paris; and their air tickets were bought from Air France and UTA (Union de transports aériens). Thus, Benin had well-founded reasons for proclaiming that those primarily responsible for the armed aggression were reactionary neo-colonialist circles in France who found intolerable the revolutionary process under way in Benin since 26 October 1972. Benin would, through the Council, ask France for its co-operation in seeing to it that those persons who had committed crimes against the people of Benin were brought to justice. Meanwhile, Benin was asking the Council for vigorous condemnation of this act of armed aggression, of the role played by the financial powers responsible, and the international mercenaries involved. The representative of Benin added that the consequences of the aggression for Benin's economy were serious, and his country was asking the Council to ensure compensation for damage and to provide assistance.

Many speakers condemned the armed aggression against Benin, the violation of its territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty, and the use of mercenaries in Africa and elsewhere. In this connexion, the representative of Mauritius stated that the Council was in a position to condemn strongly the activities of international mercenaries and acts of aggression to destabilize States. In his country's view, the adoption of international criminal legislation through a convention would be a timely initiative for dealing with "mercenarism," which should be outlawed as an international crime, like piracy and genocide.

The representative of Somalia said that the United Nations should invite all States not only to enact national legislation aimed at combating mercenaries but also to take effective and stringent measures to deter and prevent the recurrence of such acts of aggression. He added that the problem of international mercenaries was serious enough to warrant Security Council action in accordance with Article 1 of the Charter of the United Nations,³² and the Council should adopt a resolution which would have broad applicability and would prohibit the planning of subversion and the recruitment, training, equipping and/or transport of mercenaries.

The representative of Mozambique said that if the international community was seriously concerned with eradicating international terrorism, specific measures had to be taken to end the use of mercenaries in Africa and to discourage those who armed, employed and assisted them in their operations.

The USSR said that the Special Mission's report left no doubt that Benin had been the victim of an armed attack whose main purpose was the overthrow of its Government; this constituted a clear-cut case of armed aggression. The international community must severely condemn the use of mercenaries for the suppression of national liberation movements and for the restoration of colonial and neo-colonial domination.

Gabon, the Ivory Coast and Morocco, which had been accused by Benin of complicity, denied involvement in the aggression and called for a fuller investigation, citing the Special Mission's own statement that both time and the terms of its mandate had precluded verification of the prisoner's testimony and of the numerous documents the Mission had been shown.

The representative of Gabon, after responding in detail to the allegations, said that, in order to help establish the truth, his country reiterated its invitation extended through the Secretary-General to the same Special Mission to go also to Gabon, together with the alleged mercenary captured at Cotonou, in order to supplement his information on the spot.

The representative of Morocco expressed his country's profound indignation at the decision of Benin to circulate a report designed to cast suspicion on neighbouring heads of State. Although it rejected all Benin's accusations, Morocco was alarmed by the increase in mercenary operations in Africa, to which another country, Zaire, had just fallen victim.

The Algerian representative said that the Council could not be content merely with indignant denials by the Governments implicated in the matter. Instead, those Governments should voluntarily help to clarify the information furnished by the Mission. The Security Council had to deal with recourse by certain Governments to mercenaries for political aims in other countries, he continued. The whole system of mercenaries could not be maintained without the complicity, or at least the complacency, of certain Governments.

The spokesman for France said that France associated itself with those countries which had condemned the acts against Benin. It respected the independence of States and was committed to non-intervention in their internal affairs. That principle brooked no exception, the French representative said; the actions of adventurers against independent African States had to be condemned unequivocally. France, however, could not accept the allegation that the whole operation originated and was mounted in France and was led and carried out by Frenchmen. Movement of persons, purchase of airline tickets and opening of bank accounts were subject to no limitations and required no special authorization, he added. It was, thus, not always in the power of the French Government to prevent adventurers from engaging in certain initiatives.

The representative of the United States expressed the concern of his Government over the armed attack on Benin and the loss of life and damage to property, and its concern at the apparent violation of Benin's territorial integrity. The United States, he said, opposed the use of mercenaries to intervene in the internal affairs of other countries and was committed to enforcement of its laws concerning recruitment of United States citizens as mercenaries.

On 14 April, the Security Council adopted by consensus, as resolution 405(1977), a text proposed by Benin, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius and Panama. By this text, the Council—after expressing its grave concern at the violation of the territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty of Benin and its grief at the loss of life and substantial damage to property caused by the invading force during its attack on Cotonou on 16 January 1977—took note of the Special Mission's report, expressed appreciation for its work, and strongly condemned the act of armed aggression against Benin in January.

The Council then reaffirmed its resolution of 10 July 1967³³ by which it had condemned any State which persisted in permitting or tolerating the recruitment of mercenaries, and the provision of facilities to them, with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations.

It called on all States to exercise the utmost vigilance against the danger posed by international mercenaries and to ensure that their territory and nationals, and territories under their control, were not used for the planning of subversion, and the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries, designed to overthrow the Government of any Member State. It also called on all States to consider taking necessary measures to prohibit, under their respective domestic laws, the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries on their territory and territories under their control, and condemned all forms of external interference in the internal affairs of Member States, including the use of international mercenaries to destabilize States and/or to violate the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of States.

The Council then asked the Secretary-General to provide technical assistance to help the Government of Benin in assessing and evaluating the damage resulting from the aggression committed in January, and appealed to all States to provide material assistance to Benin to enable it to repair the damage and losses. It was noted by the Council that Benin had reserved its right with respect to any eventual claims for compensation which it might wish to assert.

The Council called on all States to provide it with any information they might have in connexion with the events in Cotonou on 16 January likely to throw further light on those events, asked the Secretary-General to follow closely the implementation of this resolution, and decided to remain seized of the question.

Communications (October-November 1977)

By a letter dated 13 October 1977, the representative of Benin transmitted the text of a revised report by his Government evaluating the damages resulting from the aggression committed at Cotonou on 16 January. The report, superseding the one circulated in April, was based on new statistical data and on reports prepared by two expert consultants who had visited Cotonou from 27 June to 26 July 1977 in accordance with the Security Council's resolution of 14 April. It concluded that the direct and indirect losses incurred amounted to approximately 7,000 million CFA francs, or $28 million. Texts of the two expert's reports, on material damage and on damage to persons, were annexed.

By a letter dated 4 November, the representative of Benin requested that a meeting of the Security Council be convened to resume consideration of the question of the armed aggression against it of 16 January.

Consideration by the Security Council (22-24 November 1977)

The Security Council resumed its consideration of Benin's complaint at three meetings held between 22 and 24 November 1977. The representatives of Algeria, Angola, the Congo, Cuba, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea, Madagascar, Mali, Mozambique and Viet Nam, at their request, were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The representative of Benin said the Council should take stock of the situation since the adoption of its resolution of 14 April. Additional information gathered by Benin since then, when the Council had considered the report of its Special Mission, had confirmed that the aggression of 16 January was an operation organized by international imperialism to end Benin's revolutionary process. Acting in accordance with the Council's resolution, Benin had requested from various Governments information aimed at shedding light on the events surrounding that attack and had been surprised by the silence of the French Government; Benin could only conclude from additional information it had gathered that high-level French officials in Cotonou were aware of the aggression long before its execution and that two French agents in Cotonou had participated in its actual preparation and execution. Since that attack, the representative said, Benin had been continually subjected to imperialist pressures and discriminatory economic measures. A vast campaign had totally modified Benin's trade and financial relations with some partners. The Council, he said, should adopt effective measures to eliminate the scourge of mercenaries and end their use against the sovereignty, integrity and territorial independence of small and practically defenceless States. The Council should again ask all States whose nationals took part in the aggression to co-operate with Benin to take action against those mercenaries who were still alive.

The French representative said his Government wished to make quite clear its denial that the French Government or any French service had any responsibility for the preparation and execution of the raid of 16 January on Cotonou. France formally condemned that operation. The French Government, noting that documents communicated by Benin to the Security Council Special Mission mentioned individuals who were termed French nationals, had undertaken an investigation on its own initiative and in accordance with its laws. The investigation produced nothing, as the Government of Benin had been informed on 8 August. The mysterious circumstances of the attack, whereby the raiders had left documentary evidence on the spot, cast doubts on the value of the documents appended to the report of the Council Mission. According to the French representative, those doubts appeared well-founded, now that the French investigation was over. Raids by adventure-seekers against independent States of Africa were a scourge of the times, he said. France supported the efforts of international organizations to end such interventions, which it viewed as inadmissible interference in the internal affairs of States. But France could not allow any accusation of itself with regard to events in which it was not involved in any way.

The representative of the USSR said that events like those in Benin caused serious alarm in his country, which considered that the international community had a duty to take effective measures to prevent the use of mercenaries for crushing national liberation movements. The USSR also considered that the armed attack on Benin was the latest link in a chain of criminal acts of international neo-colonialism and imperialism on African soil which were designed to get rid of inconvenient Governments.

The representative of China said his country supported the just position of the Government of Benin in condemning the use of mercenaries to threaten and overthrow sovereign States, and expressed profound sympathy for the losses suffered by the people of Benin in the incident. He added that, with the intensification of the contention and rivalry between the super-powers in Africa, the organization and use of mercenaries had assumed greater importance in acts of aggression and expansion. The representative called attention to recent expressions of unity among numerous African countries against the common enemy and their firm determination to combat super-power hegemonism and its use of mercenaries for aggression and expansion.

Many speakers, including Algeria, Angola, Cuba, Equatorial Guinea and Mali, expressed their solidarity with the people and Government of Benin. They said that the international community should not hesitate to assume its responsibilities and come to the aid of the victim of aggression. They added that the estimated damage of $28 million could be considered only an approximate figure, since the moral damage and long-term implications for the economy and life of the people of Benin could not be measured.

On 24 November, a text sponsored by Benin, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mauritius, and revised by them, was adopted by the Security Council without a vote as resolution 419(1977).

By the preamble to the text, the Council among other things expressed its concern over the danger which international mercenaries represented for all States, in particular the smaller ones, and said it was convinced of the necessity of co-operation among all States to collect more information about the mercenaries who operated against Benin on 16 January 1977.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Council:

(1) reaffirmed its resolution of 14 April (405(1977)) by which it had, among other provisions, taken note of the report of the Special Mission and strongly condemned the aggression against Benin on 16 January and all forms of external interference in the internal affairs of Member States, including the use of international mercenaries to destabilize States and/or to violate their territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence;

(2) took note of the report on evaluation of damages submitted by Benin;

(3) called on all States to co-operate closely to gather all useful information concerning the mercenaries involved in the events of 16 January;

(4) took note of the desire of the Government of Benin to have the mercenaries who participated in the attack subjected to due process of law;

(5) appealed to all States and all appropriate international organizations, including the United Nations and its specialized agencies, to assist Benin to repair the damage caused by the act of aggression;

(6) requested the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to Benin for the implementation of the foregoing provision;

(7) requested the Secretary-General to watch over the implementation of this resolution and to report to the Security Council not later than 30 September 1978; and

(8) decided to remain seized of the matter.

Questions concerning Botswana

Complaint by Botswana against Southern Rhodesia

Communications

On 22 December 1976, the representative of Botswana submitted a complaint to the Security Council in connexion with what he termed serious acts of aggression committed against Botswana by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, and requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the situation.³⁴

On 11 January 1977, the representative of Morocco, on behalf of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, informed the President of the Security Council that the African group fully supported Botswana's request.

In a letter dated 12 January, the representative of Botswana conveyed additional information concerning his country's complaint, charging, among other things, that a Southern Rhodesian special commando force, the so-called Selous Scouts, was being trained to carry out missions of sabotage, abductions and attacks in Botswana and that the regime had declared the entire 400-mile border between Southern Rhodesia and Botswana a war zone. It described recent violations of Botswana's territorial integrity and sovereignty; stated that Botswana intended to stand by its decision to grant political asylum to those who fled from oppression in the minority-ruled States of southern Africa; outlined Botswana's response to the acts of aggression being committed against it; and described the type of assistance it was seeking from the United Nations and the international community to ensure that its development programme was not disrupted by the diversion of funds for security measures.

Consideration by the Security Council (12-14 January 1977)

The Security Council considered Botswana's complaint against Southern Rhodesia at three meetings held between 12 and 14 January 1977. The following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote: Botswana, Cuba, Equatorial Guinea, the German Democratic Republic, Kenya, Lesotho, Mali, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The Minister for External Affairs of Botswana said that there had been about 36 violations of Botswana's territorial integrity by the security forces of Southern Rhodesia since Botswana's accession to independence in 1966 including murder, arson, kidnapping and the destruction of houses by explosives, and he cited a number of specific instances. The incursions into Botswana were becoming more frequent and more serious and amounted to unprovoked acts of war. He said that Botswana remained determined to continue to open its doors to those who were persecuted and oppressed for political reasons in their own countries. Botswana could not afford to develop an army but had decided, he said, to increase the size of its police mobile unit and equip it for greater resistance. Such an expansion—which would be at the expense of the country's various development projects—would cost about $29 million over the next four years, and he appealed to the United Nations and to the international community in general to provide the necessary financial assistance.

The Foreign Minister went on to say that in Botswana's view the current acts of aggression by the regime in Southern Rhodesia could, if unchecked, eventually engulf the whole of southern Africa in racial conflagration. It was clear that, as the war of liberation against the illegal regime intensified, the regime would become more and more desperate and look for scapegoats. Recent attacks against Mozambique (see subchapter below) and Botswana and threats against Zambia, he said, were clear manifestations of the aggressive intentions of the regime of Ian Smith. The Security Council should pronounce itself without any equivocation on the issue in the hope that the regime would desist from further acts of aggression against neighbouring States. He attributed the unprovoked aggression against Botswana to the denial of the right of self-determination to the vast majority of the people of Southern Rhodesia and he urged the Council to use the opportunity to reaffirm its belief in the inalienable right of all those people to self-determination and independence on the basis of majority rule.

The representative of Zambia said that the aim of the Smith regime was to pressure Botswana into not granting political asylum to those who fled from Southern Rhodesia. Smith, he said, was pursuing the victims of oppression into Botswana on the pretext of counteracting the activities of the freedom fighters of Zimbabwe; but he was refusing to reckon with the fact that the freedom fighters were operating within Zimbabwe itself and not from Botswana or any other neighbouring State. Smith had no one to blame but himself for the devastating blows currently being dealt his regime by the freedom fighters and should not look for scapegoats as a reaction to their onslaught.

The Zambian representative went on to say that the United Kingdom, as the colonial authority for Southern Rhodesia, should ensure that the illegal regime did not carry out acts of aggression against Botswana and other neighbouring African countries. The Smith regime, with the connivance of apartheid South Africa and in direct or indirect collaboration with countries which sold arms to the rebel British colony or had vested economic interests in southern Africa, was determined to maintain the status quo, even to the extent of engulfing the entire area in a nuclear war. The recent unprovoked acts of aggression against Botswana and Mozambique had to be seen in that context, he said; the underlying cause of the whole conflict was the existence of the illegal racist minority regimes in the region. Botswana had every right to expect and receive assistance from the international community. The Security Council should condemn the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia for its acts of aggression against Botswana and call on it to desist forthwith from committing further aggression.

A number of these points were also made by Benin, Equatorial Guinea, India, Kenya, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Republic (subsequently the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya), Mali, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Sierra Leone, Somalia and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The representative of Yugoslavia said that the Smith regime, while paying lip service to negotiations, was by its military actions violating the territorial integrity and sovereignty of neighbouring African countries, killing innocent civilians and destroying the material goods of those developing countries. The German Democratic Republic supported the request by Botswana for assistance and called for unambiguous measures by the Security Council against the racists in Pretoria and Salisbury. The representative of Romania said that the positive experience accumulated by the Secretary-General in similar situations, as well as the possibility of using the machinery of the United Nations, should be taken into account in finding the most effective means of helping Botswana.

The spokesman for China said that over a long period of time the Southern Rhodesian racist regime had ceaselessly sent armed forces to commit unbridled aggression against Botswana—which it accused of supporting and harbouring freedom fighters—causing tremendous losses to the lives and property of the people of Botswana. He said that the racist regime had recently intensified its counter-revolutionary dual tactics: on the one hand, it was engaged in political fraud by hypocritically professing its readiness to bring about reconciliation; on the other, it was greatly increasing its defence budget, prolonging the term of military service, stepping up its repression of the armed struggle of the Zimbabwe people and even wantonly sending troops for incessant aggression against the sovereign States of Zambia, Mozambique and Botswana in an attempt to force those countries to abandon their support for the just struggle of the Zimbabwe people. In China's view, the Security Council should adopt a resolution sternly condemning the criminal acts of aggression committed by the Southern Rhodesian racist regime against Botswana, enjoining that regime to cease immediately those acts, commending the just stand of Botswana and calling upon all Governments and peoples to give firm support and powerful assistance to Botswana's just struggle.

The representative of the USSR said that the ruling circles in Salisbury were attempting to maintain domination by the white minority through military raids and acts of provocation on the part of the Rhodesian army against Mozambique, acts of aggression against Botswana, violations of the sovereignty of Zambia and the stepping up of repression. The aggressive actions against Botswana were viewed by his Government, he said, as one more crime on the part of the racists and a most flagrant violation of the principles of international law. Responsibility for the situation belonged not only to those who were acting as the direct arm of aggression but also was shared by those who connived with the racists; the material responsibility for providing compensation for the injury caused to Botswana and other African countries by the racist regime of Southern Rhodesia should be borne by that regime and also by those States and monopolies which supported it and maintained economic and other ties with it.

The representatives of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States observed that their Governments were supporting the efforts being undertaken by the United Kingdom through the Geneva conference to move towards majority rule in Southern Rhodesia, which they considered to be the true solution to problems involving Southern Rhodesia.

The representative of Canada said that the Security Council had two primary, overriding responsibilities with regard to Botswana's complaint: first, to do everything in its power to stop the violations of that country's territorial sovereignty; and, second, until that result was obtained, to give all possible help in counteracting the special economic hardships confronting Botswana because of the defence obligations imposed on it.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany said that, within the framework of its development aid programme, his Government would continue and strengthen its aid in the current year and was prepared to support any solution which would be of genuine assistance to Botswana. The representative of the United States said his Government had in the past provided developmental assistance to Botswana and would continue to do so in the future. It would also continue to work for the kind of peaceful political settlement in southern Africa that would truly ensure the independence and integrity of Botswana.

The spokesman for the United Kingdom said his Government had already contributed substantial economic aid to Botswana, had traditionally been a major aid donor, and would continue its assistance. He shared the view that the incidents along the border were really a facet of the continuing problem of Southern Rhodesia and would cease if a negotiated settlement to the Rhodesian problem could be achieved. He noted that his Government was currently engaged in efforts to achieve such a settlement through the Geneva conference.

On 14 January, the Security Council adopted, as resolution 403(1977), a draft text sponsored by Benin, India, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mauritius, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and Venezuela. The vote was 13 in favour to O against, with 2 abstentions (the United Kingdom and the United States).

By the preambular part of the text, the Council among other things expressed its concern at the dangerous situation created by the provocative and hostile acts committed by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia against the security and well-being of Botswana, and at the loss of human life and damage to property caused by those acts. It noted with appreciation Botswana's decision to continue to give asylum to political refugees fleeing from inhuman oppression by the illegal regime, and expressed its awareness of the need for Bot-swana to strengthen its security in order to safeguard its sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence. Finally by the preamble, the Council reaffirmed the legal responsibility of the United Kingdom over Southern Rhodesia, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the United Nations. By the operative provisions of the text, the Security Council:

(1) strongly condemned all acts of provocation and harassment, including military threats and attacks, murder, arson, kidnapping and destruction of property, committed against Botswana by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

(2) condemned all political repression by that regime that violated fundamental rights and freedoms of the people of Southern Rhodesia and contributed to instability and absence of peace in the region as a whole;

(3) deplored all acts of collaboration and collusion which sustained the illegal regime and encouraged defiance with impunity of Council resolutions, with adverse consequences for peace and security in the region;

(4) demanded the immediate and total cessation of all hostile acts committed against Botswana by the illegal regime;

(5) took cognizance of the special economic hardship confronting Botswana as a result of the need to divert funds from development projects to security measures needed to defend itself against attacks and threats by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

(6) accepted Botswana's invitation to dispatch a mission to assess its needs in carrying out its development projects in the circumstances, and accordingly requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with United Nations organizations, to organize immediate financial and other assistance and to report to the Security Council by 31 March 1977;

(7) requested the United Nations and the organizations and programmes concerned, including the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, to assist Botswana to carry out the development projects without interruption;

(8) appealed to all States to respond positively in providing assistance to Botswana, in the light of the report of the Secretary-General's mission; and

(9) decided to remain seized of the matter.

Explaining his vote on the eight-power text, the representative of the United Kingdom said that, as his Government had said it was willing to assume a direct role in a transitional government in Southern Rhodesia, it believed it should abstain in the vote. He emphasized, however, that the abstention should not be taken as meaning that the United Kingdom was in any way indifferent to infringements of the territorial integrity of Botswana.

The United States representative explained his abstention by pointing out that his Government had played a particular role in seeking to bring all sides together in the search for a peaceful solution of the underlying problem regarding Southern Rhodesia; its ability to continue to contribute in that way would be best served by joining the United Kingdom which, he said, had a very special role in the current effort to find a peaceful settlement of the Rhodesian problem.

Following the adoption of the resolution, the Secretary-General said he had taken note of the Council's request that he organize as soon as possible financial and other forms of assistance to Botswana and dispatch a mission to assess its needs. He said he would carry out his responsibility in close co-operation with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system.

The Canadian spokesman said that Canada, as a country with a very substantial involvement in development programmes in Botswana, would wish to consider very carefully the impact of any proposals arising out of the dispatch of a mission, and that in the meantime its support of the resolution was without prejudice to the position it might take on such proposals.

Report of the Mission to Botswana

On 28 March 1977, the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Mission to Botswana which was appointed in the context of the Security Council's resolution of 14 January (403(1977)). He noted that, following consultations with the Minister for External Affairs of Botswana, he had appointed a six-member Mission to advise him on the special economic hardships confronting Botswana and to assess the needs of Botswana in carrying out its development projects in the prevailing circumstances.

The report described the deteriorating security situation of the country and the problems posed by the influx of refugees from South Africa and Southern Rhodesia. It recommended five groups of emergency projects which had either not been included in Botswana's national development plan for 1976-1981 or, if included, needed to be modified or accelerated. These were: (1) the expansion of the police mobile unit; (2) projects to safeguard Botswana's beef industry from foot-and-mouth disease, to reduce tension along the border, and to allow the Government to patrol the area to protect citizens and their property; (3) projects to safeguard Botswana against deterioration or collapse of the railway; (4) projects to meet emergency food requirements and to provide a strategic food reserve; and (5) projects to allow Botswana to deal with the refugee situation.

The Mission summarized the financial implications of the projects and estimated the diversion of resources from normal development that would be required to carry them out. It identified four major means by which the international community could assist Botswana to carry out its normal development projects in the new circumstances: (1) general programme assistance to match the diversion of funds from normal development; (2) project assistance for project included in the national development plan for which financing had not yet been arranged; (3) assistance in carrying out emergency projects; and (4) agreement by financing agencies to reduce or waive local cost contributions to development projects and programmes.

By a letter dated 18 April, the Secretary-General transmitted to all Member States of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies the report of the Mission to Botswana and pointed out that, according to the report, the sum required by Botswana to enable it to continue with its normal development would amount to $53.5 million over the next three years. He expressed confidence that all States would respond positively to the Security Council's appeal by providing Botswana with the financial and material help it so urgently needed.

Consideration by the Security Council (24 and 25 May 1977)

The Security Council considered the report of the Mission to Botswana at two meetings held on 24 and 25 May 1977. The representatives of Botswana and Sierra Leone were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

In introducing the report of the Mission, the Secretary-General said that the Government of Botswana would need to divert almost $28 million from development resources to unplanned and unbudgeted security needs, which would include the cost of protection, transport and supervision of refugees; in addition, approximately $25 million would be required for unplanned emergency projects during the next two to three years, with corresponding increases in recurrent expenditures. He drew the Council's attention to his letter of appeal of 18 April to Member States and to concerned organizations and said he would convene at United Nations Headquarters, on 6 June 1977, a meeting of representatives of Governments interested in contributing to the programme of assistance recommended in the Mission's report.

The Minister for External Affairs of Botswana said that the diversion of resources to Botswana's security needs had started even before the Mission made its report, as the situation called for urgent action. The National Assembly had recently passed an act creating the Botswana Defence Force, whose first recruits were already in active service. Drastic cuts had been made from various projects to make that possible.

He went on to say that the state of tension continued as a result of continuing attacks by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, and the security situation along Botswana's border continued to deteriorate. One of the most serious violations occurred on 16 May, he said, when Botswana was invaded and attacked at two points by about 150 rebel troops in helicopters and troop-carriers. The situation could easily escalate as a result of the Rhodesian regime's announced policy of "hot pursuit" of freedom fighters, whether real or fake, into Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia. The attacks on Botswana were systematic and carefully contrived to cause panic among the people and wreak havoc in the refugee camps, which the regime referred to as "guerrilla bases" to create a pretext for an attack on them, and to intimidate Botswana into refusing asylum to those fleeing from oppression. That, he said, Botswana would never do.

The representative of Sierra Leone, speaking as current Chairman of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, also said that, despite the Council's unanimous condemnation of the acts of aggression against Botswana, more such acts were being reported daily against Botswana and Zambia, and the situation along the Rhodesia/Botswana and Zambia/Rhodesia borders had considerably worsened. On behalf of the African group, he unequivocally condemned the continued acts of aggression committed by the illegal racist regime against Botswana and appealed to the international community to provide financial and other assistance to alleviate Botswana's economic difficulties.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that, in view of the acts of aggression and the increasing threat to the peace and security of the world, the Security Council could no longer delay the adoption of effective measures to put an end to the illegal minority regime in Southern Rhodesia. The peace and security of the area could be achieved only by granting to the people of Zimbabwe their right to self-determination and independence. The continued existence of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia could only result in the increased oppression of the Zimbabwe people and in repeated acts of aggression against Botswana and other neighbouring countries. His Government endorsed the recommendations of the Mission to Botswana, and urged that all possible assistance and support be extended to the Government of Botswana to help it overcome the consequences of those acts of aggression.

The recommendations of the Mission were also endorsed by India, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and Venezuela.

The representative of the United Kingdom said that his Government was offering £200,000 to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to provide assistance for Rhodesian refugees, particularly children, who found themselves in countries adjacent to Southern Rhodesia and, particularly, in Botswana. The United Kingdom was studying the Mission's report to determine what response it might be able to make. It deplored the reported recent incursions into Botswana by military forces of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, particularly the serious attack on 16 May, and had communicated to Ian Smith its condemnation of that action.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany said his Government had been active in bilateral and multilateral programmes of aid to Botswana. Its pledge for 1977 was 23 million marks. In response to an urgent call from the Botswana Government for humanitarian aid to assist refugees from Zimbabwe, his Government had provided an additional 100,000 marks to Botswana on 14 February.

The Canadian representative said that his Government's assistance to Botswana would total $22 million for the period 1978-1983 and would be focused on strengthening the country's key economic sectors, including mining, transportation, education and agriculture.

The representative of the United States said his Government was discussing financing for educational assistance with the Government of Botswana and was taking steps to make additional funds available to help ease the financial impact of the influx of refugees and to assist Botswana in its development projects.

The French representative said that France would contribute to the effort that the European Community planned to make on behalf of Botswana. By the end of the period 1975-1980, nearly $23 million would have been given to Botswana from the European Development Fund for specific development projects relating to cattle-raising, economic and social infrastructure, communications, technical assistance, and training and assistance to small businesses.

The USSR representative said that, while fully supporting the principle that international and bilateral assistance should be extended on a voluntary basis to the African States that had suffered in the current situation, his Government also fully realized that a definitive elimination of the threat posed by the racist regimes to independent African States and created by those regimes in southern Africa could be resolved only by putting an end to them. The USSR believed that effective measures should be adopted by the Security Council concerning support for independent African States. Only such measures could bring closer the day when the struggling peoples of Zimbabwe, Namibia and South Africa would win their independence.

The representative of China noted that since the adoption of the Council's resolution on 14 January, the Southern Rhodesian racist regime had shown not the slightest restraint in its aggressor arrogance. The illegal regime had dared act so truculently, he said, because it had the strong backing of imperialism and the South African racist regime. He said that the Chinese Government had not entered into, and would never enter into, any direct or indirect political, economic, trade and other contacts with the South African regime and would, as always, firmly support the peoples of Zimbabwe, Namibia and Azania in their just struggle against racism and for national liberation until they won complete victory. His Government had studied the report on assistance to Botswana and held the view that the United Nations should give energetic support and assistance to the just struggle of the people of Botswana by every means.

On 25 May, the Security Council unanimously adopted, without vote, as resolution 406(1977), a text sponsored by Benin, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and Venezuela. By this text, the Council—after, among other things, expressing its conviction that international solidarity with Botswana, a neighbouring State to Southern Rhodesia, was essential for the promotion of a solution to the question of Southern Rhodesia—expressed full support for Botswana in its efforts to safeguard its sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence, and fully endorsed the assessment and recommendations of the Mission to Botswana, as well as the appeal by the Secretary-General to give urgent attention to providing Botswana with the financial and material help it urgently needed. The Council requested the United Nations, and its organizations and programmes concerned, to assist Botswana in the fields identified in the Mission's report, asked the Secretary-General to give the matter of assistance to Botswana his continued attention and keep the Security Council informed, and decided to remain seized of the matter.

Assistance to Botswana

Decision by the Economic and Social Council

On 29 July 1977, at its sixty-third session, the Economic and Social Council adopted without a vote a resolution on assistance to Botswana which had been introduced by Yugoslavia on behalf of States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

By this resolution (2095(LXIII)), the Council among other things expressed its full support for Botswana in its effort to safeguard its sovereignty and to afford protection to its people against attacks and acts of provocation by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. The Council took cognizance of the special economic hardship confronting Botswana because of having to divert funds from development projects to hitherto unplanned and unbudgeted security arrangements.

The Council endorsed the assessment and recommendations of the Mission to Botswana, as well as the appeals of the Security Council and of the Secretary-General to provide generous assistance, and called on all States, regional and interregional organizations, and other governmental and non-governmental bodies to respond to those appeals. The appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system were asked by the Council to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Botswana and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-

General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was asked to strengthen further his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees, and the international community was urged to provide him with the necessary means to carry out those programmes.

The Council welcomed the arrangements made by the Secretary-General and by Botswana for the co-ordination of the programme of assistance; it asked the Secretary-General: to continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective international assistance programme to Botswana; to ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements were made for that purpose; and to arrange for a review of that assistance programme in time for the matter to be considered at the regular session of the General Assembly later in the year.

Report of the review mission

In accordance with the Security Council's request of 25 May 1977 and the Economic and Social Council's request of 29 July 1977, the Secretary-General appointed a review mission which visited Botswana from 5 to 8 September and reported that the circumstances which had given rise to the Security Council's decision of 14 January still continued: tensions remained high and there had been several attacks and other incidents along the border with Southern Rhodesia since February. The Government had established a modest defence force, incorporating the former police mobile unit. The mission also reported that the influx of refugees from Southern Rhodesia continued: during the first eight months of 1977 about 13,000 had crossed into Botswana.

With regard to the economic situation, the review mission noted that additional annual recurrent costs for defence expenditures had increased significantly and would have to be met by imposing cuts on other sectors of the economy. It also noted that the so-called independence granted by South Africa to the bantustan of Bophuthatswana, part of which sat astride Botswana's vital rail communications southward, could pose a threat to the economy of the country, as could a possible reduction by the South African Government in the number of migrant workers employed in South African mines. A rapid reduction in that source of jobs would have serious repercussions on Botswana's already serious unemployment problem.

The report noted that there had been an encouraging response from the international community to the appeals for assistance, amounting to about $25 million. However, the realistic total of capital costs of recommended projects had increased from the original estimate of $54 million to approximately $56 million.

The review mission concluded by saying that much remained to be done: there were the problems already present, such as the need for protection of the livestock industry and the need to have ready access to the border areas; and there were problems to be anticipated, such as the maintenance of rail transport and the need for improving air transport. Moreover, the country's development programme needed to be continued, despite the substantial and increasing resources which had to be diverted to defence purposes. For all those purposes, Botswana urgently required the assistance of the international community to help it through a difficult period.

Decision by the General Assembly

On 13 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without objection, resolution 32/97, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 18 November, on a proposal by 69 States.

By this resolution, the General Assembly among other things expressed its conviction that international solidarity with Botswana was essential for the promotion of a solution to the problems of southern Africa. The Assembly expressed its full support for the Government of Botswana in its efforts to safeguard its sovereignty and recognized that Botswana faced special economic hardships in doing so. It endorsed the recommendations contained in the reports of the two missions, as well as the appeals of the Security Council and Secretary-General to the international community to provide assistance.

Noting with appreciation the assistance already provided, the Assembly called upon all States and appropriate organizations to maintain and increase assistance to Botswana to help it carry out planned development projects. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was asked to continue his programmes of assistance on behalf of refugees in Botswana and the international community was urged to provide him with the means necessary to carry them out.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to: continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Botswana; ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements were made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international assistance programme; arrange for a review of the economic situation of Botswana in time for the matter to be considered by the Economic and Social Council at its second 1978 session; and keep the situation in Botswana under constant review, maintain close contact with Member States, intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions, and report on the question at the Assembly's regular 1978 session.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letters dated 22 December 1976 and 12 January 1977 from the Permanent Representative of Botswana to the United Nations, and having heard the statement of the Minister for External Affairs of Botswana concerning hostile acts against Botswana by the illegal minority regime in Southern Rhodesia,

Gravely concerned at the dangerous situation created by the provocative and hostile acts committed by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia against the security and well-being of Botswana,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of the people of Southern Rhodesia to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure the enjoyment of such rights as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 232(1966) of 16 December 1966 and 253 (1968) of 29 May 1968, by which it determined and reaffirmed, respectively, that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 31/154 of 20 December 1976,

Convinced that the recent provocative and hostile acts perpetrated by the illegal regime against Botswana aggravated the situation,

Deeply grieved and concerned at the loss of human life and damage to property caused by the acts of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia against Botswana,

Noting with appreciation Botswana's decision to continue to give asylum to political refugees fleeing from inhuman oppression by the illegal racist minority regime,

Realizing the need for Botswana to strengthen its security in order to safeguard its sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence,

Reaffirming the legal responsibility of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland over Southern Rhodesia, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

1. Strongly condemns all acts of provocation and harassment, including military threats and attacks, murder, arson, kidnapping and destruction of property, committed against Botswana by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

2. Condemns all measures of political repression by the illegal regime that violate fundamental rights and freedoms of the people of Southern Rhodesia and contribute to instability and lack of peace in the region as a whole;

3. Deplores all acts of collaboration and collusion which sustain the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and encourage defiance with impunity of the resolutions of the Security Council, with adverse consequences for peace and security in the region;

4. Demands the immediate and total cessation of all hostile acts committed against Botswana by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

5. Takes cognizance of the special economic hardship confronting Botswana as a result of the imperative need to divert funds from ongoing and planned development projects to hitherto unplanned and unbudgeted security measures necessitated by the urgent need effectively to defend itself against attacks and threats by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

6. Accepts the invitation of the Government of Botswana to dispatch a mission to assess the needs of Botswana in carrying out its development projects under the present circumstances and, accordingly, requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize with immediate effect financial and other forms of assistance to Botswana and to report to the Security Council not later than 31 March 1977;

7. Requests the United Nations and the organizations and programmes concerned, including the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, to assist Botswana in carrying out the ongoing and planned development projects without interruption as stated in paragraph 5 and envisaged under paragraph 6 of the present resolution;

8. Appeals to all States to respond positively in providing assistance to Botswana, in the light of the report of the Mission of the Secretary-General, in order to enable Botswana to carry out its planned development projects;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Resolution 2095 (LXIII), as introduced by Yugoslavia, E/L.1784, and as amended by sponsors, adopted without vote by Council on 29 July 1977, meeting 2083.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 403(1977) of 14 January 1977 and 406 (1977) of 25 May 1977 concerning the complaint by the Government of Botswana of acts of aggression committed against its territory by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 232 (1966) of 16 December 1966 and 253 (1968) of 29 May 1968, which determined and reaffirmed, respectively, that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security and that sanctions should be imposed against the illegal regime in that territory,

Deeply concerned at the loss of human life and damage to property caused by the acts of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia against Botswana,

Noting with appreciation Botswana's policy of according asylum to political refugees fleeing from Southern Rhodesia,

Realizing the need for Botswana to strengthen its security in order to safeguard its sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence,

Recognizing the plight of the refugees and the additional burden imposed upon Botswana by their continuing influx,

1. Expresses full support for the Government of Botswana in its effort to safeguard its sovereignty and to afford protection to its people against attacks and acts of provocation by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

2. Takes cognizance of the special economic hardship confronting Botswana because it has to divert funds from current and planned development projects to hitherto unplanned and unbudgeted security arrangements, owing to the country's urgent need to defend itself effectively against attacks and threats by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

3. Fully endorses the assessment and recommendations of the mission to Botswana appointed by the Secretary-General to assess the needs of Botswana in carrying out its development projects in the present circumstances;

4. Strongly endorses the appeal of the Security Council and of the Secretary-General to all States and intergovernmental organizations to provide generous assistance to Botswana, within the framework of the mission's recommendations, in order that Botswana may be able to carry out its planned development projects at their original level and without delay;

5. Calls upon all States, regional and interregional organizations, and other governmental and non-governmental bodies to respond to the appeals of the Security Council to provide assistance on a generous scale to Botswana;

6. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Botswana in carrying out its planned development projects without interruption and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance;

7. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to strengthen further his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees and urges the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out these programmes;

8. Further requests the appropriate organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to report regularly to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Botswana;

9. Welcomes the arrangements made by the Secretary-General and by the Government of Botswana for the co-ordination of the programme of assistance, and the establishment of a special account at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General to receive contributions to the programme;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective international programme of assistance to Botswana;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate an international programme of assistance to Botswana;

(c) To arrange for a review of the programme of assistance to Botswana to be conducted in time for the matter to be considered at the thirty-second session of the General Assembly.

Resolution 32/97, as recommended by Second Committee,

A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without objection by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 403 (1977) of 14 January 1977 and 406 (1977) of 25 May 1977 concerning the complaint by the Government of Botswana of acts of aggression committed against its territory by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia,

Deeply concerned at the loss of human life and damage to property caused by the acts of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia against Botswana,

Realizing the need for Botswana to strengthen its security in order to safeguard its sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence,

Recognizing the plight of the refugees fleeing from oppression and the additional burden imposed upon Botswana by their continuing influx,

Noting the report of the mission to Botswana, transmitted by a note by the Secretary-General dated 28 March 1977, which assessed the special economic needs of Botswana in February 1977,

Having examined the report of the review mission to Botswana, transmitted by a note by the Secretary-General dated 26 October 1977 in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2095 (LXIII) of 29 July 1977, which outlines the programme of international assistance to Botswana,

Convinced that international solidarity with Botswana is essential for the promotion of a solution to the problems of southern Africa,

1. Expresses full support for the Government of Botswana in its efforts to safeguard its sovereignty;

2. Recognizes the special economic hardship confronting Botswana caused by the diverting of funds from current and planned development projects to effective arrangements for security against attacks and threats by Southern Rhodesia;

3. Endorses the assessments and recommendations contained in the notes by the Secretary-General dated 28 March and 26 October 1977;

4. Notes with appreciation the assistance so far provided to Botswana by the international community;

5. Draws the attention of Member States and international organizations to the fact that the assistance received to date falls short of Botswana's requirements;

6. Strongly endorses the appeal of the Security Council and of the Secretary-General to all States and intergovernmental organizations to provide generous assistance in order to enable Botswana to carry out its planned development projects;

7. Calls upon all States, regional and interregional organizations, and other governmental and non-governmental bodies to respond to the appeals of the Security Council to provide assistance on a generous scale to Botswana;

8. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Botswana in carrying out its planned development projects without interruption and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance;

9. Further draws the attention of the international community to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General to receive contributions for assistance to Botswana;

10. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Botswana and urges the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out these programmes;

11. Further requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report regularly to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Botswana;

12. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Botswana;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Botswana;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Botswana in time for the matter to be considered by the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session;

(d) To keep the situation in Botswana under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions and other organizations mentioned in the present resolution, and to report on the question to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Questions concerning Lesotho

Complaint by Lesotho against South Africa

Report of the Mission to Lesotho

By a note dated 30 March 1977, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the report of the Mission appointed by him, in accordance with a Security Council decision of 22 December 1976,³⁵ which had visited Lesotho to consult with the Government and assess the assistance needed so that an international programme of financial, technical and material assistance could be organized. According to the report, the eight-member Mission, which was headed by the Assistant Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, was appointed after consultation with the Government of Lesotho. It arrived in Maseru on 27 January 1977 and spent 18 days in Lesotho, where it consulted officials principally concerned with the development of the country and received a list of proposed projects for which assistance was needed. It also visited border posts and agricultural, industrial, educational and health projects in various parts of the country.

In the Mission's view, the assistance needed by Lesotho was both substantial and urgent, and should have the effect not only of generally strengthening the country's fragile economy but also of reducing its economic dependence on South Africa, and hence reducing its vulnerability to deliberate pressures. To that end, the report recommended 46 projects for assistance, grouped under two programmes of development: an emergency programme, at a cost of some $66 million, and an accelerated development programme, costing some $47 million.

The emergency programme was primarily concerned with the development of internal road transport facilities, with civil aviation and with the strengthening of food supplies. It also included some development in telecommunications and in health facilities. The accelerated development programme strongly emphasized road transport and agricultural development but also included hydroelectric power, education, health services, industry and mining.

The report concluded by calling attention to the need for action in several related fields besides the development projects proposed in the two programmes, including the strengthening of the fiscal system and the preparation of contingency plans in the event that large numbers of migrants should return to Lesotho suddenly and unexpectedly.

By a letter dated 18 April, the Secretary-General transmitted the Mission's report to the Governments of all Member States and members of the specialized agencies and said he had designated the Assistant Secretary-General for Special Political Questions to co-ordinate action by the United Nations system. Since the resources required to finance the various projects recommended in the Mission's report were clearly beyond the means available to Lesotho, he hoped that all Governments would respond positively to the appeal of the Security Council for immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Lesotho.

Consideration by the Security Council (24 and 25 May 1977)

The Security Council resumed consideration of the 1976 complaint by Lesotho against South Africa³⁶ at meetings held on 24 and 25 May 1977. The President, with the consent of the Council, invited the representatives of Lesotho and Sierra Leone to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

³⁵ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 170, text of resolution 402(1976).

³⁶ Ibid., p. 167.

The Secretary-General introduced the report of the Mission, expressing the hope that the Security Council would endorse the two programmes recommended therein. He informed the Council that the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General for Special Political Questions would serve as a clearing-house for information on all aspects of the assistance programme, and that on 6 June 1977 he would convene at United Nations Headquarters a meeting of representatives of Governments and organizations interested in participating in the programmes of assistance.

During the discussion in the Council, the representative of Mauritius stated that no one could fail to be concerned by Lesotho's remarkable dependence on South Africa for, among other vital necessities, food and consumer, manufactured and industrial goods, social, technical and economic services and, in particular, the employment of a great proportion of its population. Mauritius further noted that South Africa had once again chosen to defy the will of the international community, and it continued to persist in its attempts to harass and coerce Lesotho by creating unbearable economic hardships for it. Moreover, South Africa, by the recent establishment of so-called independent Transkei along the south-eastern border of Lesotho, had closed three border posts—which it was obliged to maintain under agreements—through which traffic entering or leaving Lesotho had to pass because of the absence of alternatives.

The representative of Sierra Leone observed that Lesotho's problems should not be considered in isolation: they were the direct effect of the apartheid system of government prevalent in southern Africa.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya asserted that steps had to be taken to assist Lesotho and enable it to overcome the hardships and difficulties resulting from the border closure and to maintain its courageous defiance and non-recognition of the apartheid and bantustan policies of the Pretoria regime. India said an expression of international solidarity with Lesotho was clearly called for, and that expression should take the form of generous responses to the appeal for financial, technical and material assistance put forward by the Secretary-General.

The representative of Lesotho recalled that he had previously brought the problem of his people to the attention of the Council, and explained that South Africa had unilaterally closed the three border posts because of Lesotho's refusal to recognize the independence of Transkei, in full compliance with the General Assembly's resolution of 26 October 1976.³⁷ He also noted Lesotho's situation as a land-locked country surrounded by a racist and apartheid State. The report of the Mission appointed by the Secretary-General had indeed catalogued the various pressures to which his country had been subjected; moreover, he stressed, those pressures showed no signs of abating, and in fact the situation had since grown worse. The people of Lesotho continued to be harassed and intimidated at the hands of the South African police; the normal flow of goods and people continued to be hampered; and arrests had been made. He said that implementation of the recommendations contained in the report would enable Lesotho to uphold and abide by the decisions and resolutions of the United Nations and safeguard its independence and sovereignty.

The representative of India said that his country was aware of the extreme vulnerability of Lesotho's economy, and admired Lesotho all the more for refusing to recognize so-called independent Transkei. There could be no doubt, he said, that South Africa had breached agreements with Lesotho by closing the three border posts in an effort to coerce Lesotho into recognizing Transkei. In India's view, the Pretoria regime should be made financially liable for the damage caused by its policies.

The representative of Canada pointed out that the fact that Lesotho had refused to be coerced into recognizing Transkei—which the entire international community had also refused to recognize—had to be held to its credit, and its attachment to moral principles in the midst of substantial economic pressures had to be commended. He said that, in direct response to the need to increase international assistance to Lesotho to enable it to meet its developmental goals, Canada had increased the indicative planning figure for Canadian assistance to Lesotho for 1978-1983 from $22.6 million to $30 million, and that a major portion of this would be earmarked for road construction and the purchase of aircraft to facilitate delivery of critical supplies to those regions affected by the difficulties arising from the creation of the Transkei bantustan. His Government was also continuing to assist Lesotho in the development of agricultural, mining and secondary industry sectors with the goal of increasing employment in those areas. In addition, he said, Canada would certainly be guided by the Mission's findings and suggestions in further developing its assistance to Lesotho.

The representative of France said that the countries of the European Community had provided emergency assistance totalling $1.2 million following the closure of the frontier of Lesotho and Transkei, and the Community would provide nearly $27 million for development projects in Lesotho for the period 1975-1980. He stated that by associating itself fully with the actions of the Community, his Government wished to express its solidarity with the Government and people of Lesotho in the difficult circumstances they were experiencing.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany said that the stability of Lesotho was an essential factor in achieving progress in the common struggle for the rights of the peoples of southern Africa. Mindful of this, his Government had initiated years ago its policy of economic co-operation with the geographically isolated people of Lesotho. Contributions had reached a total of 15 million marks by 1975; pledges in 1976 totalled 13 million marks for that year alone; and an additional 31.5 million marks had been pledged for 1977, of which 24 million marks were made available as financial assistance on very easy terms. Together with the Government of Lesotho, the Federal Republic of Germany was working on several project appraisals, including road construction, basic agricultural services, assistance to the agricultural development bank and the construction of a brick factory. At the same time, this Government offered a sum of 7.5 million marks for continuing technical assistance.

Recalling his country's close relationship with Lesotho, the representative of the United Kingdom explained that the main objective of his Government's aid programme, arrived at in consultation with Lesotho, was to reduce Lesotho's dependence on South Africa. In consequence, he declared, his Government fully endorsed the appeal to the international community to provide assistance to that end.

The representative of China said that his Government had studied the Mission's report on assistance, and firmly believed that the United Nations should support the just struggle of the people of Lesotho by every possible means and provide substantial assistance to it.

The USSR representative said that his country fully supported the just cause of the peoples of South Africa against imperialism, neo-colonialism and racism; it felt that the Security Council not only should condemn those practices in southern Africa but also should adopt more effective measures which would put an end to the aggression and other hostile activities of the racists and their supporters against independent African States, would hasten the elimination of the racist colonialist regimes in Africa and would guarantee the peoples of Africa an opportunity for peaceful development in conditions of security.

At its meeting on 25 May 1977, the Security Council adopted unanimously, without a vote, as resolution 407(1977), a draft proposal by Benin, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and Venezuela.

By the preambular part of this text, the Security Council inter alia noted with deep concern the continued acts of coercion and harassment against the people of Lesotho by South Africa, and reaffirmed its endorsement of the General Assembly's resolution of 26 October 1976 on so-called independent Transkei. The Council was fully aware that Lesotho's decision not to recognize Transkei had imposed a special economic burden upon that country. It was convinced that international solidarity with Lesotho, as a neighbouring State of South Africa, was essential to counteract effectively South Africa's policy to coerce Lesotho into recognizing Transkei.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Council commended Lesotho for its decision not to recognize Transkei and expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General for having arranged to send a Mission to Lesotho to ascertain the assistance needed. It noted with satisfaction the report of that Mission, and endorsed its recommendations, as well as the Secretary-General's appeal to all States for immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Lesotho.

The Council then requested the United Nations and the organizations and programmes concerned, including the Economic and Social Council, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Health Organization, to assist Lesotho in the fields identified in the Mission's report. The Secretary-General was asked to give the matter of assistance to Lesotho his continued attention and to keep the Council informed. The Council also decided to remain seized of the question.

On 15 June 1977, the representative of the Federal Republic of Germany informed the Secretary-General that his Government had agreed to allocate 500,000 marks to the construction of housing facilities for student refugees from South Africa studying at the University of Lesotho. He added that the funds were part of the programme of economic assistance for 1977 agreed upon between the Government of Lesotho and his Government in April 1977, to which he had referred in his statement in the Security Council.

Assistance to Lesotho

Decision by the Economic and Social Council

On 29 July 1977, at its sixty-third session, the Economic and Social Council, having examined the report of the Mission to Lesotho appointed by the Secretary-General in accordance with Security Council resolution 402(1976), and after having heard an oral report on behalf of the Secretary-General, adopted without a vote, as resolution 2096(LXIII), a draft resolution sponsored by Yugoslavia on behalf of States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

By the resolution, the Council among other things expressed full understanding of the problems faced by Lesotho as a result of its decision not to recognize so-called independent Transkei; concurred with the assessment and recommendations contained in the report of the Mission to Lesotho; and expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he had taken to organize an effective international programme of assistance to Lesotho.

The Council also endorsed the appeal made by the Security Council to the international community for assistance to Lesotho in order to help the Government carry out its development programmes and enhance its capacity to implement United Nations resolutions on apartheid and bantustans; it requested the appropriate organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Lesotho and to report regularly to the Secretary-General on the steps they had taken in this regard; and it also requested that UNHCR strengthen its humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees. The Council welcomed the arrangements made by the Secretary-General and by the Government of Lesotho for co-ordination of the assistance programmes and requested him to continue his efforts to mobilize resources, to co-ordinate the international assistance programme and to arrange for a review of the economic situation of Lesotho in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its 1977 session later in the year.

Report of the review mission

By a note dated 9 November 1977, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council and the General Assembly the report of a review mission which he had dispatched to Lesotho in September 1977, in accordance with the Security Council's request of 25 May 1977 and the Economic and Social Council's request of 29 July. The report described the changes which had taken place in the situation since the visit of the first Mission in January and February, and gave details of the response of the international community to the Secretary-General's appeal for assistance to Lesotho and information about the progress made with individual projects.

The review mission visited Lesotho from 8 to 11 September 1977. It found that the combination of political and economic problems faced by Lesotho had in no way diminished. In general, it reported, the response by the international community to the appeal for assistance had been generous and encouraging, but it said that the cost of many of the projects outlined in the report of the first Mission had risen significantly.

The report noted that little change had been called for in the actual content of either the emergency programme or the accelerated development programme. However, general developments in Lesotho's situation had caused some change in the priorities attached to different fields, with increased requirements for national security and self-sufficiency in the production of staple foodstuffs. In addition, the report noted, some difficulties had been encountered in project preparation and arrangement.

The report documented the information given to the Mission by the Government of Lesotho on the progress of individual projects in both the emergency and accelerated development programmes. Four additional projects were described for which assistance was needed, namely, in the areas of emergency electricity supply, a labour-intensive development programme, development-staff reinforcement and training, and reinforcement of the management of the Lesotho National Development Corporation.

Decision by the General Assembly

On 13 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without objection, resolution 32/98 on assistance to Lesotho. By the preambular part of this text, among other things, the Assembly: commended Lesotho's decision not to recognize the bantustan Transkei, thereby incurring a special economic burden; endorsed the appeals by the Security Council to the international community for assistance to Lesotho in order to help its Government carry out its economic development and enhance its capacity to implement United Nations resolutions; and recognized that the continuing influx of refugees from southern Africa imposed an additional burden on Lesotho.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations made by the Secretary-General in transmitting the reports of the two missions, and drew the attention of the international community to Lesotho's continuing and urgent requirements. It expressed satisfaction with the measures already taken by the Secretary-General to organize a programme of assistance and, although noting with appreciation the assistance provided thus far, urged a continued and generous response to the appeals for assistance.

The Assembly requested UNHCR to strengthen assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Lesotho and urged the international community to provide UNHCR with the means to implement the programmes. It also requested the international community to continue its assistance to Lesotho in carrying out its planned development projects and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international assistance programme, and further requested the appropriate United Nations organizations and programmes to report regularly to the Secretary-General on the assistance they had made available to Lesotho.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General: to continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of assistance to Lesotho; to ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements would be made to mobilize those resources; to arrange for a review of the economic situation of Lesotho in time for consideration at the second 1978 session of the Economic and Social Council; to keep the situation in Lesotho under constant review by maintaining close contact with the international community; and to report to the General Assembly at its 1978 regular session.

The resolution was adopted on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text without vote on 18 November 1977, on the proposal of 72 States.

