The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 2971 (XXVII) of 14 December 1972 and resolution 63(III) of 19 May 1972 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Recalling also its resolutions 3169 (XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 and 3311 (XXIX) of 14 December 1974 on special measures related to the particular needs of the land-locked developing countries,

Bearing in mind various other resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and its related organs and by specialized agencies emphasizing special and urgent measures in favour of land-locked developing countries,

Aware of the need to implement immediately the resolutions adopted by the United Nations, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, particularly its resolution 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, and other related organs of the United Nations calling for specific action in favour of land-locked developing countries,

Noting with concern that the problems of the land-locked developing countries have not found adequate solutions and that concrete and effective operational measures have not yet been taken in their favour.

Noting further that the difficulties faced by the land-locked developing countries, especially their remoteness from the sea, impede their active and full participation in the world economic life and hamper their development,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the land-locked countries and the specialized agencies, to find ways and means of improving the economic situation of the land-locked developing countries through the urgent implementation of resolutions 63(III) and 98(IV) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

2. Calls upon Member States and the entire international community to give special attention to the trade requirements of the land-locked developing countries, including the possible provision of preferential treatment of their goods;

3. Invites the appropriate organs of the United Nations system, as well as the regional development banks, to pay special attention to the particular problems of the land-locked developing countries in their assistance to national, subregional and regional infrastructural projects related to transit;

4. Urges the developed countries and all others in a position to do so to provide technical and/or financial assistance in the form of grants or in the form of concessional loans on appropriate terms to the land-locked developing countries for the construction, improvement and maintenance of their transit roads;

5. Calls upon the Governments of developed and developing countries to invite and urge shipowners, members of liner conferences and insurance companies, as far as is feasible, to establish freight rates, and premiums for the land-locked developing countries, which will encourage and assist the expansion of trade of these countries, and to develop promotional rates for non-traditional exports of these countries, which will facilitate the opening up of new markets and the development of new trade flows;

6. Invites all Member States and the competent international organizations to assist the land-locked developing countries in facilitating the exercise of their right of free access to and from the sea.

Chapter II

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States

The General Assembly in 1975 entrusted the Economic and Social Council with the task of reviewing the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States<sup>1</sup> and co-ordinating the efforts of the various organs of the United Nations system in this endeavour.<sup>2</sup>

Subsequently, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), at its fourth session in May 1976, adopted a resolution by which it requested its Trade and Development Board to establish an appropriate mechanism for the implementation and review functions envisaged in, inter alia, article 34 of the Charter.<sup>3</sup>

At its mid-1976 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the question of the implementation of the Charter. On 4 August 1976, it adopted resolution 2027(LXI), by which it requested all States and the relevant bodies of the United Nations to co-operate fully in the discharge of the mandate entrusted to the Council by the General Assembly concerning the implementation of the Charter. It asked the Secretary-General to prepare progress reports on what had been achieved in the implementation of the Charter by Governments and on the activities conducted in connexion with the dissemination of the Charter. It also requested the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board to report to the Council on the progress achieved towards the establishment of a mechanism for the implementation and review functions envisaged in the Charter.

The resolution, sponsored by Egypt on behalf of the States members of the Economic and Social Council belonging to the "Group of 77," was approved in the Economic Committee on 2 August by 29 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions. The Council adopted it by 42 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of the vote, Australia, Brazil, Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States, among others, referred to the reservations they had expressed in the past with regard to the Charter and said their positions on it remained unchanged. (The latter two countries had voted against the Charter as a whole.) Brazil specifically mentioned its reservations concerning that part of the Charter dealing with the exploitation of resources shared by two or more countries. Mexico noted that the resolution was the first one regarding the Charter to be passed with no votes against it.

In October 1976, the Trade and Development Board decided that special sessions of the Board were the appropriate mechanism for review of the progress achieved in the implementation of, inter alia, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.

<sup>3</sup> Article 34 of the Charter states: "An item on the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States shall be included in the agenda of the General Assembly at its thirtieth session, and thereafter on the agenda of every fifth session. In this way a systematic and comprehensive consideration of the implementation of the Charter, covering both progress achieved and any improvements and additions which might become necessary, would be carried out and appropriate measures recommended. Such consideration should take into account the evolution of all the economic, social, legal and other factors related to the principles upon which the present Charter is based and on its purpose."

Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System

In 1975, the General Assembly established the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System<sup>1</sup> to prepare detailed action proposals, with a view to initiating the process of restructuring the United Nations system so as to make it more fully capable of dealing with problems of international co-operation and development in a comprehensive and effective manner and to make it more responsive to the requirements of the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,<sup>2</sup> as well as to those of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.<sup>3</sup> During 1976, the Ad Hoc Committee held three sessions.

At its session from 11 February to 4 March 1976, the Ad Hoc Committee held a general debate and identified the subjects and areas to which it would give priority consideration. Almost all of the executive heads of United Nations organizations and organs, including the regional commissions, programmes and specialized agencies, and of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), as well as senior officials of the United Nations Secretariat, participated in the general debate. The speakers advanced views on the objectives and substance of the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system and on the priorities they attached to the various questions within the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Following consultations based on ideas expressed in the general debate, the Ad Hoc Committee decided that during its future deliberations it would concentrate its attention on the following areas: (1) the General Assembly; (2) the Economic and Social Council; (3) other United Nations fora for negotiations; (4) structures for regional and interregional co-operation; (5) operational activities of the United Nations system; (6) planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation; (7) inter-agency co-ordination; and (8) Secretariat support services.

The Ad Hoc Committee also decided that the informal working group set up at its first session in 1975 should hold a series of meetings, and invited the Secretary-General in his capacity as Chairman of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) to submit to that group options and possible alternative courses of action in respect of the identified programme areas. The group met from 12 to 29 April and received preliminary and informal views from States on areas of inquiry identified by the Ad Hoc Committee. It also received a paper prepared for ACC by a special interagency task force on options and possible courses of action in respect of those areas.

At its session from 2 to 11 June 1976, the Ad Hoc Committee received an oral report from the Chairman on the progress made in the informal working group. The Committee also had before it the results of the deliberations on institutional arrangements of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its April 1976 meeting and of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fourth session in May 1976. During the June session, the Committee continued to consider the eight areas previously identified and exchanged views on the informal proposals submitted by its members. On the basis of this discussion, the Ad Hoc Committee invited its Chairman to prepare a consolidated text which would attempt to bring together all the proposals made and the views expressed.

This consolidated text served as a basis for further informal consultations by members of the Ad Hoc Committee during the mid-year session of the Economic and Social Council and at the following session of the Ad Hoc Committee, from 23 September to 29 November 1976. Throughout these sessions, the Ad Hoc Committee held mainly informal meetings conducted within the framework of a contact group open to the participation of all Committee members under the leadership of the Chairman.

As a result of extensive consultations on the Chairman's text, a substantial measure of agreement emerged; in particular, a close convergence of views on the draft recommendations relating to the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, other United Nations fora, structures for regional and interregional co-operation, and planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation. The Chairman was asked to prepare a revised version of the consolidated text in these areas. The Committee was unable, however, to discuss in equal detail the proposals contained under the other three headings (operational activities, inter-agency co-ordination and Secretariat support services) and accordingly decided to recommend to the General Assembly that its mandate be extended with a view to enabling it to submit final recommendations and proposals in 1977.

Decisions of the Economic and Social Council

At its April-May 1976 session, the Economic and Social Council decided to review and consolidate the terms of reference of its Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and received a number of proposals relating to the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system. On 14 May, the Council decided (a) to take note of and transmit to the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System the documentation submitted to it on that subject and (b) to consider later in the year, in the context of its consideration of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee, the terms of the report on the rationalization of the work of the Council requested by the General Assembly in 1974.<sup>4</sup> These actions were contained in Council decision 153(LX), adopted, without a vote, on a proposal by the United Kingdom.

Later in 1976, the Council considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee. It took note of it and transmitted it to the General Assembly together with the Council's comments, and informed the Assembly that the report on the rationalization of its work would be submitted after the Council had considered the definitive conclusions of the Ad Hoc Committee. This was set forth in decision 203(LXI) of 9 December 1976, adopted, without a vote, on a proposal by the Council President.

Decisions of the General Assembly

The General Assembly, on 21 December 1976, decided to extend the Ad Hoc Committee's mandate with a view to enabling it to submit final recommendations in 1977. By the same decision (31/421), the Assembly asked the Economic and Social Council to continue the process of rationalization and reform and to submit in 1977 the report it had requested in 1974.<sup>5</sup> The decision was adopted without a vote on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, where it had been approved, without a vote, on the proposal of the Chairman on 9 December. ## Chapter IV

United Nations operational activities for development*The United Nations Development Programme

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) came into existence in 1965 through the merger of the United Nations Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance, established in 1950, and the United Nations Special Fund (which began operations in 1959), for the purpose of assisting developing countries to build long-term self-sustained development capacities. The Programme works closely with Governments and over 24 international agencies in support of some 8,000 development assistance projects in Africa, Asia, Latin America and parts of Europe. Through its network of more than 100 country offices, UNDP helps to co-ordinate strategic development planning and United Nations field development activities with national development endeavours and other forms of external assistance.

The funds required to finance UNDP's development projects come from annual voluntary contributions by Member countries of the United Nations and are allocated through five-year projections known as indicative planning figures, which conform to UNDP's five-year country programming cycles.

Following a 1970 decision of its Governing Council, UNDP established the five-year country programming cycles, which were to emphasize greater coherence and more responsiveness to the needs of developing countries and to establish a more integrated, forward-planning approach to development. At the conclusion of the first programming cycle (1972-1976), UNDP considered that it had attained those designated goals, despite reorganizational problems and a cash-flow crisis in 1975. A target of $1,537.5 million had been set for country and intercountry programme expenditures, and actual expenditures at the end of 1976 coincided with that amount. During the cycle, UNDP sent to the field an average of 10,000 experts annually, provided 28,200 fellowships, and spent nearly $238 million for project equipment and another $188 million in project subcontracts. Together, these development activities stimulated over $19,000 million in follow-up investment commitments between 1972 and 1976.

Country programming planning during the first cycle gave many developing countries a means to identify and systematically structure their technical co-operation requirements over a five-year period. It also helped them to determine which needs UNDP could meet and which could be met by other sources of development assistance, thereby facilitating the Governments' over-all co-ordination of technical assistance activities.

Also, during the first cycle, the so-called new dimensions in technical co-operation were introduced.<sup>1</sup> These were designed to increase UNDP's flexibility and receptivity to the needs of developing countries and they led to modification of traditional programming methods. The Programme shifted towards a comprehensive forward-planning approach for its regional, interregional and global projects by linking them to global development priorities and integrating them at the country level.

The tables on the following pages summarize UNDP's first-cycle performance in financing and project expenditure.

Most project expenditures during the 1972-1976 programming cycle were for country and intercountry programmes which were planned to total $1,537.5 million. For that period, the total expenditure was $1,536.8 million.

Although the largest portion of UNDP expenditures were for country and intercountry programmes, funding in other categories increased. At the beginning of the first programming cycle the Governing Council had established a Programme Reserve to meet unforeseen needs and requirements of the Special Industrial Services programme and to supplement available resources to least developed countries. The Reserve expenditures for 1972-1976 were $38.1 million.

In addition, the Governing Council authorized the UNDP Administrator to use a planning figure of $35 million for 1973-1976 to finance special measures in least developed countries. The Special Measures Fund received $38.2 million in contributions from both developing and developed countries and was supplemented by $9 million from the Programme Reserve.

The amount of provisional estimated expenditures for the 1973-1976 period totalled $27.4 million. The unexpended balance of $19.8 million in the Special Measures Fund, plus an additional $3 million to be made available in 1977 from the Programme Reserve, were to be utilized in the second cycle (1977-1981).

Another source of funding was cost sharing, whereby recipient Governments contributed additional funds to meet a portion of UNDP project costs. The first cost-sharing arrangement occurred in 1973 and since then this method of funding steadily increased. In 1976, cost-sharing expenditures amounted to about $27.5 million.

The Programme, throughout the first cycle, responded to and gave particular attention to such outstanding global concerns as food production, trade promotion, water resources, energy, pollution control, employment, indigenous technology, commodities and the role of women in development.

Activities in 1976 under the United Nations Development Programme

As the result of a financial liquidity problem in 1975 caused by inflation and higher rates of programme approvals and delivery, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) began 1976 with a deficit of $40 million, a nearly exhausted operational reserve and a high inflationary spiral which was eroding its remaining resource base. Consequently, measures were taken to reduce administrative expenditures and 1976 programme expenditures by curtailing new project approvals, rephasing many on-going projects and cancelling others. The UNDP Governing Council approved a 1976 level of expenditure of $370 million, $66 million less than 1975.

A number of steps were taken during this period to minimize any adverse effects from the curtailment of project activities. Country expenditure ceilings were established within which Governments allocated funds among those individual projects which reflected their own development priorities. Also, efforts were made to protect the more economically vulnerable countries, such as the least developed countries, those which had been most seriously affected by the world economic crisis, or newly independent countries.

Financial initiatives designed to preserve planned and on-going projects included the provision of additional resources by recipient countries and the assumption of a portion of UNDP project costs by the recipient country on a cost-sharing basis. Such cost-sharing schemes were usually undertaken by countries at the upper end of the per capita gross national product (GNP) scale; however, the Gambia and the Sudan, which are among the least developed countries, also provided cost-sharing funds. In addition, other countries made advances against their second cycle (1977-1981) planning figures to maintain the progress of their programmes. The United Nations executing agencies also provided additional financial resources in 1976 by deferring reimbursement requests; among these agencies were the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the Asian Development Bank, the African Development Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank and the Arab Fund. Under other arrangements, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the International Labour Organisation, the International Civil Aviation Organization and the Council of Arab Economic Unity made advances.

Through these and other arrangements, such as special bilateral aid to UNDP-supported projects, the projected deficit for the end of 1976 was met, the short-term liquidity situation was resolved and UNDP ended the year with a reasonably satisfactory level of liquid assets.

Various steps were also taken during the year to improve Programme management.

In 1976, UNDP expenditure came to $478.9 million, as follows (in millions of United States dollars):

|   |             |
|---|-------------|
| Field programme                                 |             |
| Country projects                                | 279.3       |
| Intercountry projects                           | 62.8        |
| Programme Reserve                               | 12.1        |
| Special measures for least developed countries  | 12.2 |
| Subtotal  | 366.4       |
| Agency overhead costs                           | 55.3        |
| UNDP administrative and programme support costs | 57.2 |
| Total   | 478.9       |

In addition, the equivalent of $6.5 million was spent from Governments' cash counterpart contributions in support of UNDP-assisted projects. During 1976, UNDP provided over 57,000 man-months of expert services to 127 developing nations and 22 territories at a cost of $247.7 million. At the same time it supplied $63.4 million in project equipment, $32.5 million in training fellowships and $45.5 million in consulting and subcontracted services.

The number of experts on assignment in UNDP-supported projects during 1976 was 8,595, of whom 29 per cent were recruited from developing countries. At the same time, 12 per cent of the $42.4 million worth of equipment purchased, 27.6 per cent of the $32.5 million worth of subcontracts and 30 per cent of the 5,198 fellowships awarded also went to developing countries.

The year showed a substantial increase in investment commitments originating directly or indirectly from UNDP-supported projects. The reported commitments were $4,557 million, which represented a 38 per cent increase from 1975. The total of such reported investment commitments for the first cycle was $19,045 million.

More than $5,833 million in reported investment commitments for the first cycle were in the transport and communications sector while $3,764 million were for natural resources, primarily hydro-electric and nuclear power development; $3,554 million for agriculture, forestry, and fisheries development; $2,787 million for industrial schemes; and $1,141 million for projects in health.

The UNDP Office of Project Execution (OPE) introduced a number of restrictive measures in 1976 because of the financial difficulties; several activities were transferred to other bodies. Also, it began to classify its projects in 1976 as technical and non-technical, the former being projects in which it oversaw substantive and technical functions, and the latter those in which it was primarily responsible for administrative and financial monitoring. In 1976, OPE delivered a total of $15.2 million in projects, of which 58 per cent were classified as non-technical.

Also during the year, OPE was selected as coordinator and contracting agent for a number of large-scale multilateral and bilateral projects, particularly in Africa. It expanded its functions to include construction activities and the provision of information to Governments, businesses and institutions on methods of supplying goods and services to the United Nations development system, methods of utilizing non-convertible currencies, and means for achieving equitable distribution of purchase orders and contracts. Finally, OPE was serving as a focal point for initial efforts for establishment of interagency procurement services.

Another area of active UNDP involvement during 1976 was in technical co-operation among developing countries, referred to as TCDC. It has actively promoted developing countries' co-operative efforts and increased the utilization of such co-operation in the execution of its own projects. Also, UNDP established an information referral service designed to provide developing countries with information on what technical assistance resources were available for bilateral or multilateral co-operation with other developing countries.

In preparation for the 1978 Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, UNDP and the United Nations regional commissions organized regional meetings in 1976 in Bangkok (Thailand), Lima (Peru) and Addis Ababa (Ethiopia). These meetings provided a forum for countries to become aware of each other's capabilities, to identify specific regional problems to which technical co-operation among developing countries could apply, and to consider methods for extending such co-operation.

Provision of operational, executive and administrative personnel

Under a plan established for the provision of operational, executive and administrative personnel in the field of public administration, experts were appointed as officials of recipient Governments while at the same time remaining in the employ of the United Nations or of the specialized agencies participating in this type of scheme. The United Nations, or the agency concerned, recruited the experts and supplemented their salaries paid by the recipient Governments should they be too low to attract experts with the desired level of experience and expertise. These experts were responsible for training designated national counterparts to take over from them as quickly as possible.

In 1976, UNDP financed 190 operational experts, of whom two were sent on a regional basis to Africa. The remaining 188 were sent to the following 44 countries or territories: Antigua (2), the Bahamas (2), Barbados (1), Belize (5), Botswana (18), the Cayman Islands (2), Cyprus (1), Democratic Kampuchea (1), Dominica (1), El Salvador (1), Fiji (2), Gabon (3), the Gambia (4), Ghana (3), the Gilbert Islands and Tuvalu (1), Indonesia (1), Jordan (6), Kenya (4), Lesotho (13), Malawi (15), Mali (1), Malta (7), Mauritania (3), Mauritius (1), Morocco (7), Nepal (1), the Netherlands Antilles (4), the Niger (1), Nigeria (6), Oman (7), Qatar (1), Rwanda (1), Samoa (6), St. Lucia (3), Sierra Leone (2), the Sudan (6), Swaziland (21), Tonga (4), Trinidad and Tobago (4), Uganda (2), the United Republic of Tanzania (5), the West Indies (2), Yemen (2) and Zambia (5).

Extra-budgetary activities in 1976

United Nations Volunteers

At the conclusion of 1976, 285 United Nations Volunteers were working in 52 developing countries. The least developed countries were the major recipients, with over 65 per cent of the total placements. There was an increase in the number of volunteers from developing countries, who by 1976 were more than 50 per cent of the total.

United Nations Volunteers activities normally occurred within the framework of UNDP-supported projects. However, a few placements were made under the regular programmes of the United Nations agencies or on Government projects.

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly designated the United Nations Volunteers to be a major operational unit for the execution of programmes to increase youth participation in development and it expanded the terms of reference of the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers to include any youth programmes requested by developing countries (see page 377). In this connexion, a joint UNDP/United Nations Volunteers-funded regional project was initiated in 1976 with the participation of eight Latin American countries to promote youth participation in development.

The General Assembly also requested the UNDP Administrator to expand United Nations Volunteers activities in the field of domestic development services (see page 377). In this regard, an Asian and Pacific Forum of Domestic Development Services, consisting of governmental and non-governmental organizations, was established as an advisory group to the United Nations Volunteers.

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration was established in 1974 to provide assistance to developing countries for locating and assessing natural resources, and undertaking exploration projects which those countries were unable to undertake because of the high degree of risk involved.

The Revolving Fund began field operations in 1976 with the implementation of a mineral exploration project in Ecuador intended to determine if sufficient reserves of silver, gold and base-metal minerals at San Bartolomé and Río Angas existed to warrant exploitation. The first phase of the project was to cost $1.2 million and, should encouraging results be obtained, an additional $1.2 million had been authorized.

Also in 1976, a project agreement was signed and ratified by the Government of Sudan to explore the precious and base-metal mineralization potential in Jebel Sabidana. The Revolving Fund was to expend $125,000 for a minimum work phase and up to $325,000 for possible additional work.

Pledged contributions rose in 1976 to $5.81 million: Belgium, $400,000; Canada, $1.5 million; Iraq, $10,000; Japan, $3.5 million; and the Netherlands, $400,000.

Assistance to colonial countries and peoples

In 1974, a trust fund to assist the national liberation movements in Africa was established within UNDP. Maintained through voluntary contributions, the Fund was designed to provide greater impetus to project formulation for the benefit of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

Among the assistance projects under way in 1976 was support for the Institute for Namibia, which was training a cadre of civil servants in preparation for independence.

At the end of 1976, the resources of the Fund were $4.2 million, which was entirely committed to projects of various national liberation movements. However, there existed a wide gap between project approval and project implementation due to the scarcity of trained manpower and organized institutions among those movements being assisted. Therefore, actual expenditure in 1976 amounted to $1.2 million. In co-operation with OAU, UNDP was trying to accelerate project implementation rates.

The United Nations Sahelian Office

In October 1976, the UNDP Administrator was given responsibility for the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities and for the United Nations Sahelian Office.

The Sahelian Office supported medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programmes of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and its member States. In 1976, the original 52 priority projects established in 1975 had increased to 90, with a total financial requirement of $400 million. About $180 million was available either through commitments of bilateral donors or by contributions from the Trust Fund. The Trust Fund balance as at 31 December 1976 was $22,375,786. (See also pp. 510-11.)

Fund for the development of Irian Jaya

Full-scale operations under this trust fund ended in 1974; however, residual activity continued in 1976 with allocations totalling $36,713. The balance as at 31 December 1976 was $1,108,009.

Trust Fund Programme for the Republic of Zaire

Full-scale operations under the United Nations Trust Fund Programme for the Republic of Zaire were concluded in 1971. However, an allocation of $410,400 against residual funds was issued in 1976. The balance as at 31 December 1976 was $358,906.

United Nations Trust Fund for an Operational Programme in Lesotho

Decisions of deliberative organs

Operational activities for development

At its June/July 1976 session, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) decided to request the Economic and Social Council to recommend that the United Nations organizations take steps to maintain and improve co-ordination at both the headquarters and the country levels. Also, within the context of UNDP's role as the central funding and co-ordinating body in the field of technical assistance, it requested the Economic and Social Council to bring the matter to the attention of the General Assembly in order to stimulate thorough consideration by the whole United Nations membership of maintaining the spirit of the Assembly's resolution of 11 December 1970<sup>2</sup> on the capacity of the United Nations development system, taking into account the efforts to rationalize the system, particularly those of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System, without prejudicing the results of the restructuring exercise.

On 9 July 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 159(LXI), by which it transmitted the UNDP decision on the coherence of the United Nations development system to the executive heads of the specialized agencies with the request that it be circulated at the next session of their legislative bodies. The Council took this decision on the proposal of Iran, without voting.

In addition, on 4 August 1976, the Council, with the adoption of resolution 2024(LXI), requested all international organizations in the United Nations development system to strengthen co-ordination between headquarters and in recipient countries to improve technical assistance integration at the country level and to enable UNDP resident representatives to act as the central co-ordinating authorities in the field for United Nations development assistance programmes. It also requested those organizations to take steps to strengthen their co-operation with the United Nations field office network, including, where feasible, joint arrangements on the functioning of technical advisers to UNDP resident representatives. The Council requested the UNDP Governing Council to report the following year on the progress achieved in securing such headquarters and field co-ordination. The Economic and Social Council also reaffirmed the desirability of having additional voluntary contributions to the technical assistance programmes of the United Nations system channelled through UNDP as the body for central funding and co-ordination of the country programming system, and it invited all donor countries to assist in the achievement of the dynamic growth of UNDP's activities for the next programming cycle (1977-1981).

Resolution 2024(LXI) was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which approved the text, also without vote, on 30 July on the proposal of Austria, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Italy, Norway, Pakistan and Sweden. Drafting amendments made by Brazil at the plenary meeting were accepted. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly, after considering the reports of the UNDP Governing Council on its two 1976 sessions, noted with appreciation that the Administrator of UNDP and the heads of the agencies and programmes that were members of the Inter-Agency Consultative Board were taking steps to strengthen their mutual co-ordination, both between headquarters and in recipient countries, with a view to improving the integration of technical assistance. The Assembly requested all organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen their co-operation and to ensure an integrated and interdisciplinary approach to operational activities. It looked forward to the report which the Governing Council was to submit to the Economic and Social Council on the subject.

Finally, the Assembly invited all countries to help promote a properly co-ordinated approach to operational activities and to assist in achieving a dynamic growth of UNDP activities in 1977-1981, based on the need for an equitable sharing of the total effort required with regard to the level, timeliness and usability of contributions to UNDP.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/171, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text without vote on 6 December. The resolution was sponsored by Austria, Belgium, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Kenya, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sweden and Uganda. ### Technical co-operation among developing countries

United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries

Reporting to the Governing Council at its 1976 sessions, the UNDP Administrator noted that UNDP had assisted Governments in effectively initiating and participating among themselves in various technical co-operation schemes, as well as promoting and co-ordinating such activities within the United Nations development system.

Working with the United Nations regional commissions, UNDP had developed plans for regional meetings related to technical co-operation among developing countries (see p. 371). Other activities had included a programme to organize and place into operation both the information referral system and improved publicity for the possibilities of technical co-operation among developing countries.

Following its consideration of the question, the Economic and Social Council recommended to the General Assembly that it: convene the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries in August/September 1977 in Buenos Aires, Argentina; designate the UNDP Governing Council's sessional Committee on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries as the preparatory committee; request the Secretary-General to convene in January 1977 the first session of the preparatory committee; request the Secretary-General and the UNDP Administrator to consult regarding adequate servicing for the Conference; request the Secretary-General to provide the necessary funds from the United Nations regular budget for the costs of providing conference servicing facilities for meetings of the preparatory committee and the Conference itself; take note of the provisional agenda, which should be made final by the preparatory committee at its first session; request the Administrator to involve the executing and participating agencies in the preparatory process for the Conference; request these agencies and the regional commissions to participate fully in the Conference preparations and to submit reports to the preparatory committee on their activities for promoting technical co-operation among developing countries; call upon Governments, particularly those of developing countries, to participate actively in the Conference preparations; request the Secretary-General and the Administrator to take measures for the inclusion of technical co-operation among developing countries as a main feature in the 1977 activities of the United Nations Office of Public Information and the regular information activities of UNDP; and request the Secretary-General to invite all Member States and United Nations organizations to participate in the Conference.

These recommendations were set forth in resolution 2023(LXI), adopted by the Council without vote on 4 August 1976. The Council acted on the recommendation of its Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which approved without vote on 30 July a text sponsored by Argentina. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 31/179, endorsed most of the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council. The Assembly decided to convene the Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries from 27 March to 7 April 1978 at Buenos Aires. It also: requested the UNDP Administrator to act as Secretary-General of the Conference; decided that the Governing Council's sessional Committee on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries was to function as the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and was for that purpose to be open to all Member States; requested a programme of public information to ensure global awareness of and interest in the Conference; requested the Secretary-General of the Conference to enlist the co-operation of the agencies and regional commissions in the substantive preparations for the Conference and to establish an interagency task force for this purpose; requested the agencies and regional commissions to contribute to the development by the Conference of a practical plan of action for furthering technical co-operation among developing countries; and called upon Member States to prepare national reports on their experience and capacity as well as needs on a global and sectoral basis in regard to technical co-operation among developing countries.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to invite: all States to participate in the Conference; representatives of those organizations having a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate in the sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices, in the capacity of observers; representatives of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, as observers; the United Nations Council for Namibia, as an observer; the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the regional commissions and interested United Nations organs, to be represented; interested intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, as observers.

Resolution 31/179 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which approved a 45-power text without vote on 10 December. At the plenary meeting 44 Members presented an amendment intended to secure the broadest participation of Member States in preparations for the Conference; it was accepted without vote. (For text of resolution, and list of sponsors of resolution and of amendment, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Reports on technical co-operation among developing countries

The Economic and Social Council by decision 168(LXI), adopted without vote on 4 August 1976, took note of reports of the participating and executing agencies of the United Nations development system and of the regional commissions on technical co-operation among developing countries. The Council acted on the recommendation of its Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which approved the text on 30 July, without a vote, on the proposal of the Chairman.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council invited UNDP, the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations, in co-ordination with the Economic Commission for Western Asia, to intensify their efforts to identify the social and economic needs of the Palestinian people.

The Council requested these agencies and organizations to consult and co-operate with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, to establish and implement concrete projects to improve social and economic conditions of those people. It urged the heads of these bodies to submit proposals to this end to their respective governing bodies and it requested the Secretary-General to report on implementation in 1977.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2026(LXI), adopted by a roll-call vote of 36 to 1, with 11 abstentions. The text was approved by the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee on 30 July by a roll-call vote of 37 to 1, with 11 abstentions. The sponsors were the States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" as well as Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Borrowing authority of the UNDP Administrator

At its June/July 1976 session, the UNDP Governing Council requested authorization for the Administrator of UNDP to borrow moneys until the end of 1977 to maintain the stability of the Programme until an adequate and fully liquid operational reserve could be built up. The conditions governing this borrowing authority were set forth, and authorization was also requested for the Secretary-General to lend moneys from appropriate voluntary trust funds in his custody to UNDP for the stated purposes and conditions; in all such cases a consensus decision was to be required of the Governing Council.

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council decided to recommend that the General Assembly approve this borrowing authority as a contingency measure, and it approved the text of a resolution for adoption by the Assembly. These actions were set out in decision 164(LXI) adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee which approved without vote on 30 July a text forwarded by the Governing Council.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted the recommended text as its resolution 31/165. It thereby gave the Governing Council authority to permit the Administrator to borrow funds until the end of 1977 to meet immediate cash requirements subject to the purposes and under the conditions it set forth. Resolution 31/165 was adopted without vote. The Second Committee approved the text by consensus on 30 November. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

United Nations Volunteers

During 1976, the role of the United Nations Volunteers in the promotion of youth and domestic volunteer services received greater emphasis.

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council approved a decision (165(LXI)) by which it recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution concerning the development and expansion of United Nations Volunteers activities in domestic development services. Decision 165(LXI) was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which approved the text without vote on 30 July. The text had been proposed by the UNDP Governing Council.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted the recommended text as its resolution 31/166. It thereby requested the UNDP Administrator to develop further and expand the activities of the United Nations Volunteers in the field of domestic development services and to ensure that the Volunteers programme actively promoted the formation of and co-operated with regional advisory groups for domestic development services. He was also asked to ensure the publication of relevant material on such services. The Assembly then appealed to Governments for increased contributions to support the growing activities of the United Nations Volunteers.

Resolution 31/166 was adopted without vote; it had been approved by the Second Committee without vote on 29 November. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the terms of another resolution (31/131), the General Assembly designated the United Nations Volunteers programme as a major operational unit of the United Nations for the execution of youth programmes, especially of pilot projects to increase youth participation in development activities and training programmes for youth workers—such programmes to be undertaken only after consultation with the Governments of recipient countries concerned.

It decided to expand the terms of reference of the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers to include the receipt of additional contributions for implementing youth programmes requested by developing countries, and appealed to Governments and all other potential sources to help finance such programmes. The Assembly also set down procedures for intersecretariat consultations on such programmes and called for a report in 1977 on implementation.

Resolution 31/131 was adopted, without vote, on 16 December 1976 on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which approved the text, also without vote, on 9 December on the proposal of Austria, Iran and the Netherlands. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Aid to colonial countries and peoples

At its twenty-first session (15 January to 4 February 1976) the UNDP Governing Council took a decision by which it agreed that UNDP should continue its active support for the humanitarian programmes of the African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU). It requested the Administrator to utilize Namibia's indicative planning figure for financing requests submitted by the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia and to continue responding to requests for assistance submitted by the South West Africa People's Organization by utilizing available resources for humanitarian assistance programmes to African liberation movements.

The Governing Council also appealed to Member States to provide additional resources to the fund established to provide aid to such groups so that UNDP might discharge its obligations.

At its twenty-second (15 June to 5 July 1976) session, the Governing Council requested the Administrator to invite representatives of OAU-recognized African liberation movements to participate in the Governing Council's work as observers and to ensure that UNDP assistance to these liberation movements was provided quickly and with maximum flexibility. It further decided that the Administrator should utilize, in addition to liberation-movement trust funds, funds available in respect of undistributed indicative planning figures provided for future participants during the 1977-1981 period, not to exceed $6 million.

(i) Call upon the Governments of Member States, in particular those of developing countries, to participate actively in the preparations for the Conference and, to this end, to designate a Co-ordinator or liaison officer at the national level and make other arrangements, as appropriate, in order, inter alia, to prepare national documents on their experience and capacity in regard to technical co-operation among developing countries for submission to the Conference; for this latter purpose, the Programme is to prepare standards to facilitate uniformity in the format of the documents;

(j) Request the Secretary-General and the Administrator of the Programme to take all necessary measures to include the question of technical co-operation among developing countries as a main feature in the activities of the Office of Public Information of the United Nations Secretariat and in the regular public information activities of the United Nations Development Programme in 1977, in order to ensure world-wide awareness of and interest in the Conference and its objectives;

(k) Request the Secretary-General to invite all Member States of the United Nations, and organizations of the United Nations system, to participate in the Conference, as well as other participants, as enumerated in General Assembly resolution 3438 (XXX) of 9 December 1975 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1982 (LX) of 19 April 1976.

Resolution 31/165, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/411, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the part of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its twenty-second session relating to the granting of short-term borrowing authority to the Administrator of the Programme, Recognizing the urgent need for the United Nations Development Programme to replenish its Operational Reserve on a funded basis, fully mobilizable at sight or on short notice, to a level sufficient to ensure the financial integrity of the Programme,

Recognizing the urgent need for participating Governments to pay promptly outstanding pledges and obligations to the United Nations Development Programme and to co-operate fully in measures undertaken by the Administrator of the Programme in conjunction with the executing agencies to use accumulated currencies,

Recognizing that, in the meantime, it may prove necessary to assist the United Nations Development Programme to meet short-term cash requirements, arising exclusively out of unavoidable fluctuations between the payment of announced voluntary contributions and the immediate cash requirements of the Programme in any one year, which might jeopardize its approved programme,

1. Authorizes the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to grant to the Administrator of the Programme, until the end of 1977 and on a case-by-case basis, authority to borrow moneys for the purpose stated above and subject to the conditions and specifications indicated below:

(a) In order to borrow, the Administrator shall in each case seek the prior approval of the Governing Council at a regular or special session;

(b) The sources from which such funds can be borrowed are limited to voluntary-funded trust funds of organizations within the United Nations system, provided that the borrowing of such moneys shall be made with the agreement, where appropriate, of the executive directors of the voluntary funds and shall in no way adversely affect the operations of the trust funds to which the moneys have been contributed or the speedy implementation of the programmes concerned, it being understood that borrowings shall be made, in the first instance, from trust funds under the aegis of the Governing Council;

(c) The Governing Council shall only grant borrowing authority to the Administrator as an exceptional measure, if, after a thorough examination of the financial situation of the Programme on the basis of comprehensive information provided by the Administrator, it is satisfied of the need to borrow and is satisfied also regarding the repayment schedules of the anticipated borrowings; such comprehensive information shall include particulars of the status of assessed-programme costs, of voluntary contributions, including the status of accumulated currencies and shared programme costs, of accounts payable and of cash requirements for completing first-cycle programmes and initiating second-cycle programmes, including allocations to programme and administrative support costs and agency overheads;

(d) Such borrowings shall not be used as a means to raise additional funds for the Programme over and above the pledged voluntary contributions and other approved income for any one year;

(e) Repayments shall be made only from the funds voluntarily contributed to the Programme and shall be effected within 60 days of the borrowing;

(f) If possible, borrowing should be free of interest, but if there is a need to pay interest the rate paid should be the lowest possible and in no case higher than that paid by the World Bank for its short-term borrowing and, to the extent possible, the interest shall be paid from earned interest;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to lend moneys to the United Nations Development Programme from appropriate voluntary trust funds in his custody for the purpose and under the conditions specified in paragraph 1 above, on the understanding, however, that in all such cases a consensus decision of the Governing Council of the Programme shall be required.

Resolution 31/166, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/411, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2659(XXV) of 7 December 1970 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1966(LIX) of 30 July 1975,

Noting the expanding role of the United Nations Volunteers in the field of domestic development resulting from the decision taken by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme in 1974 to set up a unit within the United Nations Volunteers programme to deal with the activities in question,

Aware that the International Secretariat for Volunteer Service is in the process of being liquidated under the direction of an interim board appointed by the Council of the International Secretariat and that it has terminated its activities in the field of international volunteer work and domestic development services,

Noting that a number of the activities of the International Secretariat have already been taken over, at the request of the interim board, by the United Nations Volunteers,

1. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme:

(a) To develop further and expand the activities of the United Nations Volunteers in the field of domestic development services;

(b) To ensure that the United Nations Volunteers programme actively promotes the formation of regional advisory groups for domestic development services and subsequently co-operates to the fullest possible extent with such groups;

(c) To ensure that the United Nations Volunteers programme prepares and publishes relevant material on volunteer and domestic development services activities;

2. Appeals to Governments to take into account the growing number and widening scope of the activities of the United Nations Volunteers and, consequently, to consider contributing, or increasing their contribution, as the case may be, to the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2497(XXIV) of 28 October 1969, 2659(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2770(XXVI) of 22 November 1971, 3022(XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3125(XXVIII) of 13 December 1973 and 3140(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1966(LIX) of 30 July 1975 on youth policies and programmes relating to the role of the United Nations Volunteers programme,

Recognizing the important role of youth in the realization of the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, especially those concerning economic and social progress and development,

Convinced that the active participation of the younger generation should be an integrated component of the over-all development process,

Believing that the United Nations must intensify its efforts to implement practical programmes to assist younger people to play constructive roles in the development of their societies, including the means of financing such programmes, Acknowledging the role in the achievement of national and international development goals that has been entrusted to the United Nations Volunteers programme and the potential of that programme for the advancement of the role of youth in development,

1. Considers the United Nations Volunteers programme to be a major operational unit of the United Nations for the execution of youth programmes, especially of pilot projects to increase the participation of youth in development activities and training programmes for youth workers, such programmes to be undertaken only after consultation with the Governments of the recipient countries concerned;

2. Decides to expand the terms of reference of the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers to include the receipt of additional contributions for the purpose of implementing youth programmes requested by developing countries;

3. Appeals to Governments and all other potential sources for contributions to the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers to help finance such youth programmes;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme:

(a) To hold joint intersecretariat consultations at least once every year to discuss the implementation of the programmes described above on the basis of principles and programme objectives laid down by the relevant policy-making bodies;

(b) To take whatever administrative action is necessary within existing resources to implement the course of action described above with effect from 1 January 1977;

(c) To study the best ways and means of ensuring the participation, to the fullest extent possible, of youth and youth organizations in the planning and implementation of youth programmes launched by the United Nations Volunteers;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution with recommendations for further action.

United Nations programmes of technical co-operation

The term "United Nations programmes of technical co-operation" is used in a collective sense to describe the activities carried out by the United Nations in developing countries. These activities are financed under the regular budget of the United Nations, under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), or, in addition, by funds-in-trust.

Activities in 1976

During 1976, obligations for the United Nations programmes of technical co-operation were $92.5 million, as compared with obligations of $96.2 million in 1975.

The expenditures during the year 1976 were as follows:

(1) regular-budget programmes, that is, financed under the United Nations regular budget—$6.4 million;

(2) allocations under the United Nations Development Programme—$61.9 million;

(3) extrabudgetary operations financed by United Nations trust funds—$6.9 million: these included projects financed by recipient Governments, the provision of services of associate experts, the special educational and training programmes for Africa, the Sudano-Sahelian activities, the provision of the United Nations development advisory teams, and projects financed by non-governmental organizations;

(4) extrabudgetary operations financed by UNDP trust funds—$17.3 million; these were mainly operations financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

The largest expenditures made during 1976 were in the fields of: resources and transport; development planning; statistics; public administration; housing, building and planning; population; and social development—in that order.

The percentage of obligations incurred, by region, were: Africa, 41.0 per cent; the Americas, 22.4 per cent; Asia and the Far East, 23.4 per cent; Europe, 2.2 per cent; Middle East, 6.2 per cent; and interregional, 4.8 per cent.

The number of experts assigned during 1976 totalled 2,145, as compared with 2,272 assigned during 1975.

The number of fellows placed in 1976 totalled 1,028, as compared with 1,419 fellows placed during 1975.

The two tables below show, respectively, the number of experts and fellowships provided by the United Nations and the amount of United Nations technical assistance expenditures by field of activity during 1976.

<sup>f</sup>Regular programme data in all five categories refer to technical assistance activities, other than those carried out under UNDP, which were financed from regular budgetary resources of other organizations of the United Nations family.

The World Food Programme

In 1976, the World Food Programme (WFP), a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), continued to provide food aid to developing countries to assist them in carrying out development projects and continued to meet emergency food needs.

Activities in 1976

The target for WFP's food aid pledges for 1975-1976 was set at $440 million in 1974; pledges reached $674 million, or some 54 per cent above the target, as at the end of 1976. Due to additional pledges of commodities, cash and transport services, the Programme in 1976 entered into commitments totalling almost $600 million, compared with $368 million for 1975 and $105 million for 1974.

Contributions in food commodities, cash and services pledged during 1976 for the period 1977-1978 amounted to $523 million, which was 76 per cent of the pledging target of $750 million agreed upon in October 1975. (For a list of pledges, see table below).

The newly constituted Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA) of the international body charged with co-ordinating international food aid, particularly emergency food aid, held its first and second sessions at Rome, Italy, from 26 April to 6 May and from 15 to 24 November 1976. At these sessions, CFA approved 55 projects for economic and social development at a cost of $554 million, a record amount for a single year.

A three-year project for reactivation of waterways in Bangladesh was approved for more than $60 million; other projects included resettlement of nomads and farmers in Somalia ($21 million), development of agriculture and resettlement of farmers in the Syrian Arab Republic ($15 million), and two project expansions and one new project in Pakistan ($25 million).

The World Food Programme was assisted in the preparation of projects by organizations of the United Nations system, in particular FAO, which also provided technical assistance to recipient Governments for several projects for which WFP furnished food aid. In addition, WFP's activities were co-ordinated with those of bilateral programmes and with development activities of non-governmental organizations.

During the year, WFP co-operated with the United Nations Children's Fund in preparation for the 1979 International Year of the Child. A film was to be prepared on WFP aid to children and new projects were developed for vulnerable groups, providing assistance through mother-child health centres.

Emergency operations

In 1976, emergency food needs for about 6.9 million people in 22 countries were met in 26 relief operations. This assistance amounted to approximately 120,580 metric tons of food commodities at an approximate cost of $48 million, including $40 million from WFP's annual allocation for emergency relief and the remainder provided by the International Emergency Food Reserve, which was set up in 1976 at the recommendation of the 1974 World Food Conference. The World Food Programme was also appointed the official co-ordinating agency of emergency food aid in Angola, Cape Verde, Chad and Lebanon.

Decisions of deliberative bodies

At its mid-1976 session, the Economic and Social Council took note of the fourteenth annual report of the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme and the first report of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes.

The Council took this action by decision 167(LXI), approved on 4 August without a vote. On 30 July, the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee had approved the text, without a vote, on the proposal of its Chairman.

Committee of the WFP. See Y.U.N., 1975, pp. 428-29.

Trade and development

The major event concerning trade and development in 1976 was the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), which took place in Nairobi, Kenya, from 5 to 31 May.

The session differed in several respects from previous ones. A pre-Conference meeting of the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD was held to clarify the positions of the various groups of countries and to engage in preliminary negotiations. A more selective agenda was adopted for the Conference and general debates were dispensed with except in plenary sessions.

A major task of the Conference was to translate objectives, principles and policy approaches embodied in the decisions taken at the sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions of the General Assembly into agreements calling for concrete action by Governments. While final decisions of this kind were not taken at the Conference itself, agreement was reached on programmes for negotiation within UNCTAD in the period ahead in several important areas.

The most prominent result of the Conference was in the field of commodities, where the concept of an integrated programme was accepted, together with a time-frame for the implementation of the programme.

Also, a number of decisions entailed commitment on the part of member Governments to proceed immediately with intergovernmental negotiations expected to lead to the adoption of codified instruments of international co-operation, e.g. an international code of conduct on transfer of technology, and the formulation of a set of multilaterally agreed equitable principles and rules for the control of restrictive business practices.

A third group of decisions called for UNCTAD's active contribution to the negotiations on international trade and related issues of international economic co-operation centred in other international bodies.

A fourth group of decisions reflected the thrust given to the work in areas such as industrial development and co-operation, trade with socialist countries of Eastern Europe and economic cooperation among the developing countries.

A fifth area covered by the decisions of the Conference was technical co-operation. Several resolutions in this field contained provisions for strengthening and initiating technical co-operation activities, stressing the need for an increase in resources for financing the programme of activities concerned.

One substantive area in which the Conference fell short of taking decisive action was money and finance, with particular reference to external-debt problems of developing countries. It remitted this question to the Trade and Development Board.

Finally, the Conference adopted a resolution on the institutional future of UNCTAD, inter alia calling on the General Assembly to strengthen the role of UNCTAD in its functions of deliberation, negotiation, review and implementation, on international trade and related issues, of international economic co-operation, and determining that the Trade and Development Board should meet at the ministerial level every two years between sessions of the Conference.

The Trade and Development Board at its October 1976 meeting took a number of decisions as a follow-up to the resolutions of the fourth session of UNCTAD. Among other things, it established an Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee for the Integrated Programme for Commodities and a Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries.

Further activities in the field of commodities included the first preparatory meeting on a common fund, which took place in Geneva, Switzerland, from 29 November to 4 December.

The General Assembly took several decisions relating to UNCTAD at its 1976 session. Among other things, it welcomed the establishment of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries and, on 21 December, adopted resolution 31/159, by which it endorsed, welcomed or noted the various resolutions of the fourth session of UNCTAD.

These and other matters are described in detail in the sections that follow.

Fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and subsequent actions

The fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) was held at Nairobi, Kenya, from 5 to 31 May 1976.

In March 1976, the Trade and Development Board, which served as a preparatory committee, held a special session during which it formulated substantive proposals for action, which were forwarded to the Conference. These proposals concerned (a) export subsidies and countervailing duties, (b) adjustment assistance measures, (c) safeguards and standstill in regard to import restrictions, (d) the debt problems of developing countries, (e) the objectives of financial co-operation, and (f) the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system.

Also in preparation for the Conference, the regional groups of the States members of UNCTAD held meetings to consider the various issues on the agenda. The Asian, African and Latin American regional groups held their respective meetings at Jakarta (Indonesia), Algiers (Algeria), and Caracas (Venezuela). The results of these were considered at the third ministerial meeting of the developing States members of the "Group of 77" at Manila, Philippines, from 26 January to 7 February 1976. At this meeting, the Manila Declaration and Programme of Action was adopted as a position paper to be submitted to the Conference. Similar meetings were held at Paris, France, by representatives of the countries members of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and at Moscow, USSR, by the countries members of the Permanent Commission for Foreign Trade of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA).

The formal opening of the Conference was preceded by a meeting on 4 May 1976 of senior officials representing the participating States, who agreed on a number of recommendations concerning the organization of the work of the session. These recommendations, subsequently accepted by the Conference, were that the Conference establish one committee, the General Committee, which would deal with the main substantive issues; the General Committee, in turn, would establish five negotiating groups, among which items would be distributed as follows: Group I, commodities; Group II, manufactures and semi-manufactures, review and evaluation of progress made in the multilateral trade negotiations and other actions and decisions taken at the international level, and transfer of technology; Group III, money and finance, transfer of real resources for development, and review of developments in the international monetary field; Group IV, least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, and economic co-operation among developing countries; and Group V, trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems, and institutional issues.

The Conference elected Eliud T. Mwamunga (Kenya) as its President, J. Nyerges (Hungary) as its Rapporteur, and 32 Vice-Presidents, namely Austria, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Finland, Gabon, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Republic, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Somalia, Spain, the USSR, the United States and Venezuela.

One hundred and thirty-nine States members of UNCTAD were represented at the session: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, the Comoros, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, the Holy See, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, the Republic of South Viet-Nam, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Also represented at the conference were United Nations regional commissions and other United Nations organs, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the International Monetary Fund and the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO). Twenty-eight intergovernmental organizations and 14 international non-governmental organizations were represented, as well as two liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity.

In his opening address to the Conference, the President observed that the developing nations of the world had come there to press for a reordering of international economic arrangements that would give them their rightful due and thus enable them to create their individual and distinctive environments. Qualitative changes were required in the world's economic institutions so that equitable benefits could flow to all parties in the trading process.

The implications and ramifications of the call for a new international economic order had been under scrutiny and discussion for almost two years and UNCTAD currently had an opportunity to negotiate certain key issues in the field of trade and development. These issues had been defined as precisely as possible by the Trade and Development Board, the President said, and what was required at the session were decisions on specific remedial plans and programmes to move the developing countries out of the stagnation to which current trading patterns had consigned them. Also, the Conference had the opportunity to launch in a number of areas new initiatives whose impact would be of far-reaching importance over a longer period of time.

The President further observed that some of the issues under discussion were also being discussed in other fora, particularly the Conference on International Economic Co-operation (see pp. 337-40), but he stressed that that Conference could not be a substitute for UNCTAD.

The President stressed the unity of the developing world in its demand for equity and justice and noted that many of the developed market-economy countries themselves had not only acknowledged the necessity of reordering existing arrangements but had taken steps to help implement some of the proposals for a new international economic order.

Statements were also made at the opening ceremony by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who spoke about the importance of both interdependence and autonomous national effort towards development, and by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, who outlined the issues before the Conference.

Decisions of the Conference

Commodities

By resolution 93(IV), adopted without dissent on 30 May 1976, the Conference decided to adopt an integrated programme for commodities, whose objectives were to achieve stable conditions in commodity trade, to improve and sustain the real income of individual developing countries and protect them from fluctuations in export earnings from commodities, to improve market access and reliability of supply for primary products and the processed products thereof, to diversify production in developing countries, to improve the competitiveness of natural products, to improve market structures in the field of raw materials and commodities, and to improve marketing, distribution and transport systems for commodity exports of developing countries.

The commodity coverage of the integrated programme included bananas, bauxite, cocoa, coffee, copper, cotton and cotton yarns, hard fibres and their products, iron ore, jute and jute products, manganese, meat, phosphates, rubber, sugar, tea, tropical timber, tin, vegetable oils including olive oil, and oilseeds. Other products could be included in accordance with established procedure.

The measures to establish the programme included a conference for the negotiation of a common fund for commodities, to be held no later than March 1977, and a number of actions, singly or in combination, in the light of the characteristics and problems of each commodity and the special needs of the developing countries. Special measures, including exemption from financial contributions, were called for to accommodate the needs of the least developed countries.

The Conference decided that preparatory meetings for international negotiations on individual products were to commence in September 1976 and be completed no later than February 1978. Finally, it instructed the Trade and Development Board to establish an ad hoc intergovernmental committee to co-ordinate the work under the integrated programme.

Several members expressed reservations about resolution 93(IV). The Federal Republic of Germany and the United States stated that they still had reservations on the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.<sup>1</sup> The Federal Republic of Germany further considered that it would not be in the interests of the developing countries to establish a common fund for commodities, i.e. to create a dirigistic mechanism for centralized management, and it continued to reject the concept of indexation. The United Kingdom and the United States, among others, also expressed reservations on indexation.

Colombia maintained that any integrated programme for commodities should specifically and unambiguously exclude commodities that were already governed by an existing agreement or one that was in the process of being ratified. Colombia considered, in this connexion, that the International Coffee Agreement, 1962, should continue in force and be renegotiated when necessary within the framework of the organization established by that Agreement, and that the case for excluding coffee from the list of commodities in the resolution should be considered by the ad hoc committee envisaged in the resolution. Colombia was not entirely convinced of the appropriateness of the common fund for financing commodities historically characterized by structural over-production, which had been a determining factor in the deterioration of prices of those products.

Canada said it was generally supportive of the resolution and the integrated programme for commodities. However, while recognizing the importance of efforts to improve the competitive position of natural products competing with synthetics and substitutes, Canada had difficulty in seeing how harmonization of the two could take place. The United States expressed the same view.

The United Kingdom and the United States noted in particular that the resolution pointed out that there were differences of view on the objectives and modalities of a common fund and that it provided for further preparations prior to actual negotiations.

Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Turkey were among those which said they welcomed the resolution and pledged to work actively with other countries to ensure that it would result in a true and comprehensive integrated commodity programme. France said that its positive contribution towards the concerted management of commodity markets was well known.

Algeria said that the developing countries had made major concessions in respect of the resolution in order to secure the agreement of all members. It believed the resolution might prove to be of historic significance. The socialist countries of Eastern Europe (known as Group D within UNCTAD) also believed the resolution was a significant achievement. In their view, the basic goal of an integrated approach was a radical reform of both the structure of world commodity markets and of the commodities sector of the economies of developing countries.

Manufactures and semi-manufactures

By resolution 96(IV), adopted without dissent on 31 May 1976, the Conference set forth a group of interrelated measures for expansion and diversification of exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries.

Improved access to the markets of developed countries through the adoption by those countries of specific measures was called for in the following areas: (a) the generalized system of preferences; (b) tariff reclassification; (c) tariffs and non-tariff measures; and (d) adjustment assistance.

Industrial development and co-operation were to be promoted by the international community through concerted measures at the national, subregional, regional, interregional and international levels. The Conference recommended that the developing countries, in their national industrialization policies, evolve long-term industrialization goals, plans and strategies, which should include measures and institutional machinery for their execution, appraisal and adjustment. In order to achieve these ends, specific action was recommended in: (a) improving the capability of the developing countries to supply exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures; (b) international co-operation for industrial development, restructuring and trade; (c) trade and industrial co-operation between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and the developing countries; and (d) co-operation with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

In the matter of restrictive business practices, the Conference called for action to be taken by countries in a mutually reinforcing manner at the national, regional and international levels to eliminate or effectively deal with such practices, including those of transnational corporations, adversely affecting international trade, particularly the trade of developing countries. Action at the international level, particularly within the framework of UNCTAD, was also prescribed, and specific measures were suggested, such as the elaboration of a model law.

Several countries expressed reservations concerning the resolution. China supported the resolution in principle but said that one super-power had thrust a great many sinister ideas into the part of it dealing with trade and industrial co-operation between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and developing countries.

The socialist countries of Eastern Europe noted that, in their view, the section of the resolution dealing with access to the markets of developed countries was not applicable to them except for the matter of the generalized system of preferences.

Concerning the principle of standstill, Australia and New Zealand did not agree that legitimate safeguard action taken under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) should be subject to the measures outlined in the resolution (consultations, multilateral surveillance and compensation).

Australia, Japan, Switzerland and the United States were among those expressing reservations on the section of the resolution dealing with restrictive business practices. The United States had further reservations concerning two paragraphs of the parts of the resolution dealing with the generalized system of preferences and with non-tariff measures, respectively. (The first of these was a paragraph which referred to political or economic coercion by the developed countries against the developing countries; the second referred to adjustment assistance measures, including the redeployment of industries.)

Another resolution, adopted by 84 votes to 0, with 16 abstentions, on 31 May 1976, concerned transnational corporations and expansion of trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures. By resolution 97(IV), the Conference recommended that action be taken at the national, regional and international levels to achieve a reorientation in the activities of the transnational corporations and thus to safeguard the interests of the developing countries, and that measures should be designed and implemented to strengthen the participation of developing-country national enterprises in the activities of transnational corporations. It also decided that UNCTAD should continue and strengthen its work in this field and co-operate fully with the Commission and the Information and Research Centre on Transnational Corporations.

Prior to the vote on the draft resolution on transnational corporations, the representative of Switzerland said that he would abstain from voting as Switzerland considered that the text did not take into consideration the view that, when a developing country recognized the positive contribution that transnational corporations and other enterprises engaged in private investment could bring to its economic and social development, it was in its interest to create a climate conducive to the establishment of such corporations.

The representative of the United States, speaking also on behalf of Japan, said they could not support the resolution. He said that developing countries which considered that transnational enterprises as well as other forms of private investment could make a positive contribution to their development process or plan should endeavour to promote an appropriate investment climate. While recognizing that transnational enterprises should conduct their operations in accordance with local laws and in harmony with local policy, he stressed the importance of local laws being stable and consistent with the obligations of international law. He said, furthermore, that Governments, in regulating the activities of transnational enterprises, should be guided by an understanding of the legitimate methods of an entity that was often privately owned; otherwise the private contributions from such activities to development could be diminished.

The representative of Sweden, speaking also on behalf of Finland and Norway, said that, while these States adhered to the broad principles of the resolution, they considered that specific measures for the implementation of those principles would have to be decided upon in the appropriate organizations, which in their view were the United Nations Commission on Transnational Corporations and the Information and Research Centre on Transnational Corporations, with UNCTAD providing a supporting role.

The representative of New Zealand expressed reservations on the part of the resolution concerning action which should be taken, particularly in the developed countries, to adjust their tariff and non-tariff and fiscal and financial policies.

Recent trends in international trade and development

By resolution 91(IV), adopted without dissent on 30 May 1976, the Conference noted a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on developments in the multilateral trade negotiations and invited the countries participating in them to ensure that the objectives in the 1973 Tokyo Declaration regarding the negotiations,<sup>2</sup> in particular as they affected the developing countries, were fully achieved by the end of 1977. Further, it recommended that the countries concerned give consideration to the views of the developing countries on a number of specific issues, that the necessary technical assistance be given to developing countries to facilitate their participation in the negotiations and that the permanent machinery of UNCTAD continue to follow the developments and issues of particular concern to the developing countries. Also, it stressed the importance of maintaining and improving the generalized system of preferences, in accordance with the Tokyo Declaration.

The socialist countries of Eastern Europe (Group D) stated that while they supported resolution 91(IV) in principle, they considered it insufficient for solving the problems arising in the existing circumstances. The socialist States of Eastern Europe which were contracting parties to GATT and participants in the multilateral trade negotiations firmly maintained that the violations of contractual rights and all forms of discrimination arising from the actions of a certain group of countries had to be eliminated without delay. These States would accordingly make their concessions and their approach to the multilateral trade negotiations dependent on whether or not their own rights were fully respected.

The United States said that it did not view the multilateral trade negotiations as the appropriate forum for the consideration of preferences.

Money, finance and transfer of real resources for development

By resolution 94(IV), adopted without dissent on 31 May 1976, the Conference welcomed the fact that developed countries had pledged themselves to respond in a multilateral framework by quick and constructive consideration of individual requests from developing countries concerning their official debts; invited appropriate existing fora to indicate guidelines that could be used in future operations relating to debt problems; and requested the Trade and Development Board at its ministerial session in 1977 to review developments in this field.

The socialist countries of Eastern Europe (Group D) emphasized that the provisions of resolution 94(IV) did not apply to them, since their credit relations with the developing countries were different from those between the developing countries and the developed capitalist States.

The industrialized market-economy countries (referred to as Group B within UNCTAD) welcomed the adoption of the resolution by consensus and said that the importance of the fact that it had been possible to reach agreement on a text should not be minimized. The United States added that its policy remained that of engaging in debt rescheduling in the framework of creditor clubs only where there was presumption of imminent default.

Transfer of technology

By resolution 87(IV), adopted without dissent on 30 May 1976, the Conference recommended lines of action in five areas with a view to strengthening the technological capacity of developing countries in any region or subregion, and thereby reducing their technological dependence. These five areas were: (a) action to improve the institutional infrastructure and capacity of developing countries for the development and transfer of technology; (b) technical and operational assistance; (c) reverse transfer of technology; (d) environmental aspects of transfer and development of technology; and (e) the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development.

In the first area, four kinds of action were recommended. Concerning action by the developing countries, it was recommended that each developing country take the necessary steps at the national level to ensure (a) the formulation of a technology plan as an integral part of its national development plans, as well as the co-ordination of its policies in a number of interrelated areas, (b) the establishment of appropriate institutional machinery, and (c) the elaboration of all necessary measures to ensure optimum utilization of qualified manpower.

In regard to co-operation among developing countries, it was recommended that, in order to supplement national efforts and promote collective self-reliance among themselves, the developing countries take specific action at the subregional, regional and international levels in an integrated and complementary manner. Such specific action included the elaboration of preferential arrangements for the development and transfer of technology among themselves, the establishment of subregional and regional centres for the development and transfer of technology, and the establishment of subregional, regional and interregional centres in specific and critical sectors of particular interest to these countries. The Conference welcomed the initiatives that had been taken to date in this area.

Several recommendations were addressed to the developed countries. These covered the implementation of previous resolutions and decisions, the promotion of imports of technologies originating in the developing countries, the development of technologies appropriate to the needs of the developing countries, assistance in manpower training programmes at various levels, support of research centres and other centres for the development of technology, and acceleration of the transfer of technology on favourable terms to the developing countries.

Finally, it was recommended that all countries support all efforts within the United Nations in the field of the transfer of technology.

In the second area, technical and operational assistance, the Conference decided to establish an Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology within UNCTAD to render assistance at the request of developing countries and urged the General Assembly to provide funds for it. International financing and development institutions and all countries were urged to give high priority to assisting the programmes and projects of the Advisory Service, with special consideration and assistance being given to the needs of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries.

In the third area, the reverse transfer of technology, the Conference recommended that all countries, particularly those benefiting from the "brain drain," consider what measures might be necessary to deal with developing countries' problems posed by the outflow of trained personnel, refrain from aggravating the exodus from developing countries, and assist in making arrangements to encourage qualified personnel to stay in the developing countries.

In the fourth area, environmental aspects of the transfer and development of technology, the relationships between these and development planning were recognized and co-operation between UNCTAD and the United Nations Environment Programme was welcomed.

In the fifth area, the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, it was recommended that necessary arrangements be made within UNCTAD to ensure its effective participation in the preparatory process as well as in the Conference itself, which was scheduled for 1979.

The industrialized market-economy countries (Group B) said that while they fully supported resolution 87(IV), they would emphasize that the appropriate exchange of information on technological alternatives available to developing countries referred to in the resolution must be consistent with contractual agreements and, where relevant, must respect the confidentiality of technological information.

A second resolution concerning transfer of technology was also adopted without dissent on 30 May. By resolution 88(IV), the Conference reaffirmed that the process of revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, as well as of the Model Law for Developing Countries on Inventions and Know-how should take full account of the responsibilities and competences of WIPO and UNCTAD, and should be guided by certain specified considerations. (See also PART TWO of this volume, CHAPTER XV.) Further, it was decided that UNCTAD should continue its activities in this field and that technical assistance on an increasing scale should be provided to developing countries so as to develop their national capability with regard to industrial property.

Resolution 89(IV), on an international code of conduct on transfer of technology, was also adopted without dissent on 30 May.

By this resolution, the Conference recommended that work on a draft code be accelerated with a view to completion by mid-1977 and decided to establish within UNCTAD an intergovernmental group of experts to elaborate the draft, with provisions ranging from mandatory to optional, without prejudice to the final decision on the legal character of the code. It recommended further that the General Assembly convene a United Nations conference to be held by the end of 1977 to negotiate and adopt a final document.

Referring to all three resolutions concerning the transfer of technology, the advanced industrialized countries (Group B) noted that they represented a substantial increase in the resources that would be available for transfer of technology activities within UNCTAD. These countries wanted to ensure the most effective use of those resources and avoid duplication of effort, and said they would be giving serious consideration to the matter.

Least developed, island and land-locked developing countries

Resolution 98(IV), on the least developed among the developing countries, developing island countries and developing land-locked countries, was adopted without dissent on 31 May 1976.

The resolution was divided into five sections: (a) introduction; (b) action on special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries; (c) specific action related to the particular needs and problems of developing island countries; (d) specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries; and (e) action on special measures applicable to the least developed, developing island and developing land-locked countries.

By the introduction, the Conference reaffirmed the need for effective international action in favour of these countries and agreed that such action should be supplementary to the general measures applicable to all developing countries.

By the section dealing with the least developed countries, the Conference recommended action on financial and technical assistance, including an expansion of the flow of assistance, a liberalization of the terms and conditions for financial and technical assistance, and the adoption of more suitable and flexible criteria and procedures in granting assistance. The Conference also recommended action on commercial policy towards these countries, including improved provisions for the marketing of commodities, improvement of the schemes of generalized preferences, special treatment in the multilateral trade negotiations, improvement of the rules of origin in respect of products of export interest, further improvement and enlargement of compensatory financing facilities, assistance towards maximization of sales of products, promotion of trade and economic co-operation, and adoption of measures to foster the creation of industries for on-the-spot processing of raw materials and food products.

Those developing countries in a position to do so were asked to give preferential treatment and provide increased assistance to the least developed countries. In the matter of insurance and reinsurance, the developed countries were asked to make special efforts to minimize the foreign-exchange costs for the least developed countries, and the latter were to take corresponding appropriate legislative and administrative action. All countries were asked to urge shipowners and liner conferences to establish beneficial freight rates for the least developed countries, and the developed countries and international financial institutions were asked to give higher priority to helping these countries acquire or expand their merchant marines and improve their port facilities, where applicable.

The developed countries and competent international institutions were asked to assist in the development and transfer of patented, patent-related and non-patented technology, appropriate to the needs of the least developed countries, on favourable terms. Further action, to be taken by UNCTAD, included the convening of meetings to discuss particular problems affecting the least developed countries, strengthening of UNCTAD's technical assistance activities, and further provision in the work programme for studies of the problems of these countries.

By the part of resolution 98(IV) dealing with the particular needs and problems of developing island countries, the Conference recommended action on: (a) shipping, with measures suggested on trans-shipment problems, prevention of discrimination against island ships, insurance of inter-island ships, promotional freight rates, research on appropriate ship and shore facilities for archipelagic countries, co-operation with shipping conferences, training for ship repair and maintenance, and assistance in the establishment of shipping services to promote regional co-operation and in the improvement of ports; (b) air services, with measures to improve the quality and cost of such services, research and development efforts in the field and assistance from regional commissions, bilateral and multilateral organizations and from UNCTAD; (c) convening a group of experts on feeder and inter-island transport services; (d) telecommunication improvement; (e) assistance in exploiting marine and sub-marine resources; (f) improvement or stabilization of commodity export earnings; (g) improvement of the commercial policies of developed countries so as to help the developing island countries; (h) assistance in the establishment of schemes for collective import operations which could represent savings in terms of cost, insurance, freight and handling and storage charges; (i) intensification of efforts to help small islands plan rationally in order to deal with the peculiar problems of human geography and ecology; (j) financial and technical assistance to help develop tourism potential; (k) intensification of efforts to increase the flow of resources to island developing countries; and (l) insurance and reinsurance measures appropriate to the individual circumstances of island developing countries.

By the section on land-locked developing countries, the Conference recommended: (a) joint efforts to improve particular route and transit facilities; (b) improvement and development of integrated regional and subregional transport infrastructure, and the harmonization of transport planning; (c) improvement of the commercial policies of developed countries to help the land-locked developing countries; (d) assistance in developing the transport infrastructure of these countries; (e) fast and reliable communication links among their commercial centres, transit ports and overseas markets; (f) financial and technical assistance for restructuring the economies of land-locked countries; (g) improvement of port facilities; (h) an increase in the flow of resources for over-all economic development; (i) reduction of shipping, freight and transit costs; (j) assistance in the development of air transport and tourism; (k) establishment of organizational arrangements for the special fund for land-locked developing countries;<sup>3</sup> (l) review by member countries and UNCTAD of progress made; and (m) reaffirmation by the developing land-locked countries of their right of free access to and from the sea (it was noted in this part of the resolution that some developing transit countries reserved their position on this matter).

Action recommended on special measures applicable to all three groups of countries covered in the resolution included: (a) extension of effective and speedy relief in the event of natural disasters; (b) special efforts to aid industrialization; (c) provisions in any eventual code of conduct on the transfer of technology which would take into account the special problems of these countries; and (d) constant review of progress by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany, speaking on behalf of the developed market-economy countries (Group B), said that, while his Group was pleased to concur in the consensus on resolution 98(IV), it had a number of interpretations and reservations. The Group B countries considered, inter alia, that the subject-matter of free access to and from the sea for developing land-locked countries was not properly within the purview of the Conference. They had therefore abstained from commenting upon it and did not consider themselves committed by the fact that it appeared in the resolution.

By a recommendation (99(IV)) on the economic situation of the Comoros, adopted without dissent on 31 May, the Conference took note of the serious and disturbing economic situation in the Comoros, which had one of the lowest per capita incomes in the world, recommended that the country be included in the categories of the least developed, island and newly independent countries, and appealed for urgent assistance from the international community to the Comoros and other such newly independent States in Africa.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

By resolution 92(IV), on measures of support by developed countries and international organizations for the programme of economic co-operation among developing countries, which was adopted without dissent on 30 May, the Conference urged the developed countries and the United Nations system to provide support and assistance to developing countries in strengthening their mutual co-operation. To this end, both the developed market-economy countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe were urged to abstain from any action which could adversely affect the decisions of developing countries in favour of the strengthening of their economic co-operation and diversification of production, and also to support legitimate decisions taken by the developing countries to fulfil their programmes of economic co-operation. Such support would be for measures such as: existing and new programmes of interregional, regional and subregional economic co-operation and integration; setting up and functioning of multinational marketing enterprises; promotion of multinational ventures; reducing the interest costs of loans, particularly in the context of multilateral development financing; and the participation of developing countries on a subcontracting basis in projects undertaken by the developed countries.

The developed market-economy countries were urged to support, in particular, preferential trade arrangements among developing countries, the import of technology by developing countries from other developing countries, the establishment of financial and capital markets in developing countries, increased access on favourable terms to the capital markets of developed countries; and the expansion of existing, and the creation of new, export credit finance and guarantee schemes by the World Bank and regional and subregional development banks in the light of existing and on-going studies by international institutions.

The socialist countries of Eastern Europe were urged to lend their support in particular through the provision of technical assistance for the setting up and operation of State import and export enterprises of developing countries, the promotion of links between the transferable rouble system and regional payments arrangements of developing countries, and joint investment programmes of developing countries in the productive sectors.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany, speaking on behalf of the developed market-economy countries (Group B), said that while States members of his Group concurred in the general consensus on resolution 92(IV), their acceptance of the part dealing with support of preferential trade arrangements among developing countries was based on the understanding that, whenever preferential trade arrangements were enacted, the applicability of the international obligations of the parties to such arrangements would be respected. In addition, Group B's acceptance of the part of the resolution calling for action on export credit finance and guarantee schemes was based on the understanding that the members of the Group would consider such action only if justified by the findings of the studies referred to.

Referring to the provision on agreement by the developed countries—both the market-economy countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe—to support and facilitate the implementation of legitimate decisions taken by the developing countries in order to ensure fulfilment of their programmes of economic co-operation, the United States said that it would support decisions taken by developing countries on the understanding that such decisions were consistent with international obligations.

The socialist countries of Eastern Europe said that the term "interdependence," which appeared in the resolution, should not be employed to the detriment of the sovereignty of any country.

Trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems

Resolution 95(IV) dealt with multilateral action for expanding trade and economic relations among countries having different economic and social systems, in particular action that would contribute to the development of developing countries. It was adopted without dissent on 31 May 1976.

The resolution contained six operative sections. By section I, the Conference invited countries participating in East-West trade to take into account the interests of developing countries in order to provide them with positive trade opportunities. Also, it invited all countries to expand multilateral forms of economic co-operation, and to seek tripartite economic and industrial co-operation in a number of fields.

By section II, the Conference recommended that the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and the developing countries extend the practice of concluding medium-term and long-term agreements on trade, economic, scientific and technical co-operation, and medium- and long-term co-operation programmes in trade, industry, science and technology, make wider use of compensatory agreements aimed at developing the export sectors in the developing countries, and improve co-operation mechanisms by expanding the functions of bilateral intergovernmental commissions.

By section III, further recommendations were made to the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. These included a widening of the areas of economic co-operation, the reduction or elimination of tariff barriers on imports from developing countries, the implementation of preferential measures on a non-reciprocal and non-discriminatory basis, the expansion and improvement of their schemes of generalized preferences, the taking of specific measures to facilitate their trade with developing countries, the provision of adequate opportunities to developing countries to participate in common projects in third countries, the execution of certain structural changes to help the developing countries, the establishment of production capacities in the developing countries, and the provision of assistance in various sectors on a bilateral as well as a multilateral basis.

By section IV, the Conference invited the member countries of CMEA to promote the establishment of multilateral co-operation with developing countries and their organizations and to provide for an increased flow of information on relevant issues directly to the developing countries or through UNCTAD.

By section V, the Conference recommended that the developing countries continue their efforts to increase their trade and economic co-operation with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and to study the markets of these countries.

By section VI, the Secretary-General of UNCTAD was requested to convene in 1977 two intergovernmental groups of experts. One would deal with trade opportunities in favour of developing countries resulting from the implementation of various multilateral schemes by CMEA countries. The other group would study particularly the issue of a multilateral system of payments between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and the developing countries. Also, the Secretary-General of UNCTAD was requested to continue and intensify the technical assistance activities of UNCTAD in this area, and to reinforce its secretariat services in order to do so. Further, the Conference decided to improve the consultative machinery of UNCTAD in this area of trade, and recommended that the Trade and Development Board convene, at its regular sessions, a sessional committee to study trade and economic relations as specified in the resolution.

China expressed a reservation on the formulation which referred to the international division of labour with the developing countries on a long-term, stable basis. It considered that the intention of this formulation was to reduce the national economies of the developing countries to mere dependencies of social-imperialism. The spokesman for the Group of 77 developing countries said that while they accepted the resolution, they remained attached to the fundamental principle of the transfer of resources, as a means of achieving the objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.<sup>4</sup>

Institutional questions

A resolution on institutional issues (90(IV)) was adopted without dissent on 30 May. The resolution contained two operative sections. By section I, the Conference invited the General Assembly, in carrying forward the process of the restructuring of the United Nations in accordance with the decision taken at its seventh special session in 1975,<sup>5</sup> to reaffirm and strengthen the central role of UNCTAD in the field of trade and development so as to increase its effectiveness as an Assembly organ for deliberation, negotiation, review and implementation in the field of international trade and related issues of international economic co-operation. Such strengthening of UNCTAD, the Conference suggested, would be a step towards the creation of a comprehensive organization to deal with international trade and related issues.

The Conference also recommended that the General Assembly take fully into account the need for UNCTAD to have greater flexibility in budgetary, financial and administrative matters for the efficient performance of its responsibilities. Other recommendations were that the fifth session of the Conference be held not later than three years after the fourth session and that the membership of the Trade and Development Board be open to all member States of UNCTAD.

By section II, the Conference agreed: that the Trade and Development Board should meet at ministerial level every two years between sessions of the Conference; that the Board should establish an open-ended Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries whose function would be to provide support and assistance to developing countries in strengthening and enlarging their co-operation at the subregional, regional and interregional levels; that the Board should introduce greater flexibility into its operations and those of its subsidiary bodies; that the structure of its committees and their subsidiary bodies should be rationalized, and that their existing procedures for intergovernmental consultations and negotiations should be expanded and improved. Further, it requested consultations by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and subsequent consideration and report by the Board on means of increasing UNCTAD's flexibility in budgetary, financial and administrative matters. The Conference also reaffirmed the importance of technical assistance and recommended the extension of such assistance through UNCTAD and the International Trade Centre.

The United States, among others, expressed the view that nothing in resolution 90(IV) should be interpreted in any way which affected the independence of GATT or the International Monetary Fund or implied the setting up of new intergovernmental machinery. The socialist countries of Eastern Europe said they firmly opposed any attempt to use the resolution in ways that could lead to the weakening of the General Assembly or the Economic and Social Council.

Other actions

On 28 May, by resolution 85(IV), the Conference approved the credentials of the representatives to the fourth session in adopting without dissent the report of the Credentials Committee. On the same day, by resolution 86(IV), the Conference without dissent recommended to the General Assembly that it take the necessary steps to include Arabic among the official and working languages of the machinery of UNCTAD, particularly all sessions of the Conference, the Trade and Development Board and the main committees. It also requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to take the appropriate action to ensure that the necessary amendments would be made to the relevant rules of procedure.

On 31 May, the Conference decided that the question of the terms of reference of the Advisory Committee to the Board and to the Committee on Commodities should be further considered by the Trade and Development Board, and that the Board also should consider a draft resolution on the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system which was before it and on which agreement had not been reached.

By resolution 100(IV), adopted by acclamation on 31 May 1976, the Conference requested the President of the Conference to express its appreciation and gratitude to the President of Kenya and through him to the Kenyan people.

Decisions of the Trade and Development Board

The Trade and Development Board, at its October 1976 session, took up a number of matters remitted to it by or related to the fourth session of UNCTAD.

While recognizing that the primary responsibility for the economic development of the developing countries rested with those countries themselves, the Board urged developed countries that had not met the target for official development assistance of 0.7 per cent of gross national product set by the International Development Strategy to do so, and recommended that they study the various proposals made for altering the definition of official development assistance, improve the financial terms of such assistance, and distribute such assistance rationally and equitably among developing countries in such a way as to benefit those with the greatest difficulties.

The Board also urged that official development flows be predictable, continuous and increasingly assured, that official development loans be generally untied, and that assistance be provided in the forms most appropriate to the development needs and priorities of developing countries. It also said that the possibility of raising development finance from other sources should be kept under review, and that flows from multilateral development finance institutions to developing countries should be increased.

Other recommendations of the Board were that all countries increase their overall contributions to the United Nations Development Programme, that capital market countries liberalize capital movements and implement earlier agreements, that co-financing by international and regional development banks be expanded, and that the Development Committee (Joint Ministerial Committee of the Boards of Governors of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries) complete its study of further measures to improve the access of developing countries to capital markets. (See also p. 408.)

Concerning the debt and related development and financial problems of the least developed, the developing island and developing land-locked countries, the Board decided that its 1977 ministerial session should review the measures taken.

The Board also decided that the question of interrelated problems in the field of international trade and related areas of international economic co-operation, in particular development finance and monetary issues, should be maintained on the agenda of its regular sessions, that the Secretary-General of UNCTAD should keep such problems under continuous review, and that special problems in the field which required urgent attention could be considered at brief special sessions of the Board.

Concerning trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems, the Board took note of consultations already initiated by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD with the member countries of CMEA and noted that he would elaborate a report for the consultative group of experts. The terms of reference for that group were to examine the report of the Secretary-General, to evaluate the consultations held, to identify possible common endeavours with a view to facilitating new trade opportunities in favour of the developing countries which might result from the multilateral schemes of the member countries of CMEA, and to prepare a report with recommendations for the Board. The terms of reference of the second inter-governmental group of experts were to study particularly the issue of a multilateral system of payments between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and the developing countries.

On commodities, the Board established an Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee for the Integrated Programme for Commodities to co-ordinate the preparatory work and the negotiations, to deal with major policy issues that might arise, including commodity coverage, and to co-ordinate the implementation of the measures under the integrated programme. Other provisions of this decision covered the organizational structure of the Committee, its mode of work and its reports to the Trade and Development Board. (See also pp. 409-10.)

The Board also established a Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries as an open-ended main committee of the Board. Its functions were to consider and recommend measures to provide support and assistance to developing countries in strengthening and enlarging their mutual co-operation at the subregional, regional and interregional levels. (See also pp. 406-7.)

The Board invited favourable consideration for requests for technical assistance in the field of economic co-operation among developing countries. It also requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to recommend a suitable mechanism within the framework of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to ensure proper co-ordination in this field.

The Board also took follow-up decisions, discussed later in this chapter, on institutional matters (pp. 415-16) and on manufactures (pp. 410-11).

Decisions of General Assembly

In the discussions on the results of the fourth session of UNCTAD in the General Assembly in 1976, many members expressed the view that, whereas important decisions had been made at Nairobi, much had been left for further negotiation. Developing countries in particular emphasized that the results obtained at the fourth session were limited in nature and that in the critical areas of commodities, debt and transfer of resources, only further negotiations in UNCTAD and elsewhere would show whether the session could be called a success in the light of the objectives set forth at the General Assembly's sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions. The developed countries were generally of the opinion that important progress had been achieved and particularly mentioned the wide degree of agreement in the field of manufactures, technology, least developed countries, relations with socialist countries of Eastern Europe and institutional matters.

By its resolution 31/159 of 21 December 1976, adopted without vote, the General Assembly, inter alia, endorsed, welcomed or noted various resolutions adopted by the Conference. It also noted with concern that the agreements reached at the Conference were of a limited nature, despite some positive results in certain areas.

It urged that the objectives of the integrated programme for commodities be vigorously pursued and that the preparatory meetings for international negotiations on individual commodities be concluded no later than February 1978. It also noted that steps had been taken towards the negotiation of a common fund under the integrated programme and invited the countries that had announced specific contributions to, or support for, such a fund to consider making specific pledges before the commencement of the negotiating conference on the fund.

With regard to the Conference resolutions relating to the expansion and diversification of exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries, the Assembly endorsed particularly the decisions on the extension of the coverage of the generalized system of preferences, and requested developed countries to consider making the system a continuing feature of their trade policies. It also drew the attention of the Economic and Social Council and the concerned organizations of the United Nations system to the recommendations and measures contained in the Conference resolution on transnational corporations, and requested that appropriate consideration be given to means of ensuring that transnational corporations made a positive contribution to the economic development of developing countries.

Recalling the UNCTAD resolution on multilateral trade negotiations, the Assembly requested that immediate and concrete agreements be reached in these negotiations, particularly on the issues of special interest to developing countries.

Noting the resolution adopted by the Conference on the debt problems of developing countries, the Assembly requested the Trade and Development Board at its ministerial session in 1977 to review the action taken. It also requested all organizations concerned within the United Nations system to implement as a matter of urgency the relevant special measures and specific action recommended by the Conference in favour of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries. The Assembly also urged the International Monetary Fund to continue work on the reform of the international monetary system and to give in that context special and urgent consideration to the interests of the developing countries and to a link between the creation of special drawing rights and additional development finance.

With regard to technology, the Assembly decided to convene a United Nations conference under the auspices of UNCTAD, to be held early in 1978, to negotiate the draft of an international code of conduct for the transfer of technology, to be elaborated by the intergovernmental group of experts established by the Conference. It also welcomed the Conference resolutions concerning the strengthening of the technological capacity of developing countries and the roles of UNCTAD and WIPO in the area of industrial property.

The Assembly endorsed the Conference resolution relating to measures of support by developed countries and international organizations for the programme of economic co-operation among developing countries and requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD in this connexion to study the relevant portions of the report of the September 1976 Mexico City Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries and other relevant proposals of developing countries.

Recalling the Conference resolution on institutional issues, the Assembly affirmed that the functions mentioned in that resolution should be strengthened in order to increase the effectiveness of the Conference as an organ of the General Assembly for deliberation, negotiation, review and implementation in the field of international trade and related issues of international economic co-operation. It also emphasized the need for the provision of adequate resources for the secretariat of UNCTAD resulting from the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Conference and of the Trade and Development Board and urged member States of UNCTAD, in particular the developed countries, to implement urgently these resolutions and decisions. (For text of resolution 31/159, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The draft resolution was approved without vote in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 15 December. At the same time, the Philippines withdrew an earlier draft resolution on the same subject which had been submitted by the developing Member States belonging to the Group of 77. The final draft was the result of informal consultations held by the Vice-Chairman of the Committee and Committee members.

Speaking in explanation of the vote, several Members, including Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United States and the members of the European Communities, reiterated the reservations they had expressed on the various resolutions at the fourth session of UNCTAD. In addition, Bulgaria, on behalf of a number of the Eastern European States and Mongolia, considered that a substantial defect of the resolution lay in the fact that the priorities on which resources should be first concentrated were not specified.

By a decision of 21 December 1976, the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General of UNCTAD on the evaluation of the results of the fourth session of the Conference. Decision 31/419 was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, where it was approved without a vote. The Assembly also took note of the report on the proceedings of the fourth session of UNCTAD by its resolution 31/178 of 21 December 1976 on the implementation of its decisions concerning the Second United Nations Development Decade, a new international economic order, and development and international economic co-operation. By that resolution, the Assembly, inter alia, expressed its deep concern at the limited nature of agreements reached at the fourth session of UNCTAD, as well as at the slow pace of progress in the implementation of the measures specified in the earlier Assembly resolutions. ## General trade and development questions

Economic co-operation among developing countries

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 16 September 1975<sup>6</sup> and with other relevant resolutions, including those of the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Trade and Development Board on 23 October 1976 established a Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries as an open-ended main committee of the Board.

The functions of the Committee were to consider and recommend measures to provide, as and when requested, support and assistance to developing countries, or groups thereof, in strengthening and enlarging their mutual co-operation at the sub-regional, regional and interregional levels. According to its terms of reference, which the Trade and Development Board agreed to consider, improve and further elaborate in 1977, the Committee would (a) exercise its functions within the competence of UNCTAD and promote policies as regards support measures, (b) review and facilitate the co-ordination of such measures, including technical assistance, within the United Nations system, and (c) periodically review and report on the implementation of support measures within the competence of UNCTAD in order to permit the adoption of further measures of support.

The Board requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to study the relevant portions of the report of the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Mexico City, Mexico, from 13 to 22 September 1976, relating to measures of support requested from UNCTAD and to submit his report thereon for consideration and appropriate action by the Committee at its first session. All the relevant organizations of the United Nations system were invited to give active and favourable consideration to requests for assistance to programmes and projects of co-operation among developing countries and to increase technical assistance funds to this end.

