The German Democratic Republic said that, notwithstanding Security Council sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, certain United States corporations were continuing to violate those sanctions by importing chromium from that territory for the arms industry. Many imperialist States, in collaboration with South Africa, were ignoring Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia<sup>18</sup> of the United Nations Council for Namibia in order to exploit Namibia's uranium resources. As a part of that collaboration, the régime of B. John Vorster in South Africa was acquiring specialized knowledge for the development of a nuclear capacity despite the fact that the General Assembly had called on all States to oppose South Africa's development of nuclear technology.

Bulgaria said that the role of foreign monopolies in the numerous small colonial territories in the Pacific Ocean, the Caribbean and other regions was also harmful. Despite numerous appeals by the United Nations, the administering powers had failed to limit the sale of land to foreign corporations, and the populations of those territories were being deprived of the right of ownership of their land and of sovereignty over their natural resources.

Cuba's representative contended that the real objective of the companies in the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom, France and Japan—which, in its opinion, were acting with the tacit consent of their Governments—was to exploit the resources of Namibia and Zimbabwe with complete disregard for the living standards of the indigenous populations. Their interest lay in maintaining the enslavement of the peoples of those territories in order to guarantee a supply of cheap labour and strategic raw materials for their own benefit. Reacting to the progress achieved by the patriots in Namibia and Zimbabwe and faced with the inevitability of eventual black majority rule, he said, the whites in South Africa had devised a scheme for creating small States which would in theory be self-governing and independent, although racially segregated within a multinational State. In other words, colonialism would be officially institutionalized. The first of those new colonies would be the territory of Transkei, where foreign economic and other interests would continue to operate with even greater freedom under cover of the so-called independence granted by the Pretoria régime. The international community had to be vigilant in the face of such manoeuvres.

The USSR noted that in South Africa, foreign monopolies continued to earn high profits on their capital investments. That was why, despite United Nations resolutions condemning any relations with South Africa and despite the sanctions imposed by the Security Council on Southern Rhodesia, Western capital continued to be invested in the economies of South Africa and the territories of southern Africa. In Southern Rhodesia, more than 80 per cent of the mining companies were controlled by South African, United Kingdom and United States monopolies. The predominant position of the imperialist monopolies in the South African economy enabled them to intervene actively in the politics of that country. Thus, the role played by foreign capital was not limited to economic objectives but had political and strategic implications as well.

Ghana considered that the report of the Special Committee provided evidence of a long-established pattern of activities by foreign economic interests; this had led to the impoverishment of the indigenous population, which had been reduced to a mere reservoir of illiterate, cheap labour for foreign companies, with no opportunity for advancement to a social level at which it would become aware of and demand its basic human rights. Thus the feeling of inadequacy and the uncritical willingness to submit to white colonial domination, racism and exploitation were perpetuated.

Mexico commented that in Bermuda, the Cayman Islands and the Turks and Caicos Islands foreign economic and other interests remained a significant obstacle to the granting of independence to the people.

Others, including Ethiopia, India, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Oman, Peru, the Sudan, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Yugoslavia, also denounced the role which they said foreign monopolies played in perpetuating the colonial system.

The United Kingdom said it was seeking to bring about early advance towards majority rule in Southern Rhodesia by convening a constitutional conference. In Bermuda, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the Cayman Islands, United Kingdom policy was to encourage the development of healthy political constitutions. If non-self-governing territories, often with few natural resources of their own, were to proceed to the exercise of self-determination, they would need economic development from whatever source it came. Accordingly, as administering power, the United Kingdom welcomed foreign economic investment in its remaining dependent territories so long as it met the requirements of their development strategy in each case. It was not the United Kingdom Government that decided those matters; the local democratically elected Governments of those dependent territories actively encouraged well-planned investment. At the same time, they had enacted regulations to ensure that such investment was in accordance with their national priorities and that jobs were given to their own citizens. They also regulated the sale of land, as could be seen in the report of the Special Committee's 1975 visiting mission to Montserrat.

On 22 October 1976, the Fourth Committee approved a draft resolution concerning the question, which was subsequently adopted by the General Assembly on 5 November as its resolution 31/7. By this resolution, the Assembly took the following decisions, among others.

It reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests.

It reaffirmed that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the entrenchment of colonial domination over the territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests currently operating in the colonial territories of southern Africa constituted a major obstacle to political independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those territories by the indigenous inhabitants.

It condemned the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial territories impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination, and it also condemned the Governments which continued to collaborate with those foreign economic interests.

The Assembly strongly condemned the collaboration in both nuclear and military fields between the racist minority régime of South Africa and all countries, in particular France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the United Kingdom and the United States, which supplied that régime with nuclear and military equipment and technology, thus increasing its nuclear and military potential, and it called upon all Governments, in particular the five named above, to refrain from extending facilities, directly or indirectly, to the racist minority régime of South Africa, enabling it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment.

The Assembly called on Governments that had not done so to take action to put an end to the activities of their nationals and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction operating enterprises detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of the territories.

The Assembly also condemned all Governments violating the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council against the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions, as being contrary to the obligations assumed by them under Article 25 of the Charter.

It then requested all States to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to régimes which used such assistance to repress the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements, and called again on all States to discontinue relations with South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from relations lending support to South Africa's illegal occupation of that territory. In addition it condemned the racist minority régime in South Africa which continued to collaborate with the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia and called on it to cease such collaboration.

The Assembly, further, called on all Governments and bodies in the United Nations system to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial territories over their natural resources was fully respected.

It also called upon the administering powers to abolish every discriminatory and unjust wage system that prevailed in the territories under their administration and to apply in each territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination.

Finally, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to undertake, through the Office of Public Information, a sustained and wide publicity campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources and the exploitation of the indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and the support they rendered to the colonialist and racist régimes, and it asked the Special Committee to continue to examine this question.

Resolution 31/7 was adopted by a recorded vote of 93 to 9, with 19 abstentions. The Fourth Committee approved the text by a recorded vote of 102 votes to 9, with 19 abstentions. The following Members sponsored the draft: Algeria, Benin, Burundi, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, Kenya, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Zambia.

A number of Members spoke in explanation of vote. Canada considered that most developing countries could offer their people a satisfactory standard of living only with the help of foreign as well as domestic capital, the transfer of technologies which enabled human and natural resources to be developed, and the expansion and liberalization of trade.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany said that it was entirely unjustified to mention his country in the context of nuclear military co-operation with South Africa. He wished to reiterate emphatically that there was no co-operation between his Government and South Africa in the field of uranium enrichment.

Israel denied any nuclear collaboration with South Africa and said such allegations were completely without foundation.

The United Kingdom rejected the view that foreign economic interests were by definition detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of non-self-governing territories. Furthermore, it was opposed to apartheid and it did not therefore sanction the export to South Africa of any nuclear material, equipment or technology which could contribute to the development of a military nuclear capacity in that country.

Japan also was among those which rejected the view that all activities of foreign economic and other interests were prejudicial to the social and economic interests of the indigenous peoples and impeded their achievement of self-determination and independence.

The United States said it opposed the resolution as a whole because of its biased character and its sweeping generalizations. Misleading statements concerning the nature of the activities of foreign economic interests and investment made under the imprimatur of the United Nations for propaganda purposes ran counter to the welfare of the colonial peoples themselves, damaged the reputation of the Organization and disparaged the untiring efforts made by the United States to contribute to the self-determination of peoples throughout the world.

France did not believe that the presence of foreign economic interests in the colonial territories impeded the evolution of those countries towards independence. On the contrary, it considered that economic assistance, the transfer of technology and manpower training promoted a political awakening of consciousness among the population and that foreign investment in some sectors was essential to economic development. The resolution took no account of those factors but made sweeping generalizations that foreign interests in colonial territories impeded their evolution towards independence.

Australia said it did not consider justified the imprecise and exaggerated wording which appeared in the operative paragraph referring to nuclear and military collaboration with South Africa. That paragraph contained a number of ill-defined and unsubstantiated accusations which did not conform to the report of the Special Committee. The opposition aroused by that paragraph meant that the resolution would lack authority and would console only one Government—the Government of South Africa.

Sweden, on behalf also of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway, said that condemnation of the policies of explicitly named Governments when the accusations were not based on incontrovertible facts was unacceptable to the Nordic countries.

A number of other Member States, although voting in favour of the resolution, expressed reservations on the paragraphs referring to nuclear and military collaboration between South Africa and some Western and other countries, as they considered the allegations therein to be unsubstantiated. Among these States were Bolivia, Fiji, Greece, Iran, Thailand, Turkey and Uruguay.

The representative of Senegal, responding to these and other expressions, said that the sponsors of the resolution were surprised by the intemperate nature of some speeches, many of which they considered downright aggressive. It was common knowledge that the subject-matter of the resolution had been raised many times and that oral appeals had been made to the countries named in the resolution to change their positions, but they had not done so. The sponsors had therefore decided to go a step further and exert greater pressure on those countries by naming them.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa,"

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to this question,

Taking into consideration the parts of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia relating to this question,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and its resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the item,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming that any economic or other activity which impedes the implementation of the Declaration and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories violates the political, economic and social rights and interests of the peoples of the Territories and is therefore incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Noting with profound concern that the colonial Powers and certain States, through their activities in the colonial Territories, have continued to disregard United Nations decisions related to the item and that they have failed to implement, in particular, General Assembly resolutions 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 and 3398(XXX) of 21 November 1975, by which the Assembly called upon the colonial Powers and those Governments which had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in order to put an end to enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are owned by their nationals or bodies corporate under their jurisdiction, whenever such enterprises are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, and to prevent new investments which run counter to such interests.

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, particularly in southern Africa, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the support which the racist minority régime of South Africa and the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia continue to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests which are collaborating with them in their exploitation of the natural and human resources of, and in the further entrenchment of their illegal and racist domination over, the international Territory of Namibia and the Non-Self-Governing Territory of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe), respectively,

Deeply concerned at the growing investments of foreign capital in the production of uranium and military equipment and the extent of the nuclear and military collaboration between the racist minority régime of South Africa and some Western and other countries, in particular France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, in providing the Pretoria régime with equipment and technology, which increases its nuclear and military capability and reflects the intensified support of foreign interests in South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as South Africa's own growth as a nuclear and military Power,

Concerned also at the fact that foreign economic, financial and other interests continue to deprive the indigenous populations of other colonial Territories, including those in the Caribbean and Pacific Ocean regions, of their rights over the wealth of their countries, and at the continued loss of ownership of land by the inhabitants of the Territories as a result of the unwillingness of the administering Powers to restrict the sale of land to foreigners,

Conscious of the continued need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of the natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories, particularly in Africa,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power which deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the entrenchment of colonial domination over the Territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories of southern Africa constitute a major obstacle to political independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

4. Condemns the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial Territories that impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

5. Condemns the Governments which continue to support or collaborate with those foreign economic and other interests engaged in exploiting the natural and human resources of the Territories, thus violating the political, economic and social rights and interests of the indigenous peoples and obstructing the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) in respect of those Territories;

6. Strongly condemns the collaboration in both nuclear and military fields between the racist minority régime of South Africa and all countries, in particular France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, which continue to supply that régime with nuclear and military equipment and technology, thus increasing its nuclear and military potential, and calls upon all Governments, in particular France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the United Kingdom and the United States, to refrain from extending facilities, directly or indirectly, to the racist minority régime of South Africa enabling it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

7. Calls once again upon all Governments which have not done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction who own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

8. Condemns all Governments that violate the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council against the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions, as being contrary to the obligations assumed by them under Article 25 of the Charter;

9. Requests all States to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to those régimes which use such assistance to repress the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

10. Calls once again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial or trade relations with South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into economic, financial or other relations with South Africa, acting on behalf of or concerning Namibia, which may lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that Territory;

11. Strongly condemns the racist minority régime of South Africa which, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and in open contravention of its specific obligations under Article 25 of the Charter, continues to collaborate with the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia, and calls upon that Government to cease immediately all forms of collaboration with the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia;

12. Invites all Governments and organizations within the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, to ensure, in particular, that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

13. Calls upon the administering Powers to abolish every discriminatory and unjust wage system which prevails in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each

Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, through the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat, a sustained and wide publicity campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources and the exploitation of the indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and the support they render to the colonialist and racist régimes;

15. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued during 1976 to grant scholarships to persons from Namibia, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia for education and training outside their own countries. In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 13 December 1974,<sup>19</sup> assistance under the Programme was also made available for a transitional period—at the request of the Governments concerned—for the inhabitants of the territories covered by the Programme that attained independence during 1974-1975. Scholarships for inhabitants of territories formerly under Portuguese administration were no longer approved in 1976, but scholarships granted in previous years were continuing until completion of the course of study for which they had been granted.

In his report to the General Assembly on the progress of the Programme, covering the period from 1 November 1975 to 22 October 1976, the Secretary-General stated that 31 States had contributed $1,420,800 to the Programme, and pledges from 10 Member States, which totalled $194,954, were outstanding. Contributions to the Programme since its inception in 1967 amounted to $9,707,260. In addition, scholarships for study in their own countries were offered by 20 States: Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Israel, Jamaica, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mauritius, Nigeria, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, the Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and the USSR.

As at 30 September 1976, the total number of scholarship holders was 1,222, including 230 from Angola, 24 from Cape Verde, 38 from Guinea-Bissau, 45 from Mozambique, 163 from Namibia, 12 from Sao Tome and Principe, 347 from South Africa and 363 from Southern Rhodesia.

On 29 November 1976, the General Assembly, without objection, adopted resolution 31/31, by which, inter alia, it considered that the Programme had been a significant and worth-while effort of the international community, and that its continuation and expansion was desirable to meet increased needs arising from recent developments in the territories concerned. It expressed its appreciation to all those who had made voluntary contributions to the Programme, commended the Secretary-General and the Programme's Advisory Committee for strengthening and expanding the Programme and appealed once again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions.

Questions concerning individual territories

The following pages give brief accounts of the decisions taken on various individual territories in 1976 by the General Assembly and by its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>20</sup> (See also other chapters of this section for details on questions concerning Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.)

For each of the territories considered, the Special Committee had before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat containing information on action previously taken and on the latest developments concerning the territory. The working papers, and the Special Committee's report covering the individual territories, were submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-first session, which opened in September 1976, for consideration.

On 1 December, the Assembly adopted a number of decisions regarding the various territories.

American Samoa

The Special Committee, on 20 August 1976, approved the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning American Samoa—administered by the United States—and endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein.

<sup>20</sup>See Y.U.N., 1960, pp. 49-50, resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing text of Declaration.

The Special Committee expressed its appreciation for the co-operation of the administering power in participating actively in the work of the Committee, thereby enabling it to conduct a more informed and meaningful examination of the territory, with a view towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence. The Committee noted a decision to hold a special referendum, on 31 August 1976, on the question of the proposed popular election of the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor of the territory. It noted with satisfaction that the referendum would not be held simultaneously with other elections in the territory, as had been the case with some previous referendums, thus enabling the people of the territory to focus their attention exclusively on that question.

The Committee believed that the eligibility requirements for voting appeared to impede the rights of some 60,000 American Samoans living abroad and urged the administering power, in consultation with the Government of the territory, to consider reviewing the absentee ballot procedure.

The Committee noted with interest a statement of the administering power that during 1975 the economy of the territory began to show signs of slow but steady improvement. It urged the administering power to provide the territory with a safe and secure water supply system and a reliable electric power system. The Special Committee also suggested that communication and understanding between it and the American Samoans would be facilitated if a United Nations visiting mission could visit the territory.

Following its consideration of the chapter of the Special Committee's report on American Samoa, the Assembly approved the chapter and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the territory to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration. It also reaffirmed its conviction that questions of territorial size, geographical location and limited resources should not delay implementation of the Declaration for American Samoa and it called upon the administering power, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people, to continue to take all the necessary steps to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in the Declaration.

The Assembly also called upon the administering power to take all possible steps to diversify the economy of the territory and to work out for it concrete programmes of assistance and economic development.

The Assembly then requested the administering power to consider favourably inviting a United Nations mission to visit American Samoa to observe conditions there. It urged the administering power, with the co-operation of the Government of American Samoa, to safeguard the people's enjoyment of their natural resources by taking effective measures which guaranteed their rights to own and dispose of those resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development.

The Assembly requested the administering power to continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of the territory. It requested the Special Committee to continue to seek the best ways and means for the implementation of the Declaration with respect to American Samoa, including the possible dispatch of a mission in consultation with the administering power, and to report thereon in 1977.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/55, adopted on 1 December 1976 without objection. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which approved the text on 18 November, also without objection. The sponsors of the resolution were Australia, Grenada, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Sierra Leone and the United Republic of Tanzania.

During the discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United States while supporting the resolution, felt concern at the fact that the text did not refer to status alternatives other than independence, which was only one of the possible results of an act of self-determination, since there were indications that the people of American Samoa wished to maintain their relationship with the United States. The United States said it was considering the question of inviting a visiting mission to the territory. It noted, however, that such a decision was entirely within its own discretionary power.

New Zealand said that American Samoa had taken a significant step forward in August 1976 by showing itself to be in favour of the election of its Governor and Lieutenant-Governor. It reiterated the view that a visiting mission would be as instructive for the Special Committee as it would be helpful to the administering power and the inhabitants of the territory.

Belize

On 10 September 1976, the Special Committee decided, without objection, to transmit to the General Assembly the working paper prepared by the Secretariat in order to facilitate the Assembly's consideration of the question and, subject to any directives which the Assembly might give in that connexion, to consider the item the following year.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Belize to self-determination and independence, and reaffirmed that the inviolability and territorial integrity of Belize had to be preserved.

The Assembly called upon all States to respect the right of the people of Belize to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity, to facilitate the attainment of their goal of a secure and early independence and to refrain from any action that would threaten the territorial integrity of Belize. It also called upon the Government of the United Kingdom, as administering power, acting in close consultation with the Governments of Belize and Guatemala, to pursue vigorously their negotiations in accordance with the principles set forth in its resolution of 8 December 1975,<sup>21</sup> in order to reach an early conclusion.

The Assembly requested the two Governments concerned to report to it in 1977 on such agreements as might have been reached in the negotiations.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/50, adopted by a roll-call vote of 115 to 8, with 15 abstentions. The Fourth Committee had approved the text on 17 November 1976 by a recorded vote of 111 to 9, with 15 abstentions, on a proposal by 53 Member States.

(For list of sponsors, text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

During the discussions, which took place mainly in the Fourth Committee, Guatemala said that the resolution before the Committee was merely a sterile reiteration of the Assembly's 1975 resolution. It was inadmissible in Guatemala's view that, at the advanced stage reached in the negotiations, efforts were being made to ensure their failure by introducing an absurd text. Guatemala had always hoped for direct negotiations in an atmosphere of good faith and respect for the principles which must inspire good relations between States. Under the terms of the resolution, the General Assembly would be interfering illegally in the current process of international negotiations. Guatemala would have preferred a moderate resolution taking note of the current negotiations between the parties and urging them to settle the dispute over Belize as soon as possible.

Guatemala had virtually lost hope that a final settlement of the dispute would be reached within a reasonable length of time, given the manoeuvres aimed at favouring one group of nations to the detriment of others. However, it still had faith in the principle of pacific settlement of disputes through the measures indicated in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>22</sup> It emphasized that its participation in the vote on the resolution did not imply that it accepted the competence and jurisdiction of the Committee with respect to the negotiations. It had taken part in the vote only to demonstrate its respect for the Organization and its solidarity with the countries that had voted against the resolution; for its own part it considered the resolution null and void and did not feel in any way bound by it.

Trinidad and Tobago, speaking also on behalf of Barbados, Guyana and Jamaica, said that it was the duty of the Assembly to ensure that the right of the people of Belize to self-determination was upheld, taking into account some basic factors. It considered that the Declaration on the granting of independence applied fully to Belize; this had been reaffirmed by the Assembly in numerous resolutions and decisions. The unfounded claim of Guatemala to the territory had denied the people of Belize their right to independence. The solution of the problem rested on negotiations between the United Kingdom and Guatemala to resolve their differences, but at the same time such negotiations had to respect fully the freely expressed wishes of the people of Belize for self-determination, independence and territorial integrity.

The United Kingdom said that it had voted in favour of the resolution and that a further round of talks between Guatemala and the United Kingdom, in close consultation with the Government of Belize, would take place in the near future. It would do its best to ensure that the negotiations were successful before the next session of the Assembly.

The United Kingdom Government did not agree that the Declaration could justify an attempt to deprive the people of Belize, a dependent territory, of their right to self-determination, and neither the United Kingdom nor Belize had ever accepted the argument that Belize had been a part of Guatemala.

Sweden said that the people of Belize had made it known that they aspired to independence, which the colonial power was entirely willing to grant. It appreciated that Guatemala had a special interest in developments concerning Belize, and the United Nations had also recognized the situation by asking for negotiations to meet that interest. Without trying to pass judgement on the claims of Guatemala, the Assembly by the current resolution reaffirmed the inviolability of the territorial integrity of Belize, which was fully in keeping with the provisions of the Declaration.

Bolivia, El Salvador, Nicaragua and Paraguay, which voted against the resolution, were among those which stressed the importance of continued negotiations for a peaceful settlement of the question. Others expressing the same view included the Dominican Republic, Italy and Mexico.

British Virgin Islands

On 18 February 1976, the Special Committee referred the question of the British Virgin Islands to its Sub-Committee on Small Territories for consideration and report.

Earlier, on 10 February, the Chairman had informed the Special Committee that the United Kingdom, the administering power, had invited the Committee to send a three-member visiting mission to the British Virgin Islands. The mission was to be composed of Fiji, Sierra Leone and the Syrian Arab Republic.

On 10 September 1976, the Special Committee took up the question and heard a report from the representative of Sierra Leone, Chairman of the visiting mission which had visited the territory between 2 and 9 May.

On 17 September, the Special Committee adopted, without objection, a resolution concerning the British Virgin Islands by which, among other things, it approved the report of the visiting mission and the conclusions and recommendations contained therein.

The Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the British Virgin Islands to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence. It requested the administering power to continue to take all necessary measures to expedite the process of decolonization in the territory in accordance with the relevant provisions of the United Nations Charter and the Declaration.

The Committee noted that the amended Constitution of the British Virgin Islands, which was to come into force later in 1976, marked an important step in the achievement of the decolonization process.

The Special Committee endorsed the view of the visiting mission that measures to promote the economic development of the territory were an important element in the process of self-determination, and expressed the hope that the administering power would continue to intensify and expand its programme of budgetary and development aid. It also asked the administering power to continue to enlist the assistance of the organizations in the United Nations system in this effort and to pay particular attention to training local personnel.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 31/54 by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the British Virgin Islands to self-determination and independence.

It also noted with satisfaction the conclusions and recommendations of the 1976 visiting mission.

The Assembly requested the United Kingdom to take all necessary measures, in consultation with the Government of the British Virgin Islands, to expedite the decolonization of the territory. It endorsed the view of the visiting mission that measures to promote the economic development of the territory were an important element in the process of self-determination, and expressed the hope that the administering power would continue to intensify and expand its programme of budgetary and development aid.

The Assembly requested the administering power to continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and the organizations within the United Nations system in the development and strengthening of the economy of the territory, and requested those organizations to respond appropriately to its development needs.

Resolution 31/54 was adopted without objection. On 18 November 1976, the Fourth Committee had approved the text, also without objection. It was sponsored by Australia, the Congo, Denmark, Fiji, Grenada, India, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Liberia, Mozambique, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon and the United Republic of Tanzania. The text was orally amended by Mali.

Brunei

Following consideration of a report on Brunei, which had been referred to the Sub-Committee on Small Territories, the Special Committee, on 20 August 1976, adopted a consensus statement on Brunei.

By the text, the Special Committee called upon the administering power to take all steps within its competence to facilitate the holding of free and democratic elections by the appropriate government authorities of Brunei, in consultation with and under the supervision of the United Nations. It further called for, prior to the elections, the lifting of the ban on all political parties and the return of all political exiles so that they could participate freely and fully in those elections. Noting that no progress had been achieved thus far in implementing the General Assembly's resolution of 8 December 1975,<sup>23</sup> the Committee called on all the parties concerned to work towards its early implementation.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it approved the part of the Special Committee's report concerning Brunei and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Brunei to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence. It then noted that no progress had been achieved in implementing its 1975 resolution and called upon all parties concerned to work towards its early implementation.

The Assembly called again upon the United Kingdom Government, consistent with its responsibility as the administering power, to take all steps within its competence to facilitate the holding of free and democratic elections by the appropriate Brunei Government authorities, in consultation with and under the supervision of the United Nations; it further called for, prior to the elections, the lifting of the ban on all political parties and the return of all political exiles so that they could participate freely and fully in the elections.

The Assembly called upon the administering power to extend full co-operation to the Special Committee, and requested the Committee to continue to keep the situation under review and report thereon in 1977.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/56, adopted by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 14 abstentions. The Fourth Committee had approved the text on 18 November, by 107 votes to 0, with 15 abstentions, on a proposal by Egypt, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mozambique, the Philippines, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

During the Fourth Committee's discussions, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that his Government had always considered Brunei to be a sovereign State; it had never been a colony of the United Kingdom. Brunei had freely chosen to maintain a treaty relationship with the United Kingdom for more than 100 years. In 1971, the United Kingdom had surrendered such advisory powers in relation to the internal affairs of Brunei as had been conferred upon it in previous agreements; consequently, it could not take the action called for by the resolution since that action related to the internal affairs of Brunei. The United Kingdom felt that Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter<sup>24</sup> was not applicable to Brunei and therefore would not take part in the vote. The United Kingdom was, however, willing to continue consultations on the question with the Chairman of the Special Committee.

Malaysia rejected as unacceptable the position of the United Kingdom as to the actual status of Brunei. Brunei did not yet have an elected assembly and there was no information on the activities or current status of the two recognized political parties in the territory. Malaysia maintained that the decolonization process could not be completed without the application of the principle of self-determination and without ascertaining the wishes of the majority.

Grenada expressed the view, in the context of this discussion, that the idea that independence was not necessarily the only possible option for non-self-governing territories was worthy of consideration.

Cocos (Keeling) Islands

With regard to the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, the Special Committee, on 20 August 1976, by a consensus statement recommended by its Sub-Committee on Small Territories, noted with appreciation the continuing co-operation of Australia, the administering power concerned, in the work of the Committee, and its continued preparedness to receive a further visiting mission to the territory at an appropriate time. The Committee noted the measures taken by the administering power in the light of the conclusions and recommendations of the 1974 visiting mission.<sup>25</sup> The Committee also noted that the Australian Government was reviewing recent developments in the territory. It regarded with concern a division of opinion among the people of the territory concerning their future and expressed the hope that, in the light of that review, the administering power would take steps to remedy that division and assess what measures might best be taken, having regard to the obligations of the administering power, with a view to enabling the people of the territory to exercise their right to self-determination in accordance with the principles of the Charter and the Declaration on the granting of independence.

During the discussions in the Assembly's Fourth Committee, Australia noted that a temporary pause had been reached in the development of its policy concerning the future of the Cocos Islands as a result of serious divisions within the territory's community. These had developed largely in 1975, with half the population favouring the maintenance of the traditional way of life, and the other half looking for early changes, including resettlement elsewhere, principally in Australia. The Australian authorities were engaged in a very careful review of the situation, bearing in mind the rights of the Cocos community and Australia's obligations as the administering power.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted a consensus statement relating to the question of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands.

The Assembly noted with appreciation the continued co-operation of Australia and its preparedness to accept a further visiting mission. The Assembly also noted the measures taken by Australia in the light of the recommendations of the 1974 visiting mission and its review of recent developments in the territory.

The Assembly viewed with concern the division of opinion among the people concerning their future and hoped Australia would take steps to remedy that division and assess what measures might be taken to enable the people to exercise their right to self-determination. Finally, the Assembly requested the Special Committee, in continued co-operation with Australia, to seek the best ways and means to implement the Declaration with respect to the territory, in the light of the detailed information to be provided by Australia in 1977, and to report thereon.

The consensus statement was embodied in decision 31/406 D, adopted, without objection, as it had been in the Fourth Committee on 18 November.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Special Committee considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) at meetings held on 13 and 17 September 1976.

On 17 September, the Special Committee adopted by a vote of 17 to 0, with 5 abstentions, a draft resolution by which, among other things, it expressed its gratitude for the continuous efforts made by Argentina, in accordance with the relevant decisions of the General Assembly, to facilitate the process of decolonization and to promote the well-being of the population of the islands.

The Committee requested the United Kingdom and Argentina to expedite the negotiations concerning the dispute over sovereignty, as requested by the Assembly on 16 December 1965<sup>26</sup> and 14 December 1973,<sup>27</sup> and called upon them to refrain from taking decisions that would imply introducing unilateral modifications in the situation while the islands were going through the process recommended by the Assembly.

The Special Committee requested both Governments to report to the Secretary-General and to the General Assembly as soon as possible on the results of the negotiations.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted a resolution concerning the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), by which, inter alia, it approved the chapter of the report of the Special Committee relating to the islands and, in particular, the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Special Committee concerning the territory.

The Assembly expressed its gratitude for the continuous efforts made by Argentina, in accordance with the Assembly's decisions, to facilitate the process of decolonization and to promote the well-being of the population of the islands. It asked the Governments of Argentina and the United Kingdom to expedite the negotiations concerning the dispute over sovereignty, as it had requested in 1965 and 1973.

The Assembly called upon the two parties to refrain from taking decisions that would imply introducing unilateral modifications in the situation while the islands were going through the process it had recommended. It requested both Governments to report to it and to the Secretary-General as soon as possible on the results of the negotiations.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/49, adopted by a recorded vote of 102 to 1, with 32 abstentions. The Fourth Committee had approved the text on 15 November 1976 by a recorded vote of 94 to 1, with 32 abstentions, on a proposal by Benin, Bolivia, Burundi, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Iraq, Mali, Mexico, Mozambique, Panama, Peru, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, Uruguay and Venezuela.

During the discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom said that it had been unable to accept earlier General Assembly resolutions on the Falkland Islands because they did not give due weight to the principle of self-determination. The traditional friendship between the United Kingdom and Argentina was marred only by issues arising from the latter's claim to sovereignty over the territory. The United Kingdom felt that those differences could be resolved by dialogue. It hoped that discussions would lead to a settlement of the dispute that was consonant with the wishes and interests of the islanders.

Argentina, referring to the earlier General Assembly resolutions, said that both decisions recognized explicitly that the principle applicable to the Malvinas Islands was that of the right of States to territorial integrity, and not the principle of self-determination which normally governed most cases of decolonization.

It was logical, Argentina stated, that the resolutions on the question should call upon both parties to negotiate, since that was the procedure prescribed by the United Nations Charter for the peaceful settlement of disputes. The United Kingdom was now calling for a dialogue, rather than negotiations as recommended by the General Assembly, but despite the growing reticence of the United Kingdom, Argentina was continuing to seek ways of reaching an agreement.

In Colombia's view, the earlier Assembly resolutions, especially that of 16 December 1965, had stressed the principle of territorial integrity in the particular case of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas). The United Kingdom, on the other hand, had continuously stressed the principle of self-determination. Colombia felt that that principle could not be applied without restrictions, especially in the case of territories settled by people who had displaced the original inhabitants. It was convinced that the 1965 resolution provided the proper framework for negotiations.

Ecuador said that Argentina had based its demand for reintegration of the Malvinas Islands on historical facts and juridical arguments, with which Ecuador agreed. The Assembly, in its decisions on the subject, had determined the nature of the problem beyond all doubt in recommending that the parties concerned should employ the most appropriate means provided for in Chapter VI of the Charter<sup>28</sup> concerning the pacific settlement of disputes, namely direct negotiations. Ecuador would fully and resolutely support any resolution recommending that the parties concerned should actively continue negotiations for a peaceful solution of the problem.

French Somaliland

On 18 February 1976, the Security Council met to consider charges brought by France and by Somalia in connexion with an incident which had taken place on 4 February at the post of Loyada on the frontier between French Somaliland<sup>29</sup> and Somalia. The incident was related to the abduction of children travelling in a school bus by persons claiming to be members of the Front de libération de la Côte des Somalis (FLCS).

The Council heard the representatives of the two Governments and the Council President then stated that he would remain in touch with Council members concerning future meetings or consultations on the matter. For details of this matter, see pp. 184-86.

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of French Somaliland on 10 September 1976 and, on the proposal of its Chairman, adopted without objection a statement on the matter. In so doing, the Committee, among other things, welcomed the efforts of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to expedite the process of decolonization of the territory, in particular a resolution on the territory adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU at its June-July 1976 session in Mauritius. The Committee authorized its Rapporteur to transmit to the General Assembly the relevant documentation in order to facilitate consideration of the territory. The Special Committee also decided, subject to any Assembly directives, to resume consideration of the question in 1977.

During discussion of the question in the Assembly's Fourth Committee, the representatives of FLCS and of the Mouvement de libération de Djibouti (MLD) participated as observers.

France recalled in the Committee the steps it had taken since 31 December 1975, when it had reaffirmed that the territory was destined for independence. These had included consultations with all political groups, which had resulted in agreement on the principles and procedures for the territory's accession to independence in full sovereignty and territorial integrity. The stages for accession to independence included revision of electoral lists by December 1976 on the basis of a revised act on nationality to guarantee the franchise to all persons born or originating in the territory. A referendum would be held in the spring of 1977 and, if the results favoured independence, the territory would accede to independence during the summer of 1977, thus enabling it to apply for United Nations membership.

The President of the Government Council of the territory, speaking in his official capacity as the leader of the coalition Government, said that his Government wanted the territory to accede to independence in a union of all the political tendencies. This position was supported by the Ligue populaire africaine pour l'indépendance (LPAI) and by FLCS. The people of the territory were opposed to the suggestion that its independence should be guaranteed by the two neighbouring States, he continued. Instead, the two States—Ethiopia and Somalia—should recognize the right of his country to independence and refrain from interference. For its part the new State was determined to build a unified modern State whose laws would take no account of the ethnic origin of its citizens, and it would pursue a policy of friendship towards both neighbouring States.

The representative of FLCS told the Fourth Committee it was important that the United Nations should consider and deal with the territory as a classic case of decolonization, and should affirm the right of the people to independence and the obligation of the French Government to establish peacefully, and with the co-operation of all the political parties, a free and democratic climate during the decolonization period. There should be international controls during the transition, he said, and there should be full participation of all political parties in the territory in the referendum, which should be held in the presence of observers from OAU, the United Nations and the League of Arab States.

<sup>29</sup> The term "French Somaliland" appears in those United Nations texts where it is so used by the United Nations organs, delegations or speakers concerned. The designation "French Territory of the Afars and the Issas" is the one requested by the administering power.

The representative of MLD criticized the way the electoral lists were being revised by the French authorities, which he said did not take account of the demographic realities of the territory. He charged that the referendum and elections would be organized by the French authorities and the local Government in such a way as to legitimize a fait accompli, namely the so-called Government of National Union.

The Fourth Committee also heard statements by the representatives of LPAL, the Mouvement populaire de libération (MPL), and the Union nationale pour l'indépendance (UNI). The speakers expressed concern over the effects of the previous nationality law and stressed the need for the new legislation to take into account the population situation in the territory. They requested the United Nations to ensure that France undertook to carry out the decolonization process peacefully and democratically and with a United Nations presence at the referendum. Both MPL and LPAL also opposed the idea that Ethiopia and Somalia should guarantee the territory's independence and territorial integrity; UNI, however, felt that those States should commit in writing their respect for the territory's independence.

The representative of Somalia welcomed the statement made by the representative of France containing a time-table for independence. He proposed that France be called upon to fix an early date for independence and ensure, prior to the proposed referendum, the creation of a democratic atmosphere by: (a) extending the right to participate to all indigenous inhabitants; (b) calling on the administering power to consult with the true representatives of the people; (c) allowing refugees and political exiles to return home to participate; (d) engaging the United Nations in the supervision of the referendum and elections and in all steps leading up to them; (e) dismantling the electrical barbed-wire fence surrounding the city of Djibouti; and (f) withdrawing all foreign military forces from the territory.

The representative of Ethiopia welcomed the definite commitment of the administering power to a time-table and a programme for independence. He said that the principles underlying OAU decisions should provide the framework for any United Nations recommendations that might emerge from the debate: in particular, that the administering power should be requested to co-operate with OAU in convening a round-table conference of all political groups with a view to creating a government of national unity which would pave the way for independence, and that the General Assembly should call upon all States, particularly Somalia, to renounce all claims to the territory, and should request Ethiopia and Somalia to provide, jointly or separately, an undertaking that they would respect Djibouti's territorial integrity and independent existence and refrain from interfering in its internal affairs.

Other speakers also welcomed the time-table outlined by France and supported the attainment of genuine independence by the territory. These included the representatives of Benin, Chad, the Congo, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Equatorial Guinea, Ghana, Guinea, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, the Niger, Oman, Peru, Qatar, Senegal, and Yemen.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, adopted a resolution concerning French Somaliland by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of so-called French Somaliland (Djibouti) to self-determination and to immediate and unconditional independence in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence; it called upon France to implement scrupulously and equitably, under democratic conditions, the programme for the independence of the territory as outlined by its representative in his statement before the Fourth Committee within the indicated time frame, namely the summer of 1977.

The Assembly urged the leaders of the Government Council of the territory and the representatives of the liberation movements, political parties and groups to enter into the broadest possible discussions on neutral grounds, under the auspices of OAU, and in accordance with the OAU resolution adopted at its 1976 meetings in Mauritius, with a view to agreeing upon a common political platform before the holding of a referendum.

The Assembly also called upon France to co-operate fully with OAU in its effort to convene, in accordance with the OAU decision, a round-table conference. It also requested France to consider the result of the referendum in its totality, thus respecting the territorial integrity of the future State.

The General Assembly demanded that France withdraw its military base from the territory without delay and called upon it to allow and facilitate the return of all refugees who were bonafide citizens of the territory in accordance with the OAU Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa of 10 September 1969 and the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees of 1951. It requested France, in order to ensure the implementation of this request, to set up an ad hoc committee in accordance with the recommendation of an OAU fact-finding mission.

The Assembly endorsed all resolutions adopted by OAU on the territory and, in particular, those adopted in 1975 and 1976, as well as the declaration adopted by the OAU Co-ordinating Committee for the Liberation of Africa and approved by the OAU Assembly in 1976, and it welcomed the solemn declarations by Ethiopia and Somalia before OAU and before the Fourth Committee that they would recognize, respect and honour the independence and sovereignty of so-called French Somaliland (Djibouti) and its territorial integrity after its accession to independence.

The Assembly then called upon all States to refrain from interfering in the internal affairs of the territory and to abstain from any action likely to impede or adversely affect the current process of the country's accession to independence. It welcomed the statements by the representatives of the people of the territory in which they had declared that the territory would become a member of the United Nations and of OAU immediately after independence.

The Assembly also endorsed the decisions of OAU and the United Nations to send representatives to observe the referendum and all subsequent stages of the independence process to ensure that the principle of self-determination in the territory was carried out smoothly and in the most democratic manner. It urged all Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in co-operation with the administering power, to render all possible moral and material assistance to the territory.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/59, which the Assembly adopted by a recorded vote of 117 to 0, with 19 abstentions. The Fourth Committee approved the text on 25 November, by a recorded vote of 111 to 0, with 18 abstentions, on a proposal by the following 35 States: Algeria, Benin, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, the Congo, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Mozambique, the Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Zambia.

Gibraltar

The Special Committee considered the question of Gibraltar on 10 September 1976. It decided, without objection, to transmit to the General Assembly the working paper prepared by the Secretariat in order to facilitate consideration of the item and, subject to any directive from the Assembly in that connexion, to consider the question in 1977.

On 1 December 1976 the General Assembly adopted, without objection, a consensus statement concerning Gibraltar recommended by its Fourth Committee, also without objection, on 18 November 1976. By this statement, the Assembly, noting that, since the approval of its resolution of 13 December 1974,<sup>30</sup> talks—which were still continuing—had been held between the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom on the question of Gibraltar; it urged both Governments to make possible without delay, taking due account of current circumstances, the initiation of the negotiations envisaged in the consensus statement it had adopted on 14 December 1973<sup>31</sup> with the object of reaching a lasting solution to the problem, in the light of relevant Assembly resolutions and in the spirit of the United Nations Charter.

Gilbert Islands

On 20 August 1976, the Special Committee endorsed without objection conclusions and recommendations of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning the Gilbert Islands, administered by the United Kingdom.

The Special Committee, among other things, reiterated its expression of appreciation to the United Kingdom Government for enabling it to conduct a more informed and more meaningful examination of conditions in the territory, with a view to accelerating the process of decolonization, by increasing its level of co-operation with the Committee, by actively participating in the consideration of the territory and by having invited a mission to visit the territory in 1974.<sup>32</sup>

On the subject of constitutional and political development, the Committee noted that significant progress had been made towards internal self-government, including adoption of a Constitution providing for an elected House of Assembly with 21 members and a Speaker. It welcomed the results of constitutional talks held at London on 14 July 1976 between representatives of the Gilbert Islands Government and the administering power concerning the introduction of full internal self-government, which was planned to come into effect on 1 November 1976. The Committee also welcomed the agreement that independence would be achieved during 1978.

The Committee noted with appreciation the two overseas visits made in 1975 by government officials and public servants of the territory, sponsored by a United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) aid fund. The purpose of the visits was to enable the participants to examine in other countries interrelated social, political and economic developments similar to those in their own, and to compare and select the best solutions for possible application in the Gilbert Islands.

The Committee again recommended that steps be taken to diversify the territory's economy, noting that this process was primarily the responsibility of the administering power but could be facilitated through the co-operation of the international community. In this connexion, the Committee took note of a pledge by the administering power to continue a programme of development assistance to the territory. It also welcomed programmes being carried out by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system and by regional organizations such as the Asian Development Bank.

With regard to Ocean Island,<sup>33</sup> the Special Committee reiterated its view that the parties directly involved should resolve their differences by negotiation, bearing in mind the wishes and interests of the peoples of the territory and with a view to achieving a settlement satisfactory to all concerned.

On 1 December, the General Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 31/47, approved the relevant chapter of the Special Committee's report and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the Gilbert Islands to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the granting of independence. It also, among other things, requested the administering power to continue to expedite the process of decolonization in accordance with the recommendations of the Special Committee, including in particular the observations of the 1974 visiting mission. It also requested that the administering power take steps to diversify the territory's economy and continue to enlist the assistance of the organizations in the United Nations system in developing and strengthening that economy. It then requested the Special Committee to continue to seek the best ways and means to implement the Declaration with respect to the Gilbert Islands, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission in consultation with the administering power, and to report thereon in 1977.

Resolution 31/47 was adopted, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 15 November, also without objection. The sponsors were Australia, Denmark, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia, Malaysia, Mali, Mozambique, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia.

Guam

The Special Committee, on 20 August 1976, approved the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning Guam, and endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein.

The Special Committee took note of the participation of the administering power—the United States—in the work of the Committee, thereby enabling it to conduct a more informed and more meaningful examination of Guam, with a view to accelerating the process of decolonization towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence.

The Committee took note of the establishment of a new Guam Political Status Commission, which began working in July 1975 towards a referendum to be held in September 1976 on the question of the future relationship between Guam and the United States Government. The referendum would offer the voters of Guam the following options: (a) to remain an incorporated territory of the United States; (b) to remain a territory with a separate constitution; (c) to vote for statehood; (d) to declare independence; or (e) to choose a relationship with the United States other than the above. The Committee called upon the administering Power to ensure that all members of the Commission were fully consulted in advance in the preparation of a draft constitution for the territory. It drew the administering power's attention to the need for an adequate programme of political education prior to the referendum.

The Committee expressed its concern over the continuing presence of the administering power's military bases on Guam and expressed the hope that that presence would not be an inhibiting factor in permitting the people of Guam to exercise their right to self-determination in accordance with the Declaration and the principles and objectives of the United Nations Charter.

Also, the Committee took note of a proposal by the Guam Economic Development Authority to have prepared a preliminary comprehensive economic plan concentrating on banking activities in the Pacific basin, the development of agriculture and light industry, the impact of United States armed forces on Guam, and tourism.

On 1 December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution whereby it approved the relevant chapter of the Special Committee's report and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Guam to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration. It called upon the United States, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people, to continue to take all the necessary steps to ensure the full and

The Assembly strongly deprecated the establishment of military installations on Guam as being incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter and the Declaration. It called upon the administering power to take all possible steps to diversify the economy of the territory, to work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development, and to reconsider its attitude towards receiving visiting missions and permit access by such a mission to the territory.

The Assembly also urged the United States, with the co-operation of the Government of Guam, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people of the territory to the enjoyment of its natural resources by taking effective measures to guarantee their right to own and dispose of those resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development. It requested the United States to continue to enlist the assistance of the organizations within the United Nations system in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of Guam. Finally, it requested the Special Committee to continue to seek the best ways and means for the implementation of the Declaration with respect to Guam, including the dispatch of a visiting mission in consultation with the administering power, and to report thereon in 1977.

The decisions of the Assembly were embodied in resolution 31/58, adopted on 1 December 1976 by a recorded vote of 61 to 22, with 42 abstentions. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 25 November by a recorded vote of 60 to 21, with 42 abstentions. The sponsors were Benin, the Comoros, Cuba, Iraq, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Libyan Arab Republic.

During the discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United States said it would vote against the resolution mainly because of the language expressing concern over the presence of military installations on Guam. Although it recognized the legitimate interest of the Committee in promoting self-determination in non-self-governing territories, it did not recognize the Committee's right to question the legitimacy of the bases, and found it inappropriate that the Committee should express its concern over their maintenance.

The United States representative assured the Committee that the presence of military installations would in no way inhibit the population's right to self-determination. The inhabitants of Guam were United States citizens and shared in the basic freedoms guaranteed by the United States Constitution. Also, they could freely express their views on the future status of Guam, as they had recently done in the referendum of 4 September 1976, during which 90 per cent of the voters had expressed the desire that the territory remain part of the United States.

Further, he said, the United States found it totally inappropriate that the Committee should consider, let alone approve, a resolution challenging the presence of United States bases on Guam. Those bases were an important element in the defence of the United States, of which Guam was a part, and contributed to the security of the Pacific region. Their presence was consistent with the United Nations Charter, which recognized the right of self-defence and in no way limited the authority of an administering power to set up military bases in a non-self-governing territory. The United States also could not accept the implication that the rate of progress towards full implementation of the Declaration had been unsatisfactory.

Fiji, Iran and Portugal said they would abstain in the vote because of their reservations concerning the paragraph deprecating the establishment of military installations on Guam. The Ivory Coast did not believe the question of such installations was within the competence of the Fourth Committee.

The Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine countries of the European Economic Community (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom), deplored the fact that the text had not taken into account the results of the referendum held on 4 September, in which the majority of inhabitants had declared themselves in favour of maintaining a close relationship with the United States. Moreover, these States considered that the presence of military bases of an administering power in a non-self-governing territory did not constitute an obstacle to the exercise by the indigenous population of the right to self-determination.

New Hebrides

The Special Committee, on 23 August 1976, in adopting without objection the conclusions and recommendations of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning the New Hebrides—a jointly administered condominium—expressed appreciation for the co-operation and participation of one of the administering powers, the United Kingdom, in the discussions on the situation in the territory. However, it noted with regret the continued absence from those discussions of the other administering power, France. The Committee once more urged the French Government to change its policy and to participate. It noted with interest the holding of the first municipal elections on 16 August 1975, as well as the election for the new Representative Assembly between 10 and 16 November 1975, both on the basis of direct universal suffrage.

The Committee noted that the inaugural meeting of the Representative Assembly had taken place on 29 June 1976.

The Committee also noted with interest a joint ministerial message of the administering powers to the inaugural meeting in which they recognized that the 1914 Anglo-French Protocol was not a satisfactory basis for a relationship between the administering powers and the people of the territory in 1976. It noted the intention of the administering powers to co-operate in building the future of the territory in full agreement with its people and the intention to work together for the orderly and democratic evolution of the territory in accordance with the basic principle of self-determination. The Committee urged the administering powers to transfer greater responsibility to the Representative Assembly and to facilitate the creation of an executive body in the near future.

Further, the Committee emphasized the need for the administering powers to intensify their efforts to promote the national unity, preserve the territorial integrity and facilitate the process of self-determination in the territory in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence. It noted with concern that the nationality of New Hebrideans remained undefined and that they did not have a national passport.

In addition, the Committee noted with concern the state of the economy, based mainly on subsistence farming and on the production of copra: one had no potential growth while the other was strongly affected by fluctuating world market prices. It further noted that economic progress depended on foreign aid. In that connexion, it was encouraged that the administering powers had agreed, at joint Anglo-French ministerial discussions in November 1974,<sup>34</sup> to initiate a joint economic and social development plan for the territory. The Committee again urged the administering powers to safeguard the right of the people to own and dispose of their natural resources and to maintain control over their future development.

Commenting that the subject of education was apparently not covered by the 1974 ministerial discussions and that a joint educational policy for the territory had apparently not been developed, the Committee reiterated its concern about the lack of trained indigenous personnel and urged both powers to make a combined effort to promote a unitary system of education.

When the General Assembly took up the question of the New Hebrides at its 1976 session, it had before it joint letters from the representatives of the administering powers: one dated 2 July 1976 containing the joint message to the inaugural meeting of the Representative Assembly on 29 June 1976; the other dated 26 October 1976 containing a joint communiqué issued by the two powers following joint ministerial talks held at London on 6 and 7 October 1976. In the communiqué, France and the United Kingdom had reaffirmed their desire to see democratic progress in the territory.

On 1 December, the Assembly adopted a resolution concerning the territory, whereby it approved the relevant chapter of the Special Committee's report and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration. The Assembly also reaffirmed its conviction that questions of size, geographical isolation and limited resources should not delay implementation of the Declaration with respect to the New Hebrides.

The Assembly noted with satisfaction the establishment of the Representative Assembly and the declared intention of the administering powers to increase progressively the responsibilities enjoyed by that Assembly, in accordance with the wishes of the people. It reiterated its request that the administering powers should continue to take measures to expedite the process of decolonization and requested them to take appropriate steps to strengthen the economy and work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development for the territory.

The Assembly requested the administering powers to continue to enlist the assistance of the organizations within the United Nations system in accelerating progress in all sections of the territory's life, to co-operate with the Special Committee, and to consider permitting access by a visiting mission to the New Hebrides to report on this aspect when the Committee next considered the question. It then requested the Special Committee to continue to seek the best ways and means for the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the New Hebrides and to report thereon in 1977.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/51, adopted on 1 December 1976, without objection, on a recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved it without objection on 17 November. The sponsors were Australia, Ghana, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Malaysia, Mozambique, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Sierra Leone and the United Republic of Tanzania.

During the discussions in the Fourth Committee, France informed the Committee on the talks held at London in October, referring to the joint communiqué issued at their close. France was prepared to increase co-operation with the Special Committee.

The United Kingdom said that the administering powers recognized the right of the inhabitants of the New Hebrides to decide their own future. As indicated in the joint communiqué, France and the United Kingdom were trying to rationalize the joint administration and arrange for the Representative Assembly to elect its own President in 1977. A passport for the inhabitants was also being prepared.

Australia welcomed the commitment of the administering powers to ensure early progress towards self-determination, while Fiji said it strongly supported the Special Committee's decision to emphasize the need for the administering powers to intensify their efforts to promote the national unity and territorial integrity of the New Hebrides. It hoped that both administering powers would consider the possibility of allowing visiting missions, if the people of the territory so wished.

New Zealand shared the view that it was important for the political advancement of the territory that the Representative Assembly should meet as soon as possible. It was aware of the magnitude of the problems facing the territory's administration, but hoped that the administering powers, in co-operation with the United Nations, would continue their efforts to accelerate political and economic development.

St. Helena

The Special Committee considered the question of St. Helena at meetings held on 19 and 20 August 1976.

On 20 August, the Special Committee adopted a consensus statement on the question, by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination in conformity with the Declaration on the granting of independence. It noted that there had been no change in the constitutional system of the territory since it last examined the situation there, but nevertheless welcomed the commitment of the administering power—the United Kingdom—to respect the wishes of the people in relation to their advance towards self-determination, as well as to carry out a policy aimed at implementing the consensus statement on the territory adopted by the General Assembly on 8 December 1975.<sup>35</sup>

The Committee called upon the administering power to continue and intensify its efforts to promote the territory's economic growth, and welcomed the economic and technical assistance that St. Helena had received from the United Kingdom.

The Special Committee noted the positive attitude taken by the United Kingdom on the question of receiving visiting missions, and expressed the hope that it would permit the access of such a mission to St. Helena.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, adopted a consensus statement relating to the question of St. Helena. The Fourth Committee had approved the text without objection on 17 November.

By this, the Assembly, among other things having examined the chapter of the Special Committee's report, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination in conformity with the Declaration. Noting the commitment of the United Kingdom to respect the wishes of the people in relation to their advance towards self-determination and to carry out a policy aimed at implementing the 1975 Assembly decision on St. Helena, the Assembly reaffirmed that continued assistance from the administering power, together with any assistance that the international community might provide, constituted an important means of developing the economic potential of the territory and of enhancing the capacity of its people to realize fully the goals set forth in the United Nations Charter. The Assembly also noted the positive attitude of the administering power concerning visiting missions and requested the Chairman of the Special Committee to continue his consultations in that regard.

This consensus statement was set forth in decision 31/406 A.

Seychelles

On 23 February 1976, the Special Committee adopted, without objection, the text of a statement prepared by its Chairman concerning the accession of the Seychelles to independence.

By the statement, the Special Committee recorded its satisfaction at the conclusion of the agreement between the Seychelles and the United Kingdom, the administering power, at the resumed Constitutional Conference, held in January 1976, envisaging the entry into force of an independence constitution for the Seychelles on 28 June 1976.

The Committee also paid a particular tribute to the Government and people of the Seychelles on their achievements and extended congratulations on the attainment of their independence. The Special Committee also paid tribute to the administering power for the discharge of its obligations in relation to the Seychelles.

The Special Committee expressed its confidence that the international community would render all possible assistance to the Seychelles for the consolidation of its independence.

Solomon Islands

On 20 August 1976, the Special Committee adopted without objection the report of its Subcommittee on Small Territories concerning the

Solomon Islands, administered by the United Kingdom, and endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein.

The Special Committee noted with appreciation the continued co-operation of the administering power, thereby enabling the Committee to conduct a more informed and more meaningful examination of the territory, with a view to accelerating the process of decolonization.

The Committee was encouraged by the latest political, economic and social developments in the territory and the efforts of the administering power and the people of the Solomon Islands and their leaders to facilitate a smooth transition to independence. The Committee welcomed in particular the achievement of full internal self-government on 2 January 1976, following the 16-month ministerial system of government initiated in August 1974. The Committee expressed the hope that the constitutional conference to be held later in 1976 would determine the exact date of independence and the content of the Solomon Islands independence constitution.

The Committee considered that the process of localization was an essential development and urged the administering power to continue the training of local officers in the technical and professional fields, in order to accelerate the filling of vacant posts by Solomon Islanders and reduce the need for experts from outside the territory.

The Committee noted with regret that progress in the field of economic development did not seem to have matched the speed of the constitutional changes and it called for more efforts towards diversification of the economy, with emphasis on the development of fisheries, beef production, palm oil and minerals.

The provisions of the 1976 territorial appropriations bill, calling for progress towards economic self-reliance in conformity with the 1975-1979 National Development Plan, were considered to provide an impressive blueprint for the territory's development.

The Committee also noted with satisfaction the economic contributions from Australia and New Zealand in aid programmes, as well as the participation of UNDP in the economic development of the territory for 1976.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly approved the chapter of the Special Committee's report relating to the Solomon Islands, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people to self-determination and independence, and requested the United Kingdom to continue to assist them in achieving independence.

It further asked the United Kingdom, in consultation with the people of the Solomon Islands, to continue its efforts towards diversifying the territory's economy. The Assembly stressed the responsibility of the United Nations to render all possible assistance to the people of the Solomon Islands in their efforts to consolidate their national independence and, to that end, invited the specialized agencies and institutions associated with the United Nations to work out concrete programmes of assistance. Finally, the Assembly requested the Special Committee to keep the situation in the territory under review.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/46, adopted without objection. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 15 November, also without objection. The sponsors were Australia, Austria, Canada, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Malaysia, Mozambique, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom said that the Solomon Islands were on their way to becoming independent in 1977; complete internal self-government had been achieved. The framework within which independence would be achieved was currently under study and the details would be settled at a constitutional conference to be held at London later in 1976. After attaining independence, the territory would continue to receive United Kingdom assistance.

Australia said it had given assurances of its willingness to go on contributing to the progress and development of the Solomon Islands. It also intended to develop further the friendly relations which existed between them. Fiji welcomed the progress made by the Solomon Islands towards independence. It felt that the political and constitutional advancement of the territory had to be accompanied by corresponding economic progress, and suggested that high priority would have to be given to diversifying production and minimizing the territory's heavy dependence on a limited number of exports.

New Zealand noted with particular satisfaction the rapid political progress of the Solomon Islands and congratulated its Government and the administering power on the progress made. Papua New Guinea said that the report of the Special Committee and the statement by the administering power indicated that satisfactory progress had been made towards granting independence to the Solomon Islands at the time its people asked for it. There was need for economic and political co-operation between the administering power and the Solomon Islands Government, since the discontinuance of co-operation with the metropolitan power would be detrimental to the territory.

Timor

During 1976, the question of Timor was again considered by the Security Council, by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and by the Assembly itself.

On 12 March 1976, in implementation of the Security Council's resolution of 22 December 1975,<sup>36</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council a report by his Special Representative, Vittorio Winspeare Guicciardi, on his mission to East Timor to assess the situation and to establish contact with the parties concerned in order to ensure implementation of United Nations decisions.

The report stated that, although the Special Representative had not been able to visit some parts of the territory because of communications difficulties or because the security of his mission could not be assured, he had been able to establish useful contacts with the parties and States concerned. Among divergent views on the future of East Timor, one common element emerged—the need for consultations—although it was sometimes interpreted differently. Therefore, as a first step it might be possible, in the view of the Special Representative, to build on the slender common assumption that the people of East Timor should be consulted on the future status of the territory.

Listing the different interpretations in scope and procedure of the question of consultations, the Special Representative noted the following.

The Government of the Democratic Republic of East Timor<sup>37</sup> suggested a referendum with a simple choice between integration with Indonesia and independence under the Frente Revolucionaria Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN).

The Portuguese Government, while in principle favouring a referendum, considered that the people of East Timor themselves should decide on the procedure to be followed. Regarding the substance of the referendum, that Government had expressed a preference for a choice to be given to the population between integration with Indonesia and independence in consultation with all political forces in the territory.

As to the Provisional Government,<sup>38</sup> it had proposed that a People's Representative Council should either ratify the decision of the people for complete integration with Indonesia or formulate other suggestions for the future political structure of East Timor.

Finally, Indonesia had maintained that, since it was for the people of the territory to determine for themselves the future of East Timor, the decision of the Provisional Government for integration with Indonesia should be subjected to ratification by East Timor people.

Among other communications also circulated to Security Council members was a letter of 15 January 1976 from Portugal drawing attention to certain acts of interference on the part of Indonesia in the internal affairs of East Timor, including a visit to East Timor by the Indonesian Minister for Foreign Affairs. In a reply of 22 January to the Portuguese allegations, Indonesia stated that the Provisional Government had been established to ensure the maintenance of law and order which had been threatened in the territory by the vacuum of authority left by Portugal, and that the Foreign Minister's visit was in pursuance of aims expressed by the Security Council. In a further letter, dated 30 January, Portugal stated that Indonesia had been unloading cars and helicopters in East Timor and that the illegal activities of Indonesia were raising new problems in connexion with the visit of the Special Representative to certain areas of East Timor. In a reply transmitted by Indonesia on 17 February, the Provisional Government noted that Indonesia had been providing humanitarian assistance to the people of East Timor, requiring the use of transportation facilities.

A communication from the Indonesian Red Cross reporting on its efforts to trace missing persons was transmitted by Indonesia on 5 April, as well as a list of persons said to have been taken hostage by FRETILIN. Another Indonesian letter of the same date transmitted the text of a telegram dated 25 March from the Provisional Government taking issue with FRETILIN allegations.

A communication from the President of FRETILIN and President of the Democratic Republic of East Timor was transmitted by Guinea-Bissau on 19 April. It stated, among other things, that the people of East Timor were prepared to struggle until the withdrawal of Indonesian troops.

The Security Council met between 12 and 22 April 1976 to discuss the Secretary-General's report; the President, with the consent of the Council, invited, at their request, the representatives of Australia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mozambique, the Philippines, Portugal and Saudi Arabia to participate in the debate without the right to vote.

The following speakers were also allowed to participate in the debate, without the right to vote, in accordance with the Council's provisional rules of procedure: a member of the House of Representatives of the Australian Commonwealth Parliament, at the request of Mozambique; a representative of the Democratic Republic of East Timor, at the request of Guinea-Bissau; and representatives of the Provisional Government of East Timor, as well as

At the beginning of the debate, José Ramos Horta, who said that he was speaking on behalf of the Democratic Republic of East Timor and also as spokesman for FRETILIN, said that Indonesia had launched a military aggression against East Timor, a former colony which had been independent since 28 November 1975. Although less than 20 per cent of the territory was occupied, one tenth of the population—over 60,000 people—had been slaughtered. Disregarding the Security Council's resolution of 22 December 1975, Indonesian forces, numbering 30,000 troops, had launched assaults with napalm and biological weapons. Continuing, Mr. Horta said the Special Representative of the Secretary-General had been unable to travel widely in the territory because the Indonesian authorities and their supporters did not want the United Nations mission to go to the countryside where the large mass of the people lived. When it was proposed that the Special Representative might fly to areas under the control of FRETILIN, the Indonesian air force launched bombing raids against the needed airstrips.

Mr. Horta added that his Government rejected any suggestion of East Timor being a colony. Further, any suggestion by the United Nations that Portugal was still the administering power was a blatant contradiction of all United Nations principles. The Central Committee of FRETILIN no longer recognized Portuguese sovereignty over East Timor but was willing to establish bilateral dialogue as between Government and Government. As to Indonesian claims on the territory, the people of East Timor had more ethnic and cultural affinity with the people of Papua New Guinea than with Indonesia. A possible union with Indonesia was not ruled out in the future, but only by the will of two independent States and not by armed aggression, Mr. Horta concluded.

The representative of Portugal deplored the fact that it had not been possible for the Secretary-General's Special Representative to undertake as complete and concrete an examination of the current situation as he would have desired. Portugal regretted in particular that it had not been possible for him to get into direct contact with the leaders of FRETILIN, despite all the efforts made to that end.

The Portuguese Government, as the administering power—a capacity it was recognized as having by the provisions of an Assembly resolution of 12 December 1975<sup>39</sup> and the Security Council's resolution of 22 December 1975—solemnly reaffirmed its intention to do everything in its power to safeguard the legitimate right of the people of Timor to self-determination.

However, the armed forces of Indonesia continued to be illegally present on the territory of Timor, contravening the provisions of the Security Council's and General Assembly's decisions. The presence of those forces in East Timor was a fact openly acknowledged by Indonesia, which stated to the Special Representative that the presence of the so-called volunteers in East Timor was the result of a request first made by parties known as the Associação Popular Democrática Timorense (APODETI), the União Democrática de Timor (UDT), the Klibur Oan Timor Aswain (KOTA) and the Partido Trabalhista and then by the so-called Provisional Government of East Timor, and that those volunteers would leave East Timor only upon the request of the so-called Provisional Government. But the Provisional Government of East Timor was not recognized either by the United Nations or by the administering power of the territory, and it consequently could not claim the slightest legitimacy—any more than could the political parties to which it had alluded—for requesting foreign troops to intervene militarily in East Timor and to remain there in violation of East Timor's territorial integrity.

Consistent with the principle that increased United Nations participation in the decolonization process in Timor was essential, Portugal would agree to a possible prolongation of the mandate conferred by the Council on the Secretary-General by the terms of its 1975 resolution. Consultations between the Secretary-General, or his Special Representative, and all the parties concerned should continue so as to ensure the implementation of that resolution.

Portugal would also consider very favourably the convening of a conference with the participation of all interested parties, under United Nations auspices, as a means of facilitating the holding of consultations and of giving them some force.

Guilherme Maria Gonçalves, who said he was speaking on behalf of the Provisional Government of East Timor, recalled that the National Front, which formed the Provisional Government, had been constituted from four former political parties—UDT, APODETI, KOTA and the Partido Trabalhista. A Deliberative Council had been established as a provisional assembly and an Advisory Council was providing technical and administrative advice to the Provisional Government. But when FRETILIN regained control of the city of Dili it undertook to eliminate its opponents, who sought refuge towards the Indonesian border. Those who could escape were given shelter by Indonesia; the others were thrown in jail, tortured and murdered.

On 28 November 1975, FRETILIN unilaterally proclaimed its independence and formed its self-styled republic; FRETILIN thereby tried to impose its will by force upon the majority of East Timor. It was only logical that the four other parties should respond to the challenge immediately.

The National Front declared the independence and the integration of the whole former territory of East Timor with Indonesia on 30 November 1975 and on 17 December the Provisional Government of the Territory of East Timor was established.

After Dili fell into the hands of the joint forces of the four parties, Mr. Gonçalves continued, an open arms policy was announced through Radio Dili. Any member of FRETILIN who surrendered with his weapons got fair treatment and was allowed to return to his village or community. It should be noted however, that four mass graves containing the bodies of persons slaughtered by FRETILIN members were found. The Portuguese, who had handed over their arsenal to FRETILIN had a moral responsibility of their own in those executions.

The presence of Indonesian volunteers in East Timor was at the urgent request of the majority of the people of East Timor through the four political parties and later formally repeated by the Provisional Government.

In the view of the Provisional Government, the report of the Special Representative was as factual and objective as possible in the prevailing circumstances. Mr. Gonçalves said Indonesia had asked the Provisional Government to ensure that the implementation of the right to self-determination was carried out properly, namely that the decision was ratified by all the people in the presence of the United Nations. The Provisional Government of East Timor would discuss with representatives of the United Nations the role of the United Nations in the electoral process. It was the Provisional Government's earnest hope that the United Nations would send its observers to witness the exercise of the right of self-determination by the people of East Timor concerning their future political status.

As far as the Provisional Government was concerned, the question of Timor had been solved by the East Timorese themselves. There was no Portuguese administering power any more in Dili or on Atauro; it had deliberately abandoned the territory. The existence of FRETILIN had become a completely irrelevant question. Former prominent members and supporters of FRETILIN had joined the Provisional Government to build up their country, Mr. Gonçalves said. Because of the gradual return to normal, the Provisional Government had decided to allow volunteers to return to their places of origin. That return had started in February and continued in March.

Addressing the Security Council, the representative of Indonesia said that his Government supported the suggestion made by the Secretary-General in his report that consultations between the parties should be continued with the Special Representative.

The solution to the question of East Timor had to be based on the wishes of the people in the territory. The Indonesian presence was upon the specific request of the large majority of the people, to prevent them from being liquidated by FRETILIN armed elements only because they wanted to be integrated with Indonesia. Overwhelming proof of mass murder and atrocities committed by those elements had been provided to the Council by the representative of the Provisional Government.

Organized fighting in East Timor had stopped and the Provisional Government was currently in control of the territory. The greater number of the former FRETILIN supporters had returned to their original communities, the representative went on to say, and had declared themselves in support of the Provisional Government, which stood for complete integration with Indonesia. In view of the lack of sufficient cadres, Indonesian volunteers were assisting the Provisional Government in their efforts to restore normal life in the territory by rehabilitation and reconstruction.

As to the call for withdrawal, the people of East Timor considered themselves already Indonesians and their territory an integral part of Indonesia. Nevertheless, although such a call was unjust, the armed volunteers had already started to leave the territory.

With regard to the exercise of the right to self-determination, the people of East Timor had formally decided to become independent through complete integration with Indonesia. As to the Indonesian Government, it would like to see whether that decision, proclaimed on 30 November 1975, would subsequently be confirmed by the people of East Timor in the exercise of their right to self-determination. In that connexion, Indonesia considered that the appropriate organ of the United Nations should consult with the representatives of the Provisional Government as to the kind of role the United Nations would play during the remaining stage of the decolonization process.

With reference to Portugal's statement to the Security Council, it should be noted, the Indonesian representative said, that both the supporters of the Provisional Government and the remaining adherents of FRETILIN had refused to recognize Portugal any longer as the administering power.

The representative of Australia recalled that his Government supported the main thrust of the resolutions adopted on the question by the General Assembly and the Security Council, namely the call for withdrawal of outside forces and a process by which the people could determine their own future. A stable settlement could rest only on the free choice of the people concerned. Some form of United Nations participation in this process would be appropriate and in the best interests of the people. To that effect, Australia believed the mandate of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General should be extended.

Saudi Arabia said it would support further efforts by the Special Representative to find out what could be done to prevent further deterioration of the situation. It pointed out that anything to be done in East Timor should be done through the United Nations, to be sure that there were no ulterior motives.

Malaysia noted that it appeared from statements heard by the Council that FRETILIN leadership had left the territory and that life on East Timor was returning to normal. It urged that the people of the territory should be given the opportunity to express their wishes and felt another visit by the Special Representative was called for. Similar views were expressed by the Philippines, which also pointed out that Indonesia had exercised its responsibility with objectivity and in doing so contributed to the promotion of peace in the area.

Mozambique and Guinea deplored the fact that Indonesian troops had not withdrawn from the territory as requested by the United Nations, and suggested that adequate measures be taken to implement the resolutions already adopted.

Other speakers included Ken Fry, a member of the Australian Parliament who expressed views generally in support of those of the FRETILIN spokesman. Another Australian, Rex K. M. Syddell, criticized the Portuguese administration of the territory as well as recent actions by FRETILIN. He said that if Indonesia were to withdraw at the current juncture, vicious fighting would break out.

On 22 April, the Council adopted a resolution proposed by Guyana, Panama and the United Republic of Tanzania. By the preamble to the resolution, the Council reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of East Timor to self-determination and independence in accordance with the principles of the United Nations Charter and the Declaration on the granting of independence, and expressed the view that all efforts should be made to create conditions that would enable the people of East Timor freely to exercise that right.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Council: (1) called upon all States to respect the territorial integrity of East Timor, as well as the inalienable right of its people to self-determination in accordance with the Declaration; (2) called upon Indonesia to withdraw without further delay all its forces from the territory; (3) requested the Secretary-General to have his Special Representative continue the assignment entrusted to him by the terms of the Council's resolution of 12 December 1975 and pursue consultations with the parties concerned; (4) further requested the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of this resolution and submit a report to the Security Council as soon as possible; (5) called upon all States and other parties concerned to co-operate fully with the United Nations to achieve a peaceful solution to the existing situation and to facilitate the decolonization of the territory; and (6) decided to remain seized of the situation.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 389(1976), which was adopted by a vote of 12 in favour, 0 against, and 2 abstentions (Japan and the United States). Benin did not participate in the vote. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Before adopting the resolution, the Council voted on a Japanese amendment which would have had the Council call for the withdrawal from the territory without delay of the remaining Indonesian forces. Japan said it proposed the amendment to take into account the evolving situation in the territory and the goodwill of the Indonesian Government. Objections to the Japanese proposal were voiced by the representative of Benin, who said that he opposed it because Indonesia had committed an aggression against East Timor. Furthermore, considering that the resolution was not balanced and, in fact, missed the true objectives of the efforts undertaken, Benin would not participate in the vote on the whole text.

Romania, stressing that the main point was for the people of East Timor to decide freely their own destiny, said it supported the action called for by the resolution.

The Japanese amendment was rejected, having failed to attain the required affirmative votes; the vote was 8 in favour, 1 against (Benin) and 5 abstentions (Guyana, Romania, Sweden, USSR, United Republic of Tanzania). China did not participate in the voting.

The United States noted that it had voted in favour of the Japanese amendment, believing it would have made explicit that the Council recognized the importance of the statement of Indonesia that some forces had been and were being withdrawn from the territory. Since that amendment had not been accepted, the United States felt that the resolution was unlikely to serve any essential purpose and, consequently, it had abstained in the vote.

China, France, Pakistan, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United Republic of Tanzania spoke in favour of the resolution adopted, and emphasized that the people of East Timor had to be allowed to exercise their right to self-determination. France and the United Kingdom expressed regret that the Japanese amendment had not been adopted; nevertheless, they said they felt encouraged by the prospect of consultations concerning the future of East Timor under the Special Representative's auspices.

The USSR deplored the presence of foreign troops and pointed out the importance of the continuation of the Special Representative's efforts. China and Sweden strongly criticized the continuing presence of Indonesian troops in the territory, which they considered a violation of the territorial integrity of East Timor.

Speaking at the close of the meeting, the representative of Indonesia confirmed that the Indonesian armed volunteers were in the process of leaving the territory and consequently deeply regretted that the Japanese amendment had not been adopted. He said that Indonesia could not support the Council's resolution just adopted and that the co-operation which it would extend to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General would continue to be guided by the wishes of the people of East Timor.

A number of communications on the question of Timor were circulated to Security Council members between April and September 1976. These included a communication from the Democratic Republic of East Timor, transmitted by Guinea-Bissau on 28 April, and letters from Indonesia relating to various matters in East Timor. On 15 June, Indonesia transmitted the texts of four communications from the Provisional Government of East Timor requesting that East Timor be integrated with Indonesia, and on 10 August Indonesia transmitted a cable from the former Chief Executive of the Provisional Government stating that the statute of integration of East Timor with Indonesia had been signed into law on 17 July and from that date all matters pertaining to East Timor had come under the jurisdiction of Indonesia.

Meanwhile, the President of the Security Council on 21 June circulated a note containing the text of an invitation from Indonesia to the Council, received on 10 June, to visit East Timor. Indonesia said that, in response to a petition it had received, it was sending a mission to East Timor to make an on-the-spot assessment of the wishes of the people and invited a Council visit concurrently with the Indonesian mission. The President stated that after holding consultations with the members of the Council, he had indicated in his reply that the Council, having regard to the decisions which it had taken in December 1975 and April 1976 on the situation in East Timor, had concluded that it was unable to accept that invitation.

Benin, in a note verbale of 17 June, said it appeared from the communication sent by Indonesia when it invited the Council to visit East Timor that that Government intended to proceed with its policy of annexing East Timor on the basis of a decision emanating from self-styled representatives of the peoples of East Timor, and Benin strongly protested against the Indonesian manoeuvre.

On 22 June 1976, pursuant to the Council's resolution of 22 April, the Secretary-General transmitted the second report by his Special Representative, which provided an account of the contacts made with the parties concerned, mainly in Geneva and New York. The report concluded that for a number of reasons it had not been possible to assess accurately the prevailing situation in East Timor, particularly as regarded the implementation of the Security Council's resolution.

On 8 July 1976, Mozambique transmitted the text of a letter from the Democratic Republic of East Timor wherein it was stated that the mission of the Special Representative had been obstructed by Indonesia and consequently the report was incomplete.

On 12 August 1976, Indonesia transmitted to the Secretary-General a summary of recent developments in East Timor. It indicated that following a request on 7 June for integration from representatives of the people of East Timor, the Indonesian Government had dispatched a fact-finding mission on 24 June to ascertain the wishes of those people. Then, in accordance with its findings, legislative action had been taken, which had led, on 17 July 1976, to the integration of East Timor into Indonesia.

Additional communications from Indonesia dated 1 and 17 September dealt with the transfer of Portuguese nationals to Portuguese authorities.

On 8 and 9 September 1976, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Timor. The representative of Portugal, as the administering power, participated in the Committee's consideration of the item. In response to his request for a hearing, José Ramos Horta of FRETLIN was invited to address the Committee.

The Special Committee had received two communications relating to the question: one on 24 May 1976 from the Provisional Government of East Timor inviting it to attend the first meeting of the regional Popular Assembly that was to be convened in Dili on 31 May 1976, and one dated 10 June 1976 from Indonesia inviting the Special Committee to visit the territory concurrently with the Indonesian mission that was being sent on 24 June in response to a petition it had received from the Popular Assembly of East Timor to integrate the territory with Indonesia. To both communications the Chairman had replied that in view of the provisions of General Assembly resolution 3485(XXX) of 12 December 1975<sup>40</sup> and Security Council resolution 389(1976) of 22 April 1976 (see above), the Special Committee was not in a position to dispatch any mission.

During its consideration of the item, the Special Committee had before it, in addition to a working paper prepared by the Secretariat, a paper entitled "Indonesia's position on Timor" circulated at the request of Indonesia.