Resolution 32/98, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without objection by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 402 (1976) of 22 December 1976, in which the Council, inter alia, expressed concern at the serious situation created by South Africa's closure of certain border posts between South Africa and Lesotho aimed at coercing Lesotho into according recognition to the bantustan Transkei,

Commending the decision of the Government of Lesotho not to recognize the bantustan Transkei in compliance with United Nations decisions, particularly General Assembly resolution 31/6 A of 26 October 1976,

Fully aware that the decision of the Government of Lesotho not to recognize the Transkei has imposed a special economic burden upon its people,

Strongly endorsing the appeals by the Security Council, voiced in resolutions 402(1976) of 22 December 1976 and 407 (1977) of 25 May 1977, to all States, regional and inter-governmental organizations and the appropriate agencies of the United Nations system to contribute generously to the international programme of assistance to enable Lesotho to carry out its economic development and enhance its capacity to implement fully United Nations resolutions,

Noting the report of the mission to Lesotho, transmitted by a note by the Secretary-General dated 30 March 1977, sent in compliance with Security Council resolution 402 (1976) to assess the specific requirements of Lesotho resulting from the closure of border posts,

Recognizing that the continuing influx of refugees from southern Africa imposes an additional burden on Lesotho,

Having examined the report of the review mission to Lesotho, transmitted by a note by the Secretary-General dated 9 November 1977, sent in compliance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2096 (LXIII) of 29 July 1977 to review the over-all economic situation of Lesotho,

1. Endorses the assessments and recommendations contained in the notes by the Secretary-General dated 30 March and 9 November 1977;

2. Draws the attention of the international community to the identification in these reports of continuing and urgent requirements for assistance beyond that received to date;

3. Further draws the attention of the international community to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General in compliance with Security Council resolution 407 (1977) to receive contributions for assistance to Lesotho;

4. Expresses satisfaction with the measures already taken by the Secretary-General to organize an effective programme of assistance to Lesotho;

5. Notes with appreciation the assistance so far provided to Lesotho by the international community;

6. Calls upon all Member States and regional and interregional organizations to continue to respond to the appeals of the Security Council and the General Assembly for urgent and generous assistance to Lesotho;

7. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to strengthen further his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Lesotho and urges the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out these programmes;

8. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—to continue their assistance to Lesotho in carrying out its planned development projects without interruption and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance;

9. Further requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to report regularly to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Lesotho;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Lesotho;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Lesotho;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Lesotho in time for the matter to be considered by the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session;

(d) To keep the situation in Lesotho under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions, and to report on the question to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

The question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

Communications

On 16 August 1977, the representative of Swaziland, on behalf of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, asked that the question of the Comorian island of Mayotte be included in the agenda of the thirty-second (1977) session of the General Assembly.

In an explanatory memorandum accompanying the African group's request, it was stated that the heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) noted with regret that after one year there had been no positive development with regard to the question and that the French Government was continuing its illegal occupation of the island, which was an aggression against the unity, territorial integrity and sovereignty of the independent Republic of the Comoros. The heads of State and Government had therefore decided that the matter should be brought to the attention of the international community and put on the agenda of the General Assembly of the United Nations until a satisfactory solution to the problem was found.

On 25 October, the representative of Tunisia, on behalf of the African group of Member States, transmitted the text of a resolution concerning the Comorian island of Mayotte adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at its session held in Libreville, Gabon, from 23 June to 3 July 1977, by which, among other things: it strongly condemned France's illegal occupation of the island of Mayotte, which constituted an aggression against the national unity, territorial integrity and sovereignty of the independent Republic of the Comoros, as well as the independence and sovereignty of Africa as a whole; it demanded France's immediate withdrawal from Mayotte—an integral part of the Republic of the Comoros—and its respect for the sovereignty of that State; and it reaffirmed its total solidarity with the Government and people of the Republic of the Comoros in their struggle for the total liberation of their national territory.

Also transmitted was the text of a programme of action recommended by the OAU Committee of Seven on the Question of the Comorian Island of Mayotte (Algeria, the Comoros, Gabon, Madagascar, Mozambique, Senegal and the United Republic of Cameroon) at a meeting at Moroni, Comoros, on 5 and 6 September, in which, among other things, the current Chairman of OAU was urged to continue his efforts to bring about the evacuation of France from the island. The Committee of Seven recommended that a mission consisting of the Foreign Ministers of its member States meet the French Foreign Minister to ascertain France's designs and real intentions in connexion with the fate of Mayotte. The Ministers were to demand that France remove once and for all the restrictions imposed on the movement of persons and goods between Mayotte and the rest of the Comoro Archipelago. The Committee appealed to all member States of OAU to undertake individual and collective efforts so that the French Government would bring about a just and urgent solution to this problem, which preoccupied the whole of Africa, in collaboration with the Government of the Republic of the Comoros.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The question of the Comorian island of Mayotte was considered at three plenary meetings of the General Assembly during its thirty-second session later in 1977. On 1 November, on a proposal by 68 States, it adopted resolution 32/7, by a roll-call vote of 121 to 0, with 17 abstentions.

By this text, the Assembly among other things recalled the provisions of its resolution of 21 October 1976,³⁸ by which it called on the Government of France to enter into negotiations with the Government of the Comoros. It also noted OAU's efforts, especially those of its Committee of Seven, which had recommended that efforts be exerted to bring about a just and urgent solution by France to this problem. The Assembly then:

(1) called on the Government of the Comoros and the Government of France to work out a just and equitable settlement for the problem of the Comorian island of Mayotte which respected the political unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros, in accordance with the resolutions of the General Assembly on this issue;

(2) mandated the Secretary-General to take, in close consultation with the Comoros and France, any initiative in favour of negotiations between the two Governments;

(3) further requested the Secretary-General to contact the OAU Administrative Secretary-General with a view to obtaining any assistance which might help to discharge his mission; and

(4) decided to keep the item on its agenda, and asked the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly in 1978 on the implementation of this resolution.

(For text of resolution 32/7, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the Assembly's discussion, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Comoros, after reviewing previous developments on the question, said that the French Parliament on 24 December 1976 had adopted a law proclaiming Mayotte to be an integral part of the French Republic. That law, he said, was an act of deliberate violation of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly. It constituted, furthermore, proof of the desire of the French Government to maintain in the Indian Ocean region an atmosphere of constant insecurity prejudicial to the consolidation of the independence of the fledgling African coastal States of the Indian Ocean and to handicap and hinder their political, economic and social future. He wanted to make it clear that the Government and people of the Comoros sought a dialogue with France, but he urged respect for the territorial integrity of the Comoros based on its national identity, its common cultural patrimony and the geographic and economic conditions that made the populations of its four islands interdependent.

The representative of Senegal said that the occupation of the Comorian island of Mayotte by France could only diminish the store of sympathy which France had built up in its relations with Africa and create a split between them in a matter that Senegal doubted was worth the candle. He urged the Comoros and France speedily to reach, through negotiations, a settlement providing for the return of Mayotte to the Comorian State. He praised the Comorian Government for its moderation and for carefully avoiding heightening tensions in the Archipelago by demonstrating its willingness to have normal relations with France. He also said that the United Nations could not remain inactive when a part of the territory of one of its Members, weak and defenceless, was occupied by another Member State. It should take measures to establish a dialogue between the two parties.

The representative of Senegal went on to say that, by putting an abrupt end to its aid to the Comoros after more than 130 years of colonial occupation, the French Government obviously wished to upset the regime of the new independent State by casting it into inevitable economic and social chaos. The economic development of the country had been jeopardized, its relations with the rest of the world impeded and its cultural activities blocked. France had thus confronted the Comoros with considerable difficulties for which it bore a heavy moral responsibility. Senegal, he said, strongly supported the Comorian people and the granting, whether by the United Nations or by Member States, of substantial economic assistance to the Republic of the Comoros to help it through its difficulties.

The spokesman for Sri Lanka observed that what was being witnessed was the bizarre spectacle of a colonial power engaging in the process of decolonization and thereafter resorting to recolonization. He wondered whether France's action in dismembering the Comoros was perhaps connected to a strategy to safeguard the oil route to the Western countries, or whether the Comoros imbroglio had to be understood in the context of the problems of the Indian Ocean and the supposed needs of naval strategy. He said that, whatever the perception of France and other countries about their interests in the Indian Ocean, there was no justification whatever for the dismemberment of a State.

The representative of France observed that the territorial definition of archipelagos posed a very specific problem: the only sure criterion was the will of the population, which was the criterion France had applied in Mayotte, thus implementing the principle of the right of peoples to self-determination. The measures taken by the French Government and Parliament since the previous session of the General Assembly showed quite clearly, he said, that France in no way wanted to determine for ever the destiny of Mayotte. The law of 24 December 1976 made Mayotte a territorial collective unit of the French Republic; it provided in its first article that at the end of a period of three years the population of the island would be able to decide freely, by a new vote, what its future would be. France would not exercise pressure of any kind, he said.

The French representative went on to say that the political unity of the archipelago desired by the Comorian Government could not be achieved against the will of the population of one of the islands. The future of Mayotte was the affair of the inhabitants of Mayotte themselves and would depend also on the attitude of the Comorians. In that regard, he said that France had never taken the initiative of ceasing its co-operation with the Comoros; it was not because of France that that co-operation had been interrupted, and France, he said, was always ready to resume it. The final choice of the inhabitants of Mayotte would depend on the attitude of the neighbouring State, and he added that it was up to the Comorian Government to see to it that a dialogue was begun with the inhabitants of Mayotte. France would never either reject a community which had chosen to remain linked to it or oblige it to place itself under an authority that it objected to. France, he said, would accept any solution chosen by the inhabitants of Mayotte.

The French representative did not take part in the vote on the draft resolution, explaining that the text was unacceptable as it constituted interference in the internal affairs of France in violation of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the United Nations Charter,³⁹ and sought to settle in advance the formula which should result from the negotiations it recommended. It would deny the people of Mayotte the right to make a choice, he said.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and its resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also resolution 3161 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, in which the General Assembly affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros and through which the representative of France affirmed the intention of the Government of France to respond faithfully to the aspirations of the Comorian people,

Recalling that those aspirations were clearly expressed by the overwhelming vote of 22 December 1974 in favour of independence in political unity and territorial integrity in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 3291 (XXIX) of 13 December 1974,

Considering that in its communication of 17 October 1975 the Security Council recommended the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations and that on that occasion France raised no objection,

Recalling that by General Assembly resolution 3385 (XXX) of 12 November 1975 the Comoros were admitted to membership in the United Nations as an entity composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli, as emphasized in resolution 3291 (XXIX) and other resolutions,

Recalling the provisions of resolution 31/4 of 21 October 1976, mainly its paragraph 6 in which the General Assembly called upon the Government of France to enter into negotiations with the Government of the Comoros,

Bearing in mind the efforts of the Organization of African Unity, especially those of its Committee of Seven on the Question of the Comorian Island of Mayotte, which met at Moroni on 5 and 6 September 1977 and recommended that individual and collective efforts should be exerted in order to bring about a just and urgent solution by the Government of France to this problem which preoccupies the whole of Africa,

4. Decides to keep the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte" on its agenda and requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Questions concerning Mozambique

Complaint by Mozambique

Communications to Security Council (June 1977)

On 3 June 1977, the representative of Sri Lanka, as Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, transmitted the text of a communique issued by that Bureau condemning an act of aggression which it said had been committed recently by the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia against Mozambique. The timing of this act of aggression, involving the occupation of a part of Mozambican territory, in the wake of the Maputo (Mozambique) Conference (see p. 183) and following soon after armed intrusions into the territories of Zambia and Botswana (see subchapter above), could only be interpreted, according to the communiqué, as an impudent challenge to the peoples of Africa and a calculated affront to the authority of the United Nations. The sanctions voted by the Security Council against the illegal regime of Ian Smith had clearly failed in their purpose, the communique added. The negotiations which had been set in train for the transfer of power to the black majority of Zimbabwe were clearly being used by Smith to gain time for the consolidation of his illegal occupation of that country.

On 14 June, the representative of Mongolia transmitted the text of a statement, issued on 7 June by the Mongolian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, which charged that the recent aggressive act committed by the illegal racist regime in Southern Rhodesia against Mozambique was illustrative of the adventurist policy of racist and neo-colonialist forces designed to perpetuate the racist and colonial structures in southern Africa. Mongolia strongly condemned the armed attack on Mozambique and the aggressive policy of the imperialist powers towards the independent States of Africa and demanded their immediate cessation.

A telegram from the President of Mozambique, dated 18 June, was transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter dated 22 June from the representative of Mozambique. It was stated that the illegal regime of Ian Smith, finding itself unable to suppress the liberation war, had been escalating a systematic action of violations, provocations and armed aggressions against those front-line States having common borders with Rhodesia. The international community had, the President noted, unanimously condemned Smith's racist regime and decided to give its support to the Zimbabwe people's just struggle; now it was imperative that international solidarity be expressed in more concrete and active form. He asked that a meeting of the Security Council be convened to study the situation of tension and insecurity existing in southern Africa, created by the colonial situation prevailing in Southern Rhodesia.

Appended to the letter of 22 June were a statement made by the President of Mozambique at Maputo on 18 June and photographs.

The President of Guinea, in a telegram dated 20 June, said that Mozambique, which had for many months been the victim of repeated military incursions into its territory by Rhodesian troops, was currently being subjected to a veritable invasion by the Rhodesian army, whose troops were massacring peaceful populations, burning towns and villages, destroying factories and killing large numbers of livestock. By this insensate action, the illegal regime in Rhodesia was creating a state of war in southern Africa. The Government of Guinea, the telegram said, firmly supported the request by Mozambique for a meeting of the Security Council and would be grateful to the international community for any assistance it was willing to give to the people of Mozambique.

On 25 June, the representative of Brazil said that, in view of the fact that new attacks had been launched by Rhodesian troops against Mozambique, the Brazilian Government reiterated its condemnation of such violations of the sovereignty of Mozambique as constituting threats to international peace and security.

In a telegram dated 26 June, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Gabon, Chairman of the twenty-ninth session of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), held at Libreville, Gabon, from 23 June to 3 July 1977, stated that the Council of Ministers supported Mozambique's request for a meeting of the Security Council and transmitted the text of a resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers in connexion with the recent invasion of Mozambique by Southern Rhodesia. Among other things, the Council of Ministers: declared that any attack by the racist regime on any front-line State would be considered as an attack against the whole of independent Africa; decided that in the event of such an attack member States of OAU would grant all possible support to repel the aggression; called upon the Security Council to take effective meaasures, particularly those provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,⁴⁰ to end the prevailing situation in Zimbabwe, which was the source of the instability and insecurity which constituted a serious threat to international peace and security; and further called on the Council to adopt measures facilitating prompt and effective assistance by the international community to Mozambique in order to enable it to strengthen its defence capabilities as well as overcome the tremendous material loss incurred as a result of the aggression and devastation committed by the illegal regime.

On 30 June, the representative of Portugal expressed his Government's strongest condemnation of the acts of armed aggression suffered by Mozambique, emphasized Portugal's solidarity with that country and expressed the hope that the world community would not fail to give Mozambique all the assistance it required to confront the additional challenge.

Consideration by the Security Council (28-30 June)

The Security Council considered the complaint by Mozambique at six meetings held between 28 and 30 June. The following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote: Algeria, Angola, Botswana, Brazil, Cuba, Egypt, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Lesotho, Mozambique, Nigeria, Senegal, the Sudan, Swaziland, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

Opening the Council's discussion, the Minister for Development and Economic Planning of Mozambique said that 1,432 persons, of whom 1,001 were Zimbabwean refugees, had been murdered by the army of Ian Smith since Mozambique began strictly to apply the sanctions imposed against Southern Rhodesia by the Security Council. He enumerated several instances of material damage suffered by Mozambique, including the destruction of hospitals, schools, stores, water reservoirs, homes, factories, bridges, a tropospheric weather station and livestock.

The Minister said that Ian Smith's objectives in carrying out this escalated aggression were, on the one hand, to intimidate the Mozambican people into abandoning support for the people of Zimbabwe and halting implementation of resolutions adopted by the international community, and, on the other, to make the colonial conflict an international issue, thus drawing attention from the central question— independence for the British colony. The intensification of the aggression, the unprecedented scope of the attacks and the use of sophisticated equipment of war, including armoured vehicles, tanks, heavy artillery, helicopters, reconnaissance aircraft and Mirages revealed, he said, that the rebel regime of Ian Smith was not alone: it dared invade Mozambique because it was supported militarily by certain countries. The constant aggression against Mozambique, which was connected with the aggression against Zambia and Botswana, was transforming southern Africa into a hotbed of tension, he said, seriously endangering world peace and security.

He went on to recall that on 17 March 1976, the Security Council had unanimously adopted resolution 386(1976),⁴¹ by which it called on all States Members and specialized agencies of the United Nations to supply financial, material and technical aid to Mozambique, first, to implement its economic development programme and, second, to maintain the application of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. Mozambique's primary objective at that time was the restructuring of its economy so as to become a solid, active and safe base for the liberation struggle of the peoples of southern Africa and, in particular, of Zimbabwe. The special Mission sent to Mozambique in 1976 by the Secretary-General in implementation of the Council's decisions calculated the needs of that country at $210 million for the first 12 months and $175 million for the following year. The aid provided, though welcome, had been considerably less than what was required.

He continued by saying that, in order to confront the aggression by the Smith regime, Mozambique had been obliged to mobilize what little material resources it had for the defence of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, and also to cover the losses incurred through implementation of the sanctions. Mozambique therefore considered it imperative that the international community contribute to the reinforcement of its defensive military capability by supplying the equipment necessary to enable it to defend its 1,200 kilometres of common frontier with Southern Rhodesia. It also appealed to the international community to pursue its efforts to make available the financial, material and technical aid called for by the Security Council on 17 March 1976 and further appealed for assistance for the reconstruction of areas devastated by aggression which, he stated, had caused direct material losses estimated at over $13 million.

Support for the statement by the representative of Mozambique and solidarity with Mozambique was expressed by a number of speakers, including Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Cuba, Egypt, India, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Panama, Senegal, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela and Zambia.

The representative of Nigeria said his Government was prepared, in concert with all member States of OAU and other progressive forces of the world, to take appropriate retaliatory measures against any further violations of the territorial integrity of the front-line States.

The representative of Gabon, speaking also on behalf of the Council of Ministers of OAU, repeated the appeal made by the Head of State of Gabon at the opening meeting of the Council of Ministers of OAU at Libreville in June to assist the freedom fighters and the brother countries which were the victims of aggression at the hands of the armed bands of Ian Smith. He proposed that the Security Council adopt a resolution along the lines of the one adopted by the Council of Ministers at the Libreville meeting.

The representatives of the German Democratic Republic and Romania, expressing support for Mozambique, called for a broadening of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. The representative of the German Democratic Republic, in addition, called for the imposition of a general embargo on the supply of weapons to South Africa in order to prevent the racist regimes from increasing their military strength.

The representative of the Sudan, current Chairman of the Arab group of Member States, stated that the Arab countries and peoples wished once again to reaffirm their unflinching support for the people of Mozambique. The military aggression that had been committed and the tension currently prevailing in that part of the African continent constituted a threat to international peace and security.

The representative of the USSR said that the infringements of the freedom and sovereignty of independent African States by the racist had assumed a systematic and massive character. The racist regimes, he said, were more and more clearly exacerbating the situation in southern Africa, intensifying the threat to international peace and security. He called for the extension of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia because the previous measures, which were limited in scope, had not yielded the hoped-for results. The preservation in southern Africa of racist regimes and the continuation of their raids against independent African countries were being facilitated, he said, by the connivance of those who had been holding endless talks with Smith and his South African protectors, which in actual practice provided cover and legality for those regimes. The USSR, he said, agreed with the approach of the Council of Ministers of OAU, which had declared that an attack by the racist regime on any African State would be viewed as an attack against the whole of independent Africa. The USSR, he said, would do everything in its power to help Mozambique and other African States and peoples to win a decisive victory in the struggle against the last bastions of colonialism and racism in Africa.

The spokesman for Pakistan believed it was the duty of the international community to respond to Mozambique's call for assistance. He said that Pakistan, in pursuance of Security Council resolution 386(1976), had decided to give Mozambique the sum of 1 million rupees, a token of its friendship. He hoped that effective measures would be taken to stop completely the flow of oil to Southern Rhodesia and believed that, as a first step, action against the regime should be taken under Article 41 of the Charter in its entirety, with consideration to be given to initiating action under Article 42 if necessary.⁴² It was necessary above all, he said, to consider the application of an arms embargo against South Africa, for the problem of Rhodesia could not be isolated from the larger problem of racial discrimination and minority rule in South Africa.

The representative of China said that, since the beginning of 1977, the Southern Rhodesian racist regime had ceaselessly carried out military threats, provocations and aggression against the neighbouring independent African States of Zambia, Botswana and Mozambique; that did not show its strength but instead demonstrated that under the heavy blows of the mounting armed struggle of the Zimbabwe people it had increasingly found itself in an inextricably hopeless impasse. Recent events in Africa, he said, were closely linked with the intensified rivalry between the super-powers over southern Africa and for world hegemony. The Chinese Government considered that the Security Council should uphold justice, condemn Smith's racist regime in the strongest terms for its criminal acts of invading Mozambique and other independent African States, condemn the South African racist authorities for their criminal acts of working hand in glove with the Smith regime, firmly support the people of Zimbabwe and the rest of southern Africa in their struggle for national liberation, firmly support the Government and people of Mozambique in their just struggle to defend their national independence and territorial integrity, and call upon all countries and people to give them the necessary support and assistance.

According to the representative of France, the problem before the Council was a political one. At stake were the authority of the international community and the dignity of Africa. He said that the increase in the number of Rhodesian attacks on Mozambique had inevitably led Mozambique to divert its energies from the primary objective, development; in the face of such dangers, France believed that the security of the African States should be fully protected as they exercised their legitimate rights. The Security Council should call on Member States to extend the necessary material assistance to Mozambique so that it might pursue its development policy in spite of the undue burdens that had been placed on it in the defence of its independence and sovereignty.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany said that his Government had most emphatically denounced the act of aggression of the Salisbury regime against Mozambique and was concerned that this development would jeopardize the efforts for a peaceful settlement of the Rhodesian question. It called on the Salisbury regime to withdraw its troops from Mozambique without delay and to abstain from all aggressive acts against neighbouring countries in the future. His Government, he said, was also prepared to assist Mozambique in the same spirit of solidarity in which it had decided to assist Botswana and Lesotho in May 1977.

According to the representative of the United Kingdom, Mozambique had suffered in economic terms from the fact that there was a considerable economic and trading relationship between it and Southern Rhodesia which had made the decision to impose sanctions a particularly hard one for the newly independent State of Mozambique. It had also suffered, both economically and militarily, from the repeated attacks mounted by the illegal Salisbury regime which his Government had condemned unreservedly. He gave details of the assistance the United Kingdom had pledged to Mozambique, adding that it hoped to offer further development assistance in the near future. The United Kingdom, he said, fully agreed that every effort should be made to tighten and intensify existing sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. He totally and unreservedly rejected any allegation that the attempts to find a peaceful settlement of the Rhodesian issue were diplomatic manoeuvres concealing an ignoble motive.

The representative of the United States said his Government deplored Rhodesia's actions because of the tragic loss of life and property and because those actions diverted attention from the true imperatives: the fundamental necessities of arriving at a negotiated settlement in Zimbabwe and the urgency of establishing majority rule in that country. In this context, he recalled his country's emphasis on support for majority rule and stated that the Smith regime could expect no assistance from the United States to rescue it from the position in which it had placed itself. Members must address themselves to Mozambique's request for assistance to repair the damage resulting from the raids.

The Canadian representative said his Government would continue to encourage the current initiative of the United Kingdom and the United States to achieve the independence of Zimbabwe under majority rule. It was Canada's hope, he said, that the international community would respond generously to Mozambique's appeal for assistance.

On 30 June, the Security Council unanimously adopted, as resolution 411(1977), a draft text sponsored by Benin, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius, Pakistan, Panama and Romania. By the preamble to this text, the Council among other things: expressed its indignation at the systematic acts of aggression committed by the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia against Mozambique and the resulting loss of life and destruction of property; expressed its awareness that the recent acts of aggression perpetrated against Mozambique, together with the illegal regime's constant acts of aggression and threats against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Botswana and Zambia, aggravated the existing serious threat to the security and stability of the region; said it was conscious of the important contribution made by Mozambique through its decision to close its borders with and strictly to apply sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in conformity with United Nations resolutions; reaffirmed the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the People of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and in particular those provisions which called for assistance to the front-line States victims of aggression by the racist minority régimes; and affirmed the right of Mozambique to take all necessary measures in accordance with the United Nations Charter to safeguard its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Council:

(1) condemned the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia for its recent acts of aggression against Mozambique;

(2) declared that those acts, as well as the repeated attacks and threats against Zambia and Botswana, constituted a serious aggravation of the situation in the area;

(3) condemned South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia in contravention of Security Council resolutions on sanctions against the regime in Salisbury;

(4) reaffirmed that the continued existence of the illegal regime was a source of insecurity and instability in the region and constituted a serious threat to international peace and security;

(5) reaffirmed the right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV),⁴³ and urged all States to intensify assistance to those people and their national liberation movement in their struggle to achieve that objective;

(6) commended Mozambique for its scrupulous observance of sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and its steadfast support to the people of Zimbabwe in their legitimate struggle, in accordance with United Nations resolutions;

(7) demanded that the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Mozambique be scrupulously respected;

(8) demanded that all States refrain from providing any support—overt or covert—to the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and, in particular, demanded that South Africa adhere fully to Security Council resolutions and cease from any co-operation or collaboration with the illegal regime in violation of those decisions;

(9) requested all States to give immediate and substantial material assistance to enable Mozambique to strengthen its defence capability in order to safeguard effectively its sovereignty and territorial integrity;

(10) requested all States and appropriate intergovernmental organizations to provide financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique in order to enable it to overcome the severe economic loss and destruction of property brought about by the aggression committed by the illegal regime, and to reinforce Mozambique's capacity to implement United Nations decisions in support of measures against that regime;

(11) requested the United Nations and its organizations and programmes concerned—including the Economic and Social Council, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Health Organization—to provide assistance to Mozambique on a priority basis in implementation of the above request;

(12) called on all States to implement strictly Security Council resolutions on sanctions and requested the Security Council's Committee on sanctions (established in pursuance of resolution 253(1968))⁴⁴ to examine as a matter of priority further measures to tighten the scope of sanctions in accordance with Article 41 of the Charter, and urgently to submit its recommendations to the Council;

(13) requested the Secretary-General to co-ordinate the efforts of the United Nations system and to organize immediately an effective programme of international assistance to Mozambique; and

(14) decided to remain actively seized of the matter.

Assistance to Mozambique

Report of the review mission

In response to a request by the General Assembly of 1 December 1976,⁴⁵ the Secretary-General undertook to arrange for a new assessment of the economic situation in Mozambique during the first quarter of 1977. Accordingly, the Joint Co-ordinator of the United Nations International Programme of Assistance to Mozambique visited that country on 4 and 5 March 1977 and, in co-operation with the Co-ordinator of the Programme, carried out a review mission from 18 to 24 April. The mission's report was submitted to the General Assembly on 9 June 1977.

The mission recalled that it had been estimated that some $175 million to $200 million in financial and material assistance would be needed annually to allow Mozambique to carry out its normal development. In addition, some $36 million would be required for emergency and short-term agricultural projects. To date, $102 million in financial, material and technical assistance had been offered to Mozambique in the context of the application of sanctions. This fell far short of Mozambique's needs. Grants of money and materials were urgently needed, as well as assistance in carrying out a number of emergency and high-priority development projects. The particular sectors in which assistance was needed were transport, communications, education, health and self-help and social development programmes.

The mission observed that many countries had not yet responded to the appeals for assistance. To add to the difficulties facing the country, there had been devastating floods in which many lives were lost and thousands made homeless; property damage exceeded $35 million. Emergency assistance exceeding $5.5 million had been provided by the international community but there was still a need for food, clothing, agricultural implements and equipment for those affected by the floods. Financial assistance was required for the resettlement of some 40,000 people, the report noted.

At the time the mission visited Mozambique, the report said, there were over 32,000 Zimbabwean refugees in the country, and an estimated 1,000 more were arriving each month. The international community had provided over $6 million for the immediate needs of the refugees, but further assistance was required to meet health, education and food requirements.

As substantial damage to rail, road and telecommunications systems had been suffered from attacks by the forces of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, there was an urgent need to repair and re-establish links, the mission reported.

The mission found that deficits in both the State budget and the public sector were increasing and were expected to exert severe pressures on the level of prices and on the balance of payments.

Decision by the Economic and Social Council

On 29 July 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 2094(LXIII), on the question of assistance to Mozambique, the text of which had been proposed by Yugoslavia on behalf of States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

The Council thereby, among other things, expressed its appreciation for the assistance provided by countries to Mozambique thus far, but expressed its concern that the aid given fell short of the amount required by Mozambique to deal with the special economic problems arising from its application of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. The Council called on all States and regional and interregional organizations to respond to the appeals of the Security Council and the General Assembly to provide assistance on a scale which would enable Mozambique to bear the great cost arising from the implementation of sanctions and the illegal regime's aggressive actions.

The Council also requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to strengthen his assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Mozambique and it urged the international community to provide him with the necessary means.

The Council welcomed the arrangements made by the Secretary-General and the Government of Mozambique for the co-ordination of the assistance programme and requested organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in this programme. It also asked the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize resources for assistance to Mozambique and to arrange for a further review of its economic situation.

Report of the Mission to Mozambique (July 1977)

Following the adoption of Security Council resolution 411(1977) on 30 June 1977, the Secretary-General appointed a seven-member Mission to visit Mozambique to assess the extent of economic loss and destruction of property and to obtain an estimate of the financial, technical and material assistance needed to overcome that loss.

In its report, submitted on 20 October to the General Assembly and the Security Council, the Mission observed that the armed attacks against Mozambique by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia had resulted in heavy loss of life and widespread destruction of public and private property in the border areas: 1,500 people had been killed, trade and service centres had been destroyed, and communications systems destroyed or damaged. Moreover, the Mission said, the direct losses from destruction of property were greatly exceeded by the losses from the disruption of the country's economy, particularly in the provinces affected, which were rich in food crops, cattle and minerals. Those losses had been inflicted on a country which was already struggling to cope with many grave problems. In addition to the problems Mozambique inherited on becoming independent, its economy had been seriously affected by its application of sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. It had also suffered extensive losses from flooding. Food production had dropped sharply both in the modern farm sector and in the traditional sector, causing a deterioration in urban food supplies and a drop in agricultural exports. The decrease in food production and an outflow of capital had put severe pressure on the balance of payments, which would be increased by a drop in gold earnings from the remittances of migrant labour after 1977. There had also been a rapidly increasing deficit in the Government's budget.

The Mission said in its report that food aid was required and would be needed for some time to come. Urgent development projects included construction of transport and communications facilities. The Government had reviewed its general development projects and identified a number which it considered particularly urgent in the new circumstances.

The Mission found that the continuing influx of large numbers of refugees from Southern Rhodesia was imposing a heavy burden on Mozambique and that substantially more assistance was needed than had been provided. Immediate relief was also required for the resettlement and rehabilitation of approximately 50,000 persons affected by the Southern Rhodesian attacks. The Government had established a national directorate for refugee affairs to deal with the situation.

Annexes to the report listed projects requiring external assistance in response to Security Council resolution 411(1977); some of them had been identified by earlier missions but had not as yet received international assistance. Also included were lists of projects still needing assistance and those which had received assistance since the review mission visited Mozambique in April.

Decision by the General Assembly

On 13 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 32/95 on assistance to Mozambique. It did so on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee which, on 18 November, had approved without vote the text of a resolution proposed by 86 Members.

By this text, the Assembly among other things endorsed the assessment and recommendations of the Mission to Mozambique and fully supported the provision of assistance to meet Mozambique's specific food, material and economic requirements arising from its special economic situation, and its financial and material needs required to deal with the large influx of refugees from Southern Rhodesia.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation for the measures taken by the Secretary-General to organize and mobilize an effective programme of international assistance to Mozambique, and noted with satisfaction the assistance thus far provided by various States and organizations. It expressed deep concern, however, that the total assistance received to meet the economic sacrifices by Mozambique in the enforcement of sanctions fell far short of requirements to cope with the situation. After drawing the attention of the international community to additional financial, economic and material assistance urgently required by Mozambique to enable it to overcome the severe economic loss and destruction of property caused by the recent acts of aggression, the Assembly urged all States and all regional, financial and inter-governmental organizations to provide such assistance to Mozambique to enable it to cope with these new problems.

The Assembly then noted with satisfaction the programmes of humanitarian assistance provided to Zimbabwean refugees in Mozambique by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and urged the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to extend those programmes. It requested the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to assist Mozambique in carrying out its planned development projects without interruption and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance.

The organizations and programmes of the United Nations system were asked to report regularly to the Secretary-General on the steps taken by them and the resources they had made available to assist Mozambique. The Secretary-General was asked: to continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique; to arrange for a review of the economic situation of Mozambique in time for the matter to be considered by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular 1978 session; and to keep the situation in Mozambique under constant review, and report on the question to the General Assembly at its regular 1978 session.

Communications (December 1977)

On 1 December, the representative of Mozambique transmitted the text of three communiques issued by his Government in connexion with a number of attacks carried out against Mozambique by the armed forces of Southern Rhodesia since May 1977. On 5 December, he transmitted two communiques giving further details about the attacks.

On 14 December, the representative of Zaire transmitted the observations of the Executive Council of Zaire concerning the identity of an aircraft mentioned as having been shot down on 26 November 1977 in Mozambique's note of 1 December.

On 16 December, the representative of Mozambique, further to his communications of 1 and 5 December, transmitted 11 photographs and a film showing the results of attacks carried out by Southern Rhodesia against Mozambique.

On 20 December, the representative of Zaire provided additional information in connexion with his note of 14 December concerning the identity of the aircraft mentioned previously.

Resolution 411(1977), as proposed by 7 powers, S/12353, adopted unanimously (15-0) by Council on 30 June 1977, meeting 2019.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the telegram dated 18 June 1977 from the President of the People's Republic of Mozambique, Mr. Samora Moisés Machel, to the Secretary-General, contained in document S/12350 and Add.1,

Having heard the statement of Mr. Marcelino dos Santos, member of the Permanent Political Committee of FRELIMO* and Minister for Development and Economic Planning of Mozambique, concerning the recent acts of aggression against

Mozambique committed by the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia,

Taking note of the resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-ninth ordinary session at Libreville, Gabon,

Indignant at the systematic acts of aggression committed by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia against the People's Republic of Mozambique and the resulting loss of life and destruction of property,

Gravely concerned at the rapidly deteriorating situation in Southern Rhodesia as a result of the continued existence of the illegal régime,

Reaffirming the inalienable rights of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination and independence, in accordance with Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-ninth ordinary session at Libreville, Gabon,

Recalling its resolution 232 (1966) of 16 December 1966, in which it determined that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security,

Cognizant of the fact that the recent acts of aggression perpetrated by the illegal regime against the People's Republic of Mozambique together with that regime's constant acts of aggression and threats against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Botswana and the Republic of Zambia aggravate the existing serious threat to the security and stability of the region,

Recalling its resolutions on sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, in particular resolution 253 (1968) of 29 May 1968,

Conscious of the important contribution made by the Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique through its decision of 3 March 1976 to close its borders with Southern Rhodesia and to apply strictly sanctions against the illegal regime in conformity with United Nations resolutions,

Deeply concerned that the measures approved by the Security Council have so far failed to bring to an end the illegal regime and convinced that sanctions cannot put an end to that regime unless they are comprehensive, mandatory and strictly supervised and unless measures are taken against States which violate them,

Recalling its resolution 386 (1976) of 17 March 1976,

Expressing its particular concern at the continued violation of sanctions by South Africa and its support of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia,

Reaffirming the primary responsibility of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, to take all effective measures to bring to an end the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions,

Reaffirming the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and in particular those provisions which call for assistance to those front-line States victims of acts of aggression by the racist minority regimes,

Affirming the right of the People's Republic of Mozambique to take all necessary measures, in accordance with the Charter, to safeguard its sovereignty and territorial integrity,

1. Strongly condemns the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia for its recent acts of aggression against the People's Republic of Mozambique;

2. Solemnly declares that these acts of aggression as well as the repeated attacks and threats against the Republic of Zambia and the Republic of Botswana by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia constitute a serious aggravation of the situation in the area;

3. Condemns South Africa for its continued support of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia in contravention of Security Council resolutions on sanctions against the regime at Salisbury;

4. Reaffirms that the continued existence of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia is a source of insecurity and instability in the region and constitutes a serious threat to international peace and security;

5. Reaffirms the right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination and independence, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV), and urges all States to intensify assistance to the people of Zimbabwe and their national liberation movement in their struggle to achieve that objective;

6. Commends the Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique for its scrupulous observance of sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and its steadfast support to the people of Zimbabwe in their legitimate struggle, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions;

7. Demands that the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Mozambique be scrupulously respected;

8. Demands that all States refrain from providing any support—overt or covert—to the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and, in particular, demands that South Africa adhere fully to Security Council resolutions and thus cease from any co-operation or collaboration with the illegal regime at Salisbury in violation of the Council's decisions;

9. Requests all States to give immediate and substantial material assistance to enable the Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique to strengthen its defence capability in order to safeguard effectively its sovereignty and territorial integrity;

10. Requests all States, regional organizations and other appropriate intergovernmental organizations to provide financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique in order to enable it to overcome the severe economic loss and destruction of property brought about by the acts of aggression committed by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and to reinforce Mozambique's capacity to implement United Nations decisions in support of measures against the illegal regime;

11. Requests the United Nations and the organizations and programmes concerned, including the Economic and Social Council, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Health Organization, to provide assistance to Mozambique on a priority basis in implementation of the request contained in paragraph 10 of the present resolution;

12. Calls upon all States to implement strictly Security Council resolutions on sanctions and requests the Security Council Committee established in pursuance of resolution 253(1968) concerning the question of Southern Rhodesia to examine as a matter of priority further effective measures to tighten the scope of sanctions in accordance with Article 41 of the Charter of the United Nations and urgently to submit its appropriate recommendations to the Council;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to co-ordinate the efforts of the United Nations system and to organize immediately an effective programme of international assistance to Mozambique in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 10 and 11 of the present resolution;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

REPORT OF THE REVIEW MISSION
A/32/96. Report of Secretary-General.

DECISION BY THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Economic and Social Council—63rd session
Plenary meetings 2081-2083

E/L.1773. Note by Secretary-General.

E/L.1783. Yugoslavia (on behalf of States members of Economic and Social Council belonging to "Group of 77"): draft resolution.

Resolution 2094(LXIII), as introduced by Yugoslavia, E/L.1783 as amended by sponsors, adopted without vote by Council on 29 July 1977, meeting 2083.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the decision of the Government of Mozambique to implement mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253 (1968) of 29 May 1968,

Fully aware of the substantial economic sacrifices made by the Government and the people of Mozambique as a consequence of the closure of the border with Southern Rhodesia,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386 (1976) of 17 March 1976, in which that Council appealed to all States to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize with immediate effect all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its policy of economic independence from the racist regime of Southern Rhodesia and to enhance its capacity to implement fully the United Nations mandatory sanctions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987(LX) of 11 May 1976 and 2020 (LXI) of 3 August 1976 and General Assembly resolution 31/43 of 1 December 1976, endorsing the appeal of the Security Council to the international community to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Mozambique, which gives an assessment of Mozambique's specific food and material requirements for 1977 and describes the country's special needs resulting from floods and from the influx of refugees from Southern Rhodesia,

Recognizing the plight of the refugees and the additional burden imposed upon Mozambique by their continuing influx,

Noting further the status of the international assistance accorded to Mozambique by February 1977,

Recalling Security Council resolution 411 (1977) of 30 June 1977 concerning inter alia losses suffered by Mozambique as a result of acts of aggression committed by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, by which that Council requested the international community to provide financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to overcome the severe economic loss and destruction of property brought about by those acts of aggression,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the report reviewing the situation in Mozambique and concurs with its conclusions;

2. Deeply appreciates the assistance so far provided to Mozambique by various countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

3. Expresses concern, however, that the international assistance received to date falls short of the amount required to enable Mozambique to deal with the special economic problems arising from its implementation of Security Council resolution 253 (1968);

4. Further concerned by recent acts of aggression committed against Mozambique by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, in particular the infliction of heavy casualties among the civilian population and widespread destruction of private and public property;

5. Calls upon all States and regional and interregional organizations to respond to the appeals of the Security Council and the General Assembly for assistance on a generous scale to enable Mozambique to bear the great cost arising from the implementation of sanctions and from the aggressive actions of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session the report of the mission which was dispatched to Mozambique pursuant to Security Council resolution 411 (1977), so that the international community may consider further the measures needed to assist Mozambique in overcoming the social and economic losses resulting from the acts of aggression committed by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

7. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to strengthen further his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees and urges the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out these programmes;

8. Welcomes the arrangements made by the Secretary-General and by the Government of Mozambique for the co-ordination of the programme of assistance, and the establishment of a special account at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General to receive contributions to the programme;

9. Requests the appropriate organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to assist Mozambique in carrying out its planned development projects without interruption and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance;

10. Further requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to report regularly to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Mozambique;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Mozambique;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Mozambique in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

Resolution 32/95, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the decision of the Government of Mozambique to implement mandatory sanctions against the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253 (1968) of 29 May 1968,

Conscious of the substantial economic sacrifices made by Mozambique in the implementation of its decision to enforce sanctions and to close its borders with Southern Rhodesia,

Deeply concerned at the continued acts of aggression committed by the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia against Mozambique and the resultant loss of life and destruction of property,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386 (1976) of 17 March 1976, in which the Council appealed to all States to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize, with immediate effect, all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its economic development programme normally and to enhance its capacity to implement fully the United Nations mandatory sanctions.

Endorsing the provisions of Security Council resolution 411 (1977) of 30 June 1977, in which the Council, inter alia, condemned the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia for its acts of aggression against Mozambique and requested the international community to provide financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to overcome the severe economic loss and destruction of property brought about by such acts of aggression.

Noting Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987 (LX) of 11 May 1976, 2020 (LXI) of 3 August 1976 and 2094 (LXIII) of 29 July 1977, and recalling General Assembly resolution 31/43 of 1 December 1976,

Noting also the report of the Secretary-General dated 9 June 1977 submitting the report of the second review mission assessing Mozambique's specific food, material and economic requirements and describing its special needs resulting from floods and the large influx of refugees from Southern Rhodesia,

Having examined the note by the Secretary-General dated 20 October 1977 transmitting the report of the mission to Mozambique, which provided an assessment of the financial, technical and material assistance required for Mozambique to overcome the loss and destruction caused by Southern Rhodesia's acts of aggression and which reviewed the over-all economic situation in Mozambique in the context of Security Council resolutions 386 (1976) and 411 (1977),

1. Fully endorses the assessment and recommendations of the mission which was dispatched to Mozambique under the terms of Security Council resolution 411 (1977), contained in the note by the Secretary-General dated 20 October 1977;

2. Fully supports the provision of assistance to meet:

(a) The specific food, material and economic requirements arising from the special economic situation facing Mozambique;

(b) The financial and material needs required to deal with the large influx of refugees from Southern Rhodesia, as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General dated 9 June 1977 and the note by the Secretary-General dated 20 October 1977;

3. Deeply appreciates the measures taken by the Secretary-General to organize and mobilize an effective programme of international assistance to Mozambique;

4. Notes with satisfaction the assistance so far provided to Mozambique by various States and by various regional and international organizations;

5. Expresses deep concern, however, that the total assistance received to date to meet the economic sacrifices made by Mozambique in the enforcement of sanctions still falls far short of its requirements to cope with the situation;

6. Draws the attention of the international community to additional financial, economic and material assistance urgently required by Mozambique to enable it to overcome the severe economic loss and destruction of property caused by the acts of aggression that are detailed in the note by the Secretary-General;

7. Urges all States and all regional, financial and inter-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and economic assistance to Mozambique to enable it to cope with these new economic and social problems;

8. Notes with satisfaction the programmes of humanitarian assistance provided to Zimbabwean refugees in Mozambique by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and urges the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out an extension of these programmes along the lines recommended in the note by the Secretary-General;

9. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization and the International Fund for Agricultural Development—to assist Mozambique in carrying out its planned development projects without interruption and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance;

10. Further requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to report regularly to the Secretary-General on the steps taken by them and the resources they have made available to assist Mozambique;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Mozambique;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Mozambique in time for the matter to be considered by the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session;

(d) To keep the situation in Mozambique under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions, and to report on the question to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

The question of Western Sahara

Communications

During 1977, the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received communications from Algeria, France, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, and Morocco relating to the situation in Western Sahara.

In a letter dated 7 July, the representative of Mauritania charged that on 3 July a band of mercenaries in the pay of the Algerian regime had attacked the capital of Mauritania causing casualties among the civilian population. The Algerian regime appeared to be resorting to State terrorism, the letter stated: on that day, 7 July, an attempt had been made on the life of the Mauritanian Ambassador to Paris.

In a reply dated 28 July, the representative of Algeria denied the charges and stated that Mauritania, in the wake of the continued losses inflicted on it by the liberation forces of the Saharan people, under the direction of the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el Hamra y Río de Oro (Frente POLISARIO), had tried to conceal the failure of their policy of annexation by trying to implicate Algeria.

The representative of Mauritania, in a letter dated 28 October, charged that on 26 October a party of 26 railwaymen, including two French nationals, who were responsible for the maintenance of the Mauritanian railway between Nouadhibou and Zouérate, had been seized and held hostage at the instigation of the Algerian Government and with the direct participation of the Algerian army. The letter also said that earlier in 1977 six French nationals stationed at Zouérate and three Mauritanian citizens had been seized and were being held hostage on Algerian territory.

In a reply dated 31 October, Algeria's representative denied the charges and said that Algeria had repeatedly drawn the attention of the international community to the inevitable consequences of the policy of aggression and occupation of Western Sahara and the consequent degradation of the situation in the whole region. It remained convinced that the only possible way to bring about a peaceful, just and lasting settlement of the problem of Western Sahara lay in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions relating to the effective exercise by the Saharan people of their inalienable right to self-determination.

On 9 November, in a letter transmitted by the Algerian representative, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Algeria said that recent developments in Western Sahara were causing his Government concern. Because of the failure to find a just and lasting solution, the problem of Western Sahara continued to provoke armed clashes between the Saharan people and the occupation forces of Morocco and Mauritania, the Governments of which had refused to respect the decisions of international agencies and accept the peaceful settlement of this decolonization question.

He went on to say that the French Government, while officially assuming an attitude of neutrality, no longer concealed its bias and its involvement on the side of the aggressor States. Its belligerent declarations and the massive aid given to the Moroccan and Mauritanian armed forces in their endeavour to exterminate the Saharan people were evidence of a clear intent to fan the flames of conflict and to encourage escalation. He said the King of Morocco tried to place on Algeria the responsibility for the state of war prevailing in Western Sahara, proclaiming that the Moroccan army would no longer hesitate to violate Algeria's borders and invoking the right of "hot pursuit."

In a reply dated 10 November, the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of Mauritania said that the resistance of the so-called Saharan people was simply the manifestation of the policy of aggression and intimidation which the Algerian Government had constantly practised towards his country, in defiance of all norms of international law and of international morality. The taking of innocent civilians as hostages and the systematic intent to destroy Mauritania's economic potential were proof, if proof were needed, of the kind of morality which the Algerian leaders were trying to impose on the countries of the region, and indeed on the international community as a whole. He went on to say that the proclamation of a self-styled Saharan republic in Algerian national territory and the recognition of that republic by the Algerian Government were in themselves an outright negation of the principles of the Charters of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU). In setting up that republic, the Algerian Government was trying to establish in Western Sahara a State based on tribalism—an attempt to create another Transkei in the north-western part of Africa.

On 22 November, the Moroccan representative forwarded a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Morocco stating that the Algerian leaders were constantly infringing the territorial integrity of Morocco by organizing military actions from Algerian territory. Algeria had been trying to establish in the area, through the so-called Frente POLISARIO, a sham entity that would enable it to control the territory in place of the former administering power. Morocco totally rejected the hegemonistic policy being imposed on the region by Algeria.

In a letter dated 21 December, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that a dangerous situation existed in Western Sahara as a result of barbaric raids perpetrated by the French air force against the inhabitants, in which napalm and other prohibited weapons had been deployed. These actions, as well as recent statements issued by the French Minister of Defence and Ministry of Foreign Affairs, were reversions to the old methods of colonialism and could only be considered as acts of direct intervention in the affairs of African countries.

In a letter of the same date, the Mauritanian representative drew attention to what it termed the extremely tense situation which had been created and maintained in Mauritania by the Algerian Government. He said, among other things, that attacks on 12 and 18 December on the mineral train joining Zouérate to Nouadhibou was part of Algeria's policy of aggression. Mauritania would not hesitate to turn for assistance to the international community, and especially to friendly countries, in accordance with its sovereign rights as recognized by the United Nations Charter.

In a letter dated 22 December, the representative of France said that the statements made in the letter of 21 December from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya were totally inconsistent with the facts. France, he said, could not fail to take an interest in the fate of its nationals who were contributing to the development of Mauritania and it was the duty of the French Government to provide protection for them. In view of this situation, French air force units—in very limited numbers—might take action to help maintain the security of French nationals in Mauritania when the latter were endangered, doing so only at the request of the Mauritanian Government.

By a letter of the same date, the representative of Mauritania transmitted a message from the Mauritanian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs rebutting recent statements made by Algerian leaders concerning the tension in north-western Africa.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The question of Western Sahara was considered by the General Assembly at its regular 1977 session. The Assembly had before it, to facilitate consideration of the question, the pertinent chapter of the report of its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁴⁶ The Special Committee had, on 4 August 1977, transmitted the available information on the territory to the Assembly and had decided to consider the item again at its 1978 session.

Also before the Assembly was a report of the Secretary-General informing the Assembly of a proposed extraordinary summit meeting on the question by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, and letters from Algeria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar and Tunisia: Algeria transmitted two communications from its Minister for Foreign Affairs on the situation in the territory; the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya annexed the text of a cable by its Secretary for Foreign Affairs drawing attention to a recent bombardment by the French air force against the Sahrawi people; Madagascar transmitted a memorandum from POLISARIO addressed to the Chairman of the Special Committee; and Tunisia requested circulation of resolutions and decisions adopted by the Council of Ministers and by the OAU Assembly at their June/July 1977 sessions at Libreville, Gabon.

The Fourth Committee, the committee in which the question was considered, heard a petitioner from POLISARIO on 31 October 1977 and statements by several Members at meetings held between 31 October and 9 November. On 9 November, following consultations between its Chairman and interested parties, the Fourth Committee approved by consensus a draft text on the question of Western Sahara; the Assembly adopted it without objection on 28 November as its resolution 32/22.

By this resolution, the Assembly among other things: reaffirmed its commitment to the principle of self-determination of peoples in accordance with the Declaration on granting independence; expressed the hope that a just and lasting solution to the problem of Western Sahara would be speedily achieved at the forthcoming extraordinary session of OAU; requested the Special Committee on implementation of the Declaration to keep developments under review and report again in 1978; asked the OAU Administrative Secretary-General to inform the United Nations Secretary-General of the progress achieved in the implementation of OAU decisions concerning Western Sahara, and invited the United Nations Secretary-General to report on that information as soon as possible; and decided to resume consideration of the question at its regular 1978 session.

Assistance to Cape Verde

At its July/August 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the question of assistance to Cape Verde. It was pointed out by the representative of the Secretary-General that the economy of Cape Verde lacked infrastructure for development, that large numbers of refugees had been returning and that there had been more than eight successive years of drought followed by floods.

The Council was informed that, in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 24 November 1976,⁴⁷ the Secretary-General had issued an appeal to the international community for the purchase and transport of food-stuffs. The Secretary-General's representative reported that the response had secured the food supply for 1977 but it would be many years before Cape Verde would become self-sufficient in food production. It was hoped that the international community would continue to give support to Cape Verde.

On 29 July 1977, the Council adopted decision 252(LXIII) by which it took note of the statements made on behalf of the Secretary-General on assistance to Cape Verde and also noted the observations in the report of the Committee for Development Planning, on its April 1977 session, on the inclusion of Cape Verde in the list of the least developed among the developing countries. The report had concluded that available data suggested Cape Verde should be included, as a borderline case. In addition, by decision 252(LXIII), the Council recommended that the Secretary-General continue his efforts to mobilize assistance from Member States and the United Nations system.

Decision 252(LXIII), proposed by the Council President, was adopted without a vote.

Later in the year, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly summarizing the situation in Cape Verde.

The Secretary-General reported that in October 1976 he had issued an appeal for food supplies for 1977 and transport to move them to Cape Verde. He had also arranged for a mission to visit Cape Verde to review the economic situation. The response had indicated that all food needs would be met during 1977; as for development needs, assistance had come from bilateral donors as well as from component parts of the United Nations system. The Secretary-General said that he planned to send another mission to Cape Verde to assess the situation.

On 13 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/99, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The Second Committee had approved the text, without vote, on 18 November 1977, on the proposal of 70 Member States.

By the preambular paragraphs of resolution 32/99, the General Assembly inter alia noted with concern the grave economic situation existing in Cape Verde and expressed its appreciation for the assistance that had been provided. It took note of the report of the Secretary-General and recognized the need for active measures to stimulate new economic activities.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly inter alia urged Member States and relevant international institutions to provide assistance to Cape Verde. It requested the Secretary-General to send a special mission to the country to consult with the Government on the nature and extent of the development aid needed, and it decided to include Cape Verde in the list of least developed countries. The Secretary-General was requested to continue his efforts to mobilize assistance for Cape Verde, to keep the situation under review and to maintain close contact with Member States and intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions.

Resolution 32/99, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without objection by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/17 of 24 November 1976 relating to assistance to Cape Verde, in which it requested the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular the developed countries and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to meeting the short-term and long-term development needs of this newly independent country,

Recalling its resolution 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in which it urged all Governments to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries,

Recalling its resolutions 3054 (XXVIII) of 17 October 1973 and 3512 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 concerning the economic and social situation in the Sudano-Sahelian region and measures to be taken for the benefit of that region,

Recalling further that Cape Verde is a member of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, Noting Economic and Social Council decision 252 (LXIII) of 29 July 1977, in which the Council, inter alia, took note of the view of the Committee for Development Planning concerning the inclusion of Cape Verde in the list of the least developed countries,

Noting with concern the grave economic situation existing in Cape Verde as a result of nine successive years of drought, of the total lack of development infrastructure and of the grave effects of the international economic situation on its entire economy,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance provided by various States and organizations, including both food aid and development aid,

Noting, however, that, despite the appeal by the Secretary-General for development aid to enable Cape Verde to implement its development programme, the international response has fallen short of the requirements of the situation,

Noting further the efforts made for the benefit of the Sahel by the Office for Sahelian Relief Operations of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and by the United Nations Sahelian Office,

Recognizing the need for active measures to stimulate new economic activities,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 September 1977,

1. Urges Member States and the relevant international institutions—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme and the World Health Organization—to continue to provide effective and continuous assistance to the Government of Cape Verde so that it may deal effectively with the catastrophic situation resulting from the drought, and to ensure the supply of food, medical and other products to that country;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to send a special mission to Cape Verde with a view to determining, in consultation with the Government, the nature and extent of the development aid needed in order:

(a) To expand and strengthen the economic and social base of the country;

(b) To initiate an accelerated development programme;

3. Decides to include Cape Verde in the list of the least developed countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Cape Verde;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Cape Verde;

(c) To keep the situation in Cape Verde under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions, and to report on the question to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Assistance to the Comoros

At its July/August 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the question of assistance to the Comoros.