Finally, the Board asked the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to make recommendations regarding a sub-committee on economic co-operation among developing countries, or another appropriate mechanism within the framework of the inter-agency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly, by its resolution 31/119, welcomed the establishment by the Board of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries and asked the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to assist developing countries, at their request and after consideration and appropriate action by the Committee, in carrying out studies on specific issues relating to trade and development. The Assembly also urged developed countries to provide appropriate support, as and when requested by developing countries, for the implementation of measures of economic co-operation among developing countries.

Review of implementation of the International Development Strategy

The Trade and Development Board on 23 October 1976, in response to a request of the fourth session of UNCTAD, decided that at its biennial special sessions for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, it should also review the progress achieved and the further improvement of the role of UNCTAD in the implementation of the resolutions of the General Assembly's sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions on a new international economic order and on development and international economic co-operation, as well as the 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and should formulate appropriate recommendations. The implementation of these resolutions was also the subject of General Assembly resolution 31/178 of 21 December 1976.

Special intergovernmental committee on international trade

The General Assembly decided, without a vote, on 21 December 1976, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, to defer until 1977 consideration of a draft resolution concerning a special intergovernmental committee on international trade. The decision (31/421 B) had been approved, without a vote, by the Committee on the proposal of the Chairman on 9 December. The question had also been postponed in 1975.<sup>7</sup>

Financing related to trade and the international monetary system

At its October 1976 session, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) considered several proposals concerning the international monetary system referred to it by the fourth session of the Conference held earlier in the year. These proposals dealt with the balance-of-payments deficits of developing countries, international monetary reform, with particular reference to the developing countries, and measures to improve the international financial and monetary situation. The Board also considered a draft resolution on compensation for losses occasioned by the realignment of major currencies, referred to it by the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade. The Board decided to remit these to the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade for further consideration.

The Board also decided that the question of the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system should be maintained on the agenda of its regular sessions, and that the Secretary-General of UNCTAD should keep the subject under continuous review. It agreed that relevant problems identified by him, in consultation with member States, as requiring urgent attention might appropriately be considered at brief special sessions of the Board convened at short notice.

On development financing matters, the Board had before it, inter alia, a draft resolution referred to it by the fourth session of the Conference on measures to be taken by developed countries and international organizations to resolve and alleviate the critical debt problems of developing countries. The Board decided to remit this draft resolution to its ministerial session in 1977.

The Board adopted a resolution on the transfer of real resources, by which it urged, among other things, that developed countries that had not met the International Development Strategy target for official development assistance increase their aid with a view to doing so by the end of the decade. It urged: that official development assistance flows be predictable and continuous and increasingly assured; that developed countries jointly study various proposals for altering the definition of official development assistance; that each developed country use its best endeavours to improve the terms of its official development assistance; and that increased attention be given to programme assistance. The Board also urged that flows from multilateral finance institutions be increased substantially and specified ways in which this might be done. Finally, it urged capital-market countries and international development-finance institutions to implement the agreement reached by the Joint Ministerial Committee on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries, of the Boards of Governors of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund (Development Committee) regarding access to capital markets. It urged the Development Committee to complete its study of further measures and urged the capital market countries then to take the necessary and appropriate follow-up action.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions relating to these matters —on debt problems of developing countries (resolution 31/158) and on ways and means of accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries on a predictable, assured and continuous basis (resolution 31/174). By the first of these, the Assembly drew attention to the need to solve the mounting debt problems of developing countries in the context of internationally agreed development targets and national development objectives, and specified the respective roles of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation and UNCTAD in arriving at a solution. By the second resolution, the Assembly urged a number of actions with regard to aid targets, the budgeting of aid programmes and private capital markets; these were intended to accelerate the flow of resources and place them on a more assured basis. ## Questions relating to merchandise trade

Commodities

The Trade and Development Board, at its session in Geneva, Switzerland, from 8 to 20 March 1976, considered action on commodities, including decisions on an integrated programme, in the light of the need for change in the world commodity economy. The Board did not adopt any formal decisions on the subject, but the President, in a personal summing-up, expressed the view that the Board had been able to define several areas where a convergence of views existed and others where further work seemed likely to produce acceptable agreements.

The fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), held in May 1976, had before it for consideration, inter alia, a report by the UNCTAD secretariat summarizing the main issues of international commodity policy, including proposals for an integrated programme for commodities, together with four supporting documents dealing with: a review of recent trends in world commodity markets; the preservation of the purchasing power of developing countries' exports; the relationship between prices of commodity exports from developing countries and the corresponding final consumer prices; and marketing and distribution systems. The report noted that the General Assembly, at its seventh (1975) special session, had decided that an important aim of the fourth session of UNCTAD should be to reach decisions on the improvement of market structures in the field of raw materials and commodities of export interest to the developing countries, including decisions with respect to an integrated programme and the applicability of elements thereof.<sup>8</sup>

The Conference, with the adoption of resolution 93(IV), established an integrated programme for commodities with a common set of objectives, measures and negotiating procedures on the basis of an agreed list of commodities and a specified timetable. The commodities were bananas, bauxite, cocoa, coffee, copper, cotton and cotton yarns, hard fibres and their products, iron ore, jute and its products, manganese, meat, phosphates, rubber, sugar, tea, tropical timber, tin, vegetable oils including olive oil, and oilseeds.

The Conference also requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene, not later than March 1977, a negotiating conference on a common fund for the financing of commodity stocks and other measures within the framework of the integrated programme. (See also pp. 394-95.)

The Trade and Development Board, at its session in October 1976, decided to establish an Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee for the Integrated Programme for Commodities, open to all member States of UNCTAD, as a subsidiary body of the Board, to perform the tasks envisaged for such a committee in the UNCTAD resolution. At its first session (in Geneva, from 24 to 26 November 1976), the Committee approved a tentative schedule of meetings under the integrated programme.

A preparatory meeting on copper was held at Geneva from 27 September to 1 October 1976. The participants decided to request the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to convene an intergovernmental group of experts to examine appropriate measures and techniques required to meet the objectives of the integrated programme, to determine financial requirements, to make an examination of the situation in the copper market, to consider the interim measures that might appear to be necessary, and to make appropriate recommendations. The group of experts held its first session in Geneva from 1 to 4 November and agreed on a broad list of studies to be undertaken in order to assist it in its further examination, at its second session, of the matters remitted to it.

A preparatory meeting on jute and jute products was held in Geneva from 25 to 29 October 1976. The participants decided to continue work at the level of governmental experts in order to prepare and recommend to a preparatory meeting, to be held not later than April 1977, an action programme on jute and jute products designed, inter alia, to achieve stable conditions in trade, to improve and sustain the real income of individual jute-producing countries through increased export earnings, to improve the competitiveness of jute and jute products, to launch and continue a comprehensive and purposeful programme of research and development, to seek to improve access to markets for jute and jute products of developing countries, to improve the regularity of their transport, and to consider the harmonization of the production of synthetics and substitutes in developed countries with the supply of jute and jute goods.

A preparatory meeting on hard fibres was held in Geneva from 6 to 10 December 1976. As in the case of jute, the participants decided to continue work at the level of governmental experts for the purpose of preparing and recommending to a preparatory meeting, to be held not later than September 1977, an action programme on hard fibres and products thereof.

The first preparatory meeting for the negotiation of a common fund took place in Geneva from 29 November to 4 December 1976. Governments engaged in a general exchange of views on the issues set forth on the fund in the UNCTAD resolution.

Among other meetings on commodities in 1976 was an intergovernmental consultation on copper, convened at the request of the seven States members of UNCTAD which constituted the Intergovernmental Council of Copper-Exporting Countries, held at Geneva from 23 to 26 March. It concluded that a working sub-group should be convened to follow up the progress made at the meeting in collecting and assessing the adequacy of existing statistics and studies on various aspects of the copper situation and in studying the practical arrangements for the establishment of a permanent intergovernmental consultative body on copper, including draft terms of reference.

The Working Group of the Committee on Tungsten held its tenth session in Geneva from 19 to 23 January. The Group reached certain conclusions concerning the elements of a possible system of minimum and maximum prices for tungsten and concerning alternative approaches to the question of stabilization of the tungsten market. The UNCTAD secretariat was requested to prepare a document setting forth the major alternative approaches to a tungsten stabilization arrangement. The tenth session of the Committee on Tungsten took place in Geneva from 15 to 19 November. Different proposals regarding future action, particularly with regard to the terms of reference of an expert group and the convening of a negotiating conference, were made by producing and consuming countries.

Manufactures

The third periodic review of the operation and effects of the generalized system of preferences was carried out by the Special Committee on Preferences at its seventh session, held in Geneva from 5 to 16 January 1976. The Committee examined the main changes in the system and other relevant developments which had taken place since its last review. The changes concerned, in particular, the status of implementation of the system, the improvements made in the various schemes and the operation and effects of the schemes. Other relevant developments concerned the renegotiation of special preferences between the European Communities and a number of developing countries and the current multilateral trade negotiations.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that with the entry into force of the United States scheme of generalized preferences on 1 January 1976, all countries that had made submissions to the Committee in 1970 had implemented their schemes. In consequence, it would be able to devote all its efforts to a review of the operation and effects of the system and to its further improvement and possible enlargement.

The Committee also recommended that the Working Group on Rules of Origin be reconvened at a date to be determined by the Trade and Development Board in the light of further preparations by preference-giving and preference-receiving countries.

The Committee also took note with satisfaction of the activities carried out by the UNCTAD/United Nations Development Programme project on training and advisory services on the generalized system of preferences and recommended that the two organizations consider extending the duration of the project for an appropriately long period beyond 30 April 1977.

The Trade and Development Board, at its session from 8 to 20 March 1976, decided to transmit three draft resolutions to the fourth session of UNCTAD concerning manufactures. These concerned export subsidies and countervailing duties, adjustment assistance measures, and safeguards and standstill. The President of the Board, in his summing-up, said that it was recognized that achievement by the year 2000 of the 25 per cent share of world industrial output by the developing countries—in line with the targets agreed in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action—would secure for those countries a substantial expansion and diversification of their export trade in this sector. Taking into account the goals for international industrial restructuring also agreed upon at the Second General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), stress was laid on the need for further work on appropriate measures. In this context, it was generally agreed that UNCTAD should participate effectively in the consultation systems established by UNIDO and that co-operation between the two organizations should be intensified.

The proposal for a comprehensive strategy to expand and diversify the export trade of developing countries in manufactured and semi-manufactured products commanded considerable support, the President went on to say. There was also a measure of agreement on the possible components of that strategy, including an improvement of the industrial capabilities of the developing countries, access to markets of the developed countries for industrial goods from the developing countries, and increased trade and industrial co-operation among the developing countries. At the same time, views converged on the need for assistance to developing countries in regard to export and industrial financing. However, the clarification and elaboration of the various elements to be incorporated into such a strategy would require intensive work.

There was general agreement, the President continued, on the desirability of improving access to markets of the developed countries for the manufactures and semi-manufactures of the developing countries and improving the scope and content of the generalized system of preferences, as well as on the extension of the principle of generalized preferential treatment in favour of developing countries to non-tariff barriers. It was considered that a basis for agreement existed in regard to the formulation of principles and rules on restrictive business practices. There was agreement on the need for appropriate measures to control restrictive business practices by transnational corporations.

The three draft resolutions concerning manufactures were remitted by the fourth session of UNCTAD to the permanent machinery of UNCTAD. The Trade and Development Board in October 1976 decided to remit them for consideration to the Committee on Manufactures.

Trade negotiations

In his summing-up of the proceedings of the March 1976 session of the Trade and Development Board, the Board President said that there was general recognition of the importance of the commitments made in the Tokyo Declaration of 1973,<sup>10</sup> one of which was to secure additional benefits for the international trade of the developing countries in those negotiations. The role of bilateral and multilateral discussions was stressed, and there was also agreement on the need to maintain the multilateral character of the negotiations. It was acknowledged, however, that the implementation of those commitments on a priority basis and the question of ensuring the transparency of the negotiations were matters for further consideration. At the same time there was a convergence of views on the necessity for action as early as possible on a number of important issues of concern to developing countries, including non-reciprocity, differential treatment and special priorities and procedures for developing countries.

The belief was widely shared, the President noted, that UNCTAD had a responsibility to follow closely the development of the multilateral trade negotiations, and that the fourth session of the Conference should define UNCTAD's contribution to the process.

Invisibles, including shipping

The Working Group on International Shipping Legislation held two meetings, in January and July 1976. At the first meeting it reviewed and commented on a draft convention on the carriage of goods by sea prepared by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL). At the second meeting, in the light of the final UNCITRAL draft, the Working Group recommended that the General Assembly convene an international conference of plenipotentiaries under the auspices of the United Nations to conclude a Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea. This recommendation was subsequently endorsed by the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), and on 15 December 1976 the General Assembly took a decision to this effect by its resolution 31/100.

The Intergovernmental Preparatory Group on a Convention on International Multimodal Transport met from 16 February to 4 March 1976 at Geneva, Switzerland. The preparatory work on the draft convention was further advanced, in particular in the areas of documentation, scope of application and liability.

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group on Container Standards for International Multimodal Transport met in November 1976. The Group achieved measurable progress in examining the subjects referred to it by the Trade and Development Board (inter alia, standardization of freight containers, pallets and other transport equipment, and the impact of the standardization of containers on the economies of both developed and developing countries), although no agreement was reached on the practicability and desirability of forming an international agreement on container standards.

A Group of Experts on Port Congestion was convened by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD in April 1976. The Group made a number of recommendations for follow-up action which were to be discussed by the Committee on Shipping in 1977.

Transfer of technology

In 1976, the question of the transfer of technology was discussed at the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see pp. 397-98), the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. The main issues were the preparation of an international code of conduct on transfer of technology, revision of national and international industrial property systems, and the strengthening of the technological capability of developing countries including the establishment of centres for the development of technology.

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2034(LXI). By this it welcomed the resolution (87(IV)) on the transfer of technology adopted at the fourth session of UNCTAD and asked the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), the Director-General of the World Intellectual Property Organization, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the executive heads of other United Nations agencies and bodies concerned, as well as States, to (a) proceed with the immediate implementation of UNCTAD resolution 87(IV) in the light of its consideration by the General Assembly at its 1976 session, and (b) render immediately in a co-ordinated manner operational and technical assistance to developing countries towards the establishment or strengthening of national, regional, subregional and interregional centres for the development and transfer of technology.

(For text of resolution 2034(LXI), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

At the October session of the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD a progress report by the UNCTAD secretariat on sector studies in the field of transfer of technology was reviewed. The Board took note of the report and also approved the draft rules of procedure of the Committee on Transfer of Technology.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/183, by which it requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD and the Executive Director of UNIDO, in consultation with the United Nations regional commissions and other appropriate organizations, to intensify their efforts in their respective fields to assist in the establishment in developing countries of centres for the transfer and development of technology at the national, subregional and regional levels, in order to provide fundamental elements for the adequate functioning of an international network for the exchange of technological information, through corresponding national, subregional and regional systems of information.

Questions relating to special trade flows and groups of countries

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

At its October 1976 session, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) reviewed trends and policies in trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems. Member countries stressed the importance they attached to the expansion of these trade and economic relations and considered the resolution (95(IV)) of the fourth session of UNCTAD on this subject (see pp. 400-1) an important step forward in promoting such relations. The Board defined, as requested by that resolution, the terms of reference of two intergovernmental groups of experts to be convened in 1977. The first group was to identify possible common endeavours with a view to facilitating new trade opportunities in favour of developing countries which might result from the implementation of the multilateral schemes of the member countries of the Council on Mutual Economic Assistance. The second group was to study the issue of a multilateral system of payments between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and the developing countries.

Trade expansion and regional integration among developing countries

The Trade and Development Board on 23 October 1976 established a Committee on Economic

Co-operation among Developing Countries as an open-ended main committee of the Board. (See also pp. 406-7.)

Least developed, land-locked and island developing countries

The Trade and Development Board decided on 23 October 1976 that its ministerial session in 1977 should review measures taken concerning the debt and related development and financial problems of the least developed, the developing island and the developing land-locked countries. The General Assembly, by resolution 31/159 of 21 December 1976, endorsed resolution 98(IV) of the fourth session of UNCTAD concerning these countries and requested all organizations concerned within the United Nations system to incorporate the relevant recommendations of that resolution in their activities and implement them as a matter of urgency. (For text of resolution 31/159, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Also on 21 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/157 on specific action in favour of land-locked developing countries, by which inter alia it requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, the land-locked countries and the United Nations specialized agencies, to find ways and means of improving the economic situations in those countries through the urgent implementation of earlier UNCTAD resolutions. It also called upon Member States and the entire international community to give special attention to the trade requirements of the land-locked developing countries and urged the developed countries and all others in a position to do so to provide technical and/or financial assistance through grants or concessional loans.

The Assembly, on the same date, adopted resolution 31/177 on the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries. It approved the statute of the Fund and asked the United Nations Development Programme, in close collaboration with the secretariat of UNCTAD, to manage the Fund during an interim period and report on its activities to the Assembly in 1977. It appealed to all international organizations, financial institutions and potential donor countries to provide the necessary financial resources in order to make the Fund operational during the interim period.

By resolution 31/156 on developing island countries, also adopted on 21 December 1976, the Assembly invited the United Nations system to continue its efforts for these countries and to incorporate in their regional and interregional programmes the relevant recommendations of the fourth session of UNCTAD. It urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to support in their assistance programmes the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries within the framework of those countries' plans and priorities.

International trade law

At its October 1976 session, the Trade and Development Board took note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its ninth session in April/May 1976.

Technical assistance and related activities

In 1976, the mandate of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) for providing technical co-operation to developing countries in the field of international trade and development was reaffirmed and strengthened as a result of a number of resolutions adopted at the fourth session of the Conference.

Apart from a valuable but marginal amount of financial support from bilateral agencies, UNCTAD relied almost entirely on the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for the financing of its operational programme. In general, the technical co-operation activities of UNCTAD were geared to the provision of technical and specialized advice and training to developing countries in the increasingly complex aspects of foreign trade. The major objectives of this advice and training were:

(a) to provide assistance to officials and/or government institutions in developing countries, to prepare them for more effective participation in consultations and negotiations which were expected to lead to changes in commercial policies and the adoption of measures which might affect the international trade of those countries (e.g. a series of projects on the multilateral trade negotiations);

(b) to assist Governments of developing countries in training officials and other nationals to take appropriate administrative measures with a view to deriving maximum benefit from such changes in commercial policies (e.g. a large-scale project on the generalized system of preferences);

(c) to assist Governments of developing countries and groupings of such countries in sharing the experience acquired in negotiating and implementing measures to expand their economic co-operation and increase their mutual trade (e.g. subregional and regional projects included under the UNCTAD programme of trade expansion and integration).

In monetary terms the volume of assistance provided by UNCTAD increased by 16 per cent in 1976. The programme of operational activities in 1976 was about $6.5 million, as shown in the table below.

During the year, UNDP approved two projects to be directly executed by two Latin American regional institutions in co-operation with UNCTAD. These projects called for substantive support by the UNCTAD secretariat without a corresponding global allocation of resources to the UNCTAD programme. A similar effect arose in the effort to promote a more integrated approach to development through a larger number of multidisciplinary and multisectoral projects. The organization was increasingly requested to participate in the formulation of, and to provide substantive backstopping for, such projects, whose execution was entrusted either to the regional commissions (for regional projects) or to specialized agencies in the United Nations system. Examples of these contributions not reflected in programme allocation were two regional projects in the field of transfer of technology in Asia and Africa, and a joint project with the World Health Organization and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization on the development of pharmaceutical production in developing countries.

Organizational questions

At the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in May 1976, a resolution (90(IV)) was adopted by which, inter alia, UNCTAD asked the General Assembly to amend the relevant Assembly resolutions to permit membership of the Trade and Development Board to be open to all member States of UNCTAD and to permit the fifth session of the Conference to be held no later than 1979. (See also pp. 401-2.)

In October 1976, the Trade and Development Board, which had before it a preliminary report by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD on reforming the permanent machinery of the Conference, also adopted a resolution concerning organizational matters. Among other things it took note of the report and decided to change the method of scheduling its meetings. It also expressed the view that the effectiveness of informal consultations between the Secretary-General of UNCTAD and the regional groups would be enhanced if adequate advance notice of topics to be discussed were provided and if participation in the consultations were at an adequate level.

By another decision, the Board recommended to the General Assembly that the UNCTAD secretariat be provided with an appropriate increase in its resources because the resolutions adopted by the Conference at its fourth session had resulted in an increase in the work programme of UNCTAD. Also, it expressed the hope that consultations between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of UNCTAD would result in greater flexibility for UNCTAD in budgetary, financial and administrative matters.

The Board further recommended to the Assembly that the fifth session of UNCTAD be held in 1979, noting that the Philippines had offered to be the host, and that the conference on an international code of conduct for the transfer of technology be held in 1978.

The General Assembly discussed organizational questions pertaining to UNCTAD at its 1976 session and adopted without a vote resolution 31/2 A and 31/2 B on 29 September and 21 December, respectively. Both resolutions were proposed by the Chairman of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee and approved by the Committee without a vote on 27 September and 6 December, respectively.

By resolution 31/2 A, the Assembly revised the 1964 resolution establishing UNCTAD,<sup>11</sup> as amended in 1972.<sup>12</sup> The substance of the revision was to open membership of the Trade and Development Board to all members of UNCTAD, and to make the term of membership an indefinite period.

<sup>12</sup> See Y.U.N., 1972, pp. 300-1, resolution 2904 A (XXVII) of 26 September 1972.

By resolution 31/2 B, the Assembly further amended the enabling resolution, thus terminating the Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements (thus permitting termination of the Advisory Committee to the Board and to the Committee on Commodities, which had replaced it). (For text of resolutions, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By another resolution—31/206 of 22 December—the Assembly decided that the extent of the greater flexibility in budgetary, financial and administrative matters requested by UNCTAD should be such as to enable it to make the best use of its resources according to the demands made of it. It also asked the Secretary-General to clarify as soon as possible the reasons for strengthening the office of the Secretary-General of UNCTAD. It considered that meanwhile a flexible use of UNCTAD's resources might provide his office with the desired strengthening.

Resolution 31/206 was adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee by a recorded vote of 114 to 9, with 8 abstentions. It was sponsored by Sri Lanka and approved in the Fifth Committee on 20 December by a vote of 86 to 9, with 5 abstentions.

Chapter VI

The International Trade Centre*Activities in 1976

During 1976, the International Trade Centre (ITC) continued its activities under the joint sponsorship of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). In accordance with an Economic and Social Council resolution of 9 August 1973,<sup>1</sup> ITC continued its efforts during the year to serve as the focal point for all United Nations assistance in the field of trade promotion. (See also pp. 414-15.)

As in previous years, ITC assisted developing countries with the formulation and implementation of national trade promotion programmes by providing information and advice on trade promotion institutions and programmes, export marketing services, and training institutions and services. Assistance mainly took the form of integrated programmes, which provided recipient Governments with several aspects of assistance, including institution-building, marketing information and training. Particular attention was given to the needs of the least developed countries.

In 1976, a total of 62 countries received ITC assistance in the amount of $8.4 million, of which 74 per cent came from trust-fund contributions by industrialized countries and 26 per cent from the United Nations Development Programme. The Centre's assistance was provided mainly through the services of 319 technical co-operation experts, who assisted in establishing and strengthening trade promotion institutions and services (33 per cent of the assistance programme), aiding with export market development of selected products (47 per cent), and training of government officials and business executives in trade promotion and export marketing (20 per cent).

Integrated programmes, operative in 32 countries, accounted for 57 per cent of ITC's assistance expenditures.

Activities during the year also included assistance in identifying export products, undertaking research into export markets, and aiding in formulating market development plans and export strategies. Market surveys and reports were published, trade information disseminated and new research tools for the provision of trade promotion assistance were developed.

In 1976, market research surveys were undertaken on pyrethrum, honey, off-season horticultural products, gelatin, and machine tools. Also prepared were monographs on oil-exporting countries as markets for developing countries and case-studies aimed at identifying market problems hampering the development of trade among developing countries. Marketing assistance was provided to individual countries as part of integrated country projects or as special projects.

Also during the year, ITC worked to stimulate demand for basic commodities through co-operative efforts on the part of developing countries. In this connexion, ITC convened an intergovernmental conference of tea-producing countries in September 1976, at which the International Tea Promotion Association was established and opened for membership to eligible Governments. A consultative meeting of tropical-timber-producing countries was also convened during the year; it discussed the text of a draft agreement to establish an International Tropical Timber Bureau.

Within the framework of United Nations efforts to give priority to the development requirements of developing countries, nearly 60 per cent of ITC's training assistance was undertaken in the developing countries. The programme focused on strengthening the educational management facilities of trade-promotion training institutions, by strengthening their programmes and through teacher training. In addition, ITC continued to provide training opportunities in developed countries through courses, workshops and seminars, and to provide training materials in trade promotion and export marketing. Market surveys and other ITC publications, including the quarterly journal International Trade FORUM, were available free of charge to developing countries.

(See also PART TWO of this volume, Chapter XVI.)

Secretariat

In 1976, ITC's total staff included 100 professionals and 117 general service staff, financed by regular budget funds and extrabudgetary resources and by sponsor developed countries. The Centre's regular budget, financed in equal portions by UNCTAD and GATT, amounted to $4,951,077 in 1976.

Decision of Economic and Social Council

On 3 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, with the adoption of decision 161(LXI), took note of the report of the Joint Advisory Group on the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT on its January 1976 session and endorsed the recommendations contained therein. The Council also decided that the Secretary-General need no longer submit a report to the Council on a biennial basis and decided to maintain cognizance of the subject of export promotion in order to consider the matter for co-ordination purposes, whenever warranted.

The Council approved decision 161(LXI), without a vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which, on 14 July 1976, had approved the text, also without vote, on an oral proposal of Brazil.

Chapter VII

Industrial development

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued its efforts during 1976 to develop methods of using available funds to produce better results for developing countries. These included the intensification of investment promotion and the transfer of technology, particularly in training to upgrade skills. Nearly 80 studies were undertaken during the year to assist developing countries with industrial policies and strategies, particularly in the fields of fertilizers, iron and steel, agro-industries, and vegetable oils and fats.

Information on national economies was provided for use by prospective investors in another 50 studies.

Assistance during the year remained at about the same level as in 1975, with 2,054 projects under implementation in 120 countries.

Details of these activities and of decisions taken concerning UNIDO by the Industrial Development Board and the General Assembly are described in the following sections.

Activities and expenditures in 1976

Funds for the activities of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) in 1976 were derived from the following sources:

|  | Amount (in millionsof US dollars) |
|--|---------------------------------------|
| UNIDO regular budget   | 21.9                                  |
| United Nations regular programmeof technical assistance  | 2.2                                   |
| United Nations Development Programme,indicative planning figures   | 27.1                                  |
| United Nations Development Programme,Reserve and Special Measures(including Special Industrial Services) | 4.6                                   |
| Special Industrial Services  |                                       |
| Trust Fund   | 0.3                                   |
| UNIDO General Trust Fund   | 4.0                                   |
| Special-purpose trust funds  | 1.8                                   |
| Total  | 61.9                                  |

The value of technical assistance delivered by UNIDO in 1976 amounted to nearly $40 million, of which 57 per cent was expended for project personnel, 26 per cent for equipment and contracts, and 14 per cent for fellowships. This brought the total value of technical assistance delivered by UNIDO since its inception in 1966 to nearly $200 million. Regionally, 34 per cent of UNIDO technical assistance went to Africa, 16.7 per cent to the Americas, 23.6 per cent to Asia and the Pacific, 15 per cent to Europe and Western Asia, and 10.7 per cent to interregional activities.

As in previous years, the major share of operational expenditure came from the indicative planning figures for country programmes of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which also provided funds for Special Industrial Services (SIS), a programme designed to meet urgent needs not covered by long-term planning. Expenditure for SIS in 1976 amounted to $4 million, of which $1 million was reserved for use in the least developed countries. Due to a backlog of commitments and high levels of project approvals in 1976, a special allocation was made from SIS Trust Fund Reserves and the UNDP Special Measures Fund for least developed countries to take care of excess expenditures. These measures enabled UNIDO to meet the situation; however, in view of the UNDP financial crisis and consequent expenditure restrictions, plans were made to pare future programmes.

Allocations from the United Nations regular programme of technical assistance financed 12 advisers attached to regional commissions and six interregional advisers attached to UNIDO headquarters. The programme also financed 94 fellowships for regional and interregional training (33 fellowships awarded in Africa, 20 in Europe and Western Asia, 15 in the Americas and 26 interregional). Eleven regional and interregional group training programmes and seminars were held, with a total of 140 participants. Of these, four were fully financed by UNIDO; additional costs were defrayed for seven others.

The allocation for least developed countries amounted to $550,000.

Activities financed with allocations from the General Trust Fund were training (42 per cent), industrial equipment or plants, industrial information, promotional activities, workshops and technical meetings. The special-purpose trust funds financed more than 80 projects in developing countries. Experts (649 from 20 developed countries and 367 from 37 developing countries) were assigned for 1,016 missions during the year.

The UNIDO Advisory Committee on Co-ordination in the Field of Industrial Development held two meetings during the year to discuss its role as Co-ordinator for the promotion of industrialization in developing countries, and agreements for co-ordination of programmes were concluded with other United Nations agencies and bodies.

Assistance to the least developed countries increased in 1976, and 43 projects were approved, mainly focusing on agro-industries, appropriate technology, training, and plastics in agriculture. Three projects were implemented in Afghanistan, and work started in the Lao People's Democratic Republic on low-cost prefabricated wooden bridges of a type developed in Kenya. Feasibility studies were made for bulk blending and bagging of fertilizers and pesticide formulation in the Sudano-Sahelian area, and for agricultural machinery and implements manufacture in the Niger and Senegal.

Training was given to about 8,000 nationals of developing countries through fellowships, group training programmes, workshops, study tours and in field projects. Four hundred and thirty fellowships were awarded in 1976; and the number of participants at in-plant group training programmes rose to 476 as compared with 385 in 1975. The number of host countries increased to 28, from 22 the previous year. The cumulative total of in-plant training programmes reached 158, with 2,818 participants from developing countries. An additional 194 trainees took part in 12 group training exercises during the year. By region, participation was approximately 41 per cent from Asia and the Pacific, 18 per cent from the Americas, 30 per cent from Africa and 11 per cent from Europe and Western Asia. Representation from the least developed countries increased from 10 to 16 per cent during 1976.

Under the joint investment promotion programme of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and UNIDO, missions visited 21 developing countries and about 120 project proposals were formulated or identified. An office for investment promotion and transfer of technology was established at Brussels, Belgium, to facilitate co-operation with European countries.

Other projects included assistance to an African industrialization fund at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and to engineering projects in South-East Asia. Assistance was also given to industrial research and development institutions, and for standardization and quality control, industrial information and industrial-fair promotion. Projects were carried out in connexion with small-scale industry, industrial estates and co-operatives, and industrial free zones. Management information systems, domestic marketing and industrial consultancy were other areas in which UNIDO provided assistance.

In compliance with decisions of the Second General Conference of UNIDO in 1975 and of the General Assembly,<sup>1</sup> studies were initiated on aspects of industrial development at global, regional and national levels, with participation from universities, research centres, Governments and industrial enterprises in advanced and developing countries. Work on a computer-based model to analyse world industrial development was followed by tests and formulation of data requirements. The reasons for under-utilization of industrial capacity in developing countries were being studied, as was the scope for redeployment of industries from advanced countries.

Specialized meetings during the year numbered 59; they related to preparations for consultations, investment co-operation, institutional infrastructure, factory establishment and management, training, feasibility studies, sectors of industry and technology. The organization of experimental sectoral consultations at the world level was initiated during the year, and preparatory meetings were held for two of them—iron and steel, and fertilizers—which brought together representatives from Governments, industry and labour.

The development and transfer of technology were the subjects of discussions at a symposium held jointly with the Licensing Executives Society, in New York, United States, in September, and a research programme was launched to assess the impact of foreign technology on developing countries.

Also during September, a meeting on national consultations on licensing, patents and transfer of technology was held in Uruguay. A pilot project for an industrial and technological information bank was approved during the year.

In 1976, UNIDO issued 32 publications, in addition to a monthly newsletter and bulletins on the investment climate in nearly 50 developing countries.

At the end of 1976, UNIDO's staff numbered 979, including 339 professionals, 635 general service staff and five field service officers. In addition, five interregional advisers, five special technical advisers and one project Co-ordinator were working on UNIDO projects.

Table I below shows UNIDO expenditures for technical assistance projects and for support activities.

Table II lists the number of experts received and provided, fellowships awarded and cost of assistance provided, by country or territory and by region.

Programme questions

Strengthening of operational activities for industrial development

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/162) on the strengthening of operational activities in the field of industrial development. By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly requested the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) to strengthen the organization's operational activities, particularly at the national and subregional levels, with a view to enabling it, through enhanced knowledge of actual problems in industrialization faced by developing countries, to provide developing countries with the assistance most urgently needed and help focus programmes more effectively on specific requirements.

The Assembly further asked UNIDO, in developing the programme of studies and research, to take into account the results of research and studies by government agencies, universities and other institutions in developing countries, thereby permitting a larger proportion of resources to be allocated to strengthening secretariat units concerned with the delivery of assistance to the developing countries.

In addition, the Assembly requested the Executive Director to submit an interim report to the Industrial Development Board and an updated report on implementation of this resolution, through the Economic and Social Council, to the 1977 Assembly session.

Resolution 31/162 was adopted by the Assembly, without vote, on 21 December 1976. The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the text on 14 December, also without vote, as proposed by Pakistan on behalf of States Members belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

Industrial redeployment in favour of developing countries

By another resolution (31/163) concerned with industrial development, the General Assembly urged developed countries to implement fully the relevant parts of its decisions taken at the seventh special session<sup>2</sup> which asked developed countries to facilitate the development of new policies and strengthen existing ones in order to encourage the redeployment of their industries which were less competitive internationally to developing countries. The Assembly requested the Executive Director of UNIDO to prepare, in collaboration with United Nations organizations, studies which would include recommendations concerning an inter-related set of policies for promoting redeployment, and identification of specific industries and sectors amenable to accelerated redeployment to developing countries.

The Assembly requested submission of the results of the studies to the Industrial Development Board, which was asked to include redeployment of industries from developed to developing countries as a regular agenda item.

On 21 December 1976, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/163 by a recorded vote of 104 to 1, with 27 abstentions. On 14 December, the Second Committee had approved the text by a roll-call vote of 91 to 1, with 26 abstentions, on a proposal by Pakistan on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77.

Explaining their abstention in the vote, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden said that it would be premature for UNIDO to identify the industries and sectors of industries which should be redeployed.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said these States unreservedly supported the accelerated industrialization of the developing countries, but emphasized that the resolution related to the sphere of the so-called market economies and not to the socialist countries.

The United Kingdom pointed out that the resolution appeared to recommend a new approach just when UNIDO was putting into effect the measures agreed on earlier. Any decision about redeployment of industry within the British economy, it continued, would be taken by its Government; it was on that basis that the United Kingdom would participate in the UNIDO negotiations.

Austria was of the opinion that steps to facilitate industrial redeployment in favour of developing countries needed more consideration, and Belgium was not convinced that the sectoral approach to the problem, proposed in the resolution, was appropriate.

Italy and Japan drew attention to the consultations to be held within the context of UNIDO and said they had abstained because the approach provided for in the text might hinder the process of negotiation and prejudice the results. The Federal Republic of Germany also considered the UNIDO consultations as the most appropriate means of strengthening the industrialization of developing countries and expressed the view that industrial redeployment should be an evolutionary, not a planned, process.

The United States, while not opposing the redeployment of industry to developing countries per se, voted against the draft resolution, as it could not commit itself to interfere with decisions of private industry and labour concerning the location of selected industries. Further, the United States was opposed to any recommendation requiring direct government action in the market-place to relocate resources out of selected industries or sectors of industries.

In voting for the text, Portugal said the studies which the resolution called for should complement the consultations under way with Governments.

Argentina expressed its surprise at the result of the vote because, it stated, very broad agreement on the subject appeared to have been reached at the Assembly's seventh (1975) special session. It did not consider the resolution to be premature or compromising to UNIDO consultations.

Joint study on international industrial co-operation

In response to its resolution of 16 September 1975,<sup>3</sup> by which the Assembly called for a joint study by Governments on international industrial co-operation under the auspices of UNIDO, the Executive Director of UNIDO submitted a progress report to the Assembly, in which he stated that a list of possible issues had been examined at a Meeting of Eminent Persons on International Industrial Co-operation at Vienna, Austria, in September 1976. The meeting, which was held in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), helped to define the scope and content of the study and elaborated procedures for carrying it out. Discussions focused on: global economic interdependence and industrialization; reshaping the world industrial structure; financial and technical co-operation; the problems of the least developed countries; and scope for consultations and negotiations on interrelated issues.

The Assembly took note of the progress report on 21 December 1976, by decision 31/421 C, which it approved, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second Committee; the Committee approved the text, without vote, on 13 December on the proposal of its Chairman.

Establishment of an industrial technological information bank

In response to a request by the Assembly for establishment of an industrial technological information bank,<sup>4</sup> the Executive Director of UNIDO submitted a progress report in which he stated that expert meetings were held in March and June 1976, at which recommendations were drawn up listing possible information and advisory services the bank could provide. In a statement to the Second Committee, the Executive Director said that experts had also recommended a pilot scheme in a limited area to test the scope, application, cost and practical uses of information that the bank would provide without duplicating the work of existing sources. Provision of $300,000 had been proposed in UNIDO's 1976-1977 budget.

On 21 December 1976, the Assembly, by decision 31/421 C, took note of the report of UNIDO on the establishment of an industrial technological information bank. The decision was approved, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second Committee, which had approved the text, without a vote, on 13 December on the proposal of its Chairman.

Also on 21 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/183 on the establishment of a network for the exchange of technological information. By this resolution, the Assembly, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD and the Executive Director of UNIDO to intensify their efforts towards the establishment in developing countries of centres for the transfer and development of technology at national, regional and subregional levels.

By another provision, the Assembly welcomed the report of UNIDO's Executive Director and urged the Industrial Development Board to take an early decision so that the necessary measures could be taken towards making the industrial technological information bank operational. ## Organizational questions

Committee on drafting a constitution for UNIDO

In accordance with a General Assembly decision of 16 September 1975 to convert the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) into a specialized agency,<sup>5</sup> the Committee to Draw Up a Constitution for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency, established by the same decision, held four sessions during 1976. In a report on its work, the Committee outlined the adoption of rules of procedure, the election of officers and the organization of work. The Chairman of the Committee told the Second Committee that he believed it would be possible for agreement to be reached on outstanding substantive issues so that the task could be completed effectively.

On 21 December 1976, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/161, by which it noted with concern that the conference of plenipotentiaries originally foreseen for the last quarter of 1976 could not be convened because the Committee had not been able to complete its work. The Assembly decided to extend the Committee's mandate and called for an acceleration of its work so that the conference of plenipotentiaries could be held during the second half of 1977. The Assembly also emphasized the need for all Governments to participate fully in elaborating the draft constitution.

Resolution 31/161 was adopted, without a vote, as recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. On 13 December 1976, the Second Committee had approved the draft text, without vote, as proposed by Pakistan on behalf of Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

Establishment of the United Nations Industrial Development Fund

At its tenth session, held at Vienna, Austria, in April, June and September 1976, the Industrial Development Board considered the terms of reference and the functioning and administration of a proposed United Nations Industrial Development Fund. The Board stressed that the establishment of the Fund should result in an increase in development assistance funds and that particular attention should be devoted to the needs of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries. In addition, the Board approved two draft resolutions for submission to the General Assembly. By the first, the Assembly would decide to establish the Industrial Development Fund, define its purpose, guiding principles and functions, the role of the Board and of the Executive Director of UNIDO, and the financial arrangements.

On 22 December 1976, the Assembly adopted the draft text, without objection, as its resolution 31/202, on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. During its discussion of this subject, the Fifth Committee had before it a note by the Secretary-General on the establishment of the Fund, containing certain amendments to the text having the effect of giving responsibility for promulgating the financial rules of the Fund to the Secretary-General, in accordance with normal United Nations procedure. These changes were accepted by the Fifth Committee, which approved the amended text, without objection on 21 December 1976.

By the second text proposed by the Industrial Development Board, the Assembly would adopt general procedures governing the operations of the Fund. An annex to the resolution set forth the definitions, financial resources, pledges, management of resources, subaccounts, and responsibilities of the Board and of the Executive Director.

On 22 December 1976, the Assembly adopted the text, without objection, as its resolution 31/203, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee. On 21 December, the Fifth Committee had approved the draft text, without objection, as amended on the suggestion of the Secretary-General, to include, among other things, a clearer explanation of the process of reimbursement for support service.

An amendment proposed by the USSR to the general procedures was rejected by a vote of 40 to 12, with 18 abstentions. The amendment would have deleted a provision that certain reimbursements by the Fund to UNIDO would be at the executing agency rates applied by the United Nations Development Programme.

Also on 22 December, the Assembly approved a decision (31/426), by which it concurred with the understanding of the Secretary-General that the purpose of the Industrial Development Fund related to activities beyond the scope of the programmes authorized by the General Assembly under the regular budget and that, while the Fund was intended to enhance and supplement such programmes, its resources should not be used to finance posts or activities which should appropriately be justified under the regular budget.

Decision 31/426 was approved, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, which had approved the text, also without objection, on 21 December 1976.

Third General Conference

By resolution 31/164 of 21 December 1976, the Assembly took note of the report of the Industrial Development Board on the work of its 1976 session and decided in principle, in accordance with a recommendation in the report, to convene the Third General Conference of UNIDO in 1979. The Assembly requested the Board to act as an inter-governmental preparatory committee for the Conference, and decided to take a final decision on the matter at its 1977 session.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/164, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved the text on 14 December 1976, without vote, as proposed by its Chairman.

Membership in UNIDO

By resolution 31/160 of 21 December 1976, the General Assembly decided to include Angola and Seychelles in the list of States eligible for membership in the Industrial Development Board.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/160, without objection as recommended by the Second Committee. On 13 December 1976, the Second Committee had approved the text, without vote, as proposed by its Chairman.

At the ninth pledging conference for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 26 October 1976, 68 nations pledged their intention of making voluntary contributions for 1977; five other States had made pledges as at 31 December 1976, bringing the amount pledged to a total of $3,814,397. This brought the total of voluntary contributions pledged to UNIDO since establishment of the General Trust Fund in 1968 to $24,666,092.

During the year, UNEP organized and participated in 85 conferences and seminars. Such meetings included: a government expert meeting on environmental monitoring of soil and vegetation cover, jointly organized with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in March, at Rome (Italy); a symposium on environmental problems resulting from coal industry activities, organized with the Economic Commission for Europe in October, at Katowice (Poland); three seminars on environmental education, sponsored by UNEP and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in November, at Bogota (Colombia), Bangkok (Thailand) and Kuwait; and an international workshop on marine pollution in the Caribbean and adjacent region, sponsored by UNEP, FAO and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission, in December, at Port of Spain (Trinidad and Tobago).

In 1976, UNEP co-operated with other United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations and institutions in preparing and issuing information in 30 publications, studies and reports, which included: Application of Building Climatology to the Problems of Housing and Building for Human Settlements; An Environmental and Economic Study of the Consequences of Pesticide Use in Central American Cotton Production; The Health of the Oceans; The Mediterranean Basin: Proposal for a Programme of Studies and Action; Ecological Guidelines for the Use of Natural Resources in the Middle East and South-West Asia; Can Desert Encroachment Be Stopped? and Energy Policy for the Rural Third World. In addition, UNEP continued to issue the monthly publication African Environment and the bi-weekly World Environment Report.

Action programme for the human environment

The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme met at its headquarters at Nairobi, Kenya, from 30 March to 14 April 1976 for its fourth session. The Council took a number of decisions affecting its action programme for the human environment, including decisions on programme policy and implementation, water resources, environmental problems of industries, the monitoring of the oceans and the stratosphere, the use of renewable energy resources, the Earthwatch programme, environmental law, and environment and development.

By its decision on water resources, the Governing Council noted the progress made in establishing the Centre for Water Resources Management, which was to start activities in 1977, and requested the Executive Director of UNEP to continue to participate actively in the preparations for the 1977

United Nations Water Conference, particularly regarding the environmental aspects of water use.

By a decision on environmental problems of specific industries, the Governing Council noted the results of the first two seminars on this subject, which focused on the pulp and paper and the aluminium industries, and requested UNEP's Executive Director to ensure balanced representation at seminars from all countries concerned with the relevant industries, from intergovernmental organizations and international non-governmental organizations such as those representing workers or employers in the relevant industry.

By a decision relating to ocean pollution, the Governing Council noted that the Governments of Bahrain, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates had a mutual interest in protecting from pollution the marine area to which they were all adjacent. The Governing Council, noting that the interest of these States was purely of a regional nature, decided therefore that immediate steps were necessary to protect this marine area from pollution by oil from ships and sea-bed exploration and exploitation, and from pollution resulting from industrialization in the context of development activities. It approved the action of Kuwait in proceeding with preparatory work for convening a regional conference to protect the area against pollution.

The Governing Council, by a decision on renewable energy resources, requested the Executive Director of UNEP, in co-operation with the relevant United Nations bodies, to accelerate an active programme involving the rational utilization of renewable resources for energy generation which would have a positive impact on rural development, consistent with environmentally sound practices. It urged him to further UNEP's support for national and regional projects for harnessing renewable energy resources and authorized him, in the light of the acquired experience, to carry out a study on the possibility of establishing a programme activity centre on the subject.

By a decision on Earthwatch, the Governing Council called for, inter alia, an integrated evaluation programme and interdisciplinary research programme as interacting component parts of Earthwatch, along with the Global Environmental Monitoring System, the International Referral System and the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals. It also requested the Executive Director to develop an over-all plan for the Global Environmental Monitoring System.

The Governing Council, by a decision on a study of the ozone layer, requested the Executive Director to convene a meeting of appropriate international, governmental and non-governmental organizations to review all aspects of the ozone layer, identify related activities and future plans and agree on a division of labour and a co-ordinating mechanism for, inter alia, the compilation of research activities and future plans and the collection of related industrial and commercial information.

The Governing Council also took a decision on environmental law, by which it requested the Executive Director to continue the systematic collection, analysis and presentation of data and information relating to activities and international conventions and agreements in the field of environment, in collaboration with other organizations within and outside the United Nations system involved in similar activities. It also requested him to continue development of the relevant principles contained in the Declaration of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment,<sup>1</sup> in particular through studies on the specific aspects of the problem relating to liability for pollution and other environmental damage and compensation for such damage.

The Governing Council also requested him to continue the promotion of international agreements or conventions to deal with global and regional environmental concerns and to provide technical assistance and appropriate guidelines to countries, at their request, for the development of their legislation for environmental planning and control.

Environment and development was the subject of another decision, by which the Governing Council appealed to Member States of the United Nations to reaffirm their commitment to the integration of environmental considerations in the context of development planning; it also requested the Executive Director to devote increased attention to the relationship between environment and development, including research into the development of appropriate institutions and the implementation of relevant management techniques.

It authorized him to convene an intergovernmental expert group meeting to consider environment and development, ecodevelopment and the environmental impact of the irrational and wasteful use of natural resources, with a view to preparing agreed criteria for assessing that environmental impact.

The Governing Council also drew the attention of the Executive Director to the desirability of promoting research and the development of methodologies, parameters and techniques to appraise the environmental aspects and foreseeable impact of development programmes and projects. It further requested him to submit a report indicating the level and the ways and means of assisting developing countries in establishing or upgrading, as appropriate, their standards for control of technological innovations.

On 3 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1976(LXI), having considered the report of UNEP's Governing Council and the recommendations contained therein, invited the General Assembly to approve the recommendations, in particular those relating to the 1977 United Nations Conference on Desertification (see below), and invited the Assembly's attention to the decisions of the Governing Council calling for active participation in the preparations for the 1977 United Nations Water Conference. It also called the attention of the Assembly to a decision by which the Governing Council had expressed the belief that the environment should be a major consideration in international discussions on development, and to a decision by which the Council appealed to Governments to pledge contributions to the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme and urged Governments which had announced pledges to pay them fully and promptly.

In addition, the Council invited the General Assembly to take into consideration the comments of the Governing Council on a 1975 report of the Secretary-General on criteria governing multilateral financing of housing and human settlements.<sup>2</sup>

Resolution 1976(LXI) was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which had approved the text without objection on 22 July 1976, as sponsored by Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Liberia, Uganda, Zaire and Zambia. Amendments by Egypt and the USSR were accepted by the sponsors.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly considered the report of UNEP's Governing Council. By resolution 31/111, the Assembly endorsed the paragraph of Economic and Social Council resolution 1976(LXI) concerning the active participation of UNEP in the preparations for the 1977 United Nations Water Conference and reaffirmed the belief expressed by the UNEP Governing Council that the environment should be a major consideration in international discussions on development. The Assembly noted with satisfaction the report of the Executive Director on the status of the Fund of UNEP and urged Governments to continue financial support to the Fund. (See also pp. 881-82.)

It further noted a report of the Secretary-General on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment (see below) and expressed its concern that such conventions and protocols had not received the wide acceptance and application they deserved.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/111, without vote, as recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 1 December 1976, on a proposal by Bangladesh, Cyprus, Egypt, Jamaica, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Republic, New Zealand and Sweden.

When it considered the report of UNEP, the Second Committee also had before it a draft resolution sponsored by Saudi Arabia proposing a special levy to save the biosphere. By this text, the General Assembly would have appealed to all oil-producing countries to consider introducing a levy of a value-added tax of 1 cent per barrel of oil, amounting to between $200 million and $300 million per annum, which was to be deposited in a special UNEP account to help save the biosphere for mankind. The Assembly would also have requested the Secretary-General to initiate consultations with the oil-producing countries concerning the modalities for the establishment and management of such an account.

Saudi Arabia subsequently decided not to press for a vote on the draft text, on the understanding, it said, that the Secretary-General and all appropriate agencies would take due account of it in their future work.

International co-operation to counter the spread of deserts

The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, at its 1976 session, considered preparations for the United Nations Conference on Desertification to be held in August/September 1977 in Nairobi. It approved proposals of the Executive Director concerning these preparations and called upon the Governments concerned to co-operate fully with the secretariat of the Conference in the preparation of case studies and in the consideration of the feasibility of proposed transnational activities. The Governing Council invited the General Assembly to: request the Executive Director of UNEP to assume the responsibility of Secretary-General of the Conference; give favourable consideration to the inclusion of Arabic as a working language of the Conference; and approve the extension of invitations to all States and liberation movements in accordance with established practice, to interested specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations, and to non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. The Governing Council also recommended that the Assembly approve the agreed draft provisional agenda for presentation to the Conference for adoption.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1976(LXI) of 3 August 1976 (see above), inter alia invited the General Assembly to approve the Governing Council's recommendations relating to the United Nations Conference on Desertification.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/108, by which it urged Member States to continue to co-operate with the Conference secretariat in the preparations, including the case studies and the proposed transnational activities to combat desertification, and requested the Executive Director of UNEP to assume the responsibility of Secretary-General of the Conference.

The Assembly requested the United Nations Secretary-General to invite to the Conference: all States; organizations with a standing invitation from the Assembly to participate in its work; representatives of the national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity; the United Nations Council for Namibia; the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, as well as interested organs of the United Nations; and interested inter-governmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. It authorized him to invite other interested non-governmental organizations that might have a specific contribution to make to the work of the Conference and requested him to ensure that the necessary arrangements were made, including financial provisions, for the participation of the representatives of organizations with a standing invitation from the Assembly to participate in its work and the representatives of recognized national liberation movements.

In addition, the Assembly decided to include Arabic as a language of the Conference, approved the provisional agenda set forth in an annex to the resolution and requested the Secretary-General to report on the results of the Conference.

Resolution 31/108 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second Committee. On 5 November 1976, the Second Committee had approved the text, without objection, as sponsored by 38 powers.

Institutional arrangements

At its 1976 session, the Governing Council of UNEP reviewed the institutional arrangements for international environmental co-operation and took a decision on this matter, by which it, inter alia, decided to advise the General Assembly that in its view the arrangements appeared adequate and sound after less than four years of operation and should not be changed at this stage; however, while continuing to meet annually, the Governing Council would consider phasing items so that some issues were dealt with at length only at alternate sessions.

In addition, the Governing Council reaffirmed the view that UNEP should avoid involvement in any new long-term activities of a primarily executive character without its approval and noted the Executive Director's intention to submit to it proposals for a modest increase in staff, without departing from the principle of a small secretariat. The Governing Council endorsed the Executive Director's views on the catalytic function of the UNEP Fund and noted the reports of the Executive Director and the Environment Co-ordination Board, which, it felt, demonstrated that the Board was a useful instrument of programme co-ordination within the United Nations system in the environmental field.

On the possible restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, the Governing Council decided to make recommendations to the General Assembly relating to the place of environmental considerations within the system. These included responsibility for environmental issues of a global nature, guidance and leadership in international environmental affairs, provision of suitable fora and facilities for treaty-making in the field of the environment, and responding to the environmental problems of human settlements.

The Governing Council, in a review of the institutional arrangements for human settlements, invited the participants of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (scheduled to open in May 1976—see following Chapter) to take into account that both the natural and the man-made aspects of man's environment were essential to his well-being and to the enjoyment of basic rights, and that the linkage between the man-made and the natural environment was of prime importance.

In addition, the Governing Council invited the Secretary-General to present to the Habitat Conference specific options regarding institutional arrangements, based on technical and administrative studies.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/112), by which it endorsed the view of the Governing Council that the institutional arrangements for international environmental co-operation appeared adequate and sound, and also endorsed the recommendations by the Governing Council relating to the place of environmental considerations within the United Nations system.

The Assembly decided to maintain the existing arrangements, without prejudice to any decision it might take concerning the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system (see pp. 364-66).

These decisions, as set forth in the resolution, were adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 1 December 1976.

The draft resolution was sponsored in the Second Committee by Argentina, Canada, Egypt, Finland, Greece, Iran, Jamaica, Kenya, the Philippines, Sweden, the United States and Venezuela.

Compensation for material remnants of wars

The UNEP Governing Council—by a decision on a study requested by the General Assembly on 9 December 1975<sup>3</sup> of the problem of the material remnants of wars, particularly mines, and their effect on the environment—welcomed the efforts undertaken in various fora and urged that discussions should aim at ensuring the maximum possible protection of the environment against damage caused by war. It authorized UNEP's Executive Director to proceed with the study, requested him to consult with Governments regarding the convening of an intergovernmental meeting on this matter, and requested him to render assistance in the field of environmental protection to States preparing their own programmes for the elimination of mines in their territories.

Later in the year, the Secretary-General transmitted an interim report of the Executive Director of UNEP on the study of the problem of the material remnants of war, particularly mines, and their effect on the environment. In his report, the Executive Director stated that he had convened an advisory group of experts to assist him in preparing recommendations on the subject.

The group of experts advised, inter alia, that an analysis of environmental problems could best be made on the basis of material provided by Governments themselves and that the study should be transmitted to the Assembly in 1977 and not in 1976, in order to allow more time for its preparation and consideration by the UNEP Governing Council.

The Executive Director intended, by August 1976, to address to Governments a request for information and, on the basis of replies received, was to consider the desirability and feasibility of convening an intergovernmental meeting to discuss, among other subjects, the need for and practicability of guidelines formulated on the basis of statistical data supplied by Governments. Such guidelines, in the view of the Executive Director, could cover both action to remedy the environmental damage caused by existing material remnants of war and ways of reducing such damage resulting from future conflicts.

On 16 December 1976, by resolution 31/111 on the report of the Governing Council of UNEP (see above), the General Assembly took note of the report on the study of the material remnants of war and requested the Governing Council to ensure the study's completion, taking into account the views expressed during consideration of this matter.

Environment conventions and protocols

At its 1976 session, the UNEP Governing Council considered a report of the Executive Director on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment. The Governing Council urged States to accept the 1969 Amendments to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil, of 12 May 1954, and to become parties as soon as possible to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, of 2 November 1973.

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 9 December 1975,<sup>4</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the Executive Director of UNEP on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment. The report contained a list of such conventions and protocols, and their ratifications, accessions, and parties and dates of entry into force.

By resolution 31/111 of 16 December 1976 (see above), on the report of the UNEP Governing Council, the General Assembly noted the report of the Secretary-General and reiterated the concern it had expressed at the previous session<sup>5</sup> that existing international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment had not received the wide acceptance and application they deserved.

Environment co-operation regarding shared natural resources

The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, at its 1976 session, considered co-operation in the field of the environment concerning natural resources shared by two or more States and considered the progress report of its Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on Natural Resources Shared by Two or More States. In its discussion of this item, the importance of the question of shared natural resources was stressed and a decision approved, by which the Governing Council expressed satisfaction at the progress made by the Intergovernmental Working Group in the preparation of draft principles of conduct in the field of the environment for the guidance of States in the conservation and harmonious exploitation of such resources. It took note of the report on the Working Group's first session, held at Nairobi from 12 to 22 January 1976, decided that it should continue its work in

Questions concerning human settlements*Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements

Convened by the United Nations General Assembly, Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements met in Vancouver, Canada, from 31 May to 11 June 1976. The purpose of the Conference was to set out guidelines for national and international action to improve the living places of people throughout the world. It was attended by representatives of 132 Governments, four national liberation movements, 160 non-governmental organizations and a number of intergovernmental bodies.

The Conference was first proposed by the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment held in Stockholm, Sweden. Later that year, the General Assembly, accepting the recommendations of the Stockholm Conference, decided that a conference-exposition on human settlements should be held to serve as a practical means to exchange information about solutions to problems of human settlements.<sup>1</sup> A Preparatory Committee held three sessions: the first in January and August 1975; the second and third in January and May 1976. The Committee reviewed the documentation for the Conference and the procedural arrangements.

Regional preparatory conferences and a series of expert meetings were also held during the year preceding the Conference.

In addition to the traditional reports and background papers, an audio-visual programme was devised to stimulate the exchange of information about human settlements problems. A total of 236 films and slide presentations were submitted by 123 nations. These presentations were shown during the Conference and plans were made to make them available for showings throughout the world.

Participating in the Conference were representatives of Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, the Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, the Holy See, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization and of the following national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) also took part in the Conference: the African National Congress, the African National Council, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania.

Also attending were representatives of the United Nations Council for Namibia, three United Nations regional commissions, the United Nations Centre for Regional Development, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the United Nations University and the World Food Programme.

Representatives of the following specialized agencies participated: the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the World Meteorological Organization. Thirteen intergovernmental organizations were represented by observers: the African Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, the Cairo Demographic Centre, the Commonwealth Secretariat, the Commission of the European Communities, the Council for Arab Economic Unity, the Council of Europe, the Islamic Conference Secretariat, the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of American States, the Inter-American Institute for Agriculture and Sciences, and the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

The officers of the Conference were: President, Barney Danson (Canada); Rapporteur-General, Adolf Ciborowski (Poland); Chairman of Committee I, the Reverend George K. Muhoho (Kenya); Chairman of Committee II, Homayoun Jaber Ansari (Iran); and Chairman of Committee III, Diego Arria (Venezuela). Also serving were 33 Vice-Presidents from the following States: Australia, Austria, Bolivia, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Hungary, India, Iraq, Japan, Mauritania, Mexico, Nigeria, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, Sri Lanka, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Uganda, the USSR, Zaire and Zambia.

The plenary meetings of the Conference were devoted to a general debate in which 149 speakers described their experience in problems of human settlements and suggested the policies and programmes best suited to their solution. The substantive work was divided among three main committees. Committee I dealt with the draft declaration of principles and with programmes of international co-operation. Recommendations regarding national action were divided between Committee II, which examined settlement policies and strategies, settlement planning, and institutions and management, and Committee III, which dealt with shelter, infrastructure and services, land and public participation.

Simultaneously with the Conference, a non-governmental Forum was held at Vancouver. More than 5,000 participants from 90 countries took part in the discussions, which covered such topics as self-help and low-cost housing, land policy, participation, appropriate technology, nuclear energy and rural development.

The Conference was opened by the United Nations Secretary-General, Kurt Waldheim, who said that the central theme of the Conference was concern for people—where and how they lived, the quality of their lives and the future for themselves and generations yet unborn.

The participants were welcomed by the Governor-General of Canada, Jules Léger, and the Prime Minister of Canada, Pierre Elliot Trudeau. In his address, the Prime Minister emphasized the urgency of human settlements questions and noted that human settlements were linked so closely to existence itself, represented such a concrete and widespread reality, and were so complex and demanding, so racked with injustices and deficiencies, that the subject could not be approached with leisurely detachment.

On 11 June 1976, the Conference adopted a Declaration of Principles known as the Vancouver Declaration on Human Settlements, 1976, a set of 64 recommendations for action by Governments intended to assure the basic requirements of human habitation—shelter, clean water, sanitation and a decent physical environment, and the opportunity for cultural growth and the development of the individual—and five resolutions.

The Declaration, proposed by the States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, was adopted by a roll-call vote of 89 in favour to 15 against (Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, the United Kingdom, the United States), with 10 abstentions (Austria, Colombia, Fiji, Honduras, Japan, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland). A number of countries, including Australia, Austria, Canada, Colombia, Fiji, the Netherlands on behalf of the countries belonging to the European Economic Community, New Zealand, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland and the United States, in explaining their negative votes or abstentions, said they were unable to support the Declaration because of its implicit endorsement of General Assembly resolution 3379(XXX) of 10 November 1975, which characterized Zionism as a form of racism.<sup>2</sup> Others specified reservations or objections to references in the Declaration to a new international economic order and to what they considered to be political interjections—such as a preambular reference to involuntary migration, politically, racially and economically motivated, as a cause of unacceptable circumstances of life for vast numbers of people.

With two exceptions, the recommendations for national action submitted by the Committees were approved without vote. The two amended in plenary meeting dealt with settlements in territories under foreign occupation (see below for details).

Declaration of principles

The 55-paragraph Vancouver Declaration was composed of a preamble, and three sections setting forth opportunities and solutions, general principles and guidelines for action.

By the preamble, the Conference, among other things, recognized that the circumstances of life for vast numbers of people in human settlements were unacceptable, particularly in the developing countries, and that, unless positive and concrete action was taken, those conditions were likely to be further aggravated.

As factors aggravating the problem, the preamble cited: inequitable economic growth; social, economic, ecological and environmental deterioration; a world population growth, expected to double the population within 25 years; uncontrolled urbanization; rural backwardness and dispersion; and involuntary migration, politically, racially and economically motivated, relocation and expulsion of people from their national homelands.

By the section on opportunities and solutions, the Conference pointed out the need for increased activity by Governments and the international community aimed at mobilization of economic resources, institutional changes and international solidarity. Such a mobilization would include the adoption of bold, meaningful and effective human settlement policies and spatial planning strategies realistically adapted to local conditions, and the creation of more livable, attractive and efficient settlements which would recognize the heritage and culture of people and the special needs of disadvantaged groups, especially children, women and the infirm, in order to ensure the provision of health services, education, food and employment within a framework of social justice. Human settlements, it was noted, had to be seen as an instrument and object of development; the goals of settlement policies were inseparable from the goals of every sector of social and economic life, and the solutions to these problems of human settlements had therefore to be conceived as an integral part of the development process of individual nations and the world community.

The Conference then proclaimed a series of general principles, among which were the following.

The improvement of the quality of life of human beings was the first and most important objective of every human settlement policy; these policies must facilitate the rapid and continuous improvement in the quality of life of all people, beginning with the satisfaction of the basic needs of food, shelter, clean water, employment, health, education, training and social security, without any form of discrimination. Priority was to be given to the needs of the most disadvantaged people.

Human dignity and the exercise of free choice consistent with over-all public welfare were basic rights which must be assured in every society, and it was therefore the duty of all people and Governments to join the struggle against colonialism, foreign aggression and occupation, domination, apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination referred to in the resolutions as adopted by the General Assembly.

The establishment of settlements in territories occupied by force was illegal and condemned by the international community; action remained to be taken against the establishment of such settlements.

The right of free movement and the right of each individual to choose the place of settlement within the domain of his own country should be recognized and safeguarded.

Every State had the sovereign right to choose its economic, political, social and cultural system, without interference, coercion or external threat, and the right to exercise full and permanent sovereignty over its wealth, natural resources and economic activities.

Land was one of the fundamental elements in human settlements and every State had the right to maintain under public control the use, possession, disposal and reservation of land; every State had the right to plan and regulate use of land in such a way that the growth of population centres, both urban and rural, was based on a comprehensive land-use plan.

Nations must avoid the pollution of the biosphere and the oceans and should join in the effort to end irrational exploitation of environmental resources. The waste and misuse of resources in war should be prevented.

All countries should make a commitment to promote disarmament, in particular nuclear disarmament, and part of the resources thus released should be used to achieve a better quality of life, particularly in the developing countries.

Also, all persons had the right and duty to participate in elaborating and implementing policies and programmes of their human settlements.

To achieve universal progress in the quality of life, a fair and balanced structure of the economic relations between States had to be promoted, and it was therefore essential to implement urgently the New International Economic Order, based on the Declaration and the Programme of Action approved by the General Assembly at its sixth (1974) special session<sup>3</sup> and on the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.<sup>4</sup>

The highest priority should be given to homeless persons displaced by natural or man-made catastrophes, and especially by the act of foreign aggression. In the latter case, all countries had the duty to cooperate to guarantee that the parties involved allowed the return of displaced persons to their homes to give them the right to possess their properties without interference.

Historical settlements, monuments and other national heritage items were to be safeguarded against aggression or abuse by an occupying power.

Also, every State had the right to rule and exercise effective control over foreign investments, including the transnational corporations, which affected the human settlements programmes.

All countries were to create conditions making possible the full integration of women and youth in political, economic and social activities, particularly in relation to human settlement proposals, on the basis of equal rights.

Finally, international co-operation was a common duty of all States and necessary efforts therefore must be made to accelerate the development of developing countries.

In the section setting out guidelines for action, the Conference among other things stressed that national and international efforts should give priority to improving the rural habitat and to reducing the disparities between rural and urban areas. Human settlements policies and programmes, it stated, should strive for progressive minimum standards for an acceptable quality of life and it drew attention to the detrimental effects of transposing standards and criteria that could only be attained by a minority of the population. Governments should promote programmes that would assist local authorities to participate to a greater degree in national development.

Another guideline enunciated by the Conference stated that land was an essential element in the development of both urban and rural settlements; hence, because of its limited supply the use and tenure of land should be subject to public control through appropriate legislative measures, including agrarian reform, that would facilitate the transfer of economic resources to the agricultural sector and the promotion of the agro-industrial effort.

Also, access should be granted, on more favourable terms, to modern technology, which should be adapted, as necessary, to the specific economic, social and ecological conditions and to the different stages of development of the developing countries. International, technical and financial co-operation by the developed countries with the developing countries must be conducted on the basis of respect for national sovereignty and national development plans and programmes and designed to solve problems relating to projects, under human settlement programmes, aimed at enhancing the quality of life.

Finally, since the resources of Governments were inadequate to meet all needs, the international community should provide the necessary financial and technical assistance, evolve appropriate institutional arrangements and seek new, effective ways to promote them. In the meantime, aid to developing countries must reach the percentage target set in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.<sup>5</sup>

Recommendations for national action

The recommendations which the Habitat Conference addressed to Governments concerned action to be taken at the national level to improve human settlements. They were divided into six categories: settlement policies and strategies; settlement planning; shelter, infrastructure and services; land; public participation; and institutions and management.

Settlement policies and strategies

In the section on settlement policies and strategies, seven recommendations dealt with national settlement policies, their content, and their relationship to the distribution of population, the environment, economic and social development, and the use of resources.

By the preamble to the recommendations the Conference stated that national development strategies must be devised so that the goals and objectives of human settlement policies became an integral part of national development objectives. Such policies were not to be used to dispossess people from their homes and their land or to entrench privilege and exploitation and were to be in conformity with the Declaration of Principles and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>6</sup>

The first recommendation suggested that all countries should establish as a matter of urgency a national policy on human settlements embodying the distribution of population and related economic and social activities.

Next, the Conference stipulated that a national policy on human settlements and the environment should be an integral part of any national economic and social development policy and should take into account, among other things, the changing roles of women. It should concentrate on key issues, promote the goals and objectives of national development, establish priorities among regions and areas of a country and be led by public-sector action.

Another recommendation was that policies should aim to improve the condition of human settlements, particularly by promoting a more equitable distribution of the benefits of development among regions and by making such benefits and public services accessible to all groups. Public-sector investments, subsidies, and fiscal and legal in-

Settlement planning

The section on settlement planning contained 16 recommendations that treated settlement planning in national, regional and local contexts, and dealt with such subjects as the availability of resources, urban improvement and expansion, reconstruction after disaster, new settlements, temporary settlements, and the settlements of mobile groups such as nomads and migrant workers. It was noted that plans must include clear goals and adequate policies, objectives and strategies, along with concrete programmes, and should promote and guide development rather than restrict or simply control it.

At the plenary meeting, a Cuban amendment to the preamble was adopted by a roll-call vote of 77 in favour to 8 against, with 20 abstentions. This amendment added a paragraph to the effect that settlement planning and implementation for the purpose of prolonging and consolidating occupation and subjugation in territories and lands acquired through coercion and intimidation must not be undertaken and must be condemned as a violation of United Nations principles and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Shelter, infrastructure and services

On the topic of shelter, infrastructure and services, the Conference approved 18 recommendations dealing with such questions as national housing policies, waste management and prevention of pollution, energy, water supply and social and recreational services. Infrastructure was defined as the networks designed to deliver or remove people, goods, energy or information, including transport and communications; this was distinguished from services such as education, health, culture, welfare, recreation and nutrition. The overriding objectives of settlement policies, it was noted, should be to make the facilities available to those who needed them, in the sequence in which they were needed and at a monetary or social cost they could afford.

The Conference proposed a comprehensive approach to shelter, infrastructure and services. Standards should be compatible with local resources, adaptable to local culture and established by government bodies. Efforts should be made to reduce dependence on foreign technologies and materials and to make use of available local resources and know-how in such a way as to generate employment and income. The Conference recommended reducing energy consumption and identifying and developing new sources of energy.

By another recommendation, the Conference proposed political, financial and technical support to the construction industry. Also, it suggested that national housing policies should aim at providing adequate shelter and services to the lower income groups, distributing available resources on the basis of greatest need.

Land

Eight recommendations in the section on land dealt with land as a basic component of human settlements and included suggestions on land ownership, conservation and reclamation, as well as other aspects of effective land management. Land, with its crucial role in human settlements, the Conference stated, could not be treated as an ordinary asset and the pattern of land use should be determined by the long-term interests of the community, especially since decisions on location of activities had a long-lasting effect on the pattern and structure of human settlements.

The first recommendation stated that land was a scarce resource whose management should be subject to public surveillance or control in the interest of the nation. Two amendments to this recommendation were adopted at the plenary meeting. The first added a paragraph by which the Conference stated that, in all occupied territories, changes in the demographic composition, or the transfer or uprooting of the native population, and the destruction of existing human settlements in these lands and/or the establishment of new settlements for intruders was inadmissible. Heritage and national identity were to be protected and any policies violating these principles were to be condemned.

This amendment was adopted by a roll-call vote of 69 to 8, with 26 abstentions. It was sponsored by Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen.

The second amendment added a paragraph by which the Conference stated that land was a natural resource fundamental to the economic, social and political development of peoples and therefore Governments must maintain full jurisdiction and exercise complete sovereignty over such land with a view to freely planning development of human settlements throughout the whole of the national territory. This resource was not to be the subject of restrictions imposed by foreign nations which enjoyed the benefits while restricting its rational use. This amendment, proposed by Panama, was adopted by consensus.

By another recommendation, the Conference, noting that agricultural land was prey to speculation and urban encroachment, stated that change in the use of land, particularly from agricultural to urban, should be subject to public control and regulation. Measures to that end might include direct intervention, legal and fiscal controls, as well as zoning and land-use plans.

In relation to the economic value of land, the Conference recommended that the unearned increment resulting from rises in land values as a result of changes in land use, public investment or decision, or due to the general growth of the community, must be subject to appropriate recapture by public bodies (the community), unless the situation called for other additional measures such as new patterns of ownership or the general acquisition of land by public bodies.

Another recommendation declared that public ownership of land should be used to control areas of urban expansion and protection, to implement land reform, and to supply serviced land at price levels which could secure socially acceptable patterns of development.

The Conference recommended that past patterns of ownership rights should be transformed to match the changing needs of society. Special attention should be given to redefinition of legal ownership, separation of land ownership from development rights, and land rights of indigenous peoples.

Public participation

On the question of public participation, the Conference noted that a co-operative effort of the people and their Governments was a prerequisite for effective action on human settlements; as the magnitude and intractability of the problems were too great for Governments to act alone, citizens must be provided opportunities for direct involvement in the decisions that profoundly affected their lives.

In six recommendations it was stated, among other things, that public participation should be an indispensable element in planning strategies and in their formulation, implementation and management. Public participation was a right to be accorded to all segments of the population; it was a human right, a political duty and an instrument essential for national development.

Institutions and management

The final set of 10 recommendations dealt with institutions and management—the political, administrative and technical instruments which formulated or implemented settlement plans and policies. Covered were such questions as adaptation to changing circumstances, the use of human resources, financial arrangements, and settlement laws and regulations. The Conference observed that new institutions should be designed to promote new concepts and provide leadership in unfamiliar areas. Adequate representation of inhabitants should be ensured on principal policy-making bodies. Institutions dealing with human settlements should adapt to changing circumstances and they should be continuously reviewed and reorganized as necessary. Settlements should be improved by responsive and imaginative management of all resources.

Other Conference decisions

The Conference adopted six resolutions on the question of international co-operation in regard to human settlements.

By the first resolution, adopted by consensus, the Conference called for the creation of an intergovernmental body for human settlements, composed of not more than 58 States; its task would be to help countries and regions increase and improve their own efforts to solve settlements problems, to promote greater international co-operation for increasing the resources available to developing countries, and to strengthen co-operation among developing countries. The body would have among its main functions the development and promotion of policy objectives and priorities for United Nations programmes in this field, and the study of new issues, problems and solutions relating to settlements. It would also exercise over-all policy guidance for the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. The proposed body would report to the Economic and Social Council or to the General Assembly through the Council.

The Conference also called for the establishment of a secretariat to serve as a focal point for human settlements action and co-ordination within the United Nations system; the secretariat would comprise the posts and budgetary resources of certain specified existing units.

By the resolution, the Conference also recommended that the United Nations regional commissions establish intergovernmental regional committees on human settlements, that the secretariats dealing with human settlements establish close links with the principal financial institutions at the regional and global levels, and that co-operation should be sought with universities, research and scientific institutes, non-governmental organizations and voluntary groups, in order to make full use of their knowledge and experience in the field of human settlements.

The Conference did not take a decision on the section of the text before it dealing with the questions of the location or organizational link of the proposed human settlements unit—whether it should be integrated into the Secretariat Department of Economic and Social Affairs or into the United Nations Environment Programme. Reservations, proposals and amendments by various countries were appended to the resolution for transmittal to the General Assembly.

By a second resolution, the Conference asked the United Nations Secretary-General to submit to the 1976 session of the General Assembly a paper on the financial implications of alternative institutional arrangements for the proposed unit. This resolution was adopted by consensus.

Another resolution adopted by consensus recommended the convening of regional meetings before the opening of the 1976 Assembly session in September to establish guidelines for co-ordinating within each region the action to be taken to deal with settlements problems.

By yet another resolution, the Conference recommended that the General Assembly authorize the Secretary-General to conclude an agreement with the University of British Columbia in Vancouver for the custody, reproduction, use and augmentation of the audio-visual materials prepared for the Conference; this text was also adopted by consensus.

The Conference also adopted a resolution by which it recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to prepare and submit a report in 1977 on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories. By the preamble to this resolution, the Conference expressed concern that the Palestinian people had been forced to abandon their indigenous homeland and said it recognized the threat to international peace and security that would result from the wilful destruction of their cultural habitat.

This resolution, sponsored by Algeria and Egypt, was adopted by a roll-call vote of 73 in favour to 3 against (Israel, Paraguay, United States), with 42 abstentions.

The Conference also adopted a resolution welcoming the convening of the United Nations Water Conference in 1977 and urging that Governments support it, and another expressing thanks to the Government and people of Canada.

Post-Conference action by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly

The Economic and Social Council, on 5 August 1976, adopted a resolution (2040(LXI)) by which, among other things, it noted the report of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, and called upon the United Nations regional commissions and urged all other international organizations within the United Nations system to take intensified and sustained action in support of national efforts to improve human settlements.

It recommended to the General Assembly that the Secretary-General be requested to convene, within the framework of the regional commissions, regional meetings to establish guidelines for the co-ordination of action to deal with human settlements and it recommended that the Assembly, in considering the report of the Habitat Conference, give special attention to the recommendations for international co-operation.

Resolution 2040(LXI) was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which approved the text without vote on 2 August. The text was sponsored by Argentina, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Malaysia, Pakistan, Thailand and Sweden. Oral amendments by Italy and the USSR were accepted by the sponsors. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted six resolutions on questions arising from the Habitat Conference. By resolution 31/109, the Assembly took note of the report and decisions of the Conference. It urged all Member States to consider, on a priority basis, the recommendations for national action contained in the report, and called on regional commissions and other international organizations to take intensified action in support of national action, including exchanges of information and assistance, in the formulation and implementation of projects to improve human settlements. It also requested the Secretary-General to convene regional meetings to establish guidelines for the co-ordination of action to deal with human settlements and to report on the results in 1977, and took note of the reports on the regional meetings held within the Economic Commissions for Latin America and for Europe.

Resolution 31/109 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text, also without vote, on 17 November on the proposal of Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bolivia, Canada, Colombia, Cyprus, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, the Philippines, Poland, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Turkey, Uganda and the United

By the second resolution adopted—31/110—the Assembly, recalling the Conference's resolution on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in occupied territories, requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the relevant United Nations organs and specialized agencies, to prepare and submit to the Assembly's 1977 session a report on that subject. It requested the Secretary-General, in preparing the report, to consult and co-operate with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, and it urged all States to co-operate with him in this matter.

Resolution 31/110 was adopted by a recorded vote of 107 to 2, with 26 abstentions. The Second Committee approved the text on 17 November by a roll-call vote of 102 to 2, with 25 abstentions. The text was introduced by Pakistan on behalf of the States Members belonging to the "Group of 77." (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By another resolution—31/113—the Assembly requested Member States and the Secretary-General, when planning the implementation of the Habitat Conference recommendations, to bear in mind the measures that protected the decent living environment of the most vulnerable social groups, such as children, youth, the elderly and the handicapped, so that they might live in an environment that was equally accessible to all individuals.

This resolution was adopted without vote. The text was sponsored by Austria, Bolivia, Canada, Chile, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Honduras, Jamaica, Japan, Kuwait, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay and Venezuela and was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 1 December. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

With the adoption of resolution 31/114, the Assembly invited the Secretary-General to ensure that the international bodies responsible for implementing the relevant recommendations of the Habitat Conference studied the specific possibilities and effective conditions for collaboration between the United Nations and the non-governmental organizations concerned, and drew up programmes of collaboration with those organizations.

Resolution 31/114 was adopted without vote. The text was sponsored by Austria, Ecuador, Mali, the Niger, Portugal, Senegal, Togo, Tunisia and the United Republic of Cameroon and was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 3 December. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By a fifth resolution—31/115—the Assembly decided to establish a United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements; invited all participants in the Habitat Conference to transfer to the Secretary-General the audio-visual material prepared for the Conference; invited Governments of Member States to make available to the Information Centre new or enriched audio-visual presentations prepared for their programmes of national action; and authorized the Secretary-General to conclude an agreement for the provision by the Canadian authorities of facilities and financial support to the Centre to carry out its responsibilities for custody, reproduction and international distribution, for the period up to March 1980, of the audio-visual material prepared for the Conference.

This resolution was also adopted without vote. The Second Committee approved the text by consensus on 3 December, on the proposal of Canada. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The final resolution on this question adopted by the Assembly dealt with institutional arrangements. The Assembly decided to defer until its 1977 session a decision on the type of definitive intergovernmental body for human settlements and on the organizational link and location of the human settlements secretariat, when the guidelines from the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System would be in hand. It requested the Economic and Social Council to devote the necessary time at the outset of its mid-1977 session to the examination of developments in human settlements and the follow-up to Habitat and to make concrete recommendations on the definitive institutional arrangements.

Also, it requested all the United Nations bodies concerned, particularly the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, to ensure that the recommendations of the Habitat Conference were taken into account in their respective programmes related to human settlements, and to make their consultative services and resources available for the implementation of national programmes of action in the field of human settlements.

The Assembly further requested UNDP, UNEP and the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning to give all possible support to the regional commissions in the strengthening of regional co-operation in the field of human settlements, and asked the regional commissions to report to the Economic and Social Council on the results of such regional co-operation, including progress in the establishment of governmental regional committees on human settlements.

This resolution—31/116—was adopted without vote. The text, proposed by the Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee after consultations, was approved, without vote, by that Committee on 6 December. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Second Committee had four draft resolutions before it for its discussion of the institutional arrangements for international co-operation on human settlements. All were withdrawn following submission of the text proposed by the Vice-Chairman after consultations.

The first of these drafts was proposed by Bolivia, Chile, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay and Venezuela. By this text, the Assembly among other things would have endorsed the recommendations of Habitat concerning the establishment of an intergovernmental body for human settlements. It would have asked the Economic and Social Council to dissolve the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning and to replace it with a 58-member Commission on Human Settlements. It would have established Habitat: United Nations Centre for Human Settlements as the Secretariat unit responsible for such activities, consolidating in it existing units. Further, it would have called for regional co-operation and for co-operation between the new Centre and UNEP; UNEP was to retain its staff resources devoted to human settlements.

The second draft was sponsored by Egypt and Kenya. By this text, the Assembly among other things would have: decided that the Governing Council of UNEP would be the global intergovernmental body for human settlements; invited the Economic and Social Council to abolish the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning; established a secretariat for human settlement action within UNEP, consolidating in it existing units; and recommended regional co-operation.

The third draft was sponsored by Algeria, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Jordan, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. By this text, the Assembly among other things would have requested all bodies concerned to implement the recommendations of Habitat, requested the Economic and Social Council, UNEP and UNDP to consider the Conference's recommendations on institutional arrangements and submit their views to the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System, and requested the Ad Hoc Committee to submit concrete recommendations on the matter in 1977.

The fourth draft text was sponsored by Australia, Denmark, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the United Kingdom. By this text, the Assembly would have deferred to its 1977 session any decision on the type of intergovernmental body to be established until the guidelines from the Ad Hoc Committee on Restructuring were in hand. In the interim, the Economic and Social Council would have been given responsibility for monitoring human settlements activities and a Centre for Human Settlements would have been established at United Nations Headquarters by consolidating the programmes and resources of existing Secretariat units. Further, it would have asked the Secretary-General to establish an interagency co-ordination sub-committee on human settlements under the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and would have decided that in 1977 it would consolidate under a single administrative structure all relevant activities. Finally, the Assembly would have called for regional co-operation and would have requested the Ad Hoc Committee on Restructuring to convey to the mid-1977 session of the Economic and Social Council any conclusions it had reached on the matter.

Resolution 31/113, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/415, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1976, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, in its recommendations A.4, B.3, B.12, C.4, C.14, C.15 and E.4, called for specific measures to be taken to meet the need for a decent living environment for the most vulnerable groups of society,

Considering that human settlement policies are inseparable from the goals of the social and economic sectors, and that consequently solutions to the problems of such settlements must be conceived as an integral part of the development process of individual nations and the world community,

1. Requests Member States and the Secretary-General, when planning the implementation of the aforementioned recommendations adopted at Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, to bear in mind the measures that protect the decent living environment of the most vulnerable social groups, such as children, youth, the elderly and the handicapped, so that they may live in an environment which is equally accessible to all individuals;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the measures taken and the results obtained.

Resolution 31/114, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/415, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1976, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the results of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, Aware of the importance and global nature of the phenomenon of urbanization,

Noting that uncontrolled urbanization is one of the causes of the deterioration in living conditions in human settlements,

Stressing the need for harmonization of intergovernmental action and intercommunal action with regard to human settlements,

Recognizing the role that the competent non-governmental organizations can play in solving the problems facing local communities,

Noting that non-governmental organizations such as the United Towns Organization and the International Union of Local Authorities, which are in consultative status, in category I, with the Economic and Social Council, have offered their collaboration with the United Nations in the field of human settlements,

Recalling its resolution 2861(XXVI) of 20 December 1971 concerning world-wide intercommunal co-operation, which stressed the role played in that sphere by the United Towns Organization,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1738(LIV) of 4 May 1973 on international co-operation between municipalities,

1. Invites the Secretary-General to ensure that the international bodies responsible for implementing the relevant recommendations of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements:

(a) Study the specific possibilities and effective conditions for collaboration between the United Nations and the non-governmental organizations concerned;

(b) Draw up with those organizations programmes of collaboration;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-fifth session on the evolution of those programmes.

Noting resolution 5 of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements on post-Conference use of audio-visual material, Expressing its appreciation for the support and assistance in preparing the audio-visual material for the Conference provided by national and international organizations, particularly the United Nations Environment Programme,

Convinced that the audio-visual and related material prepared for the Conference constitutes an information resource of continuing value for the effective implementation of recommendations for national action, programmes for international co-operation and the realization of goals in the field of human settlements established by the Conference,

Recognizing that prompt and effective utilization of the information resource created for the Conference is essential if maximum benefit is to be derived from the considerable investment in that resource, particularly its audio-visual component,

Bearing in mind the possibility of evolving regional audio-visual centres associated with regional arrangements for training, education, research and information exchange,

Expressing its appreciation also for the undertaking by Canadian authorities regarding the post-Conference use and dissemination of the audio-visual material prepared for the Conference,

1. Decides to establish a United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements;

2. Invites all participants in Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements to transfer, as appropriate, to the Secretary-General or his designated agents the intergovernmental and international copyright of their audio-visual material prepared for and made available to the Conference, including material prepared with the assistance of the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Invites Governments of Member States, as an important part of a programme for augmenting the audio-visual material on human settlements, to make available to the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements new or enriched audio-visual presentations prepared for their programmes of national action;

4. Authorizes the Secretary-General to conclude an agreement with the appropriate Canadian authorities for the latter to provide the facilities and financial support to the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements to carry out the Centre's responsibilities for the custody, reproduction and international distribution, for the period up to March 1980, of the audio-visual material prepared for the Conference, to ensure the widest possible use of the material by Governments and interested bodies, and calls for a review of the agreement in 1979.