On 9 September 1976, the Special Committee decided without objection, on a proposal by its Chairman, to transmit the documentation relating to the item to the General Assembly in order to facilitate its consideration of the matter.

On 1 December 1976, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of East Timor to self-determination and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to achieve that right. The Assembly also reaffirmed its resolution of 12 December 1975 and the Security Council's resolutions of 22 December 1975 (384(1975)) and 22 April 1976 (389(1976)). It also affirmed the principles stated in that part of the political declaration adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August 1976, relating to the question of East Timor.

The Assembly strongly deplored the persistent refusal of Indonesia to comply with the provisions of its 1975 resolution and those of the Security Council. It rejected the claim that East Timor had been integrated into Indonesia, inasmuch as the people of the territory had not been able to exercise freely their right to self-determination and independence, and called upon Indonesia to withdraw all its forces from the territory.

The Assembly drew the attention of the Security Council to the critical situation in the territory and recommended that it should take all effective steps for the immediate implementation of its resolutions on the question with a view to securing the full exercise by the people of East Timor of their right to self-determination and independence.

The General Assembly also requested the Special Committee to keep the situation under active consideration, to follow the implementation of this resolution, to dispatch to the territory as soon as possible a visiting mission with a view to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration, and to report on the matter in 1977.

Finally, the Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its 1977 session an item entitled "Question of East Timor."

These decisions were taken with the adoption of resolution 31/53 by a recorded vote of 68 to 20, with 49 abstentions. The Fourth Committee approved the text on 17 November by a roll-call vote of 61 to 18, with 49 abstentions.

The text was sponsored by Algeria, Benin, the Congo, Cuba, Democratic Kampuchea, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, Mozambique and the United Republic of Tanzania; it replaced a text that had been submitted and withdrawn by many of the same sponsors.

During the debate on the question of Timor which preceded the adoption of the resolution, the Fourth Committee heard a statement by Mari Bin Hamud Alkatiri of FRETILIN.

Portugal told the Committee that as the administering power it fully accepted the application to Timor of the Assembly's Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant United Nations decisions, including the Security Council's 1975 and 1976 resolutions. It pointed out that all those resolutions had reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Timor to self-determination and independence, a principle that had been set forth in Portugal's new Constitution. Portugal did not recognize de jure the integration of East Timor into Indonesia; in Portugal's view, it had not resulted from the effective exercise by the people of their right to self-determination. It was not up to Indonesia alone, but to the United Nations, to determine whether that right had been effectively exercised. The United Nations should therefore determine whether the solutions that had been adopted, or were to be adopted, to decolonize the territory were, or would be, in conformity with the fundamental principles of the Charter and with the various relevant resolutions. The Portuguese Government was ready to accept a consensus of the United Nations on the matter.

Indonesia reaffirmed its position that the process of decolonization in the territory had been concluded. The exercise of the right to self-determination had taken place in freedom and in accordance with the customary practice of the people concerned. Indonesia had accepted the decision of the people of the territory to be independent through integration with Indonesia. Furthermore, Indonesia expressed the view that it was no longer appropriate for the United Nations to consider the question of East Timor. Indonesia would categorically reject any resolution that did not respect the legitimate decision already taken by the people of East Timor.

Algeria, Benin, China, Democratic Kampuchea, Ghana, Madagascar and Mozambique expressed the view that the United Nations should support the people of Timor in their struggle to safeguard their national independence and integrity. Guinea stated that it could not accept the Indonesian position that a popular assembly, which had been elected under martial law, had been consulted with a view to integrating the territory with an already existing national entity. Indonesia could not arrogate to itself the right to annex East Timor, and the Portuguese Government, together with the United Nations, should take all necessary measures to enable the people of East Timor to exercise their national sovereignty and to secure the withdrawal of invading foreign troops.

Guinea-Bissau said it refused to recognize Indonesia's annexation of East Timor and condemned it. The United Republic of Tanzania expressed the view that, for the people of East Timor to exercise their right to self-determination, hostilities had to cease and Indonesian troops had to withdraw. In China's opinion, Indonesia should implement the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council by immediately withdrawing its invading troops from East Timor so that the people of the territory could exercise their right to independence and self-determination without outside interference.

India considered that East Timor had attained independence when the colonial power had withdrawn and, after constitutional steps, including some form of popular consultation, had been integrated into Indonesia. This view was shared by Bolivia, Malaysia, Morocco, Oman, the Philippines and Saudi Arabia. Saudi Arabia noted that Indonesia was a polyethnic nation and had legitimate interests in protecting peace and security on the island of Timor.

Japan considered that the resolution adopted would not contribute to a solution of the problem; it was important for the parties concerned to enter into a dialogue to normalize the situation, bearing in mind the interests of the inhabitants. Australia did not regard the resolution as a realistic or constructive one. In Australia's view, the options before the people of the territory were self-determination through complete independence or joining the people of Indonesia; these options were not adequately expressed in the resolution.

Tokelau

The Special Committee on 26 October 1976 adopted without objection the report of a three-member visiting mission (Iran, Tunisia and the United Republic of Tanzania) dispatched to the Tokelau Islands in June 1976, and endorsed its observations, conclusions and recommendations.

Among other things, the mission recommended that henceforth the United Nations adopt the style of the name of the territory, in conformity with the wishes of the people expressed through the general Fono (Council), so that it should appear as Tokelau and not the Tokelau Islands.

The mission considered that further assistance from international agencies to both the territory and the administering power in its endeavour to aid the local farmers might be called for, and it therefore suggested that New Zealand, the administering power, continue to explore the possibilities of seeking assistance from such institutions. It stated that some thought needed to be given as to how to improve the soil of the atolls and what other crops might prove an economic resource to the people. The mission expressed the hope that when a South Pacific Commission survey on water catchments in the territory became available, the administration and village elders would be in a better position to respond to the problem of pure water supply. In the meantime, it urged the administering power to take the necessary measures to improve materials for catching water and to examine the water supply regularly to ascertain its potability.

Fish were both food and a principal source of revenue, the mission stated, and fishing could become the most important source of income. Whatever the results of the current United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, it was bound to have a profound effect on the people of Tokelau as an island people and, in the mission's view, it was essential that they were made aware of the issues and participated in formulating policies in this regard. The mission considered that all parties concerned needed to continue to search diligently for an effective answer to the serious problem of poaching.

The Tokelauans needed reef channels to ease their passage to the sea. The mission considered that there was ample reason to give more study to this important question and urged the administering power, in consultation with appropriate international agencies, to study and implement means of improving the access by the Tokelauans to the sea around them.

One of the major problems the mission found was that of communication with the outside world. The mission considered that, especially in the light of a restructuring of the Office for Tokelau Affairs at Apia (Western Samoa), the administering power and the leaders of the people should together study shipping schedules with regard to the needs of the population.

The mission stated that the educational system should meet the needs of the people and prepare each individual either for life in the territory or for emigration. It welcomed the intention of the New Zealand Government to improve the educational system and considered that this was a subject to be kept under constant review by the administering power, in consultation with the people of Tokelau, so as to find more satisfactory solutions.

The mission found what it considered a unique situation on the three atolls—Fakaofu, Atafu and Nukunonu—which comprise Tokelau. Each island was virtually an autonomous unit. It seemed to the mission that in the quasi-traditional internal structure on each island the areas of competence of each political institution had not been clearly defined. It accepted that these bodies, performing certain functions, represented to the people supreme bodies. The mission did not detect any challenge to the authority of those institutions, which appeared to be acceptable to all concerned. The mission stated that only when it had become clear what form of change the people of Tokelau desired did the administering power consider it wise to act upon the wishes of the people and to formalize the modified institution. The mission requested that the administering power continue to inform the United Nations on measures adopted in this area of development.

There appeared to be a considerable body of New Zealand law applicable in the territory. It seemed to the mission therefore that some work had to be done to bring about uniformity in the public law in order to ensure that there were no conflicts or contradictions between customary law and New Zealand laws in Tokelau.

The mission was informed of the reorganization of and new general approach towards the Office for Tokelau Affairs. It was assured by the New Zealand Government that the Office was moving towards more autonomy, that eventually it would be headed by a Tokelauan and that the post of Administrator of the territory (held currently by the New Zealand Secretary of Foreign Affairs) would be eliminated. The mission expressed the hope that the New Zealand Government would continue to meet any increase in budget caused by the reorganization and revitalization of the Office.

The mission considered that, in order to allay the apprehensions of the people that the administering power might wish to cut itself free from its responsibilities in the territory, the administering power had to make the issues clear to the people and explain the choices available to them in such a manner as not to exacerbate their fears for the future. In order to allow the people to run their affairs, the mission stated that it might be necessary to guarantee them financial and technical assistance in the future.

In the mission's view, the Tokelau claim to Swains Island, administered by the United States as part of American Samoa, would have to be considered by all parties concerned and in the light of any further information which might be submitted to the Special Committee.

The mission drew the attention of the Special Committee and the General Assembly to the people's opposition to nuclear testing in the Pacific Ocean.

The mission recommended several areas in which specialized agencies and regional bodies might give assistance to the administering power to improve the living conditions of the people, and recalled that it was the role of the administering power to approach the international organizations, to draw their attention to the problems and projects at hand and to co-ordinate policies and projects.

The mission was convinced that the dispatch of visiting missions to the small territories was essential and was the critical element in the search for an adequate and satisfactory solution concerning the future political status of such territories.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, adopted a resolution concerning Tokelau by which, among other things, it commended the conclusions and recommendations of the 1976 visiting mission to the territory, to New Zealand and to the people of the Tokelau Islands for their consideration. It decided that, in accordance with the wishes of the people and in conformity with the mission's recommendation, the territory would from then on be known as Tokelau.

The Assembly expressed the view that measures to promote the economic development of Tokelau were an important element in the process of self-determination, and hoped that the administering power would continue to intensify and expand its programme of budgetary support and development aid. It requested the administering power to continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies, as well as other international bodies, in strengthening and developing the economy of the territory. Further, it requested the specialized agencies and other organizations to consider the methods and scale of their operations, in order to ensure that they were able to respond appropriately to the requirements of such small and isolated territories as Tokelau.

In addition, the Assembly requested New Zealand to take the necessary measures to intensify programmes of political education, as well as to ensure the preservation of the identity and cultural heritage of the people of the territory. Finally, it requested the Special Committee to continue to examine the question in the light of the mission's findings, including the possible dispatch of a second mission, as appropriate, and to report thereon to the Assembly in 1977.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/48. It was adopted, without objection, on a recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the draft, also without objection, on 15 November. The text was sponsored by Argentina, Australia, Austria, the Congo, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Malaysia, Mozambique, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon and the United Republic of Tanzania.

During the discussions, which took place mainly in the Fourth Committee, Fiji said that Tokelau would require continued assistance geared to its over-all economic development to help offset its geographical disadvantages. It was concerned about the very serious opposition expressed by the people to continued nuclear testing in the South Pacific. The exploitation of marine resources was vital to the economic development of the South Pacific; thus protests against nuclear testing in the region stemmed not from a refusal to recognize the right of a State to defend itself but rather from a concern for the effects of nuclear contamination on both human and marine life. Fiji appealed once again to France to stop further nuclear testing in the South Pacific.

New Zealand said that Tokelau was developing and strengthening direct contacts with its Pacific neighbours. New Zealand had always made it quite clear to the people of territories under its administration that their wishes were paramount. However, it fully understood that the affairs of men were subject to change and, if the day should come when Tokelau sought a different status, New Zealand would be ready and willing to help it achieve that status.

Tuvalu

On 20 August 1976, the Special Committee endorsed without objection the conclusions and recommendations of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning Tuvalu, administered by the United Kingdom.

The Committee reiterated its appreciation to the administering power for increasing its level of co-operation.

The Committee noted that Tuvalu had its own Constitution, providing for a new House of Assembly of eight elected members, and had advanced towards the ministerial system of government. It took note of the Chief Minister's statement that independence should follow perhaps in two or three years with the assistance of the administering power.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the rapid establishment of a new public service, composed almost entirely of Tuvaluans.

It expressed concern, however, over the fragility of the economy and noted that, apart from being dependent on overseas remittances, the only other economic prospects were copra and fisheries. While reiterating its call for continued assistance in the development and implementation of the fisheries programme and for an increase in the output of copra for export, it took note of the various forms of assistance the territory had received both from the administering power and from neighbouring countries on a bilateral basis.

On 1 December, the General Assembly adopted a consensus statement on Tuvalu, recommended by its Fourth Committee, whereby, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Tuvalu to self-determination in conformity with the Declaration on the granting of independence. The Assembly noted that, following the referendum held in the former territory of the Gilbert and Ellice Islands in 1974,<sup>41</sup> which was observed in part by a United Nations visiting mission, the separation of the Ellice Islands from the former territory was satisfactorily completed and the new territory, Tuvalu, was brought into being on 1 January 1976 with well-established institutions of self-government.

The Assembly urged the administering power to continue to assist the people to realize their aspirations in accordance with their right to self-determination. It requested the Special Committee, in continued co-operation with the administering power, to seek the best ways and means to implement the Declaration with respect to the territory and report thereon in 1977.

This consensus statement was set forth in decision 31/406 B. The Fourth Committee had approved the text without objection on 17 November.

United States Virgin Islands

The Special Committee adopted the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning the United States Virgin Islands on 20 August 1976 and it endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein.

In so doing, the Special Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the United States Virgin Islands to self-determination and independence.

The Special Committee noted that, on 6 October 1975, the House of Representatives of the United States Congress had passed a bill whereby the territorial Legislature would be authorized to call a constitutional convention to draft a constitution for the territory, and that the proposed bill was currently under consideration by the United States Senate.

The Committee noted further that the President of the territorial Legislature, whose views were shared by other legislative leaders, had expressed support for the House bill, and that the Governor and the minority leader of the Legislature had expressed reservations about the bill, with particular emphasis on the need to allow the proposed constitutional convention to draft a new federal relations act. The Committee considered that the bill represented a lack of significant constitutional progress towards the full implementation of the provisions of the Declaration on the granting of independence with respect to the territory and was concerned that it did not make provision for the people to consider any change in their current colonial status with the administering power.

by several political leaders of the United States and the United States Virgin Islands indicated that plans for constitutional development in the territory did not envisage the transfer of all powers to its people. Recalling that the proposals of the Second Constitutional Convention and the resolution adopted by it concerning the territory's future status had not received an overwhelming endorsement from voters in a referendum held in November 1972,<sup>42</sup> the Committee once more called upon the administering power not to prejudice the status question.

The Committee noted that efforts had been intensified to revitalize and strengthen the local economy by implementing measures set forth in an economic plan announced by the Governor in 1974, with particular emphasis on the promotion of economic diversification, and that the territorial Government intended to continue developing a comprehensive economic development plan. Nevertheless, the Committee was of the opinion that much remained to be done by the administering power in co-operation with the local authorities before the territory would achieve a more viable and stable economy.

A proposal made by the President of the United States on 1 April 1976 to grant to the territory a special federal loan of $76 million, principally for essential capital improvement projects, was also noted; the Committee hoped that the United States Congress would expedite the approval required for that proposal.

The Committee also urged the administering power to continue assisting the territory to improve its social situation, particularly in the fields of labour, public housing, health care and education.

In noting that under a constitutional bill recently passed by the House of Representatives the United States would continue to impose restrictions on the territory's fiscal and taxing powers, the Committee urged it to give serious consideration to views recently expressed by the executive branch of the Government and by some leaders of the territorial Legislature with regard to eliminating those federal restrictions which were inconsistent with the right of the territory to self-determination.

Noting also a statement of the United States made on 15 April 1976 that it had been considering the possibility of inviting a visiting mission to the territory, the Committee strongly urged early access of such a mission to the territory.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 31/57 concerning the United States Virgin Islands. By this resolution, it approved the chapter of the report of the Special Committee relating to the United States Virgin Islands and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the territory to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration; it also reaffirmed its view that questions of size, location and limited resources should not delay its implementation.

The Assembly then called upon the United States, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people, to continue to take all the necessary steps to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in the Declaration with respect to the territory. It also called upon the United States to take all possible steps to diversify the territory's economy, to work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development, and to enlist the aid of the specialized agencies and other bodies in this endeavour. Favourable consideration of an invitation to a United Nations mission to visit the territory was also requested. Also, the Assembly urged the United States, with the co-operation of the territorial Government, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people to the enjoyment of their natural resources, guaranteeing their rights to own and dispose of those resources and to control their future development.

Resolution 31/57 was adopted by the Assembly without objection. The Fourth Committee had approved the text by consensus on 19 November 1976; it was sponsored by the Dominican Republic, the Ivory Coast and Sierra Leone. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United States said that it had the same reservations regarding this resolution as it had regarding the resolution concerning American Samoa (see above): specifically, the United States was committed to the principle of self-determination, but believed that self-determination could lead to a status other than independence.

Western Sahara

Communications

During 1976 the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received a number of communications from Algeria, Mauritania and Morocco concerning the situation in Western Sahara. These were circulated to members of the Security Council and General Assembly.

On 6 February 1976, Algeria transmitted a memorandum referring to the agreement concluded on 14 November 1975 at Madrid by Spain, Morocco and Mauritania<sup>43</sup> and stating, among other things, that developments in Western Sahara following that agreement would have serious consequences for the future national unity and territorial integrity of the Saharan people and for peace, security and stability in that region. That agreement, Algeria declared, was totally lacking in validity, as it was in complete contradiction of the Charter of the United Nations and relevant United Nations resolutions, in particular the General Assembly's resolution of 10 December 1975.<sup>44</sup> A blatant act of aggression against the Saharan people by the countries that signed the tripartite agreement of Madrid was taking place, and it was imperative that the dangerous process of deterioration be halted and international legality restored.

Spain, by a letter dated 26 February, called attention to the efforts made by the Spanish Government to achieve speedy decolonization of the territory under peaceful conditions. It noted that the persistence of circumstances beyond its control had thus far made it impossible to organize the popular consultation provided for by the Madrid agreement. Referring to provisions of that agreement, the letter stated that, as at 26 February, Spain definitively terminated its presence in the territory of the Sahara and thenceforth considered itself exempt from any responsibility of an international nature in connexion with the administration of that territory. Further, Spain took the position that the decolonization of Western Sahara would reach its climax when the views of the Saharan population had been validly expressed.

On 8 March, the representative of Algeria transmitted a statement by a spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Algeria pointing out that the President of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, which had met at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 23 to 29 February 1976, had declared that the Saharan people, like all other peoples, were entitled to exercise the right of self-determination; therefore, the Council of Ministers had recognized the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el Hamra y Río de Oro (Frente POLISARIO) as a liberation movement. Algeria, it was stated, unconditionally supported all liberation movements, particularly those in Africa, and therefore joined Burundi and Madagascar in recognizing the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic.

By a letter dated 17 May, the representative of Algeria transmitted a message from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Algeria to the Secretary-General in which the Minister referred to two agreements signed at Rabat on 14 April 1976 by Morocco and Mauritania; one on the delimitation of the frontier between those two States, and the other on economic co-operation between them in Western Sahara. Algeria held that those agreements fell fully within the framework of the policy of aggression and fait accompli pursued by those two countries in Western Sahara; therefore, Algeria accorded no validity to those agreements and considered them null and void.

A letter from Mauritania, dated 14 June, stated that for some time Algeria had been pursuing a systematic policy of aggression and intimidation against Mauritania. Mercenary units organized, armed and financed by Algeria had attacked civilian objectives situated within the Mauritanian frontiers of 1960. During May, two localities had been hit by mortar fire, causing casualties among the innocent population. On 8 June, a column of several hundred men, including the Secretary-General of the so-called liberation movement of the Sahara, had arrived in the vicinity of the capital, Nouakchott, with instructions to overthrow the Mauritanian Government. Although their plan had been foiled by the Mauritanian security forces, it nevertheless constituted an extremely dangerous precedent which seriously affected peace and security in the entire region.

On 23 June 1976, Algeria replied to Mauritania's letter of 14 June, stating that, while Algeria had never concealed its position of support for the legitimate demands of the Saharan people, it rejected as utterly baseless and contrary to the truth the Mauritanian accusation against Algeria. The policy that had been pursued by Morocco and Mauritania in Western Sahara was contrary to the solemn undertakings that had been assumed by the highest Mauritanian authorities towards the Saharan people, Algeria added. It continued to affirm that the only possible step to rectify the situation was to allow the Saharan people to exercise their right to self-determination.

A further letter from Mauritania, dated 24 June, reiterated the charges concerning the attack against Nouakchott on 8 June 1976 as having been planned and organized by Algerian leaders and headed by Algerian officers. This was a grave violation of international law and an inadmissible attack against a Member of the United Nations. Mauritania considered that Algeria, in creating the so-called Republic of Sahara and granting it de jure recognition, was the real cause of tension in the area.

On 13 July, Algeria transmitted the texts of two resolutions on Western Sahara. The first it said was adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at its June-July 1976 session and the second by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its thirteenth session in Mauritius (2-5 July 1976). By the first resolution, the Council of Ministers reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Western Sahara to self-determination and to national independence; it requested the United Nations Secretary-General to pursue his mission with a view to enabling the Saharan people freely to exercise their right to self-determination, and demanded the immediate withdrawal of all foreign forces of occupation from Western Sahara. By the second resolution OAU invited all the parties concerned and interested, including the people of Western Sahara, to co-operate with a view to achieving a peaceful solution of the conflict, and decided to hold a special session at the level of heads of State and Government with the participation of the people of Western Sahara for the purpose of finding a just and lasting solution to the problem of Western Sahara.

In a reply dated 15 July, Mauritania stated that the resolution on Western Sahara of the OAU Council of Ministers transmitted with the Algerian letter had not been ratified by the thirteenth summit meeting of OAU, which had instead adopted the second resolution transmitted by Algeria. Accordingly, the definitive position of OAU concerning Western Sahara could not emerge until its special session took place.

On 27 July, Morocco transmitted the text of a message dated 26 July from the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of Morocco to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The message referred to a joint communiqué issued on 23 July 1976 after talks between the King of Morocco and the President of Mauritania, which included an appeal to native Saharans currently in the Tindouf (Algeria) area to return to their respective countries, and an invitation to the competent international organizations of humanitarian character to co-operate with the Moroccan and Mauritanian Governments with a view to ensuring the repatriation of such persons.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The Special Committee considered the question of Spanish (Western) Sahara on 10 September 1976. It decided to refer the question to the General Assembly and authorized its Rapporteur to transmit to the Assembly the relevant documentation in order to facilitate the Assembly's consideration of the question.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 11 November 1976, the General Assembly's Fourth Committee heard a statement by a representative of the Frente POLISARIO, Mohamed Abdelaziz, who spoke as a petitioner.

The POLISARIO representative reviewed the events of 1975 and said the tripartite Madrid agreement concluded in November 1975 was illegal and invalid because a fait accompli had been imposed upon the people depriving them of their legitimate rights to self-determination. He described the struggle for independence, which, with the support of the Saharan people, his movement was waging against the Moroccan and Mauritanian occupying forces.

The POLISARIO representative urged that the General Assembly: reaffirm the right of the Saharan people to self-determination and independence, which had been prevented by the presence of aggressive troops; vigorously condemn the Moroccan/Mauritanian aggression and urge the two Governments to withdraw their challenge to the international community and its laws under pain of severe penalties; and recall the duty of Member States to support countries which had been attacked and peoples fighting for their independence and urge them to refrain from all direct or indirect aid to the aggressors.

The representative of Algeria said it was necessary to recall that, when Morocco and Mauritania invaded Western Sahara, the 1975 United Nations visiting mission<sup>45</sup> had just reported that the people of the territory had overwhelmingly declared their wish for independence and against the territorial claims of Morocco and Mauritania. Also he would recall that the International Court of Justice<sup>46</sup> did not find any claims which would justify the denial of the right of the Western Sahara to self-determination in favour of the claims of Morocco and Mauritania. Moreover, even Spain, the administering power, had not accepted that the people of the territory had fully exercised their right to self-determination as envisaged by United Nations resolutions. Therefore, the decolonization of the Western Sahara had yet to be carried out. As the people of the territory were still struggling to preserve their identity, to construct a nation and to organize their life according to their own traditions, the problem of Western Sahara had become a source of discord among countries of the region. He hoped that, with the help of the United Nations, OAU and the international community as a whole, justice would be done to the Saharan people to enable them to exercise their rights in complete freedom.

Following these two statements, a draft resolution on the question of Western Sahara was put forward by the African group of Member States through the Chairman of the Fourth Committee. On 12 November this draft resolution was approved by consensus and, on 1 December, it was adopted without objection by the General Assembly as resolution 31/45.

By this resolution, the Assembly: reaffirmed its commitment to the principle of self-determination of peoples in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence; took note of the decision of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU to convene an extraordinary session with a view to finding a just and lasting solution to the problem of Western Sahara; decided to postpone the question of Western Sahara to its 1977 session; and requested the Administrative Secretary-General of OAU to inform the United Nations Secretary-General of the progress achieved in the implementation of OAU'S decisions concerning Western Sahara.

Speaking after the vote in the Fourth Committee, Spain welcomed the spirit of consensus that had prevailed in the adoption of the resolution, which, it considered, contained positive elements, particularly with respect to the principle of self-determination. Spain was sure that the extraordinary session of OAU would help find a just and lasting solution to the problem of Western Sahara. It recalled that the Spanish position had been clearly set forth in its letter of 26 February 1976 to the Secretary-General (see above), wherein it had pointed out, inter alia, that with effect from that date it terminated its presence in the territory and considered itself exempt from any responsibility of an international nature in connexion with the administration of the territory.

Morocco said that, ever since the question of the Sahara had come before the United Nations, all imaginable arguments had been set forth. Faithful to the spirit of unanimity of the African group, he would refrain from adding to those arguments. The Kingdom of Morocco trusted in the wisdom of the African heads of State and was convinced that they would be able to thwart any manoeuvre and arrive at a real solution to the problem.

Mauritania said that it had refrained from speaking because OAU, during its extraordinary session, would have an opportunity to discuss the problem, which was essentially an African one. Furthermore, the African group of Member States had preferred to tackle the problem in a spirit of unity and understanding.

During and after the General Assembly session, Algeria addressed communications to the Secretary-General (on 26 October and 29 December) reiterating its position, while Morocco on 28 October requested the Secretary-General to circulate a message its Minister of State for Foreign Affairs had addressed to the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of African countries. This message stated Morocco's position.

Other territories

In 1976, the General Assembly and its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples also considered the situations in the following additional territories: Antigua, Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, Dominica, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

On 18 February 1976, the Special Committee decided, inter alia, to refer to its Sub-Committee on Small Territories the questions of Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat, Pitcairn, and the Turks and Caicos Islands for consideration and report.

On 10 September 1976, the Special Committee decided, without objection, to transmit to the General Assembly the Secretariat documentation on Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent, in order to facilitate consideration of the item and, subject to any directives it might receive from the Assembly at its 1976 session, to consider the territories in 1977.

BERMUDA

On 20 August 1976, the Special Committee adopted, without objection, the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning Bermuda and endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein.

In so doing, the Special Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Bermuda to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the granting of independence. Fully aware of the special circumstances of Bermuda, the Committee reiterated the view that those circumstances should in no way delay the speedy implementation of the process of self-determination.

The Special Committee again welcomed the increased co-operation given by the administering power—the United Kingdom—both by participating in the work of the Committee and by permitting the access of visiting missions to small territories under its administration. It also welcomed a United Kingdom statement that it would not stand in the way of independence for any of the territories under its administration, should that be the wish of the majority of their people.

The Committee believed that the administering power of a non-self-governing territory had the obligation to ensure that the people of the territory were made fully aware of their right to self-determination, in accordance with the Declaration, and that all options available to them for their political development were explained. It noted from a statement made by the representative of the administering power that Bermuda's democratic political institutions had been developed to a point where there was little constitutional advance currently possible short of independence.

The Committee expressed its concern at the existing electoral system and urged the United Kingdom, in consultation with the local authorities, to take appropriate measures to introduce electoral reform in Bermuda, particularly revision of that part of its Constitution relating to the expatriate vote, if necessary, in order to ensure that the expa-triate vote did not influence decisively the question of the future status of the territory.

The Committee reiterated its recommendation concerning the need to encourage leading representatives of the political parties to present to the Sub-Committee on Small Territories their respective positions in regard to questions relating to independence and the franchise. In that connexion, it reiterated its view of the importance of a United Nations visiting mission having access to Bermuda. It expressed the hope that the administering power, together with the territorial Government, would continue to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the people of Bermuda would be able freely to determine their future political status in accordance with the Declaration.

The Committee expressed the hope that the presence of foreign military bases in Bermuda would not constitute an inhibiting factor in permitting the people of the territory to exercise their right to self-determination.

The Committee once again emphasized the importance of diversifying the Bermudian economy and called upon the administering power, in consultation with the local authorities, to take the necessary steps in that regard.

CAYMAN ISLANDS, MONTSERRAT, AND TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS

The Special Committee, on 20 August 1976, adopted without objection the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning the Cayman Islands, Montserrat, and the Turks and Caicos Islands, and endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein.

In so doing, the Special Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of those territories to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the granting of independence.

Fully aware of the special circumstances of those territories, owing to such factors as their size, geographical location, population and limited natural resources, the Committee reiterated the view that those circumstances should in no way delay the speedy implementation of the process of self-determination in accordance with the Declaration.

The Committee once again welcomed the increased co-operation of the administering power—the United Kingdom—both by participating actively in the Committee's work and by permitting visiting missions access to small territories, expressing the hope that the administering power would continue consultations with the Committee on arrangements for future missions.

The Committee was pleased to note from a statement by the United Kingdom that it remained its policy to grant independence to the three territories should their peoples so wish. In that connexion, the Committee firmly believed that it was the responsibility of the administering power to provide the conditions under which their wishes with regard to their future status could be freely ascertained.

The Committee noted from the information presented to it that there had been a lack of significant constitutional progress towards the full implementation of the Declaration with respect to these territories. It requested the United Kingdom to continue to take measures to expedite the process of decolonization in those territories in accordance with General Assembly resolutions and the observations of the 1975 mission to Montserrat,<sup>47</sup> as well as with the expressed wishes of the peoples.

The Special Committee also urged the United Kingdom to take all possible steps to strengthen the economies of the territories through diversification.

The Committee, finally, took note of a number of projects which continued to be carried out in the territories under the auspices of the United Nations and its specialized agencies. Believing that such assistance was useful for the economic and social development of the territories, it expressed the hope that it would be further increased.

With regard to the Cayman Islands, the Committee noted that elections were to be held in the Cayman Islands later in 1976. It believed that there was an urgent need for measures to be taken by the administering power aimed at developing and encouraging the political awareness of the Caymanians.

The Committee expressed satisfaction at the economic and social conditions prevailing in the Cayman Islands. It noted with interest that a draft development plan for 1975-1990, prepared by experts, had been the subject of a thorough and comprehensive public debate and would be laid before the Legislative Assembly for decision.

Concerning Montserrat, the Committee urged the administering power to take concrete measures aimed at providing the people of the territory with an opportunity to consider freely all the options available to them for the realization of their aspirations for the political future of their territory.

The Committee recalled that the 1975 visiting mission to Montserrat had suggested that the territory be granted full internal self-government in law, since that was the current de facto situation, and that the attendance of the Attorney-General and the Financial Secretary at meetings of the Executive Council be only as advisers and not as full members. In connexion with the former suggestion, the Committee urged the administering power to take effective steps towards the attainment by the territory of the full legal status of internal self-government. The Committee considered that the latter suggestion should be implemented if it was in accordance with the wishes of the Government of Montserrat.

The Committee noted that the territory was faced with several pressing economic problems. Referring to the measures being taken by the territorial Government to cope with those problems and considering that those measures were indications of the seriousness with which Montserrat viewed its development, the Committee urged the United Kingdom to continue to assist the territory in solving those problems as far and as quickly as possible.

In regard to the Turks and Caicos Islands, the Committee noted that the necessary constitutional instruments were being drawn up to implement changes aimed at ensuring wider participation by the islanders in the central organs of government, but that a date for the new Constitution to become effective had not been fixed.

The Committee took note of the fact that the territory was heavily dependent on the administering power for budgetary and development aid. It welcomed the assistance it provided and hoped that it would continue to increase its meaningful and substantial development aid so that the territory could at the earliest opportunity implement programmes to improve communications, social welfare facilities, education and training.

The Committee expressed the hope that the presence of foreign military bases in the islands would not be an inhibiting factor in permitting the people to exercise their right to self-determination. It noted with approval that in order to improve the economic and social situation in the islands, the territorial Government had taken several significant measures, such as the establishment of a Development Board. The Committee considered that there was still an urgent need for the administering power to assist the territorial Government in taking effective action in the fields of economic development and labour.

Concerning Pitcairn, administered by the United Kingdom, the Special Committee, on 20 August 1976, adopted a consensus statement whereby, among other things, it took note of the statement of the administering power reaffirming its policy to preserve the island community life for as long as the people of the territory wished and were physically able to remain on the island. The Committee also welcomed and hoped for early implementation of the plans of the administering power to improve the harbour facilities by helping to construct a new jetty and clear the landing area of dangerous rocks.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly's Fourth Committee considered the reports of the Special Committee on the various small territories. On 1 December 1976, the Assembly adopted a resolution—31/52—concerning the question of Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat, and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

By the resolution, the Assembly approved the chapters of the report of the Special Committee on those territories and reaffirmed the inalienable right of their peoples to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the granting of independence. It also reaffirmed its conviction that questions of size, geographical isolation and limited resources should not delay implementation of the Declaration.

The Assembly called upon the administering power, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the peoples, to continue to take all the necessary steps to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in the Declaration. It further called upon the administering power to expand its programme of budgetary and development aid, and to take all possible steps, in consultation with the local authorities as appropriate, to diversify and strengthen further the economies of the territories and to work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development for them. It then urged the administering power, with the co-operation of the territorial Governments, to safeguard the inalienable right of the peoples to the enjoyment of their natural resources by guaranteeing their rights to own those resources and to control future development of them.

The Assembly welcomed the positive attitude of the administering power concerning visiting missions in the territories and requested the Chairman of the Special Committee to continue his consultations with a view to the dispatch of such missions, as appropriate.

It then asked the Special Committee to continue to seek the best ways and means to implement the Declaration with respect to those territories, including the possible dispatch of visiting missions, and to report thereon again in 1977.

Resolution 31/52 was adopted without objection on 1 December 1976. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 17 November 1976 without objection. The sponsors were Australia, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Canada, Guinea, Guyana, India, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Mozambique, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Kingdom.

During the discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom said that its approach to its dependent territories had always been based on the Charter of the United Nations, which specified that the interests of the inhabitants of non-self-governing territories were paramount and that the wishes of the peoples of those territories should be respected in their quest for self-government.

In regard to Bermuda, the United Kingdom said that the party which in the past had opposed independence currently formed the Government, but some of its members had given indications that they did not have closed minds on the subject. It would be quite inappropriate for the United Kingdom to intervene in the political life of the Bermudians to ensure that they realized that they had a right to self-determination, as it was asked to do by the Special Committee. The political life of Bermuda was active, and even if that were not the case the United Kingdom would not have the power to intervene, since its responsibilities were limited to external affairs, defence and internal security.

Regarding Montserrat, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the Cayman Islands, the United Kingdom said that those territories had well-developed institutions of self-government and in none of them had a widespread desire for independence been expressed. The Special Committee's visiting missions to Montserrat and the British Virgin Islands had resulted in useful recommendations. As the Committee had noted, the dilemma of small island territories was that with their limited resources they might never be able to be independent economically. The United Kingdom endorsed the Committee's view that that problem merited careful examination in the United Nations.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, deferred until its 1977 session consideration of the questions of Pitcairn and of Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent. This action was set forth in decision 31/406 E.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Belize,

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 3432(XXX) of 8 December 1975,

Having heard the statements of the representatives of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Guatemala,

Having also heard the statement of the representative of Belize,

Reaffirming the principles established in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, set out in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, in particular that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Noting that negotiations have taken place between the Government of the United Kingdom, as the administering Power, acting in close consultation with the Government of Belize, and the Government of Guatemala, pursuant to the provisions of paragraphs 4 and 5 of resolution 3432(XXX),

Regretting that these negotiations have not resulted in the removal of such obstacles as have hitherto prevented the people of Belize from exercising freely and without fear their inalienable right to self-determination and independence,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Belize to self-determination and independence;

2. Reaffirms that the inviolability and territorial integrity of Belize must be preserved;

3. Calls upon all States to respect the right of the people of Belize to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity, to facilitate the attainment of their goal of a secure and early independence and to refrain from any action that would threaten the territorial integrity of Belize;

4. Calls also upon the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, acting in close consultation with the Government of

Belize, and the Government of Guatemala to pursue vigorously their negotiations in accordance with the principles of General Assembly resolution 3432(XXX), in order to reach an early conclusion;

5. Requests the two Governments concerned to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on such agreements as may have been reached in the negotiations referred to above;

6. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue its examination of the question.

Recalling its resolution 3485(XXX) of 12 December 1975 and Security Council resolutions 384(1975) of 22 December 1975 and 389(1976) of 22 April 1976,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the Territory,

Bearing in mind that part of the Political Declaration adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, relating to the question of East Timor,

5. Rejects the claim that East Timor has been integrated into Indonesia, inasmuch as the people of the Territory have not been able to exercise freely their right to self-determination and independence;

6. Calls upon the Government of Indonesia to withdraw all its forces from the Territory;

7. ## Chapter III

The question of Namibia

In 1976, as in previous years, the question of Namibia was considered by various United Nations bodies. The Security Council, the General Assembly, the Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>1</sup> and the United Nations Council for Namibia all took decisions on the matter. Related decisions were taken by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Economic and Social Council.

On 26 November 1975, the General Assembly had urged the Security Council urgently to take up again the question of Namibia.<sup>2</sup> The Council did so in late January 1976 and unanimously adopted resolution 385(1976) on 30 January, by which, among other things, it condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of and military build-up in Namibia and utilization of the territory as a base for attacks on neighbouring countries, and demanded that South Africa urgently make a solemn declaration concerning the holding of free elections in Namibia under United Nations supervision—undertaking to comply with relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions and with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971,<sup>3</sup> and recognizing the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia as a nation.

The Council reiterated its demand that South Africa withdraw its illegal administration in Namibia. Pending the transfer of powers, the Council demanded that South Africa take certain measures, which included the release of political prisoners, the abolition of discriminatory and repressive laws and practices, and the granting to all Namibians in exile full facilities for return. The Council decided to meet on or before 31 August 1976 to review South Africa's compliance with the resolution and, in the event of non-compliance, to consider appropriate measures to be taken under the Charter of the United Nations.

The Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence adopted a consensus statement on 17 June whereby, among other things, it once again emphatically denounced the Government of South Africa for its persistent refusal to terminate its illegal occupation of Namibia. The Special Committee also considered that, in the event that South Africa did not comply with the Security Council's resolution of 30 January, the Council should consider adopting appropriate measures under Chapter VII of the Charter.<sup>4</sup>

Also on 17 June, the Special Committee adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it approved the report of its six-member Ad Hoc Group, which had visited Botswana, Ethiopia, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia and had met with government leaders and officials and with representatives of national liberation movements and the Organization of African Unity (OAU). The Group put forward a proposal, supported by the Special Committee, that an international conference be convened in 1977 to mobilize world public opinion in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe (Southern Rhodesia) and Namibia.

The Security Council resumed consideration of the question on 31 August and held additional meetings between 28 September and 19 October. A seven-power draft resolution was voted on but not adopted, owing to the negative vote of three permanent members (France, the United Kingdom and the United States).

By this rejected text, the Council would have, among other things, condemned South Africa's failure to comply with the terms of the Council's resolution of 30 January and South Africa's attempts to evade the demand for holding free elections under United Nations supervision in Namibia. It would have denounced the so-called Turnhalle constitutional conference as a device for evading compliance with Security Council resolutions.

The Council also would have: reaffirmed the legal responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia; reiterated its demand that South Africa immediately withdraw its illegal administration, transfer power to the people of Namibia and end the policy of bantustans and so-called homelands; reaffirmed its declaration that free elections under United Nations supervision be held for Namibia as one political entity; and demanded that South Africa urgently comply with the foregoing provisions.

Stating that it was acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council would then have determined that the illegal occupation of Namibia and the war being waged there by South Africa constituted a threat to international peace and security, and decided that all States were to prevent any supply of arms, ammunition, aircraft, vehicles and military equipment to South Africa, as well as equipment and materials for the manufacture and maintenance of arms and ammunition in South Africa and Namibia.

In its 1976 report to the General Assembly, the United Nations Council for Namibia said, among other things, that it had continued to mobilize world public opinion in support of the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia, had provided material and moral assistance to Namibians and had closely followed political, military and economic conditions in the territory. It had fully supported the activities of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), the authentic liberation movement of Namibia, and condemned the proposals of the so-called constitutional conference in Namibia as totally lacking in legitimacy.

The Council reported that the United Nations Institute for Namibia, proposed by the Council and endorsed by the General Assembly in 1974, was officially opened at Lusaka, Zambia, on Namibia Day, 26 August 1976.

The Council also made a number of recommendations for action to be taken by the Assembly.

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, adopted eight resolutions on the following aspects of the question: the situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa; the programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia; intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia; action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to Namibia; dissemination of information on Namibia; observer status for SWAPO; a Nationhood Programme for Namibia; and the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

Details of these and related decisions are given in the sections that follow.

Communications (January 1976)

By a letter dated 22 January 1976, the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Declaration of Dakar on Namibia and Human Rights, adopted at the International Conference on Namibia and Human Rights held at the Senegalese capital from 5 to 8 January 1976, together with a Programme of Action adopted by the Conference and proposed to States and organizations as a set of measures to be taken to secure for the people of Namibia the exercise of their right to self-determination.

By a letter dated 26 January, the representative of the Netherlands transmitted to the Secretary-General, at the request of Luxembourg, which was currently exercising the function of President of the European Community, the outlines of a démarche undertaken with respect to the situation in Namibia by the Netherlands Ambassador to South Africa on behalf of the nine member countries of the Community (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom). Among other things, they considered that South Africa should withdraw from Namibia as soon as possible and that the inhabitants of Namibia should have the opportunity to exercise at an early date their right to self-determination and independence. The exercise of that right should consist of the opportunity of expressing their opinions on the political and constitutional future of the territory as a whole, through a fully democratic process under the supervision of the United Nations.

Also, according to the nine countries, all political groups should be free to engage in peaceful political activities throughout the territory during the process of self-determination; the release of all Namibians detained because of their political opinions and the return to their territory of Namibians currently in exile could contribute appreciably to ensuring democratic and peaceful participation in the process of self-determination.

In the light of the foregoing, the nine countries considered that what had emerged thus far from the constitutional conference being held at Windhoek, Namibia, was inadequate: its representativeness having been limited to ethnic groups, not all political forces had been able to participate in it and it thus did not appear to guarantee the fully democratic character of the process of self-determination or to provide for the constitutional future of Namibia.

The nine countries felt it was essential for South Africa to promote the process of self-determination of Namibia on the basis of the above-mentioned principles and by applying modalities which should be determined through negotiations between the South African Government and the United Nations Secretary-General, so as to enable the United Nations to exercise supervision.

By a letter of the same date, the representative of Uganda transmitted to the President of the Security Council a message setting forth the position of OAU on the situation in Namibia as follows: (i) South Africa immediately had to withdraw its illegal occupation of the territory and repeal its oppressive laws; (ii) the situation in Namibia was a threat to peace and the Security Council should call for the application of Chapter VII of the Charter; (iii) Namibia's territorial integrity had to be preserved and South Africa's policy of bantustanization could not be tolerated; (iv) SWAPO was the sole representative of the Namibian people; (v) the illegal exploitation of Namibia's natural resources had to be stopped; (vi) increased arms supply to South Africa should be condemned; and (vii) the use of Namibian territory for aggression against Angola had to be condemned.

In a letter addressed to the Secretary-General and dated 27 January, the representative of South Africa said that his Government did not recognize any right of the United Nations to supervise the affairs of the territory, adding that the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971 was, as its name indicated, advisory only.

After reviewing what he described as the impressive developments which had been and continued to be achieved in the territory and giving details about the South West Africa Constitutional Conference, which had been convened at Windhoek on 1 September 1975, the South African representative said his Government was astonished that there had not been more appreciation of the real efforts it had made to encourage the constitutional development of the territory. For the first time in history, he said, representatives of all population groups there were voluntarily co-operating to draft a constitution. In South Africa's view, that course of action reflected the true meaning of the concept of self-determination.

In spite of the hostile reaction of the United Nations to the many initiatives taken by South Africa to advance the people of the territory socially, economically and politically, the South African Government reiterated its offer to negotiate with a mutually acceptable personal representative of the Secretary-General in order that he might acquaint himself with the development of the process of self-determination in the territory and attend the Constitutional Conference as an observer. It also reiterated its offer to discuss progress and development with leaders of Africa, the United Nations Council for the territory and the special committee of OAU. They would also be welcome to visit South West Africa, the representative said. Additional information regarding the territory was provided in the letter as an annex entitled "South West Africa Survey, 1974."

Consideration by the Security Council (27-30 January 1976)

By a letter dated 16 December 1975, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the text of a resolution adopted by the General Assembly on 26 November 1975<sup>5</sup> by which, among other things, it urged the Security Council urgently to take up again the question of Namibia, and to act to give effect to Security Council resolution 366(1974) of 17 December 1974.<sup>6</sup>

The Council resumed its consideration of the question at meetings held between 27 and 30 January 1976. The representatives of the following Member States were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Algeria, Bangladesh, Burundi, Cuba, Egypt, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Nigeria, Poland, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, Tunisia and Yugoslavia.

The Council also decided to extend an invitation under rule 39 of its rules of procedure<sup>7</sup> to the President and four other members of the United Nations Council for Namibia and to the Rapporteur of the Special Committee against Apartheid. The Council also acceded to the request contained in a letter dated 26 January 1976 from the representatives of Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania that an invitation under rule 39 be extended to Moses M. Garoeb, Administrative Secretary of the South West Africa People's Organization of Namibia.

A number of spokesmen for African and Asian States who participated in the discussion observed that South Africa's position and attitude since the Security Council last considered the situation in Namibia in June 1975 remained basically unchanged: it refused to withdraw from the territory, it had said it would not allow the United Nations to have any role in the political and constitutional future of Namibia, and its position regarding the maintenance of Namibia's territorial integrity had been stated in ambiguous terms. In short, South Africa had clearly shown that it had no intention of complying with the provisions of Security Council resolution 366(1974).

The representative of Kenya noted that the people of Namibia still suffered under the oppressive rule of the illegal régime, which continued to escalate police brutality through killings, mass arrests, detentions of political leaders, torture, and other forms of political repression. The representative of India and others said the purpose of the new wave of oppression had been to arrest and imprison all opponents of the régime in Namibia before the convening of the so-called constitutional conference, which was designed to divide the Namibian people and perpetuate South African domination of the territory. It was pointed out, by Kenya and others, that the conference was no more than a trick to deceive the people of Namibia and the United Nations. The so-called African leaders who attended the conference were merely the hired puppets of South Africa, whereas the representatives of SWAPO—which had been recognized by both OAU and the United Nations as the sole legitimate representative of the Namibian people—had been excluded. Kenya and other speakers noted that the manner in which South Africa had conducted the conference had alarmed not only the people of Namibia but the whole international community, including the members of the European Community, which had expressed their concern in their letter of 26 January to the Secretary-General (see above).

Many speakers—those representing Algeria, Indonesia, Nigeria and Panama among them—condemned South Africa for extending to Namibia its policies of apartheid. The representative of Kenya observed that it was difficult not to view South Africa as anything but the worst colonial power of the century; the only suitable description of South Africa's form of colonialism was slavery. How could anyone believe, he asked, that a régime which continued to apply policies of apartheid within its own borders and which practised the worst racial discrimination through legislation could be trusted to offer Namibia a constitution that guaranteed fundamental human rights and freedom from racial discrimination.

The spokesman for Kuwait suggested that South Africa wanted to create a buffer zone in Namibia to serve as an early warning station against a threat from the north and prevent the advent of pan-Africanism within South Africa. By applying the policy of apartheid, by fragmenting the territory into bantustans and homelands and by reviving obsolete tribalism, South Africa intended to ensure that the fragmented white areas would seek protection from Pretoria, thus enabling it to extend its authority.

The representative of Sweden observed that the homeland system was in reality apartheid pushed to its ultimate extreme: apartheid not only between white and non-white but also between different groups within the African population. The representative of Kenya, noting that the General Assembly had repeatedly condemned the policy of bantustans inside South Africa itself, said it was even more deplorable for South Africa to extend such policies to Namibia, a territory it occupied illegally.

The representative went on to say that the cry from South Africa about foreign intervention in Angola was a cover to conceal its own massive military build-up in Namibia, which was currently being used as a spring-board for South African intervention in the affairs of other African countries. The militarization of Namibia was being accelerated even while South Africa, with the support of certain Western powers, was preparing to become a nuclear power by exploiting uranium in Namibia.

Mr. Garoeb, the representative of SWAPO, said that the militarization of Namibia had not been limited to the reinforcement and redeployment of the racist regime's regular armed forces in Namibia but involved also the establishment of new army and air bases at strategic points through the territory, one of which was to be completed shortly at the town of Grootfontein, some 230 kilometres south of the Namibian-Angolan border.

He went on to say that this militarization had led to increased repression and indiscriminate killing of Namibians. During the last quarter of 1975, hundreds of Namibians—men, women and children—were killed when the racist troops decided to clear a 250-kilometre "security zone" along the Namibian-Angolan border. Some of the villages along the border area were simply wiped out because they were allegedly harbouring SWAPO guerrillas. Namibians continued to die as the militarization process gained momentum throughout the country. He charged that the illegal régime aimed at creating an elaborate military infrastructure throughout Namibia. Its actions were not those of a country that intended to withdraw from Namibia, as South Africa alleged: it was in fact bent on entrenching its illegal occupation indefinitely.

The SWAPO representative also deplored the "ugly reality" of South Africa's becoming a nuclear power and the collaboration it had received in that connexion from Western powers.

A number of speakers, including Panama, also condemned South Africa's military build-up, which they charged was designed to perpetuate its presence in Namibia, maintain an oppressive régime there and openly use the territory as a base from which to carry out military incursions threatening the security and sovereignty of other African countries. Sweden's representative added that that policy created a situation of dangerous tension in Africa and it was imperative to keep up and increase international pressure on the South African Government.

The spokesman for the United Republic of Tanzania said that the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia posed a threat to international peace and security, and the Council's basic objective must therefore be to get South Africa to leave. South Africa had to be isolated completely from all international intercourse of every kind, including diplomatic and other relations which enabled the régime to continue enjoying some form of political respectability. He also called for severance of all economic relations with South Africa relating to Namibia and he deplored the role of foreign firms in Namibia which he said continued relentlessly to exploit the economy of the territory.

The Tanzanian representative challenged the South African régime to accept a free expression of the views of the Namibians through an election supervised and controlled by the United Nations. All exiled political leaders had to be allowed to return and all restrictive laws repealed. Namibia had to be free; whether that freedom came through the ballot or the barrel of a gun was for South Africa to choose. He added that, in both choices, the responsibility of South Africa's allies was a heavy one.

A number of speakers called on the Western powers to cease their economic, military, political and other assistance to South Africa, which only served, they said, to encourage it in its defiance of United Nations decisions on Namibia.

The President of the United Nations Council for Namibia said that at the very minimum the Security Council should: first, condemn South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia and demand that it comply with the relevant resolutions calling on it to withdraw; second, condemn South Africa's attempts to divide Namibia into so-called homelands and its application there of racially discriminatory and repressive laws and practices; third, condemn the South African military build-up in Namibia and the convening of the so-called constitutional conference in the territory; fourth, direct that free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations be held for the whole of Namibia as one political entity; and, fifth, demand that South Africa accept the requirement for the holding of free elections, undertaking to comply with United Nations decisions and the 1971 advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice and recognizing the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia as a nation.

It was also imperative, he went on to say, for South Africa: to release all Namibian political prisoners, including all those imprisoned or detained in connexion with offences under so-called internal security laws; to abolish the application in Namibia of all racially discriminatory and politically repressive laws and practices, particularly those relating to bantustans and homelands; and to accord unconditionally to all Namibians currently in exile for political reasons full facilities for return without risk of arrest, detention, intimidation or imprisonment.

The representative of the United Kingdom said his Government regarded South Africa's occupation of Namibia as unlawful and believed that South Africa should withdraw from the territory as soon as possible. Namibians should be allowed to exercise their right to self-determination and independence as a single State, in the same way as the peoples of all other former dependent territories in Africa. He noted that on a number of occasions the United Kingdom had condemned the practice of apartheid in Namibia and the practice of detaining Namibians without trial. It believed that the future of Namibia should be decided by the freely expressed wishes of all its inhabitants at the earliest possible moment. Every political group in Namibia, including SWAPO and all other political parties, whatever the basis of their composition, should be allowed to campaign peacefully for their views throughout Namibia and should have full and unfettered freedom to carry out peaceful political activities. Similarly, all detainees should be brought to trial or else released. Only thus could Namibians decide their future freely and the world community be convinced that they had done so.

The United Nations, he continued, had a special responsibility for Namibia; it was undeniable that the territory had been the concern both of the League of Nations and then of the United Nations for over 50 years. Had it become a Trust Territory, like other former Mandated Territories of the League of Nations, it could have undergone the same political development that took place in Trust Territories elsewhere.

The representative of South Africa said his Government did not recognize and had never recognized any right on the part of the United Nations to supervise the affairs of the territory; it could not be expected to agree to supervision by the United Nations of any electoral process as long as the majority of United Nations Members continued, for their purposes, to conduct a malicious and completely biased campaign. His Government, he continued, respected the separate status of the territory and staked no claim to it. South Africa agreed that the peoples themselves should decide their future, as they were currently engaged in doing; it remained in the territory only at the wish of the peoples there. All political groups could participate peacefully in the political processes in the territory. The United Nations had rejected out of hand the many initiatives taken by South Africa, preferring instead to capitulate to the pressures of the supporters of a small group of militants who espoused an open and avowed policy of intimidation, violence and bloodshed against South West Africa.

The South African representative reiterated his Government's offer to negotiate with a mutually acceptable personal representative of the Secretary-General and its offer to discuss progress and development with leaders of Africa, with the United Nations Council for the territory and with the special committee of OAU. They would also be welcome to visit the territory.

He expressed his Government's hope that the Security Council would refrain from any action that might jeopardize the chance of success of the Constitutional Conference, which offered a way of achieving a peaceful future for the territory.

As an African country, he went on to say, South Africa was deeply aware of the problems of the continent. South Africa had played a limited role in Angola in the hope that, inter alia, it would secure for the Angolans time to achieve a settlement for themselves around the conference table, or, failing that, an opportunity for OAU to find a political solution without outside interference. The situation in Angola was bound to exert a strong influence in South West Africa and other neighbouring countries; he proposed that the Security Council establish for itself who was posing a threat to peace in that area—South Africa, or the USSR and Cuba.

The representative of China said the balance of forces in Africa had undergone a drastic change and, in order to preserve its vested interests, one super-power was supporting the racist régimes and undermining the national liberation movements, while the other super-power was stepping up its frenzied contention with the former in order to seek strategic areas in southern Africa, to scramble for Europe and to intensify its global deployment for war. Because of that rivalry, the over-all situation of African unity and the struggle of the people in southern Africa was in jeopardy. Only by linking the struggle against racism with that against super-power interference could African unity be preserved, the struggle for national liberation enhanced, and the complete liberation of the whole continent of Africa achieved.

China, he said, believed that in order to solve the Namibian question, the relevant resolutions should be adhered to and South Africa had to end its illegal occupation of Namibia immediately, withdraw all its troops and its administration and let the Namibian people achieve their independence free from outside interference. The Chinese Government and people would, as always, support the Namibian people and give them assistance in their just struggle until they won complete victory.

The USSR representative said it was obvious that the major goal of the South African régime was to postpone its withdrawal from the territory indefinitely, to slow down the initial development of the national liberation movement throughout southern Africa and especially in Namibia, and to preserve in that area a citadel of neo-colonialism and racism against the peoples of Africa. The pro-imperialist forces of the West, he added, appreciated South Africa not only for its gold and diamonds but also for its strategic situation. Transnational imperialist monopolies and individuals were trying to preserve and to perpetuate the régime in South Africa. They regarded it as their major bulwark, he said, and as their watchdog in preserving their investments. Through them, ever greater amounts of sophisticated arms and military supplies were being delivered to South Africa, in violation of the decisions of the United Nations and of OAU, and being widely used to suppress the national liberation movement in Namibia and turn the territory into a base from which to threaten and attack neighbouring African countries.

He went on to say that the anti-Soviet statements of the representatives of China and South Africa were simply attempts to divert the attention of the Security Council from Namibia. The USSR sought no economic, strategic or other advantage in Angola: its only concern was to assist the People's Republic of Angola in defending its freedom and independence. With respect to Namibia, he said, the Security Council had the duty to take measures to end the aggressive adventurist activities of the racist régime in southern Africa, in order to strengthen peace and security there on the basis of respect for the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to freedom and independence.

At its meeting on 30 January, the Security Council unanimously adopted, as resolution 385(1976), a draft which had been put forward by Benin, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, Panama, Romania, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania.

By the preambular part of the text, the Council, after recalling previous decisions on the question and reaffirming the legal responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia, expressed its concern at South Africa's continued illegal occupation of the territory and its persistent refusal to comply with resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, as well as with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971. The Council was concerned also at South Africa's brutal repression of the Namibian people, its persistent violation of their human rights, its efforts to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia, as well as its aggressive military build-up in the area, which it deplored.

By the operative part of the text, the Council condemned the continued illegal occupation of the territory of Namibia by South Africa, the illegal and arbitrary application there of racially discriminatory and repressive laws and practices, the South African military build-up in Namibia, and any utilization of the territory as a base for attacks on neighbouring countries. The Council demanded that South Africa put an end forthwith to its policy of bantustans and the so-called homelands aimed at violating the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia. It condemned South Africa's failure to comply with the terms of Security Council resolution 366(1974), as well as all attempts by South Africa calculated to evade the clear demand of the United Nations for the holding of free elections in Namibia under United Nations supervision and control, declaring that, in order that the people of Namibia be enabled freely to determine their own future, free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations had to be held for the whole of Namibia as one political entity. The Council further declared that, in determining the date, time-table and modalities for the elections, there was to be adequate time to enable the United Nations to establish the necessary machinery within Namibia to supervise and control such elections, as well as to enable the people of Namibia to organize politically.

The Council then demanded that South Africa urgently make a solemn declaration accepting the foregoing provisions for holding elections, undertaking to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and with the 1971 advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice in regard to Namibia and recognizing the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia as a nation.

South Africa was to take the necessary steps to effect the withdrawal of its illegal administration from Namibia and to transfer power to the people of Namibia with the assistance of the United Nations. Pending such transfer of powers, South Africa was to: comply fully in spirit and in practice with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;<sup>8</sup> release all Namibian political prisoners, including those imprisoned or detained in connexion with offences under so-called internal security laws, whether they had been charged or tried or were held without charge and whether held in Namibia or South Africa; abolish the application in Namibia of all racially discriminatory and politically repressive laws and practices, particularly bantustans and homelands; and accord unconditionally to all Namibians currently in exile for political reasons full facilities for return to their country without risk of arrest, detention, intimidation or imprisonment.

The Council decided to remain seized of the matter and to meet on or before 31 August 1976 to review South Africa's compliance with the terms of the resolution and, in the event of non-compliance, to consider appropriate measures to be taken under the Charter.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the French representative observed that one of the main problems was to define the role of the United Nations in the process of self-determination and, in particular, to have it accepted by South Africa. France, he said, believed that that role should be both effective and precise, but the supervision should not result in the creation of a machinery incompatible with the presence of an administration which would not have left the territory before the elections were held.

The French representative also pointed out that the text referred to certain resolutions on which France had abstained and that its reservations on them still stood, as well as those of a strictly legal nature relating to the opinion of the International Court. The United Kingdom also maintained its reservations on earlier resolutions. Also, it remained its position that Assembly resolutions had the status of recommendations and were not mandatory in effect.

The United States representative said it was clear that the Council was leaving open the exact form of United Nations supervision of the elections, leaving it to be worked out subsequently by the United Nations. In that way, he believed, the Council wisely avoided prejudging the exact nature of the United Nations role until the matter could be specifically considered.

The spokesman for Japan expressed the hope that the Government of South Africa would not fail to respond to the resolution, which reflected the unanimous and strong will of the Council, and thereby enable the Council to take further steps to implement it. The Council had ended the current stalemate and could henceforth address itself to the most pressing action—the need to hold free and democratic elections under United Nations supervision.

The Chinese representative said that his Government had reservations on the provisions relating to free elections: as long as the Namibian people remained under the domination and repression of South African troops, police and administration, the holding of the so-called free elections was, in China's view, completely out of the question. The danger was that such a practice might be utilized by the South African racist régime to continue its occupation and domination of Namibia in a disguised form. China also held that it was imperative to maintain vigilance and guard against the South African authorities' attempt to capitalize on the so-called "dialogue" to deceive world public opinion and delay their withdrawal from Namibia.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Namibia at meetings held in New York on 1 April 1976 and between 12 May and 17 June.

At its meeting on 1 April, the Special Committee decided to send a high-level Ad Hoc Group of six of its members to several African capitals to provide the Special Committee with first-hand information on developments in southern Africa, with specific reference to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia.

Between 13 April and 4 May the Ad Hoc Group visited London (United Kingdom), Dar es Salaam (United Republic of Tanzania), Lusaka (Zambia), Gaborone (Botswana), Maputo (Mozambique) and Addis Ababa (Ethiopia). It held consultations with officials and leaders of the Governments concerned, with officials of the Organization of African <sup>8</sup> See Y.U.N., 1948-49, pp. 535-37, for text of Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Unity and with representatives of national liberation movements, including that of Namibia—the South West Africa People's Organization.

In its report, the Group recommended that the Special Committee request the Secretary-General, in consultation with OAU, to prepare for General Assembly approval a proposal to convene an international conference in 1977 in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, in order to mobilize world public opinion in support of their struggle towards self-determination, freedom and independence. The Group also, among other things, urged the international community to render effective assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia in their struggle, and stressed the need for intensification of the dissemination of information about the liberation struggle in those territories.

When the Special Committee considered the question of Namibia, it invited SWAPO to participate in its discussion in an observer capacity. On 14 June it heard a statement by the SWAPO representative, Mishake Muyongo, who said that death sentences passed recently against Aaron Mushimba and Hendrik Shikongo, two members of SWAPO, and long prison terms imposed on two women members of SWAPO showed that South Africa had no intention of complying with the demands of the international community. Since the adoption on 30 January of Security Council resolution 385(1976), South Africa had increased its repression of the Namibian people and had expanded its military presence. There were over 50,000 South African troops in the territory, he said, adding that he failed to understand how some Western countries could be alarmed by the presence of Cuban troops in Angola, invited by the legitimate Government there, but could remain silent about the illegal presence of so many troops in Namibia.

The so-called constitutional conference at Turnhalle in Windhoek, the third session of which was held from 2 to 19 March 1976, had been organized, he said, simply to entrench the bantustans, leaving the infrastructure of transportation, communications, public services and, most important, the rich farmlands and mines in the hands of the white minority. South Africa was racing against time to have a constitution approved by its puppets in time for the 31 August deadline laid down in the Council's resolution, thus hoping to silence the world community. If South Africa failed to comply with that resolution, he said, the Security Council should determine under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter that the continued occupation of Namibia and its use as a military base from which to launch aggression constituted a threat to international peace and security. Failure to comply should be followed by a complete arms embargo, including an embargo on facilities for the production of nuclear materials. He appealed for the maximum political and material assistance to SWAPO and condemned what he described as a Western-inspired and -financed campaign against SWAPO. He declared that SWAPO would fight, using arms, until freedom and independence were achieved for Namibia as one political entity.

During the discussion in the Special Committee, a number of speakers—among them Bulgaria, Cuba, India and Sierra Leone—noted that, since the adoption of Security Council resolution 385(1976), South Africa had given no indication of willingness to withdraw from Namibia or to allow the holding of free elections. On the contrary, they said, the situation in the territory had continued to deteriorate, as evidenced by South Africa's massive military build-up and its ongoing repression of the Namibian people. It was also pointed out that the so-called constitutional conference, which was still continuing, was merely another manoeuvre by South Africa to fragment the territory and mislead the world community into accepting pseudo-independence.

Australia observed that South Africa gave too little leeway to the constitutional conference and continued to ignore SWAPO as the representative of the genuine aspirations of a significant number of the people of the territory. Norway also could not accept the attempt by South Africa to divide Namibia into various racial groups. Member States had an obligation to bring pressure to bear on South Africa for a peaceful settlement. South Africa, Australia added, for its part had to show awareness of the true situation in southern Africa, adjust its policies in Namibia to the requirements of Security Council resolution 385(1976) and allow the people of the territory, together with SWAPO and other genuine leaders of the people, to decide their own future on the basis of free and open elections.

A number of Special Committee members, Iraq, Sierra Leone and the USSR among them, said that, as South Africa was using Namibia as a base for aggression against neighbouring African States, the Special Committee should recommend to the Security Council that it declare the situation in the territory a threat to international peace and security and impose mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. They appealed for moral and material support for SWAPO. Norway joined in urging the relevant United Nations agencies, in co-operation with the Council for Namibia, to assist the people through SWAPO. Norway urged that contacts between the Western powers and the black African States and liberation movements be strengthened: such increased contacts with SWAPO and mounting pressure on South Africa might accelerate a peaceful solution of the conflict and prevent a new Angola.

Cuba and the Syrian Arab Republic charged that South Africa was able to continue to defy the United Nations and occupy the territory with its troops because of the economic and military support it received from certain Western powers, which were protecting their investments also by lending their support to the installation of a puppet government.

Most members protested strongly against the death sentences passed by the South African administration. Norway said that it and Sweden had formally joined the protest lodged with the South African Government by the European Common Market.

On 17 June, the Special Committee approved a consensus statement by which it once again emphatically denounced the Government of South Africa for its persistent refusal to terminate its illegal occupation of Namibia and condemned the efforts by the South African régime to bolster its illegal presence by creating an atmosphere of terror and intimidation and by employing tactics, based on apartheid and bantustanization, aimed at destroying the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia.

The Special Committee went on to note that, in its efforts to destroy the national unity of Namibia, the South African Government had in 1975 resorted to the stratagem of convening a so-called constitutional conference from which representatives of non-white political parties were excluded. As that conference was not representative of majority opinion, the Special Committee considered that it had to be regarded as a device by the South African régime to give a semblance of validity to its own preconceived policies.

The Special Committee also reaffirmed that the only political solution for Namibia must be in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and fully endorsed the position of SWAPO, which was totally opposed to any political settlement that did not include majority rule and that was not based on the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia.

Mindful that the situation in Namibia posed a threat to international peace and security, the Special Committee considered that, in the event that South Africa did not comply with the provisions of Security Council resolution 385(1976), the Council should consider the adoption of appropriate measures under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

The Special Committee also condemned the militarization of Namibia by South Africa, as well as that Government's failure to take necessary measures, which included the release of political prisoners, the abolition of all racially discriminatory and politically repressive laws and practices and the provision of full facilities for the return of political exiles without risk of arrest, detention, intimidation or imprisonment. The Special Committee noted with concern the wave of arrests over the preceding six months, including the arrest of the leaders of SWAPO inside Namibia, and expressed shock and indignation at the death sentences imposed by the illegal régime on two members of SWAPO and the sentencing of two women members to several years' imprisonment. The carrying out of these sentences—in particular the death sentences—would constitute a crime of the greatest magnitude.

The Special Committee went on to state that it was the clear responsibility of the international community to render all possible moral and material assistance to the Namibian people under the leadership of SWAPO. It reiterated its request that Governments should apply the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia in 1974.<sup>9</sup>

The Special Committee also recommended that Member States contribute to the United Nations Fund for Namibia and noted with satisfaction the forthcoming entry into operation of the United Nations Institute for Namibia at Lusaka, Zambia, and the establishment by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) of an indicative planning figure for Namibia for the period 1977-1981. The Special Committee also reaffirmed its support for the activities of the Council for Namibia and endorsed the policies and programmes defined by that Council in co-operation with SWAPO.

By another decision of 17 June, the Special Committee among other things commended for the consideration of the General Assembly the observations of its Ad Hoc Group and expressed its gratitude to the Heads of State and the Governments and peoples of Botswana, Ethiopia, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia and the officials of OAU for their collaboration with the Ad Hoc Group. The Special Committee also noted the continuing and intensified efforts of the Heads of State of the "front-line" countries towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence with respect to Southern Rhodesia and Namibia.

The Special Committee requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in co-operation with its Chairman and in consultation with OAU, for approval by the General Assembly at its 1976 session, a proposal to convene in 1977 an international conference in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, as suggested by the Ad Hoc Group, for the purpose of mobilizing world public opinion in support of those peoples.

The Special Committee's Chairman was to continued to maintain a close working relationship with the Governments of the front-line States and other concerned Member States, with OAU and with the national liberation movements. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the report of the Ad Hoc Group to the Security Council.

Decisions of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

On 1 March 1976, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa. The Commission among other things denounced such assistance given by certain States to the régimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, directly or through national or multinational corporations. It considered that the sales of arms, the nuclear co-operation agreements and the activities of such corporations in South Africa, Namibia or Southern Rhodesia constituted blatant acts of complicity in the policies of apartheid and racial discrimination and were an encouragement for the illegal occupation of Namibia by the racist régime of South Africa and its use of the territory for committing acts of aggression against neighbouring African States and for intervening in their internal affairs.

The Commission also condemned the attitude of any country which, by its political, military, economic and other forms of assistance, became an accomplice in apartheid, and called upon States to, among other things: assist the liberation movements of southern Africa that were recognized by OAU and the United Nations; take steps to bring about a total embargo by the Security Council on sales, gifts and transfers of arms and all other kinds of military supplies to South Africa; and give full effect to the United Nations Council for Namibia's Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia. (For details, see pp. 578-80.)

By another resolution, adopted on 4 March on the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, the Human Rights Commission among other things deplored the fact that policies of apartheid and racial discrimination persisted in southern Africa and that, in particular, South Africa was continuing its illegal occupation of Namibia. It noted that the illegal, inhuman and degrading practice of public floggings in Namibia was continuing, and it drew the attention of States to the Declaration of Dakar on Namibia and Human Rights and to the Programme of Action annexed thereto. (See also pp. 575-76.)

On 11 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (1989(LX)) by which, among other things, it welcomed the decisions of the Security Council condemning the continued illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and demanded again that South Africa abolish its application of racially discriminatory and repressive law and practices in Namibia. (For details, see p. 564.)

By another resolution (2015(LXI)), adopted on 1 August on implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Economic and Social Council among other things stressed the critical need of the peoples who were still living under oppressive colonial and alien domination in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and other territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and international institutions within the United Nations system and asked those bodies to render increased moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples of Africa. It recommended that the organizations concerned initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with those peoples, in consultation with OAU and work out and implement concrete programmes for such assistance, with the active collaboration of the national liberation movements concerned.

Also by this resolution, the Council asked the agencies and other bodies to continue to withhold all assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia until they restored to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition or support of the illegal domination of the territories by those régimes. #### Communications (April-August 1976)

On 29 April 1976, the representative of South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General an extract from a statement made in the South African House of Assembly on 23 April by Prime Minister B. John Vorster, in which he suggested the repeal of the Act of 1922 whereby the administration of Walvis Bay had been transferred to South West Africa. The claim was being made that Walvis Bay belonged to South West Africa, he said, and he wanted no misunderstanding on the matter: Walvis Bay belonged to South Africa.

He went on to say that the territory of South West Africa had a particular international character that could not be ignored, and its leaders should work out their own future. South Africa did not want the territory and made no claim to it. South Africa was in the territory as an administrative rather than an occupying power, and was responsible for law and order and the security of the people. It had a task and a duty to fulfil, whatever the United Nations might decide.

On 18 August, the representative of South Africa transmitted the text of a statement by the Constitutional Committee of the South West African Constitutional Conference, according to which agreement had been reached on certain points. On the question of self-determination and independence, the Committee was in agreement that 31 December 1978 could, with reasonable certainty, be fixed as the date for independence for South West Africa. The Committee reaffirmed, with regard to the question of territorial integrity, the interdependence of the territory's various population groups and the firm desire to maintain South West Africa as a unity. As to form of government, the Committee envisaged a system in which, particularly in the central body, provision would be made for the adequate protection of minority groups. The Committee rejected any attempt to solve the country's problems by violence.

The United Nations Council for Namibia, in a statement issued on 18 August, said that the proposals of the so-called constitutional conference did not even approach any of the requirements laid down by the United Nations for genuine self-determination and independence, but merely sought to perpetuate the homelands (bantustans) policies and prolong South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia.

By a letter dated 24 August, the representative of Sri Lanka transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a resolution concerning Namibia adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Colombo, Sri Lanka, from 16 to 19 August 1976. By the resolution, the Conference among other things condemned the continued illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, denounced the so-called constitutional talks arranged by the racist régime and declared that any meaningful talks for the transfer of power could be held only with the genuine representatives of the Namibian people—SWAPO—under the auspices of the United Nations.

By a letter dated 30 August, the representative of Guinea transmitted the text of a message from the President of Guinea expressing the hope that the Security Council would take effective measures to give expression to the hopes of international public opinion to see the Namibian people accede to unconditional freedom, independence and national sovereignty over all Namibia, under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole and legitimate representative.

Consideration by the Security Council (31 August 1976)

In accordance with its resolution of 30 January (385(1976))—by which it decided to meet on or before 31 August 1976 to review South Africa's compliance with that resolution—the Security Council on 31 August resumed its consideration of the situation in Namibia. The representative of Madagascar, who was invited in his capacity as Chairman of the African group for the month of August to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, informed the Council of the desire of the African group that the debate be suspended at that stage until a date to be announced. The meeting then adjourned.

Communications (September 1976)

On 15 September 1976, the representative of South Africa transmitted the text of a request by the Chief Minister of Ovambo, Pastor C. Ndjoba, addressed to the South African Government, to the effect that SWAPO had given orders that 42 citizens of Ovambo who had been taken captive in Zambia, and who were accused of being agents of the imperialists and capitalists, were to be shot. According to the Chief Minister, the planned mass murder was the brainchild of Sam Nujoma, President of SWAPO, to get rid of opponents in his own ranks. The Chief Minister asked that the South African Government request the United Nations, the International Red Cross and all responsible countries to determine, through diplomatic and other channels, where and under what circumstances those people were being held and to attempt to save their lives.

Consideration by the Security Council (28 September-19 October 1976)

The Security Council resumed its consideration of the situation in Namibia at meetings held between 28 September and 19 October 1976, in the course of which the Council President invited the representatives of Algeria, Bangladesh, Botswana, Burundi, Cuba, Democratic Kampuchea, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, the Niger, Nigeria, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President and four other members of the United Nations Council for Namibia were also invited to participate and, in response to joint requests from Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania, invitations were extended to Sam Nujoma, President of SWAPO, and to Theo-Ben Gurirab, also of SWAPO. These invitations were extended under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.<sup>10</sup>

At a meeting on 30 September, the Council President drew attention to a letter of that date from the United States representative replying to questions raised in the Council by the representative of Mauritius in connexion with recent negotiations concerning southern Africa in which the United States Secretary of State and the Prime Minister of South Africa participated.

A number of speakers observed during the discussion that the Security Council had the responsibility to adopt appropriate measures against South Africa under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. By its resolution 385(1976) of 30 January, they pointed out, the Council had demanded that South Africa comply by 31 August with the provisions of that resolution, but it had done nothing; it had made no declaration or undertaking towards ending its illegal occupation of Namibia, towards abolishing its discriminatory and repressive laws there, towards releasing political prisoners, towards withdrawing its troops or towards holding free elections. On the contrary, it had attempted to further divide Namibia into homelands governed by racially discriminatory and repressive laws aimed at maintaining the status quo and perpetuating the system of apartheid. According to Zambia, Namibia continued to be a perfect example of a police State.

It was also pointed out that the so-called constitutional conference had rightly been unanimously rejected by the people of Namibia, by SWAPO, by OAU and by the United Nations Council for Namibia as a manoeuvre by South Africa aimed at perpetuating its occupation of Namibia and breaking up its national unity and territorial integrity.