The Council was informed by a representative of the Secretary-General that the General Assembly on 1 December 1976⁴⁸ had called on the international community to assist the Government of the Comoros in dealing with that country's economic situation and had requested the Secretary-General to mobilize assistance for its development needs. His representative reported that, in pursuance of that request, the Secretary-General had appealed for aid to Member States and had dispatched a Mission to the Comoros to determine the essential needs and priority areas for action.

⁴⁸ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 189, text of resolution 31/42.

On 29 July 1977, the Council adopted decision 252(LXIII) by which it took note of the statement on assistance in emergency situations made on behalf of the Secretary-General, and also noted the observations made in the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its April 1977 session. The Committee had pointed out that available data suggested that the Comoros could be included, as a borderline case, in the list of the least developed among the developing countries.

In addition, by decision 252(LXIII), the Council reaffirmed the Assembly's request that the Secretary-General continue his efforts to mobilize assistance for the Comoros from Member States and the United Nations system.

Decision 252(LXIII), proposed by the Council President, was adopted without a vote.

Later in the year, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly summarizing the situation with regard to assistance to the Comoros. The report stated that the Secretary-General had sent a Mission to the Comoros in May 1977 to consult with that Government on the nature and extent of its needs.

On 3 November, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the recommendations and conclusions of that Mission, as well as those of a supplementary mission in September. He outlined major factors contributing to the critical situation in the Comoros, many of them long-term underlying problems inherited from the past. In addition, he reported that the Government was faced with post-independence problems compounding the difficulties. The Government's approach to development was described and a programme of proposed international assistance was put forward. The projects within the programme were divided into those critically urgent, those necessary to accelerate development and some urgent small-scale technical co-operation projects. Also listed in detail were the needed agricultural tools and equipment, and hospital supplies.

With this report before it, on 13 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/92, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The Second Committee had approved the text of the resolution, without vote, on 10 November 1977 on the proposal of 57 Member States.

By the preambular paragraphs of this resolution, the General Assembly observed, among other things, that the Government and people of the Comoros had made substantial sacrifices in reorganizing and improving administration in both the economic and social fields.

By the operative paragraphs of resolution 32/92, the Assembly inter alia endorsed the assessment and recommendations of the report of the Mission to the Comoros. It urged Member States and regional and intergovernmental organizations to respond generously with the assistance necessary to meet the costs of the programme outlined in the report of the Mission. Further, it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to give increased assistance to the Comoros and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective programme of international assistance to that country. It also decided to include the Comoros in the list of the least developed countries.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General inter alia to continue his efforts to mobilize assistance, to arrange for a further review of the economic situation and to keep the situation under surveillance, maintaining close contact with the international community.

Resolution 32/92, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/42 of 1 December 1976 relating to assistance to the Comoros, in which it requested the Secretary-General to mobilize financial, technical and economic assistance from the international community, particularly from the developed countries and the appropriate organizations within the United Nations system, with a view to meeting the short-term and long-term development needs of this newly independent country,

Recalling its resolution 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in which it recommended specific action by the developed countries in favour of developing island countries,

Having regard to the particularly exceptional circumstances in which the Comoros acceded to independence on 6 July 1975,

Taking note of the island character of this developing country and of the serious economic situation with which it had to deal immediately after its accession to independence,

Having regard to Economic and Social Council decision 252(LXIII) of 29 July 1977, in which the Council took note, inter alia, of the view of the Committee for Development Planning concerning the inclusion of the Comoros in the list of the least developed countries,

Having regard to the very substantial sacrifices made by the Government and people of the Comoros in reorganizing and improving the administration in both the social and economic fields,

Noting the statement of the representative of the Secretary-General, which emphasized the urgency of providing increased assistance adapted to the real needs of the young republic of the Comoros,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the United Nations Mission to the Comoros which reviews the extremely critical economic situation in the Comoros and contains, inter alia, a list and the cost of urgent projects formulated by the Government of the Comoros that require international assistance,

1. Endorses the assessment and recommendations of the United Nations Mission to the Comoros;

2. Draws the attention of the international community to the critical budgetary situation confronting the Comoros;

3. Calls the attention of the international community to the list of urgent projects submitted by the Government of the Comoros for financing, as described in the report transmitted by the Secretary-General;

4. Urges Member States and regional and intergovernmental organizations to respond generously and to continue to provide the Comoros with the economic, financial and material assistance necessary to meet the cost of the projects and other measures referred to in the report of the Mission;

5. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization—to grant increased assistance to the Comoros and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance to that country;

6. Decides to include the Comoros in the list of the least developed countries;

7. Expresses its deep satisfaction regarding the measures taken by the Secretary-General to organize an effective programme of international assistance to the Comoros;

8. Notes with appreciation the assistance already provided or pledged to the Comoros by Member States, regional and intergovernmental organizations and the organizations of the United Nations system;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Comoros;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to the Comoros;

(c) To arrange for a review of the economic situation in the Comoros in time for the matter to be considered by the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session;

(d) To keep the situation in the Comoros under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions, and to report on the question to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Assistance to Djibouti

On 13 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without objection, resolution 32/93 on assistance to Djibouti. The Assembly thereby recalled its recent admission of the country to the United Nations and expressed awareness of problems facing Djibouti which derived from an inadequate social and economic infrastructure and which had been aggravated by a long drought and other factors.

Among other actions taken by the Assembly in adopting the resolution, the Assembly appealed strongly to Member States and to international institutions to give effective and sustained assistance to Djibouti to enable the Government to deal with the critical situation it was facing. The Assembly requested, inter alia, that the Committee for Development Planning consider including Djibouti in the list of the least developed among the developing countries, and strongly recommended that Djibouti be included also in the list of the countries most seriously affected by world economic crises. It further requested the Secretary-General to mobilize assistance from the international community and to keep the situation under review.

Resolution 32/93 was adopted on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. That Committee had approved, without vote, the text of the resolution on 10 November 1977, on the proposal of 67 Member States.

Resolution 32/93, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without objection by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Having warmly welcomed the admission of the Republic of Djibouti to the United Nations,

Taking note of the statement made by the President of the Republic of Djibouti in the General Assembly on the economic difficulties confronting his country,

Aware of the fact that Djibouti has to tackle certain specific tasks deriving from its recent accession to independence,

Aware also of the need for the improvement and enlargement of the social and economic infrastructure of Djibouti,

Deeply concerned at the situation prevailing in the country, aggravated by drought and other factors seriously affecting its economic and social life,

Recalling also the recent surveys carried out by the United Nations with a view to assessing Djibouti's short-term and long-term needs,

Further recalling its resolution 3421 (XXX) of 8 December 1975 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Recalling recommendation 99 (IV) of 31 May 1976 adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fourth session, held at Nairobi from 5 to 31 May 1976,

Noting that Djibouti is not included in the list of the least developed countries or in the list of the most seriously affected countries,

1. Strongly appeals to Member States and to the international institutions concerned—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme—to give effective and sustained assistance to the Government of Djibouti so as to enable it to deal successfully with the critical situation arising from the drought and the economic difficulties which that country is experiencing;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize financial, technical and economic assistance from the international community, particularly from the developed countries and competent agencies of the United Nations, in order to meet the short-term and long-term development needs of this newly independent country;

3. Requests the Committee for Development Planning to treat as a priority matter at its fourteenth session and to give favourable consideration to the inclusion of Djibouti in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session;

4. Invites in the meantime Member States, particularly the developed countries, and United Nations agencies to grant Djibouti, in view of its difficult economic situation, the same favourable treatment as is enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries;

5. Strongly recommends that Djibouti should be included in the list of the most seriously affected countries;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the question under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Assistance to Guinea-Bissau

On 13 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without objection, resolution 32/100 on assistance to Guinea-Bissau. It thereby voiced its deep concern at the serious economic situation in Guinea-Bissau resulting from more than 11 years of a war of national liberation, the return of large numbers of refugees and the lack of infrastructure for development.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly, among other actions, urgently appealed to Member States and international institutions to assist Guinea-Bissau in meeting its economic development needs. It requested the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, and further requested the Committee for Development Planning to give favourable consideration to the inclusion of Guinea-Bissau in the list of the least developed among the developing countries. In addition, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to keep the situation in Guinea-Bissau under review.

Resolution 32/100 was adopted on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The Second Committee had approved the text, without vote, on 22 November 1977 on the proposal of 80 Member States.

Resolution 32/100, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without objection by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the serious economic situation in Guinea-Bissau as a result of more than eleven years of a war of national liberation, the return of large numbers of refugees and the total lack of infrastructure for development,

Recalling that Guinea-Bissau is included in the list of the most seriously affected countries,

Recalling its resolution 3421 (XXX) of 8 December 1975 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Recalling recommendation 99 (IV) of 31 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, particularly paragraph 4 thereof, in which the Conference recommended that measures of assistance should be undertaken by the appropriate organs of the United Nations system in favour of the newly independent States in Africa,

Recalling further its resolution 3339 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, in which it invited Member States, particularly the developed countries, to provide economic assistance to the newly independent State of Guinea-Bissau,

1. Urgently appeals to Member States and the international institutions concerned—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the international financial institutions, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme—to assist the Government of Guinea-Bissau in an effective and continuous manner so as to enable it to deal effectively with the difficult situation resulting from the long liberation struggle and the return of large numbers of refugees from neighbouring countries, and to meet its economic development needs;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular the developed countries and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to meeting the short-term and long-term development needs of this newly independent country;

3. Requests the Committee for Development Planning at its fourteenth session, as a matter of priority, to give favourable consideration to the question of the inclusion of Guinea-Bissau in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session;

4. Invites in the meantime Member States, particularly the developed countries, and the organizations of the United Nations system to grant Guinea-Bissau the same benefits as those enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries in the light of prevailing conditions in Guinea-Bissau;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to keep this matter under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Assistance to Sao Tome and Principe

At its July/August 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the question of assistance to Sao Tome and Principe. By decision 252(LXIII) it took note of a statement made on behalf of the Secretary-General on efforts to mobilize financial, technical and economic assistance from the international community to meet the development needs of Sao Tome and Principe, as requested by the General Assembly on 21 December 1976.⁴⁹ The Secretary-General's representative reported that the Secretary-General had sent a mission to the country in June 1977 to review the situation with the Government. It was estimated that assistance amounting to $13 million would cover the most immediate, urgent needs with regard to training of national personnel and establishment of communications facilities; if trained administrators and managers were supplied, there was hope that development of the country's rich natural resources would eventually lead to self-sufficiency.

On 29 July 1977, the Council adopted decision 252(LXIII) by which it took note of the statement made on behalf of the Secretary-General, and also noted the observations made in the report of the April 1977 session of the Committee for Development Planning that although the per capita gross domestic product appeared higher than the limiting value used by the Committee, in view of the serious difficulties facing that country the Committee would examine more recent and detailed information at its next session.

In addition, by decision 252(LXIII), the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize assistance for Sao Tome and Principe. This decision, proposed by the Council President, was adopted without a vote.

Later in the year, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly summarizing the situation in Sao Tome and Principe. The information reported was essentially the same as that reported by the representative of the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council in July 1977. In addition, a detailed statement of needs, prepared by the Government of Sao Tome and Principe, was appended to the report.

On 13 December 1977, the Assembly adopted resolution 32/96, without objection, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The text had been approved by the Second Committee on 18 November 1977, without vote, on the proposal of 60 Member States.

By resolution 32/96, the General Assembly noted, among other things, that its appeal for assistance to Sao Tome and Principe had not met with the desired response. It noted, too, the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Sao Tome and Principe and the statement submitted by the Government on its most urgent needs.

By operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly renewed its appeal and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize financial, technical and economic assistance from the international community to meet the development needs of Sao Tome and Principe, and to send a special mission to the country to continue consultations with the Government. The Secretary-General was further requested to ensure the circulation of the mission's report to all Member States and organizations concerned, to keep the situation in Sao Tome and Principe under review, and to maintain close contact on the matter with Member States, intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions.

Resolution 32/96, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without objection by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its resolution 31/187 of 21 December 1976, in which it expressed deep concern at the serious economic and social situation in Sao Tome and Principe as a result of the total lack of infrastructure for development,

Recalling its resolution 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in which it urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries within the framework of their development plans and priorities,

Noting that the appeal made in resolution 31/187 for assistance to Sao Tome and Principe thus far has not met with the desired response,

Having noted the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Sao Tome and Principe and the statement submitted by the Government of that country on its most urgent needs.

Having noted the report of the Committee for Development Planning, in which the Committee decided to examine at its fourteenth session the question of the inclusion of Sao Tome and Principe in the list of the least developed countries, on the basis of more recent and more detailed information,

1. Renews the appeal made in its resolution 31/187;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts for the mobilization of the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular of the developed countries and the appropriate organizations within the United Nations system, with a view to meeting the short-term and long-term needs of Sao Tome and Principe;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Sao Tome and Principe;

(c) To send a special mission to Sao Tome and Principe with a view to continuing the consultations with the Government on urgent needs and identifying the economic problems facing the country, and to ensure that the report of the mission is issued in time to enable the Economic and Social Council to consider the question at its sixty-fifth session;

(d) To ensure that the report of the special mission is circulated to all Member States and to all regional and international organizations concerned, including the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund;

(e) To keep the situation in Sao Tome and Principe under constant review and to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions, and to report on the question to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session.

Assistance to Seychelles

On 13 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted, without objection, resolution 32/101, on assistance to Seychelles, and thereby voiced its concern about the economy of Seychelles and noted the specific tasks arising from its recent attainment of independence.

By operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly urgently appealed to Member States, especially the developed countries, and the international institutions concerned to grant Seychelles technical and financial assistance in a manner that would enable it to establish the necessary social and economic infrastructure essential for the well-being of its people.

In addition, the Assembly requested the Committee for Development Planning to consider the inclusion of Seychelles in the list of the least developed among the developing countries, and further requested the Secretary-General to mobilize assistance and to keep the situation in Seychelles under review.

Resolution 32/101 was adopted on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. That Committee had approved the text, without vote, on 22 November 1977, on the proposal of 57 Member States.

Resolution 32/101, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265/Add.1, adopted without objection by Assembly on 13 December 1977, meeting 101.

The General Assembly.

Having heard the statement of the representative of Seychelles concerning the serious economic and social situation in Seychelles as a result of the lack of infrastructure for development,

Concerned by the adverse effects which the international economic situation has had upon the economy of Seychelles,

Noting that Seychelles is faced with certain specific tasks arising from its recent attainment of independence,

Recalling its resolution 3421 (XXX) of 8 December 1975 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Recalling further recommendation 99 (IV) of 31 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, particularly paragraph 4 thereof, in which the Conference recommended that measures of assistance should be undertaken by the appropriate organs of the United Nations system in favour of the newly independent States in Africa,

1. Urgently appeals to Member States, especially the developed countries, and the international institutions concerned—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organisation—to grant Seychelles, in the light of the prevailing conditions, technical and financial assistance in an effective and continuous manner so as to enable it to establish the necessary social and economic infrastructure which is essential for the well-being of its people;

2. Requests the Committee for Development Planning at its fourteenth session to consider the question of the inclusion of Seychelles in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fourth session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community mentioned in paragraph 1 above, to keep this matter under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Assistance to Zambia

At its July/August 1977 session, the Economic and Social Council again considered the question of assistance to Zambia to allow it to develop normally and enhance its capacity to implement United Nations sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. The Council heard a statement made on behalf of the Secretary-General by the Co-ordinator of United Nations Assistance to Zambia, who pointed out among other things that the financial burden of applying sanctions against Southern Rhodesia was greater for Zambia than for any other Member State and that the assistance received was not commensurate with the exceptional costs involved.

On 26 July 1977, the Council adopted without vote resolution 2093(LXIII), by which it again commended the decision of the Government of Zambia to implement sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in accordance with the Security Council's resolution of 29 May 1968,⁵⁰ and expressed its appreciation for the sacrifices made by the Government and people of Zambia in forgoing opportunities for economic and social development. The Council also voiced its appreciation for the assistance pledged in the past and its satisfaction with the measures taken by the Secretary-General to organize an effective programme of assistance for Zambia.

The Council also noted that the direct cost to Zambia of applying sanctions was estimated at $744 million over the past 11 years, that the Government had already undertaken a number of long-term development projects designed to counter the adverse effects of sanctions, and that Zambia wished the programme of co-operation between it and the United Nations to be continued until the situation in relation to the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia was satisfactorily resolved.

By operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Council endorsed the appeal of the Security Council to the international community to provide technical, financial and material assistance to Zambia, and called on Member States and the United Nations system to make every effort to assist Zambia. Among other things, it requested the Secretary-General to continue the programme of co-operation between Zambia and the United Nations, to keep the situation under review and to consult, as appropriate, with Member States, regional organizations, intergovernmental agencies, regional and international financial institutions and specialized agencies of the United Nations system.

Resolution 2093(LXIII) was sponsored by Yugoslavia on behalf of the States members of the Economic and Social Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

Resolution 2093 (LXIII), as introduced by Yugoslavia, E/L.1781, adopted without vote by Council on 26 July 1977, meeting 2080.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling Security Council resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia, in particular resolution 232 (1966) of 16 December 1966 declaring that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security, and resolution 253 (1968) of 29 May 1968 imposing mandatory sanctions against the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia.

Commending the decision of the Government of Zambia in 1968 to implement progressively United Nations mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253 (1968), culminating in the closure of the border with Southern Rhodesia in 1973,

Appreciating the very substantial sacrifices made by the Government and the people of Zambia in terms of the opportunities forgone for the economic and social development of the country since the unilateral declaration of independence by Southern Rhodesia in November 1965,

Recalling Security Council resolution 277 (1970) of 18 March 1970, requesting, inter alia, Member States and the United Nations system to increase their assistance to Zambia as a matter of priority,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 329 (1973) of 10 March 1973, appealing to all States for immediate technical, financial and material assistance to Zambia to enable it to enhance its capacity to implement fully the mandatory sanctions policy and requesting the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize with immediate effect all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to enable Zambia to carry out its policy of economic independence from the racist regime of Southern Rhodesia,

Appreciating the assistance received until now from certain Member States and the United Nations system,

Noting with satisfaction the measures taken so far by the Secretary-General to organize an effective programme of international assistance to Zambia,

Having heard the statement made on behalf of the Secretary-General and that of the representative of Zambia,

Noting that:

(a) The real cost to Zambia includes not only the direct cost of applying sanctions and the cost of the contingency measures necessitated by them, but also heavy recurrent expenditure, and the diversion of limited financial and human resources from the country's national development,

(b) The direct cost to Zambia of applying sanctions is estimated at approximately $744 million over the past eleven years, of which approximately $544 million has been incurred during the period 1973-1977,

(c) The Government of Zambia has already undertaken a number of long-term development projects designed to counter the adverse effects of sanctions,

(d) The Government of Zambia wishes to continue the programme of co-operation between Zambia and the United Nations until the situation in relation to the minority racist regime of Southern Rhodesia is resolved satisfactorily,

Bearing in mind the provisions of Articles 49 and 50 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that Zambia is confronted with special economic problems arising from the implementation of the measures decided upon in Security Council resolution 253 (1968), and especially in the context of the increasing momentum and pressure of political development in southern Africa,

1. Strongly endorses the appeal of the Security Council to the international community to provide technical, financial and material assistance to Zambia;

2. Calls upon all Member States to continue to provide Zambia with ample and appropriate assistance, bilaterally and multilaterally, whenever possible in the form of grants, to enable Zambia to bear the great cost arising from the implementation of sanctions and to carry out its normal development programme;

3. Requests the United Nations and all its organizations and specialized agencies to make every effort to assist Zambia;

4. Requests the United Nations Special Fund to give special consideration to the needs of Zambia;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the programme of co-operation between Zambia and the United Nations until the situation in relation to the minority racist regime of Southern Rhodesia is resolved satisfactorily;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation under constant review, to hold consultations, as appropriate, with representatives of Governments of all interested Member States, regional organizations, intergovernmental agencies, regional and international financial institutions, and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fourth session.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

Report of the Secretary-General

In a report to the 1977 session of the General Assembly, on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Secretary-General reviewed developments in four areas: consultations and exchange of information; co-operation with regard to the situation in southern Africa; co-operation in the field of economic and social development; and co-operation in the field of information and publicity.

The Secretary-General noted that there had been consultations, exchanges of information and reciprocal representation at meetings at both the political and secretariat levels of the two organizations. Among other things, the report noted that the Chairman of OAU for 1976-1977 had visited United Nations Headquarters in October 1976, had addressed the General Assembly and had had discussions with the Secretary-General on matters of common interest. The Secretary-General for his part had attended and addressed the fourteenth session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU in July 1977 at Libreville, Gabon, and had conferred there with many African heads of State and Government and with leaders of liberation movements.

The report also noted that during the year the Special Committee against Apartheid organized, in consultation with OAU, a World Conference for Action against Apartheid at Lagos, Nigeria, from 22 to 26 August 1977. In addition, the Chairman of the Special Committee attended several OAU meetings, and representatives of the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU—the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania—were invited by the Special Committee for consultations in March 1977. These liberation movements, as well as the South West Africa People's Organization and the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe, were also invited by the Special Committee to attend the World Conference at Lagos.

The report further noted that another joint endeavour of the United Nations and OAU was the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, which was held at Maputo, Mozambique, from 16 to 21 May 1977.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia continued to maintain a close working relationship with OAU; in particular, an OAU representative participated in their work. Both bodies were also represented at meetings of the OAU Council of Ministers and the fourteenth OAU Assembly in June and July 1977, and at the meeting of the OAU Coordinating Committee for the Liberation of Africa held at Luanda, Angola, in June 1977.

Also during the year, the report noted, excellent co-operation between OAU and the Economic Commission for Africa continued and a number of joint ventures were undertaken. The secretariats of the two bodies participated reciprocally in meetings of their respective institutions, as well as in joint meetings concerning specific areas of activity, namely in the fields of trade, industry and transport.

The Secretary-General also reported that periodic and ad hoc consultations, reciprocal attendance at meetings and exchange of information and technical co-operation in the field of economic and social development characterized relations between OAU and a number of United Nations bodies and specialized agencies.

In the field of public information and publicity, the United Nations Office of Public Information, within the framework of co-operation between the two organizations, continued through its channels to disseminate information concerning the problems of attainment of independence, racial discrimination and apartheid in Africa.

Decisions of the General Assembly

On 11 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/19) on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity by which, inter alia, it took note of the report of the Secretary-General and commended his efforts to promote such co-operation. The Assembly expressed its deep appreciation of the outstanding contribution made by OAU in the work of the United Nations bodies concerned. The Assembly invited OAU and the United Nations to co-operate fully in the speedy implementation of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia (see p. 183) and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid (see p. 149). It commended the efforts of OAU to find solutions to African problems of vital importance to the international community and reaffirmed the determination of the United Nations to intensify its efforts to put an end to the remaining vestiges of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid in southern Africa.

In addition, the Assembly requested United Nations bodies to continue to take effective measures to associate OAU closely and regularly with all their work concerning Africa. It also requested the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen co-operation at the political, economic, cultural and administrative levels between the United Nations and OAU, and to report again to the Assembly in 1978.

Resolution 32/19 was adopted by the Assembly without vote, on the basis of a proposal by 29 African States.

Algeria, Angola, Burundi, Chad, Congo, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Sudan, Swaziland, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire: draft resolution.

Resolution 32/19, as proposed by 29 powers, A/32/L.19 and Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 11 November 1977, meeting 66.

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, including in particular resolution 31/13 of 16 November 1976,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 2 to 5 July 1977,

Taking into account the statement made by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at the 34th plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 14 October 1977,

Commending the important role which the Organization of African Unity continues to play in helping to achieve the objectives of the United Nations in the world in general and on the African continent in particular,

Noting with satisfaction the initiatives which the Organization of African Unity has taken with a view to promoting multilateral co-operation among African States and the efforts exerted to further, with the collaboration of the United Nations, social and economic development in Africa,

Noting with satisfaction the continued efforts of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations bodies concerned, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to help solve the serious social and economic problems which affect the African continent,

Taking note with satisfaction of the successful co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations in organizing the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, and the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977, and of the ensuing positive results,

Aware of the urgent need to give increased assistance and support to the victims of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid resulting from the intensified acts of provocation and aggression against neighbouring countries by the apartheid regime in South Africa and Namibia and the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia,

Conscious of the need to take effective steps for the widest possible dissemination of information relating to the struggle of the African peoples concerned for their liberation from colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Reaffirming the determination of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations to work closely towards the establishment of the new international economic order,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and commends his efforts in promoting such co-operation;

2. Expresses its deep appreciation of the outstanding contribution made by the Organization of African Unity in the relevant work of the United Nations bodies concerned;

3. Invites the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations to co-operate fully in the speedy implementation of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and

Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977;

4. Commends the efforts of the Organization of African Unity to find solutions to African problems of vital importance to the international community;

5. Reaffirms the determination of the United Nations, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to intensify its efforts to put an end to the remaining vestiges of colonialism and racial discrimination and to apartheid in southern Africa;

6. Recognizes that it is important that the United Nations and the specialized agencies be closely associated, where appropriate, with the efforts of the Organization of African Unity to promote social and economic co-operation in Africa;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen co-operation at the political, economic, cultural and administrative levels between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, particularly with regard to the provision of assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa, and, in this connexion, draws attention once again to the Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid established by the Organization of African Unity;

8. Requests once again the United Nations bodies, in particular the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia, to continue to take effective measures to associate closely the Organization of African Unity regularly with all their work concerning Africa;

9. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned within the United Nations system to continue and intensify their co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and, through it, with the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe and Namibia, in particular within the context of General Assembly resolution 31/30 of 29 November 1976;

10. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts he is making on behalf of the international community to provide effective programmes of assistance to various African States experiencing grave economic difficulties because of special political and geo-economic circumstances;

11. Requests all Member States, regional and international organizations as well as the organizations of the United Nations system to give full and generous support to the programmes of assistance being organized by the Secretary-General;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and the organizations concerned with the United Nations system.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued during 1977 to grant scholarships for education and training to persons from Namibia, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia and territories formerly under Portuguese administration. Awards of scholarships for inhabitants of territories formerly under Portuguese administration were discontinued in 1976, following the attainment of independence by those territories, but scholarships granted earlier were continued until completion of the course of study for which they had been granted.

In his report to the General Assembly on the progress of the Programme, covering the period from 23 October 1976 to 24 October 1977, the Secretary-General stated that 35 States had contributed $1,971,760 to the Programme, and pledges from 13 Member States, totalling $92,726 were outstanding. Total contributions to the Programme since its establishment in 1967 amounted to $11,731,275. In addition, the following 21 States had offered scholarships for study in their own countries: Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Israel, Jamaica, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahirriya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, the Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and the USSR.

As at 24 October 1977, the total number of scholarship holders was 1,386. There were 143 from Angola, 18 from Cape Verde, 37 from Guinea-Bissau, 21 from Mozambique, 191 from Namibia, 11 from Sao Tome and Principe, 460 from South Africa and 505 from Southern Rhodesia.

Applications and awards under the Programme for the period from 23 October 1976 to 24 October 1977 were as follows:

	Applications received	New awards granted	Awards renewed	Current scholarship holders
Namibia	56	42	149	191
South Africa	459	205	255	460
Southern Rhodesia	1,498	239	266	505
Territories formerly under Portuguese administration			230	230
Total	2,013	486	900	1,386

The Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, established by the Assembly in 1968, held three meetings in 1977, at which it considered various aspects of the development and growth of the Programme. The Committee was particularly concerned about finding ways and means to raise the level of financial resources in order to meet the rising costs of scholarships and the increased demands created by the continuing influx of refugee students from southern Africa into neighbouring States.

On 28 November 1977, the General Assembly, without objection, adopted resolution 32/37, by which it reaffirmed that the Programme had been a significant and worthwhile effort of the international community and that its continuation and expansion during this crucial period was desirable. It recognized that additional funds were essential if the Programme was to continue in operation at a satisfactory level. It expressed its appreciation to all those who had made voluntary contributions to the Programme, commended the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee for strengthening and expanding it, and again appealed to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions.

Resolution 32/37 was adopted on the recommendation of the Assembly's Fourth Committee, which had approved it unanimously on 9 November 1977, on the basis of a proposal sponsored by 52 powers.

Chapter X

Questions concerning Asia and the Far EastThe question of East Timor*Communications to the Security Council

On 6 May 1977, the representative of Mozambique transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a letter dated 27 April from the Democratic Republic of East Timor which charged that there had been large-scale killings in East Timor by the armed forces of Indonesia since the invasion of 7 December 1975; these amounted to a concerted crime of genocide. The letter annexed a report issued by the director of a research service in Canberra, Australia, on talks with Timorese refugees in Portugal about the situation in East Timor, and excerpts from a report prepared by an Indonesian Catholic organization.

On 23 May, the representative of Indonesia transmitted the texts of four statements concerning the latest situation in East Timor, which contradicted the information presented in the annexes to the letter from the representative of Mozambique.

On 30 September, the representative of Mozambique transmitted the text of a letter dated 29 September from the Standing Political Committee of the Frente Revolucionaria Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN) and the Government of the Democratic Republic of East Timor, in which it was stated that a new wave of Indonesian offensives against East Timor was taking place and that the Democratic Republic of East Timor had rejected an offer of amnesty by Indonesia.

Decision of the Special Committee

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of East Timor at three meetings in August 1977. A representative of FRETILIN, José Ramos-Horta, was invited to address the Committee, at his request. Indonesia expressed strong reservations to the granting of this hearing.

On 4 August, the Special Committee decided, without objection, to consider the question of East Timor at its 1978 session.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 28 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/34 concerning East Timor. By this, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of East Timor to self-determination and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to achieve that right. It rejected the claim that East Timor had been integrated into Indonesia, inasmuch as the people of the territory had not been able to exercise freely their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly also, among other things: requested the Special Committee to send a visiting mission to the territory with a view to achieving implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples; requested the Secretary-General to send a special representative to make an on-the-spot investigation, establish contacts with FRETILIN, the Indonesian Government and other Governments concerned and prepare the ground for the visiting mission; drew the attention of the Security Council to the critical situation in the territory and recommended that it take steps to implement its 1975 and 1976 resolutions² with a view to securing the full exercise of the people's right to self-determination; and called upon the Indonesian Government and FRETILIN to facilitate the entry into East Timor of the International Committee of the Red Cross and other relief organizations in order to assist the people.

Resolution 32/34 was adopted by a recorded vote of 67 to 26, with 47 abstentions.

Assistance for the reconstruction of Viet Nam

On 20 September 1977, the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam was admitted to membership in the United Nations (see p. 370) and on 14 October the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/3) on assistance for the reconstruction of Viet Nam.

By the preamble to this resolution, the Assembly among other things expressed deep concern over the grave economic and social consequences of the long years of war, further aggravated by recent severe natural calamities. It recalled the Secretary-General's statement, in his 1975 report to the General Assembly, expressing the hope that the United Nations system would be able to assist countries in the Indo-Chinese peninsula in their efforts for national rehabilitation after the war, and recalled as well that the Economic and Social Council had called on all States to aid the reconstruction efforts of the people of Indo-China. The Assembly also noted the efforts made by the Secretary-General and by United Nations organs and agencies to mobilize this aid.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly recommended that Viet Nam be included in the list of countries most seriously affected by world economic crises. It appealed to the peoples and Governments of all Member States and to all economic, financial and social institutions to increase and intensify their efforts and contributions on a bilateral and/or multilateral basis to help the Vietnamese people in the reconstruction of their country. The Assembly also urged the Secretary-General to continue to encourage further mobilization of resources and efforts from the international community with a view to achieving the social and economic recovery of Viet Nam.

Resolution 32/3 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text without vote on 6 October 1977. The text was sponsored by 55 Member States. (For list of sponsors and text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In pursuance of Assembly resolution 32/3, the Secretary-General dispatched a mission to Viet Nam in November/December 1977 to review the reconstruction needs and priorities.

Resolution 32/3, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/265, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 October 1977, meeting 34.

The General Assembly,
Having warmly welcomed the admission of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam to the United Nations,

Expressing profound admiration to the courageous Vietnamese people in their struggle for independence and national reunification and their constant efforts devoted to national reconstruction,

Deeply concerned over the grave economic and social consequences of the long years of war further aggravated by recent severe natural calamities,

Recalling the Secretary-General's statement in his report on the work of the Organization for 1974/1975 expressing the hope that the United Nations system would be able to assist countries in the Indo-China peninsula in their efforts for national rehabilitation after the war,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1944

(LVIII) of 7 May 1975 appealing to all States to come to the assistance of the people of Indo-China in their efforts to bring about the reconstruction of their countries, in accordance with the needs and requests of those countries, by ways and means which the latter deem most appropriate and with full respect for their national sovereignty,

Recalling further resolution 33 adopted by the World Conference of the International Women's Year, held at Mexico City from 19 June to 2 July 1975, on aid to the Vietnamese people,

Noting with appreciation the prompt and pertinent efforts made by the Secretary-General and by the organs, agencies and programmes of the United Nations to mobilize assistance to meet the most pressing humanitarian needs in Viet Nam and to help organize relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance to the Vietnamese people,

Further concerned that massive international assistance, notably in respect of food, equipment and project aid, remains urgently needed to speed up the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the social and economic infrastructure of the country,

Noting with satisfaction that the non-aligned group of countries has established, by resolution 28 adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, a solidarity fund for the reconstruction of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam to help in the reconstruction effort,

1. Recommends that Viet Nam be included in the list of the most seriously affected countries;

2. Appeals to the peoples and Governments of all Member States and to all international economic, financial and social institutions to increase and intensify their efforts and contributions on a bilateral and/or multilateral basis to help the Vietnamese people in the reconstruction of their country;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to continue to encourage further mobilization of resources and efforts from the international community with a view to achieving the social and economic rehabilitation of Viet Nam;

4. Authorizes the Secretary-General to utilize the necessary resources for implementing the present resolution.

Chapter XI

Questions relating to the Middle East

In 1977, as in previous years, aspects of the situation in the Middle East occupied the attention of the Security Council and the General Assembly, as well as other United Nations bodies.

The Security Council on 21 October 1977 renewed for one year the mandate of the United Nations Emergency Force, established in 1956 in accordance with an agreement between Egypt and Israel and deployed in the zone of disengagement between Egyptian and Israeli forces in the Sinai region. The Council's decision was embodied in resolution 416(1977). With regard to the Israel-Syria sector, the Security Council twice renewed the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, which continued to supervise a 1974 agreement on disengagement between Israeli and Syrian forces in the area of the Golan Heights. The Council took these actions on 26 May and 30 November 1977 when it adopted resolutions 408(1977) and 420(1977).

The situation along the border between Israel and Lebanon continued to be the subject of periodic reports on the status of the cease-fire there by the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine; in November, as a result of escalation of violence, the Secretary-General expressed his concern and appealed to the parties to exercise restraint and to co-operate with efforts to re-establish peaceful conditions in the area. The Security Council was not convened.

The situation along the Israel-Jordan cease-fire line remained unchanged in 1977. No complaints were received from either country regarding cease-fire violations.

During the year, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council and the General Assembly on consultations he had held with the parties concerned regarding the possibility of an early reconvening of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East. The Security Council discussed his report at three meetings in March. At meetings held between 22 and 25 November, the General Assembly considered the situation in the Middle East and adopted a resolution (32/20) on 25 November by which, among other things, it called for the early convening of the Peace Conference under the auspices of the United Nations and the co-chairmanship of the USSR and the United States, with the participation on an equal footing of all parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The Security Council and the General Assembly also considered the second report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. The Security Council held a meeting on the question on 27 October and adjourned without adopting a decision. The General Assembly on 2 December adopted two resolutions on the question of Palestine, by the first of which (32/40 A), among other things, it urged the Security Council to take a decision as soon as possible on the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian rights, which it had endorsed; and authorized the Committee to continue to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations. By the second resolution (32/40 B), the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to establish a Special Unit on Palestinian Rights in the Secretariat.

With regard to the situation in the Arab territories occupied by Israel, the Assembly took decisions on the treatment of the civilian population in those territories—as did the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council—based on the findings of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories. Decisions were also taken in 1977 on questions of: Israeli measures in the occupied Arab territories; permanent sovereignty over national resources in the territories; living conditions of the Palestinian people; and assistance to the Palestinian people.

The Assembly again took a number of decisions concerning the Palestine refugees and displaced inhabitants; among other things, it urged Governments to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, in the light of the Agency's projected budgetary deficit.

Details of these and other, related actions on Middle East questions are described in the sections that follow.

The situation in the Middle East: status of the cease-fire

Egypt-Israel sector: United Nations Emergency Force

Communications and reports (January-October 1977)

By a note dated 12 January 1977, the President of the Security Council informed members that the Secretary-General intended to appoint, subject to agreement by the Council, Major-General Rais Abin of Indonesia to replace Lieutenant-General Bengt Liljestrand as Commander of the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF). After consultations with members of the Council, the President said he had informed the Secretary-General that the Council consented to the proposed appointment and that China and the Libyan Arab Republic (subsequently the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya) had dissociated themselves from the matter.

As the mandate of UNEF was to expire on 24 October 1977, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the activities of the Force covering the period from 19 October 1976 to 17 October 1977. He said that throughout the period under review the situation in the UNEF area of operation had remained stable and that the Force had continued efficiently to discharge its mandate: supervising the observance of the cease-fire and assisting in the implementation of the Agreement between Egypt and Israel of 4 September 1975 and its Protocol of 22 September 1975.¹

As at 17 October, the strength of the Force stood at 4,297, made up of contingents from Australia, Canada, Finland, Ghana, Indonesia, Poland and Sweden, and assisted by 124 military observers of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine. In response to a request by the Secretary-General, the Polish Government provided 100 additional engineers in June 1977.

The Secretary-General said that Lieutenant-General Ensio P. H. Siilasvuo, Chief Co-ordinator of the United Nations Peace-keeping Missions in the Middle East, and General Rais Abin, UNEF Commander, had continued the practice of separate meetings with the military authorities of Egypt and Israel concerning the implementation of the terms of reference of the Force and the inspections carried out by UNEF in the areas of limited forces and armaments; in addition, the Chief Co-ordinator had continued to maintain contact with the parties at the ministerial level on important issues.

The Secretary-General also noted that the problem of restrictions on the freedom of movement of personnel of certain contingents still existed. He reaffirmed his view that UNEF had to function as an integrated and efficient military unit, whose contingents must serve on an equal basis under the command of the Force Commander, and no differentiation could be made regarding the United Nations status of various contingents. He said he was continuing his efforts in this regard.

During the period under review, the report said, UNEF had continued to receive the full co-operation of the parties in carrying out its functions. There had been no significant violations of the cease-fire or the Agreement, although numerous limited incursions in the buffer zone by both parties by land and air had been observed and reported. In such cases, however, assurances that remedial action would be taken had been received from the party concerned. A number of complaints from both parties alleging violations by the other side had been taken up with the party concerned by the Force Commander or the Chief Co-ordinator. Complaints alleging overflights were, the report noted, often submitted by the parties, but on most occasions UNEF did not have the technical capability to assess them.

The report said that UNEF had maintained close contact with representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross and had extended its assistance in providing facilities for family reunions and student exchanges. During the period under review, 7,122 persons crossed from Egypt to Israeli-occupied territory, and 7,387 crossed from Israeli-occupied territory to Egypt.

Also in the report, the Secretary-General said that efforts continued at various levels to promote an early resumption of the negotiating process aimed at establishing a just and durable peace in the area, as called for by the Security Council in its resolution 388(1973) of 22 October 1973.² He noted that those efforts were described in the reports he had submitted to the Security Council on 28 February and to the General Assembly on 3 October 1977 (see pp. 284 and 288).

The Secretary-General said in conclusion that, while the situation in the Egypt-Israel sector had remained quiet, it was a precarious quiet. Unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached, the situation in the area would continue to be unstable and, with the passage of time, increasingly dangerous. Intensive efforts were being made at various levels to bring about an early resumption of the negotiating process aimed at the establishment of a just and durable peace in the Middle East as called for by the Security Council in resolution 338(1973). He earnestly hoped that those efforts would be pursued by all concerned until the objective was attained. The Secretary-General affirmed once again that the continued presence of UNEF in the area was essential and he therefore recommended the extension of its mandate for one year.

Consideration by Security Council (21 October 1977)

The Security Council met on 21 October 1977 to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Emergency Force. The President said that agreement had been reached on a draft resolution, by a provision of which the Council would ask the Secretary-General to report to it by 24 October 1978 on the developments in the situation and the steps taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

The President said that members of the Security Council had asked him to make it clear that they would expect the Secretary-General to report at an earlier date if he considered it appropriate and to continue his efforts to assist the early resumption of the negotiations for a comprehensive settlement in the Middle East. The President added that China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya had informed him that they would not participate in the vote on the draft resolution and that, as a result, they did not subscribe to the agreed statement.

The Security Council adopted the draft resolution as resolution 416(1977) by 13 votes to 0, with China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya not participating in the voting.

By this text the Council, after recalling its earlier decisions concerning UNEF, also recalled the Secretary-General's view that any relaxation of the search for a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be dangerous, and his hope that urgent efforts would be undertaken by all concerned to tackle the Middle East problem in all its aspects, with a view both to maintaining quiet in the region and to arriving at the comprehensive settlement called for by the Security Council in resolution 338 (1973).

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Council decided: (a) to call on all the parties concerned to implement resolution 338(1973) immediately; (b) to renew UNEF's mandate for one year, that is, until 24 October 1978; and (c) to request the Secretary-General to submit at the end of that period a report on the developments in the situation and the steps taken to implement Council resolution 338(1973). The Council expressed its confidence that the Force would be maintained with maximum efficiency and economy.

The representative of the United States, after welcoming the Council's action in extending the mandate of the Force, which he said was a constructive contribution to the maintenance of peace and stability in the region, observed that during the past year intensive diplomatic contacts and negotiations had taken place, with the aim of reconvening the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East by the end of 1977. It was eloquent testimony to the effectiveness of UNEF that that diplomacy could proceed in an atmosphere reflecting the urgency and importance of the issue, but without a sense of emergency or military confrontation. The United States believed that the presence of United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Sinai and on the Golan Heights had helped to make that possible. In agreeing once again to an extension of the Force, the parties had reaffirmed their commitment to the cease-fire and disengagement, as well as to the larger goal of a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. He and other speakers—including Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Mauritius, Panama, the United Kingdom and Venezuela—paid tribute to the nations whose forces were participating in UNEF, to their officers and men and to the two United Nations commanders.

A number of speakers, for instance Mauritius, said that in supporting a renewal of UNEF's mandate they did not look on the Force as a substitute for permanent peace in the Middle East. Romania's representative, for example, said that the maintenance of UNEF in the region, though useful and necessary, should not become an end in itself. The activities of the Force were conceived as limited in duration, so as to permit the countries concerned to embark on negotiations, pursuant to the relevant resolutions, to resolve the conflict in which they had been engaged for almost 30 years.

The spokesman for the USSR also noted that the question of renewing the mandate of UNEF could not be viewed separately from the over-all context of the situation in the Middle East. He said the USSR would continue to do everything in its power to achieve the kind of settlement in this area that would establish lasting peace and would not infringe the legitimate rights or interests of any people or State in the Middle East.

The representative of Benin said his Government recognized a certain usefulness in the Force for maintaining an unstable equilibrium in a multifaceted war situation, but was not prepared to allow the real situation to be masked or veiled. Benin, he added, noted that international imperialism had intensified its policy of resisting the democratic, progressive and anti-imperialist forces of the region.

The French representative said that the presence of the United Nations could not serve as a pretext for maintaining the status quo or for a lack of action, but was justified and had real significance only in combination with genuine and sustained efforts to seek a political solution to the fundamental problems of the region. France believed that a broader dimension had to be given to the efforts undertaken to reach a just and lasting settlement in the Middle East by peaceful means: it should not be forgotten that a part of the territory of one of the parties continued to be occupied by the forces of the other party.

According to the representative of Pakistan, there was often a tendency to look upon peace-keeping forces as a substitute for the more difficult and complex task of working out a peaceful settlement. Her Government sincerely hoped that the extension of the mandate would in no way lead to the slackening of efforts towards working out a permanent settlement, but would help to create the right political atmosphere, conducive to holding peace negotiations in the near future without further delay.

A number of speakers, among them the representatives of India and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, believed that a just and lasting peace in the area presupposed the withdrawal of Israel from all occupied Arab territories and settlement of the problem of the Palestinians in accordance with their legitimate aspirations. Romania's representative said that such a peace would include also the establishment of a free and independent Palestinian State, and a guarantee of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of every State in the area. In that regard a positive role could be played by the Geneva Peace Conference, with the participation of all parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

The reconvening of the Geneva Peace Conference was also favoured by Benin, India, Pakistan, Panama and the United Kingdom; Panama's representative noted that the two Co-Chairmen—the USSR and the United States—were making special efforts to bring about a reconvening of the Conference.

The representative of Benin praised what he termed the courageous vigilance displayed by the Arab and Palestinian peoples in facing the situation; the Arab States had shown moderation and a readiness for peace, to facilitate a peaceful, just and lasting settlement of the problem. Benin, however, noted with regret what he termed the unacceptable intransigence of the Israeli leaders, who refused to make concessions that could open a way out of the dangerous and unstable situation referred to in the Secretary-General's report. The new ultra-reactionary regime in Israel had raised the stakes, he said, and was blocking the renewal of useful dialogue, a dialogue which could not exclude the Palestinians of PLO, who had asserted themselves as a nation through their courageous struggle. He also said that Benin was opposed to any policy of aggression and any policy of illegal occupation and colonization of other people's territory; the Israeli regime had to understand that the international community disapproved of its initiatives, which would only earn it further condemnation.

The Canadian representative noted that there were still restrictions on the freedom of movement of personnel of certain contingents in the Force and expressed concern that the Secretary-General's efforts to achieve freedom of movement for personnel of all contingents had not been successful. It was his Government's position that freedom of movement in the conduct of operations of a peace-keeping force was an essential element and it fully supported the Secretary-General's efforts in that regard.

Referring to the question of the financing of UNEF, the representative of the USSR said that his Government did not intend to bear expenditures connected with the performance by UNEF of additional functions arising out of the Sinai Agreement of 4 September 1975, which had been concluded on a separate basis and which in fact by-passed the Geneva Peace Conference. Benin's representative said that Benin was making no financial commitment with regard to contributions for the maintenance of the activities of the Force.

The representatives of China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, who did not participate in the vote, stated that the position of their Governments with regard to UNEF remained the same. The Libyan representative said that Security Council resolutions 242(1967)³ and 338(1973), on which the presence of UNEF was based, were irrelevant as a framework for a just and lasting solution to the questions of Palestine and the Middle East. Any just and lasting solution had to be based on the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, including that of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by the use of force.

Israel-Syria sector: United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

Report of Secretary-General (23 May 1977)

Before the expiration of the six-month mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) on 31 May 1977, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the operations of the Force during the period from 23 November 1976 to 23 May 1977. The Secretary-General observed that UNDOF had continued to supervise the area of separation between Israeli and Syrian forces and inspect the areas of limitation of armaments and forces in accordance with its mandate. With the co-operation of both parties, UNDOF had been able to contribute to the maintenance of the cease-fire called for by the Security Council in its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.⁴

As at 23 May 1977, the strength of the Force stood at 1,248, made up of contingents from Austria, Canada, Iran and Poland, and including 86 military observers detailed from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine. Command of UNDOF continued to be exercised by Major-General Hannes Philipp. The Secretary-General reported that Major Ernst Pellegrini of Austria had been killed by the explosion of an anti-personnel mine.

The Secretary-General reported that UNDOF's task had been facilitated by the close contact maintained by the Force Commander and his staff with the military liaison staffs of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic. In his capacity as Chief Co-ordinator of the United Nations Peace-keeping Missions in the Middle East, Lieutenant-General Ensio P. H. Siilasvuo had continued to take part in high-level contacts and, as occasion required, in meetings between the Force Commander and military representatives of Israel or the Syrian Arab Republic, concerning the functions of the Force.

Despite the efforts made towards resolving the question of freedom of movement, the existing arrangements still fell short of what was required and of what was provided for in the Protocol to the Agreement on Disengagement between Israeli and Syrian Forces of 31 May 1974.⁵ The Secretary-General said that efforts were continuing to secure full acceptance of that principle.

Concerning the implementation of Security Council resolution 338(1973), calling for negotiations between the parties, the Secretary-General stated that renewed efforts aimed at establishing a just and durable peace in the Middle East had been undertaken.

The Secretary-General observed that the existing quiet in the Israel-Syria sector should not obscure the fact that the main elements of the Middle East problem remained unresolved and that the situation in the area would continue to be unstable and dangerous unless real progress could soon be made towards a just and durable settlement of the problem in all its aspects. He reiterated his belief that, unless the opportunity was seized to resume negotiations as soon as possible in a meaningful way, there would be a growing and serious danger that the situation would deteriorate once again. The Secretary-General said he considered that the continued presence of UNDOF in the area was essential and he therefore recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of the Force for a further period of six months, until 30 November 1977.

Consideration by Security Council (26 May 1977)

The Security Council met on 26 May 1977 to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force.

The Secretary-General told the Council that he had been informed by the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic that it assented to the extension of the mandate of UNDOF for a further period of six months. The Government of Israel had also expressed its agreement, he said.

The Council had before it a draft text which it adopted as resolution 408(1977), by a vote of 12 to 0. Benin, China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not participate in the voting.

By this text, the Security Council, after among other things noting the efforts made to establish a durable and just peace in the Middle East area and the urgent need to continue and intensify such efforts, and expressing its concern over the prevailing state of tension in the area, decided: (a) to call on the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973); (b) to renew UNDOF'S mandate for another six months, that is, until 30 November 1977; and (c) to request the Secretary-General to submit at the end of that period a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Following the adoption of the resolution, the President of the Council read out the text of a statement on behalf of the Council noting that the Secretary-General in his report had said: "The present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector should not obscure the fact the main elements of the Middle East problem remain unresolved and that the situation in the area will continue to be unstable and dangerous unless real progress can soon be made towards a just and durable settlement of the problem in all its aspects."

The President said that that statement reflected the view of the Security Council. He added that he had been asked by Benin, China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to say that, as they had not participated in the vote on the resolution, they took the same position with regard to his statement on behalf of the members of the Council.

The representative of the United States observed that the performance of UNDOF had been an unqualified success. The parties had scrupulously observed their obligations under the terms of the Disengagement Agreement. There had been no serious incidents, nor had the area of disengagement been a source of significant military tension between the armed forces of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic. He paid tribute to the professionalism and dedication of the men who had served and were serving in UNDOF; it should also be recognized that the United Nations had built up over the years an impressive institutional experience and expertise in the area of peace-keeping operations.

He went on to say that the United States in the past few months had embarked on a new round of consultations with the aim of resuming the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East. The Secretary of State of the United States had recently discussed with the Foreign Minister of the USSR the shared responsibilities of the two countries as Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference, and they had agreed to direct their efforts towards reconvening the Conference later in the year.

The spokesman for the USSR said that stepped-up efforts should be made to reconvene the Geneva Conference, with the Palestine Liberation Organization taking part on an equal footing; no decision affecting the Arab people of Palestine should be taken without their participation and, in particular, against their will. He also noted the talks that had taken place between the USSR Foreign Minister and the United States Secretary of State and said the two Co-Chairmen, who had agreed to make joint efforts to reconvene the Conference later in the year, were convinced of its importance.

The representative of the USSR went on to praise the constructive approach taken by the Syrian Arab Republic and said that the USSR shared Syria's view that the renewal of UNDOF's mandate should not be viewed as automatic or routine, but should be used to speed up the implementation of the resolutions calling for full withdrawal of Israeli troops from the occupied territories and for exercise of the national rights of the Palestinians. His Government, he said, did not object to the renewal of the mandate for six months, but stressed its view that the stationing of the Force was of a temporary nature and could not be used to delay a comprehensive settlement.

The representative of Mauritius also said that the Syrian Arab Republic had shown great restraint and understanding and was bending backwards not to increase tension in the area. However, his country's agreement to renewal of the UNDOF mandate should not be construed as being automatic or routine. The opportunity should be used for renewed efforts to bring about a just and lasting peace on the basis of resolutions 242(1967)⁶ and 338(1973).

The representative of the United Kingdom also said that the renewal of the mandate should not be seen as an end in itself but as the means to an end—to establish a full, just and lasting peace in the Middle East through negotiations between the parties concerned. The presence of the Force could not act as a substitute for peace, but was there to provide the conditions which were necessary to enable negotiations to take place. He noted that a certain amount of progress had been made towards preparing the way for negotiations to resume in the second half of the year, though a number of important differences between the parties remained. The renewal of the mandate of UNDOF provided further time to carry on with the process that had been begun and to help in narrowing those differences. It was vital that the time should be well used and that the pace of the peace-making process should not be allowed to slacken, he stated.

France's spokesman said that the renewal did not touch upon the substance of the problem and, therefore, did not alleviate France's concern at the lack of progress towards a settlement. That absence of progress was all the more deplorable in view of the fact that, when the mandate of the Force was renewed in November 1976, the Council had unanimously expressed the hope that the parties would use the intervening period to exert new efforts to establish a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. The parties still had that chance, he said, adding that UNDOF was not in itself an active factor in the negotiation process but the symbol of hope for a just and lasting solution based on reasoned and reasonable views.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany said that the renewal, as with the previous ones, was meant to provide the parties with another opportunity to achieve progress towards a peace settlement. It could not be the purpose and the justification of UNDOF to serve as a substitute for a peace settlement, which was overdue. His Government, he said, shared the general concern that this goal was still far from being achieved.

The Canadian representative said it was a sad fact that, since UNDOF's establishment three years earlier, there seemed to have been no further significant steps by the parties principally concerned to establish the just and durable peace which the 1974 Agreement envisaged. A lesson of United Nations history had been that peace-keeping operations which were not accompanied by peace-making activity failed to prevent further outbreaks of fighting. The dispute between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic might not be solvable bilaterally, he said, but the machinery existed for multilateral negotiations. He urged all parties concerned to convene and attend a renewed Geneva Conference.

⁶ See Y.U.N., 1967, pp. 257-58, text of resolution 242 (1967) of 22 November 1967.

A number of other speakers, including Benin, India, Mauritius, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and Venezuela, also favoured the resumption of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East, with the participation of all the parties concerned, to achieve a negotiated settlement of the question.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, who together with the representatives of China and Benin did not participate in the vote, reiterated his Government's position that Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), on which the presence of UNDOF was based, were irrelevant to any solution of the Middle East problem.