Resolution 31/116, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/415, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1976, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, in particular the annex to Conference resolution 1 on programmes for international co-operation,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2040(LXI) of 5 August 1976,

Recognizing that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System is considering proposals that would have implications for institutional arrangements for international co-operation in the field of human settlements,

Considering that the most appropriate and effective action for dealing with human settlements problems is action at the national level, but that action is also required at the regional and global levels with a view to improving the quality of life for all peoples, particularly in the developing countries,

Recognizing also that the momentum of the Conference must be maintained through further action and decisions within the United Nations system,

Considering also that co-operation in the field of human settlements is one of the important means of fostering the goals of over-all social and economic development,

Taking into account that further consideration is required with respect to definitive institutional arrangements for human settlements activities within the United Nations system,

I

Recommendations for international co-operation

1. Takes into account the paragraphs agreed to by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, as contained in the preamble and in sections I to IX of the annex to Conference resolution 1, with due respect to the footnote to section X of that annex;

2. Decides to defer until its thirty-second session the decision on the type of definitive intergovernmental body for human settlements and on the organizational link and location of the human settlements secretariat, when the guidelines from the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System will be in hand, the financial implications of alternative institutional arrangements will be worked out and studied in greater depth, and the regional consultations will have been completed;

II

Intergovernmental body for human settlements

1. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System to make available to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session any conclusions it has reached in the light of its over-all responsibilities which might have implications for institutional arrangements for human settlements;

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to devote the necessary time at the outset of its sixty-third session to the examination of the developments in human settlements and the follow-up to Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements;

3. Recommends that those meetings of the Economic and Social Council should be at the expert or highest appropriate level and with the active participation of all interested delegations and that the Council at its organizational session for 1977 should arrange the necessary modalities to this end;

4. Requests the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session, as part of its agenda, to consider the report of the Secretary-General referred to in section III, paragraph 1, below, together with the views of the Ad Hoc Committee and of the regional commissions, with a view to taking action on the recommendations of the Conference regarding institutional arrangements, bearing in mind the terms of reference contained in paragraphs 29 to 31 of the annex to Conference resolution 1;

5. Further requests the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session concrete recommendations on definitive institutional arrangements for human settlements within the United Nations;

6. Decides to take action on those recommendations, at the latest at its thirty-second session, taking into account the conclusions of the Ad Hoc Committee;

III

Secretariat arrangements

1. Requests the Secretary-General, as an interim arrangement, to ensure, through the appropriate machinery of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, the co-ordination of the work of all the United Nations bodies concerned with respect to their activities in the human settlements field and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session on the progress made;

2. Requests that, since definitive arrangements for human settlements are yet to be decided upon, the Secretary-General should take appropriate measures to ensure effective preparations for the discussions on human settlements questions at the sixty-third session of the Economic and Social Council, bearing in mind the contributions made by the relevant components of the United Nations system as represented in the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination;

3. Requests all the United Nations bodies concerned, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, to ensure that the recommendations of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements are taken into account in their respective programmes related to human settlements and within their respective terms of reference, and to make their consultative services and resources available, as appropriate, for the implementation of national programmes of action and in strengthening regional co-operation in the field of human settlements;

IV

Regional commissions

Requests, in this regard, the United Nations bodies concerned, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme and the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning, to give all possible support to the regional commissions in the strengthening of regional co-operation in the field of human settlements and further requests the regional commissions to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session on the results of regional co-operation in human settlements, including the progress made in the establishment of governmental regional committees on human settlements.

The United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

At its 1976 session, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) considered a progress report of the UNEP Executive Director on the programme of operations of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. The Governing Council approved

general procedures to govern the operations of the Foundation and decided to defer until 1977 a decision on setting a target for voluntary contributions.

The procedures approved concerned: the objectives of the Foundation (to assist in strengthening national environmental programmes relating to human settlements, particularly in developing countries); the organs (a Governing Council, Executive Director, Administrator and Advisory Board); the resources (an allocation of $4 million over a four-year period from the Environment Fund, voluntary contributions to be pledged by Governments, United Nations and other international bodies and private sources, and participation in the United Nations Development Programme as an executing agency); programme activities; projects (operational or of a research, technical assistance, training or demonstrational character, trust funds, reports and co-operation with other bodies).

Later in the year, when the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee considered the report of UNEP, the Philippines submitted a draft resolution concerning the Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. By this text, the Assembly would have affirmed the significant role of the Foundation in promoting the implementation of the objectives and recommendations of the 1976 Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements. It would have invited the Foundation to promote regional co-operation for the improvement of human settlements, invited non-governmental organizations and financial and other institutions to collaborate with the Foundation in order to facilitate the expansion of its activities, and urged Governments, especially those of developed countries, to support the Foundation on a voluntary basis.

Following discussion, the Second Committee decided, on the proposal of the Philippines, to recommend to the Assembly that it transmit to the Economic and Social Council, for consideration at its mid-1977 session, the Philippine draft resolution. The Philippines accepted an oral proposal by the United Kingdom, included in the decision, to transmit the relevant parts of the Second Committee's report along with the draft resolution.

The Second Committee's decision was taken on 7 December 1976. The Assembly adopted the text as its decision 31/411 A on 16 December.

Legislative decisions

At its June/July 1976 session, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) considered the United Nations Capital Development Fund's annual report for 1975 and the assessment by the Administrator of UNDP that the Fund could handle a substantially increased volume of activities.

By a decision on this subject, the Governing Council took note of the report, expressed satisfaction with the Fund's increasing orientation towards smaller-scale capital funding projects at the village level and asked for comprehensive information on both the implementation and the achievements of Fund projects in future annual reports.

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council took note of the reports of the UNDP Governing Council on its 1976 sessions. This action was set forth in decision 166(LXI), approved, without vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text on 30 July, without vote, on a proposal of its Chairman.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly, without adopting a resolution, decided to preserve the original function of the United Nations Capital Development Fund until 31 December 1977, as set forth in an Assembly resolution of 15 December 1967.<sup>1</sup> This action was set forth in decision 31/420, approved, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text on 6 December 1976, also without vote, on a proposal by its Chairman.

The role of the World Bank Group in international economic and social policy

Consideration by Economic and Social Council

The role of the World Bank Group (the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Development Association (IDA) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC)) in international economic and social policy was a topic discussed at the mid-1976 session of the Economic and Social Council.

Addressing the Council on this subject on 2 July 1976, the representative of the World Bank recalled the deterioration of the world economic situation and the resulting squeeze on the resources of the developing countries, particularly the poorest among them, which had led to a reduction of imports and investment and, consequently, to lower economic growth.

To help alleviate the resource squeeze, he stated, the Bank had greatly increased its lending, particularly to countries with per capita incomes of $200 or less per annum. In the fiscal year ended 30 June 1976, total lending by the Bank and IDA had reached $6,600 million, an increase of 13 per cent over the previous year. The increase for the 29 least developed member countries was 32 per cent. Of these, 18 were in Africa, the poorest being the four land-locked countries of the Sahel (Chad, Mali, the Niger and the Upper Volta) for which lending increased by nearly 40 per cent. Lending under the Third Window facility, under which the Bank lends on concessional terms half-way between those of the Bank and IDA, amounted to $450 million during the 1976 fiscal year, of which nearly $300 million had been committed to the poorest member countries. Ninety-three per cent of lending to the least developed countries, the representative observed, had been on concessional terms.

To mobilize further resources, the Bank increased its efforts to arrange co-financing of priority development projects. In the 1976 fiscal year, the Bank's co-financing arrangements amounted to about $2,000 million for 63 projects, of which about $735 million was committed to 34 projects in Africa. About two thirds of the co-financing came from the traditional aid-giving countries and a significant part came from Arab oil-producing countries.

The World Bank placed continued emphasis, the representative pointed out, on rural development, promotion of local industry and traditional enterprises, urban problems and expansion of technical assistance. About one third of all Bank projects in the 1976 fiscal year directly promoted agriculture and rural development.

In addition, the Bank attached importance to the promotion of regional development and economic co-operation among developing countries and had taken the lead in mobilizing funds on an international basis to finance the first six-year phase of the onchocerciasis (river blindness) control programme which it had launched in seven western African countries, together with the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The representative also referred to the fifth replenishment of IDA; the World Bank was grateful, he said, for the strong support for IDA expressed in the General Assembly and other United Nations organs. A substantial increase in IDA's funds was being negotiated, he noted, for the 1977-1979 period, when the needs of the poorest countries for concessional development finance would be greater than ever.

Reference was also made to the replenishment of IDA in a position paper by the States members of the Economic and Social Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, submitted to the Council in connexion with the general discussion of international economic and social policy. The paper called on the developed countries to replenish IDA at the level of at least $3,000 million annually for the next three years, without prejudice to bilateral development assistance flows.

The paper expressed concern at the lack of progress even on the most urgent and pressing problems of the developing countries and stated that for many developing countries real per capita income was declining. It called upon developed countries to work for the establishment of an equitable and just international economic system through the adoption of concrete and adequate solutions to the problems confronting the developing countries. Such solutions included, inter alia: acceptance of the integrated programme for commodities; acceptance of the principles of indexation; elimination of tariff and non-tariff barriers against the export of primary products; reform of the international monetary system to make it fully responsive to the objectives of development; acceptance of cancellation, moratorium and consolidation of external debt and other measures of debt relief; and achievement at the latest by 1980 of the target for the annual transfer of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product of developed countries as official development assistance to the developing countries.

On 9 July 1976, the Economic and Social Council decided to annex the position paper of the Group of 77 to its annual report to the General Assembly. This action was taken by decision 158(LXI), which the Council approved, without a vote, on an oral proposal by Pakistan on behalf of the States members of the Council belonging to the Group of 77.

Recapitalization of the World Bank and replenishment of IDA

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly expressed concern at the slow progress in the negotiations for the fifth replenishment of IDA and urged all traditional donors and others to support it. The Assembly emphasized the critical need for concessionary funds for financing development in the developing countries and considered it essential that negotiations for the fifth replenishment be completed early in 1977. In addition, the Assembly urged donors to ensure that IDA's commitment authority was not disrupted at the end of the current replenishment period, namely 30 June 1977.

Concerning the recapitalization of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Assembly called upon all members of the World Bank to support urgently a substantial increase in its capital to ensure adequate levels of lending. It expressed concern over the impact of the hardening of the Bank's lending terms and urged a review of those terms.

These actions were set forth in resolution 31/181, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. A text introduced by Pakistan on behalf of the Group of 77 developing Member States was withdrawn when a text proposed by the Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee, on the basis of consultations, was approved without vote on 9 December 1976.

The representative of the United States noted that the negotiations on an increase in the Bank's capital had been successfully completed. The United States, he observed, appreciated the importance of the World Bank in promoting development and was in favour of providing for an increase in resources for both the World Bank and IDA.

Japan stated that it construed the reference to a substantial increase in the Bank's capital to refer to the proposed selective increases in subscription to capital to be allotted to 125 member countries. The Federal Republic of Germany added that a general increase in capital should be given favourable consideration by the competent bodies of the World Bank. France pointed out that an increase in capital involved three stages: a selective increase in capital, the fifth replenishment of IDA and a possible general increase in the capital of the Bank. Kuwait recalled that it was the only developing country among the traditional donors to IDA. China called on the Bank and IDA to implement the Assembly resolution relating to the expulsion of the representatives of Chiang Kai-shek from organizations of the United Nations system<sup>2</sup> and stated that if a vote had been taken on the text, it would not have participated.

Chapter XI

Questions concerning transnational corporations

In 1976, the Commission on Transnational Corporations adopted its programme of work, which was subsequently approved by the Economic and Social Council. The work programme gave highest priority to the formulation of a code of conduct on transnational corporations and set out the immediate tasks to this end. Other items in the programme included research, information and technical assistance.

Also during the year, the Economic and Social Council established an Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on corrupt practices, and the Commission's Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting commenced its work.

Details of these activities are given in the sections below.

Second session of Commission on Transnational Corporations

The second session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations was held at Lima, Peru, from 1 to 12 March 1976. The Commission noted with satisfaction the establishment of the Centre on Transnational Corporations and the agreement between the Centre and the Economic Commission for Latin America to establish a joint unit. Steps were also taken to establish similar joint units with the other regional commissions.

The main task of the Commission at its second session was the formulation of a detailed programme of work on the full range of issues relating to transnational corporations. Objectives of the programme were: to further understanding of the nature and the political, legal, economic and social effects of the activities of transnational corporations in home and host countries and in international relations, particularly between developed and developing countries; to secure international arrangements for the operation of transnational corporations designed to promote their contribution to national development and world economic growth while controlling and eliminating their negative effects; and to strengthen the negotiating capacity of host countries, in particular the developing countries, in their dealings with transnational corporations.

The Commission decided to focus the programme of work on five areas: formulation of a code of conduct; establishment of a comprehensive information system; research on the political, economic and social effects of the operations and practices of transnational corporations; organization and co-ordination of technical co-operation programmes concerning transnational corporations; and a definition of transnational corporations.

Much of the discussion during the second session of the Commission centred on the formulation of a code of conduct. The interrelationship of this task with research, information activities and the question of a definition of transnational corporations was stressed.

The Commission decided to establish a working group of the whole, the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct, to formulate the code. All States were asked to submit their views on such a code, on the basis of which the Centre on Transnational Corporations was to prepare a document containing the views of Governments. In addition, the Centre was to prepare a paper outlining the views of non-governmental organizations and was requested to collect and analyse other material relevant to the formulation of the code of conduct, taking into account related work by United Nations bodies and intergovernmental organizations. On the basis of this information, the Working Group was to submit an annotated outline of the code to the Commission at its third session. It was hoped to complete a draft code of conduct at the Commission's fourth session in 1978.

As to the establishment of a comprehensive information system, the Commission requested that the Centre on Transnational Corporations continuously bring up to date surveys of relevant information—including national, regional and international regulations—and periodically issue a directory of types and sources of information. The Centre was also asked to consider preparing profiles of individual transnational corporations and collecting data on contracts and agreements between transnational corporations and government agencies and local enterprises. This mandate included the preparation of a feasibility study on the availability of information in order to determine what obstacles to this task might be presented by such constraints as national legislation and regulations and the requirements of business confidentiality.

The Commission further noted that the Centre should concentrate its efforts on the development of a classification system of information relevant to Governments, and on the collection of publicly available information at the aggregate and enterprise levels, by country, in a number of areas where information gaps were most evident. In order to make the information system as comprehensive as possible, the Commission also requested the Economic and Social Council to appeal to all States to co-operate with the Centre in collecting information.

At its second session, the Commission also decided that the Centre should carry out and promote studies on a number of specific subjects. Such studies were to include, inter alia, the impact of the activities of transnational corporations on the balance of payments of developing and other countries, the implications of investment by transnational corporations for employment in home and host countries and the effect of investment and production by transnational corporations on domestic enterprises. The Centre was also asked to initiate studies on obstacles to strengthening the negotiating capacity of Governments in their relations with transnational corporations as well as measures adopted to strengthen this negotiating capacity and to strengthen the competitive position of national enterprises vis-à-vis transnational corporations.

In addition, sectoral studies were proposed regarding the service sector—including banking, insurance, shipping and tourism, food and beverages, and pharmaceutical industries. The Commission requested the Centre to prepare a study on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and an integrated study on the political, legal, economic and social effects of transnational corporations as well as a review of research on their activities.

As for the programme of technical co-operation, the Centre, at the request of Governments, was to organize and co-ordinate training programmes and advisory services to strengthen the negotiating capacity of developing countries in their dealings with transnational corporations.

Regarding the definition of transnational corporations, the Commission asked the Centre to collect available definitions so that the Commission could, at the appropriate time, define more accurately the areas affected by the programme of work; in the meantime, the Centre was to identify common characteristics of transnational corporations without prejudice to the definition that might eventually be proposed.

The Commission also decided to appoint a group of experts to assist it in its programme of work. The group was to include persons with practical experience, particularly from trade unions, business, public interest groups and universities, from both the developed and developing countries.

Measures against corrupt practices

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975,<sup>1</sup> the Secretary-General prepared a report on measures against corrupt practices of transnational and other corporations, their intermediaries and others involved. The report was based on replies received from Governments to a note verbale by the Secretary-General requesting information on this subject. As at 21 July 1976, the following 28 Governments had responded: Argentina, Australia, Barbados, Belgium, Colombia, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Fiji, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Iran, Ireland, Japan, Jordan, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Senegal, Singapore, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The report surveyed the range of possible measures to combat corrupt practices at the private, national and international levels. It also contained an analysis of the investigations made by Governments and the main proposals suggested for dealing with the problems of corrupt practices.

Decisions of deliberative bodies

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 180(LXI), took note of the report on the second session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations and approved the programme of work on the full range of issues related to transnational corporations. The Council also requested Governments to submit to the Secretary-General their views or proposals on a code of conduct for transnational corporations by 30 November 1976.

Decision 180(LXI) was approved, without vote, on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 2 August 1976, on a proposal by Denmark, as orally amended by the USSR.

Also on 5 August, the Economic and Social Council considered the issue of corrupt practices, particularly illicit payments, in international commercial transactions. By resolution 2041(LXI), the Council decided to establish an Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on corrupt practices to conduct an examination of the problem of corrupt practices, in particular bribery, to elaborate in detail the scope and contents of an international agreement to prevent and eliminate illicit payments, in whatever form, in connexion with international commercial transactions. The Council further decided that the Ad Hoc Working Group was to be composed of 18 members selected on the basis of equitable geographical distribution and that the Group was to meet in 1976, and as necessary in 1977, to permit the completion of its task.

The Council requested United Nations agencies and bodies, especially the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and the Centre on Transnational Corporations to render such assistance as the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group might request. The Council reaffirmed that the formulation of a code of conduct by the Commission on Transnational Corporations should be given the highest priority and that action of the Council in the field of corrupt practices was in no way to interfere with or delay that priority. In addition, the Council decided that the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group, to be submitted to the Council in 1977, should be in a form enabling the Council to transmit concrete recommendations to the General Assembly for final action.

Resolution 2041(LXI) was adopted, without vote, as recommended by the Council's Economic Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 4 August 1976, on a proposal by its Chairman.

In its discussion of this item, the Economic Committee also had before it a draft resolution submitted by the United States, by which the Council would have established a high-level Ad Hoc Working Group. The draft resolution was withdrawn in favour of the one adopted.

By decision 181(LXI) of 5 August 1976, the Council took note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on measures against corrupt practices of transnational and other corporations, their intermediaries and others involved.

The Council approved this decision, without a vote, as recommended by the Economic Committee. On 4 August, the Economic Committee had approved the text, without vote, on a proposal of its Chairman. The text was orally amended by Greece and Mexico.

The General Assembly also took up the issue of measures to be taken against corrupt practices. On 21 December 1976, by decision 31/422 B, it took note of the report of the Secretary-General on this matter. The Assembly approved the decision, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 8 December, as proposed by its Chairman.

Other matters

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on corrupt practices, established by the Council, held its first session from 15 to 19 November 1976, at which it requested the Centre on Transnational Corporations to prepare for consideration at its next session a report examining the issues related to the formulation of an international agreement to prevent and eliminate illicit payments.

The Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting met from 30 August to 10 September 1976 at Geneva, Switzerland, to consider the development of international standards of accounting and reporting. It reviewed existing practices of reporting by transnational corporations and the reporting requirements in different countries, with a view to drawing up a list of minimum items to be included in reports by transnational corporations and their affiliates.

In connexion with the second session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, communications were addressed to the Secretary-General from the USSR (4 March), the German Democratic Republic (8 March), Bulgaria (18 March) and the Ukrainian SSR (24 March) concerning the representation of the Federal Republic of Germany at that session. These communications protested that the appointment to the Federal Republic's delegation of the head of the Federal Office for the Supervision of Cartels and Trusts of the Federal Republic of Germany—an office which, they charged, was illegally headquartered in Berlin (West)—was an action designed to abuse the authority of the United Nations with a view to legalizing State agencies of the Federal Republic of Germany illegally situated in the western sectors of Berlin. Berlin (West) was not a constituent part of the Federal Republic of Germany and could not be governed by it.

By a joint letter of 23 March 1976 to the Secretary-General, France, the United Kingdom and the United States reaffirmed the position they had set out on this question on 26 June 1975, when a similar protest had been made against the representation of the Federal Republic of Germany at the first session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations.<sup>2</sup> At that time they had stated that the location of the Office in the western sectors of Berlin had been approved by them and they were satisfied it did not perform there acts in exercise of direct State authority over the western sectors.

In a letter of 24 March 1976, the Federal Republic of Germany stated that it shared the position set out in the three-power letter.

On 8 April 1976, the USSR, referring to the three-power letter in a letter to the Secretary-General, reaffirmed its position, adding that the rights and responsibilities of the three powers deriving from the quadripartite agreements and decisions reached during the Second World War and post-war period did not bestow on them any authority to sanction illegal acts by the Federal Republic of Germany aimed at undermining the position of the western sectors of Berlin as a separate entity which did not form part of the Federal Republic of Germany and was not governed by it. The USSR again reaffirmed its position by a letter of 29 July as did the German Democratic Republic by a letter of 15 September.

Injoint letters dated 4 May and 23 July France, the United Kingdom and the United States reaffirmed their position on the matter. Similarly, the Federal Republic of Germany, by a letter of 27 July, stated that it shared the position of the three powers, adding that the appointment of the Chairman of its delegation was, as a matter of principle, for it alone to make.

Chapter XII

Questions relating to food problems*The World Food Council

The World Food Council, which was established in 1974, held its second session at Rome, Italy, from 14 to 17 June 1976, preceded by a preparatory meeting from 10 to 15 May 1976, also held in Rome. The Council reported an improvement in the food situation of many developing countries, but noted that long-term food production trends in developing countries were inadequate in view of rising requirements. Due to the high level of grain exports in 1975, grain stocks could not be significantly replenished during the year. The Council expressed concern at the global food situation, in particular that of the countries most seriously affected by the world economic crisis and of newly independent countries.

The Council also considered measures to increase food production in the developing countries, food aid, food security, agricultural inputs and food trade. The work programme of the Council was to focus, as in previous years, on increasing food production and improving distribution and consumption of food, particularly for the poorest countries. In addition, the world food situation and outlook was to be kept under review, including monitoring post-harvest losses and seeds. Nutrition, food trade, and an assessment of the feasibility and implications of abolishing hunger and malnutrition within a decade were added to the Council's programme of work.

The Council noted that the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of an International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) took place in Rome from 10 to 13 June 1976, attended by some 90 countries. An agreement establishing IFAD was adopted. This was opened for signature and ratification at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 20 December 1976, after pledges to IFAD had reached the equivalent of $1,000 million.

The Conference also established an 18-member Preparatory Commission for the International Fund for Agricultural Development to set up IFAD's secretariat and to prepare drafts for relationship agreements between IFAD and United Nations agencies. (For details see section on IFAD, below.)

on increasing food production in developing countries. Based on criteria established at the Council's preparatory meeting, the Council agreed to identify certain countries as "food priority countries," but noted that more work needed to be done on these criteria. The Council recommended asking international agencies to co-operate with the food priority countries to determine specific measures and programmes to accelerate their food production.

In addition, the Council considered the quality, terms and direction of external assistance to agriculture in developing countries. It emphasized the need for further assistance, in particular concessional assistance, and the need to direct external resources to countries with major food-production problems. In order to overcome policy and other constraints on food production in developing countries, the Council advised intensive evaluations of these constraints, leading to the formulation of programmes to achieve specific production objectives, including proposals for the provision of additional resources to achieve these objectives.

The Council also considered food aid and noted that the volume of cereals aid was rising and had reached over 9 million tons a year, but was still short of the minimum target of 10 million tons set by the World Food Conference. The need for an improved policy framework for food aid was stressed, as was the importance of gearing food aid policies and programmes more closely to nutrition, employment and development objectives of recipient countries.

Discussions at the Council's 1976 session also focused on world food security. The Council noted that only limited progress had been made and considered proposed solutions, which included monitoring negotiations in different fora on food security and provision of political impetus to these negotiations.

Finally, the Council recognized the importance of nutrition and the world food trade to the solution of the food problem and agreed to include these issues in its future programme of work. It decided to adopt as one of its major objectives the development of a practical and realistic framework to achieve the goals of the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition of the 1974 World Food Conference.<sup>1</sup>

Draft resolutions on the question of agricultural inputs and food trade submitted by the Council members belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries were referred to the Economic and Social Council. Another draft resolution referred to the Council recommended that that body approve the recommendations of the African Inter-Ministerial Committee for Food, contained in its report, and take steps to implement them.

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council took note of and transmitted the report of the World Food Council to the General Assembly, requesting all Governments and United Nations bodies and agencies to take into account and to implement the agreed recommendations adopted by the World Food Council at its June session. The Economic and Social Council also invited the Secretary-General and the President of the World Food Council to report to the Economic and Social Council at its mid-1977 session on the progress achieved in dealing with food problems.

These actions were embodied in resolution 2037(LXI), which the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote. The Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee had approved the draft text without vote on 30 July 1976, as introduced by Egypt on behalf of the States members of the Council belonging to the Group of 77. An oral drafting amendment by the United Kingdom was accepted by the sponsors.

The Committee also had before it the text of a decision by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) agreeing with proposals for decentralization at the country level and increased investment in food production.

Also on 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2038(LXI) on co-operation between the African Inter-Ministerial Committee for Food and relevant United Nations organizations and specialized agencies. For its discussion of this item, the Council had before it a letter dated 20 May 1976 from Lesotho, containing the text of a draft resolution on the subject adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the report of the first (January 1976) session of the African Inter-Ministerial Committee for Food.

By resolution 2038(LXI), the Council took note of the draft resolution submitted to the (World Food Council on the report of the African Inter-Ministerial Committee for Food and requested all appropriate United Nations organizations and agencies to intensify their co-operation with this Committee. The Economic and Social Council also requested all relevant organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations working in Africa to service, in co-operation with OAU and the Economic Commission for Africa, the meetings of the African Inter-Ministerial Committee for Food and its expert committees, and to take all necessary action to assist them in the performance of their tasks. In addition, the Council invited the Secretary-General to submit a progress report to it in 1977 on the implementation of this resolution and to draw the attention of the World Food Council at its 1977 session to this matter.

The Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2038(LXI), without a vote, as recommended by the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee. Egypt, on behalf of States members of the Council belonging to the Group of 77, had introduced the draft text in the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which approved it without vote on 2 August 1976.

By decision 142(ORG-76), approved on 15 January 1976 on the proposal of the Council President, the Economic and Social Council decided to transmit a report entitled "Issues relating to world food trade," prepared by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), to the World Food Council at its 1976 session, on the understanding that the report would be available when the Economic and Social Council considered the report of the World Food Council later in the year.

By a later decision—173(LXI) of 5 August 1976—the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of UNCTAD on issues relating to world food trade. Decision 173(LXI) was approved on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text on 30 July, on the proposal of its Chairman.

(See also p. 640.)

By one of the operative paragraphs of resolution 2009(LXI) of 9 July 1976, the Economic and Social Council affirmed the need to increase substantially the level of food production in developing countries, particularly those in Africa, and to extend adequate assistance to them for this purpose. (See p. 332 for text of resolution 2009(LXI).)

The General Assembly also considered the report of the World Food Council. For its discussion of this item, the Assembly had before it a letter dated 1 September 1976 from Sri Lanka, transmitting documents of the Fifth (August 1976) Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo.

By a resolution adopted on 16 December 1976, the Assembly called upon all Governments and relevant United Nations bodies and agencies to implement fully the recommendations of the World Food Council and requested that Council, at its 1977 session, to take immediate and concrete steps to promote the early implementation of the recommendations adopted by the 1974 World Food Conference and by the General Assembly at its 1975 special session.

These actions were set forth in resolution 31/121, which the Assembly, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted, without vote. Pakistan, on behalf of States Members belonging to the Group of 77, had introduced the draft resolution in the Second Committee, which approved the text, without a vote, on 9 December 1976, after oral drafting amendments by Pakistan had been accepted by the other sponsors.

Also on 16 December 1976, with the adoption of resolution 31/120, the Assembly decided that the secretariat of the World Food Council was to be headed by an Executive Director, appointed by the Secretary-General in consultation with the members of the World Food Council and FAO, for four years, with due regard to the principle of geographical rotation. The Assembly further decided that the Secretary-General was to appoint adequate staff to the secretariat of the Council.

Resolution 31/120 was adopted without a vote. The Second Committee had approved the draft text, also without a vote, on 1 December 1976, as recommended by the World Food Council. Amendments were proposed by the Philippines, which changed the title of the executive head of the World Food Council to Executive Director in order to assure uniformity with other United Nations agencies and which would delete the need for approval of his appointment by the General Assembly. The amendments by the Philippines were accepted without a vote.

2. Further decides that the Secretary-General shall, in consultation with the Executive Director of the World Food

Council, appoint an adequate number of staff to the secretariat of the Council, taking into account the need for equitable geographical distribution, in addition to professional competence, and avoiding the appointment of persons who simultaneously perform functions in other agencies or institutions.

International Fund for Agricultural Development

At its April/May 1976 session, the Economic and Social Council considered arrangements for the negotiation with the Preparatory Commission for the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) of an agreement with the Fund to constitute it as a specialized agency in accordance with Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>2</sup> With the adoption of resolution 2006(LX) on 13 May, the Council decided that, for the purposes of negotiation with the Preparatory Commission for IFAD, its Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies was to be composed of the representatives of the States members of the Council that had notified the Secretary-General by 21 June 1976 of their intention to become members of the Committee.

The Council invited the Preparatory Commission to prepare and submit to the Committee proposals for bringing IFAD into relationship with the United Nations, and requested the Committee to submit its report to the Council, including the text of a draft agreement for its approval.

Resolution 2006(LX) was adopted after an oral amendment by the Council Secretary to the Secretariat's text, to add that the Committee on Negotiations was to be composed of representatives of States members which had notified the Secretary-General by 21 June 1976. The Council, after consultations, also decided to elect Rafael Rivas (Colombia) as the Chairman of the Committee and amended the resolution to include this decision. Resolution 2006(LX) was adopted without a vote. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In June 1976, the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of an International Fund for Agricultural Development was held at Rome, Italy. The Conference established the Preparatory Commission for IFAD and outlined its programme of work. The Commission—whose members were Argentina, Canada, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guinea, Iran, Japan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Thailand, the United States and Venezuela—held its first session at Rome from 27 to 30 September 1976. The Commission adopted rules of procedure and established an interim secretariat and a working committee on lending policies and criteria for IFAD. Taking note of the Economic and Social Council's resolution 2006(LX) of 13 May 1976, the Commission also requested its secretariat to submit a draft of a relationship agreement between the United Nations and IFAD for consideration at its second session.

The Commission noted a General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975<sup>3</sup> authorizing funds for the Preparatory Commission, and agreed to accept an initial advance of $200,000, to be repaid once IFAD was operational.

The Preparatory Commission held a second session at Rome from 13 to 16 December 1976. At this session, the Commission approved guidelines for staff and financial regulations, and authorized its Chairman to commence consultations with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and other specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations in order to enter into relationship agreements. The Commission also adopted draft rules of procedure for IFAD's Governing Council and Executive Board.

In addition, the Commission considered a draft relationship agreement between the United Nations and IFAD and discussed lending policies and criteria for IFAD.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly welcomed the progress achieved in establishing IFAD and noted that, relative to their combined gross national products, the contributions pledged by the developing countries were substantial. The Assembly expressed appreciation to all Governments that had made pledges to IFAD and expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the Executive Director of the World Food Council for their efforts towards the establishment of IFAD.

The Assembly took these actions by adopting, without vote, resolution 31/122. On 15 December 1976, the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the draft text, as submitted by its Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a draft introduced by Pakistan on behalf of the States Members belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. The draft resolution was approved, without vote, after the Committee had accepted an oral amendment by Iran to delete a paragraph urging interested countries to bridge the gap in contributions required to make IFAD operational. (For text of resolution 31/122, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Also on 16 December 1976, the Assembly decided that the Secretary-General should release from the United Nations Special Fund $10 million of the Venezuelan contribution and the Norwegian contribution of $9,981,851.18 to the two donor Governments, having taken note of their declared intention to contribute these amounts to IFAD.

This action was taken by decision 31/413, which the Assembly approved by 56 votes to 12, with 64 abstentions. The decision was recommended by the Second Committee, which had approved the draft text on 15 December 1976, by 52 votes to 11, with 57 abstentions. The draft decision was sponsored by Norway and Venezuela, after a draft resolution on this matter was withdrawn.

(See also pp. 336-37.)

The Agreement Establishing the International Fund for Agricultural Development was opened for signature on 20 December 1976, as pledges of contributions had reached the required target of the equivalent of $1,000 million.

The use and development of natural (non-agricultural) resources

In 1976, preparations for the 1977 United Nations Water Conference continued. Several studies on water resources were completed, and two periodicals in the field of natural resources were initiated.

Technical assistance continued to be provided in the fields of energy, mineral and water resources. Assistance projects included national energy surveys, petroleum legislation, geothermal energy, electric power and institution building and training, ground water exploration and development, the establishment of national water-resources institutions, and planning of combined surface and ground water development and of river basins. Increased emphasis was given to the evaluation of mineral prospects by pre-feasibility studies and to the specialized training of national staff. Attention also focused on the environmental effects of mining. Problems of marine resources and environment were examined. A pre-feasibility study for coastal and area development was carried out in one region.

The availability and supply of natural resources were also discussed during the year. Studies were initiated on global copper resources, technological and economic development and the requirements for capital investment in the copper industry. In addition, a study on coal dealt with world-wide coal reserves and production and prospects for expanding its use in developing and developed countries. Other studies during the year discussed concepts and methods of measurement of reserves and resources in the field of natural resources with a view to achieving standardization. Two periodicals, Natural Resources Forum and Natural Resources and Energy Newsletter began publication in 1976. (See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES for other publications.)

An ad hoc group of experts on technical co-operation among developing countries in water resources development was convened to formulate guidelines for technical co-operation between developing countries.

The United Nations and the Foundation for International Development of the Federal Republic of Germany jointly convened an interregional seminar on development and management of resources of coastal areas, which was held in Berlin, Hamburg, Kiel and Cuxhaven from 31 May to 14 June 1976. A multidisciplinary mission was organized by the United Nations and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in co-operation with concerned United Nations organizations to carry out a pre-feasibility study for coastal area development in the Persian Gulf.

A comprehensive register of courses and training programmes in the field of marine affairs was prepared in collaboration with the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission and published by the United Nations.

Operational activities

Technical assistance for 107 large-scale and 66 small-scale projects financed under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in the field of mineral, energy and water resources was provided to the following countries or territories: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Burma, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, the Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iran, Israel, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, the Niger, Pakistan, Paraguay, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Rwanda, St. Vincent, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Turkey, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Total UNDP allocations to these projects amounted to about $22.6 million, of which $2.2 million was allocated to energy, $9.4 million to mining and $11 million to water projects.

The number of projects in the energy field amounted to 30 (15 of large scale), in mining 76 (47 of large scale) and in water 67 (45 of large scale). The services of 351 experts were provided for these projects—303 of them for the large-scale projects. In addition, 93 fellowships were granted during the year, which brought the total number of fellowships in 1976 to 200.

Technical assistance was also provided in the form of equipment for projects. A total of $4 million was expended for equipment for diesel power plants, chemical laboratories, geophysical exploration, remote sensing, mineral processing, drilling, hydrological surveying and coastal engineering research, among others. Of this amount $700,000 was for energy projects, $1.8 million for mining and $2.5 million for water.

Preparation for United Nations Water Conference

Preparatory activities for the United Nations Water Conference, to be held in March 1977, included the appointment of a Secretary-General of the Conference secretariat and the holding of regional meetings to provide inputs for consolidated action proposals to be placed before the Conference. Task forces of specialists met under the aegis of United Nations agencies to prepare specific strategy documents on water for agriculture, community water supply, and technical co-operation among developing countries.

Also in preparation for the Conference, the Committee on Natural Resources held a special session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 23 to 27 February 1976. At this session, the Committee approved several draft resolutions, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

At its April/May 1976 session, the Council adopted resolution 1982(LX), by which it recognized the importance of universal participation in the Conference and requested the Secretary-General to invite all States, representatives of organizations having a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate as observers in the work of all international conferences convened by the Assembly, national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, interested regional intergovernmental organizations, interested organs of the United Nations and concerned non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. Other organizations of an international character could also be authorized to be represented by observers. The Council requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the necessary arrangements, including the requisite financial provisions, were made for effective participation in the Conference by the organizations having standing invitations from the General Assembly and by the recognized national liberation movements.

The Council took these actions on 19 April 1976, when it adopted resolution 1982(LX), without vote, as recommended by the Committee on Natural Resources.

By another resolution on preparations for the Water Conference, the Council requested the Secretary-General to appoint a Secretary-General of the Conference and took note of his second progress report on the preparations. The Council requested both Secretaries-General to make all necessary efforts to complete preparations as soon as possible and requested the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to continue their substantive support. In addition, the Council requested the United Nations Secretary-General to make arrangements for a second special session of the Committee on Natural Resources, to be held in January 1977. The Council expressed its appreciation to UNEP for its offer to help defray the travel costs of the representatives of the developing countries that might face special difficulties in this respect and asked it to consider increasing its financing of the preparatory work for the Conference. It also appealed to Governments to intensify their national preparations.

The Council took these actions by resolution 1983(LX), adopted, without vote, on 23 April 1976 on the recommendation of the Committee on Natural Resources.

By letters of 20 September and 3 December 1976, circulated as documents of the Economic and Social Council, the USSR addressed protests to the Secretary-General concerning the translation of the name of the Federal Republic of Germany into Russian. The translation in question was contained in documents of the Water Conference.

In a report to the General Assembly on the preparations for the Water Conference, the Secretary-General of the Conference reported on action taken by him, by the Committee on Natural Resources and by the Economic and Social Council. He also noted regional preparatory progress and public information activities. In addition, budgetary questions, interagency co-operation, and co-operation with the 1977 United Nations Conference on Desertification (see pp. 435-36) were included in the report.

On 7 December 1976, the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee approved a draft resolution by which the Assembly would take note of the statement made by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Water Conference to that Committee and of his report on the preparatory work for the Conference. The draft resolution was approved without a vote, and orally sponsored by Argentina, Italy and the Sudan.

The General Assembly, on 21 December, adopted the draft text, also without vote, as resolution 31/185.

By another resolution (31/111 of 16 December 1976) the Assembly endorsed a paragraph of Council resolution 2013(LXI) of 3 August 1976 relating to the active participation of UNEP in the preparations for the United Nations Water Conference. (For texts of resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

On 21 December 1976, the Assembly also decided to include Arabic as an official language of the Water Conference. Decision 31/422 A was approved, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee. The draft decision was sponsored in that Committee by Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen. It was approved without a vote on 13 December 1976.

Strengthening information services on natural resources

The Economic and Social Council, at its mid-1976 session, considered the strengthening of United Nations information services in the natural resources field. The Council had before it a report by the Secretary-General on this subject, which outlined the work of the Committee on Natural Resources and proposed a programme for the strengthening of information services.

On 3 August 1976, the Council adopted a resolution by which, after reaffirming the principle of the permanent sovereignty of States over their natural resources, it noted the proposals submitted by the Secretary-General for the gradual strengthening of the United Nations information services in the natural resources field. The Council recommended that the information should cover trends in the demand for and the supply, consumption and reserves of natural resources, and should include economic data concerning the processing and transportation of natural resources and the structure and operations of industries in this area. The Council further recommended that the General Assembly consider providing financial resources to give effect to these proposals and urged donor countries to consider making contributions to support the proposals.

The Council took these actions by adopting resolution 2014(LXI), without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee. On 22 July 1976, the Economic Committee had approved the draft text without objection. It was sponsored by Colombia, Jamaica and Mexico.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

The General Assembly, on 21 December 1976, adopted a resolution (31/186) on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories. The Assembly, inter alia, reaffirmed the right of Arab States and peoples whose territories were under Israeli occupation to regain full and effective control over their natural and all other resources and economic activities. It also reaffirmed the rights of these States, territories and peoples to restitution and full compensation for the exploitation, loss and depletion of, and damage to, their natural and all other resources and economic activities. (For text of resolution, refer to INDEX TO RESOLUTIONS.)

Other activities

During 1976, the energy situation continued to receive attention. The Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly on the possibility of establishing an international energy institute within the framework of the United Nations system. He recommended that a working group of governmental experts be convened to consider the various aspects of the subject. (See p. 340.)

The Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution—2031(LXI)—on 4 August 1976 on research and development activities in the field of non-conventional sources of energy. (For text of resolution, refer to INDEX TO RESOLUTIONS.)

Chapter XIV

Application of science and technology to development

Many activities in science and technology received new momentum in 1976 with the decision by the General Assembly at its 1976 session to convene the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development in 1979. In addition to preparing the Conference, activities continued in such areas as: quantification of scientific and technological activities related to development; arid zones research (a United Nations Conference on Desertification was scheduled for 1977); and research and development in non-conventional sources of energy.

During the year, a proposal to establish a network for the exchange of technological information received wide support; the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General and the Interagency Task Force on Information Exchange and the Transfer of Technology to continue their work on the question, including the preparation and publication of a pilot directory of United Nations information services.

The Committee on Science and Technology for Development held its third session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 2 to 20 February 1976. On the basis of the Committee's recommendations, the Economic and Social Council adopted several resolutions with regard to science and technology. The resolutions dealt with the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development; the quantification of scientific and technological activities related to development; the world programme of development research and application of science and technology to solve the special problems of the arid areas; research and development in non-conventional sources of energy; and human rights and scientific and technological development (see pp. 606-7).

Among other matters on which the Council took action was the application of computer science and technology to development.

The Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development met at Geneva, Switzerland, from 22 November to 3 December 1976; the Committee's regional groups for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and Western Asia also held sessions at Geneva at that time, as did ad hoc working groups of the Advisory Committee and expert groups and task forces connected with United Nations activities in science and technology.

Proposal for a United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development

On the recommendation of the Intergovernmental Working Group of the Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2028(LXI) on the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development. By the preamble to this resolution, the Council, inter alia, observed that science and technology could make a substantial contribution to the process of economic and social development through concerted action at the international level. By the operative paragraphs, the Council recommended to the General Assembly that it convene the Conference on Science and Technology in 1979. It also recommended that the main objectives of the Conference should be: (a) adoption of concrete decisions on ways and means of applying science and technology in establishing a new economic order, as a strategy aimed at economic and social development within a time frame; (b) strengthening of the technological capacity of developing countries so as to enable them to apply science and technology to their own development; (c) adoption of effective means for the utilization of scientific and technological potentials in the solution of problems of development, especially for the benefit of developing countries; and (d) provision of instruments of co-operation to developing countries in the utilization of science and technology for solving socio-economic problems, in accordance with national priorities.

The Council further recommended a framework for the Conference by proposing the agenda and the measures to be taken during the preparatory period. The agenda items included: science and technology for development; institutional arrangements and new forms of international co-operation in the application of science and technology; utilization of the existing United Nations system and other international organizations; and science and technology and the future. With regard to the preparatory period, the Council recommended it be an integrated and fundamental component of the Conference itself, through preliminary national and regional analysis of relevant socio-economic problems which might be solved with the help of science and technology.

In addition, the Council requested that the Committee on Science and Technology for Development act as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, open to the participation of all States, and that a Secretary-General be appointed to head a secretariat of the Conference. The Council invited the United Nations Secretary-General to request the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to promote close contact with the Secretary-General of the Conference.

The Council further requested that, for the preparatory work leading to the Conference, the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development should advise, on request, the Secretary-General of the Conference and the Preparatory Committee and assist and collaborate in the preparations at the regional level. Additional recommendations concerned the preparatory work, the participation of the regional commissions therein and the desirability of enlisting the co-operation of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

Resolution 2028(LXI) was adopted on 4 August 1976, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee. The Economic Committee had approved the draft text without vote on 29 July, as recommended by the Committee on Science and Technology.

Also on 4 August, the Council adopted resolution 2035(LXI) concerning the preparatory period of the Conference. By this resolution, the Council requested the Secretary-General to give attention to, inter alia: national views, programmes and policies relating to the development of science and technology; different forms of bilateral and multilateral co-operation to improve current scientific and technological potentials; the function of the Secretary-General of the Conference of providing, on request, technical support for the preparation of national papers.

The Secretary-General of the Conference was asked to prepare a work programme for the various stages of the preparatory period, and the Preparatory Committee was requested to establish guidelines for the preparation of national papers and to complete the detailed work programme for that period.

The Council recommended that the programme of work include plans for seminars, travelling seminars and specialized task forces to supplement national efforts with the aim of the full mobilization and participation of national inputs.

Resolution 2035(LXI) was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee. On 30 July 1976, the Committee had approved the draft resolution without vote, subject to a statement of programme budget implications submitted by the Secretary-General. The resolution was sponsored by Egypt on behalf of the States members of the Economic and Social Council belonging to the "Group of 77". Canadian amendments were incorporated in a revised text and the sponsors accepted an oral drafting amendment by the Federal Republic of Germany.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly endorsed the Council's resolutions of 4 August and decided, inter alia, to convene the Conference during 1979, in time for the Assembly to take action at its 1979 session in the light of the results of the Conference. The Assembly decided to take the final decision on the site of the Conference at its 1977 session, and invited the specialized agencies, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), as well as the International Atomic Energy Agency, the interested organs of the United Nations and the regional commissions, to co-operate fully in the preparations for the Conference.

It requested the Secretary-General of the Conference to seek the co-operation of intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council that might be in a position to contribute constructively to the preparation of the Conference.

The Assembly also asked the Committee on Science and Technology, in preparing for the Conference, to take into account the interrelationship between the scientific/technological fields and other areas of United Nations activity, in particular the economic area, so as to promote comprehensive international co-operation.

The Assembly's actions were embodied in resolution 31/184, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The Committee had approved the text without vote on 10 December 1976, as proposed by Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Ecuador, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire. Amendments proposed by Canada and, orally, by France were incorporated in a revised text. Also accepted by the sponsors was an oral drafting amendment by the United Kingdom. A Polish amendment (adding the request that the Committee on Science and Technology take into account the interrelationship between the scientific/technological and other areas of activity) was adopted without vote.

Science and technology in the Second United Nations Development Decade

Quantification of scientific and technological activities related to development

At its session in February 1976, the Committee on Science and Technology for Development considered the question of quantitative targets for direct support by developed countries to the scientific and technological activities of the developing countries. The Committee had before it a progress report submitted by UNESCO, the agency serving as a focal point for the development of concepts, criteria, standard nomenclatures and methodologies for the purpose of quantifying scientific and technological activities.

The importance of establishing operational data collections for national science-policy machinery was emphasized in the report, as was the need to elaborate a general classification system by objective which should be compatible with the System of National Accounts recommended by the United Nations. An international survey of some 1,400 research projects in 400 institutes had thus far been carried out by UNESCO. The results of these efforts were to constitute a major contribution to the Conference on Science and Technology for Development and furnish an instrument for bringing about an agreement on the question of quantified targets for science and technology.

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed the importance of establishing feasible targets for the expansion of assistance for promoting and strengthening the scientific research and technological capacities of developing countries. It recommended that Governments continue their efforts to establish data systems for scientific and technological activities or refine existing systems. The Council requested UNESCO, in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and other competent organizations of the United Nations system, to complete its report on the question in time for the revision of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade by the General Assembly at its 1976 session.

The Council recommended that the revised International Development Strategy should include feasible targets for aid for direct support by developed countries of science and technology in developing countries during the remainder of the Development Decade and for assistance by developed countries, within their research and development programmes, in seeking solutions to specific problems of interest to developing countries which had a bearing on the expansion and modernization of their economies.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2029(LXI), adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which on 29 July 1976 had approved without vote the text of a draft resolution proposed by the Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

World programme of research for special problems of arid zones

At its 1976 session, the Committee on Science and Technology also considered a world programme of development research and application of science and technology to solve the special problems of the arid areas. The Committee had before it a report prepared by its Intergovernmental Working Group. The ad hoc Interagency Task Force on the arid areas, established in 1974 to identify obstacles to the development of arid areas and to prepare an inventory of current research and development actions and programmes on this subject, submitted its report to the Intergovernmental Working Group, listing the main obstacles and making proposals as to how they might be overcome.

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution by which, inter alia, it observed that the preparation of a world research programme on arid zones constituted a world-wide and interdisciplinary experiment, on the basis of which the Committee on Science and Technology for Development could determine and improve its practice in the context of economic and social development and of the transfer of technologies from developed to developing countries.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to take measures to ensure that the ad hoc Interagency Task Force proceeded with its work and requested the Task Force to call on the knowledge of experts from all countries with experience of the problems raised by the obstacles to the development of the arid areas. It also requested the Task Force to take into account the information and recommendations resulting from the 1976 United Nations Conference on Desertification and to report to the Committee on Science and Technology for Development at its 1978 session.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2030(LXI), adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which on 29 July 1976 had approved without vote the text of a draft resolution proposed by the Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

Research and development in non-conventional sources of energy

The Committee on Science and Technology for Development also considered the subject of research in non-polluting and non-conventional sources of energy. The Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development had submitted reports on this subject which had included suggestions for the Committee's future programme of work.

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council commended the Advisory Committee for its comments regarding non-conventional sources of energy (solar, wind and biological) and requested the Committee on Science and Technology to keep the topic on its agenda, with a view to submitting action proposals which would benefit developing countries.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the Committee on Science and Technology, at its 1978 session, surveys of ongoing research and development activities in this field, with a view to identifying gaps in the activities within and outside the United Nations system. In addition, the Council recommended that the Advisory Committee establish a working group of experts to assist the Secretary-General in preparing the surveys.

It called upon Member States and organizations of the United Nations system, in formulating their research and development programmes in solar, wind and biological energy, to take into account particularly the needs of developing countries and especially the development of appropriate sources of energy for rural and remote areas, villages and small towns. The Council also requested that seminars and exhibitions be arranged and fellowships provided for the benefit of scientists and engineers from developing countries.

The Council took these actions in adopting resolution 2031(LXI), without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which on 29 July 1976 had approved without vote the text of a draft resolution proposed by the Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

Transfer of technology

STRENGTHENING THE TECHNOLOGICAL CAPACITY OF DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council welcomed a decision of the fourth (May 1976) session of UNCTAD which affirmed, inter alia, that national technological capacity was a cornerstone of economic development, and asked the Secretary-General of UNCTAD and the executive heads of other United Nations bodies to give immediate operational and technical assistance to developing countries towards the establishment or strengthening of centres for the development and transfer of technology.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2034(LXI), adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which on 30 July 1976, also without vote, had approved the text of a draft resolution introduced by Egypt on behalf of the States members of the Economic and Social Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. The text was orally amended by the USSR.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NETWORK FOR EXCHANGE OF TECHNOLOGICAL INFORMATION

In a report to the Economic and Social Council on the establishment of a network for the exchange of technological information, the Secretary-General reported on the conclusions of the Interagency Task Force on Information Exchange and the Transfer of Technology, which the Assembly had asked him to establish. The Task Force, meeting in February and May 1976, had prepared a summary of the activities of organizations of the United Nations system and principles to be taken into account in the establishment of such a network. Preliminary recommendations were made, which included the publication of a pilot directory of United Nations information services and actions necessary in preparing a plan of action for the establishment of the network.

The Secretary-General said the assessment made by the Task Force had led to the conclusion that the establishment of such a network offered a practical approach for harnessing the existing capacities of the organizations of the United Nations system. Among other things, the Secretary-General emphasized the importance of effective arrangements at the local level and the use of mass media to enhance public awareness of technological developments and their potentialities. In addition, the Secretary-General urged Governments to consider the identification of national focal points for policy guidance in this field.

The Committee on Science and Technology for Development, at its 1976 session, had before it the report of the Secretary-General. The Committee noted that the results of the work undertaken on the subject indicated that the approach envisaged should lead to a network of interrelating systems and services rather than the creation of a single new system. Maximum use should be made of existing centres inside and outside of the United Nations system and emphasis was placed on the development of national infrastructures and indigenous capacity. Also, any future initiatives in the area of information should give priority to the needs of developing countries.

The Committee suggested that it assume responsibility for the implementation of these recommendations, assisted by the existing interagency machinery and the Interagency Task Force. The Committee stressed the need for better harmonization of the relevant information activities of the United Nations system and called upon the Interagency Task Force to take account of the on-going activities at the international and national levels.

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council took note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly for consideration at its 1976 session. It also took note of an oral report of the Executive Director of UNIDO on the establishment of an industrial technological information bank. The Council's actions were contained in decisions 171(LXI) and 172(LXI), approved, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee. On 28 and 30 July, the Committee had approved, without vote, texts of these decisions proposed by the United States and orally, by the Committee Chairman, respectively.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly reaffirmed the importance, especially for developing countries, of wider dissemination of scientific and technological information and requested the Secretary-General and the Interagency Task Force to continue their work, including publication of the pilot directory, and to submit further conclusions and recommendations on the establishment of the network to the Assembly at its 1977 session. The Secretary-General and the task force were also asked to identify by means of inventories any deficiencies that might inhibit the setting up of the network. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General of UNCTAD and the Executive Director of UNIDO to intensify their work of assisting developing countries to establish centres for the transfer and development of technology in order to provide fundamental elements for the functioning of an international network.

The Assembly also welcomed a report of the Executive Director of UNIDO on the establishment of an industrial technological information bank and urged UNIDO to take an early decision to make the bank operational.

The Assembly took these actions in adopting resolution 31/183, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second Committee. On 10 December 1976, the Committee had approved without vote a draft resolution proposed by the United States. Oral drafting amendments by Argentina and Mexico were accepted by the sponsor.

On 21 December 1976, the Assembly approved a decision (31/421 C), by which it, inter alia, took note of the report of the Executive Director of UNIDO on the establishment of an industrial technological information bank and of the report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a network for the exchange of technological information.

Decision 31/421 C was approved by the Assembly without a vote on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved the draft text on 13 December 1976, on the proposal of the Chairman, without a vote.

Application of computer science to development

At its 1976 session, the Committee on Science and Technology for Development considered a report of the Secretary-General on the application of computer science and technology to development which had been prepared at the request of the Economic and Social Council. The Committee welcomed the report, generally approved the recommendations and proposed that the Secretary-General convene an ad hoc working group composed of the organizations which had primary responsibility for the implementation of each of the recommendations. The working group was requested to prepare concrete proposals for action and to submit them to the Economic and Social Council at its 1976 session.

Later in the year, the Secretary-General reported to the Council that he had convened the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Application of Computer Science and Technology in May 1976. In view of the limited time and the complexity of the subject, it had not been possible to prepare a programme of action; he therefore proposed to invite the organizations concerned to submit new proposals on the basis of which he hoped to submit a final report to the Council in 1978.

On 4 August 1976, by decision 172(LXI), the Council took note of the report of the Committee on Science and Technology on its February 1976 session and of the interim report of the Secretary-General. The decision was proposed in the Council's Economic Committee by the Chairman and approved on 30 July.

Also on 4 August, the Council endorsed in general the decision of the Committee on Science and Technology on the matter. The Council requested the Secretary-General to submit the final report of the Ad Hoc Working Group, together with the views of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development and the comments of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to the Committee on Science and Technology for Development at its 1978 session and, through that Committee, to the Council in 1978.

These actions were set forth in resolution 2036(LXI), which was adopted, without vote and orally amended by the Council President, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee. On 29 July 1976, also without vote, the Economic Committee had approved a text proposed by Algeria, Argentina, Mexico, Nigeria, Romania, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Report of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development

The Committee on Science and Technology for Development considered the report of the 1975 session of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development at its 1976 session. The Committee emphasized the valuable contribution being made by the Advisory Committee to the work of the United Nations system in the application of science and technology to development and pointed out that matters dealt with by the Advisory Committee formed the basis of many of the programmes and activities of the Committee on Science and Technology for Development. In view of the advice expected from the Advisory Committee in connexion with the proposed United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development and of the number of questions referred to it by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee, the Committee considered that the Advisory Committee would be unable to discharge its mandate effectively if it and its regional and working groups were to meet only once every two years.

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, after considering this report, observed that the Advisory Committee performed functions for the Council and the Committee on Science and Technology and considered that this advisory work must be of a continuing nature in view of the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development. The Council decided that the Advisory Committee and its regional and working groups were to be exempt from the obligation to adhere to the normal biennial cycle of meetings during the preparatory period for the Conference. This decision would be reviewed after the Conference. The Council also recommended the increased participation of developing countries from all regions in the work of the Advisory Committee.

These actions were taken by the Council in adopting resolution 2033(LXI). The resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which on 29 July 1976, also without vote, had approved the text of a draft resolution recommended by the Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

Sessions of the Committee on Science and Technology for Development

At its 1976 session, the Committee on Science and Technology for Development approved and transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the draft provisional agenda for its next (1978) session. Items of the draft provisional agenda included, inter alia: the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development; formulation of a harmonized science and technology policy for programmes within the United Nations system; quantification of scientific and technological activities related to development; the World Plan of Action for the Application of Science and Technology to Development; the role of an international technological information system in the transfer and assessment of technology and in the indigenous growth of appropriate technologies in developing countries; and research in non-conventional sources of energy.

On 4 August 1976, the Council approved the draft provisional agenda by decision 170(LXI) on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which on 29 July 1976 had approved a text proposed by the Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

Recalling its resolution 1897(LVII) of 1 August 1974 on the question of convening a United Nations conference on science and technology, in which it, inter alia, emphasized the necessity for a conference and recognized that the new needs in the field of science and technology made it imperative for the United Nations to expand international co-operation in the field of science and technology on the basis of principles designed to adjust the scientific and technological relationships among States in a manner compatible with the special requirements and interests of developing countries,

Recalling further that in the same resolution it was also recognized that the conference should be oriented towards the elaboration of methods of action, and affirming that it should make recommendations for concrete action at the national, regional and global levels, in particular paragraphs 61 to 63 thereof, which state that serious consideration shall be given at the time of the first biennial review and appraisal to the question of setting targets in the area of science and technology,

Recalling also Council resolutions 1718(LIII) of 28 July 1972 and 1822(LV) of 10 August 1973, which, inter alia, direct the

(i) The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme acting as the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Desertification, and the other bodies concerned with the preparation of that Conference;

(ii) The Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development, so that the Committee may take it into account when reviewing the World Plan of Action for the Application of Science and Technology to Development;

(b) To take into account the information and recommendations resulting from the United Nations Conference on Desertification and the preparations for it;

(c) To report to the Committee on Science and Technology for Development at its fourth session, with a view to enabling it to pursue the preparation of the world programme of development research and application of science and technology to solve the special problems of the arid areas.

Statistical developments*Activities in 1976

During 1976, the Statistical Office of the United Nations continued to collect and publish statistics showing major global, regional and national economic and social characteristics. These included data on external trade, production and prices, transport, energy, national economic accounts, population, migration and vital statistics.

The first issue of an annual United Nations Statistical Pocketbook (World Statistics in Brief) was published during the year. The first part contains demographic, economic and social statistics for: the world as a whole, selected regions and major countries. The second part presents frequently consulted statistical indicators for 139 countries.

A Statistical Annex to the Global Review of Human Settlements was prepared by the Statistical Office for the use of Habitat: the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, which was held in Vancouver, Canada, from 31 May to 11 June 1976.

Long-term statistical training centres continued to operate under United Nations auspices in Japan, Uganda and the United Republic of Cameroon. In addition, training in general statistics was provided at the Regional Institute for Research and Training in Statistics for the Near East, located in Baghdad, Iraq. Phase I of this programme started in 1973 with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations as executing agency and provided training in agricultural statistics. Phase II began in 1976 with the United Nations as executing agency.

Decisions of the Statistical Commission

The nineteenth session of the Statistical Commission was held at New Delhi, India, from 8 to 19 November 1976.

During the session, the Commission requested revision and publication of the guidelines on price and quantity statistics and the preparation of manuals on specific aspects of the sources and methodologies of collecting and compiling such statistics. A programme for developing a global system of integrated energy statistics was approved; its keystone was the compilation of energy balances, covering different energy forms and different stages of operation from production through trade and stockage to conversion and final use.

In addition, the Commission requested publication of the report on the feasibility of welfare-oriented measures to supplement the national accounts and balances. It also approved proposals to reconcile the United Nations draft manual on public sector statistics and the International Monetary Fund's draft manual on government finance statistics.

The Commission asked that interim proposals for the 1980 population and housing censuses be circulated to countries for use in planning their censuses and that final draft recommendations be drawn up. In this connexion, the Commission stressed the importance of national statistical agencies developing a continuing cartographic capability.

Also, the Commission requested revision and publication of: statistics of international migration; provisional guidelines on statistics of international tourism; a report on the improvement of statistics on the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries (brain drain); the International Standard Classification of All Goods and Services and the preparation of indices thereto; a report on statistics of internal migration; a report on demographic and social statistics in developing countries; and a report on social indicators.

The Commission emphasized the high priority it accorded to environmental statistics and reiterated the need for a step-by-step approach, concentrating initially on an inventory of needs and availability, and the development of concepts, classifications and tabulations.

Publication of the report on the organization of national statistical services was also requested by the Commission, which asked that this report be distributed to statistical authorities and also to those national authorities responsible for the basic decisions affecting the future of statistical programmes.

The Commission approved a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council would express concern over the rapidly declining trend of assistance rendered by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to the financing of statisticians' training and would request UNDP to take a sympathetic view of the requirements of developing Member States for financing the training of statisticians, especially through its regional funds, and to increase this component of its assistance with a view to fostering the long-term and lasting development of the statistical services of developing countries.

In addition, the Commission approved a draft resolution, for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council would draw the attention of developing countries to the value of a continuing national household survey capability to meet their need for reliable and integrated statistics as a complement to periodic censuses and would request the Secretary-General and UNDP, in co-operation with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and other multilateral and bilateral donor agencies, to consider ways of carrying out this important development activity, including the provision of resources for intercountry technical advice and training in this field.

Chapter XVI

Regional economic and social activities*The Economic Commission for Europe

At its thirty-first session, held at Geneva, Switzerland, from 30 March to 9 April 1976, the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) carried out a major review of the work programmes of the Commission and its principal subsidiary bodies. Of the 400 projects in the work programmes, about half were modified or adapted to focus on the solution of problems demanding international co-operation.

The new programmes gave greater emphasis to policy-oriented action and perspective studies, which helped Governments to shape their policy decisions. Other projects enlarged the ECE approach to economic development and dealt with economy and efficiency in the use of natural resources, land utilization, the quality of life in human settlements and related issues.

The Commission took a number of steps during the year to implement provisions of the Final Act of the 1975 Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (Helsinki Conference) which specifically called for action by ECE. These included undertaking a study of foreign-trade regulations, preparing for a marketing seminar and a scientific forum (in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) and undertaking a study on the capacity of countries to predict the environmental consequences of economic activities and technological development.

The Commission adopted a resolution dealing with future activities, giving special attention to projects referred to by the Helsinki Conference. The Commission also approved the work programme for 1976-1977 and a longer-term programme for 1977-1981.

By other decisions, the Commission asked the Executive Secretary to take account of the need to encourage economic co-operation and also to continue his consultations with other United Nations bodies, including the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Western Asia.

One decision concerned the possibility of holding all-European congresses on questions of co-operation in protecting the environment, developing transport, and energy.

Another called for attention to be devoted to: the promotion of the publication and dissemination of economic and commercial information; the promotion of international and other arrangements on acceptance of certificates of conformity with standards and technical regulations; the development of an international programme for the monitoring and evaluation of the long-range transport of air pollutants; and the harmonization of administrative and technical provisions concerning safety in road, rail and river transport.

The Commission also established a programme dealing with general energy questions and gave guidelines for the incorporation into work programmes of projects on problems of energy economy and efficiency.

Still other decisions dealt with continuing ECE activities relating to trade development, industrial co-operation, standardization, automation, engineering industries, and tourism. The Commission decided to invite the Holy See and Liechtenstein to participate in its work in a consultative capacity.

Activities in 1976

The ECE Committee on the Development of Trade continued to review trends, policies and problems in intra-European trade. Steps to implement provisions of the Helsinki Conference included a feasibility study on a multilateral system of notification of laws and regulations concerning international trade and changes therein. The Committee called for an assessment of the practicability of operating such a system. In addition, the Committee decided to expand its inventory of administrative restrictions in East-West trade into a general inventory of obstacles to trade.

During the year, a second informal meeting of trade experts, in May, and a meeting of experts on industrial co-operation, in October, were held and planned ECE activities reviewed. The Committee published the results of a seminar held in 1976 on licensing and leasing and made preparations for a marketing seminar to be held in 1977. The Guide on Drawing Up International Contracts on Industrial Co-operation was published, and work was started on a guide for drawing up contracts between parties associated for execution of a specific project. A set of ECE/United Nations arbitration rules for certain categories of perishable agricultural products was prepared.

In the field of data requirements and documentation in international trade, task teams were created to advise on specific problems, and Government officials made recommendations for developing international standards.

The Committee on Housing, Building and Planning reviewed the progress of its work to harmonize the technical content of ECE building regulations. The market for forest products was reviewed by the Timber Committee, which made forecasts for 1976 and 1977, and studied cyclical fluctuations. Work continued during the year on the development of ECE recommended standards on stress-grading and finger jointing of coniferous sawn timber.

The Coal Committee made analyses of the solid-fuel situation in Europe, and the Steel Committee approved a study of the steel market in 1975. Production and trade in chemical products were analysed by the Chemical Industry Committee. Guidelines for statistics on tourism were drawn up by the Conference of European Statisticians.

The Committee on Agricultural Problems reviewed developments in European trade in agricultural products, drew up standards for eggs-in-shell and proposed new or revised standards for other perishable products.

Groups established by the Inland Transport Committee began consideration of type approval of complete vehicles, and also considered the harmonization of approval procedures for power-driven vehicles between European countries and the United States. In 1976, the Committee adopted a Convention on the Contract for the International Carriage of Passengers and Luggage by Inland Waterway and a resolution concerning European provisions for the international carriage of dangerous goods by inland waterway.

After a lapse of seven years, a group of experts resumed an economic study of the connexion by inland waterway of the Danube, Oder and Elbe rivers. Joint planning continued for a north-south motorway joining the Baltic coast with the Adriatic, Mediterranean and Black Seas and linking up with the Asian Highway.

Energy

The Committee on Electric Power considered the preparatory work for interconnexion of the transmission systems of the Balkan countries, and noted the possibilities offered by some central European countries for electricity transfers.

A Symposium on Gasification and Liquefaction of Coal, held in Dusseldorf, Federal Republic of Germany, in January 1976, recommended that ECE study scenarios of long-term energy supply and demand and the role of synthetic gases and liquids. The Committee on Gas proposed to hold a symposium on the gas situation around 1990, and the Committee on Electric Power decided to make a preliminary study of the long-term prospects of the electric power industry for the period 1985-1990. Work progressed on a perspective study of the coal industry in the ECE region.

Long-term planning and projections

The Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments adopted the interim version of the Over-all Economic Perspective for the ECE Region up to 1990 (OEP) and presented it to a group of experts who recommended a time-table for future work. The growing internationalization of production and the requirements of the international division of labour were discussed at a seminar in Budapest, Hungary, in December.

During the year, a study of the raw material requirements of the chemical industry was completed, and a study of timber trends and prospects from 1950 to 2000 was prepared for publication.

Long-term trends and perspectives were to be studied by the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology. The importance of comprehensive planning linked with land utilization and the need for international co-operation among riparian countries in the management of trans-boundary river basins were emphasized at a seminar in Zlatni Piasatzi, Bulgaria, in May 1976.

Discussions at a seminar on long-term prospects and policies in the construction sector, at Copenhagen, Denmark, included: allocation of resources; the role of this sector in economic policy, trade and co-operation; automation and mechanization; the use of alternative technologies; modernization and maintenance; and environmental considerations.

Scientific and technological co-operation

In co-operation with the Committee on the Development of Trade, the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology prepared a manual on licensing procedures and related aspects of technology transfer.

A meeting of experts on innovation in energy technologies reviewed ECE studies on energy economy and efficiency and the designing of national strategies for research and development, and the Seminar on Technologies for the Utilization of Low-calorie Fuels, at Varna, Bulgaria, in April 1976, recommended further ECE work in this field. The Seminar on the Statistics of Science and Technology, held in Prague, Czechoslovakia, considered the improvement of the quality and international comparability of science statistics.

The Symposium on Gasification and Liquefaction of Coal proposed that ECE consider joint research and development projects and act as a clearing-house for data on actual and planned installations. A Group of Experts on Open-cast Mines was established by the Coal Committee. The development of gas fields, stimulation of reserves and enhanced recovery techniques were included in the programme of the Committee on Gas. The first Meeting of Directors of Research Institutes or Centres of the Gas Industry was held at Dresden, German Democratic Republic, in November. In April, a seminar on problems relating to sea pipelines for the transport of gas was held in Florence, Italy. The Committee on Electric Power agreed to study the problem of using nuclear power stations for the combined production of heat and electricity.

The interaction between the technical, managerial and social aspects of manufacturing using automated integrated production systems in mechanical engineering was discussed at a seminar in Prague, Czechoslovakia, in November. Work continued on a study of the economic efficiency of automation in different industrial branches. Studies were completed on energy questions in the chemical industry and on technical progress and its role in combating high-waste technologies in the inorganic chemical industry.

Studies made by the Steel Committee dealt with the increasing use of continuous processes and their technical and economic aspects, scrap problems, and structural change in the iron and steel industry. In May, the Committee held a Seminar on the Utilization of Pre-reduced Materials in Iron and Steel Making, at Bucharest, Romania.

The Timber Committee held a Symposium on Harvesting a Larger Part of the Forest Biomass, at Hyvinkää, Finland, in May; in Bucharest it held a Symposium on Extending the Use of Wood Residues, in September.

A joint ECE/Food and Agriculture Organization Working Party on the Mechanization of Agriculture observed farm management and agricultural engineering techniques in the Netherlands and Switzerland.

Problems of the environment

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems gave attention to questions of resources and waste relating to the production and use of energy, particularly in the context of new technologies, and approved the recommendations of a 1975 Seminar on the Collection, Disposal, Treatment and Recycling of Solid Wastes.

In December, a seminar was held in Paris, France, which dealt with the principles and creation of non-waste technology and production. A Seminar on Air Pollution Problems of the Inorganic Chemical Industry was organized by the Senior Advisers in Geneva, in November. There was progress on projects concerning major air and water pollutants and noise. New ECE projects relating to the integration of environmental policy into socio-economic development planning included a study of environmental impact assessment. Improvements to environmental and related statistics were discussed by the Senior Advisers and by the Conference of European Statisticians.

The Committee on Water Problems prepared a report on policy options in water use and development in the ECE region, and drew up regional recommendations for submission to the United Nations Water Conference.

Amendments to regulations covering air pollution by motor vehicles were considered by the Inland Transport Committee, which also prepared recommendations dealing with various aspects of road traffic safety, construction and equipment of vehicles, transport of dangerous goods, and noise.

The Coal Committee organized the Symposium on Environmental Problems Arising from Coal Industry Activities, in Katowice, Poland, in October. The Committee on Electric Power prepared three reports and a booklet on the environmental aspects of electricity production, transmission and distribution.

The second ECE Seminar on the Role of Transportation in Urban Planning, Development and Environment was held in June in Washington, D.C. (United States).

The improvement of housing and its immediate surroundings was discussed at the annual session of the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning, and a report on the future pattern and forms of human settlements was reviewed. The third ECE Conference on Urban and Regional Research, in Warsaw, Poland, in May, made recommendations to Governments and international organizations. The fifth ECE Seminar on the Building Industry, in Budapest in October, focused discussions on the building industry and the environment. The Group of Experts on Housing, Building and Planning Problems and Policies in the Countries of Southern Europe held a meeting in Lisbon, Portugal, in May, to study the financing of housing.

Specific housing needs in relation to over-all housing policy, to social principles, and to architectural, planning and technical aspects were discussed at the Seminar on Special Housing Needs at The Hague, Netherlands, in November. Other meetings gave priority to land-use policies, to quality approval and control of building products and to functional requirements and reference to standards in building regulations.

Decision by Economic and Social Council

At its mid-1976 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the annual report of ECE for the period 25 April 1975 to 9 April 1976. On 5 August

1976, the Council, by approving decision 183(LXI), without a vote, took note of the report, of the views expressed during discussions in the Commission and of the resolutions and decisions adopted by ECE, and endorsed ECE's work programme and priorities. The action was taken on the proposal of the Council's President.

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

The thirty-second session of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) was held at Bangkok, Thailand, from 24 March to 2 April 1976. The Commission established guidelines for action to consolidate changes in policy, programme planning and implementation which were initiated in 1974 and 1975. It approved measures to further rationalize and refine its programme of day-to-day activities and long-term projects, and for continuing consultations between member Governments and ESCAP's secretariat. The Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission, established in 1975, served as a forum for such consultations. The Commission requested the Advisory Committee to maintain a general and continuing appraisal of the work programme and its implementation.

In 1976, the membership of ESCAP increased to 41, with 33 members and eight associate members. Maldives was admitted to membership on 5 August, and Papua New Guinea, formerly an associate member, became a member on 27 August. Tuvalu, formerly part of the territory of the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, was admitted as an associate member following its separation from the Gilbert Islands. The Gilbert Islands continued as an associate member.

Food and agriculture

Special attention continued to be given by the Commission to food, energy, raw materials, transfer of technology and external financial resources. At its 1976 session, the Commission identified rural development as an additional priority area and asked the Executive Secretary to commit available resources ensuring implementation of projects in priority areas. The Commission also invited member Governments to give increasing attention to the problems of rural development, including the adoption of a policy aimed at evolving integrated rural development programmes.

During the year, preparations started for a regional plan of action for rural development, and an integrated rural development unit was established in the ESCAP secretariat. This included the recruitment of experts, consultations with other United Nations agencies, and the drawing up of an inter-agency co-ordinated regional plan of action for integrated rural development, to be implemented jointly by ESCAP, United Nations agencies and other organizations. In addition, ESCAP drew up its own integrated work programme. These two plans were to form the main components of a programme which aimed at providing a composite plan of action for each specific problem of the rural poor. The programme was to be reviewed at a special intergovernmental meeting to be held in Tokyo, Japan, in February 1977.

The regional network of agricultural machinery, which was set up in 1975, became operational in November 1976 when the project document was approved by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and was opened for the final signatures of the participating Governments. The network was to assist in the development and utilization of locally-suited mechanized farming tools and equipment and was to be located in Los Banos, Philippines. Contribution pledges were received from Australia, Indonesia, Japan and Thailand.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

Of special concern during the year were resource constraints, due to the curtailment of financial assistance by UNDP. The Commission expressed deep concern at the serious effect the cut-back in UNDP financial support had on programme implementation and called for action to avoid duplication of activities and to ensure that any additions to essential activities were matched by a guaranteed corresponding increase in resources.

The Commission also urged Governments to rely on the concept of technical co-operation among developing countries as a potential source of additional resources for ESCAP's work. Technical co-operation among developing countries, a new approach in international co-operation for development, was being promoted at the global level under UNDP's auspices; its co-operative activities were to be considered at a 1977 world conference.

In February 1976, a joint ESCAP/UNDP regional meeting was held in Bangkok to consider the nature and scope of the participation of the ESCAP member countries in the world conference. Recommendations were made for the promotion of this concept at the regional level and for better planning and co-ordination of these activities among the developing countries of ESCAP with those of other regions. The Commission endorsed these recommendations and urged the member Governments to regard technical co-operation among developing countries as an instrument of concerted action in self-reliance.

Two handbooks of training and fellowship facilities and of consultancy services in the region's developing countries were published in 1976 to promote greater use of the potential for development assistance existing in the region's developing countries.

Transfer of technology

A feasibility study on the Regional Centre for the Transfer of Technology was considered by ESCAP in 1976. The Commission called for the necessary steps to be taken for a timely establishment of the Centre and requested the drafting of a project document, which was to be submitted to an intergovernmental meeting in February 1977. Contributions were received for the preparatory phase of the project from India, the Netherlands, UNDP and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

During the year, ESCAP prepared a project document for the Asia and Pacific Centre for Women and Development, which was approved by an inter-governmental meeting in November 1976. The document was signed by India, Iran, Pakistan and the United States and pledges of contributions were received from Iran, New Zealand and the United States. The Centre was to be inaugurated in February 1977 in Teheran, Iran, and was to aim at increasing women's potential for local, national and regional leadership.

Telecommunity

During 1976, efforts to establish an Asia-Pacific Telecommunity progressed. The organization was to serve as a forum for Governments to co-operate on technical compatibility and efficiency of telecommunications operations and on the training of personnel. A constitution was approved by an intergovernmental working party in March/April. It was ratified by four States, and was to come into force after an additional three ratifications. Thailand offered host facilities for the Telecommunity.

Trade

Consultations continued during the year on the Asian trade expansion programme, a project to increase and improve regional trade and monetary co-operation among the developing countries of the region. The 1975 Bangkok Agreement, which liberalized trade between the developing nations of the region, entered into force in June 1976. Average tariff cuts amounted to 36 per cent and covered a total of 146 products.

In December 1976, a draft charter and three protocols were prepared for an Asian Reinsurance Corporation, which was to help member countries increase their capacity to retain insurance business and reduce the outflow of foreign-exchange earnings. The draft text was to be submitted for approval to the Commission in 1977.

Development planning

The Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1975 was published in February 1976. In Part I, the Survey noted the negative or negligible growth rates and high levels of unemployment and inflation during 1974-1975 and predicted a moderate recovery for 1976.

Part II, which reviewed the situation of the small farmer in the region, estimated that of the 415 million persons living in poverty, about 355 million were in rural areas. The Survey analysed the reasons for neglect of the rural poor and suggested measures for improvement, such as institutional restructuring of rural society and the provision of non-formal education for rural people. -

Meeting of the Executive

Secretaries of regional commissions

In January 1976, a meeting of the Executive Secretaries of the United Nations regional commissions was held at Bangkok. The meeting made recommendations for the planning and co-ordination of programmes in fields identified for priority action: international trade, transfer of resources and international monetary reforms, science and technology, industrialization, food and agriculture, co-operation among developing countries, and restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations. It was also agreed to study the long-term trends of economic development in each region.

Mekong project

Work continued on the implementation of the Mekong project, a long-term scheme to develop the use of the water resources of the lower basin of the Mekong River for the benefit of the riparian countries (Democratic Kampuchea, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Socialist Republic of Viet Nam and Thailand). Hydroelectric power, modern irrigation and flood control systems, improved navigation and water supplies were to be provided under the project.

Activities were directed by the Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin whose members represented the four riparian countries.

At the end of December, the total resources contributed or pledged to the Committee or projects sponsored by it amounted to the equivalent of $355.7 million. The Committee's work programme for 1976 consisted of 56 projects, divided into 167 activities. Work on many of these projects continued during the year; others were held in abeyance or curtailed, particularly in Democratic Kampuchea and the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam.

Offshore oil exploration

The Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Offshore Areas, established under the auspices of ESCAP and operating with UNDP support, continued its programme of regional investigations and broad reconnaissance surveys for petroleum and other minerals in offshore areas. With bilateral and multilateral assistance, work was undertaken to intensify and extend these geological and geophysical surveys to deeper waters and to unexplored offshore and coastal areas.

The developing member countries expanded their participation in the Committee's activities. This involved not only their geological surveys and mineral resources agencies, but also their petroleum and energy resources agencies, State oil companies, universities and research institutions in the fields of geoscience, marine science and technology, and marine environment.

A similar body, the Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in South Pacific Offshore Areas, continued programmes in surveys and training. The surveys led to the discovery of a large field of manganese nodules in the offshore areas of the Cook Islands. Chemical analyses indicated a nodule density of 90 per cent and varying combinations with other metals such as copper, nickel and cobalt.

Decisions by Economic and Social Council

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council considered the annual report of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific for the period 8 March 1975 to 2 April 1976.

On a proposal of its President, the Council approved, without a vote, decision 184(LXI), by which it replaced "Gilbert and Ellice Islands" by "Gilbert Islands" in the Commission's terms of reference listing its associate members, and added "Tuvalu" to the list of associate members of the Commission.

Also on 5 August, the Council adopted, without a vote, on the suggestion of its President, resolution 2044(LXI), by which it decided to include Maldives in the geographical scope of the Commission and to admit it to membership.

The Economic Commission for Latin America

In 1976, the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA), which is also known by the Spanish acronym CEPAL, continued to research and analyse socio-economic development in Latin America, and to provide technical advice to Governments on the region's presence and participation in international affairs. In addition, ECLA organized or co-sponsored 13 meetings and seminars, dealing with such subjects as employment, export promotion, technical co-operation among developing countries, and the use and management of water resources.

Activities in 1976

The region's economic development was analysed in ECLA's annual Economic Survey of Latin America, 1976 and in several studies dealing with inflation and transnational corporations, among other topics. The Survey indicated that the rate of economic growth in the region had shown a marked increase in 1976, though it did not reach the rates of the first half of the decade. Except for a few countries, a more favourable export performance led to improvement in the external sector. Inflation was again a source of concern during the year.

Social development

During 1976, ECLA continued to focus its activities on styles of social development and change in Latin America, an approach which tried to limit the dispersion of resources among the numerous specialized policy areas classified as social.

In this connexion, discussion focused on "critical poverty" as one approach to the reordering of development priorities and strategies. Also reviewed were alternatives for Latin American development under different suppositions concerning the future evolution of the international order and economic development.

Work continued during the year on a study of social stratification and mobility, in co-operation with the United Nations Children's Fund. Other studies reviewed housing and urban services, the integration of women in development, employment, income distribution, rural development, and the situation of the family in Latin America.

Industrial development

Special attention was given during the year to new activities that were considered suited to the region's needs. These consisted mainly of sectoral studies aimed at identifying problems, promoting development and seeking co-operation in specific branches of industry.

A study was prepared on the Latin American economy between 1950 and 1975, which gave special attention to industrialization. The study reviewed the intermediate stages and identified the growth patterns of internal and external factors.

In collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the United Nations Development Programme, ECLA studied the development possibilities of the pulp and paper industry in several countries of the region. Special attention was given to the identification of new projects as part of a programme on the planning and development of forest industries in Latin America.

A study was prepared on the effect of transnational corporations on the region's manufacturing industry. An appraisal of the Latin American development process was prepared by ECLA's Economic Projections Centre.

Food and agriculture

During the year, ECLA continued to analyse the effects of the international economic situation on agriculture in the countries of the region. The ECLA/FAO Joint Agriculture Division gave special attention to the food sector and organized the 1976 Latin American Food Conference which was held in Lima, Peru, in April.

A study on agricultural development in the past 25 years was prepared; it evaluated agricultural progress, analysed trade in agricultural products and examined the potential for integrated regional agriculture. In addition, the Division continued to co-operate in the agricultural sector with the Latin American Free Trade Association (LAFTA) and the Caribbean Community, and it advised the Government of Paraguay on problems encountered in the marketing of meat and other agro-industrial products.

Natural resources and environment

Activities during the year focused mainly on preliminary work for the United Nations Water Conference to be held in 1977. A regional preparatory meeting of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean was held in Lima in August/September 1976. The meeting considered regional reports on the water resources of Latin America and prepared recommendations to be presented to the Conference in the form of "Action Proposals: The Lima Consensus on Water Problems."

Work continued on the project of water, development and the environment in Latin America; this aimed at improving the planning and management of water resources in Latin America and attempted to reconcile the needs of rapid economic development with the protection of the environment.

Other activities during the year included concluding an agreement between ECLA and the Latin American Energy Organization which identified areas of co-operation and established general procedures for collaboration. A study was made of the region's production, volume of reserves and possible exports of mining products: copper, lead, zinc, aluminium, nickel, silver, sulphur, phosphates, fluorite and iron. Projections of consumption up to the year 2000 were prepared.

Transport and communications

During the year, ECLA continued to collaborate with member Governments and international organizations at their request in the areas of: facilitation of transport in international trade; bases for the improvement of transport planning; and the application of technology in transport. A document was prepared on the establishment and promotion of international land transport services in the Andean subregion, and talks were held with the two Governments concerned regarding the carriage of goods to Bolivia through Chilean ports.

The Commission continued to provide advisory assistance to the countries of the region for the formation of national transport facilitation groups and the promotion of the simplification and standardization of the procedures and documentation required for international transport and trade.

The Latin American Railways Association met in August/September 1976 to consider the regulations implementing the Multinational Rail Traffic Agreement. In addition, steps were taken during the year to promote maritime transport and work was started on a draft agreement to facilitate international multimodal transport in southern Latin America.

International trade and development

A study on international economic relations was prepared, which examined Latin America's international economic relations in a global setting, changes in the industrial centres and in Latin America, problems of financing and external indebtedness, and relations with the major trading powers. Latin America's progress and prospects in economic integration were also evaluated, and proposals for action were put forward.

In November 1976, ECLA co-sponsored with the Japan External Trade Organization a seminar in Tokyo on the Japanese experience in export promotion, which was attended by officials from Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Mexico, Peru and Venezuela.

Work continued during the year on three areas in the field of financing and external indebtedness of Latin America: the balance-of-payments current account, capital movements and external indebtedness. Among the measures considered was a financial safety net. The presidents of the central banks of Latin America decided at their meeting in San Salvador, El Salvador, in May 1976, to set up a special committee to study financial co-operation among Latin American countries, including the possible establishment of a safety net. The Commission was requested to serve jointly with the Centre for Latin American Monetary Studies as secretariat of the committee.