Mr. Nujoma (SWAPO) said that, as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, SWAPO had always been ready to talk directly to the South African Government on modalities of transferring power. Such talks, he insisted, had to be under United Nations auspices, and, before they could take place, all political prisoners had to be released. He also said that SWAPO demanded that South Africa give a commitment to withdraw its armed forces from Namibia.

The SWAPO representative reiterated his organization's position that it was more than ever committed to carrying out the armed liberation struggle with intensity and to liberating every inch of Namibia, including Walvis Bay.

The representative of Ghana said that if SWAPO'S conditions were not accepted by South Africa, it should be expelled from the United Nations until it decided to comply with the relevant United Nations decisions on Namibia. The representative of Kenya urged that the United Nations consider dispatching a buffer force to Namibia to protect the interests of the Africans, establish a presence in the territory, and help supervise the organization and conduct of one-man/one-vote elections. The representative of Saudi Arabia suggested a meeting of the South African Prime Minister or his representatives and SWAPO representatives, under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General and with the assistance of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia.

According to the representative of China, the recent plan of South Africa's for establishing a so-called multiracial government in Namibia was merely a clumsy scheme designed to shirk its responsibility for the non-implementation of Security Council resolution 385(1976), to deceive world opinion and to prolong its illegal rule in Namibia. The Security Council should among other things condemn South Africa for refusing to implement that resolution and should consider the adoption of all necessary measures, including sanctions, against the South African authorities in accordance with the relevant provisions of the United Nations Charter.

The representative of the USSR said that the dangerous course being followed by the Pretoria régime required urgent and effective measures by the Council to take account of the fact that the situation in Namibia was a threat to international peace and security.

During the discussion, a draft resolution was submitted on behalf of Benin, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and the United Republic of Tanzania. By the preambular part of this draft, the Council would, among other things, express its concern at South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia and its persistent refusal to comply with resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, as well as with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971. The Council would also register its concern: at South Africa's efforts to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia; at its recent intensification of repression against the Namibian people and its persistent violation of their human rights; at the colonial war which South Africa was waging against the Namibian people; at its use of military force, torture and intimidation against them; and at its utilization of the territory to mount aggression against independent African States.

By the operative part of this seven-power proposal, the Council would:

(1) condemn South Africa's failure to comply with resolution 385(1976);

(2) condemn South Africa's attempts to evade the demand of the United Nations for holding free elections under United Nations supervision and control in Namibia;

(3) denounce the so-called Turnhalle constitutional conference as a device for evading the responsibility to comply with Security Council resolutions, particularly resolution 385(1976);

(4) reaffirm the legal responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia;

(5) reaffirm its support for the Namibian people's struggle for self-determination and independence;

(6) reiterate its demand that South Africa take immediately the necessary steps to withdraw from Namibia and to transfer power to the Namibian people, with United Nations assistance;

(7) demand that South Africa end forthwith its policy of bantustans and so-called homelands;

(8) reaffirm its declaration that, in order for the people of Namibia to determine freely their own future, it was imperative that free elections under United Nations supervision and control be held for the whole of Namibia as one political entity;

(9) demand that South Africa urgently comply with the foregoing provisions for the holding of free elections in Namibia;

(10) demand again that South Africa, pending such transfer of power: (a) comply fully with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, (b) release all Namibian political prisoners, whether held in Namibia or South Africa, (c) abolish the application in Namibia of all racially discriminatory and politically repressive laws and practices, particularly bantustans and homelands, and (d) accord unconditionally to all Namibians currently in exile for political reasons full facilities for return without risk of arrest, detention, intimidation or imprisonment;

(11) acting under Chapter VII of the Charter: (a) determine that South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia and the war it was waging there constituted a threat to international peace and security, (b) decide that all States were to cease and desist from, and prohibit any form of, direct or indirect military consultation, co-operation or collaboration with South Africa, (c) decide that all States were to take effective measures to prevent the recruitment of mercenaries, however disguised, for service in Namibia or South Africa, (d) decide that all States were to take steps to ensure the termination of all arms licensing agreements between themselves or their nationals and South Africa, and prohibit the transfer to South Africa of all information relating to arms and armaments, and decide that all States were to prevent any supply to South Africa of arms and ammunition, aircraft, vehicles and military equipment, as well as any activities in their territories which promoted the supply of arms, ammunition, military aircraft and military vehicles to South Africa and equipment and materials for the manufacture and maintenance of arms and ammunition in South Africa and Namibia;

(12) decide that all States were to give effect to the decisions set out in the preceding paragraph, notwithstanding any contract entered into or licence granted before the date of this resolution, and that they notify the Secretary-General of the measures taken to comply with the above provision;

(13) request the Secretary-General, for effective implementation of the resolution, to arrange for the collection and systematic study of all available data concerning international trade in the items which should not be supplied to South Africa under the above decision;

(14) request the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the resolution and to report to the Security Council on [a date to be decided]; and (15) decide to remain seized of the matter.

The representatives of Italy and Japan questioned whether it was politically wise to take a decision, however well-founded in principle, such as that contained in the draft resolution. The Security Council should suspend judgement until it knew better what had been going on behind the scenes in the ongoing negotiations between the United States, certain African countries and South Africa. Adoption of the proposed measures, they felt, might disturb the intricate process of negotiation covering the whole region or strengthen the "hard-liners" to work in favour of a collision course rather than in favour of talks in Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and South Africa.

The representative of France also said that the Security Council, in accordance with its role, should let the negotiations take their course; it should promote peaceful solutions as far as possible. In the current circumstances, he added, the conditions justifying the application of the measures provided under Chapter VII of the Charter were not present and there was no situation which threatened international peace and security.

The representative of the United Kingdom said there was no doubt that South Africa had disregarded the provisions of Security Council resolution 385(1976), which was to be deplored, as the steps proposed in that resolution for the achievement of Namibian independence were and remained both just and realistic. However, he noted, important discussions were going on and there was some hope of progress on a transfer of power. Also, he said, the Security Council should not be asked to vote for a determination that the situation in Namibia constituted a threat to international peace and security under Chapter VII. It was well known, he added, that his Government did not supply arms to South Africa, and it had taken pains to ensure that its export licence system was effective.

According to the spokesman for the United States, the measures called for in the seven-power draft resolution would not improve the chances for a free and independent Namibia, and in fact could do just the opposite. He added that the United States had continued to enforce its own arms embargo against South Africa and had made clear to South Africa the urgent need for unqualified independence for Namibia. The United States would continue to keep the Secretary-General informed on the progress of negotiations and would remain in regular contact with the Presidents of the front-line States.

On 19 October 1976, the Security Council voted on the seven-power draft resolution. It received 10 votes in favour to 3 against (France, the United Kingdom and the United States), with 2 abstentions (Italy and Japan), and was not adopted owing to the negative votes of permanent members of the Security Council.

Report of United Nations Council for Namibia

The United Nations Council for Namibia reported to the General Assembly at its 1976 session on developments concerning Namibia and on the Council's activities from 13 September 1975 to 20 October 1976. The report of the Council included recommendations, which the Assembly approved.

The Council reported that it had continued during 1976 to work for the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia and for compliance by Member States with United Nations resolutions on Namibia and with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971.<sup>11</sup> Other activities of the Council during the year included: consultations with Governments on actions in support of the people of Namibia; dissemination of information on Namibia; assistance to Namibians; co-operation with the South West Africa People's Organization; and representation of Namibia at international meetings and meetings of the specialized agencies and United Nations organs. The Council was represented at meetings of the Security Council when the question of Namibia was taken up. It also participated in: the June/July 1976 session of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, the Dakar International Conference on Namibia and Human Rights, in January; the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in May; Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, in May/June; the sixty-first International Labour Conference of the International Labour Organisation and the Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour, held concurrently in June; the International Seminar on the Eradication of Apartheid and in Support of the Struggle for Liberation in South Africa, in May; the fourth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, between March and May; and the twenty-ninth World Health Assembly of the World Health Organization, in May. In addition, the Council continued to co-operate with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and with the Special Committee against Apartheid.

During 1976, the Council continued its practice of sending missions for consultation with Governments and organizations: it sent missions to Angola, Botswana, Brazil, Peru, Venezuela and Zambia.

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 9 December 1970,<sup>12</sup> the Council was also represented at sessions of various bodies of the Organization of African Unity.

On 26 August 1976, Namibia Day was celebrated with the formal inauguration of the United Nations Institute for Namibia at Lusaka, Zambia. In accordance with an Assembly resolution of 13 December 1974,<sup>13</sup> the Institute was established to enable Namibians to undertake research, training, planning and related activities.

The Council held a special meeting to mark Namibia Day, and called for the issuance of a new series of commemorative stamps on Namibia.

The Council also continued its efforts in connexion with the dissemination of information concerning Namibia. Specific projects undertaken included: television advertisements promoting the cause of Namibian independence; activities through United Nations information centres around the world; press releases on the activities of the Council issued on a regular basis at United Nations Headquarters; radio and television news programmes; and films and photographic exhibitions. The Council continued to publish the Namibia Bulletin.

Among the measures taken to implement Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, specialists were engaged to trace the exact origin of natural resources shipped from Namibia, to determine the route and destination of such shipments and to identify the shipping, brokerage and insurance companies involved. In addition, the Commissioner for Namibia continued to issue travel and identity documents to Namibians.

In its report to the General Assembly, the Council made a number of recommendations, among which were the following. The Assembly should: reaffirm the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination, freedom and national independence in accordance with Assembly resolutions; recognize SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people; appeal to all Members to grant all necessary support and assistance to SWAPO in its struggle to achieve independence for Namibia; request all organizations in the United Nations system to prepare programmes of assistance to the Namibian people and SWAPO; increase financial provisions in the Council's budget to finance the office of SWAPO at New York; defray the expenses of a representative of SWAPO whenever the Council so required.

It further recommended that the Assembly should strongly condemn South Africa for: its persistent refusal to withdraw from Namibia; its aggression against and massive repression of the Namibian people and their national liberation movement; its military build-up in Namibia, threats and acts of aggression against independent African countries and forceful removal of Namibians from the northern border for military purposes; and organizing the so-called constitutional conference at Windhoek.

The Council also recommended that the Assembly demand that South Africa: put an end to extending apartheid in Namibia and to its policy of bantustanization of the territory; release unconditionally all Namibian political prisoners; and accord unconditionally to all Namibian political exiles the right to return to Namibia without risk of arrest or intimidation. The Assembly should also condemn the activities of all foreign corporations operating in Namibia under the illegal South African administration, reaffirm that such activities were illegal and demand that such exploitation cease forthwith.

Another recommendation was that the Assembly urgently call upon the international community to refrain from according any recognition to or co-operation with any authority which might be installed by South Africa under the so-called constitutional conference or under any other circumstances in Namibia. The Assembly was also asked to decide that any independence talks regarding Namibia had to be between South Africa and SWAPO under the auspices of the United Nations for the sole purpose of discussing the modalities for the transfer of power to the people of Namibia, and to request all Member States to co-operate fully with the Council in discharging its mandate.

Also, the Council called on the Assembly to: condemn South Africa for its failure to comply with the terms of Security Council resolution 385(1976) (see above); reiterate that the illegal occupation of Namibia and the war being waged there by South Africa constituted a threat to international peace and security; urge the Security Council to take up again the question of Namibia; and impose a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

Still other Council recommendations related to arms and armaments. The Assembly was asked: to request all States to cease and desist from any form of direct or indirect military consultation, co-operation or collaboration with South Africa, including the recruitment of mercenaries and the supply of arms, ammunition and other military equipment; to ensure the termination of all arms licensing agreements with South Africa; and to prevent any co-operation or activities by public or private corporations with South Africa in the development—directly or indirectly—of nuclear technology and capability of the racist régime in South Africa.

The Council also made several recommendations to the Assembly relating to the intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia. By these, the Assembly was asked to call upon all States to comply with United Nations resolutions and the 1971 advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, to break off economic relations with South Africa that concerned Namibia, and to take measures with a view to compelling that Government to withdraw immediately from Namibia.

The Assembly was also asked to request Member States to apply fully the provisions of Council Decree No. 1 and other measures to assist in the protection of the natural resources of Namibia; to request all States and specialized agencies to make adequate financial contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia; to call upon States to terminate consular representation in Namibia; and to request the Secretary-General to prepare lists of foreign corporations operating in Namibia, and a summary of the major operations and a historical note on their involvement in the territory.

Still other Council recommendations related to the need for the Assembly to authorize the Council to: hold hearings and seek information regarding the exploitation and purchase of uranium and report on this matter to the Assembly in 1977; notify Governments whose corporations operated in Namibia of the Council's position and of the illegality of such operations; and contact administering or managing bodies of such corporations, particularly those not under direct governmental control, to warn them of the illegality of operating there.

The Council's report also included recommendations relating to action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. The Assembly was asked to: express appreciation to UNDP for the indicative planning figure granted to Namibia; request UNDP to continue its programmes of assistance to Namibians; request the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to consider granting full membership to the Council as the Administering Authority for Namibia; and request those organizations to consider granting a waiver of the assessment of Namibia during the Council's representation of Namibia.

It further recommended that the Assembly: request the Council to send a mission to specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to discuss dissemination of information and assistance to Namibians; request the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Council, to direct the Office of Public Information to acquire and distribute films on Namibia, to prepare a film on the contemporary situation inside Namibia and the struggle of its people for independence, to continue publicity through television, radio and other media, and to continue to give publicity on television to the Council and SWAPO in the United States and other major Western countries in order to mobilize support for the independence of Namibia; and request Member States and the United Nations Postal Administration to issue commemorative stamps on Namibia. It further recommended that the Assembly: make budgetary provisions to expand the editions of the Namibia Bulletin and to add German to the languages in which it was published; decide to observe the week of 27 October as the week of solidarity with the people of Namibia and SWAPO; and request the Secretary-General urgently to prepare a United Nations map reflecting the territorial integrity of Namibia.

Subsequently, these recommendations were approved by the Assembly and were embodied in its resolutions 31/146, 31/148, 31/149 and 31/150 of 20 December 1976 (see below). Other Council recommendations, which related to the programme of work of the Council, were also approved by the Assembly and embodied in its resolution 31/147 of the same date (see below).

The Council was thus empowered to: review annually the political, military, economic and social conditions affecting the struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia; represent Namibia to ensure that its rights and interests were protected in all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, bodies and conferences; co-ordinate aid for Namibia provided by agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system; and act as trustee of and administer and manage the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

The Council was further authorized to: examine periodically the consequences of the illegal South African administration in Namibia; formulate projects and programmes of assistance to Namibians; consult with SWAPO in formulating and implementing the work programme; propose assistance projects to UNDP for Namibians; review and approve the annual budget of the United Nations Institute for Namibia and make recommendations on the direction of its work; and formulate a policy of intensive dissemination of information on Namibia, in consultation with the Office of Public Information.

In addition to these decisions, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the units which serviced the Council in accordance with its requirements. It also requested the Council to authorize the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia to appoint a resident representative in Botswana to enhance the effectiveness of the Council's assistance to Namibians.

General aspects

At its thirty-first (1976) session, the General Assembly referred the question of Namibia to its Fourth Committee, which considered the agenda item at meetings held between 22 November and 10 December.

The Committee had before it reports of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia, as well as reports of that Council and the Secretary-General relating to the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

Also before the Fourth Committee were letters dated 20 July and 31 August 1976 from the representative of the Federal Republic of Germany concerning aspects of the situation in Namibia; a letter dated 1 September from the representative of Sri Lanka transmitting, inter alia, the text of a resolution on Namibia adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, from 16 to 19 August 1976; and a letter dated 30 September from the representative of Turkey transmitting texts of resolutions adopted by the Seventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 12 to 15 May 1976.

During its meetings, the Fourth Committee heard two statements by Theo-Ben Gurirab, representative of the South West Africa People's Organization, the national liberation movement of Namibia, who participated in an observer capacity in the Committee's work.

On 10 December, at the conclusion of the debate, the Fourth Committee approved a number of draft resolutions relating to various aspects of the question of Namibia, which were adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December.

The first of these was sponsored by 51 Members and concerned the situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa. The Fourth Committee approved it by a recorded vote of 108 to 6, with 12 abstentions. The text was adopted by the General Assembly by a recorded vote of 107 to 6, with 12 abstentions, as resolution 31/146.

By the preambular part of this text, the Assembly among other things recalled previous Assembly and Security Council resolutions relating to the question, as well as the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971. The Assembly then reaffirmed that the territory and people of Namibia were the direct responsibility of the United Nations and that those people had to be enabled to attain self-determination and independence within a united Namibia. It strongly deplored South Africa's continued refusal to comply with United Nations resolutions and decisions, its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its brutal repression of the Namibian people, its persistent violation of their human rights, and its efforts to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia; it also condemned its attempts—through the convening of a so-called constitutional conference—to perpetuate its colonial exploitation of the people and resources of Namibia by misrepresenting the genuine aspirations of the Namibian people. The Assembly expressed concern at the militarization of Namibia by the illegal occupation régime, South Africa's threats and acts of aggression against independent African countries and its forceful removal of Namibians from the northern border of the territory for military purposes, and deplored the policies of States which continued to maintain diplomatic, economic, consular and other relations with South Africa.

The Assembly recognized that the situation in Namibia constituted a threat to international peace and security, noted with satisfaction the opposition of the Namibian people to South Africa's illegal presence and to its oppressive racist policies, and, in particular, the progress of their struggle for national liberation under the leadership of SWAPO, and it expressed its support for the efforts of the Council for Namibia in discharging its responsibilities.

By the operative paragraphs of this text, the Assembly: reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia and the legitimacy of their struggle by all means at their disposal against the illegal occupation; recognized that SWAPO was the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people; and supported the armed struggle, led by SWAPO, to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia.

The Assembly appealed to all Member States to grant all necessary support and assistance to SWAPO. It requested all organizations in the United Nations system to prepare, in consultation with the Council for Namibia, programmes of assistance to the people of Namibia and SWAPO, and decided to increase the financial provisions in the Council's budget to finance SWAPO'S office in New York and to continue to defray the expenses of a SWAPO representative, whenever the Council so required.

The Assembly condemned South Africa: for its persistent refusal to withdraw from Namibia, for its manoeuvres to consolidate its illegal occupation, for its aggression against the Namibian people and SWAPO, for its massive repression of those people, for its military build-up in the territory, for its threats and acts of aggression against independent African countries, for its forceful removal of Namibians from the northern border of the territory, and for organizing the so-called constitutional talks, which sought to perpetuate the apartheid and homelands policies.

The Assembly also urgently called upon the international community to refrain from according any recognition to, or co-operation with, any authority which the illegal occupation régime might install under the current fraudulent constitutional talks.

The Assembly further condemned the activities of all foreign corporations operating in Namibia under the illegal administration of South Africa and reaffirmed that their activities were illegal.

It also decided that any independence talks regarding Namibia had to be between the representatives of South Africa and SWAPO, under United Nations auspices, for the sole purpose of discussing the modalities for the transfer of power to the people of Namibia. It requested all Member States to co-operate fully with the Council for Namibia in discharging the mandate entrusted to it by the General Assembly in 1967,<sup>14</sup> and condemned South Africa for its persistent refusal to comply with the pertinent resolutions of the Security Council, particularly resolution 385(1976) of 30 January 1976.

The Assembly demanded by this resolution that South Africa put an end to extending apartheid in Namibia, and to its policy there of bantustanization, and release all Namibian political prisoners. It declared it imperative that free elections under United Nations supervision and control be held urgently in the whole of Namibia as one political entity, and it demanded that South Africa accord full facilities for return to Namibia of political exiles without risk of arrest, detention, intimidation or imprisonment.

The Assembly reiterated that the illegal occupation of Namibia and the war being waged there by South Africa constituted a threat to international peace and security, and declared that that occupation constituted an act of aggression against the Namibian people and against the United Nations as the legal authority to administer Namibia until independence.

Also by this resolution, the Security Council was urged by the Assembly to take up again the question of Namibia and, in view of South Africa's failure to comply with the Council's resolution of 30 January, to impose a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

The Assembly requested all States to desist from any form of direct or indirect military consultation, co-operation or collaboration with South Africa, to take effective measures to prevent the recruitment of mercenaries for service in Namibia or South <sup>14</sup> See Y.U.N., 1967, pp. 709-10, text of resolution 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967.

Africa, and to take steps to ensure the termination of all arms licensing agreements with South Africa. All States were asked to cease and prevent the supply to South Africa of: (a) any arms and ammunition; (b) any aircraft, vehicles or military equipment; (c) any spare parts for arms, vehicles or military equipment; and (d) any so-called dual-use aircraft, vehicles or equipment, which could be converted to military use. It also requested all States to cease or prevent any activities in their countries which promoted the supply of such equipment, as well as any indirect or direct nuclear co-operation with South Africa by public or private companies.

A second resolution, on the programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia, was sponsored in the Fourth Committee by 51 Members, and was approved by the Committee by a recorded vote of 123 to 0, with 4 abstentions. The text was adopted by the General Assembly by a recorded vote of 119 to 0, with 4 abstentions, as resolution 31/147.

The Assembly thereby, among other things, recalled its decision of 19 May 1967,<sup>15</sup> by which it established the Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority of Namibia until independence. It also reaffirmed that the territory and people of Namibia were the direct responsibility of the United Nations and that those people were to be enabled to attain self-determination and independence within a united Namibia.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly approved the report of the Council for Namibia and decided to make adequate financial provision for implementation of the recommendations contained therein. It also decided that the Council should continue to exercise the following functions and responsibilities.

As an organ of the United Nations, the Council was to: (i) review annually the political, military, economic and social conditions in the territory and report thereon to the Assembly; (ii) represent Namibia in all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, bodies and conferences; (iii) consult with Member States to encourage compliance with United Nations resolutions on Namibia; (iv) co-ordinate aid provided by agencies and other bodies within the United Nations system; and (v) act as trustee of, administer and manage the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

As Administering Authority for Namibia, the Council was to: (i) examine periodically the deleterious consequences of the illegal South African administration in Namibia; (ii) formulate projects and programmes of assistance to Namibians; (iii) consult with SWAPO in formulating and implementing its programme of work; (iv) propose to UNDP projects of assistance to Namibians; (v) review and approve the annual budget of the United Nations Institute for Namibia and make recommendations on the general direction of its work; and (vi) formulate a policy of intensive dissemination of information on Namibia, in consultation with the Office of Public Information.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the units servicing the Council so that it might fully discharge all its tasks and functions, and requested the Council to authorize the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia to appoint a resident representative in Botswana.

Another resolution, sponsored in the Fourth Committee by 53 Members, concerned intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia and was approved by the Committee by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 7 abstentions. The text was adopted by the General Assembly by a recorded vote of 118 to 0, with 7 abstentions, as resolution 31/148.

By the preambular paragraphs of this text, the Assembly among other things strongly condemned the support which the illegal South African administration continued to receive from foreign economic, financial and other interests that were collaborating with it in its exploitation of the human and natural resources of, and in the entrenchment of its domination over, the international territory of Namibia.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly called upon States to comply with the relevant decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council concerning Namibia and the 1971 advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, and also urged States to break off economic relations with South Africa that concerned Namibia and take measures aimed at compelling South Africa to withdraw immediately from Namibia.

The Assembly again requested all Member States to take measures to ensure the full application of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia in 1974, requested the Secretary-General to prepare updated lists of foreign corporations operating in Namibia, commended the inauguration of the United Nations Institute for Namibia at Lusaka, and requested all States and organizations within the United Nations system to make adequate financial contributions for it.

The Assembly also authorized the Council for Namibia to hold hearings and seek information on the exploitation and purchase of Namibian uranium, as well as to contact corporations operating in Namibia to warn them of the illegal basis on which they were operating there. It called upon States that had consular representation in Namibia to terminate such representation.

The Fourth Committee also approved a resolution—sponsored by 53 Members—on action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to Namibia, by a recorded vote of 118 to 0, with 7 abstentions. The text was adopted by the General Assembly by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 7 abstentions, as resolution 31/149.

By this text, the Assembly—conscious of the urgent and pressing need of Namibians outside Namibia for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and other institutions within the United Nations system—reaffirmed the responsibility of those bodies to ensure the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly in the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly asked all specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to prepare programmes of assistance to the people of Namibia and SWAPO, expressed its appreciation to UNDP for the indicative planning figure granted to Namibia, and asked all agencies, organizations and conferences within the United Nations system to consider granting full membership to the Council for Namibia so that it might participate as the Administering Authority for Namibia.

The Assembly also asked the organizations in the system to consider favourably granting a waiver of Namibia's assessment while it was represented by the Council, and requested all intergovernmental and non-governmental bodies to ensure that the rights and interests of Namibia were protected and to invite the Council, as Administering Authority, to participate whenever such rights and interests were involved.

A resolution on dissemination of information on Namibia was sponsored by 54 Members and approved by the Fourth Committee by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 4 abstentions. The General Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 123 to 0, with 4 abstentions, as resolution 31/150.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly

among other things stressed the need to arouse world public opinion and intensify the widespread and continuous dissemination of information on the struggle for liberation being waged by the people of Namibia, guided by SWAPO. It reiterated the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the mandate given to the United Nations Council for Namibia.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly requested the Council for Namibia to send a mission to the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to discuss the questions of dissemination of information and assistance to Namibians. It also requested the Secretary-General to direct the Office of Public Information: (a) to acquire and distribute appropriate films on Namibia; (b) to prepare a film on the situation in Namibia and the struggle for independence; (c) to continue publicity through television, radio and other media; and (d) to continue to give publicity to the Council and SWAPO on television in the United States and other major Western countries.

The Assembly also requested Member States and the United Nations Postal Administration to issue commemorative stamps on Namibia, requested the Secretary-General to direct the Office of Public Information to make every effort to generate publicity in order to mobilize public support for the independence of Namibia, decided to make adequate budgetary provision to expand the circulation of the Namibia Bulletin and provide for its publication in German, decided to observe the week of 27 October as a week of solidarity with the people of Namibia and SWAPO, and requested the Secretary-General urgently to undertake the preparation of a comprehensive United Nations map of Namibia reflecting its territorial integrity.

Also approved by the Fourth Committee was a resolution—on observer status for SWAPO—sponsored by 51 Members and approved by a recorded vote of 114 to 0, with 13 abstentions. The General Assembly adopted the text by a recorded vote of 113 to 0, with 13 abstentions, as resolution 31/152.

By the preambular part of this text, the Assembly among other things recalled in particular its 1973 resolution by which it recognized SWAPO as the authentic representative of the Namibian people,<sup>16</sup> and noted that OAU and the non-aligned countries had recognized and invited SWAPO to participate in their meetings in an observer capacity.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly invited SWAPO to participate in the sessions and work of the Assembly, as well as in all international conferences convened under its auspices, in the capacity of observer, and considered that SWAPO was entitled to participate as an observer in the sessions and work of all international conferences convened under the auspices of other organs of the United Nations.

A resolution to launch a Nationhood Programme for Namibia, sponsored by 28 Members, was approved without objection by the Fourth Committee and adopted by the General Assembly, also without objection, as resolution 31/153.

The Assembly thereby, among other things, recognized that, by assuming direct responsibility for Namibia, the United Nations and its Member States had also assumed responsibility for assisting its people morally and materially. It commended the steps taken by various bodies within the United Nations system to provide such assistance.

By the operative paragraphs of the text, the Assembly decided to launch a comprehensive assistance programme within the United Nations system covering both the current period of struggle and the initial years of independence of Namibia, and including: (a) the review and planning of measures for assistance to Namibians by the organizations and bodies within the United Nations system; (b) the consolidation of all measures in a comprehensive and sustained plan of action; and (c) the implementation of that plan.

The Assembly also called upon the United Nations Council for Namibia, as the Administering Authority, to elaborate, in consultation with SWAPO, the guidelines and policies for such a programme, to be known as the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, and to direct and co-ordinate its implementation. It invited all States to participate in the Nationhood Programme by supporting measures of assistance to Namibians and by contributing to the United Nations Fund for Namibia and the United Nations Institute for Namibia, and called upon the organizations and bodies in the system to participate in planning and implementing the Programme.

A draft resolution put forward in the Fourth Committee by Saudi Arabia was not pressed to a vote. At the request of the sponsor, however, the Committee decided that the Rapporteur should bring the text to the attention of the General Assembly when he presented the Committee's report on the item.

By this text, the Assembly would, among other things, have asked the Secretary-General to invite representatives of South Africa and SWAPO to meet him for discussions on the composition and agenda of a conference to be convened by the United Nations to agree on the modalities for ensuring the holding of free elections in Namibia under United Nations supervision. The Assembly would also have asked the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia to work as a liaison officer among all the parties concerned with the liberation of Namibia.

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee preceding the adoption of the resolutions, the majority of speakers agreed that South Africa had totally failed to comply with Security Council resolution 385(1976), by which the Council among other things had demanded South Africa's withdrawal from Namibia and called for free elections under United Nations supervision. It was pointed out that during the past year South Africa not only had persisted in the application of apartheid and the fragmentation of the territory into homelands but also had vastly increased its military presence in the territory, had created a so-called free-fire zone along the northern border which had involved the demolition of villages and the forced removal of thousands of Africans, and had illegally imprisoned hundreds of SWAPO members and others who had expressed opposition to South Africa's illegal occupation, thereby creating a climate of intimidation and repression.

These speakers also denounced the so-called constitutional conference, which they said South Africa was attempting to represent as an exercise in self-determination. Egypt, Fiji, Greece, Pakistan, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR and Zambia, among others, said that the sole purpose of the conference, from which SWAPO was excluded, was to mislead the world community into accepting the perpetuation of apartheid and bantustanization under a new guise.

A number of Members, including Canada, France, Japan and New Zealand, agreed that South Africa's response to Council resolution 385(1976) had been unsatisfactory, but felt there had been some hopeful signs over the past few months. A number of speakers, including Argentina, the Ivory Coast, Liberia, Peru, the Philippines, Sweden and Zaire, noted that negotiations had recently been undertaken with South Africa with a view to convening a genuine constitutional conference at a neutral venue in which SWAPO would participate.

Others, however, including Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, Sierra Leone and the USSR, condemned the negotiations as a manoeuvre by the Western powers to allow South Africa to retain control of Namibia through a puppet government.

Benin's representative noted that during the Security Council's discussion in September/October many speakers had agreed that it was the massive support from Western, imperialist powers that had enabled Pretoria to defy the international community. That shameful support had been manifested in the triple veto cast at that time by the Western powers, preventing the Security Council from calling for an embargo on the supply of arms to South Africa. Others making this point were the representatives of Guinea, India, Nepal, Oman and Sri Lanka, who observed that the Security Council had been paralysed by France, the United Kingdom and the United States. In order to protect their investment in the territory, they said, those three countries had repeatedly vetoed draft resolutions whose provisions would have imposed a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

In view of South Africa's intransigence and the political, military and economic support it received from the Western powers, a number of Members—China, Egypt, Indonesia and Madagascar among others—urged that the United Nations give full support to the national liberation movement in waging its armed struggle, which had become the only effective way to achieve liberation.

The representative of the United Kingdom assured the Committee that his Government supported the demand for free elections in the territory and agreed that SWAPO should be included in any talks. It had exercised its veto power in the Security Council not to protect South Africa but because it was fundamentally opposed to the imposition of sanctions.

United Nations Fund for Namibia

The General Assembly had before it two reports on the United Nations Fund for Namibia, one submitted by the United Nations Council for Namibia in its capacity as trustee, the other by the Secretary-General.

The Council in its report noted that, since 1972, when it became operational, the Fund had increased and broadened in accordance with available resources. It continued to serve as the main vehicle through which the Council channelled its assistance to Namibians in the main areas of remedial, technical and vocational training, primary and secondary education, and college and university education. For administrative reasons, the funds allocated for technical and vocational training of Namibians in different fields were divided and distributed among country programmes in Kenya, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire and Zambia, where large numbers of Namibian refugees lived.

The Council went on to report that it had been consulting with several Governments in Africa, particularly Zambia and Botswana, on the possibility of developing in those countries, in co-operation with the specialized agencies, concrete projects in the fields of education and health, as well as farm schools in collaboration with SWAPO. Negotiations were in progress with the Government of Zambia, and an agreement had been reached with the Government of Botswana, for financing the construction of a health clinic in Makunda, where a considerable number of Namibians were living.

The report noted that the fund continued to award scholarships to Namibians living in Europe, Canada and the United States who were unable to obtain other funds.

The Council noted that the United Nations Institute for Namibia had been established under its aegis in 1974 to enable Namibians to undertake research, training, planning and related activities, with special reference to the struggle for the freedom of Namibia and the establishment of an independent State of Namibia, and noted that the level of activity of the Fund in regard to the provision of assistance to Namibians through different programmes and the Institute had not been examined by the Council to date. The results achieved and the efficiency of such programmes were to be examined in the near future in the light of actual needs for assistance.

The Council reported that as of 31 May 1976, the balance of the Fund was $326,087, which included $121,222 in contributions from Governments and $200,000 from the regular budget of the United Nations; commitments totalling $272,390 had been made for country programmes and individual fellowships, among other projects. At the beginning of 1976, the Institute for Namibia, which was formally inaugurated in August 1976, had a balance of $830,210 brought forward from 1975; the Council had approved on 17 June 1976 budgetary estimates for 1976 amounting to $3,129,490, subject to the availability of funds.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Council said that there was a need for the United Nations, at this crucial stage of the struggle for the liberation of Namibia, to promote much greater support for the Namibian people, through the United Nations Fund and Institute for Namibia or directly through the liberation movement. To this end, and to close the gap between available resources and the need for greater assistance, the Council recommended that the General Assembly appeal to all Member States, specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to provide as a matter of high priority more generous assistance to the people of Namibia through the Council, and that the Assembly also vote to increase the allocations from the regular budget of the United Nations.

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that, in view of the comprehensive report furnished by the Council for Namibia on the Fund, no additional information was called for.

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee, many speakers commended the United Nations

Fund for Namibia and the United Nations Institute for Namibia, which were making possible the training of Namibians to meet the challenge of self-government. The representative of Canada expressed the hope that in the future the preparation of budgetary estimates and other relevant documentation would be speeded up to enable Governments to make generous contributions.

On 10 December, the Fourth Committee approved without objection a resolution on the Fund sponsored by 53 Members. The General Assembly adopted it on 20 December, also without objection, as resolution 31/151.

By this text, the Assembly among other things: took note of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia on the activities of the United Nations Fund for Namibia and approved the conclusions and recommendations contained therein; expressed its appreciation to all who had made voluntary contributions to the Fund; decided to allocate to it $300,000 from the United Nations regular budget for 1977; requested the Secretary-General and the Council to continue to appeal for generous voluntary contributions; invited Governments to appeal once more to their national organizations for voluntary contributions; and appealed to all States, specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to make contributions to the Institute through the Fund.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation to the organizations within the United Nations system for their assistance to Namibians, requested them to give priority to the allocation of funds for material assistance to the Namibian people, as well as to render all necessary assistance to the Council, and called on them to assist the Institute in all possible ways. It expressed its appreciation of the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to assist Namibian refugees, and decided that Namibians would continue to be eligible for assistance through the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see below) and the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa (see pp. 144-46).

Appointment of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, appointed Martti Ahtisaari (Finland) as United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for a one-year term beginning on 1 January 1977.

International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia

On 17 June 1976, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, after considering the report of its Ad Hoc Group, recommended that the General Assembly at its 1976 session approve a proposal to convene in 1977 an international conference in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for the purpose of mobilizing world public opinion in support of those peoples.

On 17 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted by consensus, as resolution 31/145, a text proposed by 40 Members concerning the holding of such a conference.

By the preamble to the text, the Assembly among other things expressed its concern at the situation obtaining in Zimbabwe and Namibia as a result of the continued oppression and domination of their peoples by the racist régimes in Southern Rhodesia and South Africa; it noted the recommendation by the Special Committee that the United Nations should convene a conference in support of those peoples and noted the endorsement of that recommendation by the United Nations Council for Namibia.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly decided that an International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia would be held during 1977 to mobilize world-wide support for and assistance to the peoples of those territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence. It welcomed the fact that the Government of Mozambique was prepared to hold the Conference at Maputo, and asked the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Special Committee and the Council for Namibia, to organize the Conference in that city, in consultation with OAU; he was also asked to give it the widest possible publicity. The Special Committee and the Council for Namibia were asked to report to the Assembly at its 1977 session on the results of the Conference.

Related General Assembly decisions

At its thirty-first session in 1976, the General Assembly took several decisions which referred to various aspects of the situation in Namibia. These are described briefly below.

IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION ON THE GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

On 17 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/143) relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by which, among other things, it condemned the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans—in Namibia by South Africa through its persistent, illegal occupation of the international territory, and in Zimbabwe by the illegal racist minority régime. It was conscious of the pressing need to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly with respect to Namibia and Zimbabwe, and strongly deprecated the policies of States that continued to collaborate with South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia.

It asked all States to withhold assistance from South Africa and the illegal régime until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their right to self-determination and independence and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those régimes. All States were urged to provide all moral and material assistance to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe. The Special Committee was asked to continue to examine the compliance by Member States with the Declaration and other relevant resolutions, particularly those relating to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and to enlist support among Governments and organizations in the achievement of the objectives of those decisions, particularly as concerned the oppressed peoples of the two territories. (For details, see pp. 690-94.)

On 29 November, by another resolution (31/30) relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence, the General Assembly expressed its concern that the assistance extended thus far by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements was far from adequate; it once again urged those agencies and organizations to withhold any assistance from and discontinue all support to the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime of Southern Rhodesia until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those régimes. (For details, see pp. 700-2.)

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

On 5 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/7, by which it condemned the support which the régimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia continued to receive from the foreign economic, financial and other interests which were collaborating with them in their exploitation of the natural and human resources of Namibia and Zimbabwe. It expressed concern at the growing investments of foreign capital in the production of uranium and military equipment and the extent of the nuclear and military collaboration between the racist minority régime of South Africa and some Western and other countries, reflecting the intensified support of foreign interests in continued occupation of Namibia. The Assembly also called once again on all States to discontinue all economic, financial or trade relations with South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into economic, financial or other relations with South Africa, acting on behalf of Namibia, which might lend support to its continued illegal occupation. (For details, see pp. 708-11.)

ADVERSE CONSEQUENCES FOR HUMAN RIGHTS OF AID TO RACIST RÉGIMES IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

On 30 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/33) concerning the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa, expressing the conviction that such aid given to the régimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia by certain States was the major factor in the perpetuation of the abominable policies of those régimes.

The Assembly among other things reaffirmed the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination, independence and the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories. (For details, see pp. 578-80.)

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF THE RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE ORGANIZATION OF AFRICAN UNITY

By resolution 31/13, relating to co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and adopted on 16 November, the General Assembly among other things expressed its awareness of the urgent need to give increased assistance to victims of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid resulting from intensified acts of repression against the African peoples by the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see pp. 200-2.)

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1976, 163 Namibian students were studying abroad in 16 countries on scholarships granted under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1967. Between 1 November 1975 and 30 September 1976, the Programme received 40 applications, granted 36 new awards and extended 127 awards. Also during the period, 30 awards were completed.

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly reviewed the Programme and, by resolution 31/31 adopted on 29 November, among other things noted with satisfaction the increase in contributions to the Programme which permitted the continuance in 1975/1976 of a substantial level of assistance, and appealed once again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to ensure the Programme's continuation and expansion.

(For additional information about the Programme and the Assembly's decisions thereon, see pp. 202-4.)

Reaffirming the legal responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia, Concerned at South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia and its persistent refusal to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, as well as with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice,

Gravely concerned at South Africa's brutal repression of the Namibian people and its persistent violation of their human rights, as well as its efforts to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia, and its aggressive military build-up in the area,

Strongly deploring the militarization of Namibia by the illegal occupation régime of South Africa,

1. Condemns the continued illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia by South Africa;

2. Condemns the illegal and arbitrary application by South Africa of racially discriminatory and repressive laws and practices in Namibia;

3. Condemns the South African military build-up in Namibia and any utilization of the Territory as a base for attacks on neighbouring countries;

4. Demands that South Africa put an end forthwith to its policy of bantustans and the so-called homelands aimed at violating the national unity and the territorial integrity of Namibia;

5. Further condemns South Africa's failure to comply with the terms of Security Council resolution 366(1974);

6. Further condemns all attempts by South Africa calculated to evade the clear demand of the United Nations for the holding of free elections under United Nations supervision and control in Namibia;

7. Declares that, in order that the people of Namibia may be enabled freely to determine their own future, it is imperative that free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations be held for the whole of Namibia as one political entity;

8. Further declares that, in determining the date, time-table and modalities for the elections in accordance with paragraph 7 above, there shall be adequate time, to be decided upon by the Security Council, for the purpose of enabling the United Nations to establish the necessary machinery within Namibia to supervise and control such elections, as well as to enable the people of Namibia to organize politically for the purpose of such elections;

9. Demands that South Africa urgently make a solemn declaration accepting the foregoing provisions for the holding of free elections in Namibia under United Nations supervision and control, undertaking to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971 in regard to Namibia, and recognizing the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia as a nation;

10. Reiterates its demand that South Africa take the necessary steps to effect the withdrawal, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 264(1969), 269(1969) and 366(1974), of its illegal administration maintained in Namibia and to transfer power to the people of Namibia with the assistance of the United Nations;

11. Demands again that South Africa, pending the transfer of power provided for in paragraph 10 above:

(a) Comply fully in spirit and in practice with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statements of the representative of the South West Africa People's Organization, who participated in an observer capacity in the consideration of the item by the Fourth Committee,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling, in particular, its resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967 and subsequent resolutions of both the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to the question of Namibia, as well as the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, delivered in response to the request addressed to it by the Council in its resolution 284(1970) of 29 July 1970,

Taking into consideration the relevant resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-seventh ordinary session, and subsequently endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirteenth ordinary session, held at Port Louis from 2 to 6 July 1976,

Also taking into consideration the relevant part of the Political Declaration and the resolution relating to Namibia adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976,

Reaffirming that the Territory and people of Namibia are the direct responsibility of the United Nations and that the Namibian people must be enabled to attain self-determination and independence within a united Namibia,

Strongly deploring South Africa's continued refusal to comply with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its brutal repression of the Namibian people and its persistent violation of their human rights, as well as its efforts to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia,

Strongly condemning attempts by South Africa, through the convening of a so-called constitutional conference, to perpetuate its colonial exploitation of the people and resources of Namibia by misrepresenting the genuine aspirations of the Namibian people,

Gravely concerned at the militarization of Namibia by the illegal occupation régime of South Africa, its threats and acts of aggression against independent African countries and the forceful removal of Namibians from the northern border of the Territory for military purposes,

Strongly deploring the policies of those States which, despite the relevant decisions of the United Nations and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, continue to maintain diplomatic, economic, consular and other relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, as well as military or strategic collaboration, all of which has the effect of supporting or encouraging South Africa in its defiance of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the situation in Namibia constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Noting with satisfaction the opposition of the Namibian people to South Africa's illegal presence in the Territory and to its oppressive racist policies and, in particular, the progress of their struggle in all its forms for national liberation under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Strongly supporting the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia in the discharge of the responsibilities entrusted to it by the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and as recognized in resolutions 1514(XV) and 2145(XXI) as well as subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly relating to Namibia, and the legitimacy of their struggle by all means at their disposal against the illegal occupation of their Territory by South Africa;

2. Recognizes that the national liberation movement of Namibia, the South West Africa People's Organization, is the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people;

3. Supports the armed struggle of the Namibian people, led by the South West Africa People's Organization, to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

4. Appeals to all Member States to grant all necessary support and assistance to the South West Africa People's Organization in its struggle to achieve independence and national unity for Namibia;

Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to prepare, in consultation with the United Nations Council for Namibia and within their respective spheres of competence, programmes of assistance to the people of Namibia and their liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization;

6. 7. Decides to continue to defray the expenses of a representative of the South West Africa People's Organization, whenever the United Nations Council for Namibia so requires;

8. Strongly condemns South Africa for its persistent refusal to withdraw from Namibia and for its manoeuvres to consolidate its illegal occupation of the Territory;

9. Strongly condemns the illegal South African administration for its aggression against the Namibian people and their national liberation movement;

10. Strongly condemns the illegal South African administration for its massive repression of the people of Namibia and their liberation movement with the intention of establishing, among other things, an atmosphere of intimidation and terror for the purpose of imposing upon the Namibian people a bogus constitutional structure aimed at subverting the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia and perpetuating a ruthless policy of racial segregation;

11. Strongly condemns South Africa for its military build-up in Namibia, its threats and acts of aggression against independent African countries and the forceful removal of Namibians from the northern border of the Territory for military purposes;

12. Strongly condemns South Africa for organizing the so-called constitutional talks at Windhoek, which seek to perpetuate the apartheid and homelands policies as well as the colonial oppression and exploitation of the people and resources of Namibia by misrepresenting the genuine aspirations of the Namibian people for self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

13. Urgently calls upon the international community, especially all Member States, to refrain from according any recognition to, or co-operation with, any authority which the illegal occupation régime may install under the current fraudulent constitutional talks or any other circumstances in Namibia;

15. Reaffirms that the activities of those corporations are illegal;

Decides that any independence talks regarding Namibia must be between the representatives of South Africa and the South West Africa People's Organization, under the auspices of the United Nations, for the sole purpose of discussing the modalities for the transfer of power to the people of Namibia;

17. Requests all Member States to co-operate fully with the United Nations Council for Namibia in discharging the mandate entrusted to it under the terms and provisions of General Assembly resolution 2248(S-V);

20. Demands that South Africa release all Namibian political prisoners, including all those imprisoned or detained in connexion with offences under so-called internal security laws, whether such Namibians have been charged or tried or are held without charge and whether held in Namibia or South Africa;

Chapter IV

The situation in Southern Rhodesia

During 1976, aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) continued to receive consideration by various United Nations bodies.

On 6 April, the Security Council unanimously adopted a resolution by which the scope of mandatory sanctions against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia was expanded to include insurance, trade names and franchises. The Council acted on a 1975 recommendation of its Committee on sanctions established in pursuance of a Council resolution of 29 May 1968.<sup>1</sup> Later in the year, the Committee submitted its ninth report, covering its work from 16 December 1975 to 15 December 1976, and a second special report (see p. 156).

In June, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>2</sup> adopted resolutions on general aspects of the situation in the territory and on the question of sanctions. It also adopted a resolution commending for the Assembly's consideration the observations of an Ad Hoc Group of six of its members which earlier in the year had visited London and several States in Africa to provide the Special Committee with first-hand information on developments in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia.

Later in 1976, at its thirty-first session, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia, by which among other things it reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in the territory and expressed the hope that the conference on Zimbabwe then under way at Geneva, Switzerland, would succeed in establishing conditions for early independence on that basis. The Assembly also condemned Governments which continued to collaborate with the illegal régime, as well as all violations of the mandatory sanctions, and reiterated its conviction that the scope of the sanctions had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>3</sup> Governments were again urged to take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance with the sanctions.

Also at its 1976 session, the Assembly, endorsing a recommendation of the Special Committee and its Ad Hoc Group, adopted a decision that a conference would be held during 1977 at Maputo, Mozambique, to mobilize world-wide support for and assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia in their struggle for self-determination and independence.

Decisions on the question of Southern Rhodesia were also taken during the year by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Details of these and other related decisions on Southern Rhodesia taken by United Nations bodies in 1976 are described in the sections that follow.

Consideration by Security Council (6 April 1976)

On 6 April 1976, the Security Council held a meeting to consider a special report on the expansion of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia that had been submitted to it on 15 December 1975<sup>4</sup> by its Committee on sanctions (established in pursuance of Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968).<sup>5</sup> In that report, the Committee had, among other things, recommended to the Security Council that insurance, trade names and franchises be included within the scope of the mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 388(1976), the text of which had been sponsored and submitted by all 15 members following consultations.

By the preamble to this text, the Security Council among other things reaffirmed its previous decisions on the question and also reaffirmed that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security. Stating that it was acting under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter,<sup>6</sup> the Council then, by the operative paragraphs of the text:

(1) decided that all Member States were to take appropriate measures to ensure that their nationals and persons in their territories did not insure (a) any commodities or products exported from Southern Rhodesia after the date of this resolution (6 April 1976) in contravention of Council resolution 253(1968) which they knew or believed to have been so exported, (b) any commodities or products which they knew or believed to be intended for importation into Southern Rhodesia after 6 April in contravention of resolution 253(1968), or (c) commodities, products or other property in Southern Rhodesia of any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking in Southern Rhodesia in contravention of resolution 253(1968);

(2) decided that all Member States were to take appropriate measures to prevent their nationals and persons in their territories from granting to any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking in Southern Rhodesia the right to use any trade name or from entering into any franchising agreement involving the use of any trade name, trade mark or registered design in connexion with the sale or distribution of any products, commodities or services of such an undertaking; and

(3) urged States not Members of the United Nations to act in accordance with the above provisions.

(For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below. For summary of discussion in Security Council, see pp. 147-48.)

Several communications relating to Southern Rhodesia were received during the year by the President of the Security Council or the Secretary-General. For details, see p. 157.

Decisions of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

On 1 March 1976, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa. The Commission among other things denounced such assistance given by certain States to the régimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, directly or through national and multinational corporations. It considered that the sales of arms, the nuclear co-operation agreements and the economic activities of such corporations in South Africa, Namibia or Southern Rhodesia constituted blatant acts of complicity in the policies of apartheid and racial discrimination. It called upon States among other things to observe scrupulously the sanctions decreed against Southern Rhodesia and to prohibit the recruitment of mercenaries in their territories. (For details, see pp. 578-79.)

On 3 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2015(LXI)) on implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by which, among other things, it stressed the critical need of the peoples who were still living under oppressive colonial and alien domination in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and in other territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and international institutions within the United Nations system, and asked those bodies to render increased moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples in Africa struggling for liberation from colonial rule. In particular, the Council recommended that the organizations concerned initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with these peoples, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), and work out and implement concrete programmes for such assistance, with the active collaboration of the national liberation movements concerned.

Also by the resolution, the Council asked the agencies and other bodies to continue to withhold any assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see pp. 699-700.)

Consideration by the Special Committee

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held in New York on 1 April and between 12 May and 17 June 1976.

At its meeting on 1 April, the Special Committee decided to send a high-level Ad Hoc Group of six of its members to several States in Africa to provide the special Committee with first-hand information on developments in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia.

Between 13 April and 6 May, the Ad Hoc Group visited London (United Kingdom), Dar es Salaam and Zanzibar (United Republic of Tanzania), Lusaka and Livingstone (Zambia), Gaborone (Botswana), Maputo (Mozambique) and Addis Ababa (Ethiopia). It held consultations with officials and leaders of the Governments concerned, with officials of OAU and with representatives of the national liberation movement—the African National Council of Zimbabwe (ANC (Zimbabwe)). In its report, the Group recommended that the Secretary-General be requested, in consultation with OAU, to convene an international conference in 1977 in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, in order to mobilize world public opinion in support of their struggle towards self-determination, freedom and independence. The Group also, among other things, urged the international community to render effective assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia in their struggle, and stressed the need for intensified dissemination of information about their liberation struggle.

The Special Committee considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held between 8 and 17 June, with the participation of the representative of the United Kingdom—the administering power—as well as representatives of ANC (Zimbabwe): the Reverend Ndabaningi Sithole and Luke Munyawarara. On 16 June, the Special Committee unanimously adopted two resolutions, one relating to the question of Southern Rhodesia in general, the other on sanctions. On 17 June, it adopted, also unanimously, a resolution on the report of the Ad Hoc Group.

The United Kingdom representative gave the Special Committee an account of recent developments in efforts by his Government to help promote a settlement providing for an early and orderly transfer of power in Southern Rhodesia. The constitutional talks which had been continuing between Ian Smith and Joshua Nkomo of the African National Council had broken off on 17 March. The position of the United Kingdom—as outlined on 22 March by the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary—remained the same: first, acceptance of the principle of majority rule; second, elections for majority rule to take place in 18 months to two years; third, agreement that there would be no independence before majority rule. Negotiations were not to be long drawn out, he added, and there would need to be assurances that the transition to majority rule and to an independent Rhodesia would not be thwarted and would be orderly. If those preconditions were accepted, the negotiation of the actual terms of a constitution for independence could then begin.

The United Kingdom, he said, believed that those proposals remained valid. As the international isolation of Rhodesia increased and the guerrilla war became more intense, the ruling white minority would, he believed, come to recognize that a negotiated transfer of power was preferable to a prolonged struggle which they could not win. Similarly, he added, the African nationalists should recognize that it would be better to negotiate to achieve their aim of majority rule rather than to fight to the finish. The United Kingdom would take no part in imposing a military solution in Rhodesia but it was determined to remain in close contact with all concerned and to use its influence to promote early majority rule and consequent independence.

The Reverend Sithole questioned whether the United Kingdom could play an effective role in the prevailing situation or even if it should still be regarded as the administering power in Rhodesia. He went on to state that South Africa's intervention had helped the illegal régime to defeat United Nations sanctions. Currently it was supplying the régime with weapons, helicopters and military aeroplanes. There was no doubt that it was committed fully to the cause of white supremacy in Rhodesia and its continued intervention could not fail to bring about a racial war in southern Africa. In his view, the consistent refusal of the United Kingdom to intervene militarily in the Rhodesian situation had justified the armed struggle on which the people of Zimbabwe had embarked and from which they would not desist until their national objective—majority rule—was attained.

During the discussion in the Special Committee, regret was expressed by many speakers that attempts made over the past year by the Presidents of the front-line States, by ANC (Zimbabwe) and by others to reach a negotiated settlement had failed because of the intransigence of Ian Smith and his illegal régime. Trinidad and Tobago observed that a new and tragic phase had begun, characterized by increasing military activity on the part of the liberation movement and increasingly brutal and repressive measures by the illegal régime against the Zimbabwe people, involving destruction of property, human suffering and loss of life.

The representative of Norway pointed out that the changing geopolitical situation in southern Africa provided the international community with a unique opportunity to assist the people of Zimbabwe in their quest for self-determination and freedom. However, he added, it was the Zimbabweans and their liberation movement which would have to bear the brunt of the burden and it was ANC's duty to close its ranks: continued division would weaken the liberation struggle.

Several speakers—Cuba and India among them—felt that sanctions had been ineffective and that it was time for the Security Council to broaden their scope to include all measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter.

The Chinese representative said that the broad masses of the Zimbabwe people had come to realize that genuine national liberation could be achieved only by persevering in armed struggle. Nevertheless, the Smith régime, though essentially weak and in dire straits, was still putting up a last-ditch struggle, strengthening its armed forces and intensifying its repressive measures.

The spokesman for Bulgaria said that the illegal régime had been able to survive for more than 10 years only because of the massive assistance and the covert and overt support it had been receiving from South Africa and certain imperialist States and monopolies. According to the representative of Yugoslavia and others, the illegal régime was continuing to recruit mercenaries from various Western countries and South Africa.

Cuba and others said the United Nations had an unavoidable duty to aid the people of Zimbabwe and support its liberation with the same courage and decisiveness displayed by the States bordering Southern Rhodesia. Yugoslavia was among those that said the United Nations also had the obligation to continue and strengthen its assistance to those countries which were unevenly burdened by the economic and other consequences of their decisions to impose economic sanctions against the Smith régime. Yugoslavia also expressed concern over the difficulties those countries were encountering as a result of the problem of refugees.

By one of the resolutions it adopted on 16 June, the Special Committee among other things:

(1) reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right;

(2) reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the territory had to be worked out with the full participation of ANC (Zimbabwe), the sole and authentic representative of the true aspirations of the people of Zimbabwe;

(3) strongly condemned the continued brutal and repressive measures perpetrated by the illegal racist minority régime against the people of Zimbabwe, and in particular the wanton killings of Africans carried out by that régime;

(4) called upon the United Kingdom, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population, and not under any circumstances to accord to the illegal régime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty;

(5) commended to the administering power for appropriate action the relevant sections of the report of the Special Committee's Ad Hoc Group;

(6) firmly supported the people of Zimbabwe under the leadership of ANC (Zimbabwe) in their struggle to achieve majority rule, and emphasized the importance of maintaining a united leadership within the liberation movement;

(7) demanded (a) the termination of the executions of freedom fighters, (b) the release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, the removal of all restrictions on political activity and the establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, as well as the restoration of fundamental human rights; (c) the discontinuance of all repressive measures, in particular the brutality committed in "the operational area," the arbitrary closure of African areas, the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of so-called protected villages; and (d) the cessation of the influx of immigrants into the territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom;

(8) appealed to all States to take all necessary and effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia;

(9) requested all States, non-governmental organizations concerned and the various programmes within the United Nations to extend, in consultation with OAU, to the people of Zimbabwe and their national liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable rights;

(10) invited all Governments, specialized agencies and other organizations and concerned bodies within the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization, and the Secretary-General to give widespread and continuous publicity through all the media at their disposal to information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant United Nations decisions and actions, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal régime; and

(11) decided to keep the situation under review.

By the second resolution, the Special Committee among other things:

(1) strongly condemned the policies of the Governments, particularly the Government of South Africa, which in violation of United Nations resolutions and in open contravention of their obligations under Article 25 of the United Nations Charter,<sup>7</sup> continued to collaborate with the illegal racist minority régime, and called on them to cease;

(2) condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions strictly, as being contrary to their Charter obligations;

(3) condemned the continued importation of chrome and nickel from Southern Rhodesia into the United States and called on the United States to repeal speedily all legislation permitting such importation;

(4) called upon all Governments that had not done so (a) to take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance with the sanctions and to prohibit collaboration by them with the illegal régime, (b) to take effective steps to prevent or discourage the emigration to Southern Rhodesia of individuals or groups under their jurisdiction, (c) to discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal régime, inter alia by forbidding the operation of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board and the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravened the aims and purposes of the sanctions, and (d) to invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the territory;

(5) highly commended the action taken by Mozambique in closing its borders with Southern Rhodesia and imposing total sanctions against the Ian Smith régime, and considered that that action constituted an important contribution in support of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and towards the maximum isolation of his régime;

(6) requested all States and the various programmes within the United Nations to extend to Mozambique all forms of assistance to enable it to overcome any economic difficulties in connexion with its application of the economic sanctions, and requested the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to Mozambique and Zambia; and

(7) endorsed the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Group that the scope of sanctions against the illegal régime had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter, and reiterated its request that the Security Council consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency.

By the resolution concerning the report of the Ad Hoc Group, the Special Committee among other things commended the Group's observations to the General Assembly for consideration and expressed its gratitude to the Governments and peoples of Botswana, Ethiopia, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia and to the officials of OAU for their collaboration with the Ad Hoc Group. The Special Committee also noted the continuing and intensified efforts of the Heads of State of the front-line countries towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples with respect to Southern Rhodesia and Namibia.

It requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in co-operation with the Chairman of the Special Committee and in consultation with OAU, for approval by the General Assembly at its 1976 session, a proposal to convene in 1977 an international conference in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, as suggested by the Ad Hoc Group, for the purpose of mobilizing world public opinion in support of those peoples.

The Special Committee's Chairman was to continue to maintain a close working relationship with the Governments of the front-line States and with officials of other bodies concerned. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the report of the Ad Hoc Group to the Security Council.

The representative of Norway recalled the position of his Government with regard to references, direct or indirect, to armed struggle in United Nations resolutions. The Australian representative said his Government was not able to accept any interpretation in the first-mentioned resolution which might be regarded as lending unqualified approval to resort to armed struggle. The representative of Fiji also said that his Government was not able to support the use of arms by liberation movements in their struggle for independence.

General aspects

At its thirty-first session, in 1976, the General Assembly referred the question of Southern Rhodesia to its Fourth Committee, which considered the item at meetings held between 6 and 14 December.

The Rapporteur of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples introduced the chapters of the Special Committee's report on Southern Rhodesia and on the meetings in Africa of the Ad Hoc Group established by the Special Committee on 1 April 1976. The Rapporteur drew the attention of the Fourth Committee to the resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia adopted by the Special Committee in June.

The representative of the United Kingdom observed that the Fourth Committee's debate was taking place at a time when a conference in Geneva, under United Kingdom chairmanship, was engaged in intensive negotiations to establish an interim Government to see Rhodesia through the difficult transitional period before full independence. After 11 years of illegal rule, there were grounds for hope that the régime of Ian Smith had finally accepted the inevitable, and prospects for a peaceful and rapid transition to majority rule and independence were good, he said.

The representative went on to describe the events leading to the convening of the Geneva conference and the developments to date in the work of the conference. The United Kingdom, he said, had always considered a resolution of the Rhodesian problem as one of its most important and direct responsibilities and believed—currently more than ever—in a negotiated solution. Violence would not necessarily bring about independence any earlier and might well leave the territory in ruins, carrying the risk of a more general conflagration in southern Africa. The United Kingdom whole-heartedly supported the maintenance of sanctions until such time as the illegal régime had given way to an interim government. The pressure upon the régime, which the United Kingdom believed had contributed to the regime's change of heart in recent months, had to be kept up until power had passed to a legal government.

The representatives of Argentina, Canada, Cyprus, Pakistan, the Sudan and the United States, among others, expressed support for the efforts being made at Geneva to achieve a peaceful solution to the problem of Southern Rhodesia. For the first time in a decade, the United States representative said, the General Assembly could look forward to a realistic prospect of majority rule in an independent Zimbabwe. His Government was pleased to have played a part in the negotiations which had brought about the conference.

The spokesman for Mali said that all countries saw the Geneva conference as the last chance for a peaceful settlement of the Southern Rhodesian crisis but it would be successful only if the United Kingdom—instead of acting as umpire between the Zimbabwean nationalists and the white minority régime—ensured that power was transferred to the Zimbabweans without bargaining or compromise. Mali and others held the view that Ian Smith's previous reversals of attitude showed that he was not a man to be trusted. Even as diplomatic efforts were proceeding at Geneva, his régime was intensifying its oppression against the African population. The Byelorussian SSR and the USSR, and several other speakers, also made this point.

The USSR representative condemned the military build-up in Southern Rhodesia, the Draconian repressive laws, the oppression of the indigenous population and its forced transfer and resettlement in so-called protected villages. He went on to say that he welcomed the fact that negotiations were being held in Geneva and hoped they would be successful. However, he said, that would be difficult if the Western powers, which had publicly undertaken to exert pressure on the Smith régime and ensure the transfer of power, continued to support the regime's repressive actions. Perhaps if the Smith régime were deprived of oil and weapons it would participate more sincerely in the discussions. However, he noted, it had been reported that British and United States multinational corporations had met Southern Rhodesia's needs for oil and petroleum derivatives for more than a decade, and South Africa had supplied the regime with military aircraft and other types of armaments. He also expressed concern over the continued escalation in the recruitment of mercenaries—from Australia, the Federal Republic of Germany, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The USSR believed, he said, that the armed struggle had to continue at the same time as negotiations were being held: the freedom fighters should not relax nor should their supporters reduce their assistance to them.

The representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine members of the European Communities (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom), welcomed the convening of the Geneva conference. Ian Smith's acceptance of the concept of majority rule within two years demonstrated the effectiveness of concerted international action, he said, adding that it would be tragic if the opportunity to reach a solution were lost. The nine countries meanwhile would continue to comply strictly with the sanctions imposed by the Security Council: they would look forward to establishing links with a legal government in Southern Rhodesia and, in due course, with the government of an independent Zimbabwe.

The representatives of Cuba, Guyana and other States said that the downfall of colonialism in southern Africa would be the result of the victories achieved by the national liberation movements. The Geneva conference had come about not because of a "superman" of imperialist diplomacy who had caused the Smith régime to change its mind but because of resounding victories by the liberation movements in Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique, the advances of the South West Africa People's Organization in Namibia and the thrust of the liberation movement in Zimbabwe.

Cuba and other speakers, including India, Nepal and Yugoslavia, paid tribute to Mozambique for closing its borders with Southern Rhodesia and applying full sanctions. Nepal urged the international community to heed the appeal made by the Security Council to render assistance to Mozambique by all means available. (See also pp. 190-97.)

Tribute was also paid by, among others, Indonesia, Papua New Guinea and Sierra Leone to the efforts of the other States which had assisted the people of Zimbabwe. They appealed for economic and material assistance to those countries to compensate for the losses they had suffered as a direct result of their involvement in the struggle.

Many Fourth Committee Members, among them Ethiopia, Ghana, Mozambique and Poland, expressed their appreciation to the Ad Hoc Group of the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence for shedding useful light on the internal situation in Southern Rhodesia and for its observations on the situation in southern Africa.

On 14 December 1976, the Fourth Committee approved two draft resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia. The first text, sponsored by 54 Members, related to the territory as a whole and was approved without objection. The General Assembly adopted it on 20 December, also without objection, as resolution 31/154 A.

By the preambular part of the text, the Assembly among other things: reaffirmed that any attempt to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal régime on the basis of independence before majority rule would be in contravention of the inalienable rights of the people of the territory; took note of the declared position of the administering power that there would be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe; took note of the convening of the Geneva conference on Zimbabwe; condemned the illegal racist minority régime for its intensified oppression of the people of Zimbabwe; and commended the firm determination of those people, under the leadership of their national liberation movement, to achieve freedom and independence.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly:

(1) reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Zimbabwe people to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right;

(2) reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to its future had to be worked out with the full participation of the Zimbabwe people;

(3) strongly condemned the illegal régime for its continued brutal and repressive measures and in particular its wanton killings of Africans within and outside Zimbabwe;

(4) further strongly condemned the régime for its systematic acts of aggression against neighbouring States;

(5) called upon the United Kingdom, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population, and not in any circumstances to accord to the illegal régime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty;

(6) commended to the administering power for appropriate action the relevant sections of the report of the Special Committee's Ad Hoc Group;

(7) firmly supported the Zimbabwe people in their struggle to achieve majority rule;

(8) demanded: the termination of executions of freedom fighters by the illegal Smith régime, the unconditional and immediate release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, removal of all restrictions on political activity, establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, and restoration of fundamental human rights; the discontinuance of all repressive measures, in particular the brutality committed in the "operational area," of the arbitrary closure of African areas, of the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of so-called protected villages and of the persecution of Christian missionaries supporting the cause of Zimbabwe liberation; and the cessation of the influx of immigrants into the territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom;

(9) called upon all States to take all necessary measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia;

(10) requested all States, directly and through their action in other organizations, to extend, in consultation with OAU, to the Zimbabwe people and their national liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle;

(11) invited all Governments, specialized agencies, other organizations and bodies concerned, and the Secretary-General, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the situation in Zimbabwe and to the relevant United Nations decisions and actions, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal régime;

(12) expressed the hope that the conference on Zimbabwe at Geneva would succeed in establishing the conditions for early independence on the basis of majority rule, in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions;

(13) requested the United Kingdom to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of the mandate, and to report thereon to the Special Committee as well as to the Assembly at its 1977 session; and

(14) requested the Special Committee to keep the situation in the territory under review as a matter of priority and to report thereon to the General Assembly in 1977.

The second text, having to do with sanctions, was approved by the Fourth Committee by a recorded vote of 121 to 1, with 6 abstentions. It was sponsored by 50 Members. The General Assembly adopted it on 20 December by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 7 abstentions, as resolution 31/154 B.

By the preambular part of this text, the Assembly among other things strongly deplored the increasing collaboration that certain States, particularly South Africa, maintained with the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia, thereby seriously impeding the effective application of the sanctions and other measures taken against the régime. It was also deeply disturbed at recent reports of widespread violations of the sanctions, and considered that developments in the area called for positive, concerted international action with a view to imposing maximum isolation on the illegal régime. It reaffirmed its conviction that sanctions would not put an end to the régime unless they were comprehensive, mandatory and effectively supervised, enforced and complied with, particularly by South Africa. The Assembly also noted with appreciation the decision of Mozambique to close its borders with Southern Rhodesia and to impose sanctions against the illegal régime in compliance with the relevant decisions of the Security Council.

By the operative paragraphs of the text, the Assembly:

(1) strongly condemned those Governments, particularly the racist régime of South Africa, that continued to collaborate with Southern Rhodesia's illegal racist minority régime, and called upon them to cease all such collaboration;

(2) condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions strictly, as being contrary to their obligations;

(3) condemned the continued importation of chrome and nickel from the territory into the United States, which was called upon to repeal speedily all legislation permitting such importation;

(4) called upon all Governments which had not done so (a) to take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions imposed by the Security Council and to prohibit any form of collaboration by them with the illegal régime, (b) to take effective steps to prevent or discourage emigration to Southern Rhodesia of any individuals or groups under their jurisdiction, (c) to discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal régime—among other things by forbidding the operation of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board, the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravened the aims and purposes of the sanctions, and (d) to invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the territory;

(5) highly commended the action taken by Mozambique in closing its borders with Southern Rhodesia and imposing total sanctions against the Smith régime, and considered that that action constituted an important contribution in support of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and towards the maximum isolation of the illegal régime;

(6) requested all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and the various organizations and programmes within the United Nations system, to extend to Mozambique all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to enable it to overcome any economic difficulties in connexion with its application of the economic sanctions;

(7) further requested the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to Mozambique, as well as to Zambia;

(8) reiterated its conviction that the scope of the sanctions had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter and requested the Security Council to consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency; and

(9) requested the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence to follow the implementation of this resolution and invited the Security Council's Committee on sanctions to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee.

Following the voting on the draft resolutions, the United Kingdom representative informed the Fourth Committee that the Geneva conference had been adjourned until 17 January 1977 so that its Chairman could carry out intensive consultations in southern Africa. The United Kingdom's intention was to meet the concern of the nationalists that the process of transition to independence should be guaranteed and the anxieties of the Europeans that it should be orderly. He associated his Government with the reference in the first resolution to the Geneva conference, whose main objective was to bring about a rapid and orderly transfer of power to the people of Zimbabwe.

The representatives of Australia, Austria, Canada, Japan, the Netherlands (speaking for the nine countries of the European Communities) and Sweden (speaking also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway), said they had supported both resolutions but as a matter of principle objected to the call for effective measures to prevent immigration and tourism to Southern Rhodesia. Such measures, they said, would limit the constitutional right of their citizens to travel freely. Canada also believed it was preferable to avoid cutting off all communications with Southern Rhodesia so that pressures of international opinion might continue to be brought to bear on the régime.

The United States said it had voted against the second resolution not because it opposed such sanctions or wished to see them vitiated in any way but because it deeply resented being singled out for criticism when its imports from Southern Rhodesia did not account for more than 5 per cent of the territory's export earnings. In a year when the United States had exerted every effort to bring about the peaceful transition to majority rule in Southern Rhodesia, it was petty and unjust for the Assembly to criticize the United States alone while other nations—some of them African—went unmentioned for their secret and much more extensive trade with Southern Rhodesia.

International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia

On 17 June 1976, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, after considering the report of its Ad Hoc Group, recommended that the General Assembly at its 1976 session approve a proposal to convene in 1977 an international conference in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for the purpose of mobilizing world public opinion in support of those peoples.

On 17 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted by consensus, as resolution 31/145, a text proposed by 40 Members concerning the holding of such a conference.

By the preamble of the text, the Assembly among other things expressed its deep concern at the situation obtaining in Zimbabwe and Namibia as a result of the continued oppression and domination of their peoples by the racist régimes in Southern Rhodesia and South Africa; it noted the recommendation by the Special Committee that the United Nations should convene a conference in support of those peoples and the endorsement of that recommendation by the United Nations Council for Namibia.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly decided that the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia would be held during 1977 to mobilize world-wide support for and assistance to the peoples of those territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence. It welcomed the fact that the Government of Mozambique was prepared to hold the conference at Maputo, and asked the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Special Committee and the Council for Namibia, to organize the conference in that city, in consultation with OAU; he was also asked to give it the widest possible publicity. The Special Committee and the Council for Namibia were asked to report to the Assembly at its 1977 session on the results of the conference.

Related General Assembly decisions

At its session in 1976, the General Assembly took several decisions that referred to various aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia. These are described briefly below.

IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION ON THE GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

On 17 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/143) relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by which, among other things, it condemned the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans in Namibia by South Africa and in Zimbabwe by the illegal racist minority régime. It was conscious of the pressing need to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly with respect to Namibia and Zimbabwe, and strongly deprecated the policies of States that continued to collaborate with South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. It asked all States to withhold assistance from South Africa and the illegal régime until they restored to the people of Namibia and Zimbabwe their right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those régimes. All States were urged to provide all moral and material assistance to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe. The Special Committee was asked to continue to examine the compliance by Member States with the Declaration and other relevant resolutions, particularly those relating to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and to enlist support among Governments and organizations in the achievement of the objectives of those decisions, particularly as concerned the oppressed peoples of the two territories. (For details, see pp. 690-94.)

On 29 November, by another resolution (31/30) relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence, the General Assembly expressed its concern that the assistance extended thus far by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements was far from adequate; it once again urged those agencies and organizations to withhold any assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime of Southern Rhodesia, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those régimes. (For details, see pp. 700-2.)

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

On 5 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/7, by which it condemned the support which the régimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia continued to receive from the foreign economic, financial and other interests that were collaborating with them in their exploitation of the natural and human resources of Namibia and Zimbabwe. It also condemned all Governments that violated the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions, and called upon the régime in South Africa to cease immediately all forms of collaboration with the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see pp. 708-11.)

ADVERSE CONSEQUENCES FOR HUMAN RIGHTS OF AID TO RACIST REGIMES IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

On 30 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/33) relating to the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa, expressing the conviction that such aid given to the régimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia by certain States was the major factor in the perpetuation of the abominable policies of those régimes.

The Assembly among other things reaffirmed the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination, independence and the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories and called on all States scrupulously to observe the sanctions imposed on the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia.

(For details, see pp. 578-80.)

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF THE RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

On 30 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/34) relating to the importance of the universal realization of the right to self-determination by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, of the Palestinian people and of all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, independence and sovereignty without external interference. (For details, see pp. 590-91.)

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE ORGANIZATION OF AFRICAN UNITY

By resolution 31/13, relating to co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and adopted on 16 November, the General Assembly among other things expressed its awareness of the urgent need to give increased assistance to victims of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid resulting from intensified acts of repression against the African peoples by the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see pp. 200-2.)

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1976, 363 Southern Rhodesian students were studying abroad in 19 countries on scholarships granted under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1967. Between 1 November 1975 and 30 September 1976, the Programme received 1,168 applications from Southern Rhodesians, granted 40 new awards and extended 323 awards.

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly reviewed the Programme and, by resolution 31/31, adopted on 29 November, among other things noted with satisfaction the increase in contributions to the Programme which permitted the continuance in 1975/1976 of a substantial level of assistance, and appealed once again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to ensure its continuation and expansion.