Pakistan's representative said that a special responsibility lay on those in a position to influence the situation. Cease-fires and peace-keeping arrangements were no substitute for peace and should not be allowed to become a protective screen behind which Israel could pursue its policies of annexation and expansion. They must lead, he said, to the establishment, at an early date, of a peace which ensured the rights and security of all the peoples of the region and brought about the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from all occupied territory. He hoped that all possible efforts, through the United Nations and outside it, would be made to that end. Among others calling for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the occupied territories were Benin, France, India and Mauritius. The representative of Benin reaffirmed that there would be no lasting peace in the Middle East without the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Arab territories and there was no chance for a negotiated settlement of the Middle East crisis if the Palestinian national entity continued to be disregarded.

A number of members paid tribute to the Commander of UNDOF and the forces under his command for the way in which they continued to discharge their duties on the Golan Heights. Tribute was also paid to the nations contributing forces to UNDOF.

Report of Secretary-General (23 November 1977)

Before the mandate of UNDOF was due to expire, on 30 November 1977, the Secretary-General on 23 November submitted to the Security Council a report giving an account of the activities of the Force during the period from 24 May to 23 November. He said that UNDOF had continued to carry out its functions effectively in accordance with its mandate and with the co-operation of both parties.

The Secretary-General referred again to the question of freedom of movement of UNDOF contingents, noting that the existing arrangements still fell short of what was required, since restrictions on freedom of movement still existed. He said that limited progress had been made on the matter, particularly with regard to freedom of movement during inspections in the areas of limitations of armaments and forces. Efforts to achieve full freedom of movement for personnel of all contingents were being pursued.

With regard to the maintenance of the ceasefire, the Secretary-General reported that there had been one serious shooting incident when, on 16 November, two members of the Iranian battalion, while on patrol duty inside the area of separation, had come under fire from the Israeli side of the line. Both men had been wounded and a strong protest had been lodged with the Israeli authorities.

With regard to the Security Council's request that he report on the implementation of resolution 338(1973), the Secretary-General observed that intensive efforts had been made during the year to promote an early resumption of the negotiating process aimed at establishing a just and durable peace in the area. Those efforts were being pursued, and he had continued to keep in touch with the parties concerned and the Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East.

The Secretary-General went on to warn that the current quiet in the Israel-Syria sector should not obscure the fact that the main elements of the Middle East problem remained unresolved; the situation in the area would continue to be unstable and dangerous unless real progress could soon be made towards a just and durable settlement of the problem in all its aspects. He expressed the hope that intensive efforts at various levels being made in pursuit of that goal would contribute to an early resumption of the Geneva Peace Conference as a first step towards such a settlement. Failing such a development, there would be a growing and serious danger that the situation could deteriorate once again. In the prevailing circumstances, he considered the continued presence of UNDOF in the area to be essential and he therefore recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of the Force for a further period of six months, until 31 May 1978.

Consideration by Security Council (30 November 1977)

The Security Council met on 30 November 1977 to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force. The Secretary-General informed the Council that the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic agreed to the extension of UNDOF's mandate for another period of six months; the Government of Israel had also expressed its consent. The Secretary-General reiterated that the situation in the area would continue to be unstable and potentially dangerous unless real progress could soon be made towards a just and durable settlement and he hoped that the Geneva Peace Conference could be reconvened in the near future. He assured the Council that in the meantime the Force would continue to do its utmost to maintain quiet in the area in accordance with the terms of the Disengagement Agreement.

The Security Council then adopted as resolution 420(1977), by a vote of 12 to 0, a draft text on the renewal of the mandate. Benin, China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya did not participate in the voting.

By this text the Council, having noted the efforts made to establish a durable and just peace in the Middle East area and the urgent need to continue and intensify such efforts, and expressing its concern over the prevailing state of tension in the area, decided: (a) to call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973); (b) to renew the mandate of UNDOF for another six months, that is, until 31 May 1978; and (c) to request the Secretary-General to submit at the end of that period a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338 (1973).

Following the adoption of the resolution, the President of the Council read out a complementary statement on behalf of the members of the Council, noting that the Secretary-General in his report had said: "The present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector should not obscure the fact that the main elements of the Middle East problem remain unresolved and that the situation in the area will continue to be unstable and dangerous unless real progress can soon be made towards a just and durable settlement of the problem in all its aspects." The President said that that statement reflected the view of the Security Council. He added, on behalf of Benin, China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, that, as they had not participated in the vote on the resolution, they took the same position with regard to the statement he had read out.

The representative of China said that, as the resolution mainly concerned the question of the United Nations Force, on which his Government had always held a different position of principle, China had not participated in the vote.

According to the representative of the USSR, the question of renewing the mandate of UNDOF was linked to the whole question of a Middle East settlement and he reiterated his Government's position that there could be no peace in the Middle East until the causes of the conflict were removed—namely, Israel's occupation of Arab territories and its denial to the Arab people of Palestine of their inalienable rights—and until the independent existence and the security of all the peoples and States in the area were guaranteed. He said that experience had showed that any kind of partial or separate agreement could not lead to a solution of the Middle East problem; such agreements served only to complicate the situation even more.

He said that the USSR held that the stationing of United Nations forces in the Middle East was a strictly temporary measure and must not serve to delay a comprehensive settlement in that part of the world. He hoped that the renewal of UNDOF's mandate would be used for a businesslike, constructive and realistic search for a Middle East settlement within the framework of the Geneva Peace Conference.

A number of speakers stressed that renewal of the mandate was not to be regarded as an end in itself. The representative of Venezuela, for example, said that, while UNDOF's presence had prevented confrontations and had been useful in preserving peace in the region, the renewal of its mandate should not become routine for the Security Council. The Force was a palliative, not a final answer, and should in no way postpone or delay the solution of the substantive problems relating to the Middle East. Efforts directed to the attainment of a lasting peace in the region should be continued and intensified.

The spokesman for the United States observed that, amid the intense diplomacy of the past six months, UNDOF had kept its vigil on the Golan Heights, contributing an element of stability to the region and providing important reassurance to the parties and to the international community. Its effectiveness could be measured by the lack of attention it drew to itself, thus permitting the energies of the parties and of the international community to be directed away from the battlefield and into peaceful negotiation.

In the view of the representative of the United Kingdom, the role which the Force had played over the past three and a half years in maintaining the cease-fire and supervising the Disengagement Agreement—above all in providing the necessary climate of confidence for efforts towards a just and lasting settlement—remained a very important one.

The representative of France said that extension of the mandate was a necessary element in efforts to achieve a solution by peaceful means, the first stage being the reconvening of the Geneva Conference. For a settlement, he said, it was necessary for Israel to evacuate all territories occupied in 1967, to recognize the right of the Palestinians to a homeland, and to recognize the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure, recognized and guaranteed boundaries. Pakistan expressed a similar view.

The representative of Benin said that peace for all peoples in the Middle East was indivisible and global and could be achieved by the enthusiastic participation of all the parties to the conflict in a peace conference, which should lead to Israel's unconditional withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories and the solution of the central problem in the crisis, which was the Palestinian question.

The Indian representative said he did not see why, after three and a half years, the parties concerned should not be expected to keep the peace themselves without the necessity of an expensive United Nations force. They should be expected to exercise the utmost restraint themselves and move in the direction of responding positively to any peace initiatives that might be taken by the Secretary-General in pursuance of Council resolution 338(1973) and its implementation.

The situation in the Israel-Lebanon sector

During 1977, the situation in the Israel-Lebanon sector continued to be the subject of periodic reports on the status of the cease-fire there, submitted by the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO) and transmitted to the Security Council by the Secretary-General. From January to December, the Chief of Staff issued monthly reports in which he assessed the nature and frequency of incidents occurring in the sector, as well as complaints submitted by the parties and the results of UNTSO investigations. The Chief of Staff noted in his reports that UNTSO observers were stationed in the Israel-Lebanon sector on the Lebanese side of the Armistice Demarcation Line, in accordance with the consensus approved by the members of the Security Council on 19 April 1972,⁷ to observe the cease-fire between Israel and Lebanon called for by the Council. The reports of the Chief of Staff concerned developments observed and reported by UNTSO observers in that context.

The reports covering January, February and March 1977 indicated a low level of activity, with only a few cases of firing across the Armistice Demarcation Line and crossing violations. However, Israeli forces personnel had continued to occupy daily, during daylight hours, six positions on the Lebanese side of the Line.

The Chief of Staff reported that ground activity had increased significantly in April in the north-eastern part of the sector, with 31 cases of firing across the Line, two crossing violations and five overflights by Israeli jet aircraft. For the month of May, he reported that ground and air activity was at a low level. In the months of June and July, ground and air activity had increased, with 37 cases of firing across the Line, five crossing violations and 27 reported overflights by Israeli jet aircraft. One naval violation by Israel was observed.

In reports covering the months of August and September, the Chief of Staff said that ground activity had increased significantly along the entire Armistice Demarcation Line and remained at a high level. Two special reports were submitted to the Secretary-General by the Chief of Staff—on 20 and 23 September—concerning intensified fighting which began on 16 September in the El Khiam area, and ground activity along the entire Armistice Demarcation Line and the line between Lebanese territory and Israel-occupied Syrian territory. The Chief of Staff said that attempts by UNTSO to arrange for a cease-fire between de facto forces in the El Khiam area had not been successful because of the refusal of the Lebanese Christian de facto forces to co-operate in the negotiation process or to allow any of four attempted reliefs of the United Nations Observation Post (OP) Khiam, after agreements had supposedly been reached.

The Chief of Staff reported that the fighting ended on 26 September as a result of an agreement by all concerned to a general cease-fire in southern Lebanon. The relief of OP Khiam was finally completed on 28 September, after the military observers had spent 10 days in the OP or its shelter, including nine days under heavy-weapons fire.

In connexion with the work of UNTSO in the sector, the Secretary-General, in a comment appended to the special report of 23 September, pointed out that the United Nations observation posts were spread far apart and there were blind spots along the Armistice Demarcation Line and the line between Lebanese territory and Israel-occupied Syrian territory which could not be observed from the OPS, even during daylight hours. Furthermore, the movement of UNTSO observers had been severely restricted for some time because of hijackings of their vehicles, firing on them by irregulars, and mined roads in the area of fighting between de facto forces. The Secretary-General paid tribute to the UNTSO observers and the United Nations Field Service officers assigned to the sector, who had continued to perform the tasks entrusted to them by the Security Council in difficult and dangerous circumstances.

In the report covering the month of October, the Chief of Staff said that ground and air activity in the sector had been at a low level. The general cease-fire of 26 September had been partially respected by all. However, he said, de facto forces had continued to hinder UNTSO operations. Approximately 70 per cent of the incidents reported in October involved de facto forces identified by observers as Christian, and the types of incidents (hijacking, denial of freedom of movement, armed theft, forced entry into OPS, mined roads and shooting) continued to force partial curtailment of the normal daily UNTSO patrolling of the Armistice Demarcation Line, the Chief of Staff stated.

Events from 5 to 13 November were the subject of two special reports by the Chief of Staff, to the effect that violations of the general cease-fire had increased in intensity and number in southern Lebanon. These included an exchange of automatic weapons fire on 5 November between de facto forces in Naqoura and penetration by an Israeli forces patrol boat into Lebanese territorial waters. The de facto forces had initiated the exchange. On 6 November, Israeli forces were observed firing artillery and mortar rounds across the Armistice Demarcation Line, rounds which fell in and around the village of Naqoura. Israeli news agencies reported that the firing was in response to rocket attacks by de facto forces in southern Lebanon directed at the city of Nahariya in Israel on 6 November, in which two people were reported killed. On 8 November, further artillery and rocket-fire exchanges were observed. On 9 November, an Israeli forces air attack, consisting of 12 Phantom and Mirage jet aircraft, was directed against five target areas south of Tyre. Approximately 110 bombs were dropped by the aircraft; casualties and destruction were reported to be heavy. Also reported during the period were six reconnaissance overflights by jet aircraft and five violations of the Armistice Demarcation Line, all by Israeli forces. Internal fighting between de facto forces in southern Lebanon also increased.

In a comment appended to the special report of 10 November, the Secretary-General expressed his growing concern at the continuing escalation of tension and violence in the Israel-Lebanon sector. He particularly deplored the sequence of events, including a rocket attack on Nahariya on 8 November, causing Israeli casualties, followed by Israeli air strikes on 9 November which caused heavy loss of life and extensive destruction in southern Lebanon. He reiterated his appeal to all parties to exercise restraint and to co-operate with efforts to re-establish peaceful conditions in the area.

The Chief of Staff reported that during the month of December no ground or naval activity was observed and air activity was at a low level. However, UNTSO operations in Lebanon continued to be hindered by incidents with de facto forces involving hijackings, denial of freedom of movement, armed thefts, forced entry into OPS, mined roads and shooting at or into the immediate vicinity of OP relief/logistics operations. The Lebanese authorities submitted a complaint during the period alleging that Israeli forces had penetrated Lebanese territory in the vicinity of Chebaa on 27 December and arrested four Lebanese. The complaint could not be confirmed owing to the restrictions described above.

Communications in connexion with the events of early November were received from Israel, Lebanon and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

In a letter dated 10 November addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Lebanon charged that between 5 and 9 November Israel had: (1) sunk a fishing boat inside Lebanese territorial waters; (2) shelled the town of Tyre and several villages in the western sector of southern Lebanon, causing casualties and material damage; and (3) bombed several Lebanese towns, killing at least 60 and injuring 120 civilians. The Lebanese Government, he said, was reserving its right to call a meeting of the Security Council at an appropriate time.

In a letter dated 11 November addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Israel said that, following the internecine Arab slaughter which had taken place in Lebanon over the previous two years, the situation in the south of the country bordering on Israel had remained unsettled. Forces of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) in the area had, he said, attempted on numerous occasions to annihilate the Lebanese Christian community there, numbering some 50,000 men, women and children. The Government of Israel had committed itself to the defence of the lives of those Christians. After serious outbreaks of violence between PLO and the Christians, a cease-fire in southern Lebanon entered into force on 26 September 1977.

The representative went on to state that negotiations were set in train for the withdrawal of the PLO forces from the area and for the re-entry of the reconstituted Lebanese army into southern Lebanon. Various elements within PLO declared themselves opposed to the cease-fire and announced that they would take steps to sabotage it. They sought to reactivate military action in the area, not only to prevent the Lebanese army from re-establishing itself over sovereign Lebanese territory but also to prejudice the current negotiations for the reconvening of the Geneva Peace Conference, the letter added. From the end of September to the beginning of November, PLO had launched eight rocket attacks across the border with Israel. Then, on 6 November, an attack using 122-millimetre Katyusha rockets with a range of 22 kilometres was launched against Nahariya, killing two civilians. A further barrage on 8 November killed one and injured five. Israel, he said, had no alternative but to strike at the sources of attack, namely, terrorist bases, training camps and ammunition stores. The fault for the damage and casualties lay with the PLO terrorist groups, which as a matter of policy located their military installations in or near civilian centres in the hope of inhibiting action against them.

By a letter dated 14 November, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in his capacity as Chairman of the Arab Group of Member States, transmitted to the President of the Security Council a letter from the Permanent Observer of PLO stating that the Political Department of PLO wished to draw a clear picture of the various facets of the latest Israeli aggression against a number of peaceful towns, villages, and Palestinian refugee camps in the south of Lebanon. The letter stated that such brutal aggression was related to the Israeli political campaign aimed at creating in the south of Lebanon a new fait accompli, to be achieved by evacuating the villages in preparation for direct or indirect control of the south. Then, the new situation would be used as a form of extortion to put pressure on the Arab countries and to jeopardize peace efforts in the region in an attempt to nullify agreements between the Lebanese authorities and PLO.

In a letter dated 15 November to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Lebanon noted that the President had communicated to Council members a document not originating from the Government of Lebanon and not approved by it concerning recent events on the southern frontier of Lebanon. The document in question, he noted, claimed to provide a clear picture of the various facets of the Israeli aggression, but it did not add any new information and, moreover, represented further deliberate interference in a matter pertaining exclusively to Lebanese sovereignty. He quoted from a statement of 3 October by the Lebanese Minister for Foreign Affairs to the effect that Lebanon was determined to defend its sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity against any aggression and to demand respect for its rights by all means, especially for its exclusive right to raise any issue relating to its territory, problems or citizens.

Financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

In 1977, the General Assembly considered the questions of the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee and in two plenary meetings.

In order to allow adequate time for the consideration of the Secretary-General's report and other related documents on the financing of the Forces, the Assembly decided, by a resolution adopted on 25 October, to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into short-term commitments for UNEF and UNDOF. Thus, by resolution 32/4 A, adopted by 77 votes to 4, with 24 abstentions, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments, not exceeding $6,083,333 per month for UNEF and not exceeding $1,359,583 per month for UNDOF, for the period from 25 October to 30 November 1977.

The General Assembly also decided to apportion the expenses involved among Member States in accordance with the scheme set forth in resolutions it had adopted on 22 December 1976.⁸

The resolution on short-term commitments had been submitted to the Fifth Committee by its Chairman and approved on 24 October by 66 votes to 2, with 18 abstentions.

By resolution 32/4 B, adopted on 2 December 1977, the Assembly appropriated, to the ⁸ See Y.U.N., 1976, pp. 226-28, text of resolutions 31/5 C and D.

Special Account maintained for this purpose,⁹ $76,321,000 for the operation of UNEF for the period from 25 October 1977 to 24 October 1978 inclusive.

By resolution 32/4 C, adopted on 2 December together with resolution 32/4 B, the Assembly appropriated $6,490,912 to the Special Account for the operation of UNDOF for the period from 1 June to 24 October 1977, appropriated $11,611,871 to that Special Account for the period 25 October 1977 to 31 May 1978, and authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for UNDOF at a rate not to exceed $1,607,000 per month for the period from 1 June to 24 October 1978 inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond 31 May 1978, the current limit of its mandate (see section above, resolution 420(1977) of 30 November 1977).

By these decisions the Assembly also set forth ad hoc arrangements for apportioning the authorized expenses among Member States.

When the Fifth Committee discussed the financing of the Forces on 30 November 1977, it had before it the report on the subject submitted by the Secretary-General, and a related report prepared by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

The Secretary-General noted in his report that the statement of expenses of UNEF and UNDOF for the period from 25 October 1976 to 24 October 1977 included the amounts of $970,000 and $243,000, described as unencumbered balances. The actual strength of UNEF during that period was about 2 per cent less than had been projected in the budget for that year and further economies had been achieved in the amount spent for rations.

The Secretary-General observed that as of 24 October 1977 he had received $312.2 million in contributions from Member States for the four-year period from 25 October 1973. The balance due from Member States amounted to $50 million of which only $19.8 million could be considered collectable. In this context the Secretary-General indicated that he would not be able to continue to meet obligations of the Forces on the current basis, particularly those due to troop contributors, unless a remedy was found to the mounting shortfall.

He estimated the cost of UNEF for the period from 25 October 1977 to 24 October 1978 at $78.7 million, which included proposed new rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing countries for troops' pay and allowances ($680 per man-month plus a supplementary $200 per man-month for certain specialists, commencing on 25 October 1977—the current rates were $500 and $150, respectively). The cost of UNDOF—if its mandate was further extended beyond 30 November 1977—would be of the order of $1.4 million per month from 1 December 1977 onwards. Should the General Assembly approve the new reimbursement rates, an apportionment of $1.7 million per month would be required in respect of UNDOF.

The Secretary-General estimated that, on the basis of the new rates of reimbursement, the total cost of UNEF and UNDOF for the fifth year of the Force would be $98.6 million.

In its report, ACABQ noted that the estimates for 1977-1978, leaving aside the proposed additional provision for new rates of pay and allowances, were approximately $6.2 million lower than the 1976-1977 revised apportionments. The proposed additional provision for pay and allowances recommended by the Secretary-General amounted to $12,180,000. The Advisory Committee noted that with the inclusion of this amount the estimates for 1977-1978 represented an increase of nearly $6 million over the 1976-1977 revised apportionments.

The Advisory Committee did not raise any objections to the Secretary-General's proposal for new rates of pay and allowances for troops serving in the Forces, but recognized that the problem was primarily a political one and should be dealt with by the Fifth Committee. The Advisory Committee was of the opinion that the cost of the Forces in 1977-1978 should not exceed $95.6 million, and it recommended a $2,858,000 reduction in cost estimates beyond October 1977, but considered that the Secretary-General should be allowed flexibility in applying the reductions to such items as he deemed appropriate.

When the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ were discussed in the Fifth Committee, many Member States noted the financial difficulties facing UNEF and UNDOF and emphasized that the operation of the Forces should be conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy. The representatives of Australia, Denmark, Finland, France, Ireland, Panama, Sweden, the United Kingdom and Venezuela were among those supporting the recommendations of the Secretary-General and ACABQ. Sweden expressed its concern over the increasing gap between the amounts appropriated and the payments received and said that a solution to the problem should be found as a matter of urgency.

Denmark and Japan, among others, noted with regret the amount of $30.2 million referred to as uncollectable and appealed again to States to reconsider their position, bearing in mind the collective responsibility required by the Charter of the United Nations.

Albania said the creation and use of UNEF was an interference in the internal affairs of sovereign States and in gross violation of the Charter. It could not accept any extension of the mandate of the Forces; Security Council resolutions had failed to make a distinction between the aggressor and the victim or to condemn Israeli aggression.

Czechoslovakia was among those Members which considered that the unliquidated obligations for the period from 1973 to 1977—amounting to almost $21 million—should be apportioned among Member States, in accordance with the Financial Regulations of the United Nations. Czechoslovakia also supported the view that the practice of reimbursing some of the costs relating to UNEF and UNDOF from the regular budget should be discontinued.

Referring to the question of the increase in the rates of reimbursement for troops, the representative of the USSR said that it would increase the over-all estimates by over $12 million, while the report of the Secretary-General did not provide any justification for the new rates. He recommended that much larger reductions of expenses be made and that auditing of UNEF and UNDOF accounts be carried out annually.

Australia, Austria, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Nepal, Poland and Sweden welcomed the proposed reimbursement rate increase but said the new rates still fell short of the actual costs borne by troop contributors; the majority of these States suggested more frequent review, preferably on an annual basis.

Argentina introduced in the Fifth Committee two parallel draft resolutions—co-sponsored also by Australia, Austria, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Kenya, Nepal, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Sweden and Venezuela—the purpose of which, Argentina said, was to provide the Assembly with a structure that would enable it to take decisions necessary for financing the two Forces.

By the preambular paragraphs of the resolutions, which the General Assembly adopted on 2 December, the Assembly established a procedure different from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget, taking into account the special responsibilities of the permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations and the fact that the economically more developed countries were in a position to make relatively large contributions.

With regard to UNEF, the subject of the first resolution, the Assembly appropriated $76,321,000 for the operation of the Force for the period from 25 October 1977 to 24 October 1978 inclusive. This figure would be apportioned in various specific amounts among four groups of States, as defined in an Assembly resolution of 11 December 1973¹⁰ (the five permanent members of the Security Council, States listed as economically developed, those defined as economically less developed, and others defined as least developed States). The amounts were subdivided proportionally according to whether the assessment was for 1977 or 1978, in accordance with the scale of assessments for that year, notwithstanding the apportionment provisions of resolution 32/4 A of 25 October 1977 (above).

An amount of $6,490,912 was appropriated by the terms of the second resolution, for the operation of UNDOF for the period from 1 June to 24 October 1977, and $11,611,871 was appropriated to the Special Account for UNDOF for the period from 25 October 1977 to 31 May 1978.

The Assembly specified that the apportionment formula to be applied in both cases was an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that might be taken by Member States in any consideration by the Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations.

Three recently admitted Member States—Angola, Samoa and Seychelles—were to be included in the groups of States defined as least developed and their contributions would be calculated in accordance with the provisions of an Assembly resolution (32/39 of 2 December 1977) relating to the scale of assessments for contributions of States to the United Nations budget (see p. 1028).

The Assembly also stressed the need for voluntary contributions for the Forces, both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, and asked him to ensure that the Forces were conducted with the maximum efficiency and economy.

The Fifth Committee had approved both draft resolutions on 30 November 1977 by a single vote of 81 to 2, with 14 abstentions. The operative paragraph by which the Assembly appropriated $76.3 million for UNEF, on which a separate vote had been requested, was approved by 82 votes to 9, with 6 abstentions. The same provision was separately voted on in the Assembly, where it was adopted by 115 votes to 9, with 2 abstentions.

The General Assembly then adopted the two draft resolutions by a single recorded vote of 115 to 2, with 10 abstentions, as resolutions 32/4 B and C.

On the same day, the Assembly endorsed a recommendation, approved without vote by the Fifth Committee, to approve the new rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing countries proposed by the Secretary-General. The vote on decision 32/416 was 112 in favour to 3 against, with 10 abstentions.

During the discussion of the resolutions, the representatives of Democratic Yemen and the Syrian Arab Republic stated that since Israel continued to occupy Arab territories illegally as a result of aggression and to establish new settlements there, the cost of financing the Forces should be borne by the aggressor. To continue to finance UNEF and UNDOF, Democratic Yemen said, was tantamount to ratifying the occupation. Iraq reiterated its position in opposition to the financing of the Forces and stated that it would not vote for the resolutions. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said it would not take part in the vote since the Security Council resolutions mentioned therein did not provide the basis for a practical solution to the Middle East problem.

The representative of Israel observed that his Government regarded the presence of UNEF and UNDOF as an integral part of the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces of 18 January 1974 between Israel and Egypt.¹¹

The representatives of Bulgaria and the USSR stated that their countries would accept no responsibility regarding the costs and additional expenses arising from the new tasks entrusted to the Forces, following the agreement concluded between Israel and Egypt on 4 September 1975¹² outside the framework of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East. The maintenance of UNEF, the USSR said, should not serve to delay an over-all settlement of the question.

Benin said it would be unable to participate in the financing of UNEF and UNDOF, and cautioned that care must be taken not to give the Forces a permanent character; the virtually automatic renewal of their mandates placed a financial burden on the small developing countries which was difficult to bear.

Reiterating his country's position opposing the inclusion of expenditures for UNDOF and UNEF on the United Nations regular budget, the representative of China announced that he would not participate in the vote on the resolutions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the present appropriation for the United Nations Emergency Force, as provided by section I, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 315 C of 22 December 1976, does not extend to periods beyond 24 October 1977,

Recalling further that the present authority of the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as provided by section III of General Assembly resolution 31/5 D of 22 December 1976, expires on 24 October 1977,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 416 (1977) of 21 October 1977, by which the Council renewed the mandate of the United Nations Emergency Force for the period from 25 October 1977 to 24 October 1978 inclusive, Noting further that the present mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, which was renewed by the Security Council in resolution 408 (1977) of 26 May 1977, continues until 30 November 1977 inclusive,

1. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Emergency Force at a rate not to exceed $6,083,333 per month for the period from 25 October to 30 November 1977 inclusive, and for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed $1,359,583 per month for the period from 25 October to 30 November 1977 inclusive, in order to allow adequate time for consideration by the General Assembly of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Forces;

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 340 (1973) of 25 October 1973, 346 (1974) of 8 April 1974, 362 (1974) of 23 October 1974, 368 (1975) of 17 April 1975, 371 (1975) of 24 July 1975, 378 (1975) of 23 October 1975, 396 (1976) of 22 October 1976 and 416 (1977) of 21 October 1977,

Recalling its resolutions 3101 (XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 B (XXX) of 28 November 1975, 31/5 C of 22 December 1976 and 32/4 A of 25 October 1977,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874 (S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $76,321,000 for the operation of the United Nations Emergency Force for the period from 25 October 1977 to 24 October 1978 inclusive;

2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of $14,156,315, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 25 October to 31 December 1977 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and the amount of $62,164,685, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 1 January to 24 October 1978 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978 and, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 2 of Assembly resolution 32/4 A of 25 October 1977:

(a) To apportion an amount of $46,763,599 for the above-mentioned twelve-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (a) of General Assembly resolution 3101 (XXVIII), of which $8,687,730 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and $38,075,869 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978;

(b) To apportion an amount of $27,896,680 for the above-mentioned twelve-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (b) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and section II, paragraph 2 (b), of resolution 3374 B (XXX), of which $5,144,405 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and $22,752,275 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978;

(c) To apportion an amount of $1,624,530 for the above-mentioned twelve-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (c) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and section II, paragraph 2 (c), of resolution 3374 B (XXX), of which $312,855 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and $1,311,675 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978;

(d) To apportion an amount of $36,191 for the above-mentioned twelve-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (d) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII), section IV, paragraph 1, of resolution 3374 B (XXX) and section III, paragraph 1, of resolution 31/5 C, of which $11,325 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and $24,866 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978;

II

1. Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Emergency Force both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Emergency Force is conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

III

1. Decides that Angola, Samoa and Seychelles shall be included in the group of Member States mentioned in paragraph 2 (d) of General Assembly resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and that their contributions for the United Nations Emergency Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (f) of Assembly resolution 32/39 of 2 December 1977;

2. Decides further that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the United Nations Emergency Force until 24 October 1977 of the Member States listed in paragraph 1 of the present section shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the appropriations apportioned in section I above.

C

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administration and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 350 (1974) of 31 May 1974, 363 (1974) of 29 November 1974, 369 (1975) of 28 May 1975, 381 (1975) of 30 November 1975, 390 (1976) of 28 May 1976, 398 (1976) of 30 November 1976, 408 (1977) of 26 May 1977 and 420 (1977) of 30 November 1977,

Recalling its resolutions 3101 (XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975, 31/5 D of 22 December 1976 and 32/4 A of 25 October 1977,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874 (S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $6,490,912 authorized and apportioned by section III of General Assembly resolution 31/5 D for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 24 October 1977 inclusive;

II

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $11,611,871 for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 25 October 1977 to 31 May 1978 inclusive;

2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of $3,576,871, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 25 October to 31 December 1977 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and the amount of $8,035,000, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 1 January to 31 May 1978 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978 and, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 2 of Assembly resolution 32/4 A of 25 October 1977:

(a) To apportion an amount of $7,116,563 for the period from 25 October 1977 to 31 May 1978 inclusive among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (a) of General Assembly resolution 3101 (XXVIII), of which $2,195,126 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and $4,921,437 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978;

(b) To apportion an amount of $4,240,645 for the period from 25 October 1977 to 31 May 1978 inclusive among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (b) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and section II, paragraph 2 (6), of resolution 3374 C (XXX), of which $1,299,835 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and $2,940,810 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978;

(c) To apportion an amount of $248,588 for the period from 25 October 1977 to 31 May 1978 inclusive among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (c) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and section II, paragraph 2 (c), of resolution 3374 C (XXX), of which $79,049 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and $169,539 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978;

(d) To apportion an amount of $6,075 for the period from 25 October 1977 to 31 May 1978 inclusive among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (d) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII), section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 3374 C (XXX) and section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 31/5 D of which $2,861 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and $3,214 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978;

III

Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed $1,607,000 per month for the period from 1 June to 24 October 1978 inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 420 (1977) of 30 November 1977, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

IV

1. Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

V

1. Decides that Angola, Samoa and Seychelles shall be included in the group of Member States mentioned in paragraph 2 (d) of General Assembly resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and that their contributions for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (f) of Assembly resolution 32/39 of 2 December 1977;

2. Decides further that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force until 24 October 1977 of the Member States listed in paragraph 1 of the present section shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the appropriations apportioned in section II above.

The search for a peaceful settlement

The situation in the Middle East: Peace Conference on the Middle East

Communications and reports (January-March 1977)

On 7 January 1977, the Secretary-General brought to the attention of the Security Council the texts of two resolutions which had been adopted by the General Assembly on 9 December 1976. By one of these resolutions (31/61),¹³ the Assembly requested the Security Council to take effective measures, within an appropriate timetable, for the implementation of all relevant resolutions of the Council and the Assembly on the Middle East and Palestine. By the second resolution (31/62),¹⁴ the Assembly asked the Security Council to meet to consider the situation in the area in the light of a report which the Secretary-General was asked to submit to the Council not later than 1 March 1977 in connexion with the convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East.

In response to the Assembly's request, the Secretary-General on 28 February submitted a report to the Security Council on the consultations he had held with the parties concerned regarding the possibility of an early convening of the Geneva Peace Conference.

He said that in the latter part of December 1976 and in January 1977 he had held initial consultations with the representatives of the parties and of the two Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East (the USSR and the United States). Between 31 January and 12 February he had visited Egypt, the Syrian Arab Republic, Saudi Arabia, Lebanon, Jordan and Israel, and had met with the leaders of those countries. He had also met in Damascus with Yasser Arafat, Chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). The main object of his mission, he said, was to get clarification of the views of the parties concerned as to the best course to follow in resuming the negotiating process, and to consult with them as to the best means of overcoming the various obstacles in the way of that objective. His consultations had also provided an opportunity for an exchange of views on the wider aspects of the Middle East problem itself. He said that all the parties had expressed a desire for an early resumption of the negotiating process through the convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East. The problem was to find agreement on the conditions under which the Conference could be convened.

The Secretary-General went on to state that the most immediate difficulty was the question of participation. The position of the Arab States was that PLO should be invited to participate in any future meetings of the Peace Conference on the Middle East. The position of the Israeli Government was that the Conference should be reconvened on the original basis, with the participation the same as at the meeting of the Geneva Conference which took place in December 1973. The Arab Governments maintained that PLO was the only legitimate representative of the Palestinians. Israel, on the other hand, was not prepared to recognize PLO as the representative of the Palestinians but was prepared to negotiate with Jordan concerning the Palestinian question. Israel would not object to the inclusion of Palestinian representatives in the delegation of Jordan. The position of PLO was that it had to be invited to participate in the Peace Conference from the outset on an equal footing with all the other parties as the sole representative of the Palestinian people.

In discussing possible ways of overcoming the difficulty, the Secretary-General said he had found that the difference between the parties was too fundamental to be bridged by procedural devices, such as the possibility of a unified Arab delegation.

Commenting further on the attitude of the parties towards the Peace Conference, he said that Israel regarded it as a continuous process, within whose framework negotiations could take place in different forms and, if necessary, in different places, according to the aspect of the problem involved. Israel preferred a comprehensive solution of the Middle East problem; if, however, in the current circumstances, that could not be achieved, it was prepared to work out limited arrangements within the framework of the Geneva Peace Conference.

For its part, the Secretary-General said, the Arab side emphasized that its interest was to work out a comprehensive settlement, within the Geneva framework and under United Nations auspices, involving, in the first place, the solution of the Palestinian question and the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied territories.

¹⁴ Ibid., p. 247, text of resolution 31/62.

He went on to say that, obviously, the attitude of PLO towards Israel as reflected in the Palestine National Charter (formerly called the Covenant), the attitude of Israel towards PLO, and the nature and context of the Palestinian entity in a future settlement were among the key issues where adjustments of attitude would have an important bearing on the prospects of success of the Peace Conference. Without such basic changes in attitude, the Secretary-General said, it would be difficult to make progress in resolving the substantive aspects of the Middle East problem.

There was no doubt, he continued, that all concerned were earnestly desirous of moving towards a negotiated settlement. In order to achieve that, however, a determined effort was needed to overcome the lack of confidence and the mutual distrust and fears of all the parties as to the consequences of making compromises and concessions. In the existing situation, he said, lack of communication and understanding presented a major obstacle in the way of efforts to establish a just and lasting peace in the area.

The main elements of the Middle East problem remained intractable and extremely difficult to deal with, the Secretary-General observed, but he believed that there was an increasing consciousness in the area that an opportunity existed to resume negotiations in a meaningful way and that, if that opportunity were not seized, there were grave dangers that the situation would deteriorate once again, with incalculable consequences not only for the Middle East but for the international community as a whole.

By a letter dated 23 March to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Egypt requested that a meeting of the Council be held to discuss the situation in the Middle East, in the light of the Secretary-General's report.

Consideration by Security Council (25-29 March 1977)

The Security Council held three meetings—on 25, 28 and 29 March 1977—to consider the Secretary-General's report. The representatives of Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President informed the Council that the representative of Egypt had requested the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization in the discussions in accordance with previous Council decisions in that respect. He understood that the proposal had not been put forward under rule 37¹⁵ or rule 39¹⁶ of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, but that, if approved, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights as were conferred when a Member State was invited to participate under rule 37.

Speaking in his capacity as the representative of the United States, the Council President said his Government could not agree to the proposal and considered that the terms on which past invitations had been extended to PLO were inappropriate. He asked that the proposed invitation be put to a vote. It was adopted by a vote of 10 in favour to 1 against (United States), with 4 abstentions (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, United Kingdom).

In presenting his report to the Security Council, the Secretary-General reiterated his observation that, in order to overcome the remaining problems facing a resumption of the Geneva Peace Conference, certain changes of attitude on all sides were desirable. He remained hopeful that the diplomatic efforts currently under way might contribute to such changes and he noted that recent statements by the Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Peace Conference at the highest level contained elements that might further the negotiating process. He once again emphasized the necessity of taking advantage of the prevailing favourable climate for taking definitive steps forward towards a settlement.

The representative of Egypt also stressed that the time was propitious for initiating real progress in the right direction towards a genuine peace and stability in the area and not mere movement. The role of both Co-Chairmen, the United States and the USSR, should lead towards that goal, he said, and he expressed the hope that the current opportunity would not be missed as others before it had been.

The presence of the representative of PLO in the Council, he said, was another manifestation of the preoccupation of the Council with the important and overriding fact that the participation of the representatives of the Palestinian people was essential in any debate concerning the situation in the Middle East; the Council had been wisely consistent in that policy during the past 15 months in inviting the PLO representatives to participate.

¹⁵ Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure reads: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter."

The representative of Egypt went on to recall that, in its historic resolution 31/62 of 9 December 1976, the General Assembly had affirmed its determination to strive for peace in the Middle East by calling for the early convening of the Peace Conference under the auspices of the United Nations and the co-chairmanship of the USSR and the United States. That resolution was historic because 122 Member countries had supported it. Israel, he noted, chose to oppose it in order to demonstrate two things: first, its usual defiance of the United Nations and the will of the vast majority of the Members, and, second, its defiance of the peace process in the Middle East itself. Israel had intensified its repressive policies in the occupied territories, leading to the conclusion that it had no desire to reach a peaceful settlement, that it was interested only in expansion and the annexation of Arab land.

Faced with that situation, the Security Council should, in the view of Egypt, act to promote the process toward the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the area, as envisaged in Assembly resolution 31/62. That peace should, he said, include primarily the Palestinian people. The Council should also show clearly to Israel that it could no longer condone Israel's disregard for its resolutions and decisions. Finally, the Council should call for the prompt convening of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East with the participation of all the parties. Should the Council fail in that endeavour, a great threat would confront the whole world and not only the Middle East.

The representative of Jordan said that, while the quest for peace was stalemated within the framework of the Security Council and the United Nations as a whole, Israel had been busy devouring the occupied Arab territories and inflicting upon them a territorial, cultural and national genocide. In a year or two, he said, quite apart from the awesome suffering of the people under occupation, there would be very little left to talk about.

Pending the achievement of a just and viable peace in the area, he continued, the Government of Jordan urged the Security Council not to abandon the occupied territories and their people as free-for-all grazing ground. It proposed that the Council set up a three-man monitoring team from among those of its members acceptable to Israel, to be installed at Government House in Jerusalem to oversee the strict observance in the occupied territories of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949. The team would report monthly to the Security Council on any and all violations of the integrity and inviolability of the territories and people.

The representative of Israel said his Government rejected out of hand the proposal by Jordan for a monitoring team as another excuse to bypass the main problem, namely, sitting down face to face and negotiating for peace. Israel, he said, also rejected out of hand General Assembly resolution 31/62 and would not be a party to any moves arising out of that resolution, whose purpose was to change the ground rules of the Geneva Peace Conference and substitute a dictated settlement for direct negotiations between the parties. In Israel's view, the only resolution on which moves towards peace could be based was Security Council resolution 338(1973),¹⁷ which was adopted unanimously and was then accepted by both sides to the conflict.

The Israeli representative went on to say that Israel was prepared for a reconvening of the Geneva Peace Conference at any time without any pre-conditions whatsoever, especially with regard to the question of participation. In that connexion, he said that Israel, while recognizing the importance of the Palestinian Arab issue and while willing to accept the participation of Palestinian Arabs from the West Bank in the Jordanian delegation, could not countenance sitting at a table with representatives of PLO, an organization which had only recently reaffirmed that its purpose was the destruction of the State of Israel. Israel, he declared, was not prepared to negotiate with those who called for its destruction; it had no intention of committing national suicide.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic said that Israel, while claiming readiness to attend the Geneva Conference immediately, at the same time imposed several impossible conditions which it hoped, and indeed knew, the Arabs would not and could not accept. The truth was, he said, that Israel was not interested in peace and did not even want the Geneva Conference to reconvene. It did not want peace because peace meant that it would have to withdraw from the occupied Arab territories. It was playing for time to consolidate its grip on Arab land, establish more settlements and present the world with more faits accomplis.

The representative of PLO, who also doubted Israel's desire for peace, noted that Israel was using the question of participation as an excuse. But, he said, PLO, as the representative of the Palestinian people, was entitled to participate in any forum dealing with the future of the Palestinians. That was not only the position of the Arab States but the will of the international community and the General Assembly. He added that PLO continued to reject Security Council resolution 242(1967) of 22 November 1967,¹⁸ which completely ignored the national rights of the Palestinian people; PLO considered that a settlement of the Palestinian problem could be achieved only with the recognition of those rights, as defined by the Assembly in its resolution 3236(XXIX) of 22 November 1974.¹⁹ The Palestine National Council at a recent meeting had, he said, among other things declared that any settlement or agreement affecting the rights of the Palestinian people and reached in its absence was null and void.

A number of speakers during the Council's discussion shared that view, among them the representative of the USSR, who said it was obvious that no decision of the Geneva Peace Conference affecting the destiny of the Palestinians could be adopted without them—let alone against them. His Government therefore supported, as it had always done, equal participation in the Conference by the Palestinian people as represented by PLO. He went on to say that a resumption of the Geneva Conference at an early date was required in moving towards a just and genuine peace because that was the international machinery created for that purpose. Being one of the Co-Chairmen, the USSR would, he said, continue its efforts to convene the Conference and help it carry out its work in a constructive manner.

The representative of Pakistan said that the refusal of Israel to sit with PLO representatives in the peace negotiations was unreasonable, and justified the mistrust and suspicion felt by the Arabs about the eventual outcome of the peace negotiations. Israel's attitude towards the Palestinian people had to change if a lasting peace in the Middle East was to be achieved.

The representative of India regretted that some parties were disposed to link the question of PLO participation with the future of a Palestinian entity, thus unrealistically using an ideal objective as a pre-condition for commencement of negotiations. The Council should try to maintain the momentum towards negotiations by adopting a consensus statement containing certain basic elements, such as recognition of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people. If a consensus was not possible, India was of the opinion that the Council should adjourn until a more auspicious time.

The representative of Canada stated that any viable peace settlement had to have as its fundamental basis Security Council resolution 242(1967) in all its elements, including the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied territories, the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war and the possibility for all the States in the region to live in peace within secure and recognized borders. Clearly, he said, such a peace settlement, to be viable, would also have to take due account of the legitimate aspirations of the Palestinians. The surest route to the restoration of peace to the area was negotiations between the parties concerned as called for by resolution 338(1973). The Council should refrain from prejudging difficult issues which could be resolved only by negotiations and instead concentrate on proclaiming the necessity for all parties concerned to meet at the Geneva Conference table.

The spokesman for France was gratified to note that all parties recognized that momentum towards negotiations should continue without interruption. The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany supported an early resumption of the Geneva Conference, and urged that the Secretary-General continue his mission of good offices with all parties concerned to enable them to bridge the remaining gaps. His Government remained ready, individually and as part of the European Community, to contribute actively to the achievement of that goal.

The representative of the United Kingdom said the Council should not try to provide its own solution to the problems set out in the Secretary-General's report but should express its conviction that the negotiations should be resumed as soon as possible and should press upon the parties the need for moderation and for a willingness to compromise in overcoming the remaining obstacles.

In the view of the representative of Yemen, the Council should act in accordance with the United Nations Charter and force Israel to withdraw from all the occupied Arab territories and to recognize the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the rights to self-determination, sovereignty and independence. It was imperative, he said, that the Geneva Conference be resumed, with PLO participation.

¹⁹ See Y.U.N., 1974, pp. 226-27, text of resolution 3236 (XXIX).

The spokesman for the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the Palestine question was the core of the Middle East problem and could only be resolved when the Palestinians returned to their homeland and exercised their right to self-determination. Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) could in no way be the basis for a solution, he said, as they had been bypassed by events and developments in the attitude of the United Nations and international public opinion. Resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 1974 and 1975 reflected the proper approach to the question, he said.

The representative of the United States said his Government was continuing the intensive bilateral consultations initiated by the visit of the United States Secretary of State to the Middle East in February 1977. President Jimmy Carter was preparing a series of meetings with leaders of the Middle East nations. The United States, he said, hoped to identify common ground among the parties and to find ways of bridging the wide gaps that existed. If there was to be a return to the Geneva Conference, flexibility had to be shown by all parties on the key issues involved.

At the conclusion of the three meetings, the President of the Council stated that, after consultations with the members of the Council, it had been agreed to adjourn the discussion.

Communications and reports (October-November 1977)

On 3 and 18 October 1977, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council respectively a report on the situation in the Middle East as called for by the Assembly in resolution 31/61 of 9 December 1976.²⁰

The Secretary-General said that immediately after his visit to the Middle East in February 1977, he had sent representatives to Moscow and Washington for the purpose of briefing the two Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East on his consultations with the parties concerned and his findings. Since then, he said, efforts to resume the negotiating process had continued at various levels in New York and elsewhere. He and his immediate advisers on the Middle East had been in close contact with the two Co-Chairmen.

He went on to report on a number of developments that had taken place in the Middle East and which had a bearing on the search for a peaceful settlement in the area. In July, the Government of Israel had legalized three existing settlements in the West Bank of Jordan. In the following month, it decided to apply Israeli laws in the fields of health, labour and other services to the Arab population of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Later in August, it authorized the establishment of three new settlements in the West Bank. The Arab States and PLO had strongly protested those decisions, which they considered to be deliberate acts to consolidate Israeli occupation and pave the way for annexation.

The Secretary-General also drew attention to the situation in southern Lebanon, where fighting between de facto forces had flared up recently with renewed intensity. A deterioration of the situation could have considerable implications in the wider context of the Middle East problem, he said.

He noted that, in his report to the thirty-second (1977) session of the General Assembly on the work of the Organization, he had expressed the view that, in the current critical stage in the search for a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, it was of vital importance that all the Governments and parties concerned should refrain from any moves likely to heighten tension or to affect current efforts to resume the negotiating process, which was entering a new, intensified phase. As he had said in his report on the work of the Organization, it was more than ever urgent and vital that the parties preserve the spirit of moderation and realism and channel that spirit into the arduous and lengthy process of negotiation. If that were not to happen, he greatly feared that a major international crisis would have to be faced in the not too distant future.

In an addendum to his report, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly on 26 October that he had received a letter from the representative of Israel calling attention to what was termed a factual error in the report regarding Israel's decision to apply certain Israeli laws to the occupied territories. The intention of the Israeli Government, the letter said, was rather to equalize the services given to residents of the occupied territories with those given to residents of Israel. The former law continued to be administered, the letter stated.

In a letter dated 11 November 1977 to the Secretary-General, the representative of Israel drew attention to a statement broadcast that day over television by the Prime Minister of Israel, Menachem Begin, to the people of Egypt, in which, among other things, he appealed for an end to wars, bloodshed and threats between the two peoples and invited them to start, instead, on the road of friendship and co-operation. He recalled that two days earlier President Anwar Sadat of Egypt had stated that he was ready to come to Jerusalem and address the Knesset, and said that the President would be welcome in Israel and that he, for his part, would be ready to go to Cairo.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The General Assembly considered the agenda item entitled "The situation in the Middle East" at meetings held between 22 and 25 November 1977.

During the Assembly's discussion, a majority of Members expressed the hope that the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East could be reconvened at an early date. A statement issued on 1 October 1977 by the two Co-Chairmen, the USSR and the United States, was viewed as a positive development as it not only stressed that the settlement of the conflict should involve all parties concerned and all questions but also laid down the main principles which should govern an eventual solution. It was pointed out that the co-operation of the Co-Chairmen was essential, and their responsibility great, in unblocking the way to a comprehensive settlement in the Middle East.

According to the representative of the USSR, the resumption of the work of the Geneva Conference—with a view to attaining a comprehensive political settlement—was becoming an increasingly pressing matter. He noted that, in the joint USSR/United States statement of 1 October, it was stressed that the two Governments believed that the only right and effective means of achieving a fundamental solution to all aspects of the Middle East problem in its entirety were negotiations within the framework of the Geneva Peace Conference specially convened for that purpose, with the participation in its work of all the parties involved in the conflict. The Co-Chairmen had affirmed their intention to facilitate in every way, through joint efforts and in their contacts with the parties concerned, the speedy resumption of the Conference.

The spokesman for the United States observed that since the Assembly had last discussed this issue the Middle East had been an arena of intense diplomatic activity aimed at a single and simple goal—the resumption of direct negotiations between the parties in order to achieve a comprehensive peace. While the setting of the goal—a Geneva Conference by the end of 1977—was easy, achievement of that goal had proved elusive, he said. All the parties were agreed that the key substantive questions to be addressed were: the nature of peace; Israeli withdrawal, agreement on final borders, and arrangements to make those borders secure; and the Palestinian question, for which representatives of the Palestinian people as well as of the Governments concerned had to be included in the negotiating process. Procedural problems remained to be resolved, but he stressed that procedural arrangements did not in themselves determine the outcome of negotiations—only the negotiations themselves produced agreements.

The representative of Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Community, noted that since the beginning of the year a whole range of efforts had been made. Together with the action taken by the Secretary-General, a number of countries had undertaken similar efforts on a bilateral basis. The new United States Administration, in particular, had taken a series of initiatives with a view to finding grounds for mutual understanding between the parties. All those initiatives had then culminated in intensive diplomatic activity at the beginning of the current Assembly session. The members of the European Community welcomed all those peace efforts, he said, as well as the co-operation between the two Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference which became evident at the time of their statement of 1 October.

The representative of India, for his part, maintained that there should be a further intensification of efforts by the international community to promote the early convening of the Geneva Conference.

The Polish representative said that the world could not afford to start another decade of frightful suspense and concern over the Middle East conflict. He and many other speakers said that a peaceful solution was possible, if it were comprehensive in scope and based on three inseparable elements: first, withdrawal by Israel from all territories occupied since 1967; second, implementation of the inalienable rights of the Arab people of Palestine, which included the right to self-determination and independent statehood; third, safeguarding of the right to independent existence and security of all States in the region, including the State of Israel, and granting of effective international guarantees of their frontiers. Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and other decisions of the Council and the General Assembly provided an adequate basis for precisely such a settlement in the best interests of all the parties concerned, including Israel. The best way to bring such a settlement to fruition would be the prompt resumption of the Geneva Conference.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic gave a detailed historical account of Israel's aggressive policies towards the Palestinian people and the neighbouring Arab States. He said that the time had come for the United Nations to put an end to the situation of stagnation and obstruction in the Middle East, which had been created by Israel in order to perpetuate its aggression and occupation and to prevent the Palestinian people from exercising their national and human rights. The existence of any people or any State, he said, could not be imposed at the expense of other peoples or other States. Similarly, the security of a State could not be based on regional or geographical expansionism. As to the conditions for an over-all settlement of the Middle East problem, he said that the termination of Israel's occupation of Arab lands was the first condition, and Israel had therefore to withdraw from all the territories occupied since 1967. The second fundamental condition was to allow the Arab people of Palestine to exercise their inalienable national rights and to set up an independent State on their land. Similar views were expressed by Algeria, Iraq, Jordan, Morocco, Qatar and Yemen, among others.

The representative of PLO said that the settlement of the Middle East conflict could be achieved only when the relevant resolutions and the principles of the United Nations Charter were respected and implemented. A just peace could reign, he said, only when the question of Palestine was resolved, justice restored, and the Palestinian people regained their rights.

A number of speakers commended President Anwar Sadat of Egypt for his recent initiative in going to Jerusalem and addressing the Israeli Knesset. The representative of Nepal called the visit courageous and said that what was needed in the Middle East was the building of bridges that would lead to a lasting peace for all concerned. The Belgian representative, speaking for the European Community, quoted from a statement made in Brussels on 22 November by the nine Ministers for Foreign Affairs, that they shared the hopes raised by the courageous initiative of President Sadat and his historic meeting with the Israeli leaders. They hoped that the unprecedented dialogue begun in Jerusalem would open the way to comprehensive negotiations leading to a just and lasting over-all settlement taking account of the rights and concerns of all the interested parties. The representative of the United States called the visit a remarkable event in the political life of the Middle East.

The Canadian representative observed that a new atmosphere appeared to have emerged, and the psychological barrier which had existed for so long seemed to have been broken by the leaders of Egypt and Israel. Canada, he said, hoped that the dialogue would be expanded to include Israel's other neighbours and representatives of the Palestinian people. The Canadian Government believed that the Member States of the United Nations had a moral and political responsibility to encourage the continuation and broadening of the dialogue which had taken place the previous week in Jerusalem so that comprehensive negotiations leading to a final peace settlement could get under way as soon as possible in a constructive atmosphere.

A number of speakers, among them Colombia, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway and Portugal, expressed similar views.

Others, however, including the representatives of a number of Arab States, took the view that no Arab leader had the right to act independently or, as Iraq's representative put it, transcend his limits and affect the national rights and dignity of all Arabs, particularly the Palestinians. The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic said the visit of the Arab President to the leaders of the Zionist racist entity was a tragedy for every free Arab. Among its seriously damaging effects on the Arab cause, he said, were that it split Arab ranks, saved Israel from its isolation, imparted legitimacy to the Zionist entity, and facilitated Israeli manoeuvres aimed at replacing a comprehensive settlement with unilateral agreements and partial settlements that would allow Israel to return gradually to the step-by-step policy and gain time to consecrate the status quo. Finally, he said, it weakened any means of pressure on Israel by granting Israel what it wanted in the way of recognition, acceptance and normal relations beforehand, without its having to fulfil any of the basic prerequisites of such normal relations, such as withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories and full recognition of the national rights of the Palestinian people.

The representative of Israel said that a momentous and historic event had taken place a few days before: old suspicions and barriers had been broken down as rhetoric gave way to dialogue, and the limits of what seemed possible were suddenly expanded to new horizons. The visit to Israel by the President of Egypt left no doubt that the common people of both countries profoundly desired peace. It was perhaps too much to hope, he went on, that the General Assembly would take note of the events in Jerusalem and encourage all the parties to the conflict to get together, open a dialogue and negotiate an end to the war. If the Assembly once again chose condemnations over negotiations, it would merely testify to its own irrelevance. In Jerusalem the previous weekend, he said, the process of peace-making was dramatically advanced. If the Assembly was not prepared to encourage that process, it should at least refrain from interfering.