Regional and subregional economic integration was analysed during 1976 in Latin America. Efforts were made to revitalize integration in Latin America and new steps were taken towards Caribbean integration through the activities of the Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee, LAFTA and the Andean Group. In March 1976, representatives from the ECLA regional offices met in Santiago, Chile, to analyse problems connected with integration, the approaches and solutions to them, and ECLA's work programme. It was decided to focus activities on central research projects benefiting the region as a whole, sectoral projects, and technical support for action organizations.

Statistics and quantitative analysis

The national accounts data base and the permanent data file on the public sector were updated during the year. Computer programmes were developed for processing estimates at constant prices of the gross domestic product by type of expenditure.

Work proceeded on a project jointly undertaken by ECLA and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, which evaluated and analysed data on income distribution in Latin America.

A project on determining poverty lines estimated basic consumption budgets for 10 countries of the region. Work continued on the determination of urban poverty profiles and on a descriptive characterization of income distribution by levels.

Other statistical work included the systematization of manufacturing production indices, which used the same base and a common classification, to revise the index at the regional level. In addition, a data file on employment statistics was set up, which was to centralize data and available estimates on the evolution of total and sectoral employment and unemployment.

The Statistical Yearbook for Latin America, 1976 was prepared.

Decision by Economic and Social Council

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, on a proposal of its President, approved, without a vote, decision 185(LXI), by which it took note of the report of ECLA for the period 7 May 1975 to 6 May 1976.

The Economic Commission for Africa

During 1976, the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) reformulated its medium-term plan for 1976-1981 to focus on African self-reliance through close intra-African co-operation and economic integration. Activities were set up to give impetus to economic and social development through agricultural transformation and integrated rural development. The close dependency relationship between agriculture and industry was emphasized. Rural populations, which comprise 80 per cent of the continent's population, received priority consideration for their development requirements. The Commission planned to increase employment, provide administrative machinery for domestic and foreign trade and improve or create institutional machinery for the training of African manpower.

Activities in 1976

The sixth session of the Conference of African Planners was held at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in October. The Conference considered and made recommendations concerning, inter alia, application of a unified approach to development analysis and planning under African conditions, conventional planning in relation to the unified approach, social development planning, public works programmes and integrated rural development to alleviate poverty, unemployment, under-employment and institutional aspects of development planning.

The Commission continued to intensify its relations with the specialized agencies of the United Nations family and to expand its co-operation with other international organizations. Joint divisions were set up with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

Agriculture

The Commission emphasized activities to increase productivity and expand food production, especially at the small-farmer level. Studies were completed in Senegal to formulate programmes for the integration of livestock production into the farming system and to provide greater security to the nomadic and semi-nomadic pastoral sector and to enable it to be more productive.

The Commission continued to analyse national reports on the state of food and agriculture in member States. Country studies on the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia were reviewed during the year. A study on self-sufficiency in rice production in five countries—the Gambia, Ghana, Liberia, Nigeria and Sierra Leone—was presented at the meeting of the FAO Intergovernmental Group on Rice Production held in Rome, Italy, in April 1976. An ECA seminar on increasing food availability by reducing waste and improving the marketing systems in west Africa was held in October in Monrovia, Liberia.

Economic research and planning

During the year, the 1975 and 1976 issues of the Survey of Economic and Social Conditions in Africa were completed. The Surveys reviewed the international economic situation, developments and policies in the ECA region and long-term trends and prospects.

Economic co-operation

The Commission's Economic Co-operation Office, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, evaluated the United Nations Development Advisory Team programme in 20 countries of Africa. Recommendations were made to strengthen the three existing teams, which were renamed ECA Multinational Programming and Operational Centres, and to establish four additional Centres. By the end of 1976, five Centres were operational or being established; they served as the operational arms of ECA, replacing the sub-regional offices.

An action-oriented programme was formulated, which included priority multinational projects and national projects with multinational potential, to be implemented within two to three years.

In addition, assistance was given to intergovernmental economic organizations, and projects of the Lake Chad Basin Commission were evaluated and new project possibilities identified.

A co-operation agreement was signed with the Economic Commission for Western Asia, establishing, inter alia, a regional documentation centre and a data bank. Discussions also started on co-operation between ECA and the Economic Commission for Latin America concerning mutual assistance in training.

Public administration

During the year, ECA continued to provide advisory and consultancy services, thereby helping member States to establish efficient structures for socio-economic development. Assistance was rendered to Governments to improve their procurement and supplies management. Assistance to the public finance sector focused on budgetary management, tax administration and the organization of national training workshops. Ninety-eight students received funds from bilateral sources for studies not available in their own countries. Four national training workshops were organized with 78 participants to assist national institutions in developing a professional capability for training.

Studies were undertaken on the establishment of an African centre for advanced public policy analysis on local government reforms, the management problems of African public enterprises and improvements in budgetary systems and tax administration.

Industry

During 1976, the Commission's activities focused on institution-building, intra-African co-operation in industrial development and the programme of world-wide consultations on the redeployment of world industrial production capacities. A comprehensive development programme was drawn up for the years from 1976 to 1981, covering all aspects of multinational co-operation in the development of basic industries, institutions and rural industries.

Regional draft programmes were formulated for industrial policies and planning and for developing the following industries: building materials and construction; chemicals; engineering; basic metals; small-scale, rural and agro-forest-based industries. The programmes were endorsed by the Committee for African Industrialization in November 1976.

Advisory missions were undertaken by ECA involving: industrial strategies; policies and plan formulation; industrial surveys; training facilities in forest industries; food processing; and textile and cement industries. Work continued on the identification of opportunities for small-scale industry and technology development.

Trade

During 1976, ECA activities continued to promote and expand intra-African trade. A consultative mission to Morocco studied the identification of products for trade with other African countries. Another mission surveyed the possibilities of expanding trade between and within the eastern and southern African subregions and advised on the required institutional framework to support and facilitate that trade.

A Symposium on the Development of Intra-African Trade and the establishment of an African common market was jointly organized with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), and held at Algiers, Algeria, in October. An action programme was adopted, and the symposium called for the convening in 1978 of OAU's intergovernmental committee of experts on trade and development to start multilateral negotiations among African countries.

The first issue of the quarterly bulletin African Trade was published in 1976, providing information on intra-African trade problems and opportunities.

The Commission assisted member States in their preparations for the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, which was held at Nairobi, Kenya, in May 1976. In collaboration with OAU, ECA organized several meetings of the African group of States to harmonize their positions on the topics under discussion and to ensure co-ordination between African positions and those of the other developing States members of the "Group of 77" throughout the negotiations.

Other ECA activities during the year included the organization of a meeting on African producers' associations to discuss ways of strengthening their bargaining power in the commodity trade field. The meeting developed lines of strategy for future development of producers' associations and the creation of new ones, as well as a mechanism for the co-ordination of producers' associations at regional and interregional levels.

Also, ECA assisted activities aimed at the promotion of intra-African monetary and financial co-operation, and the restructuring of financial and monetary relations between African countries and the developed world. In this connexion, ECA organized a meeting of the working party of African governors and executive directors of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), held in preparation for the 1976 annual Fund/World Bank meeting. African views on the world financial and monetary situation and its impact on African countries were discussed and agreed upon at the meeting.

Natural resources

The Commission's second African meeting on energy was held in Accra, Ghana, in November. It analysed energy resources in Africa and discussed co-operation in energy development, training of manpower, technical assistance, environmental aspects of energy utilization and development in Africa.

A number of projects were prepared on the development of non-conventional sources of energy, an inventory of energy resources and the development of electrical energy in Africa. Studies continued on the status of the human environment, especially in connexion with desertification and the supply of water. In the field of remote sensing by satellite, a technical mission visited several African countries and drew up a report, which was discussed at an intergovernmental meeting in September 1976. It was decided to establish two ground receiving stations in satellite imagery in Kinshasa, Zaire, and Ouagadougou, Upper Volta, and five trainer and user assistance centres in Kinshasa, Ouagadougou, Nairobi, Ile-Ife (Nigeria) and Cairo (Egypt). A meeting to discuss the legal and financial framework for the African Remote-Sensing Council was to be convened in 1977.

In September 1976, ECA held a regional meeting in preparation for the United Nations Water Conference, scheduled for 1977; it discussed water resource development and recommended action programmes. In August, an agreement establishing the East African Mineral Resources Development Centre in the United Republic of Tanzania came into force. The Regional Centre for Training in Aerial Surveys, at Ile-Ife, held its first graduation ceremony in June, awarding diplomas in photogrammetry and photo-interpretation to students from 11 African countries. The Centre also sponsored students for study abroad on fellowships awarded through bilateral assistance.

The African Association of Cartography was established in 1976, with headquarters in Algeria. The Cartographic Inventory for Africa project, financed by a grant from Canada, continued through 1976. Data were collected in eastern Africa on topographical and topical mapping and geodetic work. Also established in 1976 was the African Regional Standards Organization, with headquarters at Accra.

Population

During the year, ECA pursued its major objective of enhancing demographic knowledge in the region. Studies were completed on: fertility levels, trends and differentials in Africa and their implications for social and economic development; fertility, education and population growth in selected African countries; and rural exodus in the Central African Empire. Also completed were two studies on migration to Accra and Lagos (Nigeria) and case studies on the Ivory Coast and Kenya.

Mali, Mauritania, Senegal and the United Republic of Cameroon conducted a population census in 1976, bringing the number of countries which have conducted censuses under the African Census Programme to 17.

The Commission continued sending experts to the Regional Training Institute for Population

Studies at Accra, and to the Institut de Formation et de Recherche Démographique at Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon. Other assistance was given to the East African Statistical Training Centre at Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, and to the Ivory Coast, which had requested preparation of a project for the supply of experts and fellowships to the Ecole Statistique d'Abidjan, Ivory Coast.

Mali, Rwanda and Zaire received ECA assistance for their demographic statistical work. Demographic surveys were organized at the request of Nigeria to provide initial information for the planning of a new capital.

Several issues of the African Census Programme Newsletter and the African Population Newsletter were published during the year. Population Studies, Series No. 2 was published in English.

Social development

Integrated rural development programmes were a major concern of ECA during 1976. Workshops were organized to improve the quality of rural life, seminars were held and advisory services provided on national machineries to accelerate integration of women in development, and study tours were organized to evaluate rural development programmes. A female task force volunteer programme was launched to train women in special skills.

Work continued on developing the youth and national development programmes. Priority was given to the formulation of guidelines to assist member Governments in promoting and developing youth policies and programmes aimed at social integration and increasing employment opportunities.

Publications included: a study on family welfare and development in Africa, with particular emphasis on policy formulation, programme planning and implementation; an up-to-date study on the African social situation; and the quarterly Rural Development Newsletter and African Women.

Statistics

The Commission's statistical work programme continued to focus on the development and co-ordination of national statistical services and the development of a centralized statistical service for the African region.

Advisory services on national accounts and demographic statistics were provided, and statistical training was given at several statistical institutes. A regional data bank was developed, and a household survey programme was formulated. The data bank was to include a comprehensive documentation reference service, in addition to statistics in demographic, social and economic fields.

During the year, ECA continued to publish the Statistical Newsletter, the Statistical and Economic Information Bulletin and the Statistical Yearbook for Africa.

Transport, communications and tourism

A Conference of Ministers of Transport of Central Africa, held in September 1976, set up a co-ordinating council for integrated transport development in the subregion.

A report was prepared on the establishment of a compensation fund for the export of ground-nuts from land-locked member countries of the African Ground-nut Council.

Field studies on road standards, maintenance and construction were undertaken in the Gambia and in the United Republic of Cameroon. At an ECA meeting at Addis Ababa, the routing and alignment of the Trans-East African Highway (Cairo to Gaborone, Botswana) were agreed on. The Co-ordinating Committee for the Trans-African Highway (Mombasa, Kenya, to Lagos) met at Kinshasa, in September, establishing the Trans-African Highway Authority at Bangui, Central African Empire.

A study on causes of port congestion in Africa was undertaken and published.

Representatives of port management associations of Africa met with United Nations agencies to discuss problems and possibilities for assistance.

In the area of tourism, advisory missions were undertaken in Benin, the Ivory Coast, the Niger, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo, Uganda and the Upper Volta, and recommendations for action were drawn up. In Senegal, a study was made of current conditions in international tourism and their repercussions on the tourism business.

The Co-ordinating Committee for the implementation of the Pan-African Telecommunication Network met at Geneva, Switzerland, in May 1976, to review progress in attracting funds for the remaining 7,000 kilometres of the 24,000 kilometres of route. The Committee also discussed plans for completing surveys for the third stage, covering an additional 26,000 kilometres of route.

In May 1976, a second mission was undertaken to Georgetown, Guyana, at the request of the Action Programme for Economic Co-operation (among developing countries), to give advice on the establishment of information and communication systems for trade and commerce in developing countries.

In co-operation with OAU, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Telecommunication Union, ECA organized a seminar in Addis Ababa in September/October to exchange knowledge and experience in satellite communication and to review progress in the development of a co-operative regional action programme in the use of space communication for education and development.

Decision by Economic and Social Council

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, without adopting a formal resolution, took note of the report of the Economic Commission for Africa for the period 1 March 1975 to 29 February 1976. The Council also amended ECA's terms of reference to add the following States as members of the Commission: Botswana, Cape Verde, the Comoros, Equatorial Guinea, the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Mauritius, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, Swaziland and Zambia. This action was taken by approving decision 186(LXI), without a vote, at the suggestion of the Council President.

The Economic Commission for Western Asia

In 1976, the implementation of the 1976-1977 work programme of the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) continued to be adversely affected by the prolongation of the hostilities in Lebanon, which resulted in the evacuation of staff members and a freeze on recruitments. Some projects were therefore carried over to the next biennium.

The third session of ECWA was held at Doha, Qatar, from 10 to 15 May 1976. It was decided to move headquarters temporarily from Beirut, Lebanon, to Amman, Jordan, for a period of one year. In July, the Commission started operating in Amman. At a special session held in Doha on 22 and 23 August, the Commission adopted a resolution by which it decided to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that the site of ECWA's permanent headquarters be established at Baghdad, Iraq.

By other resolutions adopted at its May session, ECWA decided, inter alia: to extend assistance for the co-ordination of efforts made for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon; to continue, intensify and expand training and advisory services in public finance and administration in favour of the least developed countries of the region; to carry out a study on the economic and social situation and potential of the entire Palestinian Arab people; to urge the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) to furnish material support to start a population census of the Palestinian Arab people; to establish a voluntary fund for economic and social development of the least developed member States of the region; and to co-operate with the United Nations Environment Programme in connexion with the protection of the environment and the promotion of environmental awareness in the region.

Development planning

During the year, ECWA prepared its third progress report on the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.<sup>1</sup>

The Commission also started to prepare studies on the long-term trends in and forecasts of the economic development of the ECWA region.

Work continued on a "brain drain" study; arrangements were made with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) for coverage of the Arab countries in Africa.

In 1976, the Euro-Arab dialogue was continued, and discussions were held with the League of Arab States on areas of possible ECWA assistance and on ways and means of co-operation between the two organizations.

Within the framework of the multilateral trade negotiations being held under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the Commission prepared a paper analysing the structure of trade barriers facing products of export interest to the ECWA countries in three developed markets. The Commission continued work during the year on the public finance profiles of ECWA member countries and on the evaluation of Government budgetary systems and practices in ECWA member countries and the need for reform in those areas.

A survey on the use of computers and computer-based management techniques in Jordan, Kuwait and the Syrian Arab Republic was completed for submission by ECWA and the International Labour Organisation to the three countries concerned in the area.

In the field of economic co-operation, ECWA prepared a paper on the promotion of economic co-operation among developing countries, and assisted in the preparation of a position paper on the role of the regional commissions in economic co-operation among developing countries.

The Regional Project for Public Finance and Administration continued its activities during the year. A training course was held in Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, in May-June 1976 for finance officers from Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Oman, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen. In addition, three country-based training programmes were organized on various aspects of public finance, focusing on the local needs and the operational field activities.

A paper on employment problems in countries of Western Asia was prepared by ECWA in collaboration with ECA and submitted to the preparatory meeting for the 1976 World Employment Conference held in Tunis, Tunisia, in May 1976. The Commission also prepared a report reviewing economic and social conditions in the ECWA region, including growth of output, prices, sectoral developments (agriculture, manufacturing and petroleum), external trade and payments, planning, the social situation and regional and interregional co-operation.

An agreement was signed between the Centre on Transnational Corporations and ECWA to establish within ECWA a joint unit on transnational corporations.

During the year, advisory services and assistance were extended to Lebanon to co-ordinate reconstruction and development after cessation of hostilities. A project was prepared by ECWA for the United Nations Inter-Disciplinary Advisory Team to Lebanon which was expected to assist with policy decisions on economic and social problems, help prepare a comprehensive medium-term plan, and prepare the ground for studies on Lebanon's development prospects and growth under conditions of economic and social stability.

Food and agriculture

The agriculture division, organized jointly with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), focused activities in 1976 on the following: establishment of a reliable data system, starting with the preparation of an annual review and appraisal of agricultural development in the region; improvement of agricultural planning, including a study of the long-term agricultural potential for East Jordan, a policy framework for irrigation-water charges in Yemen and participation in the FAO Country Programming Development Mission to Iraq; enhancing food security, continuing the study on short-term possibilities for expanding food production and completing a pilot study on food security in East Jordan; promotion of agricultural integration; and identification of investment opportunities, with participation in a mission to Democratic Yemen launched by the FAO/International Bank for Reconstruction and Development Investment Centre.

In addition, ECWA prepared a contribution to the United Nations Conference on Desertification and participated in a training course on agricultural planning organized by the Arab Planning Institute for Social and Economic Development.

Industrial development

Work continued in 1976 on a techno-economic study for the development of the fertilizer industry in the Arab world, which was a joint project of ECWA, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Industrial Development Centre for Arab Studies.

Missions were undertaken to Iraq to assist the Government in preparing a master plan for the chemical industry. The Commission also provided advisory services to Jordan to assess and formulate the prospects of export-oriented industries.

At the request of the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development, ECWA drew up a programme for a study of the regional farm machinery project.

The Commission also participated in seminars on petrochemicals, on industrial development, on the sugar industry, and on the fertilizer industry.

Natural resources, science and technology

Water resources continued to be of major concern to ECWA during the year. The first basic study was completed on the development of water resources in the ECWA region. A regional meeting was held at Baghdad from 11 to 16 December 1976, in preparation for the 1977 United Nations Water Conference. Country reports were submitted by member countries, and a draft regional report was prepared by ECWA and adopted by its member countries.

A survey report was completed on the development of mineral resources in the region. The report was based on the results of missions to almost all ECWA countries.

Energy resources were assessed under a project on basic energy statistics and review of developments in the energy and oil sector in the ECWA region. Visits were made to member countries to identify priorities and problem areas in energy resources development. The Commission also provided advisory services to Democratic Yemen on the legal aspects of oil refining.

The science and technology programme included the preparation of a report on the status of science and technology in the ECWA region, based on information gathered during visits to all ECWA member countries in late 1975 and early 1976.

The Commission also participated in the Conference of Ministers of Arab States Responsible for the Application of Science and Technology to Development, held at Rabat, Morocco, from 16 to 25 August 1976.

Population

In 1976, data collection was one of the main activities of the population programme. The results of the 1975 socio-demographic survey of five cities in Oman were processed and analysed. In addition, demographic and related socio-economic data were compiled and analysed for all countries of the ECWA region. Data sheets containing recent and reliable data on 53 indicators (relating to population, labour force and education) for each country were reproduced and disseminated during the year.

A seminar on demographic data collection and analysis was held in Amman from 30 October to 10 November 1976. Advisory missions were undertaken to the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen. At the request of the two Governments, these missions assisted in the evaluation and streamlining of the national population programmes and in formulating project requests for financing by UNFPA.

Transport, tourism and communications

In 1976, a preliminary survey was conducted of port facilities in nine ECWA member countries.

Advisory services were rendered to Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic on improving the railroad system and on training staff.

In Amman, a feasibility study on road maintenance and improvement was conducted, and the Jordan National Planning Council was advised on port expansion in Aqaba and new highway construction.

At the request of the Abu Dhabi Fund for Arab

Economic Development, advisory services were provided on the feasibility and evaluation of a port project in the Comoros, and the Government of Yemen was advised on maritime national policies.

Social development and human settlements

The final report of a case study on the situation and needs of youth in Democratic Yemen and in Yemen was completed in 1976. Work continued on the participation and integration of Arab women in industrial development. Quantitative data were collected on women's educational, social, legal and employment status in the ECWA region.

The Commission participated in an interagency meeting on the rehabilitation of the disabled, held in Geneva, Switzerland, in December 1976. It was planned to start providing advisory services on rehabilitation to ECWA countries, especially to Lebanon.

The social aspects of integrated rural development projects were studied in Democratic Yemen and in Yemen. Other studies included two socio-economic surveys of the north-eastern Badia region of Jordan, and a report on training and research for social development in the ECWA region.

In addition, ECWA provided advisory services: to Bahrain, on a study project of the needs of children and youth; to Iraq, on the socio-economic returns of national literacy; and to Jordan, on the planning of the Centre for Community Development. Work was also started on a study evaluating housing finance in the ECWA region and a project document was prepared for a regional institution for urban development in the Arab States.

Statistics

A study of comparative real income and costs of living in ECWA countries was initiated during the year. In an effort to help member countries adopt sound pricing policies and obtain international real product and purchasing power comparisons, ECWA drafted a paper on an integrated system of price and quantity statistics and a system of international comparisons of gross product and purchasing power in the ECWA region. The Commission also assisted ECWA countries in the implementation of the United Nations System of National Accounts.

Technical assistance

Direct technical assistance was also rendered to the ECWA countries. The Commission provided regional advisers in the fields of human resources development, statistics and national accounts, transport and communication development, population statistics, social aspects of population policies, and industrial project formulation and evaluation.

Decision by Economic and Social Council

At its mid-1976 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the report on the third session of ECWA. On 5 August 1976, the Council, at the suggestion of its President, approved, without a vote, decision 187(LXI), by which it took note of the report and the resolutions therein, and endorsed amendments to the Commission's programme of work and priorities.

Later in the year, the Council adopted a resolution—2045(LXI)—by which it decided to establish the permanent headquarters of ECWA at Baghdad.

Resolution 2045(LXI) was adopted without a vote on 27 October 1976, on the proposal of Democratic Yemen and Pakistan.

Regional co-operation

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution on the strengthening of the regional commissions for regional and interregional co-operation. By the preamble to this resolution, the Council, inter alia, noted that slow but steady progress had been made in the decentralization of operational activities and that the regional commissions had been adapting their work programmes and activities to conform to decisions taken by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions and to the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States adopted on 12 December 1974.<sup>2</sup>

By the operative paragraphs, the Council reaffirmed that the regional commissions should be enabled fully to play their role as the main general economic and social development centres within the United Nations system for their respective regions and it called upon all the organizations and agencies in the system to work closely with the regional commissions.

The Council affirmed, without prejudice to the special needs and conditions of each region and to the outcome of the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System, and having regard to a General Assembly decision of 11 December 1970 concerning intercountry development programming,<sup>3</sup> that the regional commissions should, as defined in Joint Inspection Unit recommendations, exercise team leadership and responsibility for intersectoral co-ordination and co-operation at the regional level, with the active support of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and of regional offices.

The Council asked the Ad Hoc Committee on Restructuring to consider, inter alia, the following options: (1) the designation of the regional commissions as team leaders with responsibilities for the co-operation and co-ordination of intersectoral programmes at the regional level; (2) their designation also as executing agencies of UNDP for future United Nations intersectoral, subregional, regional and interregional projects and the inclusion of the commissions in the list of executing agencies for the implementation of such projects; (3) the delegation in full to the regional commissions of executing agency functions for existing intersectoral, subregional and regional operational activities of the United Nations; (4) the organization of regular meetings of the regional commissions to improve the co-ordination of the economic and social activities of the United Nations system in their respective regions; and (5) arrangements for ensuring that regional views were duly reflected in the debates in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee of the General Assembly.

In addition, the Council asked the Secretary-General to make provisions to enable the regional commissions to continue to carry out their activities effectively, and to consider arranging for their Executive Secretaries to be present during the consideration of their budgets.

It recommended that the executive heads of such global organizations as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme and the specialized agencies should intensify their co-operation with the secretariats of the regional commissions to make them centres for the formulation, co-ordination and implementation of programmes for the promotion of co-operation among States members of the commissions.

The Council asked the regional commissions to formulate a programme of work and priorities for their respective regions in the field of co-operation among developing countries, bearing in mind the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries to be held at Mexico City, Mexico, in September 1976 and the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries to be held in Argentina in 1977.

The Council also requested the Secretary-General to submit, for consideration at its mid-1977 session—taking into account the financial implications involved—proposals for strengthening the secretariats of the regional commissions to enable them effectively to promote co-operation among developing countries.

The Council's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 2043(LXI), adopted without a

Recalling its many resolutions, as well as those of the General Assembly, on the decentralization of economic and social activities and the strengthening of the regional commissions, including General Assembly resolutions 1709(XVI) of 19 December 1961 and 1823(XVII) of 18 December 1962 and Council resolutions 793(XXX) of 3 August 1960, 1442(XLVII) of 31 July 1969, 1756(LIV) of 16 May 1973, 1896(LVII) of 1 August 1974 and 1952(LIX) of 23 July 1975,

Noting that slow but steady progress has been made in the decentralization of operational activities through the arrangements made between the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the Secretary-General for the regional commissions to be executing agencies for subregional, regional and interregional projects under the conditions indicated in Council resolutions 1896(LVII) and 1952(LIX),

Other matters concerning regional economic and social activities

Regional support for improving human settlements

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 2040(LXI), took note of the report of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, which was held at Vancouver, Canada, from 31 May to 11 June 1976.

The Council called upon the United Nations regional commissions and urged all other international organizations within and outside the United Nations system to take intensified and sustained action in support of national efforts to improve human settlements. It recommended to the General Assembly that the Secretary-General be requested to convene regional meetings to establish guidelines for the co-ordination, within each region, of action to be taken in order to deal with human settlements, and to report to the Assembly on the results on their deliberations. ## Chapter XVII

United Nations disaster relief

In 1976, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) opened a Co-ordination Centre which was designed to strengthen UNDRO's capability as a clearing-house for disaster information and to facilitate international disaster relief co-ordination. Attention focused on the economic impact of disasters in disaster-prone developing countries. Special projects, technical advisory missions and the dissemination of information on technological developments helped to increase understanding of the importance of protective measures and to promote implementation of disaster preparedness and prevention in disaster-prone developing countries.

Emergency relief assistance was mobilized and co-ordinated in 16 disaster situations in 1976. For this, $194,555 was allocated from the United Nations regular budget and $2,034,203 was channelled through UNDRO in the form of voluntary contributions.

Assistance activities in 1976*Aid to Sudano-Sahelian populations

In 1976, the total number of priority projects for which the United Nations Sahelian Office (UNSO) was requested to mobilize resources rose from 52 to 90. Financial requirements for the projects totalled $400 million, of which about $180 million was raised by UNSO through commitments of bilateral donors and by contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities.

The projects were concerned with the development of agriculture and provided for seed multiplication, fertilizers, crop production, pesticides, agricultural tools and irrigation. The projects also aimed at the improvement of hydraulic resources, livestock, feeder road systems, forest resources, agro-meteorological and hydrological services, telecommunications, fisheries, storage facilities, vocational training and health services.

A number of priority projects were implemented through the utilization of the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities.

Among the projects which were completed or being implemented in 1976 in the member States of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel (Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta) were programmes for the construction and maintenance of feeder roads, the development of rural telecommunications and a radio broadcasting system and the conduct of a regional seminar on forest development. Also included were the development and strengthening of regional and national agro-meteorological and hydrological services, the planning of an inventory of all water points and earth dams in the region, a plan for the reconstitution of livestock herds in Chad, and a plan for the integration and development of continued fishery resources.

In Cape Verde, a series of underground waterworks was constructed and improved seeds for food crops were provided. In Mauritania, an integrated system of food-grain storage facilities was being developed, pumping equipment installed, and a maintenance and control system in a series of deep-bore wells set up. Other projects included the implementation of an integrated plan for water control in the northern littoral of Senegal and the development of a series of cattle watering points in the Gambia.

In October 1976, the Secretary-General announced the transfer of UNSO from the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), giving full responsibility for the administration, control and operation of the Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities to the Administrator of UNDP.

In November, at the request of the Permanent Inter-State Committee, UNSO launched a second campaign for resource mobilization in support of the Committee's medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme.

In October 1976, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the situation in the Sudano-Sahelian region to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. The Secretary-General reviewed the activities of UNSO and the Permanent Inter-State Committee. He noted the increase in priority projects and continuing co-operation with other agencies of the United Nations system, such as the Economic Commission for Africa and the Food and Agriculture Organization (seed multiplication plans), the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (strengthening local capacity for the manufacture of agricultural tools and equipment).

On 25 October 1976, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the report of the Secretary-General, decided to take note of the report and to transmit it to the General Assembly. This action was set forth in Council decision 194(LXI), adopted, without a vote, on the proposal of the President.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly expressed its profound gratitude for the support given to the recovery and rehabilitation programme for the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region, and urged all Governments, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental and private organizations and individuals to respond favourably and in a continuing manner to requests for assistance. The Assembly also requested UNSO to continue its close co-operation with the Permanent Inter-State Committee and its efforts to ensure co-ordination between United Nations programmes and bodies. Finally, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue his action aimed at mobilizing the financial resources necessary for the implementation of projects identified by the member States of the Permanent Inter-State Committee.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/180, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text without a vote on 30 November 1976. The text was sponsored by Bolivia, Brazil, Cape Verde, Chad, Egypt, Ethiopia, the Gambia, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, the Netherlands, the Niger, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, the Sudan, Swaziland, Tunisia, Uganda, the United States and the Upper Volta. #### Aid to Ethiopia

In May 1976, heavy rains caused flooding in the southern part of Hararge Province in Ethiopia. Several villages were under water; the maize crop suffered substantial losses. Relief activities undertaken by the Government posed logistical problems. A $10,000 allocation by UNDR0 helped pay fuel costs for the helicopters bringing supplies to isolated villages and refugee camps.

A shortage of rainfall during the 1976 growing season in other parts of Ethiopia (Tigre, Wollo and the Rift Valley) was expected to result in crop failures for 1977. The Government requested UNDR0 to issue an appeal for equipment to upgrade the capacity of the ports of Assab and Djibouti for commercial and food aid imports. A joint mission was undertaken by UNDR0 with the World Food Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) to assess food requirements and internal transport conditions.

In April 1976, the Secretary-General reported to the Economic and Social Council on the economic and social conditions of the people in the drought-stricken areas. He noted that there had been short-term improvements in the general situation due to satisfactory harvests, but that much depended on the adequacy of the 1976 rainy season. Food distribution requirements, the Secretary-General stated, were estimated at 5,000 tons per month during 1976. He stressed the need for a renewed commitment by the international community to Ethiopian rehabilitation and recovery, as the fundamental causes of the recent famines still existed.

On 6 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution by which it noted with concern that the emergency conditions of the drought situation had not all been alleviated, and that many drought-sensitive parts of the country could revert to being a disaster area. Noting also that close to a million people were still dependent on relief assistance, the Council requested the Administrator of UNDP, in collaboration with all appropriate United Nations organs, specialized agencies and Member States, to intensify their response to the needs for recovery, rehabilitation and development of the drought-stricken areas.

The Council's decisions were embodied in resolution 1986(LX), which was sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Colombia, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Togo, Uganda, Yugoslavia and Zambia. The resolution was adopted without a vote, after an oral drafting amendment by Liberia was accepted by the other sponsors.

In September 1976, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the emergency-related aspects of the drought. The report reviewed the progress made in the implementation of all relevant resolutions regarding assistance to the drought-affected areas, and noted that, on the basis of information available to UNDR0 on 12 August 1976, the cumulative value of contributions from the international community for relief and rehabilitation exceeded $300 million.

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which it urged UNDR0, UNDP and other United Nations organizations and specialized agencies to continue and intensify their assistance to Ethiopia. The Assembly also appealed to all Member States, voluntary agencies and intergovernmental organizations to continue and increase their assistance to Ethiopia, and invited the Secretary-General, the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the Administrator of UNDP to report to it on implementation.

The Assembly's decisions were embodied in resolution 31/172, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee. The Second Committee approved the draft resolution without a vote on 3 December 1976, as sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, Chad, Colombia, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, the Gambia, Ghana, India, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

Aid to Madagascar

In the wake of a series of seasonal cyclones which swept over Madagascar between December 1975 and March 1976, UNDR0 received a Government request on 4 March 1976 for communications equipment and medical supplies, which was met by an emergency allocation from UNDR0 and UNDP.

At its April-May 1976 session, the Economic and Social Council was informed of the cyclone damage in Madagascar and of a drought affecting the rice-producing areas. The World Food Programme had allocated 11,000 tons of wheat for the victims. An UNDR0 report recommended medium- and long-term measures for the permanent reconstruction of the affected areas, in particular aid to the Government in establishing priorities for rebuilding infrastructure and installations essential to the economic development of the country.

On 6 May 1976, the Council adopted a resolution by which it noted the assistance provided by several countries and international organizations to meet the most urgent needs, and the vigorous efforts made by the Government of Madagascar to relieve the suffering of the cyclone and drought victims.

The Council also urged all Member States to participate in relief operations and to intensify their efforts and co-operation in medium-term and longer-term measures for rehabilitation and reconstruction. It requested all international organizations and voluntary agencies to lend their support to efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General and by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to mobilize relief and assistance. The Council expressed the hope that UNDP, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), and all other international financial institutions would give favourable and urgent consideration to requests for assistance, and requested the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the resolution.

The Council's decisions were set forth in resolution 1985(LX), adopted without a vote. It was sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Malaysia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Romania, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

(For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In accordance with the Council's request, the Secretary-General, on 13 July 1976, submitted a report on measures to be taken following the cyclone and drought in Madagascar. He noted that the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator had continued to monitor the developments in Madagascar and that relief supplies were delivered to the population. He also noted that the Government of Madagascar had improved its national organization for relief, but that a planned programme of assistance in reconstruction, or in the promotion of better construction methods, would lead to reduced need for relief operations in the future.

Aid to Guatemala

On 4 and 6 February 1976, major earthquakes occurred in Guatemala, killing over 22,000 people and injuring 77,000. Almost 1.5 million people were rendered homeless. It was estimated that the total amount of damage caused by the earthquake was $748 million, and that the reconstruction and replacement costs would amount to $1,000 million.

To meet the most urgent needs, such as caring for the injured, shelter and drinking water, most donors made cash donations, as all needed supplies were available in the Americas. The donations were made through UNDR0, the League of Red Cross Societies, or bilaterally to the Government of Guatemala.

On 6 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council, after examining reports on the situation, adopted a resolution by which it expressed its deep sorrow to the people and Government of Guatemala at the loss of life and damage to the economy. It urged the specialized agencies and United Nations bodies to allocate the most extensive possible financial, technical and other resources for the purpose of responding to requests from Guatemala with a view to planning and implementing programmes for national reconstruction. The Council also requested UNDP to take steps to provide special technical assistance, expressed the desire that the World Bank and all other regional and international financial institutions, in particular the International Development Association and the Inter-American Development Bank, give urgent consideration to requests for assistance from Guatemala in connexion with its programmes and projects for national reconstruction, and decided to keep the matter under review.

The Council's decisions were embodied in resolution 1984(LX), adopted without a vote; the text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Iran, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Malaysia, Mexico, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Romania, Uganda, the United States, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

Other assistance activities

In March 1976, parts of Afghanistan were affected by an earthquake and floods, killing about 50 people and causing heavy damage to buildings and irrigation systems. An allocation of $20,000 was provided by UNDR0.

A cargo aircraft crashed into a main street of Santa Cruz, Bolivia, in October 1976, killing the crew and 102 others. Urgent medical needs were met by a $12,000 UNDR0 grant.

Heavy rains in June and July 1976 made 200,000 people homeless in Burma. Blankets were purchased with a $20,000 contribution by UNDR0.

As part of the United Nations response to a General Assembly resolution of 8 December 1975,<sup>1</sup> an UNDR0 mission visited the Comoros in May 1976. An appeal was launched for food and medical supplies, and assistance channelled through UNDR0 totalled $736,067. A request for longer-term aid was made by the General Assembly in December 1976. (See also p. 189.)

A series of seismic shocks occurred in Ecuador in October 1976, making about 20,000 people homeless. A survey of shelter needs and the purchase of roofing materials were financed with an $11,000 UNDR0 allocation.

In November 1976, floods killed 20 people and made 15,000 homeless in Honduras. An UNDR0 contribution of $10,000 was to help meet emergency health needs, together with a Government allocation of $8,000 channelled through UNDR0.

Two severe earthquakes occurred in a remote mountain area of Irian Jaya in Indonesia in June and July 1976. About 420 people were killed and 8,000 relied on food supplies brought in by air. An earthquake shook Bali in July, killing over 500 people and causing heavy damage. Emergency relief was co-ordinated by UNDR0, and $20,000 was provided for immediate needs of the victims. The total value of assistance provided by United Nations agencies amounted to $270,000.

An earthquake killed 1,000 people and caused heavy damage in the Friuli region of Italy in May 1976. An UNDR0 allocation of $20,000 was made to the League of Red Cross Societies for use in relief operations, though the Italian Government did not request international assistance.

A hurricane struck western Mexico in October 1976. About 1,000 people lost their lives; 100,000 were left without shelter. Medical supplies and air-freight costs totalling $7,500 were channelled through UNDR0.

Over 3 million acres of farmland were flooded in Pakistan due to heavy rains in July 1976; 300 people lost their lives and about 1.5 million people had to leave their homes. A contribution of $19,683 was made by UNDR0 for emergency health assistance.

A typhoon brought torrential rains to the island of Luzon in the Philippines in May 1976. Over 200 people were killed by floods and more than 600,000 evacuated. An emergency feeding programme was established, to which UNDR0 contributed $20,000. The World Food Programme allocated over $1 million to this programme.

In August 1976 an earthquake caused a tsunami which devastated fishing villages on Mindanao Island in the Philippines, killing over 4,000 people and leaving over 100,000 homeless. An UNDR0 grant of $20,000 helped to meet emergency shelter needs. The World Food Programme launched food-for-work projects in the affected areas and FAO assisted in the rehabilitation of the fisheries sector.

A serious epidemic of viral haemorrhagic fever was reported in the Sudan and Zaire in October 1976. The World Health Organization launched an emergency operation at a cost of $100,000, part of which was financed by a contribution of $50,000 channelled through UNDR0.

In November 1976, an earthquake killed nearly 4,000 people and made 50,000 homeless in Van province, Turkey. A list of emergency needs was distributed by UNDR0; by mid-December these needs had been met and the victims were installed in winterized tents financed by international contributions.

Strengthening the Office of the Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

Co-operation in the promotion of disaster preparedness and prevention was expanded during 1976 with other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. Also, UNDR0 expanded its technical co-operation activities, particularly assistance to Governments for the elaboration of national plans for disaster preparedness and advice on longer-term disaster-prevention measures. By the end of 1976, technical advisory missions had been sent to 23 countries, and five missions were in preparation.

Disaster preparedness and prevention were also promoted through the dissemination of scientific and technological information. This included publication of monographs on disaster prevention and mitigation, continuation of work on the World Survey of Disaster Damage and expanded participation in international meetings. Activities included the formulation of a programme for the application of remote sensing by satellite to disaster damage assessment, preparedness and prevention, in co-operation with other United Nations bodies, and a study project on the provision of emergency shelter and related services in disaster situations.

Financing the activities of the Office of Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

In July 1976, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Economic and Social Council on the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator. Particular attention was given to the question of the future financing of the Office. The Secretary-General noted that governmental response to requests for voluntary contributions had been gratifying, amounting to more than $1.7 million as at 31 March 1976. These contributions had financed the strengthened capability of the Office. Substantial progress had been made with respect to disaster prevention and preparedness, and technical co-operation activities had been expanded.

On 3 August, the Economic and Social Council, recalling the General Assembly's decision of 29 November 1974<sup>2</sup> to review the method of financing the Office of the Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in the light of experience, called upon member Governments to support the trust fund for UNDRO operations and recommended that the Assembly take up the question at its 1976 session.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2016(LXI), adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee. On 23 July 1976, the Committee had approved the draft resolution, without a vote, as sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Denmark, Jordan, Malaysia, Norway, Pakistan, Thailand, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Kingdom and the United States. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly commended the Co-ordinator for the progress made in strengthening the capacity of his Office and observed that there was need to maintain the core programme of the Office. It requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly, at its 1977 session, proposals for a continued sound financial basis for the core programme, which were to include proposals for a transfer of appropriate costs from voluntary funding to the United Nations regular budget.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General, in formulating the draft programme budget for 1978-1979, to include provision for financing from the regular budget a substantial portion of those core-programme administrative activities currently financed from the trust fund, as an initial step in the process of ensuring a sound financial basis for UNDRO. It decided to maintain the trust fund for a further two-year period from 1 January 1978.

The Assembly appealed for contributions to the trust fund and requested the Economic and Social Council to undertake in 1978 a review of alternative sources of funding for the technical co-operation activities of the Office which it had called for in 1975. It invited the Secretary-General to submit a report on possible sources of such financing. The Assembly decided to examine further the question of future financial arrangements for the Office at its 1977 session, with a view to reaching definitive conclusions at that time.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/173, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved the draft resolution without objection on 3 December 1976. It was sponsored by Austria, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, the Philippines, Portugal, the Sudan, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States. #### AID TO ETHIOPIA

Economic and Social Council—60th session
Plenary meetings 1994, 1995, 1997.

E/5762 and Corr.1. Assistance to drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia. Report of Secretary-General.

E/L.1715. Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Colombia, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Togo, Uganda, Yugoslavia, Zambia: draft resolution.

Resolution 1986(LX), as proposed by 18 powers, E/L.1715, and as orally amended by sponsors, adopted without vote by Council on 6 May 1976, meeting 1995.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General submitted to the Council pursuant to General Assembly resolution 3441(XXX) of 9 December 1975 on the progress made in the implementation of all relevant resolutions regarding assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia,

Noting with concern that the report indicates that not only have all the conditions characterizing the emergency drought situation not been alleviated but that the general situation still hangs in a delicate balance and that many of the drought-sensitive parts of the country could revert to being a disaster area,

Having heard the statement of the delegation of Ethiopia that close to a million people are still dependent on relief assistance,

Recognizing the enormous difficulties encountered in the process of rehabilitation and recovery, and the immense resources required,

Recognizing also that, after the emergency relief, unless urgent measures for rehabilitation and recovery are undertaken, the lives of the people affected by the drought will continue to be in jeopardy,

Taking note that, despite the measures undertaken by the Government of Ethiopia to deal with emergency relief and rehabilitation in the drought-stricken areas of the country, it still continues to face enormous economic difficulties in financing the short-term and long-term rehabilitation programmes,

Recalling its resolutions 1833(LVI) of 8 May 1974, 1876(LVII) of 16 July 1974 and 1971(LIX) of 30 July 1975, in which it, inter alia, called upon the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to respond to the requests of the Government of Ethiopia with regard to the immediate, medium-term and long-term needs of the drought-stricken areas, and appealed to the Governments of all Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to continue giving their fullest support and assistance in the Government's effort towards rehabilitation and recovery,

Noting that despite the generous assistance offered to the Government of Ethiopia by the Governments of Member States, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and other organizations of the United Nations system and voluntary agencies, the enormous difficulties of rehabilitation and recovery still persist,

1. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in collaboration with all appropriate United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and Member States, to intensify the response to the needs for recovery, rehabilitation and development of the drought-stricken areas, taking into account the Special Programme of emergency measures adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974;

2. Urges the United Nations and the specialized agencies to continue implementing vigorously the provisions of Council resolutions 1833(LVI), 1876(LVII) and 1971(LIX) and those of General Assembly resolution 3441(XXX);

3. Appeals to Governments of Member States and to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and all voluntary agencies to lend their continuing support to the measures undertaken by the Government of Ethiopia for the relief, rehabilitation and recovery of the drought-stricken areas;

4. Decides to keep the matter under review.

A/C.2/31/L.40. Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, Chad, Colombia, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, Gambia, Ghana, India, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia: draft resolution, as orally amended by sponsors, approved by consensus by Second Committee on 3 December 1976, meeting 59.

A/31/413. Report of Second Committee, draft resolution I.

Resolution 31/172, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/413, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,
Noting with deep concern the recent failure of rain during critical stages of the cropping season in parts of Ethiopia, Mindful of the demands made on the resources of the Government of Ethiopia,

Noting with appreciation the assistance given to Ethiopia by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Recognizing the relief and rehabilitation efforts made by the Government of Ethiopia,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1886(LX) of 6 May 1976, by which the Council requested the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to intensify the response to the needs for recovery, rehabilitation and development of the drought-stricken areas,

Further recalling its resolution 3441(XXX) of 9 December 1975, in which it urged the United Nations and the specialized agencies to continue to implement vigorously the provisions of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1833(LVI) of 8 May 1974, 1876(LVII) of 16 July 1974 and 1971(LIX) of 30 July 1975,

1. Urges the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the other United Nations organizations and specialized agencies to continue and intensify their assistance to Ethiopia in its relief and rehabilitation efforts in their respective areas of competence and to implement promptly the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 and 3441(XXX) of 9 December 1975, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1833(LVI), 1876(LVII), 1971(LIX) and 1986(LX);

2. Appeals to all Member States and voluntary agencies and intergovernmental organizations to continue and increase their assistance to Ethiopia;

3. Invites the Secretary-General, the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session and to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-second session on the implementation of paragraphs 1 and 2 above and of other relevant resolutions of the Assembly and the Council.

Resolution 1985(LX), as proposed by 25 powers, E/L.1712, adopted without vote by Council on 6 May 1976, meeting 1995.

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that the Democratic Republic of Madagascar has recently suffered the effects of tropical cyclones which have caused loss of life and considerable damage to the economy of the country,

Having heard the statement of the delegation of Madagascar on the periodicity and frequency of the cyclones which affect the countries situated in the south-western part of the Indian Ocean, and on the microclimatic factors peculiar to Madagascar, whose southern regions have been affected by a prolonged drought,

Recognizing that climatic hazards create in countries subject to seasonal disasters emergency situations having economic, social and structural consequences which seriously affect development,

Recalling the resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council concerning assistance in cases of natural disaster, particularly Assembly resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, 2959(XXVII) of 12 December 1972, 3243(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3440(XXX) of 9 December 1975 and 3510(XXX) of 15 December 1975 and Council resolution 1891(LVII) of 31 July 1974,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, in particular section X dealing with the Special Programme,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975, in which the Assembly, inter alia, appealed to the international community to give special attention to the phenomena of natural disasters,

Taking into account the fact that the assistance provided to all Member States stricken by natural disasters is an expression of the principle of international solidarity embodied in the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction the assistance provided by several countries and international organizations to meet the most urgent needs,

Noting also the vigorous efforts made by the Government of Madagascar to relieve the suffering of the victims of the cyclones and the drought,

1. Expresses its profound sympathy with the people and Government of Madagascar for the loss of life and the serious damage which the cyclones and drought have caused to the economy of the country;

2. Urges all Member States to participate in relief operations and, if possible, to intensify their efforts and co-operation with a view to instituting medium-term and long-term measures for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the areas affected by the cyclones and drought;

3. Requests all international organizations and voluntary agencies, particularly those most directly concerned, to lend their support and assistance, within the framework of their respective programmes, to all the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General and by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to mobilize relief and assistance, and also to examine urgently all requests for assistance made by the Government of Madagascar during the phase of rehabilitation and reconstruction, taking into account the principles set out in the Special Programme of emergency measures adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 3202(S-VI);

4. Expresses the hope that the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and all other international financial institutions will give favourable and urgent consideration to requests for assistance which the Government of Madagascar may submit under its rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes, and to requests for assistance designed to enable it, within the framework of its development plans, to adopt measures relating to programmes to provide warning of disasters and protection therefrom;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-first session.

The Economic and Social Council,

Observing with deep sorrow and concern that earthquakes of unprecedented intensity have recently caused serious loss of life and property in extensive areas of Guatemala,

Mindful of the efforts made by the United Nations system and by the international community as a whole in the relief work organized in conformity with the principle of international solidarity embodied in the Charter of the United Nations,

Observing also that, in addition to the death and injury suffered by thousands of persons, grave damage has been sustained by the Guatemalan infrastructure and economy,

Aware that, following the emergency relief effort, a second phase of reconstruction and rehabilitation will have to be initiated at enormous cost,

Recalling its resolution 1803(LV) of 7 August 1973 concerning assistance in cases of natural disaster and other disaster situations,

Recalling also the decision taken on 31 March 1976 by the Board of Governors of the United Nations Special Fund at its third session, in which it was provided that Guatemala should be included in the list of most seriously affected countries in accordance with section X of General Assembly resolution 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974,

1. Expresses its deep sorrow to the people and Government of Guatemala at the loss of life and the damage caused to the infrastructure and the economy by the earthquakes of 4 and 6 February 1976;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General and the statement by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator concerning the emergency aid provided to Guatemala both by the United Nations system and by the Member States;

3. Takes note also with satisfaction of the report submitted by the Economic Commission for Latin America on the damage caused by the earthquake in Guatemala and its repercussions on the country's economic and social development;

4. Urges the specialized agencies, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Children's Fund, other appropriate organizations and programmes, such as the World Food Programme, and the Economic Commission for Latin America, to allocate the most extensive possible financial, technical and other resources for the purpose of responding to requests made to them by the Government of Guatemala with a view to planning and implementing special programmes for national reconstruction;

5. Requests in particular the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, at its twenty-second session, to take urgent steps to provide special technical assistance, by means of the accelerated procedure already established, so as to assist the Government of Guatemala to carry out the process of national rehabilitation;

6. Expresses the desire that the World Bank and all other regional and international financial institutions, in particular the International Development Association and the Inter-American Development Bank, give urgent consideration to requests for assistance which the Government of Guatemala may submit in connexion with its programmes and projects for national reconstruction, particularly those of a medium-term and long-term nature, and act favourably on them under terms and arrangements consistent with the serious economic situation in which that country now finds itself;

7. Decides to keep the matter under review.

Recalling section II, paragraph 14, of its resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2016(LXI) of 3 August 1976, in which the Council recommended that the General Assembly at its thirty-first session should consider the most appropriate means for the financing, after 31 December 1977, of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

Aware that it would be desirable, for planning purposes, for the General Assembly to give guidance to the Secretary-General on the modalities for the future financing of the activities of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and of the further information given by the Co-ordinator in his statement to the Second Committee on 19 November 1976;

2. Commends the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and his staff for the progress made in strengthening the capacity of his Office with a view to providing an efficient world-wide service of mobilizing and co-ordinating disaster relief, including in particular the collection and dissemination of information on disaster assessment, priority needs and donor assistance;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, his proposals for a continued sound financial basis for the core programme, which should include proposals for the transfer, over a period of time, of appropriate costs from voluntary funding to the United Nations regular budget;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, in formulating his draft programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979, to include provision for the financing from the regular budget of a substantial portion of those core programme administrative activities currently financed from the trust fund established in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 3243(XXIX), as an initial step in the process of ensuring a sound financial basis for the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and to enable the Assembly to reach a final

6. Decides to maintain for a further two-year period from 1 January 1978 the trust fund established pursuant to its resolution 3243(XXIX), modified under resolutions 3440(XXX) and 3532(XXX), in order to ensure that the financial resources available to the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator remain adequate to meet the tasks entrusted to that Office;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General, in preparing his budgetary proposals referred to in paragraph 5 above, to take full account of the possibility of field co-ordination being undertaken, where appropriate, by the resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme with due consideration being given to the views expressed by the Government of the disaster-stricken country;

8. Appeals to all Governments to make contributions to the trust fund for a further two-year period;

9. Requests the Economic and Social Council to undertake in 1978 the review of alternative sources of funding for the technical co-operation activities of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator provided for in General Assembly resolution 3532(XXX);

10. Invites the Secretary-General to submit a report on possible sources of financing for such activities to assist the Economic and Social Council in this review;

11. Decides to examine further the question of future financial arrangements for the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator at its thirty-second session with a view to reaching definitive conclusions at that time.

Chapter XVIII

Assistance to refugees*Activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued in 1976 to provide international protection and material assistance to refugees. The Office also continued or undertook a number of special humanitarian assignments concerning such matters as the settlement of displaced persons of Indo-China, assisting refugees in Mozambique and co-ordinating United Nations humanitarian assistance for Cyprus. Special attention was given during the year to protecting the basic rights of refugees, notably the right to asylum. Efforts were also made to counter the increasing prevalence of refoulement (expulsion of or refusing entry to aliens).

Activities in 1976International protection*

As at 31 December 1976, the number of parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees rose to 68. The number of parties to the 1967 Protocol, which extended the coverage of the 1951 Convention to new groups of refugees, rose to 63. Co-operation with Governments proceeded in order to determine the status of refugees in accordance with the definition contained in the 1951 Convention and 1967 Protocol.

The number of States acceding to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons increased to 31, and the number of ratifications of the 1973 Protocol to the 1957 Agreement relating to Refugee Seamen rose to 11. The number of accessions to the 1969 Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa drawn up by the Organization of African Unity remained at 18 during the year.

The Office of the High Commissioner in 1976 pursued its efforts to secure the reunion of refugee families. Reunion was achieved by voluntary repatriation, by helping relatives of refugees to receive authorization to leave their country of origin, and by helping relatives of refugees to leave the country of asylum and gain admission to a country of resettlement.

During the year, lasting solutions to problems of refugees were aided by legislative and administrative changes facilitating refugee settlement in various countries, particularly in Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Kenya.

In Europe, at least 5,000 refugees acquired the nationality of their country of residence during 1976, and significant results in promoting naturalization were also obtained in Africa.

Material assistance programmes

During 1976, more than 350,000 refugees benefited from the UNHCR regular assistance programme, the majority of them in Africa. Assistance continued to focus on solutions through voluntary repatriation, integration within host countries, or resettlement through migration. Emergency relief was provided to new refugees.

Nearly $14 million was committed under the UNHCR assistance programme in 1976, supplemented by allocations of more than $1.8 million under the High Commissioner's Emergency Fund. In addition, $12.7 million was committed from special trust funds, including allocations from the Refugee Education Account. Governments also made substantial supporting contributions.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN AFRICA

At the end of 1976, the number of refugees of concern to UNHCR in Africa was estimated at 1.2 million.

Special measures were taken to provide relief assistance to meet the needs of large influxes of refugees from Namibia, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) into Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique and Swaziland. Programmes for refugees continued in Burundi, Ethiopia, Senegal, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire and Zambia. A programme of humanitarian assistance was launched in 1976 for some 20,000 Sahrawi refugees in Algeria, and UNHCR pursued its efforts to assist the Governments of Angola, Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique with the return and resettlement of former refugees and persons displaced inside those countries.

Local, mainly rural, settlement programmes continued to provide a solution for the majority of refugees in Africa, helping refugees to achieve a level of self-sufficiency comparable to that of the local population. In 1976, one rural settlement was completed; other settlements, which had been established for several years, received assistance in agriculture, health and education.

The severe shortage of employment and resettlement opportunities continued to pose serious problems for individual refugees in urban centres who required assistance. Counselling services in African cities with refugee populations were strengthened to provide professional guidance and assistance regarding education, employment and resettlement.

More than $20.7 million was committed for assistance to refugees in Africa, of which $4.4 million was allocated to local settlement and $6.9 million to special operations. Trust funds, including the Education Account, made $6.6 million available for refugee assistance.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN ASIA AND WESTERN ASIA

Large groups of displaced persons received UNHCR assistance in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam, Thailand and in Lebanon. Under the 1976 programme, Hong Kong, India, Iran, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates received limited assistance related to health, vocational training and counselling needs. Temporary care and maintenance were also provided in a small number of cases.

The assistance programme in the Lao People's Democratic Republic helped rehabilitate about 350,000 persons, mainly through resettlement. Another 70,000 families were awaiting resettlement at the end of the year; it was hoped that the programme would be completed in 1977. Total UNHCR expenditures under this programme in 1976 amounted to $3.7 million.

At the request of the Government of Lebanon, UNHCR assisted in dealing with problems of displaced and needy persons in that country, whose number was estimated to exceed 2 million. Acting within the over-all framework established by the Secretary-General in February for special humanitarian assistance for Lebanon, UNHCR's programme of emergency assistance continued as and when availability of funds, transport and security conditions permitted.

Under the United Nations emergency assistance programme, UNHCR provided emergency shelter material, food, medical supplies and transport. Blankets and clothing were contributed by a voluntary agency. By the end of 1976, nearly $1 million had been expended for assistance in Lebanon.

Assistance programmes in the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam continued during the year, focusing on basic individual needs such as food, shelter, clothing, and restoring food production. Agricultural assistance accounted for the major part of the total UNHCR expenditure of $7.4 million. Contributions from Governments amounted to $7.8 million and donations in cash and kind of $2.7 million were received to provide supplementary food supplies.

In Thailand, authorities registered 115,000 Indo-Chinese displaced persons during 1976, of whom 37,000 were resettled in third countries. At the request of the Government of Thailand, UNHCR undertook a programme of assistance, to be implemented by Thai authorities, to meet such emergency needs as food, shelter, clothing, medical care and transportation for refugees accepted for resettlement in other countries: $2.27 million was used to cover resettlement costs. In addition, $8 million was expended by UNHCR in Thailand in 1976, $6.7 million of which was made available to the Government for the care and maintenance of displaced persons.

A major concern during the year were the large numbers of Indo-Chinese refugees arriving in small boats in countries bordering the South China Sea or rescued on the high seas by passing ships. Assistance was provided by UNHCR for their basic needs until admission to a country for temporary or permanent settlement could be secured.

In 1976, more than $24 million was expended by UNHCR for these humanitarian operations. Of this, about $11.8 million was spent in Indo-China, $7.9 million in Thailand, and nearly $1 million in Lebanon. A further $3.9 million was allocated for care and maintenance of refugees in other South-East Asian countries and for Indo-Chinese displaced persons awaiting settlement in third countries.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN EUROPE

The number of refugees of concern to UNHCR in Europe at the end of 1976 was estimated at 566,000; most had been fully integrated for many years and benefited from national welfare facilities. Complementary assistance was therefore limited to groups requiring special care, particularly the old, the handicapped, and newly arrived refugees in countries of first asylum. Refugees from Argentina and Chile and considerable numbers of displaced persons from Indo-China continued to be admitted to several European countries for permanent settlement. An essential element of assistance was counselling, particularly relating to employment and resettlement through migration. Refugees also benefited in most European countries from integration facilities in the fields of education, professional training and employment. Total UNHCR commitments under the 1976 programme in Europe amounted to $1.6 million.

The Office of the High Commissioner continued to co-ordinate United Nations humanitarian assistance in Cyprus. Activities were carried out in co-operation with the World Health Organization, which continued to provide medical supplies and equipment, and the World Food Programme, which assisted in procuring food and made available local staff experts for counselling services. The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus supported these efforts by delivering food supplies to various areas of the island and providing logistical assistance.

Assistance to approximately 200,000 displaced persons included temporary accommodation and shelter materials, food purchases, medical supplies, health care facilities and supplies to meet supplementary needs, such as handicraft materials, youth and community facilities, infant care, cash grants to the needy and immediate provision of clothing and foot-wear.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN LATIN AMERICA

A total of 112,000 refugees in Latin America included 82,000 of European origin, for whom comparatively little assistance was required, and about 29,000 of Latin American origin, mainly persons from Chile. Large-scale assistance and resettlement programmes for the refugees from Chile continued during the year, providing care and maintenance and covering resettlement costs. Other forms of aid included legal counselling and education assistance. Over 4,000 Latin American refugees were resettled in other countries with UNHCR assistance, mainly in Europe. About the same number of refugees were awaiting resettlement opportunities at the end of 1976.

Commitments under the 1976 programme in Latin America totalled $4.7 million, of which over $1 million was allocated for resettlement and $2.9 million for supplementary assistance.

Legislative action

On 2 August 1976, having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2011(LXI), by which it recognized the importance of the essential humanitarian tasks undertaken by the Office of the High Commissioner in the context of man-made disasters, in addition to its original functions, and commended the High Commissioner for his efforts on behalf of refugees and displaced persons requiring urgent humanitarian assistance. The Economic and Social Council also requested the High Commissioner to continue his activities in co-operation with Governments, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental organizations and voluntary agencies, called upon the international community to continue and strengthen its support for the activities of the High Commissioner, and transmitted his report to the General Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session.

Resolution 2011(LXI) was adopted by the Economic and Social Council without a vote and was sponsored by the following 31 members: Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Colombia, the Congo, Denmark, Egypt, France, Gabon, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Iran, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Kenya, Liberia, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal, Romania, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 30 November, with the adoption of resolution 31/35, the General Assembly recognized the need for further strengthening the international protection of refugees and endorsed the Economic and Social Council's resolution of 2 August 1976. The Assembly commended the High Commissioner and his staff for the efficient manner in which they continued to discharge their activities on behalf of refugees and displaced persons and asked the High Commissioner to intensify his efforts to promote permanent and speedy solutions through voluntary repatriation and assistance in rehabilitation of returnees, integration in countries of asylum or resettlement in other countries. It asked him to continue humanitarian aid to refugees in Africa and called for the full co-operation of all concerned. The Assembly also urged Governments to strengthen their support for the humanitarian activities of the High Commissioner by acceding to the instruments relating to refugees, co-operating in the field of international protection and in the promotion of permanent solutions, and by providing the necessary financial support for his assistance programmes.

Resolution 31/35 was adopted by consensus on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. The Third Committee had approved the text by consensus on 17 November, as sponsored by 44 Members: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Cyprus, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Iceland, Iran, Ireland, Italy, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, the Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Another resolution adopted on 30 November was concerned with the question of the establishment, in accordance with the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness, of a body to which persons claiming the benefit of the Convention might apply. The General Assembly, having considered the High Commissioner's report on that question, noted that he was carrying out the functions required under the Convention without any financial implications for the United Nations and requested him to continue to perform these functions.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/36, adopted by 117 votes to 9, with 8 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text on 17 November by 100 votes to 9, with 14 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal sponsored by Australia, Austria, Ireland, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom. ## Chapter XIX

The United Nations Children's Fund

At its annual session, held from 17 to 28 May 1976, the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) noted with concern the continuing deterioration in the situation of children in many developing countries. Governments had been obliged to delay development plans, or to shift resources from social services to financially productive activities, thus seriously hampering the expansion of services benefiting children. While there was increasing evidence of recovery from the economic recession, the Board noted, the poorest countries would need augmented assistance for a significant period of time to come.

In accordance with a General Assembly request of 28 November 1975,<sup>1</sup> the UNICEF Executive Board discussed basic services for children in developing countries and adopted a report to the General Assembly on the question. As a basis for discussion, the Board had before it a report by the Executive Director. This report, which elaborated the concept of basic services and established criteria for its application, expressed the view that it was not possible in low-income countries to deliver the services required for children and mothers through conventional methods. The most effective means of bridging this gap within the coming decades lay in extending basic services for children. This was to comprise a group of interrelated, mutually supporting services in: maternal and child health, including family planning; safe water supply and waste disposal; improving the quantity and quality of local food production and consumption; nutrition education; meeting the basic educational needs of the community; and introducing simple technologies to lighten the daily tasks of women.

The basic services strategy, according to the report, was to be characterized by the active involvement and support of the community in the planning, creation and functioning of services; the use of locally selected persons as voluntary or part-time community agents with the task of motivating the community and delivering essential services by simplified technologies; the engagement in the public service of substantially increased numbers of auxiliary personnel; the orientation of central and provincial professional staff to devote more time to direction, training, supervision, referral, logistical and technical support services. Government support was also seen as an essential precondition for the successful development of basic services on a major scale.

Canada put before the UNICEF Board a paper proposing that UNICEF concentrate its assistance on the very young child (ages 0-5 years). According to the Canadian proposal, the use of this age group as a priority-setting yardstick in all of UNICEF's decisions would increase the efficiency of the organization by helping reach a vastly more significant number of deprived children. It would also facilitate judgements within UNICEF as an investor, give focus to relations with other agencies working in the areas of the general needs of children, increase the efficiency of the United Nations development system as a whole by helping remove duplication of efforts, and cause national Governments and other agencies to integrate gradually into country programming and forward planning a concern for children over the age of five.

The Executive Director, in his comments on the proposal, pointed out that the UNICEF Executive Board had endorsed priority for aid to the young child but never excluded assistance to projects for other age groups. He said that, in addition to programmes directly benefiting the young child (immunization, special feeding, paediatric and child care), indirect measures also contributed to the young child's protection and development. These included projects relating to health services, responsible parenthood, safe and sufficient water supplies, improved sanitation, domestic production and use of better foods, the lightening of women's daily drudgery and other social welfare services. Such services represented the main practical channels for reaching and benefiting young children.

Education assistance was also provided by UNICEF, as in many developing countries the primary school system was the only service which reached to the village level and could provide a base for various activities benefiting young children and their families, as well as the communities in general.

At the conclusion of its debate, the Executive Board reaffirmed the high priority accorded the young child, but did not exclude aid for children over the age of five.

Given the increasing proportion of the total programme budget going to education over the past decade, the Board requested the Executive Director to report to its next session on the flow of external aid of various types to formal and non-formal education at the primary school level, and on the evolution of UNICEF participation.

The UNICEF Executive Board also considered a paper by the Executive Director discussing criteria for programme appraisal, monitoring and evaluation.

The Board endorsed the criteria suggested by the Executive Director and also approved a programme proposed for 1977-1979 which had the objective of strengthening ministry or department interest and evaluation machinery; strengthening the decision-making process, especially in relation to project implementation; making greater use of national expertise and institutions available in the country, a neighbouring country or the region; and evaluating services that absorbed substantial Government and UNICEF inputs or might do so in the future.

At the country level, each UNICEF field office was to identify at least one country in which it intended to co-operate intensively with national institutions to improve programme evaluation.

The Board also considered proposals by the Executive Director revising the handling of special assistance. It was felt that the Executive Director should have more flexibility in starting projects as soon as funds were received, without prior Board approval. The Board adopted the following recommendations, among others: emphasis should continue to be placed on the rapid extension of basic services for children, financed with UNICEF regular income and extra donor funds; sustained focus in fund-raising was to continue to be on increasing contributions to general resources, with appropriate attention to funding for special assistance and other noted projects.

In addition, categories of assistance were to be simplified in future programme and financial reporting. They were to include: regular projects (financed from general resources); long-term projects funded by a United Nations body; special assistance and other noted projects; and emergency assistance.

Child health services

During 1976, community-based primary health care was introduced in a number of countries. In the main, this involved the reorientation and strengthening of national health services.

The primary health care concept was further developed during the year in co-operative undertakings by the World Health Organization (WHO) and UNICEF. Workshops and seminars were organized for national staff. Training guidelines for primary health care workers were being prepared by WHO, and a joint UNICEF/WHO effort was the revision of a guidelist of equipment and supplies for peripheral health establishments.

In 1976, UNICEF provided assistance to child health services in 100 countries at a total cost of $25 million. That included the provision of supplies and equipment to some 33,600 rural health centres and subcentres, urban maternal and child health centres, district and referral hospitals and maternity homes. Training stipends were given to over 25,000 health workers.

Responsible parenthood

The Children's Fund continued to view family planning in the broad context of social and economic development. Assistance therefore focused on health, nutritional and other social services. Improvements in the conditions of life led to a decline in high infant and child mortality, which encouraged parents to space births and regulate the number of children. This, in turn, benefitted the individual child by improving conditions of family life and allowing the mother more time and energy to care for her children.

In 1976, expenditures for family planning activities carried out by UNICEF and funded by United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) totalled $4.7 million, or 6 per cent of UNICEF programme expenditures.

Water supply and environmental sanitation

Water supply projects were increasingly viewed as an essential part of a more comprehensive approach to meeting children's basic needs and were co-ordinated with other approaches to improving life in the villages.

During 1976, UNICEF spent $13.5 million on assistance for clean water supplies and improved sanitation in 91 countries. Over 12 million persons benefited from approximately 80,000 water supply systems and more than 450,000 persons gained access to better waste disposal systems.

Child nutrition

Some 40 countries were considering or preparing comprehensive food and nutrition plans. They were to have first priority for UNICEF assistance.

In co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and WHO, work continued on the establishment of a global nutritional surveillance system, which had been recommended by the 1974 World Food Conference. The Children's Fund had lent its main support to a system in Ethiopia which had been under way for some time for relief purposes. The Board approved in 1976 a commitment of $225,000 for 1976-1977, primarily for training and for establishing or strengthening the central operation of countries' national systems.

The Children's Fund also handled requests for food for emergency and long-term child feeding, often obtaining the foods directly from donors. In 1976, UNICEF shipped 25,984 metric tons of food valued by donors at $29.7 million.

During 1976, UNICEF continued to supply vitamin A capsules for the prevention of blindness in young children in Bangladesh and Indonesia; and further encouraged long-term attempts to prevent blindness by changing the patterns of production and consumption of foods and food fortification. Aid for goitre prevention through iodization of salt continued in a number of countries. To counter anaemia, iron supplements were provided for distribution to mothers through health services.

Education

During the year, in accordance with guidelines adopted by the Executive Board in 1972, UNICEF assistance to education continued to help meet the minimal learning needs of educationally deprived children of primary school age. Formal and non-formal schooling were used to reach children and adolescents who otherwise would not receive education.

During 1976, nearly all formal education assistance went to the primary level for the training of teachers, the purchase of textbooks and teaching aids, curriculum reform, and the construction of classrooms. Some 94,000 teachers received training with UNICEF stipends. Total expenditure for education in 1976 totalled $17.3 million, or 21 per cent of all programme expenditure.

Women and girls

Efforts to promote the status of women and girls continued in 1976. Greater emphasis was placed on non-formal education, particularly on literacy geared to the needs of everyday life and on training at the village level.

A regional programme in the Americas for the promotion and development of the role of women in community activities and in the development and welfare of the child and the family was approved by the UNICEF Board in 1976. This complemented the regional programmes for women in Africa, Asia and the Eastern Mediterranean region, which were designed to provide sources of information, approaches, methodologies and techniques to improve the status of women, and were to be used by countries in planning national action programmes.

The Children's Fund also helped to lighten women's burden through the supply of water and the use of simple technology. A village technology unit was established in the regional office for East Africa. In collaboration with the Government of Kenya, a permanent demonstration and development centre was constructed in a village near Nairobi. The centre was to exemplify village technologies in: food production, conservation, storage, preparation, cooking and use; water procurement technology, including windmills and other pumps, and water storage at the domestic level; home improvements; and appropriate building techniques.

Other matters

In order to strengthen UNICEF's management capacity and effectiveness, further steps were taken to delegate authority to field offices; steps were also taken to improve co-ordination and orientation towards field requirements at headquarters and to revise personnel administration. The Executive Board noted with approval the nature of the changes.

The Board also considered a report by the Executive Director on UNICEF's relations with national committees. The report pointed to the unusual nature of the relationship between UNICEF, an international intergovernmental organization, and the committees, which were national organizations. Using the UNICEF name, the committees fell under the policy control of UNICEF. For the establishment of a committee, the approval of the Government of the country involved was needed and UNICEF had to agree to the committee's purposes, functions and statutes.

According to the Executive Director, the growing interdependence between UNICEF and the committees and the increased significance of the committees warranted a formal recognition procedure. The UNICEF Board supported the signing of agreements between UNICEF and each national committee in order to strengthen the relationship and requested the Executive Director to continue discussions with the committees with a view to exploring the implications of his recommendations and to inform the Board of the progress made.

The Executive Director reported on the question of a UNICEF charter to the Executive Board, pointing out that the mandate for UNICEF laid down by the General Assembly had permitted the organization over the years to operate with flexibility in responding to new developments and unforeseen situations. Policies and working methods had been reviewed and revised by the UNICEF Board whenever necessary, and the Executive Director therefore did not recommend that UNICEF undertake the preparation of a draft charter, a view which was approved by the Executive Board.

Income and expenditures

During 1976, UNICEF's revenue totalled $135.2 million. Of that amount, $106.6 million was allotted to general programmes and $28.6 million to specific purposes.

By source of revenue, 72.6 per cent came directly from 133 Governments as regular and special contributions, 14.3 per cent came from private sources, such as fund-raising campaigns, greeting-card profits and individual donations, and 13.1 per cent from the United Nations system (mainly UNFPA) and from miscellaneous sources.

Expenditures in 1976 amounted to $112.9 million, including $100.3 million for assistance and $11.7 million for administrative services. Expenditures for assistance comprised $62.3 million for supplies (including freight charges), $20.0 million for non-supply assistance and $18.0 million for programme support services.

In addition, UNICEF handled $12.3 million in funds-in-trust which was not subject to Executive Board commitment, mainly for reimbursable supply procurement on behalf of Governments and organizations in the United Nations system for services benefiting children. The Children's Fund also administered contributions in kind, estimated at $29 million, mainly in the form of children's foods and freight costs for emergency relief.

At its 1976 session, the Executive Board approved new commitments in the amount of $91 million; other commitments which came into effect during the year totalled $36 million. Taking into account unfulfilled commitments made prior to 1976, the total of outstanding commitments at the end of the year was $276 million.

International Year of the Child

Reporting to the UNICEF Executive Board, the Executive Director said that support for the proclamation of an International Year of the Child in 1979 seemed to be growing. While the Year was to be concerned with all children of the world, UNICEF perceived it also as a significant opportunity to advance the concept of basic services for children in developing countries and to raise the level of resources available for them. The Children's Fund placed emphasis on the necessity to assure the financing for the Year. The Executive Board appealed to Governments to make serious commitments to support the Year.

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social

Council took note of a report of the Secretary-General on the preparation, support and financing of the International Year of the Child and recommended that the General Assembly proclaim 1979 as the International Year of the Child. The Council also recommended that the Assembly give appropriate consideration to the objectives of the Year, call upon all appropriate United Nations organizations to participate in the activities, and designate UNICEF as the lead agency for the purpose.

The Council further requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its 1976 session a brief report, including revised estimates of costs, and invited Governments to support the Year. It urged active support by the appropriate United Nations bodies, non-governmental organizations and individuals, and recommended that all parties intending to participate in the financing of the activities of the Year should announce their intention as soon as possible.

These actions were set forth in decision 178(LXI), which was adopted without a vote on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee.

On 2 August 1976, the Committee had approved the draft decision without a vote, as proposed by its Chairman after informal consultations. A draft resolution on the International Year proposed by Austria, Belgium, Colombia, the Congo, Egypt, Mexico, Norway, Tunisia and Yugoslavia was withdrawn by the sponsors.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly proclaimed 1979 the International Year of the Child and stated the general objectives of the Year to be to provide a framework for advocacy on behalf of children and for enhancing the awareness of the special needs of children on the part of decision-makers and the public, and to promote recognition of the fact that programmes for children should be an integral part of economic and social development plans, with a view to achieving, in both the long term and the short term, sustained activities to the benefit of children at national and international levels.

The Assembly urged Governments to expand their efforts at national and community levels to provide lasting improvements in the well-being of children, called upon organs and organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to the preparation and implementation of the Year's objectives, designated UNICEF as the lead agency in the United Nations system for co-ordinating activities of the Year, invited non-governmental organizations and the public to participate actively in the Year, and appealed to Governments to make contributions through UNICEF to ensure adequate financing of activities for the preparation and carrying out of the Year.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/169, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

The Second Committee had approved the draft resolution by consensus on 7 December, as sponsored by Austria, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Canada, Chad, Colombia, Egypt, Greece, India, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, the Netherlands, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, the Sudan, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, Uruguay and Yugoslavia.

Expansion of basic services to children in developing countries

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the report of the UNICEF Executive Board on the expansion of basic services to children in developing countries, expressed its appreciation for the report and endorsed a draft resolution in support of basic services which it recommended to the General Assembly for adoption.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2022(LXI), which was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee. On 30 July, the Committee had approved the draft resolution without a vote, as sponsored by Afghanistan, Austria, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, the Congo, Cuba, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Jamaica, Jordan, Malaysia, Norway, Romania and Uganda.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted the text recommended by the Council as Assembly resolution 31/167. Resolution 31/167 was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 29 November. The General Assembly thereby urged developing countries to incorporate the basic services concept and approach into their national development plans and strategies, and urged developed countries and others in a position to do so to provide, through bilateral and multilateral channels, including UNICEF, external assistance to supplement efforts of developing countries in launching or expanding basic services benefiting children. The Assembly also urged the international community to recognize its responsibility for increased co-operative action to promote social and economic development through its support of basic services at the international and the country programming level.

Target for contribution pledges

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council noted with approval the activities of the Children's Fund and expressed its deep concern about the magnitude of unmet needs of children in developing countries. The Council endorsed a target for the Children's Fund of $200 million in annual revenue from all sources and appealed with a sense of urgency to all Governments to increase their contributions to the Fund, so that it might rapidly augment its assistance to basic services for children. The Council also drew attention to the pledging conference for the Children's Fund scheduled for 4 November 1976.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2021(LXI), which was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee. On 30 July, the Committee had approved the text, also without vote; it was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Jamaica, Jordan, Malaysia, Norway, Romania and Uganda.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly noted the Council's resolution of 4 August on UNICEF and endorsed the $200 million target in annual revenue for the Children's Fund. The Assembly also appealed to all Governments, especially those of industrialized countries, to increase their contributions to the Fund.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/168, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee. The Second Committee had approved the text, without a vote, on 29 November 1976; it was sponsored by Colombia, Denmark, Norway, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Sweden and the United States.

Pledging conference

The annual pledging conference for UNICEF was held on 4 November 1976. In all, 94 Governments announced pledges or indicated expected pledges to UNICEF's general resources for 1977 amounting to $85.1 million. In addition, contributions for specific purposes were announced, totalling $4.1 million. It was estimated that additional pledges of approximately $6.6 million for the general resources fund would be forthcoming from Governments which did not find it possible to make known their pledges for 1977 at that time due to the timing of budget preparations and approval. (See table below for list of contributions.)

Resolution 31/169, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/411, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on measures and modalities to ensure the adequate preparation, support and financing of an international year of the child, Economic and Social Council decision 178(LXI) of 5 August 1976 on an international year of the child and the additional report of the Secretary-General prepared in the light of the discussions in the Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the fundamental importance in all countries, developing and industrialized, of programmes benefitting children not only for the well-being of the children but also as part of broader efforts to accelerate economic and social progress,

Recalling in this connexion its resolutions 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Deeply concerned that, in spite of all efforts, far too many children, especially in developing countries, are undernourished, are without access to adequate health services, are missing the basic educational preparation for their future and are deprived of the elementary amenities of life,

Convinced that an international year of the child could serve to encourage all countries to review their programmes for the promotion of the well-being of children and to mobilize support for national and local action programmes according to each country's conditions, needs and priorities,

Affirming that the concept of basic services for children is a vital component of social and economic development and that it should be supported and implemented by the co-operative efforts of the international and national communities,

Bearing in mind that the year 1979 will be the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child and could serve as an occasion to promote further its implementation,

Aware that, for an international year of the child to be effective, adequate preparation and the widespread support of Governments, non-governmental organization and the public will be required,

Believing that administrative costs for the international year should be kept to the minimum necessary,

Taking note of the statement made by the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund before the Second Committee,

1. Proclaims the year 1979 International Year of the Child;

2. Decides that the International Year of the Child should have the following general objectives:

(a) To provide a framework for advocacy on behalf of children and for enhancing the awareness of the special needs of children on the part of decision-makers and the public;

(b) To promote recognition of the fact that programmes for children should be an integral part of economic and social development plans with a view to achieving, in both the long term and the short term, sustained activities for the benefit of children at the national and international levels;

3. Urges Governments to expand their efforts at the national and community levels to provide lasting improvements in the well-being of their children, with special attention to those in the most vulnerable and particularly disadvantaged groups;

4. Calls upon the appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to the preparation and implementation of the objectives of the International Year of the Child;

5. Designates the United Nations Children's Fund as the lead agency of the United Nations system responsible for co-ordinating the activities of the International Year of the Child, and the Executive Director of the Fund to be responsible for its co-ordination;

6. Invites non-governmental organizations and the public to participate actively in the International Year of the Child and to co-ordinate their programmes for the Year as fully as possible, especially at the national level;

7. Appeals to Governments to make contributions or pledges for the International Year of the Child through the United Nations Children's Fund to ensure the adequate financing of activities for the preparation and carrying out of the Year;

8. Expresses the hope that Governments, non-governmental organizations and the public will respond generously with contributions to attain the objectives of the International Year of the Child and, through the United Nations Children's Fund and other channels of external aid, to increase substantially the resources available for services benefitting children;

9. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session, on progress in preparing for the International Year of the Child, including its financing and the level of contributions pledged.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund entitled "The expansion of basic services for children in developing countries," prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 3408(XXX) of 28 November 1975,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund for its thoughtful and stimulating report, which should contribute towards a wider discussion, both in developing countries and in the international community, of the strategies and resources required to meet the essential human needs of children and mothers in the unserved and under-served areas of the developing world;

2. Endorses the following draft resolution and recommends it to the General Assembly for adoption:

Resolution 31/167, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/411, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3408(XXX) of 28 November 1975 in which it, inter alia, invited the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund to consider in depth the matter of basic services for children in developing countries,

Recognizing that the provision of basic services constitutes an important link in the development process,

Noting that the basic services concept represents the extension, to a number of developmental activities benefiting children, of the same principles as those adopted by the World Health Assembly at its twenty-eighth session, held at Geneva from 13 to 30 May 1975, and by the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund at its session held in New York from 14 to 30 May 1975 in connexion with the approach to be followed in meeting basic health needs,

Convinced that the basic services concept and strategy, while providing guidelines for future action by the United Nations Children's Fund, are equally appropriate for adoption by agencies and authorities concerned with the promotion of programmes for human development in developing countries,

Stressing the importance of increased international co-operation in support of basic services as a vital component of social and economic development,

Believing that the external assistance required to support these services should be within the capacity of the international community,

1. Urges the developing countries to incorporate the basic services concept and approach in their national development plans and strategies;

2. Urges the developed countries and others in a position to do so to provide through bilateral and multilateral channels, including the United Nations Children's Fund, external assistance to supplement the efforts of developing countries in launching or expanding basic services benefiting children;

3. Urges the international community to recognize its responsibility for increased co-operative action to promote social and economic development through its support of basic services at the international and the country programming level.

Chapter XX

International drug control

In 1976, international control of narcotic drugs was aimed, as in previous years, at restricting the supply and use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances to medical and scientific purposes. The work was carried out within the framework of international treaties and called for close co-operation with Governments, the International Narcotics Control Board, the specialized agencies of the United Nations and other international organizations and bodies.

The importance of the international drug control system was enhanced in 1976, when the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances entered into force, bringing those substances for the first time under international control.

The Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs formulated United Nations policies and outlined activities to combat drug abuse.

The International Narcotics Control Board, a treaty organ whose members are elected by the Economic and Social Council to serve in their individual capacities as persons competent in the field, supervised the legal production, manufacture and use of, and trade in, narcotic drugs. It also assessed the precautions taken by Governments to prevent diversion of these substances into illicit traffic and undertook to ensure that the aims of the international treaties were not endangered by the failure of Governments experiencing difficulties in implementing treaty provisions.

In 1976, the United Nations continued its technical assistance, research and information activities in the field of narcotic drugs, often with the support of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC).

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its fourth special session at Geneva, Switzerland, from 16 to 27 February 1976. Its report was considered by the Economic and Social Council.

Implementation of drug treaties

Ratifications, accessions, successions to and acceptance of treaties

During 1976, Barbados and Indonesia became parties to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, bringing the total number of parties to the Convention to 108.

The 1972 Protocol amending the Single Convention, 1961, was ratified or acceded to by the Bahamas, Barbados, Canada, the Holy See, Indonesia, Luxembourg, Togo, Tunisia and Zaire; these countries and Bolivia became parties to the Single Convention, 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol, which brought the total number of parties to the Convention as amended to 56.

On 16 August 1976, the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances entered into force after deposit of the fortieth instrument of ratification or accession. Cuba, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Holy See, Iraq, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo and Uruguay became parties to the Convention, bringing the total number of parties to 41.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly reiterated its appeal to all States not parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances to take the necessary steps to accede to it, and also appealed to all parties to the Convention and to the international drug control bodies to implement its provisions by adopting suitable legislative and administrative measures. The Assembly invited the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the World Health Organization (WHO) to take into consideration the responsibilities assigned to the drug control bodies of the United Nations and to WHO by that Convention.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/125, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. The Third Committee had approved the draft resolution without a vote on 29 November 1976, as sponsored by Denmark, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iraq, Norway, the Philippines, Poland, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey and the United Republic of Cameroon.

Reports of Governments

During the year, Governments submitted annual reports to the Secretary-General on the implementation of their obligations under international narcotics treaties; these reports, covering 1975, were submitted with respect to 114 countries and territories.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

During its fourth special session, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered broadening dissemination of information on international activities in the field of drug control and their co-ordination.

The Commission called for publication of the text of the 1961 Single Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol in English, French, Russian and Spanish. It also decided to issue as Commission documents summaries of annual reports submitted by Governments, and to publish a Spanish edition of the Bulletin on Narcotics in addition to the English and French editions.

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted without a vote resolution 2003(LX), by which it took note of the Commission's report. The Council acted on the recommendation of its Social Committee, which had approved without a vote on 4 May 1976 a text proposed by the Commission and orally amended by Egypt.

International Narcotics Control Board

In its annual report for 1975 to the Economic and Social Council, the International Narcotics Control Board noted the continuing uncontrolled and illicit cultivation of the opium poppy on a substantial scale. Also noted was the increased tendency for opium to be converted into morphine or heroin close to cultivation areas, which reduced the volume of goods to be transported.

In addition, the report stated that the supply difficulties of raw materials for the licit manufacture of opiates was expected to end after the 1975 harvest and that a greater reliability of supplies was foreseen.