Resolution 31/154 A, as recommended by Fourth Committee, A/31/447, adopted without objection by Assembly on 20 December 1976, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the administering Power,

Taking into account the report of the Ad Hoc Group established by the Special Committee at its 1029th meeting on 1 April 1976,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions relating to the question of Southern Rhodesia adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Special Committee,

Bearing in mind that the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, has the primary responsibility for putting an end to the critical situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) which, as repeatedly affirmed by the Security Council, constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming that any attempt to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal régime on the basis of independence before majority rule would be in contravention of the inalienable rights of the people of the Territory and contrary to the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and of resolution 1514(XV),

Taking note of the declared position of the administering Power that there shall be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe,

Reaffirming also its endorsement of the relevant provisions of the Dar es Salaam Declaration on Southern Africa, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its ninth extraordinary session, held from 7 to 10 April 1975,

Taking note of the convening of the conference on Zimbabwe at Geneva,

Condemning the illegal racist minority régime for its intensified oppression of the people of Zimbabwe, the arbitrary imprisonment and detention of political leaders and others, the illegal execution of freedom fighters and the continued denial of fundamental human rights, including in particular the wanton beating, torture and murder of innocent villagers, arbitrary criminal measures of collective punishment and measures designed to create an apartheid State in Zimbabwe,

Commending the firm determination of the people of Zimbabwe, under the leadership of their national liberation movement, to achieve freedom and independence,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in conformity with the objectives of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

2. Reaffirms the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the Territory must be worked out with the full participation of the people of Zimbabwe and in accordance with their true aspirations;

3. Strongly condemns the illegal racist minority régime for its continued brutal and repressive measures perpetrated against the people of Zimbabwe and in particular the wanton killings of Africans carried out by the régime within and outside Zimbabwe;

4. Further strongly condemns the illegal racist minority régime for its systematic acts of aggression against neighbouring African States;

5. Calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering Power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population and not under any circumstances to accord to the illegal régime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty;

6. Commends to the administering Power for appropriate action the relevant sections of the report of the Ad Hoc Group established by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples at its 1029th meeting, on 1 April 1976;

(d) The cessation of the influx of foreign immigrants into the Territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom;

9. Calls upon all States to take all necessary and effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia;

10. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members, as well as the non-governmental organizations concerned and the various programmes within the United Nations system, to extend, in consultation and co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to the people of Zimbabwe and their national liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable rights;

11. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, the United Nations bodies concerned and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization, as well as the Secretary-General, to take steps, as appropriate, to give widespread and continuous publicity through all the media at their disposal to information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant decisions and actions of the United Nations, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal régime;

13. Requests the Government of the United Kingdom, in keeping with its express readiness to do so, to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of the mandate entrusted to the latter by the General Assembly, and to report thereon to the Special Committee and to the Assembly at its thirty-second session;

The General Assembly,

Having adopted resolution A above on the question of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Strongly deploring the increasing collaboration, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations and of the relevant decisions of the United Nations, which certain States, particularly South Africa, maintain with the illegal racist minority régime, thereby seriously impeding the effective application of sanctions and other measures taken thus far against the illegal régime,

Seriously concerned at the continued importation of chrome and nickel into the United States of America from Southern Rhodesia, in violation of the relevant decisions of the Security Council and in disregard of the related resolutions of the General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed at recent reports of widespread violations of United Nations sanctions, including the operation of Southern Rhodesian aircraft for international passenger and cargo traffic, as well as the continued functioning of information and airline offices of the illegal régime outside Southern Rhodesia and the resultant influx of foreign tourists into the Territory,

Considering that developments in the area call in particular for positive, concerted international action with a view to imposing maximum isolation on the illegal régime,

Reaffirming its conviction that the sanctions will not put an end to the illegal racist minority régime unless they are comprehensive, mandatory and effectively supervised, enforced and complied with, particularly by South Africa,

Noting with appreciation the decision of the Government of Mozambique to close its borders with Southern Rhodesia and to impose sanctions against the illegal racist minority régime in compliance with the relevant decisions of the Security Council,

1. Strongly condemns those Governments, particularly the racist régime of South Africa, which, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and in open contravention of their specific obligations under Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations, continue to collaborate with the illegal racist minority régime, and calls upon those Governments to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

2. Condemns all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions strictly, as being contrary to the obligations assumed by them under Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter;

3. Condemns the continued importation of chrome and nickel from Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) into the United States of America and calls upon the Government of the United States to repeal speedily all legislation permitting such importation;

4. Calls upon all Governments which thus far have not done so:

(a) To take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions imposed by the Security Council and to prohibit any form of collaboration by them with the illegal régime;

(b) To take effective steps to prevent or discourage the emigration to Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) of any individuals or groups of individuals under their jurisdiction;

(c) To discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal régime, inter alia, by forbidding the operation and activities of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board and the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravene the aims and purposes of the sanctions;

(d) To invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the Territory;

5. Highly commends the action taken by the Government of Mozambique in closing its borders with Southern Rhodesia and imposing total sanctions against the Smith régime, and considers that that action constitutes an important contribution in support of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and towards the maximum isolation of the illegal régime;

6. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members, and the various programmes within the United Nations system to extend to the Government of Mozambique all forms of financial, technical and material assistance in order to enable it to overcome any economic difficulties in connexion with its application of economic sanctions against the illegal régime;

7. Further requests the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to the Government of Mozambique as well as to the Government of Zambia;

8. Reiterates its conviction that the scope of the sanctions against the illegal régime must be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter and requests the Security Council to consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency;

9. Resolution 31/145, as proposed by 40 powers, A/31/L.31 and Add.1-3, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 17 December 1976, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the situation obtaining in Zimbabwe and Namibia as a result of the continued oppression and domination of their peoples by the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia and the racist régime of South Africa in defiance of the decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, Mindful of the special responsibility of the United Nations to support the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Having approved the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, including in particular the findings of the Ad Hoc Group established by the Special Committee at its 1029th meeting on 1 April 1976,

Deeply conscious of the urgent and continuing need to arouse world public opinion with a view to assisting effectively the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia to self-determination, freedom and independence, and to intensify the widespread dissemination of information on the struggle for liberation being waged by the peoples of those Territories and their national liberation movements against the repressive, colonialist and racist domination of their countries by the minority régimes concerned, Bearing in mind the constructive results of the International Conference of Experts for the Support of Victims of Colonialism and Apartheid in Southern Africa, held at Oslo from 9 to 14 April 1973,

Noting the recommendation by the Special Committee that the United Nations should convene during 1977 an international conference in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the endorsement of this recommendation by the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Noting the statement of the Government of Mozambique that it would welcome a decision by the General Assembly to hold a conference at Maputo,

1. Decides that the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia shall be held during 1977 for the purpose of mobilizing world-wide support for and assistance to the peoples of those Territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence;

2. Welcomes the fact that the Government of Mozambique is prepared to hold the Conference at Maputo;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia, to organize the said Conference at Maputo, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, and authorizes the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and services for the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to give the widest possible publicity to the Conference through all the media at his disposal, including press releases, radio and television;

5. Requests the Special Committee and the United Nations Council for Namibia to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the results of the Conference.

Chapter V

Other questions relating to non-self-governing territories*Transmission of information

Territories on which information was submitted in 1976

In accordance with Chapter XI, Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations, Members responsible for the administration of territories whose peoples have not attained a full measure of self-government have the obligation to send each year to the Secretary-General information on economic, social and educational conditions in the territories for which they have responsibilities, subject to such limitations as security and constitutional considerations might require.

Australia, France, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States regularly include information on political and constitutional developments in the territories on which they transmit information. Additional information on such developments in the territories under their administration is given by Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States when these territories are discussed in the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Supplementary information is also made available by the United Kingdom concerning territories under its administration.

During 1976, information relating to 1975 was transmitted to the Secretary-General with respect to the following territories:

Australia: the Cocos (Keeling) Islands

France: the New Hebrides (condominium with the United Kingdom)

New Zealand: Tokelau Islands

United Kingdom:<sup>2</sup> Belize, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, the Gilbert Islands, Montserrat, the New Hebrides (condominium with France), Pitcairn, St. Helena, the Solomon Islands, Southern Rhodesia, the Turks and Caicos Islands, Tuvalu

United States: American Samoa, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly at its 1976 session, which opened on 21 September, that he had received no information from Portugal concerning East Timor. [On 20

April 1977, the Portuguese Government informed the Secretary-General that, since August 1975, owing to the circumstances prevailing in the territory, the Portuguese Government had been unable to exercise effective administration of East Timor. The Portuguese Government was therefore defacto prevented from transmitting any information under Article 73 e of the Charter concerning the territory.]

The Secretary-General also had not received any information concerning Antigua, Dominica, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia or St. Vincent. In that connexion, the United Kingdom had declared at previous sessions of the General Assembly that those territories, having achieved the status of Associated States, had attained a full measure of self-government.

The Secretary-General further reported that he had received no information concerning Brunei. On 18 September 1972, the Government of the United Kingdom had notified the Secretary-General that this territory had attained full internal self-government and, consequently, the transmission of information thereon was, in its view, no longer appropriate.

In a letter dated 26 February 1976, the representative of Spain informed the Secretary-General, inter alia, that the Spanish Government, as of that date, definitively terminated its presence in the territory of the Sahara and deemed it necessary to place on record that Spain considered itself exempt from any responsibility of an international nature in connexion with the administration of that territory, in view of the cessation of its participation in the temporary administration established for the territory.

Study of information from administering Members

Up to 1963, information transmitted by administering Members on non-self-governing territories was examined by the General Assembly's Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories. When the Assembly decided, on 16 December 1963, to discontinue that Committee,<sup>3</sup> it requested the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to study the information and take it fully into account in examining the situation in each of the non-self-governing territories.

On 29 November 1976, the General Assembly approved the chapter of the report of the Special Committee relating to information from non-self-governing territories which was transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter; it deplored the fact that, despite the repeated recommendations of the Assembly and the Special Committee, some Member States having responsibilities for the administration of non-self-governing territories had ceased or had failed to transmit information under that Article.

The Assembly then reaffirmed that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a non-self-governing territory had attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e with respect to that territory.

It asked the administering powers concerned to transmit or continue to transmit to the Secretary-General the required information, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the territories, within six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those territories.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/29, adopted by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 3 abstentions. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which approved the text on 15 November 1976 by a recorded vote of 122 to 0, with 4 abstentions. The sponsors of the text in the Fourth Committee were Algeria, Brazil, the Congo, Cuba, Egypt, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Mozambique, the Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Senegal, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, and the United Republic of Tanzania. The text was based on a resolution approved on 9 September 1976 by the Special Committee.

Offers of study and training facilities

The Secretary-General reported to the 1976 session of the General Assembly that up to 15 October 1976 the following 31 Member States had made scholarships available to persons from non-self-governing territories for secondary, vocational and post-graduate studies: Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Israel, Italy, the Libyan Arab Republic, Malta, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United States and Yugoslavia.

The General Assembly, on 29 November 1976, after considering the report, expressed appreciation to Member States which had made scholarships available and invited all States to continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities. It also asked them to provide travel funds to prospective students whenever possible.

It requested the administering powers to ensure widespread publicity in territories under their administration to offers of study and training and to provide all necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers.

The Assembly's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 31/32, adopted, without objection, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which on 15 November had approved the text, also without objection, on the basis of a proposal by Australia, Austria, Brazil, Canada, the Congo, Egypt, Ethiopia, Greece, India, Indonesia, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mexico, Mozambique, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia. ### The International Court of Justice

Aegean Sea continental shelf

On 10 August 1976 Greece submitted to the International Court of Justice an Application instituting proceedings against Turkey in connexion with a dispute concerning the continental shelf in the Aegean Sea and the rights of those two States to explore and exploit the shelf. Greece requested the Court to adjudge and declare: that certain specified Greek islands, as part of the territory of Greece, were entitled to the portion of the continental shelf which appertained to them according to the applicable principles and rules of international law; what was the course of the boundary (or boundaries) between the respective portions of the continental shelf appertaining to either State; that Greece was entitled to exercise over its continental shelf sovereign and exclusive rights for the purpose of researching and exploring it and exploiting its natural resources; that Turkey was not entitled nor should it continue to undertake any activities on the Greek continental shelf, whether by exploration, exploitation, research or otherwise, without the consent of Greece; and that certain specified activities of Turkey constituted infringements of the sovereign and exclusive rights of Greece to explore and exploit its continental shelf or to authorize scientific research respecting the continental shelf.

Greece founded the Court's jurisdiction on article 17 of the General Act of 1928 for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, read together with Article 36, paragraph 1, and Article 37 of the Statute of the Court,<sup>1</sup> and on a joint Greco-Turkish communiqué issued on 31 May 1975 at Brussels, Belgium.

Also on 10 August, Greece requested the Court to indicate interim measures of protection whereby the Governments of the two States should be directed: (1) unless with the consent of each other, and pending the final Judgment of the Court, to refrain from all exploration activity or any scientific research in disputed areas; and (2) to refrain from taking further military measures or actions which might endanger their peaceful relations.

The Government of Greece named Michel Stasinopoulos to sit as judge ad hoc in the case in accordance with Article 31 of the Statute of the Court.<sup>2</sup>

At public sittings held on 25, 26 and 27 August 1976, the Court heard the observations of the representatives of Greece concerning the request for the indication of interim measures of protection.

In justification of its request for interim measures, Greece alleged: (a) that certain acts on the part of Turkey (the granting of petroleum exploration permits and the explorations of the vessel MTA Sismik I) constituted infringements of its exclusive sovereign rights to the exploration and exploitation of its continental shelf, and that the breach of the right of a coastal State to exclusivity of knowledge of its continental shelf constituted irreparable prejudice; and (b) that the activities complained of would, if continued, aggravate the dispute.

On 26 August, Turkey, which had not appointed an agent and was not represented at the hearings, transmitted to the Registry of the Court written observations by which it expressed the view that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the Application, that the measures requested were not required for the protection of the rights claimed by

Greece, and that the Greek request for interim measures should be rejected and the case removed from the list. Turkey contended that its activities in the disputed areas involved no prejudice to the rights of Greece. It stated that it had no intention of taking the initiative in the use of force.

On 11 September 1976, the Court made an Order whereby it found, by 12 votes to 1, that the circumstances, as they presented themselves to the Court, were not such as to require the exercise of its power under Article 41 of the Statute<sup>3</sup> to indicate interim measures of protection.

The Court, viewing the matter in the context of Article 41, was unable to find in the alleged breach of Greece's rights such a risk of irreparable prejudice to rights at issue as might require the exercise of the power to indicate interim measures of protection. The Court considered that it was not to be presumed that either Government would fail to heed its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations or fail to heed the Security Council's resolution of 25 August 1976 (see pp. 321-22), whereby the Council urged the Governments of Greece and Turkey to do everything in their power to reduce the tensions in the area and called upon them to resume direct negotiations over their differences.

The Court observed that, in order to pronounce on the request for interim measures, it was not called upon to decide any question of its jurisdiction to entertain the dispute, and that its Order of 11 September in no way prejudged any question relating to its jurisdiction or to the merits of the case. It was unable, at that stage of the proceedings, to accede to Turkey's request that the case be removed from the list, and it decided that the written pleadings should initially be addressed to the question of its jurisdiction.

On 14 October 1976, the President of the Court, after ascertaining the views of the parties, made an Order fixing the following time-limits for the written proceedings on the question of jurisdiction: 18 April 1977 for the Memorial of Greece; 24 October 1977 for the Counter-Memorial of Turkey.

Chapter II

Questions concerning the International Law Commission

The International Law Commission held its twenty-eighth session at Geneva, Switzerland, from 3 May to 23 July 1976. Devoted in large part to concluding the first reading of draft articles on the most-favoured-nation clause, the session also produced further draft articles on State responsibility and on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties. The Commission also began consideration of the law of non-navigational uses of international watercourses. The General Assembly, at its 1976 session, considered the Commission's report and adopted a resolution on its work.

Report of the International Law Commission*Most-favoured-nation clause

The Commission, in its consideration of the most-favoured-nation clause, had before it a seventh report submitted by Endre Ustor, the Special Rapporteur for the topic. The report contained proposals concerning certain articles approved at previous sessions as well as additional chapters dealing with provisions in favour of developing States and with the settlement of disputes.

At its 1976 session, the Commission adopted on first reading seven new draft articles. Three related to exceptions to the application of the most-favoured-nation clause: treatment under a generalized system of preferences (article 21); treatment extended to facilitate frontier traffic (article 22); and rights and facilities extended to a land-locked State (article 23). The other four were miscellaneous provisions: cases of State succession, State responsibility and outbreak of hostilities (article 24); the non-retroactivity of the articles (article 25); the freedom of the parties to agree to different provisions (article 26); and article 27, which provided that the articles as a whole were without prejudice to the establishment of new rules of international law in favour of developing countries.

In addition, the Commission approved a definition of the term "material reciprocity" (article 2 (e)), which, for the purposes of this set of articles, meant that the beneficiary State was entitled to the treatment provided for under a most-favoured-nation clause only if it accorded equivalent treatment to the granting State in the agreed sphere of relations.

With minor changes in the texts of certain articles, the Commission completed the first reading of the draft articles on the most-favoured-nation clause, as recommended by the General Assembly on 15 December 1975.<sup>1</sup> The Commission decided to transmit those articles to Member States for their observations.

The Commission, continuing its analysis of the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause in trade relations between States at different levels of economic development, said it had entered the field of progressive development of international law by approving articles 21 and 27. With reference to article 21, the Commission stated in its report that there appeared to be agreement in principle among States that they should adopt a generalized system of preferences and that they would refrain from invoking their rights to most-favoured-nation treatment in order to obtain the preferential treatment granted to developing countries by developed countries.

Among the other aspects of the most-favoured-nation clause discussed in depth at the 1976 session was the relationship and interaction between the clause and the principle of non-discrimination. It was the Commission's view that the clause could be considered as a technique or means for promoting the equality of States, or non-discrimination. But the Commission also observed that the close relationship between the two concepts should not blur their differences; while States were bound by the duty arising from the principle of non-discrimination, they were nevertheless free to grant special favours to other States on the ground of some special relationship of a geographic, economic, political or other nature.

State responsibility

In 1976, the Commission continued its work on State responsibility and provisionally approved four additional draft articles, on the basis of a fifth report submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Roberto Ago.

The four articles, comprising chapter III (breach of an international obligation) of Part One of the draft (relating to the origin of international responsibility), dealt with: the existence of a breach of an international obligation (article 16); the irrelevance of the origin of the international obligation breached (article 17); the requirement that the international obligation be in force for the State (article 18); and international crimes and international delicts (article 19). The chapter laid down one of the two essential conditions for the existence of an internationally wrongful act, namely, the objective element. The other condition—the subjective element—was incorporated in chapter II, provisionally completed at the Commission's previous session.<sup>2</sup>

Article 19, which gave rise to considerable discussion later in the year when the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee took up the Commission's report, set forth the concept of an "international crime." The article specified that an international crime might result, inter alia, from a serious breach of an international obligation of essential importance for: (a) the maintenance of international peace and security, such as that prohibiting aggression; (b) safeguarding the right of self-determination of peoples, such as that prohibiting the establishment or maintenance by force of colonial domination; (c) safeguarding the human being, such as those prohibiting slavery, genocide and apartheid; or (d) the safeguarding and preservation of the human environment, such as those prohibiting massive pollution of the atmosphere or of the seas.

The Commission also stated by article 19 that any internationally wrongful act which was not an international crime constituted an international delict.

Success/on of States in respect of matters other than treaties

The Commission continued its efforts to draft additional articles on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties and approved, at its 1976 session, five draft articles and the definition of a "newly independent State." The Commission's work was based on the eighth report of the Special Rapporteur for the topic, Mohammed Bedjaoui.

The five articles formed section 2 (provisions relating to each type of succession of States) of part I, which concerned succession to State property. They dealt with: the transfer of part of the territory of a State (article 12); newly independent States (article 13); the uniting of States (article 14); the separation of part or parts of the territory of a State (article 15); and the dissolution of a State (article 16). A "newly independent State" (article 3 (f)) was defined, for the purposes of these articles, as a successor State the territory of which immediately before the date of the succession of States was a dependent territory for the international relations of which the predecessor State was responsible.

The Commission applied the principle of equity in several draft articles, stipulating that under specific circumstances the movable State property of a predecessor State was to pass to the successor State or States in an equitable proportion.

Non-navigational uses of international watercourses

At its 1976 session, the Commission had before it the first report on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses submitted by the Special Rapporteur for the topic, Richard D. Kearney. The report analysed replies received from Governments to a questionnaire, prepared by the Commission in 1974, concerning the scope and direction of the work on international watercourses. It was devoted largely to a discussion of the definition of the term "international watercourses" and the geographical concepts which could serve as a basis for a study of the legal aspects of non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

After exploring basic aspects of the work to be done, the Commission reached a general agreement that the question of determining the range of the term "international watercourses" need not be pursued at the outset; attention should instead be devoted to beginning the formulation of general principles applicable to legal aspects of the uses of those watercourses. Efforts should be made to devise rules not too detailed to be generally applicable nor too general to be effective. The sensitivity of States regarding their interests in water should be taken into account, and such concepts as abuse of rights, good faith, neighbourly co-operation and humanitarian treatment, and the requirements of reparation, should be explored.

Other topics

Due to the time required for other items at the 1976 session, the Commission was unable to consider the question of treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between two or more international organizations, although the Special Rapporteur, Paul Reuter, had submitted a fifth report on that topic. The Commission decided to resume its examination of the subject at its 1977 session.

The Commission also decided to begin consideration in 1977 of the second part of a topic on the relations between States and international organizations, specifically, the status, privileges and immunities of international organizations, their officials, and experts and other persons engaged in their activities who were not representatives of States. The first part of the topic, dealing with the status, privileges and immunities of representatives of States to international organizations, had been completed with the adoption in 1975 of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character.<sup>3</sup>

A planning group composed of five Commission members was entrusted with the task of making suggestions and recommendations concerning the Commission's organization and progress of work, its programme and working methods. The Commission took some decisions on the suggestions and recommendations of the planning group.

The twelfth session of the International Law Seminar for advanced students and junior government officials was held from 17 May to 4 June 1976, during the Commission's twenty-eighth session. Twenty-five participants, each from a different country, were in attendance. Nine members of the Commission presented lectures. The Governments of Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden made fellowships available to participants from developing countries.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the International Law Commission was considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session, mainly by the Sixth Committee.

On 15 December 1976, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the Assembly adopted a resolution by which it approved the Commission's programme of work, thus, inter alia, recommending that the Commission complete at its 1978 session the second reading of the draft articles on the most-favoured-nation clause. The Commission was also asked to continue, on a high-priority basis, its work on State responsibility, with a view to completing the preparation of a first set of draft articles on responsibility for internationally wrongful acts, if possible within the next term of office of the Commission's members, and to take up at the earliest possible time the separate topic of international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law.

The Assembly further recommended that the Commission: proceed with the preparation, on a priority basis, of draft articles on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties and on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations; and continue its work on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

The Assembly also, by this resolution: urged Member States that had not done so to submit written comments on the subject of the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses; expressed confidence that the International Law Commission would continue to adopt methods of work best suited to the speedy completion of the tasks entrusted to it; and expressed the wish that seminars continue to be held in conjunction with sessions of the Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries be given the opportunity to attend them.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 31/97, adopted by consensus on 15 December 1976, as recommended by the Sixth Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 1 December. The text was sponsored in the Committee by Algeria, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Kenya, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Spain, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia. Drafting changes orally proposed by the United Arab Emirates and Zambia were accepted by the sponsors.

In the course of the discussion in the Sixth Committee, many Members congratulated the Commission for the substantial and constructive work accomplished at its 1976 session.

On the question of the most-favoured-nation clause, several Members, including Bulgaria, Finland, Guyana and the United States, considered the set of 27 draft articles to be generally acceptable and to provide a good basis for further work. Some of them stated that the articles rested on a firm foundation of generally recognized principles and rules of international law, taking into account at the same time the fundamental changes that had taken place in international economic relations during recent years.

Pakistan, Paraguay, Trinidad and Tobago and others, however, wondered whether the Commission had sufficiently reflected in the draft as a whole the special position of the developing countries in current economic relations, a position which was set out in such instruments as those adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other international fora.

Members expressed views on two draft articles which they felt deserved special attention: article 15, concerning customs unions and other economic unions; and article 21, dealing with the treatment accorded to developing countries by developed countries under a generalized system of preferences.

Commenting on article 15, Brazil, India, Kenya, Tunisia and the USSR, among others, approved the Commission's approach of not including a rule establishing a general exception to the application of most-favoured-nation clauses in the case of customs unions and other similar associations of States. On the other hand, a number of States, among them Colombia, the Ivory Coast, the United Republic of Cameroon and the member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), considered that the draft should allow for an exception from the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause in such cases. Some argued that such an exception should apply only to the unique case of EEC; others were of the view that it should apply solely to customs unions and other similar associations among developing countries.

Many Members, including Cyprus, Japan, Mali and Sri Lanka, supported article 21, which expected treatment under a generalized system of preferences from the application of the most-favoured-nation clause, as being in conformity with the efforts of the international community to relieve the imbalance between developed and developing countries. Others, the Netherlands for example, supported the principle espoused by article 21 but felt that its wording required further study. Many Members pointed out the need to include references to other types of special treatment in favour of developing countries, such as preferences granted by developing countries to each other. Among the Members holding this view were Guyana, India, Nigeria, Portugal, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yugoslavia.

On the topic of State responsibility, some Members, including Peru and Romania, considered the adoption of four additional draft articles on the breach of an international obligation as representing significant progress in the definition of the objective element of the internationally wrongful act and approved those articles in principle.

The greatest attention on this question was given to article 19, which established the concepts of international crime and international delict, setting forth the elements that would constitute the two distinct types of internationally wrongful acts. Many speakers, including El Salvador, Indonesia, Iraq, Mexico, Pakistan, the USSR and Yugoslavia, strongly endorsed the underlying concepts embodied in that article.

On the other hand, some representatives, including those of Australia, France, Greece, Israel and the United States, were unable to endorse the approach taken in article 19, citing various reasons. It was stated that no compelling arguments were found for including the concept of criminal responsibility in the draft articles at the current stage of the development of international law. Caution was expressed in drawing an analogy from domestic legal institutions on that question because of the important distinctions between domestic and international legal systems, particularly in the notions and institutions relating to criminal procedure. It was also argued that the article appeared at variance with the Commission's earlier decision not to deal with the primary rules on the subject.

Other Members, among them Japan and the Netherlands, said they found it difficult to assess definitively the soundness of article 19 without knowing the full legal consequences of the distinction between international crimes and delicts—specifically, the régimes of international responsibility applicable to the two categories of internationally wrongful acts.

On the subject of succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties, many Members participating in the debate, including Guinea, Iran, Somalia, Turkey and the Ukrainian SSR, either supported or saw no major difficulty in the draft articles approved by the Commission at its 1976 session; they considered them to be clear and responsive to the current needs of the international community. Certain Members, including France and the Federal Republic of Germany, expressed reservations with regard to those articles and stated that at the current stage in the development of international law it was not possible to lay down absolute and incontestable rules on the topic.

Some Members, among them Brazil, Bulgaria, Japan and Jordan, welcomed the approach the Commission had taken in formulating general rules applicable to all kinds of State property for each type of succession.

Many Members, including Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Indonesia, Nigeria and Tunisia, endorsed the principle of equity introduced by the Commission in some of the draft articles. As a balancing and corrective factor, that principle was believed to provide a practical solution to some of the major problems relating to succession of State property. However, certain Members—Paraguay, Spain and the United Kingdom among them—stated that caution should be exercised in respect of that principle because States had always mistrusted it and it was difficult to apply in practice.

With regard to the question of the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses, there was general agreement that the Commission had accomplished useful preparatory work. Argentina, Canada, Iraq, Pakistan, Venezuela and others stressed the need for intensifying the consideration of this subject in view of its growing importance. As to the general approach to the topic, some Members, among them Brazil, Finland and India, considered that the concept of an international drainage basin was the most appropriate and that the traditional concepts were too restrictive. The drainage basin concept, they felt, would provide a broader framework for the equitable sharing of waters. Others, including Bulgaria, Colombia and Kenya, while recognizing the relevance of the drainage basin concept for the studies concerning the harmonious development and physical integration of the river basin, were of the view that that concept could not be used as a point of departure for the formulation of general legal rules.

Chapter

Succession of States in respect of treaties

By a resolution of 15 December 1975,<sup>1</sup> the General Assembly decided to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries in 1977 to consider a set of draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties, approved by the International Law Commission in 1974.<sup>2</sup> The conference was to embody the results of its work in an international convention and such other instruments as it might deem appropriate. The Assembly had also urged Member States to submit written comments and observations on the articles.

At its 1976 session, the question of the conference of plenipotentiaries was discussed again by the Assembly, mainly by its Sixth (Legal) Committee. The Sixth Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General containing the comments of Brazil, Hungary and Mali. Its discussion was devoted principally to determining the place and dates of the conference, some of its organizational aspects, the invitations to participating States and observers, and the basic proposal to be considered by the conference.

On 24 November 1976, acting on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the question. Noting the invitation extended by Austria, the Assembly decided that the United Nations Conference on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties would be held from 4 April to 6 May 1977 at Vienna.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to extend an invitation to participate in the Conference to all States and, in the capacity of observers, to organizations that had received a standing invitation from the Assembly to participate in the sessions and work of all international conferences convened under its auspices, to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity in its area, and to the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency, interested organs of the United Nations and interested regional intergovernmental organizations.

The Assembly referred to the Conference as the basic proposal for its consideration the draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties approved by the International Law Commission in 1974. It requested the Secretary-General, among other things, to arrange for the presence at the Conference, as an expert, of the Commission's Special Rapporteur for the topic of succession of States in respect of treaties.

The Assembly's decisions were embodied in resolution 31/18, adopted by consensus on 24 November 1976, as recommended by the Sixth Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 18 October. The resolution was sponsored by Austria, Chad, Indonesia, Kenya, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Senegal and Uganda.

Three Members—Israel, Nicaragua and the United States—expressed reservations regarding the provisions requesting the Secretary-General to invite certain organizations and movements to participate in the Conference.

The General Assembly,
Recalling that, by its resolution 3496(XXX) of 15 December 1975, it decided to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries in 1977 to consider the draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties, adopted by the International Law Commission at its twenty-sixth session, and to embody the results of its work in an international convention and such other instruments as it might deem appropriate,

Recalling further that, in section II of its resolution 3315(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, it expressed its appreciation to the International Law Commission for its valuable work on the question of succession of States in respect of treaties and to the Special Rapporteurs on the topic for their contribution to this work,

Believing that the draft articles adopted by the International Law Commission at its twenty-sixth session represent a good basis for the elaboration of an international convention and such other instruments as may be appropriate on the question of succession of States in respect of treaties,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General containing the comments and observations submitted by a number of Member States in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 3315(XXIX) and 3496(XXX),

Mindful of Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations, which provides that the General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Believing that the successful codification and progressive development of the rules of international law governing succession of States in respect of treaties would contribute to the development of friendly relations and co-operation among States, irrespective of their constitutional and social systems, and would assist in promoting and implementing the purposes and principles set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter,

Noting that an invitation has been extended by the Government of Austria to hold the United Nations Conference on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties at Vienna,

1. Decides that the United Nations Conference on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties, referred to in General Assembly resolution 3496(XXX), will be held from 4 April to 6 May 1977 at Vienna;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to invite:

(a) All States to participate in the Conference;

(b) Representatives of organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate in the sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices, in the capacity of observers, in accordance with Assembly resolution 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974;

(c) Representatives of national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity, in the capacity of observers, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974;

(d) The specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, as well as interested organs of the United Nations and interested regional intergovernmental organizations, to be represented at the Conference by observers;

3. Refers to the Conference as the basic proposal for its consideration the draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties adopted by the International Law Commission at its twenty-sixth session;

4. Decides that the languages of the Conference shall be those used in the General Assembly and its Main Committees;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Conference all relevant documentation and recommendations relating to its methods of work and procedures and to arrange for the necessary staff, facilities and services which it will require, including the provision of summary records;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the presence at the Conference, as an expert, of the International Law Commission's latest Special Rapporteur on the topic of succession of States in respect of treaties.

Chapter IV

International trade law

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) held its ninth session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 12 April to 7 May 1976, during which, among other things, it approved a draft convention on the carriage of goods by sea and the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules. The General Assembly adopted three resolutions on the work of the Commission. These developments and others relating to international trade law are described below.

United Nations Conference on the Carriage of Goods by Sea

At its 1976 session, the Commission considered and approved a draft convention on the carriage of goods by sea, on the basis of a text prepared by its Working Group on International Legislation on Shipping. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to circulate the draft convention to Governments, to the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and to interested international organizations for comments and proposals. The Commission recommended that the General Assembly convene an international conference of plenipotentiaries as early as practicable to conclude, on the basis of the draft, a convention on the carriage of goods by sea.

The draft convention, comprising 25 articles, was divided into six parts. Part I (general provisions) gave definitions of terms and described the scope of the convention's application and its interpretation. Part II (liability of the carrier) concerned the period of carrier responsibility and the basis and limits of carrier liability. In part III (liability of the shipper), a proposed general rule stated that the shipper would not be liable for losses or damages unless they were caused by his neglect. Specific rules applicable to dangerous goods were also outlined.

Part IV (transport documents) included articles on the issue and contents of bills of lading, reservations regarding the nature or condition of goods and guarantees by shippers. Part V (claims and actions) set out requirements regarding notices of loss, damage or delay and provisions concerning legal jurisdiction and arbitration. Part VI (supplementary provisions) contained articles on contractual stipulations and on the relationship of the draft convention to other conventions dealing with the carriage of goods by sea.

On 6 October 1976, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board endorsed a resolution drawn up by its Working Group on International Shipping Legislation whereby the Group considered the draft convention, taken as a whole, to be generally acceptable. The Group felt that, in view of the clear economic implications of the draft convention, UNCTAD should participate fully in a conference of plenipotentiaries convened for the purpose of concluding a convention. The Trade and Development Board decided to transmit the Working Group's reports and its resolution to the General Assembly at the Assembly's 1976 session.

The report of UNCITRAL, containing the draft convention on the carriage of goods by sea, received Assembly consideration mainly at meetings of the Sixth (Legal) Committee.

On 15 December 1976, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution by which it expressed its conviction that the adoption of a convention on the carriage of goods by sea which would take into account the legitimate interests of all States, particularly those of the developing countries, which would remove such uncertainties and ambiguities as existed in the rules and practices relating to bills of lading and which would establish a balanced allocation of risks between the cargo owner and the carrier would contribute to the harmonious development of international trade.

Consequently, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to convene the United Nations Conference on the Carriage of Goods by Sea in 1978 in New York, or at any other suitable place for which the Secretary-General might receive an invitation, for the purpose of considering the question of the carriage of goods by sea and embodying the results of its work in an international convention and such other instruments as it might deem appropriate.

The Assembly referred to the Conference the draft articles approved by UNCITRAL, together with draft provisions concerning implementation, reservations and other final clauses to be prepared by the Secretary-General, asking him to circulate the draft convention to Governments and interested international organizations for comments and proposals. It also asked the Secretary-General, among other things, to invite all States to participate in the Conference, and to invite, in the capacity of observers: representatives of organizations that had received a standing invitation from the Assembly to participate in the sessions and work of all international conferences convened under its auspices; representatives of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity in its area; and the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and interested United Nations organs and regional intergovernmental organizations.

These actions were embodied in resolution 31/100, adopted by consensus. The Sixth Committee had approved the text on 9 December 1976, also by consensus. The sponsors of the resolution were Australia, Austria, Finland, Guyana, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Paraguay, the Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Trinidad and Tobago, and Tunisia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules

On 28 April 1976, the Commission approved the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules—a set of rules for optional use in ad hoc arbitration relating to international trade—as well as a model arbitration clause by which the parties to a commercial contract could undertake to apply the Rules in the settlement of disputes relating to the contract. Application of the Rules could also be secured by a separate agreement concluded before or after a dispute arose. The Rules had been prepared by the United Nations Secretariat.

The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules comprised 41 articles divided into four sections. Section I, containing introductory rules, dealt with the scope of the application of the Rules, the delivery of notices and the calculation of periods of time. It also contained specific provisions concerning notice of arbitration and the representation and assistance of parties.

Section II concerned the composition and appointment of arbitral tribunals, which were to consist of one or three arbitrators, and contained provisions regarding challenging and replacement of arbitrators.

Section III dealt with arbitral proceedings: the presentation of evidence and oral arguments and the exchange of written pleadings. Included were rules concerning the place of arbitration, the languages to be used, statements of claim and of defence, pleas as to the jurisdiction of an arbitral tribunal, interim measures of protection, hearings, expert witnesses, default and the waiver of rules. The Rules would allow for the continuation of arbitral proceedings despite the failure of a party to take requisite actions within prescribed periods of time.

Section IV contained provisions concerning the award—its form, effect, interpretation and correction—and the costs of the arbitral proceedings. It further dealt with the question of the law applicable to the substance of the dispute: arbitrators were to apply the law designated by the parties. Any award or other decision was to be made in accordance with the terms of the contract in question.

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Sixth Committee, adopted a resolution on the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules on 15 December 1976. Stating that it was convinced that the establishment of rules for ad hoc arbitration that were acceptable in countries with different legal, social and economic systems would significantly contribute to the development of harmonious international economic relations, the Assembly recommended the use of the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules in the settlement of disputes arising in the context of international commercial relations, particularly by reference to the Rules in commercial contracts. It requested the Secretary-General to arrange for the widest possible distribution of the Rules.

The Assembly's resolution—31/98—was adopted by consensus. On 9 December 1976 the Sixth Committee had approved the text, also by consensus. The sponsors were Australia, Austria, Finland, France, Greece, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Kenya, the Netherlands, Nigeria, the Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Other activities of UNCITRAL

During 1976, UNCITRAL continued work on three other topics under its purview: the international sale of goods; international payments; and training and assistance in the field of international trade law. The General Assembly took decisions on these and other matters at its 1976 session when it adopted resolution 31/99 concerning the Commission's annual report.

The Commission's Working Group on the International Sale of Goods completed in 1976 its task of ascertaining which modifications of the Uniform Law on the International Sale of Goods, annexed to the Hague Convention of 1 July 1964, might render that text capable of wider acceptance by countries having different legal, social and economic systems.

The Commission decided to consider at its 1977 session the draft convention on the international sale of goods prepared by the Working Group. In the meantime, the draft convention was sent to Governments and interested international organizations for their comments.

The Commission deferred the question of whether rules on the formation and validity of contracts should be set forth in the same convention, and instructed the Working Group to confine its work on that question to contracts of the international sale of goods rather than to consider the whole matter in general terms.

The Commission requested the Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments to continue its preparation of a draft uniform law on international bills of exchange and international promissory notes, which would establish rules for their optional use in international payments. It also asked the Secretary-General to carry out further work, in accordance with the directives of the Working Group, in connexion with inquiries regarding the use of cheques for settling international payments. The Secretary-General was asked to work in consultation with the Commission's Study Group on International Payments, composed of experts provided by interested international organizations and banking and trade institutions.

The Commission, as one of its training activities, approved plans for a second UNCITRAL symposium on international trade law, to be held in conjunction with the tenth (1977) session of the Commission at Vienna, Austria. It decided that the theme of the symposium would be transport and financing documents used in international trade and that part of the programme would also be devoted to a discussion of the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules.

On 15 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on the report of UNCITRAL, thereby, among other things, commending the Commission for the progress made in its work. The Assembly noted with satisfaction the completion of the draft convention on the carriage of goods by sea, the adoption of the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules and the preparation of a draft convention on the international sale of goods.

The Assembly recommended that the Commission, inter alia: continue working on the topics included in its programme and on training and assistance in the field of international trade law, taking into account the specific interests of the developing countries; maintain liaison with the Commission on Transnational Corporations and close collaboration with UNCTAD, and with international organizations active in the field of international trade law; and continue to give special consideration to the interests of developing countries and to bear in mind the special problems of land-locked countries.

The Commission was also called upon to continue to take account of the relevant provisions of the resolutions of the sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions of the General Assembly that laid down the foundations of a new international economic order, bearing in mind the need for United Nations organs to participate in the implementation of those resolutions.<sup>1</sup>

The Assembly welcomed the decision of the Commission to hold a second international symposium on international trade law and appealed to Governments to contribute to the costs thereof. It also welcomed the Commission's decision to review, in the near future, its long-term programme of work and requested the Secretary-General to invite Governments to submit views and suggestions on the programme.

The Assembly invited the Commission on Transnational Corporations to refer, when applicable, specific legal issues in its programme of work to UNCITRAL for its consideration.

The Assembly's decisions were set forth in resolution 31/99, adopted by consensus. The sponsors of the text in the Sixth Committee, where it was approved by consensus on 9 December 1976, were Austria, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Indonesia, Kenya, Nigeria, the Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia. The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it established the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and defined the object and terms of reference of the Commission,

Having considered chapter IV of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its ninth session which contains draft articles for a convention on the carriage of goods by sea,

Noting that the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law considered and adopted the draft articles taking note of observations and comments submitted by Governments, by the Working Group on International Shipping Legislation of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and by international organizations,

Taking note with appreciation of the comments of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development that the revision of the law on carriage of goods by sea involves consideration not only of legal but also of economic and shipping trade aspects, and that these aspects should be given due consideration at an international conference of plenipotentiaries,

Convinced that international trade is an important factor in the promotion of friendly relations among States and that the adoption of a convention on the carriage of goods by sea which would take into account the legitimate interests of all States, particularly those of the developing countries, which would remove such uncertainties and ambiguities as exist in the rules and practices relating to bills of lading and which would establish a balanced allocation of risks between the cargo owner and the carrier, would contribute to the harmonious development of international trade,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for the valuable work done in having prepared draft articles for a convention on the carriage of goods by sea;

2. Decides that an international conference of plenipotentiaries shall be convened in 1978 in New York, or at any other suitable place for which the Secretary-General may receive an invitation, to consider the question of the carriage of goods by sea and to embody the results of its work in an international convention and such other instruments as it may deem appropriate;

3. Refers to the conference the draft articles for a convention on the carriage of goods by sea approved by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, together with draft provisions concerning implementation, reservations and other final clauses to be prepared by the Secretary-General;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To circulate the draft Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, together with draft provisions concerning implementation, reservations and other final clauses to be prepared by the Secretary-General, to Governments and interested international organizations for comments and proposals;

(b) To convene the United Nations Conference on the Carriage of Goods by Sea for an appropriate period in 1978 at any of the places referred to in paragraph 2 above;

(c) To arrange for the preparation of summary records of the proceedings of the plenary meetings of the Conference and of meetings of committees of the whole which the Conference may wish to establish;

(d) To invite all States to participate in the United Nations Conference on the Carriage of Goods by Sea;

(e) To invite representatives of organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate in the sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices, in the capacity of observers, in accordance with Assembly resolution 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974;

(f) To invite representatives of the national liberation movements recognized in its region by the Organization of African Unity, in the capacity of observers, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974;

(g) To invite the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, as well as interested organs of the United Nations and interested regional intergovernmental organizations, to be represented at the Conference by observers;

(h) To draw the attention of the States and other participants referred to in subparagraphs (d) to (g) above to the desirability of appointing as their representatives persons especially competent in the field to be considered;

(i) To place before the Conference:

(i) All comments and proposals received from Governments;

(ii) Working and background papers which may be received from the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other interested international organizations, taking into consideration the legal, economic and shipping trade aspects of the draft Convention;

(iii) Draft provisions concerning implementation, reservations and other final clauses and all relevant documentation and recommendations relating to methods of work and procedure;

(j) To ensure that all relevant documentation for the Conference will be distributed to all participants in the Conference at the earliest possible date;

(k) To arrange for adequate staff and facilities required for the Conference, bearing in mind the fact that the legal, economic and shipping trade aspects of the carriage of goods by sea should receive due consideration at the Conference.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the value of arbitration as a method of settling disputes arising in the context of international commercial relations,

Convinced that the establishment of rules for ad hoc arbitration that are acceptable in countries with different legal, social and economic systems would significantly contribute to the development of harmonious international economic relations, Bearing in mind that the Arbitration Rules of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law have been prepared after extensive consultation with arbitral institutions and centres of international commercial arbitration,

Noting that the Arbitration Rules were adopted by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law at its ninth session after due deliberation,

1. Recommends the use of the Arbitration Rules of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law in the settlement of disputes arising in the context of international commercial relations, particularly by reference to the Arbitration Rules in commercial contracts;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the widest possible distribution of the Arbitration Rules.

Resolution 31/99, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/31/390, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 15 December 1976, meeting 99.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its ninth session,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it established the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and defined the object and terms of reference of the Commission, and its resolution 3108(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, by which it increased the membership of the Commission, as well as its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Commission on the work of its annual sessions,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic co-operation among all States on a basis of equality and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Having regard for the need to take into account the different social and legal systems in harmonizing the rules of international trade law,

Noting with appreciation that the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law has completed, or soon will complete, work on many of the priority items included in its programme of work,

Noting further that, under resolutions 2205(XXI) and 3108(XXVIII), a State elected as a member of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law takes office on 1 January of the year following its election, and that its term of office expires on 31 December of the last year of the period for which it was elected,

Bearing in mind that much of the substantive work of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law is carried out in its Working Groups which usually meet during the months of January and February prior to the regular annual session of the Commission, and that inconvenience is caused to the work of the Commission because vacancies occurring in the membership of Working Groups as at 31 December cannot be filled until the next regular annual session of the Commission,

Taking into account the fact that Governments of Member States which are not members of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law have on occasion expressed the wish to attend sessions of the Commission and of its Working Groups as observers and the opinion of the Commission expressed in paragraph 74 of its report on the work of its ninth session that it is in the interest of the Commission's work that such States, not members of the Commission, be given the opportunity to participate in its work as observers,

Bearing in mind that the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its sixteenth session, took note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its ninth session;

2. Commends the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for the progress made in its work and for its efforts to enhance the efficiency of its working methods;

3. Notes with satisfaction the completion of the draft Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea and the adoption by the Commission of the Arbitration Rules of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law;

4. Further notes with satisfaction that a draft convention on the international sale of goods has been prepared by a working group of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and that this draft convention has been transmitted to Governments and interested international organizations for their comments;

5. Welcomes the decision of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law to hold a second international symposium on international trade law in connexion with its tenth session in 1977 and, in view of the fact that the symposium is financed by voluntary contributions, appeals to Governments to contribute to the costs of the symposium;

6. Recommends that the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law should:

(a) Continue its work on the topics included in its programme of work;

(b) Continue its work on training and assistance in the field of international trade law, taking into account the special interests of the developing countries;

(c) Maintain close collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and continue to collaborate with international organizations active in the field of international trade law;

(d) Maintain liaison with the Commission on Transnational Corporations with regard to the consideration of legal problems that would be susceptible of action by it;

(e) Continue to give special consideration to the interests of developing countries and to bear in mind the special problems of land-locked countries;

(f) Keep its programme of work and working methods under review with the aim of further increasing the effectiveness of its work;

7. Calls upon the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law to continue to take account of the relevant provisions of the resolutions of the sixth and seventh special sessions of the General Assembly that laid down the foundations of the new international economic order, bearing in mind the need for United Nations organs to participate in the implementation of those resolutions;

8. Invites the Commission on Transnational Corporations, if it identifies specific legal issues in its programme of work that would be susceptible of action by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, to refer such issues to that Commission for its consideration;

9. Welcomes the decision of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law to review, in the near future, its long-term programme and, in this connexion, requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments to submit their views and suggestions on such a programme;

10. Decides that:

(a) The term of office of those members of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law whose term would expire on 31 December 1976 is extended until the last day prior to the beginning of the regular annual session of the Commission in 1977 and the term of office of those members of the Commission whose term would expire on 31 December 1979 is extended until the last day prior to the beginning of the regular annual session of the Commission in 1980;

(b) Commencing with the elections to membership of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law at the thirty-first session of the General Assembly, all States elected to membership shall take office at the beginning of the first day of the regular annual session of the Commission immediately following their election and their terms of office shall expire on the last day prior to the opening of the seventh regular annual session of the Commission following their election;

(c) Governments of Member States that are not members of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law are entitled, when they so request, to attend the sessions of the Commission and its Working Groups as observers;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law the records of the discussions at the thirty-first session of the General Assembly on the Commission's report on the work of its ninth session.

Other legal questions*Measures to prevent international terrorism*Consideration by the General Assembly

The General Assembly's consideration of measures to prevent international terrorism and to eliminate the underlying causes thereof, and of the 1973 report of the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism,<sup>1</sup> was resumed in 1976 after having been successively deferred for three years due to lack of time. The item was discussed at the thirty-first (1976) session of the Assembly mainly in the Sixth (Legal) Committee.

On 15 December 1976, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the Assembly adopted a resolution on the question, thereby expressing its deep concern over increasing acts of international terrorism, which endangered or took innocent human lives or jeopardized fundamental freedoms, and urging States to continue to seek just and peaceful solutions to the underlying causes which gave rise to such acts of violence.

The Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right to self-determination and independence of all peoples under colonial and racist régimes and other forms of alien domination and upheld the legitimacy of their struggle, in particular the struggle of national liberation movements, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant resolutions of United Nations organs. It condemned the continuation of repressive and terrorist acts by colonial, racist and alien régimes in denying peoples their legitimate right to self-determination and independence and other human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Assembly invited States to become parties to the existing international conventions that related to various aspects of the problem of international terrorism and to take all appropriate measures at the national level with a view to the speedy and final elimination of the problem, bearing in mind the right of peoples to self-determination.

Also by this resolution, the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism was invited to continue its work in accordance with the mandate entrusted to it by the Assembly in 1972.<sup>2</sup> States which had not yet done so were invited to submit observations and concrete proposals to the Secretary-General, who was asked to transmit to the Ad Hoc Committee an analytical study of those observations. The Assembly requested the Ad Hoc Committee to consider the observations of States and to submit, for consideration at the next Assembly session, a report with recommendations for possible co-operation for the speedy elimination of the problem of international terrorism.

The Assembly's resolution—31/102—was adopted by a vote of 100 to 9, with 27 abstentions. It had been approved by the Sixth Committee on 10 December 1976 by a roll-call vote of 86 in favour to 8 against, with 24 abstentions. The following Members sponsored the text: Algeria, Benin, Burundi, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, India, Indonesia, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mali, the Niger, Nigeria, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Togo, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

During the debate, Bolivia, Chile, the United States and Uruguay were among those holding that it was urgent to get under control a phenomenon which seriously threatened relations between States and took a heavy toll of human lives. It was observed that every State had a paramount obligation to protect the lives of its citizens and that, because of the indiscriminate character of terrorism, no State should hope to be immune from its effects.

In the course of the discussion, considerable attention was given to the underlying causes of international terrorism. The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania commented that some States, while eager to establish sanctions against international terrorism, were reluctant to search for underlying causes. Without eradication of the causes, no amount of international legislation could put an end to terrorism. If oppression in the form of colonialism, apartheid and foreign occupation was ended, he said, terrorism would either decrease or disappear.

Other Members expressing similar views included India, the Niger, Poland, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Yugoslavia felt that it was indispensable to make a clear distinction between acts of State or individual terrorism, against which decisive international action should be taken, and the genuine struggle of oppressed peoples for liberation and equal rights, which was actually a negation of terrorism and violence.

Bolivia commented to the effect that in spite of the positive results achieved by the United Nations in the struggle against colonialism, in the establishment of a more just international order and thus in the elimination of the causes of violence, terrorism continued unabated.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United Kingdom said it opposed the resolution because, among other things, it did not include an adequate condemnation of terrorism and it was not sufficiently directed towards the elaboration of measures to combat international terrorism.

Australia and Italy were among those objecting to the operative provision reaffirming the right to self-determination and independence, as well as that condemning the continuation of repressive or terrorist acts by colonial, racist and alien régimes in denying peoples that right. They considered these provisions to be inappropriate.

Communications to the Secretary-General

Several communications from Member States on the question of international terrorism were received by the Secretary-General during 1976.

By a letter of 23 August, Israel drew attention to what it termed a criminal attack carried out on 11 August 1976 against the passengers of an El Al Israel Airlines plane in the Istanbul International Airport. It stated that four passengers of various nationalities were killed and 21 were injured in the incident. Israel's letter cited this as only the latest in a series of indiscriminate terrorist attacks, and held that the guiding force behind the attacks was the Libyan Arab Republic. The Government of Israel felt that the time had been reached for the United Nations to take immediate and effective action.

The Libyan Arab Republic responded to Israel's communication on 31 August 1976. Israel's accusations were not only false, it argued, but were part of an attempt to create a climate of anarchy in the hope of covering up the terrorism exercised against the Arab people of Palestine. The Libyan Arab Republic hoped that the United Nations would be able to take effective measures to put an end to the terrorism exercised by all racist régimes in the world, including the Zionist entity in occupied Palestine.

By a letter dated 18 October 1976, Kuwait drew attention to the escalation of what it called Israeli acts of piracy against Arab civilians on the high seas. Two specific incidents were described. Kuwait asked the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures aimed at putting an end to Israel's piratical acts, which, it said, contravened all norms of international law.

Drafting of an international convention against the taking of hostages

By a letter of 28 September 1976, the Federal Republic of Germany asked the General Assembly to consider at its 1976 session the possibility of drafting and adopting a convention on international action against the taking of hostages. In an explanatory memorandum, the Federal Republic of Germany observed that in recent years the number of cases in which persons were taken hostage, deprived of their personal liberty and threatened with death with a view to impelling others to do certain acts against their will had assumed frightening proportions all over the world. Incidents often ended with the deliberate killing of hostages.

These acts normally affected more than one State and nationals of several States simultaneously. It was in the nature of such acts that they could at any time set off an uncontrollable chain of events, endangering international peace and transnational relations. This phenomenon could no longer be accepted by the Member States of the United Nations without reaction.

The General Assembly agreed to place the item on its agenda and allocated it to the Sixth (Legal) Committee, which considered it between 26 November and 10 December 1976.

On 15 December 1976, on the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted a resolution by which, expressing its grave concern at the increase of hostage-taking, it decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, to be composed of 35 Member States appointed by the President of the General Assembly on the basis of equitable geographical distribution and representing the principal legal systems of the world.

The Ad Hoc Committee was asked to draft at the earliest possible date an international convention against the taking of hostages and was authorized to consider suggestions and proposals from any State. The Committee was also asked to present its report, and to make every effort to submit a draft convention, to the Assembly in good time for consideration at its 1977 session.

The Assembly took these actions in adopting, by consensus, resolution 31/103. The Sixth Committee had approved the text, as revised, on 10 December, also by consensus.

The resolution was sponsored in the Committee by the following 38 Member States: Austria, Australia, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Canada, the Central African Empire, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Grenada, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Luxembourg, Nepal, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, the Philippines, Portugal, Senegal, Singapore, Surinam, Sweden, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela.

Amendments submitted by the Libyan Arab Republic, which were not pressed to a vote, would have inter alia modified the term "hostages" to read "innocent hostages." The Libyan Arab Republic stated that it was motivated by a desire to protect innocent lives.

During the debate, many Member States described the initiative of the Federal Republic of Germany as constructive and timely. Others felt that the question of hostage-taking had been unnecessarily or improperly removed from the overall topic of international terrorism.

A number of Members, including Japan, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Portugal, the United States and Uruguay, considered that the problem of hostage-taking had become a threat to international peace and security. They held that the taking of hostages was universally condemned and should be treated as a crime under international law: if forbidden in time of war, it should be prohibited without qualification in time of peace.

Commenting on the nature of the convention to be drafted, the Federal Republic of Germany said it should be based on the principle that States parties to it should either prosecute offenders or extradite them to other States. Australia and others held that non-prosecution of offenders could not be justified by reference to the political character of violations of human rights. Australia suggested that the Ad Hoc Committee might investigate techniques of internationally controlled prosecution, such as an international criminal court.

Algeria, Bulgaria, Egypt, Kenya, the United Republic of Tanzania and several other Members stressed that the taking of hostages could not be separated from the wider problem of international terrorism and that any measure designed to solve the problem of terrorism merely by treating its consequences would be vitiated from the outset. In Jordan's view, the real solution to the problem of hostage-taking lay in solving the basic problem of international terrorism and its roots. The USSR believed that attempts to single out only the humanitarian aspect of the hostage-taking problem would not facilitate its solution; it should be considered as part of the problem of combating terrorism.

Many Members—China, Tunisia and the Ukrainian SSR among them—insisted that a convention against the taking of hostages should in no way impair the rights of national liberation movements in their struggles, the right of peoples to self-determination or the territorial integrity of States.

Resolution 31/103, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/31/430, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 15 December 1976, meeting 99.

The General Assembly,

Considering that the progressive development of international law and its codification contribute to the implementation of the purposes and principles set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter, freedom, justice and peace in the world are inseparable from the recognition of the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family,

Having regard to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which provide that everyone has the right to life, liberty and security,

Recognizing that the taking of hostages is an act which endangers innocent human lives and violates human dignity, Gravely concerned at the increase of such acts,

Recalling the prohibition of the taking of hostages in articles 3 and 34 of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, the Hague Convention of 1970 for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, the Montreal Convention of 1971 for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, the Convention of 1973 on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents, as well as General Assembly resolution 2645(XXV) of 25 November 1970 condemning aerial hijacking or interference with civil air travel,

Recognizing the urgent need for further effective measures to put an end to the taking of hostages,

Mindful of the need to conclude, under the auspices of the United Nations, an international convention against the taking of hostages,

1. Decides to establish an Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, composed of thirty-five Member States;

2. Requests the President of the General Assembly, after consultations with the chairmen of the regional groups, to appoint the members of the Ad Hoc Committee on the basis of equitable geographical distribution and of representation of the principal legal systems of the world;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to draft at the earliest possible date an international convention against the taking of hostages and authorizes the Committee, in the fulfilment of its mandate, to consider suggestions and proposals from any State, bearing in mind the views expressed during the debate on this item at the thirty-first session of the General Assembly;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to afford the Ad Hoc Committee any assistance and provide it with all facilities it may require for the performance of its work, to provide the Committee with pertinent information on the taking of hostages and to ensure that summary records of the meetings of the Committee will be drawn up and submitted;

5. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit its report and to make every effort to submit a draft convention to the General Assembly in good time for consideration at its thirty-second session and requests the Secretary-General to communicate the report to Member States;

Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, 1961

By a 1975 decision,<sup>3</sup> the General Assembly invited Member States to submit to the Secretary-General comments and observations on ways and means to ensure the implementation of the provisions of the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations<sup>4</sup> as well as on the desirability of elaborating provisions concerning the status of the diplomatic courier.

The Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly, for consideration at its thirty-first (1976) session, containing the comments received during the course of the year from the following States: Austria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Kuwait, Mexico, the Netherlands, Poland, Spain, Sweden, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The question was discussed in the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee at meetings held on 7, 8 and 9 December 1976. On 13 December, the Assembly adopted, as resolution 31/76, a text recommended by the Sixth Committee.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly urged States which had not done so to become parties to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 and reaffirmed the need for strict implementation of the Convention's provisions in the interest of maintaining normal relations between States, strengthening international peace and security and developing international co-operation.

The Assembly also invited Member States to submit or supplement their comments and observations on the Convention and on the provisions concerning the status of the diplomatic courier, with due regard also to the question of the status of the diplomatic bag not accompanied by the diplomatic courier. It requested the International Law Commission at the appropriate time to study, in the light of information received from Member States, the proposals on the elaboration of a protocol concerning the status of the diplomatic courier and the unaccompanied diplomatic bag.

The Secretary-General was asked to submit to the Assembly at its thirty-third (1978) session—at which time the question would again be taken up—an analytical report on ways and means to ensure the implementation of the Convention based on comments and observations received from Member States and taking into account the results of the study by the International Law Commission.

Resolution 31/76 was adopted by a recorded vote of 92 to 0, with 25 abstentions. The Sixth Committee, which approved the text on 9 December by 72 votes to 2, with 19 abstentions, had rejected, by a vote of 39 against to 23 in favour, with 33 abstentions, a motion by the United States that a separate vote be taken on each paragraph.

The following 22 Members sponsored the resolution in the Committee: Algeria, Argentina, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Iran, Liberia, Mali, Panama, Poland, Senegal, Somalia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia.

mittee by the USSR, whose representative pointed out that, since more than 30 States had still not acceded to the Convention, Members should be urged once again to do so with a view to making it truly universal in character. Certain States, he said, continued to violate the terms of the Convention; that was reflected in the difficulties faced by diplomatic couriers. Some States favoured the drafting of a protocol on the status of the diplomatic courier, although others opposed the idea. The USSR representative proposed that the Secretary-General might send a questionnaire to Member States every three or four years regarding their practical experience in applying the Vienna Convention.

Most of the sponsors of the resolution expressed views similar to those of the USSR.

Japan, the Netherlands, the United States and others expressed doubts that a new protocol on the status of the diplomatic courier would increase the likelihood of further ratifications of the Vienna Convention and questioned the advisability of any further study of the question. They noted that only a few States had submitted comments, and their lack of unanimity did not seem to suggest that it would be useful to refer the matter to the International Law Commission.

These and other Members—including Kenya, New Zealand, Sweden and the United Kingdom—felt that the Assembly should be seeking a better response from Governments rather than adding this item to the Commission's already heavy programme of work.

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation by States of the provisions of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961,

Noting that since the adoption by the General Assembly of resolution 3501(XXX) of 15 December 1975 the number of States parties to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 has increased,

Concerned at continuing instances of violations of the rules of diplomatic law relating, in particular, to the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier,

Recognizing the advisability of studying the question of the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier in the light of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961,

Considering it desirable that the General Assembly should periodically consider at its sessions the question of implementation by States of the provisions of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961,

1. Urges States which have not yet done so to become parties to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961;

2. Reaffirms the need for strict implementation by States of the provisions of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 in the interest of maintaining normal relations between them, strengthening international peace and security and developing international co-operation;

3. Invites Member States to submit or to supplement their comments and observations on ways and means to ensure the implementation of the provisions of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 and on the desirability of elaborating provisions concerning the status of the diplomatic courier in accordance with paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 3501(XXX), with due regard also to the question of the status of the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier;

4. Requests the International Law Commission at the appropriate time to study, in the light of the information contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation by States of the provisions of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 and other information on this question to be received from Member States through the Secretary-General, the proposals on the elaboration of a protocol concerning the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, which would constitute development and concretization of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session an analytical report on ways and means to ensure the implementation of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961 on the basis of comments and observations on this question received from Member States and also taking into account the results, if available and ready, of the study by the International Law Commission of the proposals on the elaboration of the above-mentioned protocol;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session the item entitled "Implementation by States of the provisions of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961: report of the Secretary-General."

Relations with the host country

Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country held nine meetings in 1976. It retained the following list of topics provisionally adopted in 1972: security of missions and the safety of their personnel; comparative study of privileges and immunities; obligations of permanent missions to the United Nations and of individuals protected by diplomatic immunity; exemption from taxes levied by states other than New York; the possibility of establishing a commissary at United Nations Headquarters to assist diplomatic and Secretariat personnel; housing; transportation; insurance; the public relations of the United Nations community in the host city and the encouragement of the mass media to publicize the functions and status of permanent missions to the United Nations; education and health; identity documents; acceleration of customs procedures; entry visas issued by the host country; study of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations; and consideration of, and advice to the host country on, issues arising from the implementation of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations (signed on 26 June 1947).

The bulk of the Committee's work in 1976 related to complaints by missions of unlawful acts against them, their personnel and their property. The acts in question were directed against the missions of seven Member States: Cuba, Czechoslovakia, India, Iraq, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia and the USSR. The incidents involved the firing of shots, bombings and attempted bombings, thefts and various acts of harassment and violence. The Committee took specific decisions strongly condemning the shooting incidents.

Some Committee members, including Bulgaria, Iraq and the USSR, drew attention to what they called the dangerous escalation of the hostile campaign waged against the missions of certain States, in which they saw evidence that the repeated assertions and promises of the host country regarding the prevention of criminal acts remained unfulfilled, adding that the possibility of bloodshed could not be ruled out if the trend were not reversed.

In the view of these members, the unlawful acts in question had taken on a systematic character and were part of an organized campaign. The inaction of the authorities in the face of this situation was not only a violation of the international obligations of the host country but amounted to virtual connivance with the criminal elements responsible for the campaign. The argument that New York was not the only city in which terrorist acts were perpetrated against diplomats was no justification for such acts. Nor could respect for fundamental freedoms be used as an excuse for the inaction of the authorities of the host country.

These members complained of the virtual impunity that, in their view, was enjoyed by the perpetrators of unlawful acts against missions, including organizations which openly claimed credit for attacks. They felt that the attitudes of local officials and of the press encouraged those prone to such actions.

The host country—the United States—categorically rejected charges of connivance with the perpetrators of illegal acts against missions and of inaction on the part of the local authorities. As shown by terrorist acts elsewhere in the world, no Government could give an ironclad guarantee of safety to diplomats.

Pointing out that many persons charged with unlawful activities against missions had been arrested by the authorities, the United States admitted that there had been fewer prosecutions than arrests and fewer convictions than prosecutions, but observed that: wrongdoers were often impossible to find; witnesses were sometimes unavailable, while in some cases diplomats who could have testified refused to do so; in some instances prosecutors deemed the evidence insufficient to warrant action. In the view of the United States, respect for the constitutional right of freedom of speech imposed limits on the possibility of curbing demonstrations against missions.

Some other members, including the United Kingdom, while sympathizing with missions which had been victims of unlawful acts, said that it was wrong to accuse the United States authorities of connivance with the culprits. In a democracy, they said, the preservation of public order presented special problems.

In its recommendations, the Committee noted with satisfaction the host country's assurances regarding the safeguarding of the security of missions and recognized the usefulness of the various measures taken towards that end, but expressed deep concern over the serious acts of terrorism and other criminal acts nevertheless committed against several missions. It condemned such acts as being totally incompatible with the norms of international law. The host country was urged to take all necessary measures without delay to prevent unlawful acts against missions, to apprehend, bring to justice and punish all those responsible for such acts, and to prohibit illegal activities of organizations that encouraged or engaged in terrorist or other acts of violence against missions or their personnel.

With a view to facilitating the course of justice, the Committee called on missions to co-operate as fully as possible with the United States authorities in cases affecting their security and emphasized that, without prejudice to their privileges and immunities, it was the duty of all members of the diplomatic community to respect local laws and regulations.

The Committee also made recommendations on the problem of parking diplomatic vehicles. Renewing its appeal to New York City authorities to consider terminating the practice of issuing summonses to diplomats with regard to the parking of their vehicles, it noted with pleasure that, in response to its previous recommendations, no diplomatic vehicles were being towed away.

Noting that there had been difficulties concerning the financial responsibilities of certain missions and individual diplomats, the Committee suggested that the Secretariat and all others concerned work together to solve those problems.

The Committee also expressed its appreciation to the New York City Commission for the United Nations and for the Consular Corps and associated bodies for providing hospitality and promoting mutual understanding between the diplomatic community and the local population.

Consideration by General Assembly

The report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country was considered at the 1976 session of the General Assembly by the Sixth (Legal) Committee. On 15 December 1976, the Assembly adopted a resolution recommended by the Sixth Committee, thereby accepting the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country and deciding that it should continue its work.

The Assembly adopted this resolution (31/101) by consensus. The text, sponsored by Cyprus, was approved by the Sixth Committee by consensus on 10 December. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Three other draft resolutions, none of which was pressed to a vote, were submitted to the Sixth Committee before it considered the Cyprus draft.

The first draft text, sponsored by Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia and the Ukrainian SSR, would have had the Assembly, among other things: strongly condemn terrorist and other acts of violence against missions and their personnel; urge the host country to take effective measures to guarantee the security of missions and prohibit the unlawful activities of organizations and groups which prepared, instigated, encouraged or participated in such acts; and note with regret that persons guilty of such acts still remained unpunished.

By the second draft, sponsored by Argentina, Belgium, Botswana, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Grenada, Honduras, Ireland, Italy, Liberia, the Netherlands, the Niger, the United Kingdom, Uruguay and Zaire, the Assembly would, among other things, have: recognized the usefulness of the measures taken by the host country to provide for the security of missions; expressed its concern over criminal acts committed against several missions, strongly condemning any such acts and urging the host country to take all necessary measures to prevent them; welcomed the apprehension and prosecution by the authorities of the host country of individuals charged with committing criminal acts against missions; and called upon missions to co-operate as fully as possible with the local authorities in cases affecting their security, emphasizing the duty of all members of the diplomatic community to respect local laws and regulations.

The third draft text, sponsored by Australia, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic and Spain, would have had the Assembly make the recommendations set forth in the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country.

Opening the debate in the Sixth Committee, the United States said that, although the situation with regard to the security of missions was generally satisfactory, some problems did exist. Unlawful acts against missions should be condemned and their perpetrators prosecuted and punished. However, it was not always possible to do so because those in a position to present evidence were sometimes unwilling to testify. The United States representative stated that in 1976 federal authorities had apprehended several persons charged with acts of violence against two of the missions and that those persons had pleaded guilty.

The USSR said that the situation in respect of the security of missions had grown worse in the past year and alleged that incidents occurring in 1976 were part of a systematic campaign of harassment and violence against missions. The measures taken by the United States authorities to protect missions and prosecute the perpetrators of unlawful acts were inadequate. The USSR representative observed that, under international law, members of missions accredited to the United Nations had no obligation to give evidence as witnesses.

Other Members, including the Byelorussian SSR, Pakistan and the Syrian Arab Republic, also emphasized the need for effective measures to ensure the security of missions. Bulgaria believed that the host country could not invoke its domestic law as an excuse for not fulfilling its obligation under international law in this regard. Yugoslavia called on the host country to ban the activities of organizations engaged in carrying out terrorist acts.

In other statements: the United Kingdom considered that the gravity of the incidents against missions should be balanced against the fact that the host country had taken useful measures to prevent their repetition; Israel protested against insinuations that it condoned acts of terrorism; and India expressed its appreciation of the measures taken by the host country, adding however that such efforts should be intensified.

Legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

During 1976, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee continued work on three priority items: the preparation of a draft treaty relating to the moon; the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting; and the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space. Work was also continued on an item concerning the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities.

On 8 November 1976, the General Assembly unanimously adopted resolution 31/8, by which it noted with satisfaction the progress achieved by the Legal Sub-Committee and recommended that it should continue at its next session, as matters of high priority: to consider the draft treaty relating to the moon; to consider completing the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements; and to give detailed consideration to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the particular aim of formulating draft principles on the basis of common elements identified during its discussions.

The Assembly also recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee should pursue its work on questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities in the remaining time available.

By the same resolution, the Assembly welcomed the entry into force on 15 September 1976 of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space and invited States that were not parties to that instrument—or to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies; the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space; or the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects—to give early consideration to ratifying or acceding to those international agreements.

Teaching and knowledge of international law

Activities under the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law were continued during 1976 in accordance with a General Assembly decision of 15 December 1975.<sup>5</sup>

Under the fellowship scheme jointly administered by the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), 20 fellowships were awarded to young government officials and university teachers from the following countries: Australia, Barbados, Benin, Bolivia, Bulgaria, the Central African Empire, Colombia, the Congo, Democratic Yemen, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, India, Kenya, Malaysia, Nepal, the Philippines, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Tunisia and Turkey.

The fellows attended courses at the Hague Academy of International Law and seminars and talks organized by UNITAR at The Hague (Netherlands). About half of the fellows also received practical training at the legal departments of the United Nations and its associated agencies.

Two regional training and refresher courses were organized by UNITAR in 1976: one (in January) in Doha, Qatar, for member countries of the Economic Commission for Western Asia; the other (in December) in Dacca, Bangladesh, for the developing member countries or associate members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. Some 50 government officials and university teachers participated in these courses, and 18 were awarded travel grants under the Programme.

The International Law Commission continued to sponsor the International Law Seminar at Geneva, Switzerland, during its annual sessions. Attending the Seminar in 1976 were 25 advanced students and junior government officials, each from a different country. Because of the voluntary contributions of six Governments, 14 of the participants received scholarships.

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law continued to give attention to the question of training and assistance in the field of international trade law. Practical training was offered under the United Nations/UNITAR fellowship scheme as well as under other programmes. Preparations were begun for a second international symposium on international trade law, to be held in conjunction with the Commission's 1977 session. The Commission decided that the theme of the symposium would be transport and financing documents used in international trade.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization continued to participate in the Programme through various activities, including assistance in the improvement of teaching and research facilities in international law at selected universities and institutions in Asia and Africa, the provision of fellowships, the preparation of teaching materials for use in universities, and financial assistance to non-governmental organizations active in the field of international law.

The Advisory Committee on the Programme met in November 1976 to consider an interim report prepared by the United Nations Secretariat on the conduct of the Programme during 1976 and the prospects for 1977.

United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations

The General Assembly included in the agenda of its 1976 session an item concerning two resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations, held at Vienna, Austria, in February and March 1975.<sup>6</sup> The resolutions related to the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States and to the application of the Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character, adopted by the Conference, in future activities of international organizations.

The item was allocated to the Sixth (Legal) Committee, which, on 8 December 1976, decided to recommend to the General Assembly that, due to lack of time, consideration of the item be deferred until the Assembly's 1977 session. On 13 December, the Assembly endorsed that recommendation without a vote.

Administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

Administrative arrangements

The composition of the United Nations Secretariat

After reviewing the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat in 1976, the General Assembly decided to change the method of calculating the desirable ranges of Secretariat posts subject to geographical distribution for each Member State (the ranges guide the Secretary-General in determining how to ensure that the staff is recruited on as wide a geographical basis as possible in accordance with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations<sup>1</sup>) and confirmed the major recruitment objectives to be achieved in the composition of the Secretariat. It also requested the Secretary-General to ensure equal opportunity for the promotion of women in the Secretariat and to establish a panel to investigate allegations of discriminatory treatment.

Report of the Secretary-General

The report of the Secretary-General reviewed the situation of Member States related to their desirable ranges of posts subject to geographical distribution and noted that 22 Members, 12 of which had joined the Organization since 1970, half as recently as 1975, were unrepresented in the Secretariat on 30 June 1976. In addition, there were nine under-represented Member States in the Secretariat. The report also noted that candidates from some of the unrepresented States could not always be attracted to appropriate positions in the Secretariat because opportunities were much greater in their home countries and the national cadres of trained personnel in those countries might still have to increase before they would be released for work in the Secretariat.

The report's statistical data on the composition of the staff at the senior level showed that the groups encompassing developing countries in Africa and Asia and in Latin America were above the mid-point of their desirable range at the senior level—Principal Officer (D-1) and above—while the group of countries with developed market economies was close to the mid-point and the group of socialist countries of Eastern Europe below the mid-point.

An analysis of the staff by age showed the average age to be 45 years. The report emphasized the need to recruit young candidates, particularly from Asia and the Pacific, North America, and the Caribbean and Latin America, which had the lowest percentages of staff under 40 years of age.

The report reviewed the system of desirable ranges of posts allocated for each Member State, which was applied to gauge equity in the distribution of the staff by nationality. The method followed in calculating those ranges was based on three factors: membership in the Organization, population and contribution to the budget. The lower and the higher figures in the range were intended to show, respectively, the short-term and the long-term objectives of geographical distribution of the staff.

The Secretary-General pointed out, as he had in previous reports, that the method used in computing the desirable ranges, while serving the original purpose for which it was intended, was difficult to understand, unduly complicated and resulted in certain anomalies. He proposed a new method to simplify computation, to remove the anomalies in the sizes of the ranges and in the long- and short-term objectives for different Member States, and to provide for a constant flexibility both for individual Member States and for regions.

In the light of the discussions in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee in 1974 and 1975,<sup>2</sup> the Secretary-General considered that a desirable range of 2 to 7 posts for Member States that were assessed the minimum contribution, with 4.5 as the figure representing the mid-point of their desirable range and a flexibility of 15 per cent up or down (with a minimum flexibility of 2.5 posts up or down), might be generally acceptable. Such a change would appear to correspond to the desire of Member States to have some increase in the minimum range of posts, but would not represent any drastic alteration of the desirable range for Member States.

The report showed that women occupied 20.4 per cent of all posts subject to geographical distribution and with special language requirements, and it recorded efforts made to identify women candidates for recruitment and measures taken to improve the status and conditions of work of women in the Secretariat. It noted the revision of the Staff Rules and Staff Regulations to eliminate all differential treatment based on sex, and noted the Secretary-General's intention to issue a policy statement on the importance of equality between men and women and his proposal to appoint an ombudsman or panel to deal with complaints of staff who felt they had been discriminated against by virtue of their sex or any other reason not related to their service. The report also detailed measures taken in the field of career development and training for women.

Consideration by the General Assembly

During discussion of the item on the composition of the Secretariat, which took place in the Fifth Committee, several representatives expressed the view that, although the privileged position of some countries in the Secretariat had been reduced, there was still much to be done to achieve an equitable geographical composition of the staff.

Some Members, including Bulgaria, the Federal Republic of Germany and the USSR, stressed that, in spite of the still unsatisfactory situation, 105 of the 292 staff members who had been recruited to posts subject to geographical distribution during the previous year were from over-represented countries. The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic added that 61.4 per cent of all posts subject to geographical distribution were held by staff members with permanent appointments, many of whom were from over-represented Member States. They also noted the extension of the appointments of a number of staff who had reached retirement age. In their view, such practices prevented the employment of many well-qualified candidates from unrepresented and under-represented Member States from all regions.

The Libyan Arab Republic, Mongolia and the USSR also believed that no extensions of appointments should be granted to staff members who reached retirement age.

While some representatives favoured a simple reduction in recruitment from over-represented countries, those of the German Democratic Republic and Mongolia believed that it should be stopped altogether.

A number of representatives, among whom were those of Czechoslovakia, India, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, felt that the geographical distribution of the Secretariat would be improved by favouring the use of fixed-term rather than permanent appointments; an increase in fixed-term appointments would bring about a continuous inflow of new talent and a better age and sex composition in the Secretariat. Jamaica, Portugal and Tunisia were among those that held the view that a greater use of fixed-term appointments would make it easier for developing countries to release their nationals for service with the Organization, on the understanding that their international experience would benefit their countries upon their return. Some representatives, including those of the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, supported the discontinuation of permanent appointments; the representative of Czechoslovakia felt that permanent appointments should constitute only one third of all contracts.