Israel, he said, was firmly committed to the process of negotiation on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) in order to achieve a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. In those negotiations, at Geneva or elsewhere, everything had to be negotiable.

On 25 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/20, by 102 votes to 4, with 29 abstentions. The text was sponsored by 33 Members.

By the preambular part of this resolution, the Assembly among other things expressed its concern that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 had continued, for more than 10 years, to be under illegal Israeli occupation and that the Palestinians, after three decades, were still deprived of the exercise of their inalienable national rights. It reaffirmed that the acquisition of territory by force was inadmissible and that all territories thus occupied had to be returned. The establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the United Nations Charter and Assembly resolutions, was an urgent necessity.

The Assembly took note of the joint statement on the Middle East issued on 1 October 1977 by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the USSR and the Secretary of State of the United States in their capacities as Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East.

Also by the preamble to this resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed that peace was indivisible and that a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem had to be based on a comprehensive solution, under the auspices of the United Nations, taking into account all aspects of the Arab-Israeli conflict, in particular the attainment by the Palestinian people of all their inalienable national rights and Israeli withdrawal from all the occupied Arab territories. It expressed its conviction that the early convening of the Peace Conference with the participation of all parties concerned, including PLO, in accordance with relevant Assembly resolutions, was essential for the realization of a just and lasting settlement.

By the operative provisions of this text, the Assembly:

(1) condemned Israel's continued occupation of Arab territories, in violation of the Charter, the principles of international law and repeated resolutions of the United Nations;

(2) reaffirmed that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in which all countries and peoples in the region could live in peace and security within recognized and secure boundaries, could not be achieved without Israel's withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied since 5 June 1967 and the attainment by the Palestinian people of their inalienable national rights;

(3) called anew for the early convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations and the co-chairmanship of the USSR and the United States, with the participation on an equal footing of all parties concerned, including PLO;

(4) urged the parties to the conflict and all other interested parties to work towards the achievement of a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the problems and worked out with the participation of all parties concerned within the framework of the United Nations;

(5) requested the Security Council, in the exercise of its responsibilities under the Charter, to take all necessary measures to ensure the implementation of relevant United Nations resolutions and to facilitate the achievement of such a comprehensive settlement aiming at the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region;

(6) requested the Secretary-General to follow up the implementation of this resolution and to inform all concerned, including the Co-Chairmen; and

(7) also requested him to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the Assembly in 1978 a comprehensive report covering, in all their aspects, the developments in the Middle East.

Communications (November-December 1977)

By a note verbale dated 28 November 1977, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted to the Secretary-General two communiques.

The first of these contained a declaration issued on 18 November by the Libyan General People's Congress, following President Sadat's announcement of his intention to visit the occupied territories and "to hold discussions with the terrorist Begin" and with "the Israeli Knesset gangsters." The General People's Congress declared among other things that President Sadat's intended visit constituted a crime against the whole Arab nation. The Egyptian President was representing only himself; the Egyptian and the Arab people could not be held responsible and would not be bound by whatever he undertook, since no Arab ruler had the right to act individually on the Arab national cause. If President Sadat went ahead with the projected visit, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya would withdraw its recognition of the Egyptian Government, demand the expulsion of Egypt from the League of Arab States and the immediate relocation of its headquarters from Cairo, and, finally, would enforce an Arab boycott against Egypt.

The second communique contained a statement issued on 23 November by the Libyan Secretariat for Foreign Affairs to the effect that, inasmuch as the disgraceful and treacherous visit of the Egyptian President had taken place, the Libyan Government had taken steps to: withdraw its recognition of the Egyptian Government on the grounds that that Government no longer had confidence and respect as a legitimate Arab Government; apply the Arab boycott against the Zionist enemy to Egypt as well; close Libyan air space and airports to Egyptian planes, and close its territorial waters to vessels carrying the Egyptian flag; and request of sister Arab Governments the expulsion of the Egyptian Government from the League of Arab States and the immediate relocation of the headquarters of the Arab League from the Egyptian capital.

By a letter dated 5 December 1977, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted the text of a declaration made at the conclusion of a Summit Conference held at Tripoli between 2 and 5 December 1977. In the 10-point declaration, which was signed by the heads of State of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Algeria, the Syrian Arab Republic and Democratic Yemen and by the Chairman of PLO, the Conference among other things condemned President Sadat's visit as constituting high treason against the Egyptian people and their armed forces. It decided to work for the elimination of the results of the visit and to freeze political and diplomatic relations with Egypt and implement the Arab boycott of the Zionist enemy against Egyptian individuals, companies and institutions dealing with the Zionist enemy.

Commenting on the declaration, the representative of Egypt, in a letter dated 8 December, said that while the participants at the Tripoli meeting were paying lip service to the Palestinian cause, their acts past and current had in fact belied that position. What Egypt was seeking, he said, was the achievement of a comprehensive and just settlement of the Middle East problem in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations and its relevant resolutions and, in particular, a solution that would realize the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

By a letter dated 6 December, the representative of Israel transmitted extracts from an interview conducted on 4 December with the President of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on the American Broadcasting Company television network programme, "Issues and Answers."

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East,"

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, in particular resolutions 3414 (XXX) of 5 December 1975 and 31/61 of 9 December 1976,

Taking into account the decisions of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, concerning the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have continued, for more than ten years, to be under illegal Israeli occupation and that the Palestinian people, after three decades, are still deprived of the exercise of their inalienable national rights,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible and that all territories thus occupied must be returned,

Reaffirming also the urgent necessity of the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations as well as for its resolutions concerning the problem of the Middle East including the question of Palestine,

Taking note with satisfaction of the joint statement on the Middle East issued on 1 October 1977 by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Secretary of State of the United States of America in their capacities as Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East,

Reaffirming that peace is indivisible and that a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem must be based on a comprehensive solution, under the auspices of the United Nations, which takes into account all aspects of the Arab-Israeli conflict, in particular the attainment by the Palestinian people of all their inalienable national rights and the Israeli withdrawal from all the occupied Arab territories,

Convinced that the early convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East with the participation of all parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, is essential for the realization of a just and lasting settlement in the region,

1. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of Arab territories, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and repeated resolutions of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in which all countries and peoples in the region can live in peace and security within recognized and secure boundaries, cannot be achieved without Israel's withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied since 5 June 1967 and the attainment by the Palestinian people of their inalienable national rights;

3. Calls anew for the early convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations and the co-chairmanship of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, with the participation on an equal footing of all parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization;

4. Urges the parties to the conflict and all other interested parties to work towards the achievement of a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the problems and worked out with the participation of all parties concerned within the framework of the United Nations;

5. Requests the Security Council, in the exercise of its responsibilities under the Charter, to take all necessary measures in order to ensure the implementation of relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to facilitate the achievement of such a comprehensive settlement aiming at the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to follow up the implementation of the present resolution and to inform all concerned, including the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session a comprehensive report covering, in all their aspects, the developments in the Middle East.

The question of Palestine

The question of Palestine was again taken up in 1977 by both the Security Council and the General Assembly. Both bodies had before them the second report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. This body was established by the Assembly on 10 November 1975²¹ and asked to consider and recommend to the Assembly a programme of implementation designed to enable the Palestinian people to exercise the rights recognized by the Assembly in its resolution of 22 November 1974,²² by which the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people in Palestine, including (a) the right to self-determination without external interference, and (b) the right to national independence and sovereignty. The Assembly also reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property from which they were displaced and uprooted, and called for their return.

The Committee's report was submitted to the Security Council in May 1976 and, later in the year, to the General Assembly. Its recommendations²³ included a timetable for Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories by 1 June 1977 and a two-stage plan for return of the Palestinians to their homes, with the establishment of an independent Palestinian entity.

The Security Council failed to adopt a resolution on the matter because of the negative vote of one of its permanent members.²⁴ Four members had abstained. The Assembly, by a resolution adopted on 24 November 1976,²⁵ took note of the report and endorsed the recommendations contained in it as a basis for the solution of the question of Palestine. Also by that resolution, the Assembly urged the Security Council to consider once again, as soon as possible, the Committee's recommendations so that the necessary measures could be taken to implement them and achieve early progress towards a solution of the problem of Palestine and the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

Communications and 1977 report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People

In a letter dated 28 March 1977, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People informed the President of the Security Council that, at an informal meeting held that day by the Committee, the representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) had informed it that the Palestine National Council, meeting in Cairo in March 1977, had decided: (1) to consider the recommendations contained in the Committee's 1976 report as a positive and progressive step towards the achievement of the aspirations and rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return and the right of self-determination, independence and national sovereignty; and (2) to declare that any settlement or agreement affecting the rights of the Palestinian people concluded in its absence would be null and void.

In a letter dated 8 June to the President of the Security Council, the Chairman of the Committee drew attention to the provision of Assembly resolution 31/20 by which it urged the Council to consider the Committee's recommendations again as soon as possible, in order to take the necessary measures to ensure their implementation. He noted that the Committee had pointed out several ways in which the United Nations, particularly the Security Council, could exercise an influential role in promoting and facilitating a peaceful settlement, and said that the Committee had been encouraged by recent statements by leaders of States playing an important role in the efforts to achieve progress towards peace in the Middle East. It was the Committee's strong belief, he said, that delay in action by the Council would be prejudicial to progress currently being made, and that the requirements of the current situation demanded that at its next meeting on the question of Palestine the Council should endeavour urgently to promote a positive approach leading towards the solution of this problem. He added that the Committee remained anxious to support any constructive efforts aimed at overcoming the current stalemate.

By a letter dated 28 July, the Chairman of the Committee informed the President of the Security Council that on 26 July the Prime Minister of Israel had decided officially to approve the establishment of three Israeli settlements at Camp Kadum, Ofra and Maale Adu-min, situated on the West Bank of Jordan, which Israel had been illegally occupying since June 1967. The Chairman said that the decision was completely incompatible with the Committee's recommendations. The decision also constituted a violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and of a number of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions.

The letter went on to say that the official approval of the establishment of Israeli settlements could not have any legal validity and, in fact, aggravated tensions in the region, artificially erected an additional obstacle to the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, and undermined efforts to promote a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem.

(For further details about the question of Israeli measures in occupied Arab territories, see p. 312.)

By a letter dated 13 September to the President of the Security Council, the Chairman of the Committee again drew attention to Assembly resolution 31/20 and asked the President to hold the necessary consultations with a view to convening a meeting of the Security Council at a suitable date. In the Committee's opinion, the meeting should in any case be held before the Assembly considered the question of Palestine, so that it could submit its conclusions concerning the discussion in the Council to the General Assembly. He attached to the letter a copy of the Committee's report containing the recommendations that the Council was asked to consider once again.

In its 1977 report, which it submitted on 19 September, the Committee reviewed its activities during the year, including its efforts to establish a dialogue with the members of the Security Council which had been unable to support the report and recommendations of the Committee when the matter came before the Council in 1976. The Committee accordingly authorized its Chairman to address letters to the representatives of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, and also to the representative of Israel.

Since no replies were received to these letters, which were sent on 18 April, the Chairman met with the representatives of the five of those countries which were members of the Security Council. Summarizing the outcome of his contacts, he stated that the representatives had evidently appreciated the fact that the Committee's report would figure largely in the deliberations of the Security Council when it considered the question of Palestine, but had felt that in view of the current efforts being made it would be better if Council consideration were deferred to a more appropriate moment.

In conclusion, the Committee stated that having taken into account the various observations made on its report and recommendations and in the light of current events in the region, it unanimously decided to reaffirm the validity of its recommendations. It agreed that the date suggested—1 June 1977—for the withdrawal of Israeli occupation forces from territories occupied in 1967, although now passed, should be retained for its symbolic significance and as a timely reminder of the urgency of a peaceful solution under the auspices of the United Nations, and particularly on the basis of resolutions unanimously adopted but not as yet implemented. The Committee said it was also agreed that an intensification of efforts was necessary to implement those recommendations with minimum delay, and that the various sectors of the United Nations system should act in concert to promote their implementation by peaceful means.

In the course of the discussion in the Committee, the report said, suggestions were made as to ways and means by which the objectives of the Committee could be further advanced. It was felt, however, that a decision on these suggestions should be deferred until such time as the Security Council had considered the question of Palestine.

Annexed to the report was the text of the Committee's recommendations endorsed by the General Assembly in 1976 and the texts of the letters addressed by the Chairman in April to the representatives of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Consideration by Security Council (27 October 1977)

At a meeting on 27 October 1977, the Security Council considered the question of the exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights. With the consent of the Council, the President invited the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People to address the Council. He also informed the Council that the representative of Senegal had requested the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization in the discussion in accordance with previous decisions of the Council in that respect. He understood that the proposal had not been put forward under rule 37²⁶ or rule 39²⁷ of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, but that, if approved by the Council, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights as were conferred when a Member State was invited to participate under rule 37.

The representative of the United States said his Government could not agree to the proposal and considered that the terms on which past invitations had been extended to PLO were inappropriate. He asked that the proposed invitation be put to a vote. It was adopted by 10 votes in favour to 1 against (United States), with 4 abstentions (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, United Kingdom).

In accordance with the Council's decision, the PLO representative was invited to participate in the Council's discussion. The representatives of Egypt and the Syrian Arab Republic were also invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People reminded the Council that the Committee's recommendations, endorsed by the General Assembly in 1976, were based on two fundamental elements: on the one hand, the right of return of the Palestinians, in accordance with the Assembly's resolution of 11 November 1948 (194(III))²⁸ and the Security Council's resolution of 14 June 1967 (237(1967));²⁹ on the other hand, the right of independence and national sovereignty as defined in Assembly resolutions 181(II),³⁰ on the partition of former Palestine under British Mandate, and 273(III),³¹ on the admission of the State of Israel to membership in the United Nations. The sacred principle of the inadmissibility of the occupation of territory by force had also been taken into account in drawing up the recommendations, he observed. At the General Assembly's 1976 session, a vast majority of Members had agreed that the question of Palestine was to be considered as the central element in the Middle East conflict and that consequently a just and lasting peace in the region could be achieved only if the legitimate rights and aspirations of the Palestinian people were taken into account. Most speakers, he recalled, had also stressed that a satisfactory and equitable solution to the Palestine question could not be achieved outside the framework of an over-all settlement of the Middle East problem.

He recalled that in 1976, although the recommendations had had the support of the majority of Members, they could not be adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Security Council. Since then, he said, he had undertaken direct contacts with Council members and the Committee had addressed various communications to the Council expressing its views on the basic principles underlying its work and stressing the need for action by the Council. This group of initiatives was to facilitate the Council's work towards the adoption of a positive approach likely to lead to the exercise by the Palestinian people of their inalienable rights, he said, adding that the Committee was firmly convinced that the Council had to take such action. What was required was sincere political will based on the implementation of the decisions that had been adopted and the feelings that had been expressed by all the parties.

The Chairman went on to say that Israel's right to exist was no longer challenged by anyone, but Israel in turn had to recognize the legitimate rights of its neighbours. It had no right to continue to pose constant threats to the very survival of the planet.

He then appealed to the members of the Council—in particular those who did not vote for the General Assembly's recommendations on Palestine—not to put off once again the adoption of a positive approach to the question of the rights of the Palestinian people.

²⁶ Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure reads: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter."

It was no longer enough to recognize in private the reality of those rights; they had to be vested with the full weight of the Security Council's moral authority. In approving the recommendations of the General Assembly as a basis for a solution to the Palestine question, the Security Council would considerably increase the chances of a peaceful settlement in the Middle East, he declared.

During the discussion, the Council heard statements by 10 of its members, who made the following points, among others.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya observed that the Palestinian people had for over a quarter of a century struggled in the cause of the restoration of their inalienable national rights in their own country, Palestine. They had been deprived of the exercise of those rights as a result of acts of oppression and terrorism perpetrated by Zionist racist gangs in collaboration with imperialist, colonialist forces. They had been expelled from their homes and lands and compelled to live in refugee camps and tents, while their homeland had been usurped and plundered by alien racist elements. But, he said, they would never cease to struggle for their rights and they were gaining increasing international support. He found it both frightening and dangerous that a super-power, the United States, was using its huge influence and might to serve the illegal and irresponsible dictates and goals of the fascist Zionist entity in occupied Palestine.

The representative of Pakistan praised the Committee for approaching its task in an objective and constructive spirit, bearing in mind the need to consolidate positive trends towards a peace settlement in the Middle East. He felt that the Council had to take cognizance of the fact that the problem of the Palestinians could not be dealt with as a problem of refugees; it concerned the destiny of an entire nation. It must be made clear that the aim of negotiations for a just and lasting peace in the Middle East had to include the achievement of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to their own State. He hoped the Council would endorse the Committee's recommendations.

The Romanian representative noted that previous efforts to get the Council to assume its responsibilities in this matter had not brought results, but the current time might be a turning point. It was generally recognized, he said, that peace was not possible in the Middle East unless there was a settlement of the Palestine problem taking account of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to be represented on an equal footing in any peace negotiations. The authority which should represent them was the Palestine Liberation Organization, recognized by the United Nations and by the vast majority of the States of the world as the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. He also said that in the view of the Romanian Government the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region could be founded only on Israeli withdrawal from the Arab territories occupied after the 1967 war, on a settlement of the problem of the Palestinian people in keeping with their legitimate aspirations, including the creation of a free and independent Palestinian State, and on the guarantee of the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all States in the region.

The representative of the USSR shared that view, stating that the experience of recent years and the events taking place in the Middle East showed that there could be no peace in the region until the consequences of Israeli aggression had been eliminated and until the Arab people of Palestine were secure in the exercise of their lawful national rights. The USSR, he said, would continue to lend all possible support to the Palestinian people in their just struggle for their inalienable rights.

According to the Chinese representative, the Palestinian question was an important, integral part of the whole Middle East question. The rivalry between the two super-powers over this region was the crucial reason why the question of Palestine and the Middle East had remained unsettled over a long period. While each of them tried to outdo the other in clamouring for an over-all settlement, he said, in essence neither of them wanted a genuine settlement. Instead, both worked hard to maintain the state of "no war, no peace" so as to facilitate their control over the Middle East, motivated by the needs of their respective global strategies. He said that China supported the just struggle of the Palestinian and other Arab people against Zionism and hegemonism and for the recovery of their lost territories and the restoration of their national rights.

The spokesman for Benin said that if, since 1976 when the Committee's first report was submitted, the Council had been unable to take a decision, it was because of the diversionary tactics adopted by the enemies of peace in the Middle East. However, he added, the manoeuvres of the imperialists and their puppets to prevent the Council from recognizing the rights of the Palestinian people were doomed to failure. The determination of PLO in its legitimate struggle against the oppressors was an invincible weapon; sooner or later the Palestinian people would triumph. Benin, he said, entirely approved the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian rights, which were made with a view to achieving a just and lasting settlement. He went on to observe that, in order to satisfy certain private arrangements, the Council—subjected as usual to inadmissible pressures—was holding its meeting just for appearances and that no positive result was to be expected. Benin, as a member of the Council, sincerely regretted being involved in this "tragicomedy."

The representative of Mauritius said his country fully supported the report of the Committee. The world could ill afford at this critical time to ignore the rights of the Palestinians. He noted that efforts were under way to secure a comprehensive settlement on a lasting and just basis, with the participation of all parties concerned, and said that Mauritius would contribute towards securing such a settlement in any way it could.

The representative of India said he did not share the impression of the representative of Benin that the Council was participating in some sort of tragicomedy. He expressed India's support for the legitimate rights of the Arab people of Palestine, which remained inalienable and were protected by international law, although the question of their exercise had yet to be resolved. He hoped that the current diplomatic initiatives to reconvene the Peace Conference on the Middle East would succeed and that the legitimate rights and interests of all parties, including those of the Palestinian people, would be adequately ensured. Any other course of action would not result in a peace settlement that was just and enduring.

At the conclusion of the discussion, the President of the Council announced that, after consultations with Council members, it had been agreed that debate on the item would be adjourned and that the next meeting would be fixed after consultations among members.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The General Assembly considered the question of Palestine at meetings held between 28 November and 2 December 1977. It had before it, in addition to the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, the following communications having a bearing on the question:

— a letter dated 10 August from the Chairman of the Committee transmitting the text of a resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers and approved by the Summit Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), held at Libreville, Gabon, in July 1977. By this resolution, among other things the Ministers: reaffirmed their total support for the Arab frontline States and the Palestinian people in their legitimate struggle to recover, by all means, their occupied territories and usurped rights; declared their support of PLO as the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian people; endorsed the recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian rights and requested the General Assembly to take all measures for their implementation; and requested the Security Council to reconsider its position concerning those recommendations and to take measures to implement them;

— a letter dated 30 September from the representative of Sri Lanka transmitting the text of a declaration adopted that day at an extraordinary meeting in New York of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of non-aligned countries on the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine in the light of recent developments. By this declaration, the Ministers among other things said they considered it of prime importance that the Committee on Palestinian rights should continue to pursue its task. They invited all delegations to give their active support to the adoption of the Committee's report; and — a letter dated 5 October from the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitting the text of the final communique of an extraordinary meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Islamic Conference held in New York on 3 October 1977, emphasizing among other things that it was of prime importance that the Committee should continue to pursue its task. All Islamic countries were invited to lend their active support towards the achievement of the adoption of the Committee's report.

Introducing the Committee's report in the General Assembly, the Chairman said that certain members of the Security Council felt it was not timely to take a decision on the question of the Committee's report and recommendations. He believed, however, that the peace efforts currently under way should not be a pretext for indefinitely immobilizing the Security Council. On the contrary, the recent progress in recognizing the rights of the Palestinians should serve as an incentive and encourage positive action by the Council on this matter. The Committee expected that the Council would resume its debate as soon as circumstances permitted. The Assembly for its part, he said, should grasp the opportunity and appeal again to the Security Council to approve the Committee's recommendations without delay.

The Committee's Rapporteur said that the recommendations of the Committee remained unchanged and their validity was undiminished, as the first steps in the envisaged timetable had not yet been taken. The pace of progress was slow, he said, but an important phase had been reached; the United Nations should either keep moving forward or suffer the consequences of its irresolution. As for the parties most directly involved, the generous first step should come from the temporary trespasser and not from the oppressed victims, he said.

A summary of some of the points made during the Assembly's discussion follows.

The PLO representative said that the schism resulting from the visit on 19 November by the President of Egypt to occupied Jerusalem had split the Arab world. The situation was fraught with dangers of new explosions, as extremism took over from moderation. He stressed that PLO would fight any attempt to whittle down or sweep away the rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, to return to its land and to establish its own independent Palestinian State enjoying full independence with no strings attached. No one could impose on it a solution it rejected.

The representative of Jordan said there could never be peace in the Middle East until Palestinian Arab rights were recognized and restored. The Palestinians would not fade away from the face of the earth, no matter what happened. He noted that Jordan had within its borders at least 1 million Palestinian refugees and displaced persons; it pledged its unswerving support in every struggle and endeavour to restore their inalienable rights. He repeated that it was for the Palestinians to determine their future and shape their destiny, freely and without hindrance from any side. He urged support for the Committee's report, which he described as a position paper, a policy programme of implementation which grappled with most of the conceivable variables that might be raised and tried pragmatically to find appropriate solutions.

The Egyptian representative said that Egypt firmly believed that any solution to the Middle East problem should be made within the framework of the United Nations. Egypt had therefore called for a preparatory meeting to be held in Cairo, in which all the parties to the conflict, including PLO, the United Nations and the Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East, would take part. This preparatory meeting, he said, would make careful and proper preparation for the Peace Conference, thus avoiding many futile controversies. Egypt hoped that all parties would respond.

He went on to note that President Sadat in his historic address in Jerusalem on 20 November 1977 had emphasized that the Palestinian question lay at the heart of the problem. There would be no basis for true peace unless it was founded on justice, not on the occupation of other people's land. No one could seek for himself what he denied to others.

According to the spokesman for Israel, the report of the Committee on Palestinian rights, with its blatant disregard of Israel's own sovereign rights, bore no relation to the new era that had dawned in the Middle East—an era of direct dialogue based on mutual respect, in which the substantive issues separating Israel from its neighbours would be resolved not by sterile speeches but by face-to-face negotiations. Despite the obstacles which the Assembly continued to place in the path of peace, he said, Israel remained ready to enter into immediate negotiations with all its neighbours with a view to achieving a just and lasting peace. It had always maintained that a direct and open dialogue was the only way to attain that goal, and it urged that the constructive dialogue begun between Egypt and Israel be extended to all parties involved in the conflict. In the negotiations, everything had to be negotiable, without pre-conditions. In that context, he added, Israel was committed to a just solution of the Palestine Arab issue, to be sought within the framework of a comprehensive solution of the conflict as a whole.

The representative of the United States said that the General Assembly could not dictate to Israel and its Arab neighbours either the form of negotiations or the elements of a settlement, which was, unfortunately, precisely what the Committee on Palestinian rights was created to do. The United States, he said, did not believe that the work of the Committee was a practical contribution to the search for peace in the Middle East. The United States had opposed the creation of the Committee and had opposed its one-sided and unrealistic recommendations for a settlement.

According to the representative of Belgium, who spoke on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Community, the Palestinian problem was one of the questions at the centre of the Middle East conflict, a solution of which would be possible only if the legiti-mate right of the Palestinian people to give effective expression to its national identity were translated into reality—which would, she said, take into account the necessity for a homeland for the Palestinian people. The nine Governments, while stressing that those legitimate rights had to be recognized by Israel, also insisted on the necessity for the Arab side, including the Palestinian people, to recognize Israel's right to live in peace within secure and recognized borders.

She went on to say that the nine countries continued to have reservations about the mandate of the Committee on Palestinian rights, which isolated one of the aspects of the settlement of the conflict, and they felt that the recommendations suffered, on the whole, from a fundamental lack of balance. In connexion with the recent attempts to promote the resumption of the negotiations in the framework of the Geneva Peace Conference, she recalled a statement of 29 June 1977 by the heads of Government of the nine countries, reaffirming that the representatives of the Palestinian people should participate in those negotiations on lines agreed between all interested parties.

The representative of Czechoslovakia said it had become clear that the just cause of the Palestinian people was receiving broad support throughout the world, not only from the socialist and the Arab countries but even from the majority of other countries—in particular of the developing countries, which, he said, had clearly expressed their support for the Arab people of Palestine and fully supported their just demands. His Government was convinced that a successful conclusion of the just struggle of the Arab States demanded, as a prerequisite, unity on their part and joint action. No one should be deceived by proposals to conduct separate negotiations whose purpose was to create favourable conditions for one side, with no account at all being taken of the fundamental rights and interests of the Arab people of Palestine and the interests of the Arab States as a whole. Czechoslovakia, he said, supported the proposal to resume the Geneva Peace Conference with the participation of all the interested parties, including PLO, on an equal footing. The Conference should serve as an effective tool for the solution of all problems of the Middle East, until the time when the legitimate rights of the Arab people of Palestine could be ensured and the security of all the States in the Middle East guaranteed.

The spokesman for Yugoslavia noted that the Committee was the first United Nations body to have elaborated and defined the concept and essence of Palestinian rights in a comprehensive manner, which would prove important in the search for a solution of the Middle East and Palestine questions. He went on to state that Israel's denial of the right of Palestinians to their State was unacceptable, because—according to United Nations resolutions—the legal basis for the establishment of both the Israeli and the Palestinian States was the same. The right to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty had its political basis in the fact that the international community as a whole, except Israel, had recognized the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. It was impossible, he said, to conceive legitimate rights without the right to self-determination. Israel's arguments for denying the rights of Palestinians were the need for secure borders and the alleged danger threatening Israel owing to the close vicinity of the Palestinian state. These arguments were unfounded, he said, and were motivated by Israel's policy of annexation. The best guarantee for Israel's security was respect for the security and territorial integrity of its neighbours. The continuation of the occupation could only create new disturbances and lead to new conflicts in the region. Security could be attained, he said, only through the creation of conditions liable to promote mutual trust, which could be achieved primarily through ending the occupation and accepting the establishment of an independent Palestinian state.

According to the spokesman for Sri Lanka, there could be no settlement of the Middle East problem that did not recognize the Palestinian people's right to a State and a right to return to it. He said it was preposterous that Israel should demand recognition of itself as a State from a people who were themselves denied a right to a State. The most powerful State in the Middle East—in the military sense of the term—contended, he observed, that the existence of a Palestinian Arab State would endanger its security, and by that statement it vetoed the creation or even the possibility of the creation of that other State. He wondered whether any nation in the world enjoyed that type of security, that absolute guarantee. For Israel to demand such a guarantee of security was to raise serious doubts about the sincerity of its purposes.

He went on to say that the claim of PLO to represent and speak for the Palestinians was irrefutable, and he noted that the mayors of Jerusalem, Ramallah, Beit Sahour, Nablus, Halhoul, Hebron, Bethlehem, Beit Jala, Doura, Qalqilya and Gaza, the elected representatives of the Palestinian Arabs under occupation, had recognized PLO as the leader of their struggle for the attainment of their legitimate rights. The Palestinian Arabs had a place at the negotiating table and they alone, he said, had the right to make their choice of representatives.

Sweden's representative said that President Sadat's visit to Israel was an historic event which could have an important influence on developments in the Middle East; his Government hoped that it would increase the possibility of an early convening of the Geneva Conference. He said the interests and rights of the Palestinian Arabs had not been sufficiently taken into consideration in the previous attempts at attaining a settlement of the Middle East question. Those rights included the right to form a State that would live in peace side by side with Israel. The Palestinians should also be assured participation in negotiations. The role of PLO, as the most representative spokesman for the Palestinian Arabs, had to be considered as fundamental in that context. The situation required the utmost wisdom and careful action on all sides, and he urged the parties to try to create a really viable peace process and avoid unnecessary discord.

On 2 December 1977, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the question of Palestine. The first—resolution 32/40 A, adopted by a recorded vote of 100 to 12, with 29 abstentions—was sponsored by 31 powers.

By the preamble, the Assembly among other things expressed concern that no just solution to the problem of Palestine had been achieved and that this problem therefore continued to aggravate the Middle East conflict, of which it was the core, and to endanger international peace and security. It reaffirmed that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East could not be established without the achievement, inter alia, of a just solution of the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return and the right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. The Assembly took note of decisions adopted on the question of Palestine by the Council of Ministers of OAU in July 1977, by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of non-aligned countries in September; and by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Islamic Conference, in October.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, took note of its report and endorsed recommendations contained therein.

It noted with satisfaction that, during the consideration of the report of the Committee by the Security Council in October 1977, all Council members which participated in the discussion reaffirmed that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East could not be established without the achievement, in particular, of a just solution of the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. It urged the Council to take as soon as possible a decision on the recommendations endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 31/20 as a basis for the solution of that problem.

The Assembly decided, by this resolution, to circulate the report to all competent United Nations bodies and urged them to take necessary action in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation; it asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Committee's reports to all conferences on the Middle East held under the auspices of the United Nations, including the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East.

The Committee was authorized to continue to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations, to send delegations or representatives to international conferences, where appropriate, and to report thereon to the Assembly in 1978. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks.

The Assembly decided to include the item "Question of Palestine" in the provisional agenda of its regular 1978 session.

The second resolution—32/40 B—was sponsored by 25 Members and adopted by a recorded vote of 95 to 20, with 26 abstentions.

After recognizing the need for the greatest possible dissemination of information on the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and on the efforts of the United Nations to promote the attainment of those rights, the Assembly:

(1) requested the Secretary-General to establish within the United Nations Secretariat a Special Unit on Palestinian Rights which would (a) prepare, under the guidance of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, studies and publications relating to those rights, to relevant United Nations resolutions, and to the activities of the Committee and other United Nations organs to promote the attainment of those rights, (b) promote maximum publicity for such studies and publications through all appropriate means, and (c) organize in consultation with the Committee, commencing in 1978, the annual observance of 29 November as the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People;

(2) further requested the Secretary-General to ensure the full co-operation of the Office of Public Information and other Secretariat units in enabling the Special Unit to perform its tasks; and

(3) invited all Governments and organizations to co-operate with the Committee and the Special Unit in the implementation of the resolution.

(For text of resolution 32/40 B, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Speaking in explanation of vote, the Israeli representative said that anti-Israeli activities were already costing the United Nations huge sums and the new proposals would add to the amount being spent to churn out hatred and vilification of his country. There was no precedent for the Special Unit proposed, he said, and its establishment at the behest of PLO seriously prejudiced the impartiality of the Secretariat itself. That body, which had a role to play both in relation to the peace-keeping forces of the Middle East and in reconvening the Geneva Peace Conference, would, he warned, lose its standing as an honest broker and forfeit any positive role it might have played in bringing the parties together. He said that history would recall that when the Middle East stood for the first time in 30 years on the verge of serious and direct negotiations, the Assembly chose to ignore those opportunities and to reaffirm a series of hostile recommendations which blatantly disregarded the sovereign rights of a Member State.

The representative of Malta, Rapporteur of the Committee on Palestinian rights, said he wanted to remind the Assembly, in view of the remarks of the representative of Israel, that the Committee had made clear in its report that its work came within the framework of the United Nations and was complementary to the efforts for a just and lasting peace. Its work was not directed against any particular State.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3236 (XXIX) of 22 November 1974, 3376 (XXX) of 10 November 1975 and 31/20 of 24 November 1976,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Having heard the statement of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people,

Deeply concerned that no just solution to the problem of Palestine has been achieved and that this problem therefore continues to aggravate the Middle East conflict, of which it is the core, and to endanger international peace and security,

Reaffirming that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East cannot be established without the achievement, inter alia, of a just solution of the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return and the right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking note of the resolution on the question of Palestine adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-ninth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 23 June to 3 July 1977,

Taking note of the Declaration on the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of non-aligned countries at their extraordinary meeting in New York on 30 September 1977,

Taking note also of the final communiqué of the extraordinary meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Islamic Conference, held in New York on 3 October 1977,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Takes note of the report of the Committee and endorses the recommendations contained in paragraphs 43 and 44 of that report;

3. Notes with satisfaction that, during the consideration of the report of the Committee by the Security Council at its 2041st meeting, on 27 October 1977, all members of the Council who participated in the discussion reaffirmed that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East could not be established without the achievement, in particular, of a just solution of the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people;

4. Urges the Security Council to take as soon as possible a decision on the recommendations endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 31/20 as a basis for the solution of the problem of Palestine;

5. Decides to circulate the report to all the competent bodies of the United Nations and urges them to take necessary action, as appropriate, in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the reports of the Committee to all conferences on the Middle East held under the auspices of the United Nations, including the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East;

7. Authorizes the Committee to continue to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations, to send delegations or representatives to international conferences where such representation would be considered by it to be appropriate, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks, including summary records of its meetings;

9. Decides to include the item entitled "Question of Palestine" in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Noting, in particular, the observations contained in paragraphs 38 to 42 of that report,

Recognizing the need for the greatest possible dissemination of information on the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and on the efforts of the United Nations to promote the attainment of those rights,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to establish within the Secretariat of the United Nations a Special Unit on Palestinian Rights which would:

(a) Prepare, under the guidance of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, studies and publications relating to:

(i) The inalienable rights of the Palestinian people;

(ii) Relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and other organs of the United Nations;

(iii) The activities of the Committee and other United Nations organs, in order to promote the attainment of those rights;

(b) Promote maximum publicity for such studies and publications through all appropriate means;

(c) Organize in consultation with the Committee, commencing in 1978, the annual observance of 29 November as the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure the full co-operation of the Office of Public Information and other units of the Secretariat in enabling the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights to perform its tasks;

3. Invites all Governments and organizations to lend their co-operation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights in the implementation of the present resolution.

The situation in the occupied territories

Treatment of civilian population in the Israeli-occupied territories

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council

At its thirty-third session in February/March 1977, the Commission on Human Rights considered the 1976 report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and adopted two resolutions on the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East.

By the first, the Commission shared the Security Council's expressed anxiety over the serious situation in the occupied territories as a result of continued Israeli occupation. It expressed its alarm at the continuation by Israel of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in those territories, in particular measures aimed at annexation, as well as torture and ill-treatment of detainees.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Commission called on Israel to take immediate steps for the return of the Palestinians and other displaced inhabitants of the occupied Arab territories to their homes. It deplored Israel's continued violations of the basic norms of international law and of international conventions, in particular its breaches of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (the fourth Geneva Convention), and Israel's persistent defiance of United Nations resolutions. It condemned a number of Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories, which it enumerated in the resolution, and also condemned the massive deliberate destruction of the Syrian city of Quneitra perpetrated during Israeli occupation and prior to the withdrawal of Israeli forces in 1974. It reaffirmed that all measures taken by Israel to change the character or demographic composition and status of the occupied territories or any part thereof—including Jerusalem—were null and void. The Commission also declared null and void all measures taken by Israel with a view to changing the structure, status and established religious practices in the sanctuary of Al-Ibrahimi Mosque in the city of Al-Khalil (Hebron) and called on Israel to rescind all such measures taken.

The Commission called on Israel to release all Arabs imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and national liberation, and to accord them the treatment of prisoners of war. It asked the Secretary-General to collect all relevant information concerning detainees, such as their number, identity, place and the duration of their detention, and to make this information available to it at its 1978 session.

The Commission called on Israel to comply with its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights³² and to abide by its obligations under the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949. The Commission reiterated its call upon all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid any actions which might be used by Israel in pursuit of proscribed policies and practices.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to bring this resolution to the attention of all Governments, competent United Nations organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to give it the widest possible publicity, and to report to the Commission at its 1978 session, when, it was decided, the matter would be given high priority under the new title "Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine." The Secretary-General was requested to bring to the attention of the Commission all United Nations reports appearing between sessions of the Commission that dealt with the situation of the civilians of the occupied territories.

By the preambular part of the second resolution, the Commission recalled the General Assembly's resolution of 16 December 1976³³ by which it reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to all occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem. By the operative part of the text, the Commission deplored the failure of Israel to acknowledge the applicability of that Convention to all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and urgently called upon Israel to acknowledge and to comply with the provisions of the Convention in those territories. The Commission urged all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the occupied territories. The Secretary-General was requested to bring this resolution to the attention of all Governments, competent United Nations organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations.

The Commission also decided to send a telegram to the Government of Israel expressing its deep concern at reports of the deaths of Arab detainees in Israeli prisons attributable to the conditions of their imprisonment, and called upon Israel to take urgent measures to ensure improvement in prison conditions and refrain from ill-treatment of detainees.

At its session in April/May 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2085(LXII)) on the question of the violation by Israel of human rights in the occupied Arab territories. By this resolution, it took note of the action of the Human Rights Commission on the question, commended it for its vigilance and for action taken in connexion with the protection of human rights in the occupied territories, and requested it to pursue its efforts in this regard and continue to take appropriate measures. For details, see p. 694.

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination also took decisions on the question of human rights in the occupied territories. For details, see p. 695.

Report of the Special Committee in 1977

The ninth report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, established by the General Assembly in 1969, was transmitted to the Assembly on 17 October 1977. Among its principal observations was that Israel, as occupying power, had persisted in its violation of the fourth Geneva Convention throughout 1977 and that the day-to-day situation in the territories continued to be tense, marked by incidents which often led to injury and loss of life of innocent civilians. Such incidents, the report said, were directly attributable to the military occupation.

The report noted that the Government of Israel had continued to deny the Special Committee access to the occupied territories. As a result, it had been unable to conduct its investigations on the spot; however, as in the past, it had been able to follow developments on a day-to-day basis by examining: information gathered from various sources, such as the Israeli and Arab press; evidence furnished by Governments; oral testimony; information contained in United Nations documents; and information communicated by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and contained in ICRC publications.

The Special Committee reported that, on the basis of information received since the preceding report, the Government of Israel had continued to implement a policy of annexation and settlement of the occupied territories. The situation of civilians had given cause for concern in several areas, and the report included accounts of strikes, demonstrations, arrests, imposition of curfews and ill-treatment of youths. Accounts of ill-treatment of civilian detainees during and immediately after arrest, as well as during interrogation, trial and imprisonment, were cited in the report, and the pattern of arrests that emerged over the period under review showed a constantly swelling prison population; prison overcrowding was underlined as a major cause for concern. The Special Committee also concluded, on the basis of information received, that a strong prima facie case had been established that detainees were subjected to treatment which could not be described as other than torture.

The Special Committee again referred to the destruction of structures in the town of Quneitra by Israel, and transmitted to the General Assembly a report prepared by an expert engaged to assess damages not covered in a previous survey, in particular damages to furniture and streets resulting from the destruction of the town in 1974.

A significant development during 1977, according to the Special Committee, was the emergence of a policy followed by the occupying power based on the assumption that the territories in question were not occupied territories. This belief, the report noted, was at the root of the thesis held by Israel that the fourth Geneva Convention did not apply to the occupied territories. However, the Special Committee said, it was universally recognized that the Convention did apply to the territories occupied as a result of the 1967 hostilities, as had been attested to by the many General Assembly resolutions on the subject, as well as the traditional stand taken by ICRC.

The Special Committee noted the continued preparation of detailed plans to settle the occupied territories, as formulated by the Israeli Minister of Agriculture, according to which a number of Israeli settlements, linked by a network of highways, were to be established in all parts of the occupied territories over the next 20 years. In the same context, the Special Committee noted a significant increase in reports of expropriation and purchase of land, including reports of Government budgetary appropriations for that purpose. It observed that such purchases were invalid; military conquest and occupation were not recognized as bestowing valid title to property.

The Special Committee noted that with the establishment of eight new settlements, bringing the number to 84, there were reported to be nearly 10,000 Israeli citizens settled in the occupied territories, not including those in East Jerusalem. The twin policies under which the territories and persons were governed were resulting in changes in the physical character and in the demographic composition of those territories, and the Special Committee saw no sign whatsoever that that pattern would change in the foreseeable future.

The Special Committee observed, in conclusion, that its findings reflected the continuing deterioration of the situation in the occupied territories, noticeable in the policy of annexation and settlement, the day-to-day life of the civilians, and the treatment of detainees. The number of settlements continued to grow, as did the number of Israeli civilians living in the occupied territories and the number of major roads linking the extreme areas of those territories. The situation of the civilians living there continued to deteriorate as the frequency of incidents which affected day-to-day life continued to increase. In some areas civilians were directly subjected to interference by the occupying power, such as those who were expelled from certain areas in occupied Jerusalem; in other areas interference was indirect. The most serious deterioration recorded by the Special Committee during 1977 had been that of civilians in detention. The numerous reports confirming that ill-treatment of detainees occurred frequently during interrogation, the unsatisfactory manner in which trials were conducted and the situation of detainees in overcrowded prisons were matters of distress.

The Special Committee once more appealed to the international community, through the General Assembly, to assume its responsibility to end the occupation, thereby safeguarding the most fundamental of the human rights of the population of the occupied territories. Pending the early termination of the occupation, the Special Committee recommended that a suitable mechanism be established to safeguard the human rights of the civilian population which had been so long exposed to military occupation.

In that connexion, the Special Committee reiterated the proposal it had made in previous years for the adoption of an arrangement³⁴ based on the protecting-power formula envisaged under the fourth Geneva Convention in an effort to ensure protection of civilian persons in the occupied territories. In addition, and in view of the serious deterioration in the situation of detainees, the Special Committee urged the Assembly to ensure that a mechanism was set up, similar to that proposed by ICRC, establishing commissions of inquiry.

Communications

During the year several communications were received relating to the condition of the civilian population in the occupied territories.

By a letter dated 23 May 1977, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a letter of 19 May from the Permanent Observer of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) in which he charged that on 3 May Israeli military occupation forces in the West Bank had opened fire on Palestinian demonstrators, killing a 55-year-old woman and a 15-year-old boy; the boy had been denied a religious burial by the Israeli forces. Israeli authorities had declared extensive territory in the areas of Jenin and Qabatyia to be closed, and farmers had been prevented from tilling their lands. There had been widespread reaction in the Palestinian towns of Nablus, Ramallah and Jenin, a general strike had been declared protesting the practices of the occupying force and approximately 70 Palestinians had been detained, the letter said.

By a letter dated 30 June, the representative of the Sudan, in his capacity as current Chairman of the Arab group of Member States, forwarded the text of an article entitled "Israel tortures Arab prisoners" and a related editorial that had appeared in The Sunday Times (London) of 19 June 1977.

By a note verbale dated 19 September, the representative of Egypt drew attention to a report published by the Swiss League for Human Rights about the common and systematic use of torture and of expropriation, confiscation and destruction of Arab property by Israel against the population of the occupied territories. The report was prepared by a four-man group headed by the League's President, the letter added.

On 20 October, the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted the text of a telegram addressed to the Secretary-General by Moslem and Christian leaders in Jordan urging that he intervene for the liberation of Archbishop Hilarion Capucci, who had been detained in Israeli prisons for three years and who was seriously ill.

On 7 November, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, as current Chairman of the Arab group of Member States, transmitted the text of the testimony of journalists Paul Eddy and Peter Gillman of The Sunday Times (London), at hearings held at the United Nations Office in Geneva on 6 and 7 September 1977 under the auspices of the Special Committee, asking that it be distributed as a document of the General Assembly.

On 15 November, the representative of Israel transmitted excerpts from a briefing given on 29 July by the Attorney General of Israel to members of the press corps in Jerusalem, concerning the allegations of ill-treatment of prisoners in Israel as published in The Sunday Times of London on 19 June 1977. He also enclosed an article entitled "More insight on torture," by David Krivine, which was published in the ³⁴ See Y.U.N., 1972, p. 432.

Jerusalem Post on 28 October 1977. Both of these items, the letter said, showed the falsity of the trumped-up charges levelled against Israel without any grounding in fact or without any effort to substantiate the allegations by reference to the competent Israeli authorities.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories was considered at the General Assembly's regular 1977 session by the Special Political Committee, which also had before it a report by the Secretary-General in which he described the measures he had taken to comply with an Assembly request³⁵ that he provide the necessary facilities and staff to the Special Committee and ensure the widest circulation of its report and of information regarding its activities and findings.

The Special Political Committee considered the question at meetings between 14 and 29 November. It approved three draft resolutions on 29 November which were adopted by the General Assembly on 13 December.

By the preambular part of the first of these (resolution 32/91 A), the Assembly among other things recalled that Israel and those Arab States whose territories had been occupied by Israel since June 1967 were parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and that States parties to that Convention undertook not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly: (1) reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 was applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem; (2) strongly deplored Israel's failure to acknowledge the applicability of the Convention to those territories; (3) called again on Israel to acknowledge and comply with the provisions of the Convention in all the territories it had occupied, including Jerusalem; and (4) once more urged all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions.

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 132 to 1, with 1 abstention; the Special Political Committee had approved the text by a roll-call vote of 114 to 1. The text was sponsored by Bangladesh, Chad, India, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan, Senegal, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

(For text of resolution 32/91 A and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By a second resolution (32/91 B) the Assembly, having considered the expert's report on damage at Quneitra, expressed its appreciation of the report; condemned the massive deliberate destruction of Quneitra perpetrated by Israeli forces, reaffirmed that the Syrian Arab Republic was entitled to full compensation under international law and in equity for the damage, took note of the statements made by the Syrian representative reserving all the rights to full compensation for all damages, including those not covered by the expert's report, requested the Special Committee to complete the survey on damage in Quneitra, and requested the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with all facilities required to complete this task.

This resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 96 to 1, with 37 abstentions; the Special Political Committee had approved the text by a roll-call vote of 83 to 1, with 33 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Byelorussian SSR, the Comoros, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Mali, Pakistan, Senegal, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam.

(For text of resolution 32/91 B and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the terms of the third resolution (32/91 C), the General Assembly commended the efforts of the Special Committee in performing its tasks, deplored the continued refusal of Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories, and again called on it to allow such access.

The Assembly also by this resolution deplored Israel's continued and persistent violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and other applicable international instruments.

It condemned the following Israeli policies and practices and demanded that Israel desist from them immediately: (a) the annexation of parts of the occupied territories; (b) the establishment of Israeli settlements therein and the transfer of an alien population thereto; (c) the evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories, and the denial of their right to return; (d) the confiscation and expropriation of Arab property in the occupied territories and all other transactions for the acquisition of land involving the Israeli authorities, institutions or nationals on the one hand, and the inhabitants or institutions of the occupied territories on the other; (e) the destruction and demolition of Arab houses; (f) mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population; (g) the ill-treatment and torture of persons under detention; (h) the pilaging of archaeological and cultural property; (i) the interference with religious freedoms and practices, as well as with family rights and customs; and (j) the illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and population of the occupied territories.

³⁵ See Y.U.N., 1976, pp. 264-65, text of resolution 31/106 C of 16 December 1976.

The Assembly reaffirmed that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, or any part thereof, including Jerusalem, were null and void, and that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and relevant United Nations resolutions.

The Assembly reiterated its call upon all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, which might be used by Israel in pursuit of its policies of annexation and colonization.

The Special Committee was asked to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the occupied Arab territories, to consult with ICRC, as appropriate, to ensure the safeguarding of the welfare and human rights of the population of the territories, and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arose. The Special Committee was also requested to continue to investigate the treatment of civilians in detention in the occupied territories and to submit a special report to the Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General was asked by the Assembly: to render all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories; to continue to make available additional staff as might be necessary to assist the Special Committee; to ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee, and of information regarding its activities and findings, through the Office of Public Information; to reprint, where necessary, those reports of the Special Committee which were no longer available; and to report to the Assembly in 1978, when the item would again be included in the Assembly's agenda.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 98 to 2, with 32 abstentions; the Special Political Committee had approved the text by a roll-call vote of 84 to 2, with 30 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Comoros, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan, Senegal, Uganda and Viet Nam.

(For text of resolution 32/91 C and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion, the Rapporteur of the Special Committee, introducing the Committee's report, said the Committee had not been able to obtain direct proof of violence stemming from the occupation because Israel had opposed its repeated requests in that connexion; nevertheless, it had reached its conclusions on the basis of information derived from the Israeli press and from all the other sources of information generally accepted as being sympathetic to the Government. He said the Special Committee had relied also on the evidence of individuals who had visited the site of the alleged occurrences. The Committee paid tribute to the journalists of The Sunday Times of London, who, in the face of many difficulties, had carried out a major investigation into the situation of civilian prisoners. The humanitarian aspect of that work could provide a useful basis for decisions to be adopted by the General Assembly with a view to improving the situation of the prisoners, he added.

He went on to observe that resistance would cease only when the occupation was ended, and Israel would not enjoy security until the Palestinians returned to their native land. Resistance and demonstrations were continuing and he cited the report of ICRC for the previous year that, as a reaction to the legitimate liberation struggle, Israel had detained 3,000 civilians for so-called security reasons and 400 for ordinary offences.

Another matter for concern, he said, was the torture and inhuman treatment of detainees during questioning. The Committee had ascertained that Israel had taken no effective measures to improve the situation. The exclusive powers of the interrogating official, and the lack of any humanitarian or legal defence against the inevitable abuses, lent credibility to the accusations which had been made.

The Rapporteur said the Special Committee believed that the international community should have the possibility of verifying the facts on the spot, since it remained convinced that Israeli practices affecting human rights in the territories were part of a scheme to establish in Palestine and in the occupied territories a Jewish State where there would be no room for any alien element, whether religious or ethnic.

The representative of Israel said that the Special Committee and the General Assembly had let themselves be carried away over the past nine years by a campaign of calumny and vilification of Israel, in the service of the war-mongering policy of the Arab States. That evil campaign had reached new heights, he said, and the Israeli Government wished to denounce the nefarious and deliberate use of the United Nations for ends contrary to its Charter and detrimental to international peace. If the Special Committee's report were to be believed, the Arabs living in the territories administered by Israel were being permanently held hostage, their property was being expropriated and pillaged, they were being arrested and imprisoned for no valid reason, they were being judged by unjust courts and were being subjected to abominable tortures while in detention. That disgusting picture, he said, was the product of a sick imagination, one that Arab propaganda wanted to paint of Israel. To that end, it was using the Special Committee and the well-known automatic majority, and the United Nations was becoming an instrument to propagate perfidious anti-Semitism.

He charged that the Special Committee had reported on incidents in the territories in a selective, distorted way. Israel was doing its utmost to promote day-to-day coexistence between Arabs and Jews. All obstacles notwithstanding, life in common was coming about. Naturally there were strikes and demonstrations from time to time, but they were not frequent. The Arab residents desired stability and did not want to be involved in tragic events like those in Lebanon, he added.

As for the allegedly crowded conditions of the prisons, he said that by the end of 1976 plans were in the works to accommodate 1,000 prisoners by the end of 1977. In reply to the accusations of mistreatment of prisoners, he expressed strong reservations about the reliability or objectivity of the sources of the Special Committee's information.

The representative of Israel suggested that the Special Political Committee concentrate its efforts on adopting a single recommendation inviting Israel and the Arab States to initiate peace talks as soon as possible within the framework of Security Council resolutions 242(1967)³⁶ and 338(1973).³⁷ Such a recommendation, he maintained, would demonstrate a realistic attitude which would save the honour of the United Nations and constitute responsible international action worthy of the Charter of the United Nations.

The spokesman for the Syrian Arab Republic said that the Special Committee deserved the highest praise for its courage and honesty in investigating the available evidence and in submitting a valuable report on the question, despite the fact that it had been prevented for the past nine years from entering the occupied territories. It was the only body through whose report the United Nations could view the occupied territories and the suffering inflicted on the Arab and Palestinian people as a result of the racist colonialist invasion. If conditions in the occupied territories were as the Israeli representative claimed, he wanted to know why Israel refused to co-operate with the Special Committee or to grant it permission to enter the territories, or submit information which would enable the Special Political Committee to present the true picture to the international community. These views were shared by a number of speakers. The observer for PLO added that if the Zionist authorities had nothing to hide, it would surely be to their advantage to let the Committee see the miracle they claimed to have wrought.

The Nigerian representative also expressed appreciation for the work of the Special Committee, whose report, he said, gave a truthful account of the various acts of Israeli authorities in the occupied Arab territories. It was not surprising that the Israeli practices had provoked an unending chain of spontaneous demonstrations by the Palestinians. The Israeli response had been one of increased repression, which in turn had provoked further demonstrations. It had brought about a vicious circle which could not be broken until the original causes of discontent were removed and until the Palestinians could freely exercise their inalienable rights to self-determination, freedom and independence in their own homeland.

He went on to observe that Israel's 1950 Law of Return allowed any Jew of any nationality to emigrate to Israel and acquire Israeli citizenship immediately. On the other hand, the hundreds of thousands of Palestinian Arabs who had been born in Palestine and had later been expelled from the area had been deprived of their rights of citizenship. According to Israeli law, there were a number of conditions that had to be met before a non-Jew could become eligible for citizenship, and those requirements effectively prevented the refugees from acquiring Israeli nationality. It was high time, he declared, that Israel's backers abandoned their hypocritical attitude and condemned the continued violation of the basic rights of the Palestinians and the non-Jewish population in the occupied territories.