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council noted the contribution of the International Narcotics Control Board to international drug control during 1975 and commended the Board on its report. The Council also called upon all Member States to give urgent and serious attention to the Board's activities.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2000(LX), adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee. The Social Committee had approved the draft resolution without a vote on 4 May 1976, as sponsored by Argentina, Egypt, France and Italy.

Drug abuse and measures to reduce illicit demand

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs noted that opiate addiction continued to be a problem world-wide and abuse of synthetic narcotics, as well as of psychotropic substances, had increased in several countries. Multiple drug abuse also represented a growing trend which was becoming predominant. The Commission felt that drug abuse problems should be dealt with in the context of the underlying psycho-social, cultural, economic and other factors associated with them and of the availability, quality and accessibility of health and social programmes.

Illicit traffic in drugs

During 1976, there was a marked increase in seizures of all drugs from the illicit traffic world-wide. The quantity of heroin intercepted, for example, reached 2.5 tons, a 50 per cent increase over 1975. Information on illicit traffic was submitted by 112 Governments, 13 of which stated that they had experienced no illicit traffic during the year.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs also noted that narcotics traffickers continued to look to the Far East and Mexico for their major supplies of heroin. The traffic from the Far East to Europe had become more organized and the importance of the Netherlands was noted as a transit and distribution point for drugs destined for countries of western Europe. The Commission approved the recommendations and proposed study tour of a working group of the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East and the report of the second meeting in November 1975 of operational heads of national narcotics law enforcement agencies in the Far East region.

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council urged Governments to enact legislation to make financial support knowingly provided for illicit trafficking in drugs a punishable offence and to co-operate in exchanging information to identify drug traffickers. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to bring this resolution to the attention of Governments.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2002(LX), adopted, without a vote, as recommended by the Social Committee, which had approved without a vote on 4 May 1976 a text proposed by the Commission.

Scientific research

During 1976, international collaboration in United Nations research programmes was expanded. Scientists and institutions from many countries participated, and Governments continued to provide research samples. The United Nations Narcotics Laboratory continued to identify and analyse drugs and advise Governments on the establishment and improvement of national narcotics laboratories. Significant advances were made on determination of the chemical composition of khat (Catha edulis Forsk) and the procedures for extraction were further improved. Research was also conducted on the chemistry of cannabis, cannabis smoke and hashish oil.

As in previous years, technical assistance was provided in the form of fellowships. Laboratory training was extended to fellowship-holders from Afghanistan, Argentina, Burma, Egypt, Honduras, Lebanon, Mexico, Peru, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia and Thailand.

United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control

During 1976, contributions to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control amounted to $3.9 million. There was a deficit of $2 million for 1976, as expenditures totalled $5.8 million. Total cash contributions to the Fund since 1971 amounted to $23.6 million. This supported 88 projects and programmes, 21 of which had been completed as at the end of 1976. Financial assistance was received from 65 Governments.

Programmes to reduce the illicit supply of narcotic drugs continued in 1976 and were especially successful in Turkey, where leakage of opium into the illicit traffic was prevented. Projects continued in Afghanistan, Pakistan and Thailand, and new programmes were planned for Bolivia, Burma and Peru. Projects designed to reduce the demand for illicit drugs were strengthened, and increased emphasis was given to outside evaluation of projects.

In order to obtain sustained and increased voluntary contributions, the Fund intensified its campaign to inform Governments about programmes and projects and their financial requirements. Similar efforts were also made to generate support among non-governmental organizations and from the public.

The Commission noted the continued effort to use a regional approach to operations financed by UNFDAC. It was stressed that a greater proportion of the Fund's resources should be allocated to projects designed to reduce the demand for illicit drugs and special attention should be given to the control of psychotropic substances. Emphasis was also placed on continued evaluation of projects supported by the Fund. The Commission expressed concern about adequate financial resources for projects in the planning stage and hoped that Governments would increase their contributions.

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council noted with satisfaction the activities of UNFDAC and expressed its appreciation for the efforts made by Governments of a number of developing countries to reduce illicit traffic in drugs. The Council noted with concern that aid requests from some countries could not be met because of the insufficient financial resources of the Fund and it appealed to Governments for additional generous and sustained contributions.

These decisions were embodied in resolution

2004(LX), adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, as sponsored by Afghanistan and Italy. An amendment by Egypt, adding the paragraph by which the Council expressed its appreciation for the efforts made by the developing countries, with a further drafting change proposed by Pakistan, was accepted by the sponsors. The text was approved without a vote on 5 May 1976 by the Social Committee.

Information on drug control activities

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council took a decision (152(LX)) by which it urged the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to expand in its next report information relating to bodies entrusted with international narcotic drug control and to make proposals to the Council with a view to rationalizing such activities.

This decision was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, which approved it without a vote on 4 May 1976. Argentina was the sponsor of the text.

Secretariat units for international narcotics control

On 3 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council—recalling that the General Assembly had requested it to examine the programme aspects of the existing secretariat arrangements of the International Narcotics Control Board and the Division of Narcotic Drugs, with a view to identifying any duplication and overlapping and to consider the possibility of streamlining or combining the secretariats in the interest of economy and expeditious administration and management—reconfirmed that in the current circumstances the administrative arrangements in force should continue in effect.

The Council noted with satisfaction that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs had decided to monitor the possibility of streamlining the administration of services.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2017(LXI), which was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee. The draft resolution was sponsored by Argentina, Belgium, Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, Egypt, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, India, Iran, Mexico, Norway, Pakistan, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States. It was approved without a vote by the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee on 22 July 1976.

Cycle of sessions for the Commission on Narcotic Drugs

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council decided to maintain the principle of biennial sessions of the Commission; the next session was to take place in 1977 and was to be, exceptionally, of three weeks' duration, provided the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances had entered into force. [It did so on 16 August 1976—see above.] The Council also decided that the conditions existed to justify the convening of a special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 1978.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2001(LX), adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee. The Social Committee had approved on 4 May 1976, without a vote, a text submitted by the Commission, as orally amended by Australia.

Resolution 31/125, as recommended by Third Committee, A/31/395, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1976, meeting 102.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 3443(XXX) of 9 December 1975 concerning the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances and its resolution 3445(XXX) of 9 December 1975 on adequate priority for narcotics control,

Noting with satisfaction that the Convention entered into force on 16 August 1976,

Convinced that that event constitutes an important step towards the establishment of effective international control of the licit trade and the prevention of the illicit traffic in psychotropic substances through prompt and satisfactory implementation of the provisions of the Convention at the national and international levels,

Recognizing that, in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 1576(L) of 20 May 1971, many States have already applied provisionally the control measures provided for in the Convention and have voluntarily co-operated with one another and with the international drug control bodies, particularly by furnishing pertinent information, a course of action which should be continued,

Aware, however, that complete and effective control requires universal accession to the Convention and, in particular, the accession of countries in which psychotropic substances are manufactured,

Realizing that the Convention imposes substantial additional responsibilities on the drug control bodies of the United Nations and on the World Health Organization,

1. Reiterates its appeal to all States not yet parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances promptly to take the necessary steps to accede to it and requests the Secretary-General to transmit this appeal to the Governments concerned;

2. Appeals to all parties to the Convention and to the international drug control bodies to implement its provisions by adopting suitable legislative and administrative measures as provided for in the Convention;

3. Invites the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the World Health Organization to take into consideration the responsibilities assigned to the drug control bodies of the United Nations and to the World Health Organization by the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances.

Recalling articles 4, 35 and 36, particularly article 36 (2) (a) (ii), of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, as amended by articles 13 and 14 of the 1972 Protocol,

Mindful of the importance of improving by all available means international co-operation to combat illicit trafficking in drugs and their abuse,

Aware that such illicit trafficking requires large sums of money and involves financial transactions of significant size, and that leaders of illicit trafficking organizations may be involved in these transactions, although not in the actual movement of drug contraband,

Believing that close attention by authorities to financial transactions concerning persons suspected of involvement in illicit drug trafficking may be valuable in apprehending and convicting major drug traffickers,

1. Urges Governments which have not already done so to enact such legislation as may be necessary to make financial support provided knowingly, by whatever means, in furtherance of offences enumerated in article 36 (1) of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, a punishable offence, and to co-operate with one another in exchanging information to identify drug traffickers committing such an offence;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Governments.

Resolution 2004(LX), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5820, adopted without vote by Council on 12 May 1976, meeting 2002.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1937(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3446(XXX) of 9 December 1975, in which the Council appealed to Governments for generous and sustained contributions to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control,

Aware of the fact that, despite the appeals made in those resolutions to Governments for generous and sustained contributions, the financial resources of the Fund have remained insufficient to enable it to expand its activities and to provide to the developing countries concerned additional assistance in carrying out their respective drug control programmes, particularly those countries where the further success of such programmes depends on the expansion of such assistance to obtain maximum results,

1. Notes with satisfaction that the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, in collaboration with Governments and the international organizations concerned, has undertaken a number of activities which have contributed, through the strengthening of national drug control programmes, to the significant advancement of international efforts to reduce drug abuse and illicit traffic in drugs;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts being made by the Governments of a number of developing countries concerned, which, with the assistance of the Fund, have undertaken effective programmes with a view to further strengthening measures for the reduction of illicit traffic in drugs, which programmes have produced encouraging results;

3. Notes with concern that the request of a number of countries for additional assistance for their respective drug control programmes could not be met owing to the insufficient financial resources of the Fund;

4. Reiterates its previous appeals for additional generous and sustained contributions to the Fund;

5. Expresses the hope that Governments will, as early as possible, positively and generously respond to the appeals already made by the Council itself and by the General Assembly.

Resolution 2017(LXI), as recommended by Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, E/5881, adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1976, meeting 2030.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the General Assembly has requested it to examine the programme aspects of the present secretariat arrangements of the International Narcotics Control Board and the Division of Narcotic Drugs, with a view to identifying any duplication and overlapping of activities that might exist, and to consider, within that context, the possibility of streamlining or combining both secretariats in the interest of economy and expeditious administration and management,

Taking into account the provisions of article 9, paragraph 2, of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961,

Having received the reports and recommendations of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on this question,

1. Reconfirms that in the present circumstances the administrative arrangements now in force shall continue in effect;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs has decided to continue to monitor the possibility of streamlining the administration of the services concerned, bearing in mind the need for economy and for the most efficient and expeditious management.

E/5820. Report of Social Committee, draft resolution II.

Resolution 2001(LX), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5820, adopted without vote by Council on 12 May 1976, meeting 2002.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling paragraph 16 (b) of its resolution 1768(LIV) of 18 May 1973 on the rationalization of the work of the Council, in which it decided that its subsidiary and expert or advisory bodies would meet biennially unless it should decide otherwise. Bearing in mind that in resolutions 1778(LIV) of 18 May 1973 and 1848(LVI) of 15 May 1974, it authorized the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to hold special sessions of two weeks each in 1974 and 1976, since the serious problem of drug abuse required continuing vigilance by that Commission, so that both the principle of biennial sessions and the need for more frequent meetings of the Commission could be recognized by convening special sessions of that Commission as necessary,

Referring to its decision 124(LIX) of 31 July 1975, by which it drew the attention of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its fourth special session, to the discussion which took place in the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee on that Commission's cycle of sessions, and to the deliberations and conclusions of the Commission at its fourth special session,

Recognizing that, in view of the seriousness of the problems concerning the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, continuing vigilance by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs is absolutely necessary,

Considering that:

(a) The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, since its establishment in 1946, met continuously on an annual basis from 1946 to 1976, with the exception of the years 1967 and 1972,

(b) The work to be carried out by the Commission under its statutory functions according to the international treaties on narcotic drugs has considerably increased over the years, in particular after the entry into force of the 1972 Protocol amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, under the numerous resolutions adopted by the Council itself and by the General Assembly, and in the field of operations financed by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, to which the Commission gives the policy directives,

(c) This workload will increase even more with the imminent entry into force of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, which will broaden the field of competence, responsibility and action of the Commission by bringing also psychotropic substances under international control, and will require proper implementation at the international level through the Commission,

(d) The developments in this field accelerate and change so rapidly from year to year, in particular with regard to the changing patterns of abuse of, and illicit trafficking in, drugs, requiring that sufficient time be available, on an annual basis, for the Commission to discharge, properly and efficiently, its duties in this enlarged field of international drug control,

1. Decides to maintain the principle of biennial sessions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the next session of which shall take place in 1977 at Geneva and shall be, exceptionally, of three weeks' duration, provided that the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances has entered into force;

2. Also decides that the conditions exist to justify the convening of a special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 1978.

Population questions

United Nations Fund for Population Activities

Operational activities

Pledges from 84 Governments to the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) totalled $79 million in 1976 and programme allocations amounted to $81 million for 700 projects in 103 countries. Programme and administrative allocations totalled $87.3 million. For the eight years of UNFPA operations, the cumulative total for project budgets was $257.8 million.

Two country agreements were concluded during the year, with Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic. Large-scale projects were approved by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (the governing body of the Fund) for Bolivia, Ecuador, Haiti, Mexico and Morocco. The Council also reviewed country agreements with Bangladesh, India, Kenya, Pakistan and Turkey and approved allocations for the duration of those agreements.

The Governing Council was also concerned with measures proposed by UNFPA to overcome its resource gap, in particular the principles which were to govern UNFPA assistance, the establishment of a core programme, the designation of priority countries and minimum programmes.

The tables below show UNFPA allocations by major function, by executing agency and by area.

Legislative decisions

On 4 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, after considering the report of UNFPA's Executive Director, endorsed general principles for the future allocation of resources: to promote population activities proposed in international strategies; to meet the needs of developing countries which had the most urgent need for assistance in population activities; to respect the sovereign right of each nation to formulate, promote and implement its own population policies; to promote the recipient countries' self-reliance; and to give special attention to meeting the needs of disadvantaged population groups.

The Council also requested UNFPA's Executive Director to apply certain specific criteria for establishing priorities and other recommendations which he had enumerated in his report.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2025(LXI), approved, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee. The Committee had approved the draft resolution without a vote, on 30 July, as sponsored by Egypt, Thailand and Yemen. Oral drafting amendments by Brazil and Greece were accepted by the sponsors.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly also endorsed the general principles to be applied in making future allocations of resources and requested the Executive Director to apply the criteria for establishing priorities.

It invited Governments to continue and increase their contributions to UNFPA in view of rapidly increasing needs. The Assembly further recommended that the Executive Director be appointed for a four-year term and urged full collaboration and co-operation on operational matters between the Executive Director and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the heads of other organs within the United Nations system working in the field of population.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/170, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The Second Committee had approved the draft resolution without a vote on 3 December, as sponsored by Bangladesh, Ecuador, El Salvador, the Gambia, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mauritania, Mauritius, Nepal, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, the Philippines, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Tunisia and Uruguay.

Other United Nations population activities

Operational activities

The United Nations 1976 regular work programme in the population field included research studies on population trends and structure, demographic projections, fertility and family planning, population and development, population policy, and technical co-operation through field programmes and services. A major undertaking during the year was the monitoring of population trends and policies.

In accordance with the recommendations of the World Population Plan of Action, the United Nations during 1976 carried out the first biennial round of monitoring population trends and policies, in collaboration with specialized agencies and regional commissions. The results were to be submitted to the Population Commission in January 1977.

The inputs for the monitoring of population trends covered population growth, mortality, fertility, migration, population distribution and urbanization, aspects of population structure including age and sex, groups of special social and economic significance, labour force, dependency, agricultural population and the agricultural labour force.

An inquiry entitled "Population Policies in the Context of Development in 1976" was sent in January 1976 to 156 Governments. Replies were received from 107 nations representing 2,594 million inhabitants, or 65 per cent of the total population of the 156 nations. Based on the replies, a detailed analysis was made of Governments' perceptions and policies with respect to population variables.

During 1976, more than 50 countries received technical assistance in the field of population. Eighty-five United Nations experts provided technical expertise in population project development, assessed needs and utilization of resources according to Government priorities, reviewed project implementation and evaluated the results. Despite limited financial resources, some new activities were started in response to the recommendations of the World Population Plan of Action, especially in research programmes directed at population policy formation and in the interdisciplinary approach to population training.

Technical assistance was given to countries directly through country projects and indirectly through global, interregional and regional projects.

Training programmes received priority among multicountry projects. In the academic year 1975-1976, a total of 196 fellowships were awarded, tenable at the six United Nations regional and interregional population training and research centres in: Chembur, India; Santiago, Chile; Cairo, Egypt; Accra, Ghana; Yaoundé, United Republic of Cameroon; and Bucharest, Romania. Forty-eight fellowships for population training were awarded for study at other institutions. These were funded from country project budgets and from the block allocation provided by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities for population fellowships.

Approximately 65 countries benefited from the population fellowships. About 60 per cent of all fellowships were awarded in the Africa region, some 17 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, about 13 per cent in Latin America, slightly less than 10 per cent in the Western Asia region and about 1 per cent in Europe.

Other technical co-operation activities included: assistance to the African Census Programme and to the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning to continue the study on population change; help in establishing demographic units for population studies and research at national universities in Liberia, Malaysia, Sierra Leone and Sri Lanka; assistance for teaching and research in demography at universities in Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Papua New Guinea and the Syrian Arab Republic; and provision of experts to conduct demographic research studies, with emphasis on development planning, in several countries of Africa, Latin America and Western Asia. During the year, demand for technical support for family planning programmes increased: assistance was given to Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Kenya and Mauritius.

Total expenditure in 1976 for technical assistance projects in population amounted to $15.5 million.

A meeting of a group of experts on methods of measuring the impact of family planning programmes on fertility was convened in Geneva, Switzerland, from 20 to 27 April. The meeting was organized by the Secretariat in collaboration with the Committee on Demographic Aspects of Family Planning Programmes, a committee of the International Union for the Scientific Study of Population, with financial support from UNFPA. The experts attending the meeting considered the technical issues and problems related to each of the methods used to determine the impact of family planning programmes on fertility. They recommended the improvement of data collection and methodological research, a greater emphasis on evaluation of national family-planning programmes, and the promotion of training for personnel to carry out such evaluation.

Interagency co-operation was discussed at the 1976 session of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination's Sub-Committee on Population. Discussions included the population work programmes of the organizations represented in the Sub-Committee—the United Nations and the regional commissions, UNFPA, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The interaction of demographic with social and economic factors was considered in depth, and the monitoring of population trends and policies reviewed. A report on population activities of the United Nations system for the biennia 1976-1977 and 1978-1979 was also considered.

The Sub-Committee suggested more intensive programme discussions in the form of workshops or task forces on selected topics in order to strengthen interagency co-ordination. It also discussed the guidelines on population-related factors for development planners, the welfare of migrant workers and their families, and the status of demographic projections.

During the year, the United Nations Secretariat continued its collaboration with the International Statistical Institute regarding the World Fertility Survey. The International Union for the Scientific Study of Population also co-operated, and the Secretariat provided staff and technical advisers who assisted in the implementation of the Survey. As at December 1976, the following countries had participated in the Survey: Bangladesh, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Fiji, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Malaysia, Mexico, Nepal, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Venezuela. Also, Burma, Ecuador, Egypt, Ghana, Iraq, Senegal, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia expressed interest in participation.

Publications in 1976 included Fertility and Family Planning in Europe Around 1970: A Comparative Study of Twelve National Surveys. This report, which was prepared by the Economic Commission for Europe in co-operation with the Secretariat's Working Group on Social Demography, was issued in the Population Studies series. The 12 countries covered in the study are: Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Hungary, the Netherlands, Poland, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia.

Also issued was the Demographic Yearbook, 1975, which includes estimates of total population for the world's major areas and regions and for those countries for which the specific data were unavailable.

Legislative decisions

In a report to the Economic and Social Council on guidelines on population-related factors for development planners, the Secretary-General discussed the demographic variables interacting with development factors and how they should be taken into account in development planning. He stated that this interaction had been neglected in the development planning process and made suggestions for relating demographic factors to policy issues in planning and in selecting areas for further research.

The guidelines were discussed at two levels of development: aggregate and sectoral. At the aggregate level, emphasis was put on population and development strategies and on labour force and employment. At the sectoral level, the guidelines were limited to food and agriculture, education, housing, health, social aspects of development and resources. Also included were suggestions concerning the promotion of supporting programmes which could contribute to the integration of population-related factors in development planning, such as those involving the improvement of data, research on the cause-and-effect relation between demographic variables and development factors, the training of personnel working in the field of population and development and the establishment of an appropriate institutional system.

On 2 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 169(LXI), took note with satisfaction of the report and transmitted it to the Population Commission for further consideration.

Decision 169(LXI) was adopted on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which approved the text, without a vote, as proposed by its Chairman and orally amended by Greece, the USSR and the United States.

Chapter XXII

Social questions*Social development and policy*Social policy and development planning

World social situation

The General Assembly, at its 1976 session, considered the 1974 Report on the World Social Situation. The Report was published in 1975 and sought to contribute to a review and appraisal of social progress achieved during the first half of the Second United Nations Development Decade in meeting the objectives set out in the International Development Strategy<sup>1</sup> and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development.<sup>2</sup> The analysis in the report was to supplement information on the economic situation published in the World Economic Survey.

On 13 December 1976, the Assembly adopted a resolution on the world social situation, by which it reaffirmed the right of each State and people to determine its own objectives of social development and decide the means of their achievement without any external interference. It noted with satisfaction the policies and programmes adopted by many developing countries, despite grave financial and other external constraints, to promote social development. It also recognized the need for continued efforts at the national level to fulfil the basic needs of all segments of the population. The Assembly reaffirmed the urgency of observing the principles and implementing the decisions regarding the establishment of a new international economic order, and also affirmed that the need to eliminate social disparities in developing countries was an important reason for the developed countries to increase their commitment to achieving the goals of development co-operation and of the new international economic order.

Further, the Assembly reaffirmed the urgency of observing the principles and implementing the decisions regarding the establishment of the new international economic order, as well as the targets for the International Development Strategy, as a pre-condition for social progress and it reaffirmed that the elimination of imperialism, colonialism, aggression, foreign occupation, discrimination, apartheid and threats against national sovereignty was also a pre-condition for social and economic progress.

In addition, the Assembly urged those developed countries that had not done so to respond in a spirit of co-operation and interdependence to ensure sustained socio-economic development in the developing countries; and it requested the Secretary-General to continue to issue a report on the world social situation every four years and to give an account of the measures taken by Governments to implement these provisions.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/84, which was adopted by 120 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions. An oral drafting amendment proposed by Algeria in the plenary meeting was accepted. The Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee had approved the draft resolution on 26 November by 91 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions. The text was submitted by Pakistan on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing Member States.

Also on 13 December, the Assembly adopted a resolution by which it took note of the 1974 Report on the World Social Situation and established guidelines for future reports. It asked the Secretary-General, when preparing future reports on this subject, among other things, to: present a more integrated and concise text, with emphasis on analysis of the data obtained; cover all countries and territories, including those under colonial and alien domination and foreign occupation; and utilize the goals and objectives of the new international economic order as one of the guidelines. The Assembly also asked Governments, appropriate United Nations bodies and specialized agencies concerned to continue to co-operate in the preparation of future reports on the world social situation.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/83, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee. The Third Committee had approved the draft text without vote on 17

November 1976, on the proposal of Cuba, Egypt, the Philippines and the Syrian Arab Republic.

A draft resolution which would have invited the Secretary-General to re-examine the format and context of the report was introduced in the Third Committee by the United States and amended by Czechoslovakia, Iraq, and Mongolia; it was withdrawn by the sponsor.

Unified approach to development

In response to a General Assembly resolution of 28 November 1975,<sup>3</sup> the Secretary-General prepared, in consultation with the Director of the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD), a report containing suggestions for pilot projects on the practical application of a unified approach to development analysis and planning.

The suggested pilot projects were grouped under four aspects of a unified approach to development: (a) the formulation of a comprehensive and integrated set of national development objectives; (b) the determination and use of an integrated package of policies to achieve particular development objectives; (c) the analysis of institutions and procedures appropriate to a unified approach to planning at various levels and stages of the policy-making process; and (d) the organization of training workshops on a unified approach to development analysis and planning.

The proposed pilot projects in the first group included: a comparative study of structures of national objectives from the perspective of their scope and interrelationships; a comparative analysis of the methods and procedures used by countries in formulating a broad range of national and international development goals; and a study of a framework of indicators reflecting a unified approach to development.

The second group dealt with: a study of methods for selecting and integrating a mix of policy instruments directed towards achieving a more equitable distribution of income and a reduction in the degree and extent of mass poverty; and a survey and comparative study of measures adopted to stimulate participation in the process and benefits of development at the local level.

The third group contained two projects: a comparative analysis of the methods used to ensure co-ordination and consistency of government decisions and actions; and a comparative analysis of institutions and processes for evaluation at the level of policies, programmes and projects as part of the total decision-making system.

The proposed training workshops in the fourth group were to deal with the application of a unified approach to planning at the macrolevel and on the local and project levels.

In addition, UNRISD proposed four projects which included: analysis of policy measures in developing countries to ensure that development programmes reached the poor majority; establishment of development monitoring services; administrative arrangements for a unified approach; and organization of training workshops.

As background for the Economic and Social Council's consideration of these pilot projects, the report also contained a list of activities on a unified approach to development analysis and planning initiated or planned for 1976-1977 by the United Nations Secretariat, the regional commissions and UNRISD.

On 3 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 162(LXI), took note of the report of the Secretary-General on suggestions for pilot projects and recommended that the projects be reformulated in the light of the views expressed during the Council's discussion, in particular the view that the application of a unified approach should take full account of national plans and priorities. The Council further recommended that the decisions on development and international economic co-operation taken at the General Assembly's seventh (1975) special session be given particular attention in the reformulated projects, taking into account the special needs of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries. The Council requested the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of this decision.

The decision was approved, without vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which had approved the draft text, also without vote, on 20 July 1976, on the proposal of Argentina, Brazil, Egypt, Mexico and Pakistan.

National experience in measures for social progress

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly had before it a report of the Secretary-General on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress. In the report, information on far-reaching social and economic changes was presented in sections dealing with the developed centrally planned economies, the developed market economies and the developing economies. The material included information on: changes in decision-making, planning and participation; changes in the rights and status of individuals and groups; changes in production and employment; and changes in standards of living. Fifty Governments had given information on social, economic and institutional changes emphasizing, in particular, government measures and strategies that were instrumental in bringing about such changes. Quantitative indicators and other data reflecting such changes were also included.

On 30 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress, by which it, inter alia, reaffirmed the inalienable right of all nations to pursue freely their own economic and social development and to exercise full sovereignty over all their riches and natural resources and considered that the elimination of aggression, foreign occupation, colonialism, apartheid and racism was a prerequisite for economic and social development.

The Assembly emphasized that the carrying out of internal basic socio-economic changes designed to safeguard national independence and to ensure speedy improvement of the well-being of the population was of great importance for the achievement of social and economic progress.

The Assembly further re-emphasized the importance of holding regular interregional and regional seminars on this question and called upon the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council and the regional commissions to pay special attention to studies and analyses of national experience in carrying out far-reaching socio-economic changes for the purpose of social progress. In addition, it requested the Secretary-General to submit at its 1978 session a comprehensive report prepared on the basis of information received from Governments on national experience in carrying out such changes.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/38, adopted by 125 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, as orally amended by that Committee's Rapporteur. On 17 November 1976, the Third Committee had approved the draft text by 100 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions. The sponsors of the text were Bulgaria, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, the Philippines, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Ukrainian SSR.

Also on 30 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement. By the preamble to the resolution, the Assembly, inter alia, recognized that the expansion of the co-operative movement in the promotion of social and economic progress was closely linked to structural and institutional reforms which aimed at equitable distribution of income, popular participation in the development process and equality of opportunity to contribute to and benefit from the fruits of development.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly recognized the necessity to pay due attention to the international exchange of experience in the growth and further development and diversification of the co-operative movement. It invited Governments and relevant specialized agencies to report to the Secretary-General on their experience in promoting the co-operative movement and in building the necessary socio-economic infrastructure for that movement.

The Assembly then asked the Secretary-General to submit a report on the matter, including the results achieved by international co-operation.

These actions were embodied in resolution 31/37, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the draft text on 10 November 1976, also without vote, as sponsored and amended by Austria, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, India, Madagascar, Mongolia and Poland.

Development of national mass communication systems for social progress

During its consideration of social questions, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on co-operation and assistance in the application and improvement of national information and mass communication systems for social progress. By this resolution, the Assembly invited the Governments of the developing countries to give due regard to the establishment and/or strengthening of their national mass communication systems within the framework of their over-all development plans. It requested the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue and intensify its programme for the development of mass communication systems, especially for the benefit of developing countries, and called for a report on the progress achieved. The Assembly decided to take this matter up again in 1978 as a matter of priority.

These actions were taken by resolution 31/139, which was adopted on 16 December 1976, without vote, as recommended by the Third Committee. The Third Committee had approved the text on 10 December 1976, also without vote. It was sponsored by Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. Oral drafting amendments by Jamaica, Morocco, and Portugal were accepted by the sponsors.

Other aspects of social development and policy

Research and training for social development

The United Nations Research Institute for Social Development continued in 1976 to analyse socio-economic development through a research data bank. Three volumes containing basic socio-economic data for 1960 and 1970, comparisons of indicators for the two years and data adjusted for age structures were compiled. Related projects on measurement of real progress at the local level were also pursued. A report on the improvement of development statistics was published, which emphasized that an adequate system of development statistics required an adequate conceptual approach to development.

In collaboration with the Economic Commission for Africa, UNRISD prepared a paper on the application of a unified approach in Africa. The paper was presented at the Conference of African Planners, held in October 1976 at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. Reports on specific and on regional aspects of the social and economic implications of the large-scale introduction of new varieties of food grain were published in 1976. In addition, UNRISD initiated research on famine risk and famine prevention in the modern world and on attitudes and values concerning environment and development.

Adoption law

By a General Assembly decision of 16 December 1976, the question of a United Nations conference for an international convention on adoption law was to be included in the agenda of the thirty-second (1977) session, as the Assembly had been unable to consider the matter at its 1976 session. The Assembly took this decision (31/416) on the recommendation of its Third Committee, which had approved the draft text without vote on 10 December 1976, as proposed by Liberia.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, containing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, and 2771(XXVI) of 22 November 1971 on the world social situation,

Recalling in this connexion its resolution 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, paragraph 7 of which states that the ultimate objective of development must be to bring about sustained improvement in the well-being of the individual and bestow benefits on all,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Further recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1927(LVIII) of 6 May 1975,

Recognizing that the persistence of colonialism, aggression and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity, foreign occupation, all forms of discrimination, apartheid and all forms of domination continues to exercise a negative impact on the world social situation,

Considering that the world social situation is characterized by the wide and growing disparity in conditions of living and income levels between people in the developed and developing countries and that it is incumbent on the international community to redress this disparity,

Aware of the decisive influence of existing economic relations on the internal social situation, particularly of the developing countries, and that social distress and poverty can be removed only if the pre-conditions are created for comprehensive and equitable economic growth and social development,

Recalling that during the period from 1974 to 1976 the General Assembly, at its sixth and seventh special sessions, and a number of international conferences, including the World Population Conference, the World Food Conference, the World Conference of the International Women's Year, Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, the Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour, the Second General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, addressed themselves to several issues related to the world economic and social situation,

Considering that the desired pace of social progress in the developing countries is hindered because of the magnitude of their difficulties arising from the unjust world economic order which has existed hitherto,

Re-emphasizing that the primary responsibility for the development of developing countries rests upon themselves, but that, however great their own efforts, these will not enable them to achieve the desired development goals as expeditiously as they must unless equitable economic and commercial relations between developed and developing countries are established, and increased financial and technological resources are available to the developing countries,

Noting that social disparities are not peculiar to the developing countries and are a reflection of the injustices and inefficiency of the present world economic system,

Emphasizing the interdependence of economic and social development in promoting comprehensive growth with justice and the importance of harmonizing this process of development with the evolution of each country's values and structures,

Having considered the 1974 Report on the World Social Situation,

1. Reaffirms the right and responsibility of each State and people to determine freely its own objectives of social development, to set its own priorities and to decide in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations the means and methods of their achievement without any external interference;

2. Notes with satisfaction the policies and programmes adopted by many developing countries, within their over-all development plans, despite the grave financial and other external constraints, to promote comprehensive social development in various fields, especially to improve the conditions in the particularly disadvantaged sectors of their societies;

3. Recognizes the need for continued efforts at the national level towards the promotion of social progress and development aiming at the fulfilment of basic needs of all segments of the population through measures leading to:

- (a) More equitable redistribution of income and wealth;
- (b) The elimination of hunger and malnutrition;
- (c) A reduction of unemployment and underemployment;
- (d) The improvement of the distribution of health, housing, education and other social services;

4. Welcomes the active participation and growing involvement of the people of all sectors of society, including the youth and women, in the programmes of socio-economic development in developing countries;

5. Reaffirms the urgency of observing the principles and implementing the decisions regarding the establishment of the new international economic order, as well as the targets and policy measures of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, as a necessary pre-condition for the success of measures to eradicate poverty and to ensure real social progress in developing countries;

6. Reaffirms also that the elimination of imperialism, colonialism, aggression, foreign occupation, all forms of discrimination and apartheid and threats against national sovereignty and territorial integrity is a pre-condition for social and economic progress;

7. Affirms that the need to eliminate social disparities in developing countries is an important reason for the developed countries to increase their commitment to achieving the goals of development co-operation and of the new international economic order;

8. Deeply deplores the lack of response from some of the developed countries to measures designed to establish the new international economic order;

9. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system to take into consideration Economic and Social Council decision 162(LXI) of 3 August 1976, bearing in mind the close interrelationship between international economic relations and the world social situation;

10. Urges those developed countries that have not done so to respond in a spirit of co-operation and interdependence to ensure sustained socio-economic development in the developing countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to issue the report on the world social situation every four years, taking into consideration the provisions of the present resolution, and to give an account of the measures taken by Governments to implement these provisions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development proclaimed in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969,

Noting Economic and Social Council resolution 1927(LV/III) of 6 May 1975 on the world social situation and recalling the mid-term review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Having considered the 1974 Report on the World Social Situation,

Desirous of improving the future reports on the world social situation as to their cross-sectoral analysis of social policies and programmes, which analysis should take into account the goals and objectives of the new international economic order,

1. Takes note of the 1974 Report on the World Social Situation as well as the various points of view expressed regarding its substance and format during the thirty-first session of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take into consideration the following guidelines while preparing future reports on the world social situation:

(a) A more integrated and concise text should be presented, with emphasis on the analysis of the data obtained;

(b) All countries and territories should be covered, including those under colonial and alien domination and foreign occupation;

(c) A wide range of sources of information should be used, mainly from the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and the Governments concerned;

(d) The mid-term review and appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

(e) The goals and objectives of the new international economic order should be utilized as one of the guidelines for the preparation of future reports on the world social situation;

3. Requests Governments, appropriate United Nations bodies and specialized agencies concerned to continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the preparation of future reports on the world social situation.

The General Assembly,

Guided by the desire to promote a better quality of life, full employment and other conditions for social and economic development,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Mindful of the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order as well as the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, Bearing in mind resolutions 1581 A (L) of 21 May 1971, 1667 (LII) of 1 June 1972 and 1746 (LIV) of 16 May 1973, in which the Economic and Social Council emphasized the importance of fundamental structural socio-economic changes for the strengthening of national independence and achievement of the ultimate goals of social progress and considered it appropriate to study the experience of various countries in this field,

Recalling that, in resolution 3273 (XXIX) of 10 December 1974, the General Assembly reaffirmed the right of every State to carry out fundamental social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress and the necessity to continue the studies of national experience in this field,

Desirous of securing a speedy and complete removal of obstacles to the economic and social progress of peoples, especially colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, aggression, foreign occupation or domination and all forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples,

Convinced that peaceful coexistence and friendly relations among States would contribute to economic and social development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared on the basis of information received from Governments on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all nations to pursue freely their economic and social development and to exercise full sovereignty over all their riches and natural resources;
2. Considers that the elimination of all forms of subjugation and dependence such as aggression, foreign occupation, colonialism, apartheid, racism and all forms of racial discrimination constitutes a prerequisite for social and economic advancement;

3. Emphasizes that the carrying out of international basic socio-economic changes designed to safeguard national independence and to ensure speedy improvement of the well-being of the population is of great importance for the achievement of social and economic progress;

4. Re-emphasizes the advisability of holding, within the programme of advisory services, regular interregional and regional seminars to study the national experience of developing and developed countries in carrying out far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress;

5. Calls upon the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council and the regional commissions to pay special attention, on a regular basis, to studies and analyses of national experience in carrying out far-reaching socio-economic changes for the purpose of social progress;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Commission for Social Development and/or the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive report prepared on the basis of information received from Governments on national experience in carrying out far-reaching changes for the purpose of social progress;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress."

Resolution 31/37, as recommended by Third Committee, A/31/343, adopted without vote by Assembly on 30 November 1976, meeting 83.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2459 (XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and 3273 (XXIX) of 10 December 1974 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1668 (LII) of 1 June 1972,

Recalling the objective expressed in Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations to promote higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development for the purpose of favourably influencing the welfare of peoples as well as the peaceful and friendly relations among nations,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recognizing that the expansion of the co-operative movement in the promotion of social and economic progress is closely linked to structural and institutional reforms which, inter alia, aim at equitable distribution of income, popular participation in the development process and equality of opportunity to contribute to and benefit from the fruits of development,

Underlining the appeal to States contained in article 6 of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development that social progress and development require the participation of all members of society in productive and socially useful labour and the establishment, in conformity with human rights and fundamental freedoms and with the principles of justice and the social function of property, of forms of ownership of land and of the means of production which preclude any kind of exploitation of man, ensure equal rights to property for all and create conditions leading to genuine equality among people,

Welcoming the recommendation contained in the Programme of Action adopted by the Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour, held at Geneva from 4 to 17 June 1976, that greater importance should be given to the development of co-operatives within the framework of national measures,

Taking note of the progress made by the co-operative movement, both in developed and developing countries, and the contribution made by it in promoting collective self-reliance and mutually beneficial interdependence,

Recognizing the social and economic benefits accruing from producers', consumers', credit, multipurpose and other kinds of co-operatives to all sections of society and, more particularly, to the middle-income and low-income groups,

Stressing the need to assist the rapid development of the multipurpose co-operative movement, particularly in the agricultural and allied rural sectors of economic and social life in the developing countries,

Drawing attention to the lasting benefits enjoyed by large sections of society in urban and rural areas in many parts of the world owing to the noteworthy expansion in co-operative housing projects in the last three decades, and the considerable potential for further activity in this field,

Bearing in mind the positive experience which many countries have already gained in implementing agrarian reforms and in promoting the co-operative movement and which would be conducive to the establishment of the new international economic order and to the realization of the objectives of the Second United Nations Development Decade,

1. Recognizes the necessity to pay due attention to the international exchange of experience in the growth and further development and diversification of the co-operative movement;

2. Invites Governments and relevant specialized agencies to report to the Secretary-General on their experience in promoting the co-operative movement and in building the necessary socio-economic infrastructure for it;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with Member States, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on their national experience in promoting the co-operative movement and on the results so far achieved by international co-operation in this field;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress" and to consider under this item the report of the Secretary-General on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement.

Resolution 31/139, as recommended by Third Committee, A/31/434, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1976, meeting 102.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1778(XVII) of 7 December 1962 and convinced that the establishment and/or development of national information and mass communication systems will play an important role in the promotion of opportunities for the peoples of the developing nations to participate fully in national development and in the promotion of international co-operation, including the efforts to achieve the goals of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade and the establishment of the new international economic order,

Further recalling its resolution 3148(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973 and convinced that the establishment and/or improvement of national information and mass communication systems will greatly help preserve and enhance the cultural values of a country and will be one of the most efficient methods for transmitting scientific and technological knowledge and the cultural values of a country,

Desirous that the benefits of co-operation and assistance in the application and the establishment and/or improvement of national information and mass communication systems for social progress and development be considered with a view to disseminating those benefits to all countries regardless of their stages of economic and social development,

Acknowledging the important contributions made and the significant roles being played by the specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, regional economic and social commissions, non-governmental organizations and regional communication media training and research institutions in assisting developing countries in the field of mass communications,

Noting with appreciation the relevant decisions taken by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its nineteenth session in the field of mass communications,

Convinced that consideration of ways and means of achieving the application and improvement of national information and mass communication systems for social progress and development will pave the way for improved international co-operation in the field of mass communications,

1. Invites the Governments of the developing countries to give due regard to the establishment and/or strengthening of their national mass communication systems within the framework of their over-all development plans;

2. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue and intensify its programme for the development of mass communication systems, especially for the benefit of developing countries;

Housing, building and planning

Operational activities

During 1976, technical co-operation activities in the field of housing, building and planning dealt with human settlements in the broader context of economic and social development. Housing for the lowest-income groups received high priority in government programmes and greater emphasis was placed on immediate action.

Governments received technical assistance in: addition of a spatial dimension to national development planning activities; support of regional development projects with regard to human settlements and land utilization; assistance in urban and metropolitan development planning, emphasizing specific action programmes such as sites and services schemes, urban redevelopment projects, environmental protection and programmes for disaster prevention and reconstruction. Other projects dealt with sectoral planning in housing, building construction, training skilled manpower and institution building.

During 1976, 183 experts (including 40 associate experts) provided by Denmark, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland, undertook assignments in the field of housing, building and physical planning in the following 52 countries or territories: Antigua, Argentina, the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Botswana, the British Virgin Islands, Burundi, the Cayman Islands, Chad, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, the Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Republic, Malawi, Malaysia, Montserrat, Morocco, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, the Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

During the year, 104 fellowships were awarded to nationals of Afghanistan, Argentina, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Burma, Chad, the Congo, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, the Gambia, Haiti, Hungary, India, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Lesotho, Malawi, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Togo, Turkey, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia. Host countries included Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Mexico, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Poland, Senegal, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, Togo, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States and Venezuela.

The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on the Significance of Rural Housing and Community Facilities in Integrated Rural Development held a meeting from 17 to 21 May 1976 in New York. An Interregional Seminar on Building Operations in Low-cost Housing Construction was organized by the United Nations Centre for Housing, Building and Planning in collaboration with the Government of the Netherlands from 5 to 16 April 1976, in Rotterdam. The Seminar was to assist Governments of developing countries in overcoming obstacles in the implementation of housing programmes, such as the waste of materials and wages resulting from inefficient and disorganized building operations in housing construction and the use of technologies unsuited to developing countries' needs. Thirty participants were invited.

Total expenditure for technical co-operation projects during 1976 amounted to $8,043,251, of which $260,727 came from the regular United Nations budget, $6,937,779 from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), $4,928 from the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and $839,817 from trust funds.

Of this total, about 90 per cent was allotted to 33 large-scale projects in Argentina, Bangladesh, Chad, Ecuador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Iran, the Ivory Coast, Malaysia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Yemen and Yugoslavia, and to regional projects in Asia and in the Caribbean.

Publications issued in 1976 included Financial Management of Government Housing Projects and Basic Housing—Case Studies. A special issue of the quarterly, Human Settlements Bulletin, published in May 1976, was devoted to Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.

Report of the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning

The report of the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning on its October 1975 session, taken up in the Social Committee of the Economic and Social Council at its April-May 1976 session, contained three draft resolutions for action by the Council. France submitted a draft resolution in the Social Committee which, it said, was intended to replace draft resolution II proposed by the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning at its 1975 session.<sup>4</sup> France noted that it had also sponsored the draft resolution in the Committee.

By this text, the Economic and Social Council would, among other things, request the Secretary-General to: devise and implement an integrated information system in the field of human settlements; undertake all necessary measures for informing Governments, institutions and enterprises in the developing countries of the services available to them and maintain contact with those countries in order to be continually apprised of their growing needs; assist interested countries in organizing national or regional networks of documentation and information on human settlements and co-ordinate their programmes and functions with those of the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning; invite Member States to collaborate with the Centre in the organization and operation of the services offered; and organize advisory meetings of experts.

On the proposal of Bangladesh, as amended by Pakistan, the Social Committee on 15 April 1976 approved, without vote, a draft decision by which the Council would take note of the report of the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning, would request the Secretary-General to circulate the report to Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, and would decide to examine at its mid-1976 session the draft resolutions and recommendations contained in the report of the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning in the context of the recommendations of the Habitat Conference. Pakistan's amendment called for circulation of the report to the Habitat Conference.

The Council adopted the recommended text as its decision 151(LX) on 12 May 1976 without a vote.

Later in the year, on 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council decided to transmit the draft resolutions and recommendations proposed by the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning to the General Assembly at its 1976 session, in connexion with the Assembly's consideration of the report of Habitat. These actions were taken by decision 179(LXI), approved, without taking a vote, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, which approved the text, without vote, on 2 August 1976 on the proposal of the Chairman as orally amended by France. (See also pp. 447-53.)

The General Assembly, by resolution 31/116 of 16 December 1976, requested the Secretary-General to ensure, through the appropriate machinery of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), the co-ordination of the work of all United Nations bodies concerned with respect to their activities in the human settlements field and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its July-August 1978 session on progress made. It further requested him to take appropriate measures to ensure effective preparations for the discussions on human settlements questions at the same session, bearing in mind the contributions made by relevant components of the United Nations system as represented in ACC.

In addition, the Assembly requested all United Nations bodies concerned, particularly UNDP, UNEP, the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning, and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, to ensure that the recommendations of Habitat were taken into account in their respective work programmes and to make their consultative services and resources available for implementation of national programmes of action and in strengthening regional co-operation in the field of human settlements. These bodies were also asked to give all possible support to the regional commissions, which were to report to the Council at its mid-1978 session on the results of regional co-operation, including the progress made in the establishment of governmental regional committees on human settlements. #### Criteria governing multilateral financing of housing and human settlements

In a final report to the General Assembly on criteria governing multilateral financing of housing and human settlements, the Secretary-General analysed the needs and possibilities for action by multilateral finance agencies and the rest of the international community. He reviewed existing criteria, recommended a number of additions and modifications and urged an increase in the total volume of investment.

On 3 August 1976, the Economic and Social

Council, by resolution 2013(LXI), invited the attention of the General Assembly to a decision of the Governing Council of UNEP, wherein that Council expressed the belief that the environment should be a major consideration in international discussions on development. The Economic and Social Council further invited the Assembly to take into consideration the comments of the Governing Council on the report of the Secretary-General on criteria governing multilateral financing of housing and human settlements. (For text of resolution 2013(LXI), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly took note of the report on criteria governing multilateral financing of housing and human settlements. It also took note of comments thereon submitted by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and UNDP and a note by UNEP.

These actions were set forth in decision 31/411 B, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text on 7 December 1976 on the proposal of its Chairman.

Social services

Technical aid activities

During 1976, United Nations technical assistance continued to be provided for social welfare administration and training, child welfare, social aspects of family planning, rehabilitation of disabled persons and production of orthotic/prosthetic appliances.

Seven experts undertook assignments in Bahrain, Cyprus, the Dominican Republic, Iran and Pakistan. Two experts were assigned to the Asian Centre for Training and Research in Social Welfare and Development, in the Philippines, and one adviser assisted the European Centre for Social Welfare Training and Research, at Vienna, Austria. The services of an interregional adviser in rehabilitation of the disabled were made available to the Governments of Brazil, Chad, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Mali and Singapore. Two regional advisers assisted with social aspects of family planning and with social welfare training and community development.

Eighteen fellowships were awarded to nationals of Israel (11), the Netherlands (1), Pakistan (3), Southern Rhodesia (1), Togo (1) and Turkey (1). Host countries included Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iran, the Netherlands, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Total expenditures during the year amounted to $1,290,000.

Publications in 1976 included: Comparative Study on Legislation, Organization and Administration of Rehabilitation Services for the Disabled and Social and Economic Conditions of the Mentally Retarded in Selected Countries. The first issue of the Bulletin on Aging was also published during the year. (See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES for other publications.)

Rehabilitation of disabled persons

On 13 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the implementation of the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons. It recalled its resolution of 9 December 1975 proclaiming the Declaration<sup>5</sup> and recommended that all Member States should take account of the rights and principles laid down in the Declaration in establishing their policies, plans and programmes. The Assembly further recommended that all international organizations and agencies concerned should include in their programmes provisions ensuring the effective implementation of those rights and principles.

In addition, the Secretary General was requested to inform the Assembly, in the form of a summary annexed to his reports on the world social situation, of the measures adopted by Member States, international organizations and agencies concerned, to ensure the effective implementation of the Declaration.

These actions were taken by resolution 31/82, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. On 1 November 1976, the Third Committee had approved without vote a draft resolution sponsored by Algeria, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bhutan, Botswana, Burundi, Canada, the Central African Republic, Chad, Colombia, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Republic, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Yugoslavia and Zaire. Oral amendments by India were accepted by the sponsors; India then became a sponsor.

By another resolution, the General Assembly proclaimed the year 1981 International Year for Disabled Persons, with the theme "full participation." The Assembly decided to devote that year to the realization of a set of objectives in favour of disabled persons, such as helping them in their physical and psychological adjustment to society, making available opportunities for suitable work and ensuring their full integration in society, encouraging study and research projects designed to facilitate their practical participation in daily life, educating and informing the public of the rights of disabled persons, and promoting effective measures for the prevention of disability and for the rehabilitation of disabled persons.

The Assembly also invited all Member States and organizations concerned to implement the objectives of the Year, and requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1977 a draft programme for the Year.

These actions were embodied in resolution 31/123, adopted, without vote, on 16 December 1976 on the recommendation of the Third Committee. The Third Committee had approved the text on 25 November 1976, without a vote, as spon-

Social defence

Technical aid activities

During 1976, the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice focused on the development of effective methods to prevent crime and improve the treatment of offenders.

During the year, the United Nations continued to provide technical support to Governments at their request. Through a network of regional institutes it also sponsored research activities, training courses and conferences designed to promote collaborative efforts in crime prevention and the treatment of offenders.

A seminar on crime prevention in Latin America was held in Mexico City, Mexico, from 9 to 12 August 1976, jointly organized by the Government of Mexico and the United Nations-affiliated Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, which had been established in San José, Costa Rica, in August 1975. The Latin American Institute also organized a regional meeting of ministers of justice in Costa Rica on 24 and 25 May 1976.

The United Nations continued to provide technical support to the regional institutes for crime prevention and the treatment of offenders in San José, Cairo (Egypt) and Fuchu (Japan). The Government of Zambia offered to provide host facilities for a regional institute for Africa south of the Sahara, and the Government of Finland offered host facilities for a European regional institute.

In 1976, the services of three experts in the field of crime prevention were provided by the United Nations to Hong Kong, Israel and Sri Lanka. They were to assist in the establishment of, respectively, psychological services in the correctional establishment, a forensic metallurgical laboratory and a training school for correctional personnel. Five fellowships in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders were awarded to nationals of India, Israel, Sierra Leone and Sri Lanka. Publications in 1976 included the International Review of Criminal Policy, No. 32.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Report of Fifth Congress on Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

At its fourth session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 21 June to 2 July 1976, the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control considered the report of the 1975 Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.<sup>6</sup> In its debate, the Committee stressed the importance of maintaining continuity in the work of the Congresses. This might be achieved by providing for an adequate feedback on the activities arising from the recommendations of the Congress, through strengthening communications with Governments, scientific institutions and other agencies and through wider dissemination of Congress and Committee reports and newsletters. In addition, while recognizing the need for encouraging technical co-operation, the Committee felt strongly that greater efforts should be directed towards the strengthening of existing local resources and traditions.

The Committee also adopted several draft resolutions for submission to the General Assembly, by one of which it asked the Assembly to: draw the attention of Member States to the existence of the Social Defence Trust Fund and to request contributions thereto; appeal for the collaboration of Member States in international action for crime prevention; and support the preparations for and conduct of the Sixth Congress, to be held at Sydney, Australia, in 1980.

International Plan of Action

In 1972, the General Assembly had instructed the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to submit to it in 1976, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on methods to prevent crime and improve the treatment of offenders.<sup>7</sup> At its fourth session, the Committee considered the report, which was based on its previous work and the conclusions of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

The report elaborated guidelines and standards for the administration of criminal justice, including law enforcement, judicial procedures and correctional practices, with emphasis on crime problems impeding socio-economic development. It drew attendon to the growing seriousness of crimes, especially those of a transnational character, and the spread of violence. The report also noted that crime had assumed new dimensions, such as crime related to international trade and offences against consumers, which victimized large sections of the population and impaired the quality of life. Strengthened national and international action was required to solve the problem of criminality in modern societies.

The Committee approved the report as the basis of further United Nations activities and invited its use by Member States in formulating and implementing national crime prevention policies and strategies. It requested the Commission for Social Development to transmit the report through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly for adoption.

Code of conduct for law enforcement officials

The Committee on Crime Prevention and Control also approved at its 1976 session a draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials, which set standards to guard against corruption, excess of force or authority, and violence and brutality. The code stressed in particular the obligation to respect and protect human dignity and human rights, the prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and the inadmissibility of all acts of corruption.

The Committee recommended that the code be transmitted to the General Assembly for adoption in 1976.

On 13 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted without a vote resolution 31/85 on the subject of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. By this resolution the Assembly, inter alia, welcomed the work of the Committee, in particular with respect to the draft code, and invited the Economic and Social Council to give due priority to the examination of the draft code, so that the Council at its first 1977 session could take further steps with a view to its adoption. (For text of resolution 31/85, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Standard Minimum Rules for Treatment of Prisoners

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1993(LX) adopted on 12 May 1976, reiterated a 1973 General Assembly recommendation<sup>8</sup> that Member States make all possible efforts to implement the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and take the Rules into account in the framing of national legislation. The Council determined that no restrictions upon or derogations from any of the fundamental human rights recognized or existing in any country in virtue of law, conventions, regulations or custom were to be admitted on the pretext that the Rules did not recognize such rights or that they recognized them to a lesser extent. The Council further requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to study the range of application of the Rules and to formulate a set of implementing procedures. (For text of resolution 1993(LX), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

At its 1976 session, the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control considered the question of the range of application and the implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules. The Committee approved a draft resolution calling for the addition of a new section (rule 95) regarding persons arrested or imprisoned without charge and urging the full application of the proposed implementing procedures. It recommended that the Commission for Social Development transmit the resolution to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

On 13 December 1976, the General Assembly, by resolution 31/85 on the subject of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, invited the Economic and Social Council to consider with due priority the recommendation of the Committee relating to the extension of the Rules to all persons arrested or imprisoned with or without charge and conviction, as well as the draft procedures for their effective implementation. (For text of resolution 31/85, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Human rights in the administration of justice

The Committee, at its fourth session, also considered the question of human rights in the administration of justice and surveyed the scope of existing standards. The Committee recommended that priority be given to the formulation of new standards, including: the development of standards that would ensure just, humane and effective judicial proceedings; the elaboration of standard minimum rules for the treatment of offenders in the community; the strengthening of inmate grievance procedures; the facilitation of the return of persons convicted of crime abroad to their domicile to serve their sentences; and the improvement of the situation of persons detained before trial. (See also p. 611.)

Role and function of Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

In addition, the Committee discussed its role and possible courses of action to maximize its contribution to international action for crime prevention. These included: co-ordination of activities for the regional United Nations-affiliated institutes; an advisory role in technical co-operation efforts; a direct role in devising methods of crime prevention and control; formulation, evaluation and implementation of medium-term plans; data collection; and ensuring co-ordination with international activities, such as drug abuse control and action against transnational criminality. In this connexion, the Committee recommended urgent consideration of the trends in prison population, the extent and consequences of economic criminality, the revision of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the elaboration of a code for judicial personnel, and the implementation of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.<sup>9</sup>

The Committee's role in connexion with the organization and preparation of the quinquennial United Nations Congresses on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the implementation of their conclusions and recommendations was also cited, and annual Committee sessions were recommended in view of the Committee's increasing responsibilities.

Popular participation and institutional development

Technical aid activities

During 1976, 31 advisers provided technical assistance to Botswana (2), the Central African Empire (6), Democratic Yemen (6), the Ivory Coast (1), Kenya (2), Saudi Arabia (10), Sierra Leone (1), Swaziland (2) and the Upper Volta (1). The main objective of these projects was the promotion of popular participation, particularly in the rural areas, through training personnel, integrating women in development and evaluating social programmes.

Twenty-seven fellowships were awarded to nationals of the following countries: the Central African Empire (1), Democratic Yemen (12), Honduras (7), the Niger (4), Saudi Arabia (2) and Togo (1). Host countries included Egypt, France, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Mexico, the Niger, Poland, the Sudan, Tunisia, the Upper Volta, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela.

A correspondence seminar on local- and intermediate-level development was conducted, which was to introduce the concept of integrated social development at the grass-roots level. Forty-two participants came from the following countries or territories: Bangladesh, Belize, Burma, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, India, Jordan, Liberia, Malaysia, Mauritius, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Somalia, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia. The results of the seminar were reviewed at a workshop held from 6 to 18 September 1976 in Berlin (West) with 16 participants from Bangladesh, Burma, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Ghana, Guatemala, India, Pakistan, Turkey and Yugoslavia.

During the year, a study entitled "Popular participation for the improvement of the human environment in marginal settlements" was issued for the 1976 Habitat: United Nations Conférence on Human Settlements. It focused on strategies and methods for promoting popular participation to improve the quality of life in marginal settlements. In addition, two annotated bibliographies were completed: Monitoring and Evaluation Systems for Assessing Developmental Impact at the Local Level and Innovative Approaches to Popular Participation in Development. A study entitled "Popular participation and its practical implications for development" reviewed actions at the international level to promote citizen participation in development.

Agrarian reform and rural development

The Task Force on Rural Development of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) met in April 1976 in Washington, D.C., United States, for joint planning relating to rural development, with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development acting initially as lead agency. At the meeting, a draft report was adopted which recommended a poverty-oriented approach to rural development. Primary responsibility for the design and implementation of rural development programmes was to rest with the Governments of the countries concerned. The inter-agency effort was to support and assist these programmes, which would lead to improvement of monitoring and evaluation of rural development activities, harmonization of future programme proposals and réorientation of activities.

Later in the year, the recommendations were endorsed by ACC, which decided to designate the International Labour Organisation as lead agency for the next year. Appointment of the lead agency on a rotating basis was to assist in maintaining the momentum for co-operation.

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council took note of the progress report of ACC on rural development, requested governing bodies of the organizations in the United Nations system to give priority to rural development, and requested ACC to proceed with the joint planning and action phase. (See also pp. 640—41.)

These actions were taken by the Council in its decision 175(LXI), approved, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee; the text was sponsored by Denmark and Jamaica. The Committee had approved the draft text without a vote on 29 July 1976.

In September 1976, the ACC Task Force met again to take steps to implement the recommendations.

Human rights questions*Action against racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, nazism and racial intolerance

During 1976, the United Nations continued its consideration of action to be taken against racism, racial discrimination, apartheid and other forms of discrimination. The implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the preparations for a World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were the subject of resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination continued to consider reports submitted by States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. The Assembly commended the Committee for focusing greater attention on struggles against oppression in southern Africa, and appealed to all States to become parties to the Convention.

The International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, adopted by the Assembly in 1973, entered into force on 18 July 1976. By the end of the year the Convention had been ratified by 23 States; the Assembly appealed to all States to accede to it. Also, the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts of the Commission on Human Rights continued to investigate violations of human rights related to the policies of apartheid and racial discrimination practised in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia.

A preliminary report on the adverse effects on human rights resulting from aid to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa, prepared by a Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, was the subject of a General Assembly resolution by which it condemned collaboration with such régimes.

The Commission on Human Rights continued drafting a declaration on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and was asked by the Assembly to speed up its work.

On 19 March 1976, the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination was observed at a special meeting at United Nations Headquarters, New York. Details of these and other developments are described in the sections below.

International action to combat racism and racial discrimination*Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination*Implementation of the Programme for the Decade

On 10 December 1973, the General Assembly launched the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in an effort to ensure the rapid eradication of all forms of racial discrimination. By the Programme for the Decade it had adopted on 2 November 1973,<sup>1</sup> the Assembly asked the Economic and Social Council to assume responsibility for co-ordinating and evaluating the activities undertaken in connexion with the Decade.

At its organizational session for 1976, held in January, the Council decided to refer a 1975 General Assembly resolution<sup>2</sup> on the implementation of the Programme for the Decade to the Commission on Human Rights for consideration at its 1976 session. This action was taken with the adoption on 15 January of decision 137(ORG-76) on the Council's programme of work, proposed by the Council President.

The Commission, which met at Geneva, Switzerland, from 2 February to 5 March 1976, approved a resolution by which, among other things, it asked its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to study and prepare, at its session later in the year, suggestions concerning the implementation of United Nations decisions on racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, decolonization, self-determination and related matters. The Commission drew the Sub-Commission's attention to the Assembly's and its own deliberations on this matter and asked it to report in 1977 with suggestions and proposals.

At its August/September 1976 session, the Sub-Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council be asked to authorize the Sub-Commission's Chairman to appoint a group to meet, prior to the Sub-Commission's 1977 session, to examine the action to be undertaken in the context of the Commission's request. (See also p. 576.)

At its April-May 1976 session, the Economic and Social Council discussed the implementation of the Programme for the Decade. Among the documents before it was the third annual report of the Secretary-General on Decade activities, containing information on actions, suggestions and trends emerging from deliberations in United Nations organs and bodies, including the General Assembly's Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the specialized agencies dealing with the question of racial discrimination and apartheid. The report summarized: activities undertaken or contemplated under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights; information submitted by non-governmental organizations concerning Decade activities; and the activities of the United Nations Office of Public Information and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research with respect to the Decade.

The Council also had before it a report of the Secretary-General summarizing information received from the following 39 States concerning their activities relating to the Decade: Algeria, Bahrain, Barbados, Cuba, Cyprus, Ecuador, Fiji, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Guatemala, Hungary, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Japan, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, New Zealand, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, the Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, the Sudan, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Venezuela.

Also before the Council were a number of letters addressed to the Secretary-General by Cyprus and Turkey respectively. Those from Turkey transmitted letters from a representative of the "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus," who asserted that discrimination had been systematically practised in Cyprus for the past two decades by what he termed the Greek Cypriot Administration and its leadership against the indigenous Turkish Cypriot population of the island.

In its communications, Cyprus said that the so-called "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" was a non-existent entity. It said that Turkey was trying to deflect attention from the main issue, which was the crimes perpetrated against the Republic of Cyprus by the Turkish occupation forces and their instruments in Cyprus, and to blur the issue of Turkey's violation of all human rights in Cyprus after its invasion of the island.

On 11 May 1976, the Council adopted a resolution by which, after taking note with appreciation of the Secretary-General's reports, it asked him to submit those reports, along with any supplemental information received, to the General Assembly at its 1976 session later in the year.

The Council welcomed the adoption, by the Assembly and other United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, of decisions and measures bearing on racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, decolonization and self-determination, as called for under the Programme for the Decade. It welcomed in particular the adoption of certain resolutions by which the Security Council had, inter alia: condemned the continued illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa; demanded again that South Africa abolish its application of racially discriminatory and repressive laws and practices in Namibia; reaffirmed that the current situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security, and expanded the sanctions against that régime under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;<sup>3</sup> and appealed to all States and to the organizations of the United Nations system to provide all possible assistance to Mozambique.

Also by this resolution, the Economic and Social Council approved the text of a draft resolution on various aspects of the Decade and recommended its adoption by the General Assembly.

The Council's resolution—1989(LX)—was adopted by 40 votes to 1, with 9 abstentions. The sponsors of the text were Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Nigeria, Togo, Uganda, Zaire and Zambia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

When the General Assembly discussed the implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination at its 1976 session, it had before it further letters received by the Secretary-General from Cyprus and Turkey containing views on matters raised within the context of racial discrimination.

The Assembly also had before it a report of the Secretary-General containing an analysis of information received from 13 Member States—Belgium, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Egypt, Greece, Honduras, India, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Yugoslavia—on activities undertaken or contemplated in connexion with the Decade. The report also included information submitted by non-governmental organizations and summarized actions, suggestions and trends emerging from the deliberations of United Nations bodies.

In accordance with a 1975 General Assembly request,<sup>4</sup> the Secretary-General, at the 1976 Assembly session, submitted a report containing proposals to implement those provisions of the Programme for the Decade which called for the establishment of an international fund on a voluntary basis to help peoples struggling against racial discrimination and apartheid. The report described existing funds and programmes in the United Nations system whose activities were pertinent to the realization of the fund's objectives. It also contained information on funds established by the Organization of African Unity.

The report said that further expressions of view in the Assembly on the scope and objectives of the new fund would serve as a guide to the Secretary-General in establishing such a fund. Consideration might also be given, it said, to extending the mandate of one or some of the existing funds.

Also before the Assembly was the text of the draft resolution on the Decade recommended by the Economic and Social Council. The discussion of the text took place in the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which on 7 October 1976 approved the resolution by a roll-call vote of 103 to 1, with 16 abstentions.

On 13 December, the Assembly adopted the text by a recorded vote of 113 to 1, with 14 abstentions, as its resolution 31/77. It thereby, among other things, condemned the intolerable conditions that continued to prevail in southern Africa and elsewhere and reaffirmed its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of oppressed peoples to liberate themselves from racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, colonialism and alien domination. It called upon all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to offer all possible assistance to Angola, Mozambique and the African countries surrounding the racist régimes in southern Africa, so that they might continue to apply fully the sanctions against those régimes.

The Assembly urged all States to co-operate in achieving the goals and objectives of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination by taking actions and measures called for by the Programme for the Decade at the national, regional and international levels. It urged them, in particular:

(a) to ensure the immediate termination of all measures and policies, as well as military, nuclear, economic and other activities, which enabled racist régimes in southern Africa to continue the repression of the African people;

(b) to provide full support and assistance, morally and materially, to the peoples victims of apartheid and racial discrimination and to the liberation movements;

(c) to cease emigration to South Africa;

(d) to ensure the release of political prisoners in South Africa and of those subjected to restrictions for their opposition to apartheid;

(e) to formulate and execute plans to realize the policy measures and goals contained in the Programme for the Decade, and to consider establishing national arrangements to follow up the implementation of the Programme;

(f) to review internal laws and regulations with a view to identifying and rescinding those which provided for, gave rise to or inspired racial discrimination or apartheid;

(g) to ensure the cessation of all discriminatory measures against migrant workers and to extend to them treatment equal to that provided for nationals of the host country with regard to human rights and the provisions of their labour legislation; and

(h) to sign and ratify the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,<sup>5</sup> the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid<sup>6</sup> and all other relevant instruments.

The Assembly also urged Member States which were parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to comply fully with their obligations under that Convention.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly urged United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to ensure the continuation of their activities related to the Decade, with emphasis on, inter alia:

(a) providing moral and material support to the national liberation movements and the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination;

(b) assisting and conducting vigorous educational and information campaigns to dispel racial prejudice and to involve public opinion in the struggle against racism and racial discrimination; and

(c) examining the socio-economic and colonial roots of racism, apartheid and racial discrimination with a view to eliminating them.

The Assembly welcomed suggestions concerning the Programme for the Decade by those United Nations bodies whose work related to it. It asked the Secretary-General to draw on the expertise of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Commission on Human Rights' Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities while carrying out Decade activities.

The Assembly appealed to Governments and private organizations to make voluntary contributions which would make it possible to carry out all Decade activities, and reiterated its call for adequate resources to enable the Secretary-General to undertake the tasks entrusted to him under the Programme for the Decade.

Also by resolution 31/77, the Assembly decided to consider the question of the Decade as a matter of high priority at its 1977 session. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 13 December 1976, the Assembly also adopted a resolution—31/81—on the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. By one provision thereof, it welcomed the Committee's participation in the realization of the objectives of the Programme for the Decade. (See below for further details of resolution 31/81.)

World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly decided in 1973<sup>7</sup> that a world conference on combating racial discrimination should be convened not later than 1978. By a 1975 decision, the Assembly noted with appreciation the offer of Ghana to act as host to the world conference, and requested the Secretary-General to enter into consultations with the Government of Ghana concerning financial and other arrangements and to submit a report thereon to the Economic and Social Council in 1976.<sup>8</sup>

At its April-May 1976 session, the Council had before it the report of the Secretary-General. In addition to information on the consultations with Ghana, the report contained observations on the purposes and aims of the conference, the nature and character of its proceedings and preliminary financial implications, bearing in mind the provisions of the Assembly's 1969 decision calling on host Governments, when issuing an invitation to a United Nations body, to agree to defray the additional costs involved.<sup>9</sup>

In its conclusions, the report noted that the Government of Ghana had requested that the United Nations defray one half of the expenditures involved in holding the conference away from Headquarters. It stated that in the event that the Economic and Social Council decided to recommend to the General Assembly that it make an exception to its practice by acceding to Ghana's request, there would be a considerable financial implication to the United Nations.

The Council adopted a resolution on the question of the conference on 11 May 1976. By the preambular part of the text, the Council, among other things, recognized the fact that, although Ghana was one of the countries most seriously affected by the current world economic crisis, its Government had committed itself to a substantial financial contribution towards the conference.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Council reiterated its total abhorrence of all forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. Then, welcoming with appreciation Ghana's continued interest in hosting the conference, it recommended that the General Assembly consider favourably Ghana's request that the United Nations defray half of the additional cost involved in holding the conference at Accra.

The Council authorized its President, in consultation with regional groups, to appoint a committee of Council members to act as the preparatory sub-committee of the Council. The sub-committee was to complete, in consultation with the Secretary-General and the Government of Ghana, the preparations for the conference and to submit a report on its work in 1977. The Council observed that the sub-committee might wish to draw on the expertise of various United Nations bodies which dealt with matters relating to racial discrimination.

Also by the resolution, the Council recommended the text of a draft resolution on this question for adoption by the General Assembly.

The Council adopted this resolution—1990(LX)—by 40 votes to 1, with 8 abstentions. The sponsors of the text were Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Nigeria, Togo, Uganda, Zaire and Zambia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly discussed the world conference at its 1976 session in the context of its consideration of the agenda item on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination. On 13 December 1976, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, it adopted the text submitted to it by the Economic and Social Council.

By this resolution, the Assembly again welcomed with appreciation the offer by Ghana to act as host to the conference, took note of the measures contemplated by its Government to ensure the success of the conference, and decided to convene the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination in Ghana in order to mobilize world public opinion and adopt measures likely to secure the full and universal implementation of United Nations decisions and resolutions on racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, decolonization and self-determination. It decided to make exception to its 1969 resolution on the pattern of conferences<sup>10</sup> and agreed that half of the additional cost involved in holding the Conference in Ghana would be defrayed from the regular budget of the United Nations.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to maintain contacts with the Government of Ghana concerning future arrangements for holding the Conference at Accra. It decided to consider this question again in 1977 as a matter of high priority.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 31/78, by a recorded vote of 110 to 2, with 16 abstentions. The Third Committee had approved the text on 7 October 1976 by a roll-call vote of 99 to 2, with 20 abstentions. At the request of Austria, a separate vote was taken in the Committee on the operative paragraph by which the Assembly decided to convene the Conference; it was approved by 82 votes to 15, with 13 abstentions. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 4 February 1977, by a letter addressed to the Secretary-General, the Government of Ghana withdrew its offer to host the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. It explained that it had reached the unavoidable conclusion that the necessary expenditures were beyond its current capability.

The Commission on Human Rights, meeting at Geneva in February and March 1976, approved a resolution on its continuing consideration of ways to implement the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. By a provision thereof it recommended that the Economic and Social Council take into account the participation of the Commission in the preparatory arrangements for holding the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. The Commission also recommended the text of a draft decision on this matter for adoption by the Council.

The Council, at the first of its two regular 1976 sessions, took note of the recommendation of the Commission that it should be enabled to participate in the preparatory arrangements for the World Conference. The Council acted on the recommendation of its Social Committee in adopting decision 148(LX), by a vote of 38 to 0, with 9 abstentions, on 12 May 1976. The Social Committee had approved the decision, as recommended by the Commission, on 3 May, by 40 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions.

Elimination of racial discrimination

Status of the International Convention

The fifth meeting of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination<sup>11</sup> was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 8 January 1976.

At that meeting, the States parties elected new members of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and decided to continue the current method of apportioning the Committee's expenses.

The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination was adopted by the General Assembly on 21 December 1965 and entered into force on 4 January 1969. As at 31 December 1976, the following 92 States had ratified or acceded to the Convention: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, the Central African Empire, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Haiti, the Holy See, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Five of the States parties—Costa Rica, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Uruguay—had made declarations, under article 14 of the Convention, recognizing the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to receive and consider communications from individuals or groups of individuals within their jurisdiction claiming to be victims of a violation by the State party concerned of any of the rights set forth in the Convention. Under article 14, the Committee was to be competent to exercise this function when at least 10 States parties were bound by such declarations.

At the 1976 session of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General submitted a report on the status of the Convention, providing a list of States that had signed, ratified or acceded to it, as well as the texts of declarations and/or reservations made by some States at the time of ratification or accession.

By a resolution adopted on 13 December 1976, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report, expressed satisfaction with the increase in the number of States that had ratified or acceded to the Convention, reaffirmed its conviction that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and implementation of its provisions were necessary for the realization of the objectives of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and appealed to States which were not parties to the Convention to ratify or accede to it. Also, the Assembly appealed to the States parties to study the possibility of making the declaration provided for in article 14. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to submit annual reports on the status of the Convention.

These decisions were taken with the adoption by consensus of resolution 31/79. The Assembly's Third Committee had approved the text by consensus on 8 October 1976. The resolution was sponsored by Argentina, Belgium, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, India, Iran, Italy, the Libyan Arab Republic, Morocco, New Zealand, the Philippines, Senegal, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Yugoslavia. The Third Committee also approved, by a vote of 48 to 0, with 56 abstentions, an amendment by Uruguay adding the provision by which the Assembly appealed to the States parties to study the possibility of making the declaration provided for in article 14 of the Convention.

When it adopted resolution 31/77 on the implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see section above), the Assembly also urged all States to sign and ratify the Convention. In adopting resolution 31/81 on the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, it took a number of decisions having a bearing on the Convention (see section below).

Reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, established in 1969 after the entry into force of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to supervise the implementation of the Convention, held two sessions during 1976: its thirteenth, from 29 March to 16 April at Geneva, Switzerland, and its fourteenth, from 2 to 20 August at United Nations Headquarters, New York. The Committee submitted the seventh annual report on its activities to the General Assembly at its thirty-first session, which opened on 21 September 1976.

At its 1976 sessions, the Committee continued its primary task of considering the biennial reports submitted by States parties to the Convention on legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures taken to implement the provisions of the Convention. It examined 50 initial, periodic or supplementary reports submitted by 44 States parties.

Representatives of reporting States, in keeping with the Committee's practice, were invited to introduce their reports, to submit further information and to reply to questions raised by Committee members in connexion with the implementation of the Convention in their countries. The Committee's report to the General Assembly summarized the views expressed by Committee members and the statements made by representatives of States parties.

The Committee reiterated that it was the unanimous view of its members that the reports of the States parties were an essential element in the discharge of its duties. It therefore drew the attention of the Assembly to the fact that reports from 25 States parties were currently outstanding.

The Committee also discussed the application of the provisions of the Convention in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and in a number of non-self-governing and other territories after its three working groups had examined working papers, reports and other information submitted by the Trusteeship Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>12</sup> The working groups dealt respectively with African territories, Pacific and Indian Ocean territories and Atlantic Ocean and Caribbean territories, including Gibraltar. The Committee's annual report to the General Assembly contained expressions of opinion and recommendations relating to the territories discussed.

Due to lack of time, the Committee postponed taking a decision on its participation in the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, including the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

At the General Assembly's regular 1975 session, the sixth annual report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination had not been considered for lack of time. The Committee's reports for 1975 and 1976 were considered together at the Assembly's 1976 session, where the discussion took place in the Third Committee.

On 13 December 1976, the Assembly adopted a resolution on the reports of the Committee, thereby taking note of them with appreciation. It also took note of the parts of the reports concerning petitions and other information relating to the territories to which its 1960 Declaration on the granting of independence applied, and drew the attention of United Nations bodies to the Committee's opinions and recommendations relating to those territories.

The Assembly expressed appreciation to the Committee for its work in pursuance of the provisions of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. It commended the Committee for focusing greater attention on the just cause of peoples struggling against the oppression of the colonialist and racist régimes in southern Africa.

States parties to the International Convention were called upon to observe fully its provisions, as well as those of other international agreements to which they were parties, concerning the elimination of all forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin. The Assembly welcomed the co-operation of the States parties to the Convention with the Committee in submitting their reports and in designating representatives to be present during the Committee's consideration of those reports. It called upon the States parties to provide all necessary information to the Committee in accordance with the provisions of the Convention, taking also into account the Committee's recommendations and requests.

The Assembly welcomed the Committee's participation in the realization of the objectives of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. It invited States parties to the Convention to include in their reports information on the status of their relations with the racist régimes of southern Africa and reminded the States parties of their obligations under the Convention to adopt appropriate legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures with a view to putting an end to racism and to the vestiges or manifestations of such ideologies wherever they existed.

Finally, the Assembly invited all States which were not parties to the Convention to ratify or accede to it and, pending such action, to be guided by the basic provisions of the Convention in their internal and foreign policies.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/81, adopted by the Assembly, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 12 November 1976. The resolution was sponsored by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ghana, India, Jordan, Kuwait, Madagascar, Mali, Morocco, Nigeria, the Philippines, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia. Amendments proposed jointly by Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia were withdrawn after the sponsors had agreed to modify the text, taking into account those proposals. Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia then joined in sponsoring the resolution.

Communications

In connexion with the General Assembly's consideration in 1976 of the question of the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, the Libyan Arab Republic, by a letter dated 28 September 1976, transmitted a declaration and resolution of the International Forum on Zionism and Racism, held at Tripoli in July 1976. Iraq, by a letter dated 18 November 1976, transmitted the Declaration of the International Symposium on Zionism, held at Baghdad in November 1976.

International day

The General Assembly's Special Committee against Apartheid held a special meeting at United Nations Headquarters on 19 March 1976 in observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, commemorating the sixteenth anniversary of an incident at Sharpeville, South Africa, on 21 March 1960, in which 69 persons demonstrating against pass laws were killed and 180 others were wounded.

Attending were representatives of permanent missions to the United Nations, of specialized agencies and of the Organization of African Unity, as well as representatives of the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania.

Statements were made by, among others, the United Nations Secretary-General, the President of the Security Council and the Chairmen of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples; a statement by the President of the General Assembly was read. Many messages of support for the fight against racism and apartheid were received from government leaders.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, in which it reaffirmed its resolve to achieve the total and unconditional elimination of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Reaffirming that the policies of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid are flagrant violations of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and constitute serious violations of the obligations of Member States under the Charter,

Bearing in mind the vital importance of establishing a new international economic order based on justice and equality,

Noting that the realization of the national independence of the People's Republic of Angola and the courageous action of the People's Republic of Mozambique in applying fully the United Nations system of sanctions against the racist régime in Southern Rhodesia have contributed to the growing isolation of the racist régime in South Africa,

Realizing the serious threat to international peace and security resulting from the continued defiance by the racist régimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia of the resolutions and the will of the international community in relation to the abhorrent policies of apartheid and racial discrimination, the continued illegal occupation of Namibia and the denial of the right of peoples to self-determination,

Convinced that the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination is a major undertaking in the fight against racial discrimination which deserves the full support of all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Condemns the intolerable conditions which continue to prevail in southern Africa and elsewhere, including the denial of the right to self-determination and the inhumane and odious application of apartheid and racial discrimination;

2. Reaffirms its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of oppressed peoples to liberate themselves from racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, colonialism and alien domination;

3. Calls upon all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to offer all possible assistance to the People's Republic of Angola, the People's Republic of Mozambique and the African countries surrounding the racist régimes in southern Africa, so that they may continue to apply fully the sanctions against these régimes;

4. Urges all States to co-operate loyally and fully in achieving the goals and objectives of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination by taking actions and measures called for by the Programme for the Decade at the national, regional and international levels and, in particular:

(a) To ensure the immediate termination of all measures and policies, as well as military, nuclear, economic and other activities, which enable racist régimes in southern Africa to continue the repression of the African people;

(b) To provide full support and assistance, morally and materially, to the peoples which are victims of apartheid and racial discrimination and to the liberation movements;

(c) To cease emigration to South Africa;

(d) To ensure the release of political prisoners in South Africa and of those subjected to restrictions for their opposition to apartheid;

(e) To formulate and execute plans to realize the policy measures and goals contained in the Programme for the Decade, and to consider the advisability of establishing national arrangements to follow up the implementation of the Programme;

(f) To review internal laws and regulations with a view to identifying and rescinding those which provide for, give rise to, or inspire racial discrimination or apartheid;

(g) To ensure the cessation of all discriminatory measures against migrant workers and extend to them treatment equal to that provided for nationals of the host country with regard to human rights and the provisions of their labour legislation;

(h) To sign and ratify the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and all other relevant instruments;

5. Also urges Member States which are parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to comply fully with their obligations under the Convention and, in particular, to submit their reports in accordance with the time-table laid down in article 9 thereof;

6. Further urges United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to ensure the continuation of their activities related to the Decade with emphasis on, inter alia:

(a) Providing moral and material support to the national liberation movements and the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination;

(b) Assisting and conducting vigorous educational and information campaigns to dispel racial prejudice and to involve public opinion in the struggle against racism and racial discrimination;

(c) Examining the socio-economic and colonial roots of racism, apartheid and racial discrimination with a view to eliminating them;

7. Appeals to Member States which have not yet done so to forward the reports called for under paragraph 18 (e) of the Programme for the Decade;

8. Welcomes any contributions and suggestions related to the Programme for the Decade by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Commission on Human Rights, its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, especially with regard to the preparations for the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to draw on the expertise of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities while undertaking the relevant activities of the Decade;

10. Reiterates the call in paragraph 18 (g) of the Programme for the Decade to make adequate resources available to the Secretary-General to enable him to undertake the activities entrusted to him under the Programme;

11. Appeals to Governments and private organizations to make voluntary contributions which would make it possible to carry out all of the activities provided for in the Programme for the Decade;

12. Decides to consider at its thirty-second session, as a matter of high priority, the question entitled "Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination."

Apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa

Status of the International Convention

The International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, adopted by the General Assembly on 30 November 1973,<sup>13</sup> entered into force on 18 July 1976. This occurred, under the terms of the Convention, on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit with the United Nations Secretary-General of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.

As at 31 December 1976, the following 23 States had ratified or acceded to the Convention: Benin, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Chad, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, Iraq, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mongolia, Poland, Qatar, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yugoslavia.

The Secretary-General submitted a report on the status of the Convention to the 1976 session of the General Assembly, in accordance with a 1975 Assembly request.<sup>14</sup>

On 13 December 1976, the Assembly adopted a resolution (31/80) concerning the Convention. By the preambular part of the text, the Assembly, among other things, underlined a Security Council resolution of 19 June 1976 by which the Council condemned the South African Government for its resort to massive violence against and killings of African people (see pp. 117-20).

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly, taking note of the Secretary-General's report, welcomed the entry into force of the Convention and appealed to all States which had not become parties to it to accede thereto.

The Assembly, in accordance with a provision of the Convention, invited the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights at its 1977 session to appoint a group of three Commission members who were also representatives of States parties to the Convention to consider periodic reports to be submitted by States parties on measures they adopted to give effect to the Convention's provisions. The Assembly also invited the Commission on Human Rights to undertake its various functions as set out in the Convention, including in particular the preparation of a list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States alleged to be responsible for crimes enumerated in the Convention under the heading of the crime of apartheid.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report on the Convention a special part concerning its implementation, and decided to consider annually, starting with its 1977 session, the question of the status of the Convention.

Resolution 31/80 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 99 to 0, with 30 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had approved the text by 90 votes to 0, with 28 abstentions, on 8 October 1976. The sponsors of the resolution were Benin, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Jamaica, Mozambique, Nigeria, Poland, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

When it adopted resolution 31/77 on 13 December 1976, the Assembly urged all States to co-operate fully in achieving the goals and objectives of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination by, among other actions, signing and ratifying the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and all other relevant instruments (see pp. 571-72). Also, the Economic and Social Council, on 12 May 1976, in adopting resolution 1991(LX) on the report of the Human Rights Commission's Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, invited United Nations Member States to ratify the Convention (see below).

Report of Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts

At its 1976 session, held at Geneva, Switzerland, from 2 February to 5 March, the Commission on Human Rights considered an interim report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, submitted in accordance with a request made by the Commission in 1975.<sup>15</sup> The report described new developments relating to the policy of apartheid and racial discrimination practised in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia. Among other things, it dealt with the effects of apartheid on the African family, the disparity between the wages of black and white workers, the conditions of African agricultural workers, the gaol systems, the homelands policy and farm labour system in South Africa, and the difficulties encountered by student movements in South Africa and Namibia.

After examining the interim report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, the Commission adopted a resolution by which it deplored the fact that policies of apartheid and racial discrimination persisted in southern Africa and, in particular, that

South Africa was continuing its illegal occupation of the territory of Namibia. It noted that the illegal, inhuman and degrading practice of public floggings in Namibia was continuing.

The Commission drew the attention of States, international organizations, non-governmental organizations and socio-professional and information groups to the Declaration of Dakar on Namibia and Human Rights, and to the Programme of Action annexed thereto, adopted at the International Conference on Namibia and Human Rights, held at the Senegalese capital from 5 to 8 January 1976. (It was organized by the International Institute of Human Rights, under the auspices of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia and in co-operation with the International Commission of Jurists and the International Association of Democratic Lawyers.) The Commission on Human Rights decided that the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts should evaluate all aspects of the Declaration and Programme of Action and should submit specific proposals relating to them to the Commission in 1977.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to keep up contacts with a view to organizing a symposium in southern Africa on the matter of deaths in gaols or at the hands of the police in South Africa. It also approved the text of a draft resolution, which it recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

On 12 May 1976, the Council adopted the resolution submitted to it by the Commission on Human Rights. It thereby expressed complete satisfaction with the interim report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts and invited the Group to continue its work.