The representatives of Barbados and Trinidad and Tobago stressed that with the current emphasis on economic and social development it was essential to have the cultural perceptions of developing countries at the policy-making level, bearing in mind the differences in approaches to developmental problems between developed and developing countries shown by the sixth (1974) and seventh (1975) special sessions of the General Assembly.

In this connexion, many States, including Algeria, Barbados, Iran, Kenya, Malaysia, Nepal, Romania, Somalia and Trinidad and Tobago, noted that little progress had been made in the implementation of the Assembly's resolution of 8 December 1975,<sup>3</sup> by which the Secretary-General was requested to take steps to increase the number of staff members from developing countries in senior posts in the Secretariat. These Members favoured the use of recruitment and promotion to achieve the objectives of that resolution.

Others, including Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, had reservations about this proposal on the grounds that it would run counter to the provisions of Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter; the promotion of staff should be based only on merit and not on other considerations. The representative of the United States, while agreeing with the need for appropriate representation of developing countries at all levels, was opposed to the establishment of special rules for any level of posts. Several States, including India, Japan, Kuwait, Nepal, Portugal and Sweden, emphasized the 1974 decision of the Fifth Committee that no post in the Secretariat should be considered as the exclusive preserve of any individual Member State or any region.<sup>4</sup>

The spokesmen for several States, including those for Algeria, Jordan, Malaysia, Nepal, the United Republic of Cameroon and the USSR, considered that the consent of the Member State should be sought before appointing one of its nationals to a post in the Secretariat. Others, including those of Australia, Brazil, Colombia, New Zealand, Sweden and the United Kingdom, believed instead in the need for a truly independent international civil service. They stressed that the system of desirable ranges should not become a more significant criterion for recruitment than professional suitability and considered that seemingly conflicting considerations of geographical distribution and personal competence could and had to be reconciled. They upheld the necessity of a clear career structure in the international civil service to be established with minimum interference by national interests and maximum flexibility of choice for the Secretary-General.

The representative of the United Kingdom expressed the wish to see a reversal of the trend towards filling more and more high-ranking posts in the Secretariat by outside appointments. The representative of the United States emphasized that the fact that a political organization such as the United Nations was subjected to intense pressures from Member States did not excuse the Secretary-General from fully complying with his paramount obligation under Charter Article 101 (3).

The representative of the Secretary-General stated that the Secretary-General attached the highest importance to that Article, which he regarded as the primary basis for the establishment and strengthening of a truly independent international civil service. The Secretary-General had never considered that the principle of equitable geographical distribution conflicted with the requirements of efficiency, competence and integrity. As a consequence of the very high standards set for the recruitment of staff, over 98 per cent of all staff in the Professional category recruited during the past year had at least a first-level university education (a Bachelor's degree or equivalent), more than 51 per cent had a second-level degree (a Master's degree or equivalent) and 34 per cent had a third-level degree (a Ph.D. or equivalent). In addition to professional experience, 73 per cent of the new recruits had at least a good working knowledge of two or more of the official languages of the Organization.

India, Portugal, Tunisia and Turkey were among those that felt that the composition of the Secretariat as regards age should be improved. Japan, the United States and other Member States noted that the average age of appointees to junior posts was excessively high and that the Organization would benefit from the employment of young people, full of ideas and enthusiasm.

A number of representatives, including those of Australia, Colombia, Japan, Poland, the United States and Venezuela, believed that there had been some improvement in the recruitment of women during the previous year, although Afghanistan, Ghana and the United States, among others, considered that the over-all increase of 1 per cent in the number of women in the Professional category of the Secretariat was not sufficient.

Other States, for instance Austria, India and Sweden, held the view that the situation was even less satisfactory with regard to the representation of women in senior and decision-making posts. Iran observed that, according to the General Assembly's resolution of 8 December 1975,<sup>5</sup> the Secretary-General should have made every effort to recruit 65 women to posts subject to geographical distribution during 1976. In the first six months of that year, however, only 18 women had been recruited to those posts.

Australia and others felt that much more determination was needed to achieve a better balance between the sexes in the Secretariat. New Zealand and the United Kingdom suggested that the intention of the Secretary-General to attract more women to the service of the Organization should be further publicized by the United Nations information centres by means of a co-ordinated campaign carried out by the Office of Personnel Services and the Office of Public Information. It was also stressed that Member States should support the efforts of the Secretary-General by submitting more women candidates for recruitment.

Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Japan, among others, believed that measures to increase the number of women in the Secretariat should be taken within the framework of the principle of equitable geographical distribution. The Byelorussian SSR and Kenya indicated that major efforts in this area should be directed towards the recruitment of women from unrepresented and under-represented countries. Algeria, Turkey and others observed that no mathematical ratio between men and women in the Secretariat should be established.

Australia and others stressed the need for equal opportunities in career and promotion for women in the Secretariat. Some Members, including the United States, expressed their interest in the recommended measures to eliminate all possible discrimination by reason of sex within the Secretariat. Among the States that supported the appointment of an ombudsman or panel to deal with complaints and grievances of this nature were Australia, Austria, Egypt, Jordan and Trinidad and Tobago.

Among the various measures suggested to improve the status of women in the Secretariat were the establishment of day-care centres for children of staff members, supported by Austria and Sweden, and the increased access of women to staff training programmes, welcomed by Australia, Egypt, Peru and Turkey.

The new method for calculating the desirable ranges of posts for Member States suggested by the Secretary-General in his report was generally welcomed. The representatives of Czechoslovakia and the Ukrainian SSR, however, felt that the establishment of a single figure, rather than a range, for each Member State would serve even better the aim of achieving an equitable geographical distribution of the staff. The representatives of Japan and Romania, among others, expressed the view that more Secretariat posts should be subject to geographical distribution. Dividing Member States into five rather than seven geographical regions was favoured by the German Democratic Republic and Mexico.

A number of representatives endorsed the increase of the desirable range of posts allocated for Member States with the minimum assessment towards the budget of the Organization. Some, including those of Sweden and the United States, had difficulties with the proposal, because it would raise the relative weight of the membership factor at the expense of the contribution factor. Australia and the United Kingdom were among those that would not oppose the proposal provided that no further increase in the membership factor was foreseen.

It was generally agreed that the population factor should, for the time being, remain unchanged, as recommended in the Secretary-General's report. Nevertheless, some Members, including Egypt and Turkey, were in favour of increasing its importance, while others, among which were Ghana, Romania and the United States, were in favour of decreasing it.

Several States, including Kenya and Pakistan, believed that too much weight was being given to the contribution factor. Barbados, Trinidad and Tobago and others suggested that a ceiling of 50 per cent of all posts should be established for that factor. It was also suggested that every Member State should eventually be represented by a minimum of 12 Professional staff members in posts subject to geographical distribution.

The United States noted that the increase of the membership factor from 1 to 6 to 2 to 7, together with the high level of the population factor and the continuous addition of new Members to the Organization, would contribute to the progressive watering-down of the percentage entitlement of the larger contributors.

On 18 November 1976, following the debate, a draft resolution—twice revised to incorporate suggestions by Members and oral amendments by Greece and the Upper Volta and ultimately sponsored by the Bahamas, India, Iran, Nicaragua and Trinidad and Tobago—was approved by the Fifth Committee by 95 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions. The General Assembly adopted it on 29 November by 102 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, as its resolution 31/26.

By the resolution, the Assembly noted the efforts of the Secretary-General to achieve an equitable geographical distribution of the staff in the Professional category and above and noted with concern that progress in implementing its 1975 resolutions<sup>6</sup> on the composition of, and employment of women in, the Secretariat had been limited and that personnel policy reforms were proceeding too slowly. Also, among other things, the Assembly reaffirmed that the considerations of efficiency, competence and integrity in the employment of staff, as laid down in the Charter, did not conflict with the principle of an equitable geographical distribution in the composition of the Secretariat. In addition, no post, department, division or unit should be considered as the exclusive preserve of any State or region. It expressed conviction that to achieve the objectives and goals of the United Nations, especially with regard to the new international economic order, the developing countries should be adequately represented at all levels, and in particular at the senior levels.

The Assembly adopted both the new method of establishing the desirable ranges of posts as recommended by the Secretary-General in his report and the new desirable range of 2 to 7 for Member States with the minimum assessment in the apportionment of United Nations expenses. It asked the Secretary-General to increase, by recruitment or promotion or both, the number of staff from all developing countries in senior and policy-making posts and to give priority to recruitment of candidates from among nationals of unrepresented and under-represented Member States.

increase his efforts to attract younger people to the service of the United Nations and urged Member States to intensify their efforts to put forward qualified women candidates for Professional positions, particularly at the policy-making level, in the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

The Secretary-General was also asked to ensure equal opportunity for the promotion of women without discrimination based on sex, to appoint as soon as possible a panel to investigate allegations of discriminatory treatment and recommend action, and to provide the Assembly in 1978 with precise data showing the results of his efforts to realize the objectives of this resolution.

Barbados withdrew an amendment it had submitted by which the Assembly would adopt a new desirable range of 2 to 8, with 5 as the number representing the mid-point and a flexibility of 15 per cent, for Member States with the minimum budgetary assessment.

The Philippines also withdrew its oral amendment to have the new panel investigate allegations of discriminatory treatment "against women" and to recommend "remedial," rather than "appropriate," action.

At the request of the United States, before approving the resolution in the Fifth Committee, a separate vote was taken on the operative paragraph by which the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to take effective measures to increase staff from all developing countries in senior and policy-making posts to ensure their appropriate representation at those levels. The paragraph was adopted by 80 votes to 7, with 16 abstentions. The paragraph was also adopted by a separate vote in plenary by 85 votes to 5, with 16 abstentions.

The United Nations salary system

Review of the United Nations salary system

On 18 December 1974, the General Assembly established the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), requesting it to review as a matter of priority the United Nations salary system.<sup>7</sup> The Commission carried out the review at its third and fourth sessions in March and June/July 1976, and submitted its report to the Assembly, where it was discussed in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

In reviewing the report of the Commission, the Fifth Committee also considered comments of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), a report of the Secretary-General and comments of the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the financial implications of the Commission's recommendations, and a note by the Secretary-General containing the proposed amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations consequential to the adoption by the Assembly of the recommendations of the Commission.

The review carried out by ICSC covered mainly the salary system for staff in the Professional and higher categories. The Commission concluded that the existing level of United Nations remuneration in relation to that of the United States Federal Civil Service (the comparator civil service) was satisfactory. It proposed that the Assembly instruct the Commission to keep under continual review the United Nations/United States remuneration relationship, having due regard to all the relevant factors. The main recommendations of ICSC are summarized as follows:

- (1) Consolidation of five classes (the bases for cost-of-living adjustments at different duty stations) of post adjustment into base salaries, and change of the base date of the post adjustment system<sup>8</sup> from New York at 100 as at December 1969 (i.e. the cost of living in New York in December 1969 being taken as 100) to New York at 100 as at November 1973.

- (2) Revised scales of staff assessment rates, post adjustment rates and gross and net salaries for the Professional and higher categories.

- (3) Temporary transitional payments in order to avoid any reduction in net or pensionable remuneration for staff members whose remuneration under the revised scales would be less than under the existing ones.

- (4) Change in the definition of "base salary or wage" for purposes of terminal payments (termination indemnities, repatriation grants, payments in lieu of accrued annual leave, death grants) to "pensionable remuneration less staff assessment."

- (5) Abolition of the separate dependent spouse allowance (the amount of the allowance being incorporated in the revised base salary).

- (6) Increase in the allowance for a secondary dependant to $300 per year.

- (7) Revised scales of amounts of the repatriation grant.

- (8) Change in the percentage of approved costs reimbursable under the provisions of the education grant, as follows:

|--------------------------------------|-------------|
| Expenses up to $2,000               | 75 per cent |
| Expenses between $2,001 and $3,000 | 50 per cent |
| Expenses between $3,001 and $4,000 | 25 per cent | and an increase in the flat amount for boarding expenses to $750.

- (9) Revised conditions and rates for the termination indemnity.

- (10) Continuation of existing rates of staff assessment for the General Service category, pending further study by ICSC.

<sup>8</sup> The post adjustment system was designed to maintain equality of purchasing power of United Nations salaries in the Professional and higher categories in duty stations throughout the world; consequently, it reflected changes in cost of living and in the exchange value of the United States dollar in relation to local currencies.

In its report to the General Assembly, the Commission also submitted a number of conclusions relating to different aspects of the salary system. The principal conclusions were the following:

(1) No change should be made in the existing structure of categories or grades. The Commission would, however, study, among other related matters, the policy regarding promotions from the General Service to the Professional category and a possible extension within the common system of the use of a P-6 grade.

(2) No acceptable alternative could be found to the practice of basing the remuneration of the Professional and higher categories on the levels of pay in the highest paying national civil service, which otherwise lent itself to a significant comparison (the Noblemaire principle).

(3) There was no evidence to justify changing the United States Civil Service as the comparator civil service.

(4) It was necessary to use the following United Nations/United States grade equivalencies for the current review:

| United Nations | United States |
|----------------|---------------|
| P-3            | GS-12/GS-13   |
| P-4            | GS-14         |
| P-5            | GS-15         |

A comprehensive job evaluation study covering both systems should be carried out as soon as possible with the participation of outside experts. The matching points so obtained should be verified periodically.

(5) Comparison should be made between the remuneration of the comparator civil service at its headquarters (Washington, D.C.) and the remuneration of the United Nations at its headquarters (New York), the difference in the cost of living between the two cities being taken into account. The comparison should be expressed as an average ratio (Washington = 100) over the 12-month period 1 October to 30 September.

(6) In fixing the level of United Nations remuneration in relation to that of the United States Civil Service, due regard should be paid to the predominantly expatriate character of the United Nations service. [A majority of ICSC members were of the view that it would be inappropriate to define a precise optimum margin. Others believed that the advisability of fixing upper and lower limits to the margin should be studied further in 1977.]

(7) Differentiation between the over-all net remuneration of staff with and without dependants should be effected through differentiated rates of net salary (applying a higher rate of staff assessment to those without dependants) rather than, as currently, through the post adjustment system.

(8) The method of adjusting pensionable remuneration by the movement of the weighted average of post adjustments (WAPA) should remain in force pending further study.

(9) The Commission would review at the earliest opportunity the question of the language incentives provided in the United Nations Secretariat.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination commented that it had sought the following broad objectives during the review and that the proposals of ICSC would go some way towards achieving these objectives: (a) to reaffirm the doctrine of an international salary system and to re-define the method of its application; (b) to build into the salary system a rational scheme of social benefits for staff with family responsibilities; and (c) to limit, as far as possible, the effects of inflation and currency instability on emoluments.

As regards the margin between United Nations and United States Civil Service pay, ACC shared ICSC's majority opinion that a precise definition would be inappropriate. It endorsed the new rates of staff assessment, post adjustment and gross base pay, provided that five classes of post adjustment would be incorporated into base salaries with effect from 1 January 1977 (the WAPA index having reached 128.8 on 1 September 1976—that is, a movement of 28.8 per cent from 1 January 1974 to 1 September 1976) and on the understanding that suitable transitional measures designed to avoid reduction in net or pensionable remuneration would be worked out. It also endorsed the Commission's conclusion that, in the future, consolidation of post adjustment should be effected only in conjunction with a major salary review.

The Administrative Committee supported the proposals relating to the education grant but hoped that ICSC would again review at an early date the question of payment of the grant for university education for a full four years. It continued to support an increase in the maximum amount of the termination indemnity (payable to staff whose appointments were prematurely terminated by the organization for reasons of its own, such as abolition of post or reduction of staff) to 18 months pay after 18 years of service, instead of the formula proposed by ICSC, which established the limit at 12 months of pay after 15 years of service.

The Committee supported the other proposed changes relating to payment of the termination indemnity (owing to incapacity, unsatisfactory service or misconduct, or in the interests of good administration); it also welcomed the proposed end-of-service grant (payable to a staff member whose fixed-term appointment was not renewed after six years of continuous service).

The budgetary implications of the proposals of the Commission were stated by ACC to be approximately $10,575,200 net for 1977 for all the organizations in the United Nations common system as a whole.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions confined its consideration to the financial implications of the proposals of ICSC—summarized in a report by the Secretary-General—and did not review the substance of the Commission's recommendations. Subject to observations it made, inter alia with respect to relative costs of the revised staff assessment and post adjustment schemes and of the change in the basis for calculating terminal payments, ACABQ said it had no reason to disagree with the Secretary-General's estimate of financial implications.

The estimated amount related to the United Nations regular budget was $1,903,000 net.

The Chairman of the International Civil Service Commission, speaking before the Fifth Committee at the opening of the debate on the Commission's report, said that another general review of the salary system should not be necessary for five or six years, though particular aspects of the system would continue to be studied. The Commission considered that the changes it proposed should enable the organizations to recruit and retain Professional staff of the required calibre. Member States should not seek economies as much in the area of salaries as in the better utilization of staff.

The representative of Japan, while among those accepting that there was no ready alternative to the Noblemaire principle, felt that a more precise comparison between United Nations and United States remuneration was required. Ghana and Venezuela said they were of the view that the possibility of basing United Nations remuneration on that of more than one national civil service should be further studied.

Australia, Ghana and the United States were among those Members expressing reservations with regard to the proposed United Nations/United States grade equivalencies, while the USSR rejected the equivalencies on the grounds that they were based on too narrow a study.

The level of United Nations remuneration attracted several comments. Belgium and the United States favoured a comparison of United Nations remuneration with United States remuneration at New York rather than Washington because there was a large group of United States Government employees, performing duties equivalent to those of the United Nations Professional staff, stationed in New York; using that comparison, the current gap between United Nations and United States salaries was between 31 and 59 per cent, according to the United States representative.

The representative of the USSR, among others, favoured establishing a ceiling for the difference between United Nations and United States salaries. Belgium favoured a maximum margin of 10 per cent; Nigeria was of the view that, in establishing the margin, the average of United Nations remuneration in New York and other headquarters duty stations, such as Geneva (Switzerland) or Vienna (Austria), should be taken into account. Representatives of the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States were among those that endorsed the Commission's request that it be instructed to keep the relationship of United Nations/United States remuneration under continual review.

Fifth Committee Members that commented on the matter doubted the necessity for a study on the need for an additional P-6 grade. Afghanistan, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom felt that a P-6 grade was not required. Australia was of the view that an additional grade could only be justified if a large number of P-5 incumbents were found to be over-qualified by comparison with United States Civil Service GS-15 officers even then, Australia felt it would be better not to add a new grade but to incorporate it within the existing structure.

Most speakers expressed reservations regarding the continuing suitability of the current post adjustment system. Australia, Canada, Italy and Turkey were among those Members favouring a fundamental review of the system because in many countries there was a move away from salary indexation as a means of controlling inflation, and also because national civil servants did not enjoy complete protection against increases in cost of living. Canada suggested that consideration be given to the feasibility of a system under which a non-movable base of 100, representing the cost of living in Washington, would be established; United Nations staff in countries where the index was higher would be compensated for cost-of-living increases in excess of those at the base. Canada also suggested, as an alternative, that consideration be given to applying increases to a certain portion of the net salary only. Belgium proposed that the increases be regressive in percentage terms in relation to the level of salary. The United States proposed that time-to-time post adjustment changes be eliminated but place-to-place differentials be maintained. The USSR proposed complete elimination of all automatic increases in remuneration. Moreover, if the Commission's recommendation that, in certain cases, it be authorized to take independent action with respect to salaries without waiting for a decision of the General Assembly meant that ICSC could increase Professional staff salaries, then the USSR could not support the recommendation, since those salaries fell within the sole competence of the Assembly.

The representatives of Australia and Japan suggested that a fundamental re-examination of the principle of the education grant be carried out. Historically the provisions of the grant had been continuously liberalized, and therefore Australia said it would have difficulty endorsing payment of the grant for university education in the country of the duty station. Japan pointed out that the original purpose of the grant had been to aid the re-assimilation of children of expatriate parents in the home country when they returned to it, but it had simply become a means of helping parents with educational expenses. Similar points were made by the representative of the United States, who also pointed out that as current practice did not necessarily aid reassimilation—since the grant was payable for attendance at schools or universities in any country—it discriminated against staff members who were nationals of the country of the duty station. These views were shared in part or wholly by Belgium, Italy, Turkey and Venezuela. France, too, said it had doubts about the desirability of extending the grant. The Canadian spokesman pointed out that outside practice was not to reimburse university education costs. The Netherlands was of the view that the education grant provisions should be compared to those used in the best-paid civil services for reimbursement of educational costs. The USSR was among those that opposed any increase in the amount of the grant.

Argentina and Austria, however, supported the proposals of the Commission in this regard. The former said it believed that the importance of maintaining the family together was justification for reimbursement of costs of university education at the duty station; the latter strongly favoured payment of the grant for a full four years of university education and an increase in the ceiling of the grant.

The Commission's proposals with respect to the repatriation grant, termination indemnity and the introduction of an end-of-service grant were also considered. Austria, Belgium and Canada suggested that consideration be given to establishing a maximum amount for the repatriation grant. Austria and Canada also questioned whether staff returning after a full career and entitled to a pension, or those who do not leave the duty station on retirement, should receive a repatriation grant. The USSR and Belgium opposed basing separation payments on "pensionable remuneration less staff assessment," rather than on base pay, since, as the Belgian representative pointed out, it would no longer be possible to determine future costs because pensionable remuneration was adjusted automatically.

Commenting specifically on proposals concerning the termination indemnity, Afghanistan, Belgium, Ghana and Nigeria, among others, opposed payment of the indemnity for unsatisfactory service or misconduct. The United Kingdom doubted whether an increase in the indemnity was justified, since one of the reasons for consolidating five classes of post adjustment was to maintain the value of certain terminal and other payments. Ghana and Japan stated that the provision for "agreed terminations" (i.e. terminations in the interests of good administration) appeared to be over-generous.

Japan, however, supported the introduction of the end-of-service grant in view of the increasing use of fixed-term appointments that were renewed repeatedly. This view was supported by, among others, Turkey and Venezuela.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany opposed the end-of-service grant because of its cost and on the grounds that it was structurally not justified, since existing provisions for payment of a termination indemnity provided sufficient protection. The United Kingdom and the United States stressed that the contractual status of fixed-term staff was very clear and they should not be entitled to any indemnity. Moreover, it was noted that seconded staff were to qualify for the indemnity. The United Kingdom, supported by Ghana, suggested that the proposal be deferred and reviewed.

Belgium, France and Italy were also unable to support the proposal for an end-of-service grant. Ghana saw no rationale in paying an indemnity to an official who had completed six years' service and nothing to an official who had served a slightly lesser period. The USSR opposed the principle of the grant.

During the course of the discussion, the Austrian representative proposed that the maximum number of months for which salary should be paid to the survivors of a staff member who died in service should be increased to 12 months, in keeping with the change proposed in the maximum amount of the termination indemnity.

Austria also stressed the importance of day-care facilities for children of staff members and urged that the question be pursued.

Brazil, Italy, Japan and Turkey welcomed the Commission's decision to review the question of the language incentive system, which they considered discriminatory against staff whose mother tongue was not one of the official or working languages of the Organization.

The Fifth Committee approved, on 29 November 1976, by 78 votes to 11, with 2 abstentions, a three-part draft resolution—the final two parts of which concerned the conclusions and recommendations of ICSC—and submitted it to the Assembly for adoption. [The first part, which became General Assembly resolution 31/141 A, is discussed in the section which follows.] The sponsors were Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Costa Rica, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Japan, Nicaragua, Nigeria, the United Kingdom and Uruguay.

The Assembly adopted all parts of the resolution, together with an annex containing the necessary amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, on 17 December 1976, as its resolutions 31/141 A and B (resolution 31/141 B contained two of the three parts, as sections I and II), by a recorded vote of 119 to 11, with 2 abstentions.

As a result of the adoption of resolution

31/141 B, the Assembly approved, by section I, with effect from 1 January 1977, those recommendations of the Commission having a direct bearing on the salary system (see above, recommendations (1) to (10)). Other recommendations, relating to payment of the education grant for university education in the country of the duty station, and the end-of-service grant, were not approved but left for further study.

In addition to approving the aforementioned recommendations, the Assembly requested the Commission, by section II of resolution 31/141 B:

(a) to carry forward its study of possible further reforms of the international civil service salary system and, in that connexion, report to the Assembly on the feasibility of establishing a modified system of post adjustments;

(b) to pursue studies for the purpose of arriving at a methodology permitting comparison, at all levels, of "total compensation" between the United Nations salary system and the comparator civil service and report to the Assembly not later than at its 1978 session;

(c) to re-examine: (i) the conditions governing terminal payments, in particular for retirement, and the possibility of establishing a ceiling on the total of all such payments; (ii) the possible introduction of an end-of-service grant, with particular attention to the conditions governing payment; and (iii) the need for an allowance for post-secondary education of children of expatriate staff and, in particular, the need to cover such education in a country other than the home country; and

(d) to consider and propose in 1977 measures to align on the revised scale for termination indemnities the amount payable to dependants of a staff member who dies in service.

Report of the International Civil Service Commission

The second annual report of the International Civil Service Commission to the General Assembly, submitted in 1976, covered the following main items: the operation of the post adjustment system; career development and promotions in relation to reclassification of posts; day-care centres for children of staff members; and the programme of work of the Commission, in particular that relating to salaries of staff in the General Service category.

The Commission held two sessions during 1976, its third and fourth in March and June/July 1976, respectively.

The Commission approved the terms of reference and membership for its newly established Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions, set up to provide the requisite technical advice on the operation of the post adjustment system. The Commission considered a question regarding the post adjustment index for Rome, Italy, brought to its attention in circumstances of heavy devaluation of the local currency in relation to the United States dollar, accompanied by rapid inflation. It decided that no special action in respect of Rome was warranted, but decided to study further the possible need for special measures in such circumstances.

The Commission decided to invite the Secretary-General to provide it with an analysis of the problem of reclassification of posts in the Secretariat and on progress being made towards instituting control through a consistent job classification system, for comparison with the way the problem was handled in other organizations.

In keeping with the principle that remuneration of staff in the General Service category should continue to be established by comparison with the best prevailing conditions at each duty station, the Commission stated that the allowances and other entitlements (which formed a part of the remuneration) should also continue to be established by comparison with local conditions at each duty station. It would examine the appropriate rate of the children's allowance at New York when it studied General Service salaries there.

Pending the submission of further information and proposals, ICSC was unable to express any views on the general problem of day-care centres for children of staff members.

The report also contained indications as to the way in which ICSC intended to undertake, in 1977, its next major task, namely, the assumption of its responsibilities under its statute with respect to the salaries of the General Service category.<sup>9</sup>

The second part of the annual report contained the report of ICSC on the review of the United Nations salary system (see section above).

In adopting resolutions 31/141 A and B on 17 December 1976—adopted together by a recorded vote of 119 to 11, with 2 abstentions—the General Assembly, by resolution 31/141 A, noted with appreciation the report of ICSC and approved the intention of the Commission to assume its functions under its statute relating to salaries of staff in the General Service category. The Assembly asked ICSC to submit its conclusions and recommendations on this matter at the Assembly's 1977 session.

The Assembly's action was taken on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, which approved the text on 29 November 1976, by 78 votes to 11, with 2 abstentions, when it approved a three-part draft resolution sponsored by Algeria, Argentina,

Austria, Costa Rica, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Japan, Nicaragua, Nigeria, the United Kingdom and Uruguay. [The last two parts were incorporated into General Assembly resolution 31/141 B on the review of the United Nations salary system, discussed in the section above.]

Several comments were made in the Fifth Committee with respect to conditions of service of staff in the General Service category, in particular as regards General Service remuneration in Geneva. Belgium expressed concern at the methods used to establish General Service remuneration. Japan stressed the urgent need—in light of the serious situation with regard to the conditions of service in the General Service category, particularly at Geneva (see below)—for reviewing the guiding principles and methodology determining General Service salaries and allowances and agreed with Argentina, Australia, Brazil, France and others that priority should be given during 1977 to a review of those principles.

The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany also urged a review of the principles and methodology involved and stated that, in particular, further changes in the salary scales of General Service staff in Geneva should be kept to a minimum pending the outcome of the ICSC review. Belgium and Italy proposed that increases be suspended until the review was completed.

The representatives of Afghanistan and the United Kingdom trusted that ICSC would consider whether the principle of paying the best prevailing rates at each duty station was justified.

Emoluments of the Secretary-General

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly decided, without a vote, to increase the Secretary-General's salary to $110,650 gross, with effect from 1 January 1977; his maximum retirement allowance was increased from $38,800 to $55,325 a year, pursuant to the provisions of a resolution of 29 November 1971 by which the Assembly decided inter alia that his annual retirement allowance was to be one half of the gross salary.<sup>10</sup>

The Assembly also concurred in the recommendation that, effective 1 January 1977, pensions in payment to former Secretaries-General or their surviving spouses be adjusted proportionately whenever a decision was taken affecting the maximum retirement allowance for the Secretary-General.

The Assembly then approved additional appropriations for the above purposes under the relevant section of the 1976-1977 programme budget and approved appropriate adjustments to allow for the concomitant staff assessment increases.

The Assembly's decision was taken on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee—based on an oral suggestion of the Chairman reflecting the recommendations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report on this question—and was approved without a vote by the Fifth Committee on 21 December 1976.

The decision was embodied in section IX of an 11-part resolution—31/208—concerning a number of matters related to the programme budget for the 1976-1977 biennium.

General Service salaries and conditions of service at the United Nations Office at Geneva

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly—after considering a report by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), with comments by ACC and the Secretary-General, on various aspects of a strike at the United Nations Office at Geneva, Switzerland, from 25 February to 3 March 1976—requested ICSC, as a matter of urgency, to establish the methods by which the principles for determining conditions of service in the General Service category at Geneva should be applied.

The Commission was asked to have a survey made, on the basis of such methodology, of local employment conditions at Geneva, to make recommendations as to salary scales deemed appropriate in the circumstances and to inform the Assembly in 1977 of the actions taken in this regard.

The Assembly also asked ICSC to examine the basis and justification for recent General Service salary adjustments in Geneva and decided that all financial implications of a decision to raise salaries there should be covered by savings in implementing the 1976-1977 United Nations budget, including reductions in General Service posts. It asked for a report on any such reductions.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to develop, in the course of 1977, job classification standards for the General Service category at Geneva, and to introduce a job classification system based on those standards. It urged the Secretary-General, after completing a review and making any upward interim salary adjustments appropriate for General Service staff as at 1 January 1977, to refrain from further upward interim adjustments or commitments as to emoluments of such staff at Geneva until the report and recommendations of ICSC were submitted. The Assembly also decided that no salary would be paid to staff members in respect of periods of unauthorized absence from work except for reasons beyond their control or duly certified medical reasons.

These decisions were among those embodied in the two sections of resolution 31/193 B, which the General Assembly adopted, without a vote, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

[General Assembly resolution 31/193 A, which concerned pension coverage for members of the Joint Inspection Unit, is dealt with in CHAPTER III of this section.]

The Fifth Committee approved section I of the draft resolution—which was sponsored by Algeria, Canada, Costa Rica, Nigeria and Pakistan, and twice revised to reflect amendments proposed by Trinidad and Tobago and by the USSR—by a recorded vote of 91 to 0, with 2 abstentions.

The sponsors also accepted a Ghanaian oral amendment to the preamble by which the Assembly noted "with satisfaction" the ICSC decision to advance the assumption of its functions under its statute in response to requests by the World Health Organization and the International Labour Office to assume those functions as soon as possible, particularly with respect to the salary scales of General Service staff at Geneva; thus, an operative paragraph by which the Assembly welcomed the same decision was deleted.

The sponsors could not accept a Belgian amendment by which the Assembly would urge the Secretary-General to suspend the upward interim salary adjustments envisaged for 1 January 1977 until the Assembly had been able to appreciate the need for it in the light of the ICSC report. The amendment was rejected by a recorded vote of 42 against to 23 in favour, with 29 abstentions.

Section II of the resolution, which was added to the text as the result of an amendment by Japan, was approved by a recorded vote of 77 to 0, with 16 abstentions. The Fifth Committee then approved the draft resolution as a whole, as amended, by a recorded vote of 89 to 0, with 2 abstentions, on 21 December 1976.

The report of JIU on aspects of the February-March 1976 strike at Geneva contained information and observations on the historical background of the procedures followed in determining General Service salaries in Geneva over the years, a detailed examination of the 1975 salary survey, and a review of other problems concerning the General Service staff in Geneva.

The report noted that negotiations following the strike had culminated in an agreement reached on 28 April 1976—between staff representatives and a sole negotiator appointed by the Secretary-General in agreement with the executive heads of the Geneva-based organizations—which provided for salary increases. In addition, the agreement provided increases in dependency allowances. The estimated total cost was $25 million for all the organizations involved.

The Joint Inspection Unit concluded that the situation in Geneva was marked by: major shortcomings in the application of the methods for determining General Service salaries, with the result that the principle of best prevailing conditions of employment was no longer adhered to; a hierarchy of salaries and pensions for the staff as a whole which in too many cases, was inversely proportional to the level of qualifications and responsibilities; an absence of any rational career or post classification system, and a de facto ranking system which contained serious anomalies; the absence of any definition of responsibilities in respect of the power of decision; and a crisis of confidence between staff and management.

Based on these conclusions, JIU made five main recommendations, relating to: (1) the preparation of a draft regulation on the method of applying the principles of the best prevailing conditions of employment; (2) the acceleration of the implementation of the provisions of article 12, paragraph 1, of the statute of ICSC, by which the Commission was to establish the relevant facts for and make recommendations as to the salary scales of staff in the General Service and other locally recruited categories at designated duty stations, and the improvement of the methods for the negotiation of General Service salaries by instituting a system of a sole negotiator at Geneva; (3) the improvement of the consultation machinery between the administration and the staff at Geneva; (4) the preparation of a rule governing career development for General Service staff in both Geneva and New York; and (5) the establishment of a new structure for the General Service salary scale and the return to a more reasonable relationship between General Service and Professional salaries and pensions.

The comments of ACC on the JIU report deal specifically with the three recommendations that had implications for the entire common system of the United Nations. The Administrative Committee suggested, among other recommendations that the General Assembly: endorse the decision of ICSC to advance the date it would assume its functions under article 12 of its statute; request ICSC to include in its work programme for 1977 both the general questions relating to the methods by which the principles for determining conditions of service for the General Service category should be applied and the specific question of General Service salaries and allowances in Geneva; and refer the JIU report to the Commission for study.

The Secretary-General commented on the JIU recommendations that referred to the staff/management relations at the United Nations Office at Geneva and to the establishment of a career development plan for General Service staff at Geneva and New York.

With regard to the former, the Secretary-General indicated that he had requested the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Geneva to review, in close consultation with the authorized representatives of the staff, the entire machinery for communication between staff and management, with a view to strengthening channels of communication and consultation procedures.

The Secretary-General also brought to the Assembly's attention a number of changes in the administrative structure and procedures of the United Nations Office at Geneva which he had decided to make in order to strengthen the lines of communication, authority and responsibility within the Office.

With regard to the latter recommendation, the Secretary-General said he had indicated to the General Assembly, in a separate report (see pp. 870-72), his intention to make proposals to permit the immediate implementation of a job classification study of the General Service category in Geneva early in 1977, which was a necessary prerequisite to the inauguration of a sound system of career development. Pending the completion of the study, and as a matter of urgency, an interim set of guidelines for career ranges of General Service posts would be developed, which would define an appropriate span of grades for the various occupational groups. The question of establishing a system of examinations and training for access to the various grades within and between occupational groups, and its consequent effect on current promotion procedures, would be pursued at the same time.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions referred to the comments and suggestions of ACC as well as those of the Secretary-General on the JIU report. The Advisory Committee pointed out that the Fifth Committee on 29 November 1976 had already approved a draft resolution by which, inter alia, the Assembly would note the intention of ICSC to assume forthwith its functions under article 12 of its statute regarding the salaries of the General Service category and would request ICSC to present its conclusions and recommendations in 1977 (see pp. 851-52, resolution 31/141 B, section II). The Advisory Committee also agreed with ACC's suggestions regarding ICSC's programme of work for 1977 and referral of the JIU report to ICSC. Further, the Advisory Committee had no objections to the Secretary-General's estimates of appropriations needed to carry out his proposed actions.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 3042(XXVII) of 19 December 1972, 3357(XXIX) of 18 December 1974 and 3418(XXX) of 8 December 1975 by which it requested the International Civil Service Commission to review, as a matter of priority, the United Nations salary system,

Noting with satisfaction the timely completion by the Commission of the major part of this review,

Having considered the report of the Commission thereon, together with the comments transmitted by the Secretary-General as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and those of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting the conclusions reached by the Commission as set out in chapter II of its report,

1. Decides that the International Civil Service Commission, as a standing body, should keep under continual review the relationship between the levels of remuneration of the comparator civil service, at present the United States Civil Service, and the United Nations system, having due regard to all relevant factors, including the differences between the two services, and decides that at any time when the Commission considers corrective action is necessary it should either recommend such action to the General Assembly or, if urgent conservatory action is necessary between sessions of the Assembly to prevent an undue widening of the margin of United Nations remuneration over that of the comparator civil service, take appropriate measures itself within the operation of the post adjustment system;

2. Decides that:

(a) The equivalent of five classes of post adjustment shall be consolidated into the base salaries of the Professional and higher categories;

(b) The base of the post adjustment system shall be changed from New York at 100 as at December 1969 to New York at 100 as at November 1973;

3. Approves the revised scales of staff assessment rates, post adjustment rates and gross and net salaries for the Professional and higher categories as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

4. Authorizes temporary transitional payments, which shall not be pensionable, to be made to staff members whose remuneration under the revised scales would be less than under the existing scales, the amounts of these payments and the modalities for their gradual reduction and ultimate elimination to be determined by the Commission;

5. Decides that, in cases where the revised level of pensionable remuneration would be less than the level which would otherwise exist on 1 January 1977, the latter level shall be maintained temporarily until it is overtaken by the revised level;

6. Decides that terminal payments (termination indemnities, repatriation grants, payments in lieu of accrued annual leave, death grants) which are defined in terms of "base salary or wage" shall henceforth be defined in terms of "pensionable remuneration less staff assessment";

7. Decides to abolish for the Professional and higher categories the existing allowance for a dependent spouse, the prevailing amount of the allowance being incorporated into the revised base salary;

8. Decides to increase for the Professional and higher categories the amount of the allowance for a secondary dependant to $300 per year;

9. Decides to amend the scales of amounts of the repatriation grant for staff members of the Professional and higher categories with and without dependants as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

10. Decides:

(a) To revise the percentage of approved costs reimbursable under the provisions of the education grant as follows:

|--------------------------------------|-------------|
| Expenses up to $2,000               | 75 per cent |
| Expenses between $2,001 and $3,000 | 50 per cent |
| Expenses between $3,001 and $4,000 | 25 per cent |

(b) To increase the flat amount allowable for boarding expenses, in case of attendance at an educational institution outside the duty station where the institution does not provide board, to $750;

11. Decides to amend the conditions and rates of the termination indemnity as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

12. Decides that, pending the results of further study by the Commission of the remuneration of the General Service category and to avoid in the meanwhile any reduction in the level of General Service pensionable remuneration which might result from the application to General Service salaries of the revised staff assessment rates established under paragraph 3 above for the Professional and higher categories, the existing rates of staff assessment shall continue, as a temporary measure, to apply to the General Service category;

13. Approves the amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations necessary to give effect to the above decisions, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

14. Invites the Secretary-General to make such consequential changes as are necessary in the Staff Rules and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session in accordance with the provisions of regulation 12.2 of the Staff Regulations;

15. Decides that the date of entry into effect of the above decisions shall be 1 January 1977;

1. Recommends that the International Civil Service Commission should carry forward its study of possible further reforms in the international civil service salary system and, in that connexion, requests the Commission to report to the General Assembly on the feasibility of establishing a modified system of post adjustments, taking into account the views expressed in paragraph 229 of its report;

2. Notes the intention of the Commission to pursue studies with a view to arriving at a methodology permitting comparison of "total compensation" between the comparator civil service and the United Nations salary system and requests the Commission to carry out this comparison at all levels and to report its findings to the General Assembly no later than at its thirty-third session;

3. Requests the Commission to re-examine, in the light of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee at the current session:

(a) The conditions for the provision of terminal payments (for example, repatriation grant, termination indemnities), in particular on retirement, and the possibility of establishing a ceiling for the maximum aggregate of entitlements to these payments;

(b) The possible introduction of an "end-of-service" grant with particular attention to the conditions in which such payment might be justified;

(c) The need for an allowance for post-secondary education of children of expatriate staff and, in particular, the need for an allowance to cover education in countries other than the home country of the staff member;

4. Requests the Commission to consider and propose to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session measures by which the maximum amount of the lump sum payable to the dependent spouse or dependent child of a staff member who dies in service would be aligned on the scale for termination indemnities approved under paragraph 11 of section I above.

A/31/457/Add.1. Report of Fifth Committee (part II) (on JIU), draft resolution B.

Resolution 31/193 B, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/31/457/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 22 December 1976, meeting 107.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on some aspects of the strike at the United Nations Office at Geneva from 25 February to 3 March 1976, the joint comments of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the comments of the Secretary-General on recommendations 3 and 4 in the report of the Joint Inspection Unit,

Convinced of the need to re-examine the methodology for salary surveys and the system of job classification of the General Service category at Geneva,

Noting the requests of the World Health Organization and the International Labour Office to the International Civil Service Commission to assume as soon as possible the functions described in paragraph 1 of article 12 of its statute, particularly with respect to the salary scales of the staff in the General Service category at Geneva,

Further noting with satisfaction the decision by the International Civil Service Commission to advance the assumption of its functions under article 12, paragraph 1, of its statute in response to these requests,

Recognizing the importance of maintaining harmony with the agencies and organizations located at Geneva in the management of personnel services,

Observing that the degree of responsibility and authority delegated by the Secretary-General to the United Nations Office at Geneva should be sufficient to ensure the satisfactory management of personnel services and conduct of staff relations in that Office in accordance with the Staff Regulations and Staff Rules of the United Nations,

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission, as a matter of urgency, to establish, under the authority of article 11 (a) of its statute, the methods by which the principles for determining conditions of service in the General Service category at Geneva should be applied and, on the basis of such methodology and under the authority of article 12, paragraph 1, of its statute, to have a survey made of local employment conditions at Geneva, to make recommendations as to the salary scales deemed appropriate in the circumstances and to inform the General Assembly at its thirty-second session of the actions taken in this regard;

2. Further requests the International Civil Service Commission, in its examination of conditions of service of the General Service category at Geneva, to examine the basis on which recent substantial salary adjustments of staff in that category were determined and to take them fully into account in its consideration of the salaries of that category of staff and the methodology for future salary adjustments, in so far as they affect General Service staff at Geneva;

3. Urges the International Civil Service Commission, in carrying out these tasks, to take into account all aspects, especially paragraph 29 of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on some aspects of the strike at the United Nations Office at Geneva from 25 February to 3 March 1976, the joint comments on the report received from the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the comments of the Secretary-General on recommendations 3 and 4 of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit, and invites its comments;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the International Civil Service Commission in the first half of 1977 with job descriptions for the General Service category at Geneva, grouped according to common job functions, in order to enable the Commission to carry out its survey task;

5. Decides that all financial implications of a decision to raise salaries at Geneva should be covered by savings in the implementation of the United Nations budget for 1976-1977, including reductions in General Service posts, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on such reductions as may have been made;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to develop, in the course of 1977, job classification standards for the General Service category at Geneva and, based upon them, to introduce a job classification system, including a structure of occupational groups and a classification of posts;

7. Urges the Secretary-General, after completing the current review of relevant factors and making any upward interim salary adjustments appropriate for General Service category employees as at 1 January 1977, to refrain from making any further upward interim adjustments and from entering into any further commitments as to emoluments of General Service category employees at Geneva until the report and recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission requested in paragraph 3 above have been submitted;

8. Reaffirms its expectation that the Secretary-General will fully exercise his authority to ensure the effective and efficient implementation of administrative instructions concerning the delegation of responsibility and commensurate authority to the United Nations Office at Geneva;

Decides that no salary shall be paid to staff members in respect of periods of unauthorized absence from work unless such absence was caused by reasons beyond their control or duly certified medical reasons.

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

Eleven organizations were members of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in 1976. They were: the United Nations (including the Registry of the International Court of Justice); the International Atomic Energy Agency; the International Labour Organisation; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; the World Health Organization; the International Civil Aviation Organization; the International Telecommunication Union; the World Meteorological Organization; the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization; and the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization.

During the year ending 31 December 1976, the number of participants in the Fund increased from 42,592 to 42,917.

The principal of the Fund increased during the year from $1,079,391,114 to $1,243,267,659. The income of the Fund from interest and dividends during the year, less investment management costs, was $49,161,000.

As at 31 December 1976, 3,576 retirement benefits, 3,036 early and deferred retirement benefits, 1,289 widow's and widower's benefits, 245 disability benefits, 2,342 children's benefits, and 27 secondary dependant's benefits were in payment by the Fund.

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board held both its twenty-first and twenty-second sessions at United Nations Headquarters, New York, in July and November 1976. Its report to the General Assembly contained: the audited accounts of the Fund for the year ended 31 December 1975, together with the report of the Board of Auditors on the annual audit of the Fund; a summary of the Fund's investments as at that date; and various statistical tables reflecting the operation of the Fund during the year. It also contained recommendations for action by the General Assembly with respect to a new system for the adjustment of pensions, an increase in the maximum length of contributory service, provision by the Fund of increased survivors' and disability benefits, future operation of the Emergency Fund established in 1973, size and composition of the Investments Committee, removal of age 60 as a bar to entry into the Fund, administrative expenses for 1977 (including supplementary expenses for 1976), participation in the Fund of members of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), admission of the World Intellectual Property Organization to membership in the Fund, transfer of pension rights between the Fund and the Commission of the European Communities and consequential amendments to the Regulations of the Joint Staff Pension Fund relating to the foregoing items.

The report gave an account, at the same time, of decisions taken or recommendations made by the Board within its own authority under the Regulations and Rules of the Fund, including those relating to the annual review of the Fund's investment position and investment policy, the methodology and assumptions for the actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1976, and the introduction of a change in the Administrative Rules.

The report annexed a draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly containing provisions relating to: (i) adjustment of benefits in respect of cost-of-living changes, (ii) amendments to the Pension Fund Regulations, (iii) admission to membership of the World Intellectual Property Organization, (iv) continuation of the Emergency Fund, and (v) approval of the administrative expenses of the Staff Pension Fund.

The Joint Staff Pension Board's text was subsequently modified to incorporate recommendations of the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), and resubmitted by the Secretariat to facilitate consideration of the subject by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

With a number of amendments adopted during the discussion of the pension system in the Fifth Committee, the text emerged as a draft resolution with seven operative parts, relating to the five matters on which the Board submitted a draft text, to endorsement of the observations of ACABQ concerning matters to be taken into account in the Board's study of adjustment proposals, and to temporary measures to apply to existing pensioners in respect of the loss of purchasing power of their pensions.

The Fifth Committee approved the consolidated text, as amended, on 17 December 1976 by 79 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions. The Assembly approved the text as a whole without objection on 22 December 1976 as its resolution 31/196. (For details, see below.)

A resolution on the investments of the Pension Fund was also approved by the Fifth Committee, relating to investments in transnational corporations and developing countries. This resolution, as amended in the plenary, was adopted by the Assembly on 22 December 1976 as resolution 31/197. (For details, see below.)

Annual report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board

Adjustments to counter erosion of purchasing power of benefits

As requested by the General Assembly in 1975,<sup>11</sup> the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board continued its search for a system of adjusting pensions to compensate pensioners for losses in purchasing power sustained through inflation and exchange-rate fluctuations. In its report, it proposed a new system, endorsed by the majority of the Board's members (but which did not have the support of the members representing the United Nations), which sought to achieve that objective by, inter alia, the establishment of the initial pension, under a special formula, in the currency of the pensioner's country of residence, to be adjusted subsequently in the light of the cost-of-living movements in that country. However, if the base pension, calculated in United States dollars, adjusted by the United States consumer price index and converted into local currency at the rate of exchange prevailing at the time of payment, would be higher, that amount would be payable instead.

The Advisory Committee was unable to endorse the Board's proposals for several reasons, among them the likelihood that the various alternatives for calculating payable benefits would increase the cost of the pension adjustment scheme. It believed that the actuarial impact of the current dual system (under which a beneficiary could choose to have his pension adjusted on the basis of movements of either the index of weighted average of post adjustments (WAPA) or the local consumer price index (CPI))<sup>12</sup> would become clear only after the next actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1976 had been carried out, and that this information should be before the General Assembly when it took a decision on any change to the pension system. In view also of the fact that the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) had recognized the need for an in-depth study of the value of pension benefits as part of the total package of compensation for staff in both the Professional and General Service categories and intended to undertake such a study, preferably in conjunction with the Pension Board, ACABQ considered that it might be more prudent for the Assembly to postpone a decision on the question of adjustment of pensions until its 1978 session. A postponement would also enable further study to be made of a number of anomalies in the proposed new system and might provide solutions to others which might arise.

The Advisory Committee also recommended a number of issues which might be considered in order to give some guidelines to the Board in its future deliberations. Among them were: the question of principle raised by the proposal of a special formula for an initial adjustment to compensate in part for country-to-country differences in the cost of living, the question of whether any adjustment system at all could be institutionalized, and the possibility of devising less costly alternatives to the Board's proposals.

After considerable discussion in the Fifth Committee, during which various views were expressed on the need for a scheme which would help to maintain the purchasing power of pensions, it was decided to recommend postponement of action until the Assembly's 1978 session; meanwhile the current dual WAPA/CPI adjustment system would be continued, although some Members favoured deferment only until 1977 and others regretted the need for postponement at all in view of the hardship situations in which some pensioners found themselves. Still others, including Italy and Trinidad and Tobago, expressed doubts concerning, inter alia, what appeared to be the concepts underlying the proposed adjustment scheme. France stressed the need for a much simpler system. The USSR considered that the task of developing a system of adjustment of pensions should be entrusted to ICSC.

On 17 December 1976, the Fifth Committee approved—by 79 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions—and the Assembly subsequently adopted a seven-part resolution based on a consolidated text containing proposals by the Board and amendments by ACABQ. By sections I and VI the Assembly requested the Board to continue its study of the system of adjustment of benefits with respect to cost-of-living changes in the light of the views expressed during the current session and the results of the forthcoming actuarial valuation as at 31 December 1976, and also bearing in mind the question of principle referred to by ACABQ as well as its observations relating inter alia to the findings of ICSC and pertinent aspects of national taxation. The Assembly also decided that the current system of adjustment should remain in force until 31 December 1978.

In accordance with an oral amendment by the United Kingdom approved by consensus in the Fifth Committee—which added a paragraph to section I, subamending a proposal by the Federal Republic of Germany—the Assembly decided that the deliberations of the Board should be guided by the principle that compensating for country-to-country differences in the cost of living should be given limited recognition falling short of equality of purchasing power so as to ensure that the new scheme would not require an increase in the current or future financial liabilities of Member States.

The Board's recommendations were to be submitted to the General Assembly at its 1978 regular session.

(For texts of preamble and sections I and VI of resolution 31/196, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 20 December, the Fifth Committee approved by consensus a draft resolution submitted by Belgium and France aimed at providing, as an interim measure, relief from hardship suffered by those on a small pension. Belgium explained that the proposal would be implemented for one year only and would affect approximately 1,000 pensioners.

The proposal in essence was that the Fund would be authorized to make payments in 1977, under specified guidelines and conditions, in an aggregate amount not to exceed $500,000, to those pensioners whose pensions in the country of residence had decreased in purchasing power by more than 20 per cent. The Board was to report on the expenditures thus made to the Assembly at its 1977 session.

The resolution was incorporated into resolution 31/196 as section VII, and approved by the Assembly when it adopted the text as a whole without objection on 22 December.

Amendments to Pension Fund Regulations

The Joint Staff Pension Board submitted in its report to the Assembly proposals for amendments to the Regulations of the Fund relating to: (a) an increase of two years in the maximum period of reckonable contributory service so that after 30 years of service an additional two years could be counted as contributory, though at an accumulation rate of 1/100 of the final average remuneration rather than the normal 1/50; (b) a change in the calculation formula to increase survivors' and disability benefits as well as to increase the minimum benefit; (c) an increase from six to nine in the number of members of the Investments Committee, in order to provide for a wider geographical distribution of membership in that body; (d) clarification of the text relating to early retirement benefits by specifying the precise amount of the reduction factor applied to benefits where the participant had had less than 25 years of service; and (e) removal of the age of 60 as a bar to entry into participation in the Fund and provision for members of JIU to become members of the Fund if the Assembly should so decide.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions did not concur in the proposal to remove the age-limit for participation in the Fund and recommended postponement of a decision on the other amendments with the exception of that relating to the increase in the membership of the Investments Committee. Its views on the question of pension coverage for members of JIU were contained in a separate report (see p. 919).

The Fifth Committee, however, on a proposal by Algeria, Austria and Colombia, decided to recommend to the General Assembly adoption of the Board's proposed amendments to the Regulations relating to contributory service, improvement of disability and survivors' benefits, membership of the Investments Committee and early retirement benefits. It expressed agreement with ACABQ's recommendation to reject the proposal that staff members recruited after the age of 60 should be permitted to enter the Fund.

The amendments to the Regulations were voted on by the Fifth Committee on 17 December as follows: the amendments to the articles proposing to increase the membership of the Investments Committee, to clarify the reduction factor to be applied in calculating early retirement benefits and to increase the minimum amount of a disability benefit were adopted by consensus; the amendment to the article containing a change in the maximum number of years of reckonable contributory service was adopted by 72 votes to 11, with 2 abstentions; that containing an increase in the disability benefit was adopted by 68 votes to 12, with 4 abstentions; and that containing an increase in the widow's benefit was adopted by 82 votes to 1, with 5 abstentions.

The text relating to acceptance of these changes became section II of resolution 31/196, adopted by the Assembly on 22 December. A United Kingdom amendment to accept ACABQ's proposals, as well as the Board's recommendation, on the question of the maximum length of contributory service was not put to a vote, having been superseded by adoption of the three-power proposals.

On 17 December, the Fifth Committee also took note without objection of a report by the Secretary-General concurring in the Board's recommendations regarding an increase in the membership of the Investments Committee and outlining proposed action to accord with whatever decision was taken on the matter.

Emergency Fund

The Emergency Fund had been established in 1973<sup>13</sup> to alleviate individual hardships among pensioners. It was initially used to relieve distress caused to small pensioners as a group by currency fluctuations and cost-of-living increases, but had subsequently reverted to its original purpose of providing aid in individual hardship cases where there was a proved need for relief due to illness, infirmity or other like cause. The Board recommended that its authority to supplement voluntary contributions to the Fund up to an annual amount of $100,000 should be continued for a further one-year period.

The Advisory Committee and the Fifth Committee both agreed with that recommendation, which was contained in section IV of the Assembly's resolution 31/19.6. (For text of section IV of resolution 31/196, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Admission of the World Intellectual Property Organization to the Pension Fund

The Board reported on an application from the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) to become a member organization of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund. The organization had become a specialized agency of the United Nations system on 17 December 1974,<sup>14</sup> had accepted the Fund's Regulations and had reached agreement with the Board on the conditions which would govern its admission.

The Board recommended that WIPO should be admitted to membership in the Fund with effect from 1 January 1977. The Advisory Committee concurred in the Board's recommendation. The Fifth Committee endorsed the Board's recommendation, which was embodied in section III of Assembly resolution 31/196. (For text of section III of resolution 31/196, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Administrative expenses

The Board, in its report, estimated expenses for the administration of the Fund (including those chargeable to investments) at $3,144,400 (net) for 1977 and supplementary expenses at $14,200 (net) for 1976. The supplementary expenses for 1976 were attributable in the main to higher actuarial costs, which had been to a large extent offset by savings owing to delayed recruitment.

The Advisory Committee drew attention to the considerable over-expenditure for actuarial services already experienced in 1975 and reiterated its previous observation that decisions of the Board having financial implications should be taken only after such implications had been presented and considered. Subject to that observation it recommended acceptance of the supplementary estimates.

As far as the estimates for 1977 were concerned, ACABQ noted that the estimates for investment reference services, hospitality and communication services corresponded to the revised estimates for 1976. The Board's proposals on staffing, after taking account of various reclassifications and conversions of posts from temporary to established, related essentially to the addition of three Professional and two General Service posts.

While ACABQ had no objection to the staff changes proposed, it recommended that, in view of the experience in 1976 and in line with United Nations practice, a delayed recruitment factor be applied to the cost of the new posts which would entail a reduction of $15,000 in the estimates for staff costs for 1977. The Fifth Committee agreed with the recommendation of ACABQ that the estimate of administrative expenses for 1977 be reduced to $3,129,400 (net) and approved an amended version of section V of the text which became Assembly resolution 31/196.

Investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

In response to a request from the General Assembly of 16 December 1975,<sup>15</sup> a report was submitted by the Secretary-General in 1976 on pension investments in developing countries. This report, together with the observations contained in the report of the Joint Staff Pension Board, were noted by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Discussion of the report in the Fifth Committee led to the introduction by Cuba of a draft resolution on the subject. By the Cuban text, the Assembly would note with concern the large amount of long-term investments held by the Fund in transnational corporations and would take into account that the financing by the Fund of transnational corporations contradicted the objectives and purposes of the organizations of the United Nations system. Considering that the investments made directly by the Fund in developing countries were extremely small, the Assembly would request the Secretary-General (1) to ensure that the resources of the Fund invested in shares of transnational corporations were invested directly in developing countries on safe and profitable terms, and (2) to inform the Assembly in 1977 on the implementation of the resolution.

The Cuban draft resolution was approved by the Fifth Committee on 17 December 1976 by 34 votes to 26, with 22 abstentions.

The Fifth Committee, at the same meeting, decided—by 33 votes against to 29 in favour, with 22 abstentions—not to consider a draft resolution submitted by Nicaragua by which, inter alia, the Assembly would have noted with concern that direct investment by the Fund in developing countries was very small and considered that the percentage allocated by the Fund to developing countries was disproportionate to other allocations. The Assembly would have asked the Secretary-General to take suitable measures to achieve better and greater direct investments of the Fund's resources in developing countries, on safe and profitable terms, and to report in 1977 on progress achieved.

In discussing the draft submitted by Cuba, Algeria and Egypt were among the Members which pointed out that, although efforts had been made to increase investments in developing countries during the past year, the amount invested was still only a small portion of the Fund's total resources and therefore further efforts would have to be made.

Several representatives agreed with the United Kingdom that the method proposed was a drastic one which might lead to considerable losses in the value of the Fund's assets by reason of the fact that it failed to provide discretionary authority to the Secretary-General. Australia, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and the United States were among those which stressed that the assets of the Fund were legally the property of the participants, whose interests were paramount. France considered that the pensioners should be consulted on such an important matter.

Ghana, Greece, Poland, Trinidad and Tobago and others, however, believed that the words "on safe and profitable terms" provided an adequate safeguard and gave the Secretary-General the necessary freedom of movement and discretion.

Amendments to the text recommended by the Fifth Committee were submitted in a plenary meeting of the General Assembly jointly by Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Indonesia, Nicaragua, Panama and Paraguay and approved.

By the first of these amendments, the Assembly took into account that investments in shares of (rather than "financing of) transnational corporations by the Fund might contradict (rather than "contradicted") the objectives of the United Nations system. On this point, the sponsors and others, including the Netherlands and the United States, felt that the Pension Fund was not, nor should it be, used for financing; they believed that investments in transnational corporations did not always necessarily contradict the purposes and aims of the United Nations system.

The second change inserted a reference to a slight increase in investments in developing countries by the Pension Fund.

The final change was to the first operative paragraph. The Secretary-General was asked, in consultation with the Investments Committee, to ensure that the Fund's resources invested in transnational corporations were invested on safe and profitable terms and, to the greatest extent practicable, in sound investments in developing countries.

The sponsors of the amendments said they considered it prudent that the Secretary-General should consult with the Investments Committee in order to reflect the interests of all Member States and so achieve their objectives. They also considered it desirable that the investments in developing countries should have their profitability and security guaranteed as far as possible while at the same time ensuring that such countries should receive an equitable share of investments.

The amendments were approved without a vote. The resolution was then adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 106 to 1, with 24 abstentions, on 22 December 1976 as resolution 31/197.

Other questions relating to participation in the Pension Fund

In response to a 1975 request for a report on the implications of extending Pension Fund coverage for service with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) during the period 1950 through 1960 to certain former staff members who would have been eligible for coverage under a 1975 decision<sup>16</sup> had they not recently retired, the Secretary-General said he was unable to submit a definitive report to the 1976 session of the Assembly, the principal reason being the difficulties which continued to surround UNRWA and its records. Assuming improved access to UNRWA's records, and assuming that those records were intact, the Secretary-General believed a reliable report could be prepared and presented in 1977.

The Fifth Committee decided without a vote on 20 December, on a proposal by the Byelorussian SSR, to postpone consideration of the question to 1977, and so informed the General Assembly in its report on the programme budget for 1976-1977.

The General Assembly,
Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund for 1976 and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

I

Adjustment of benefits in respect of cost-of-living changes

1. Requests the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to continue its study of the system of adjustment of benefits in respect of cost-of-living changes, bearing in mind the views expressed on this question at the thirty-first session of the General Assembly and in the light of the actuarial valuation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund as at 31 December 1976, and to submit its recommendations to the Assembly at its thirty-third session;

2. Decides that the system of adjustment of benefits approved pursuant to section I of General Assembly resolution 3354(XXIX) of 18 December 1974 shall remain in force until 31 December 1978;

3. Further decides that one of the guidelines for the future deliberations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board should be that the principle of compensating by whatever means for country-to-country differences in the cost of living should be given limited recognition falling short of equality of purchasing power so as to ensure that the new scheme does not require an increase in the present or future financial liabilities of Member States;

VI

Observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions

1. Endorses the view of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that, in the study of adjustment proposals to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session, the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board should take into account not only the results of the actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1976, but also all relevant findings of the International Civil Service Commission, as referred to in paragraph 22 of the report of the Advisory Committee, together with all aspects of national taxation which may be pertinent;

2. Also endorses the view of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that, in making its proposals on adjustment at that time, the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board should take account of the questions of principle referred to in paragraph 27 of the report of the Advisory Committee and of the alternatives referred to in paragraph 28 thereof;

VII

Temporary measures to apply to existing pensioners in respect of the loss of purchasing power of their pensions

Decides to authorize payments during 1977, in an aggregate amount not to exceed $500,000, to be made by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund to compensate those pensioners whose pensions in the country of their residence have decreased in purchasing power to a significant extent; the guidelines to be followed for such payments are that they shall be made only in respect of that part of the loss which exceeds 20 per cent and only with respect to pensions which, after such adjustment, do not exceed 50 per cent of the net base salary of a Professional staff member in the P-1, step 1, category, and a report on the expenditures thus made in pursuance of the present resolution shall be submitted by the Board to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

The General Assembly,

Noting with concern that the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund has long-term investments in transnational corporations amounting to approximately $600 million,

Recalling the resolutions adopted by the United Nations and other international organizations concerning the new international economic order and the transnational corporations,

Taking into account that investments by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in shares of transnational corporations may contradict the objectives and purposes of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Considering that the investments made by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund directly in the developing countries, while increasing, are extremely small,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Investments Committee, which is being enlarged at the current session to reflect wider and more equitable geographical distribution, to ensure that the resources which the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund holds invested in shares of transnational corporations are invested on safe and profitable terms and, to the greatest extent practicable, in sound investments in developing countries;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Emoluments of members of the International Court of Justice

On 22 December 1976 the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted a resolution concerning the emoluments of the members of the International Court of Justice in The Hague, Netherlands.

A report of the Secretary-General, which was before the Fifth Committee when it considered this question, had been submitted in response to the Committee's recommendation at the 1975 session of the Assembly<sup>17</sup> that he explore various options and formulate proposals which would assure adequate remuneration for the members of the Court, which was not in the common system, and eliminate the need for frequent review while preserving the sui generis nature of the judges' situation.

In his report, the Secretary-General dealt primarily with the question of interim adjustments to compensate for cost-of-living movements that affected the purchasing power of the salaries of the judges and proposed several options in this regard.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions recommended that the Assembly approve, with effect from 1 January 1977, the payment to the members of the Court of an interim cost-of-living supplement. The supplement would become payable as of 1 January of any calendar year in which the simple arithmetic average of the post adjustment classifications for headquarters cities and cities in which regional offices of the organizations in the United Nations common system were located exceeded by 5 points or more the corresponding average calculated for the effective date of the most recent Assembly decision on members' salaries; the amount of the supplement would be equal to the corresponding percentage of a member's annual salary. Thereafter, and until the next periodic review, the amount of the supplement would be recalculated as of 1 January of each year, and would be adjusted proportionately, upwards or downwards, if the aforesaid arithmetic average moved by 5 points or more in either direction since the amount was last determined.

The Advisory Committee also recommended that a review of judicial salaries should take place once every five years (the next one to take place in 1980) unless the Assembly decided otherwise. It attached a draft resolution to its report which embodied the above recommendations as well as another recommendation that the system of interim adjustments would not apply to allowances and compensation provided for in Article 32 of the Statute of the Court,<sup>18</sup> dealing with special allowances for the President and Vice-President and compensation to ad hoc judges, nor would it apply to members' retirement pensions, which would be reviewed concurrently with the periodic review of their annual salary.

After the Fifth Committee accepted a drafting amendment to the text, orally proposed by the Philippines, it approved the resolution by 61 votes to 16, with 5 abstentions, on 22 October 1976. A second Philippine oral amendment, by which the Assembly would take into account the views expressed by members of the Fifth Committee, was withdrawn.

On 22 December, the Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 114 to 11, with 3 abstentions, as resolution 31/204.

Other administrative and personnel questions

Implementation of personnel policy reforms

In 1976, the General Assembly had before it two reports—one prepared by the Secretary-General and the other by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU)—concerning progress made in the implementation of the proposals for reforms in the personnel policy of the Secretariat that it had approved in 1974.<sup>19</sup>

The report of the Secretary-General examined the implementation of these proposals with respect to the basic staff structure of the Secretariat, recruitment and staff management.

The Secretary-General had accepted recommendations of both JIU and the Administrative Management Service (AMS) to manage the staff of the Secretariat on the basis of occupational groups, and reported that an occupational-group structure, consisting of nine main groups of staff performing related functions (Administrative, Economic, Information, Legal, Library, Linguistic, Political and Publishing, Printing and Reproduction, Social), was being used both in recruitment and in the planning of the assignments of staff members.

A team of outside experts had been recruited to plan and develop a job classification system covering all Professional category posts in the Secretariat, with the aim of providing equitable grading by ensuring that there would be a consistent relationship between the complexity of the duties of a post and the grade to which it was allocated. The development of the system was expected to be completed in 1977 with respect to posts subject to geographical distribution and those with special language requirements.

With regard to restructuring the General Service category, a seven-grade structure had been proposed to replace the existing five grades. The proposals had been drawn up for the United Nations Headquarters by a working group of representatives of the Secretary-General and the staff. The group had not been able, however, to reach agreement on all points and the Secretary-General proposed to refer the matter to the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC). Taking into account events in the previous year with respect to the salaries of General Service staff in Geneva, Switzerland, which had led up to a strike at the United Nations Office at Geneva (see above), the Secretary-General was making proposals to permit the immediate implementation of a job-classification study of the General Service category in Geneva, which would eventually be broadened to all other duty stations.

The report reviewed the implementation of various recommendations of JIU and AMS relating to recruitment, including those concerning a long-term recruitment plan, the roster of candidates and the use of competitive examinations and selection procedures. The report indicated that a long-term recruitment plan had been prepared to serve as a tool for estimating the annual recruitment needs for bringing the number of nationals of each Member State, in posts subject to geographical distribution, within its desirable range within a five-year period. Its utility, however, had been limited because of political and technical reasons: many over-represented States continued to seek the recruitment of their nationals, and some circumstances to be taken into account had proved to be difficult to predict, e.g. the number of posts needed over the succeeding five years could not be forecast accurately because budget size, scale-of-assessments changes and increases in membership were uncertain. The plan therefore did little more than highlight obvious recruitment needs.

The roster of candidates contained, as at 30 June 1976, information on over 5,000 candidates from nearly all Member States. During 1975, approximately 19 per cent of recruitment for the regular staff had been done on the basis of the roster. The report also stated that, by mid-year 1976, 26 staff members had been appointed after succeeding in competitive examinations held in 1974 and 1975 for candidates from the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom.

Among the subjects reported on concerning staff management were career development, performance evaluation, training and reorganization of personnel services. Studies were to be completed in 1977 prior to the establishment of an experimental career-planning committee for one of the main occupational groups in the Secretariat. Such systems would be tested before being instituted generally for the Secretariat to replace or supplement the Appointment and Promotion Committee.

The possibility of competitive examinations for qualified General Service staff as a prerequisite to their promotion to Professional posts was being studied.

A new system for evaluating the work of staff members had been established.

In the year ending 30 June 1976, 807 staff members at Headquarters had attended in-service training programmes. Similar programmes had been or were being established in other duty stations.

Both JIU and AMS had advocated the further delegation of authority by the Secretary-General under the Staff Regulations and Staff Rules. During the year, as much authority as possible had been delegated to the officers directly involved in the administration of the staff and only those decisions which had broad policy implications were retained centrally. The assumption of the delegated authority by offices away from Headquarters had been completed; at Headquarters, where it was being assumed by stages, it was expected to be completed by the end of 1976. The remaining personnel functions had been restructured to complete the planned reorganization of the Office of Personnel Services along substantive functional lines.

The Secretary-General concluded in his report that, while a large number of the steps recommended had already been taken, much further action was needed to apply fully all the approved recommendations.

The report of JIU briefly reviewed the implementation of the approved reforms, commented on the general character of the reforms recommended by the General Assembly in 1974, gave a tentative evaluation of the state of implementation, and recommended methods to be adopted to accelerate implementation of the reforms.

The Joint Inspection Unit concluded in its report that, while the effort already made was by no means negligible, and while preliminary studies or experiments were perhaps essential in order to carry out a set of reforms of such importance, the pace of implementation of the reforms was excessively slow. It suggested that, wherever possible, provisional measures aiming at the desired direction should be adopted, on the understanding that those measures would be adjusted and improved when, upon completion of a certain step in another sector, the final answers became clear. The adoption of new methods of implementation was suggested, particularly a detailed plan of execution of the reforms which were put forward in the report, with a view to their completion by the end of 1978.

In discussing the implementation of personnel policy reforms in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee of the General Assembly, several representatives, including those of France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the United States, expressed concern about the slow pace of the implementation of the reforms. Belgium, Japan and others endorsed the plan of execution of the reforms proposed by JIU in its report, subject to minor reservations. Canada and the United States urged the Secretary-General to issue a specific time-table for action which could follow the format suggested by JIU, although the content did not necessarily have to be the same.

A number of representatives, including those of France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States, were in favour of proceeding immediately with the job-classification programme. Belgium and Canada, among others, believed that a sound job-classification structure was essential for good staff/management relations. They noted, however, that several efforts to restructure the General Service category had been frustrated because of disagreement on the part of the staff. They pointed out that the right of the staff to be consulted on those reforms did not convey with it any power to make decisions, which rested with the Secretary-General. The representative of Japan felt that if the job-classification programme had been completed it would perhaps have been possible to avert the strike of staff at Geneva in February-March 1976. Belgium, Canada, France and the United States were among those Members that believed that the restructuring of the General Service category at all duty stations deserved absolute priority.

The representative of the Secretary-General said that the problems accumulated over 30 years could not be solved as simply and speedily as JIU appeared to believe. With respect to the restructuring of the General Service category, the Secretary-General believed that to have tried to carry out such a major reform without at least the acquiescence of the staff could have provoked a direct confrontation, which would have been contrary to the interests of the Organization. In the Secretary-General's view, the current difficulties stemmed from the lack of a satisfactory foundation for the policy concerning General Service salaries at the various duty stations, and that was why he had proposed to refer the matter to ICSC.

A number of representatives, including those of the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan, believed that the recruitment process was too slow, sometimes prompting qualified people to withdraw their applications, as had happened with some candidates who had been successful in recent competitive examinations for junior Professional posts. Japan held the view that, as the Office of Personnel Services appeared to have difficulties in finding posts for those people, there was need for a change in the relationship between the substantive departments and the Office of Personnel Services, which should be strengthened. The Federal Republic of Germany and Japan indicated they would welcome an increase in the use of the roster of candidates.

The representatives of the Upper Volta and the United States emphasized that information about vacancies should receive the widest possible circulation, especially with a view to safeguarding the interests of unrepresented or under-represented Member States.

With respect to staff management, Belgium, France and the Federal Republic of Germany felt that the General Assembly should be fully informed of the major management problems which the Administration was facing and of the obstacles which it had encountered in carrying out personnel reforms.

Japan and others observed that no drastic changes had taken place in the practice of promoting General Service staff to the Professional category towards the end of their careers. In Japan's view, junior grades in the Professional category should be reserved for qualified young applicants from the universities and elsewhere. While agreeing that General Service staff should not be promoted to the Professional category merely as a reward for long service, the Philippines said that General Service staff members should be allowed to take competitive exams and those who passed should be included in the roster of candidates and taken into consideration for Professional posts if no other qualified candidates were available to fill specific vacancies.

Japan noted the delay in developing a system of assignment planning, including a scheme for rotation of the staff between duty stations.

The representative of the Secretary-General informed the Committee that most of the General Service staff promoted to the Professional category in 1975 had pursued studies at the university level and were below 45 years of age. The Secretariat was undertaking a survey of the capabilities and experience of all General Service staff who had pursued higher studies and was preparing competitive examinations to identify those with appropriate qualifications for advancement to the Professional category.

The United States said it would have liked to have seen greater efforts undertaken to train staff in the principles and methods of modern management. Other States had reservations with regard to the JIU proposal to establish by the end of 1977 a preliminary project for pre-recruitment training for countries interested in a particular occupational group; the Federal Republic of Germany believed that that task should be entrusted to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research.

On 19 November 1976, the Fifth Committee approved by consensus a resolution sponsored by Algeria, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iran, Japan, Trinidad and Tobago, the United States and Yugoslavia. On 29 November, the General Assembly adopted the text by consensus as resolution 31/27.

By this resolution, the Assembly expressed concern at the slow pace of implementation of the personnel policy reforms approved in 1974 and asked the Secretary-General to take all steps to accelerate their implementation. It invited him to report to it in 1978 on the application of his proposals, drawing attention in particular to any of those proposals that might not have been fully implemented by that time.

Administrative Management Service

Acting on a 1975 recommendation of its Fifth Committee,<sup>20</sup> the General Assembly considered at its 1976 session the action taken over the previous five years on the recommendations of the Administrative Management Service and the results achieved, with a view to taking remedial measures if necessary.

For this review, the Fifth Committee had before it a report by the Secretary-General, as well as comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). The Secretary-General also presented a report on a proposed merger of the Administrative Management Service and the Internal Audit Service, consideration of which ACABQ proposed to defer to 1977 on the understanding that the question would be dealt with in the context of the programme budget proposals for 1978-1979.

The report of the Secretary-General divided the work performed to date by AMS into five categories: (1) survey of management and manpower utilization in the Secretariat; (2) productivity improvement projects; (3) special organizational studies; (4) other management improvement studies; and (5) advice and comments on specific management questions. It provided a description of the recommendations, the action taken thereon and the results achieved, and it contained the Secretary-General's over-all assessment of the actions taken and the benefits derived.

Among the steps needed to create and sustain a management climate that would have the necessary support of the staff were: more in-house management training; inclusion of each supervisor's management-improvement achievements in his performance evaluation report; closer examination of budget proposals to determine management-improvement efforts and implementation of AMS proposals; and the requirement that the Internal Audit Service monitor implementation of AMS recommendations.

The report concluded that implementation of the AMS recommendations had been achieved in varying degrees and, taken together, a large proportion of the important recommendations had been implemented. This, the report stated, represented an acceptable degree of success in an organization like the United Nations, although this should not imply that a better degree of implementation could not have been achieved or that the process of implementation had come to an end.

The Advisory Committee observed that often recommendations were implemented in form rather than substance, the results achieved were uneven and the full potential of the Service had not been utilized. The Advisory Committee also stated that, when the recommendations of AMS were in support of a demand for additional resources, they were embraced enthusiastically, but when the surveys found that the resources already available were adequate or that there was spare capacity, departments resisted its findings. The report concluded that if AMS was to fulfil its main task, which was to recommend improved methods, techniques and procedures for the best use of available resources, it must have the necessary independence, it should be staffed with a small cadre of individuals possessing the highest possible competence in the field of management, it should be made clear to staff at all levels that management-improvement efforts had the full support of the Secretary-General and, once it was decided that an AMS recommendation was in the Organization's interest, it should be implemented in full.