According to the representative of Bangladesh, the most important aspect of the Israeli occupation was the violation of the human rights of the population of the occupied territories and the denial of the right to return of hundreds of thousands of civilians who had fled their homes during and after the 1967 hostilities. Expropriations and purchases of land in those territories were invalid because military conquest and occupation bestowed no valid title to property. The constantly increasing prison population and strong evidence that detainees were subjected to torture highlighted the need for urgent action by the international community. Lengthy statements of universal condemnation of those Israeli practices were of no value if they did not result in substantive action. Member States had to assume their responsibility to end the Israeli occupation as soon as possible and in the meantime see that a suitable mechanism was established to safeguard the human rights of the civilian population. Israel had to acknowledge that the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, to which it was a signatory, was applicable to the territories it had occupied since the 1967 war and had to comply with its provisions and with the principles of international law. A number of speakers expressed similar views.

The representative of Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Community, said that, with regard to the humanitarian and demographic aspects of the problem, the nine Governments had stated on many occasions that in their view the fourth Geneva Convention was entirely applicable to the occupied territories. They regretted that Israel did not accept the principle of the applicability of that Convention, which conferred responsibilities on the occupying power and authorized certain measures with regard to the inhabitants, but prohibited any unilateral modification of the demographic and physical nature of occupied territories. For the same reasons, they remained opposed to any unilateral modification of the status of Jerusalem and the Holy Places. She recalled that the Community had also had reservations with regard to the Special Committee; because of the way in which it had been conceived and the difficulties it encountered in its task it was not able to pass an exhaustive judgement on the situation. The nine Governments had nevertheless carefully studied the passages of the report concerning the conditions of detention and the treatment of prisoners and found certain elements which gave rise to concern.

The Bulgarian representative said that, despite the Israeli Government's continuing refusal to allow representatives of the Special Committee to visit the occupied territories, the report clearly showed that oppression of the civilian population and violation of its basic human rights were escalating at the same rate as Israel's action to perpetuate the occupation. The report showed, he said, the determination of the Arab population to fight for its rights. The rising tension in the occupied territories exposed the absurdity of Israeli attempts to assimilate the occupied Arab lands, to disregard the rights of the Palestinian people and to avoid a final settlement of the Middle East conflict. The unlawful Israeli practices in those territories had been condemned by democratic public opinion and many international organizations.

The spokesman for the Ukrainian SSR said that, in order to reach an equitable settlement of the conflict, Israel had to end its illegal occupation of the territories and withdraw its armed forces, the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and an independent State had to be recognized, and the independence and security of all States of the region had to be ensured and, if necessary, backed by international guarantees. The international community had to intensify its efforts to overcome the problems. To that end, the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East should be convened as soon as possible, with the participation of all the parties concerned, including PLO.

According to the spokesman for Albania, the Israeli invaders would not have been able to prolong their occupation of the Arab lands had it not been for the support of the United States imperialists and United States military and financial aid. The Zionist circles of Israel were also receiving assistance from the Soviet social-imperialists who, in all their demagoguery, pretended to be the friends and protectors of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples and, with their hegemonistic and expansionist policy in the Middle East, were further encouraging the Israeli aggressors in the implementation of their anti-Arab policy. Through their intrigues against the Arab peoples, and by allowing an ever greater number of Jews to emigrate from the USSR to Israel, the Soviet social-imperialists were helping the Israeli authorities to reinforce their war machine. The Zionists were thus using to their own advantage the rivalry between the two super-powers—the United States and the Soviet Union—which, through the so-called peaceful negotiations which they wished to impose at the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East, were working to force the Arab peoples to accept the Israeli occupation and their own hegemonistic rule in the region.

Following the voting, the Canadian representative said that Canada, as a signatory to the fourth Geneva Convention, took its application very seriously; it had stated on many occasions that it believed that the Convention did apply to the territories occupied by Israel. However, Canada considered that allegations that Israel was guilty of unspecified "grave breaches" of the Convention had not been proved.

The Japanese representative said that her country believed that the problems in the occupied territories were owing to their continuous occupation by Israel since 1967, and that Israel should withdraw from them. The Japanese Government was opposed to human rights violations in the territories and appealed to the Government of Israel scrupulously to apply the fourth Geneva Convention and refrain from any measure incompatible with its provisions.

The representative of the United States said that her Government had voted against resolution 32/91 C because it believed that it contained allegations which had not been adequately verified. The report on which the resolution was based presented a selective version of conditions in the occupied territories and drew extensively on questionable sources of information. Her country had voted in favour of resolution 32/91 A since it had long held that the fourth Geneva Convention applied throughout the territories occupied since 1967. It had abstained on resolution 32/91 B—concerning Quneitra—because it believed that the question of compensation was one which had to be addressed by the parties in the context of a final settlement, and that it should not be prejudged by the Special Political Committee.

The representative of Finland said it was most regrettable that the Special Committee could not have been established in a way that would have created better conditions for it to discharge its humanitarian mandate. Finland also deplored the continued refusal of Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories.

In a letter dated 9 December, the representative of Israel informed the Secretary-General that a delegation from ICRC had recently visited Israel to make contact with the new Government. Following the visit, the spokesman of the Israel Defence Forces announced a substantial extension of the arrangements for visits by ICRC delegates to security detainees in the territories. According to the new arrangements, the military government authorities would notify ICRC of the arrest of security detainees within 14 days of their arrest and an ICRC delegate would be entitled to visit without witnesses every such detainee within that period in order to ascertain his health. After the visit, if the ICRC delegate so requested, the detainee could promptly be examined without witnesses by a Red Cross physician. Agreement had been reached as to visits in special circumstances within less than 14 days from the arrest. A parallel statement was published by ICRC in Geneva on 6 December, the letter added.

It went on to state that although Israel did not consider that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to the territories, in practice it applied all the humanitarian provisions contained in it, and the representatives of ICRC were accorded all the rights and privileges provided for under it. It was emphasized that the new arrangements were in line with the Israeli Government's policy of allowing complete and free access to the territories and that the Israeli administration in the territories was willing and capable of operating under the full exposure of international opinion. It was hoped that the unusual and unprecedented step of allowing Red Cross delegates, accompanied, if necessary, by a Red Cross doctor, to visit detainees during the initial period of interrogation would go a long way towards quashing once and for all the empty allegations of Arab propaganda which had been raised again in the course of the current session of the General Assembly.

Questions concerning Israeli measures in occupied Arab territories

Communications

During 1977, the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received a number of communications concerning measures taken by Israel in the occupied Arab territories which involved the establishment of settlements and the application of Israeli laws to those territories.

By a letter dated 17 February 1977, the representative of Egypt transmitted the text of a statement issued on 16 February by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Egypt in which it was charged that a belt of settlements, including a city called Yamit, was being established by Israel in the north-eastern part of the Sinai, that the World Zionist Organization, which supervised the establishment of such settlements, had asked the Israeli Government for permission to establish 15 new villages in addition to those previously established, and that more than 1,500 Arab families had been evicted from their homes.

The statement added that Israel was resorting to such a policy in spite of the unanimous decision of the Security Council of 11 November 1976³⁸ deploring such measures and demanding their immediate cessation.

By a letter dated 29 July, the representative of Oman, on behalf of the Arab group of Member States, stated that on 26 July Israel had legalized three Jewish settlements in the occupied Arab territory near the towns of Kafr Kaddum, Khan Al-Ahmar and Ramallah. That latest measure in Israel's persistent policy of expansion and colonization, he said, violated the Charter of the United Nations, the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and numerous resolutions and decisions of the Security Council. It aggravated further an already explosive situation, the letter said.

By a letter dated 17 August, the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted the text of a declaration by his Government concerning recent measures taken by the Israeli Government in the occupied Arab territories, whereby it had announced that Israeli laws and regulations would be imposed on the population of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. The Syrian Arab Republic considered these measures to be no less than a deliberate move to legitimize the occupation and to pave the way for proclaiming the final annexation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip by the Zionist entity.

By a letter dated 19 August, the representative of Iraq said that in pursuance of its policy of annexation and expansion the Israeli Government had declared that it was enforcing its laws in the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip. That step was a flagrant violation of the principles of the United Nations Charter, the 1949 Geneva Conventions and relevant United Nations resolutions. He annexed to his letter a message from the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States to the United Nations Secretary-General, asking him to interfere in order to put an end to such aggressive actions by Israel.

As current Chairman of the Arab group, he requested that the Security Council assume its responsibility in maintaining peace and security by taking immediate action to stop the illegal measures, which represented yet another step in the systematic Israeli aggressive policy against the Palestinian people.

By a letter dated 25 August, addressed to the Secretary-General, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Egypt requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's thirty-second (1977) session of an item entitled "Recent illegal Israeli measures in the occupied Arab territories designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories in contravention of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, of Israel's international obligations under the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 and of United Nations resolutions, and obstruction of efforts aimed at achieving a just and lasting peace in the Middle East."

In an explanatory memorandum accompanying the request, Egypt said that the Israeli Government had recently begun to escalate its policy of changing the geographical nature, demographic composition and legal status of the Arab territories occupied since 5 June 1967. One manifestation had been the announcement by the Israeli authorities of their approval of the creation of additional settlements in the West Bank of Jordan, namely Hal Odmim near Jericho, Ofra near Ramallah and Elon Souria on the road to Nablus. Another was their authorization of the establishment of more settlements in the Arab territories under Israeli occupation and their decision to extend the application of Israeli laws and regulations to Arab areas in the occupied territories.

In the view of the Egyptian Government, the measures constituted a dangerous escalation of Israel's violation of its international obligations, an aggression against the rights of the Palestinian people and an insistence on placing further obstacles on the road to peace, while undermining international efforts currently under way to reach a peaceful and just solution. They represented a flagrant defiance of the will of the international community, and they contravened those principles of the United Nations Charter that protected the sovereign rights and territorial integrity of all States, established the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territories by force and provided for the right to self-determination and freedom for all peoples. They also violated the provisions of the fourth 1949 Geneva Convention affirming—in letter and spirit—that occupation was a situation of a temporary character which prohibited the occupying power from effecting any radical changes in prevailing conditions and which in no way permitted the alienation of any occupied lands.

The memorandum went on to state that Israel had rejected all the relevant United Nations resolutions and refused to respect the provisions or even the very applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention, despite its accession to that Convention and regardless of resolutions of the international community unanimously confirming its applicability and the need to respect it. As a result, the situation had become so dangerous as to have direct repercussions on the international scene, especially on the situation in the Middle East. The Israeli measures were a serious development revealing Israeli intentions to obstruct and reject peace, it stated.

By a letter dated 26 August, the representative of Cyprus transmitted the text of a statement by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Cyprus condemning the new arbitrary and unlawful act of Israel on the western bank of the Jordan River. The policy of creating faits accomplis through the establishment of Israeli settlements and the alteration of the composition of the population ran counter to fundamental norms of justice and United Nations decisions. The Government of Cyprus did not recognize the unlawful regime for whose creation on the occupied western bank of the Jordan River efforts were being made. The situation was parallel to what was happening in Cyprus, the statement added, where Turkey, through its army of occupation, was systematically colonizing the occupied area by massive settlements from Turkey.

By a letter dated 6 September, the representative of Jordan transmitted the text of a memorandum issued by the Jordanian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs concerning the Israeli Government's decision, on 14 August 1977, regarding what Israel called the equalization of public services of the inhabitants of the occupied territories with those of the citizens of Israel. The memorandum noted that Israel denied that the decision had any political overtones, and Israeli spokesmen had concentrated on its humanitarian aspects.

In Jordan's view, the consequences of enforcing this decision would involve the following political goals.

(1) The application and enforcement of Israeli laws in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip concerning health, education, water, electricity and communications, including telephone services, meant that Israeli law was to replace Jordanian law concerning those services in the West Bank, including the application of the Israeli education programme.

(2) Deprivation of the powers of the municipalities to provide services to the inhabitants, especially in the areas of water and electricity, meant instant transfer of powers to military governors to connect cities and villages of the West Bank and Gaza with the Israeli network of water and electricity. This also meant stripping the municipalities of their powers to provide other services.

(3) The liquidation of refugee camps by forcibly transferring the refugees to nearby civilian centres represented unilateral action by the occupation authorities in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in stark violation of the inalienable rights of the Palestine refugees to exercise their choice of repatriation or compensation under United Nations resolutions.

(4) The restriction of the decision of the equalization of services to the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, leaving out Sinai and Golan, showed that Menachem Begin's Government considered the Bank and the Strip to be parts of the Land of Israel, to which Israeli laws could be applied without Knesset approval.

(5) The decision could be considered as a first step towards final annexation of the West Bank and Gaza to Israel.

(6) In the event of the continued application of these measures, Israeli annexation of the occupied areas would undercut Jordanian legal status under international law or the Palestine Liberation Organization regarding the West Bank and Gaza, not to mention creating a new fait accompli of Israeli presence in these areas. It was not, the memorandum said, a question of the presence of occupation as such, but a question of creeping annexation by Israel by means of its laws, regulations and services.

By a letter dated 30 September, the representative of Sri Lanka transmitted the text of a declaration, adopted on the same day by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of non-aligned countries at an extraordinary meeting in New York, stating, among other things, that the Ministers considered that the latest measures taken by Israel in the occupied territories—the extension of Israeli laws and the establishment of Israeli settlements in the West Bank and Gaza—constituted an obstacle to the endeavours for the achievement of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

By a letter dated 5 October, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, in his capacity as current Chairman of the Islamic group of States, transmitted the text of the final communique of an extraordinary meeting of Foreign Ministers of the Islamic Conference, held in New York on 3 October, which condemned Israel for taking illegal measures in the occupied territories with the objective of changing their character, and reaffirmed that the continued occupation of Arab territories by force constituted a threat to international peace and security.

By a note verbale dated 26 October, the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic, in his capacity as current Chairman of the Arab group of States, transmitted the text of two notes, dated 17 and 21 September 1977, addressed to the Secretary-General by a number of citizens in the occupied Arab territories, in which they proclaimed that PLO was the sole legitimate representative of the Arab people of Palestine, rejected any trusteeship or mandate, affirmed their right to a homeland and independent national State, and demanded complete Israeli withdrawal from all the occupied territories in accordance with United Nations decisions and resolutions.

Consideration by General Assembly

The General Assembly considered the item concerning recent illegal Israeli measures in the occupied Arab territories at meetings held between 26 and 28 October 1977. At the conclusion of its discussion it adopted a resolution (32/5) sponsored by 74 Members.

Speaking in the discussion, the representative of Egypt said his country had requested consideration of the item in view of the serious situation resulting from the latest Israeli measures in the occupied territories. The United Nations, he said, together with its various agencies, had in recent years been fully aware of the magnitude of Israel's scheme, which aimed at imposing occupation and distorting the legal status, the geographical nature and demographic composition of the occupied Arab territories, and had unequivocally condemned it. The United Nations had, he noted, unanimously agreed that the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 applied to all the occupied Arab territories, and that had been reaffirmed many times.

He said it was well known that the current Israeli Government did all it could to encourage Israeli colonization in the occupied territories, abetted by extremist movements such as the Gush Emunim movement, which called for the expulsion of Arab inhabitants and which believed that Israelis had a sacred right to what they called "all the Land of Israel." According to them, sooner or later the Arab problem would become insignificant. He recalled that the plan of setting up Israeli settlements had begun in the aftermath of the 1967 war; the number of settlements had reached 90, 25 of which were on the Golan Heights, 22 in the Gaza Strip and Sinai and 36 in the West Bank. Dozens of settlements were being planned for. In Arab Jerusalem, tens of thousands of immigrants and people attracted to Israel had been settled following the destruction by the Israeli authorities of dozens of Arab homes in the city and the expulsion of their inhabitants.

The representative of Egypt then referred to the fourth 1949 Geneva Convention, to which Israel was a party, and said that the Israeli Government had refused to apply it to the occupied territories, even though the provisions were explicit: article 49 stipulated that individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying power or to that of any other country were prohibited, regardless of motive. The article further stated that the occupying power should not deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupied. With respect to Israel's decision to apply its laws and regulations to the Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories, which was also prohibited by United Nations resolutions and by the fourth Geneva Convention, he said it was a clear indication of Israel's intention to annex those territories.

The representative of Israel said that for 19 years, from 1948 to 1967, Israel was not building settlements in Gaza, the Sinai and the West Bank because Israel was not there. For 19 years, Egypt oppressed the people of Gaza, and Jordan suppressed and gaoled the people of the West Bank. In contrast to the severe restrictions of Egyptian and Jordanian rule, there was currently no curfew in the administered areas; the Arabs in the territories administered by Israel enjoyed freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of movement. It was against that background of prosperity, co-operation and respect for freedoms and human rights that Israel's establishment of settlements had to be considered.

He went on to say that Israel could not be considered an occupying power within the meaning of the fourth Geneva Convention in any part of the former Palestine Mandate. That Convention was intended for short-term military occupation and was not relevant to the sui generis situation in the area. The purpose of article 49 was to protect the local population from deportation and displacement. No Arab inhabitants had been displaced by Jewish settlements or by villages and townships, he insisted. The majority of the settlements had been set up on Government and public land which had been barren, rock-strewn hillsides and deserts for centuries. In the very few instances where private land was involved, it was acquired for public purposes in accordance with Jordanian law and against full compensation.

The representative of Israel said there was no connexion between progress towards a Middle East peace agreement and the establishment of settlements. The settlement issue was simply a device to cover up for the stubborn refusal of the Arab States to negotiate with Israel, whose destruction many of them sought.

The representative of Jordan said that the designation by Israeli Primer Minister Begin of the occupied territories as "liberated territories" implied that the legitimate inhabitants of those territories, who had lived there for 10,000 years, were strangers in their own homeland. Never in recorded history until 1948 had the Palestinian inhabitants left or been forced to leave their land. Even during the short period of Israeli hegemony some 3,000 years ago, there had never been a monolithic Israeli presence in the West Bank, which the Israelis now claimed as their exclusive ancestral land. Mr. Begin, he noted, had not set foot in the country before 1942.

Many speakers in the discussion deplored the timing of the Israeli measures, affirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention applied to the occupied Arab territories and condemned the settlement policy as illegal and as a preliminary to annexation.

The representative of Belgium, speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Community, said that the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 applied to all the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem. As to the establishment of settlements and all other measures taken by Israel which violated the physical and demographic status of the occupied territories, they were illegal and contrary to the norms of international law. Moreover, establishing settlements would complicate the negotiating process. The European Community had informed Israel of its position and it was regrettable that Israel still pursued that policy.

The representative of China said that over the past three decades Israeli Zionists had occupied large portions of Arab territories through one aggressive war after another. To date, it not only refused to withdraw from the occupied Arab territories but brazenly and absurdly declared that they were liberated Israeli lands and that the question of annexation did not exist. Statements made by Israeli leaders indicated that Israeli Zionism would never withdraw from those territories of its own accord, nor would it ever give up its policies of aggression and expansion. The root cause of non-settlement of the Middle East problem lay in the rivalry between the two super-powers. The handful of Zionists were emboldened to do all kinds of evil and persisted in making themselves the enemy of the Arab people because they had the backing of the two super-powers in different forms.

The representative of the USSR said that the illegal measures by Israel were a major facet of the Middle East conflict—one of the most dangerous focal points of tension in the world. Israel's representatives, he noted, had expressed Israel's desire for peace, but he wondered how much credence could be given to those statements when there was ample evidence of a systematic Israelization of the occupied Arab territories in gross violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. Israel's refusal to withdraw from the territories and the measures it had taken to annex them gave rise to grave concern and alarm among those genuinely interested in establishing a just peace in the Middle East, he declared.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic and others deplored the position taken by Israeli leaders that the West Bank and Gaza Strip were not occupied, but liberated, territories, lands belonging to the Jews according to history and the Old Testament.

The Maltese representative said that world opinion was in disagreement with the demographic changes in the occupied territories, which had been described by the most lenient critics as unfortunate and untimely and as not helping the serious efforts aimed at a Geneva peace conference. Suspicion was generated not only by the inherent characteristics of each single act of illegal settlement but also by the cumulative effect of several actions. It was one thing to say that settlements were no obstacle to peace, and another to refer to the occupied areas being established as Judaea and Samaria, dropping any reference to occupied Arab lands, calling them liberated territories and even issuing instructions to news editors to stop calling the West Bank an "occupied" territory. Such measures, he said, were viewed with suspicion even by Israel's most ardent sympathizers.

A number of speakers expressed concern over the situation of Jerusalem, citing various measures taken by Israel which tended to modify the character of the Holy City. The representative of Kuwait said that Jerusalem had been officially and defiantly annexed: there was annexation in Jerusalem and in the ring of territory surrounding the City. The representative of Argentina said his country understood the importance of Jerusalem for the Jewish people and religion, but it was equally important to Christians and Moslems. There was a very special convergence of a plurality of historic and religious rights in Jerusalem and it was the duty of all to ensure its protection by a special status guaranteed by an international legal instrument. He recalled that the need to preserve the City from any attempt to change that special status was recognized by the Security Council on 25 September 1971 when it adopted resolution 298(1971),³⁹ by which it confirmed earlier United Nations decisions on the invalidity of any legislative and administrative measures adopted for the purpose of changing the status of Jerusalem.

Similar views were expressed by the spokesmen for Malaysia, Mali and Mauritania.

On 28 October, the Assembly adopted as resolution 32/5 a draft text that had been introduced at the beginning of the debate by Egypt and eventually sponsored by 74 countries. The vote, by roll-call, was 131 in favour to 1 against, with 7 abstentions.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly expressed concern over the current serious situation in the occupied Arab territories as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by Israel as the occupying power and designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories. It considered that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, was applicable to all the Arab territories occupied since 5 June 1967.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly:

(1) determined that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 had no legal validity and constituted a serious obstruction of efforts aimed at achieving a just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

(2) strongly deplored the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the occupied Arab territories;

(3) called on Israel to comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949;

(4) called once more on the Government of Israel as the occupying power to desist forthwith from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

(5) urged all States parties to the fourth Geneva Convention to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

(6) requested the Secretary-General (a) to undertake urgent contacts with the Government of Israel to ensure the prompt implementation of this resolution; and (b) to submit a report to the General Assembly and the Security Council, not later than 31 December 1977, on the results of his contacts; and

(7) requested the Security Council to review the situation in the light of this resolution and of the report of the Secretary-General.

Following the vote, the representative of the United States said that the issue of Israeli civilian settlements in the territories occupied since 1967 had been a matter of deep concern to his Government, which had stated its position on many occasions. That position had two elements.

First, the United States was opposed to the settlements because they could be perceived as prejudging the outcome of negotiations to deal with the territorial aspects of final peace treaties and would thus complicate the difficult process of negotiation. Second, he said, the United States believed that the settlements were inconsistent with international law as defined in the fourth Geneva Convention. Its position as stated in the Security Council in 1976 was that an occupier had to maintain the occupied areas as intact and unaltered as possible, without interfering with the customary life of the area; any changes had to be necessitated by the immediate needs of the occupation and be consistent with international law. According to article 49 of the Convention, the occupying power was not to deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupied. It was thus clear that substantial resettlement of the Israeli civilian population in occupied territories, including East Jerusalem, was illegal under the Convention.

The United States representative went on to say that the resolution just adopted was consistent in most aspects with the United States position. However, the United States had accepted a special responsibility as Co-Chairman of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East, requiring it to remain impartial when the complex issues to be considered at Geneva were involved. The United States had therefore abstained from voting.

Report of the Secretary-General

On 30 December 1977, the Secretary-General submitted the report requested by the Assembly in its resolution 32/5 of 28 October. Included in the report was the text of his note requesting that the Government of Israel provide him with all available information relevant to the implementation of the resolution, and the reply received from the representative of Israel, stating that Israel's position and views had been explained in detail in plenary meetings of the General Assembly on 26 and 28 October 1977.

Permanent sovereignty over national resources

By a decision adopted on 21 December 1976,⁴⁰ the General Assembly among other things had reaffirmed the right of the Arab States and peoples whose territories were under Israeli occupation to regain full and effective control over their natural and all other resources and economic activities, as well as the right to restitution and full compensation for the exploitation, loss and depletion of, and damage to, those resources and activities. The Assembly had asked the Secretary-General to submit a final comprehensive report on the adverse effects on the Arab States and peoples resulting from repeated Israeli aggression and continued occupation of their territories.

In response to that request, the Secretary-General on 11 October 1977 submitted a report to the Assembly. He noted that the study had originally been defined to relate to the economic effects of the Arab-Israeli conflict of June 1967 and its aftermath on Egypt, the Syrian Arab Republic, Lebanon and Jordan and on the Arab peoples encompassed in the boundaries of those States in the relevant period. In the absence of a response on the part of Lebanon to the Secretary-General's approaches and because of subsequent events in that country, it had not been possible to include Lebanon in the study. Furthermore, in the absence of facilities to visit the occupied areas, there had been no opportunity for a first-hand study of the economic conditions in those areas. No reliable information was available to the Arab countries themselves concerning the magnitude of many of the losses and disabilities suffered in the occupied territories, nor was there any possibility of such material becoming available in the near future.

The report, using material prepared by Governments and assessed by means of micro- and macro-economic approaches, analysed in detail the economic effects of the 1967 conflict and its aftermath on Egypt, the Syrian Arab Republic, Jordan and the occupied territories, including the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Consideration was mainly confined to capital and income losses, including personal, corporate and public losses.

Annexed to the report was a list of official reports and submissions by Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic; the list also included a report by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) entitled The Impact of the Suez Canal Closure on Egypt, Jordan and Syria.

In a note verbale dated 29 November 1977 addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Egypt pointed out that the Secretary-General's report did not cover all losses suffered by Egypt as a result of continued occupation of Egyptian territories.

The following examples of losses were given: losses incurred before the June 1967 aggression, including those resulting from the Israeli campaign of 1956 in Sinai; damage caused to Egyptian property in the Gaza Strip; losses incurred in Sinai resulting from excessive reduction in exploitable oil reserves due to exceptionally high rates of exploitation of the oil wells during occupation; civilian and military human losses, not measurable in monetary terms; the consequences of material military losses, including repayment of military debts which constituted a heavy burden on the Egyptian economy; the loss of and damage to items of national, religious and cultural heritage, such as ancient mosques and monuments, particularly in the devastated Suez Canal Zone, which could not be evaluated in monetary terms; and losses incurred by certain segments in the private sector, including those of retail trade, crafts, small industries and the traditional farming sectors.

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 109 to 3, with 26 abstentions, resolution 32/161; it was recommended by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved it on 8 December by a roll-call vote of 98 to 3, with 24 abstentions, as proposed by 52 Members.

By this resolution, the Assembly, after among other things recalling its previous decisions on the matter, took note of the Secretary-General's report and noted that, owing to certain technical and other limitations, the report did not cover all pertinent losses, such as: (a) the adverse economic effects extending beyond the year 1975; (b) losses in the Arab territories still under Israeli occupation; (c) human and military losses; (d) the loss of and damage to items of national, religious and cultural heritage; (e) losses in the traditional sectors, including the retail trading, small industries and farming sectors; and (f) the full impact on the development process of the Arab States, territories and peoples subjected to Israeli aggression and occupation.

The Assembly by this resolution emphasized the right of the Arab States and peoples whose territories were under Israeli occupation to full and effective permanent sovereignty and control over their natural and all other resources, wealth and economic activities. It reaffirmed that all measures undertaken by Israel to exploit the resources, wealth and economic activities in the occupied Arab territories were illegal, and called upon Israel immediately to desist from all such measures.

The Assembly further reaffirmed the right of the Arab States and peoples subjected to Israeli aggression and occupation to the restitution of, and full compensation for the exploitation, depletion and loss of and damages to, their natural, human and all other resources, wealth and economic activities, and called upon Israel to meet their just claims. All States were called on to support and assist the Arab States and peoples in the exercise of the above-mentioned rights, and all States, international organizations, specialized agencies, investment corporations and other institutions were called on not to recognize or assist in any measures undertaken by Israel to exploit the resources of the occupied territories or to effect any changes in the demographic composition, geographical character or institutional structure of those territories.

During the discussion in the Second Committee, the representative of Pakistan noted, in introducing the 52-power text, that it represented the culmination of an exercise begun some years earlier.

The representative of the USSR said that the Secretary-General's report gave eloquent testimony to the losses sustained by Arab States as a result of Israeli aggression and subsequent occupation of Arab territories, and to Israel's gross violation of universally recognized international instruments. As a result of Israel's continuing illegal occupation of Arab territories and its exploitation of their human, natural and other resources, enormous damage had been caused to the economies of the Arab States. The representative of the German Democratic Republic said that Israel had to comply with United Nations requests to put an immediate end to its illegal exploitation of resources in the Arab territories.

The United States representative said that his Government opposed the resolution, as it had opposed similar resolutions in the past, on the ground that the issue was not an appropriate one for the Second Committee to deal with. The representative of Belgium said that the nine countries of the European Economic Community (EEC) also considered that the subject was not within the competence of the Second Committee.

The spokesman for Israel observed that recent weeks had witnessed dramatic and challenging changes and that, for the first time in more than three decades, there was hope for peace in the Middle East. Members of the Committee, he said, had an opportunity to follow the new trend rather than to maintain the old barriers to peace. He urged them not to raise their hands automatically in favour of any suggested anti-Israeli resolution. Those who sincerely wished to encourage the process which had begun with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's visit to Jerusalem should evaluate each case brought before the Committee on the basis of whether it helped or hindered the chances for peace. He went on to say that, under the pretence of enumerating losses and damage, the report and the resolution actually substituted imagination and speculation for facts.

Israel was blamed for almost any damage in the region. Within a framework of peace, he said, there would be ample room to discuss all the economic claims and counter-claims relevant to the conflict.

The representative of Jordan said that the resolution would promote peace and was not a barrier to it. The Egyptian representative drew attention to her Government's note verbale concerning the report of the Secretary-General and said that portions of the study had been carried out by the Egyptian Institute of National Planning and there was no question of facts having been replaced by imagination. The document was very factual and the extent of Egypt's suffering was clear. For instance, she said, the closure of the Suez Canal had cost it $10,000 million and the effect of the situation on its gross national product amounted to about $70,000 million.

Living conditions of the Palestinian people

A report on living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories was submitted by the Secretary-General on 4 October 1977 to the General Assembly's 1977 regular session, as requested by the Assembly on 16 December 1976.⁴¹ In preparing the report, the Secretary-General was to consult and co-operate with the Palestine Liberation Organization. Governments were urged to co-operate with him in the matter.

In the report, the Secretary-General noted that since the United Nations Secretariat had no independent source of information about the occupied territories, it would have to look to the Governments and organizations concerned to provide the necessary information. Accordingly, notes verbales were sent on 16 May and 21 July 1977 to the Permanent Missions of Egypt, Israel, Jordan, and the Syrian Arab Republic, as well as to the Permanent Observer of PLO, requesting such information as might be made available on the subject.

Information for the report was also requested from the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization (WHO), the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and from the Chairman of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories.

Replies were received from Egypt, Israel,

Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, ECWA and UNRWA. These were appended to the report or—in the case of the replies from Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic—circulated separately. No information was made available by PLO, except for a note included in the FAO reply. The Chairman of the Special Committee to investigate Israeli practices referred to the 1977 report of the Special Committee submitted to the General Assembly (see p. 306).

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (32/171) on living conditions of the Palestinian people, by a recorded vote of 107 to 4, with 28 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved the text on 9 December by a recorded vote of 95 to 4, with 24 abstentions, on a proposal by 36 States.

By the operative provisions of this text, the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General and expressed the view that there was need for further analysis. It therefore asked him, in collaboration with the relevant United Nations organs and specialized agencies, particularly UNRWA and ECWA, to prepare and submit to the Assembly at its regular 1978 session a comprehensive and analytical report on the social and economic impact of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories. The Secretary-General was asked, in preparing the report, to consult and co-operate with PLO, the representative of the Palestinian people. All States were urged to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the preparation of the report.

Introducing the draft resolution in the Second Committee, the representative of Pakistan observed that, since the report of the Secretary-General was based entirely on replies received from Governments and international organizations, drew no conclusions and did not analyse the replies or suggest any course of action, there was a need for further analysis in order to meet fully the objectives of the Assembly's resolution of 16 December 1976.

The United States representative said that his Government regretted the injection of highly controversial political issues into bodies concerned with economic and technical matters, and could not support the resolution. Similarly, the spokesman for Belgium, speaking on behalf of the States members of EEC, said that those countries believed that the question at issue did not come within the terms of reference of the Second Committee.

The Chinese representative said that his Government and people had always deeply sympathized with the plight of the Palestinian people living under the domination of the Israeli aggressors. They strongly condemned Israeli Zionism because of the atrocities it had perpetrated in the occupied territories as well as the outrageous practice of establishing settlements in the West Bank in an attempt to perpetuate its occupation of Arab territory.

The representative of Israel said that his Government had invested over $2,300 million in the territories between 1968 and 1975. There was virtually no unemployment in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and there was absolutely no discrimination between Arab and Jewish employees. The standard of living was rising and agricultural output had increased by 20 per cent a year in real terms since 1967. There were high health and sanitary standards, infant and adult mortality rates had fallen, and health services had greatly expanded. The Palestinian Arabs in the administered areas lived in security, enjoyed prosperity and economic growth and had a high standard of social services. It was therefore absurd to talk of the problem of the "living conditions" of the Palestinian Arabs.

He went on to say that if it adopted the draft resolution the Committee would forfeit the possibility of making any contribution to the success of the new peace initiatives and would defeat its own purpose.

The spokesman for the Syrian Arab Republic said his country supported the draft resolution because of the conditions prevailing under Israeli occupation. The sufferings of the Palestinian people had to be ended; peace in the Middle East could not be established without taking the Palestinian people into account.

The observer of PLO said there could be no doubt that all peoples wished for peace; the question was how peace was to be established in the Middle East, where it could be readily obtained were it not for the occupation of Arab lands and the aggression of Zionist forces. The Zionists did not recognize the rights of the Palestinian people. They spoke much of peace, but did nothing about it, hoping to perpetuate their domination in the name of peace and security. In the view of his organization, there could be no peace in the Middle East until the rights of the Palestinian people were recognized; PLO had chosen the only way open to it to struggle for the establishment of lasting peace and a pluralist, secular and democratic Palestinian State. In the absence of peace, he said, it was the Palestinians who suffered most; despite all claims to the contrary, their situation in terms of health and housing had become worse. The current talk of peace was no more than an attempt to cover up the true situation, and PLO looked to the international community for help to relieve the suffering of the Palestinian people.

The representative of Democratic Yemen recalled that the question of preparing a report on the living conditions of the Palestinian people had been discussed at Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, in 1976, and such a report was long overdue. The claim that the subject had political connotations was very weak. It was said that the resolution would obstruct efforts to secure peace; yet no just and lasting peace could be established in the Middle East unless certain essential human principles were recognized. Any attempts to establish peace which disregarded those basic human principles would be doomed to failure, he said. Unfortunately, certain countries refused to condemn occupation by force and denial of the right to self-determination of peoples. The arrogant claim that the Palestinian Arabs enjoyed progress and prosperity under occupation and colonialism constituted an attempt to misrepresent the situation and perpetuate that occupation and aggression.

Other decisions

Assistance to the Palestinian people

In response to a resolution adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 4 August 1976,⁴² the Secretary-General on 22 June 1977 submitted a report on action taken by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Economic Commission for Western Asia and other agencies and programmes of the United Nations system on the intensification of their efforts to identify the social and economic needs of the Palestinian people. The organizations had also been asked by the Council to consult and co-operate with the Palestine Liberation Organization in establishing and implementing concrete projects to ensure the improvement of the social and economic conditions of the Palestinian people.

In his report, the Secretary-General included information received from UNDP and ECWA, as well as from ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and UNCTAD.

On 3 August 1977, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2100(LXIII) by which, among other things, it:

(1) called once more on UNDP, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to continue and to intensify, as a matter of urgency and in co-ordination with ECWA, their efforts in identifying the social and economic needs of the Palestinian people;

(2) urged those agencies and organizations to consult and co-operate closely with PLO, the representative of the Palestinian people, with a view to establishing and fully implementing concrete projects to ensure the improvement of the social and economic conditions of the Palestinians;

(3) called on agencies and organizations within the United Nations system that had not taken the necessary action in conformity with the Council's resolution of 4 August 1976 to do so as a matter of priority;

(4) urged the executive heads of the organizations and agencies concerned to formulate and submit to their respective governing and/or legislative bodies concrete proposals for ensuring, in co-operation with PLO, the effective implementation of provisions of this resolution; and

(5) requested the Secretary-General to submit annual reports to the Council on the action taken by the agencies and organizations concerned and the results achieved.

The resolution was adopted by a roll-call vote of 34 to 1, with 11 abstentions, as recommended by the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which had approved it on 21 July by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 11 abstentions. The text was put forward by Yugoslavia on behalf of States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

Importance of universal realization of the right to self-determination

On 7 November 1977, the General Assembly adopted resolution 32/14 by which, among other things, it expressed indignation at the continued violations of the human rights of peoples still under colonial and foreign domination and alien subjugation, and the denial to the Palestinian people of their inalienable national rights. The Assembly strongly condemned Governments which did not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples still under colonial and foreign domination and alien subjugation, notably the peoples of Africa and the Palestinian people. Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Noting that Israel and those Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to that Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to that Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Strongly deplores the failure of Israel to acknowledge the applicability of that Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967;

3. Calls again upon Israel to acknowledge and to comply with the provisions of that Convention in all the Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urges once more all States parties to that Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with the provisions thereof in all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3240 C (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 C (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/106 D of 16 December 1976,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, in particular annex II thereof, entitled "Report on damage at Quneitra," a report on the nature, extent and value of damage, submitted by a Swiss expert engaged by the Special Committee,

1. Expresses its appreciation of the thoroughness and impartiality with which the expert engaged by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories discharged the tasks entrusted to him;

2. Condemns the massive, deliberate destruction of Quneitra perpetrated during the Israeli occupation and prior to the withdrawal of Israeli forces from that city in 1974;

3. Reaffirms that the Syrian Arab Republic is entitled to full and adequate compensation, under international law and in equity, for the massive damage and deliberate destruction perpetrated in Quneitra while it was under Israeli occupation, and to all other legal remedies in accordance with applicable international law and practice;

4. Takes note of the statements made by the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic before the Special Political Committee at the thirty-first and thirty-second sessions of the General Assembly to the effect that his Government reserves all rights to full compensation in regard to all damages resulting from Israel's deliberate destruction of Quneitra, including those not covered by the expert's above-mentioned report or not falling within the scope of his assignment;

5. Requests the Special Committee to complete its survey on all the aspects referred to in paragraph 4 of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with all the facilities required for the completion of the tasks referred to in the previous paragraphs.

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations as well as the principles and provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, as well as of other relevant conventions and regulations,

Recalling its resolutions on the subject, as well as those adopted by the Security Council, the Commission on Human Rights and other United Nations bodies concerned and by the specialized agencies,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, which contains, inter alia, public statements made by leaders of the Government of Israel,

1. Commends the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Deplores the continued refusal by Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

3. Calls again upon Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

4. Deplores the continued and persistent violation by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and other applicable international instruments, and condemns in particular those violations which that Convention designates as "grave breaches" thereof;

5. Condemns the following Israeli policies and practices:

(a) The annexation of parts of the occupied territories;

(b) The establishment of Israeli settlements therein and the transfer of an alien population thereto;

(c) The evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories, and the denial of their right to return;

(d) The confiscation and expropriation of Arab property in the occupied territories and all other transactions for the acquisition of land involving the Israeli authorities, institutions or nationals on the one hand, and the inhabitants or institutions of the occupied territories on the other;

(e) The destruction and demolition of Arab houses;

(f) Mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population;

(g) The ill-treatment and torture of persons under detention;

(h) The pillaging of archaeological and cultural property;

(i) The interference with religious freedoms and practices as well as with family rights and customs;

(j) The illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and population of the occupied territories;

6. Reaffirms that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, or any part thereof, including Jerusalem, are null and void, and that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in the occupied territories constitutes a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

7. Demands that Israel desist forthwith from the policies and practices referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the present resolution;

8. Reiterates its call upon all States, in particular those States parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, in accordance with article 1 of that Convention, and upon international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, which might be used by Israel in its pursuit of the policies of annexation and colonization or any of the other policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

9. Requests the Special Committee, pending the early termination of the Israeli occupation, to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross in order to ensure the safeguarding of the welfare and human rights of the population of the occupied territories, and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

10. Requests the Special Committee to continue to investigate the treatment of civilians in detention in the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and to submit to the Secretary-General a special report on that subject as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To render all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories, with a view to investigating the Israeli policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

(b) To continue to make available additional staff as may be necessary to assist the Special Committee in the performance of its tasks;

(c) To ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee, and of information regarding its activities and findings, by all means available through the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat and, where necessary, to reprint those reports of the Special Committee which are no longer available;

(d) To report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the tasks entrusted to him in the present paragraph;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories."

The General Assembly,
Stressing the urgent need to achieve a just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

Expressing grave anxiety and concern over the present serious situation in the occupied Arab territories as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by the Government of Israel, as the occupying Power, and designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Considering that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all the Arab territories occupied since 5 June 1967,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 have no legal validity and constitute a serious obstruction of efforts aimed at achieving a just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the occupied Arab territories;

3. Calls upon Israel to comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

4. Calls once more upon the Government of Israel, as the occupying Power, to desist forthwith from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Urges all States parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To undertake urgent contacts with the Government of Israel to ensure the prompt implementation of the present resolution;

(b) To submit a report to the General Assembly and the Security Council, not later than 31 December 1977, on the results of his contacts;

7. Requests the Security Council to review the situation in the light of the present resolution and of the report of the Secretary-General.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the relevant principles of international law and the provisions of the international conventions and regulations, in particular the Hague Convention IV of 1907 and the fourth Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949, concerning the obligations and responsibilities of the occupying Power,

Recalling its previous resolutions on permanent sovereignty over natural resources, particularly their provisions supporting resolutely the efforts of the developing countries and the peoples of the territories under colonial and racial domination and foreign occupation in their struggle to regain effective control over their natural and all other resources, wealth and economic activities,

Bearing in mind the pertinent provisions of its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling further its resolutions 3175 (XXVIII) of 17 December 1973, 3336 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3516 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 and 31/186 of 21 December 1976 on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the adverse economic effects on the Arab States and peoples resulting from repeated Israeli aggression and continued occupation of their territories;

2. Notes that, owing to the time constraint, incomplete coverage and technical and other limitations, the report did not cover all pertinent losses, such as:

(a) The adverse economic effects extending beyond the year 1975;

(b) Losses in the Arab territories still under Israeli occupation;

(c) Human and military losses;

(d) The loss of and damage to items of the national, religious and cultural heritage;

(e) Losses in the traditional sectors, including the retail trading, small industries and farming sectors;

(f) The full impact on the development process of the Arab States, territories and peoples subjected to Israeli aggression and occupation;

3. Emphasizes the right of the Arab States and peoples whose territories are under Israeli occupation to full and effective permanent sovereignty and control over their natural and all other resources, wealth and economic activities;

4. Reaffirms that all measures undertaken by Israel to exploit the human, natural and all other resources, wealth and economic activities in the occupied Arab territories are illegal and calls upon Israel immediately to desist forthwith from all such measures;

5. Further reaffirms the right of the Arab States and peoples subjected to Israeli aggression and occupation to the restitution of, and full compensation for the exploitation, depletion and loss of and damages to, their natural, human and all other resources, wealth and economic activities, and calls upon Israel to meet their just claims;

6. Calls upon all States to support and assist the Arab States and peoples in the exercise of their above-mentioned rights;

7. Calls upon all States, international organizations, specialized agencies, investment corporations and all other institutions not to recognize, or co-operate with or assist in any manner in, any measures undertaken by Israel to exploit the resources of the occupied territories or to effect any changes in the demographic composition or geographic character or institutional structure of those territories.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vancouver Declaration on Human Settlements, 1976, and the relevant recommendations for national action adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, held at Vancouver from 31 May to 11 June 1976,

Recalling also resolution 3 on the living conditions of the Palestinians in occupied territories, as contained in the recommendations of the Conference for international co-operation, and Economic and Social Council resolution 2100 (LXIII) of 3 August 1977,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 31/110 of 16 December 1976,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories and expresses the view that there is need for further analysis in order to meet fully the objectives of General Assembly resolution 31/110;

2. Requests therefore the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the relevant United Nations organs and specialized agencies, particularly the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the Economic Commission for Western Asia, to prepare and submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session a comprehensive and analytical report on the social and economic impact of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the above-mentioned report, to consult and co-operate with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people;

4. Urges all States to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the preparation of the report.

2. Urges these agencies and organizations to consult and co-operate closely with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, with a view to establishing and fully implementing concrete projects to ensure the improvement of the social and economic conditions of the Palestinian people;

3. Calls upon agencies and organizations within the United Nations system that have not taken the necessary action in conformity with Council resolution 2026 (LXI) to do so as a matter of priority;

4. Urges the executive heads of the organizations and agencies concerned to formulate and submit to their respective governing and/or legislative bodies concrete proposals for ensuring, in co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the effective implementation of the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 above;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit annual reports to the Council on the action taken by the agencies and organizations concerned and the results achieved.

Questions pertaining to refugees in the Near East

In 1977, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) maintained educational, health and relief services for eligible Palestine refugees in east Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank of Jordan and the Gaza Strip. The Agency's headquarters were returned to Beirut, Lebanon, after an absence of 22 months in Amman, Jordan, and Vienna, Austria, owing to the 1975-1976 conflict in Lebanon.

An estimated budgetary deficit of some $16.4 million in income for the year led the Agency to reduce flour rations for eligible refugees in November for four months and to contemplate the suspension of operations and termination of virtually all staff members twice during the year. In an effort to correct the defects of UNRWA'S financing methods, the Commissioner-General of UNRWA introduced in 1977 a new method—the forward planning procedure—for soliciting the voluntary contributions from Governments on which the Agency had depended for about 95 per cent of its income.

The United Nations General Assembly renewed UNRWA'S mandate for a further three years, to 30 June 1981. In November 1977, the Assembly, by a six-part resolution (32/90 A-F), called upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make generous efforts to meet the anticipated needs of UNRWA, urging non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

The Assembly also: endorsed the efforts of the Commissioner-General to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, to other displaced persons in the area who were in serious need of such assistance as a result of the June 1967 hostilities; reiterated its call upon Israel to take effective steps immediately for the return of refugees to the camps from which they were removed in the Gaza Strip, to provide adequate shelters for them and to desist from their further removal and from destruction of their shelters; requested the Working Group on the Financing of the Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue its efforts for another year; called again upon Israel to take immediate steps for the return of displaced inhabitants and to desist from all measures that obstructed their return, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories; and appealed to all States and invited relevant United Nations agencies to make special allocations, scholarships and grants to Palestinian Refugees. By another resolution (32/111), the Assembly expressed its deep concern about the health needs of Palestinian refugee children and requested that a sample survey be conducted by Governments of host countries and relevant United Nations bodies to ascertain those needs.

Activities in 1977

The number of refugees registered with UNRWA at the end of 1977 rose through natural increase by 46,269, to 1,730,520. An average of some 830,000 registered refugees received basic rations, and most refugees were eligible for health and (if further qualified by age) educational programmes. The Agency also distributed monthly rations to 192,812 displaced adults and 38,097 displaced refugee children in east Jordan at the expense of the Jordanian Government.

At the end of 1977 there were 502,874 registered refugees in 51 camps established before the 1967 hostilities, and 110,764 in 10 emergency camps established afterwards.

The Agency continued, in co-operation with the World Health Organization, to maintain health services for eligible refugees, with an emphasis on preventive medicine, including supplementary feeding of nutritionally vulnerable groups, and health education. Increasing emphasis was placed on equipping the Agency's larger health centres for common biochemical examinations to reduce the number of specimens being referred to central laboratories.

Expenditure on health services totalled some $20 million in 1977.

Expenditure on education and training in 1977 amounted to $65 million. The programme, operated jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), included the first nine years of elementary and preparatory education (10 years in Lebanon), some assistance to refugee pupils in government and private secondary schools, vocational and teacher training in eight Agency centres, and 339 university scholarships. In the 1977/78 school year, 306,968 children were enrolled in government and private schools. The growth of the school population and lack of funds for school construction on the scale required meant that children had to attend classes in two shifts at 450 schools, or 73 per cent of the total number of UNRWA/UNESCO Schools.

The eight UNRWA/UNESCO training centres had 3,324 vocational and 1,216 teacher training places for young men and women. The UNRWA/UNESCO Institute of Education, which had received financial support from the United Nations Development Programme since 1972, completed its thirteenth year of operation in providing in-service training for UNRWA/UNESCO educational staff. A total of 1,300 teachers employed by UNRWA participated in Institute courses. In co-ordination with the Institute, two Education Development Centres in east Jordan and the Gaza Strip also provided in-service training for educational staff, while divisions of the Department of Education carried out ad hoc in-service training seminars, workshops and conferences during the summer and holidays.

Repairs to Agency installations and the replacement of supplies and equipment damaged or lost during the conflict in Lebanon in 1975-1976 were completed. The situation in the country improved in the course of 1977, permitting in November the return of UNRWA headquarters to Beirut from temporary premises in Amman and Vienna.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The situation of the refugees in the Near East was considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-second (1977) session and, as in previous years, the subject was referred to the Assembly's Special Political Committee, which discussed the matter at 12 meetings held between 27 October and 15 November. Five reports were submitted in connexion with the item: (1) the annual report of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA; (2) two reports of the Secretary-General, concerning Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and concerning persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities; (3) a report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine; and (4) a report by the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA.

Report of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA

In his annual report to the General Assembly covering the period from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977, the Commissioner-General of UNRWA indicated that during the period under review the situation in Lebanon had continued to affect seriously the Agency's activities throughout its area of operations. The achievement of a cease-fire in most of the country in October 1976, with the help of the Arab peace force, had greatly improved the situation. However, the report continued, even after the end of armed conflict, much remained to be done to put back into operation the facilities required by the Agency to function. The Commissioner-General noted that the Agency would probably never be able to determine the precise number of casualties caused among the refugee population by the conflict in Lebanon. Up to 30,000 refugees had been displaced by the fighting and forced to find new places to live.

With regard to the Agency's financial situation, the Commissioner-General said that the deficit for 1977 was estimated at $16.4 million. He noted that although the Agency had sufficient working capital to cover that deficit, it would be left with inadequate resources to operate during the beginning of 1978 or during any temporary shortfall of contributions in 1978.

In order to alleviate this situation, the Commissioner-General introduced a new method—the forward planning procedure—for soliciting voluntary contributions from Governments, on which the Agency depended for about 95 per cent of its income. Designed to give contributing Governments earlier information on the state of the Agency's finances and to permit orderly budgetary planning, the new procedure meant that contributors would be asked to agree to specified pledges or at least reasonable estimates for actual consideration three years in advance.

Reports of the Secretary-General

On 6 October 1977, the Secretary-General submitted two reports to the General Assembly.

The first report concerned population and refugees displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities, in compliance with an Assembly resolution of 23 November 1976,⁴³ by which it had reiterated its call upon Israel to take immediate steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants and to desist from all measures that obstructed their return. The Secretary-General reported that he had requested the Government of Israel to forward to him any relevant information on the implementation of the resolution. In reply, the Israeli Government had asserted that it had, over the past 10 years, taken significant steps to facilitate the reunion of displaced persons with their families in the territories administered by Israel since 1967, and to relieve hardship cases. However, it said that the policies of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), coupled with the actions of certain Arab Governments, had gravely undermined all efforts to ameliorate the situation of these displaced persons.

At the same time the Secretary-General reported that information received from the Commissioner-General of UNRWA indicated that, so far as the Agency knew, the number of displaced refugees who had returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 was slightly over 9,000.

The second report concerned Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip, submitted in compliance with another Assembly resolution of 23 November 1976⁴⁴ by which it had reiterated its call upon Israel to take effective steps immediately for the return of the refugees concerned to the camps from which they had been removed, and to desist from further removal of refugees and destruction of their shelters. The Secretary-General reported that he had requested the Government of Israel to forward to him any relevant information on the implementation of the resolution. In reply, the Israeli Government had affirmed that, due to the measures it had taken in Gaza, refugees in that territory for the first time since 1948 had been given the possibility of moving out of the squalid conditions of the camp into decent, modern housing. By contrast, Israel said, the situation was tragic in the refugee camps in Lebanon, where the presence of PLO was paralysing UNRWA's activities to the extent that the Agency had been forced to move its headquarters elsewhere.

At the same time, the Secretary-General reported that information received from the Commissioner-General of UNRWA indicated that the Agency was still concerned at the lack of progress in the rehousing of the refugee families whose shelters had been demolished in July-August 1971, and that its repeated appeals to the Israeli occupying authorities for urgent action on that matter had not brought any change in the situation. The Commissioner-General further indicated that it was still the case that only 67 out of 2,554 families affected by the demolitions had thus far been provided with free alternative accommodation. Moreover, the Agency's claims for compensation, referred to in the Commissioner-General's previous report, remained unpaid.

The report, based on information from the Commissioner-General, further indicated that in the period from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977 a total of 342 families, comprising 2,064 persons, had moved from their shelters in the camps to new housing in projects established by Israel; 55 other refugee families, comprising 357 persons, had constructed and moved into new housing; and a total of 619 shelter rooms had been demolished in the camps in this connexion.

The Commissioner-General stated that references by the Israeli Government to squalid conditions in the refugee camps were more generalized than warranted by the facts. With regard to its comments relating to the alleged role of PLO in paralysing the activities of UNRWA in Lebanon, the Commissioner-General pointed out that not only had UNRWA activity not been paralysed at any time but PLO had continued to assist the Agency's Lebanon Field Office in meeting specific operational needs.

Report of the United Nations

Conciliation Commission for Palestine

The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine submitted to the Assembly its thirty-first report, covering the period from 1 October 1976 to 30 September 1977. Under the terms of General Assembly resolution 31/15 A,⁴⁵ the Commission was requested to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of paragraph 11 of Assembly resolution 194(III)⁴⁶ of 11 December 1948 and to report by 1 October 1977.

In its report, the Commission noted that the circumstances governing the possibilities open to it had remained essentially unchanged. It expressed the hope, however, that the situation in the region would improve considerably, enabling it to carry forward its work.

The Commission also indicated that, in response to the request from the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for an inventory of Arab property in Israel and the territories occupied by Israel, the Commission had had no objection to that Committee having access to the relevant documents in its possession.