The Council further expressed its deep concern to the General Assembly regarding the situation in southern Africa as constituting a serious threat to international peace and security. It appealed to all States to co-operate with international organizations in combating racial discrimination and apartheid, and invited United Nations Member States to ratify the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.<sup>16</sup> It also requested the Secretary-General to transmit the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to all competent bodies in the United Nations system.

The Council's resolution was adopted, by 34 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, which had approved the text on 3 May 1976 by a vote of 38 to 0, with 8 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Study of ways to ensure implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid and racial discrimination

At its February/March 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered ways and means of ensuring the implementation of United Nations resolutions bearing on apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, in accordance with the provisions of a 1975 General Assembly resolution.<sup>17</sup>

On 5 March 1976, the Commission adopted a resolution by which it requested its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to study and prepare suggestions at its session later in the year on effective measures for securing the full and universal implementation of United Nations resolutions and decisions on racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, decolonization, self-determination and related matters, and to submit its suggestions and proposals to the Commission. The Sub-Commission's attention was drawn to the deliberations and decisions of the Assembly at its regular 1975 session and of the Commission at its 1976 session on this question.

Also, the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council take into account the Commission's participation in the preparatory arrangements for holding the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see pp. 566-67).

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, at its twentieth session in August/September 1976, discussed the Commission's request for proposals on the implementation of United Nations decisions on racial discrimination. It decided to recommend that the Commission request the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Sub-Commission's Chairman to appoint a group of three Sub-Commission members to meet, prior to the Sub-Commission's 1977 session, to examine the action to be undertaken in the context of the Commission's request.

Other matters concerning prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities

Elimination of religious intolerance

The Commission on Human Rights, through an informal working group open to all its members, continued work in 1976 on the text of a draft declaration on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief. The General Assembly had asked the Commission in 1974 to prepare such a declaration.<sup>18</sup>

As at its final meeting held during the Commission's February/March 1976 session, the working group had approved the title and the first eight preambular paragraphs of the draft declaration. After some discussion, the Commission decided to establish an open-ended working group which would meet regularly during its 1977 session to continue work on the draft.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted a resolution by which it requested the Commission to speed up its work on the draft declaration and to submit a progress report to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, for consideration at the Assembly's 1977 session.

The Assembly adopted the resolution—31/138—without a vote. The text, approved by the Third Committee on 9 December 1976, also without a vote, was based on a proposal by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guatemala, Ireland, Mexico, Nepal, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Senegal, Sweden and Venezuela.

The text approved by the Third Committee reflected changes proposed by Australia and by Bulgaria and accepted by the sponsors. Australia's amendment added a reference in the preamble to a 1962 General Assembly resolution containing a request for a draft declaration on the elimination of religious intolerance;<sup>19</sup> after its amendment was accepted by the sponsors, Australia joined in sponsoring the resolution.

Measures against terrorism or incitement to racial discrimination or group hatred

By a decision of 14 December 1973,<sup>20</sup> the General Assembly deferred consideration of the question of measures to be taken against ideologies and practices based on terror or incitement to racial discrimination or any other form of group hatred—until such time as a discussion of the matter had been concluded by the Commission on Human Rights. At its 1976 session, as in previous years, the Commission itself decided to defer consideration of the item to its following session.

Adverse effects on human rights which result from aid to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa

The question of the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa was considered by the Commission on Human Rights at its February/March 1976 session. The Commission based its discussion on the examination by its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of a preliminary report prepared by Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt), Special Rapporteur.

The Commission, by a resolution on this question, denounced with indignation the assistance given by certain States to the régimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, and considered that such aid was the main cause of South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia.

The Commission strongly condemned any country which, by such forms of assistance as nuclear co-operation agreements and the sale of arms, or by other forms such as the activities of corporations, became an accomplice in the policies of apartheid and racial discrimination. It called on States to take specific steps, including complying with sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, assisting national liberation movements, prohibiting the recruitment of mercenaries and promoting efforts to bring about a total embargo on military supplies to South Africa. The Special Rapporteur was requested to submit a final report, and the Sub-Commission to present its recommendations, at the Commission's next session, to be held in February and March 1977.

By a decision taken at its August/September

1976 session, the Sub-Commission noted that, due mainly to lack of time, the Special Rapporteur had not been able to complete his study. It requested that he be given all possible assistance in completing the report for submission at the Sub-Commission's next annual session. In the meantime, it requested the Secretary-General to transmit the preliminary report to the General Assembly for consideration at its current session.

The Assembly's Third Committee discussed this question at meetings held between 15 October and 5 November 1976. On the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted a resolution on 30 November, thereby, in the preamble, expressing its conviction that the Special Rapporteur's preliminary report contained evidence permitting the conclusion that the assistance given by certain States to the racist and colonial régimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia was the major factor in the perpetuation of the abominable policies of those régimes inasmuch as they adversely affected the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa. The Assembly noted with concern that by the use of the veto three of the permanent members of the Security Council—France, the United Kingdom and the United States—had prevented the Council from taking effective action against the South African apartheid régime.

The Assembly further noted that the actions of some States in strengthening their relations with the South African régime were in flagrant violation of the Charter and resolutions of the United Nations. It stated that it was convinced that the continued military and nuclear collaboration of certain States and organizations with the racist régimes in southern Africa constituted a serious menace not only to the oppressed peoples of the area but also to the independent African States and to international peace and security.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination, independence and the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories. It reaffirmed also their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests and to receive full compensation for the exploitation, depletion and loss of, and damage to, those resources, and for the exploitation and manipulation of their human resources.

The Assembly strongly condemned the collaboration of all States, particularly France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as of foreign economic interests, with the racist régimes of southern Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields. The Assembly reaffirmed that the States and organizations which gave assistance were accomplices in the inhuman practices of racial discrimination, apartheid and colonialism.

The Assembly invited the Security Council to impose a total embargo on sales, gifts and the transfer of arms or any other kind of military supplies to South Africa. It called on all States to observe the sanctions imposed on the illegal minority régime of Southern Rhodesia. It also called on all States, as well as specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to offer all possible assistance to the liberation movements of southern Africa recognized by the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations.

The Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council, in collaboration with the Commission on Human Rights, to examine and to report in 1977 on the consequences, on the enjoyment of human rights by the oppressed peoples of southern Africa, of the use of the veto in the Security Council by France, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Also by the resolution, the Secretary-General was asked to give the Special Rapporteur the assistance he needed to complete his study, and to transmit the preliminary report to the Special Committee against Apartheid and to the United Nations Council for Namibia. The Assembly decided to consider this matter again at its regular 1978 session with priority, in the light of any recommendations of relevant United Nations bodies.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 31/33 by a recorded vote of 97 to 11, with 28 abstentions. A separate vote was taken on the operative paragraph by which the Assembly condemned the collaboration of six States with the régimes in southern Africa; it was adopted by a recorded vote of 68 to 25, with 39 abstentions.

The Third Committee had approved the resolution on 4 November 1976, by a roll-call vote of 87 to 12, with 31 abstentions, on the basis of a draft text sponsored by the following 26 Members: Algeria, Benin, Burundi, the Congo, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Iraq, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mozambique, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Zambia.

Senegal and the United Republic of Cameroon withdrew as sponsors when the sponsors revised the wording of the operative provision by which the Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council to examine the consequences of the use of the veto by three specific permanent members of the Security Council, as it related to human rights in southern Africa. As originally worded, that provision included no reference to particular States. Senegal and the United Republic of Cameroon considered the sponsors' change to be a far-reaching modification.

Explaining their opposition to this resolution, Canada, Japan, the Netherlands (speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Communities—Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom) and the United States reaffirmed their view that the maintenance of diplomatic, commercial or other relations with a Member State did not necessarily constitute complicity in the internal policies of that State. They also objected to misuse of the word "assistance": normal diplomatic or commercial relations could not be called assistance in the sense of co-operation for the attainment of shared political or ideological goals, they said. These Members pointed out that the sources of information on which the reference to trade with South Africa by six States was based were not identified, and that the text omitted mention of the many other States which maintained economic relations with that State.

France, the United Kingdom and the United States also objected to the provision by which the Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council to study their use of the veto in the Security Council. They held that such use was a legitimate right and that an examination of it would only serve to create conflict.

Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Guinea and others said they supported the resolution, in the spirit of solidarity with the victims of colonialism and racism, because they were concerned about the continuation of assistance to the racist régimes in southern Africa. They voiced reservations, however, concerning the choice of words in some passages. Colombia, for example, said it was counter-productive to use exaggerated language and to cast aspersions on specific countries. Indonesia said the resolution should either have listed all countries that collaborated with the régimes in southern Africa or none of them. Sri Lanka voted for the resolution but stressed that it did not regard trading with South Africa as collaboration with that régime.

Fiji, Morocco, Thailand and other Members voting for the resolution also expressed reservations regarding the call for a study of the use of the veto in the Security Council.

Several Members, including Hungary, Mongolia and the USSR—holding that a study of the use of the veto could be used to undermine the principle of unanimity of the permanent members of the Security Council, a principle which played an important role in deciding questions of international peace and security—abstained in the voting. Also abstaining, Canada and Portugal said the resolution did not seem to have human rights as its central concern.

Special study of racial discrimination in political, economic and cultural spheres

The Economic and Social Council, by a 1973 decision, asked Hernán Santa Cruz (Chile), Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights, to bring up to date his study on racial discrimination in the political, economic, social and cultural spheres, with special emphasis on discrimination based on colour.<sup>21</sup>

The Special Rapporteur submitted the updated study in 1976, and the Sub-Commission, at its August/September 1976 session, adopted a resolution by which it approved the recommendations contained in the study and brought them to the attention of the Commission and the Council. It asked the Secretary-General to give the study the widest possible dissemination, as well as to consider the possibility of preparing a condensed edition.

Also by the resolution, the Sub-Commission called on States to ratify or accede to all international instruments prohibiting racial discrimination.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3382(XXX) and 3383(XXX) of 10 November 1975,

Recalling resolution 6(XXXII) of 1 March 1976 of the Commission on Human Rights, denouncing with indignation the political, military, economic and other forms of assistance which certain States give to the racist minority régimes of southern Africa,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.

Recalling its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling its resolution 3171(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 relating to permanent sovereignty over natural resources of developing countries and territories under foreign occupation, colonial rule, alien domination and the apartheid régime,

Having considered with satisfaction the preliminary report of 14 July 1976 prepared by the Special Rapporteur on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa,

Convinced that the above-mentioned report contains additional evidence enabling the General Assembly to conclude that the political, military, economic and other assistance given to the racist and colonial régimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia by certain States is the major factor in the perpetuation of the abominable policies of these régimes inasmuch as they adversely affect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa,

Noting with concern that three permanent members of the Security Council—France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America—by the use of the veto prevent the Council from taking effective action against the South African apartheid régime, thus impairing the exercise and the enjoyment of human rights of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa,

Noting further that the actions of some States in strengthening political, economic, military and other relations with the South African régime are in flagrant and deliberate violation of the purposes and principles of the Charter and the resolutions of the United Nations,

Convinced that the continued military and nuclear collaboration of certain States and organizations with the racist régimes in southern Africa constitutes a serious menace not only to the oppressed peoples of southern Africa, but also to the independent African States and to international peace and security,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination, independence and the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories;

2. Reaffirms further the right of these same oppressed peoples to dispose of those resources in their best interests and to receive full compensation for the exploitation, depletion and loss of and damage to their natural resources, including compensation for the exploitation and manipulation of their human resources;

3. Strongly condemns the collaboration of all States, particularly France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, Israel and Japan, as well as those foreign economic interests which maintain and/or continue to increase their collaboration with the racist régimes in southern Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields;

4. Reaffirms that the States and organizations which give assistance to the colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa are accomplices in the inhuman practices of racial discrimination, apartheid and colonialism perpetrated by those régimes;

5. Invites the Security Council to impose a total embargo on sales, gifts and the transfer of arms or any other kind of military supplies to South Africa;

6. Calls upon all States scrupulously to observe the sanctions imposed on the illegal minority régime in Southern Rhodesia;

7. Calls upon all States, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to offer all possible assistance to the liberation movements of southern Africa that are recognized by the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations;

8. Invites the Economic and Social Council, in collaboration with the Commission on Human Rights, to examine the question of the consequences of the use of the veto by the above-mentioned three permanent members of the Security Council on the enjoyment of human rights by the oppressed peoples of southern Africa and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to give the Special Rapporteur the assistance he needs to complete his study;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur to the Special Committee against Apartheid and to the United Nations Council for Namibia;

11. Decides to consider this item at its thirty-third session as a matter of priority in the light of any recommendation by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council, as well as by the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia.

Violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms

Study of violations

Question of human rights in the occupied territories

During 1976, the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights and by the General Assembly. Also during the year, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of communications from Arab countries concerning the treatment of the civilian population in the occupied territories and Israel's replies thereto (see pp. 250, 253-54, 256 and 261).

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights

At its thirty-second session, held at Geneva, Switzerland, from 2 February to 5 March 1976, the Commission on Human Rights had before it, among other documents, the 1975 report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories.<sup>22</sup> On 13 February 1976, the Commission adopted a resolution on the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East.

By the preambular part of that resolution, the Commission inter alia expressed alarm at the continuation by Israel of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the occupied Arab territories, including the destruction of homes, the expropriation of Arab properties and the ill-treatment of prisoners, as well as measures aiming at annexation. It also expressed concern that the population of the occupied areas were hindered in the exercise of their inalienable rights to national education and cultural life.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Commission again deplored Israel's continued grave violations of the basic norms of international law and of relevant international conventions—in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (the fourth Geneva Convention). The Commission considered such violations to be war crimes and an affront to humanity. It also deplored Israel's persistent defiance of United Nations resolutions and its continued policy of violating the basic human rights of the inhabitants of the occupied territories.

The Commission reaffirmed that military occupation of territory constituted a grave threat to international peace and security and was, in itself, a continuous violation of the Charter of the United Nations and of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>23</sup> It also reaffirmed its condemnation of Israel for the deliberate destruction of the Syrian town of Quneitra.

The Commission called upon Israel to take immediate steps for the return of the Palestinians and the other displaced inhabitants of the occupied Arab territories to their homes, to desist from establishing new settlements in the occupied lands and to commence immediately with the removal of the existing settlements.

The Commission deplored the measures taken by Israel to exploit the human, natural and all other resources and wealth of the occupied Arab territories. It declared that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic structure and status of the occupied territories, as well as those designed to change the institutional structure and established religious practices in the sanctuary of Al-Ibrahimi Mosque in the city of Al-Khalil, were null and void. It reaffirmed its call on Israel to ensure freedom of worship in accordance with established traditions in the region, particularly in Jerusalem.

The Commission called upon all States not to recognize any measures carried out by Israel aimed at effecting change in the occupied territories, and invited those States to do their utmost to ensure that Israel respected the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention. It censured in the strongest terms all measures taken by Israel to change the status of Jerusalem and condemned a number of specific Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories.

The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments and to give it the widest possible publicity. He was asked to report to the Commission at its 1977 session when, it was decided, the matter would again be given high priority.

Report of the Special Committee

The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, established by the General Assembly in 1969, adopted its eighth report to the Assembly on 17 September 1976. As in previous years, the report noted, because of the absence of co-operation by the Government of Israel and the consequent inability of the Special Committee to visit the occupied territories and verify at first hand the information it received, it had had to rely on oral testimony, day-to-day reports in the Israeli press of occurrences in the occupied territories and of Israeli Government pronouncements concerning the civilian population of the occupied territories, reports appearing in the Arab-language press and other sections of the international press, information appearing in United Nations documents, as well as information communicated to it by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and contained in ICRC publications.

In its report, covering the period from 13 October 1975, the Special Committee said that the policy of annexation and settlement continued to be implemented, new plans had been announced and other settlements had been established in the occupied territories. The prolonged occupation and the effect of those policies and practices had persisted. Violent demonstrations that lasted for several months had taken place, in addition to acts of sabotage which appeared to have been daily occurrences. Those incidents had in turn led to arrests of groups of persons, presenting a pattern of mass arrests. Other repressive measures had continued, as for example curfews, demolition of houses, expulsion and administrative detention.

The Special Committee also said that civilian inhabitants detained were treated in a manner incompatible with the fourth Geneva Convention and in-

The Special Committee divided the information it received under the following headings: evidence of the policy of annexation and settlement as practised in the occupied territories; evidence of treatment of civilian detainees from the occupied territories, including administrative detainees; evidence of the effects of the prolonged occupation in the form of mass manifestations, regular occurrence of incidents, adoption of repressive measures, ill-treatment, and a pattern of mass arrests, trials and convictions.

Included as an annex to the Special Committee's report was a field report by an expert, working with a team of engineers, on the destruction of Quneitra and an assessment of the nature, extent and value of the damage caused. The expert, Edward Gruner, was selected by the Committee in accordance with an Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975.<sup>24</sup> His house-by-house survey revealed 4,180 structures, of which 4,088 were destroyed by deliberate action, according to the findings. The expert further estimated that the total value of the deliberate damage caused to Quneitra was in excess of 460 million Syrian pounds.

In its conclusions, the Special Committee said that in all its reports since 1970 it had stated that the main problem affecting the human rights of the population of the occupied territories had its roots in a policy followed by the Government of Israel directed towards a process of annexation of the territories. This process was shown to be the result of a number of direct or indirect measures or practices.

The most serious of the direct measures had been the establishment of Israeli settlements in accordance with previously approved plans of the Government and the transfer of Israeli citizens to these settlements. The information before the Special Committee indicated that 61 settlements had thus far been established in the occupied territories. A second direct measure was Israel's continued refusal to recognize the right to return of persons who had fled the occupied territories during and as a result of the hostilities of June 1967.

Examples of indirect measures, the report went on, were the excessively severe steps taken by the occupying power to repress all manifestations of protest against the occupation, including reprisals such as the demolition of houses and prohibition of exports of produce.

The Special Committee said that from its very inception it had been balked in the discharge of its mandate by the Government of Israel, whose obstructionist attitude had received a surprising degree of support and encouragement from Member States of the United Nations which professed to be interested in human rights. If a country whose conduct was in question was permitted to prevent an investigation of its conduct, the fourth Geneva Convention, which constituted a vital part of international law, would be brought into contempt, the Special Committee went on to state. It was for Members of the United Nations to consider what the future of the fourth Geneva Convention was to be and, in particular, why any country should be granted special immunity from its provisions.

The Special Committee recalled the proposal it had made in each of its previous reports for the adoption of an arrangement<sup>25</sup> inspired by the protecting-power formula envisaged under the fourth Geneva Convention to protect civilian persons living in occupied territories.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories was considered at the General Assembly's thirty-first session in 1976 by the Special Political Committee, which also had before it two reports of the Secretary-General submitted in response to requests by the Assembly in 1975.

The first of these contained information relevant to the situation in the Al-Ibrahimi Mosque in Al-Khalil (Hebron), submitted to the Secretary-General by the Governments of Israel and Jordan, by the Islamic Conference and by the League of Arab States. This was in response to an Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975.<sup>26</sup> In letters to the Secretary-General on 1 and 3 November, Israel said that the information submitted by the Islamic Conference disregarded Jewish religious and historical connexions with the city of Hebron.

The second report by the Secretary-General was submitted in response to two other Assembly resolutions of 15 December 1975,<sup>27</sup> and stated that, as in previous years, he had continued to provide the facilities required by the Special Committee. He gave details of the measures undertaken by the Office of Public Information to ensure the widest circulation of the Committee's reports and of information regarding its activities and findings.

Also before the Committee were communications dated 25 February and 29 March 1976 from the Syrian Arab Republic alleging violations of human rights by Israel in occupied areas, and a letter of 18 November 1976 from Iraq transmitting the Declaration of the International Symposium on Zionism, held at Baghdad in November 1976.

At its meeting on 12 November, the Special Political Committee viewed a film, "Quneitra: Death of a City," shown at the request of the Syrian Arab Republic. In a letter of the same day, Israel protested that the Special Political Committee had refused to allow an Israeli film to be shown and had thus prevented Israel from presenting its views. The Syrian representative replied to Israel's letter in a letter dated 22 November.

(For summary of debate in Special Political Committee, see pp. 259-60.)

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted four resolutions on the 1976 report of the Special Committee.

By the first of these—31/106 A—the Assembly among other things strongly deplored the measures taken by Israel in the Arab territories occupied since 1967 that altered their demographic composition or geographical nature, and particularly the establishment of settlements. The Assembly declared that such measures had no legal validity and could not prejudice the outcome of the search for the establishment of peace, and it considered that they constituted an obstacle to the achievement of a just and lasting peace in the area.

The Assembly declared, moreover, that all legislative and administrative measures taken by Israel purporting to change the legal status of Jerusalem were invalid and could not change the status of the City. It again urgently called upon Israel to rescind all such measures and to desist from taking others that would tend to change the demographic composition, geographical nature or status of the occupied territories or any part thereof, including Jerusalem.

This resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 129 to 3, with 4 abstentions. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 2 December 1976 by a roll-call vote of 102 to 3, with 4 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Bangladesh, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Comoros, Cuba, India, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Pakistan and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution 31/106 A, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the second resolution—31/106 B—the Assembly, noting that Israel and the Arab States whose territories had been occupied by Israel since June 1967 were parties to the (fourth) Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, reaffirmed that that Convention was applicable to all the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. It deplored the failure of Israel to acknowledge the applicability of, and reiterated its call upon Israel to comply with the provisions of, the Convention in all the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. It again urged all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all the occupied areas.

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 134 to 0, with 2 abstentions. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 2 December 1976 by a roll-call vote of 107 to 0, with 2 abstentions. The sponsors of the resolution were Bangladesh, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Comoros, Cuba, India, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Mozambique, Pakistan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution 31/106 B, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Resolution 31/106 C concerned the work of the Special Committee. By its provisions, the Assembly commended the efforts of the Special Committee in performing its tasks and deplored the continued refusal of—and again called upon—Israel to allow it access to the occupied territories.

The Assembly also by this resolution deplored Israel's continued and persistent violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and other applicable international instruments. It condemned in particular, and demanded that Israel desist forthwith from, the following policies and practices: annexation of parts of, establishment of Israeli settlements in, and transfer of an alien population to the occupied territories; evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of those territories and denial of their right to return; confiscation and expropriation of Arab property and other land transactions in occupied areas; destruction and demolition of Arab houses; mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population and of persons under detention; pillaging of archaeological and cultural property; interference with religious freedoms and practices, family rights and customs; and illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and population of the occupied territories.

The Assembly reaffirmed that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, were null and void, and that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and of United Nations resolutions. It demanded that Israel desist immediately from those policies and practices.

The Assembly reiterated its call upon all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions—including those in the field of aid—which might be used by Israel in pursuit of its policies.

The Special Committee was asked to continue to investigate Israel's policies and practices in the occupied Arab territories, to consult with ICRC as appropriate and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arose. The Secretary-General was asked to render all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including additional staff, to ensure the widest circulation of its reports, activities and findings, and to report to the Assembly for its consideration in 1977.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 100 to 5, with 30 abstentions. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 2 December 1976 by a roll-call vote of 84 to 3, with 22 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Comoros, Cuba, Cyprus, the Gambia, Guinea, India and Pakistan. (For text of resolution 31/106 C, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the fourth resolution on this matter adopted on 16 December—31/106 D—the Assembly expressed appreciation for the thoroughness and impartiality with which the expert engaged by the Special Committee to assess the nature, extent and value of the damage in the town of Quneitra had discharged his tasks. It condemned the massive, deliberate destruction of Quneitra perpetrated during Israeli occupation and prior to the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the town in 1974. It recognized that the Syrian Arab Republic was entitled to full compensation, under international law and in equity, for this destruction, as well as to all other appropriate legal remedies.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee to complete its survey on all aspects of the damage in Quneitra, and asked the Secretary-General to provide the Committee with the required facilities.

The Assembly adopted this resolution, by a recorded vote of 97 to 3, with 36 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which had approved the text on 2 December 1976 by a roll-call vote of 81 to 2, with 26 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Byelorussian SSR, the Comoros, Cuba, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, India, Malta, Pakistan, Uganda and the Ukrainian SSR. Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Noting that Israel and those Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to that Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to that Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Deplores the failure of Israel to acknowledge the applicability of that Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967;

3. Calls again upon Israel to acknowledge and to comply with the provisions of that Convention in all the Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urges once more all States parties to that Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with the provisions thereof in all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, which contains, inter alia, public statements made by leaders of the Government of Israel,

8. Reiterates its call upon all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, which might be used by Israel in its pursuit of the policies of annexation and colonization or any of the other policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

Other matters relating to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms

Questions concerning procedures

Study of situations revealing a consistent pattern of human rights violations

At its February/March 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights examined in closed meetings confidential documents and the question of procedures for dealing with communications containing allegations of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It approved several decisions concerning confidential material referred to it pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) of 27 May 1970.<sup>28</sup>

Two of the Commission's decisions, the texts of which were confidential, led to the adoption by the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, of a decision whereby the Council: approved the Commission's decision to refer to the Ad Hoc Working Group on the situation of human rights in Chile certain confidential documents considered by the Commission under Council resolution 1503(XLVIII); and referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories certain other confidential documents also considered by the Commission under the Council's 1970 resolution.

The Council adopted this decision—149(LX)—without a vote on 12 May 1976. The Social Committee had approved the text on 4 May, also without a vote, on the proposal of its Chairman.

Procedures for dealing with human rights violations

Prior to the Commission's 1976 session, a working group set up in 1975<sup>29</sup> met to examine documents relating to alleged violations of human rights, referred to the Commission by its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, pursuant to Council resolution 1503(XLVIII),<sup>30</sup> and submitted a confidential report for consideration by the Commission. Under procedures mandated by the Council, actions envisaged in the implementation of resolution 1503(XLVIII) were to remain confidential until such time as the Commission might decide to make alternative recommendations.

By an action taken at its 1976 session, the Commission decided to set up a working group of five of its members to meet one week before its next annual session to examine situations referred to it by the Sub-Commission. The Economic and Social Council approved that action on 12 May 1976 in adopting decision 147(LX) without a vote. The Social Committee had approved the decision on 3 May, also without a vote, on the basis of the text proposed by the Commission.

In a related action, the Commission decided that the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and its Working Group on communications concerning human rights should have access to the records of the closed meetings of the Commission in which it examined situations under Council resolution 1503(XLVIII), together with all other relevant confidential documents.

At its August/September 1976 session, the Sub-Commission—in view of the forthcoming establishment of the Human Rights Committee in accordance with the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which entered into force in 1976 (see pp. 608-9)—requested the Commission on Human Rights to recommend that the Economic and Social Council review the procedures it had established by resolution 1503(XLVIII) for dealing with communications relating to violations of human rights.

Importance of the right to self-determination

Studies on the right to self-determination

In the context of its continuing consideration of the right of peoples to self-determination and the application of that right to peoples under colonial and alien domination, the Commission on Human Rights discussed, at its February/March 1976 session, two studies on that theme being undertaken by special rapporteurs of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The studies dealt with the historical and current development of the right to self-determination on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments adopted by United Nations organs, with particular reference to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and with the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the right of peoples under colonial and alien domination to self-determination.

Some Commission members noted that since the two studies dealt with essentially the same subject, joint authorship of a single study should be considered. The special rapporteurs were encouraged by some members to give emphasis to the economic aspects of the right to self-determination, and they were invited to go more deeply into the question of what circumstances could justify recourse to armed struggle in order to achieve self-determination.

The studies were submitted in preliminary form to the Sub-Commission in 1976 and were the subject of two decisions taken at its August/September 1976 session.

By the first of these, the Sub-Commission—considering that in the implementation of resolutions and declarations in the sphere of human rights adopted by the main organs of the United Nations, particularly the General Assembly, doubts concerning legal aspects and difficulties which might restrict United Nations action often arose, and bearing in mind that under Article 96 of the United Nations Charter an organ so authorized by the Assembly might request advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice on legal questions arising within the scope of its activities<sup>31</sup>—recommended that the Commission on Human Rights should propose to the Economic and Social Council that it request an advisory opinion of the Court on the following question: "What is the legal nature, scope and impact of declarations and resolutions of the main organs of the United Nations, in particular the General Assembly, in the field of human rights?"

By the second decision, the Sub-Commission decided that the Special Rapporteur for the study of the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the right to self-determination should bring the study up to date before submitting it for final consideration by the Sub-Commission in 1977.

Realization of the right to self-determination

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly again considered the question of the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights. The Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee discussed the matter at meetings held between 8 and 26 October 1976.

Before the Committee was a report containing information received from 14 Member States—Austria, Botswana, the Byelorussian SSR, Cyprus, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, Hungary, Iran, Japan, Kuwait, Romania, Senegal and the Ukrainian SSR—two regional intergovernmental organizations and seven non-governmental organizations on action taken in pursuance of the Assembly's 1975 resolution on this question.<sup>32</sup>

Also before the Committee were two letters to the Secretary-General from Turkey. By the first, dated 8 September 1976, Turkey transmitted a letter from Nail Atalay, whom the Turkish representative identified as the representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, concerning the situation in Cyprus as it related to the exercise of the right to self-determination. By the second letter, dated 30 September, Turkey transmitted the texts of resolutions adopted by the Seventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul in May 1976.

On 30 November 1976, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which it reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation of peoples from colonial and foreign domination and alien subjugation by all available means, including armed struggle. It called upon all States to implement fully the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination.

The Assembly also reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, of the Palestinian people and of all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, independence and sovereignty without external interference. It condemned the policy of bantustanization and reiterated its support for the oppressed people of South Africa in their just and legitimate struggle against the racist minority régime in Pretoria.

The Assembly condemned any interference in the internal affairs of the Comoros and demanded the immediate withdrawal of the French Administration from the Comorian island of Mayotte.

Reiterating that the practice of using mercenaries against movements for national liberation and independence constituted a criminal act, and that the mercenaries themselves were criminals, the Assembly called upon all Governments to enact legislation that would declare the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in, and the transit of mercenaries through, their territory to be punishable offences, and that would prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries.

The Assembly condemned the policies of those members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and of other countries whose political, economic, military or sports relations with the racist régimes in southern Africa and elsewhere encouraged those régimes to persist in their suppression of the aspirations of peoples for self-determination and independence. It strongly condemned all Governments which did not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination and alien subjugation, notably the peoples of Africa and the Palestinian people. It also strongly condemned massacres of innocent and defenceless people, including women and children, by the racist minority régimes of southern Africa in their desperate attempt to thwart the legitimate demands of the people.

The Assembly demanded full respect for the basic human rights of, and the immediate release of, all individuals detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence. It also demanded strict respect for article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, under which no one was to be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.<sup>33</sup>

The Assembly noted with appreciation the material and other forms of assistance that peoples under colonial and alien régimes continued to receive from Governments, United Nations agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and called for a maximization of that assistance. It stated that it keenly awaited the conclusion of the two studies of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities relating to the right to self-determination (see above).

The Assembly decided to remain seized of this question at its 1977 session on the basis of the reports that Governments, United Nations agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations were requested to submit concerning the strengthening of assistance to colonial territories and peoples under alien domination and foreign subjugation.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 31/34 by a recorded vote of 109 to 4, with 24 abstentions. Prior to the vote, the Assembly rejected, by a vote of 65 against to 28 in favour, with 42 abstentions, an amendment proposed by Belgium, Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States; the amendment sought to delete the reference to the members of NATO.

The Third Committee, voting on 25 October, approved a revised text of the resolution, sponsored by 39 Members, by a roll-call vote of 102 to 4, with 24 abstentions. In revising the text, the sponsors had taken into account amendments submitted by Pakistan and by Romania. The Committee rejected, by a roll-call vote of 72 against to 21 in favour, with 36 abstentions, an amendment which would have deleted the reference to NATO. The amendment, identical to that rejected by the Assembly in plenary, was proposed by Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Reaffirming its faith in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, Reaffirming the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, national sovereignty and territorial integrity and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples as imperatives for the enjoyment of human rights,

Affirming that bantustanization is incompatible with genuine independence, unity and national sovereignty and would have the effect of perpetuating the power of the white minority and the racist system of apartheid in South Africa,

Welcoming the independence of Seychelles,

Reiterating the need to respect the independence and to maintain the territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Demands full respect for the basic human rights of all individuals detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, and strict respect for article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights under which no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and their immediate release;

13. Decides to remain seized of this item at its thirty-second session on the basis of reports that Governments, United Nations agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations are requested to submit concerning the strengthening of assistance to colonial Territories and peoples under alien domination and foreign subjugation.

Respect for human rights in armed conflicts

The Secretary-General, in accordance with a 1975 General Assembly request,<sup>34</sup> submitted a report to the Assembly in 1976 on developments concerning human rights in armed conflicts, covering in particular the proceedings and results of the third session of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts. The Conference was convened by the Swiss Federal Council at Geneva, Switzerland, from 21 April to 11 June 1976.

The Secretary-General's report gave an account of the specific provisions of two draft additional protocols to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims. The first protocol was to relate to international armed conflicts, and the second to those having a non-international character. Proposed articles for the protocols were examined at the Diplomatic Conference by Committee I (which dealt with provisions of a general character), Committee II (wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons and other victims) and Committee III (civilian populations, mercenaries, methods and means of combat, and a possible new category of prisoners of war). In addition, the Diplomatic Conference's Ad Hoc Committee on Conventional Weapons considered the report of the Conference of Government Experts on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons on its second session, held at Lugano, Switzerland, from 28 January to 26 February 1976 (see p. 38).

The Secretary-General also submitted a report on incendiary and other specific conventional weapons which might be the subject of prohibitions or restrictions of use for humanitarian reasons (see pp. 38-40).

The Secretary-General's report on the Diplomatic Conference contained texts of articles of the draft additional protocols approved and considered at committee level during the third session of the Conference, a list of other proposals and amendments, and information on the activities of non-governmental organizations relating to human rights in armed conflicts. The fourth session of the Diplomatic Conference, which was intended to be the final session, was scheduled to be held from March to June 1977.

The Secretary-General's report was considered by the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee at the Assembly's 1976 session. On 24 November 1976, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the Assembly adopted a resolution by which it welcomed the substantial progress made at the third session of the Diplomatic Conference and noted that the Conference would continue its consideration of the use of specific conventional weapons, including any which might be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects, and its search for agreement, for humanitarian reasons, on possible rules prohibiting or restricting the use of such weapons.

The Assembly called upon all parties to armed conflicts to acknowledge and to comply with their obligations under humanitarian instruments and to observe international humanitarian rules, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949. It called the attention of the Diplomatic Conference and of the Governments and organizations participating in it to the need for measures to promote on a universal basis the dissemination of and instruction in the rules of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts.

The Assembly urged all participants in the Conference to do their utmost to reach agreement on additional rules which might help to alleviate the suffering brought about by armed conflicts and to respect and protect non-combatants and civilian objects in such conflicts. It also urged them to bring the Conference to a successful conclusion during its fourth (1977) session and expressed its appreciation to the Swiss Federal Council for convoking the fourth session. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1977 on developments concerning human rights in armed conflicts, in particular on the proceedings and results of the 1977 session of the Diplomatic Conference.

These actions were taken with the adoption, by consensus, of resolution 31/19. The text, as revised by its sponsors, was approved by the Sixth Committee, also by consensus, on 12 October 1976. The resolution was sponsored by Australia,

Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Cyprus, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, Ireland, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Senegal, Sweden and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The USSR said it had reservations concerning parts of the draft additional protocols thus far approved by the Diplomatic Conference. The Conference, it said, was not competent to elaborate a legal instrument restricting the use of specific conventional weapons. That question should be dealt with in the appropriate disarmament organs of the United Nations.

France also had certain reservations, stating that the Diplomatic Conference was to deal with humanitarian law and not with disarmament questions. Also, France said, the Assembly's resolution offered no encouragement to the Conference to include in the additional protocols provisions for the protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions.

Resolution 31/19, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/31/295, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 24 November 1976, meeting 77.

The General Assembly,

Conscious that a better application of existing humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts and the development of further rules remains an urgent task in order to reduce the suffering brought about by all such conflicts,

Recalling the successive resolutions adopted in the preceding years by the United Nations relating to human rights in armed conflicts and the debates on this subject,

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on the third session of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts, held at Geneva from 21 April to 11 June 1976, and on the second session of the Conference of Government Experts on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons, convoked by the International Committee of the Red Cross at Lugano from 28 January to 26 February 1976,

Welcoming the substantial progress made at the third session of the Diplomatic Conference and the work of the Conference of Government Experts,

Noting that the Diplomatic Conference will continue its consideration of the use of specific conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects, and its search for agreement, for humanitarian reasons, on possible rules prohibiting or restricting the use of such weapons,

1. Calls upon all parties to armed conflicts to acknowledge and to comply with their obligations under the humanitarian instruments and to observe the international humanitarian rules which are applicable, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

2. Calls the attention of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts, and of the Governments and organizations participating in it, to the need for measures to promote on a universal basis the dissemination of and instruction in the rules of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts;

3. Urges all participants in the Diplomatic Conference to do their utmost to reach agreement on additional rules which may help to alleviate the suffering brought about by armed conflicts and to respect and protect non-combatants and civilian objects in such conflicts, and to bring the Conference during its final session in 1977 to a successful conclusion;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Swiss Federal Council for convoking the fourth session of the Diplomatic Conference from 17 March to 10 June 1977;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on relevant developments concerning human rights in armed conflicts, in particular on the proceedings and results of the 1977 session of the Diplomatic Conference;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Respect for human rights in armed conflicts."

Advisory services in human rights

In 1976, the programme of advisory services in human rights provided for a regional training course which dealt with human rights in the administration of criminal justice. The training course, held at Canberra, Australia, from 29 November to 17 December, was attended by 16 judges, public prosecutors, police officials and other jurists.

During the year, 20 fellowships in the field of human rights were granted to nationals of the following 20 countries: Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Greece, Iceland, Jamaica, Malaysia, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Rwanda, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Swaziland, Uganda, the USSR, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Uruguay.

The fellowships were awarded for study relating to: human rights in the administration of justice; education of youth in respect of human rights; protection of children's rights in the administration of justice; protection of human rights of immigrants and resident aliens; role of the ombudsman and similar institutions in relation to the protection of citizens' rights; activities of the United Nations and specialized agencies in the field of human rights; and the role of local governments in the protection and implementation of human rights.

At its 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights decided to postpone until 1977 consideration of advisory services in the field of human rights.

The Commission expressed its conviction that the programme of advisory services constituted an effective method of ensuring the exchange of expert opinion and the dissemination, implementation and improvement of the standards contained in international instruments. It therefore requested the Economic and Social Council to enable the Secretary-General to continue to organize worldwide and regional seminars on human rights.

On 12 May 1976, with the adoption of decision 146(LX), the Economic and Social Council inter alia requested the General Assembly to enable the Secretary-General to continue to organize such seminars. This action was taken, without vote, on a recommendation by the Council's Social Committee, which had approved the Commission's text containing such a request.

The General Assembly, by resolution 31/38 of 30 November 1976, inter alia re-emphasized the advisability of holding, within the programme of advisory services, regular interregional and regional seminars to study the national experience of developing and developed countries in carrying out far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress.

Protection from torture and other cruel or inhuman treatment

Human rights of detained or imprisoned persons

The Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session for 1976 held in January, decided to transmit a 1975 General Assembly resolution relating to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment<sup>35</sup> to the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission for Social Development and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at their next sessions.

<sup>35</sup> See Y.U.N., 1975, pp. 625-26, text of resolution 3453(XXX) of 9 December 1975.

The Council acted by approving decision 137(ORG-76) on 15 January, without objection, on a proposal by the Council President.

The Commission on Human Rights, at its thirty-second session held in February/March 1976 at Geneva, Switzerland, approved a resolution by which it invited its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, when considering the question of the human rights of detained persons, to take into account the principles contained in the 1975 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment<sup>36</sup> as a guideline for its work and to report annually thereon.

By the second part of the resolution, the Commission inter alia requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Sub-Commission an up-to-date report on the draft principles on freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention and on the study on the right of arrested persons to communicate with those necessary to ensure their defence or protect their essential interests. The Commission requested the Sub-Commission to draw up, at its session later in the year, draft principles on freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention and a body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment. The Commission on Human Rights decided to give the matter priority at its 1977 session.

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (1993(LX)) on the question of the human rights of all persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment. By this text, the Council called upon all Governments fully to observe and implement the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and invited Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to co-operate with the Sub-Commission in implementing resolutions on this question. The Council urged the Sub-Commission to give adequate attention to the task entrusted to it by the Commission on Human Rights and to formulate a body of principles for the protection of all detained or imprisoned persons. It recommended that Member States make all possible efforts to implement the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, approved by the Council on 31 July 1957,<sup>37</sup> and determined that no restrictions upon or derogations from any fundamental human rights were to be admitted on the pretext that those Rules did not recognize such rights or recognized them to a lesser extent.

In addition, the Council requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its June/July 1976 session, to study the range of application of the Standard Minimum Rules, to formulate a set of implementing procedures for the Rules, and to report on these questions to the Council at its April/May 1977 session.

Resolution 1993(LX) was adopted by the Council, without vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee. That Committee had approved the text without vote on 3 May 1976, as sponsored by Austria, Belgium, Colombia, Ecuador, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela. An amendment by Greece was accepted by the sponsors.

Later in the year, the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control recommended to the Commission for Social Development a draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials, consisting of 10 articles with commentaries, which was to be submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

The Committee also approved the text of a draft resolution for the Commission for Social Development to transmit to the Economic and Social Council concerning the range of application and the implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners. By this text, the scope of several provisions of the Standard Minimum Rules would be extended to protect persons arrested or imprisoned without charge, and existing procedures within the United Nations system for the implementation of the Rules would be strengthened. (See also p. 560.)

At its August/September 1976 session, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities considered the question of the human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment. By a resolution approved on this item, the Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission on Human Rights request the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Sub-Commission Chairman to appoint five members to analyse the material received concerning the human rights of detained or imprisoned persons and to prepare the Sub-Commission's annual review of developments in this field. It considered that the question of the human rights of detained or imprisoned persons in situations of a public emergency or a state of siege should be further examined, and emphasized the need for judicial and administrative supervision over arrest, interrogation and detention practices of secret police and other police and military authorities, in particular the statutory and other rules governing the authority of secret police. The Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to invite Governments, specialized agencies and other concerned organizations and bodies to provide information on this subject, and also requested him to submit this information to the Sub-Commission, with a synopsis of the material received from non-governmental organizations, before its next session.

By another action, the Sub-Commission appointed Erik Nettel (Austria) as Rapporteur to formulate the first draft of a body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment, for consideration at the Sub-Commission's 1977 session.

On 13 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/85 on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, by which it called upon Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to give maximum publicity to the 1975 Declaration against torture. The Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council to examine with due priority the draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials and the recommendations on the range of application and the implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners proposed by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control.

In addition, the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights, through the Council, to submit to it in 1978 a comprehensive report on the elaboration of a body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment. It invited the World Health Organization (WHO) to prepare and bring to the attention of the Assembly in 1977 a draft code on medical ethics relevant to the protection of detained or imprisoned persons against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The Assembly also decided to consider the question again in 1977.

Resolution 31/85 was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, where it had been sponsored by Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Ecuador, Fiji, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Venezuela. The Third Committee had approved the text on 3 December 1976, without a vote. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Other matters relating to rights of detained or imprisoned persons

During discussion in the Assembly's Third Committee of the report of the Economic and Social Council, Sweden introduced a draft resolution on the protection of persons detained on account of their political opinions or convictions. By the three operative paragraphs of this text, the Assembly would have: (1) requested all Member States to take effective measures to safeguard the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons detained by reason of their political opinions or convictions, to ensure that such persons were not subjected to torture and other inhuman treatment or punishment, and to ensure that they received a fair hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal in the determination of any criminal charge against them; (2) called upon all Member States to examine periodically the possibility of releasing such persons as an act of clemency or by way of conditional release or otherwise; and (3) requested the Commission on Human Rights to include this item on its agenda and to report thereon to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

A series of amendments to this text was submitted by the German Democratic Republic. Preambulary amendments would have had the Assembly inter alia recall its resolution of 12 December 1973<sup>38</sup> proclaiming the basic principles of the legal status of combatants struggling against colonial and alien domination and racist régimes.

From operative paragraph 1 the German Democratic Republic proposed to delete the phrase referring to persons detained "by reason of their political opinions or convictions," replacing it by a phrase referring to persons detained "as a result of their struggle for self-determination, independence, the elimination of apartheid, and all forms of racial discrimination and the termination of gross and consistent violations of human rights." Operative paragraph 2, calling for examination of the possibility of releasing persons detained for political opinions, would be replaced by a text demanding an immediate and unconditional release of those persons struggling for self-determination and against racial discrimination. Operative paragraph 3 would be replaced by a text requesting the Commission on Human Rights to give special attention to the question of safeguarding the human rights of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and national independence, against colonialism, aggression, foreign occupation, apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, and the termination of gross and consistent violations of human rights.

Another draft resolution was submitted in the Third Committee by the representative of the Byelorussian SSR on the protection of persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination, independence and social progress against colonialism, aggression and foreign occupation, racism, apartheid and racial discrimination. By this text, the Assembly would have, inter alia: expressed its solidarity with the fighters for national independence and social progress of peoples, against colonialism, apartheid, racism and foreign occupation; demanded the release of all individuals detained or imprisoned as a result of such struggle; insisted that the racist régimes of southern Africa immediately release all individuals detained or imprisoned for their views or opposition to apartheid, racism and colonialism; called upon Member States to provide support and assistance to peoples fighting for their liberation from colonialism, foreign occupation, racism and racial discrimination; and requested the Commission on Human Rights to give particular attention to the question of the release of such individuals detained or imprisoned.

Algeria, Egypt, Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic proposed an amendment to this text, by which the Assembly would have insisted that Israel and the racist minority régimes in southern Africa immediately and unconditionally release all individuals detained or imprisoned because of their struggle for self-determination and national independence, and against apartheid, all forms of racism and racial discrimination, colonialism and foreign occupation.

On 3 December 1976, upon the suggestion of its Chairman, the Third Committee approved a draft decision by which it took note of the two draft resolutions which it had been unable, for lack of time, to consider in detail. It therefore recommended that the Assembly resume consideration of the drafts at its 1977 session. On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly so decided, without a vote. This action was taken by decision 31/414.

Protection of human rights in Chile

At its February/March 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights decided, on 19 February, to authorize its Chairman to address a telegram to the Government of Chile urging it to desist from holding military trials of 13 Chilean personalities and to release them without further delay.

Also on 19 February, the Commission adopted a resolution on the study of reported violations of human rights in Chile, with particular reference to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. By that text, the Commission, inter alia, expressed its profound distress at the constant, flagrant violations of human rights, including the institutionalized practice of torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, arbitrary arrest, detention and exile, of which the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group to inquire into the situation of human rights in Chile brought further evidence, and which had taken place and, according to evidence, continued to take place in Chile. The Commission appealed to the Chilean authorities to take, without delay, all necessary measures to restore and safeguard basic human rights and fundamental freedoms and fully to respect the provisions of the international instruments to which Chile was a party. It concluded that the practice of torture had been systematically employed by some State agencies and called upon the Chilean authorities to undertake effective measures to investigate and put an end to such activities of those agencies and of individuals in relation to acts of torture.

In addition, the Commission extended the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group and requested it to report to the General Assembly at its 1976 session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its 1977 session on the situation of human rights in Chile, in particular on any developments, legislative or otherwise, which might have occurred to re-establish respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in implementation of an Assembly resolution of 9 December 1975<sup>39</sup> and all other relevant resolutions and decisions of United Nations bodies.

Further, the Commission approved a draft decision, to be submitted for action to the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council would approve the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group and request the Assembly to make arrangements for adequate financial resources and staff.

At its April/May 1976 session, the Council approved the text submitted by the Commission on Human Rights as its decision 145(LX). It was approved on 12 May, without a vote, on a proposal by the Council President.

Also on 12 May, the Council adopted a resolution (1994(LX)) on the protection of human rights in Chile, by which it endorsed the resolution adopted by the Commission on Human Rights on this subject and the expression of profound distress contained therein at the constant flagrant violations of human rights, including the institutionalized practice of torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, arbitrary arrest, detention and exile, of which the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group had brought further evidence. The Council requested the Ad Hoc Working Group, in fulfilling its mandate, also to ascertain any effect which any measures taken by the Chilean authorities might have had on the re-establishment of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile, and it appealed once again to the

Chilean authorities to comply with the requests and observations made and the guarantees sought by the Commission on Human Rights with regard to the restoration of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Council adopted resolution 1994(LX) by 35 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Social Committee. The text had been sponsored in that Committee by Algeria, Austria, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, Mexico, Norway, Portugal, the USSR and Yugoslavia and was approved, by 35 votes to 3, with 5 abstentions, on 6 May 1976. The sponsors accepted an amendment proposed by Belgium and the Federal Republic of Germany.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, at its August/September 1976 session, considered the situation of human rights in Chile. On 31 August the Sub-Commission adopted a resolution by which it, inter alia, expressed its profound distress at the constant and flagrant violations of human rights in Chile, and urged the Chilean authorities to take all necessary measures to restore and safeguard human rights and to free all persons detained without charge or arrested for political reasons. It requested the Commission on Human Rights to take further steps to put an end to the violations in Chile and invited it to recommend appropriate measures regarding legal and humanitarian aid that might be made available to political prisoners and other persecuted persons in Chile, as well as measures to render financial support and other relief to alleviate the sufferings of their dependants. The Sub-Commission further invited the Commission on Human Rights to consider the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of the various forms of aid and assistance being given to the Chilean régime and requested the Secretary-General to invite international organizations, including in particular the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Organization of American States, and the Inter-Parliamentary Union, to inform the Commission on Human Rights of recent activities relating to human rights in Chile.

Later in the year, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the third report on the situation of human rights in Chile, prepared by the Ad Hoc Working Group. The Working Group described its relations with the Government of Chile, provided information on constitutional and legislative developments and on the continuing state of siege in Chile. It also set forth its findings, based on written and oral information received from a number of sources on the liberty and security of persons in Chile, including arrests, detentions and disappearance of persons, allegations of torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, the expulsion of Chilean nationals, information regarding the freedom of association, intellectual freedoms, and the situation of women, children, youth and the family, as well as information regarding economic, social and cultural rights.

On the basis of information and evidence from sources it considered reliable, the Ad Hoc Working Group concluded that constant and flagrant violations of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms continued to take place in Chile. A number of documents in support of the findings of the Working Group were annexed to the report.

In October 1976, by several communications addressed to the Secretary-General, the Government of Chile transmitted its observations on the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group. Chile presented an over-all survey of the situation of human rights as at September 1976 and provided information with regard to all aspects of violations alleged by the Working Group. In its final observations, Chile maintained that the Group's conclusions had been based on false or incomplete information and that the description and assessment of the situation of human rights in Chile, as presented in the report, did not correspond to reality.

The Third Committee of the General Assembly considered the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group and, on 23 November, approved a draft resolution sponsored by 43 powers by a roll-call vote of 98 to 14, with 18 abstentions. Separate roll-call votes were taken in the Committee on a number of provisions, noted below.

By the preamble to the 43-power text, the Assembly inter alia would observe that its previous appeals to the Chilean authorities and, likewise, appeals by the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, ILO, WHO and UNESCO for the restoration and safeguarding of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile had remained unheeded (approved by a separate roll-call vote of 87 to 13, with 27 abstentions). The Assembly would commend the Chairman and members of the Ad Hoc Working Group for the thorough and objective manner in which the report was prepared, despite the refusal of the Chilean authorities to permit the Group to visit the country in accordance with its mandate (approved by a roll-call vote of 95 to 10, with 19 abstentions).

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly would:

(1) express its profound indignation that constant and flagrant violations of human rights had taken place and continued to take place in Chile;

(2) call once more upon the Chilean authorities to restore and safeguard, without delay, basic human rights and fundamental freedoms and fully to respect provisions of the international instruments to which Chile was a party and, to this end:

(a) to cease using the state of siege or emergency for the purpose of violating human rights and fundamental freedoms and, having regard to the observations of the Ad Hoc Working Group, to re-examine the basis on which the state of siege or emergency was applied with a view to its termination (approved by a roll-call vote of 93 to 13, with 21 abstentions);

(b) to put an end to the practice of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment by Chilean State agencies, particularly the Dirección de Inteligencia Nacional, and to prosecute and punish those responsible;

(c) to clarify forthwith the status of individuals whose disappearance was attributable to political reasons;

(d) to release immediately those who had been arbitrarily arrested or detained without charge and those who were in prison solely for political reasons;

(e) to release, furthermore, those who were detained or imprisoned on account of acts or omissions which did not constitute a criminal offence at the time they were committed;

(f) to guarantee fully the right of habeas corpus;

(g) to cease the arbitrary deprivation of Chilean nationality and to restore it to those who had been so deprived;

(h) to respect the right of everyone to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and join trade unions for the protection of his interests;

(i) to guarantee the right to intellectual freedom;

(3) deplore the fact that, despite previous assurances to the contrary, the Chilean authorities persistently refused to allow the Ad Hoc Working Group to visit the country;

(4) invite Member States, United Nations agencies and other international organizations to take steps they considered appropriate as a contribution to restoring and safeguarding human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile and welcome steps already taken to this end (approved by a roll-call vote of 88 to 13, with 27 abstentions);

(5) invite the Commission on Human Rights:

(a) to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group;

(b) to formulate recommendations on possible humanitarian, legal and financial aid to those arbitrarily arrested or imprisoned, to those forced to leave the country and to their relatives (approved by a roll-call vote of 91 to 10, with 28 abstentions); and

(c) to consider the consequences of the various forms of aid extended to the Chilean authorities (approved by a roll-call vote of 82 to 16, with 31 abstentions); and

(6) request the President of the thirty-first (1976) session of the General Assembly and the Secretary-General to assist in any way they might consider appropriate in the re-establishment of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile.

On 16 December 1976, the Assembly adopted this text, by a recorded vote of 95 to 12, with 25 abstentions, as its resolution 31/124.

The sponsors of the resolution were Algeria, Australia, Austria, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Senegal, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sweden, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia.

A draft resolution on this subject was also submitted to the Third Committee by Argentina, Costa Rica, Grenada, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Paraguay and Uruguay, by which the Assembly would have: called upon the Chilean authorities to continue to adopt and implement all necessary measures effectively to restore and safeguard basic human rights and fundamental freedoms and fully to respect the provisions of the international instruments to which Chile was a party; requested the Government of Chile to continue to extend to the Commission on Human Rights all necessary co-operation to enable it to carry out its work; invited the Commission on Human Rights to report to the General Assembly in 1977 on the current situation of human rights in Chile and, in particular, on any developments which might occur to re-establish respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; and requested the President of the 1976 Assembly session and the Secretary-General to assist in any way they deemed appropriate to re-establish basic human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile.

On 23 November 1976, after approval of the draft text sponsored by 43 powers, Mali proposed that this eight-power text should not be put to the vote. The Third Committee approved Mali's proposal by a roll-call vote of 60 to 40, with 26 abstentions.

Other documents before the Committee included a letter dated 30 September 1976 from Chile addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting communications exchanged between the Government of Chile and the Commission on Human Rights, the Ad Hoc Working Group and the Division of Human Rights. By another letter, dated 13 October, Chile transmitted a public declaration made by its Supreme Court of Justice repudiating allegations against Chile's judiciary made in the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group.

During the year, Chile addressed several letters to the Secretary-General (dated 22 March, 29 October, 19 November and 3 December) on progress in the field of human rights and the release of detainees. Also, by a letter of 16 November, Chile announced the total release of persons detained under the state of siege, except in the case of 18 persons whom, Chile stated, it would release to third countries willing to receive them. Exceptions to the total release were Luis Corvalán Lepe and Jorge Montes, both high-ranking members of the outlawed Chilean Communist Party, whom the Government of Chile proposed to release in exchange for detainees held by Cuba and the USSR.

On 20 December, Chile addressed a letter to the Secretary-General, stating that the USSR had agreed to release Vladimir Bukovsky in exchange for the release of Mr. Corvalán and that the simultaneous release had taken place at Zurich, Switzerland, on 18 December 1976.

Other documents before the Assembly on this item included letters from Bulgaria (dated 15 March) and the USSR (30 November), expressing concern at the state of human rights in Chile. On 28 May 1976, Czechoslovakia had transmitted a letter to the Secretary-General, signed by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, which contained an appeal for the release of detainees in Chile.

Information on the activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in Chile were set forth in a letter dated 10 November 1976 from ICRC.

At the thirty-first session of the General Assembly, the USSR stated at a meeting of the Credentials Committee that it did not recognize the credentials of Chile and requested that its view be reflected in the Committee's report to the General Assembly.

Resolution 1994(LX), as recommended by Social Committee, E/5821, adopted by Council on 12 May 1976, meeting 2002, by 35 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the promotion of human rights,

Observing that the Commission on Human Rights, as the Council organ responsible for those functions, has made repeated efforts to restore human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975, in which the Assembly unanimously adopted the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 3219(XXIX) of 6 November 1974, in which the Assembly expressed its deepest concern that constant flagrant violations of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile continued to be reported, and urged the Chilean authorities to take all necessary steps to restore and safeguard those rights and freedoms,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 3448(XXX) of 9 December 1975, in which, inter alia, the Assembly deplored the refusal of the Chilean authorities to allow the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Situation of Human Rights in Chile, established under resolution 8(XXXI) of the Commission on Human Rights, to visit the country, notwithstanding previous solemn assurances given by the authorities in that regard, and urged them to honour those assurances,

Taking note also of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group established under resolution 8(XXXI) of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Commission's consideration of that report at its thirty-second session,

Observing that the Government of Chile has not yet responded to the requests of the Commission on Human Rights, communicated to it in 1974 and 1976 by the Chairman of the Commission, that persons still held in custody should be released and that they should not be subjected to any measure or prosecution on a retroactive basis,

Deeply concerned that the responsibilities entrusted to its subsidiary organs should be fully carried out,

1. Endorses resolution 3(XXXII) of the Commission on Human Rights and the expression of profound distress contained therein at the constant flagrant violations of human rights, including the institutionalized practice of torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, arbitrary arrest, detention and exile, of which the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group established under resolution 8(XXXI) of the Commission on Human Rights brings further evidence, which have taken place and, according to existing evidence, continue to take place in Chile, soon after the adoption of General Assembly resolution 3448(XXX);

2. Requests the Ad Hoc Working Group established under resolution 8(XXXI) of the Commission on Human Rights, in fulfilling its mandate under resolution 3(XXXII) of the Commission and resolution 3448(XXX) of the General Assembly, also to ascertain any effect which any measure taken by the Chilean authorities might have on the re-establishment of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in implementation of resolution 3448(XXX);

3. Appeals once again to the Chilean authorities to comply with the requests and observations made and the guarantees sought by the Commission on Human Rights with regard to the restoration of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The General Assembly,

Reiterating its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Recalling that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, everyone has the right to life, liberty and the security of person and the right not to be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile, or to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, unanimously adopted in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Considering that, in its resolution 3448(XXX) of 9 December 1975, the General Assembly expressed its profound distress at the constant and flagrant violations of human rights which have taken place and continue to take place in Chile, including the institutionalized practice of torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, arbitrary arrest, detention and exile,

Reaffirming once more its condemnation of all forms of torture and of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Considering that its previous appeals to the Chilean authorities and, likewise, appeals by the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the restoration and safeguarding of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile have hitherto remained unheeded,

Bearing in mind resolutions 8(XXXI) of 27 February 1975 and 3(XXXII) of 19 February 1976 of the Commission on Human Rights,

Taking into account resolution 3 B (XXIX) of 31 August 1976 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Having considered the reports of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Situation of Human Rights in Chile, as well as the documents submitted by the Chilean authorities,

Taking note of the statement by the Chilean authorities of 16 November 1976, brought to the attention of the General Assembly by a letter from the Permanent Representative of Chile,

Commending the Chairman and the members of the Ad Hoc Working Group for the thorough and objective manner in which the report was prepared, despite the refusal of the Chilean authorities to permit the Group to visit the country in accordance with its mandate,

Concluding that constant and flagrant violations of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms continue to take place in Chile,

1. Expresses its profound indignation that constant and flagrant violations of human rights have taken place and continue to take place in Chile, in particular the institutionalized practice of torture, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment, the disappearance of persons for political reasons, arbitrary arrest, detention, exile and cases of deprivation of Chilean nationality;

2. Calls once more upon the Chilean authorities to restore and safeguard, without delay, basic human rights and fundamental freedoms and fully to respect provisions of the international instruments to which Chile is a party and, to this end:

(a) To cease using the state of siege or emergency for the purpose of violating human rights and fundamental freedoms and, having regard to the observations by the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Situation of Human Rights in Chile, to re-examine the basis on which the state of siege or emergency is applied with a view to its termination;

(b) To put an end to the practice of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment by Chilean State agencies, particularly the Dirección de Inteligencia Nacional, and to prosecute and punish those who are responsible;

(c) To clarify forthwith the status of individuals whose disappearance is attributable to political reasons;

(d) To release immediately those who have been arbitrarily arrested or detained without charge and those who are in prison solely for political reasons;

(e) To release, furthermore, those who are detained or imprisoned on account of acts or omissions which did not constitute a criminal offence at the time they were committed;

(f) To guarantee fully the right of habeas corpus (amparo);

Other human rights questions

Trade union rights

At its April/May 1976 session, the Economic and Social Council considered a report on allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, prepared by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts of the Commission on Human Rights. The report dealt with a communication dated 4 December 1974<sup>40</sup> from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions concerning the arrest of four members of the Black Allied Workers' Union charged with having participated at Durban in a prohibited gathering organized on 25 September 1974. The report analysed the information received on this matter in the light of international standards concerning trade union rights and relevant South African legislation and concluded that South Africa had deliberately violated trade union freedoms in the case in point.

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (1997(LX)) on the allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in South Africa. The Council, having received with appreciation the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, expressed its deep indignation at the repression of African workers and their trade unions in South Africa and called for the immediate release of all trade unionists currently imprisoned or detained and for the immediate recognition and restitution of all trade union rights. The Council requested the Ad Hoc Working Group to continue to study this question and to report thereon to the Commission on Human Rights and to the Council, as appropriate.

Resolution 1997(LX) was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, which had approved the text without objection on

4 May 1976, as sponsored by Algeria, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Kenya, Liberia, Malaysia, Nigeria, Peru, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

At the same session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a note by the Secretary-General on a report of the Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association, of the International Labour Organisation (ILO), which had examined allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in Lesotho in 1970 and 1971.<sup>41</sup>

On 12 May 1976, the Council adopted resolution 1996(LX), by which, having received the report on that subject, it took note of the recommendations contained therein, invited the Government of Lesotho to consider their implementation favourably and asked it to inform the Secretary-General of any steps taken towards implementation. It also requested the Secretary-General to transmit any communications received from the Government of Lesotho to the Director-General of the International Labour Office for the information of the ILO Governing Body.

The Council adopted resolution 1996(LX), without vote, as recommended by the Social Committee, which had approved the text without objection on 4 May 1976, on a proposal by its Chairman.

The Economic and Social Council also had before it at its April/May 1976 session a note from the Secretary-General relating to a 1974 complaint<sup>42</sup> from a trade union in the Bahamas, the Bahamas Workers' Council and the Engineering Fuel, Service and Allied Workers' Union (Engineering and General Union), concerning alleged infringements of trade union rights in that country. The note contained a reply from the Government of the Bahamas dated 5 February 1976, which rejected as false the allegations made against it and requested a more detailed report on their specific nature.

On 12 May 1976, the Council decided to defer consideration of the question until 1977 and to request the Secretary-General to ascertain from the complainant unions whether they would specify the nature of their allegations or whether they would wish to withdraw their complaint.

These actions were set forth in decision 150(LX), approved, without vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, which had approved the text, without objection, on 4 May 1976, on a proposal by its Chairman.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

At its February/March 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution by which it requested the Secretary-General to continue collecting documentation on the development of new technology as it pertained to human rights and to continue and, if necessary, strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between United Nations organs and the specialized agencies with regard to the impact of science and technology on human rights, in particular with a view to the proposed 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology and Development.

The Economic and Social Council, at its mid-1976 session, considered the question of human rights and scientific and technological developments and, on 4 August, adopted without vote a resolution (2032(LXI)) by which it called upon the International Labour Organisation to strengthen its activities in the fields of the choice and transfer of technologies, particularly concerning standard-setting, dissemination of information and technical co-operation relating to the employment, training and upgrading of workers, including the provision of training courses for workers displaced as a result of technological innovations, and improvement of working conditions and environment.

Resolution 2032(LXI) was adopted on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee, which had approved the text on 29 July 1976, without vote, as proposed by the Committee on Science and Technology for Development at its February 1976 session.

The Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee of the General Assembly also considered the question of human rights and scientific and technological developments and, on 10 December 1976, approved by 102 votes to 0, with 7 abstentions, a draft resolution sponsored by nine powers—Benin, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mali, Nepal and Poland—and amended by France. By this text, the Assembly would call upon Member States and specialized agencies, in their programmes and plans, to take account of the principles and provisions of the 1975 Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind<sup>43</sup> and pertinent provisions of the Proclamation of Teheran (Iran) adopted by the 1968 International Conference on Human Rights,<sup>44</sup> would request the Commission on Human Rights, in considering the item, to give special attention to the implementation of the provisions of that Declaration, and would decide to consider the question of implementation at its 1977 session.

France proposed several amendments to this text. The first of these, approved by 81 votes to 2, with 24 abstentions, added a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly would recall several resolutions on the subject. The second amendment, approved by 81 votes to 0, with 23 abstentions, added a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly would express its concern at the fact that scientific and technological achievements might be used to the detriment of fundamental human rights and freedoms, the dignity of the human person, and international peace and security and social progress. This provision incorporated subamendments by Austria, Cuba and Nigeria. Another French amendment to include a reference to the Proclamation of Teheran was accepted by the sponsors after they had subamended it.

The General Assembly, on 16 December 1976, adopted the draft text by a recorded vote of 126 to 0, with 8 abstentions, as its resolution 31/128.

Human rights of migrant workers

At its twenty-ninth session held at Geneva, Switzerland, from 12 August to 1 September 1976, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities considered reports on the exploitation of labour through illicit and clandestine trafficking prepared by Mrs. Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco), the Special Rapporteur for that subject, and a set of draft recommendations she had prepared with the assistance of an informal working group. The Sub-Commission decided to take note with appreciation of the reports and the draft recommendations and to transmit them to the Commission on Human Rights. It further decided to draw the attention of the Commission to the report of the United Nations Seminar on the Human Rights of Migrant Workers, held at Tunis, Tunisia, in November 1975.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/127) on measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers, by which it called upon all States, taking into account the provisions of the relevant instruments adopted by the International Labour Organisation and of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,<sup>45</sup> to take measures to prevent and end all discrimination against migrant workers and to ensure the implementation of such measures.

The Assembly invited all States: to extend to migrant workers treatment equal to that enjoyed by their own nationals with regard to the protection of human rights and to the provisions of their labour legislation and their social legislation; to promote and facilitate the implementation of the relevant international instruments and the adoption of bilateral agreements designed, inter alia, to eliminate illicit traffic in alien workers; and to adopt measures to ensure that the fundamental human rights of all migrant workers, irrespective of their immigration status, were fully respected under their national legislation.

The Assembly invited Governments of host countries to make arrangements for information and reception facilities and to put into effect policies relating to training, health, housing and educational and cultural development for migrant workers and their families, and to guarantee the free exercise by them of activities calculated to preserve their cultural values. In addition, it invited Governments of countries of origin to give the widest possible dissemination to information calculated to pre-advise and protect migrants. It then invited States to enlighten public opinion in host countries on the importance of the contribution made by migrant workers to economic and social development.

The Assembly further called upon all States to consider ratifying the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975, adopted by ILO, and called upon the United Nations organs and specialized agencies concerned with the question of migrant workers to continue devoting their attention to this matter. It also recommended that the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council consider this question at their next sessions on the basis of the instruments adopted and the documents and studies prepared by the United Nations and the specialized agencies, including the study by the Special Rapporteur on the exploitation of labour through illicit and clandestine trafficking and the report of the 1975 Seminar on the Human Rights of Migrant Workers.

Resolution 31/127 was adopted, without vote, as recommended by the Assembly's Third Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 3 December 1976. The text was sponsored by Algeria, Benin, Colombia, Italy, Jamaica, Lesotho, Mali, Mexico, the Niger, Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia.

Amendments by Morocco, as subamended by the United Kingdom, were accepted by the sponsors. The sponsors also took into account, in a revised text, oral amendments proposed by Uruguay.

Specific rights or groups of rights

The individual's duties to the community and limitations on human rights

At its August/September 1976 session, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities had before it a draft report by Mrs. Erica-Irene Daes (Greece), Special Rapporteur for the study of the individual's duties to the community and the limitations on human rights and freedoms under article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>46</sup> The Special Rapporteur, in a statement to the Sub-Commission, said that she had been guided by the relevant principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration and other international instruments. The Sub-Commission decided to place the item on the agenda for the next session to consider a further part of her report, with a view to considering the final report in 1978.

Discrimination against persons born out of wedlock

The Commission on Human Rights, at its February/March 1976 session, decided to postpone until its next session consideration of the study of discrimination against persons born out of wedlock. It also decided to consider at that time the draft general principles on equality and non-discrimination in respect of such persons, which had been drafted by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and were still under consideration by that body.

Later in the year, the Sub-Commission considered the draft general principles and, on 16 August, adopted them on the understanding that the item would be taken up again by the Commission on Human Rights at its 1977 session.

Legal protection of the human rights of non-citizens

The Commission on Human Rights, at its 1976 session, decided to postpone until 1977 consideration of the question of international legal protection of the human rights of individuals who were not citizens of the country in which they lived.

At its 1976 session, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities had before it the final report on this subject prepared by Special Rapporteur Baroness Elles (United Kingdom), but for lack of time decided to postpone discussion of the report to its session in 1977.

Role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights

At its 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered two aspects of the question of the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights: conscientious objection to military service, and channels of communication with youth and international youth organizations.

On the first aspect, the Commission had before it a report by the Secretary-General containing information submitted by Member States. It also heard a statement on this subject by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and four non-governmental organizations: the International Youth and Student Movement for the United Nations, the World Federation of Democratic Youth, Amnesty International and the Friends World Committee for Consultation. The Commission decided to defer further consideration of this item until its 1977 session.

On the second aspect, the Commission requested the appropriate United Nations organs, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations, as well as Governments, to promote measures for the involvement of youth in human rights. Such measures included, inter alia, the development of a special curriculum on human rights for use in various educational systems, and the use of mass communication media to propagate among youth respect for human rights.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly addressed a solemn appeal to all States, as well as to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to take appropriate action to foster among youth respect for all people, irrespective of nationality, race, sex or religion, regard for human values and devotion to the ideals of peace, freedom and progress and to the cause of human rights. (See also p. 666.)

Communications on human rights

The Working Group on communications concerning human rights, established by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, met for its fifth session from 26 July to 6 August 1976. It considered in private meetings communications concerning human rights, including replies of Governments thereon, received by the Secretary-General during the past year. It was charged with bringing to the attention of the Sub-Commission those communications which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Working Group had before it the confidential lists of communications prepared each month by the Secretary-General, containing brief summaries of 54,510 communications received since the Working Group's session in 1975, as well as replies from Governments. It also had access to the originals of the listed communications.

The Working Group submitted a confidential report to the twenty-ninth session of the Sub-Commission, held from 12 August to 1 September 1976. The Sub-Commission considered the report at closed meetings and, on 30 August, adopted a confidential resolution on the matter.

Under the procedures mandated by the Economic and Social Council, the resolution was to remain confidential until such time as the Commission on Human Rights might decide to make recommendations to the Council. (See also pp. 588-89.)

Slavery, including slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism

The Working Group on slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its second session at Geneva during August 1976. It submitted a report to the Sub-Commission in which it noted that slavery continued to exist and that new practices analogous to slavery were being discovered or devised and permitted to continue unchecked.

The Sub-Commission, at its 1976 session, considered the report of the Working Group, together with information received from the International Criminal Police Organization.

The Sub-Commission requested the Working Group to continue studying the problems of slavery and the slave trade, including the slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism, the sale of children, debt bondage, the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others. It asked the Secretary-General to call upon all States to ratify or accede to international instruments on this subject and decided to consider the item biennially.

Status of the International Covenants on Human Rights

As at 31 December 1976, 54 States had signed the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 53 States had signed the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and 21 States had signed its Optional Protocol. All those instruments had been adopted by the General Assembly and opened for signature, certification or accession on 16 December 1966.<sup>47</sup>

The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights had been ratified or acceded to by the following 42 States: Australia, Barbados, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Mongolia, Norway, the Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Surinam, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

Except for Australia and the Philippines, the same States had ratified or acceded to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

The Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights had been ratified or acceded to by the following 15 States: Barbados, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, Jamaica, Madagascar, Mauritius, Norway, Surinam, Sweden, Uruguay and Zaire.

In addition, upon ratification of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Governments of Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom made declarations in accordance with article 41 of that Covenant, recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee, established under article 28, to receive and consider communications by one State party claiming that another State party was not fulfilling its obligations. Under the provisions of that Covenant, 10 such declarations were required before that article could come into force.

Three months after deposit of the thirty-fifth instrument of ratification or accession, in accordance with its provisions, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights entered into force—on 3 January 1976; the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and its Optional Protocol came into force on 23 March 1976.

At its 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights took note of the entry into force of the two Covenants and invited all other Member States to consider ratifying them in the near future.

At its April/May 1976 session, the Economic and Social Council considered procedures for the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. In its consideration of this item, the Council had before it a note by the Secretary-General on consultations with specialized agencies and with States parties to the Covenant; the note analysed the provisions of the Covenant relevant to measures of international implementation. The report also contained the Secretary-General's suggestions and recommendations for action by the Council and ways to accelerate the pace of implementation.

With the adoption of resolution 1988(LX), the Council established the programme under which the States parties to the Covenant were to furnish reports in biennial stages, and requested the States parties, in reporting under this programme, to give full attention to specific principles of the Covenant.

The Council invited States parties to submit reports on the measures that they had adopted and the progress made in achieving the observance of the rights recognized in the Covenant, and requested the Secretary-General to transmit copies of these reports to the Council and, where appropriate, to the specialized agencies for consideration.

The Council also called upon the specialized agencies to submit reports on the progress made in achieving the observance of the provisions of the Covenant falling within the scope of their activities and decided that States parties to the Covenant which submitted reports under its provisions did not need to submit reports on similar questions under the Council's reporting procedure. It also requested the Secretary-General to draw up general guidelines for such reports.

By the same resolution, the Council decided to establish a sessional working group whenever reports were due for its consideration, to assist it in the consideration of such reports; representatives of specialized agencies concerned might take part in the proceedings of the working group when matters falling within their respective fields of competence were considered. The Council also appealed to States to include in their delegations to the relevant Council sessions members competent in the subject-matter under consideration, and requested the Secretary-General to take all steps to ensure the effective performance by the Council of its responsibilities under the Covenant.

Resolution 1988(LX) was adopted, without vote, on 11 May 1976, as proposed by the Council President following consultations. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In accordance with the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Secretary-General addressed a written invitation to the States parties to that Covenant to submit their nominations for membership in the Human Rights Committee. The States parties held their first meeting at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 20 September 1976, to elect the Committee members.

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly had before it a report by the Secretary-General on the status of the two Covenants and the Optional Protocol containing the list of States which had signed, ratified or acceded to those instruments and indicating the dates on which the instruments of ratification or accession had been deposited with the Secretary-General.

On 13 December 1976, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/86, by which it welcomed the entry into force of both Covenants as a major step in international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms and invited once again all States to become parties to them.

The Assembly recognized the important role of the Human Rights Committee in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and stated that appropriate arrangements should be made to enable the Committee to hold sessions at such intervals and of such duration as necessary for it to carry out efficiently its functions under that Covenant and its Optional Protocol.

In addition, the Assembly endorsed the appeal made by the Economic and Social Council on 11 May 1976 that States include in their delegations to the Council sessions at which reports of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights were examined experts competent in the subject-matter of the reports.

Resolution 31/86, which the Assembly adopted by 129 votes to 0, was first considered in the Third Committee, where the text was approved on 2 December 1976 by 97 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, on a proposal by Bulgaria. Amendments proposed jointly by Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Norway and Sweden added a provision by which the Assembly recognized that resources should be allocated to enable the Secretary-General to carry out his functions under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and its Optional Protocol (approved by 56 votes to 0, with 39 abstentions), and a provision inviting States to become parties to that Protocol (approved by 56 votes to 5, with 37 abstentions). A third six-power amendment was accepted by the sponsor.

In its consideration of this item, the Assembly also had before it a letter dated 8 September 1976 from Turkey addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting a letter dated 7 September by Nail Atalay, identified as the representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. In this letter, Mr. Atalay pointed out that the Republic of Cyprus was a binational State and that therefore the proposal of Andreas V. Mavrommatis as a candidate for membership in the Human Rights Committee by the Greek Cypriot Administration was a violation of the Constitution of the Republic and totally unacceptable to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

Realization of economic, social and cultural rights and the study of special human rights problems in developing countries

At its 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered the question of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the study of special human rights problems in developing countries. The Commission had before it a study prepared by its Special Rapporteur on this subject, Manouchehr Ganji (Iran), and periodic reports on economic, social and cultural rights for the period 1 July 1969 to 30 June 1973 that were received after the 1975 session of the Commission. No action was taken by the Commission; during the discussion, however, Commission members expressed the view that more emphasis should be placed on human rights aspects of economic, social and cultural problems by policy-making international bodies concerned with development.

Freedom of information

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly, without adopting a resolution, decided without a vote to include the question of freedom of information in the provisional agenda of its 1977 session and to consider it with appropriate priority.

This action was taken in adopting decision 31/415, approved on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text on 10 December 1976, as proposed by the Netherlands on behalf of the nine member States of the European Communities (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom).

Human rights in the administration of justice

The Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its June/July 1976 session, recommended that priority be given to the formulation of new standards for ensuring human rights in the administration of justice, including: just, humane and effective judicial proceedings, improved selection and training of judges and prosecutors, and safeguards against the abuse of discretion in sentencing; minimum rules for the treatment of offenders in the community; strengthening of inmate grievance procedures by ensuring prisoners the right of recourse to an independent authority both at the national and international levels; facilitating the return of persons convicted of crime abroad to their domicile to serve their sentences; and improvement of the situation of persons detained either in police custody or in prison custody before trial.

In addition, the Committee recommended a draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials and the application and implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, which were to increase respect for and protection of human dignity and the human rights of all persons. (See also pp. 560 and 596.)

Methods and long-term programme of work

At its 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered the further promotion and encouragement of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of its long-term programme of work.

On 3 March 1976, the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council that it authorize the officers of the Commission to hold preparatory meetings before the next session and requested that the Council enable the Secretary-General to continue to organize world-wide and regional seminars on human rights. The Commission recommended that the Council invite the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to analyse, for maximum use of resources, the programme in the field of human rights contained in the 1976-1979 medium-term plan and the 1976-1977 programme budget, and requested the Secretary-General to give more publicity to United Nations activities in the field of human rights. In addition, the Commission decided to examine at its next session the possibility of grouping appropriate agenda items into two groups—one consisting of items related to civil and political rights, and the other to economic, social and cultural rights—to be considered at alternate sessions, and requested its officers to give preliminary consideration to this question.

At its April/May 1976 session, the Economic and Social Council approved a decision (146(LX)) by which it endorsed the recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights. By these, the Council decided: to authorize the elected officers of the Commission to hold preparatory meetings at least three days before the beginning of the 1977 session; to request the General Assembly to enable the Secretary-General to continue to organize world-wide and regional seminars on human rights; and to invite the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to analyse the programme in the field of human rights in order to ascertain to what degree the presentation of the programme and the resources allocated to it might efficiently achieve the aims and objectives of United Nations activities in that field.

Decision 146(LX) was approved, without a vote, on 12 May 1976, as recommended to the Council by the Social Committee, which had approved the text without objection on 6 May.

At the same session, the Council adopted a resolution (1992(LX)) by which it urged the Commission on Human Rights to continue its efforts to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and authorized, as an interim measure, the officers elected by the Commission to meet for three days before the opening of its 1977 session to consider ways and means which might enable the Commission to carry out its functions as well as possible, having regard to: establishment of a proper and balanced long-term programme of work; rationalization of the work by grouping items and through advance planning of various sessions; and recourse to the use of sessional working groups and informal consultations.

Resolution 31/127, as recommended by Third Committee, A/31/395, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1976, meeting 102.

The General Assembly,
Recalling the terms of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Considering the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 1963, Considering also the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975, and the Recommendation concerning Migrant Workers, 1975, adopted by the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation, Recalling its resolutions 2920(XXVII) of 15 November 1972, 3224(XXIX) of 6 November 1974 and 3449(XXX) of 9 December 1975 concerning migrant workers, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1749(LIV) of 16 May 1973, in which the Council affirmed the need for the United Nations to consider the situation of migrant workers in an interrelated manner and in relation to general factors which have a bearing on human rights and human dignity,

Aware that the problem of migrant workers continues to be of major importance to many States, despite the existence of international instruments and despite efforts exerted by certain States, including the adoption of bilateral agreements,

Believing that this problem is becoming more serious in certain regions for political, economic, social and cultural reasons,

Seriously concerned at the de facto discrimination frequently suffered by alien workers in some countries despite the legislative and other efforts exerted to prevent and punish it,

Noting with satisfaction the work done in the field of migrant workers by the specialized agencies, particularly the International Labour Organisation, and by other United Nations organs, such as the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

1. Calls upon all States, taking into account the provisions of the relevant instruments adopted by the International Labour Organisation and of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, to take measures to prevent and put an end to all discrimination against migrant workers and to ensure the implementation of such measures;

2. Invites all States:

(a) To extend to migrant workers having regular status in their territories treatment equal to that enjoyed by their own nationals with regard to the protection of human rights and to the provisions of their labour legislation and their social legislation;

(b) To promote and facilitate by all means in their power the implementation of the relevant international instruments and the adoption of bilateral agreements designed, inter alia, to eliminate the illicit traffic in alien workers;

(c) To adopt, pending the conclusion of such agreements, the appropriate measures to ensure that the fundamental human rights of all migrant workers, irrespective of their immigration status, are fully respected under their national legislation;

3. Invites Governments of host countries to make arrangements for information and reception facilities and to put into effect policies relating to training, health, housing and educational and cultural development for migrant workers and their families, and to guarantee the free exercise by them of activities calculated to preserve their cultural values;

4. Further invites Governments of countries of origin to give the widest possible dissemination to information calculated to pre-advise and protect migrants;

5. Invites all States to intensify efforts to enlighten public opinion in host countries on the importance of the contribution made by migrant workers to economic and social development and to raising the level of living in such countries;

6. Calls upon all States to give consideration to ratifying the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975, adopted by the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation;

7. Calls upon the United Nations organs and specialized agencies, including the International Labour Organisation, concerned with the question of migrant workers to continue devoting their attention to this question;

8. Recommends that the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council should consider this question at their next sessions on the basis of the instruments adopted and the documents and studies prepared by the United Nations and the specialized agencies, including the study by the Special Rapporteur on the exploitation of labour through illicit and clandestine trafficking and the report of the Seminar on the Human Rights of Migrant Workers, held at Tunis from 12 to 24 November 1975.

Recalling its resolutions 2200 A (XXI) of 16 December 1966 and 3270 (XXIX) of 10 December 1974, and in particular its belief that the entry into force of the International Covenants on Human Rights will undoubtedly enhance the ability of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and thus contribute greatly to the co-operation of States in the attainment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the important responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council in the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Chapter XXIV

The status of women

The Commission on the Status of Women held its twenty-sixth session at Geneva, Switzerland, from 13 September to 1 October 1976, and resumed this session from 6 to 17 December 1976, also in Geneva.

The Commission's agenda included such subjects as: the draft Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women; adoption of the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women; preparations for the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women; and evaluation of activities undertaken during the 1975 International Women's Year. Also discussed were: the preparation and implementation of project proposals; the progress made under the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade and in the implementation of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year;<sup>1</sup> improvement of the data base for measuring the implementation of the World Plan of Action; the role of non-governmental organizations; and the influence of the mass communications media on attitudes towards the roles of women and men in society.

The Economic and Social Council decided to consider the report of the Commission at its sixty-second session in 1977, but it took action in 1976 on several matters: the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women criteria and proposals for management of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women; and the preparatory work for the 1980 World Conference.

In December 1976, the General Assembly approved the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women, and considered, inter alia, the effective mobilization of women in development, the improvement of the status and role of women in education, and the pledging conference for the Voluntary Fund.

Details of these and other actions are described in the sections that follow:

Decisions of the World Conference of the International Women's Year*Implementation of the World Plan of Action

On 15 January 1976, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 137(ORG-76), decided to include consideration of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1976-1985, in its 1976 work programme. The Council further decided to refer a General Assembly resolution of 12 December 1975<sup>2</sup> on the implementation of the World Plan of Action adopted by the 1975 World Conference of the International Women's Year to the Commission on the Status of Women, to the Committee for Development Planning and to the Committee on Review and Appraisal.

At its resumed 1976 session in December, the Commission on the Status of Women approved a draft resolution for submission to the Economic and Social Council on review and appraisal of progress made under the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade and in the implementation of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year. By this text, the Council would note with interest developments in a number of countries, such as recognition of and commitment to the principle of equality of men and women, adoption of provisions ensuring the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of sex, establishment of provisions for equal access to education and guidance, and adoption of measures for health education and welfare services.

The Council would also consider that action was needed to improve the situation of women in such areas as: the enactment of legislation to guarantee equality of the sexes; provision of information to women on their rights; increase of women's participation in decision-making; establishment of targets for the elimination of illiteracy; the creation of new employment and income-producing opportunities for women; and the establishment of measures to facilitate the combination of family and work responsibilities.