During consideration of the matter in the Fifth Committee, where it was discussed in the context of the programme budget of the United Nations for the 1976-1977 biennium, Belgium observed that the question of the future of AMS was only one aspect of the over-all question of machinery for administrative and budgetary control, investigation and co-ordination. The Committee approved, without objection, a proposal by its Chairman to the effect that the question of the future of the Service should be dealt with when the Committee considered the agenda item on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

Addressing the Fifth Committee, the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management suggested several possibilities for action to ensure that recommendations received the attention they deserved and to enhance the authority of AMS: e.g., departments might be required to answer recommendations in writing; progress reports could be made biannually; negotiations should continue on unaccepted important recommendations and perhaps arbitrated; a post of Inspector-General to oversee implementation might be established; and a system of annual reports of results to an authority outside the Secretariat, perhaps to ACABQ, might be instituted.

On 8 November 1976, the Fifth Committee, on the understanding that the question of the future of AMS would be dealt with separately under the item on over-all administrative and budgetary co-ordination, decided without objection, on an oral proposal by its Chairman, to recommend that the General Assembly take note of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ on the review of AMS recommendations and concur with the latter's observations and recommendations. The Fifth Committee's recommendation was subsequently approved without a vote by the Assembly on 22 December 1976, as section IV of its resolution 31/208.

On 29 November 1976, India, Japan, Jordan, the Netherlands, Sri Lanka, Turkey, the United Kingdom and Uruguay introduced a resolution in the Fifth Committee on the future activities of AMS which they said was intended to provide guidelines to strengthen AMS in its existing role and functions. The eight-power proposal, which was approved on the same date by the Fifth Committee and on 14 December by the General Assembly, both by consensus, became resolution 31/94 C.

Thereby the Assembly, noting with appreciation the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ; (a) reiterated its conviction that an effective and continuing management-improvement programme was essential to the efficient working of the Organization; (b) noted the view expressed by the Secretary-General that, despite an acceptable degree of success, further measures were needed throughout the Secretariat for securing better results; (c) noted the statement made in the Fifth Committee by the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management; and (d) agreed with the observations of ACABQ.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to put into effect the measures mentioned in his report to create and sustain an effective management climate, and asked him to implement a number of detailed instructions to strengthen the existing functions of the Service. He was also asked: to inform the Secretariat staff of his strong support for the Service; to give special attention to staffing AMS with individuals of the highest competence; to submit annually to ACABQ a report on management-improvement projects and other advisory services rendered; to ensure that the programme budget proposals reflected all benefits derived from the management-improvement efforts; and to report to the Assembly at its regular 1978 session on the results achieved.

The Advisory Committee was requested to draw the Assembly's notice to any problem requiring its attention and to submit views and recommendations on the report that had been requested of the Secretary-General for 1978, at which time the Assembly would review the question of administrative and management control of the United Nations.

Proposed changes in the level of top echelon posts of the Secretariat

The Fifth Committee, in its report to the General Assembly on 22 December 1976 on the programme budget for the biennium 1976-1977, informed the Assembly that it had taken note of a suggestion by the ACABQ Chairman that the proposals of the Secretary-General in a report on proposed reclassification of certain posts in the top echelon of the Secretariat not be considered at the Assembly's current session, but that they should instead be included in the Secretary-General's programme budget proposals for the 1978-1979 biennium.

The Secretary-General had proposed in the report to reclassify the posts of the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions and the head of the Office of Public Information from the level of Assistant Secretary-General to that of Under-Secretary-General, and the post of the Deputy High Commissioner for Refugees from the Director (D-2) level to that of Assistant Secretary-General.

Official air travel

On 22 December 1976 the General Assembly on the recommendation of its Fifth Committee took note of the annual report of the Secretary-General on standards of accommodation for official travel of United Nations staff by air for the period from 1 July 1975 to 30 June 1976. It decided that in future the Secretary-General should report to ACABQ on implementation of the Assembly's resolution of 18 December 1973,<sup>21</sup> which restricted first-class air travel. Should ACABQ consider it necessary, it was to bring relevant information to the Assembly's attention.

The recommendation to the Assembly was approved by the Fifth Committee without objection on 8 October 1976. The Assembly adopted it, without a vote, as section XI of its 11-part resolution 31/208, when it considered the Fifth Committee's report on the programme budget for 1976-1977. (For text of section XI of resolution 31/208, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The report of the Secretary-General cited six instances in which staff below the grade of Assistant Secretary-General were permitted to travel first-class by air instead of economy-class as called for in the 1973 resolution.

The General Assembly,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the review of action taken on the recommendations of the Administrative Management Service and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Convinced that an effective and continuing management improvement programme is essential for the efficient and economical functioning of the Organization and that this, in turn, requires a competent central internal machinery endowed with the necessary mandate and the maximum support of the Secretary-General,

Noting the view of the Secretary-General that, while "an acceptable degree of success" has been achieved in implementing the past recommendations of the Administrative Management Service, further measures are needed throughout the Secretariat for securing better results from management improvement efforts,

Noting also the statement made by the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management before the Fifth Committee on this matter, in particular paragraph 17 of the summary record containing that statement,

Agreeing with the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as contained in paragraphs 12 to 19 of its report, particularly those in paragraph 14,

1. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To put into effect promptly the measures mentioned in paragraph 67 of his report;

(b) To strengthen the existing role and functions of the Administrative Management Service by:

(i) Authorizing the Service to identify management problems or areas requiring management improvement and to examine and report thereon with specific recommendations as to action required;

(ii) Reviewing the reports and recommendations when received and by taking the necessary steps to ensure the prompt and effective implementation by the offices or departments concerned of those recommendations which he has approved;

(iii) Empowering the Service to monitor and, whenever necessary, assist in the implementation of recommendations which he has approved;

(iv) Calling upon the offices or departments responsible to report at six-monthly intervals on the progress being made in implementing the approved recommendations, together with any problems and difficulties encountered in the process;

(d) To give special attention to the matter of staffing of the Administrative Management Service so as to ensure that the Service is staffed at all times by individuals possessing the highest degree of technical competence;

(e) To submit annually to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions a report in summary form on the management improvement projects and other advisory services rendered by the Administrative Management Service during the preceding twelve months; such reports should also include:

(i) A complete list of all reports and recommendations made by the Administrative Management Service during the year, with an indication of the recommendations, or parts thereof, not approved by the Secretary-General;

(ii) A summary of the progress reports submitted during the past year in accordance with subparagraph (b) (iv) above, together with an evaluation by the Secretary-General of the benefits derived to date or expected to be derived in the future from the implementation of the approved recommendations dealt with in these reports;

(f) To ensure that the programme budget proposals, beginning with those for the biennium 1978-1979, reflect all the benefits derived from the management improvement efforts referred to in subparagraph (e) (ii) above;

(g) To report to the General Assembly at its thirty-third session on the results obtained through the application of the measures mentioned in paragraph 67 of his report and the procedure set out in the present resolution;

2. Requests the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions:

3. Decides to review, at its thirty-third session, the question of administrative and management control of the United Nations, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 1 (g) above and the views and recommendations submitted thereon by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Chapter II

Budgetary arrangements*The United Nations programme budget*Programme budget for the biennium 1976-1977

On 22 December 1976, at its thirty-first session, the General Assembly voted revised budget appropriations totalling $783,932,900 for the biennium 1976-1977. It also approved revised estimates of income in the amount of $126,887,300 (which included $110,149,800 to be derived from staff assessment on salaries and wages).

In accordance with the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the gross amount to be contributed by Member States for 1977 was set by the Assembly at $397,588,829; this amount included additional appropriations for the biennium 1976-1977 totalling $38,119,100 and took into account the balance available in the surplus account, certain revisions in the income estimates for the biennium 1976-1977 and contributions receivable from new Member States for 1975 and 1976. The gross assessment on Member States was to be offset by their respective shares in the Tax Equalization Fund in a total amount of $59,553,727.

These decisions were embodied in a three-part Assembly resolution (31/207 A-C). (For texts and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly's action was taken on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, on the basis of reports of the Secretary-General and recommendations thereon by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

On 17 December 1975, the General Assembly had approved an appropriation of $745,813,800 for the biennium 1976-1977 and estimates of income from various sources during the same period in a total amount of $118,292,300, or a total net appropriation of $627,521,500.<sup>1</sup>

On the basis of expenditure trends during the first six months of 1976 and the best available projection in respect of the rest of the financial period, the Secretary-General, in his report on the budget and programme performance for the biennium 1976-1977, submitted to the Assembly at its 1976 session supplementary estimates of expenditure in an amount of $13,300,500 and a reduction in the estimates of income in an amount of $282,800, or a total revised net appropriation for the biennium of $641,104,800. Changes in the rates of exchange, inflation, decisions of policy-making organs and other programme changes were indicated as contributory factors for the increased estimates.

The Advisory Committee recommended supplementary expenditure estimates of $11,169,600 and acceptance of the Secretary-General's revised estimate of income, or a total net revised appropriation for the biennium in the amount of $638,973,900, a reduction of $2,130,900 in the total supplementary estimates submitted by the Secretary-General.

The final figures approved by the Assembly—$783,932,900 for expenditures and $126,887,300 for income—were the consequence of additional revisions arising from financial implications of decisions taken during the Assembly's 1976 session on the basis of reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ, subsequent to the submission of the supplementary estimates. (For list of documents particularizing financial implications, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The revised estimates for 1976-1977 were voted on separately, section by section, in the Fifth Committee. The total additional appropriation of $38,119,100 for 1976-1977 was approved on 22 December by a recorded vote of 71 to 10, with 2 abstentions. The total additional income estimate of $8,595,000 was approved without objection.

China said it had not participated in the vote on the 1976-1977 programme budget in the Fifth Committee because it made reference to some expenditures to which it was opposed.

The USSR said it had voted against the revised appropriations because it was totally opposed to the practice of requesting additional appropriations in the middle of the budget period and because some of the funds requested would be used to finance illegal activities that contravened provisions of the United Nations Charter.

Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan expressed concern over the sizable growth of the budget at mid-point; Japan considered it imprudent to keep adding resources without having a clear-cut perception of over-all priorities and without terminating obsolete programmes. Of particular concern was the growing trend whereby many intergovernmental organs, including the Main Committees, made recommendations which in effect pre-empted the responsibility of the Fifth Committee. Belgium said it had abstained in the sectional votes on the Centre on Transnational Corporations and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

When the revised estimates for 1976-1977 were considered by the Assembly, the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine countries of the European Communities, stated that the Communities' members would vote in favour of the revised estimates in spite of their concern over the practice by the Secretariat and Member States of disregarding programme budget practices and submitting proposals leading to revised or supplementary estimates half way through the biennium. Moreover, the revised programme budget for the 1976-1977 biennium represented an increase of approximately 28 per cent over the final appropriations for the previous (1974-1975) biennium and would probably continue to increase at a time when many Governments were actively pursuing a policy of budgetary austerity. The nine countries would therefore expect the Secretary-General whenever possible to absorb cost increases in the coming year. In explanation of its abstention in the vote, the United States expressed similar concern.

The USSR explained its negative vote with the same concerns and also reiterated its objection to the inclusion in the programme budget of an appropriation for the financing of the amortization of the United Nations bond issue, which it considered to be in contravention of the United Nations Charter. It also confirmed its position of principle with regard to expenditure for technical assistance, which it believed should be met through voluntary contributions rather than by the programme budget which, it maintained, should cover only administrative expenditures.

Machinery for formulation, review and approval of programmes and budgets

Pursuant to a resolution it adopted on 20 November 1975,<sup>2</sup> the Assembly referred to the Economic and Social Council the recommendations of the Working Group on United Nations Programme and Budget Machinery for strengthening the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) on an experimental basis for 1976, and also recommended that the rest of the Working Group's recommendations be considered along with the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System (see pp. 374-75 for details).

At its organizational session in 1976, the Economic and Social Council decided, on 15 January, to implement certain recommendations of the Working Group on United Nations Programme and Budget Machinery, among which were:

- the terms of reference of CPC should be amended;

- in performing its functions, CPC should endeavour, in particular, to review the medium-term plan in off-budget years and the programme budget in budget years, recommend an order of priorities among programmes, interpret legislative intent, develop programme evaluation procedures and their use, co-ordinate activities within the system, and co-operate with ACABQ;

- CPC should be asked to undertake reviews and appraisals of the implementation of important legislative decisions to evaluate the extent of system-wide co-ordinated effort;

- procedures for joint consultations between CPC and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) should be strengthened;

- immediately after Assembly and Council sessions, CPC should co-operate with Secretariat departments to integrate new legislation into programmes;

- functional and regional commissions and committees should eventually formulate their medium-term work programmes between January and June of the year preceding the Assembly's consideration of the medium-term plan, co-ordinate their planning periods and make their programme categories identical or comparable.

These provisions were among those embodied in Council decision 139(ORG-76), proposed by the Council President and adopted without objection. Greece had orally amended the President's proposed text by adding a Council request that reports on system-wide co-ordination of economic co-operation among developing countries and on strengthening CPC/ACC consultation procedures be submitted to the Council's second 1976 session.

Other provisions of the decision concerned CPC's consideration of medium-term plans (see below).

On 14 May 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008(LX) by which it approved consolidated terms of reference for CPC acting as the Council's and the Assembly's main subsidiary organ for planning, programming and co-ordination. The Council also decided that it would review the new terms of reference, including the composition of CPC, in the light of the forthcoming recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System. (For text of resolution, see pp. 646-47.)

At its second 1976 session, on 5 August 1976, the Council adopted resolution 2039(LXI) dealing with the question of the review of the machinery of the United Nations and of its system for administrative and budgetary control, investigation and co-ordination. In the second section of the resolution, on programme evaluation, the Council inter alia requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its 1976 session a report which would describe possible changes in the terms of reference of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) to enable it to assist CPC and other appropriate intergovernmental bodies in carrying out their responsibilities for external evaluation. It recommended also that the Assembly take into account the Secretary-General's report, together with the relevant discussion in CPC and the report of the Ad Hoc Committee, when, at its 1976 session, it considered developing appropriate methods of external evaluation.

(For text of section II of resolution 2039(LXI), see pp. 644-45. Section I of this resolution concerned JIU; for text, see pp. 919-20.)

The Fifth Committee, on 20 December 1976, decided without a vote to recommend to the Assembly that it postpone consideration of the item on the review of the intergovernmental and expert machinery dealing with the formulation, review and approval of programmes and budgets until its 1977 session. On 22 December, the Assembly endorsed the Fifth Committee's recommendation, also without a vote, as decision 31/423.

Medium-term plan

When, on 15 January 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 139(ORG-76) on intergovernmental and expert machinery dealing with the formulation, review and approval of programmes and budgets, it amended the terms of reference of CPC in certain respects relating to medium-term plans (see section above). In addition, it asked the Secretary-General to submit the medium-term plan for 1978-1981, including the revised plan for 1977, to CPC for review at an extended May/June 1976 session of CPC and authorized that Committee to transmit its report on the proposed plan to ACABQ at the same time it submitted it to the Council.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination met in mid-year, for the first time under its new terms of reference, and was able to consider in depth the totality of the Organization's four-year medium-term plan for 1978-1981, which covered the 25 major programmes of the United Nations and involved some $2,000 million.

Following that consideration, CPC formulated a number of conclusions, recommendations and observations relating among other things to: the structure and presentation of the medium-term plan including the need for more information on system-wide activities and more-detailed financial background and the preferability of constructing the next plan solely on programme lines; unsatisfactory presentations, the reasons therefor and possible means of rectification; programme content; relative priorities and growth rates; programme co-ordination; substantive matters referred to CPC in the fields of human rights, international drug control, and the review of machinery for administrative and budgetary control, investigation and co-ordination (on which subject it submitted a draft resolution for consideration by the Council—see pp. 643-45); expansion of the sale of statistical publications; the future work plan of CPC; and other matters, including inter alia public information activities, public administration and finance, information systems and CPC/ACC consultation procedures.

After its Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee had discussed CPC's report and the four-year medium-term plan, during the Economic and Social Council's session in July-August 1976, the Council adopted resolution 2019(XLI), without a vote, on 3 August. Among other things, the Council thereby endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of CPC and commended them to the attention of the organs and institutions of the United Nations system, requesting those organs to support CPC fully as it investigated means of promoting the joint planning of programmes of common interest within the system.

The Council expressed confidence that the Secretariat would continue to do its utmost to improve the structure of the medium-term plan, taking into account CPC's and the Council's comments, conclusions and recommendations; the Assembly was also asked to take these into account in considering the medium-term plan for 1978-1981. The Secretary-General was asked to prepare an introduction to the plan outlining the directions United Nations activities should take in the medium term. Sufficient time and assistance for CPC to fulfil its tasks were also recommended.

The text was sponsored in the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee by Austria, Belgium, Kenya and Pakistan, where it was approved without a vote on 29 July 1976. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

When the Fifth Committee considered the Secretary-General's proposed medium-term plan for the period 1978-1981, it also had before it the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as well as reports by the Secretary-General and ACABQ, on implementation of the General Assembly's resolution of 17 December 1975<sup>3</sup> on presentation of the United Nations programme budget. In accordance with the provisions of that resolution, the Secretary-General reported on information he was requested to submit—and to take into account when considering the medium-term plan for 1978-1981—regarding programmes, projects or activities within the United Nations that were completed, nearly completed or considered to be obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective, as well as on steps taken towards reorganizing, merging or eliminating units within the Secretariat established for those programmes, projects or activities.

Commenting on the Secretary-General's report, ACABQ said the report had not been completely responsive to the Assembly's wish to identify areas where savings could be effected without detriment to the work of the Organization; however, as the report had been submitted halfway through a biennium, it would have been unrealistic to expect that large areas of potential savings would have been identified. The Advisory Committee recommended that a further review be carried out in 1977 and its results reflected in the programme budget proposals for 1978-1979. The Controller, in a statement to the Fifth Committee, said that the Secretariat would provide more information on this subject in the interim performance report on the programme budget; to provide detailed information in the medium-term plan on the completion or usefulness of all the programmes would have resulted in documentation that would have been too voluminous.

Another report before the Committee was a report by the Secretary-General on the implementation of the major recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit on medium-term planning in the United Nations system, on which ACABQ had not found it necessary to present a written report. The Secretary-General's report dealt with the response of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to the JIU report and with implementation of ACC decisions by the United Nations.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions did not consider the medium-term plan in depth, since that had been done by CPC, and made no specific recommendations, but confined itself to drawing the attention of the Fifth Committee to a few broad areas, including the nature and status of the plan, indicative budgetary projections, rates of growth, co-operation between CPC and ACABQ and programme evaluation. While CPC had regarded the structure and degree of detail of the plan as generally satisfactory and had concluded that the plan had the status of a proposal that intergovernmental bodies could request to be amended before it was approved, ACABQ felt the plan should be a briefer and more synthetic document which the Secretary-General should not be asked to amend; it should reflect his own appreciation of the situation, on the basis of deliberations, decisions, discussions and advice, and should propose directions in which United Nations activities might develop over the medium term, concentrating on changes in emphasis. It should also provide indicative budgetary projections, including the likelihood of availability of extrabudgetary resources.

On 24 November, Australia, Belgium, Egypt, Ghana, Kenya, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Trinidad and Tobago, and Turkey presented a draft resolution on the medium-term plan—twice revised to take into account, inter alia, the Secretary-General's report on implementation of the Assembly's 1975 resolution on outdated activities, amendments by Greece, the Philippines, Poland, the USSR and the Upper Volta, and other suggestions of representatives in the course of consultations and discussions.

On 26 November 1976, the Fifth Committee approved the nine-power resolution by consensus.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted the Fifth Committee's recommended text as its resolution 31/93.

The Assembly thereby expressed awareness of the need for further harmonization of programmes throughout the United Nations system, of the usefulness of the medium-term plan as an instrument for effective co-ordination of the system's activities, and of the roles of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in co-ordination, policy determination and priority selection. It took note with appreciation of the medium-term plan for 1978-1981 and accepted it, in the light of the recommendations and conclusions of CPC and ACABQ, as the framework for preparation of the programme budget for the 1978-1979 biennium. Each organization in the system was urged to plan its activities bearing in mind the planned programmes of the other organizations.

By other provisions of the resolution, the Assembly set forth an outline of the procedure according to which future medium-term plans should be prepared, indicating the organs which were to consider the plan and the basis on which they were to consider it, and stating that it was to become the principal policy directive of the United Nations. The remaining recommendations of CPC not embodied in the outline of procedures were also endorsed and appreciation was expressed for ACABQ's comments thereon.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to involve sectoral, functional and regional programme-formulating organs more closely in the planning and programming process, and urged those organs to refrain from undertaking new activities not programmed in the medium-term plan and the budget unless the Assembly determined they were urgently necessary. Supplementary estimates to expand or initiate activities would also need specific approval from the General Assembly.

The Assembly reaffirmed its 17 December 1975 resolution,<sup>4</sup> stressing in this connexion the Secretary-General's responsibility to draw to the attention of intergovernmental bodies obsolete, marginally useful or ineffective activities.

It decided that CPC was to function as the main subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination, and approved the terms of reference set out by the Council in resolution 2008(LX) (see pp. 646-47). It instructed CPC to recommend remedial action after it had reviewed in depth the major programmes of the medium-term plan, had determined programmes and programme elements that were obsolete, only marginally useful or ineffective, and had assessed the degree of co-ordination of selected programmes in the system.

In order to encourage Member States to be represented at a high level of expertise and to ensure the continuity of their representation in CPC, the Assembly decided that the Organization would bear, from 1978, the travel (on the basis of economy class) and subsistence (at standard rates applicable to Secretariat officials plus 15 per cent) expenses of one representative of each Member State on the Committee. This provision was a special exception to the Assembly's basic principles concerning the payment of such expenses from United Nations funds to members of United Nations organs. It was to apply for an experimental period subject to review at the Assembly's 1979 session.

The sponsors had further orally amended their last written version of the text to add parenthetically the specific travel and subsistence allowances authorized.

The Fifth Committee rejected—by a vote of 36 against to 19 in favour, with 37 abstentions—an oral amendment by Algeria to delete reference to payment of subsistence expenses. It then approved the paragraph relating to provision of expenses by 53 votes to 22, with 19 abstentions, in a separate vote requested by the Upper Volta. At the plenary meeting, the Assembly also approved the paragraph by a separate recorded vote of 81 to 21, with 22 abstentions, before approving the resolution, as a whole, by consensus.

Other matters pertaining to the United Nations budget

Costs of United Nations services to activities financed from extrabudgetary funds

A report on services provided by the United Nations to activities funded from extrabudgetary resources, which was before the Fifth Committee in 1976, was submitted by the Secretary-General in response to a number of interrelated decisions of the Assembly, mainly pursuant to decisions taken on 17 December 1975. By one decision, the Assembly had endorsed ACABQ's view on the establishment of posts previously financed from extrabudgetary resources;<sup>5</sup> by another it asked the Secretary-General to study, in consultation with the organizations concerned, the question of a more equitable distribution of the costs of services provided by several Secretariat services to activities financed from extrabudgetary funds, and to report on this to the Assembly in 1976.<sup>6</sup> A third decision related to JIU reports on the utilization of office accommodation.<sup>7</sup>

The Fifth Committee decided without objection, on 20 December 1976, on a proposal by the Byelorussian SSR, to postpone consideration of the item to the 1977 session and so informed the Assembly when, on 22 December, it submitted its report on the programme budget for the biennium 1976-1977.

Allocation of expenses between the United Nations budget and the UNEP Fund

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fifth Committee, took note of a report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a rationale for the allocation of expenses between the regular budget and the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). It also took note of the related report of ACABQ, and endorsed the conclusions therein.

The Advisory Committee had not recommended acceptance of a proposal by the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of UNEP that the Assembly and the UNEP Governing Council approve a 40:60 ratio as theoretically appropriate for the distribution of staff costs between the United Nations budget and the UNEP Fund. At the same time, it felt that the current policy, under which no posts were to be added to the regular-budget establishment of UNEP, need not be extended automatically beyond 1977. However, any proposals to increase the regular-budget establishment during the biennium 1978-1979, or subsequently, should be accompanied by full justification in terms of functions and grading and be consistent with Assembly decisions regarding current and future medium-term plans.

The Fifth Committee's recommendation to endorse ACABQ's conclusions was made on the basis of an oral suggestion by its Chairman, approved without objection on 9 December 1976.

The Assembly, without a vote, adopted and incorporated the decision into its resolution 31/208, as section V, when it considered the Fifth Committee's report on the programme budget for 1976-1977.

Resolution 31/93, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/31/400, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 14 December 1976, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee of Experts to Examine the Finances of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies, Recalling also its resolutions 3199(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3392(XXX) of 20 November 1975 and 3534(XXX) of 17 December 1975,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolutions 2008(LX) of 14 May 1976 and 2019(LXI) of 3 August 1976,

Having considered the medium-term plan for the period 1978-1981, chapter III, section H, and chapter VII, section A, of the report of the Economic and Social Council, the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its sixteenth session, the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the medium-term plan, the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the major recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit on medium-term planning in the United Nations system, the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 3534(XXX) and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, Conscious of the need for further harmonization of programmes throughout the United Nations system,

Aware of the usefulness of the medium-term plan as an instrument for effective co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system,

Aware also of the respective roles of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in co-ordinating decisions taken by sectoral and regional bodies, while providing over-all guidance, determining policy lines and indicating areas of priority,

Recalling that the need to improve and strengthen the evaluation process as part of planning, programming and budgeting has been recognized since the issue of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of Experts to Examine the Finances of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the medium-term plan for the period 1978-1981 and accepts it in the light of the recommendations and conclusions contained in the reports of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as the framework for the preparation of the programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979;

2. Urges each organization within the United Nations system to plan its activities, bearing in mind the related programmes planned or being carried out in other parts of the system;

3. Decides that the future medium-term plans of the United Nations should be prepared according to the following procedure:

(a) The draft medium-term plans proposed by the Secretary-General should embody:

- (i) A short statement on directions that United Nations activities should take in the medium term;
- (ii) A set of documents in which each major programme, developed in accordance with legislative decisions, is presented in a consolidated manner;
- (iii) The following financial information:
  - a. Any approved allocations in the current regular budget;
  - b. The actual extrabudgetary expenditure for the preceding year or biennium;
  - c. Estimates, in percentage terms only, of the proportion of each programme's allocations during the planning period that the Secretary-General intends to devote to each subprogramme;

d. Indications of the time-phasing of planned activities as far as practicable, by programme, subprogramme and programme element;

e. As appropriate and in so far as possible, approximate amounts allocated or expended (as in a. and b. above) on related activities by other organs of the United Nations system;

(iv) Preliminary and approximate indications of future costs under the regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources for the plan as a whole and by major programmes which would neither constitute ceilings nor be binding upon Member States;

(v) Appropriate information on how proposed United Nations programmes would relate to activities of other organizations of the United Nations system;

(b) The medium-term plan will be considered by the General Assembly in the light of the comments and recommendations of the Economic and Social Council, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions following the procedures adopted by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 139(ORG-76) of 15 January 1976;

(c) After approval by the General Assembly, the medium-term plan will constitute the principal policy directive of the United Nations which:

- (i) States the medium-term objectives to be attained in a four-year period;
- (ii) Describes the strategy to be followed to that effect and the means of action to be used;
- (iii) Gives an indicative estimate of the necessary resources in over-all terms and by major programme;

4. Endorses the remaining recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination not covered in paragraph 3 above and expresses appreciation for the comments thereon of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take measures to involve more closely the sectoral, functional and regional programme-formulating organs in the planning and programming process;

6. Urges those organs to refrain from undertaking new activities not programmed in the medium-term plan and the subsequent programme budget unless a pressing need of an unforeseeable nature arises as determined by the General Assembly;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure compliance with the planning and programme-budgeting procedure referred to above;

8. Reaffirms that supplementary estimates for expansion of existing activities or initiation of new programmes will be considered only after specific approval of the General Assembly;

9. Reaffirms its resolution 3534(XXX) and stresses the responsibility of the Secretary-General to draw to the attention of the competent intergovernmental bodies activities that are obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective, indicating the resources which could be released so that the bodies concerned may take the necessary action;

10. Decides that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination shall function as the main subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination and approves the consolidated terms of reference as set out in Economic and Social Council resolution 2008(LX);

11. Instructs the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in particular:

(a) To review in depth, on a selective basis, the major programmes of the plan and to recommend any necessary amendments to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly;

(b) To determine which programmes, subprogrammes or programme elements are obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective and to recommend, as appropriate, their curtailment or termination;

(c) To assess the degree of substantive co-ordination of selected programmes within the United Nations system and to recommend the appropriate action thereon;

12. Further decides that, in order to encourage Member States to be represented at a high level of expertise and to ensure the continuity of their representation in the body whose central role and over-all responsibilities are recognized, the Organization shall bear from 1978 onwards, for an experimental period and subject to review by the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session, as a special exception to the basic principles set out in paragraph 2 of Assembly resolution 1798(XVII) of 11 December 1962 concerning the payment out of United Nations funds of travel and subsistence expenses to members of organs and subsidiary organs of the United Nations, the travel (on the basis of economy class) and subsistence expenses (at standard rates applicable to officials of the Secretariat plus 15 per cent) of one representative of each Member State on the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination.

Financial emergency of the United Nations

The Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations, established by the Assembly on 17 December 1975,<sup>8</sup> met in April and May and between September and December 1976 to attempt to bring about a comprehensive settlement of the critical financial situation of the United Nations and recommend steps that should be taken to solve the financial problems of the Organization. Under its mandate, the Committee was also to examine the appropriate level of the Working Capital Fund and the financial regulations governing its operation.

The Negotiating Committee organized its work under three general headings, dealing with the financial problem as it related to the past, the present and the future. It recognized in its report that this procedure did not necessarily mean that separate agreements would be sought under each of three broad headings; the issues involved were interrelated and any settlement would need to embrace all aspects of the problem. It was agreed that any partial or interim solution of parts of the problem that could facilitate further progress towards a comprehensive settlement should not be precluded, and the need for reaching solutions by consensus in an atmosphere of compromise and conciliation rather than confrontation was stressed.

The Committee conducted its discussions and negotiations based on guidelines for a financial accord proposed by its Chairman. The guidelines recognized as a basic principle to guide the Committee's work the collective responsibility of Member States for the financial security of the United Nations in accordance with relevant provisions of the United Nations Charter, and contained possible elements of a comprehensive "package" solution.

As far as the future was concerned, the guidelines stressed the necessity for all Member States to make full and prompt payment of their assessed contributions to the regular budget in order to ease the existing cash liquidity crisis. In this connexion, it was recognized that the most important and politically sensitive issue in the Committee's negotiations was the question of eliminating the withholding by certain Member States, for reasons of principle, of their share of certain of the expenses provided for under the United Nations regular budget. The main item involved the amortization of the United Nations bond issue, and one of the key elements of the guidelines was a proposal that such costs be removed from the expenditure sections of the budget and be financed instead, to the largest extent possible, from unspent appropriations balances and from the income sections of the budget. The Financial Regulations of the United Nations, which require unspent balances to be credited proportionately to the assessments of Member States, would have to be suspended until the bond issue was fully amortized.

The need to meet the obligation to repay bond holders, opposition to the use of budgetary savings for financing the bond issue, meeting the costs through voluntary contributions, voluntary forfeiture of repayment by developed countries holding bonds and repayment of developing countries by voluntary contributions were among the views expressed in the Committee.

The Committee's report noted that issues of contention and discussion in the Committee concerned inclusion in the regular budget of expenditures related to the regular programme of technical assistance, opposed by some States as incompatible with the administrative function of the budget; meeting such expenditures entirely by voluntary contributions; assurances that removal of technical assistance expenditure from the budget would be compensated by increased contributions to the United Nations Development Programme; and payment of assessed shares for the regular programme in national currencies instead of United States dollars.

The report stated that the Secretary-General had not been able to accept non-convertible national currencies tendered in respect of assessments for the regular programme and had had limited success in utilizing them. As a result, $15.2 million remained unaccepted as at 31 December 1975.

One of the elements in the plan submitted by the Committee's Chairman was that the assessed contributions used for financing the programme should be paid in a form acceptable to the Secretary-General in accordance with the relevant Financial Regulations of the United Nations and decisions of the General Assembly.

The proposals included under the heading of "present" in the plan submitted by the Chairman reflected members' views regarding strict budgetary discipline, stressing: the importance of controlled budgetary growth; the need to economize and ensure optimum use of available financial resources and to curb waste, inefficiency and duplication of activities within the Secretariat; and the need for the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts with regard to identifying programmes, projects or activities completed, almost completed or obsolete and, accordingly, to reorganize, merge or eliminate units of the Secretariat.

Under the heading of "past," the Negotiating Committee was concerned with the "short-term" deficit of the United Nations, which was estimated at $109.1 million as at 31 December 1976, and was comprised of:

(a) amounts outstanding as a result of withholdings by some Member States, for stated reasons of principle, of their shares of assessed contributions in respect of certain items of the regular budget;

(b) amounts equivalent to the unused national currencies tendered in respect of financing technical assistance under the regular budget;

(c) unpaid assessments which were transferred to a special account pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 19 December 1972 relating to assessed contributions of China;<sup>9</sup>

(d) assessments in respect of the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) (1973), including the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, to which certain Member States announced they would not contribute for reasons of stated principle;

(e) obligations incurred in excess of available funds in respect of UNEF (1956) and the United Nations Operation in the Congo; and

(f) amounts due to certain Member States for reimbursable costs in connexion with peace-keeping operations.

The Chairman's guidelines proposed that the short-term deficit might be liquidated by means of a pledging conference, to be convened at the earliest possible date and open to all Member and non-member States. The aim of the conference would be to enable States to make voluntary contributions in cash and/or through cancellation of debts owed to them by the United Nations.

The Chairman of the Negotiating Committee pointed out that the question of the Working Capital Fund had not been included in his plan. He reported that during informal consultations many members had expressed the view that replenishment of the Fund would not in itself solve the financial problem and, in any event, if agreement could be reached on a package solution, the reasons for replenishing or increasing the Fund would need to be further examined.

The Negotiating Committee concluded that it was unable to reach a consensus on a solution to the financial difficulties of the Organization and, in its report to the Assembly, stated that it was not able to put forward recommendations for an agreed solution to those difficulties.

In submitting the report to the Fifth Committee, the Negotiating Committee Chairman said that one fact which had emerged was that the Committee had perhaps been established on the mistaken assumption that there had been a considerable improvement in the international climate since the events which had caused the financial emergency. The statements made and the negotiations and consultations which had taken place indicated, however, that the positions of Member countries had not changed and, unless they became more flexible, no agreement could be reached.

When the Fifth Committee considered the report of the Negotiating Committee on 21 December 1976, Argentina, Canada, Ghana, Greece, India, Ireland, Nicaragua and Pakistan proposed that the Assembly: defer consideration of the report until 1977; ask the Negotiating Committee to keep the financial situation of the Organization under review in order to promote a lasting solution to its financial problems and submit a supplementary report on further developments, if necessary; and include the item on the agenda of its 1977 session.

The Fifth Committee approved the eight-power proposal by consensus on the same day and the Assembly adopted it as its resolution 31/191 on 22 December, also by consensus. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The representative of Saudi Arabia also introduced a draft resolution in the Fifth Committee which he said he was proposing as a way of resolving the emergency. He requested that it be referred to the Negotiating Committee when it continued its efforts towards solving the financial difficulties of the Organization.

By this text the Assembly—inter alia noting that the problem of the chronic budgetary deficits afflicting the United Nations and the specialized agencies should be solved on a permanent basis to enhance efforts to maintain world peace and security, and considering the stupendous amounts spent on replenishing military arsenals with weapons, some of which, if used, might poison the biosphere and pave the way for the extinction of the human species—would reaffirm that there was no alternative to the United Nations for the deterrence of an apocalyptic world war. It would urge Member States to consider creating a special fund to save the United Nations and the specialized agencies from financial stringency, and appeal to Member States with armament industries to levy a tax of one half of 1 per cent on the value of their arms production and to remit the proceeds to the special fund, to be managed by unpaid trustees appointed by the United Nations.

Scale of assessments for apportionment of United Nations expenses

On 14 December 1976, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted two resolutions relating to the scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations for the year 1977 (the Committee on Contributions in its report to the Assembly had recommended a scale for three years: 1977-1979) and to the criteria used by the Committee on Contributions in its review of scales of assessment. In addition, the Assembly adopted a resolution whereby it enlarged the membership of the Committee on Contributions from 13 to 18. At the same time, the Assembly rejected a draft resolution recommended by the Fifth Committee which would have had the effect of maintaining the rates of assessment at the levels approved for 1974-1976 for those developing countries whose principal commodities had suffered sharp price declines since 1974.

Adjustments in calculating the scale of assessments

Introducing his Committee's report in the Fifth Committee, the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions recalled that at the Assembly's 1974 and 1975 sessions some representatives had expressed concern at the use of per capita income as the principal measure of capacity to pay.<sup>10</sup> The Chairman stated that in accordance with the terms of reference of his Committee it was the net national income of a Member State that was the principal measure of capacity to pay and that per capita income was used solely in calculating the relief to which Members might be entitled under the low-per-capita-income allowance formula (for the 1974-1976 scale, this formula had taken into account allowances—a maximum 60 per cent deduction—to countries with a per capita income of under $1,500). Nevertheless, the Committee had appreciated that national income expressed in monetary terms might not of itself fully reflect economic realities and had therefore examined at length possible alternatives. It had concluded, however, that there was no acceptable single comprehensive indicator which could substitute for national income as the principal measure of capacity to pay. Moreover, even if it were possible to develop such an across-the-board indicator, statistics for the purpose would be available on very few Member States.

The task devolving upon the Committee in its review of the scale of assessments for the triennium 1977-1979, continued the Chairman, had been an exceedingly difficult one. In previous reports to the General Assembly the Committee had warned that, despite the limited statistics available to it in 1974 and in 1975, it was discernible that the national economies of many developed and developing States had changed to such an extent that steep increases would be called for in the next scale, despite the Committee's practice of mitigating drastic shifts between scales. The years 1972-1974, the base years for the review of the scale, had been marked by profound changes in the world economy and the net national products of Member States had mirrored those unprecedented changes.

Turning to the low-per-capita-income allowance formula, in recognition of the rapid advance of per capita income and the lessened relief afforded many developing countries through the operation of the formula, the Committee had adopted, for the recommended 1977-1979 scale, a new upper limit of per capita income of $1,800 and a new maximum deduction of 70 per cent.

The base years (1972-1974) for the formulation of the new scale had been a period of substantial relative movements in domestic price levels, which had affected the current value of national income when expressed in dollars. The limitations of official exchange-rate conversions for purposes of international comparison were widely recognized, particularly in view of the growing instability of international money markets. While no suitable methods had been developed for a sufficient number of countries to reflect correctly the real purchasing power of individual currencies, the Committee had exercised every precaution to ensure that the interaction of relative price movements and exchange rates did not result in the over-assessment or under-assessment of any Member State. Similarly, where a substantial portion of the foreign-exchange earnings of a developing country was required for the servicing of external public debt, downward adjustments had been made in individual assessments to the extent possible.

The Chairman emphasized that it had been the unanimous view of his Committee that any modifications beyond those made by the Committee not only would have widened differences in the statistical and actual rate of assessment in the forthcoming and in future scales but would have been incompatible with the principle of capacity to pay.

Concluding, the Chairman drew attention to the fact that, following the Committee's 1976 session, the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and the Republic of South Viet-Nam had been unified as the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam. Consequently, the rates of assessment recommended for the two countries as non-member States were no longer valid. The matter would be reconsidered by the Committee at its next session.

Included in the Committee's report was a draft resolution recommended by the Committee on Contributions for adoption by the Assembly proposing a new scale of assessments for the triennium 1977-1979.

The Committee had also considered other matters at its 1976 meetings, including collection of contributions, payment of contributions in currencies other than United States dollars, and theoretical rates recommended for specialized agencies that had so requested them.

During the debate on the scale of assessments in the Fifth Committee, Member States expressed widely differing views regarding the recommended scale for 1977-1979. Several Members shared Iraq's opinion that the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions were highly anomalous and fraught with dangerous contradictions. They agreed with Iran, Kuwait and Yugoslavia that the criteria laid down by the General Assembly for the apportionment of the expenses of the Organization were outdated, ran counter to economic realities and should be redefined. China added that the criteria deserved criticism since, at a time when the gap between developed and developing countries continued to widen, sudden increases, some of which were substantial, were proposed in the assessment rates of developing countries. Saudi Arabia considered—and the Libyan Arab Republic and Qatar, among others, agreed—that such increases were all the more arbitrary when viewed in the light of considerable reductions recommended in the assessments of some developed countries. These developed countries included permanent members of the Security Council with special privileges under the Charter of the United Nations; those countries' special financial obligations arising from their special powers, according to Iraq, Japan and Uruguay, should be reflected in the scale of assessments for the regular budget as they were in the case of peace-keeping assessments.

Argentina and China, supported by many Members, insisted that contributions of developed countries should not decrease at the expense of developing countries. Cuba, Iran, the Libyan Arab Republic and Yugoslavia pointed out that developing countries' economies and capacity to pay were dependent on exports of non-renewable resources or on a limited number of commodities which were subject to price fluctuations. Their earnings, Nigeria added, were often eroded by the price of imports essential to development.

Iraq and Jordan pointed out that capacity to pay based on national income did not always correspond to the actual revenues of a State, especially in countries that needed increased revenues to develop their economies.

Algeria, Kuwait, Nigeria and Venezuela considered that too much attention was given to the recent acquisition of foreign currency by some developing countries and not enough to their domestic commitments for the development of infrastructure; this placed heavy demands on their resources.

Many of these States agreed with Iraq that implementation of the recommended scale be deferred for perhaps two years pending agreement on new criteria for the formulation of future scales. Kenya and Spain were among those that supported the inclusion of a fixed-percentage limitation on increases between scales. Japan suggested that the Committee on Contributions be requested to undertake an urgent study of the possibility of formulating new criteria and recommending a new scale based on data for 1973-1975, such a scale possibly being applied progressively over a three-year period of time.

A majority of those States taking part in the debate recognized the need for continued study of methods of measuring relative capacity to pay in order to reflect economic realities more adequately; they also recognized the need for better and more precise criteria for applying those methods. China felt greater emphasis should be placed on such mitigating factors as natural disasters. The Netherlands suggested placing more emphasis on such phenomena as economic recession, unemployment and fluctuations in domestic price levels; Nigeria, on the real value of the dollar, considering that countries that had to acquire a foreign currency sometimes paid more in real terms than the face value of their contributions; Argentina and Kenya, on external public debt; and India, on military expenditures. Kuwait proposed including industrial and agricultural capacity, infrastructure, rate of literacy, and assistance given to developing countries; the Libyan Arab Republic added demographic factors, inflation, technological problems, labour force, and availability of resources; Egypt and Iran proposed including in the criteria access to foreign exchange, economic and social status, national wealth pattern, per capita consumption of energy, primary commodities produced and consumed, structure of foreign trade, and effects of aggression and/or occupation.

Spain said there was no justification for allowing a scale of assessments to remain in force for three years; Belgium and Egypt said a new scale every year might be considered in order to avoid sharp fluctuations; India and Mexico thought the scale should correspond to the biennial budgetary cycle; the USSR said the duration of the scale should remain unchanged; while Canada contended that, when the world economic situation stabilized, the Committee should consider the possibility of using scales of even longer duration.

The Libyan Arab Republic and Yugoslavia were among those which suggested that the membership of the Committee on Contributions be expanded to provide for more adequate representation of developing countries and a greater degree of objectivity.

Referring to the statistics used by the Committee on Contributions, Members variously maintained that: superficial reliance on statistics could lead to meaningless and unjust conclusions; it was unrealistic for 1972-1974 to form the base years for a scale for 1977-1979—consideration should have been given to longer-term economic trends; the documentation of the Committee should be available to the membership at large; large increases in assessments should not be imposed without prior consultations with the States concerned and there should be more consultations between Governments and the Committee when drawing up the scale; and proposed increases or reductions should be explained in detail in the report of the Committee on Contributions.

On the other hand, a number of other Member States—including Australia, Austria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Italy, Kenya, Mongolia, Norway, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States—endorsed the recommended scale, pointing to the fact that it had been based on criteria and guidelines laid down by the General Assembly. An organization could not survive, Ghana stated, if its established procedures were attacked whenever they seemed to work against the interest of some members.

While expressing sympathy with a formal Nepalese proposal (see below) that the floor of the percentage assessment (0.02 per cent) be lowered in keeping with the principle of capacity to pay, the Federal Republic of Germany and others were opposed to a suggestion put forward by Iraq that the total percentage of the budget borne by the developing countries be reduced or remain stable as long as the gap between developed and developing countries continued to widen.

Australia, Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Ivory Coast and the Netherlands were among States that did not agree with the idea that United Nations expenses should be distributed among groups of States. The economies of individual countries varied greatly within any one group, the Federal Republic of Germany stated, and defining the various groups posed problems. Group assessment was incompatible with the individual responsibility of Member States to share the financial burden of the United Nations and with the principle of capacity to pay, as Belgium, France, Italy and others saw it.

The Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland and India were among those that believed that the principle of collective financial responsibility also placed a limit on the level of the minimum contribution.

It was generally the opinion of those Members supporting the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions that the new scale was a realistic reflection of the economies of Member States and, most importantly, of their capacity to pay. Nor could it be overlooked, Canada stated, that the criteria established for the formulation of some 20 scales had withstood the test of time and had survived a change in membership from predominantly developed to predominantly developing countries. If new criteria were to be developed, they should not be drawn up hastily.

In referring to a proposal variously stated by Chile, Iran, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Republic and Spain to limit increases between scales, the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions recalled that the Committee had imposed a limit of 10 per cent on such increases at one time. However, in 1950 the Fifth Committee had decided that the retention of such limitation would require that some States would for many years pay a contribution much lower than would be equitable in accordance with their capacity to pay.

In addition to the draft text proposing a new three-year scale of assessments for apportioning the expenses of Members that was submitted by the Committee on Contributions, three draft resolutions were also submitted by Member States in connexion with adjusting the scale of assessments. [For disposition of the text recommended by the Committee on Contributions, see p. 897.]

The Fifth Committee agreed without objection to a proposal by Kuwait that voting priority be given to draft resolutions of Member States over the draft resolution recommended by the Committee on Contributions.

The first resolution, submitted by Nepal, was twice revised and ultimately sponsored also by Afghanistan.

By this text, as amended and subsequently approved by the Fifth Committee and recommended for adoption by the General Assembly, the Assembly would recall earlier resolutions relating to recognition to be given to the low-per-capita-income countries in calculating their rates of assessment. Recalling that the capacity to pay of the least developed countries and those most seriously affected by economic crisis was being adversely affected by inflation and currency instability, the Assembly would recognize the need for reconsideration of the scale of assessments of those countries. Since the existing floor level was believed to be incompatible with the principle of capacity to pay, yet collective financial responsibility implied payment of at least a minimum percentage of the Organization's expenses, the Assembly—reaffirming capacity to pay as the fundamental criterion on which scales were based—would lower the floor for formulating and establishing the rates, with a minimum payment of no less than 0.01 per cent of the total expenses.

The Committee on Contributions would be asked to reflect this decision in formulating the next scale.

Provisions of the resolution later adopted by the Assembly went beyond those proposed by the sponsors of the draft as the result of amendments.

Thus, the Committee was asked to study, urgently and in depth, ways to increase the fairness and equity of the scale of assessments: by seeking improvements in the statistical measurement of the relative capacity to pay; by considering the possibility of mitigating extreme variations in assessments between scales, without departing essentially from the capacity-to-pay principle; by increasing the length of the statistical base period or by some other appropriate method; and by bearing in mind that capacity to pay might be subject to severe fluctuations in economic activity for a variety of reasons.

The Committee was also asked to justify in its reports any significant increases between scales, and to report in depth in 1977 on its findings so that the Assembly could consider action on a new scale.

Finally, the Committee's membership was to be enlarged by five members, as from 1 January 1977.

Although the sponsors had originally left it to the Committee on Contributions to decide on the effective date of the new floor, they had accepted an oral amendment by New Zealand that the decision would be reflected in formulating the coming (1980-1982) scale.

A Canadian amendment added the provisions calling upon the Committee on Contributions to study ways of increasing the fairness of the scale of assessments, providing guidelines for that purpose, requesting justification for increases between scales, and asking the Committee to report on its findings in 1977. Canada accepted an oral drafting proposal by Trinidad and Tobago and the Canadian amendments were adopted by the Fifth Committee by a roll-call vote of 50 to 33, with 39 abstentions.

The provision to increase the membership of the Committee resulted from an amendment by the Federal Republic of Germany approved in the Fifth Committee by 50 votes to 36, with 33 abstentions.

The sponsors, as well as Indonesia and Nigeria, stated that they were not able to accept the amendments submitted by Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany since they introduced new elements into the draft resolution. The sponsors said they had intended that the resolution deal solely with the question of lowering the floor, not membership and not such a controversial problem as that of criteria for establishing a scale.

The Fifth Committee then, on 3 December 1976, approved the 2-power text, as amended, by 74 votes to 0, with 47 abstentions. On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 122 to 0, with 4 abstentions, as its resolution 31/95 A. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The second draft resolution was submitted by Cuba. Although it was approved on 3 December 1976 by the Fifth Committee—by 34 votes to 26, with 62 abstentions—the General Assembly rejected it on 14 December by a recorded vote of 29 in favour to 29 against, with 66 abstentions.

By this text the Assembly, considering that the new triennial scale increased the rates of assessment of 27 Members, including 16 developing countries, would have taken account of the fact that inflation and currency instability during the base period (1972-1974) used for the formulation of the scale made it difficult to determine, or distorted, true capacity to pay. The Assembly would also have borne in mind that developing countries' capacity to pay was subject to strong cyclical variations and that the prices of various commodities had fallen sharply since 1974; it would have recognized that a substantial part of developing countries' capacity to pay in currency had to be devoted to importing, at increasing prices, the goods and services needed to promote their development.

The Assembly would have decided to maintain for 1977-1979 the current rates of assessment of the developing countries whose principal export commodities had undergone a sharp decline since 1974, in cases where the Committee on Contributions had recommended an increase; in addition, the corresponding readjustment was not adversely to have affected the developing countries' recommended rates.

While the operative provisions of the resolution would at that time have affected only two States, Cuba and Malaysia, whose rates would be thus maintained, Cuba contended that in the longer term any developing country in a similar situation would stand to benefit.

Kenya and several others expressed concern that adoption of the Cuban draft resolution would change the scale of assessments as recommended by the Committee on Contributions, pointing out that it was too restrictive in its approach and, as France and the Ivory Coast said, its implementation would be difficult in practice.

The third draft resolution was sponsored by Bahrain, Grenada, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mauritania, Nigeria, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela. The draft resolution, a revised text of which incorporated oral amendments by Japan, would have had the Assembly defer a decision on the new scale until its 1978 session and maintain the 1974-1976 scale for 1977 and 1978 pending a further review by the Committee on Contributions based on the debate in the Fifth Committee and taking into account additional criteria and guidelines for the formulation of a scale, including for this purpose: the gap between developed and developing countries; a decrease, especially for the least developed of the developing countries, in the floor assessment from the current 0.02 per cent; and the limitation of increases in individual rates of assessment between scales to 30 per cent. A progress report in 1977 and a final report with a new scale in 1978 would be requested. In addition, the Committee on Contributions was to be enlarged by three members from the developing countries.

A number of representatives opposed maintaining the 1974-1976 scale for a further two years, arguing that the percentage increases recommended by the Committee on Contributions were not so large in absolute terms and that perpetuation of the existing scale would impose inequities on many Governments.

It was further argued by Australia—as well as by Ghana, which said its view was shared by a number of countries in the Group of 77 developing Member States—that if the scale for 1974-1976 were to be maintained for two years, as called for by the 15-power text, the interests of developing countries whose economies had suffered reverses and whose assessments would be reduced under the proposed new scale would be sacrificed in favour of developing countries whose economies had improved and whose assessments would be increased accordingly.

Canada said it had serious difficulties and problems of principle with the draft, particularly regarding a 30 per cent limitation on rate increases. Its amendment to the Afghan/Nepalese draft had been submitted to propose a solution to mitigate extreme variation between scales, it said. Canada also proposed to amend the 15-power draft resolution. This amendment would call for adoption of the new scale of assessments recommended by the Committee on Contributions for two years—1977 and 1978.

The Federal Republic of Germany also proposed amendments to the 15-power text: (a) to call upon the Committee on Contributions to take account of the gap between "individual" developing and developed countries rather than between the two groups (withdrawn on the understanding that the capacity-to-pay principle applied to individual rather than groups of countries); (b) to delete reference to the 30 per cent ceiling; and (c) to call for the enlargement of the Committee by five members, omitting reference to the requirement that those members be from developing countries (superseded by approval of a similar amendment to the Afghan/Nepalese text).

The Upper Volta pointed out that for countries at the floor, whether it be at 0.02 or 0.01 per cent, an increase of a minimum of only 0.01 per cent in the scale percentage would represent a scale-to-scale increase of 50 or 100 per cent respectively. Ghana agreed that there was the danger, therefore, that with a limitation of 30 per cent some countries would never rise above the floor level, whatever their national income. In supporting the amendments proposed by Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany, France and Iceland were among those that said they could not endorse any proposal that deferred a decision on the new scale, that imposed restrictions on increases, that detracted from the principles of collective responsibility and capacity to pay or that replaced a system for the formulation of scales of assessment by impartial experts with one based on political considerations.

Iran said the sponsors of the draft resolution could not accept the Canadian amendment, which would deprive their resolution of its whole purpose. Nor could they accept the amendments of the Federal Republic of Germany, which would negate a generally accepted concept that the situation of developing countries was very different from that of developed countries. Furthermore, deletion of a fixed-percentage limitation on increases in any Member's contribution would negate the intent of one of the provisions of the 15-power draft resolution, which was to ensure that future increases would be gradual.

Iraq pointed out that the Canadian amendment—which among other things proposed that the new scale of assessments recommended by the Committee on Contributions be adopted for two years—had already been implicitly rejected by the Fifth Committee when it had approved the Cuban draft resolution, since that resolution provided that the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions were not valid for two countries (Cuba and Malaysia) for three years. Algeria, Greece, Kuwait and Spain said they considered the Canadian amendment to be a device to overturn the Fifth Committee's decision to give priority to Members' draft resolutions in that it echoed provisions, only slightly altered, of the draft resolution proposed by the Committee on Contributions.

In response to a request by Canada for a legal opinion on the validity of its amendment, the Legal Counsel indicated that it did constitute an amendment under the rules of procedure, and should be read in the light of the draft resolution that Cuba had sponsored. Thus the Legal Counsel interpreted the amendment as calling for the approval of the scale recommended by the Committee on Contributions for two years, except—in the light of the Cuban-sponsored text—for two States whose rates for that period (as well as for an additional year) would be maintained at the 1974-1976 level (0.02 per cent) and except for a consequential readjustment in the rates for a few developed countries to redistribute the 0.04 per cent difference. According to the Counsel, reconsideration of the decision already taken on the Cuban text would not be required if either the Canadian amendment or the 15-power draft resolution were approved; neither would the amendment or the 15-power text require a two-thirds majority for approval.

Algeria, Iraq and Kuwait were among those that raised strong objections to the opinion delivered by the Legal Counsel. It was for the Committee on Contributions, they maintained, to make such consequential adjustments as were required following the approval of the draft resolution that Cuba had proposed. Japan and Saudi Arabia also questioned the validity of the amendment.

Belgium, the Byelorussian SSR, the Federal Republic of Germany, Kenya and the Ukrainian SSR considered that the Canadian amendment, which provided for adoption of the new scale for two years, represented an acceptable compromise with the Committee on Contributions' three-year scale.

In view of the disagreement on the Legal Counsel's opinion, Canada requested that a vote be taken on the opinion. At the suggestion of Spain, however, the Committee instead, on 6 December 1976, adopted a motion by a roll-call vote of 46 to 45, with 36 abstentions, that the Canadian amendment would require a simple majority for approval. The Fifth Committee then adopted the amendment by a roll-call vote of 56 to 46, with 29 abstentions.

In addition, on 6 December the Fifth Committee rejected, by a roll-call vote of 50 against to 36 in favour, with 44 abstentions, the amendment of the Federal Republic of Germany to delete reference to the 30 per cent rate-increase ceiling.

Following a procedural debate on whether a separate vote, requested by Algeria and Iran, could be taken on the paragraph of the 15-power resolution amended by Canada or whether that would entail reconsidering a decision already taken, the Committee approved the request for a separate vote by 52 to 46, with 25 abstentions. The Committee then proceeded to adopt the amended operative paragraph by a roll-call vote, requested by the Byelorussian SSR, of 55 to 47, with 26 abstentions.

The sponsors of the 15-power draft resolution, in explanation of vote, then said that since the draft resolution as amended was in direct conflict with the original purpose of their draft resolution—to defer the adoption of a new scale for two years—they would vote against it.

The Fifth Committee rejected the amended draft resolution on 6 December by 62 votes against to 26 in favour, with 34 abstentions.

Scale of assessments for the financial year 1977

The Committee on Contributions included in its 1976 report to the General Assembly a draft resolution for adoption by the Assembly proposing a new scale of assessments for the contributions of Member States to the United Nations budget for the triennium 1977-1979. It also included proposed assessments for new Members as well as for non-member States that participated in certain United Nations activities and conferences.

Algeria and India proposed an amendment to the draft text, which the sponsors said had the agreement of the Group of 77 developing Member States and other regional groups, by which the Assembly would adopt the scale recommended by the Committee on Contributions for the year 1977 only, and would have that Committee re-examine the scale in 1977 (rather than 1979) and report to the Assembly that year. In addition, the Committee would be required, by the provisions of an added paragraph, to draw up future scales on the basis of: the criteria laid down in the Afghan/Nepalese resolution, approved on 3 December (see section immediately preceding), as well as the criteria contained in the Committee's report; the continuing disparity between the economies of developed and developing countries; the possibility of avoiding excessive variations of individual rates between successive scales; and the current debate in the Fifth Committee.

The amendment was adopted by consensus and the draft resolution was approved by the Fifth Committee without objection on 14 December 1976. On the same day the Assembly adopted the text by consensus as its resolution 31/95 B. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A table showing the percentage scale of assessments and net contributions payable for 1977, with comparable percentage amounts for 1976, appears below.

Enlargement of the Committee on Contributions

On 14 December 1976, in connexion with its earlier approval of the Afghan/Nepalese draft resolution (see above)—which inter alia called for the enlargement of the membership of the Committee on Contributions to 18—the Fifth Committee, on an oral proposal of its Chairman approved without a vote, recommended that the Assembly amend its rules of procedure to read accordingly, with effect from 1 January 1977. On the same date the Assembly adopted the text without objection as its resolution 31/96. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 582(VI) of 21 December 1951, 665(VII) of 5 December 1952, 1927(XVIII) of 11 December 1963, 2118(XX) of 21 December 1965, 2961 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972 and 3062(XXVIII) of 9 November 1973 relating to the additional recognition to be given to the low per capita income countries in calculating their rates of assessment in view of their economic and financial problems,

Recalling that the capacity to pay of the countries recognized by the United Nations as the least developed among the developing countries and those most seriously affected is being adversely affected, inter alia, by inflation and currency instability,

Recognizing the need for reconsideration of the scale of assessments of the least developed countries and those most seriously affected in order to help them meet their priorities at home and to allow the adjustment necessary for these countries,

Believing that the existing arrangement of assessment at the floor level is incompatible with the principle of capacity to pay,

Believing also that the collective financial responsibility implies that all Member States pay at least a minimum percentage of the expenses of the Organization,

1. Reaffirms that the capacity of Member States to contribute towards the payment of the budgetary expenses of the United Nations is the fundamental criterion on which scales of assessment are based;

2. Decides to lower the floor for purposes of formulating and establishing the rates of assessment;

3. Requests the Committee on Contributions to reflect this decision in formulating the coming scale of assessments in so far as purely practical and technical limitations in calculating permit, which should be understood to mean a minimum payment of no less than 0.01 per cent of the total expenses of the Organization;

4. Also requests the Committee on Contributions to study urgently and in depth ways and means of increasing the fairness and equity of the scale of assessments in the light of views expressed by Member States at the thirty-first session of the General Assembly, in particular by:

(a) Seeking improvements in the statistical measurement of the relative capacity to pay, including new or additional statistical indicators and criteria;

(b) Considering the possibility of mitigating extreme variations in assessments between two successive scales, without departing essentially from the principle of the capacity to pay, either by increasing the statistical base period from three years to some longer period or by any other appropriate method;

(c) Bearing in mind the fact that the capacity to pay of Member States may be subject to severe fluctuations in economic activity for a variety of reasons;

5. Further requests the Committee on Contributions to embody as appropriate in subsequent reports of the Committee the particular justification for any significant increases in the assessment of any Member State between two successive scales;

6. Requests the Committee on Contributions to report in depth on its findings to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session with a view to enabling the Assembly to consider early action on a new scale;

7. Decides to enlarge the membership of the Committee on Contributions by five members, effective 1 January 1977.

(b) As an exception to rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, the scale of assessments given in subparagraph (a) above shall be reviewed by the Committee on Contributions in 1977 when a report shall be submitted to the Assembly for its consideration at its thirty-second session;

(c) The Committee on Contributions shall draw up future scales of assessments, on the basis of:

Other administrative and budgetary questions*United Nations information policies and activities

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization up to mid-1976, the Secretary-General stated that the Office of Public Information had continued to make intensive efforts to gain broader public understanding of, and support for, the aims and activities of the United Nations. As in previous years, the Office was again aided in its work by the Consultative Panel on Public Information, which the Secretary-General convened on 11 and 12 March 1976 to advise him on United Nations information policies and activities. The Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), a subsidiary organ of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, continued to provide the framework and impetus for intensified co-ordination and co-operation between the Office of Public Information and the information services of other members of the United Nations system. The Centre for Economic and Social Information, as the secretariat of JUNIC, was acting as a focal point for a plan of action consisting of specific proposals for combined activities starting in 1977 and for an exchange of information on the information programmes of the various organs of the United Nations system, aimed at avoiding duplication and harmonizing activities on certain common themes.

The Secretary-General also submitted separate reports to the General Assembly on the United Nations information centres system and on the Yearbook of the United Nations.

United Nations information centres system

Reporting on the results of an over-all review of the information centres system, which had been initiated in 1973, the Secretary-General examined the roles the centres played in serving the United Nations system, the structure of the information network and the function of its staff. He also provided an assessment of the system's structure and operations and a general outlook for the future, including the possible availability of extrabudgetary resources. The Secretary-General provided examples of action currently being taken to improve the efficiency of the information centres system.

He concluded that the field establishment of the Office of Public Information was indispensable for the information activities of the Organization, but that the information centres network required strengthening. However, given the current budgetary situation of the Organization, the extent to which the required strengthening and further expansion of the system could be undertaken would depend, to an important degree, on the willingness of Member States to shoulder an increased share of the cost of the centres that directly served them.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) noted with interest the Secretary-General's plan to seek additional resources from other members of the United Nations family and from Member States to supplement budgetary appropriations for the information centres system, expressed the hope that his endeavours would be successful and welcomed efforts to co-ordinate activities between the centres and the field offices of other international organizations.

On an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee decided on 21 October 1976, without a vote, to recommend that the General Assembly take note of the report of the Secretary-General and concur in the comments and observations made by ACABQ. The Assembly approved this recommendation on 22 December, also without a vote, and included its provisions as section II of resolution 31/208 on questions relating to the programme budget for the biennium 1976-1977.

Yearbook of the United Nations

The report of the Secretary-General on the Yearbook of the United Nations was submitted in response to a decision taken by the General Assembly at its 1975 session,<sup>1</sup> whereby the Secretary-General was requested to explore ways and means of ensuring a more timely publication of the Yearbook without impairing its quality and high standards as an objective reference work. His recommendations were based on those of a working group he had established to explore methods to speed up production of the Yearbook.

To deal with the backlog in the production of the Yearbook, as well as to ensure its more timely issue in the future, the Secretary-General requested additional staff resources for the Office of Public Information and the Department of Conference Services, with financial implications amounting to $108,500 in 1977 and $136,500 in 1978. The Secretary-General also reported that, since the preparation of the Yearbook involved the submission of manuscripts by various departments and offices, he had instructed each contributing department and office to designate a senior liaison official to ensure that contributions of a satisfactory quality were submitted on schedule. The Secretary-General felt that with these measures it should be possible, beginning with the 1977 Yearbook, to publish each volume within 18 months after the conclusion of the period covered by it.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions expressed the view that the root of the problem lay in the low priority assigned by departments and offices to the preparation of their submissions, and that the answer to the Yearbook's difficulties did not lie in the addition of permanent staff to the Yearbook Unit in the Office of Public Information; it recommended a reduction of $31,200 in the Secretary-General's request for both 1977 and 1978. At the same time, it expressed disappointment that the Administrative Management Service had not been consulted and that there was no indication in the report of what alternative methods had been explored. The Advisory Committee urged that the Yearbook's problems be re-examined with greater emphasis on improving the timeliness and quality of departmental submissions and the possibilities of redeployment of the manpower of the Office of Public Information.

During the discussion in the Fifth Committee, Pakistan proposed that the Committee should also endorse the recommendations made by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) at its May-June 1976 session—when it discussed the Yearbook in the context of the medium-term plan for 1978-1981—to the effect that the Secretary-General should give this important publication the high priority it deserved by reassigning adequate resources, by ensuring the timely submission of reports and by streamlining production methods, and that the Yearbook should be ready within a year after the end of the regular session of the General Assembly, without prejudice to its recognized quality and standards of objectivity. Pakistan subsequently said it had decided not to press the proposal in view of the apparent contradiction between the 18-month target mentioned by the Secretary-General and the 12-month target recommended by CPC. At the same time, Pakistan expressed confidence that, after the current backlog in the production of the Yearbook was cleared, the Secretary-General would make every reasonable effort to achieve a 12-month target without requesting additional funds.

On 28 October 1976, based on an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Fifth Committee decided, without objection, to recommend that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report. It further decided, by 69 votes to 9, with 1 abstention, to recommend that the Assembly concur with the comments and observations of ACABQ and, by 68 votes to 12, with 4 abstentions, that the Assembly approve the financial recommendation of the Advisory Committee.

The General Assembly approved these recommendations on 22 December, by a recorded vote of 117 to 10, with 3 abstentions, and included them as section I of its resolution 31/208.

The United Nations Postal Administration

In 1976, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and at overseas offices exceeded $7 million. (Revenue derived from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes is retained by the United Nations; revenue from stamps used for postage purposes from United Nations Headquarters in New York is retained by the United States Postal Service, in accordance with an agreement between the United Nations and the United States Government. Similarly, revenue from stamps used for postage from the Palais des Nations, Geneva, Switzerland, is retained by the Swiss Postal, Telephone and Telegraph Enterprise in accordance with an agreement between the United Nations and the Swiss Government.)

Five commemoratives, five definitives and two souvenir cards were issued in 1976.

Four new definitives—in denominations of 3 cents, 4 cents, 30 cents and 50 cents—were issued on 9 January.

The first commemorative stamp, issued on 12 March in denominations of 13 cents and 26 cents and 0.90 Swiss francs, was for the World Federation of United Nations Associations (WFUNA). A souvenir card was issued at the same time.

The theme of the second commemorative, issued on 23 April, was the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). This stamp was issued in denominations of 13 cents, 31 cents and 1.10 Swiss francs.

On 28 May, the third commemorative—for Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements—was issued in denominations of 13 cents and 25 cents, and 0.40 and 1.50 Swiss francs. On the same date, a new poster and a book entitled "25 Years of Philatelic Highlights" were released as part of the United Nations Postal Administration's twenty-fifth anniversary celebration.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations Postal Administration was commemorated on 8 October with stamps issued in denominations of 13 cents and 31 cents, and 0.80 and 1.10 Swiss francs. A special twenty-fifth anniversary souvenir folder was also issued on this date.

The fifth commemorative issue for 1976 paid tribute to the World Food Council on 19 November, in denominations of 13 cents and 0.70 Swiss francs. A souvenir card and a 9-cent definitive were issued at the same time.

By the end of 1976, United Nations stamps were available for purchase in local currency to collectors in 82 countries outside the United States.

The number of first-day covers serviced for the various issues in 1976 was as follows:

Pattern of United Nations conferences

The Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session for 1976 and at its two regular 1976 sessions, approved certain changes in and additions to the previously approved calendar of conferences for 1976 and 1977<sup>2</sup> for itself and its subsidiary bodies.

Notable among these changes was a decision (140(ORG-76)) adopted on 15 January 1976 to accept the invitation of the Government of the Ivory Coast to hold the first part of the Council's sixty-first session in Abidjan; by decision 155(LX) of 14 May, the Council decided to convene that session on 30 June 1976. [It ended on 9 July, and the second part was held in Geneva, Switzerland, from 12 July to 6 August 1976.]

Other provisions of those two decisions postponed and then set a date in October 1976 for convening the joint meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (see pp. 636-38). By decision 155(LX) the Council also authorized the Commission on Transnational Corporations to hold a resumed session in June 1976 to consider nominations of persons to assist the Commission, in accordance with a Council resolution of 5 December 1974.<sup>3</sup>

Another decision which the Council took on 15 January (137(ORG-76))—relating to adoption of its basic programme of work for 1976 and allocation of its agenda items to various subsidiary bodies for consideration—concerned, inter alia: setting the dates for the 1977 session of the Commission for Social Development; requesting the Secretary-General to undertake the consultations provided for in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights<sup>4</sup> and to prepare a note on recommendations to be formulated on procedures for the Covenant; and endorsing certain criteria relating to documentation, as contained in a report of the Secretary-General on publications and documentation (see section below).

By decision 141(ORG-76), adopted on the same date, the Council postponed a session of a working group of the Committee for Development Planning.

On 5 August and 27 October, the Council approved a number of additional changes in its calendar for the remainder of 1976 and for 1977 by decisions 189(LXI) and 195(LXI). These related to sessional changes for subsidiary bodies concerned with science and technology and their regional and working groups, for the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and their working groups, for working groups of the Committee for Development Planning, and for the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, the Eighth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Far East, the United Nations Water Conference, the Committee on Natural Resources, the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on Corrupt Practices, and the Commission on the Status of Women.

These decisions were all based on proposals of the Council President, the Secretary of the Council or the Secretariat, and were adopted without a vote.

The Committee on Conferences, in the second year of its mandate, continued to deal with requests for intersessional departures from the approved calendar of conferences involving additional financial implications or significant administrative changes. Among those bodies for which the Committee approved changes in dates or place of meeting were the Ad Hoc Committee on the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Disarmament and the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.

On the question of conference services for informal meetings, the Committee decided that, since such meetings were by definition unplanned, it was unnecessary to provide for them in the calendar but that, in view of their usefulness, the Secretariat should continue to provide meeting space and interpretation services for them as they occurred, within the limits of its existing resources.

The Committee had been divided on the question of the introduction of a quota system to allocate available conference facilities among various fields of activity and would continue to study it.

In its report, the Committee on Conferences submitted to the General Assembly's 1976 session the draft calendar of conferences for 1977 and a tentative calendar for 1978, along with recommendations, many of which it incorporated in a draft resolution it submitted for adoption by the Assembly. The Committee reaffirmed that the principle set forth by the Assembly in its resolution of 16

December 1969<sup>5</sup>—according to which United Nations bodies should meet at their own headquarters unless a Government invited them to meet in its territory and agreed to defray any additional costs involved—should be observed subject to certain exceptions approved in the 1969 resolution or subsequently approved by the Assembly.

Among its further recommendations was that a sufficient time should be allowed to elapse between sessions of the same body to permit Member States to assimilate the material presented in each session and to prepare adequately for the next. The length of the interval was to be determined by the body concerned. Also, the Council's subsidiary organs were not to create new bodies requiring additional resources without the Assembly's prior approval.

The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, on 9 December 1976, after considering the report of the Committee on Conferences, adopted without objection the 2-part draft resolution which was contained in the Committee's report and which gave general expression to its recommendations.

The proposed calendar of conferences and meetings for 1977 would be adjusted to reflect changes and additions made during the current session and certain other minor changes that did not entail financial implications. The Fifth Committee also took note, without objection, of the section of the report of the Economic and Social Council relating to the Council's calendar of meetings.

The text recommended by the Fifth Committee was adopted on 17 December 1976 by the General Assembly by consensus, as resolution 31/140, section I of which concerned the pattern of conferences.

Mexico did not press to a vote its oral amendment to include consultation with and acceptance by the bodies concerned as a provision of the general principle that United Nations bodies were to meet at their respective headquarters unless otherwise approved by the Assembly. Likewise, a USSR oral amendment to that principle, enabling the sessions of the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to be held alternately in New York and Geneva, was also withdrawn, in favour of a suggestion to remit the question to the Committee on Conferences.

Section II of resolution 31/140 was concerned mainly with documentation, except for a provision by which the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to specify, in the statement of financial implications accompanying a draft resolution calling for the establishment of a new body, which conference services were to be provided.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1202(XII) of 13 December 1957, 1851(XVII) of 19 December 1962, 1987(XVIII) of 17 December 1963, 2116(XX) of 21 December 1965, 2239(XXI) of 20 December 1966, 2361(XXII) of 19 December 1967, 2478(XXIII) of 21 December 1968, 2609(XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2693(XXV) of 11 December 1970, 2834(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, 2960(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3351(XXIX) of 18 December 1974 and 3491(XXX) of 15 December 1975,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee on Conferences established by General Assembly resolution 3351(XXIX);

2. Approves the draft calendar of conferences and meetings for 1977 set forth in annex I to the report;

3. Takes note of the tentative calendar of conferences and meetings for 1978 set forth in annex II to the report;

4. Reaffirms the general principle that, in drawing up the schedule of conferences and meetings, United Nations bodies shall plan to meet at their respective established headquarters, with the following exceptions:

(a) The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme may, in accordance with its rules of procedure, hold one of its sessions at the United Nations Office at Geneva;

(b) The sessions of the International Law Commission shall be held at Geneva;

(c) The sessions of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law may be held, subject to the provision in section II, paragraph 6, of General Assembly resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, alternately at Headquarters in New York and at Geneva;

(d) The regular summer session of the Economic and Social Council may be held at Geneva provided that the closing date falls at least six weeks before the opening of the regular session of the General Assembly;

(e) The functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, other than the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, shall meet - at their established headquarters unless a more rational pattern of the work programme can be achieved by holding their sessions at Geneva, that decision being without prejudice to any subsequent decision to hold them at Vienna;

(f) The regular sessions of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic Commission for Latin America, the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Western Asia, as well as meetings of their subsidiary bodies, may be held away from their headquarters when the commission concerned so decides, subject, in the case of regular sessions of the commissions, to the approval of the Economic and Social Council and of the General Assembly;

(g) The International Civil Service Commission shall hold its regular annual session at Headquarters and, if more than one session is required in any one year, it may accept an invitation from one of its participating organizations to hold its other session or sessions at the headquarters of that participating organization;

5. Decides that United Nations bodies may hold sessions away from their established headquarters when a Government issuing an invitation for a session to be held within its territory has agreed to defray, after consultation with the Secretary-General as to their nature and possible extent, the actual additional costs directly or indirectly involved;

6. Requests the Committee on Conferences and the Secretary-General to take account of the following principles in drawing up the draft calendar of conferences and meetings:

(a) The biennial calendar of conferences and meetings approved by the General Assembly shall govern the meetings programme during the period concerned;

(b) All United Nations meetings shall be carried out within the resources allocated by the General Assembly for that purpose;

(c) Between sessions of the General Assembly, departures from the calendar may, in special or unusual circumstances, be approved by the Committee on Conferences, provided that changes affecting the subsequent year of the biennium shall be approved by the Assembly;

(d) Subsidiary organs of the General Assembly shall not, without the approval of the Assembly, create new standing bodies or ad hoc sessional or intersessional bodies that require additional resources, and other principal organs of the United Nations should make similar decisions with regard to their respective subsidiary bodies, if they have not already done so;

(e) An adequate interval of time, to be determined by the body concerned, shall be allowed between sessions of the same bodies to permit Member States to derive maximum benefit from the activities and to provide sufficient time for the preparation of future activities;

(f) United Nations bodies shall meet at their respective established headquarters, subject to the exceptions to this principle approved by the General Assembly;

1. Takes note of the action taken by its subsidiary organs and by the Secretariat to apply the criteria established by General Assembly resolution 3415(XXX) of 8 December 1975 and urges all bodies to continue their efforts to rationalize their meeting records;

2. Reiterates its appeal to subsidiary bodies to consider the application to their subsidiary bodies of criterion 6, according to which such bodies should cease to be provided with meeting records of any kind;

3. Reaffirms that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the International Law Commission should continue to receive records in both provisional and final form;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to specify, in the statement of financial implications accompanying a draft resolution calling for the establishment of a new body, which conference services are to be provided;

5. Reaffirms its decision that statements may be reproduced in extenso only if they serve as bases for discussion and after statements of financial implications have been presented to the bodies requesting them.