Report of Working Group on Financing of UNRWA

The Working Group on the Financing of the Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, established in 1970 by the General Assembly to assist in reaching solutions to the Agency's financial problems, reported to the Assembly on 20 October 1977. It stated that, although the Agency was able to avoid suspension of its assistance programmes to the refugees during 1977 owing to generous regular and special contributions, it still faced a deficit. Unless UNRWA received substantial additional contributions in response to its urgent appeals before the end of the year, it would have to reduce its deficit by temporarily suspending certain services and deferring essential capital and other improvements. The Working Group reiterated its conviction that the Agency's humanitarian services of relief assistance, health care and education remained indispensable as long as a just and lasting settlement of the problem of the Palestine refugees had not been achieved. It considered the continuation of the Agency's services to be an obligation of the United Nations on behalf of the international community, and it expressed again its concern that any reduction in the services provided by the Agency would have serious implications for the refugees, the countries in which they lived and the prospects for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East.

In its efforts to help the Commissioner-General in his fund-raising efforts, the Working Group addressed a letter of appeal to member countries and agencies of the United Nations system, as well as special letters of appeal to certain Governments. Because of its continued belief that the basic financial problems of UNRWA would not be solved before its financing was put on a firmer basis, the Working Group noted with approval the new forward planning procedure for the solicitation of voluntary contributions set out by the Commissioner-General in his report to the General Assembly. However, since no single approach could provide a complete solution for the adequate funding of UNRWA, the Working Group saw no alternative to the Agency, and the Commissioner-General personally, continuing to devote time and effort to fund-raising activities.

General Assembly discussion

The Commissioner-General of UNRWA, in presenting his annual report to the Special Political Committee, noted that the Agency's chronic financial problems stemmed from UNRWA'S basic mission of providing directly to the Palestine refugees various services normally the function of government ministries, e.g. education, relief and health care. Those services, he said; were not limited to the inhabitants of the camps, since nearly 65 per cent of the refugees lived outside camps. In view of the importance of those services and the way in which they were provided, the Agency required a staff similar in size to government staffs providing similar services. Therefore, recurrent costs for staff in 1977 had been estimated at $68.8 million out of a total budget of $134 million and those costs were expected to rise to about $88 million in 1978. The Commissioner-General noted that the increase in staff costs resulted mainly from the increase in the teaching staff required to serve a growing school population.

The Commissioner-General informed the Committee that UNRWA'S problems in Lebanon had diminished due to a substantial improvement in the over-all situation in that country.

With regard to the chronic financial difficulties of UNRWA, he cautioned that the Agency might not continue to be viable unless a new approach to the problem was adopted.

In conclusion, the Commissioner-General urged that services continue to be provided to the Palestine refugees. The need for those services, he said, would disappear only with the achievement of a just settlement in the Middle East.

The representative of Norway, speaking as Rapporteur of the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA, presented the Working Group's report to the Committee. He said that reductions of the Agency's activities were still a possibility since the Agency still faced a deficit of about $12 million. Accordingly, unless the Agency received additional contributions for 1977 it would temporarily have to suspend certain services. The Working Group approved the new forward planning procedure for solicitation of contributions and expressed the hope that those Governments that had not contributed in the past and those that had made relatively small contributions would reconsider their positions and contribute generously.

During the discussion in the Special Political Committee, there was general agreement that the mandate of UNRWA, which was due to expire on 30 June 1978, should be extended three years, until 30 June 1981. Many speakers expressed appreciation for the dedicated efforts of the Commissioner-General and staff of UNRWA to provide essential services for the refugees under difficult circumstances, and shared concern about the serious financial situation of the Agency.

While recognizing the importance and urgency of providing immediate assistance to the refugees of Palestine, many representatives emphasized that other aspects of the problem were equally important. Thus, a number of speakers, including Arab representatives, expressed the view that the refugee problem should be dealt with in all of its dimensions and that the United Nations should assume its responsibility in the matter by bringing to an end the Israeli occupation of Arab lands.

The representative of Yugoslavia, among others, pointed out that the problem of the Palestine refugees was primarily a political one whose solution resided in a just and lasting settlement in the Middle East, which must be based on Israel's withdrawal from all Palestinian and other Arab lands and on the realization of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to establish its own State. Pending that solution, the international community had a morally binding obligation to assist UNRWA.

Other Members, including Czechoslovakia and Romania, also expressed the view that a lasting solution of the Palestinian problem could only be found on the basis of the realization of the national rights of the Palestinian people and the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Arab territories.

The representative of PLO, after recalling that his organization had always fully co-operated with UNRWA, stated that the refugee problem would not be solved as long as the Palestinian people did not exercise its inalienable rights to self-determination, including the establishment of an independent State on its own national territory. He said that the Palestinians had been the victims of Zionist expansionist and racist policies. He also cited instances in which Israeli occupying authorities had neglected the housing and health conditions of inhabitants of the camps and had harassed refugee trainees in training centres in western Jordan. Until such time as peace had been established, he said, the international community would have to discharge its responsibility for the Palestinian refugees.

Jordan urged that a special fund of $5 million annually be created for higher-education scholarships for refugees. The only solution to the refugee problem, he said, was for the United Nations to ensure the repatriation of the refugees and just compensation for those who might not wish to be repatriated.

The representative of Egypt maintained that Israel and the international community had the responsibility for the Palestinian people, yet the Arab States in 1976-1977 had contributed $65 million in direct services and through UNRWA, while others shirked their responsibility. The Israelis had an obligation to restore refugee housing which they had pulled down, he added.

The spokesman for Kuwait, noting that his country had always fulfilled its obligations with regard to the financing of UNRWA, stated that non-contributing countries should also be asked to contribute.

Many Arab States concurred that no just and lasting solution to the problem could be obtained until there was a restoration of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and a settlement of the Middle East conflict.

The representative of the USSR also called attention to the centrality of the Palestinian question in the search for a lasting peace in the Middle East and reiterated that his Government favoured a settlement by peaceful means through the resumption, at the earliest possible date, of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East.

The reconvening of the Peace Conference was emphasized by several other speakers, including the representative of Turkey, who declared that the success of the Conference would depend primarily on the recognition that the Palestine question was at the crux of the Middle East problem and that the participation of PLO in the peace talks was essential.

Members, including the United States and Kuwait, felt that the new procedure for forward planning proposed by the Commissioner-General in his report was a step in the right direction, and expressed the hope that it would help mitigate the current precarious financial situation of the Agency. On the other hand, the representative of the USSR considered unacceptable any attempt to change the voluntary basis of contributions to UNRWA, since this would perpetuate the status of the Palestinian people as refugees and would place on an equal footing those States impeding and those favouring the realization by the Palestinian people of its legitimate rights.

In pointing out other difficulties, the representative of the United States noted that the conflict in Lebanon had caused considerable hardship for many Palestinian non-combatants and gravely affected the operations of the Agency. The spokesman for Indonesia, among others, expressed the view that Israeli policies of arresting staff members of the Agency and obstructing its functioning in various ways had rendered its task more difficult.

The spokesman for Israel said that once again his country was being blamed for the problem of the Palestine refugees, although it was the Arab leaders themselves who had created and perpetuated that problem by encouraging the Palestinians to leave their homes at the time of the outbreak of hostilities in 1948, as had been proved time and again. For the past 28 years, the problem of the Palestine refugees had been exploited for political purposes by the Arab States, which hoped to destroy Israel by refusing to integrate and absorb those whom they themselves had uprooted, by insisting vociferously on their return en masse and by refusing to contribute to the financing of the Agency.

He pointed out that in parts of their reports the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General had presented the facts in a light unfavourable to the Israeli administration. For example, with regard to the Gaza Strip, and in particular the demolition of refugee housing, a distorted picture was provided. The fact was that only a few dozen refugee families whose dwellings had been destroyed were now living in substandard housing, he maintained, and all the others had found new homes. This was possible because the inhabitants of Gaza were now assured daily work and were protected from intimidation. Until Israel had taken preventive security measures which had saved hundreds of lives, many refugees had been killed and wounded by Arab terrorists in the Gaza Strip. With regard to the problem of harassment of trainee refugees and the erection of roadblocks at training centres, the forces representing law and order had removed the roadblocks and restored order, without injuring or unduly detaining the trainees. It was true, the spokesman for Israel continued, that a small number of UNRWA officials on the West Bank had been arrested for violating security regulations, but the same thing had taken place in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic. As to the Agency staff members who had not been permitted to enter the territories administered by Israel, the representative argued that the situation was governed both by considerations of security and by the refusal of some Governments to permit Israelis serving with international organizations to enter or work in their territory.

Decisions by the General Assembly

Six draft resolutions were submitted to the Special Political Committee, which approved them on 10, 11 and 15 November. The General Assembly adopted them as a six-part resolution (32/90 A-F) on 13 December 1977. A seventh text, recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, was adopted as resolution 32/111 on 15 December.

By resolution 32/90 A, concerning general aspects of the question, the Assembly noted with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees, as provided for in its resolution 194(III), had not been effected, that no substantial progress had been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly on 26 January 1952⁴⁷ for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement, and that therefore the situation of the refugees continued to be a matter of serious concern. The Assembly expressed its thanks to the Commissioner-General and staff of UNRWA and to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees. It noted with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine had been unable to achieve progress in the implementation of operative paragraph 11 of resolution 194(III); it asked the Commission to exert continued efforts towards that end and to report no later than 1 October 1978.

The Assembly directed attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of UNRWA; it noted with concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, the increased level of income was still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the current year, and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits would recur each year. The Assembly called on all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the Agency's anticipated needs, particularly in the light of the projected budgetary deficit, urging non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions; It decided to extend the mandate of UNRWA until 30 June 1981.

The text was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 122 to 0, with 1 abstention. The Special Political Committee approved it on 10 November by a recorded vote of 100 to 0, with 2 abstentions, on a proposal by the United States.

(For text of resolution 32/90 A and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the second text (resolution 32/90 B), concerning assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities, the Assembly endorsed the efforts of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who were displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of those hostilities. It appealed to all Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute generously for those purposes to UNRWA and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

The text was adopted without vote by the Assembly. It was sponsored in the Special Political Committee—which approved it without objection on 10 November—by Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, the Netherlands, Norway, the Philippines and Sweden.

(For text of resolution 32/90 B, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the provisions of the third text (resolution 32/90 C), concerning Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip, the General Assembly called once more upon Israel to take effective steps immediately for the return of the refugees concerned to the camps from which they were removed, to provide adequate shelters for them, and to desist from their further removal and from destroying their shelters.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of UNRWA, to report to it at its 1978 session on Israel's compliance with the resolution.

The text was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 119 to 1, with 4 abstentions. The Special Political Committee approved it on 11 November by a recorded vote of 101 to 1, with 4 abstentions, on a proposal by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mali, and Yugoslavia.

(For text of resolution 32/90 C and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A fourth resolution (32/90 D) concerned the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA.

⁴⁷ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 315-16, text of resolution 513(VI).

By the provisions of this resolution, the Assembly among other things expressed grave concern at the critical financial situation of the Agency, imminently endangering the essential minimum services being provided, and emphasized the urgent need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain activities at least at their current minimum level. The Assembly commended the Working Group for its work and asked it to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of UNRWA for a further one-year period.

The Assembly adopted this text without vote on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, where it was approved without objection on 10 November, as sponsored by Belgium, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Malaysia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines, Sweden, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

(For text of resolution 32/90 D, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By a fifth resolution (32/90 E), concerning population and refugees displaced since 1967, the General Assembly among other things: re-affirmed the right of the displaced inhabitants to return to their homes and camps in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967; deplored the continued refusal of Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of those inhabitants; and called once more upon Israel to take immediate steps for their return and to desist from all measures obstructing their return, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories. The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of UNRWA, to report on Israel's compliance with the provisions of this resolution.

This text was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 125 to 1. It was approved on 11 November by the Special Political Committee by a recorded vote of 103 to 1, with 2 abstentions, on a proposal by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Chad, Cuba, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mali, Pakistan and Yugoslavia.

(For text of resolution 32/90 E and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the sixth resolution (32/90 F), the General Assembly expressed its appreciation to those Member States which had provided scholarships to Palestinian refugees and appealed to all States to make special allocations, scholarships and grants to those refugees, in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of UNRWA. It invited United Nations agencies to consider the inclusion of assistance for higher education for Palestinian refugee students, requested UNRWA to act as recipient and trustee for such special allocations and scholarships and to award them to qualified students. It also requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly in 1978 on the implementation of the resolution.

The text was adopted by the Assembly unanimously. The Special Political Committee approved it on 15 November, unanimously, on a proposal by Jordan.

(For text of resolution 32/90 F, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By resolution 32/111, on the health needs of Palestinian refugee children, the General Assembly expressed its deep concern over the half a million children in refugee camps without basic nutritional requirements; it requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with Governments of host countries and with relevant United Nations bodies, to ascertain in a sample survey the needs of those children, with a view to averting health problems, and to report in 1978.

The text was adopted by the Assembly without vote. The text, sponsored in the Second Committee by Bangladesh, India, Jordan, Kuwait, Mali, Qatar, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia, was approved without vote on 7 December.

By a related decision (resolution 32/171), the General Assembly on 19 December 1977 asked the Secretary-General, in collaboration especially with UNRWA and the Economic Commission for Western Asia, to prepare and submit to it in 1978 a comprehensive and analytical report on the social and economic impact of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people. (For details, see p. 320.)

Pledges and contributions for 1977

For the calendar year 1977, governmental and intergovernmental contributors pledged the equivalent of $114,109,995 towards UNRWA'S budget. In addition, contributions were received from United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations, private individuals and business corporations. Total income from all sources in 1977 was $122,978,466.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/15 A of 23 November 1976 and all previous resolutions referred to therein, including resolution 194 (III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the annual report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194 (III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of resolution 513 (VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its sincere appreciation to Sir John Rennie, who retired this year as Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, for his efficient administration of the Agency and for his dedicated service to the welfare of the refugees during the past nine years;

3. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for their continued dedicated and effective efforts under difficult circumstances to provide essential services for the Palestine refugees, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194 (III) and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report as appropriate, but no later than 1 October 1978;

5. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year, and that, at presently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

8. Decides to extend until 30 June 1981, without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194 (III), the mandate of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

A/SPC/32/L.6. Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines, Sweden: draft resolution, approved without objection by Special Political Committee on 10 November 1977, meeting 21.

Assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2341 B (XXII) of 19 December 1967, 2452 C (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2535 C (XXIV) of 10 December 1969, 2672 B (XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2792 B (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 B (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 C (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 A (XXX) of 8 December 1975 and 31/15 B of 23 November 1976,

Taking note of the annual report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977,

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the June 1967 hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 2252(ES-V), 2341 B (XXII), 2452 C (XXIII), 2535 C (XXIV), 2672 B (XXV), 2792 B (XXVI), 2963 B (XXVII), 3089 A (XXVIII), 3331 C (XXIX), 3419 A (XXX) and 31/15 B;

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are at present displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975 and 31/15 E of 23 November 1976,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977, and the reports of the Secretary-General of 6 and 21 October 1977,

1. Calls once more upon Israel:

(a) To take effective steps immediately for the return of the refugees concerned to the camps from which they were removed in the Gaza Strip and to provide adequate shelters for their accommodation;

(b) To desist from further removal of refugees and destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly by the opening of its thirty-third session on Israel's compliance with paragraph 1 of the present resolution.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656 (XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728 (XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791 (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2964 (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3090 (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3330 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 D (XXX) of 8 December 1975 and 31/15 C of 23 November 1976,

Having considered the report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Taking into account the annual report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977,

Gravely concerned at the critical financial situation of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, which has already reduced the essential minimum services being provided to the Palestine refugees and which threatens even greater reductions in the future,

Emphasizing the urgent need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at their present minimum level, the activities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the Agency's financial security;

2. Notes with approval the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Population and refugees displaced since 1967

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237 (1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2252 (ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2452 A (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2535 B (XXIV) of 10 December 1969, 2672 D (XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2792 E (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C and D (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975 and 31/15 D of 23 November 1976,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977, and the reports of the Secretary-General of 6 and 21 October 1977,

1. Reaffirms the right of the displaced inhabitants to return to their homes and camps in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Deplores the continued refusal of the Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants;

3. Calls once more upon Israel:

(a) To take immediate steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants;

(b) To desist from all measures that obstruct the return of the displaced inhabitants, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly by the opening of its thirty-third session on Israel's compliance with paragraph 3 of the present resolution.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for the Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 212 (III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Cognizant of the fact that the Palestinian refugees have, for the last three decades, lost their lands and means of livelihood,

Having examined with appreciation the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1977,

Noting that less than one per thousand of the Palestinian refugee students has the chance to continue higher education, including vocational training,

Noting also that over the past five years the number of scholarships offered by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East has dwindled to half of what it was because of the Agency's regular budgetary difficulties,

1. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have provided scholarships to Palestinian refugees;

2. Appeals to all States to make special allocations, scholarships and grants to Palestinian refugees, in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

3. Invites relevant United Nations agencies to consider the inclusion, within their respective spheres of competence, of assistance for higher education for Palestinian refugee students;

4. Requests the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to act as recipient and trustee for such special allocations and scholarships and to award them to qualified Palestinian refugee candidates;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Resolution 32/111, as recommended by Second Committee, A/32/444, adopted without vote by Assembly on 15 December 1977, meeting 103.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 212 (III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Deeply concerned about the fact that almost half a million children in refugee camps are not receiving the basic nutritional requirements,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with Governments of host countries and with relevant United Nations bodies, to undertake a sample survey to ascertain the needs of Palestinian children in refugee camps with a view to averting adverse effects on their health;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Other Middle East questionsComplaint by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

On 23 and 24 July 1977, the representative of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted to the Secretary-General two messages from his Government's Secretary for Foreign Affairs. In the first message, the Foreign Secretary stated that, at dawn on 21 July, Egyptian armed forces had launched an armed attack against the Libyan villages of Musa'ad and Bardia and that the Libyan Gamal Abdul-Nasser Air Force Base near Tobruk was repeatedly bombed by the Egyptian air force.

In the second message, he advised that Egyptian fighters and bombers were undertaking repeated raids against Libyan civilian targets. The cities of Al Jaghbub, Al Kufra, Bardia, Tobruk and Musa'ad had been bombed. As a result of these aggressive acts, he said, a great loss of life had occurred among innocent civilians, and hospitals and schools had been destroyed.

These acts of aggression and the occupation of Libyan territory had been confirmed by Egyptian military communiques and in a speech delivered by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat; they were in violation of the Charter of the United Nations and threatened international peace and security. In compliance with its international responsibilities, the Libyan Foreign Secretary said, his country had exercised extreme patience and self-restraint, but any continuation of this armed aggression would compel it to respond accordingly in order to ensure its security and defend its territorial integrity.

Chapter XIII

The situation in Cyprus

During 1977, the situation in Cyprus continued to be relatively quiet but, as the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council in December, the underlying tensions showed no signs of abating and the political differences confronting the people of Cyprus were brought no nearer to a solution.

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, continued to discharge its mandate, including peace-keeping and humanitarian tasks. In view of the low rate of incidents and the disciplined attitude of the confronting forces, the Secretary-General decided, in consultation with the Government of Finland and the parties concerned, that the Finnish contingent of UNFICYP, which left Cyprus at the end of October, would not be replaced. He said that the critical financial condition of UNFICYP, to which he drew attention on numerous occasions throughout the year, had been a compelling consideration in that regard.

In pursuance of the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council, the Secretary-General continued his efforts by convening representatives of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities to further rounds of talks, including a high-level meeting in February in Nicosia at which the leaders of the two communities, Archbishop Makarios and Rauf R. Denktash, participated. The meeting produced a set of agreed guidelines for future intercommunal talks and, at resumed talks in March and April in Vienna, Austria, proposals were for the first time submitted on territorial aspects of the problem by the Greek Cypriot side and on constitutional aspects by the Turkish Cypriot side. It was not possible, however, to bridge the considerable gap between the views of the two sides. Despite further efforts by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, the differences between the two communities made it impossible to reactivate the mechanism for continued contact between them.

By its resolutions 410(1977) of 15 June and 422(1977) of 15 December, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of UNFICYP for further six-month periods and asked the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices and keep the Council informed of the progress made. On 15 September, after a series of meetings convened as a result of developments in the Famagusta area, the Council adopted resolution 414(1977) by which it called on the parties to refrain from unilateral actions that might adversely affect the prospects for a settlement and called on them to resume the intercommunal talks as soon as possible under the Secretary-General's auspices.

On 9 November, at its thirty-second session, the General Assembly by resolution 32/15 expressed concern over the prolongation of the Cyprus crisis and the lack of progress in the intercommunal talks and called for the urgent resumption in a meaningful and constructive manner of the negotiations between the representatives of the two communities. The Assembly also—by resolution 32/128 adopted on 16 December—asked the Secretary-General to provide his good offices to support the establishment of an investigatory body to trace missing persons in Cyprus.

During 1977, Major-General James Joseph Quinn (Ireland) continued as Commander of UNFICYP. Ambassador Javier Perez de Cuellar (Peru), the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Cyprus relinquished his post in mid-December. Remy Gorgé served as acting Special Representative as from 21 December. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continued during the year as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus.

Political and related developmentsCommunications and reports (January-June 1977)

In a letter dated 5 January 1977 to the Secretary-General, the representative of Cyprus drew attention to what he termed the accelerating pace of forcible expulsion of indigenous Greek Cypriot inhabitants from areas of the Republic of Cyprus under Turkish military occupation. Tactics of harassment and oppression practised by the Turkish military against the inhabitants of the occupied area had recently been intensified, the letter said, and it accused Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot leadership of ruthlessly proceeding with partitionist and annexationist designs. All these acts, the letter stated, were in flagrant violation of repeated General Assembly resolutions and Security Council decisions in the matter. Annexes to the letter gave details of the charges made.

In a letter dated 16 March addressed to Governments of United Nations Member States and members of the specialized agencies, the Secretary-General issued a special appeal for voluntary contributions for the financing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP). He said that the deficit in the UNFICYP budget had grown to nearly $44 million and the Force might find itself unable to function for lack of funds if voluntary contributions were not received in time. In an annex to the letter, giving details of UNFICYP's financial position, the Secretary-General further stated that, as a result of the shortfall in contributions and the resulting deficit, the bills presented to the United Nations by the troop-contributing Governments for reimbursement of their extra and extraordinary costs had been met only to June 1973. The Governments concerned, he added, had conveyed to him their growing and very serious concern over the situation, which could oblige some of them to reduce their contingents or withdraw them from Cyprus.

On 30 April, in pursuance of his continuing mission of good offices, which was renewed by the Security Council on 14 December 1976,¹ the Secretary-General reported to the Council on his efforts to bring about a resumption of negotiations between representatives of the two Cypriot communities.

On 27 January, he reported, a meeting had taken place at UNFICYP headquarters in Nicosia, Cyprus, between Rauf R. Denktash and Archbishop Makarios in the presence of the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Javier Perez de Cuellar, at which it was agreed that a further meeting should take place under the Secretary-General's personal auspices. That meeting took place in Nicosia on 12 February, at the conclusion of which it was stated in a communique that instructions (guidelines) had been worked out for the representatives in the intercommunal talks as the basis for future negotiations; the Cyprus talks would be reconvened in Vienna, Austria, under the auspices of the Secretary-General at the end of March.

In the agreed guidelines referred to above, the two sides stated that: (1) they were seeking an independent, non-aligned bicommunal federal republic; (2) the territory under the administration of each community was to be discussed in the light of economic viability or productivity and land ownership; (3) questions of principles such as freedom of movement, freedom of settlement, the right of property and other specific matters were to be open for discussion, taking into consideration the fundamental basis of a bicommunal federal system and certain practical difficulties which might arise for the Turkish Cypriot community; and (4) the powers and functions of the central federal government were to be such as to safeguard the unity of the country, having regard to the bicommunal character of the State.

During the next few weeks, the Secretary-General went on to report, intensive preparatory talks were conducted with all concerned in the light of the above guidelines, and the first round of the new series of intercommunal talks was held in Vienna from 31 March to 7 April. The first five meetings were held under the personal auspices of the Secretary-General and, following his departure from Vienna on 4 April, six more meetings were held under the auspices of his Special Representative. This round of talks was, the Secretary-General noted, the longest of all the sessions held under his auspices since the adoption of the Security Council's resolution of 12 March 1975,² and the substantive aspects of the Cyprus problem were discussed at some length.

For the first time, he reported, the Greek Cypriot side submitted a specific territorial proposal together with a map embodying its conception of a bicommunal arrangement. The proposal was made subject to certain principles, including the preservation of the sovereignty and unity of the Republic and of the rights of the freedom of movement, residence, work and property of all citizens. For its part, the Turkish Cypriot side submitted a constitutional proposal calling for a partnership in power between two equal political entities joining their resources in a federal administration on a basis of equality, working together at first in a comparatively limited field. The functions proposed for the federal government would be expected to grow, a process described by the Turkish Cypriot representative as "federation by evolution."

The Secretary-General said that each interlocutor made it clear that his own proposals were negotiable. However, each emphasized certain principles conflicting with those of the other side, and each commented negatively on the proposals submitted by the other.

The Greek Cypriot side, he said, contended that the Turkish Cypriot constitutional plan would in effect be a treaty between independent entities, providing not for a federal government but for a confederal system without powers, which could only evolve, if at all, in the direction of complete separation. Since it considered the Turkish Cypriot proposal to be based on unacceptable premises, the Greek Cypriot side felt unable to propose amendments to it, and instead submitted a document of its own on the subject.

According to the Secretary-General, the Turkish Cypriot side contended that: the Greek Cypriot territorial proposal was not a bi-zonal one; it failed to take account of the requirements of economic viability or productivity; it would deprive the Turkish Cypriot community of vital resources; and it would jeopardize its security. The Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, while not accepting the Greek Cypriot proposal, emphasized that he was in no position, and was not expected, to submit a territorial counter-proposal or draw a line of his own on the map. As for the Greek Cypriot constitutional document, the Turkish Cypriot side considered that this would create a unitary rather than a federal State, and was therefore unacceptable.

Annexes to the report contained the text of the opening statement by the Secretary-General and the proposals submitted by the two sides. An agreed communique issued after the final meeting stated, among other things, that it had not been possible to bridge the considerable gap between the views of the two sides. Efforts would be continued to overcome the differences; to that end it was agreed that the talks would resume in Nicosia, in May, under the auspices of the Special Representative, in preparation for a further round in Vienna.

The Secretary-General concluded his report by saying that there was evidently a long way still to go to reach the point where the necessary concessions would begin to be made, including the submission of substantive proposals on the main aspects of the problem. For that, he said, it would be necessary for both sides to make vastly increased efforts to appreciate one another's positions, apprehensions and aspirations. He and his Special Representative were determined to pursue their efforts to move the current negotiating process into a more constructive phase and he hoped that future political developments would assist the parties in bridging the conceptual and substantive differences that separated them.

As the mandate of UNFICYP was due to expire on 15 June 1977, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Security Council on 7 June on the United Nations operation in Cyprus for the period from 7 December 1976 to 7 June 1977.

The Secretary-General reported that the situation in Cyprus had been quiet during the period under review, especially since the meetings in January and February between the leaders of the two communities. Thus, three years after the events of 1974, a substantial trend towards stabilization of the security situation had developed and was being maintained, thanks in good part to the continuing peace-keeping efforts of UNFICYP, with the co-operation of the parties.

The Secretary-General said that the situation along the cease-fire lines had been quiet and there had been no serious breaches of the cease-fire by shooting. The number of violations by movement forward had declined considerably. Areas of concern persisted, however, especially continuing efforts of both sides to improve or strengthen their positions in the confrontation areas, and he hoped that both sides would continue to co-operate with UNFICYP in improving liaison arrangements at all levels with a view to de-escalating military activities, defusing any incidents and reducing tension in general.

The report noted that an important aspect of UNFICYP'S efforts in maintaining the cease-fire concerned the maintenance of the status quo, including innocent civilian activity and the exercise of property rights, in the area between the cease-fire lines. The Force had sought to facilitate normal farming activity by members of both communities on land they owned in that area; there were currently over 100 locations in the area where Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots worked productively on their land under UNFICYP control and escorts, as necessary.

It was also noted in the report that the daily exodus of Greek Cypriots from the north had virtually ceased in late January and, with the institution of a system whereby UNFICYP monitored the movement of Greek Cypriots between the north and the south, the transfers had been reduced to a trickle. There had been a slight improvement in the living conditions of Greek Cypriots remaining in the north, although their situation remained a matter of concern as free and normal access by UNFICYP to their habitations was still not possible. In that connexion, the report noted that UNFICYP'S freedom of movement in the northern part of Cyprus continued to be restricted and was generally limited to access to UNFICYP camps and observation and liaison posts.

The Secretary-General also said it was a matter of concern that the establishment of investigatory machinery for tracing missing persons of the two communities, as agreed upon at the high-level meeting in Nicosia on 12 February, had not materialized.

While the peace-keeping aspect of the United Nations operation in Cyprus had been increasingly effective, the peace-making effort continued to encounter serious obstacles, he continued, and progress towards a solution of the basic problems confronting the two communities in the territorial, constitutional and economic fields remained disappointingly low. Following the resumption of the talks in Nicosia in May under the auspices of his Special Representative, the situation had remained unchanged; it was evident that certain political developments were being awaited before the next step was taken. That step, he said, was for the parties to initiate the process of identifying, exploring in depth and broadening such common ground as might exist between them, with a view to substantive negotiations taking place. He still believed, he said, that the negotiations between the representatives of the two Cypriot communities, at the level of the interlocutors and at other levels as necessary, were the best available method of achieving a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem and he intended to continue the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council. He hoped that the current series of meetings being held by the interlocutors under the auspices of his Special Representative would clear the way for substantive negotiations on all issues at the next round of talks in Vienna.

With regard to the humanitarian aspects of the Cyprus problem, the Secretary-General reported that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees had continued to assist the displaced and needy population in the island in his capacity as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus. (For further details, see subchapter below.)

As to the financial aspects of the United Nations operation in Cyprus, the Secretary-General drew attention once more to the increasingly critical financial situation confronting UNFICYP, which was currently operating at a deficit of $54.1 million. He again warned that the time might come when UNFICYP could not, for lack of funds, continue to function.

The Secretary-General said he had concluded once again that the continued presence of UNFICYP was essential. The Force was an indispensable factor in keeping the potentially explosive situation in the island under control, in supervising the cease-fire, maintaining the status quo in the area between the lines, and helping to defuse incidents and other problems arising between the parties. He therefore recommended the extension of its mandate for a further period of six months.

In an addendum to the report, issued on 15 June, the Secretary-General informed the Council that the parties concerned had signified their concurrence in the proposed extension.

Consideration by the Security Council (15 and 16 June 1977)

The Security Council considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations peace-keeping operation in Cyprus at meetings on 15 and 16 June 1977. The representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation to Vedat A. Celik to participate and make a statement.

On 15 June, the President of the Council presented a draft resolution which had been prepared in the course of consultations; it was adopted by the Council by 14 votes to 0, as resolution 410 (1977). China did not participate in the voting.

By the preambular paragraphs of this text, the Security Council among other things: noted that UNFICYP'S freedom of movement was still restricted and expressed the hope that it would be possible to surmount the remaining obstacles; noted the Secretary-General's view that the best hope for a just and lasting settlement lay in the negotiations between the two communities, and that the usefulness of the negotiations depended on the willingness of all parties to show flexibility by taking into account not only their own interests but the legitimate aspirations of the opposing side; further noted that there had been a relative improvement in the security situation but that that evolution had yet to relieve the underlying tension on the island; and took note of the Secretary-General's report on the high-level meeting under his auspices and emphasized the need to adhere to the agreements reached at that and previous rounds of talks.

The Council also noted the concurrence of the parties concerned in the recommendation for an extension of the stationing of UNFICYP and noted that the Government of Cyprus had agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it was necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1977.

By the operative paragraphs, the Council: reaffirmed its previous resolutions and decisions on the establishment and maintenance of UNFICYP and other aspects of the situation in Cyprus; reaffirmed once again its resolution of 13 December 1974,³ by which it endorsed a General Assembly resolution of 1 November 1974,⁴ and called for the urgent and effective implementation of those resolutions and of its resolution of 12 March

⁴ Ibid., p. 295, text of resolution 3212 (XXIX).

1975;⁵ urged the parties concerned to act with the utmost restraint and to accelerate co-operative efforts; extended the stationing of UNFICYP until 15 December 1977, in the expectation that by then sufficient progress towards a final solution would make possible a withdrawal or substantial reduction of the Force; appealed again to all parties concerned to extend their fullest co-operation so as to enable UNFICYP to perform its duties effectively; and requested the Secretary-General to continue the mission of good offices entrusted to him, keep the Council informed of progress and submit a report by 30 November 1977.

Speaking after the adoption of the resolution, the Secretary-General assured the Council that he would do his utmost to give effect to its decisions. He and his Special Representative would continue their efforts to assist the negotiations, which he believed were the best available method of achieving a settlement. He drew the Council's attention to UNFICYP'S $54.1 million deficit and said it was more than ever necessary to find means of improving the financial situation.

The Council then heard statements by the parties concerned and by Council members.

The representative of Cyprus observed that, almost three years after the invasion of Cyprus in July 1974, a large part of the island was still under foreign occupation. The majority Greek Cypriot population in the area had been ruthlessly uprooted from their homes and properties and rendered, almost overnight, destitute refugees in the number of some 200,000—one third of the entire population of Cyprus. Their houses had been usurped in an attempt to change the demographic character of the island, and Turks from Turkey had been settled in the occupied area in violation of existing international law.

He went on to charge that the Turkish side had refused to account for over 2,000 missing persons taken prisoner at the time of the invasion of the island, many of whom had been seen alive in the hands of the Turkish army. The Turkish side continued to reject proposals for the establishment of an International Red Cross committee to search for the missing persons and provide information to their relatives.

With regard to the intercommunal talks, the representative of Cyprus said that the presence of a foreign army in the north of Cyprus could hardly make for the free negotiations called for in the General Assembly's resolution of 1 November 1974 which was subsequently endorsed by the Council. In his view, priority was given in those decisions to the withdrawal of the foreign occupation forces and the cessation of foreign interference, a priority considered essential to free and meaningful negotiations between the two communities on the constitutional system.

The objective of the Turkish side, he said, seemed to be to conduct negotiations from a position of strength, while Turkey was deliberately undermining the talks through unilateral actions such as the illegal declaration of a so-called Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. He added that the Turkish side availed itself of benefits in the agreements reached so far in the intercommunal talks but reneged on its corresponding obligations. The Turkish proposals were designed not to safeguard the independence or unity of the State but to make sure that the northern part of Cyprus, currently under occupation by the Turkish army, would remain a Turkish protectorate and, at a certain opportune moment, would become an integral part of Turkey. The proposals in fact aimed at the partition of Cyprus with an eye to annexation of the northern part by Turkey.

The representative of Cyprus said he still felt that intercommunal talks—freely conducted within the framework of the relevant resolutions—could lead to a solution of the problem of an independent, unified and viable State of Cyprus. His Government would continue its efforts to that end, but in no circumstances would it accept a legitimized fait accompli brought about by the use of force, nor would it agree to a constitution calculated to lead to the dissolution of Cyprus as an independent, sovereign and non-aligned State.

Vedat A. Celik, in a statement giving the views of the Turkish Cypriot community, said that the resolution just adopted was not acceptable to his community in toto, first, because it referred to the "Government of Cyprus," and he reiterated the Turkish Cypriot view that there existed in Cyprus no government which could represent or was entitled to speak for both communities. There existed two separate autonomous administrations representing the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities respectively, which should be put on a par and treated on an equal footing. Second, the resolution referred to past resolutions which had been amended or rendered obsolete by subsequent developments on the island as well as by agreements reached between the two sides.

He then said there had been an allegation that the mechanism established during the intercommunal talks regarding missing persons had not been able to operate because of intransigence or because Turkey did not like it. The arrangement had been that representatives of the Red Cross and the Red Crescent in Cyprus would, constitute a committee to trace the remaining files; the only obstacle preventing that mechanism from going into operation had been the refusal by the Greek Cypriot Administration to accept or recognize the existence of the Red Crescent in Cyprus.

Mr. Celik said that the slow progress in the intercommunal talks was primarily because the Greek Cypriots still looked upon Cyprus as a Greek island. They were considering how few rights they could give the Turkish Cypriot community within a Greek-dominated administrative set-up and continued to pretend that there was one Cyprus, one administration, one region, whereas in fact, he insisted, there were two separate autonomous administrations exercising exclusive control and authority over two distinct regions of the island.

Another factor jeopardizing peace efforts, he went on to say, was the continuation and intensification of the political and economic warfare of the Greek Cypriot Administration against the Turkish Cypriot community. He cited in this connexion: attempts to prevent the operation of charter flights to northern Cyprus, thus undermining Turkish Cypriot tourism; efforts to obstruct foreign ships from calling at Turkish Cypriot ports, thus preventing the export of agricultural produce and industrial goods with a view to crippling the Turkish Cypriot economy; and, recently, action taken by the Greek Cypriot-administered Central Bank to instruct foreign banks operating in the north to terminate foreign exchange transactions and not to issue foreign exchange to Turkish Cypriots. This had forced the Turkish Cypriot side to establish its own central bank.

Such actions by the Greek Cypriots only served to perpetuate the division of the two communities, he said. What the Turkish Cypriots wanted was a new constitutional and administrative arrangement enabling them to live as equal citizens in peace and security, and physical, actual guarantees that would not again expose them to dangers as in the past—an arrangement that would prevent the domination and oppression of one community by the other.

Mr. Celik said he hoped and believed that a permanent solution of the Cyprus problem was possible through the intercommunal talks, but the process required patience and the success of the negotiations depended above all on a change of heart and approach by the Greek Cypriot side.

According to the representative of Greece, the unacceptable situation in Cyprus was the result of the continuous and blatant disrespect of the other side for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, for the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and for a whole series of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions providing for respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of the non-aligned Republic of Cyprus, the withdrawal of all foreign armed forces from Cyprus, the return of refugees to their homes in safety and the settlement of the problem through negotiations between the two communities with the help of the good offices of the Secretary-General. Three full years after the Turkish invasion, he said, 40 per cent of the Republic's territory was still under foreign military occupation, including 70 per cent of the island's resources, plus the most fertile land and important Greek Cypriot investments in industry, tourism and other sectors of the economy—all in the name of a minority community that did not exceed 18 per cent of the total population of the island.

The Greek representative said it was obvious that, as long as the negotiating process was used by the other side as a convenient delaying tactic in order to perpetuate faits accomplis and to create so-called irreversible situations, there was little hope of making real progress towards a peaceful settlement. He assured the Council that the Greek Government would continue as in the past to lend its full support to the Secretary-General's mission of good offices. The Greek Cypriot side had, he noted, shown its goodwill and readiness to negotiate seriously by submitting concrete proposals on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem, as well as on other related aspects. The Greek Cypriot community was still awaiting a positive response.

The representative of Turkey observed that the Secretary-General's report made it clear that the island had recently enjoyed unprecedented calm and tranquillity, and some of the issues which in the past had adversely affected the relations between the two communities had abated. Room for optimism, he said, had increased not only because of the relative calm but also as a result of the high-level meetings held in late January and early February 1977 between the leaders of the two communities—their first in more than a decade—as well as the "framework" agreement concluded between them, which had been termed unanimously as a break-through in the quest for a solution by all parties concerned. The framework agreement had established a new basis for intercommunal talks, he said, and there was no doubt that the negotiating process had moved into a more concrete phase following the agreement.

With regard to Council resolution 410(1977), he said it made an unfortunate reference to a "Government of Cyprus," which compelled his Government to dissociate itself from the resolution. A reference to such an entity, which was non-existent, was all the more misleading when the leaders of two communities, in their framework agreement of 12 February 1977, had decided to establish an independent, non-aligned, bi-communal federal republic, and thus merge the two separate administrations of the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities. The Turkish representative added that the representative of Greece had again used the terms "invasion" and "occupation" to refer to the Turkish intervention, without mentioning what had led to the intervention—the Greek invasion aimed at annexation of Cyprus.

Many Council members in their statements underlined the importance of the role of UNFICYP and agreed that its continued presence was needed.

The representative of the United Kingdom called the Force an indispensable factor in keeping the peace on the island; his Government hoped to maintain its contingent—the largest in the Force—at its current strength for the next six months and also to continue to meet a large part of the logistic support costs. The French representative said the presence of UNFICYP was an essential element in the continued search for a peaceful settlement. The Federal Republic of Germany, Panama, the United States and Venezuela expressed similar views.

The representative of Canada said his Government would maintain its contingent for the further mandate period but stressed that the parties to the dispute had to realize that the international community could not be expected to continue to maintain a peace-keeping force in Cyprus indefinitely. Thirteen years was already much too long, he said, adding that all Member States, and particularly those having a direct stake in the peace and development of Europe and the Mediterranean, should show their support for the peaceful settlement of the Cyprus dispute by contributing to the UNFICYP Special Account. The United States said the financial burden should be shared by all Member States which professed concern for the realization of an enduring peace on Cyprus.

The spokesmen for Romania and the USSR supported the extension of UNFICYP'S mandate for a further six months inasmuch as the Government of the Republic of Cyprus had consented to the extension. The USSR representative said his Government still understood that the financing of the Force would continue to be on a voluntary basis. He also said it was necessary to stress that extending the mandate one more time would not of itself resolve the substance of the Cyprus problem or promote a settlement: it was the duty of the Security Council to step up efforts to ensure the implementation of United Nations decisions on Cyprus. The USSR, he said, believed that the best possibilities for settling the Cyprus problem would be opened up by the convening of a representative international conference on Cyprus within the framework of the United Nations.

The representative of China said that China had not participated in the vote on the draft resolution as it mainly concerned the question of the United Nations Force, on which China had always held a different position in principle. His Government had been pleased to note that on 27 January and 12 February direct meetings had been held between the President of Cyprus and the leader of the Turkish Cypriots for a solution to the Cyprus question, the first such meetings since 1974, constituting a positive step in the correct direction. Only the Cypriot people would decide the destiny and future of Cyprus. China sincerely hoped that the two Cypriot communities and the countries directly concerned would continue to do away with super-power intervention and in particular avoid giving any opening to that super-power which was bent on sowing discord, inciting trouble and fishing in muddied waters under the pretext of "internationalization." He urged the parties to carry on patient negotiations on an equal footing and in a spirit of mutual understanding and mutual accommodation so as to eliminate their differences gradually and achieve a reasonable solution of the Cyprus question at an early date.

Several speakers stressed the importance of the intercommunal talks. The United Kingdom was encouraged by the fact that at the March/April meetings in Vienna the two sides had made clear that their proposals were negotiable. Pakistan and others shared the Secretary-General's assessment that negotiations between the two sides were the best available method of achieving a just and lasting settlement. France said the meetings had led to some hope of progress and it hoped that the new talks envisaged by the Secretary-General would not be too long in coming. India suggested that the Cypriots might consider accepting the assistance of neutral constitutional experts from other countries to help overcome existing obstacles and evolve a typically Cypriot solution to the Cyprus problem.

A number of speakers, including Panama and Venezuela, spoke of the need to uphold respect for the independence, territorial integrity, sovereignty and non-alignment of Cyprus. According to Panama, the crux of the problem—which the Council could not ignore—was that foreign intervention and military occupation had not ceased. Benin said the continued occupation of a major part of Cyprus by Turkish forces was unacceptable and should not be countenanced. Benin opposed any policy aimed at transforming the island into a strategic military base and called for a peaceful settlement, under United Nations auspices, without any outside interference by anybody. The USSR also called for the exclusion of all foreign intervention.

Communications (July and August 1977)

In a letter dated 22 July 1977 addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Cyprus called attention to what he described as a grave unilateral action taken by Bulent Ecevit, Prime Minister of Turkey, who had reportedly said on 20 July that his caretaker Government of Turkey was starting preparations to revive the modern section of the Cypriot port city of Famagusta. That arbitrary statement, according to the representative of Cyprus, constituted a deliberate reversal of the generally accepted international understanding that the new Famagusta area would remain a closed city, ready to be opened for the return of Greek Cypriot refugees to their homes at the earliest opportunity. Cyprus denounced this irresponsible action by the caretaker Turkish Government and hoped that the new Turkish Government which had just taken office would refrain from endorsing such an action.

In a letter dated 26 August addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Cyprus requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider what he characterized as the seriously deteriorating situation in the island as a result of, among other things, the expulsion by Turkey of indigenous Cypriot inhabitants and the systematic implantation in their homes of an alien population massively imported from Turkey. The letter went on to say that the intolerable situation had been brought to a climax by further illegal moves by the Turkish Government to colonize even the new Famagusta area, which had never been occupied and which remained a sealed-off city, pending arrangements for the return of its legitimate population. If this colonization was allowed, he said, all prospects for a just and peaceful solution of the problem of Cyprus would be totally negated.

On 29 August, the representative of Turkey transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter dated 29 August from Nail Atalay, whom he identified as the representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Mr. Atalay enclosed in his letter the text of a statement made on 19 August by the "Attorney-General of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus," to the effect that no such thing as a constitutionally established "Government of Cyprus" currently existed. In December 1963, the statement said, the legitimate, bicommunal

Government had ceased to exist when the Turkish Cypriot partners were ejected from it by force. The very essence of bicommunality was ruthlessly destroyed and the intercommunal partnership rejected. From then on the Greek and Turkish Cypriots had ruled themselves in their own separate areas. From a legal point of view there were two administrations in Cyprus; if either one was to be called "the Government of Cyprus" it would be correct only when the adjective "north" or "south" was added, as appropriate.

Consideration by the Security Council (31 August-15 September 1977)

The Security Council considered the complaint by Cyprus at seven meetings held between 31 August and 15 September 1977. At their request, the representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation to Vedat A. Celik to participate and make a statement.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Cyprus observed that United Nations resolutions on Cyprus had called on all countries to respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus and the cessation of all foreign interference; those resolutions provided for the withdrawal of all foreign troops without delay and for the urgent return of the refugees to their homes in safety. They also provided for negotiations between the two communities, with a view to reaching freely a mutually acceptable political settlement based on those communities' legitimate rights. Of all those provisions, he said, Turkey had chosen to pay lip-service only to the one which referred to the negotiations, because it wished to obscure the prime provisions demanding the withdrawal of its troops from Cyprus and the return of the refugees to their homes—provisions which Turkey chose to ignore—by claiming that such withdrawal and such return were subject to the outcome of the negotiations. The negotiations, however, were concerned only with the internal aspects of the problem, and not with the withdrawal of the foreign troops and the return of the refugees, which should precede and not follow the talks. He asked how the people of Cyprus, of whatever origin, could by themselves bring about the cessation of the aggression and occupation of their country by a foreign power, or negotiate their future freely, with the presence of a powerful army of occupation on their territory and with the agonizing problem of 200,000 refugees.

At the same time, he went on, Turkey had never allowed a constructive and meaningful dialogue to develop, obviously aiming to consolidate its position in the occupied area by creating faits accomplis and heading off pressures for concessions by making the world believe that it genuinely sought a solution through the intercommunal talks. The effect of the Turkish attitude had been that the intercommunal talks, two and a half years after their commencement, had produced no results.

The Foreign Minister of Cyprus went on to say that the acceptance of a federal system and the decision to present a map at Vienna on the basis of a bi-zonal solution of the territorial aspect were indeed great concessions on the part of the Greek Cypriot side. However, he added, the Turkish Cypriot negotiator, in breach of the prior assurances given by Ankara and the Turkish Cypriot leadership, failed to give any indication of his side's views on the territorial aspect of the problem.

With regard to Famagusta, he said that despite assurances given in July 1977 by the Turkish Government, in response to representations made to Ankara, that it would not proceed with the colonization of the cordoned-off city and that the decisions of the Ecevit Government were not binding on the new Turkish Government, the Turkish army in mid-August opened for settlement part of the city known as the Constantia area. The Greek Cypriot-owned Constantia Hotel in the area was opened as a catering institute, and plans were announced to populate, as from 1 September, 100 nearby apartments and adjoining shops. The Greek names and street signs within the Constantia area were removed and were replaced by Turkish names. He cited reports to the effect that the new town of Varosha—outside the old walled city of Famagusta—had been divided into eight districts which were to be opened to settlement step by step; the Constantia Hotel area and catering institute were the first step.

The decision of the Turkish Government to colonize the new town of Famagusta was the climax of the Turkish policy of faits accomplis, he went on to say, and of Ankara's contempt for United Nations resolutions on Cyprus. The new move, if allowed to proceed, could only be the coup de grace to the intercommunal talks. He appealed to the Security Council urgently to discharge its responsibilities under the Charter and adopt effective measures to reverse the process of colonization of the new city of Famagusta and ensure the immediate implementation of those provisions of the relevant resolutions by which all countries were called on to respect the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus, all foreign interference was to cease, all foreign troops were to be withdrawn and the refugees were to return to their homes under conditions of safety.

Vedat A. Celik, in his statement giving the views of the Turkish Cypriot side, said he failed to understand the necessity for a Security Council meeting: there was no fighting in Cyprus, no threat to peace in the region, no change in the status quo. In calling the meeting, the Greek Cypriots were clearly prompted by internal political considerations, although the pretext was the implementation of United Nations resolutions and the alleged mass colonization of Maras, otherwise known as Varosha, a town situated, he said, wholly within the borders of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and under its jurisdiction.

With regard to past resolutions, he said that they had been adopted without a fair hearing being given to the Turkish Cypriot side and could not therefore reflect the true situation on the island. Many of them had been affected, amended or rendered obsolete by subsequent developments in Cyprus as well as by the agreements mutually accepted during the intercommunal talks. The main aim, he said, should be to encourage and foster intercommunal talks with a view to reaching a just and mutually acceptable solution, and not to engage in futile political fights in international forums. The Turkish Cypriot side had always been and still was in favour of the intercommunal talks.

With regard to Maras, or Varosha, Mr. Celik insisted that rights over this area could not be made the subject of bargaining with the Greek Cypriot side. There had been no "mass colonization" or resettlement of Maras; the use of one single hotel building in the north of the area as a catering institute, preparations for which began more than two years ago, and the allocation of various houses and apartments in the vicinity to the staff and pupils of the institute should not, he maintained, warrant an emergency meeting of the Council.

He said that the Turkish Cypriot side was always ready to start negotiations with a view to finding a realistic solution of the Cyprus problem, one which recognized for the Turkish Cypriot community—the suffering party until now—rights equal to those of the Greek Cypriots and which would provide for its effective and equal participation in the government and administration of the future federal State. The Cyprus problem was an intercommunal problem, he asserted, and it could be solved only through negotiations, on an equal footing, between the two communities.

The spokesman for Greece said his country had fully endorsed the Cypriot request for a Council meeting. Three years after the Turkish invasion of Cyprus, Turkey had stepped up its violations of international law and human rights in the occupied zone through expulsion of the inhabitants and seizures of property. It had placed new obstacles in the way of negotiations by perpetuating the faits accomplis in Cyprus and creating, by delaying tactics, so-called irreversible situations.

The fate of the sealed-off town of Famagusta, he said, represented a cardinal element in the intercommunal negotiations, and by colonizing it the Turkish side was depriving the negotiations of any meaning and rendering any future dialogue pointless.

He appealed to the Council to condemn any attempt at the colonization of Famagusta, or of the rest of the military-occupied zone of Cyprus, and to demand that the Turkish Government desist from any such action and abide by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council.

The Turkish representative said that Greece itself was the main culprit in the continuing tragedy of Cyprus: its record towards Cyprus was one of violence, military invasions, faits accomplis, attempted murders and intrigues. He saw no reason for a Council meeting as nothing had happened since the June meeting except the death—on 3 August—of Archbishop Makarios, which had opened the way to a power struggle not as yet resolved. The only evidence of a deterioration of the situation that the Greek Cypriots had been able to muster was the decision by the authorities of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus to use an old hotel in the south of Famagusta as a centre for hotel management. Whatever the Turkish Cypriot community did in the area under its control was none of the Greek Cypriot community's concern. Despite the ludicrous nature of the Greek Cypriot allegations, he said, the Turkish community was ready to resume the intercommunal talks on a date to be agreed upon. The Turkish Government would, he added, continue to support the mission of the Secretary-General within its current framework.

During the Council's discussion, many speakers made the point that the parties had an obligation not to resort to unilateral actions. The representative of India observed that in seven resolutions adopted since 1974 the Council had urged the parties to act with restraint and to refrain from any action, unilateral or otherwise, likely to affect adversely the prospects for negotiations. The fact that Varosha was in the Turkish Cypriot zone was not in dispute, he said, but the fact remained that changes in the sealed-off sector had to be settled through negotiations and, therefore, pending such negotiations, unilateral actions should be avoided. In India's view, the Security Council should reaffirm its previous resolutions and call upon the parties to desist from such unilateral actions as would adversely affect the success of the bicomunal negotiations.

Canada, France, Mauritius and Venezuela, among other speakers, expressed similar views: the parties should take no initiative that might alter the climate required for the success of the negotiations.

With regard to the charge that a colonization process was taking place in the new town of Famagusta, the representative of Panama said that the Security Council and the General Assembly had stated that they were opposed to any population change as a skilful and arbitrary means of colonization. In that connexion, several speakers—Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States—noted the assurances given to the Council by Mr. Celik that recent moves in new Famagusta did not constitute colonization or resettlement.

A number of speakers stressed the importance of the resumption of the intercommunal talks and felt that they offered the best hope for a just and lasting settlement. China hoped that the two Cypriot communities and the parties concerned, bearing in mind the over-all interests of opposing imperialism and hegemonism, would take a positive attitude and continue to work for an early settlement through patient negotiations, on an equal footing and in a spirit of mutual accommodation. The United Kingdom representative was convinced that the most urgent need was to get the intercommunal talks restarted and he urged both sides to come forward with comprehensive and concrete proposals for resolving their differences. The United States said it would do everything possible to encourage the earliest possible resumption of the intercommunal talks. The USSR said that recent events had confirmed its opinion that a solution of the Cyprus problem required the convening as soon as possible of an international conference under the auspices of the United Nations.

On 15 September, the President of the Security Council presented a draft resolution which he said had been prepared in the course of intensive consultations; it was adopted by the Council, without a vote, as resolution 414(1977).

By the preambular paragraphs of the resolution, the Council among other things expressed its awareness of the urgency of making progress in the solution of the Cyprus problem and recalled its previous resolutions, in particular 365(1974) of 13 December 1974⁶ and 367(1975) of 12 March 1975.⁷ The Council took note of the statements to the Council regarding developments in the new Famagusta area to the effect that there was no settlement in progress in the area.