In addition, the Council would request the Secretary-General to prepare a questionnaire on the implementation of the World Plan of Action to be circulated among Governments, and to pre-

By another draft resolution approved by the Commission for adoption by the Council, the Council would request the Secretary-General to urge Governments to report on the activities undertaken in their countries in implementation of the World Plan of Action and would also request him to prepare a supplementary report, on the basis of information received but not incorporated in previous documents on this subject, for consideration by the General Assembly at its 1977 session.

The Commission also approved a draft resolution for the Council on the improvement of the data base for measuring the implementation of the World Plan of Action. By this text, the Economic and Social Council would request the Statistical Commission to initiate action in co-operation with specialized agencies, national statistical offices, regional commissions and intergovernmental organizations and units to develop: improved methods for the collection and tabulation of statistical data to obtain breakdowns by sex for a number of indicators, including urban/rural residence, age, marital status, education and income; guidelines to assess women's participation in planning and decision-making; and guidelines to measure women's actual economic and social contributions outside of regular national data-collection systems.

The Council would further request the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development, in co-operation with relevant United Nations bodies, to prepare an inventory of social and economic indicators relevant to the analysis of the status of women.

By another draft resolution approved by the Commission, the Council would request all Governments and intergovernmental organizations to encourage non-governmental organizations to play their full part in the implementation of the World Plan of Action. It also would request that all training programmes organized by the United Nations and other organizations concerned with the implementation should take note of the needs of the non-governmental organizations, in order to develop and use their specialized knowledge and experience to the greatest extent possible. The Commission, in following up on the implementation of the future Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, was also to take note of statements from non-governmental organizations together with reports submitted by States parties to the Convention.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

In a report to the Economic and Social Council on the establishment of an International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the Secretary-General made recommendations based on the work of the Group of Experts on the Establishment of an International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women. In the report, the Secretary-General stated that the Group had suggested that the Institute should be an autonomous body under the supervision of a council or board, which would report to the Economic and Social Council. The establishment of the Institute was to be subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funds needed to ensure its operation for at least three years. The initial estimate of funds required for this purpose was $3 million.

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council welcomed the recommendations of the Group of Experts and decided to establish the Institute not later than 1977, as an autonomous body under the auspices of the United Nations, funded through voluntary contributions.

The Council also decided on guidelines, which included: close collaboration with all relevant organizations within the United Nations system; co-ordination of activities between those organizations and the Institute; special attention to the needs of women in developing countries; and close co-operation with the Commission on the Status of Women.

The Council further decided that the Institute should develop its activities in stages, starting by building on the collection of existing data on ongoing research and training needs. It took note of the offer of the Government of Iran to act as host to the Institute.

These actions were taken by resolution 1998(LX), adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Social Committee. On 6 May 1976, the Social Committee had approved the draft text without objection, as sponsored by Afghanistan, Austria, Bangladesh, Colombia, Egypt, Iran, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Mexico, Pakistan, Peru, Tunisia, Yugoslavia and Zaire, with drafting amendments by Nigeria and the sponsors.

In a progress report to the General Assembly on the establishment of the Institute, the Secretary-General noted the offer of the Government of Iran to serve as host to the Institute. He stated that the administrative and substantive work required for the identification of priorities for research and training was continuing. Institutions and programmes which might collaborate with and support the activities of the Institute were being identified and efforts to secure financial and technical support were continuing.

The Secretary-General also noted that the Commission on the Status of Women, at its 1976 session, had agreed that the Institute should give priority in its work to women in rural areas, and that the Institute's activities should form part of a general methodological and research process to assist policy formulation and programming for the integration of women in development.

The General Assembly, on 16 December 1976, endorsed the creation of the Institute and the guidelines established by the Council. It accepted the offer of the Government of Iran to act as host and requested the Secretary-General to expedite the substantive preparations for the early establishment of the Institute and to seek financial resources through voluntary contributions as well as technical support for it.

These actions were set forth in resolution 31/135, adopted, by consensus, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had approved the draft text, also by consensus, on 8 December 1976, as sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Egypt, Ghana, Guatemala, India, Iran, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, the Niger, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, the United Republic of Cameroon, the Upper

Volta, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Also on 16 December 1976, by resolution 31/137, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to convene, during the Assembly's thirty-second (1977) session, a pledging conference for contributions to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and to the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women.

Research on population and the integration of women in development

On 15 January 1976, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 137(ORG-76), referred the resolution of the 1975 World Conference of the International Women's Year dealing with research on population and the integration of women in development<sup>3</sup> to the Population Commission. The decision was approved, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Council President.

The United Nations Decade for Women

Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women

At its regular 1976 session, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a programme for the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace (1976-1985), proclaimed by the General Assembly on 15 December 1975.<sup>4</sup>

Decade were the formulation and implementation of international and national standards to eliminate discrimination against women, the integration of women in development, and the increased involvement of women in political life and in international co-operation and the maintenance of peace. The Programme, which focused on the first half of the Decade (1976-1980), stressed the importance of national action, supported by action at the regional and global levels, involving all organizations of the United Nations system.

To achieve the objectives of the Programme, specific areas of action were outlined, including: adoption of the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women; implementation or elaboration of international instruments relating to the status of women; public information activities to advise women of their rights and responsibilities; improvement of the data base necessary for drawing up programmes and policies; regional and global programmes for the integration of women in development; and the setting up of appropriate machinery and administrative procedures.

In addition, the Programme outlined measures to: review the nature and extent of women's participation in political life and in international co-operation and the maintenance of peace; develop programmes to increase women's involvement in international co-operation; alleviate the condition of women and children in particular situations of hardship, emergency and armed conflict; and, generally, increase women's participation in political life and decision-making at all levels.

The Programme called for extensive educational and informational activities at all levels to promote the Decade, including the dissemination and exchange of information and experience, and the establishment of information networks. To appraise progress, the Programme called for a system-wide biennial review of the implementation of the World Plan of Action as part of the review process of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

In October 1976, the Commission on the Status of Women requested the Economic and Social Council to transmit the Programme for the Decade to the General Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session.

The Commission also approved a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. By this text, the Council would urge Governments to adopt national mechanisms to oversee the implementation of the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women and the future Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. The establishment of such interdisciplinary and multisectoral machinery within Governments was to ensure the effectiveness of the Decade and the proper implementation of the Convention upon entry into force. In addition, the Council would recommend that States make provision for the participation of representatives from Governments, non-governmental organizations and other appropriate bodies in a position to bring about changes in traditional attitudes towards women and men.

On 27 October 1976, by decision 196(LXI), the Economic and Social Council took note of the decision adopted by the Commission concerning the Programme for the Decade, and decided to transmit the Programme to the General Assembly at its thirty-first session, which was then under way. The Council also decided to consider the report of the Commission at its first regular 1977 session. Decision 196(LXI) was adopted, without objection, on an oral suggestion by the Council President.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly approved the Programme, which focused on the first half of the Decade, and urged Governments and United Nations bodies to give priority to the Programme and to take measures to ensure equal and effective participation of women in political, economic, social and cultural life and in policy-making, thereby increasing their role in international co-operation and in the strengthening of peace. The Assembly recommended that Governments establish machinery to ensure the effective implementation and evaluation of the World Plan of Action and the Programme for the Decade within the framework of national development plans and regional policies. It further recommended that Governments undertake the organization of training courses and seminars for national development planners to study multidisciplinary methods of integrating women in development.

In addition, the Assembly invited Governments, United Nations bodies, non-governmental organizations and the mass communications media to undertake massive public information programmes on the implementation of the Programme for the Decade; it requested the Secretary-General to take fully into account the financial and staff needs required for effective implementation of the World Plan of Action and the Programme, and to prepare a report on that implementation for consideration at its 1977 session.

These actions were set forth in resolution 31/136, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. The Third Committee had approved the draft text without a vote on 9 December 1976, as sponsored by Afghanistan, Barbados, Chad, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Ghana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Madagascar, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, New Zealand, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Sweden, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Upper Volta and Zambia.

Among the documents before the Third Committee when it considered this matter was a letter dated 26 August 1976 from the German Democratic Republic to the Secretary-General, containing information on the conditions of working women in the German Democratic Republic; also on hand were documents of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in August 1976 at Colombo, Sri Lanka, transmitted by Sri Lanka.

On 30 January 1976, in a communication to the Secretary-General, the German Democratic Republic referred to a letter of 15 December 1975 from France, the United Kingdom and the United States on the status of Berlin,<sup>5</sup> which had been circulated under the agenda item dealing with International Women's Year. The German Democratic Republic reaffirmed its position with regard to the capital of the German Democratic Republic, Berlin, and the status of Berlin (West) as previously outlined in its letter of 9 July 1974.<sup>6</sup>

On 7 December 1976, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, in a communication to the Secretary-General, stated, with reference to the German Democratic Republic communication that their position concerning the status of Berlin remained as set out in letters of 14 April and 26 June 1975.<sup>7</sup>

Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women

In a report to the Economic and Social Council on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, dated 30 March 1976, the Secretary-General gave an account of the Fund and expenditures made as at 31 December 1975 and suggested specific activities and criteria for assistance.

He proposed that resources be utilized for: technical co-operation activities; development and/or strengthening of regional programmes; development and implementation of the joint interorganizational programme for the advancement of women;<sup>8</sup> research, data collection and analysis; communication support and public information activities; and support for activities of non-governmental organizations.

In addition, the Secretary-General made proposals for the future management of the Fund, outlining procedures for its operation, administration and control.

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council considered the report of the Secretary-General and adopted a resolution (2005(LX)) which it recommended for adoption by the General Assembly. This text set forth criteria and arrangements for the management of the Fund.

Resolution 2005(LX) with oral drafting changes by Argentina, Jamaica and Nigeria, was adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Council's Social Committee. On 6 May, the Social Committee had approved the draft text without objection, as sponsored by Afghanistan, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Iran, Jamaica, Mexico, Nigeria and the United Kingdom. Drafting amendments by Afghanistan and Pakistan were accepted by the sponsors. An amendment by the United States was withdrawn.

The General Assembly, on 16 December 1976, adopted the criteria for the Voluntary Fund and endorsed the arrangements for its future management. The Assembly stated that the Fund's resources should be used to help implement the goals of the Decade for Women, priority being given to the related programmes and projects of the least developed, land-locked and island countries among developing countries. It suggested special consideration for projects benefiting rural women, poor women in urban areas and other groups of women in marginal economic circumstances.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to consult the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the use of the Fund for technical co-operation activities and set up a five-member Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women to advise on the application of the adopted criteria.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/133, adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee. On 9 December 1976, also without vote, the Third Committee had approved the draft resolution, as recommended by the Economic and Social Council.

Pledging Conference for the United Nations Decade for Women

tary-General to convene, during its thirty-second session in 1977, a pledging conference for contributions to be made to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women as well as to the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women. The Assembly also appealed to Governments to extend their full co-operation to help make the pledging conference a success.

Resolution 31/137 was adopted by the Assembly, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the draft text without a vote on 9 December 1976. Sponsors of the text in the Third Committee were Iran, Nepal, the Netherlands, Norway and the Philippines.

World Conference on the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980

On 12 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution on the 1980 World Conference on the United Nations Decade for Women, by which it requested the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1976 session to consider different aspects of the preparatory work for this Conference, including its agenda. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to transmit the relevant part of the Commission's report to the Committee on Review and Appraisal, and decided to consider at its sixty-fourth (1978) session the preparatory work for the Conference, on the basis of the deliberations of the Commission on the Status of Women and the Committee on Review and Appraisal.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 1999(LX), adopted, without a vote, as recommended by the Social Committee. The draft resolution had been approved without objection by the Social Committee on 6 May 1976; the sponsors were Afghanistan, Austria, Bangladesh, Egypt, Iran, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Mexico, Pakistan, Peru, Tunisia, Venezuela and Zaire.

At its twenty-sixth (1976) session, the Commission on the Status of Women considered the preparatory work for the Conference. It approved a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council would establish, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, an ad hoc committee composed of 16 States members of the Commission to submit proposals, to its 1978 and 1980 sessions, concerning the substantive and organizational arrangements for the Conference. The Council would further request the Secretary-General to prepare a report outlining a programme of action for the second half of the United Nations Decade for Women, to serve as the basis for a report to be submitted to the 1980 World Conference.

In its discussion of this item, the Commission also had before it communications addressed to the Secretary-General by Bulgaria (dated 28 April 1976) and Iran (dated 27 May 1976), in which they offered to act as host to the Conference.

The General Assembly,

Considering that in its resolution 3520(XXX) of 15 December 1975 it proclaimed the period from 1976 to 1985 United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, to be devoted to effective and sustained national, regional and international action to implement the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year, and related resolutions adopted by the World Conference of the International Women's Year, held at Mexico City from 19 June to 2 July 1975,

Aware of the importance of developing and implementing without delay a programme of concrete action for the Decade,

Considering further its decision to convene in 1980 a world conference to review and evaluate progress made and, where necessary, readjust existing programmes in the light of new data and research available,

Noting with satisfaction the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women as adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its twenty-sixth session and transmitted to the General Assembly by the Economic and Social Council at its resumed sixty-first session,

1. Approves the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women, which focuses on the first half of the Decade, 1976 to 1980;

2. Urges Governments and United Nations bodies to take all necessary steps to give effect to the Programme for the Decade and to give it priority in view of the real need to attain the goals of the Decade;

3. Calls upon Governments to take measures to ensure equal and effective participation of women in political, economic, social and cultural life and in policy-making at local, national, regional and international levels, thereby increasing their role in international co-operation and in the strengthening of peace;

4. Recommends that Governments should establish machinery, where appropriate, which could include governmental and non-governmental agencies, bureaux and commissions, in order to ensure the effective implementation and evaluation of the World Plan of Action and of the Programme for the Decade within the framework of national development plans and regional policies;

5. Recommends further that Governments, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions, appropriate regional and international research centres and institutes as well as appropriate intergovernmental bodies, should undertake the organization of training courses and seminars whereby officials responsible for the formulation and implementation of national development plans would study multidisciplinary techniques and methods which can be utilized in effectively integrating women in development;

6. Invites, as a matter of priority, Governments and organizations and bodies of the United Nations system as well as all governmental and non-governmental organizations concerned and the mass media to undertake massive public information programmes with a view to making all sectors of the population aware of the need to implement fully the Programme for the Decade;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take fully into account the financial and staff needs required to implement effectively the World Plan of Action and the Programme for the Decade;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for the consideration of the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, a report on the measures taken to implement the present resolution, in particular paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 above, as well as a progress report on other measures taken to implement the World Plan of Action and the Programme for the Decade.

management of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women:

(a) Criteria:

The resources of the Fund should be utilized to supplement activities in the following areas designed to implement the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, priority being given to the related programmes and projects of the least developed, land-locked and island countries among developing countries:

- (ii) Development and/or strengthening of regional and international programmes;
- (iii) Development and implementation of joint interorganizational programmes;
- (iv) Research, data collection and analysis, relevant to (i), (ii) and (iii) above;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to consult the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the use of the Fund for technical co-operation activities;

3. Requests the President of the General Assembly to select, with due regard to regional distribution, in the first instance for a period of three years, five Member States, each of which should appoint a representative to serve on the Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women to advise the Secretary-General on the application to the use of the Fund of the criteria set forth in paragraph 1 above;

Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women

At its 1976 sessions, the Commission on the Status of Women considered the draft Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.

By the general provisions, the draft Convention defined discrimination against women as any distinction, exclusion or restriction made on the basis of sex which had the effect of or the purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, on a basis of equality with men, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life.

Provisions of the draft Convention required States parties to: condemn discrimination against women; embody the principle of equality of the sexes in their national constitutions; and ensure the implementation of this principle through legislative and other measures. Other provisions were to ensure the full development and advancement of women in all fields, to modify the social and cultural patterns of all citizens with a view to eliminating prejudice and all practices based on the idea of the inferiority of either sex or on stereotyped sex roles, and to combat all forms of traffic in women and the exploitation of the prostitution of women.

Provisions concerning political rights were to ensure women equal opportunities to participate in the political and public life of their countries. Spouses were to enjoy equal rights to acquire, change or retain their nationality, and to transmit their own nationality to their children. The Convention was also to ensure equal rights in education and in economic and social life, including the right to equal remuneration for work of equal value. Women in rural areas were to be guaranteed equality as participants in and beneficiaries of the agricultural and rural development process.

In addition, provisions on civil and family rights accorded women equality before the law and the equal right with men to decide fully and responsibly on the number and spacing of their children. Child marriages were to be prohibited and discrimination against single parents and their children eliminated.

The draft Convention would also have the Commission on the Status of Women establish an ad hoc group to consider the progress made in the implementation of the Convention, and would request the Economic and Social Council to submit to the General Assembly periodic reports on information received and progress made in achieving full observance of the recognized rights.

The Convention, which was to be open for signature by all States, was to enter into force on the thirtieth day after the day of deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.

In its discussion of the draft Convention, the Commission had before it a working paper based on comments received from 40 Governments, four specialized agencies and 10 non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, which analysed the replies received on different parts and articles of the draft Convention.

On 17 December 1976, the Commission approved the draft Convention without a vote and submitted it to the Economic and Social Council for action.

The Commission also considered national mechanisms to oversee the implementation of the proposed Convention at the same time it considered such mechanisms for implementing the Programme for the United Nations Decade for Women. It approved a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, by which the Council would urge Governments to establish interdisciplinary and multisectoral machinery to ensure the effectiveness of the Decade for Women and the proper implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women upon coming into force, and by which the Council would recommend that States make provision for the participation of representatives from Governments, non-governmental organizations and other bodies in a position to bring about changes in traditional attitudes towards women and men.

Another draft resolution approved by the Commission and recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption concerned the involvement of non-governmental organizations in the implementation of the World Plan of Action and the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. By this text, the Council would request Governments to encourage non-governmental organizations to play their full part in the implementation process; it would further request that all training programmes organized by the United Nations and other organizations involved in the implementation take note of the needs of the non-governmental organizations, in order to develop and use their knowledge and experience to the greatest extent possible.

Other action to promote the advancement of women

Mobilization of women in development

In response to a General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975,<sup>9</sup> the Secretary-General prepared a preliminary report on the integration of women in the development process. Based on information received from Governments and United Nations organizations, as well as existing studies, the report contained an outline of a study requested by the Assembly in its 1975 resolution on the participation of women in fields such as agriculture, industry, trade, and science and technology. The purpose of the study was to recommend policies and action programmes aimed at increasing and upgrading the participation of women in those fields.

The outline emphasized the areas of agriculture and trade, since there already existed a considerable amount of knowledge and statistical data relating to women in industry; it considered the situation of women in agriculture as closely related to local and international trade patterns and to the lack or inadequacy of relevant scientific and technological development. According to one of the study's main hypotheses, certain patterns of the agricultural female labour force bore an intimate relationship with certain patterns of trade which were not always favourable to developing countries: e.g. certain primary commodity exports such as coffee, cocoa, ground-nuts, rice and cotton might have a very low price in the international market partly because their production involved a considerable percentage of cheap female labour.

The outline recommended that in the area of agriculture the study should focus on: composition and characteristics of the rural labour force by sex; agricultural economy and its basic structure; and agricultural social organization. In the area of trade and financing, aspects should cover: the interrelationship between women's agricultural wage patterns and trade; equal access to credit and loans; the process of transfer of technology; and the participation of women in training programmes in international economics and trade.

In addition, the outline listed subjects for study in the industrial sector, such as protective legislation for women workers, and, in the science and technology sector, the development of basic and applied intermediate technology for agriculture and the socio-economic and cultural problems generated by the transfer of technology from developed to developing countries. The outline also made suggestions for statistical data to be included.

The conclusions and proposals of the study were expected to benefit primarily the most disadvantaged segments of the population within the poorest of the developing countries, and could therefore be considered as an important input to the solution of much wider world problems and to the achievement of targets established by Governments for economic and social development. The study was also to supply evidence in support of the not fully acknowledged link between sex discrimination and economic discrimination. The proposed policies and action programmes were to concentrate on the priorities of: equal access to co-operatives; credit and loan systems; revision of commodity prices which depended on cheap and/or non-remunerated female labour; stimulation of women's participation in decision-making in economic areas; de jure and de facto implementation of all instruments of the International Labour Organisation of special interest to women workers; eradication of economic exploitation of women and children; and promotion of women's participation at all levels of technological development.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the integration of women in the development process. By resolution 31/175, the Assembly also urged Member States to implement the recommendations contained in its resolution of 15 December 1975<sup>10</sup> and to facilitate the equal participation of women with men in all development efforts, equal access to political parties, trade unions, training in agriculture, co-operatives, and credit and loan systems, and equal opportunities to participate in policymaking in the economic field and in commerce, trade and industry.

The Assembly further urged the organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen their support of development programmes or projects relating to women, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report on the effective mobilization of women for development, for consideration at its 1978 regular session. The report was to be prepared in collaboration with the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, and was to include an evaluation of the extent to which the programmes of these organizations benefited women.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/175 without vote. The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the draft resolution by consensus on 7 December 1976. The sponsors were Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Canada, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, Guyana, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan,

By resolution 31/84 of 13 December 1976, on the world social situation, the Assembly welcomed the active participation and growing involvement of the people of all sectors of society, including women and youth, in the programmes of socio-economic development in developing countries. (For text of resolution 31/84, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS).

At its resumed 1976 session, the Commission on the Status of Women approved a draft resolution on training for the preparation and implementation of project proposals, to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

By this text, the Council would express its concern that women might continue to be denied participation on an equal basis with men in the formulation and implementation of development planning, and would invite the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and the executive heads of the specialized agencies to organize training programmes for women in the preparation of project proposals and in their management and evaluation. The Council would further suggest that such training incorporate, inter alia: how to look for community needs and formulate a project plan; how to determine priorities as they related to national development; how to locate sources of funding; how to locate and develop management skills among women for project implementation and evaluation; and how to evaluate progress, solve problems and determine when special assistance was needed to complete projects.

The Council would also recommend that all Member States generate such training and/or requests for it, and requested that it be envisaged as a possible programme of the planned International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women.

In addition, all international agencies would be invited to prepare reports that included information on: the frequency, content and organization of management and training courses; the extent to which women were integrated in such courses; the amount of stress placed on including women in the preparation of project proposals; the effort placed on dissemination of information to women about these courses; and whether participation increased when efforts were made to encourage women to take advantage of them.

By this text, the Council would further request the Secretary-General to submit a progress report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1978 session, and to submit a further report to the Commission in 1978 and to the 1980 World Conference on the United Nations Decade for Women on action taken. Finally, the Council would express the wish that international agencies should set an example by allocating to women an equitable number of responsible posts in all structures entrusted with the implementation of this resolution.

Improvement of the status and role of women in education

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/134 on the improvement of the status and role of women in education, by which it recognized, inter alia, that the full development of a country required the maximum participation of women on equal terms with men and noted that, despite world-wide progress in reducing illiteracy, the illiteracy rate for women far exceeded that for men.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly appealed to all States to become parties to the Convention against Discrimination in Education, 1960, elaborated by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), and to the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958, and the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975, elaborated by the International Labour Organisation (ILO). It also called upon States to undertake specific short-term and long-term measures aimed at improving the status and role of women in education and to undertake all possible measures to eliminate illiteracy among women, especially during the United Nations Decade for Women. The Assembly also called upon States: to consider taking all appropriate measures to introduce free and compulsory education at the elementary level and, where possible, free education at all levels; to promote co-education; and to ensure equal access to scholarships and other study grants.

In addition, the Assembly recommended that States expand the exchange of experience on issues concerning women in education, and invited Member States and organizations of the United Nations system to submit their observations concerning the improvement of the status and role of women in education. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with UNESCO and ILO, to submit a report in 1978 on the status and role of women in education.

Resolution 31/134 was adopted, without vote, as recommended by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. On 9 December 1976, the Third Committee had approved the draft text without a vote, as sponsored by Bhutan, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Poland, Senegal, the Sudan, Togo, the United Republic of Cameroon, the Upper Volta, and Zaire.

Canada proposed amendments to include the references to the two ILO Conventions. These references were approved by separate votes.

By an amendment of Belgium's and the United Republic of Cameroon's, the Assembly called for national measures to promote co-education; this amendment was adopted by 109 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions. The two Member States further amended the text to call upon States to ensure that men and women would have equal access to scholarship and other study grants. A drafting sub-amendment was made by Morocco, after which the Third Committee adopted the amendment by 110 votes to 0.

Influence of mass media on attitudes towards roles of women and men in society

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its 1976 session, considered the Secretary-General's progress report on the influence of the mass communications media on attitudes towards the roles of women and men in present-day society. The report suggested measures to check dissemination and perpetuation by the mass communications media of deeply rooted discriminatory attitudes, values and beliefs that held women to be inferior to men. Attention was drawn to the educational role of the mass communication media and the possibility they offered of reaching the masses faster than by any other means.

The Commission approved a draft resolution for submission to the Economic and Social Council by which the Council would, among other things, encourage Member States to make representatives of mass communications media aware of the importance of formulating policies and guidelines for treatment of women in the media, and recommend that Member States encourage programmes and materials that ensured the elimination of sex-role stereotyping and the projection of a positive image of men and women; it would also recommend greater use of the mass media for education and training as well as the formation of new attitudes about the roles of men and women in society.

In addition, the Council would request that Member States take the necessary action to establish and strengthen co-operative systems for schools and libraries to produce and disseminate educational and information materials, and that UNESCO prepare educational films concerned with improving the image of women and doing away with stereotyped sex roles. The Council would further suggest that Member States create committees to meet with policy- and decision-making staff of the mass communications media, particularly those in advertising, to evaluate progress towards changing the image and status of women in the media. The Council would encourage governmental and non-governmental organizations to help create a greater understanding and public awareness of women's role in society, and to use the mass media to project positive and more accurate images of women.

By this draft resolution, the Council would also decide to appoint a special rapporteur to prepare a study on the impact of the mass communications media on the changing roles of men and women. The Council would, finally, recommend possible inclusion of this topic in the agenda for the World Conference on the United Nations Decade for Women in 1980.

Resolution 31/134, as recommended by Third Committee, A/31/407, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1976, meeting 102.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women emphasizes the need to take all appropriate measures to ensure to women equal rights with men in education at all levels,

Recalling further its resolutions 3520(XXX), 3521(XXX), 3522(XXX), 3523(XXX) and 3524(XXX) of 15 December 1975

Recognizing that the full and complete development of a country requires the maximum participation of women on equal terms with men in all fields,

Recognizing also the necessity for women to have equal rights, opportunities and obligations with men, particularly in the fields of education and professional and vocational training, to enable their full participation in the process of development,

Recognizing further the importance of promoting the education of women and its impact on the rearing of the young generation,

Noting that, despite the world-wide progress in reducing illiteracy, the illiteracy rate for women far exceeds that of men and, in some cases, continues to rise,

Recognizing the importance of exchange of experience in the elimination of illiteracy and improvement of the educational standard of women at the national, regional and international levels,

1. Appeals to all States which have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention against Discrimination in Education, 1960, elaborated by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and to the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958, and the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975, elaborated by the International Labour Organisation;

2. Calls upon States to undertake, whenever necessary, in their economic, social and cultural programmes, specific short-term and long-term measures aimed at improving the status and role of women in education, bearing in mind the following:

(a) The provisions of the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women;

(b) The provisions of the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year concerning education and training, particularly with respect to an increase in literacy and equal access of women at every level of education, as well as the provisions of the Convention and Recommendation against Discrimination in Education, 1960, and the appropriate recommendation concerning technical and vocational education of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and the provisions of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958, the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975, and the appropriate recommendations concerning discrimination (employment and occupation), employment (women with family responsibilities) and human resources development of the International Labour Organisation;

3. Calls upon States, whenever necessary, to undertake all possible measures to eliminate illiteracy among women especially during the United Nations Decade for Women;

4. Calls upon States which have not yet done so to consider undertaking all appropriate measures:

(a) To introduce free and compulsory education at the elementary level and, where possible, free education at all levels, including professional, vocational and technical education, which should be accessible to women without discrimination;

(b) To promote co-education;

(c) To ensure that men and women have access on a footing of equality to scholarships and other study grants when these are provided nationally or are made available to States under bilateral or multilateral agreements;

Other matters relating to the status of women

Technical assistance

At its 1976 session, the Commission on the Status of Women considered a report of the Secretary-General on technical co-operation activities for the advancement of women, which noted that women had not benefited as much as men from the technical assistance programmes of the United Nations system. He stated that a major difficulty had been the low priority Governments had accorded to women's needs and interests in national development plans.

The report also noted that assistance activities during 1974 to mid-1976 focused on the 1975 World Conference of the International Women's Year and on follow-up action required to implement the recommendations of the Conference and that therefore no fellowships or expert services were provided during 1976.

Advisory services

A regional seminar was held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, from 22 to 30 March 1976, on the participation of women in economic, social and political development and on obstacles that hindered their integration. The seminar was organized by the United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America in co-operation with the Government of Argentina. It focused discussions on the evaluation of the current contribution of women compared to men in political, social and economic development in the region, the main obstacles to their integration in development, and the policies and machinery needed to accelerate it.

It was considered that the conclusions of the seminar would form the basis for regional action in the areas of: education and training; employment opportunities and conditions of work; political participation; social security; health, nutrition and family welfare; basic infrastructure; development of rural and urban communities; mass media; planning, research, integration and co-ordination; and national machinery.

The seminar recommended that a working group of experts be established to prepare a preliminary regional plan of action based on the recommendations of the seminar and within the framework of the activities of the Economic Commission for Latin America.

Procedures for communications concerning the status of women

In the discussions of communications concerning the status of women in the Commission on the Status of Women at its resumed 1976 session, opinion was divided as to the advisability of the Commission's continuing to deal with such communications.

In support of the Commission's dealing with communications, it was pointed out that the communication system provided an important source of information, which helped pin-point violations. Also, there was no other appropriate forum for receiving communications. It was stressed that by denying this channel of communication to women the credibility of the Commission would be affected.

Opponents of the handling of communications by the Commission stated that violations of human rights, whether of women or men, should be placed on the same footing and handled by the human rights bodies. They noted the duplication of work and the heavy agenda of the Commission, which would not allow the time to deal satisfactorily with communications. In addition, it was pointed out that there was no reason to reverse the decision which the Commission had taken at its 1974 session to delete this item from its work programme.

As a result of its deliberations, the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council decide to retain in its work programme consideration of communications relating to the status of women. It also recommended that an ad hoc working group be established to meet during regular sessions of the Commission to review such communications in private, and that the Secretary-General be requested to forward to the Commission two lists, one confidential and one non-confidential, summarizing communications received relating to the status of women.

Co-ordination and organizational questions

Development and co-ordination of activities of the United Nations system of organizations

During the year, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), which is composed of the executive heads of the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and all the other bodies of the United Nations system, under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General, continued its efforts to help implement the decisions on development and international economic co-operation taken at the sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions of the General Assembly and in other intergovernmental fora such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the World Employment Conference.

In order to assist the policy-making organs of ACC members with the tasks outlined at the special sessions of the General Assembly, ACC decided to establish a task force on the development objectives and programmes of the United Nations system. The task force was to help the secretariats of the system to contribute to the formulation and implementation by national and international policy-making bodies of global targets and programmes for development co-operation.

In its efforts to assist Governments in attaining their development goals, ACC gave special attention during the year to cross-sectoral activities in such interrelated fields as industrialization, rural development, employment, water, human settlements, trade and development, the advancement of women, children, and the environment.

In this connexion, it was noted that 24 organizations and programmes currently participated in ACC, that there were more than 30 programmes sectors and 10 service sectors where organizations needed to co-operate on a multilateral basis and that the activities of the system involved expenditures of $2-3,000 million annually. Most of the activities involved integrated, intersectoral approaches cutting across traditional fields of competence, multiplying the points of contact between organizations and calling for new forms of co-operation.

Further, ACC was concerned with the system-wide preparatory work for a number of major United Nations conferences during the year, including the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development; the Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution and Social Progress and the International Division of Labour, and Habitat: the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.

Under the auspices of ACC, a report on human settlements was prepared which described the roles and mandates of the organizations of the system in this field and the interim co-ordination arrangements that they had set up, as well as the proposed system-wide action in the field of human settlements.

Work on the elaboration of an interorganizational programme for the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985) progressed with the active participation of interested organizations. Arrangements were also made to ensure preparations for the 1980 world conference to be held in conjunction with the Decade.

In industrialization, the setting up of the United Nations Advisory Committee on Co-ordination in the Field of Industrial Development resulted in consultations on developing a joint approach for the development and transfer of technology called for in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action,<sup>1</sup> especially in the sectoral activities of iron and steel, and fertilizer.

Another interdisciplinary programme, in which the system was involved, concerned the environment. The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) took the lead in dealing with key environmental problems; activities included the preparatory work in connexion with the 1977 United Nations Conference on Desertification and the programme to combat pollution in the Mediterranean, on which a series of meetings was held under UNEP's auspices.

The organizations of the system concerned were also co-operating with the United Nations Children's Fund, which was designated by the General Assembly as the lead agency in the preparation, support and financing of the 1979 International

Year of the Child. Joint planning began for substantive and public information programmes to be implemented during the Year.

The implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>2</sup> continued to be an active concern of ACC. The organizations of the system were strengthening their programmes of assistance for the colonial peoples concerned and their national liberation movements, especially in Namibia and Southern Rhodesia. In co-operation with other agencies, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continued to help refugees from those territories and from South Africa.

Representatives of national liberation movements were invited to the meetings of the organizations of the system which were of concern to them. In April 1976, a meeting was held between representatives of ACC members and the Organization of African Unity, with a view to achieving effective co-ordination of activities.

Details of these and other activities are described in the sections below.

Work of ACC

Reporting to the mid-1976 session of the Economic and Social Council, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) stated that the past year had been one of intensive activity. The General Assembly's decision, taken at its seventh special session in September 1975,<sup>3</sup> that the measures it had set in motion at that session should constitute the body and framework for the work of the competent bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and the subsequent invitation to ACC by the AdHoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations system to present it with options and courses of action in respect of eight problem areas had provided an opportunity to focus on some key policy and structural issues. Several high-level task forces had been established to assist in discharging the responsibilities devolving from the Assembly's and AdHoc Committee's decisions. It was expected that additional policy guidelines would emanate from forthcoming sessions of United Nations bodies and that these would be incorporated into programming procedures.

Joint planning within the framework of ACC continued with the purpose of ensuring: that the policy directives generated by global conferences and special meetings convened by the General Assembly were acted upon within the system and were translated into common objectives to guide the programming activities of the organizations; that global conferences and international bodies dealing with the system's ongoing programmes could take full advantage of its expertise in their consideration of common policy guidelines; and that crucial development issues in cross-sectoral areas were brought to the fore so that system-wide policy recommendations could be adopted in respect of them by intergovernmental bodies concerned. With reference to the last-mentioned area, ACC noted the study it had made of the policy positions of various organizations on rural development and also the preparation of an intersectoral presentation of the totality of actions planned by the system for implementing intergovernmental decisions pertaining to economic co-operation among developing countries.

In its annual report, ACC expressed the view that the new programme planning techniques being developed within the system provided a programming instrument for promoting a unified approach by United Nations organizations to their development activities. It noted that work on the harmonization of the programme budget presentation was being undertaken by a task force of programme planners and commented that the harmonization of the presentation of programme planning documents would have to be accompanied by the more challenging task of harmonizing the substance of the programmes themselves in all areas of interagency concern. This was being attempted with regard to water-related activities.

Also, steps were taken to further strengthen the Inter-Organization Board for Information Activities so that programme planning needs could be supported by an improved mechanism for the collection and retrieval of information available within the system.

In the area of human rights, ACC had worked out in interagency meetings practical arrangements for supervision of the application of the International Covenants on Human Rights.

Joint meetings of CPC and ACC

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and ACC held their tenth series of Joint Meetings at United Nations Headquarters on 18 and 19 October 1976. During the course of discussions, it was pointed out that the question of the relationship between CPC and ACC should be approached within the general framework of the development goals and changing requirements of Member States, and in the context of continuing efforts for the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the system.

The task of co-ordinating bodies was to ensure that the actions of the system were undertaken within the framework of an increasingly better defined and integrated concept of development and to see to it that the interrelationships of the various development sectors were fully taken into account in the implementation of activities. Inter-agency co-operation and co-ordination were, therefore, becoming a necessary condition for not only carrying out the over-all development strategies set by United Nations bodies, but often also for implementing the policy guidelines provided by individual governing bodies. Some progress in that direction was already being made, for example, in the fields of the environment and of marine transport and technology, and in such programmes as the World Meteorological Organization's World Weather Watch and the Global Atmospheric Research Programme. The preparatory work for world conferences constituted examples of constructive and systematic interagency co-operation.

With regard to the functioning and methods of work of ACC, CPC members noted that a main issue was to find ways of reconciling the obligations of the executive heads vis-à-vis their governing bodies with their collective responsibilities vis-à-vis the international community, particularly those arising from implementation of over-all directives emanating from the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. While the various executive heads were responsible for duly informing their governing bodies of relevant recommendations of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, it was up to the representatives of Member States in agency governing bodies, rather than through ACC, to ensure that such recommendations were given effect.

Some members of CPC referred to the absence of sufficiently systematic and open communications between the two committees and to the impression of secrecy and aloofness that ACC, as an institution, continued to convey. They noted that that impression was due, inter alia, to the fact that no Government representatives were permitted to attend the meetings of ACC and its subsidiary bodies and they shared the view of the Secretary-General that the potential of annual Joint Meetings for establishing a real dialogue between the members of the two committees had not yet been realized. It was important to ensure that the Joint Meetings resulted in concrete action, which could only be achieved if any procedural discussions were related to the substance of the programmes being undertaken by the system. Members of ACC pledged their full co-operation in ensuring that the flow of information to CPC would be considerably improved and that representatives of organizations would maximize, both directly and through the United Nations offices concerned, their contributions to CPC'S discussions.

There was general agreement between the members of the two committees on the following: the need to strengthen the Joint Meetings through, inter alia, better preparation and a careful formulation of the agenda; to this end, the Chairman of CPC would be associated with ACC'S discussions on the preparations for these Meetings; the need to improve ACC'S reporting to the Economic and Social Council along the lines indicated by the Council on 30 July 1971;<sup>4</sup> the need for ACC to strengthen arrangements for prior consultations on work programmes and to accelerate progress towards joint planning in selected areas of system-wide concern; the need to give further consideration to the proposal of the Director-General of the World Health Organization for visits by representatives of CPC to agency headquarters, including meetings between those representatives and groups of members of agency governing bodies; the need for organizations to strengthen their substantive support of CPC in its review of selected programmes and their system-wide implications, by inter alia, providing it with special analyses and facilitating the attendance of substantive agency officials in the discussions. In addition, CPC members expected that ACC, at its sessions preceding the meetings of CPC, would give special consideration to the areas selected by CPC for in-depth consideration, and it looked forward to the Chairman of CPC being invited to those discussions.

The Economic and Social Council considered the report of the Joint Meetings on 15 November 1976. During the course of discussions, members expressed the view that important issues had been discussed at the Joint Meetings, and believed the Council should have the opportunity to study the report in detail. Accordingly, the Council, on the same day, while taking note of the report decided to consider it in depth at its organizational session for 1977, taking into account the comments made thereon by Council members, with a view to reaching specific conclusions which would guide the future work of CPC, ACC and the Joint Meetings.

The action was embodied in decision 199(LXI), adopted without objection on the proposal of the Secretary to the Council.

Annual reports of IAEA, of specialized agencies and of ACC

At its mid-1976 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it analytical summaries of the reports of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and of the following specialized agencies: the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), the Universal Postal Union (UPU), the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO), and the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO). Three of these reports, those of WHO, WMO and IMCO, were considered in depth by the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee of the Council.

On the Committee's recommendation, the Council, on 5 August 1976, adopted decision 176(LXI) by which it took note with satisfaction of those reports as well as of the report of ACC and a report by ACC on the development of a Common Register of Development Activities. Decision 176(LXI) had been approved by the Committee on 29 July on the proposal of the Chairman, as modified by the United Kingdom.

Review of relationship agreements

On 14 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council took several actions concerning the future consideration of the rationalization of its work. Included was a decision to review at the earliest appropriate date in 1977, in the light of the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System and of the deliberations of the General Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session, the agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and IAEA.

This action was embodied in decision 153(LX), adopted on a proposal of the United Kingdom. (See also pp. 645-46 below.)

Report on expenditures of United Nations system in relation to programmes

The eleventh report of ACC on expenditures of the United Nations system in relation to programmes was submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its mid-1976 session. The report showed total expenditures by all organizations—from regular budget funds and extra-budgetary funds. A series of tables set forth detailed presentations of organizations' expenditures under each of 17 activity headings for the years 1974, 1975 and 1976.

On 5 August 1976, the Council, with the adoption of decision 192(LXI), took note of the report. The Council took this action on the proposal of the President.

Co-ordination of programme activities

Implementation of General Assembly resolution on establishment of a new international economic order

The ad hoc task force established in October 1975 by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) met in December 1975 and in March 1976. The task force was to identify the action required of the United Nations system under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 dealing with development and international economic co-operation.<sup>5</sup> It was also to identify the organizations involved and establish target dates for implementation.

In its 1976 annual report to the Economic and Social Council, ACC stated that it was aware that an effective response by the system to those Assembly decisions would require new approaches and a greater degree of concerted action. In those instances when an intergovernmental organ of an agency or programme had met subsequent to the adoption of General Assembly resolution 3362 (S-VII), the executive heads had taken steps to appraise the intergovernmental organs concerned of the Assembly's actions. In its progress report, ACC dealt with implementation by its members on: international trade; transfer of real resources for financing the development of developing countries and international monetary reforms; science and technology; industrialization; food and agriculture; and co-operation among developing countries.

Science and technology

During the year, a report on institutional arrangements in the field of science and technology was prepared by the Secretary-General in close co-operation with all interested agencies and bodies of the system through the machinery of ACC. The report emphasized the strengthening of existing machinery; accordingly, ACC expanded the role of its Sub-Committee on Science and Technology by including new functions in its terms of reference.

Further, ACC welcomed the recommendation of the Committee on Science and Technology for Development that there should be a joint secretariat to service the 1979 Conference on Science and Technology for Development with organizations and agencies deputing high-level specialists.

The report of ACC cited two other major areas in which the system had been involved: information systems for the transfer of technology, and the application of computer technology to development.

Statistical activities

The ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities was increasingly functioning as a management committee for a comprehensive interagency programme to co-ordinate and achieve complementarity of the statistical programmes of the system, under the guidance of the Statistical Commission. The interest of the Statistical Commission in strengthening co-ordination at the country level was welcomed; ACC considered that the resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme could play a vital part in the co-ordination of international assistance in statistics within national programmes. As requested by the Working Group of the Statistical Commission, steps were taken to ensure that the circulation to countries of statistical questionnaires by various organizations was carried out in such a way as to support efforts at national co-ordination.

The work of the system in the field of income distribution and related statistics had been reviewed by the Sub-Committee. Other matters it had discussed included: policies on accessibility to statistical data bases and the dissemination of statistics in machine-readable forms; the nature and co-ordination of activities of international organizations relating to statistics of environment; technical problems surrounding the conversion of foreign trade, payment and monetary reserve data into a common currency; the programmes of the system in respect of price statistics; and the 1980 census round for population, housing and agricultural data.

Nutrition

In a report to the Economic and Social Council on institutional arrangements relating to nutrition, ACC indicated that the objectives of a review were: to examine the existing and the projected activities of the United Nations system with reference to implementation of the decisions of the 1974 World Food Conference on nutritional improvement, taking account of the relevant decisions of the governing bodies of the agencies concerned; to determine whether the efforts of the system were fully mobilized and integrated, in co-operation with Governments, at all levels in order to achieve maximum impact at the country level, taking into account programmes being undertaken on a bilateral basis; and to consider whether existing arrangements and resources could respond effectively to the nutritional problems of the world.

The basic purpose of a review, ACC noted, should be to ensure that: interagency co-operation worked smoothly and rationally in each of the specific fields of activity; the activities in the various fields were mutually supporting and complementary, at the country level in particular; and that this comprehensive approach was itself directed towards nutrition objectives that were compatible with the development goals.

The report pointed out that according to the assessment prepared for the World Food Conference almost 500 million people were affected by malnutrition in the developing world and neither the national Governments nor the United Nations system had satisfactorily laid out a strategy to reduce it. It cited a number of reasons for this, among them the complexity of the approach that was needed if the problem was to be properly defined and tackled effectively. In the United Nations system the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) were concerned with various aspects of intersectoral food and nutritional planning. They were seeking to develop a common approach in assisting countries to build their capacity for formulating and implementing nutrition objectives as part of overall development planning. Current interagency activities in the field of nutrition related to: feeding programmes; nutrition education and training; action against specific nutrient deficiencies; and nutrition surveillance and research.

In its report, ACC urged that the starting point for all arrangements had to be an intensified co-ordination of action at the country level on the part of agencies concerned with nutrition, in support of Government initiatives. It proposed to establish a sub-committee on nutrition which would lay down guidelines for mutually supporting action at the country level. Further, ACC did not consider that new intergovernmental machinery would be necessary, but drew the attention of the Economic and Social Council to the Ad Hoc Committee of the FAO Council on Food and Nutrition Policies, which was open to all member States.

It was also considered that the United Nations system would benefit from outside expertise in the technical guidance of its work on nutrition. The Protein-Calorie Advisory Group sponsored by the United Nations, UNICEF, FAO, WHO and the World Bank, which had been the prime source of such expertise over the years should be reviewed, in ACC's opinion, and a broader-based arrangement established.

On 5 August 1976, the Council decided to defer to its mid-1977 session consideration of ACC's report on institutional arrangements relating to nutrition. This action was embodied in decision 174(LXI), adopted on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text on 30 July on the proposal of the Committee Chairman.

Rural development

In its 1976 annual report to the Economic and Social Council, ACC stressed the need for adoption by the United Nations system as a whole of clear-cut and common objectives in rural development. The system-wide objectives of rural development programmes which ACC recommended to the governing bodies of all organizations were based on the realization that the rural poor represented an as yet largely untapped reservoir of productive talent.

In the view of ACC, increased resources should be allocated to poverty-oriented rural development programmes.

A progress report on rural development was also prepared by ACC for the Council's mid-1976 session, in response to an Economic and Social Council request of 31 July 1975.<sup>6</sup> It was recommended that a special interagency effort be launched for the implementation of rural development programmes and that it be concentrated at the country level. In the initial stages, it would only be possible to carry out such activities in a small number of countries, in particular in the least developed countries. The United Nations Development Programme should be invited to explore, through its resident representatives, the interest of developing countries in undertaking a poverty-oriented rural development exercise. Many specific recommendations were also made in the report.

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council urged the governing bodies of the organizations in the United Nations system to give priority, where appropriate, in their respective work programmes, to rural development, taking into account the considerations set forth in ACC's report and maintaining consistency with national priorities. It also asked ACC to proceed with the next phase of joint interagency planning and action, taking into account the views expressed in the Council and the proposals made in the report, and to submit reports on the progress of work in this field at appropriate intervals.

These actions were embodied in decision 175(LXI), adopted on the recommendation of the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the decision on 29 July on the proposal of Denmark and Jamaica.

Other programme co-ordination

Outer space activities

Regular interagency meetings on outer space activities were held to co-ordinate activities and to promote concerted action, especially with regard to projects for the application of space technology in development. Arrangements were also made for co-operation between interested organizations in future programmes and projects in the field of communication, meteorology and remote sensing.

Interagency co-operation was proceeding satisfactorily, ACC reported to the Economic and Social Council, in the area of communications satellites and in the area of meteorology. In the various programmes relating to remote sensing, ACC believed there was need for more intensive co-ordination.

Population

The meetings of the ACC Sub-Committee on Population were concerned with co-ordination of activities for the monitoring of population trends and policies and for the review and appraisal of progress in carrying out the recommendations of the World Plan of Action adopted by the 1974 World Population Conference. Actions taken by Governments, as well as by the United Nations system, were reviewed.

Increasing attention was also given at the interagency level to the relationship between headquarters, regional and field activities. In addition, ACC acted to strengthen joint programming and planning, particularly in substantive areas, such as the interaction of demographic, social and economic factors, which were given priority in the World Plan of Action.

Housing and human settlements

The need for a concerted effort to solve the problems of human settlements, based on a comprehensive and integrated approach, was emphasized by ACC. The process of interagency consultations continued during the preparations for Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, held in June 1976.

Youth questions

An ad hoc interagency meeting on youth questions was convened by ACC in February 1976, as it considered that programmes concerning youth activities needed to be carried out on an interdisciplinary basis, particularly at the operational level. Arrangements were made to strengthen the exchange of information, for which the Youth Liaison Office at Geneva, Switzerland, served as the focal point. Informal arrangements were also made for joint planning and programming to concentrate on such issues as: young people and employment; the situation of young workers; the special needs of young women and girls; the situation of rural and underprivileged youth; and environmental education.

Drug abuse control

The ACC Interagency Advisory Committee on Drug Abuse Control continued to assist in co-ordinating and executing programmes and projects financed by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control. The Committee examined progress reports from each participating organization and gave particular attention to those programmes involving the active participation of several organizations.

Co-ordination of administrative activities

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination of United Nations with specialized agencies and IAEA

At its mid-1976 session, the Economic and Social Council reviewed the machinery of the United Nations and of its related agencies for administrative and budgetary control, investigation and co-ordination. On 5 August 1976, the Council adopted a resolution (2039(LXI)) dealing with this question by which it, among other things, recommended that the General Assembly should consider at its 1976 session the improvement of the qualitative internal evaluation of the performance of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency as executing agencies and the performance of the United Nations Development Programme in administering operational activities of organizations of the United Nations system, taking into consideration the recommendations which might be made by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System. (See section below concerning United Nations work programmes for other provisions of resolution 2039(LXI) and for DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES.)

Information systems

The Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems and Related Activities (IOB) of ACC, at its February 1976 session, concluded that more emphasis should be put on the co-ordination of existing and future systems with a wider coverage and particularly oriented towards the support of economic and social development.

The information systems of concern to IOB included: systems jointly developed on an inter-agency basis; individually developed systems which could be used by other organizations for similar purposes; and individually developed systems which were of interest to other organizations either in terms of systems design or in terms of information produced.

In its 1976 report to the Economic and Social Council, ACC said it had been agreed that each organization would inform the Board of its plan for developing information systems so that the Board might indicate how their proposed systems could be made more compatible by relating them to existing ones. The terms of reference for IOB were revised to take account of these decisions.

Also submitted to the Council was a second progress report on the implementation of the Common Register of Development Activities (CORE). The report dealt in detail with several issues for the further development of CORE. One of these issues concerned a better identification of potential CORE users, particularly their information requirements and reporting needs. The development of the CORE concept was at a point, the report said, where definition of user requirements could be critical in choosing among technical alternatives. Organizations were at various stages of development in assuring information support to management, and perceptions of needs and priorities were changing. The ACC report noted that the increasing activities of the International Labour Organisation as the pilot CORE user agency were expected to result in more detailed insight into the reporting needs of a United Nations organization. The other pilot agencies, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Development Programme, were to co-operate in an intensive analysis of existing and future user needs.

Another question requiring attention was that of the technical specifications for the further development of the CORE system design. An Ad Hoc Technical Committee on CORE was established by IOB to work in close co-operation with the IOB secretariat to make the CORE system operational at an early date. A full assessment of the results of the pilot phase and a realistic cost-benefit-analysis were to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1977.

Later in the year, the General Assembly concurred with the views of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) relating to administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency and referred those views to the organizations and bodies concerned.

It also requested the Secretary-General to refer to the executive heads of the organizations of the United Nations system, through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, matters arising out of ACABQ reports and the related discussions in the Fifth Committee which called for their action, in particular, the question of rotation of staff. The ACABQ reports were also transmitted to the members of the Panel of External Auditors and to the Joint Inspection Unit for their information. These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/94 A, adopted on 14 December 1976. (See also pp. 926-27, and for text of resolution 31/94 A, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

On 14 December 1976, the General Assembly with the adoption of resolution 31/94 B requested the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to provide policy advice and recommendations on the administrative co-ordination of electronic data processing and information systems in the United Nations organizations. The Advisory Committee was also to examine methods and criteria for assessing the utility of, and co-ordinating and harmonizing existing and planned information systems and estimating costs for establishing and operating the system. The General Assembly requested ACC to assist in that task by providing the services and assistance of IOB.

(See also pp. 927-29, and for text of resolution 31/94 B refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Other matters

Other administrative and financial subjects discussed by ACC during the year included the co-ordination of rules and procedures for procurement and contracts and the possibility of a common methodology for estimating the costs of inflation.

United Nations work programmes in the economic, social and human rights fields

Programme evaluation

On 14 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council approved consolidated terms of reference for the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) (see section below) requiring the Committee, inter alia, to consider and develop evaluation procedures and their use in the improvement of programme design. Consequently, at its May-June 1976 session, CPC considered evaluation questions at some length and agreed on the text of a draft resolution which it proposed for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

The question of programme evaluation was considered then by the Council at its mid-1976 session in connexion with its review of the machinery for co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system.

On 5 August, the Council adopted resolution 2039(LXI) by which, in Part II, it took note of various studies and exercises in evaluation which had been made within the Secretariat and requested the Secretary-General to develop experimental modifications in the existing procedures and techniques of the Secretariat, with a view to achieving effective internal evaluation, and to submit these in 1977, together with experimental programme evaluation reports, to CPC, to the Council, and to the General Assembly.

It further requested the Secretary-General to submit to the 1976 General Assembly session a report, together with comments by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) describing possible changes in the terms of reference of JIU which would enable it to assist CPC and other appropriate intergovernmental bodies of the United Nations to carry out their responsibilities for external evaluation.

In addition, the Council recommended that at its 1976 session, the General Assembly consider the improvement of qualitative internal evaluation and of the performance of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency as executing agencies and the performance of the United Nations Development Programme in administering operational activities, taking into account recommendations which might be made by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System.

Resolution 2039 II (LXI) was adopted without a vote on the recommendation of the Council's Committee for Programme and Co-ordination which had approved the text on 29 July 1976, without a vote, as sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Pakistan and the United Kingdom.

Developments regarding organizational questions

Terms of reference of Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

The Economic and Social Council considered the question of the terms of reference of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) at its 1976 organizational session in January 1976 and at its sixtieth session, held from 13 April to 14 May 1976.

First established as the Special Committee on Co-ordination in 1962, CPC was renamed Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in 1966 in order to reflect better its dual responsibilities.

On 20 November 1975, the General Assembly recommended that the Economic and Social Council should take the necessary measures to implement on an experimental basis in 1976 certain recommendations of the Working Group on United Nations Programme and Budget Machinery for strengthening the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and improving its work.<sup>7</sup> Accordingly, the Council, with the adoption of decision 139(ORG-76), on 15 January 1976, amended the terms of reference of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in accordance with several of the recommendations of the Working Group on United Nations Programme and Budget Machinery, without prejudice to its review of the other terms of reference of CPC. These changes provided that CPC be responsible to both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, that it review United Nations programmes as defined in the medium-term plan and that it consist of 21 Member States, among other things. (See also pp. 878-79.)

On 14 May 1976, the Council adopted, without a vote, resolution 2008(LX), by which it approved consolidated terms of reference for CPC and decided that these terms of reference, including the composition based on equitable geographical distribution of the Committee, were to be reviewed by the Economic and Social Council subsequently, in the light of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System.

Resolution 2008(LX) was sponsored by Greece and Pakistan; oral amendments by Nigeria were accepted by the sponsors. (For text of resolution and terms of reference of CPC, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Rationalization of the Council's work

The Economic and Social Council continued in 1976 consideration of the rationalization of its work in connexion with discussions on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system.

On 14 May 1976, the Council decided, among other things, to review at the earliest appropriate date in 1977, in the light of the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System and of the deliberations of the General Assembly at its 1977 session the agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and the terms of reference of its subsidiary machinery, including the mandate of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination.

The Council also decided to review, at its organizational session for 1977, the rules of procedure of its functional commissions so that they might conform to its revised rules of procedure and, to that end, requested the Secretariat to prepare a draft revised text of the rules of procedure of the commissions.

Further, the Council decided that, at the first meeting of each session of one of its subsidiary bodies, the Chairman should propose, and the subsidiary body concerned should decide, on a limited number of substantive items for which summary records would be required.

These actions were set out in decision 153(LX), adopted on the proposal of the United Kingdom.

Having reviewed the terms of reference of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, Noting that the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system are now under examination by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System,

ANNEX

Terms of reference of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

A. Functions

1. The Committee shall function as the main subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination.

2. In particular, the Committee shall:

(a) Review the programmes of the United Nations as defined in the medium-term plan. In performing this function, the Committee shall:

(i) Review the medium-term plan in the off-budget years and the programme budget in budget years;
In reviewing the medium-term plan, the Committee shall examine, in the light of its budgetary implications, the totality of the Secretary-General's work programme, giving particular attention to programme changes arising out of decisions adopted by intergovernmental organs and conferences or suggested by the Secretary-General;

The Committee shall concern itself with medium-term plans formulated for the organizational units involved in each programme of the United Nations and assess the results achieved from current activities, the continuing validity of legislative decisions of more than five years' standing, and the effectiveness of co-ordination with other units of the Secretariat and members of the United Nations family;

(ii) Recommend an order of priorities among United Nations programmes as defined in the medium-term plan;

(iii) Give guidance to the Secretariat on programme design by interpreting legislative intent so as to assist it in translating legislation into programmes. In this connexion, the memoranda on the implementation of resolutions, prepared by the Secretariat after each session of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, shall be made available to the Committee, which, in the periods immediately following the sessions of those bodies, shall co-operate with the Secretariat departments concerned in integrating the new legislation into continuing programmes;

(iv) Consider and develop evaluation procedures and their use in the improvement of programme design;

(v) Make recommendations with respect to work programmes proposed by the Secretariat to give effect to the legislative intent of the relevant policy-making organs, taking into account the need to avoid overlapping and duplication.

(b) Assist the Economic and Social Council in the performance of its co-ordination functions within the United Nations system.

3. In discharging these responsibilities, the Committee shall:

(a) Consider on a sector-by-sector basis the activities and programmes of the agencies of the United Nations system in order to enable the Council effectively to perform its functions as Co-ordinator of the system and ensure that the work programmes of the United Nations and its agencies shall be compatible and mutually complementary;

(b) Recommend guidelines for the agencies of the United Nations system on their programmes and activities, taking into account their respective functions and responsibilities and the need for coherence and co-ordination throughout the system;

(c) Undertake from time to time, upon the recommendation of the General Assembly or the Economic and Social Council, a review and appraisal of the implementation of important legislative decisions, so as to determine the degree of co-ordinated effort undertaken throughout the United Nations system in certain priority fields designated as such by legislative bodies. The Committee shall perform this work, both independently and in consultation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and shall be required to report on the results of its review to the legislative body that requested that it be undertaken;

(d) The Committee shall study the reports of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, appropriate reports of United Nations organs, the annual reports of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency and other relevant documents.

B. Relationships with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Joint Inspection Unit

4. The Committee shall establish useful co-operation with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

5. The members of the Joint Inspection Unit shall be free to participate in meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and arrangements shall be made for periodic joint consultations. The Joint Inspection Unit shall also bring to the attention of the Committee any problem which it may consider important within the scope of the Committee's responsibilities.

6. The reports of the Joint Inspection Unit concerning the economic, social and human rights programmes of the United Nations system, including the reports dealing with the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, shall be examined by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, which shall report thereon to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. In its review, the Committee shall take account of any comments which the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions may wish to make on these reports.

Chapter XXVI

Consultative arrangements with non-governmental organizations

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations of the Economic and Social Council was to meet on a biennial cycle beginning in 1975. However, it held a meeting at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 15 April 1976 in order to consider applications for consultative status from eight non-governmental organizations (NGOs) which had been deferred in 1975 pending receipt of additional information.

The Economic and Social Council, at its April-May 1976 session, considered the report of the Committee and its recommendations concerning the applications in accordance with criteria set forth in a Council resolution of 23 May 1968, which established the arrangements for obtaining and maintaining consultative status with the Council.<sup>1</sup>

As at the end of 1976, 686 NGOs had such status, which meant that the Economic and Social Council could consult them on questions with which they were concerned.

These organizations were divided into three groups. Category I organizations were concerned with most of the activities of the Council, and had demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Council: that they had marked and sustained contributions to make to the achievements of the United Nations in social, cultural, educational, health, scientific, technological and human rights fields; that they were closely involved with the economic and social life of the peoples of the areas they represented; and that their membership was broadly representative of major segments of population in a large number of countries.

Category II organizations had a special competence in, and were concerned specifically with, only a few of the fields of activity covered by the Council. These organizations were known internationally within the fields for which they had consultative status.

On the Roster were organizations that the Council, or the Secretary-General in consultation with the Council or its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, considered able to make occasional and useful contributions to the work of the Council or other United Nations bodies.

At the end of 1976, there were 24 NGOs with Category I status, 196 with Category II status and 466 on the Roster.

Organizations in Categories I and II could send observers to public meetings of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies. Those on the Roster could send representatives to public meetings concerned with matters within their fields of competence.

Organizations in Categories I and II could submit for circulation written statements relevant to the work of the Council on subjects in which those organizations had a special competence. The Secretary-General in consultation with the President of the Council, or the Council or the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, could invite organizations on the Roster to submit written statements.

Category I organizations could present their views orally and also propose items for possible inclusion in the Council's provisional agenda. Such proposals were first to be submitted to the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations for subsequent action by the Secretary-General. These organizations could propose items directly for the provisional agendas of the Council's commissions.

In addition, all three groups of NGOs could consult with the United Nations Secretariat on matters of mutual concern.

Review of non-governmental organizations granted consultative status

On 14 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council considered the report of the Committee on NGOs and decided without vote to reclassify the Mutual Assistance of the Latin American Government Oil Companies (ARPEL) from the Roster to Category II.

The Council also decided to grant Category II status to the Ibero-American Institute for Aeronautic and Space Law and Commercial Aviation, and to add the following NGOs to the Roster: the Committee for European Construction Equipment, the European Container Manufacturers' Committee, the World Council of Credit Unions, and the World Development Movement. The International Youth Confederation (INTERJUV) was not granted any status at that time.

These actions were taken with the adoption of decision 154(LX), approved at the suggestion of the Council President.

Collaboration between the United Nations and non-governmental organizations regarding world-wide intercommunal co-operation

On 16 December 1976, by resolution 31/114, the General Assembly recognized the role that competent non-governmental organizations could play in solving problems facing local communities. The Assembly noted that NGOS with consultative status in Category I, such as the United Towns Organizations and the International Union of Local Authorities, had offered their collaboration to the United Nations in the field of human settlements. It invited the Secretary-General to ensure that the international bodies responsible for implementing the relevant recommendations of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements study the possibilities and conditions for such collaboration and draw up programmes of collaboration with the NGOS concerned. (For text of resolution 31/114, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

Operating consultative arrangements

Written statements

Eight statements by eight individual non-governmental organizations were submitted to the Council in 1976 under the arrangements for consultation. Five joint statements, one by two NGOS, one by nine NGOS, one by 13 NGOS, one by 22 NGOS and one by 29 NGOS, were also submitted.

Written statements were submitted not only to the Council but also to: the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities; the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control; the Commission on the Status of Women; the Commission on Transnational Corporations; and Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.

Hearings of non-governmental organizations

During the Council's two regular 1976 sessions, several statements were made by NGOS. The International Confederation of Free Trade Unions made a statement on human rights questions, and the International Alliance of Women spoke on the United Nations Decade for Women. The International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians, the International Federation of Business and Professional Women, and the International Social Service made statements on the following agenda items, respectively: the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination; the United Nations Decade for Women; and the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system.

The International Chamber of Commerce and the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions were heard on transnational corporations. The International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the World Federation of Trade Unions and the World Federation of United Nations Associations made statements on development and international economic co-operation, the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and revision of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade. The International Planned Parenthood Federation spoke on population questions, and the League of Red Cross Societies was heard on international co-operation on the environment and assistance in cases of natural disasters and other disaster situations. The International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the World Federation of Trade Unions spoke on general questions of international economic and social policy, while the International Catholic Child Bureau was heard on international co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system.

Four NGOS in category I and one NGO in category II spoke before the Commission on Transnational Corporations.

Ten NGOS made statements at Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements. In addition, non-governmental organizations were heard by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and by the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Special Political Committee of the General Assembly.

Other Council and Assembly action

The Economic and Social Council, on 6 May 1976, adopted resolution 1986(LX), by which it appealed to non-governmental organizations to lend their continuing support to measures undertaken by the Government of Ethiopia for the relief, rehabilitation and recovery of drought-stricken areas.

(For text of resolution 1986(LX) and other resolutions in this section, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

By resolution 31/144 of 17 December 1976, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to enlist the support of NGOs having a special interest in decolonization to undertake or intensify large-scale dissemination of information on the matter.

By resolution 31/34 of 30 November, the Assembly noted with appreciation the material and other forms of assistance that peoples under colonial and alien régimes continued to receive from NGOs, as well as Governments, and called upon them for a maximum of such assistance.

On 12 May 1976, by resolution 1993(LX), the Economic and Social Council invited NGOs to co-operate with the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in implementing its resolutions on the human rights of persons subjected to detention or imprisonment.

On 13 December 1976, by resolution 31/85, the Assembly called upon NGOs concerned with human rights to give maximum publicity to the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

By resolution 31/6 G of 9 November, the Assembly authorized the Special Committee against Apartheid to send missions to the headquarters of NGOs for consultations to promote the international campaign against apartheid. On the same day, it adopted resolution 31/6J on the Programme of Action against Apartheid, by which it invited NGOs to co-operate with the Special Committee on the implementation of that Programme.

On 13 December 1976, on the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/77, by which it called upon all NGOs to offer all possible assistance to Angola, Mozambique and the African countries

Chapter XXVII

Other economic and social questions*The United Nations Institute for Training and Research*Activities in 1976

During 1976, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), an autonomous organization within the framework of the United Nations, continued to carry out research, training and related activities. Its primary aim was to increase the effectiveness of the United Nations system, particularly in the maintenance of peace and security and the promotion of economic and social development. The Institute sought to provide practical assistance to the United Nations and its agencies and to Member States.

A réorientation of UNITAR training activities was carried out during 1976, with increasing emphasis placed on longer courses, sophisticated subject-matter and modern training techniques. Programmes were aimed at serving national officials concerned with United Nations-related issues and officials of organizations in the United Nations system. The Institute's programmes were increasingly attentive to the problems affecting the establishment of a new international economic order.

Seminars, courses and symposia held in 1976 covered such subjects as United Nations documentation, negotiating procedures in the United Nations, multilateral diplomacy and professional service with international organizations. A UNITAR training package on internal migration was presented at Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, in May/June 1976.

As in previous years, the Institute played a major role in organizing the United Nations fellowship programme in international law, which in 1976 awarded 19 fellowships. A regional refresher course in international law for the Western Asia region was held in Doha, Qatar, in January 1976.

The research activities of UNITAR in 1976 concentrated on three main functional areas: international organization; peace and security; and development and international economic problems, with special reference to a new international economic order. Within these areas emphasis was given both to global and regional problems.

Research was carried out during 1976 on such topics as: restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system; the effectiveness of ad hoc conferences; United Nations personnel policies; the United Nations and regional co-operation; the role of the United Nations in promoting co-operation between countries having different economic and social systems; the historical role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security; nuclear proliferation and arms control; the potential of non-governmental organizations in international co-operation for development; theory and methodology of planning in developing countries; the integration of women in development; development funds in the Middle East; equitable sharing of the world's resources; and the problems of land-locked countries.

The Institute also organized, as part of its research activities, a number of regional conferences and colloquia designed to promulgate new ideas of interest to the international community. Through extensive contacts with scholars and research institutions all over the world, the Institute was able to stimulate research on international problems and to provide working facilities for visiting scholars.

Work was continued in 1976 on a new area of activity, the Project on the Future programme. Emphasis was placed on the interrelationship between food, population, energy resources and environmental issues, in the context of a new international economic order. All activities in this Project were undertaken in close consultation with organizations in the United Nations system and with research, academic and other institutions worldwide. Conferences were held in 1976 on the topics of petroleum and natural gas resources and on microbiological energy resources, and research was undertaken on other subjects.

Through this Project, UNITAR informed Governments and interested individuals, in an analytical and critical way, about the results of various global studies and on trends of thought in the futures discipline.

Publications of UNITAR issued in 1976 included the following:

The United Nations University

Activities in 1976

During the year, the United Nations University continued to place emphasis on programme development and increasing support for the Endowment Fund.

Reporting to the General Assembly on its sixth and seventh sessions, the Council of the University described developments during 1976. It summarized the major accomplishments of the first year of operations of the University, which saw: the establishment of the University Centre—the University headquarters at Tokyo, Japan; the planning and launching of the first operational programmes; visits to United Nations Member States to solicit voluntary contributions and pledges to the Endowment Fund and to establish relationships with academic and research institutions; and development of the University's organizational concept.

At the sixth session, held at Caracas, Venezuela, from 27 to 30 January 1976, the Council of the University emphasized the need to establish programmes focusing on the University's three priority sectors: world hunger; human and social development; and use and management of natural resources.

The world hunger programme was to concentrate on human nutritional needs, post-harvest food conservation, nutrition and food objectives in national development planning; and the interfaces among agriculture, food and nutrition. The University established associations for training and applied research with nutrition institutes in Guatemala, India and the Philippines, where 24 United Nations University fellows were studying. In addition, a series of workshops was planned in order to institute dialogue between agriculturists, food scientists, social scientists and policy-makers. The first of these, held at Ibadan, Nigeria, from 14 to 16 December 1976, examined the interactions of agriculture, food and nutrition.

The Advisory Committee of the World Hunger Programme met for the first time on 29 and 30 September 1976 at Tokyo.

The Council agreed to study further the use and management of natural resources, with emphasis on the following four areas: an ecological basis for rural development in the humid tropics; an assessment of the application of scientific knowledge to arid land problems; an action-oriented programme for decision-makers on economic resources management through the holding of seminars and workshops; and aspects of energy, such as geothermal and solar energy.

At its seventh session, held at Tokyo from 28 June to 2 July 1976, the Council approved programmes relating to its third priority sector, on: technology transfer, transformation and development; development goals, processes and indicators; advanced training for planning and administration of development; and human rights, peace and international law. These programmes were to focus, respectively, on: problems and solutions to the use of technologies for self-reliant social and economic development in developing countries; improved methods and knowledge for setting development goals, establishing development processes and implementing appropriate indicators for measuring development progress; increasing the effectiveness of such objectives; and developing knowledge and improving awareness of the interrelationships among human and social development, human rights and international law.

The Council authorized the Rector of the University to initiate negotiations for association with research institutions in Argentina, Nigeria and Sri Lanka, and to consider organizing a consortium of Japanese institutes to assess the relevance of the Japanese experience of technology transfer in terms of human and social development. To launch the University's programmes, consultants were appointed, working meetings were held, and an Advisory Committee of the Human and Social Development Programme was established.

At its 1976 sessions, the Council also discussed the University's institutional relations, stressing the need to associate with institutions concerned with the University's major programme priorities and emphasizing the need for great flexibility in the preparation of agreements.

Legislative decisions

On 23 July 1976, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 160(LXI), took note of the report of the Council of the United Nations University on its work from July 1975 to January 1976 and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly for consideration. The decision was approved, without taking a vote, on the suggestion of the Council President.

Later in the year, the Council, also without taking a vote, approved decision 201(LXI), by which it noted the addendum to the report of the Council, covering the University's activities from February to July 1976, and decided to transmit it to the Assembly. This action was taken on 15 November 1976, on the suggestion of the Council President.

The General Assembly, on 16 December 1976, took note with appreciation of the efforts made by the United Nations University to commence its programme activities and welcomed the fact that two priority programme areas—world hunger and human and social development—had become operative, and that the third, use and management of natural resources, was expected to begin in the near future.

The Assembly encouraged the University to continue its efforts to launch unique and effective research activities on a global basis and to enlarge its network of scholars and research institutions throughout the world, and reiterated the importance of full co-ordination and co-operation between the University and the appropriate agencies and bodies of the United Nations system.

It appealed to all Member States to make substantial contributions to the Endowment Fund and to give financial and other support to specific programmes, so as to enable the University to embark on its full activities while maintaining its academic autonomy and financial viability.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Rector and the Council of the University and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to continue his efforts to raise more funds and to submit a report to the Assembly on the progress achieved in this regard, together with the next annual report of the Council of the University.

These actions were taken by resolution 31/117, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation on the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The text had been considered in the Second Committee and approved by consensus on 30 November 1976. It was sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Colombia, Cyprus, Egypt, Ghana, Greece, Iceland, India, Japan, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Republic, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Senegal, Turkey, Uganda and Venezuela.

Also on 16 December 1976, the Assembly adopted a resolution (31/118) by which it noted the proposal of 34 countries to establish a chair on non-alignment within the United Nations University. It invited interested countries to enter into consultations with the Council and the Rector of the University with a view to implementing the proposal, and requested the Council to report to it on the matter.

Resolution 31/118 was adopted by the Assembly, without vote, as recommended by the Second Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 3 December 1976, on a proposal by Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Botswana, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Senegal, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the Upper Volta, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Contributions to the Endowment Fund

The Secretary-General, on 27 October 1976, reported to the General Assembly on the progress of fund-raising for the United Nations University. As at that date, he stated, the following States had made contributions or pledges to the University's Endowment Fund: Austria, Cyprus, Ghana, Greece, Japan, the Libyan Arab Republic, the Netherlands, Norway, Senegal, Sweden and Venezuela. Income from the Fund, for which a target of $500 million was set, was to provide for the University's basic expenditures, thus ensuring its academic freedom, autonomy and financial viability. Pledges to the Endowment Fund had reached approximately $113 million as at 27 October 1976.

Questions relating to youth

Technical aid activities in 1976

During the year, the United Nations interregional adviser on youth policies and programmes undertook missions in Antigua, the Congo, the Gambia, Grenada, the Ivory Coast, the Libyan Arab Republic, Montserrat, Rwanda, St. Lucia, Singapore and the Sudan.

Fellowships were awarded in 1976 to: a national of Israel for participation in institutional training in Denmark, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom for placement of juvenile offenders; a national of Israel for diagnosis and placement of wayward girls, in Denmark, Finland, the Netherlands, Norway and the United Kingdom; and a national of Togo for youth social promotion programmes, in France and Switzerland.

International policy on youth

In December 1976, the General Assembly considered the question of policies and programmes relating to youth which had been deferred at its 1975 regular session.<sup>1</sup> By the terms of a resolution on the subject, the Assembly noted that, in the 11 years since the promulgation of the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples,<sup>2</sup> substantial progress had been made in implementing its principles, and emphasized that efforts to educate youth in those principles had to be closely related to programmes for their active involvement in all aspects of economic and social life.

The Assembly requested Member States and the United Nations organs and specialized agencies concerned to give greater attention to the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration and appealed to all States, as well as to intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to take appropriate action to foster among youth respect for all peoples—irrespective of nationality, race, sex or religion—regard for human values and devotion to the ideals of peace, freedom and progress and to the cause of human rights.

It urged the Secretary-General to continue promoting international awareness of the situation and needs of youth and practical action to ensure the full participation of youth in the life of society. It also requested him to submit in 1979 a report on the measures that had been taken to implement the Declaration, with recommendations on how that process might be strengthened.

The Assembly further requested the Secretary-General to submit a progress report in 1977 on the establishment of a co-operative arrangement among youth research and information centres, and decided to include the item on youth policies and programmes in the provisional agenda of its 1977 session.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/129, adopted on 16 December 1976, without vote, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had approved the text on 9 December, also without vote, as proposed by 32 powers.

During consideration of this item, the Assembly had before it a letter dated 10 September 1976 from Poland addressed to the Secretary-General, containing the text of an appeal of the European Assembly of Youth and Students for Lasting Peace, Security, Co-operation and Social Progress, held at Warsaw from 19 to 24 June 1976. The appeal called for active efforts by youth and its organizations to strengthen peace, détente and co-operation for greater mutual understanding and good-neighbourly relations.

Channels of communication with youth

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly had before it a report by the Secretary-General concerning the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth. Consideration of this report had been postponed in 1975.<sup>3</sup>

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly expressed the conviction that the pre-conditions of effective channels of communication were the promotion of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the existence of practical opportunities for youth and youth organizations to participate in the work of the United Nations at the national, regional, interregional and international levels.

The Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council to prepare, through the Commission for Social Development, appropriate recommendations concerning the best channels of communication between youth and youth organizations and the United Nations at all levels, and to report to it thereon in 1977.

These actions were taken by resolution 31/132, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 9 December 1976. The text was sponsored by Egypt, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mozambique, Norway, Romania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

Role of youth in development

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/130 on the role of youth, by which it recognized the profound importance of youth in shaping the future of humanity. It considered that the development process as well as the promotion of international peace and security would benefit greatly by the integration and involvement of youth in all related activities. The Assembly considered it necessary to disseminate among youth ideas of peace, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, human solidarity and dedication to the objectives of progress and development.

It urged all States, to that end, to ensure the full and effective participation of youth in the process of development and co-operation and invited all relevant organizations within the United Nations system to give special attention to programmes connected with education and the participation of youth in development.

The Assembly also invited States to promote international exchanges between the youth and youth organizations of their respective countries and requested the Secretary-General to collect information concerning the current and future role and the participation of youth in the development and nation-building process, as well as in the promotion of international co-operation and understanding, and to submit to the Assembly a preliminary report in 1977.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/130 without vote, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 9 December 1976, as sponsored by 20 powers.

By another resolution which dealt with the world social situation (31/84), the Assembly welcomed the active participation and growing involvement of the people of all sectors of society, including youth and women, in the programmes of socio-economic development in developing countries. Resolution 31/84 was adopted on 13 December 1976.

Role of youth in promoting and protecting human rights

At its February/March 1976 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered the question of the role of youth in promoting and protecting human rights. The Commission discussed the question of conscientious objection to military service and, on 11 February, decided to defer consideration of this item to its 1977 session.

The Commission also noted the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Youth on its first meeting in 1973<sup>4</sup> and decided, on 11 February 1976, to request, on the basis of that report, that appropriate United Nations organs, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations, as well as Governments, promote within their spheres of competence active participation of young people in the implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination<sup>5</sup> and active participation of young people, in particular young women and girls, in the development of society. The Commission also requested development of a special curriculum on human rights for educational systems, and the use of mass communication media to propagate among youth respect for human rights.

It requested the Secretary-General, all Member States, the appropriate United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and the non-governmental organizations in consultative status concerned to submit information on steps taken in pursuance of these objectives, and decided to consider this item at its 1977 session.

United Nations Volunteers

By resolution 31/131 of 16 December 1976, the General Assembly inter alia considered the United Nations Volunteers programme to be a major operational unit of the United Nations for the execution of youth programmes, especially of pilot projects to increase the participation of youth in development activities and training programmes for youth workers. The Assembly decided to expand the terms of reference of the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers to include the receipt of additional contributions for youth programmes and appealed to Governments and other potential sources for contributions for this purpose.

The Secretary-General and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme were asked to take necessary administrative action to implement the Assembly's decision.

Container standards for international multimodal transport

Responding to a 1974 request of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>6</sup> an Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group on Container Standards for International Multimodal Transport of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its November 1976 session at Geneva, Switzerland, considered inter alia the report of a Group of Experts on Container Standards for International Multimodal Transport on meetings held at Geneva from 5 to 16 April 1976. The Ad Hoc Group recommended that the Economic and Social Council transmit its report to the Trade and Development Board for consideration.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods held a session at Geneva from 29 November to 8 December 1976 to consider reports submitted by its Group of Rapporteurs on its 1976 sessions (held in March and August) and to consider the report by the Group of Experts on Explosives on its session held in August 1976.

The Committee discussed the drafting of an international convention on the transport of dangerous goods by all modes of transport and considered that the study of such a convention was desirable. The convention would relate to questions common to all modes of transport: listing and definitions of classes, classification of dangerous goods, packing and labelling, consignment procedures, multimodal tank-transport and a hazard information system.

The Committee also considered the activities of other organizations concerned with drafting regulations and recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods at the international level and adopted several provisions concerning definitions of classes, listing of substances and a hazard information system.

International co-operation in cartography

Activities in 1976

During the year, 14 experts in land surveying and mapping were assigned to United Nations technical assistance projects in Burundi, Fiji, Guyana, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, Nepal and the Sudan. One large-scale project and 12 small-scale projects were carried out with assistance from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Projects included institution strengthening in Burundi, Guyana, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nepal and the Sudan, hydrographic surveying in Fiji and registration of land title in Liberia. One expert assisted Iran with establishment of a cartography training institute.

Fellowships were awarded to nationals of Benin, Burundi, Guyana, Israel, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Trinidad and Tobago for study in Canada, France, India, the Netherlands, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Assistance was also provided in the form of equipment for cartographic projects, valued at approximately $412,000, including a contract for project execution in Nepal for $72,000.

Regional cartographic conferences

The First United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas was held at Panama City, Panama, from 8 to 19 March 1976, attended by 151 representatives and observers from 38 countries. The International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, four international scientific societies, three intergovernmental organizations and UNDP also sent representatives. Consideration by a technical committee at the Conference included: techniques and developments in basic mapping, including geodesy and ground control, topographic mapping and Photogrammetry, cadastral surveying and mapping, including urban mapping, and hydrographic surveying and charting. A technical committee was assigned to study conventional and satellite remote-sensing methods and practical applications of cartographic techniques, including aerial photography. A committee also examined small-scale mapping, aeronautical charts and other international map series, thematic cartography, and atlases. The preparation and reproduction of maps and other questions related to map compilation—geographical names, automation, digital mapping, technical innovations in geodesy and cartography and cartographic literature—were discussed by a fourth committee. Other subjects were the education and training of personnel in surveying and mapping and technical assistance needs and availability in the Americas.

The Conference adopted 19 resolutions dealing with international co-operation in cartography, technical assistance and training, thematic cartography and regional co-operation in surveying and mapping.

The Government of Mexico offered host facilities for the Second United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas, to be held in 1979.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 189(LXI) of 5 August 1976, scheduled the Eighth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and Far East for January 1977, at the Bangkok, Thailand, headquarters of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. The decision was approved without a vote, on the proposal of the Council Secretary.

Preservation and development of cultural values

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee considered a report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on the preservation and further development of cultural values. The report contained observations on cultural autonomy, the right to one's own culture, contacts and exchanges between cultures and their relationship to a new international order, as well as the links between cultural values and development, education, science and technology, information and artistic creativity. The report also summarized UNESCO'S work on cultural studies, cultural development and the protection of mankind's cultural heritage.

On 21 October 1976, the Third Committee approved, by consensus, a draft resolution sponsored by 36 Members. By the preambular paragraphs of this text, the Assembly would, inter alia, note with satisfaction the work of UNESCO in increasing awareness of the need for concerted action in the field of preservation and further development of cultural values.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly would: (1) request the Director-General of UNESCO to submit to the Assembly early in 1978 a progress report on the implementation of the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1973 calling for studies and other action on this question;<sup>7</sup> (2) request him to continue efforts and research in this field and report to the Assembly again in 1978; and (3) decide to include the item of preservation and further development of cultural values in the provisional agenda of its 1978 session.

Several amendments were proposed to the original text and accepted by the sponsors. Algeria, Argentina, Barbados, Bolivia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama proposed an amendment adding the request to the UNESCO Director-General to submit a progress report. Poland orally proposed including the subject in the 1978 agenda and India offered drafting amendments.

On 30 November 1976, the Assembly adopted the text, by consensus, as its resolution 31/39.

The resolution was sponsored by Algeria, Benin, Bolivia, Cyprus, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, France, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Madagascar, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Senegal, Somalia, Swaziland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

Also on 30 November, with the adoption of resolution 31/40 on the protection and restitution of works of art as part of the preservation and development of cultural values, the Assembly expressed its conviction that the promotion of national culture enhanced a people's ability to understand the culture and civilization of other peoples. It invited all Member States to sign and ratify the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Cultural Property, adopted by UNESCO in 1970, and called upon Member States to prevent on their territories any illicit traffic in works of art coming from other countries, particularly territories currently or formerly under foreign domination. In addition, the Assembly affirmed that the restitution of cultural or artistic treasures to their countries of origin constituted a contribution towards strengthening international co-operation as well as towards the preservation and the development of cultural values.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/40, as recommended by the Third Committee, by 125 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions. The resolution was sponsored in the Third Committee by Burundi, Colombia, the Congo, Cyprus, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Greece, India, Iraq, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Turkey, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zaire. The text was approved by the Third Committee on 25 October 1976, by 114 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions.

Turning its attention to current international cultural events, the Assembly adopted a resolution (31/41) on a proposed Second World Black and African Festival of Arts and Culture, by which it expressed its conviction that contacts and exchanges between different cultures on the basis of the equality and sovereignty of States could make a genuine contribution to the enrichment of cultural values on a national, regional and world-wide scale.

The Assembly observed that the recognition of cultural identity as an integral part of the mobilization of society was an essential factor in the achievement and preservation of independence, national sovereignty and development and said it was convinced the Festival would contribute immensely to the promotion of international co-operation and understanding.

The Assembly commended the efforts of the international community in the preparations for the Festival and noted with appreciation the efforts of Nigeria as the Festival's host country. The Assembly also appealed to all interested and concerned countries to contribute towards ensuring the Festival's success.

These actions, as embodied in resolution 31/41, were adopted, by consensus, on 30 November 1976, as recommended by the Third Committee, that Committee had approved the text by consensus on 25 October, on a proposal by Algeria, Australia, Austria, the Congo, Egypt, Ghana, Jamaica, the Niger, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Later in the year, by a letter dated 17 December addressed to the Secretary-General, Israel submitted a communication addressed to the President of Israel by 92 Jews in the USSR who stated that the Soviet authorities, by acting to prevent the convening of a symposium devoted to Jewish culture in the USSR, had violated the cultural rights of the Jewish national minority in the USSR. The signers requested the President to raise this question at the United Nations and to circulate the letter there.