Publications and documentation of the United Nations

The main aspect of United Nations documentation under consideration in 1976 was meeting records, for which the General Assembly had, by its resolution of 8 December 1975,<sup>6</sup> adopted new and more economical procedures, which it had asked the Committee on Conferences to monitor. The new procedures were based on criteria, proposed by the Secretary-General and modified by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, to be applied in determining which bodies should be provided with meeting records and what type of records should be issued.<sup>7</sup>

The Economic and Social Council took steps at its organizational session in January 1976 to apply the new procedures to its records and those of its subsidiary bodies.

By decision 137(ORG-76)—adopted on 15 January on a proposal by the Council President—which dealt mainly with the basic programme of work of the Council for 1976 (see also section above), the Council endorsed criteria whereby the main organs were invited to observe the same guidelines as the General Assembly in deciding whether records should be provided for their subsidiary bodies; the Council also asked the Secretariat to apply the guidelines to the sessions of its subsidiary bodies, including the criterion whereby, on an experimental basis in 1976, the Secretariat should issue summary records of Council sessional committees and subsidiary bodies so entitled in initial general distribution only, subject to corrigenda to remove serious errors.

With effect from 1 January 1977, subsidiary bodies otherwise entitled to receive meeting records would dispense with them when meeting away from recognized United Nations conference centres. Also, the Council's summary records should be limited to 15 pages per meeting of 2½ to 3 hours and efforts should be made to reduce summary records of subsidiary bodies to 10 pages per meeting of the same length. The Council authorized the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to continue to receive meeting records.

Later in the year, in discussing arrangements for future consideration of the rationalization of its work, the Council decided that at the first meeting of each session of any of its subsidiary bodies the Chairman should propose, and the subsidiary body should decide on, a limited number of substantive items for which summary records would be required. The decision was based on part of a United Kingdom proposal adopted without a vote as Council decision 153(LX). (See also p. 375.)

from the new procedures resulted from application of the criterion that the records of all meetings other than plenary meetings of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council should, as an experiment in the 1976-1977 biennium, be issued in initial general distribution, subject to the issuance of corrigenda to remove serious errors, instead of in provisional and then in final corrected form. The Committee on Conferences noted with satisfaction in its report that the new system had worked well thus far, but noted that its value could be more fully assessed after its application to the Main Committees of the Assembly at its 1976 regular session.

The Committee also noted that practical difficulties had arisen in getting subsidiary bodies to dispense with meeting records for agenda items of lesser substantive importance and to omit such records for procedural and valedictory items.

The Committee reported that for the most part bodies receiving meeting records wished to maintain them in their existing form. The Committee was informed, however, that the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development had decided to dispense with summary records for its main committees, as had the Special Committee on the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for its sub-committees.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the trend in certain conferences and other bodies of resorting to informal off-the-record meetings at the negotiating and decision-formulation stage.

At the Assembly's 1976 session, in connexion with the examination of the pattern of conferences, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee approved on 9 December, without objection, a two-part resolution submitted by the Committee on Conferences. The Assembly adopted the text by consensus on 17 December, as resolution 31/140.

By section II of that resolution, the Assembly took note of the action taken by its subsidiary organs and the Secretariat to apply the criteria it had established on 8 December 1975 and urged all bodies to continue their efforts to rationalize their meeting records. It reiterated its appeal to subsidiary bodies that their subsidiary bodies should cease to be provided with meeting records of any kind. The Assembly reaffirmed that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the International Law Commission should continue to receive both provisional and final records. At the same time it reaffirmed its decision of 8 December 1967<sup>8</sup> that statements were to be reproduced in extenso only if they served as bases for discussion and after statements of financial implications had been presented.

Technological innovations in the production of documentation

Also before the Fifth Committee in 1976 was the question of technical innovations in the production of publications and documentation. Having been invited at the previous session to pursue the question with vigour,<sup>9</sup> the Secretary-General engaged in 1976 a firm of consultants, who reported that substantial savings could be achieved by introducing computerized methods of text-processing at all stages of production and recommended the phased introduction of the new process.

In a report to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General sought funds for a pilot project involving text-editing capacity in the Stenographic Services. This question was among those postponed by the Committee for lack of time at the end of the session, on a proposal by the Byelorussian SSR.

Office accommodation and extensions to United Nations conference and office facilities

United Nations accommodation

Expansion and improvement of facilities at United Nations Headquarters

The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee had before it at the General Assembly's 1976 session a report of the Secretary-General by which, pursuant to feasibility studies he had carried out, he submitted to the Assembly his proposals for the expansion of meeting rooms and improvement of conference servicing and delegate facilities at United Nations Headquarters in New York. The Secretary-General estimated the cost of his proposals for carrying out the project in 1977 at $3.8 million; the proposals were estimated to involve a potential outlay of some $47 million over a four-year period beginning in 1977.

In its related report, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) concurred in the Secretary-General's proposals for expansion of the General Assembly Hall, the Trusteeship Council Chamber and main Conference Rooms 1, 2, 3 and 4, and improvement of the facilities of the Security Council. It also recommended that he review his proposals and submit revised plans in 1977 in connexion with an extension of the basement area under the north lawn, relocation of services and restoration of areas in the Conference Building's second and third basements resulting from that extension, a new Secretariat cafeteria and additional air-cooling equipment. It recommended that proposals relating to remodelling of the smaller conference rooms, extension of the north façade of the Conference Building and construction of a new main conference room not be accepted. The Advisory Committee recommended an appropriation of $2.4 million for 1977 to allow the Secretary-General to proceed with the development stage of the project.

The Secretary-General's proposals included three choices offered by architects to expand the seating capacity of the General Assembly Hall. The Advisory Committee recommended acceptance of "option 2." It would seat two delegations at each table; instead of the existing arrangement of six seats for each delegation, there would be only four, with an extra seat on the aisle. The Advisory Committee ruled out the first option because it would deprive one of the three delegations at each table access to an aisle, and it noted that the third option—three delegates' seats at each table and three alternates' seats behind—would require placement of some tables far from the podium and sharply reduce the number of seats available for other purposes.

With reference to ACABQ's recommendations, Trinidad and Tobago orally proposed the following:

The Fifth Committee recommends to the General Assembly that it shall not decide on any one option with respect to the seating arrangement to be used in the reconstruction of the General Assembly Hall, but that it should appropriate the sum of $2.6 million for the biennium 1976-1977 leaving all options on seating arrangements in the Assembly Hall open, on the understanding that the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with Member States, will inform the Secretary-General, by 31 January 1977 at the latest, on the option that is acceptable to Member States and, on the basis of this, the Secretary-General will proceed with his plans and report to the Assembly at its thirty-second [1977] session.

The proposal of Trinidad and Tobago was adopted by 62 votes to 9, with 3 abstentions, on 21 December 1976. An oral proposal by the Fifth Committee Chairman was then approved, by which the Committee recommended that the Assembly take note of the reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ and concur with various ACABQ recommendations regarding the proposed expansion as summarized in its report, but that action on ACABQ's recommendation pertaining to options on the seating arrangements in the General Assembly Hall be deferred in accordance with the procedure outlined in the proposal of Trinidad and Tobago.

These proposals were incorporated in a resolution recommended for adoption by the Assembly, which the Assembly adopted on 22 December, by a recorded vote of 121 to 10, as its resolution 31/195.

By a note of 25 February 1977, the Secretary-General transmitted a communication dated 7 February 1977 from the Assembly President regarding his consultations with the regional groups at the United Nations. The option most acceptable to Member States, the President said, was the third option, accepted by the African, Asian, Eastern European and Latin American groups without reservation.

However, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Malta, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey and the United Kingdom

—States belonging to the group of Western European and other States—jointly recorded their views on the matter in a letter of 4 February to the President, which was annexed to the Secretary General's note. Among other things, these States noted the general move away from the option recommended by ACABQ and the general consensus in favour of an arrangement giving six seats to each delegation, but they were not persuaded that the best way of giving six seats to each delegation was afforded by the option chosen by the other groups, and considered that the matter needed considerable further study. They suggested an informal meeting of delegations to discuss and analyse the question before the next Assembly session.

The Assembly President, however, reported that this suggestion had not been acceptable to the other groups. Thus the Secretary-General, on the basis of the President's report and as requested by the Assembly in its resolution, said he had instructed the Secretariat to proceed with the preparatory work for reconstruction of the General Assembly Hall in accordance with the schedule proposed in his earlier report to the Assembly.

Utilization of office accommodation

During the General Assembly's 1976 session, the Fifth Committee considered three reports of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) that it had deferred from earlier sessions.<sup>10</sup> The reports dealt with utilization of office accommodation in the United Nations system; utilization of office accommodation at United Nations Headquarters; and office accommodation provided for extrabudgetary staff in the United Nations system, i.e. personnel employed by the United Nations but paid from sources other than the regular budget (through special accounts, trust funds and so forth).

The Fifth Committee also had before it related reports containing comments and recommendations of the Secretary-General, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

The Advisory Committee agreed in general with the recommendations of JIU and the Secretary-General. It called attention to the elements of uncertainty in predicting future space requirements at United Nations Headquarters because of the difficulties of anticipating future decisions of the General Assembly and suggested that such predictions be evaluated in that light. In its opinion, the long-term policy for accommodation of staff in New York should be based on rental of the minimum additional space required, bearing in mind current administrative, financial and political considerations and the slowing of the rate of growth at Headquarters by the transfer of functions to other locations when appropriate. It agreed with JIU that the authority of the Office of General Services to manage space should be reinforced.

With regard to the question of office accommodation for extrabudgetary staff, ACABQ noted that there was no uniform approach to this problem in the United Nations system and explained that it was awaiting additional reports on the subject before it commented further. It noted that the Secretary-General would be submitting to the current Assembly session, in the context of his progress report on the programme budget, a separate report on the general question of the costs of support services, including costs of accommodation provided from the regular budget to extrabudgetary activities (see p. 881).

The Secretary-General reported that ACC's Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions had considered the matter and expressed the view that the question of office accommodation for extrabudgetary staff could not be separated from the larger question of over-all support services for extrabudgetary activities. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination shared this view and said it intended to deal with the matter in that context.

On 8 December 1976, the Fifth Committee decided without objection, on a suggestion by its Chairman, to recommend to the General Assembly that it take note of the reports of JIU, the observations thereon by the Secretary-General and ACC, as well as the related reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ, and that it concur with the comments and observations of ACABQ contained in its report.

On 22 December, the Assembly adopted the recommendation of the Fifth Committee without objection as decision 31/425.

United Nations accommodation in Addis Ababa, Bangkok, Nairobi and Santiago, and extension of the Palais des Nations

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note of the performance reports of the Secretary-General, and the report of ACABQ thereon, regarding United Nations accommodations in Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Bangkok (Thailand) and Santiago (Chile), United Nations accommodation in Nairobi (Kenya), and extension of the Palais des Nations in Geneva (Switzerland).

The Secretary-General stated that the construction of the extension of Africa Hall in Addis Ababa was completed and that an increase of about $500,000 over the amount the Assembly had appropriated for the project was attributable to inflation and to unforeseen delays in construction.

With regard to new buildings for the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific in Bangkok, the Secretary-General reported that construction had been completed within the amount of $7,920,000 appropriated by the Assembly.

The construction of the Documents Research Centre in Santiago had also been completed at a cost of $997,012, a large part of the cost having been provided by a trust fund.

In his report relating to arrangements being made for planning the construction of permanent headquarters for the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in Nairobi, the Secretary-General indicated that the preliminary plans for the project and the related costs would be submitted to the Assembly in 1977.

With regard to the projects relating to the extension of the Palais des Nations, the Secretary-General indicated that they had been completed and that the total construction cost was approximately 124.2 million Swiss francs, i.e. 2.8 million below the 127 million Swiss francs authorized by the General Assembly.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions commented briefly in a related report on the Secretary-General's statement of the costs involved in the projects. In addition, the Advisory Committee stated that it had been informed that the temporary facilities constructed for UNEP in Nairobi in 1975 would be incorporated into the final plan for its permanent headquarters.

On 15 December 1976, the Fifth Committee, when considering the programme budget for 1976-1977, decided without objection to recommend that the General Assembly take note of all the reports.

On 22 December, the Assembly accepted the recommendation of the Fifth Committee and incorporated its decision as section VI of its 11-part resolution 31/208, which the Assembly adopted without a vote. (For text of section VI of resolution 31/208, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Utilization of office and conference facilities at Vienna

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/194, by which it took certain decisions with respect to the Secretary-General's report on the utilization of office accommodation and conference facilities at the Donaupark Centre in Vienna, Austria.

The report of the Secretary-General was submitted in compliance with an Assembly resolution of 16 December 1975,<sup>11</sup> wherein the Secretary-General was requested to enter into consultations with Governments of United Nations host countries, other than that of Austria, which might be affected by United Nations accommodation decisions in respect of Vienna and to present a comprehensive report on the optimum use to be made of the office space which was being provided to the United Nations at Donaupark.

In his report, the Secretary-General inter alia proposed a plan of action whereby the Assembly would agree to take over from the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) an eight-storey tower known as Tower A-2, originally intended for IAEA needs, in order to meet future requirements of the United Nations.

Consequent upon such an agreement, the plan of action proposed by the Secretary-General would involve the transfer of existing organizational units from New York and Geneva (or for the establishment of new units in Vienna should the Assembly so decide) on the basis of a time-table based on an assumed rate at which the new accommodation would come into use—set out in an annex to the report—which would result in the rational and economic use of the Donaupark complex and full occupancy within a relatively brief period of time (by 1983).

The Secretary-General's phased plan called for the transfer from New York or Geneva of 500 staff members in the Professional and higher categories over a five-year period. Phase I of the plan would take place in 1978 when the first units—the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (from New York) and the Social Affairs Division (from Geneva)—could be scheduled for transfer. Phase II would be in 1979, and phase III would be a projection of further possibilities at an early date.

In its report, ACABQ stated its opinion that a decision to accept space in Tower A-2 had to be predicated on a commitment to make early use of it and trusted that the Secretary-General's assumptions as to the growth rates at New York and Geneva would be proved correct and provide an adequate basis for the operation of his plan and for the effective utilization of available space in Vienna. The Advisory Committee noted, with reference to the costs involved, inter alia that there were a number of uncertain elements in the Secretary-General's proposals as to which units would actually be located in Vienna and that various costings contained in his report were equally hypothetical because of uncertainties as to currency fluctuations, rates of inflation and local salary movements.

When the Secretary-General's report was discussed in the Fifth Committee, Austria, the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Bulgaria, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, the Libyan Arab Republic, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Senegal and

Zambia submitted a draft resolution on the question. As amended, the text was approved by consensus by the Fifth Committee on 20 December 1976 and adopted in like manner by the Assembly on 22 December as its resolution 31/194.

By this resolution, the Assembly among other things approved the Secretary-General's recommendation relating to Tower A-2 and authorized him to enter into arrangements with IAEA and Austria to that effect. It also approved the phased plan of action set out in his report and authorized him to put into effect the proposals relating to phase I and some proposals relating to phase II (affecting, in particular, certain units involved in the narcotics field and the International Trade Law Branch of the Office of Legal Affairs, which also serves as the secretariat of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law). At the same time he was to ensure that the success of the United Nations Decade for Women and the 1980 world conference on the Decade would not be adversely affected by the transfer of staff.

The Secretary-General was asked to report regularly on implementation of the resolution, as well as to report in 1978, in conformity with the guidelines described in the Assembly's 1975 resolution,<sup>12</sup> on concrete proposals to ensure that at the end of the phased plan of action the objective set out in his report—the best, quickest and most economical use of the Donaupark complex—would be attained.

The reference to the Decade for Women and its conference was added by an amendment by Algeria and Iran, which was accepted by the sponsors.

The sponsors also accepted amendments submitted jointly by Algeria, Belgium and Iran, containing the authorization to put into effect the proposals approved pertaining to phases I and II and the request that the Secretary-General submit proposals in 1978 to ensure that the objective set out in his report was attained. Belgium joined the sponsors of the three-power amendment after a similar amendment it had submitted jointly with France had been withdrawn. It had contained a request for a report in 1977 on revised proposals for phase II, consistent with the principle that every effort should be made to establish and maintain cohesive groupings of units with similar functions at the same locations and taking the current debate into account.

Mexico also proposed a draft resolution which it did not press to a vote, in view of the acceptance of the amendments to the 26-power resolution. By the operative provision of the Mexican text, the Assembly would have: agreed that the United Nations should take over Tower A-2 and authorized the Secretary-General to make the appropriate arrangements with IAEA and the Government of Austria; and requested him to submit in 1977 revised specific proposals to attain the objective stated in his report, which should be compatible with the principle of functional groupings and take into account the current debate.

Joint Inspection Unit

Reports of the Joint Inspection Unit

Two reports of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1976 concerned technical co-operation: one was an extract from a report on some aspects of the technical co-operation programme of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU); the other was on technical co-operation provided by the United Nations system with regard to Latin American integration. Comments by the Secretary-General and by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on both reports were also received, as well as comments on the second report by executive heads of the specialized agencies concerned.

The first report was an extract and summary of those parts of the original report—overhead costs, regional offices, development of human resources and the role of ITU in relation to the new international economic and social order—which JIU considered might be of interest to the United Nations. The full report was submitted for action to ITU and UNDP and its recommendations were directed only to those two organizations.

The subject was chosen primarily because of the growth of activities in the technical co-operation field in ITU, the increasing importance of telecommunications to the developing countries, and the need to relate the work of the United Nations agencies closely to the Second United Nations Development Decade and to the establishment of a new international economic order. Special emphasis was placed on the interdisciplinary approach.

The purpose of the second report was to study the nature and scope of the technical co-operation which the United Nations family was providing to the processes of integration in Latin America and to chart some possible courses of action. Emphasis was placed on the social aspects of integration in their broadest sense. The main recommendations of the report specified, inter alia, that: wherever possible, technical assistance projects should be given a mandate for integration; growing emphasis should be placed on projects related to social integration; in programming intercountry projects, the United Nations agencies should work closely with the regional or subregional agencies of integration; co-operation should mainly take the form of operational projects which, as far as possible, should be executed by the agencies of integration themselves; and sufficient backstopping should be provided to the various processes of integration. No decision was taken in 1976 on this report.

A JIU report on fellowships in the United Nations system was also submitted to the General Assembly. The report noted that, despite all the efforts made in the field of training, there had been no systematic attempt, on a system-wide basis, to assess the effectiveness and results of those efforts. Moreover, co-ordination and co-operation in the matter of fellowships between the donor United Nations organizations were still inadequate. The main recommendations of the report placed particular emphasis on the need and methods to: improve programming procedures; reduce delays; rationalize the choice of the type and duration of a given fellowship; widen the range of host institutions; rationalize and strengthen evaluation procedure and build it into a fellowship programme; and decentralize to the field as many operations as possible. No decision was taken in 1976 on this report.

Two other reports submitted by JIU to the General Assembly in 1976 concerned certain aspects of a strike at the United Nations Office at Geneva, Switzerland, from 25 February to 3 March 1976 (see pp. 853-55) and the implementation of personnel policy reforms approved by the General Assembly in 1974 (see pp. 870-72).

Continuation of the Unit

In a resolution adopted on 24 November 1972,<sup>13</sup> the General Assembly decided to evaluate, at its 1976 session, the work of the Joint Inspection Unit, whose mandate was to expire on 31 December 1977. For this purpose it requested the views of the Secretary-General (as chief administrative officer of the United Nations and as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC)), the governing bodies of the specialized agencies, the Economic and Social Council, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and JIU itself, as well as comments and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

These views were presented to the Assembly in 1976 in a series of documents. All bodies recommended that JIU continue in operation beyond 1977 but there were divergent views as to the precise nature of its mandate—e.g. whether it should be established on a permanent basis, guarantees of its independence, its size, the method and duration of appointment of Inspectors, collective or individual responsibility, mode of co-operation, financing arrangements, and the nature and extent of evaluation functions. The reports of ACC, JIU and ACABQ contained either revised terms of reference or draft statutes for consideration by the Assembly.

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, adopted a two-part resolution by which, in the first operative section, it recommended inter alia that the General Assembly maintain JIU in operation and establish its mandate, stressing its independence and its essential function of assisting intergovernmental bodies in assessing the execution of programmes and defining necessary reforms. The Council also recommended that the Assembly consider adopting proposals on the Unit's mandate made in JIU's report, relating inter alia to: its direct responsibility to the Assembly and other participating organizations; confirmation of appointment of the Inspectors by the Assembly; their investigatory and recommendatory powers, their independence, and their individual and collective responsibilities; preparation of the Unit's work programme; and types of reports and application of approved recommendations.

By a provision of the second operative section of the resolution, concerned with evaluation, the Council inter alia requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly in 1976 a report, together with JIU's comments, describing possible changes in the Unit's terms of reference that would enable it to assist CPC and other bodies in exercising their external programme-and-activity-evaluation functions.

(See also pp. 643-45 and 878-79.)

Adopted by the Council without a vote as resolution 2039(LXI), the text had been sponsored in the Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee by Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Pakistan and the United Kingdom. It was approved by that Committee without a vote on 29 July.

(For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

tary-General on the possible role of JIU in the field of evaluation. The report contained, inter alia, a suggested provision for possible inclusion in JIU's revised terms of reference which would indicate the Unit's external and internal evaluation responsibilities.

If it were to be entrusted with the evaluation functions envisaged by the Economic and Social Council, JIU by the terms of this provision would, at the request of the appropriate intergovernmental bodies, assist them in carrying out their external evaluation responsibilities as well as advise participating organizations on their methods of internal evaluation. For these purposes it would carry out studies of methods used and periodically assess results, and could also undertake ad hoc evaluation of specific programmes and activities. Attention was also drawn to the financial implications of entrusting the Unit with evaluation as well as inspection functions.

In the course of the debate on the question of the continuation of JIU at the General Assembly's 1976 session, which took place mainly in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, divergent views were expressed on the composition and terms of reference of the Unit. The Fifth Committee decided, on 22 November 1976, to create an informal working group and to entrust the representative of Italy with the task of co-ordinating consultations with a view to formulating a common position on the various proposals. The compromise text of the draft statute of JIU submitted by this working group was annexed to a draft resolution submitted by Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, France, Ghana, India, Kenya, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, Yugoslavia and Zambia. These texts, as amended, were approved by consensus by the Fifth Committee on 14 December 1976 and adopted by consensus by the General Assembly on 22 December as resolution 31/192.

The main features of the statute of JIU, which was to go into effect on 1 January 1978, were:

- the Unit, to be located in Geneva, was to be a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly and of the legislative bodies of United Nations organizations accepting the statute;

- the number of Inspectors, to serve in their personal capacities for a term of five years, renewable once, was increased from eight to a maximum of 11, appointed by the General Assembly (instead of, as in the past, by the Secretary-General) in accordance with a selection procedure in which Member States, the Assembly President, the President of the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General in his capacity as Chairman of ACC were to participate; due regard was to be paid to the principles of equitable geographical distribution and of reasonable rotation;

- the Inspectors were not to be considered staff members but were to have the status of officials of the United Nations, and to receive the salary and allowances of staff members at the Director (D-2) level, step IV;

— Inspectors were not to accept other employment during their term nor serve as an official or consultant of an organization accepting the statute for three years after their term ended;

— the Inspectors were to have the broadest powers of investigation in matters relating to the efficiency of services and proper use of funds, providing an independent view through inspection and evaluation aimed at improving management, methods and co-ordination, and proposing reforms or making recommendations; however, they did not have the power of decision;

— the Unit was to determine its own standards and procedure for conducting investigations;

— the Unit was to submit an annual report to the Assembly on its activities;

— Inspectors were to issue reports over their own signature, finalized after consultations among themselves in order to test recommendations against the collective wisdom of the Unit;

— reports were to be submitted to the executive heads of the organizations concerned for translation and distribution, with or without comment, to the States members—and to ACABQ for information and possible comment—within three months if the report concerned only one organization and within six (after joint consultations) if it concerned more than one; the executive heads concerned were to inform JIU of all decisions taken on the reports and to ensure that the recommendations approved by their organs were implemented as expeditiously as possible; the Unit could prepare follow-up reports on its own initiative;

— without prejudice to the principle that external evaluation remained the responsibility of appropriate intergovernmental bodies, JIU might assist organizations concerned in carrying out those responsibilities; on its own initiative or at the request of executive heads, it might advise organizations on their methods for internal evaluation, periodically assess these methods and make ad hoc evaluations of programmes and activities;

— the Unit was to be assisted by an Executive Secretary and staff, appointed by the Secretary-General after appropriate consultations, who were to be United Nations staff members;

— the budget of JIU was to be included in the United Nations regular budget and its expenditures were to be shared by the participating organizations as agreed by them; budget estimates were to be established by the Secretary-General after consultation with ACC on the basis of proposals made by JIU, and submitted to the Assembly together with ACC's report and ACABQ's comments and recommendations; JIU was to be invited to be represented at meetings when its budget estimates were being discussed;

— an organization could not withdraw its acceptance of the statute before giving the Secretary-General two years' notice.

During discussion of the draft statute and accompanying 14-power draft resolution, the Fifth Committee agreed to several clarification and drafting amendments, suggested by the Chairman of ACABQ, to both the resolution and statute. One of these amendments sought to clarify that ACABQ comments and recommendations on the Unit's budget estimates would be sent to the Assembly for consideration, in addition to ACC's report. A revised version of the article on the Unit's budget was submitted by the sponsors to take account of a number of objections and concerns voiced by speakers on the first draft.

A compromise text of the first article of the statute, approved by the Committee, incorporated an amendment by the USSR to delete reference to the Unit's establishment "on a continuing basis."

As first proposed, an article on the functions, powers and responsibilities of JIU stipulated that the Inspectors were to provide an independent "and external" view through inspection and evaluation aimed at improving management, methods and co-ordination; the sponsors accepted a USSR amendment to remove the word "external." They also accepted a Philippine amendment regarding the procedure for processing reports, by which executive heads were to distribute reports immediately upon receipt—the amendment added "with or without their comments" in order to avoid delay in distribution—to the States members of their respective organizations.

Activities of JIU (1 July 1975-30 June 1976)

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted, without a vote, a recommendation of its Fifth Committee—orally proposed by its Chairman and approved without objection on 14 December—that it take note of the eighth annual JIU report, which gave an account of the Unit's main activities and a summary of inspection reports issued during the period from 1 July 1975 to 30 June 1976. At the same time, the Assembly also took note of the related annual report of the Secretary-General on implementation of the major recommendations of JIU—enumerating those which had been acted upon since the last annual report and those which still required action.

In its June report on activities, the Unit noted that it had issued 11 reports during the preceding 12-month period: six were requested by the General Assembly and five were prepared on the initiative of members of the Unit. Four of the reports were system-wide and seven concerned individual organizations. In addition, a report on the continuation of JIU was prepared by the Unit (see article above).

The Fifth Committee also had before it the work programme of JIU for 1976, outlining broad problems for study and report by the Unit, drawn up after consultations and taking account of requests and suggestions by heads of participating organizations.

Pension coverage for members of JIU

The General Assembly on 22 December 1976 adopted, without a vote, a resolution concerning pension coverage for the Inspectors of JIU. Based on recommendations contained in the report of ACABQ and approved by this resolution, the Assembly thereby made provision for a post-retirement benefit, to be included in the terms of employment of Inspectors appointed after 1 January 1978, by the establishment of a fund into which the organizations and Inspectors would contribute monthly. A modified version of this arrangement was to be applied to the current Inspectors or any Inspector whose contract would expire on 31 December 1977.

For its consideration of this question, ACABQ had before it documentation from the previous Assembly session,<sup>14</sup> the observations of JIU, a report of the Secretary-General and the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board at its 1976 session. Inasmuch as the Inspectors were not United Nations staff members, their inclusion as participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund did not commend itself to the Advisory Committee; nor was it considered essential that the benefit received on leaving the Unit take the form of a pension.

Instead, on retirement the contributions and interest thereon would be paid over to the Inspector as a lump sum or, at his discretion, used to purchase for him an annuity.

A draft resolution incorporating ACABQ's recommendations was proposed by the Secretariat and approved by the Fifth Committee on 16 December 1976 by 59 votes to 12, with 6 abstentions. The Committee first rejected—by 21 votes against to 19 in favour, with 30 abstentions—an amendment by Japan to delete reference to ACABQ's recommendations concerning coverage for current Inspectors. The Assembly endorsed the Fifth Committee's recommendation without a vote as resolution 31/193A.

ANNEX

Statute of the Joint Inspection Unit

ESTABLISHMENT

Article 1

1. The General Assembly of the United Nations (hereinafter referred to as the General Assembly) decides that the Joint Inspection Unit, created on an experimental basis under General Assembly resolution 2150(XXI) of 4 November 1966 and extended thereafter under Assembly resolutions 2735 A (XXV) of 17 December 1970 and 2924 B (XXVII) of 24 November 1972, shall be established in accordance with the present statute and with effect from 1 January 1978. The functions, powers and responsibilities of the Joint Inspection Unit (hereinafter referred to as the Unit) are defined in chapter III of the present statute.

2. The Unit shall perform its functions in respect of and shall be responsible to the General Assembly and similarly to the competent legislative organs of those specialized agencies and other international organizations within the United Nations system which accept the present statute (all of which shall hereinafter be referred to as the organizations). The Unit shall be a subsidiary organ of the legislative bodies of the organizations.

3. Acceptance of the present statute by an organization shall be notified in writing by its executive head to the Secretary-General of the United Nations (hereinafter referred to as the Secretary-General).

Chapter II

COMPOSITION AND APPOINTMENT

Article 2

1. The Unit shall consist of not more than eleven Inspectors, chosen from among members of national supervision or inspection bodies, or from among persons of a similar competence on the basis of their special experience in national or international administrative and financial matters, including management questions. The Inspectors shall serve in their personal capacity.

2. No two Inspectors shall be nationals of the same State.

Article 3

1. Starting from the thirty-second session of the General Assembly, in 1977, the President of the General Assembly shall consult with Member States to draw up, with due regard to the principle of equitable geographical distribution and of reasonable rotation, a list of countries which would be requested to propose candidates who meet the qualifications mentioned in article 2, paragraph 1, above.

2. The President of the General Assembly, through appropriate consultations, including consultations with the President of the Economic and Social Council and with the Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, shall review the qualifications of the proposed candidates. After further consultations, if necessary, with the States concerned, the President of the General Assembly shall submit the list of candidates to the Assembly for appointment.

3. The provisions contained in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the present article shall govern the procedure for the replacement of the Inspectors whose terms of office have expired or who have resigned or otherwise ceased to be members of the Unit.

Article 4

1. The duration of the appointments of the Inspectors shall be five years, renewable for one further term. In order to ensure continuity in the membership of the Unit, six of the Inspectors appointed from 1 January 1978 shall serve for a full term; the terms of the others shall expire at the end of three years.

2. An Inspector appointed to replace one whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of that term, provided it is not less than three years. Otherwise the duration of the appointment shall be for a full term.

3. An Inspector may resign on giving six months' notice to the Chairman of the Unit.

4. The term of office of an Inspector shall be terminated only if, in the unanimous opinion of all the other Inspectors, he has ceased to discharge his duties in a manner consistent with the provisions of the present statute and after that conclusion is confirmed by the General Assembly.

5. The Chairman of the Unit shall notify the Secretary-General of any vacancy for the necessary administrative action. Such notification shall make the post vacant.

Chapter III

FUNCTIONS, POWERS AND RESPONSIBILITIES

Article 5

1. The Inspectors shall have the broadest powers of investigation in all matters having a bearing on the efficiency of the services and the proper use of funds.

2. They shall provide an independent view through inspection and evaluation aimed at improving management and methods and at achieving greater co-ordination between organizations.

3. The Unit shall satisfy itself that the activities undertaken by the organizations are carried out in the most economical manner and that the optimum use is made of resources available for carrying out these activities.

4. Without prejudice to the principle that external evaluation remains the responsibility of appropriate intergovernmental bodies, the Unit, with due regard to its other responsibilities, may assist them in carrying out their responsibilities for external evaluation of programmes and activities. On its own initiative or at the request of the executive heads, the Unit may also advise organizations on their methods for internal evaluation, periodically assess these methods and make ad hoc evaluations of programmes and activities.

5. The Inspectors may propose reforms or make recommendations they deem necessary to the competent organs of the organizations. They shall not, however, have the power of decision, nor shall they interfere in the operations of the services they inspect.

Article 6

1. Acting singly or in small groups, the Inspectors shall make on-the-spot inquiries and investigations, some of which may be without prior notification, as and when they themselves may decide, in any of the services of the organizations.

2. The Inspectors shall be accorded full co-operation by the organizations at all levels, including access to any particular information or document relevant to their work.

3. The Inspectors shall be bound by professional secrecy as regards all confidential information they receive.

Article 7

The Inspectors shall discharge their duties in full independence and in the sole interest of the organizations.

Article 8

The Unit shall determine standards and procedures for the conduct of inquiries and investigations.

Chapter IV

MODE OF OPERATION

Article 9

1. The Unit shall be responsible for preparing its annual programme of work. In doing so, it shall take into account, besides its own observations, experience and assessment of priorities as regards subjects for inspection, any requests of the competent organs of the organizations and suggestions received from the executive heads of the organizations and the bodies of the United Nations system concerned with budgetary control, investigation, co-ordination and evaluation.

2. A copy of the programme of work, as approved by the Unit, shall be sent to the Secretary-General and, for information purposes, to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. The Secretary-General shall arrange for its issue as a document of the United Nations and for its transmission to the executive heads of the organizations and to the bodies of the United Nations system concerned with budgetary control, investigation, co-ordination and evaluation.

Article 10

1. The Unit shall submit an annual report on its activities to the General Assembly and to the competent organs of the other organizations.

2. Annual reports by organizations to the Economic and Social Council shall include information on the work of the Unit as it relates to the respective organizations.

Article 11

1. The Unit may issue reports, notes and confidential letters.

2. The Inspectors shall draw up, over their own signature, reports for which they are responsible and in which they shall state their findings and propose solutions to the problems they have noted. The reports shall be finalized after consultation among the Inspectors so as to test recommendations being made against the collective wisdom of the Unit.

3. Reports of the Unit shall contain a summary of the main conclusions and/or recommendations.

4. The procedure for handling and processing reports shall be as follows:

(a) The Unit shall submit the original version to the executive heads of the organizations concerned;

(b) Translation of reports of concern to more than one organization shall be arranged by the Unit; reports of concern to only one organization shall be translated by that organization;

(c) Upon receipt of reports, the executive head or heads concerned shall take immediate action to distribute them, with or without their comments, to the States members of their respective organizations;

(d) When a report concerns only one organization, the report and comments thereon of the executive head shall be transmitted to the competent organ of that organization not later than three months after receipt of the report for consideration at the next meeting of the competent organ. In the case of the United Nations, the Unit shall, when possible, indicate to which organs of the United Nations a report is of essential concern and the Secretary-General shall take this into account when distributing it. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions shall receive all reports for information. As it deems appropriate, the Advisory Committee may choose to issue comments and observations on any of the reports which fall within its competence;

(e) When a report concerns more than one organization, the respective executive heads shall, normally within the framework of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, consult with one another and, to the extent possible, co-ordinate their comments. The report, together with the joint comments and any comments of the respective executive heads on matters that concern their particular organizations, shall be ready for submission to the competent organs of the organizations not later than six months after receipt of the Unit's report for consideration at the next meeting of the competent organs concerned. Should, in exceptional cases, more than six months be required for consultations, with the result that comments would not be ready for submission to competent organs at the next meeting following the six-month period, an interim submission shall be made to the competent organs concerned explaining the reasons for the delay and setting a firm date for the submission of the definitive comments;

(f) The executive heads of the organizations concerned shall inform the Unit of all decisions taken by the competent organs of their organizations on reports of the Unit.

5. Notes and confidential letters shall be submitted to executive heads for use by them as they may decide.

Article 12

Executive heads of organizations shall ensure that recommendations of the Unit approved by their respective competent organs are implemented as expeditiously as possible. Such implementation may be subject to verification by the competent organs of the organizations, which may also request the Unit to issue follow-up reports. The Unit may also prepare such reports on its own initiative.

Chapter V

CONDITIONS OF SERVICE

Article 13

For the purpose of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Inspectors shall have the status of officials of the United Nations. They shall not be considered to be staff members.

Article 14

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the question of pension coverage for members of the Joint Inspection Unit, the observations of the Unit thereon, the relevant paragraphs of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, Approves the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in paragraphs 8 and 9 of its report.

Financial reports and accounts and reports of the Board of Auditors for 1974 and 1975

On 29 November 1976, the General Assembly accepted the financial reports and accounts and the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors: for the biennium 1974-1975 for the United Nations, the International Trade Centre and the United Nations University; and for the year ending 31 December 1975 for the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

In addition, the Assembly concurred in the observations of its Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the accounts of the first three above-mentioned bodies, and took note of ACABQ's observations on the accounts of the remaining organs, except UNRWA, on which it had no comments. It also requested the executive heads of the organizations concerned to take such remedial action as might be required by the comments of the Board of Auditors.

The Assembly took this action on 29 November 1976 in adopting, without objection, resolutions 31/22 A-J, as recommended by its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

The Fifth Committee Chairman orally suggested the draft texts, which the Committee approved without objection on 9 and 10 November 1976. (For texts of resolutions, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

When the Chairman of the Board of Auditors orally introduced the reports to the Committee, he stated inter alia that the Board had for the first time qualified its opinion in certain instances. The qualification was mainly due to prolonged delays and the position of principle taken by certain Members regarding payments to finance the Emergency Forces, the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the United Nations Operation in the Congo; a sum owing from a régime for which no provision for loss had been made; sums in the UNDP statements in which a substantial amount in non-convertible currencies appeared as assets; and financial statements of UNRWA for which it had not been possible to verify accounts of the Lebanon Field Office because of continuing civil disturbances. The qualified opinion was based on the Board's decision to present to the Assembly an accurate picture of the financial situation as at 31 December 1975, in keeping with internationally accepted accounting principles.

The Board had also decided to set up a high-level Audit Operations Committee which would plan the audit work on a unified and integrated basis, and would review all audits, prepare reports in a consistent manner and establish common auditing standards. It hoped to complete by 1978 an audit manual incorporating those auditing standards and providing guidelines to assist developing countries in establishing audit systems. Finally, while continuing transaction auditing it had decided to shift its emphasis to "systems-based auditing," under which, in addition to identifying irregularities in financial transactions in the traditional way, it intended to formulate recommendations to the officials concerned and to check on their implementation.

The Advisory Committee said it would monitor, in the context of its annual meetings with the Board, developments involved in the Board's decision to introduce a systems approach in its auditing methods and the innovations associated with that decision.

Revision of the Financial Regulations

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly considered the report of the Fifth Committee on the programme budget for the biennium 1976-1977, wherein the Fifth Committee noted that it had decided on 20 December, on a proposal by the Byelorussian SSR, to postpone until 1977 its consideration of a report of the Secretary-General on revision of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations.

In his report, the Secretary-General proposed amendments to those financial regulations dealing with accounting and auditing procedures in order to reflect changes consequential upon the adoption of a biennial accounting period.

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination

Co-ordination reports of ACABQ

On 14 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted a three-part resolution on the question of administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency. The first part of this resolution dealt with two co-ordination reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions—one on administrative and budgetary co-ordination in general and the other on co-ordination questions for the activities of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The Advisory Committee in the first of those reports commented on the individual budgets and budgetary trends of each of the specialized agencies—except the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, whose agreements with the United Nations did not provide for transmittal of their budgets for examination. It also discussed the question of rotation of professional staff between headquarters, the regions and the field, noting that, as decentralization acquired greater momentum, there would be a need to develop policies and standardize practices across the system.

For the first time, it included tabular information on the cost estimates of regular programmes of technical co-operation. In an addendum to its report, ACABQ transmitted a statement on contributions by each of the agencies to their regular budgets for 1975 and 1976 as at 30 September 1976. Total expenditure by all organizations in the United Nations system in 1976, including peace-keeping operations, was expected to exceed $2,274 million, a 45 per cent increase in two years, largely due to inflation and currency fluctuations.

In the other report, ACABQ considered aspects of co-ordination and co-operation between UNEP and the rest of the United Nations system, responding to a 1975 Assembly decision to supplement its co-ordination reports on agency budgets with reports on specific problems of administrative and budgetary co-ordination.<sup>15</sup>

The report included comments on the inter-secretariat machinery for co-ordination in environmental questions and activities, on the relationship of UNEP with the United Nations system, and on joint programming exercises designed to avoid duplication of effort. The Advisory Committee noted that considerable progress had been made in avoiding duplication, but cautioned against allocating too many resources to formal co-ordination. Among other conclusions, it observed that consistent policies were a prerequisite to such co-operation, that the financial limitations of the Environment Fund must be recognized, and that proposals for internal projects would have to be scrutinized more carefully.

When the reports were discussed in the Fifth Committee, Canada, Japan, the Netherlands and Nicaragua proposed a draft resolution on the two reports. The Fifth Committee approved it on 16 November 1976 and the Assembly adopted it as its resolution 31/94 A on 14 December; both of these decisions were taken by consensus.

After expressing appreciation for the ACABQ reports, the Assembly concurred in the observations and comments of ACABQ and referred them to the organizations concerned. It brought the report on UNEP to the attention of the UNEP Governing Council and referred it to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination for consideration. It also transmitted the reports to the United Nations Board of Auditors, the Panel of External Auditors and the Joint Inspection Unit for their information.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to refer to the system's executive heads matters arising out of the reports and from the related discussion in the Fifth Committee that called for attention and action, particularly the question of rotation of staff. The Advisory Committee was asked to continue supplementing its annual reports on this subject with reports on specific problems, taking into account suggestions made in the Fifth Committee.

The Philippines orally proposed, and the sponsors accepted, the addition of a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly expressed concern with the growing need for effective administrative and budgetary co-ordination within the framework of the United Nations system. The final text also included a drafting amendment suggested by the ACABQ Chairman to indicate that special reports would not be required every year, but could be submitted whenever deemed necessary.

[General Assembly resolutions 31/94 B and 31/94 C related particularly to electronic data-processing and information systems (see article below) and to action taken on recommendations of the Administrative Management Service (see pp. 872-74).]

In the course of the discussion of administrative and budgetary co-ordination in the Fifth Committee, Cuba introduced a draft resolution concerned with the adverse effects on developing States of continuing currency fluctuations occurring in the developed countries in which headquarters of organizations of the United Nations system were situated, and the losses in the budgets of those organizations caused by exchange-rate fluctuations in those developed countries' currencies.

By the Cuban draft, the Assembly would inter alia consider the economic benefits which those developed countries derived as a result of being a headquarters site. Those developed countries would be asked to establish fixed exchange rates, from 1 January 1978, for the foreign-exchange transactions of the relevant organizations in accordance with the exchange rates prevailing on that date, for which those organizations could opt in carrying out their foreign-exchange transactions. The same developed countries would be asked to provide the Secretary-General with information on the matter as soon as possible so that he could report to the Assembly in 1977.

Serious reservations on the draft text were expressed by Austria, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Upper Volta. The observer for Switzerland expressed similar doubts on the Cuban draft.

The Cuban draft resolution was rejected by the Fifth Committee on 16 November by 38 votes against to 17 in favour, with 41 abstentions.

Electronic data-processing and information systems

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly took several decisions pertaining to electronic data-processing and information systems in the United Nations.

By one of these decisions, embodied in section HI of resolution 31/208, the Assembly took note of reports by the Secretary-General and ACABQ on the subject, as well as of the views expressed by delegations in the Fifth Committee, which had considered the reports. At the same time, the Assembly endorsed the observations and recommendations of ACABQ in its report.

The Secretary-General had submitted his report in compliance with a 1975 Assembly request<sup>16</sup> for an account of developments in electronic data-processing (EDP) and information systems since 1973, with a forecast of requirements tied to the medium-term plan of the Organization; the account was to include implications of developing an interactive system for the United Nations Office at Geneva. The Secretary-General, in preparing this report, took into account an ACABQ recommendation that indication be given as to whether reimbursement for services rendered by the New York Computing Centre (NYCC) to other budgetary programmes was commensurate with the volume of such services, and if not, what steps had been taken to identify and correct discrepancies.

The report dealt broadly with United Nations electronic data-processing developments, with particular emphasis on the procedures for systematic review and evaluation of proposed EDP and information system development throughout the Organization. It covered the following main topics, giving comprehensive supporting statistical data: policy, review and evaluation activities of the Office of the Director of the Electronic Data-Processing and Information Systems Service (EDPIS); EDP programmes at Headquarters, in Geneva, in Vienna and at the United Nations Environment Programme and the regional commissions; policies and programmes of the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems and Related Activities

(IOB) and the International Computing Centre (ICC) at Geneva; and financial implications.

The report summarized the current status of every major information system that utilized the computer throughout the Organization, estimated the next steps in development, and summarized the reporting, review and control measures instituted to ensure that computer-based information and management systems were serving the United Nations efficiently and effectively in their appropriate roles as part of the medium-term plan.

The report indicated that extension of control and guidance measures would be required to provide direction for the next developments in information systems; the EDP capacity of the United Nations had to be increased and modified in character at Headquarters and at several regional commissions in order to support approved programmes of work.

In terms of equipment (hardware), the Secretary-General proposed the upgrading of the central facilities of NYCC and installation of interactive remote-processing equipment for several Secretariat offices. The Secretary-General also proposed that some additional posts be authorized in the Office of the Director and in NYCC at Headquarters, and made proposals for increased provisions in respect of personnel and equipment at the United Nations Office at Geneva.

In its report, ACABQ concluded that greater discipline was needed in the use of EDP facilities at Headquarters, and accordingly recommended that the Secretary-General should establish within the Secretariat an interdepartmental information systems board which would conduct an annual review of information systems in each department to ascertain their continued validity and would meet on a regular basis to review, evaluate and approve requests forwarded to EDPIS for new computer-based information systems, including requests put forward as part of the medium-term plan. The Advisory Committee said that the review should cover all EDP applications irrespective of source of financing, that representation on the board should be at the highest level possible and that it should be chaired by an official of the rank of Under-Secretary-General, preferably the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management.

The Advisory Committee recommended that the Assembly approve the Secretary-General's proposals to upgrade the equipment in NYCC, and authorize the establishment of an additional three professional posts, subject to the establishment of the information systems board and its carrying out of the necessary reviews. Most of the other proposals made by the Secretary-General concerning operations at Headquarters should be deferred pending the results of the reviews to be carried out by the new board.

The Advisory Committee recommended approval of the Secretary-General's proposals relating to the EDP programmes in Geneva involving two new posts and additional funds for equipment and supplies.

The Advisory Committee also recommended that, in future, the budgets of IOB and ICC be subject to review and approval by the General Assembly.

The Fifth Committee discussed the two reports and, on 10 November 1976, on an oral proposal by its Chairman, recommended, without a vote, the action taken by the Assembly on 22 December. By 64 votes to 9, with 3 abstentions, the Committee voted additional appropriations for the 1976-1977 budget to cover the cost of these decisions.

The Assembly's endorsement was embodied in section III of its 11-part resolution 31/208; the section was adopted by a recorded vote of 119 to 10, with 1 abstention.

(For text of section III of resolution 31/208, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In another report to the General Assembly in 1976, containing revised programme budget estimates for the 1976-1977 biennium for the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the Secretary-General included an amount for EDP support for the Centre's programme of work. The Advisory Committee, in its report, recommended that the Assembly approve an appropriation in the amount requested, and further recommended that electronic data-processing applications in the programme be subject to review by the proposed interdepartmental information systems board in the manner described in ACABQ's report on EDP and information systems in the United Nations.

The Fifth Committee accepted ACABQ's recommendations concerning the provision of additional budgetary resources for EDP support for the Centre's work programme.

Canada introduced in the Fifth Committee a draft decision, a sponsor-revised version of which was approved without a vote by the Committee on 21 December and recommended for adoption by the Assembly. Comments by Peru had been taken into account in Canada's revision.

The General Assembly adopted the Fifth Committee's recommendations without a vote on 22 December 1976 as section VII of resolution 31/208 on the 1976-1977 programme budget. Thus, the Assembly decided that, before any decision was reached on software for the Centre on Transnational Corporations, the Secretary-General should give full consideration to suitable alternative packages, including the existing Integrated Set of Information Systems—in use by 11 Member States as well as several other organizations—and report to ACABQ.

During the Fifth Committee's discussion of the agenda item on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Canada, Nicaragua and the Philippines introduced a draft resolution on administrative co-ordination of EDP and information systems in the United Nations organizations. The draft text was approved by the Fifth Committee by consensus on 16 November 1976. The General Assembly adopted it by consensus on 14 December 1976 as section B of its three-part resolution 31/94.

[Section A of resolution 31/94 related to ACABQ reports on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and IAEA and on co-ordination questions in the activities of the United Nations Environment Programme; see pp. 926-27. Section B of this resolution concerned the Administrative Management Service; see pp. 872-74.]

By this section of resolution 31/94, the Assembly, considering the rapidly expanding applications of EDP techniques to information systems and data banks throughout the United Nations and their potential value in accelerating the implementation and co-ordination of programmes, asked ACABQ to provide policy advice and recommendations on the administrative co-ordination of EDP and information systems in the United Nations organizations.

The Advisory Committee was to identify and focus on major issues to increase the benefit from the expanding applications of EDP and information systems; also, it was to examine methods and criteria: for assessing the utility of, co-ordinating and harmonizing existing and proposed information systems and estimating their establishment and operating costs, and for considering other administrative co-ordination issues that, in the opinion of ACABQ or the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), required the consideration of Member States. To assist ACABQ ACC was asked to provide the services of IOB.

In another action, on 20 December 1976, the Fifth Committee decided, without a vote, on a proposal by the Byelorussian SSR, to postpone to the Assembly's 1977 session consideration of another report of the Secretary-General—on the establishment of an information services unit in the Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

The Secretary-General's report proposed establishing such a unit to facilitate retrieval and dissemination of information in unpublished departmental reports and to respond to requests for the Department's involvement in international information systems initiated outside the Department.

Other matters

Use of experts and consultants

In 1973, the Joint Inspection Unit presented a study of the use of experts and consultants in the United Nations<sup>17</sup> to the General Assembly which was considered by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee in 1974, together with the relevant reports of the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

In a decision taken by the Assembly on 18 December 1974, a number of criteria were laid down governing the use of experts and consultants;<sup>18</sup> the Secretary-General was requested to take them into account in proposing a comprehensive system of policies, procedures and practices relating to the use of experts and consultants which he would issue as administrative instructions applicable to all Secretariat offices and departments.

On 17 December 1975, the Assembly reaffirmed that its 1974 decision should be implemented promptly, fully and effectively and asked for a report thereon.<sup>19</sup>

At the Assembly's 1976 session, the Fifth Committee had before it a report submitted by the Secretary-General outlining progress made in implementing the new procedures instituted for the recruitment of consultants, experts and individual contractors which entered into force on 1 January 1976, and providing statistical information with regard to the period 1 January to 30 June 1976 on those procedures.

The Chairman of ACABQ, presenting the oral comments of his Committee to the Fifth Committee, noted that the new procedures approved by the Assembly had entered into force only at the beginning of the year and that there was insufficient data available to provide a basis for a full evaluation of the results of the application of the new system.

The representative of the Secretary-General stated that the application of instructions was to be monitored on an annual basis and hoped that the Fifth Committee would not judge the result of the implementation on the basis of data available for such a short period. He said that the new instructions and the revised procedures were adequate and sound; an evaluation on the basis of their long-term application was necessary to show positive results. The Committee would be able to make such an evaluation on the basis of a longer period in 1977.

The representative of Poland orally proposed a draft resolution for approval by the Fifth Committee, by which the Assembly would take note of the report of the Secretary-General and the oral report of ACABQ, reaffirm the decisions it had taken in 1974 and 1975, and ask the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1977, through ACABQ, a further report on the implementation of those decisions.

On 8 December 1976, the Fifth Committee approved the resolution without objection. The Assembly adopted it, also without objection, on 22 December as its resolution 31/205.

the use of the Arabic language in the United Nations.

On 21 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/159 on the report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on its fourth session, held in Nairobi, Kenya, in May 1976, by which inter alia it decided to include Arabic among the official and working languages of the machinery of UNCTAD, particularly for all sessions of the Conference and for the Trade and Development Board and its main committees, and asked the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to take the necessary measures in this regard.

(For text of resolution 31/159, see pp. 415-16.)

When the Fifth Committee discussed the question, it had before it a report of the Secretary-General in which he pointed out the difficulties encountered in the first three years of operation of the Arabic language services, e.g. the inability to recruit the full complement of Arabic interpreters, the high cost of providing Arab interpreters on a temporary assistance basis, the lack of capacity of the service to meet all requests within required deadlines, and the imbalanced distribution over the year of material to be translated.

The Secretary-General proposed certain organizational arrangements for providing Arabic language services to UNCTAD, while simultaneously alleviating some of the problems of providing such services at Headquarters: a permanent Arabic interpretation service would be established at Geneva; and the Arabic Translation Service at Headquarters would be expanded, with greater use of facsimile transmission for dispatch of translated material to Geneva.

In its related report, ACABQ stated its opinion that the Secretary-General should take steps towards co-ordinating efforts among the specialized agencies and the Organization in developing Arabic language services, expressed the understanding that the experience to be gained from the organizational arrangements proposed by the Secretary-General would be reviewed at the end of the three-year period 1977-1979 and trusted that a report thereon would be submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly.

On an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Fifth Committee decided by consensus, on 21 December 1976, to recommend to the Assembly that it take note of the Secretary-General's report, approve the organizational arrangements contained therein, and concur with the observations and recommendations made by ACABQ.

On 22 December, the Assembly endorsed the Fifth Committee's recommendation without a vote when it considered that Committee's report on the programme budget for the biennium 1976-1977. This decision was incorporated into the Assembly's 11-part resolution 31/208, as section VIII.

On 21 December, the Assembly also decided without a vote to include Arabic as an official language of the United Nations Water Conference, scheduled to be held in Argentina in March 1977 (see pp. 471-72).

This decision, adopted as decision 31/422 A, was taken on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second Committee in the context of its consideration of the report of the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly. The decision was sponsored by Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen and approved by the Committee without a vote on 1 December.

Honoraria payable to members of United Nations organs

Review of honorarium for Chairman of ACABQ

When the Fifth Committee considered the report of ACABQ on the emoluments received by the Secretary-General (see page 853), Algeria, supported by Belgium, Egypt and Tunisia, orally proposed that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to review, within the context of the draft programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979, the amount of honorarium received by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee and to report to the Assembly thereon. The draft decision was approved by consensus by the Fifth Committee on 21 December 1976.

On 22 December, without a formal vote, the Assembly approved the recommendations of the Fifth Committee when it considered the Committee's report on the programme budget for 1976-1977. The decision became section X of Assembly resolution 31/208.

Study of the question of honoraria

On 20 December 1976, the Fifth Committee decided to postpone consideration of a comprehensive study by the Secretary-General of the question of honoraria payable to members of organs and subsidiary organs of the United Nations, submitted pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 17 December 1975.<sup>20</sup>

the decision also encompassed several other reports, consideration of which was postponed to the Assembly's 1977 session.

Organizational nomenclature in the Secretariat

The Fifth Committee's report on the programme budget for the biennium 1976-1977 contained notification of a decision to postpone to 1977 consideration of the Secretary-General's progress report on the adoption of a standardized and uniform organizational nomenclature in the Secretariat. The Fifth Committee had taken the decision without a vote on 20 December 1976 on a proposal by the Byelorussian SSR.

The Secretary-General stated in his report that he had received the report he had requested from the Administrative Management Service on the existing situation in regard to the use of organizational nomenclature, with recommendations for revisions. He reported that he was currently in the process of obtaining the views of his senior colleagues in the Secretariat and expected to be able to give a full report at the Assembly's 1977 session.

Procedures and arrangements governing the Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

Among several reports consideration of which the Fifth Committee decided to postpone until 1977 was a progress report of the Secretary-General on general procedures and administrative arrangements governing the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation (see pp. 453-54). The decision to postpone was proposed by the Byelorussian SSR and was approved by the Fifth Committee without vote on 20 December 1976.

Inasmuch as consultations between the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management were still in progress, and since the draft financial rules of the Foundation were still under review, the Secretary-General was of the view that those rules and the related financial, personnel and internal audit arrangements should first be submitted to the UNEP Governing Council; the Secretary-General would then expect to submit the draft financial rules for the Foundation and proposals regarding related personnel and audit arrangements to the Assembly at its 1977 session.

PART TWO

The intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

Chapter I

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In 1976 the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)<sup>1</sup> continued to pursue its activities, in accordance with the objectives laid down in its statute, to accelerate and enlarge the contribution of atomic energy to peace, health and prosperity throughout the world and to ensure that assistance thus provided was not used to further military purposes.

During the year, IAEA placed special emphasis on the solution of problems related to the safety of nuclear power stations, the reprocessing of nuclear fuel and the disposal of atomic waste.

The Agency prepared for an international conference on nuclear power and its fuel cycle, to be held at Salzburg, Austria, in 1977 as part of a series of United Nations conferences on the peaceful uses of atomic energy. The Agency continued to assist member States in evaluating the technical, safety and legal aspects of peaceful nuclear-explosion projects and, as part of IAEA regulatory activities, technical assistance was directed towards ensuring that projects were safely conceived and implemented. Also, the training of adequate managerial, engineering and safety staffs for nuclear power stations was intensified.

The twentieth session of the General Conference of IAEA was held at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 21 to 28 September 1976. Nicaragua was admitted as a member of IAEA on 23 September 1976, subject to deposit of the instrument of acceptance, bringing the membership of IAEA to 110.

Safeguards responsibilities

As at 31 December 1976, 100 non-nuclear-weapon States had ratified, or acceded to, the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.<sup>2</sup> Sixty of these States, including five members of the European Communities which had become party to the Treaty on 2 May 1975, had concluded safeguards agreements with the Agency. Forty-six of the agreements had entered into force.

Forty-one safeguards agreements other than those in connexion with the Non-Proliferation Treaty were applied in full in 24 States.

By the end of 1976, safeguards applied by IAEA under all types of safeguards agreements covered nuclear material in 61 nuclear power stations, 104 other types of reactors, 27 conversion, fabrication and fuel reprocessing plants and 103 other separate accountability areas.

In anticipation of its entry into force, preparations were continued to implement the safeguards agreement signed with the European Atomic Energy Community (EURATOM) and the non-nuclear-weapon States members of EURATOM (Belgium, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands).

The Board of Governors of IAEA approved agreements to implement the voluntary offers of the United Kingdom and the United States in connexion with the application of safeguards to their nuclear activities, excluding only those activities having direct national security significance.

Ten safeguards agreements concluded with IAEA, seven of which were already in force, consisted of comprehensive arrangements satisfying the requirements of both the Non-Proliferation Treaty and the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco).<sup>3</sup> Two safeguards agreements had been concluded under the Non-Proliferation Treaty and Additional Protocol I to the Tlatelolco Treaty.

With the growth of IAEA safeguards activities, further standardization was introduced in safeguards procedures and inspection practices for all types of nuclear plants. Manpower-saving techniques and instrumentation for surveillance and inspections were further developed to ensure optimum cost-effectiveness.

Nuclear power

At the end of 1976, nuclear power plants with a total capacity of 85,000 megawatts (electrical) accounted for nearly 5 per cent of the total world electricity-generating capacity. The price of uranium and enrichment charges continued to rise, leading to erosion in the competitive position of nuclear power plants, although nuclear fuel costs remained less than 40 per cent of those of electric-power stations relying on imported oils.

The large reserves of spare capacity developed by electric utilities during the 1974-1975 recession and continuing uncertainties affecting the "back end" of the nuclear fuel cycle led to further declines in orders for new nuclear stations, which dropped to 11,000 MW output in 1976, from 32,000 MW in 1975 and 53,000 MW in 1974.

During 1976, IAEA expanded its training courses for the personnel of energy authorities and power companies responsible for the implementation of nuclear power in developing countries, and supplied methodological tools for the economic analysis of electric-power systems. By the end of 1976, IAEA had released the Wien Automatic System Planning computer programme to 18 member States and three international organizations, and issued a guidebook, Economic Evaluation of Bids for Nuclear Power Plants, to assist members in the assessment of bids for nuclear power stations.

Environment

During the year, a safety document was drafted on principles for establishing limits for the release of radio-active material. A code of practice and a guide were issued on waste management for the mining and milling of uranium and thorium, and a draft code was prepared on waste management at nuclear power plants. A guide was prepared on selection factors for repositories of high-radiation-level wastes in geological formations, and a code of practice on land-burial of low-level wastes was in preparation.

The Agency's provisional definition of and recommendations on deep-ocean dumping of radio-active wastes were accepted as operative for the 1975 Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (London Convention). The Agency initiated similar work for the Mediterranean Sea as required by the 1976 Convention for the Protection of the Mediterranean Sea against Pollution (Barcelona Convention), and assumed responsibility for radio-active aspects of a study sponsored by the United Nations Environment Programme on the pollution of the Mediterranean from land-based sources.

Co-ordinated research programmes were continued on the radio-active pollution of the Danube River, environmental monitoring in South-East Asia, the cycling of tritium in the environment, the movement of radium in waterways, and the effects of thermal discharges.

Nuclear information

The International Nuclear Information System (INIS) continued to provide a nuclear information and abstracting service, using computer and reprographic techniques. The System issued magnetic tapes containing bibliographic descriptions, abstracts of current nuclear literature and an abstracts journal, INIS Atomindex.

Information activity on nuclear data services was expanded to include charged-particle nuclear data centres; meetings of representatives of those data centres were convened during the year. A programme on atomic molecular data for fusion research and technology was begun.

Technical assistance

The Agency provided technical assistance which was financed: by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); by voluntary cash contributions and donations in kind from IAEA members including expert services, equipment grants and fellowship training opportunities; by multilateral and bilateral funds; and by moneys provided under funds-in-trust arrangements. The target for voluntary contributions for the regular programme of technical assistance amounted to $5.5 million for 1976.

During 1976, some 60 countries received IAEA technical assistance in the form of expert service or equipment, or both. A total of 383 fellowships were awarded for individual studies and 263 persons participated in study tours and training courses. Technical assistance provided by the Agency in 1976 amounted to $9 million.

Fifteen large-scale projects were financed by UNDP and executed by IAEA. These included: applied nuclear physics (Morocco); nuclear technology (Romania); irradiation sterilization of medical products (Hungary); a national nuclear energy centre (Chile); non-destructive testing and quality control (Argentina); nuclear research in agriculture (Brazil and Indonesia); radiation-processing demonstration facilities (Egypt, the Republic of Korea and Yugoslavia); tsetse fly eradication (Nigeria) and uranium exploration (Chile, Greece, Pakistan and Turkey). The Agency also provided large-scale assistance for a nuclear research project in agriculture in Bangladesh, which was financed by the Swedish International Development Authority.

Life sciences

The Agency's life sciences programme continued to promote the use of nuclear techniques in medicine, radiation biology and environmental studies, and continued research on techniques for improving the accuracy and reliability of radiation dosimetry.

Two symposia on medical radio-nuclide imaging and radio-biological research to improve radiotherapy were held. Advisory group meetings covered the following subjects: intercomparison and standardization procedures in the dosimetry of cobalt-60 gamma radiation and X-rays; optimal methods for the assay of trace elements in biological materials; effects of sterilizing-radiation dose upon the antigenic properties of proteins and biological tissues; and applications of nuclear methods in environmental research.

An IAEA/World Health Organization network of secondary standard dosimetry laboratories was set up and criteria for the establishment of such laboratories were issued.

Of 15 co-ordinated research programmes, four were completed during the year and their results reviewed. Eleven programmes were continued and developed further. A new co-ordinated programme to explore the use of Auger-electron-emitting radio-isotopes in cancer treatment was initiated.

Technical support was also provided for the evaluation and implementation of technical assistance projects, and approximately 35 such projects were begun.

Physical sciences and laboratories

The physics programme continued to assist developing countries in the promotion of nuclear technique implementation. A regional seminar on research reactor utilization for South-East Asia and the Pacific was held at Bandung, Indonesia. A study tour to Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and the USSR was organized for the purpose of securing more efficient utilization of existing low-energy accelerators. An advisory group meeting on neutron inelastic scattering in applied research was held to consider the applications of neutron scattering and diffraction for industry.

The Agency proceeded with work on international co-ordination of controlled fusion research. The Sixth International Conference on Plasma Physics and Controlled Nuclear Fusion Research was held at Berchtesgaden, Federal Republic of Germany, where substantial progress in fusion research was reported. At the annual meeting of the International Fusion Research Council, national programmes in fusion were reviewed. A meeting in the USSR on the technology of inertial confinement experiments and one in the United States on large tokamak experiments were convened.

The joint IAEA/Nuclear Energy Association international liaison group on thermionic electrical power generation was terminated on the initiative of the Association.

The Agency continued to promote regional co-operation in Asia and the Pacific, particularly in connexion with the industrial applications of isotopes and the use of nuclear techniques for mineral prospecting and trace-element analysis.

The Agency's chemistry activities focused on assisting research on the preparation and control of radio-pharmaceuticals and the radiation processing of industrial products. An international programme to compile data on the chemical thermodynamics properties of the actinide elements and their compounds was continued.

The isotope hydrology programme provided consultant and isotope analysis services to member States and to organizations of the United Nations system in their implementation of large-scale projects. Similar services were provided to seven member States to demonstrate the use of isotope techniques in evaluating specific hydrological problems. The Agency also participated in the work of the International Hydrological Programme.

The laboratory of IAEA at Seibersdorf, Austria, continued its work, including the provision of services for member States on intercomparison and intercalibration. Co-ordinated research on seed-protein improvement and on sterile-insect techniques was continued. The Safeguards Analytical Laboratory was put into operation. The third inter-laboratory comparison of low-level tritium measurement of natural waters was completed.

The International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity in Monaco continued research on radioactivity in sea-water and non-nuclear pollutants, which was financed by UNDP. Approximately 110 laboratories from 30 member States participated in the intercalibration of trace elements in marine samples.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics at Trieste, Italy, provided courses and workshops on atomic, molecular and solid-state physics as well as on astrophysics and mathematics, and strengthened its programme with respect to scientific topics relevant to developing countries.

Food and agriculture

A joint programme of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and IAEA continued to work on ways to increase food production and quality, reduce food losses, and conserve and upgrade the quality of agricultural and fishery products and the environment through the application of isotope and radiation methodology. This was carried out by co-ordinated research programmes involving national institutes, training, expert advice, and the collection and dissemination of information.

To improve the nutritional quality of the human diet, geneticists continued to work on crop cultivars of cereals and legumes that would produce more high-protein quality grain. Work also continued on the breeding of disease-resistant plants. Several co-ordinated programmes aimed at improving the efficiency of water and fertilizer use, developing adequate management practices to minimize the possibility of the pollution of water resources by nitrogen residues, and improving methods of biological fixation of atmospheric nitrogen by leguminous crops. Soil scientists worked on diagnostic methods and remedial measures for zinc deficiency in flooded rice soils.

Research on tsetse fly membrane feeding and radio-biology was intensified to increase the efficiency of control of the insect by the sterile-male technique. Co-ordinated research programmes were initiated for the use of radio-immune assays to improve reproduction in domestic animals and the use of isotopes in detecting and diagnosing mineral imbalances in domestic animals. The use of ioniz-ing radiation to reduce food losses and conserve energy in the production, processing and storage of food was also investigated. Finally, co-ordinated programmes and training were designed to assist scientists of developing countries to study and control contamination of foods and of the environment.

Secretariat

As at the end of 1976, there were 1,407 staff members employed by IAEA. Of these, 431 staff members, drawn from 59 nationalities, were in the professional and higher categories and 976 were in the general service, maintenance and operative service categories.

Budget

The twentieth General Conference of IAEA, at its September 1976 session, adopted a regular budget of $43,501,000 for the year 1977.

The target for voluntary contributions to finance the Agency's programme of technical assistance for 1977 was set at $6 million.

Chapter II

The International Labour Organisation (ILO)

During 1976, the International Labour Organisation (ILO)<sup>1</sup> continued to undertake a broad range of activities in such fields as working conditions and environment, occupational safety and health, vocational and management training, the observance of freedom of association and trade union rights, social security, the equality of women workers and promotion of employment.

Membership in ILO rose to 132 during 1976, with the admission of Saudi Arabia on 12 January, Surinam on 24 February, Papua New Guinea on 1 May, the Bahamas on 25 May, Mozambique on 28 May and Angola (by a vote of the International Labour Conference) on 4 June.

Meetings

The International Labour Organisation held three major general meetings at Geneva, Switzerland, during the year: the International Labour Conference held its sixty-first session from 2 to 22 June 1976; the Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour (World Employment Conference) was held from 4 to 17 June 1976; and the International Labour Conference held its sixty-second (maritime) session from 13 to 29 October 1976.

Approximately 1,400 delegates, advisers and observers from 123 countries attended the sixty-first session of the International Labour Conference. The Conference had before it the report of the Director-General of ILO on activities in 1975, and the twelfth special report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment in South Africa. The Conference considered three technical items: tripartite machinery to promote implementation of international labour standards; the working environment; and the employment and conditions of work and life of nursing personnel. The Conference adopted a Convention and Recommendation on the first item, and discussed the other two items, with a view to adopting international labour standards at its 1977 session.

In accordance with usual practice, the International Labour Conference set up a tripartite committee to examine the application by member States of the 143 Conventions and 151 Recommendations adopted since 1919. The tripartite committee also reviewed a survey of member States on the Consultation (Industrial and National Levels) Recommendation, 1960.

The World Employment Conference was held in 1976 as part of the World Employment Programme, which was ILO's principal contribution to the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.<sup>2</sup> The World Employment Programme was designed to assist Governments in reshaping their policies and plans in order to achieve their employment and income distribution objectives more effectively. The United Nations Economic and Social Council assigned to ILO a catalytic role in bringing action-oriented employment objectives to the fore in the operations of all agencies in the United Nations system.

The World Employment Conference was attended by representatives of Governments, workers and employers from 121 countries, as well as representatives of 22 international organizations and 58 non-governmental bodies.

The World Employment Conference adopted by consensus a declaration of principles and a programme of action which included recommendations for national and international action regarding: a "basic needs" approach to development; international manpower movements; technologies for productive employment creation; and active manpower policies and adjustment assistance in developed countries. No consensus was reached concerning the role of multinational enterprises in employment creation in the developing countries. (See also pp. 346-47.)

The declaration of principles and the programme of action were endorsed at the November 1976 session of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, which empowered the Director-General of ILO to initiate work on the recommendations adopted by the Conference.

The declaration was also submitted to the Economic and Social Council in July 1976 and was endorsed by the General Assembly on 21 December 1976, by its resolution 31/176. (For text of resolution, see p. 359.)

The sixty-second (maritime) session of the International Labour Conference had before it a report of the Director-General of ILO on developments in the maritime industry, including world trade and employment, and conditions of work and life of seafarers. Delegates representing Governments, shipowners and seafarers from 78 countries attended.

The Conference also considered four technical items: revision of the Paid Vacations (Seafarers) Convention (Revised), 1949; protection of young seafarers; continuity of employment of seafarers; and the use of substandard vessels, particularly those registered under flags of convenience. Under the first item, the Conference adopted a new Convention concerning Annual Leave with Pay for Seafarers. It adopted a Recommendation for the Protection of Seafarers under 18 years of age, a Convention and a Recommendation on Continuity of Employment, and a Convention and a Recommendation on Minimum Standards in Merchant Ships.

The Conference also adopted resolutions calling for the elimination of discriminatory employment conditions for seafarers on vessels of other countries and for the adoption, at a later session of the maritime Conference, of a convention on seafarers' welfare in port and aboard ship.

In November, the Governing Body also approved an International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment. Elaboration of the Programme followed adoption of a resolution on the subject at the 1975 session of the International Labour Conference.

The Chemical Industries Committee, which met at Geneva from 4 to 12 February 1976, discussed the effects of the energy crisis on employment in the industry, the role the industry could play in unemployment and underemployment in the developing countries, protection of the working environment and the safety and health of workers.

From 6 to 14 April 1976, the Joint Committee on the Public Service reviewed recent developments in the public service, working and employment conditions in local, provincial and regional authorities, and disciplinary codes and procedures.

The Coal Mines Committee, which met at Geneva from 28 April to 6 May 1976, discussed a general report on events and developments in the industry, training and retraining of coal miners, and safety and health.

A Tripartite Advisory Meeting on the Relationship of Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy was held at Geneva from 4 to 13 May 1976 to review the results of ILO research and recommend future action. It recommended that ILO draw up a declaration of principles concerning the social aspects of multinational enterprises, to be transmitted to the United Nations for incorporation in a proposed code of conduct to be drafted by the Commission on Transnational Corporations.

In 1976, expert meetings were held on the negotiating rights of teachers (with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) and on the effects of inflation and currency instability on pension schemes.

Field activities

During 1976, ILO spent more than $51 million on technical co-operation activities (a decrease of about 5.5 per cent from $54 million in 1975) to promote employment and training, improvement in working conditions and environment, the development of tripartism, industrial relations and participation, and the planning, performance and evaluation of social security.

The major part of this expenditure ($35 million) continued to be financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The ILO regular programme provided $2.2 million in 1976. Funds provided by multilateral and bilateral aid agencies and other special programmes rose to $11 million in 1976. Activities financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) decreased in 1976, with expenditures of $2.5 million as against $3.5 million in 1975.

A breakdown of expenditure by ILO programme of activity, by source of funds, by type of assistance and by the country, territory or region granted assistance is shown in the tables below. Regrouping the expenditures by major theme, training of all kinds received the largest share of funds ($27.8 million), followed by employment planning and promotion ($13.2 million), tripartism, industrial relations and participation ($8.1 million), social security ($1.1 million), and working conditions and environment ($700,000). By region, Africa received the largest percentage of the funds (42.4), followed by Asia (24.2), the Americas (18.1), the Middle East (7.1), interregional projects (6.2) and Europe (2.0).

Education activities

The International Institute for Labour Studies at Geneva, an ILO centre for advanced study in the labour and social fields, included in its 1976 programme nine educational activities for 223 participants.

The ILO international internship course on active labour policy development, conducted in Spanish for 28 participants, and a study course for African social leaders from Portuguese-speaking African countries (15 participants) were held at Geneva. The major topics covered in the courses were economic and social change, manpower policies and population, the industrial relations systems and the role of ILO in shaping labour and social policy.

Under the Swedish International Development Authority programme for English-speaking countries of Eastern and Western Africa, which was being carried out through the International Institute, industrial relations seminars were conducted in Kenya, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia for 92 participants, and a decision-making exercise on in-plant industrial relations was held at Banjul for 34 participants from the Gambia.

With the financial support of the Libyan Arab Republic, a two-month course on the social aspects of development was held at Geneva and at Tripoli.

Libyan Arab Republic, for 18 participants from French-speaking African countries.

A three-week regional workshop on labour and population was organized, with the co-operation of the Demographic Centre of the United Nations in Romania, l'Institut de Formation sociale, économique et civique and the Friedrich Nauman Foundation, for 28 participants from French-speaking African nations. The workshop was held at Cotonou, Benin.

International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training

During the year, the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, Italy, held residential training courses and seminars which were attended by 1,378 participants, including vocational trainers, trade union officials and managers. The courses were redesigned to incorporate the needs of developing countries, as identified by their long-term plans.

The Centre expanded its services to ILO technical departments to include courses for managers of co-operatives, the production of training materials, and refresher courses for technical co-operation experts. The Centre also increased its technical support services to other agencies in the United Nations system and to Governments in the preparation, design, implementation and revision of training projects.

Publications

Dissemination of the results of research carried out by ILO and expected to be of value to ILO constituents, as well as to scholars and practitioners in the social policy and labour fields, continued in 1976 with the publication of over 40 books, in addition to the issue of periodicals such as the bi-monthly International Labour Review and Legislative Series and the quarterly Bulletin of Labour Statistics and Social and Labour Bulletin.