By the operative paragraphs, the Council: (1) expressed concern at the situation caused by recent developments; (2) called on the parties concerned to refrain from unilateral actions that might affect adversely the prospects for a just and peaceful solution and urged them to continue and accelerate determined co-operative efforts to achieve the Council's objectives; (3) reaffirmed once again its resolution 365(1974), by which it endorsed General Assembly resolution 3212 (XXIX) of 1 November 1974,⁸ and called once again for the urgent and effective implementation of those resolutions and of resolution 367(1975); (4) expressed concern at the lack of progress at the intercommunal talks; (5) called on the representatives of the two communities to resume talks under the auspices of the Secretary-General as soon as possible, and requested the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of developments that might adversely affect the implementation of the current resolution.

Communication (26 September 1977)

By a letter dated 26 September 1977, addressed to Governments of Member States of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, the Secretary-General issued a further appeal for voluntary contributions for the financing of UNFICYP. He said he would continue to do all he could to maintain the Force but he was obliged to point out that the voluntary contributions provided had been utterly insufficient and the accumulated deficit in UNFICYP'S budget through the period ended 15 June 1977 stood at more than $48 million. An additional $12 million were required to meet the costs of the current period ending 15 December 1977. He warned once again that the time could come when UNFICYP could not continue to function for lack of funds, unless additional voluntary contributions were received. He noted that he had been obliged to accept, for financial reasons, a further reduction in the strength of UNFICYP.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 23 September 1977, at its thirty-second session, the General Assembly decided, on the recommendation of its General Committee, to consider the question of Cyprus directly in plenary meetings, on the understanding that it would, when considering the item, invite the Special Political Committee to meet to allow the representatives of the Cypriot communities to express their views and that it would then resume consideration of the item, taking into account the report of the Special Political Committee.

Communications (26 September-20 October 1977)

A number of communications were received during September and October 1977 from the representative of Turkey forwarding, he said, letters addressed to the Secretary-General or Assembly President by representatives of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. They concerned aspects of the discussion of the Cyprus question in the General Assembly.

The first such letter, dated 26 September and under cover of a letter of the same date from Nail Atalay, identified as the representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, was from Rauf R. Denktash, identified as President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, stating that he understood from press reports that Spyros Kyprianou, the current head of the Greek Cypriot Administration, purporting to represent the whole of Cyprus, was scheduled to address the current session of the General Assembly. He stated that Mr. Kyprianou, or for that matter any other representative of the Greek Cypriot Administration, could not legally or constitutionally represent the whole of Cyprus. He pointed out that the Republic of Cyprus had been established in 1960 as a binational State based on the existence of two national communities; the Constitution provided for the joint participation of the two communities in the executive, legislative and judicial organs of the State and lawful authority was therefore based on the joint will of both communities. That authority, he declared, could neither be assumed nor exercised by either community without the consent of the other.

Furthermore, he went on to say, the establishment of a bicomunal federal republic, based on the existence of two separate administrations, was one of the four principles agreed upon at the summit meetings held between President Denktash and the late Archbishop Makarios earlier in the year. He reiterated that neither Mr. Kyprianou nor any other representative of the Greek Cypriot Administration could claim to represent or speak for Cyprus as a whole, but could represent only the Greek Cypriot community. Accordingly, anything said or done by any representative of the Greek Cypriot Administration could not be legally or constitutionally binding on the Turkish Cypriot side.

In a letter dated 6 October, Mr. Atalay declared that the decision of the General Committee, subsequently approved by the General Assembly, to allocate the item on the question of Cyprus to the plenary, with a short interruption of the proceedings to enable the representatives of the two communities to express their views in the Special Political Committee, was totally unacceptable to the Turkish Cypriot community. The principle of equality between the two communities had, he maintained, been established indisputably by the Assembly in various resolutions and endorsed at the summit meetings held between President Denktash and the late Archbishop Makarios. The procedure approved by the Assembly would prevent it from becoming fully acquainted with the views of one of the two principal parties, making a useful debate impossible. The Turkish Cypriot community had no alternative but to dissociate itself from the proceedings of the General Assembly on the question of Cyprus and to state that any resolution on Cyprus which the Assembly might adopt would not be binding on the Turkish Cypriot community.

A letter dated 11 October was forwarded from Nejat Konuk, identified as Prime Minister of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and Chairman of the Symposium of Turkish Cypriots Living Abroad. He drew attention in the letter to two resolutions unanimously adopted by representatives of Turkish Cypriot communities living abroad who attended a three-day symposium in Nicosia from 12 to 14 September 1977. The symposium, he said, was held with a view to organizing and co-ordinating efforts to counter Greek Cypriot propaganda and to develop relations between Turkish Cypriots living abroad and the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The two resolutions stated, among other things, that the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus was the sole representative of all Turkish Cypriots; the Greek Cypriot Administration in the south had neither the authority nor the right to speak on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community or to represent northern Cyprus; and the representatives of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus should be accorded the right of speech equal to that of the representatives of the Greek Cypriot Administration at the United Nations General Assembly and in all bodies of the United Nations, as well as in the United Nations specialized agencies. Other points made were that the bi-national Republic of Cyprus should continue to be an independent, sovereign, biregional, federal, secular State in which the equal political status, agreed powers and rights of both national communities would permanently be guaranteed as hitherto. The two ethnic communities were to be completely autonomous in their respective regions and in all matters not specifically reserved as federal matters, the elimination in any way of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus was to be prohibited and the federal status of the island guaranteed by the motherlands of the two communities.

A letter dated 18 October was forwarded from Vedat A. Celik, identified as Foreign Minister of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. He said that, while efforts were being made for the resumption of the intercommunal talks, the Greek Cypriot Administration continued to undermine those efforts by going out of its way to isolate the Turkish Cypriot Administration politically, as well as to intensify its economic warfare against the Turkish Cypriot community. By declaring Turkish Cypriot ports illegal, by disrupting the commercial activities of Turkish Cypriots abroad and by obstructing tourism to northern Cyprus the Greek Cypriot Administration was deepening the rift between the two communities and making the current separation more permanent.

The letter charged that the most recent example of that irresponsible policy was the arrest and prosecution of a Danish sea captain, Captain Henning Bago Sevinth, whose alleged crime was to sail his vessel, Ingebech, under Danish flag, from Famagusta with a cargo of oranges.

A letter dated 5 October from Rauf R. Denktash was forwarded on 20 October. The letter said that the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Greece, Dimitri S. Bitsios, had warned in a recent statement before the General Assembly that the few remaining hopes for a rapid solution of the Cyprus problem would disappear if Ankara and the Turks of Cyprus did not adopt more reasonable and moderate positions in the immediate future. Mr. Denktash charged that it was Greece that had conspired with the Greek Cypriots since 1878 for the annexation of Cyprus. He added that the aim of the statement by Mr. Bitsios was to mislead the international community as to the true state of affairs in Cyprus. Greece, he said, sought to create the impression that the presence of the Turkish Peace Force was impeding an early solution of the Cyprus problem and thus to secure its premature withdrawal. Plans for the extermination of the Turkish community could then be completed—plans which had been foiled as a result of the legitimate and inevitable Turkish intervention, Mr. Denktash said.

Report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly (25 October 1977)

On 25 October, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly in accordance with its request that he follow up the implementation of its resolution of 12 November 1976,⁹ by which among other things the Assembly demanding implementation of its resolutions of 1974¹⁰ and 1975,¹¹ called on the parties to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in that regard and asked him to continue to provide his good offices for negotiations between the representatives of the two communities.

In his report, the Secretary-General reviewed his efforts during the year to carry out the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council. In spite of his efforts and those of his Special Representative, he said, it had not proved possible at Vienna to reach a stage where an effective negotiating process could evolve out of the interlocutors' statements of conflicting positions. Following the resumption of the talks at Nicosia in May, the situation in that regard remained unchanged, and the political developments which had occurred since then had not facilitated his efforts. He referred in that connexion to problems concerning the continuation of the talks at Nicosia, developments relating to the new quarter of Famagusta, and the constitutional questions raised following the death of President Makarios.

The Secretary-General said that, after the adoption of the most recent Security Council resolution on Cyprus on 15 September, he had undertaken a series of consultations in New York in an effort to assess the possibility of resuming negotiations as soon as possible on the basis of comprehensive and concrete proposals. With the assistance of his Special Representative, he said, he had held discussions with the President of Cyprus, with the Foreign Ministers of Greece and Turkey and with the representative of the Turkish Cypriot community. His Special Representative would pursue these consultations on his behalf at Nicosia, Ankara and Athens during the coming weeks.

The Secretary-General's report also reviewed developments on other matters referred to in Assembly resolutions, such as the withdrawal of foreign troops, changes in the demographic structure of Cyprus, the return of refugees, and humanitarian assistance. In connexion with the latter point, he said the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees had continued, at his request, to assist the displaced and needy population in the island in his capacity as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus (see subchapter below).

The Secretary-General then observed that it was evident that the Assembly's resolutions had yet to be fully implemented and, with regard to some aspects of them, there had been little or no forward movement. His recent talks with all concerned, he said, had served to strengthen his conviction that, as a practical matter, the key to any substantial progress towards the several goals set out in the Assembly's resolutions lay in the initiation of an effective negotiating process in relation to the underlying political problem of Cyprus. The intercommunal talks under his auspices had constituted a concerted effort on the part of the United Nations to give the parties an opportunity to get such a process started, but in spite of all efforts it had not yet proved possible to reach a stage where an effective process could evolve out of the interlocutors' statements of conflicting positions.

The Secretary-General went on to say that in order that the talks might be resumed in a useful way it was necessary to obtain assurances that the parties were prepared to negotiate concretely and substantively on all major aspects of the problem. His recent consultations in New York with all concerned were designed to ascertain whether a basis for activating a genuine negotiating process within the existing framework could be developed. Those consultations would be followed up by his Special Representative, who would also, as a first step, explore the possibility of reactivating the mechanism for continued contact between the representatives of the two communities. He added that he would continue to use his best efforts to promote the undertaking of substantive negotiations to obtain the objectives of the relevant resolutions.

Annexed to the report were notes verbales from the representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey and a letter from Rauf. R. Denktash setting out their respective positions.

In a letter dated 31 October, the representative of Cyprus, Zenon Rossides, noted that one of the letters annexed to the Secretary-General's report was signed by "Rauf R. Denktash, President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus." He said that, as he had made clear in previous letters, there was no federated State in existence in Cyprus. The basic structure of the 1960 Constitution was that of one integral and undivided State; any unilateral declaration of a State within a State in Cyprus violated that structure.

Assembly debate and decisions

When the General Assembly on 7 November began its debate on the question of Cyprus, the Turkish representative objected to the procedure applied at previous sessions for hearing the views of the representatives of the two communities, which he said provided only for a perfunctory hearing of the representatives of the Turkish community in the Special Political Committee, and not in the plenary meetings of the Assembly where the real debate would take place. The arrangement also had the drawback of magnifying the unequal treatment accorded to the Turkish community by enabling the Greek Cypriots to double their voice and speak in yet another capacity, that of the Greek community, in addition to that of the Greek Cypriot delegation. He formally proposed the adoption of a decision enabling a representative of the Turkish community to address the Assembly.

¹⁰ See footnote 4.

¹¹ See Y.U.N., 1975, pp. 300-1, text of resolution 3395 (XXX) of 20 November 1975.

Opposing the motion, the representative of Cyprus said among other things that the existing procedure had been adopted in 1974 with the concurrence of all the parties concerned, including Turkey, and afforded ample opportunity to the Cypriot communities to express their views in the Special Political Committee. The representative of Cuba also spoke in opposition to the motion.

By a roll-call vote of 79 against to 11 in favour, with 30 abstentions, the Assembly rejected the Turkish motion for reconsideration of the procedure adopted for discussion of the Cyprus question.

The Assembly then decided to invite the Special Political Committee to meet later in the day to hear the views of the representatives of the Cypriot communities. The Assembly would resume its consideration of the item the following day.

Accordingly, the Special Political Committee held a meeting on 7 November, in the course of which it heard a statement by Tassos Papadopoulos, representative of the Greek Cypriot community, who said that Turkey was relentlessly pursuing its policy of dismembering and abolishing Cyprus as a sovereign Member State of the Organization. A puppet Turkish Cypriot Administration had been set up in the occupied areas whose only claim to authority and legality lay with the Turkish occupying forces.

The Turkish Cypriots had refused to speak before the Special Political Committee, he said, because they had been told by Turkey not to do so. By not taking the equal opportunity thus afforded to it, the Turkish Cypriot side was aiming at using the General Assembly to promote the recognition of the so-called Turkish federated administration as a sovereign State. It was seeking recognition of the separatist attitudes of the Turkish Cypriot side as the first step in the partition of Cyprus.

Of 17,000 Greek Cypriots once enclaved at Karpas peninsula, he went on to say, only about 1,800 had been allowed to remain; all the rest had been compelled or harassed into fleeing or had been forcibly evicted. About 2,000 persons were still missing and he appealed to the Turkish side to agree to his 1976 proposal that a mixed committee be established to study the evidence, take testimony and trace the whereabouts of the missing persons.

Mr. Papadopoulos went on to say, with regard to the intercommunal talks, that no meaningful and constructive talks, in fact no talks at all, between interlocutors could be held until both sides were ready to set out their views in the form of comprehensive and concrete proposals. The Turkish side had failed or refused to submit any such proposals, while the Greek Cypriot side had submitted three separate proposals on the constitutional aspect and two separate proposals on the territorial aspect of the problem.

After reviewing developments in connexion with the intercommunal talks since 1975, he observed that the Greek Cypriot community saw the talks as a means of carrying out a constructive and rational dialogue, which might open up the way for finding a just, viable, peaceful and lasting solution to the problem. Turkey regarded the negotiation table as a suitable platform from which to dictate unacceptable terms and put forward unreasonable demands.

The Turkish Cypriot side, he said, seemed to expect that the Greek Cypriot side would legitimize by its signature the invasion of its country by Turkish troops and sign away the whole of the territory currently under occupation, so that the Turkish Cypriot minority might occupy, use and administer 40 per cent of the territory of Cyprus in order that emigrants from the Turkish mainland might be accommodated within it, and the demographic structure of the State changed.

The Special Political Committee's report to the General Assembly on its meeting was noted by the Assembly on 8 November by decision 32/404, taken without vote on an oral proposal by the Assembly President.

The Assembly resumed its consideration of the question during five plenary meetings held between 7 and 9 November, at the conclusion of which it adopted resolution 32/15. The text was sponsored by Algeria, Angola, Botswana, the Central African Empire, Guyana, India, Jamaica, Mali, Mozambique, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia.

By the preambular paragraphs of the resolution, the General Assembly among other things: expressed grave concern over the prolongation of the Cyprus crisis, which endangered international peace and security; recalled its resolutions of 1 November 1974,¹² 20 November 1975¹³ and 12 November 1976;¹⁴ deeply regretted that the resolu-

dons on Cyprus had not been implemented; and expressed concern over the lack of progress in the intercommunal talks.

By the operative paragraphs of the text, the Assembly:

(1) called for urgent and effective implementation of its resolution of 1 November 1974, endorsed by the Security Council on 13 December 1974,¹⁵ as the valid framework for solution of the Cyprus problem;

(2) reiterated its call upon all States to respect the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and non-alignment of the Republic of Cyprus and to cease interference in its internal affairs;

(3) called for the urgent resumption of negotiations between the two communities, to be conducted freely on an equal footing on the basis of comprehensive and concrete proposals of the parties, with a view to reaching as early as possible a mutually acceptable agreement based on their fundamental and legitimate rights;

(4) demanded that the parties concerned refrain from unilateral actions which might adversely affect the prospects for a just and lasting solution of the Cyprus problem by peaceful means;

(5) recommended that the Security Council keep the question of Cyprus under constant review and adopt all practical means to promote the effective implementation of its relevant resolutions in all their aspects;

(6) called upon the parties to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the performance of his tasks, as well as with the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus; and

(7) decided to include the question of Cyprus in the provisional agenda of its regular 1978 session and asked the Secretary-General to follow up implementation of the resolution and report thereon to the Assembly at that session.

Two amendments submitted orally by Saudi Arabia were not adopted. The first would have had the Assembly strongly appeal to the parties to—rather than demand that they—refrain from unilateral actions which might adversely affect the prospects for a just and lasting solution of the Cyprus problem by peaceful means. The recorded vote on this amendment was 15 in favour to 71 against, with 48 abstentions.¹⁶

By the second Saudi Arabian amendment, the fifth operative paragraph would have been replaced by one by which the Assembly would recommend that the Security Council should keep the question of Cyprus under constant review, with a view to finding an equitable solution acceptable to the parties concerned. The amendment was rejected by a recorded vote of 16 in favour to 71 against, with 48 abstentions.¹⁷

The fifth operative paragraph was then approved by a separate recorded vote of 82 to 9, with 48 abstentions.

The resolution as a whole was then adopted by a vote of 116 to 6, with 2 abstentions. (For text of resolution 32/15 and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion in the General Assembly, the representative of Cyprus charged that Turkey's attitude towards the United Nations resolutions on Cyprus was one of contemptuous disregard and continuous violation. Its policy was aimed at the dissolution of the Republic of Cyprus, the partitioning of the island and de facto annexation by Turkey of the occupied area. If peace on Cyprus was to be secured, he said, there was no time for further delay in implementing the resolutions, which contained all the necessary elements for a just and lasting solution.

The Turkish representative denied that Turkish Cypriot policy was dictated by Turkey; he stated that the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus had a democratic structure and its leaders, who had been elected under a democratic Constitution, were the true representatives of the Turkish Cypriot community. They were accountable only to that community and functioned independently of Turkey. It was inconsistent to exclude them from the plenary debate, as the Assembly had done. Turkish forces had been sent to Cyprus under the Treaty guaranteeing the status of Cyprus as an independent State to stop the invasion by Greece and to protect the Turkish community until a new constitutional order was devised by common agreement.

He also observed that in 1977 a significant milestone had been reached in the intercommunal talks, even though subsequent developments might not have been as encouraging as expected. If the Assembly wanted to contribute to the search for a settlement, it should encourage the negotiations and refrain from adopting a resolution containing language that could be interpreted as an invitation to have recourse to other means. Any solution acceptable to the Turkish community would be welcomed and endorsed by Turkey, he stated.

The representative of Greece observed that in spite of the adoption of 17 resolutions by the Security Council, three resolutions by the Assembly and six rounds of talks under the aegis of the Secretary-General, the Turkish army continued its occupation of 40 per cent of the territory of Cyprus, from which they had expelled nearly all Greek Cypriots. The latest round of the intercommunal talks was, he said, a tedious and frustrating repetition of the previous ones: the Turkish Cypriot side had refused once again to submit the kind of proposals that could possibly form a basis for a settlement. It had put forward proposals on the constitutional aspect which were incompatible with the guidelines laid down earlier in 1977, had rejected the Greek Cypriot proposals on the territorial aspect and had insisted on a package deal, with priority being given to the constitutional aspect. That meant, he said, that the Greek Cypriots were expected to agree on all other issues before being informed if the Turks really intended to return any portion of the occupied territory and, if so, what portion.

Introducing the draft resolution, the spokesman for Algeria noted that the negotiations between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities under the aegis of the Secretary-General had not achieved the expected results; nevertheless, the sponsors believed that any valid settlement had to come about through dialogue, on a footing of strict equality between the two communities. Re-establishment of confidence in their relations would be a long-term task, he said, and for such a process to develop positively would require from the Organization close support and readiness to assist the parties to rise above their deep-rooted difficulties and entrenched antagonisms.

A number of speakers appealed for a resumption of the talks and for constructive approaches by both sides. The parties were asked to refrain from acts which might interfere with efforts to carry on meaningful negotiations. It was considered by many Members that the necessary framework for achieving a solution of the Cyprus problem had been established by the Assembly's resolution of 1 November 1974 and they called for the implementation of that resolution in all its aspects. Countries holding those and similar views included Bulgaria, Burundi, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Guyana, Kenya, Malta, Panama, Romania, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, the Ukrainian SSR and Yugoslavia.

The spokesman for the USSR said that the way to a settlement lay in the indispensable condition of respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and non-alignment of Cyprus. He reiterated the USSR proposal that the Cyprus problem be considered in a broad international forum—a representative conference within the United Nations framework—which would be decisive in facilitating a just settlement. Support for such a conference was expressed by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR.

The USSR representative also stated that external forces were trying to impose on the Cypriots decisions which were alien to them and which in essence aimed at deciding the fate of Cyprus within the narrow circle of the States members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and at turning the island into a military NATO beach-head in the eastern Mediterranean. That view was shared by Benin, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Kenya, Mongolia and Viet Nam.

Speaking on behalf of the nine States members of the European Community, the representative of Belgium stated that the Community had always supported United Nations efforts to find a lasting and just solution of the Cyprus question and its members encouraged the parties to renew their dialogue without prior formalities. The Community hoped that its appeal would be heard and that negotiations would be resumed as quickly as possible.

The United Kingdom representative also urged that the intercommunal talks be resumed as soon as possible and expressed the hope that the parties would be in a position to make concrete responses to the proposals put forward at earlier rounds. It would be a mistake, he believed, for the Assembly to go beyond that point, to the extent of trying to coerce the parties or to prejudge the separate discussion of the problem in the Security Council. A real settlement could be brought about only by negotiation between the parties themselves. The United Kingdom, he said, regretted that the sponsors of the resolution had not been able to accept some amendments which the nine countries of the European Community had suggested, and he doubted whether the text would make a real contribution to the early resumption of the intercommunal talks, which should have been the Assembly's primary objective.

The representative of the United States said that his Government had over the preceding months actively encouraged a resumption of intercommunal talks and was convinced that there was a sincere desire to move towards a solution of the problems of the eastern Mediterranean. It could not support the resolution, which did not, he said, point towards a negotiated solution. Also, the text exaggerated the threat to international peace that the situation in Cyprus represented and overemphasized the role of the Security Council in the current circumstances. In general, the United States felt, it was not the kind of balanced document to foster an atmosphere of goodwill and co-operation between the two Cypriot communities that was the prerequisite for a resumption of real negotiations. The Assembly should concentrate on the prospects for achieving progress in the months ahead rather than dwell on the problems that had impeded progress to date. The difficulties that had been encountered in the intercommunal negotiations could be overcome with the support, understanding and statesmanship of all parties concerned.

The Chinese representative hoped that the Greek and Turkish communities would take to heart the over-all interests of unity against imperialism and hegemonism, and gradually eliminate their differences through patient negotiations in a spirit of mutual understanding and accommodation.

The spokesman for India said it was possible for the United Nations to bring about a cease-fire and to assist in building a just and honourable peace, but ultimately it was the parties directly concerned that must construct, by their own efforts, the edifice of peace.

According to the representative of Kuwait, the essence of the problem was the legitimate fear and concern of the Turkish community, on the one hand, and the inability of the two communities to work together to dispel that fear, on the other. There was an unbridgeable gulf of mistrust between the two sides. No solution could be found unless the legitimate concerns of the Turkish minority were taken seriously into consideration and it was given an equal opportunity to participate in running the affairs of the Republic.

The representative of Guyana said it was essential for the Security Council to reassure small States—through remedial action on the Cyprus question—that military and economic weakness and the sovereign right of small States to exist were not incompatible elements in the conduct of international relations. Speaking also on behalf of Barbados, Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago, he suggested that the Council consider sending to Cyprus a fact-finding mission to help it assess what additional means it might need to employ to accelerate the negotiating process. The Council might also consider an enhanced role for the Secretary-General, in the light of the lack of progress in the intercommunal talks.

Also at its thirty-second session, the General Assembly, expressing its concern at the lack of progress towards tracing and accounting for missing persons in Cyprus, asked the Secretary-General to provide his good offices, through his Special Representative in Cyprus, to support the establishment of an investigatory body—with the participation of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC)—which would be in a position to function impartially, effectively and speedily so as to resolve the problem without undue delay. The Assembly invited the parties concerned to continue co-operating in the establishment of the investigatory body and work out the modalities with a view to activating it expeditiously.

The Assembly took these actions when it adopted resolution 32/128 without vote on 16 December, on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which approved it, also without vote, on 12 December. The text was a consolidated version of two draft resolutions and was proposed in the Third Committee by its Chairman, after consultations with the sponsors of the two drafts. By the first of these—sponsored by Barbados, Cape Verde, Cyprus, Ecuador, El Salvador, Fiji, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Kenya, Liberia, Malta, Mexico, Mozambique, Nigeria and Panama—the General Assembly would have: requested the Secretary-General to designate an investigatory body of up to five experts, competent in this field, with the task of tracing and accounting for persons missing as a result of armed conflict in Cyprus; invited all parties concerned to undertake to give full co-operation to that body; and requested the Secretary-General to furnish the Commission on Human Rights, at its 1978 session, with information relevant to the implementation of the resolution.

By the second draft resolution, sponsored by Turkey, the Assembly would have: noted the agreement reached between the leaders of the two communities on 12 February 1977 in the presence of the Secretary-General to set up a new investigatory machinery covering missing persons of both communities; invited the two communities to implement that agreement; requested the Secretary-General to provide his good offices, through his Special Representative in Cyprus, to enable the two communities to work out the modalities of the investigatory machinery with a view to activating it expeditiously; and recommended the parties concerned seek the assistance of ICRC to facilitate the work of that investigatory machinery.

Communications (November-December 1977)

By a letter dated 1 November 1977, the representative of Turkey transmitted a letter of the same date from Vedat A. Celik, charging the Greek Cypriot side with intensifying its economic warfare against the Turkish Cypriot community. He quoted the Greek Cypriot English-language daily newspaper, Cyprus Mail, to the effect that the captain of a Lebanese freighter, Omar, had been held by the Larnaca (Cyprus) police on charges of entering the Turkish Cypriot-controlled port of Famagusta to unload a cargo of rice and to take on a consignment of oranges, in May 1977.

Another letter from Mr. Celik, dated 4 November, was forwarded on the same day by the Turkish representative. In it, Mr. Celik referred to the letter of 31 October from Zenon Rossides, whom he referred to as the representative of the Greek Cypriot community, and stated that it was high time that the Greek Cypriot side realized that the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, which was established as the Turkish Cypriot wing of the future Federal Republic of Cyprus, was in fact a reality and, particularly in view of the Denktash/Makarios agreement for the establishment of a bicomunal, bi-zonal federal republic, was a legitimate entity. To deny this reality was not only absurd but also showed the insincerity of the Greek Cypriot side, which consistently refused to proclaim its own federated State as a first step towards the establishment of a partnership within a federal framework.

In a letter dated 21 November, the representative of Cyprus refuted Mr. Celik's letter of 4 November.

In a letter dated 16 November—forwarded by the Turkish representative on 28 November—Mr. Denktash said that on 11 November, a Corvette aircraft, under charter to Deutsche Lufttransport Company of Frankfurt, Federal Republic of Germany, took off from Brindisi, Italy, bound for an airport in northern Cyprus, carrying cargo and experts for the tourist industry. It was prevented from landing at its destination, under threat of interception, and obliged to land at Larnaca airport in the south of Cyprus. This act of piracy of the Greek Cypriot civil aviation authorities, the letter said, formed part of the general policy of the illegal Greek Cypriot Administration to wage economic warfare against the Turkish Cypriot community and not only constituted a flagrant contravention of the fundamental rights of the Chicago International Air Services Transit Agreement but also violated the principles of the International Civil Aviation Organization on the safety of air navigation.

In a letter dated 18 November, forwarded by Turkey on 30 November, Mr. Denktash said that Spyros Kyprianou, whom he identified as the current Head of the Greek Cypriot Administration, in addressing the opening of the sixty-second meeting of the Council of the International Hotel Association at the Nicosia Municipal Theatre in South Cyprus, had stated, inter alia, that anyone who either directly or indirectly contributed to the efforts of the Turkish side to operate the hotels in North Cyprus condoned illegality. Mr. Kyprianou had also stated, according to the letter, that it was his "Government's" resolute decision to continue the struggle until the whole of Cyprus was really free and could welcome once again tourists from all over the world.

Mr. Denktash said that the statements in question, which constituted further examples of the Greek Cypriot side's intention to continue the struggle for the Hellenization of Cyprus and for the economic strangulation of the Turkish Cypriot community, not only undermined the efforts being exerted for the creation of a suitable atmosphere for the resumption of the intercommunal talks but also ran counter to the principles agreed between him and the late Archbishop Makarios on 12 February 1977, which were to form the guidelines of a permanent peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem based on a bicomunal, bi-zonal and non-aligned federal republic.

In a letter dated 1 December, the representative of Cyprus drew attention to what he called further unlawful activities and faits accomplis in Cyprus by Turkey's occupation forces and its instruments, the Turkish Cypriot leadership. The attempt was being made, he said, to consolidate by an illegal "law" the usurpation of the properties of the expelled Greek Cypriot majority from the invaded area, and legalize the distribution of such properties to Turkish Cypriots and colonizing settlers massively transported from Turkey. To this end, fake "titles of ownership" were being issued to the usurpers. The indigenous majority people, expelled by force and terrorist methods from their homes and properties in the invaded territory, were described in the said "law" as "aliens" and arbitrarily divested of all rights to their properties.

Report of Secretary-General (1 December 1977)

On 1 December 1977, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus for the period from 8 June to 30 November 1977.

The Secretary-General reported that during the period under review the situation in Cyprus had been quiet but the underlying tensions had shown no sign of abating and the political differences confronting the people of Cyprus had been brought no nearer to a solution. Efforts to achieve a solution of the underlying problems continued to yield disappointing results. It had not been possible since 3 June to continue the intercommunal meetings, despite the agreement to that effect reached at the conclusion of the first round of the new series of intercommunal talks in Vienna. He continued to hold to the view that the negotiations between the representatives of the two Cypriot communities, at the level of the interlocutors or on other levels as appropriate, were the best available method of achieving a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem.

The Secretary-General noted that consultations he had held in New York in September and October and those held in Nicosia by his Special Representative, which were to be continued in Athens and Ankara, had been designed to see whether a basis for activating an effective negotiation process within the existing framework could be developed. Despite his efforts and those of his Special Representative, it had not proved possible either in Vienna or in Nicosia to reach a stage where such a negotiating process could evolve out of the interlocutors' statements of conflicting positions.

For the resumed talks to be useful, he said, it was necessary to obtain assurances that the parties were prepared to negotiate concretely and substantively on all major aspects of the problem. He added that the obstacles faced by the parties were not procedural ones; whatever the venue, approach or participation, the substantive issues would still have to be faced. He pledged himself to continue the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council and to make every effort to assist the parties in overcoming the obstacles that stood in the way of genuine negotiations.

The Secretary-General went on to report that, despite recurrent difficulties, UNFICYP was pursuing its essential peace-keeping tasks. The situation along the cease-fire lines had been kept quiet; there had been no serious breaches of the cease-fire by shooting during this period, and most of the violations by movement forward had been of a temporary nature. Both sides had continued to improve and strengthen their positions in the area of confrontation. Liaison arrangements with the forces of both sides had continued to function well at all levels, with only occasional problems arising in the immediate aftermath of troop rotations.

The Secretary-General noted that the Finnish battalion, by agreement, had left Cyprus on 31 October, having completed more than 13 years of service. In view of the low rate of incidents and the disciplined attitude of the confronting forces, he had decided in consultation with the Government of Finland and with the parties concerned that the battalion would not be replaced; the critical financial condition of UNFICYP, he said, was a compelling consideration in this regard. In connexion with the withdrawal of the Finnish battalion, he added, a partial redeployment of the Force was carried out to fill the gap left in the area of the Nicosia International Airport.

The financial situation of UNFICYP had continued to be a matter of concern, the Secretary-General said, noting that the deficit in the UNFICYP account had reached $56.7 million. The claims of troop-contributing Governments for reimbursement of their extra expenses in respect of their UNFICYP contingents had been paid only until January 1975. The actual cost of UNFICYP for a six-month mandate period had been estimated at approximately $16.5 million, of which only $11.1 million was billed to the United Nations, the rest being absorbed by the troop contributors. As a consequence of the financial burdens placed upon them, some of the troop-contributing Governments had been facing serious difficulties and had had to consider reducing their contingents.

On other matters, the Secretary-General reported that UNFICYP continued to discharge humanitarian functions (see subchapter below) and promote the normalization of living conditions of the Greek Cypriots remaining in the area under Turkish Cypriot control. Only a limited number of Greek Cypriots had moved from the north to the south, many of whom were children who moved mainly in order to attend secondary schools. The system whereby UNFICYP monitored each transfer application in order to establish that the proposed move was voluntary had continued to function well and for the benefit of all concerned. There had, however, been no apparent improvement in the living conditions of Greek Cypriots remaining in the north, he added, and complaints of restrictions on them and friction between civilians of the two communities were still received. The situation of the Greek Cypriots in the north therefore remained a matter of concern. Also, UNFICYP'S freedom of movement in the north continued to be restricted and was generally limited to access to UNFICYP camps, observation and liaison posts and a few other locations.

With regard to the establishment of investigatory machinery for tracing missing persons of the two communities, he reported that intensive contacts had been taking place both in New York and Nicosia and he hoped that the proposed committee on missing persons would soon be in a position to function impartially, effectively and speedily.

In view of all the circumstances, the Secretary-General said he had concluded once again that the continued presence of UNFICYP remained indispensable in keeping the potentially dangerous situation in the island under control, supervising the cease-fire, maintaining the status quo in the area between the lines and helping to resolve incidents and other problems arising between the parties. In helping to maintain calm in the island, the Force also facilitated the search for a peaceful settlement. He recommended to the Security Council that it extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period of six months.

The Secretary-General also noted in his report that his Special Representative in Cyprus, Javier Perez de Cuellar, would relinquish his post in December to return to the diplomatic service of Peru.

In an addendum to his report issued on 15 December, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the parties concerned had signified their concurrence in the proposed extension of UNFICYP'S mandate.

Consideration by the Security Council (15 and 16 December 1977)

The Security Council met on 15 and 16 December 1977 to consider the report of the Secretary-General of 1 December. The representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation to Vedat A. Celik to participate and make a statement.

The Council began its deliberations by adopting, as resolution 422(1977), a draft text which had been prepared in the course of consultations. The vote was 14 to 0, with China not participating in the vote.

By the preambular paragraphs of the resolution, the Council noted from the report of the Secretary-General that the presence of UNFICYP in the island was essential not only to help maintain quiet in Cyprus but also to facilitate the search for a peaceful settlement. The Council noted also among other things that in the view of the Secretary-General the best hope of achieving a just and lasting settlement lay in the intercommunal negotiations.

By the operative paragraphs, the Council reaffirmed its earlier resolutions on Cyprus and called for their urgent and effective implementation. It urged the parties concerned to act with the utmost restraint and refrain from any unilateral or other action likely to affect adversely the prospects of negotiations for a just and peaceful solution, and to continue and accelerate determined co-operative efforts to achieve the objectives of the Council. The Council decided to extend the stationing of UNFICYP for a further six-month period, ending 15 June 1978. It appealed again to all parties concerned to extend their fullest co-operation to enable UNFICYP to perform its duties effectively and asked the Secretary-General to continue the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Council, to keep the Council informed of progress and to report on the implementation of the resolution by 31 May 1978.

In the course of the statements made after the vote, the representative of Cyprus said that Cyprus firmly supported the intercommunal talks, provided that they were meaningful and constructive with concrete proposals from both sides on the constitutional and territorial aspects of the question. Such proposals from the Turkish side had been totally lacking throughout, he said, with the result that the talks had been meaningless.

A further essential element in the negotiations was that they should be conducted freely, the spokesman for Cyprus continued. The policy of faits accomplis perpetrated by the Turkish army of occupation inevitably affected the conduct of the negotiations. One hopeful element was that the bulk of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot people would eagerly co-operate if left free from outside interference.

The representative of Greece observed that the Secretary-General's report once again showed that no progress had been made with regard to the implementation of United Nations resolutions. The Greek Government would continue to lend its full support to the Secretary-General's mission of good offices. It agreed with his view that negotiations were the best available method of achieving a just and lasting settlement.

Mr. Celik said that although the Turkish Cypriot community had given its consent to the extension of the UNFICYP mandate for a further six months in order to avoid a last-minute crisis, it believed that the mandate in its current form was no longer realistic and had therefore to be changed to conform with the existing situation on the island. Instead of building upon the framework agreed upon by President Denktash and the late Archbishop Makarios for the establishment of a bi-communal and bi-zonal, independent, non-aligned federal republic, he said, the Greek Cypriot leaders had chosen to erode the very essence of that agreement by statements which showed an intention to create a unitary State. They destroyed the momentum brought about by the meeting through their divisive actions. The Turkish Cypriots wanted a new arrangement that would permit their effective participation in the government of the island and give them an equal opportunity to participate in the economic life of the country without discrimination. They demanded actual, effective guarantees against a repetition of the unfortunate past.

The Turkish representative said his Government concurred in the extension of UNFICYP's mandate, having heard Mr. Celik inform the Council of the consent of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. He also said that Turkey resolutely supported the Secretary-General's mission of good offices and had been doing all it could to create a propitious atmosphere for a resumption of the negotiating process.

The Secretary-General told the Council that he would use his best efforts to carry out the provisions of the resolution and make every effort to help bring about a resumption of the intercommunal talks as the best available method of achieving a just and lasting settlement.

The representative of China said his Government had always held a different position in principle on the United Nations Force and thus had not participated in the vote on the resolution.

Several representatives, though supporting the renewal of UNFICYP's mandate, expressed concern about the lack of political progress. The spokesman for India felt that the Council had the right to expect some real progress soon towards the settlement of the two outstanding issues, namely, the territorial and constitutional aspects of the bi-zonal State of Cyprus. The two communities' differing views on these issues were not unbridgeable, he believed, and he hoped they would respond positively to outside suggestions and advice in the form of arbitral procedures to resolve territorial questions and to benefit by the practical constitutional experience of other federal countries to resolve their differences on constitutional issues. India, he added, would increasingly resist attempts to exploit the presence of UNFICYP in order to perpetuate the status quo and to prevent the emergence of a realistic and pragmatic political solution.

The Canadian representative observed that, although the situation on Cyprus had recently been calm, the underlying tensions remained, for the simple reason that no progress had been made in resolving the fundamental political differences between the parties. Canada was among several speakers expressing disappointment that during the period since the previous mandate renewal no intercommunal discussions had been held. The Canadian representative noted with concern an apparent return to the previous unfortunate pattern that had developed when the two communities failed to come to grips with the differences which led to UNFICYP's deployment. That, he said, raised the question of whether UNFICYP's contribution to a settlement could be more than offset by the fact that the Force might, by shielding the parties, remove their incentive to make earnest efforts to deal with the issues dividing them. Maintaining UNFICYP for 13 years without any appreciable political progress was certainly cause for serious disappointment and reflection, he added.

The spokesman for Panama was of the view that the Council should no longer delay adopting measures under the United Nations Charter to put an end to the conflict. He suggested that the Council appoint a commission of inquiry composed of some of its members to identify and evaluate new situations that might have arisen since the foreign invasion.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany appealed to the parties directly involved to co-operate with the Secretary-General and to give proof of their willingness to negotiate concretely.

The United States representative hoped that the early conclusion and the implementation of the agreement to establish a joint committee to trace missing persons would promote a spirit of accommodation that would inspire the intercommunal talks when they resumed.

The representative of the USSR said that the development of the situation in Cyprus strikingly vindicated the substance and timeliness of the USSR's proposal to consider the Cyprus problem within a broad international forum and to convene a conference for that purpose within the framework of the United Nations.

The representative of Benin said that respect for the sovereign independence of States was a key principle of the Charter. In this case, the State of Cyprus had been the victim of aggression by international imperialism and its lackeys. The longer the crisis persisted the greater the danger became; Benin urged the Council to overcome its political inertia and face up to its responsibilities.

A number of speakers expressed concern about the critical financial situation of the Force. The United Kingdom said it had supported the appeals of the Secretary-General for additional funds and was pleased that they had met with some response, though the contributions collected still fell short of UNFICYP's requirements. The United States urged those States that had a special responsibility to maintain international peace to consider their larger interests in stability in the eastern Mediterranean and to contribute their share of UNFICYP's costs. Canada said that in its case the extra costs for which it had billed the United Nations represented only a small fraction of the costs it absorbed for maintaining its contingent in Cyprus. The representative of the USSR said that his Government had voted for the resolution extending the stationing of the United Nations Force on the understanding that the financing of those troops would be carried out, as previously, on a voluntary basis.

Resolution 410 (1977), prepared following consultations among Council members, S/12346, adopted by Council on 15 June 1977, meeting 2012, by 14 votes to 0 (China did not participate in voting).

The Security Council,

Noting from the report of the Secretary-General of 7 June 1977 that in existing circumstances the presence of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus is essential not only to help maintain quiet in the island but also to facilitate the continued search for a peaceful settlement,

Noting from the report the conditions prevailing in the island,

Noting also from the report that the freedom of movement of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus and its civil police is still restricted in the north of the island, and expressing the hope that ways will be found to surmount the remaining obstacles,

Noting further that the Secretary-General expressed the view that the best hope of achieving a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem lies in negotiations between the representatives of the two communities and that the usefulness of those negotiations depends upon the willingness of all parties concerned to show the necessary flexibility, taking into account not only their own interests but also the legitimate aspirations and requirements of the opposing side,

Noting that, owing to the efforts of the Secretary-General, his staff and the United Nations Peace-keeping Force, and with the co-operation of the parties, there has been a relative improvement in the security situation, but that this evolution has yet to relieve the underlying tensions in the island,

Noting also the report of the Secretary-General of 30 April 1977 concerning the high-level meeting under the auspices of the Secretary-General, and emphasizing the need to adhere to the agreement reached at this meeting as well as to the agreements reached at the previous rounds of the talks,

Noting further the concurrence of the parties concerned in the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that, in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1977,

1. Reaffirms the provisions of resolution 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964, as well as subsequent resolutions and decisions on the establishment and maintenance of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus and other aspects of the situation in Cyprus;

2. Reaffirms once again its resolution 365 (1974) of 13 December 1974, by which it endorsed General Assembly resolution 3212 (XXIX) adopted unanimously on 1 November 1974, and calls once again for the urgent and effective implementation of those resolutions and of its resolution 367 (1975) of 12 March 1975;

3. Urges the parties concerned to act with the utmost restraint by refraining from any unilateral or other action likely to affect adversely the prospects of negotiations for a just and peaceful solution and to continue and accelerate determined co-operative efforts to achieve the objectives of the Security Council;

4. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force, established under Security Council resolution 186 (1964), for a further period ending 15 December 1977, in the expectation that by then sufficient progress towards a final solution will make possible a withdrawal or substantial reduction of the Force;

5. Appeals again to all parties concerned to extend their fullest co-operation so as to enable the United Nations Peace-keeping Force to perform its duties effectively;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the mission of good offices entrusted to him by paragraph 6 of resolution 367 (1975), to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1977.

S/12387. Letter of 26 August from Cyprus (request to convene Council).

S/12394. Draft resolution.

Resolution 414 (1977), prepared following consultations among Council members, S/12394, adopted without vote by Council on 15 September 1977, meeting 2032.

The Security Council,

Having considered the situation in Cyprus in response to the letter dated 26 August 1977 from the Permanent Representative of Cyprus to the United Nations,

Mindful of the urgency of making progress in the solution of the Cyprus problem,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 365 (1974) of 13 December 1974 and 367 (1975) of 12 March 1975,

Taking note of the statements made to the Council regarding recent developments in the new Famagusta area to the effect that there is no settlement in progress in the area,

Taking note also of the statements made by the parties concerned as well as by the Secretary-General with regard to these developments,

1. Expresses concern at the situation caused by recent developments;

2. Calls upon the parties concerned to refrain therefore from all unilateral actions anywhere in Cyprus that may affect adversely the prospects for a just and peaceful solution and urges them to continue and accelerate determined co-operative efforts to achieve the objectives of the Security Council;

3. Reaffirms once again its resolution 365 (1974), by which it endorsed General Assembly resolution 3212 (XXIX) adopted unanimously on 1 November 1974, and calls once again for the urgent and effective implementation of those resolutions and of its resolution 367 (1975);

4. Expresses concern at the lack of progress at the intercommunal talks;

5. Calls upon the representatives of the two communities to resume negotiations, under the auspices of the Secretary-General, as soon as possible, meaningfully and constructively, on the basis of comprehensive and concrete proposals;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed of developments that may adversely affect the implementation of the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Cyprus,

Gravely concerned over the prolongation of the Cyprus crisis, which endangers international peace and security,

Recalling its resolutions 3212(XXIX) of 1 November 1974, 3395 (XXX) of 20 November 1975 and 31/12 of 12 November 1976,

Deeply regretting that the resolutions of the United Nations on Cyprus have not yet been implemented,

Expressing concern over the lack of progress in the inter-communal talks,

Mindful of the need to solve the problem of Cyprus without delay by peaceful means in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Calls for the urgent and effective implementation of resolution 3212(XXIX), unanimously adopted by the General Assembly and endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 365 (1974) of 13 December 1974, as the valid framework for the solution of the problem of Cyprus;

2. Reiterates its call upon all States to respect the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and non-alignment of the Republic of Cyprus and to cease any form of interference in its internal affairs;

3. Calls for the urgent resumption in a meaningful and constructive manner of the negotiations between the representatives of the two communities, to be conducted freely on an equal footing on the basis of comprehensive and concrete proposals of the parties concerned with a view to reaching as early as possible a mutually acceptable agreement based on their fundamental and legitimate rights;

4. Demands that the parties concerned refrain from any unilateral actions which might adversely affect the prospects of a just and lasting solution of the problem of Cyprus by peaceful means;

5. Recommends that the Security Council should keep the question of Cyprus under constant review and adopt all practical means to promote the effective implementation of its relevant resolutions in all their aspects;

6. Calls upon the parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the performance of his tasks under the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council as well as with the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus;

7. Decides to include the item entitled "Question of Cyprus" in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session and requests the Secretary-General to follow up the implementation of the present resolution and report thereon to the General Assembly at that session.

The General Assembly,

Concerned at the lack of progress towards tracing and accounting for missing persons in Cyprus,

Expressing the hope that the informal discussions now taking place to establish a joint committee to trace missing persons are successful,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to provide his good offices, through his Special Representative in Cyprus, to support the establishment of an investigatory body with the participation of the International Committee of the Red Cross which would be in a position to function impartially, effectively and speedily so as to resolve the problem without undue delay;

2. Invites the parties concerned to continue co-operating in the establishment of the investigatory body and work out the modalities with a view to activating it expeditiously.

Security Council, meetings 2054, 2055.

S/12463 and Add.1. Report of Secretary-General.

S/12489. Draft resolution.

Resolution 422 (1977), prepared following consultations among Council members, S/12489, adopted by Council on 15 December 1977, meeting 2054, by 14 votes to 0 (China did not participate in voting).

The Security Council,

Noting from the report of the Secretary-General of 1 December 1977 that in existing circumstances the presence of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus is essential not only to help maintain quiet in the island but also to facilitate the continued search for a peaceful settlement,

Noting from the report the conditions prevailing in the island,

Noting also from the report that the freedom of movement of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus and its civil police is still restricted in the north of the island, and expressing the hope that ways will be found to surmount the remaining obstacles,

Noting further that the Secretary-General expressed the view that the best hope of achieving a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem lies in negotiations between the representatives of the two communities and that the usefulness of those negotiations depends upon the willingness of all parties concerned to show the necessary flexibility, taking into account not only their own interests but also the legitimate aspirations and requirements of the opposing side,

Noting that, owing to the efforts of the Secretary-General, his staff and the United Nations Peace-keeping Force, and with the co-operation of the parties, there has been a relative improvement in the security situation, but that this evolution has yet to relieve the underlying tensions in the island,

Noting also the report of the Secretary-General of 30 April 1977 concerning the high-level meeting under the auspices of the Secretary-General, and emphasizing the need to adhere to the agreement reached at this meeting as well as to the agreements reached at the previous rounds of the talks,

Noting further the concurrence of the parties concerned in the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that, in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1977,

1. Reaffirms the provisions of resolution 186 (1964) of 4 March 1964, as well as subsequent resolutions and decisions on the establishment and maintenance of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus and other aspects of the situation in Cyprus;

2. Reaffirms once again its resolution 365 (1974) of 13 December 1974, by which it endorsed General Assembly resolution 3212 (XXIX) adopted unanimously on 1 November 1974, and calls once again for the urgent and effective implementation of those resolutions and of its resolution 367 (1975) of 12 March 1975;

3. Urges the parties concerned to act with the utmost restraint by refraining from any unilateral or other action likely to affect adversely the prospects of negotiations for a just and peaceful solution and to continue and accelerate determined co-operative efforts to achieve the objectives of the Security Council;

4. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force, established under Security Council resolution 186 (1964), for a further period ending 15 June 1978, in the expectation that by then sufficient progress towards a final solution will make possible a withdrawal or substantial reduction of the Force;

5. Appeals again to all parties concerned to extend their fullest co-operation so as to enable the United Nations Peace-keeping Force to perform its duties effectively;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the mission of good offices entrusted to him by paragraph 6 of resolution 367 (1975), to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 31 May 1978.

Humanitarian matters

At the request of the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued throughout 1977 to act as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus—a function he had performed since 1974, following the events of July and August of that year in the island. The assistance was required to bring continued help to persons who were still displaced and in need, including some 155,500 Greek Cypriots, 37,250 Turkish Cypriots and 700 Maronites. With the continued help of the World Health Organization, the World Food Programme (WFP), and the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), further substantial supplies of food and medical consignments were made available throughout the island.

In his June 1977 report to the Security Council (see subchapter above), the Secretary-General said that generous contributions in cash and kind had continued to be forthcoming, through the Co-ordinator, from Governments, non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies, as a result of which the Co-ordinator had been able to ensure an adequate basic nutritional diet for the displaced and needy population of Cyprus and to provide temporary accommodation, health centres and equipment, community centres and facilities for children. Funds had also been made available towards the financing of basic agricultural and reforestation projects, and for the provision of medicaments, medical equipment, educational materials, insecticides and pesticides. The Secretary-General said that UNFICYP had continued to support the Co-ordinator's relief programme by delivering food supplies and other items, distributing social welfare benefits and providing emergency medical services, and had continued to maintain a close and productive working relationship with other United Nations agencies and with both communities. A total of 4,166 tons of relief supplies was delivered or distributed by the UNFICYP humanitarian system during the six-month period ending on 7 June 1977.

The Secretary-General, in his report to the Security Council of 1 December 1977 (see subchapter above), stated that UNFICYP had continued to support the Co-ordinator's relief programme by delivering food supplies and other items. A total of 2,106 tons of relief supplies had been distributed or delivered since June, which included 834 tons, representing 265 truck-loads, delivered to Greek Cypriots and Maronites in the north. In addition, 2,182 tons from UNHCR/WFP sources were provided directly to the Greek Cypriot authorities in the south. Supplies provided under the aegis of UNHCR/WFP to the Turkish Cypriot community in the north totalled 1,272 tons, that is, 272 truck-loads. Resupply to Greek Cypriots in the north consisted of food-stuffs, clothing, gas and diesel oil. Supplies transported to the Turkish Cypriot welfare stores in the north consisted of, inter alia, wheat grain and wheat flour, rice, cooking oil and tinned food-stuffs. Included in this total was medical equipment (approximately 21 tons) consigned to a new hospital in north Nicosia. The total amounts transported since August 1974 were: to Greek Cypriots 16,281 tons; to Turkish Cypriots 13,940 tons. Supplies for Greek Cypriots and Maronites in the north were not usually permitted to be delivered directly to the recipients but only to a representative of the community.

The Secretary-General also reported that UNFICYP continued to provide emergency medical services, including medical evacuation, by ambulance or helicopter; delivery of medicines to the Turkish Cypriot community was made on a regular basis. The Force continued to provide escorts for work parties, inspection teams, farmers and anti-malaria spraying teams in the area between the lines.

Although the situation of displaced and needy persons in Cyprus improved in the course of the year, the continued need for humanitarian assistance led the Secretary-General to request the High Commissioner to continue his role of Co-ordinator.

Questions relating to the membership and organs of the United Nations

Admission of new Members

During 1977, the number of Member States of the United Nations rose to 149 with the admission of the Republic of Djibouti and the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam. The General Assembly admitted these two States to membership on the recommendation of the Security Council.

In the case of Djibouti, the Security Council's recommendation, embodied in resolution 412 (1977), was adopted unanimously on 7 July, and the General Assembly adopted its decision as resolution 32/1 by acclamation on 20 September. The Assembly's resolution was sponsored by 76 States.

In the case of Viet Nam, the Council adopted its recommendation by consensus on 20 July as resolution 413(1977); the Assembly again adopted its decision—resolution 32/2—by acclamation, on 20 September. Resolution 32/2 was sponsored by 106 States.

Resolution 32/2, as proposed by 106 powers, A/32/L.2 and Add.1, adopted by acclamation by Assembly on 20 September 1977, meeting 1.

The General Assembly,

Having received the recommendation of the Security Council of 20 July 1977 that the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam should be admitted to membership in the United Nations,

Having considered the application for membership of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam, Decides to admit the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam to membership in the United Nations.

Composition of relevant organs

By a letter dated 28 September 1977, the representatives of Afghanistan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Oman, Pakistan, the Philippines, Qatar, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen requested the inclusion in the agenda of the thirty-second (1977) session of the General Assembly of an additional item entitled "Question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations."

In an explanatory memorandum attached to the request it was stated that the composition of the various organs of the United Nations should be such as to ensure their representative character. In view of the fact that a large increase had taken place in the membership of the United Nations, the representation of regional groups no longer accurately reflected the principle of equitable geographical distribution.

The memorandum went on to say that it was found that in the various United Nations bodies the level of Asian representation was not in line with its numerical strength. In addition, it stated, there was no longer any valid reason for providing representation for the Asian and African groups together. The time had come for these two groups to be represented separately.

The General Assembly approved the inclusion of the item in the agenda and allocated it to the Special Political Committee, which considered it at three meetings. Before the Committee was a draft resolution sponsored by Afghanistan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Japan, Kuwait, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Qatar, Singapore, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand and the United Arab Emirates.

This text would have amended the Assembly's rules of procedure to provide, among other things, for two additional Vice-Presidents of the Assembly who were to be elected in such a way as to ensure the representative character of the General Committee. An annex set forth a geographical pattern for the Vice-Presidents and Chairmen of the Main Committees of the Assembly.

On 13 December, the Chairman of the Special Political Committee announced that, as a result of consultations with the chairmen of the regional groups, it seemed that agreement could be reached on the text of a statement which the Committee might recommend for adoption by the General Assembly. The Committee approved the draft statement by consensus.

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted without a vote the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, thereby deciding that consideration of the 22-power draft resolution be deferred until the thirty-third (1978) session, and that a contact group, consisting of two or three representatives from each of the regional groups, would meet during the coming year, under the chairmanship of a representative of the Asian group, to study the question, on the understanding that the deliberations would serve as a basis for the consideration of this item by the Assembly in 1978. This action was embodied in decision 32/427.