By a letter dated 7 January 1977 to the Secretary-General, the USSR categorically rejected the allegations contained in the letter received from Israel and stated that persons of Jewish origin enjoyed all the rights of USSR citizens laid down in the Constitution of the USSR and were taking an active part in the country's cultural life as well. The USSR also said it rejected the attempts of the Israeli Government to act as an accomplice in the propagation of tendentious fabrications.

Questions relating to the Declaration on the granting of independence and to the International Trusteeship System

Chapter I

The International Trusteeship System

General aspects

Territory under the Trusteeship System

Under the International Trusteeship System established by the Charter of the United Nations, Member States administering Trust Territories are accountable to the United Nations for the discharge of their responsibilities and obligations in the administration of the Territories.

Following the termination, pursuant to a 1974 General Assembly decision,<sup>1</sup> of the Trusteeship Agreement for the Territory of New Guinea on the date on which Papua New Guinea became independent, only one Trust Territory remained under the System: the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (a strategic area in accordance with Article 83 of the United Nations Charter)<sup>2</sup> administered by the United States.

Examination of annual report

In supervising the administration of the remaining Trust Territory on behalf of the Security Council, the Trusteeship Council in 1976 examined the annual report submitted by the Administering Authority. It also examined, among other things, petitions affecting the Territory, reports of visiting missions and observations by specialized agencies on conditions in the Trust Territory.

Under the procedures followed by the Trusteeship Council, the Special Representative of the Administering Authority made an opening statement bringing the Council up to date on events in the Territory. This statement was supplemented by comments of Special Advisers—representatives of the Territory, attached to the delegation of the Administering Authority. The Administering Authority's representative on the Council, Special Representative and the Special Advisers then replied to questions put to them by Council members. Following a general debate in which each Council member gave his opinion on conditions in the Territory, the Council considered the adoption of a report containing its conclusions and recommendations. A summary of the observations made by Council members in their individual capacity was included in that report.

The Trusteeship Council held its forty-third regular session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 29 June to 13 July 1976, during which it examined the annual report submitted by the Administering Authority on the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and adopted conclusions and recommendations on it. (For further details, see section below on CONDITIONS IN THE TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS.)

In accordance with its normal practice, the Council adopted a report to the Security Council which contained a section on conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

On 29 June 1976, the Council decided by 3 votes to 1, on a proposal by the United States, to delete the item of its provisional agenda entitled "Adoption of the report of the Trusteeship Council to the General Assembly."

Composition of the Trusteeship Council

At its 1976 session, the Trusteeship Council was composed of one Administering Authority, the

United States, and of four non-administering members: China, France, the USSR and the United Kingdom, which sat on the Council by virtue of their being permanent members of the Security Council. China did not participate in the forty-third (1976) session of the Trusteeship Council.

Petitions and oral hearings

The examination of petitions concerning Trust Territories derives from Article 87 of the United Nations Charter,<sup>3</sup> which provides that the General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council may accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the Administering Authority. Petitions relating to the strategic area are governed by Article 83 of the Charter and the terms of the relevant Trusteeship Agreement.

Under its rules of procedure, the Trusteeship Council considers petitions and communications concerning specific complaints, as well as general questions pertaining to a Trust Territory or to the operation of the International Trusteeship System. The Council considers these in the course of its examination of annual reports. Hearings may also be granted to petitioners.

At its 1976 session, the Trusteeship Council considered seven written petitions and heard nine petitioners with regard to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. It also considered 27 communications concerning the same Territory.

Mariana Islands District

In accordance with a 1975 decision<sup>4</sup> of the Trusteeship Council, a visiting mission was sent to the Mariana Islands District of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, from 12 to 21 June 1975, to observe a plebiscite held on 17 June.

The mission, which was composed of representatives of Australia, France and the United Kingdom, observed the campaign and polling arrangements, the casting of votes, the closure of the voting, the counting of ballots and the declaration of results. In its report to the Trusteeship Council, the mission stated that there was no improper interference by the Administering Authority, the campaign was freely fought, and the poll was free and seen to be free. It noted that the people of the Northern Mariana Islands voted by a majority of almost 80 per cent to become a commonwealth of the United States.

On 13 July 1976, the Council took note of the report of the visiting mission and expressed its appreciation of the work accomplished. This action was taken by Council resolution 2163(XLIII), adopted by 2 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, on a proposal by France.

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

Pursuant to a 1975 Trusteeship Council decision,<sup>5</sup> a mission visited the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands from 5 March to 6 April 1976 to give a periodic report on the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territory, with special attention to the question of the future of the Territory.

The mission, which was composed of representatives of France and the United Kingdom, submitted its report to the Trusteeship Council at its 1976 session. In the report, the mission set forth its findings, conclusions and recommendations on those issues, as well as its views on war and post-war damage claims, military facilities, and the future political status of the Territory.

The report stated that, in view of the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement projected for 1980 or 1981, the transition should be made in the most orderly manner possible and be accompanied by a very intensive political education campaign, giving the inhabitants of the Territory the opportunity to familiarize themselves not only with the prospects offered by a compact of free association but also with other alternatives, including independence. Further, the report stressed the need for progress towards economic independence by developing the few existing productive sectors, namely the expansion of agriculture and the exploitation of marine resources.

On 13 July 1976, the Trusteeship Council considered the mission's report, together with the annual report of the Administering Authority.

By a resolution on this matter (2164(XLIII)), the Council expressed its appreciation of the work accomplished by the mission and decided that it would continue to take its recommendations, conclusions and observations into account in future examination of matters relating to the Trust Territory. The Council invited the Administering Authority to do the same and also to consider the comments thereon by Council members.

Resolution 2164(XLIII) was adopted by 2 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by France.

Attainment of self-government or independence and implementation of the Declaration on granting independence to colonial countries and peoples

At its 1976 session, the Trusteeship Council considered the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;<sup>6</sup> at the same time it considered co-operation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

During the Council's consideration of these matters, the question arose in the Council whether to address a report to the General Assembly and any of its committees. The United States said that, in the light of Article 83, paragraph 1, of the Charter,<sup>7</sup> which vested in the Security Council all functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, and in view of the fact that there no longer existed any Trust Territory with respect to which the Assembly might exercise its jurisdiction as stipulated under Charter Article 85, it believed that the question of co-operation by the Trusteeship Council with the committees of the General Assembly did not arise.

The USSR noted the second paragraph of Article 83, which stated that the basic objectives of the Trusteeship System as set forth in Article 76 should be applicable to each strategic area. Those objectives, the USSR stated, directly involved basic questions on the adoption of measures in accordance with the Charter with regard to all basic issues which were currently considered by the General Assembly in keeping with the provisions of Article 80.

Concerning co-operation with the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration, the USSR observed that the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands had, in previous years, been recognized as constituting strategic territory. Nevertheless, the USSR continued, the Trusteeship Council had adopted recommendations on co-operation with the Special Committee regarding, among other questions, those relating to the Trust Territory. Decisions and recommendations similar to those adopted in previous years should, in the view of the USSR, also be adopted at the current session of the Trusteeship Council.

In addition, the USSR referred to the Trusteeship Council's 1975 report to the General Assembly, in which was stated that the Council had sent a report to the Security Council concerning the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and a report to the General Assembly relating to Papua New Guinea, and that it had expressed its willingness to assist the Special Committee in any way that the Committee might require. The Council had further sent a letter to the Special Committee informing it of that action.<sup>8</sup> In this connexion, the USSR asked whether the Council objected to continuing such a procedure.

The United States expressed the view that, in accordance with the Council's decision not to refer the matter to the General Assembly, such a letter would be inappropriate in the circumstances.

France recalled its position, stated in earlier meetings, in accordance with which the Security Council should exercise all the functions of the United Nations relating to Trust Territories designated as strategic areas under Article 83 of the Charter. As to the Council's co-operation with the Special Committee, France said that, since it had recognized the fact that all such functions should be exercised by the Security Council, it was up to that Council, in future, to take a decision regarding the transmittal of any element of a report to a subsidiary committee of the General Assembly, or even a letter containing observations made by members of the Council.

The United Kingdom pointed out that the Council's decision of 29 June to delete the agenda item which would have provided for a report to the General Assembly had been taken on the grounds of Article 83 of the Charter and that, since the Trusteeship Council was currently dealing with a strategic Trust Territory, the competence of the Assembly and its committees clearly could not be involved in any way.

As for the question of co-operation with the Special Committee, the United Kingdom said it generally supported the position set forth by France. It felt that a letter reporting on the Council's proceedings would in fact be a report and, as such, come within the scope of the decision previously taken by the Council.

On 8 July 1976, the Trusteeship Council decided, without adopting a formal resolution, to draw the attention of the Security Council to the conclusions and recommendations that had been adopted concerning the attainment, under the Council's guidance, of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory and to the statements made by the members of the Trusteeship Council on that question.

The Trusteeship Council's conclusions and recommendations with regard to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands are summarized in the following section.

Offers of study and training facilities

Under procedures adopted by the Trusteeship Council for the administration of the programme of scholarships and fellowships for inhabitants of Trust Territories, initiated by the General Assembly in 1952,<sup>9</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Council on the programme. The report covered the period 1 June 1975 to 29 May 1976 and stated, among other things, that scholarships and training facilities were offered by the following 11 Member States: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, the USSR and Yugoslavia. According to information made available, to the Secretary-General, no applications for scholarships offered by these States were received from the remaining Trust Territory in the period under review.

During the Council's consideration of the report, the United States said that, as Micronesia approached the end of the trusteeship period, the United States remained alert to the need to assist Micronesians to become active and productive citizens of the Pacific Ocean area and the world community. The United States urged other Member States of the United Nations, particularly those in the Pacific Ocean region, to consider making available scholarships to Micronesians who wished to develop skills pertinent to Micronesian development.

On 6 July 1976, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Dissemination of information on the United Nations and the Trusteeship System

In accordance with decisions of the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly, the Secretary-General reports annually to the Trusteeship Council on arrangements undertaken in co-operation with the Administering Authorities for distributing official records of the United Nations and for disseminating information concerning the aims and activities of the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System in Trust Territories.

The report submitted by the Secretary-General to the 1976 Council session, covering the period from 14 April 1975 to 13 April 1976, detailed activities carried out in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands by the United Nations Office of Public Information through the United Nations Information Centre in Washington, D.C. The publications that were furnished to the Territory included press releases, newsletters and special features on United Nations activities.

During the Council's consideration of this item, the United States said it was proud of its record on the dissemination of information on the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System in the Trust Territory and would continue its efforts.

The USSR noted that, from the report of the visiting mission, information on the activities of the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System was inadequate, particularly concerning the various options open to the inhabitants of the Trust Territory. In the course of conversations with representatives of the Congress of Micronesia and of the communities, the USSR had become aware, it said, of the lack of adequate information even on the availability of scholarships for Micronesians in the Soviet Union. The USSR therefore urged the Administering Authority to make further efforts to make available to Micronesians information on the prevailing situation and on the activities of the Trusteeship Council.

France expressed its support of the USSR's statement and drew the attention of the Administering Authority and the Office of Public Information to the inadequacy of information on that question and the role of the United Nations in general.

On 6 July 1976, the Trusteeship Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General.

Action against racism and racial discrimination

At its 1976 session, the Trusteeship Council decided to consider together the questions of co-operation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the observance of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, which began on 10 December 1973.

During the Council's consideration of these items, the United States reaffirmed its strong and continuing opposition to racial discrimination in any form. It expressed its complete support of a statement made at a Council meeting on 1 July 1976 by the Acting High Commissioner of the Trust Territory, who had categorically rejected allegations of racial discrimination in the Trust Territory and had affirmed that if there had been evidence to support those allegations, immediate and affirmative action would have been taken to eliminate such discrimination.

With regard to the Decade, the United States said its position, as stated at a meeting of the Economic and Social Council on 28 April 1976, was unchanged, namely that with the adoption of a General Assembly resolution of 10 November 1975,<sup>10</sup> equating zionism with racism, the United States could no longer participate in or support the observance of the Decade.

The USSR pointed out that in the past the Trusteeship Council had adopted recommendations in which the attention of the Administering Authority ties had been drawn to the requests and observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and they had been asked to take those requests and observations into account in their future reports. In the view of the USSR, their reports had not contained all the necessary information on that question; it asked that future reports should devote some attention to the matter.

The USSR recalled that in 1975 the Council had decided to draw the attention of the Administering Authorities to the provisions of two General Assembly resolutions on the Decade,<sup>11</sup> and requested them to take the necessary measures. In conformity with past practice, the USSR continued, it would be desirable for the Council President to make a statement during the commemoration of Human Rights Day in December 1976 in which he would refer to the question of the observance of human rights in Trust Territories.

France stated that it attached particular importance to the struggle to combat racism and to the attainment of the objectives of the Decade, but said it believed that that struggle had to be carried out under the Programme for the Decade annexed to the Assembly's resolution of 2 November 1973<sup>12</sup> and in conformity with the definition of racial discrimination contained in article 1 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,<sup>13</sup> which France had ratified in 1971.

The United Kingdom noted its support of the Decade as defined in the same resolution and was determined, it said, to pursue its own efforts against racism as it was defined in article 1 of the International Convention. Taking note of the statement by the Administering Authority that no racial discrimination existed in the Trust Territory, the United Kingdom said it would entirely accept that contention.

Conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, administered by the United States, includes more than 2,100 islands and atolls scattered over an area of some 7.8 million square kilometres of the western Pacific Ocean, north of the Equator. The islands, with a total land area of some 1,850 square kilometres, form three archipelagos—the Marianas, the Carolines and the Marshalls—and are collectively known as Micronesia. (Guam, the largest island in the Marianas, is not part of the Trust Territory.) In June 1973, the population of the Trust Territory totalled approximately 115,000. Saipan, in the Mariana Islands, is the provisional headquarters of the Administration.

Executive and administrative authority for the Government of the Trust Territory and responsibility for carrying out international obligations undertaken by the United States with respect to the Territory are vested in a High Commissioner, appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the United States Senate. Legislative authority resides in the Congress of Micronesia, a bicameral legislature comprising a Senate and a House of Representatives.

The islands are grouped in six administrative districts: the Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, and—in the Caroline archipelago—Palau, Yap, Truk and Ponape.

Following the 1975 plebiscite in the Mariana Islands District which endorsed (by 78.8 per cent of the vote) the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America, the Covenant was approved by the Congress of the United States and signed into law on 24 March 1976 by the President of the United States. Subsequently, a separate administration was established in the Northern Mariana Islands as of 1 April 1976.

Consideration by the Trusteeship Council

The Trusteeship Council considered the report of the United States Government on the administration of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands at meetings held from 29 June to 13 July 1976. It subsequently reported to the Security Council on this Territory, a strategic area in accordance with Article 83 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>14</sup>

In formulating its conclusions and recommendations, the Trusteeship Council took into account the observations of its visiting mission which had observed the plebiscite in the Mariana Islands District in June 1975 and of its periodic visiting mission which had visited the Trust Territory in March/April 1976 (see p. 676).

A summary of the Council's discussion and main conclusions and recommendations follows.

Population movements

The Trusteeship Council noted with concern that the funds required to undertake further aerial radiological surveys on the Bikini Atoll had not been made available. It recommended that the necessary funds be provided so that the people of Bikini could either return to their ancestral home or make improvements in their living conditions on Kili Island. The Council noted with satisfaction the approval by the United States Congress of funds for the clean-up of Enewetak Atoll.

War and post-war damage claims

The Trusteeship Council took note of recent developments concerning war damage claims and urged that final disbursements for claims against Japan be made quickly to terminate the issue. Concerning post-war claims against the United States, the Council expressed the view that the total funds available should be increased towards the level envisaged by the Micronesian Claims Commission, so that adjudicated claims might be paid in full.

Political advancement

In May and June 1976, negotiations took place between the Joint Committee on Future Status of the Congress of Micronesia and the Administering Authority, which led to the drawing up of a draft compact of free association.

Also, the Administering Authority reported that on 8 November 1975 representatives of all districts of the Trust Territory signed a draft constitution for the proposed Federated States of Micronesia.

At its 1976 session, the Trusteeship Council reaffirmed its conviction that the unity of the Marshall Islands and the Caroline Islands should be preserved. It took note of the creation of a Commission on Future Political Status and Transition of the Congress of Micronesia with the mandate to ensure that the draft compact of free association was not incompatible with the draft constitution, and also noted that the draft compact would not come into effect in any district in which 55 per cent of the voters voted against it. Further, the Council noted with satisfaction the reaffirmation by the Administering Authority of its intention to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement simultaneously for all parts of the Trust Territory and not for one part separately.

The Council again noted with concern that the Administering Authority had not implemented its previous recommendation that necessary regulations be adopted which would distinguish between the special interests of the Territory and the international obligations of the Administering Authority, with the ultimate objective of restricting as far as possible the occasions for the exercise of the power of veto by the High Commissioner. Further, the Council again recommended that the Administering Authority give serious consideration to preparing Micronesians for assuming the highest executive functions.

The Council also reiterated other recommendations, including one that qualified Micronesians should be given greater opportunities in the judiciary. In that connexion, the Council reaffirmed the need for the Congress of Micronesia to be consulted before the appointment or removal of judges of the High Court.

During the Council's discussion, France reaffirmed its concern to preserve the unity of the Trust Territory, but did not go so far, it said, as to oppose the clearly expressed will of the populations themselves, since respect for the principle of self-determination was the paramount concern of the Trusteeship Council and a principle of the United Nations Charter.

The United Kingdom said it continued to hope that the peoples of the Caroline and Marshall Islands would succeed in working out a common political framework in which they could live together at the end of the trusteeship period. It was well aware of the wide dispersion of the islands and of their cultural differences, but continued to think that their best hope for a prosperous future lay in some form of political unity.

The USSR expressed the views that the pace of the Trust Territory's progress towards self-determination and independence was very slow and that the plebiscite held in the Mariana Islands District had created an atmosphere of political insecurity and had instigated separatist tendencies in other parts of Micronesia. The USSR stated it could not agree with any steps aimed at dismembering the Trust Territory, which would run counter to decisions of the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council on the need to preserve the Territory's unity and territorial integrity.

Economic advancement

The Trusteeship Council noted with concern that Micronesia's dependence on outside support was still considerable, and expressed the hope that the Administering Authority would give the most careful consideration to substantially reducing the impact of customs tariffs and related measures on the promotion of exports from the Trust Territory, thus helping to develop its export potential.

The Council reaffirmed its 1975 recommendations that the Congress of Micronesia be given greater responsibility with respect to the budget. It welcomed the preparation of a long-range comprehensive plan for the Territory and noted the assistance provided by the United Nations Development Programme in preparing the plan. It was hoped that such a plan would make it possible to determine priorities and establish an infrastructure suited to the needs of Micronesia and would reduce the Territory's dependence on foreign financial assistance. In this connexion, the Council learned with concern that the Congress of Micronesia was reassessing its intention to become a member of the Asian Development Bank; such membership, in the Council's view, would make good economic and geographic sense.

The Council welcomed the assurance by the Administering Authority that the Economic Development Loan Fund, the Production Development Loan Fund, the Marine Resources Development Fund and the Agricultural Development Fund were intended to stimulate development of local resources in Micronesia. It was pleased to note that the Development Bank of Micronesia had been opened, and said that local credit facilities were essential for the economic development in the Trust Territory.

The importance of marine resources was re-emphasized by the Council, which urged the Administering Authority to do everything possible to protect and develop those resources. It noted with approval the creation of fishing authorities in each district to foster co-operative development; it also noted the substantial financial assistance received by the Micronesian Mariculture Demonstration Center on Palau.

The Council also urged the Administering Authority to continue to exercise vigilance in protecting Micronesian waters from illegal foreign exploitation.

Noting the proposed construction of a super-port at Palau, the Council urged that consideration be given to its possible effect on unity and on the environment. It noted with satisfaction the commitment of the Administering Authority not to approve development of the super-port if it was opposed by the people of Palau.

During discussions in the Council, France stated that the efforts made in the economic field were quite significant. It was of the opinion, however, that secondary infrastructure projects were lacking and mentioned in this connexion the need for construction of rural roads and improvement of small port facilities. In addition, France urged that further efforts be made towards greater autonomy for Micronesians, to prepare them to manage their own heritage.

The United Kingdom, noting the Administering Authority's review of the capital improvement programme and efforts to spend available funds efficiently and in accordance with sensible priorities, wished to associate itself with the hope expressed by the 1976 visiting mission that the figure of $145 million to be expended in the five-year transition period towards autonomy would be increased if a sound case were put forward for additional expenditure on infrastructure projects. Referring to the proposed super-port, the United Kingdom said it welcomed the assurances that every effort would be made to ensure that the people of Palau had an objective assessment at their disposal before making a final decision.

The USSR recalled the guidelines for the development of the Trust Territory established by the Administering Authority, which placed emphasis on the development of the private sector and the attraction of foreign capital. The visiting mission had indicated, the USSR continued, that it would be preferable to involve the people in the economy of the Trust Territory and in the creation of a State sector of the economy. Experience in developing countries, the USSR observed, had borne out the accuracy of such conclusions and recommendations of the mission and had cast doubt on other recommendations.

The USSR was of the view that the building of a super-port at Palau might create obstacles to the enjoyment by the population of its right to freedom and make it more dependent upon the Administering Authority, and, as was pointed out in the report of the 1976 visiting mission, might cause considerable harm to the environment and lead to the growth of separatism.

Social and educational advancement

The Trusteeship Council welcomed the imminent opening of a new hospital on Kusaie Island, noted that proper health services were being brought to an increasing number of Micronesians, and urged that efforts be concentrated on improving facilities in the outlying areas. In addition, the Council called for the training of Micronesian health staff to meet the needs of the population.

The Council recalled its concern at the continuing imbalance between wage-earners employed in the public sector and those employed in the private sector. It welcomed a proposed survey of manpower needs as a prerequisite for providing remedies to that problem.

The Council noted that Micronesians were being trained to carry out a long-term, low-cost building programme. Given the importance of providing such housing, the Council expressed the hope that the necessary resources would be made available for that programme.

The Council welcomed efforts made to combat delinquency, in particular juvenile delinquency, and recommended that preventive efforts be continued.

In the field of education, the Council noted with pleasure the excellent record of the Administering Authority, in particular the universal instruction at the primary level and the high rate of secondary-school attendance, as well as the satisfactory number of post-graduate students in the Trust Territory. The Council again recommended, however, introduction of a programme related to the economic situation in the Trust Territory as a means of preparing Micronesians for more meaningful self-government.

Further, the Council noted the increase in the number of Micronesian teachers but remained concerned, it said, that the supply of educated people in the Territory might outpace the number of suitable jobs available; it accordingly recommended that there be a continuing emphasis on vocational rather than purely academic training.

During the Council's discussion, France stated that, according to the visiting mission, progress in education and health in the Territory had been considerable. Noting that the exploitation of the wealth of the sea was opening up possibilities for new development, France considered that the inhabitants of the Territory should be able to receive training which would make it possible for Micronesia to have the necessary experts for a rational exploitation of that wealth.

Attainment of self-government or independence

At its 1976 session, the Trusteeship Council reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Micronesia to self-determination, including the right to independence in accordance with the United Nations Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement.

The Council recognized that the plebiscite in the Northern Mariana Islands in June 1975, held in the presence of a United Nations visiting mission, had been freely and properly conducted and that, in the free exercise of their right of self-determination, the people of those islands had, by a large majority, approved the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America. The Council noted the assurances given by the Administering Authority that, although the Northern Mariana Islands were expected to become self-governing under the Covenant and a local constitution while the Trusteeship Agreement was in effect, certain provisions of the Covenant would not take full effect until after the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement. The Council also noted that the United States intended to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement simultaneously for the entire Trust Territory and it reiterated its recommendation that the Administering Authority should encourage the maintenance of close and friendly contacts between the Northern Mariana Islands and the rest of the Trust Territory.

The Council affirmed its conviction that the political unity of the Caroline Islands and the Marshall Islands should be maintained. It recalled its earlier concern about separatist tendencies in the Palau and Marshall Islands districts and noted with satisfaction the commitment of the Administering Authority to the unity of the Caroline and the Marshall Islands.

The Council stated that like the 1976 visiting mission it did not wish to make precise recommendations on the future status best suited to the Caroline Islands and the Marshall Islands, or to commit itself on the question of free association. It simply noted that the status of free association currently under consideration, if endorsed by the population, would not be inconsistent with the aims of the Trusteeship Agreement.

The Council noted the provisions of the draft compact of free association, agreed to in June 1976 between the Administering Authority and the Congress of Micronesia. Those provisions established that sovereignty resided in the people of Micronesia, that they had the sovereign right to choose their future political status, and that they would govern themselves under their own laws and their own elected Government. In addition, the Council noted the option of unilateral termination after 15 years, allowing the people of Micronesia to select whatever status they might then choose, including independence. It noted that no district was to be bound by any plebiscite on the draft compact if 55 per cent of those voting in that district voted against it. Also, it considered that the people of Micronesia should be given the fullest opportunity to inform themselves about the provisions of the draft compact of free association as well as other future political choices, including independence.

Further, the Council noted the draft constitution for the proposed Federated States of Micronesia which had been approved by the Micronesian Constitutional Convention in November 1975. In this connexion, the Council expressed the hope that when the draft constitution was put to a popular referendum, it would be in a form likely to be acceptable to all districts in the Caroline Islands and the Marshall Islands.

During the Council's deliberations, the United States said that care had been taken in negotiating the Covenant to establish a commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands to assure that the Covenant would not conflict with the obligations of the United States under the Trusteeship Agreement. The Covenant would not become fully effective until the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement, which would occur, the United States reaffirmed, simultaneously for the entire Territory.

The United States had not taken a substantive position in support of or in opposition to the draft constitution of the Federated States of Micronesia. Its policy was to encourage the peoples of the Marshall and the Caroline Islands to reach agreement on a constitutional framework that would enable them to maintain unity within a single political unit following termination of the Trusteeship Agreement.

The question of marine resources, in the view of the United States, was the only major area that remained to be resolved before the draft compact was put before the Congress of Micronesia and submitted to the people in a plebiscite; efforts were under way to reconcile this issue.

France pointed out that all options, including independence, had to remain open to the people of the Trust Territory in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement. An unofficial referendum in July 1975—to ascertain the people's wishes with regard to the different alternatives of political status likely to be available and whether the Congress of Micronesia should be authorized to negotiate future status—had shown, France continued, that there was a need for further explanation of the possible choices of future status and a strengthening of the political training of the populations concerned. The result of this referendum had, in the opinion of France, reflected the centrifugal trends of the Marshall Islands and of Palau, indicating the reticence and the hesitation of these districts with respect to unity.

The convening of the Constitutional Convention was noteworthy, France said, since it had been able to produce a draft constitution, although it appeared that the text had not always been compatible with the compact of free association. It was up to the Commission on Future Political Status and Transition to suggest to the Congress of Micronesia, as well as to the High Commissioner, formulas that would satisfy all sides and encourage a critical but constructive dialogue with each of the parties.

France and the United Kingdom stated their acceptance of the conclusions and recommendations of the visiting mission. The United Kingdom expressed the view that the people of the Northern Mariana Islands had to work out the detailed arrangements for their membership in the United States political family. While the United Kingdom emphasized the importance of the Northern Marianas maintaining the closest links with the rest of Micronesia, it was concerned, it said, at the extent to which the issue had polarized the two communities—the Chamorros and the Carolinians.

The United Kingdom believed that all possibilities, including that of independence, should remain open. If some form of association with the United States were to be the freely expressed desire of the Micronesians, the United Kingdom would regard that as a thoroughly legitimate exercise of their right of self-determination. It considered, however, that five years was a short span to complete the major tasks before the end of the trusteeship and assumed therefore that 1981 was to be taken as a target date rather than a fixed date.

The USSR noted that the Congress of Micronesia continued to strive for the consolidation of the unity of the Trust Territory and to ensure progress towards self-determination. The steps taken by the Congress regarding the future status of the Territory had shown that the overwhelming majority of the population of Micronesia supported the concept of unity and rejected any other variants proposed by the Administering Authority.

The USSR could not regard as normal, it said, a situation of the kind referred to in the Trusteeship Council in previous years, where the Administering Authority conducted negotiations and took other steps connected with the future status of Micronesia without the participation of the United Nations, particularly the Trusteeship Council. Referring to the proposed termination of the Trusteeship Agreement, the USSR stated that the final political status of the Trust Territory, including the question of the change in status of the Mariana Islands, could only be resolved by the Security Council in accordance with Article 83 of the Charter.

Report of the Trusteeship Council

On 13 July 1976, by a vote of 3 to 1, the Council approved its report to the Security Council containing its conclusions and recommendations concerning conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The United States, in explaining its vote, said that, although it had voted in favour of the report in its entirety, it had taken no position on the report's recommendations or conclusions.

The USSR stated that it had voted against the report because of its position of principle on the question of the need to preserve the territorial integrity and unity of the Trust Territory. The report contained provisions, in the view of the USSR, which attested to the Council's refusal to co-operate with organs of the United Nations dealing with decolonization. Also, the USSR considered that the report did not stress the dire economic situation in the Territory and the conclusions did not duly reflect the views of the representatives of the Congress of Micronesia on the need to expand their powers.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The situation in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands was discussed in 1976 by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>15</sup> at meetings held on 19 and 20 August. It had before it a written petition from the Chairman of the International League for Human Rights (formerly known as the International League for the Rights of Man) and it heard a statement by a representative of the League. The Administering Authority did not participate in the work of the Special Committee during consideration of the matter.

On 20 August the Special Committee requested its Chairman to convey to the President of the Trusteeship Council its sentiments concerning the Council's decision not to report to the General Assembly (see p. 675), which had resulted in the discontinuance of the Council's co-operation with the Special Committee, and to ask the President of the Council for further information on the matter.

By a set of conclusions and recommendations it adopted, the Special Committee, inter alia, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands to self-determination, in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

The Special Committee once again noted with regret the refusal of the Administering Authority to co-operate with it on this matter by declining to participate in the examination of the situation in the Trust Territory. The Committee called upon the United States to comply with its repeated requests that a representative be present at its meetings to provide information which would assist the Committee in the formulation of conclusions and recommendations.

The Special Committee noted that a draft constitution for the Trust Territory had been approved by the Micronesian Constitutional Convention and expressed the hope that it would be adopted by all districts of the Territory. It also noted the creation by the Congress of Micronesia of a Commission on Future Political Status and Transition, which it hoped would work to strengthen the unity of the Territory.

The Special Committee further noted that at the referendum held in 1975 the people had voted in favour of territorial unity. It also noted that a draft compact of free association would come into effect in each district unless 55 per cent of the people of that district voted against it.

The Special Committee noted the proposed termination of the Trusteeship Agreement in 1980 or 1981. It remained of the view that this provided an unduly long transitional period and reiterated its hope that the people of the Territory would be encouraged to decide freely upon their future political status well before 1981.

In addition, the Committee noted with concern that the Administering Authority had not implemented its previous recommendation that necessary regulations be adopted which would distinguish between the special interests of the Territory and the international obligations of the Administering Authority, with the ultimate objective of restricting as far as possible the exercise of the power of veto by the High Commissioner. It also urged the United States to prepare Micronesians for assuming the highest executive functions. The Committee joined the Trusteeship Council in the recommendation that consideration be given to appointing a Micronesian to the post of Deputy High Commissioner as an interim measure towards filling the post by popular election.

The Special Committee welcomed the establishment in 1976 of new budgetary procedures, which authorized the Congress of Micronesia to present to the United States Congress its own budgetary justification for the Territory's annual appropriation. It also noted that land identification and survey work on all public land was in progress and was expected to be completed in 1977. The Committee expressed the hope that this would provide effective measures to guarantee and safeguard the rights of the indigenous population over their own natural resources and their right to dispose of them.

The Special Committee noted with satisfaction Micronesia's involvement in regional and international organizations and, in particular, the agreement with the United Nations Development Programme to draw up a country programme for the Territory. Further, it noted with satisfaction that the Congress of Micronesia had achieved observer status at the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea with the sponsorship of the Administering Authority, and that such participation was expected to continue.

Chapter

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

During 1976, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>1</sup> continued to discharge the mandate entrusted to it by the General Assembly and to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration in territories which had not yet attained independence.

In this chapter, an account is given of the Special Committee's work in general during 1976, the consideration of its report by the General Assembly, as well as details of the Special Committee's and the Assembly's decisions on individual territories.

Information on the action taken during the year by the General Assembly, the Special Committee and other bodies on matters concerning Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe), Namibia and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands will be found in other chapters of this volume.

General questions

System of examination

During 1976, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples continued to use the methods of work developed in preceding years and endorsed by the General Assembly. Under this procedure, it examined special questions relating to the implementation of the Declaration, as well as its implementation with regard to specific territories, the order of priority being decided on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee's working group in the light of related developments.

To assist in its examination of conditions in each territory, the Special Committee normally has before it an information paper prepared by the United Nations Secretariat describing recent political and constitutional developments as well as current economic, social and educational conditions in the territory concerned. This information is derived from published sources and, in relevant cases, from information transmitted by the territories' administering powers under Article 73e of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>2</sup>

In addition, the Special Committee requests the administering powers to submit information on political and constitutional developments in the territories they administer. The Committee hears statements from the administering powers, inviting those which are not members of the Committee to participate in its examination of the territories under their administration; similar invitations may be extended to other States which are not members of the Committee. The representatives of national liberation movements of colonial territories in Africa may also participate in the proceedings of the Committee concerning their countries.

Petitions are circulated and the Committee may decide to hear petitioners at its meetings. The Committee is empowered by the General Assembly to send visiting groups to territories to obtain first-hand information; it may also hold meetings away from United Nations Headquarters whenever required for the effective discharge of its functions.

The Special Committee adopts its recommendations either in the form of a consensus formulated by its Chairman or of a resolution adopted by vote. It establishes subsidiary bodies whenever it considers it to be necessary.

Each year, the Special Committee submits to the General Assembly a report on its consideration of the situation in each territory or group of territories coming under its purview and on special questions which it has decided to take up separately. On the basis of this report the Assembly considers the implementation of the Declaration in general and with respect to individual territories.

Between 30 January and 26 October 1976, the Special Committee held 34 plenary meetings, and its working group and subsidiary bodies a total of 47 meetings.

The Committee considered general aspects of the implementation of the Declaration and also its implementation with respect to the following territories: American Samoa, Antigua, Belize, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Brunei, the Cayman Islands, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Dominica, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), French Somaliland,<sup>3</sup> Gibraltar, the Gilbert Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Namibia, the New Hebrides, Pitcairn, St. Helena, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, the Seychelles, the Solomon Islands, Southern Rhodesia, Spanish Sahara, Timor, the Tokelau Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Turks and Caicos Islands, Tuvalu and the United States Virgin Islands. The Committee also carried out other tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly.

At the beginning of its 1976 session, the Special Committee decided to maintain its Sub-Committee on Petitions and Information, to allocate to it the agenda item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations" and, in consequence, to rename it the Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance. The Committee also decided to maintain Sub-Committee II and to rename it the Sub-Committee on Small Territories.

During 1976, the Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance considered three communications, which contained requests for hearings concerning the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the New Hebrides, and decided to circulate the communications as petitions.

<sup>3</sup> The term "French Somaliland" appears in those United Nations texts where it is so used by the United Nations organs, delegations or speakers concerned. The designation of it as "French Territory of the Afars and the Issas" is the one requested by the administering power.

General aspects of implementation of the Declaration

Consideration by the Special Committee

In carrying out the tasks entrusted to it by the General Assembly or arising from its own previous decisions, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>4</sup> gave particular attention at its 1976 session to the major colonial problems. At the same time, the Committee, as in previous years, considered a number of general questions arising in connexion with the implementation of the Declaration and other related General Assembly decisions, including the activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the Declaration in colonial territories (see section below) and the military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration which were incompatible with the provisions of the relevant Assembly resolutions.

The Committee further continued its examination of: the question of the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations (see section immediately following); the question of sending visiting missions to colonial territories; and the question of the publicity to be given to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization.

In the context of General Assembly resolutions by which the Special Committee was authorized to meet elsewhere than at United Nations Headquarters whenever required for the effective discharge of its functions, the Committee, at the invitations of the Governments of Botswana, Ethiopia, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia, dispatched an ad hoc group of six of its members (the Congo, India, Norway, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia) to the capitals of those countries in May and June 1976 in connexion with the discharge of the mandate entrusted to it by the Assembly, with specific reference to the questions of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) and Namibia. In deciding to dispatch the ad hoc group, the Committee was mindful of its primary objective to seek the best ways and means of contributing effectively to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples with respect to those territories.

In conformity with relevant decisions of the General Assembly and in accordance with established practice, representatives of the national liberation movements of the colonial territories in Africa again were invited to participate as observers in the Special Committee's proceedings both in New York and away from Headquarters. They provided the Committee with information on the situation in their respective countries.

During the year, the Special Committee also paid close attention to the implementation of the Declaration with respect to colonial territories in other parts of the world, and in this context approved a series of concrete recommendations and proposals in regard to specific territories (see section below).

Also, the Special Committee, at the invitation of the United Kingdom (the administering power), dispatched in May 1976 a three-member visiting mission (Fiji, Sierra Leone and the Syrian Arab Republic) to the British Virgin Islands. In May and June 1976, in response to an invitation extended to it by New Zealand (the administering power), the Special Committee dispatched a visiting mission consisting of three of its members (Iran, Tunisia and the United Republic of Tanzania) to the Tokelau Islands in order to secure first-hand information regarding the territory and to ascertain the wishes and aspirations of its inhabitants regarding their future status. On the basis of the conclusions and recommendations of the missions, the Special Committee subsequently made a number of recommendations concerning the problems confronting the territories and their people (see pp. 717 and 734-36).

During consideration of the question of sending visiting missions to colonial territories, the Special Committee had before it a report by its Chairman on his consultations on this subject with representatives of three administering powers. The Chairman reported that the representatives of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom had reiterated their Governments' readiness to continue to provide the Special Committee with all relevant information on the territories concerned and to participate in the related work of the Committee. With regard to the receiving of visiting missions, the Chairman noted with satisfaction the positive attitude maintained by the three Governments, adding that consultations would continue with these powers with a view to sending visiting missions to territories under their administration, as appropriate.

On 17 June 1976, the Special Committee adopted a resolution by which it expressed appreciation for the co-operation extended to the United Nations by Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom with regard to visiting missions. It called upon the other administering powers to reconsider their attitude and to co-operate fully with the United Nations by permitting the access of visiting missions to the territories under their administration; the Committee also requested its Chairman to continue his consultations with those administering powers.

On the question of military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration, the Special Committee, on 13 September 1976, adopted a decision by a vote of 21 to 0, with 1 abstention.

By this decision, the Special Committee said it remained convinced that such activities and arrangements might constitute an impediment to the implementation of the Declaration. This conclusion was evident in respect of territories in southern Africa, where military forces were being utilized to subjugate the colonial peoples and to oppose the struggle of their national liberation movements for freedom and independence. It was also true in respect of other territories where strategic military bases were maintained to serve the global interests of the colonial powers.

The Committee noted with regret that the colonial powers concerned had not implemented the relevant General Assembly resolutions calling upon them to terminate their military bases and installations in the colonial territories and to refrain from establishing new ones. The Committee further observed that a particularly grave situation prevailed in southern Africa, where the illegal and racist régimes had greatly increased their military expenditures and had expanded their armed forces. In this connexion, the Special Committee expressed its concern at the continuing co-operation of certain countries with South Africa in supplying it with arms and military equipment as well as technology.

The Committee condemned in particular the use of massive armed force by the illegal racist régimes in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia in their efforts to suppress the struggle for freedom of the oppressed peoples of those territories, and the military and political collaboration of South Africa with the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. The Committee also condemned certain Western powers for the continued military collaboration and support which they rendered to the colonialist and racist régimes in southern Africa and for their nuclear co-operation with South Africa. The Special Committee further reiterated its condemnation of all military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration which were detrimental to the interests and rights of the colonial peoples concerned, and once again called upon those powers to terminate such activities and eliminate such military bases in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly.

In expressing his reservations to this decision, the representative of Australia said that there were a number of aspects of the decision not specifically related to the situation in southern Africa which were inconsistent with the views of his Government. For example, criticisms were made which took no account of the relevant Charter provisions. The military presence of an administering power might well be justified by obligations relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, as well as local defence. Australia would have wished to support the Committee's report, especially as it rightly emphasized the problems in southern Africa. However, it had had to abstain on the decision because of other partisan elements that had intruded into the report.

With regard to the publicity to be given to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, the Special Committee endorsed recommendations reiterating the importance of the widest possible dissemination by the United Nations of information on all aspects of the decolonization process as a means of mobilizing world public opinion to assist the common struggle against colonialism and in support of the struggle of the peoples of the territories under colonial rule to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence.

The Special Committee recommended that the Office of Public Information should: place special emphasis on the struggle for liberation in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia and the activities of the national liberation movements of those territories; give greater publicity to the role of foreign economic and other interests and military activities of colonial powers which were impeding the full implementation of the Declaration; establish closer co-operation with the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe and Namibia through the Coordinating Committee for the Liberation of Africa of the Organization of African Unity (OAU); and intensify the activities of all United Nations information centres, particularly those located in certain countries in Western Europe and in the Americas.

The Committee also gave attention to the question of the dissemination of information on decolonization in connexion with the observance, in mid-May 1976, of the Week of Solidarity with the Colonial Peoples of Southern Africa Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Equal Rights. At the beginning of the Week of Solidarity, the Chairman of the Committee emphasized its importance in the context of the current developments in the field of decolonization, particularly in southern Africa, and urged the international press to lend its fullest possible co-operation in rallying support for the liberation struggle of the colonial peoples.

In connexion with its review of the list of territories to which the Declaration was applicable, the Special Committee, on 7 September 1976, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and, by virtue of that right, freely to determine its political status and freely to pursue its economic, social and cultural development. The Committee charged its Rapporteur with bringing up to date the 1974 report<sup>5</sup> and decided to resume discussion of the item at its 1977 session.

Consideration by the General Assembly

General aspects of the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples were considered by the General Assembly at plenary meetings held between 29 November and 17 December 1976, during which some 27 Members explained their position on the question.

The Assembly had before it the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work in 1976. Chapters of the Special Committee's report dealing with specific territories were allocated by the Assembly to its Fourth Committee for consideration and report.

In conformity with previous Assembly decisions and in accordance with established practice, representatives of the national liberation movements of colonial territories in Africa recognized by OAU participated as observers in the proceedings of the Fourth Committee relating to their respective countries.

Speaking in his capacity as Chairman of the Special Committee, on 29 November, the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania pointed out that, notwithstanding the very remarkable progress achieved in recent years, the overriding fact of which the United Nations should not lose sight was that there remained more than 12 million people scattered throughout the world for whom the Declaration represented an unfulfilled promise. Furthermore, no less than 7 million of those people were languishing under the most inhuman system of repression and discrimination at the hands of the white racist minority régimes in southern Africa.

The Chairman stated that the emergence of independent, sovereign African States in Mozambique and Angola had given a tremendous impetus to the determination of the African peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia to hasten their own liberation. For the illegal white minority rulers in Zimbabwe, it had meant the loss of two of their principal channels for evading the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council.

The United Nations had witnessed a logical extension of those developments in the course of 1976; the freedom fighters of Namibia and Zimbabwe had forged ahead in their struggle, making great sacrifices, both human and material, but determined to secure by all the means at their disposal their legitimate right to self-determination and independence. At the same time, the international community had witnessed an escalation of repressive violence perpetrated by the racist minority régimes stubbornly clinging to the maintenance of the status quo. Those régimes had not only intensified their aggression against the African people of Namibia and Zimbabwe but also had with equal vehemence sought to threaten the territorial integrity and security of independent African States. Thus, the peoples of Angola, Mozambique and Zambia had constantly become victims of aggression by those régimes.

It was significant, the Chairman stated, that acts of aggression against Mozambique, as well as an escalation of violence against Zimbabwean patriots, had continued unabated during the talks in Geneva concerning a transfer of power to the people of Zimbabwe, demonstrating without the slightest doubt that there had been no fundamental change of attitude on the part of the Ian Smith racist minority régime. In contrast, the decision of the Zimbabwe nationalist leaders to attend the Geneva talks fully demonstrated the willingness of the African people of Zimbabwe to attain independence on the basis of majority rule by less violent means, if that was still possible.

The United Kingdom, as the administering power, should demonstrate its preparedness to work effectively for the speedy attainment of an independent Zimbabwe under majority rule. The United Kingdom's unequivocal commitment to fix March 1978 as the latest date by which Zimbabwe would become independent, while at the same time pledging its co-operation to work with the transitional government for an earlier date of independence, was a step in the right direction, the Chairman observed, adding that the United Nations had to continue to render its unqualified support to the struggle of the people of Zimbabwe.

With regard to the situation in Namibia, he said that it was no less serious. There too, South Africa, after the ignominious ending of its aggression against Angola, had reinforced its military occupation and escalated its reign of terror against the Namibian people. In contemptuous disregard for United Nations decisions, it had continued in its policy of divide and rule, resorting to the stratagem of a so-called constitutional conference of hand-picked representatives and to proposals for a puppet government to give a semblance of validity to its continued domination of the territory. The international community had rightly rejected that manoeuvre and had insisted that any negotiation of the future had to be in accord with the principles laid down by the United Nations and conducted with the authentic representatives of the Namibian people, the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO). It was to be regretted that some Member States, despite that situation, continued to aid and abet the South African régime in its defiance of the United Nations by supplying it with the arms and military equipment which enabled the régime to perpetuate its illegal occupation of the international territory.

The Chairman of the Special Committee said that it was particularly regrettable that when the Security Council had considered the question in October 1976 (see pp. 769-72) it had been frustrated in taking appropriate measures as a result of vetoes by France, the United Kingdom and the United States. It was hoped that those three Council members would reconsider their position so as to work with the rest of the international community in adopting appropriate measures to arrest the dangerous situation unfolding in Namibia.

Referring to the conclusions of the Special Committee's ad hoc group of six members dispatched to Africa in April and May 1976 (see above), the Chairman said that two things had been abundantly clear: the need for intensified support and aid to the peoples concerned and their liberation movements, and the need to provide all possible assistance to Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia to help them cope with the massive influx of refugees and meet the serious economic consequences resulting from their strict observance of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council.

Referring to the Special Committee's endorsement of a proposal of the ad hoc group that the United Nations should organize during 1977 an international conference to mobilize world public opinion in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, the Chairman said that such a conference, which would be similar to the international conference held in Oslo, Norway, in 1973<sup>6</sup> and would be organized in co-operation with OAU, would be timely and constructive.

With regard to other colonial problems, particularly the territories in the Caribbean Sea and the Indian and Pacific Oceans, the Chairman stated that the past year had been both rewarding and frustrating. On the positive side was the emergence of another independent and sovereign State—Seychelles. In several other territories advances had been made which, though they fell short of the aims of the Declaration, had at least brought the territories a step closer to the final goal.

The Chairman of the Special Committee further stated that there was still a long road to be travelled and many obstacles to be overcome before the United Nations discharged the obligation placed upon it by the Declaration and the relevant articles of the Charter. That obligation would remain until the last vestige of colonialism had been eliminated. The United Nations should confront its responsibilities conscientiously and, during 1977, make a united effort to bring that goal closer to reality.

During the debate, the majority of the speakers expressed satisfaction with the significant progress made since the adoption of the Declaration on the granting of independence and stressed the effectiveness of the contribution made to that end by the national liberation movements and the United Nations. Although during the previous 16 years several millions of people had achieved independence, there still remained 12 million whose aspirations for independence had not been fulfilled and who lived under the colonial yoke. In the view of most of these speakers, it was incumbent upon the United Nations, by firmly supporting the struggle of the peoples in the remaining colonial territories, to ensure that the last phase in this process was concluded without further delay.

Many speakers stressed the gravity and explosiveness of the situation obtaining in southern Africa and some, in particular Bulgaria, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, India, Mali, Mauritius, Mongolia, Romania, the USSR, Yugoslavia and Zambia, considered it a serious threat to international peace and security.

Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Mali, Poland and Yugoslavia considered that one of the main obstacles to the implementation of the principle of self-determination and national independence continued to be the direct or indirect support given the colonial and racist régimes by a number of foreign companies and monopolies engaged in exploiting the natural and human resources of the territories.

Although most of the statements in the debate dealt primarily with the problems facing the colonial territories in Africa, many Members also referred to colonial territories in other parts of the world. Among those expressing their position in that regard were Afghanistan, Austria, China, Guinea, Hungary, Kenya, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mali, Mauritius, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia. While it was emphasized that all territories, regardless of size, resources and location, warranted the attention of the United Nations and its assistance in ensuring that their populations were accorded the right to determine their future, the view was expressed by some that, in the application to decolonization of its principles and procedures, the United Nations had to seek a variety of ways to fulfil its purposes. In this connexion, the United Kingdom emphasized that in each case it was the wishes of the people concerned that should be paramount, while Austria expressed the view that ties between a non-self-governing territory and an existing sovereign State were only one special aspect to be taken into account in determining the proper course of action; they could in no way override the right to self-determination, which remained the guiding principle.

Several speakers, including Afghanistan, Ghana, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mauritius and the United Kingdom, remarked that, as repeatedly demonstrated, the dispatch of visiting missions to colonial territories constituted the best means for the United Nations to satisfy itself that the wishes of the people concerned regarding their future status were taken into account.

For most of the speakers in the debate, the considerable progress made during the year towards extending the guarantees of the Declaration on granting independence to dependent peoples made it all the more imperative to explore every possible avenue for the extension of concrete assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, where, Austria observed, the intransigence and narrow-sightedness of the minority racist régimes threatened large-scale disorder and massive human suffering. In respect of those territories, a number of Members considered that only the implementation of comprehensive mandatory sanctions would bring down the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia, and that the situation in the territory would not change so long as there existed a lack of co-operation or political will in that direction. Some Member States, including Czechoslovakia, Guinea, Poland, the USSR and Zambia, expressed the view that the measures provided for under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter should be adopted in regard to South Africa.<sup>7</sup>

On 17 December 1976, the General Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 31/143, took a series of decisions on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

By the operative part of this resolution, the Assembly among other things:

(1) reaffirmed its 1960 resolution by which it had adopted the Declaration on the granting of independence<sup>8</sup> and its 1970 resolution by which it adopted a programme of action to implement the Declaration<sup>9</sup> and all other resolutions on decolonization, and called upon the administering powers to take all the necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

(2) declared once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid, the exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources, and the waging of colonial wars to suppress the national liberation movements of the colonial territories in Africa—was incompatible with the United Nations Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>10</sup> and the Declaration on the granting of independence and posed a serious threat to international peace and security;

(3) reaffirmed its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the granting of independence and the Human Rights Declaration;

(4) affirmed once again its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal;

(5) approved the report of the Special Committee and its programme of work for 1977;

(6) called upon all States, in particular the administering powers, and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to give effect to the recommendations in that report;

(7) condemned the intensified activities of foreign economic and other interests which impeded the implementation of the Declaration with respect to colonial territories, particularly in southern Africa;

(8) strongly condemned all collaboration in both the nuclear and military fields with the Government of South Africa and called upon all States concerned to refrain from extending to that Government, directly or indirectly, any facilities or collaboration which increased its nuclear and military potential;

(9) requested all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned, to withhold all assistance from South Africa and from the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those régimes;

(10) called upon the colonial powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial territories and to refrain from establishing new ones;

(11) urged all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned, to provide moral and material assistance to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe and, with respect to the other territories, requested the administering powers, in consultation with the Governments of the territories under their administration, to take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those territories;

(12) requested the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration on granting independence in all territories and, in particular:

(a) to formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism;

(b) to make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial territories that were likely to threaten international peace and security;

(c) to continue to examine compliance by Member States with the Declaration and other relevant resolutions on decolonization;

(d) to continue to pay particular attention to the small territories, including the sending of visiting missions as appropriate, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable their populations to exercise their right to self-determination, freedom and independence; and

(e) to take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization, in the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly as concerned the oppressed peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe; and

(13) called upon the administering powers to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and, in particular, to participate in its work relating to the territories under their administration and to permit the access of visiting missions to those territories in order to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants.

General Assembly resolution 31/143 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 121 to 2, with 8 abstentions, on the proposal of 49 Member States.

Explaining its negative vote on the resolution, the United States said it had reservations about a number of aspects of the text itself, as well as about portions of the report of the Special Committee, including the language on military activities and foreign economic interests. With regard to a decision by the Special Committee to take up the question of Puerto Rico again in 1977, the United States said that Puerto Rico was not a matter which fell within the purview of the Special Committee. The people of Puerto Rico were self-governing, as was recognized by the General Assembly in 1953, when it approved resolution 748(VIII),<sup>11</sup> and in 1971, when it decided not to inscribe Puerto Rico on its agenda. The United States policy was based on full acceptance of the principle of self-determination; in the exercise of their right to self-determination, the island's people had opposed independence for Puerto Rico and had selected a commonwealth relationship with the United States. This choice, which was made in 1952, was reaffirmed in a 1967 status referendum, and an election on 2 November 1976 provided further current evidence as to the wishes of the people of Puerto Rico. In view of these facts, the United States concluded, discussion of Puerto Rico by the Special Committee was an unwarranted interference in the affairs of the United States and Puerto Rico.

A number of other Members also expressed reservations on the text. Guatemala, for instance, said it could not accept certain political criteria expressed in the text which had no bearing on the real purpose of decolonization.

Australia considered that recourse to armed struggle must be made only as a last resort, and believed that the international community had a continuing obligation to explore fully the opportunities that, in Australia's view, still existed for a peaceful solution in Namibia and Zimbabwe.

Others opposing the provision affirming the legitimacy of all necessary means to exercise the right to self-determination and independence included Austria, Bolivia, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy and Norway—speaking also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Sweden. Austria and Ireland commented that they interpreted this provision to mean the use of all peaceful means in accordance with the Charter.

Some of these Members, as well as Japan, Portugal, Turkey and others, had reservations concerning the provision calling for the withdrawal of military bases. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom, for example, believed that the existence of military bases was not necessarily an obstacle to self-determination.

The United Kingdom also said it was a distortion of the truth to assert that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms posed a serious threat to international peace and security. That statement, while true in Southern Rhodesia, failed to discriminate between different territories and situations. The representative of Ireland also expressed reservations about the accuracy of that operative paragraph. So, too, did Japan, which said it found it difficult to support such a provision, as well as some others, but had voted for the resolution because it firmly supported its basic objective.

France explained that it had abstained because it did not agree with the general spirit of the resolution's provisions. Moreover, it did not believe foreign economic interests were necessarily impeding the independence and development of the territories concerned. Italy also had reservations on this provision.

Also on 17 December 1976, the General Assembly took decisions on the question of dissemination of information on decolonization. Among other things the Assembly:

(1) approved the chapter of the report of the Special Committee relating to publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

(2) reaffirmed the importance of effecting the widest possible dissemination of information on the evils and dangers of colonialism, on the determined efforts of the colonial peoples to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence and on the assistance being provided by the international community towards the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in all its forms;

(3) requested the Secretary-General to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal to publicize the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization and inter alia: (a) to continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles on decolonization through the Office of Public Information and the unit on information relating to decolonization; (b) to seek the full co-operation of the administering powers in the discharge of the aforementioned tasks; (c) to intensify the activities of the information centres, particularly in Western Europe; (d) to maintain a close working relationship with OAU; and (e) to enlist the support of non-governmental organizations in the dissemination of the relevant information; and

(4) invited all States, the specialized agencies and other governmental and non-governmental organizations to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of the information referred to above.

These decisions were taken when the General Assembly, by a recorded vote of 132 to 0, with 2 abstentions, adopted resolution 31/144, on the proposal of 53 States.

Also on 17 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which it decided to convene an International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia. The Assembly decided that the Conference would be held during 1977 to mobilize world-wide support for and assistance to the peoples of those territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence. It welcomed the preparedness of the Government of Mozambique to hold the Conference at Maputo and requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Special Committee and the United Nations Council for Namibia, to organize the Conference in consultation with OAU. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to give the widest possible publicity to the Conference through all the media at his disposal, including press releases, radio and television.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/145.

(For text of resolution 31/145, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS.)

In addition, the General Assembly, on 30 November 1976, adopted a resolution—31/34—concerning the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights.

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, in particular resolution 3481(XXX) of 11 December 1975, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Condemning the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans, in Namibia by the Government of South Africa through its persistent, illegal occupation of the international Territory, and in Zimbabwe by the illegal racist minority régime,

Deeply conscious of the pressing need to take all the necessary measures to bring about the speedy and complete elimination of the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly with respect to Namibia and Zimbabwe, where efforts to perpetuate illegal racist minority rule have brought untold suffering and bloodshed to the peoples of those Territories,

Strongly deprecating the policies of those States which, in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, continue to collaborate with the Government of South Africa and with the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia, thus perpetuating their domination of the peoples in the Territories concerned,

Noting that the success of the national liberation struggle and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in Africa,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee with a view to securing the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, in particular the important consultations undertaken by the Ad Hoc Group established by the Special Committee at its 1029th meeting on 1 April 1976, as well as the constructive results achieved as a consequence of the visiting missions to the British Virgin Islands and Tokelau,

Noting also with satisfaction the co-operation and active participation of the administering Powers concerned in the relevant work of the Special Committee, as well as the continued readiness of the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration, and deeply deploring the negative attitude of those administering Powers which, despite the repeated appeals addressed to them by the General Assembly and the Special Committee, persist in their refusal to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of the mandate entrusted to it by the Assembly,

Reiterating its conviction that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples in colonial Territories will be achieved with the greatest speed by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 1514(XV) and 2621(XXV) and all other resolutions on decolonization, and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all the necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

2. Declares once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid, the exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources, and the waging of colonial wars to suppress the national liberation movements of the colonial Territories in Africa—is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a serious threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the guiding principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1976, including the programme of work envisaged for 1977;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to give effect to the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee for the speedy implementation of the Declaration and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Condemns the intensified activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa;

8. Strongly condemns all collaboration in both the nuclear and military fields with the Government of South Africa and calls upon all States concerned to refrain from extending to that Government, directly or indirectly, any facilities or collaboration which increase its nuclear and military potential;

9. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of South Africa and from the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia until they restore to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the Territories by those régimes;

10. Calls upon the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones;

11. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe and, with respect to the other Territories, requests the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, to take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) in all Territories which have not yet attained independence and, in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

(b) To make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial Territories that are likely to threaten international peace and security;

(c) To continue to examine the compliance of Member States with the Declaration and with other relevant resolutions on decolonization, particularly those relating to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia;

(a) To continue to pay particular attention to the small Territories, including the sending of visiting missions thereto, as appropriate, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination, freedom and independence;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization, in the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly as concerns the oppressed peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe;

13. Calls upon the administering Powers to co-operate, or continue to co-operate, with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and, in particular, to participate in the work of the Committee relating to the Territories under their administration and to permit the access of visiting missions to the Territories in order to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the various resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

A/31/L.307Add.1-3. Algeria, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nigeria, Oman, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zambia: draft resolution.

Resolution 31/144, as proposed by 53 powers, A/31/L.30/ Add.1-3, adopted by Assembly on 17 December 1976, meeting 104, by recorded vote of 132 to 0, with 2 abstentions, as follows:

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question of publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, including in particular General Assembly resolution 3482(XXX) of 11 December 1975,

Reiterating the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the aims and purposes of the Declaration and mindful of the pressing need for taking all possible steps to acquaint world public opinion with all aspects of the problems of decolonization with a view to assisting effectively the peoples of the colonial Territories to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence,

Aware of the increasingly important role being played in the widespread dissemination of relevant information by a number of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question of publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

2. Reaffirms the importance of effecting the widest possible dissemination of information on the evils and dangers of colonialism, on the determined efforts of the colonial peoples to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence and on the assistance being provided by the international community towards the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in all its forms;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, having regard to the suggestions of the Special Committee, to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization and, inter alia:

(a) To continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles relating to the problems of decolonization through the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat and the unit on information relating to decolonization established in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 3164(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973 and, in particular, to continue to publish the periodical Objective: Justice and other publications, special articles and studies of the Office of Public Information and to select from among them appropriate material for wider dissemination by means of reprints in various languages;

(b) To seek the full co-operation of the administering Powers concerned in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To intensify the activities of all information centres, particularly those located in Western Europe;

(d) To maintain a close working relationship with the Organization of African Unity by holding periodic consultations and by systematically exchanging relevant information with that organization;

(e) To enlist the support of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization in the dissemination of the relevant information;

(f) To report to the Special Committee on the measures taken in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Invites all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of the information referred to in paragraph 2 above.

Implementation of the Declaration by specialized agencies and other associated international institutions

Consideration by the Special Committee

In 1976, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>12</sup> again examined the question of the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. The Committee considered this question at plenary meetings held between 31 August and 8 September.

The Special Committee had before it a report submitted by the Secretary-General containing information on the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant Assembly resolutions by the following specialized agencies and international institutions: the International Labour Organisation (ILO); the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO); the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); the World Health Organization (WHO); the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank); the International Monetary Fund (IMF); the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO); the Universal Postal Union (UPU); the International Telecommunication Union (ITU); the World Meteorological Organization (WMO); the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO); the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO); the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF); the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR); the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); and the World Food Programme (WFP).

During its discussion, the Committee took into account the views which had been expressed by the representatives of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and by representatives of the national liberation movements of the colonial territories concerned who participated in its work during the year.

The Special Committee also had before it a report by its Chairman on consultations which had taken place between him and the President of the Economic and Social Council, as well as a report of its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance to which it had allocated consideration of this matter. The Committee adopted the report of the Sub-Committee and approved its detailed conclusions and recommendations.

The Special Committee also—on 8 September—adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it:

- reaffirmed that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of the colonial peoples to attain independence entailed as a corollary the extension by the United Nations system of all necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements;

- expressed its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations that had continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations in implementing the relevant Assembly resolutions;

- expressed its concern that the assistance extended by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements was far from adequate in terms of the actual needs of those peoples;

- requested the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples in Africa struggling for liberation from colonial rule, to initiate or broaden contacts with them in consultation with OAU, and to review their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay;

- regretted that the World Bank and IMF had not taken the necessary measures towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the Assembly;

- urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to discontinue all support to the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

— noted with satisfaction the arrangements by several specialized agencies and organizations enabling representatives of the national liberation movements of the colonial territories in Africa to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to their countries and called upon those international institutions which had not done so to make the necessary arrangements without delay, including the requisite financial provisions, particularly to ensure that assistance projects of agencies and organizations were carried out to the benefit of the peoples concerned and their national liberation movements; and

— requested the General Assembly to recommend that Governments intensify their efforts in the organizations of which they were members in order to ensure full implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, according priority to providing aid on an emergency basis to colonial peoples and their national liberation movements, and urged that the heads of the agencies submit to the respective governing bodies concrete proposals for the full implementation of relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples in colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

The Committee adopted this resolution without objection.

Consideration by Economic and Social Council

The implementation by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples was considered in July and August 1976 by the Economic and Social Council. Among other things, the Council discussed the report of its President on this subject.

In his report, the Council President stated that he had held consultations with the Chairman of the General Assembly's Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration. The two presiding officers reviewed the results of a meeting between representatives of the agencies, the United Nations and the General Secretariat of OAU, held at Geneva, Switzerland, on 5 April 1976. They noted that the meeting had provided useful guidance to the agencies as to the priorities and procedures of OAU with regard to assistance to the national liberation movements in Africa, and had clarified a number of issues arising in that connexion.

The two presiding officers noted with satisfaction the closer contacts and liaison established by the organizations within the United Nations system with the national liberation movements and OAU. They agreed that the practice of dispatching multidisciplinary missions, in consultation with OAU, should continue in order that the needs of the peoples concerned in terms of specific assistance programmes could be identified and receive appropriate priority. At the same time, the two officers noted that the arrangements made by several agencies and organizations had resulted in the active and direct participation, in their relevant meetings, of representatives of the national liberation movements, thus contributing towards the effective consideration by the organizations concerned of measures in support of the colonial peoples.

They also noted with satisfaction that many agencies had adopted measures with a view to defraying all travel and other related expenses of such representatives invited to attend those proceedings. In that connexion they welcomed the fact that the United Nations Council for Namibia had been represented at a number of agency conferences and meetings and had become an associate member of some agencies.

The two presiding officers noted that measures adopted by a number of agencies to withhold all assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia continued to be in force. They agreed that the United Nations system of organizations should strengthen such measures so as to bring about the maximum isolation of those régimes until they renounced their policies of colonial and racial domination.

The President of the Council expressed deep appreciation for the valuable contribution made by the Special Committee's ad hoc group which was sent to Africa in support of the continuing endeavours of the people of Zimbabwe and Namibia (see preceding section). They were in full accord that the international community should continue to intensify its support for the peoples in the remaining colonial territories, especially Southern Rhodesia and Namibia, and in that context they considered the support of the major funding institutions within the United Nations system, such as the World Bank, IMF and UNDP, essential in securing the flow of funds required for the preparation of extended programmes of assistance.

On 3 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council took several decisions on the subject. Among other things, it endorsed the observations and suggestions contained in the Council President's report and recommended them for action by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. It also requested its President to continue his consultations with the Chairman of the Special Committee and to report thereon to the Council.

These decisions were set forth in Council resolution 2015(LXI), which was adopted, without a vote, on a proposal originally submitted in the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee by Afghanistan, Algeria, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Iran, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Kenya, Liberia, Malaysia, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Romania, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. The Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee had approved the text on 21 July 1976, also without a vote.

Consideration by the General Assembly

During its consideration of the item, the General Assembly had before it two reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. The Secretary-General reported, among other things, on the type of assistance the specialized agencies had extended to the national liberation movements in Africa during the period under review. He indicated that a number of specialized agencies had extended invitations to representatives of national liberation movements to attend meetings of the specialized agencies, whenever matters pertaining to their territories were being discussed.

The International Labour Organisation had reported that it continued to render assistance to colonial territories in Africa. Co-operation between ILO and OAU had been increasing, particularly with regard to assistance to the African liberation movements.

The Food and Agriculture Organization had indicated that possibilities for implementing agricultural training projects in Zambia, proposed by Zimbabwean liberation movements, were being pursued and that further research had been undertaken into the agrarian situation in Zimbabwe. Assistance to the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) in setting up farm training courses and agricultural projects in Zambia had been discussed by an FAO consultant with the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, representatives of SWAPO and the Zambian authorities. Further, FAO had stated that it had extended invitations to the national liberation movements recognized by OAU to attend the FAO Conference in 1975 and had allocated funds to cover their travel expenses.

The Governing Council of UNDP had requested the UNDP Administrator to do everything possible to ensure that assistance by UNDP and the executing agencies to African liberation movements recognized by OAU should be furnished rapidly and with maximum flexibility. In addition to the resources of the liberation movement trust fund, the Administrator had been authorized to use funds available in respect of undistributed indicative planning figures provided for future participants during 1977-1981, not exceeding $6 million.

Since 1970, UNESCO had stated, it had contributed in co-operation with OAU to the education of African refugees who had fled their country; such assistance had totalled $92,600 for 1975-1976. In addition, UNESCO had offered support with regard to literacy and post-literacy activities to liberation movements recognized by OAU. It had continued to associate the liberation movements closely with the preparation of UNDP/UNESCO assistance projects.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees had reported that its assistance projects in 1976 were mainly directed towards rural settlement and the provision of medical and educational facilities. Of the total of $83,800 obligated by UNHCR in 1975 for assistance to Namibian refugees, more than $48,000 was made available by the United Nations Council for Namibia. In 1975, a contribution of $100,000 was received from the Netherlands; a grant of $450,000 was made from the UNHCR Emergency Fund for refugees from Southern Rhodesia.

The World Health Organization had reported, among other things, that an over-all plan of work had been drawn up covering the needs of all the liberation movements in Africa recognized by OAU; it was foreseen that UNDP would allocate $600,000 for the three-year (1976-1978) duration of that project. The plan provided for the appointment of a project manager, four medical officers, five staff nurses and three assistant nurses, among other personnel.

The assistance of the United Nations Children's Fund to liberation movements had amounted to $1.8 million in 1975. In the United Republic of Tanzania, aid given to people under the care of liberation movements totalled $489,000, of which $76,000 was from special contributions. Total assistance for liberation movements provided to Zambia amounted to $376,000, of which $251,000 was financed by special contributions.

During the discussions in the Assembly's Fourth Committee, WHO reported that at a joint OAU/UNDP/UNICEF/WHO meeting in June 1976 at Geneva, which was also attended by liberation movements, those movements had confirmed their interest in a collective project for training and for the provision of emergency medical supplies. In consultation with OAU, preparations had been made to begin the multinational liberation movement health project early in September 1976, and it had been decided to establish it in the United Republic of Tanzania.

On 29 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution setting forth its decisions on the implementation of the Declaration by organizations related to the United Nations.

By the preamble, the Assembly, among other things taking into account the positions of the national liberation movements of the colonial territories in Africa as explained to the Special Committee and to its ad hoc group which visited a number of African countries in April and May 1976, reaffirmed the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to take all effective measures to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly by providing moral and material assistance on a priority basis to colonial peoples and their national liberation movements.

It noted with satisfaction the measures taken by some of the agencies and organizations, in particular WFP and UNDP, to provide assistance on a priority basis to the peoples of the territories formerly administered by Portugal.

The Assembly then expressed its appreciation to the General Secretariat of OAU for the continued co-operation and assistance extended to the organizations within the United Nations system in connexion with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly among other things approved the chapter of the Special Committee's report on the question and reaffirmed that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entailed the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation to those specialized agencies and organizations which had continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations in the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant Assembly resolutions, but expressed concern that such assistance was far from adequate in terms of actual needs.

It requested the specialized agencies and other organizations in the system to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples in Africa struggling for their liberation from colonial rule and, in particular, recommended that the organizations concerned initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with the colonial peoples in consultation with OAU and introduce greater flexibility in their procedures so as to extend the necessary aid without delay.

The Assembly urged once again that the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system take all necessary measures to withhold any assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia, discontinue all support to them until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those régimes.

It noted with satisfaction the arrangement by several specialized agencies and organizations which enabled representatives of national liberation movements recognized by OAU to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and called upon those international institutions which had not done so to make the necessary arrangements without delay.

The Assembly recommended that all Governments intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and international organizations of which they were members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence and other relevant United Nations resolutions, and that they accord priority to providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples in the colonial territories and to their national liberation movements.

Also, the Assembly urged the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations in the system to formulate, with the active co-operation of OAU, and submit as a matter of priority to their respective governing bodies or legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples in colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures to implement this resolution.

Finally, the Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee, appropriate measures for co-ordinating the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations in the system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly.

The Assembly adopted this resolution—31/30—by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 5 abstentions. It acted on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which had approved the text by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 5 abstentions, on 15 November 1976. The text was sponsored in the Fourth Committee by 49 Members.

At the time of the vote in the Fourth Committee, China pointed out that the World Bank and IMF had continued to refuse to implement the General Assembly's resolution of 25 October 1971<sup>13</sup> by which the Assembly had decided to restore all rights to the People's Republic of China and to expel the representatives of Chiang Kai-shek from the place they unlawfully occupied at the United Nations and in all the organizations related to it. China said that such a refusal could give the impression that there was more than one China, which was impossible.

The Netherlands said it attached great importance to the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies. However, it felt, among other things, that the arbitrary infringement of South Africa's right to participate in the work of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies was unjustified.

The United States commented that the ever-growing politicization of the specialized agencies was a dangerous trend, as it threatened to undermine the important technical and humanitarian work carried out by the agencies. It said it supported the extension of humanitarian assistance to the peoples in and refugees from the colonial territories but had reservations about calling on the agencies to extend all material assistance to liberation movements, as such requests were beyond the scope and purpose of the agencies.

Canada expressed the view that the specialized agencies and institutions dealing with health, education, emergency relief and technical assistance were especially competent to provide aid under programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements, while Denmark believed that more humanitarian, technical and cultural assistance should be provided to peoples struggling for self-determination. At the same time, Denmark said, proper consideration should be given to the status of the agencies and they should retain their universal character.

In the view of the Federal Republic of Germany, the introduction of political elements in the work of the specialized agencies would adversely affect the efficiency of their activities without really promoting the political issues.

The United Kingdom expressed serious reservations about the view taken in the resolution and in previous such resolutions concerning the relations between the General Assembly and the specialized agencies, which had their own responsibilities and constitutions. Further, it urged that greater consideration be given to the problems of small non-self-governing territories, many of which had suffered severe cutbacks in the assistance they received from the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies.

France said it believed that the specialized agencies should provide the necessary assistance to States achieving independence but it had serious reservations about the provisions in the resolution which assigned to the specialized agencies tasks beyond their competence.

While Belgium agreed with the general spirit of the resolution, one of the operative paragraphs contained some views and judgements regarding the specialized agencies which Belgium considered to be incompatible with the independence of those organizations; specifically, that was the case with IMF and the World Bank. Australia held similar views, and suggested that if Member States wanted IMF to withhold co-operation from South Africa, members of IMF should take a collective decision to that effect, within the framework of the Fund's regulations.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,"

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, contained in its resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, as well as all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Having examined the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Taking into account the positions of the national liberation movements of the colonial Territories in Africa on this item, as explained to the Special Committee and to the Ad Hoc Group established by the Committee at its 1029th meeting on 1 April 1976, which visited a number of African countries in May 1976, and conscious of the urgent and pressing need of the peoples concerned for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly in the provision of moral and material assistance on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements,

Noting with concern that, although progress has been maintained in the extension of assistance to refugees from the colonial Territories in Africa, the actions taken hitherto by the organizations concerned in the provision of assistance to the peoples of the Territories through their national liberation movements continue to remain inadequate to meet the urgent needs of these peoples,

Noting with satisfaction the measures initiated by some of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in particular the World Food Programme and the United Nations Development Programme, to provide assistance on a priority basis to the peoples of the Territories formerly administered by Portugal, and expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the initiative he has taken in that regard,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance extended by it to the organizations within the United Nations system in connexion with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Mindful of the necessity to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the organizations within the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations in the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

4. Expresses its concern that the assistance extended so far by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements is far from adequate in terms of the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

5. Regrets that the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund have not yet taken the necessary measures towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

6. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to render or continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples in Africa struggling for their liberation from colonial rule;

7. Recommends that the organizations concerned should initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with the colonial peoples in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, review their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects and introduce greater flexibility in these procedures so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

8. Urges once again the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia, to discontinue all support to them until they restore to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the Territories by those régimes;

9. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and organizations which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those international institutions which have not yet done so to follow this example and to make the necessary arrangements without delay;

10. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connexion, should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples in the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

11. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, having regard to the recommendations contained in paragraph 7 above, to formulate with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples in the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

12. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To prepare for submission to the relevant bodies concerned with related aspects of the present item, with the assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, a report on the action taken since the circulation of his previous report in implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, including the present resolution;

(b) To continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

13. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee, appropriate measures for co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

14. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine this question and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests

Consideration by the Special Committee

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>14</sup> continued in 1976 to examine activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of that Declaration in Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and in all other territories under colonial domination, and impeding efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa.

The matter was discussed at meetings held between 23 August and 13 September 1976 at which the Committee had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat containing information on economic conditions with particular reference to foreign economic interests in Southern Rhodesia, Namibia, Bermuda, the Cayman Islands and the Turks and Caicos Islands. The Committee also took into account the report of the ad hoc group which visited Africa during April and May 1976 (see p. 688).

The Executive Secretary of the Organization of

African Unity (OAU) outlined to the Committee OAU's plans to assist Angola, Mozambique and the Comoros in their efforts to resist the actions and pressures being exerted on them by foreign economic interests in that region.

During the debate on this question, a number of Committee members expressed profound concern that States with economic interests in the colonial territories had continued to disregard United Nations decisions and relevant resolutions calling for an end to such economic and other activities. The representative of Bulgaria commented that, on the contrary, the colonial powers and States whose companies and nationals were engaged in those activities, particularly in Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, continued to expand rather than decrease them, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of those territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence. Free of any restrictions, monopolies and other foreign concerns continued to deprive the colonial peoples of their natural resources and assisted the colonialist and racist régimes in their fight against national liberation movements. Certain Western States, he went on to say, were giving direct support and assistance to those régimes in southern Africa, thereby thwarting the process of decolonization.

The mineral wealth of Namibia had become more and more a deterrent to its political freedom, in the view of Sierra Leone. Namibia produced diamonds, copper, lead, uranium, zinc, tin and iron ore; in 1975, the area covered by mining concessions comprised one third of Namibia. The main investors in the base metals sector were Canada, South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States, the representative of Sierra Leone added. In addition, the exploitation of uranium had increased Namibia's strategic importance not only to South Africa but also to other countries having nuclear capability. Uranium investments in the territory were estimated at £750 million, which was more than all other investments in Namibia combined. This was a clear indication that foreign investors were extremely confident that South Africa did not intend to give up its illegal occupation of Namibia in the near future.

The representative of Sierra Leone noted further that the South African Government relied on African migrant labour in Namibia because it not only minimized capital expenditure on housing, schools and hospitals but also discouraged trade unions and political activity while simultaneously depressing wages. On an average, whites received 18 times the wages paid to Africans for doing the same jobs, not including non-cash benefits such as housing, free schooling and hospital and recreational facilities, which only whites enjoyed. In an attempt to improve the plight of the African labourers, the representative said, an agreement was reached during a conference in March 1976 that the minimum wage should be 54 rand a month plus benefits. Without benefits such as housing, however, wages should be increased to R106 a month. Despite that decision, the South West African Agricultural Union openly declared that it would not adhere to the regulations on minimum wages. Thus, it could be seen that African wages would remain low in order to encourage foreign investment. Existing legislation prohibited Africans from forming labour unions, from striking or from changing jobs without permission.

The representative of Sierra Leone also commented on the situation in the Cayman Islands and in Bermuda. In the former, the demand for hotels, commercial buildings and dwellings had led to a rapid expansion of the construction industry. Foreign financial companies of Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States had made huge investments in that industry. Those foreign companies must have had strong assurances of the continuation of the status quo to have invested such huge sums in the islands, he observed.

In Bermuda, stricter measures instituted in 1972 on the acquisition of land by aliens had resulted in a downward trend in the building industry. However, the tourist industry earned 144 million Bermudian dollars in 1975, from which foreign businessmen profited, thereby frustrating efforts by Bermudians to achieve independence.

International finance ranked next in Bermuda's economy, the representative observed. In 1971, he said, there were 2,250 international finance companies operating in the territory, doing $B 30 million worth of business involving fund administration, insurance, investment, shipping, trading and trust management. These facts, he declared, gave a clear indication of how certain powers were economically involved in the territories.

Speaking of Southern Rhodesia, the representative of Mali observed that the agrarian policy carried out by the white minority régime forced Africans to leave their land to become a source of labour for European agricultural developers and for foreign economic interests. He cited illustrations of the inhuman conditions to which these labourers were subjected.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic said that in the industrial sector in Southern Rhodesia, the illegal régime paid high salaries to Europeans to promote the immigration of whites into the territory. The only salaries which those companies had been able to depress in order to continue to pay dividends to their stockholders since the imposition of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia had been those of African workers. Statistics showed that foreign companies operating in southern Africa did not devote any of their income to improving the living standards of the Africans, the representative went on to say. More than 50 per cent of the children died before the age of 10 due to lack of medical services and care. Thus, in spite of the fact that United Nations resolutions were clear and unequivocal in reaffirming the inalienable right of the peoples in colonial territories to self-determination and independence and their right to dispose freely of their natural resources, foreign companies continued to exploit the natural and human resources of those territories.

The USSR representative stated that more than 80 per cent of the mining industry in Southern Rhodesia was controlled by South African, United Kingdom and United States monopolies disguised as South African companies, thus enabling the illegal régime to circumvent the sanctions imposed by the Security Council.

Namibia's economy, he continued, was also dominated by foreign companies; these were based in the Federal Republic of Germany, South Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States and some other Western countries. The lion's share of Namibia's production left the country in the form of profits for foreign companies. In spite of the United Nations resolutions condemning all ties with South Africa, there was still an influx of capital from Western companies to Namibia and South Africa. In 1975, he added, more than one third of Namibia's territory was granted by the racist régime to foreign mining corporations as concessions.

The representative of Yugoslavia maintained that the increasing solidarity of the international community with the peoples under the colonial yoke was of special importance to the Special Committee. This solidarity had been demonstrated by the statements at the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August 1976.

The representative of Cuba asserted that the labour practices and policies of the colonial powers and of the companies operating in the territories had created economic practices aimed at establishing political control, which were an obstacle to the aspirations of the masses of the countries. Furthermore, those powers used every means available to show the people that the existing system was the only feasible one leading to development. Cuba believed that the reports of the Special Committee on foreign economic interests were of great value for the work of the United Nations.

On 13 September 1976, the Special Committee adopted a resolution by which it:

— reaffirmed the right of peoples of dependent territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

— reiterated that any administering or occupying power which deprived the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinated their rights and interests to foreign economic and financial interests violated its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations;

— reaffirmed that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the entrenchment of colonial domination over the territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in the colonial territories of southern Africa constituted a major obstacle to political independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

— condemned the foreign economic and other activities in the colonial territories as impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

— condemned the policies of Governments that continued to support or collaborate with foreign economic and other interests engaged in exploiting the natural and human resources of the territories;

— strongly condemned the nuclear collaboration of certain Western countries with South Africa in providing the racist régime with equipment and technology that increased its nuclear capability, and called on the Governments concerned to refrain from extending facilities directly or indirectly to enable South Africa to undertake the production of uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials or reactors;

— called once again upon all Governments which had not done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction which owned and operated enterprises in colonial territories, particularly in Africa, that were detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that ran counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those territories;

— condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions, as being contrary to the obligations they assumed under the Charter;

— requested all States to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to those régimes which used such assistance to repress the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements;

— called upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial or trade relations with South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into economic, financial or other relations with South Africa, acting on behalf of or concerning Namibia, which might lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that territory;

— strongly condemned the policy of South Africa, which, in violation of the relevant United Nations resolutions and in open contravention of its specific obligations under Article 25 of the Charter,<sup>15</sup> continued to collaborate with the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia, and called upon that Government to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

— invited all Governments and organizations within the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order<sup>16</sup> as well as of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,<sup>17</sup> to ensure, in particular, that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial territories over their natural resources was fully respected and safeguarded;

— called upon the administering and occupying powers to review the wage systems prevailing in the territories under their administration with a view to applying in each territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without discrimination; and

— requested the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat to undertake a sustained, wide publicity campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources and the exploitation of the indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and the support they rendered to the colonialist and racist régimes.

Statements in explanation of vote were made by the representatives of Norway and Australia. Norway said that while it subscribed to the resolution as a whole, the text contained generalizations which reflected opinions and concepts it did not share. The resolution also contained requests which, in Norway's view, fell exclusively within the competence of the Security Council. Australia commented that the resolution once again failed to discriminate between those activities and policies, both governmental and private, which were prejudicial and those which might be beneficial to the welfare, advancement and genuine interests of the people of the colonial territories concerned. While Australia could have supported many of the recommendations on matters relating to southern Africa, certain exaggerated and partisan themes extraneous to the proper objectives of the Special Committee had forced it to abstain.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The question of the activities of foreign economic and other interests in colonial territories was discussed by the General Assembly's Fourth Committee, on the basis of the Special Committee's report. The majority of Members taking part in the debate expressed support for the report. Iraq, for instance, said that the ruthless exploitation carried on in Zimbabwe by the Ian Smith clique, the transnational corporations and the foreign interests which supported him was well known. The people of Namibia were also suffering under illegal occupation by the South African régime, which was using the territory as a base for launching attacks against neighbouring African States. That régime was using every means to maintain its position of dominance and was applying the bantustan policy in order to divide the people of South Africa by means of totally unrepresentative institutions. It was regrettable that the corporations and institutions of Western countries were contributing to the exploitation and plunder of Namibia's natural and human resources and that the Governments of those countries had not advised their nationals not to participate in such illegal activities.

The Syrian Arab Republic said the information supplied by representatives of the liberation movements of southern Africa also provided proof of the activities of foreign interests in the area. Reference to the opening of a uranium mine in Namibia by a British firm and to a recently concluded contract with a French firm for the construction of a nuclear power station had been made by the representative of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO).

Kenya condemned the exploitation of the human and natural resources of colonial territories by foreign interests, which, it said, were accumulating and repatriating huge profits to the detriment of the inhabitants of those territories, particularly in South Africa.

The representatives of Benin, the Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR held that the United Nations had to intensify its measures against transnational enterprises and cut off all economic and financial assistance to colonial and racist régimes. The Assembly should endorse all the Special Committee's recommendations, resolutions and decisions that denounced foreign activities and interests contrary to the desire for liberation and independence of the oppressed peoples. A similar view was expressed by Hungary.

zania, the current political evolution in southern Africa confirmed beyond any doubt that the racist régime of South Africa and the racist rebel régime in Southern Rhodesia had survived because of the continued economic support they received from their allies. Many companies from Western countries had invested in Namibia in defiance of United Nations resolutions; the report of the Special Committee identified some of those companies as coming from Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States.

China said that the high rates of illiteracy and infant mortality prevalent among the indigenous population, the discriminatory low wages paid to African workers and the exclusion of Africans from most of the fertile areas starkly revealed the absurdity and hypocrisy of the assertions of imperialism, colonialism and racism that foreign investment was in the interests of the indigenous people and could help them to shake off their backwardness and lead them along the path to prosperity.

Pakistan noted that with the gradual exposure of the exploitative nature of the activities of foreign economic interests, enlightened public opinion was starting to ask for restraints on the operations of the companies involved. It was necessary to intensify the information campaign so that the people of the countries concerned would know that enterprises in their countries were responsible for propping up the colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa.