Publications in the management development field included Promoting Sales and Management Consulting: A Guide to the Profession. Five studies were issued on multinational enterprises: Multinationals in Western Europe: The Industrial Relations Experience; Social and Labour Practices of Some European-based Multinationals in the Metal Trades; The Impact of Multinational Enterprises on Employment and Training; Wages and Working Conditions in Multinational Enterprises; and International Principles and Guidelines on Social Policy for Multinational Enterprises: Their Usefulness and Feasibility.

Additions to the World Employment Programme series of studies included: Planning Techniques for a Better Future; Equipment Versus Employment; Jakarta: Urban Development and Employment; Internal Migration in Developing Countries; Rural and Urban Income Inequalities in Indonesia, Mexico, Pakistan, the United Republic of Tanzania and Tunisia; and World Employment Programme: Research in Retrospect and Prospect, as well as another comprehensive employment strategy mission report: Growth, Employment and Equity: A Comprehensive Strategy for the Sudan.

Publications in other areas of main emphasis (e.g. fundamental human rights, social security, working conditions and environment, and tripartism, industrial relations and participation) included Protection Against Anti-union Discrimination; The Impact of International Labour Conventions and Recommendations; Freedom of Association: Digest of Decisions (second edition); The Cost of Social Security, 1967-1971: Eighth International Inquiry; Social Security for the Unemployed; Guide to Safety and Health in Dock Work; Workers' Education and its Techniques; Women Workers and Society: International Perspectives; and Social Policy in a Changing World: The ILO Response.

The 1976 edition of the Yearbook of Labour Statistics was issued at the close of the year.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1976, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, indefinite, fixed-term or short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and at area, branch and other offices was 2,957. Of these staff members, 1,530 were in the professional and higher categories (drawn from 103 nationalities) and 1,427 were in the general service or maintenance category. Of the professional staff, 695 were assigned to technical co-operation projects.

Budget

Expenditures during the 1974-1975 biennium amounted to $109,603,406, including $14,534,406 charged to supplementary credits approved by the Governing Body, principally to meet additional costs arising from inflation and exchange-rate changes.

In June 1975, the International Labour Conference adopted a budget of expenditure for the 1976-1977 biennium of $143,982,000, including $8 million for restoration to the Working Capital Fund in 1976 of part of the amounts withdrawn in 1974-1975 under the supplementary credits approved by the Governing Body, and $10.1 million to meet additional costs arising in 1976 from the effects of exchange-rate adjustments. The Conference decided that the amount to be assessed member States for 1976 should be $81,041,000, leaving the arrangements for financing in 1977 for consideration in June 1976.

At its June 1976 session, the Conference adopted a supplementary budget of $10.1 million to cover further additional costs expected to arise in 1976-1977 from the exchange-rate position. In conformity with the Financial Regulations an amount of $6,534,406 was also added to the budget for reimbursement to the Working Capital Fund of the balance of the withdrawal made in 1974-1975 under the supplementary credits. The total expenditure budget for 1976-1977 was thus increased to $160,616,406. The Conference decided that the amount of $79,575,406 to be financed, in 1977 should be assessed member States in accordance with the scale of contributions adopted for 1977 at its June 1975 session.

Chapter III

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The need for improvement of food production in developing countries over the long term continued to be a major preoccupation of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)<sup>1</sup> during 1976.

The FAO Council, at a special session held in July in Rome, approved four proposals to alleviate hunger and malnutrition in the poorest countries: first, greater emphasis on investment in food and agriculture; second, establishment of a technical co-operation programme directly financed from FAO funds; third, closer links with member countries through greater decentralization; and fourth, a shift in the balance from long-term, theoretical studies towards more practical programmes and activities.

The organization's membership stood at 136 countries as at the end of 1976.

World food and agricultural situation

During 1976, there was improvement in the immediate world food and agricultural situation. Due to favourable weather, harvests were good and total agricultural production increased by 3.6 per cent over 1975.

Progress towards the longer-term goal of greater world food security was, however, inadequate, as food production was unable to improve nutritional levels. World cereal stocks increased in 1975/1976 for the first time in three years, but were still only 13 per cent of annual consumption, while 17 to 18 per cent was regarded by FAO as a minimum safe level for world food security.

Trends in world trade in agricultural products were unfavourable for developing countries. Their earnings from agricultural exports fell substantially, and price changes operated against them. Negotiations on trade and related matters continued through 1976 but virtually no progress was made.

Activities in 1976

By the end of 1976, 85 member Governments of FAO, and several regional bodies had agreed to join the organization's Global Information and Early Warning System. During the year, the System observed world food prospects and issued reports on crops and shortages, noting cereal-import requirements of the developing countries most severely affected by the economic crisis and impending crop failures.

The organization formally established in 1976 the Food Security Assistance Scheme, which was to assist developing countries to formulate national food security policies, identify supporting projects and mobilize the necessary external resources. The Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Norway and Switzerland pledged several million dollars to the Scheme, while other countries were providing help in specific cases.

The FAO Intergovernmental Group on Tea discussed the draft of a long-term agreement between exporting and importing countries, based on a system of "standby" export quotas. The FAO Intergovernmental Group on Meat, after two years' preparatory work, adopted a set of guidelines as a code of conduct for national and international trade policies in the livestock sector. The informal international stabilization arrangements on jute and on hard fibres were reactivated by the respective FAO groups in 1976, after a lapse of several years.

Field programmes

About four fifths of the funds received by FAO in 1976 were spent on field activities. The largest source of finance was the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which accounted for about $107 million disbursed by FAO to 600 large-scale and 700 small-scale projects, whose total value was $498 million.

Other projects in 1976 included a $45 million three-year programme to assist newly independent countries, initiated by the Nordic countries with FAO co-operation. Plans for the FAO/Near East Co-operative Programme progressed, with amounts pledged totalling $29 million; 64 projects were approved for submission to donor countries. Donor support was confirmed for 13 projects with total commitments of $15 million.

As at the end of 1976, 21 FAO teams were in the field helping Governments to plan and analyse agricultural development, policy and budgeting. Agricultural economists and planning experts were provided for 25 FAO-operated projects and for nine projects managed by other agencies.

Requests increased for FAO assistance through unilateral trust-fund agreements under which countries financed FAO execution of part of their national development programmes. The FAO/Government Co-operative Programme was joined by new donors wishing to channel part of their development aid through the organization.

The total value of approved projects amounted to some $625 million.

The United Kingdom joined the Associate Expert Scheme, financing the assignment of specialists by FAO. Seventeen countries participated and, by the end of 1976, 240 associate experts were engaged in field work and research and a further 30 were under recruitment.

In 1976, FAO set up its own Technical Co-operation Programme to deal with emergency situations and provide aid in areas not covered by existing field programmes. The sum of $18.5 million was provided for the 1976-1977 biennium, and the first projects were approved at the end of 1976.

World Food Programme

Total commitments by the United Nations/FAO World Food Programme (WFP) since it started operations in 1963 reached more than $3,000 million as at the end of 1976, financing some 800 social and economic development projects in 105 countries and an estimated 230 emergency relief operations in more than 90 countries.

The target for the Programme's food aid pledges for the 1975-1976 biennium was exceeded by 50 per cent. Pledges stood at $667 million at the end of August 1976. The Programme committed almost $600 million to developing countries for 1976.

A pledging target of $750 million for the two-year period 1977-1978 was agreed to in October 1975 by WFP's 24-nation governing body, the Intergovernmental Committee, and by August 1976 pledges had reached $554 million.

In 1976, the 30-member reconstituted governing body of WFP, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, approved projects totalling a record $554 million. Among the recipients were Bangladesh ($60 million for reactivation of silted waterways), Somalia ($21 million for resettlement of nomads and farmers), the Syrian Arab Republic ($15 million for developing agriculture and resettling farmers) and Pakistan ($32 million for five new projects, including a nation-wide scheme for feeding vulnerable groups at a cost of $20.5 million). Nutrition projects with a total value of $65 million were provided for school children in Bolivia, Brazil, Jordan, Liberia, Peru, the Philippines and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Emergency aid during 1976 totalled $40 million.

Freedom from Hunger Campaign

The Freedom from Hunger Campaign/Action for Development in 1976 placed increasing emphasis on helping organizations to plan and execute their own programmes.

Four Sahelian countries drew up consolidated projects and, at a seminar held in Somalia, representatives of six African countries pooled ideas for rural training programmes.

Between 1 January and 1 October 1976, 30 projects were initiated, with donor contributions of $1.5 million projected. In an effort to appeal to non-governmental organizations for funding, a consolidated presentation containing 50 projects was sent to over 200 partners in developed countries.

FAO Investment Centre

Developing countries seeking capital continued to turn to FAO for assistance in drawing up projects to present to multilateral, regional and national financing institutions. During 1976, efforts to improve the social and economic conditions of the poorest farmers accounted for a large proportion of the agricultural projects prepared by FAO and financed by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank).

In conjunction with the Inter-American Development Bank, plans were made for rural development in Panama, fisheries in Chile, Ecuador, Guatemala and Jamaica, irrigation in Haiti, forestry in Paraguay and Peru, and marketing and research in Jamaica. Nearly all the agricultural projects financed by the African Development Bank and Fund were drawn up with FAO assistance. Joint investment work with the Asian Development Bank resulted in a $17 million project to provide Afghanistan with quality wheat seed, cotton seed and fruit-tree seedlings which were to increase crop yields by 10 to 20 per cent.

A co-operation agreement was reached with the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development, and working arrangements were negotiated with the Kuwait Fund, the Islamic Development Bank and the Corporación Andina de Fomento.

Industry Co-operative Programme

The Industry Co-operative Programme (ICP) was established in 1966 to provide a direct link between the world's agricultural, fisheries and forestry industries, FAO and other United Nations bodies, and Governments of developing countries. Joint efforts were made by ICP members to build up agro-industrial technology in developing countries, transfer essential skills through technical training programmes and support projects with the widest development impact.

In 1976, the FAO/ICP Pesticides Working Group organized its first national training course on the safe and efficient use of pesticides in agriculture and public health. A study was undertaken on the transfer of pesticides technology to developing countries and ways of stimulating seed-industry development were explored. Funds were provided by ICP member companies for training students from several African countries in agricultural mechanization, for assisting an agro-based industrial course in Malaysia and for executing a large-scale rural development project in Nigeria. Assistance was given to the promotion of cashew-nut production and processing in the Ivory Coast and the United Republic of Cameroon, and production possibilities were explored in Senegal and Sri Lanka.

The FAO/ICP Task Force on Nutrition Improvement held its first session during 1976. In co-operation with the World Health Organization (WHO), it made plans for food production and quality control and integration of nutritional objectives in national planning.

Resource management

Developing countries continued in 1976 to draw upon FAO expertise to solve problems of farm mechanization, storage, marketing and agricultural credit facilities. Advice, designs and specifications were made available for the storage of fertilizer and chemicals, animal housing and waste-disposal systems, forage conservation and handling, and animal feed preparation. The use of local skills and building materials continued to be a primary consideration. Advice was given on farm mechanization and the establishment of an Asian regional network of institutes dealing with work in farm machinery.

A project supported by the Danish International Development Agency evaluated low-cost methods of farm-level maize storage in the humid tropics of Africa and prepared extension programmes for farmers. Field support for grain storage and animal production continued in Bangladesh, Egypt, Hungary, Indonesia, Jordan, Nepal and Sri Lanka.

Assistance to the food processing sector focused on the preservation of food supplies and the reduction of post-harvest losses. Activities included field experiments with rice processing and assistance to research and training institutions concerned with food technology.

During 1976, FAO provided advice on the processing of non-food agricultural products. Projects were supported for hide and skin processing in Iran, Pakistan, Rwanda and Turkey, and for integration of the phases of silk production in India, Iran, Sri Lanka and Turkey.

Regional credit institutes received FAO support in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Near East. The institutes' responsibilities were to include the promotion of training programmes to be funded by the developing countries concerned. Assistance was also extended to agricultural-credit training courses organized in Thailand and the Philippines and national training programmes in the Dominican Republic, the Gambia, the Republic of Korea and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Land and water management

The increasing demand for food continued to put pressure on the world's limited water resources. A study of the relationship between water planning and crop production was undertaken in collaboration with national institutes, and a course on ground-water pollution was sponsored by FAO with UNDP financing. A growing demand for FAO's Irrigation and Drainage Paper Series was reflected in several reprints and in the 1976 publication of a manual on "Water Quality for Agriculture."

Kenya received assistance for the development of irrigation schemes in arid pasture lands, and a water supply project in the Republic of Korea dealt with the problem of periodical intrusions of seawater. Twenty-seven field projects dealing with soil fertility and fertilizers were financed by UNDP in 1976. A project investigating biological nitrogen fixation as a cheap source of nitrogen started with financial assistance from the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

In co-operation with the Swedish International Development Agency, FAO held a regional workshop in Bangkok, Thailand, on the use of organic material as fertilizer in Asia, which was to be followed by sessions in Africa, the Near East and Latin America.

More than 30 countries were involved in the trace-element study undertaken by the FAO/Finland Co-operative Programme. National seminars on the use of mineral and organic fertilizers were held in Sierra Leone, the Upper Volta and Zambia. A project on the global assessment of soil degradation was started in Africa with UNEP financing.

The fertilizer programme organized by FAO helped to organize 3,000 trials and more than 7,000 demonstrations on farmers' lands. Eighty training courses were attended by 3,000 local technicians. Nearly 10,000 farmers participated in pilot schemes for the improvement of fertilizer distribution and supply and credit facilities. In a joint effort with the Netherlands Government, FAO sponsored a course on fertilizer extension-work for staff from developing countries.

Plant production and protection

Higher crop yields, disease protection, seed and plant production and crop forecasting methods were priority objectives of FAO during 1976.

Activities included the collection of primitive cultivars threatened with extinction, weather monitoring in relation to crop forecasting (in co-operation with the World Meteorological Organization) and advance estimates of water available during the crop season in the drought-prone Sahelian zone of Africa. The FAO regional study on the seven Sahelian countries (Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta) was completed in 1976. It was considered to be the most comprehensive analysis of the region's agricultural development prospects and constraints.

The Seed Industry Development Programme, in which 54 countries and three technical agencies participated, helped member States prepare national production programmes. Work continued on regional seed-production in the Sahelian countries and in Latin America (Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela).

The Swedish International Development Agency financed a four-year research project on barley and spring wheat in Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Iran, Pakistan, and Turkey, coupled with eight-month training courses. Other training courses were given on durum wheat, seed technology, and systems of farming in Australia (financed by Saudi Arabia).

A project in Indonesia involved field planting on 600 hectares of seed garden which was to provide sufficient seednut to replant some 30,000 hectares annually. An FAO pre-investment study on rubber production in Thailand resulted in a project financed by the World Bank which was to affect some 1,230,000 hectares, 95 per cent of which were small holdings in need of replanting.

Emphasis on vegetable production for local consumption and export markets was successful in several African countries (the Central African Empire, the Ivory Coast, Rwanda and Senegal) and led to increased incomes from comparatively small plots of land. A demonstration centre for protected vegetable production was set up in Kuwait to help reduce dependence on imported vegetables and to provide guidance for areas with a similar climate.

A research network on olive production, organized with the co-operation of seven Mediterranean countries, was extended to another eight countries in Europe, North America and the Near East. A date palm research centre was established in Iraq to co-ordinate date production, processing and marketing.

Due to the increased use of pesticides in developing countries, FAO in 1976 launched a programme for monitoring the environmental impact of pesticides, in co-operation with UNEP. Governments were assisted in modernizing methods of detecting and measuring pesticide residues in food and other material liable to contamination. The results of the FAO world survey on the resistance of stored-grain pests were published in the course of 1976.

As a result of FAO-sponsored co-operation between 60 countries and territories in Africa, the Middle East and South-West Asia, the fight for locust recession entered its fourteenth consecutive year and the risk of heavy losses to agricultural crops, grasslands and forests was averted in areas prone to food shortages. Control operations were carried out in 15 countries extending from India and Pakistan through Saudi Arabia to Algeria and the Sudan.

International Fertilizer Supply Scheme

By October 1976, a total of $165 million was pledged to FAO's International Fertilizer Supply Scheme. During the year, 60 fertilizer assistance operations were initiated or completed. They involved the shipment of about 270,000 tons of fertilizer—valued at $75 million—to 39 of the neediest developing countries in Africa, 18 in Asia and three in Latin America.

Fisheries

Estimated at some 70 million tons, the 1975 world fisheries catch matched the 1974 level. The supply of fish for human consumption, as opposed to fish meal for stock feeding, reached a record 50 million tons compared with 37 million tons in 1965, the expansion rate exceeding that of the world population.

Fishery projects in 1976 totalled 137. Of these, 40, valued at $11.7 million, were supported by national development agency contributions while 30 projects, involving $16.8 million, were co-operative efforts between FAO and regional fishery commissions.

Short-term projects carried out in 1976 included demonstration of fishing methods in Yemen, which increased the catch rate of sardines to a level that ensured the viability of a profitable fish-meal operation, and identification of a quality-control problem that was handicapping exports in Bangladesh. The FAO Technical Co-operation Programme helped rehabilitate small-scale fisheries in the Philippines after an earthquake.

During the year, FAO co-operated with fishery agencies on projects such as stock-assessment courses, acoustic methods of resource survey, and tuna-population dynamics.

Regional collaboration emphasized pooling of data and co-ordination of national expertise. During 1976, working parties studied resources off West Africa and the shrimp stocks in the Malacca Strait and off the coasts of Iran and the Arabian Peninsula. Inland fishery resources in Asia and the Caribbean were investigated. The decline in whale stocks was discussed, and a World Conference on Aquaculture (fish farming) was held in Japan with over 400 participants from 48 countries.

The General Fisheries Council for the Mediterranean, one of FAO's eight fishery bodies, co-ordinated four pilot projects involving more than 50 research centres, with financial support from UNDP. The Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Information System was accepted as a United Nations information system in 1976. The FAO Council approved the statutes of a new Inland Fishery Commission for Latin America, and the FAO-drafted Convention for the Protection of the Mediterranean Sea against Pollution was adopted in 1976.

Forestry

More than 300 FAO forestry experts worked in 72 countries during 1976, helping Governments to operate 166 projects ranging from pulp and paper production to wildlife conservation and sawmilling. A joint UNDP/FAO project in northern Thailand successfully countered the annual destruction of 40,000 to 50,000 hectares of forest by intensive forestry practice combined with improved measures for settled agriculture such as horticulture, animal husbandry and small-scale crop production.

India received $600,000 worth of equipment under a UNDP/FAO project to reduce India's dependence on paper imports by raising the annual production of paper to 2 million tons by 1980.

Other projects in 1976 included institution-building assistance to Honduras, sawmilling in Nigeria (a joint FAO/Finland Trust Fund effort) and crocodile exploitation in Papua New Guinea sponsored by FAO and UNDP.

The role of forestry in a rehabilitation programme for the Sahel was discussed at a meeting held in Senegal, and FAO helped prepare a feasibility study on the establishment of a southern Sahara green belt for the United Nations Conference on Desertification to be held in 1977. Three forestry conservation guides were published during 1976.

With financial assistance from UNEP, FAO started a project for the conservation of forest genetic resources. Seeds and funds were distributed to establish conservation stands of tropical pines and eucalypts in developing countries.

The inroads on tropical moist forests and the problem of harvesting their wood without jeopardizing the environment were analysed in a survey completed in 1976. With tropical forest products as a major commodity export of developing countries, a new FAO service was launched in 1976 to provide monthly information on tropical hardwood trade. Studies were conducted during the year on the pulp and paper-making properties of fast-growing wood species and the technical and economic problems of small papermills, and data were assembled for industrial planning in developing regions.

The Association of Latin American Centres of Forestry Education was founded in 1976 and workshops on forestry development and planning were held in India and the Philippines.

Livestock

A five-year operational plan was launched in 1976 for the control of African animal trypanosomiasis, a disease similar to human sleeping-sickness, borne by the tsetse fly, which prevents cattle-rearing in most of the broad, humid belt stretching across Africa. Initial operations were to concentrate on training, applied research, pilot projects and expanded rearing of disease-tolerant cattle, as well as the development of rational land-use systems.

Assistance in controlling major infectious diseases of livestock and poultry was strengthened in 1976 and efforts made to contain the growing threat of foot-and-mouth disease in developing countries.

A regional animal production and health commission for Asia, the Far East and the South-West Pacific was formed in 1976 to help small-scale farmers and to co-ordinate national policies and programmes.

Under the FAO dairy training programme, courses were organized in which 140 trainees participated during the year. In 17 developing countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America, FAO assisted national dairy training courses for 500 students. Since the inception of FAO's programme, regional and national courses have been attended by some 4,300 participants.

A two-phase UNDP/FAO project to help Malawi reduce imports of beef and dairy products was considered so successful that the Malawi Government requested a third phase, due to start in 1977. Dairy plants were established under the project, and extension work resulted in more sophisticated methods of animal production.

The genetic improvement of livestock was pursued through the artificial insemination and breeding programme initiated by FAO. A co-operative effort was organized on a number of Polish State farms, where Friesian bull semen from 10 countries was used to produce about 1,200 calves from different strains every year.

The FAO's International Scheme for the Co-ordination of Dairy Development and its International Meat Development Scheme sent missions to Guyana, Mongolia, the Niger, Peru, Surinam, Tunisia and Turkey in order to explore the development requirements of dairy-livestock and pasture improvement, staff training in dairy technology and the improvement of infrastructure. Consultations were arranged with donor countries to discuss proposals arising from missions to Chile, Ecuador, Jamaica, the Philippines and the Republic of Korea. As at the end of 1976, FAO had assisted with the preparation of dairy development plans for 28 countries. Project proposals totalling $40 million were supported by donor countries and organizations. Four reports dealing with Ecuador, Ethiopia, Malta and the Sudan were published.

Nutrition

In 1976, national efforts to plan nutritional improvement began receiving specialized inter-agency backing. Bangladesh, Senegal, Sri Lanka and the Upper Volta were the first countries to receive nutrition-planning assistance. During the year, FAO operated or planned nearly 100 nutrition projects, and initiated joint projects with UNEP to deal with environmental contaminants in food.

Education and training were FAO's main focus in the area of applied nutrition. Training programmes for middle-level field workers were strengthened in Rwanda and the Sudan, and a three-year project funded by the Norwegian Development Agency became operational in 1976. With consultancy visits to nine more countries during the year, the assessment of current training and research in nutrition and food science in Africa neared completion. Assistance was extended to agricultural institutions teaching nutrition in Kenya, the Libyan Arab Republic and Swaziland. A nutrition institute in Morocco was established with UNDP/FAO assistance to train agricultural students and to operate a research laboratory.

A large-scale nutrition programme in Colombia was appraised jointly by FAO and the World Bank. The programme was to incorporate a plan for subsidizing purchases of locally manufactured food mixtures by low-income consumers. In co-operation with the Swedish International Development Agency, FAO provided fellowships for food marketing specialists in the Andean Pact countries (Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela) and held a workshop on food promotion for participants from the Gambia, Ghana, Liberia, Nigeria and Sierra Leone.

The FAO/WHO Codex Alimentarius Commission adopted 21 international food standards in 1976. The Commission, with a membership of 114 countries, was established to protect the consumer against health hazards and fraud and to ensure fair practices in the food trade through the development of international food standards.

Food quality, inspection and control programmes and their implications for the promotion of trade and agro-industry figured among nearly 100 FAO nutrition projects operating in 1976. Operational assistance focusing on training was given to Kuwait, Mexico, Qatar, Zambia and the East African countries.

Agricultural services

The improvement of rural life received high priority during 1976. Studies were made on land settlement, changes in land tenure and farm production structure in several countries of Africa and Latin America.

During the year, discussions continued on the role of farmers' organizations and rural trade-unions to help bring the rural poor into the mainstream of development.

A large-scale UNDP project in Malaysia, for which FAO served as executing agency, was completed in 1976. The organization provided experts and consultants to incorporate the country's many agro-based co-operatives and farmers' associations into a single national structure which would benefit some 700,000 smallholder farm families.

The role of women in promoting rural development was increasingly recognized. During the year, FAO emphasized training in home economics and related subjects and helped set up itinerant training workshops for women.

To alleviate the shortage of qualified personnel in developing countries, two campaigns were launched in 1976: one to co-ordinate systems of agricultural education and training, the other to train agricultural extension workers who were to pass on their knowledge to farmers, rural labourers and their families. This project involved 60 training specialists in 30 developing countries and was a co-operative effort by FAO, UNDP, the World Bank and the Swedish and the Norwegian international development agencies.

During 1976, FAO continued to participate in and organize seminars and conferences on agricultural planning and co-operation in developing countries, such as the eighth agricultural planning course for Spanish-speaking member countries, which lasted four months and was attended by 25 participants from 19 countries.

The organization acted as a depository and clearing-house for information and helped developing countries to draw up or amend legislation concerning agriculture, forestry, fisheries, and related activities. Assistance on legal and institutional aspects of fisheries development and management was extended to the Gambia, Malaysia, Mexico and the Philippines. At the request of the Dominican Republic, a course in agrarian law was given to lawyers from 13 State institutions.

A training course in remote sensing in agriculture was held at FAO headquarters in October 1976 to apply new techniques to land use and crop inventory in semi-arid African countries. The organization's remote sensing unit became operational in January 1976 and was servicing over 100 FAO field projects—many of them using satellite imagery.

Remote sensing was also used to detect locust breeding areas and to deal with locusts before they swarmed. Promising results were reported from the Haggar Mountains in Algeria, where the first remote-sensing experiment was carried out by national ground-survey teams and FAO units. Some 30 developing countries were given advisory and operational assistance in the use of this technique in agriculture—including hydrology and soil surveys—fisheries and forestry.

Nuclear energy in agriculture

Under a programme jointly operated by FAO and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to apply nuclear techniques to food and agriculture, more than 170 agricultural research projects were undertaken in national institutes of developing countries.

During the year, scientists of developing countries were given advanced training in isotopes and radiation applied to agriculture. Methods of increasing grain legume production through efficient use of fertilizer were studied, including diagnostic and remedial techniques for micronutrient (mainly zinc) deficiencies in flooded rice soils and the control of nitrogen's potential role as pollutant in food, feed or water.

The multilateral project for tsetse fly suppression by releasing sterile insects continued in 1976. A tsetse mass-production facility was designed in co-operation with the Nigerian authorities and production of sterilized tsetse started in the United Republic of Tanzania. Research on sterile insects for control of the Mediterranean fruit fly and olive fly was completed in 1976.

Livestock was discussed at a symposium on the use of nuclear techniques in animal production and health, and a research programme to correct infertility in farm animals was established. The evaluation of irradiated food proceeded during the year, and clearance was given to several items. In 1976, pilot or commercial-scale irradiation plants were available for food irradiation in 30 countries.

Agricultural statistics

By the end of 1976, the results from 39 of the more than 100 countries participating in the 1970 World Census of Agriculture were published in the FAO Census Bulletin. Also issued was the programme for the 1980 world census.

By the end of 1976, the organization's computer storage and processing system for food and agricultural statistics covered some 400 primary and 100 processed commodities from more than 200 countries and territories. Tables analysing food supplies in terms of calories, proteins and fats were published for some 80 countries. A Fertilizer Data Centre was established to monitor data on plant nutrients. Work started on the compilation of data on production capacities and fertilizer raw materials.

Publications

In addition to occasional books and papers published under FAO's aegis, the organization issued its annual Commodity Review and Outlook, the Animal Health Yearbook, the Yearbook of Fishery Statistics, the Production Yearbook and the Trade Yearbook. Quarterlies included the Plant Protection Bulletin, World Animal Review, Food and Nutrition and the forestry magazine, Unasylva. Ceres, a review of agricultural, economic and social aspects of development, appeared on a bi-monthly basis. Monthlies included the Monthly Bulletin of Agricultural Economics and Statistics. At a popular level, FAO published Billions More to Feed. Lists of publications, depository libraries and sales agents appeared in FAO Books in Print.

Secretariat

The total number of staff employed by FAO at the end of 1976 at its headquarters and regional and country offices stood at 3,911, of whom 1,420 (drawn from more than 117 countries) were in the professional and higher categories and 2,491 in the general service category. In addition, field project personnel, working in 113 countries and territories, comprised 1,907 staff members in the professional and higher categories and 357 in the general service category.

Budget

The eighteenth session of the FAO Conference, meeting in November/December 1975, approved a budget of $167 million to finance the FAO regular programme for the 1976-1977 biennium.

Chapter IV

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

During 1976, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)<sup>1</sup> gave priority to encouraging the development of communications and cultural policies in many of its member States. A broad range of activities in the humanities, natural sciences, social sciences and communications fields continued.

During 1976, the following States joined UNESCO, bringing the number of member States to 140: Surinam (16 July), Papua New Guinea (4 October), Mozambique (11 October) and Seychelles (18 October). The organization also had two associate members, the British Eastern Caribbean Group and Namibia.

Education

During 1976, UNESCO emphasized the renovation of educational systems to enable education to make a more effective contribution to the solution of major human problems.

The nineteenth session of the General Conference of UNESCO, held at Nairobi, Kenya, in October and November 1976, recommended that adult education be regarded as an integral part of lifelong education. The General Conference also adopted a convention on the recognition of studies, diplomas and degrees in the Arab States and European countries bordering on the Mediterranean.

During the year a study of obstacles in the way of creating a new international order and UNESCO's possible role in the process, Moving Towards Change, was published. A conference of ministers of education of the African member States of UNESCO was held at Lagos, Nigeria. The conference emphasized the study of problems involved in the renovation of African educational systems and adopted a declaration urging far-reaching changes in education in order to provide impetus to social and political change.

The first international conference of ministers and senior officials responsible for physical education and sports was held at UNESCO headquarters at Paris in April. The conference, which was attended by representatives of 106 countries, urged the establishment of a permanent body to co-ordinate co-operation in those fields.

Training of educational personnel continued. More than 30 teacher-training projects were carried out in Africa and 47 expert planning missions on educational financing were sent to member States under a co-operative programme with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The organization also continued its work with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in 512 schools, gave assistance to six vocational and technical training centres and three pre-service teacher-training centres, and supervised entrance examinations in Gaza for 7,400 candidates wishing to continue their studies at Arab universities. A United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) project for assistance to African national liberation movements was transformed into a series of separate projects, and activities meeting the requirements of each movement were carried out.

The organization's programme for the access of women to education collected reports on achievements in this field from Brazil, Ghana, Japan, Tunisia, the USSR and the United States, and arranged fellowships for 14 women.

Natural sciences

The organization's major scientific meeting in 1976, an intergovernmental conference on the assessment and mitigation of earthquake risks, was held at Paris. Attended by 160 delegates and observers from 52 countries, the conference considered the prediction of earthquakes, scientific and technical problems, and the human, social and economic aspects involved in protecting populations against earthquakes.

A Conference of Ministers of Arab States Responsible for the Application of Science and Technology to Development was held at Rabat, Morocco, in August. The meeting sought to strengthen co-operation in the following areas: the study and management of water resources; the ecology of arid and semi-arid lands; geological and geophysical research; the study of the marine environment and coastal zones; and non-traditional sources of energy. The Conference decided to create an Arab fund to finance scientific and technological research in the Arab States.

An International Conference on the Education and Training of Engineers was held in April at New <sup>1</sup> For information about the activities of UNESCO prior to 1976, see reports of UNESCO to the United Nations, reports of the Director-General of UNESCO to the General Conference and previous volumes of Y.U.N.

Delhi, India. Another meeting, which was held at Tunis, Tunisia, on the status of scientific researchers in developing countries, considered ways to halt the "brain drain."

Progress was made in building the machinery of international scientific co-operation. The International Geological Correlation Programme continued; 69 countries formed national committees for the programme and 55 research projects were under way, some of which dealt with economically important minerals and special problems of fossil fuels accumulation.

Progress continued on the Intergovernmental Programme on Man and the Biosphere by the creation of an international network of biosphere reserves. A large integrated project on arid lands was launched in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme, and a working site was established in northern Kenya.

The organization also participated in the Joint Oceanographic Assembly held in September at Edinburgh, Scotland. The organization's Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission helped developing countries in Latin America and Eastern Africa to set up a joint research programme on oceanic upwelling in offshore areas, a process which leads to increased productivity of fisheries.

By the end of 1976 the UNESCO intergovernmental programme for co-operation in the field of scientific and technological information had national committees in 80 countries. The intergovernmental information programme provided assistance to 20 developing countries to help them strengthen their information systems.

Social sciences and their application

A section to deal with the social sciences and their application was established in the secretariat of UNESCO in 1976. Emphasis was placed on: the fundamental application of those disciplines and the clarification of concepts and criteria; the professional responsibilities of social scientists; the relationship between social sciences and natural sciences; and the need for interdisciplinary research into such questions as the reaction of the social sciences to problems created by scientific and technological revolution. Among improvements in the information and documentation services was the incorporation of those services into UNESCO's intergovernmental information programme. The World List of Social Science Publications and Volume I of a new series on the World-wide Service of Information about the Social Sciences were published.

A study was carried out on the problems of development, including developmental aid, the impact of transnational enterprises on education, science, culture and communication, and the socio-cultural aspects of development. Work was intensified on the application of the social sciences to the administration and management of development, to rural development, to the conditions of migrant workers, to problems of drug abuse and to the social aspects of environmental problems.

The organization continued its work on the analysis of manifestations, causes and effects of the violation of human rights and violations of peace. Other studies concerned conditions necessary for the respect of fundamental rights and liberties in multi-ethnic societies and the structural integration of immigrants in Western Europe. Studies continued on societies in southern Africa in relation to the effects of apartheid and domination by white minorities. In its efforts to promote international co-operation, UNESCO began to concentrate on disarmament and the study of violence.

The organization continued to support the increasing role of women in society by strengthening international collaboration among the organs of the United Nations, as well as with women's movements and interested non-governmental organizations.

Youth programmes were designed to promote greater participation by youth in the affairs of society, and young people and their organizations were more closely linked to UNESCO programmes. In 1976 such programmes dealt with studies on unemployment among youth and the development of their cultural life, the problems of young workers, and the promotion of voluntary service for development.

Themes of other meetings held in 1976 included: the effects of technological innovation on man's cultural environment; education goals and theories (held jointly with the International Bureau of Education); main trends of interdisciplinary research in the social sciences and humanities; the interpretations of experiences by and through the mass media; and the role of the social and human sciences with regard to the problems of peace.

Culture

Special attention was paid to the co-ordination of international effort when implementing projects financed through voluntary contributions for major restoration campaigns, such as those for Philae, Egypt, and Borobudur, Indonesia. Many of the private committees contributing to the project to safeguard Venice, Italy, were also able to carry out a number of restoration projects.

For the training of specialists in the conservation of cultural property and in museology, two types of courses were organized: international courses at the International Centre for the Study of the Preservation and Restoration of Cultural Property at Rome, Italy, and regional courses at Jos, Nigeria, and Cuzco, Peru. Recommendations on the international exchange of cultural property and on the safeguarding and contemporary role of historic areas were adopted by the 1976 General Conference.

The General Conference also adopted an international recommendation on people's participation in and contribution to cultural life.

The International Fund for the Promotion of Culture became operational in 1976. The Fund, through loans, subventions and investments, was established to finance cultural projects in the organization's member States; its resources were obtained from public and private voluntary contributions.

A total of 28 States ratified or accepted the 1972 International Convention concerning the Protection of the Cultural and Natural Heritage. The Convention's first general assembly of States was held at Nairobi in November 1976 during the General Conference, and members of the World Heritage Committee were elected.

The World Cultural Heritage Bulletin was published three times during the year in English, French and Spanish. The periodical Museums was published in English and French. Co-operation with non-governmental organizations, such as the International Council of Museums, the International Council of Monuments and Sites and the International Federation of Landscape Architects, was strengthened.

The UNESCO programme of cultural studies and dissemination had three main components in 1976: regional studies, intercultural studies, and dissemination of cultural works. Increasing emphasis was laid on the study of intercultural relations and the impact of technologically advanced societies on culture. Various publications on aspects of world civilizations were prepared and published, as well as 26 books in the various series of the UNESCO collection of representative works.

Communications

The first Intergovernmental Conference on Communication Policies for Latin America and the Caribbean was held at San José, Costa Rica, from 12 to 21 July 1976. The meeting made recommendations to member States of the region on: the current situation and trends in communication policies; the role of communications in an integrated approach to development, especially in the fields of education, science and culture; problems arising from the development of modern systems of communication, including access, participation and the right to communicate; the rights and responsibilities of communicators; approaches to the formulation of policies, problems and methods of planning; professional training; research and evaluation; and the contribution of communications to the process of regional integration in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Declaration of San José emphasized the essential functions of communications in the establishment of the new international economic order. A second conference in this series was planned for Asia in 1978.

The General Conference adopted a resolution inviting the Director-General of UNESCO to give careful attention to the recommendations approved by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August 1976, which called for reinforcement of the resources provided for communication and information activities.

During the year UNESCO continued its programme for the development of communication systems. Regional advisers in the Arab States, Africa and Asia assisted member States in the formulation of development plans and in the establishment of training facilities. Training courses were organized in co-operation with the Asian Institute for Broadcast Development and with the Kenya Institute of Mass Communication. Assistance was given to develop rural newspapers in Ghana, Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania, and community communication projects were supported in Peru and Venezuela.

A new concept, NATIS (national information systems), emphasized the need for co-operative action at the national level in the fields of documentation, libraries, archives and book promotion. To promote awareness of NATIS, meetings were organized in various regions by UNESCO or under the sponsorship of UNESCO. The Intergovernmental Conference on Communication Policies for Latin America and the Caribbean recommended that member States in that region establish national information systems as an integral part of their national communications policy. Other international meetings, notably those organized by international non-governmental organizations, discussed NATIS and made recommendations for UNESCO action in this area.

A major global objective of UNESCO was the achievement of universal bibliographic control, which would assume the establishment of an agency in each country to produce a bibliography of publications issued in that country. Preparation and studies were made in co-operation with the International Federation of Library Associations on various aspects of standardized cataloguing and exchange of information, using either manual or computerized methods of producing national bibliographies. An international congress on this subject was to be held in 1977, at which approximately 120 national bibliographic agencies would be represented.

A number of national projects were promoted, primarily directed towards the training of book personnel, the creation of national book-development councils and the improvement of writing and publishing skills in the field of books for children.

Technical seminars and training courses were held under the auspices of UNESCO regional book-development centres in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and Latin America. The organization continued assistance to a co-publishing programme of children's books in Asia, which included 15 member States. The Regional Book Development Centre at Karachi, Pakistan, was restructured to include cultural activities and was to operate as the UNESCO Regional Office for Culture and Book Development in Asia after January 1977.

Two international meetings of experts were devoted to book production in multilingual countries and to the promotion of reading. Projects assisted through UNDP included the restructuring of the Cuban Book Institute, the establishment of a printing unit in the Foreign Ministry of Ecuador and the development, in Morocco, of a simplified system of vowelized Arab script.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1976, the total number of full-time staff employed by UNESCO on permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments was 3,172, drawn from 122 nationalities. Of these staff members, 1,442 were in the professional or higher categories and 1,730 were in the general service and maintenance worker categories.

Of the professional staff, 611 were experts serving in the field; 334 of the general service and maintenance categories were also employed in the field.

Budget

The 1976 session of the General Conference of UNESCO approved a budget of $224,413,000 for the two-year period 1977-1978. The Conference fixed the level of the Working Capital Fund at $16,800,000; amounts to be advanced by member States were to be calculated according to their percentage contribution.

Chapter V

The World Health Organization (WHO)

During 1976, five States were admitted to membership in the World Health Organization (WHO):<sup>1</sup> Cape Verde (5 January); Sao Tome and Principe (23 March); Surinam (25 March); Papua New Guinea (29 April); and Angola (3 May). These admissions brought the membership of the organization to 150 plus two associate members; Papua New Guinea was previously an associate member.

The twenty-ninth World Health Assembly met at Geneva, Switzerland, from 3 to 21 May 1976.

The activities of the year followed the general programme of work adopted for 1973-1977, which included the following main categories: family health, health manpower development, disease prevention and control, mental health, accident prevention, environmental health, strengthening of health services, and co-ordination of biomedical research.

In a move to reorient WHO's work, the twenty-ninth World Health Assembly requested the Director-General to increase technical assistance to developing countries and to ensure that by 1980 at least 60 per cent of WHO's regular budget, in real terms, would be allocated to technical co-operation with Governments and provision of technical services. The WHO Executive Board was to examine at its session in January 1977 proposed changes to reach this target. Proposals included a reduction of activities that were not clearly related to technical co-operation and a phased reduction of established posts. The expected savings of $42 million over the four-year period were to finance special technical co-operation programmes.

Strengthening of health services

During 1976, WHO's efforts to strengthen health services were aimed at primary health care and rural development in developing countries. A project on health technology was begun. Programmes on medical care, disability prevention and rehabilitation emphasized over-all improvement in planning, programming and managerial procedures at the country level. They were supported by a programme in health service information systems.

Workshops were held in health-related sectors, such as the two-week workshop held in Swaziland on field training in research in public health practice. Participants came from Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland.

Other WHO-sponsored activities included an effort by Guinea-Bissau to start building up health care services and a national health programme exercise in the Sudan that resulted in a Government-supported proposal for rural health development. In Costa Rica, the Government included rural and health development in its electoral mandate.

The first publication on the planning and design of health care facilities in developing areas was issued in 1976. This series was to provide guidelines for the planning, programming, design and architecture of hospitals and other medical care facilities in countries with limited resources.

Family health

In 1976, maternal and child care formed part of WHO's technical co-operation programmes in more than 60 countries. Methods and strategies were developed to provide maternal and child health care more efficiently and to improve family planning activities.

A large-scale study on breast feeding was conducted among different socio-economic groups in nine countries during 1976. Frequency and duration of breast feeding were studied, as well as factors influencing it.

Recommendations on the health needs of adolescents were made by WHO experts. They stressed the influences of pre-adolescent health on the adolescent period and the importance of well-being and growth during that period for adult health and the health of future generations.

Nutrition

Nutrition activities focused on five priority areas: national food and nutrition planning, nutrition surveillance, nutrition as part of primary health care, control of nutritional deficiency diseases, and nutrition education and training. The organization prepared guidelines for food and nutrition planning, initiated country studies, improved the methodology for surveillance and established international reference data. Improved ways of controlling specific nutritional deficiencies were studied and nutrition as part of primary health care was emphasized.

Health education

Emphasis was placed on the strengthening of post-graduate training and the development of training facilities for all health staff, teachers and community workers. The organization co-operated with several countries in introducing health education into the curricula of teacher-training institutions.

Human reproduction

During 1976, research on the safety, effectiveness and acceptability of family-planning methods increased. Efforts to improve existing methods and to develop new ones using vaccines, post-coital drugs, drugs from plants and fertility control for men were continued. Services needed to make family-planning methods available in developing countries, especially at the primary health care level, were also studied. Other WHO activities included research on infertility, particularly in African countries, and on foetal development.

The WHO programme, supported mainly by extrabudgetary sources, involved scientists in 62 countries and was the major international research effort in the field.

Health manpower development

In May 1976, the World Health Assembly adopted a resolution calling for a long-term integrated programme of co-operation with member States in health manpower development. The aim was to ensure a comprehensive health care system adapted to the health needs of the population. Emphasis was placed on the training of primary-health workers to provide health care at the peripheral level. A manual on this subject was issued.

The first phase of a WHO study on the international migration of physicians and nurses was completed. It examined the underlying factors of migration and was used as a basis for country action.

National teacher-training centres in medicine and health sciences were established in various parts of the world. A health learning-material programme was launched, and the development of new communication techniques in health information was started.

From 1 December 1975 to 30 November 1976, WHO provided 2,754 fellowships for study, in addition to those awarded for participation in meetings and other educational activities.

Disease prevention and control

Smallpox

During 1976, smallpox was confined to two countries, Ethiopia and Somalia, as compared to five countries in 1975. A total of 953 cases of smallpox were reported, as against 19,000 cases the previous year. In Somalia intensive efforts were made to control the last outbreak; in Ethiopia the last known smallpox case occurred in August.

In 1976, smallpox was declared to have been eradicated in 15 countries of Western Africa, and in Afghanistan and Pakistan. Eradication in South America and Indonesia had been confirmed in 1973 and 1974.

Immunization programme

In co-operation with the health ministries of developing countries, WHO, the United Nations Children's Fund and other agencies provided an immunization programme for children. Vaccination against diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, poliomyelitis, measles and tuberculosis was a protective service needed, but not received, by the 80 million children born each year in these countries.

Viral diseases

In January 1976, cases of influenza attributed to a virus similar to that found in swine occurred in a military camp in the state of New Jersey, United States. Many countries prepared, and some used, vaccine from the strain, though no further cases were reported elsewhere by the WHO network of influenza laboratories.

In September 1976, outbreaks of haemorrhagic fever occurred in the Sudan and Zaire. The disease was transmitted from man to man and proved fatal in more than half of those infected. Two laboratories assisted WHO in identifying the agent, a new serological type of the Marburg virus. Assistance was given to the Sudan and Zaire in trying to discover the origin of the outbreak, and advice on disease control and prevention was provided.

Bacterial diseases

Twenty-three countries reported outbreaks of cholera in 1976, as compared with 30 declared infected in 1975 and 36 the previous year. An interdisciplinary programme for the control of acute diarrhoeal diseases and cholera was continued, stressing the development of simplified oral rehydration techniques. A new heat-resistant vaccine against cerebrospinal meningitis was developed for use in tropical countries.

Sexually transmitted diseases

A new penicillin-resistant strain of gonorrhoea was reported in 11 countries. Simultaneously, strains showing resistance to antibiotics in general appeared in different parts of the world. The World Health Organization alerted national health administrations to the dangers of resistant strains and advised them on techniques for early detection and identification.

Tuberculosis and respiratory infections

Assistance to national tuberculosis-control programmes was continued in many countries. In the WHO Eastern Mediterranean region, a number of national seminars were organized in collaboration with the International Union against Tuberculosis. Tuberculosis-control programmes were reviewed and advice provided on making them more effective.

Infectious diseases of the respiratory system were a principal cause of sickness and death in many countries. An analysis of statistical data gathered during 1976 showed that these infections were responsible for 6.3 per cent of deaths at all ages, and for over 20 per cent of deaths among children.

Leprosy

Although in several countries leprosy-control work was still hampered by late detection and inadequate treatment of patients, surveys conducted in Burma, Thailand, and the Upper Volta, among other places, showed the success of control measures. A significant reduction in prevalence of leprosy was noted, at times amounting to 75 per cent. Field trials of anti-leprosy drugs were begun in Burma and India, and a new programme on the use of chemotherapy for leprosy was launched. To counter the increasing drug resistance, alternative drugs were tested and studies on vaccines continued.

Prevention of blindness

In accordance with World Health Assembly resolutions, a programme for the prevention of blindness was developed. To increase awareness of the scope of the problem, the theme for 1976 World Health Day—7 April—was "Foresight prevents blindness."

Malaria

The world malaria situation still gave cause for concern. Of the 2,015 million people living in areas that were originally malarious, 17 per cent (343 million people) remained in areas not protected by anti-malaria measures; 41 per cent were in areas where malaria eradication was claimed and 42 per cent lived in areas with eradication or control programmes.

In Africa south of the Sahara, malaria was eradicated in areas inhabited by 8 million people, but protection against malaria was available to only 6.4 per cent of the 240 million people exposed to malaria risk.

In the Americas, out of about 210 million inhabitants of originally malarious areas, 100 million lived in areas where malaria eradication was claimed (an increase of some 8 million over the 1974 figure).

In South-East Asia, and especially in Burma, India and Sri Lanka, the malaria situation deteriorated. The number of malaria cases reached 5.3 million, as against 1.4 million in 1970. This was an increase of more than 30 per cent over the figure for 1974.

In the WHO Eastern Mediterranean region, malaria was eradicated in areas inhabited by 11 million people, while 172 million people were protected by anti-malaria measures.

In the Western Pacific region, gains were preserved and malaria ceased to be endemic in Australia, Brunei, Hong Kong, Japan, Macao and Singapore.

In 1976, WHO continued to encourage malaria research and specifically supported studies on immunology, chemotherapy, the biology of malaria parasites and epidemiology.

Schistosomiasis

Schistosomiasis, a parasitic disease transmitted by a snail living in lakes and waterways, occurs in tropical and subtropical regions, affecting millions of people, and was endemic in about 70 countries in 1976.

A joint WHO/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) research project on the shores of Lake Volta in Ghana obtained results that were of vital importance for Schistosomiasis control in planning and operating large water-impoundment systems in Africa.

Onchocerciasis

More than 20 million people in tropical Africa, Yemen and Latin America were infected with the parasite Onchocerca volvulus which causes onchocerciasis, or river blindness. During 1976, a large-scale control programme was in progress in the Volta River basin area of West Africa. Seven African countries participated (Benin, Ghana, the Ivory Coast, Mali, the Niger, Togo and the Upper Volta), in collaboration with the sponsoring agencies (WHO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and UNDP). Field operations were directed against the larvae of the blackfly, which transmits the infection.

Trypanosomiasis

African trypanosomiasis (sleeping sickness) yearly affects about 9,000 people. Of these, 7,000 are infected with the chronic form of the disease. In the moist savannah zone of Africa, a project jointly sponsored by WHO and FAO was launched with UNDP financing. The goal was to develop a realistic control strategy within the capabilities of the average rural health service. In the Sudan, another project was conducted in collaboration with the United Na-lions High Commissioner for Refugees in 1976.

Chagas' disease, the American type of sleeping sickness, is transmitted by an insect which thrives in poor housing conditions. More than 7 million people in South and Central America were known to be affected. Research on control of the disease was supported by WHO.

Cancer

The WHO Expert Committee on Chemotherapy of Solid Tumours established guidelines for the treatment of common cancers. Subjects discussed included basic concepts in cancer therapy, approaches to specific tumours, drug development and clinical trial strategies, and international co-operation.

The network of WHO collaborating centres for the evaluation of methods of diagnosis and treatment of different forms of cancer was expanded by four clinical centres (for bladder, lung and cervical cancers and for pre-cancerous lesions of the alimentary tract).

Under the programme on the International Histological Classification of Tumours, WHO published classifications of intestinal tumours, leukaemias and lymphomas, as well as an international classification for diseases relating to the study of tumours.

In a joint effort with the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) in Lyons, France, which acts as secretariat of the International Association of Cancer Registries, WHO completed the standardization of hospital-based cancer registries and published an instruction manual. Several countries adopted a proposal by WHO for a system of hospital registration of cancer cases which, it was hoped, would be of practicable use to both developed and developing countries.

Work on cancer research was continued by IARC. Several scientific publications and monographs were issued.

Cardiovascular diseases

Three leading concepts characterized WHO's cardiovascular diseases programme in 1976: more active participation by the whole community for effective disease prevention and control, emphasis on a comprehensive approach, and increasing concern with the needs of the developing world.

During the year, meetings were convened to define the methodology of comprehensive community control-programmes, and a long-term programme for prevention and treatment of cardiovascular diseases was prepared.

Publications in 1976 included a study involving 10,000 patients with myocardial infarction and a book dealing with stroke and hypertension.

Activities were in progress to prevent and control rheumatic heart disease, ischaemic heart disease and hypertension. Work on the standardization of classification and terminology continued.

Human genetics

Studies into the genetic background of populations were started in Bulgaria, Iran and Italy. They investigated the interaction of predisposing genotypes with environmental factors as manifested in a large number of diseases under partial genetic control.

With the assistance of WHO, an International Registry for Abnormal Karyotypes in Man was established at the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland, United States. More than 30 countries were involved in this work. The different types of chromosomal abnormalities in man were summarized, and three texts were prepared for use as manuals by scientists and doctors.

Mental health

In 1976, a medium-term mental health programme was formulated. Primary objectives included: collaboration with countries to prevent or reduce psychiatric, neurological and psychosocial problems, among which were alcohol and drug dependence; improvement of general health-service care by using mental health skills and knowledge; and development of intervention strategies based on an increased awareness of mental health aspects of social action and change. Activities were aimed at extending mental health care at the peripheral level in developing countries and mental health training for health and social service workers. Efforts to co-ordinate research were continued, and WHO collaborated with the relevant agencies to implement international conventions concerning psychotropic drugs.

Environmental health

The work of the organization in environmental health continued to give highest priority to co-operation with Governments in strengthening basic sanitation services, developing national planning and pre-investment projects, and training environmental health personnel.

A WHO study on water supply and sanitation in developing countries showed that in rural areas more than three quarters of the people had no reasonable access to safe water. Waste disposal also remained a serious problem. Activities therefore shifted towards underprivileged populations in rural and urban fringe areas, integrating efforts with work on rural development and primary health care.

The organization continued to assess the effects of environmental pollution on man's health. The environmental health criteria programme reflected concern with the increasing number of potentially dangerous substances. National policies and programmes for environmental pollution control were drawn up in additional countries.

Of special concern was the increase in food contaminants and the use of additives. It was noted that further study was needed to determine health hazards from chemical, biological and physical factors. Irradiation of certain foods was accepted by a committee of experts from FAO, WHO and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Drug quality control

In 1976, drug quality control was primarily directed towards ensuring the quality of drugs imported and distributed in developing countries which lacked drug-control laboratory facilities.

The revised scheme adopted in 1975 for quality certification of pharmaceutical products moving in international commerce was accepted by 14 countries with considerable exports of pharmaceutical products. The scheme requested health authorities of exporting countries to supply a certificate stating that the product was authorized for sale in the exporting country and confirming regular inspection of the manufacturer.

A new programme on drug policies and management was initiated in early 1976. It provided for direct collaboration with countries in formulating national drug policies as part of health and development policies.

Biomedical and health services research

During 1976, WHO intensified its efforts to develop and co-ordinate biomedical and health services research by establishing advisory committees on medical research in the five of its six regions where such a body did not exist. The committees planned and co-ordinated collaborative research programmes and trained research workers.

The new policy of organizing WHO's research activities into broad programmes with extrabudgetary funding was exemplified by the WHO/UNDP Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases. Participating countries pledged $7.5 million to finance the programme's first year of operation. Activities focused on finding new methods of tropical disease control and on helping develop national research capabilities. The first research centre for tropical diseases under the programme was established in Ndola Central Hospital in Zambia.

The organization's programme for health and biomedical information in 1976 included technical publications and periodicals (Bulletin of the World Health Organization, WHO Chronicle, International Digest of Health Legislation) and other public information work.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1976, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO stood at 4,236 on permanent and fixed-term contracts. Of these, 1,865 staff members (drawn from 110 nationalities) were in the professional and higher categories and 2,371 were in the general service and related categories. Of the total number of staff members, 300 were employed in projects supported by UNDP, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control.

Budget

The twenty-ninth World Health Assembly approved supplementary budget estimates for 1976 of $1,810,000 to meet salary and allowance adjustments of general service staff in Geneva. The total effective working budget for 1976 was therefore $138,910,000.

For 1977, the Health Assembly approved a budget of $147,184,000 allocated as follows:

Chapter VI

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)<sup>1</sup> and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), granted in 1976 a total of 217 loans and credits in 76 countries. These loans and credits amounted to the equivalent of $6,427 million, an increase of $266 million over the previous year.

Lending by the World Bank was up 15.3 per cent in 1976; IDA lending, however, was down 26.1 per cent due to dwindling resources. Throughout 1976, the question of constraints on future lending by both institutions was the subject of discussion and review.

The World Bank's Articles of Agreement stipulate that outstanding loans are not allowed to exceed the sum of the Bank's unimpaired capital, reserves and surplus. When the Bank's lending programme for the fiscal years 1974-1978 was presented to its Executive Directors in 1971, projections showed that the statutory ceiling on Bank loan operations would not be reached until about 1990. The subsequent appearance of double-digit inflation made a major revision in the 1974-1978 lending programme necessary. The proposed changes increased the initial loan programme of $14,000 million for the five-year period, to a total of over $22,000 million, drastically reducing the time before the ceiling on Bank lending would be reached.

During the year, discussions were held on the question of increasing the subscribed capital of the Bank. The discussions were based on a comprehensive and wide-ranging review of the appropriate volume of future World Bank lending and the capital structure needed to sustain it. The review indicated that an increase in capital subscriptions would be necessary.

The Executive Directors considered various proposals and in May 1976 transmitted to the Bank's Board of Governors two resolutions concerning capitalization: one resolution would provide for an increase of $8,444 million (in 1976 dollars) in authorized capital to a total of $41,016 million; by the other resolution up to $8,340 million of selective increases in subscriptions to capital stock would be allotted to 125 Bank members. Voting on both resolutions was continuing at the end of the year. If all selective increases were taken up by the 125 members to whom they were allotted, the Bank would be able to sustain a lending level of $5,800 million annually for the indefinite future.

Questions concerning lending beyond the $5,800 million level and the general capital increase needed to support such growth were to be discussed during 1977-1978.

One new member—the Comoros—was admitted to the Bank on 28 October 1976, bringing total membership to 128.

Lending operations

The volume of the Bank's lending operations in 1976 was at record level. During the year, the Bank granted 152 loans amounting to the equivalent of $5,219 million.

Included were $602 million in loans granted to 26 countries on so-called Third Window terms, with eligibility normally limited to countries with per capita incomes below $375 a year. This facility, which began operations in 1976, enabled the Bank to provide loans on terms intermediate between the standard terms of the World Bank and IDA's concessional terms.

The Third Window facility was subsidized by an interest subsidy fund supplied by donor Governments on a voluntary basis. By paying semi-annually an amount equal to 4 per cent of the outstanding principal on Third Window loans, the fund supplemented interest payments due to the Bank. The difference between the 4 per cent paid by the fund and the Bank's lending rate was paid by the borrowers.

The following tables summarize World Bank lending in 1976 by area and purpose.

Lending in the Latin American and Caribbean area accounted for more than one third of total World Bank lending in 1976. Loans amounted to the equivalent of $1,811 million, representing an increase of nearly 32 per cent over the previous year. Lending in the East Asia and Pacific region accounted for 28 per cent of the year's total and was about one third higher than in 1975. South Asia borrowers received $390 million in World Bank loans during the year, an increase of 45 per cent over loans received in the preceding year.

Bank loans in East Africa and West Africa decreased, respectively, 47 per cent and 16 per cent in 1976; and loans in the Europe, Middle East and North Africa region declined 2 per cent from the total reported in 1975.

On a country basis, Indonesia was the Bank's largest borrower in 1976, followed by Brazil, Mexico, the Republic of Korea and India. These five countries together received more than 40 per cent of all World Bank loan commitments in 1976.

Agriculture

The commitment of the World Bank to assist rural development continued in 1976. During the year, the Bank granted 40 loans totalling $1,345 million for agricultural and rural development projects in 24 countries. This represented an increase of 19 per cent over similar lending in 1975.

Telecommunications

Three loans totalling $134 million were granted by the Bank in 1976 to assist telecommunications projects. India borrowed $80 million to expand its telecommunications system, alleviating congestion in local and long-distance telephone networks, improving telex services and bringing new telephone service to 220,000 subscribers.

A loan of $28 million to the Syrian Arab Republic was made to reduce the shortage of telephones in both urban and rural areas. The first phase of the programme (1976-1978) was to provide for installation of 75,000 automatic and 12,000 manual telephone connexions, telephone access for 540 villages, and improvement of long-distance and other communications facilities.

Thailand received $26 million for the improvement of telephone links in rural areas, as part of a long-term communications development programme. The number of towns and villages with telephone service was to be increased by 40 per cent; and 42 small villages were to receive telephone service for the first time.

Development finance companies

The Bank lent $633 million in 1976 to development finance companies, approximately the same amount it had lent in 1975. Borrowers included private and Government-owned companies in 17 countries and two regional institutions, the Caribbean Development Bank and the East African Development Bank.

The largest borrowers were Brazil ($85 million), the Korean Development Bank ($82.5 million) and the Central Bank of Colombia ($80 million).

Industry

In 1976, the Bank granted eight loans totalling $470 million for industrial projects; this represented a decrease of more than 40 per cent from the previous year. Mexico received a loan of $95 million as part of the financing for a $3,600 million project designed to increase the steel-making capacity of a Government-owned steel company by 2.1 million tons to 3.3 million tons a year.

A $60 million loan was provided by the Bank to help finance a $284 million clinker project for Ghana, the Ivory Coast and Togo. The project, designed to finance the annual production of 1.2 million tons of clinker, the basic ingredient of cement, was located in Togo and governed by a 1975 treaty that had called for a regional cement complex among the three countries and had created a common market for clinker. Several financial institutions and the Governments of the three countries concerned also supplied finances for the project.

Education

Fifteen loans totalling $290 million were granted for education projects in 1976, an increase of $177 million over similar lending in the previous year.

Algeria borrowed $47 million for the expansion and reorganization of technical education, which was to increase the availability of trained manpower.

A loan of $37 million was granted to Indonesia for the construction of two technical teacher-training schools, four centralized workshops, 17 vocational training centres and other facilities. The new institutions were to train about 3,600 skilled workers and 11,600 semi-skilled workers a year.

In Malaysia, the expansion of primary school education was in part financed by a $35 million loan. In seven of the country's poorest states, 150 new primary schools were to be built and some 700 existing schools expanded or replaced. The loan was also to help finance training facilities for 2,000 skilled workers annually to meet the country's growing need for skilled manpower.

Non-project loans

The Bank granted three non-project loans in 1976 totalling $131 million. Guatemala received $26.5 million for national reconstruction following the earthquake in February 1976.

A $75 million loan to the Republic of Korea was made to finance imports of essential capital goods by the country's private sector; Zambia borrowed $30 million to finance similar imports in order to maintain a reasonable level of production in the economy.

Population and nutrition

Three loans totalling $31 million were granted by the Bank to assist population and nutrition programmes, including the Bank's first commitment to support a national nutrition programme. The borrower was Brazil, which received a $19 million loan to upgrade the nutrition standards of its population.

The Dominican Republic received an $8 million loan for a population and family project, and Jamaica was granted a loan of $6.8 million to support its Government's maternal- and child-care, family planning and nutrition programmes.

Electric power

Fifteen loans totalling $762 million were committed for electric power projects in 1976, an increase of 80 per cent over similar lending in 1975.

Brazil was the largest borrower, with three loans totalling $184 million to finance the installation of transmission and distribution facilities in the State of Parana and in the north-east, south-east and southern regions of the country.

Tourism

Three loans amounting to $64 million were granted for tourism projects in 1976, compared with only one loan of $9.7 million the previous year.

Morocco received $21 million to finance infrastructure installations for the Bay of Agadir project, a tourism facility with 7,000 hotel beds and 2,600 housing units.

A $17 million loan assisted the Government of Kenya in implementing policies regarding wildlife conservation and development of tourist attractions.

Turkey borrowed $26 million to assist in the development of South Antalya, on the Mediterranean coast, into a major tourist resort aimed at the European mass market. The project included the installation of the basic infrastructure needed to service 2,250 hotel rooms expected to be constructed by private interests by 1981.

Transportation

The Bank, in 1976, granted 24 loans totalling $861 million to 19 countries for transportation projects. The amount of such lending was nearly 18 per cent less than in 1975.

Indonesia was the largest borrower, receiving three loans amounting to $216 million. A loan of $130 million was helping to finance construction and supervision of 1,100 kilometres of road improvements in Java, Sumatra and Bali, as well as detailed engineering for an additional 4,100 kilometres. Also included were screening and feasibility studies of 7,000 kilometres of roads to assess future improvement.

A loan of $54 million was made for the acquisition of 94 new and used inter-island ships, which increased Indonesia's inter-island shipping fleet by about 10 per cent. A further loan of $32 million assisted in the expansion of Tanjung Priok port, the country's largest general cargo port.

Other major borrowers for transportation projects during the year included Mexico ($100 million to meet part of the financing of a $1,401 million five-year railway investment programme), the Philippines ($95 million for a highway programme) and the Republic of Korea ($90 million for the improvement and modernization of its road transport system).

Urban development

Six loans totalling $201 million were granted by the Bank for urban development projects. Compared to a single loan of $2 million granted in 1975, this sharp rise in number of loans and amount of lending reflected the Bank's growing commitment to assist the urban poor.

India borrowed $25 million for development of transport that covered a land area of more than 4,000 square kilometres in the Bombay metropolitan region.

A $52.5 million loan to Indonesia was for the purpose of improving living conditions for 1.5 million poor residents of Jakarta and Surabaya. The loan was to supply 50 per cent of the financing for a project to provide an infrastructure for densely populated areas in the two cities.

The Ivory Coast received a $44 million loan to help finance housing improvement in Abidjan and San Pedro. It was estimated that 200,000 people would directly benefit from the project.

Loans for urban projects were also made to Malaysia ($26 million), Peru ($21.6 million) and the Philippines ($32 million), all of which were to improve living conditions for the urban poor.

Water supply and sewerage

The Bank granted 11 loans totalling $284 million for water supply and sewerage projects during 1976, an increase of $105 million over such lending in 1975.

Yugoslavia was the largest borrower. A $20 million loan was granted for a water resources project for the Morava River basin, and improved water supply and sewerage systems for the towns of Titovo Uzi and Cazak.

Two additional loans amounting to $83 million helped finance two projects in Sarajevo: one for air pollution control, the other for improved and expanded water supplies and sewerage services.

In Brazil, about 1 million people were to benefit from improved water supply and sewerage systems in the State of Minas Gerais, with partial financing by a $40 million loan from the World Bank.

Greece borrowed $36 million in 1976 for a project to reorganize and upgrade the country's sewerage sector through investments in Salonica and Volos. It was estimated that 800,000 people in the two cities would benefit from the project.

Interest rate on loans

As part of the review of the Bank's capital and financial requirements, it was decided to link the Bank's interest rate on loans to the cost of funds raised by the Bank in the capital market.

In May 1976, the decision was made to increase the Bank's lending rate on an interim basis to 8.85 per cent for the period 1 June to 30 June 1976. The rate had been 8.5 per cent since January 1975.

As at 1 July 1976, a new lending-rate formula was put into effect which provided for a review of the Bank's lending rate at the end of each quarterly period and for adjustment to the average weighted cost, by amount and maturity, of funds borrowed by the Bank in the preceding 12 months. To this calculation, 0.5 per cent was added to arrive at the interest rate that the Bank would charge borrowers on new loans approved in the ensuing quarter.

For the quarter starting 1 July 1976, the interest rate on Bank loans was fixed at 8.9 per cent. For the quarter starting 1 October 1976, the loan rate was fixed at 8.7 per cent, with the reduction reflecting a decline in the cost of borrowings to the Bank.

Technical assistance

For project-related pre-investment studies, economic sector studies and feasibility assessments, the World Bank continued to encourage its member countries to seek financing from sources other than the Bank, in particular the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The Bank continued to serve as an executing agency for UNDP. There were 15 such projects in 1976 for which UNDP committed approximately $5.6 million. These included a power sector survey in Egypt for $1 million; irrigation and rural development projects in Nepal for $1.4 million; technical assistance projects in Bangladesh, Paraguay, the United Republic of Cameroon and regional Africa for $1.6 million; and projects in Afghanistan, El Salvador, Ghana, Turkey, Uganda, and the Upper Volta.

During 1976, the Bank completed 33 projects on behalf of UNDP. These represented commitments of approximately $13.3 million.

During the year, UNDP was faced with temporary financial constraints, necessitating significant reductions in the level of its assistance in many developing countries. In order to assure the continued execution of many UNDP pre-investment and technical assistance projects, the Bank agreed to defer calling on UNDP for funds to cover its disbursements as executing agency, up to a ceiling of $15 million. It was expected that UNDP would complete payment of the accumulated disbursements by May 1977.

The Bank also continued to provide technical assistance under its loans and credits. During 1976, 156 lending operations made specific provision for technical assistance amounting to approximately $232.4 million. A number of loans and credits were also made exclusively for technical assistance involving total commitments of $27.2 million.

Oil-exporting developing countries continued to receive technical assistance, mainly related to project evaluation, supervision of projects, technical advice and, in a few cases, secondment of staff to regional and national institutions. The recipients of this assistance, which was provided on a reimbursable basis, included Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela. In the case of Venezuela, special compensatory arrangements were made.

During the year, the Bank increased its technical assistance co-operation with UNDP and Governments through cost-sharing arrangements whereby the recipient Governments used proceeds from Bank loans and credits to supplement UNDP's contribution.

Economic Development Institute

By the end of 1976, a total of 2,682 officials had completed courses in development and project evaluation given by the Economic Development Institute—a staff college established in 1955 for senior officials concerned with economic affairs in the developing countries.

In 1976, 338 officials attended courses given by the Institute in Washington, D.C. (United States). The teaching staff numbered 25. A further 451 officials attended courses outside the United States, in which the Economic Development Institute participated or to which it lent its support in collaboration with national Governments or regional organizations.

By the end of 1976, a total of 2,421 officials had attended courses held outside the United States.

Development aid co-ordination

The Bank continued to encourage joint efforts by capital-exporting countries designed to co-ordinate the flow of development assistance through consortia and consultative groups. During the year, the Bank sponsored meetings of nine groups co-ordinating aid for Bangladesh, Burma, India, Kenya, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and the Sudan. The Bank also participated in a meeting of the Inter-Governmental Group for Indonesia, for which the Government of the Netherlands served as Chairman.

Settlement of Investment disputes

By the end of 1976, 67 States had ratified a convention establishing the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes. Five Governments had signed, but not yet ratified, the convention.

Financing activities

Obligations amounting to $4,350 million were sold by the World Bank in the capital markets in 1976. Included in the total were issues for $53 million sold in 1975, but delivered in 1976.

Of the $4,297 million in 1976 sales, 65 per cent were sold by public offering or private placement in the investment markets of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Switzerland and the United States. Sales of $1,238 million in the United States market were only slightly below the 1975 record amount of sales in the United States.

In the market of the Federal Republic of Germany the Bank placed $1,048 million equivalent of its obligations, a record amount for that country. The Swiss market absorbed $359 million of the Bank's issues, and the Netherlands market the equivalent of $167 million.

Governments, central banks and regional and international organizations purchased the equivalent of $1,318 million of World Bank securities in 1976. Two issues of two-year United States dollar bonds totalling $700 million were placed with Governments, central banks and other agencies in 74 countries and with regional and international organizations. Of these, issues amounting to $458 million replaced an equal number of maturing issues.

Of the $4,350 million of Bank securities sold in the year, including $53 million delivered, $3,537 million equivalent consisted of new issues, and $813 million equivalent consisted of issues that replaced obligations that had matured during 1976.

Outstanding borrowings of the World Bank as at 31 December 1976 totalled $17,309 million.

Income and reserves

The Bank's gross income in the fiscal year ended 30 June 1976 amounted to $1,330 million, an increase of $172 million over income reported in the previous year. Total expenses were $1,110 million including administrative costs ($122 million) and interest on borrowings and other financial costs ($988 million).

Net income for fiscal 1976 was $220 million, down $55 million from income in fiscal 1975. Total reserves as at 30 June 1976 were $1,916 million:

$1,623 million in the General Reserve and $293 million in the Special Reserve.

Chapter VII

The International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC)<sup>1</sup> was established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to assist developing member countries by helping them to promote the private sector of their economies. The principal objectives of IFC are to provide risk capital for productive private enterprise in association with private investors and management, to encourage the development of local capital markets and to stimulate the international flow of private capital.

The Corporation makes investments in the form of share subscriptions and long-term loans. It carries out stand-by and underwriting arrangements and provides financial and technical assistance to privately controlled development finance companies. It neither requires nor accepts guarantees by Governments in its operations. Generally, IFC investments are either in the form of a loan, a share subscription, or a combination of both—with other investors, local and foreign, providing the bulk of the funds required for any given project.

On 18 June 1976, Bangladesh became a member of IFC, thus increasing the number of member countries to 105.

From 1 July 1975 to 30 June 1976, the Corporation made 32 investments in 23 countries and one regional investment. These new commitments, in loans and equities, totalled approximately $245 million. Outside investments in the same enterprises amounted to $838 million. Taking into account $329 million to be financed by cash generation, the total cost of these projects was $1,412 million.

The operations of IFC in the fiscal year ending 30 June 1976 brought the cumulative gross total of the Corporation's investments to $1,505 million in 271 enterprises in 61 developing countries, in which others had concurrently invested approximately $6,300 million. Of that cumulative total, $582 million (39 per cent) was invested in Latin America and the Caribbean, $382 million (25 per cent) in Asia, $329 million (22 per cent) in Europe, $147 million (10 per cent) in Africa and $65 million (4 per cent) in the Middle East.

Chapter VIII

The International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA)<sup>1</sup> is an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank). Its purpose is to promote economic development by supporting productive, high-priority projects in developing member countries.

The Association lends funds for the same kinds of projects as the World Bank, using the same appraisal criteria and the same staff, but it obtains its funds from different sources and extends loans on different terms; its capital and assets are entirely separate from those of the Bank.

The Bank obtains the larger part of its funds in the capital markets and lends on conventional and intermediate terms. The bulk of IDA's resources are contributed by member Governments, enabling it to lend to the poorest countries on more flexible terms, which weigh less heavily on their balance of payments.

In general, a country eligible to receive IDA credits must have a low national income—not more than $520 per capita per year; emphasis is on assistance to the poorest countries within this category. A further eligibility requirement is a difficult balance-of-payments problem with little prospect of earning sufficient foreign exchange to justify borrowing all the external funds needed for development on conventional terms. The country must also have sufficient economic, financial and political stability to warrant long-term-development lending and a genuine commitment to development.

The Association's credits are interest-free, with a service charge of three quarters of 1 per cent on disbursed and outstanding credit balances. The credits are repayable over 50 years, with an initial grace period of 10 years before repayment begins.

Unlike the Bank, which may lend to public and private entities with Government guarantees, IDA lends only to Governments. In the case of revenue-producing projects, IDA credits are re-lent by the Governments on terms reflecting the local cost of capital. Thus, IDA terms help Governments to finance economic development without distorting the local credit structure.

From the start of operations in 1960 to 31 December 1976, the Association's usable resources totalled the equivalent of $11,645 million. Usable subscriptions and supplementary contributions amounted to $1,050 million and $9,280 million respectively.

In addition, the World Bank provided $1,125 million in grants out of its net income for the 12 fiscal years beginning in 1964, of which some $26 million was earmarked for agricultural research and for the control of onchocerciasis (river blindness). Switzerland, which is not a member of IDA, made two interest-free 50-year loans totalling $74 million. Cumulative net earnings of IDA totalled $79 million and repayments on development credits $44 million.

Aside from initial subscriptions in usable form totalling $986 million, the bulk of IDA funds for lending have been provided by its Part I (richer) member countries and several Part II (developing) members under a series of replenishment agreements. The first replenishment of IDA's resources took effect in 1964, the second in 1969, the third in 1972 and the fourth in 1975. A fifth replenishment was under discussion in 1976. As IDA's uncommitted resources were to have been exhausted by 1 July 1977, it was hoped that the necessary legislation to make the fifth replenishment effective would be passed by that date.

As at 31 December 1976, IDA had made cumulative net commitments totalling $10,262 million. Commitments in 1976 amounted to $1,209 million, $428 million, or 26 per cent, less than the total reported in 1975. The decrease was due to a declining availability of uncommitted funds to IDA.

On a regional basis, South Asia received the largest share of credits in 1976—19 credits totalling $679 million, equal to 56 per cent of the year's total. East Africa received 15 per cent of the total credits in 1976; West Africa 13 per cent; Europe, the Middle East and North Africa 12 per cent; Latin America and the Caribbean 4 per cent; and East Asia and the Pacific less than 1 per cent.

India was the largest borrower, with three loans totalling $368 million; Bangladesh was the second largest, with six loans amounting to $132 million; and Pakistan the third largest, with four loans totalling $114 million.

The tables below summarize IDA lending in 1976 by area and by purpose:

Agriculture

Credits for agricultural and rural development comprised the largest portion of IDA lending in 1976, as they did in the previous two years. Thirty-two agricultural and rural development credits in 25 countries, totalling the equivalent of $407 million, were committed during the year. The amount represented more than 30 per cent of total 1976 lending, but was a decline of 18 per cent from the 1975 volume.

Egypt received a joint IDA/World Bank loan to help finance the installation of drainage facilities. The project was to serve 210,000 hectares of irrigated land and benefit some 880,000 persons living on small farms. The $282 million equivalent project was part of a continuing programme designed to provide adequate drainage for all the irrigated land in Egypt.

Telecommunications

In 1976, one credit of $5.2 million was granted to the Niger to help finance a project that was to provide 3,800 lines of automatic switching equipment and improve long-distance services and other communications facilities in important economic areas.

Development finance companies

Three credits amounting to $33 million were granted for development finance companies in Bangladesh, Jordan and Rwanda. A credit of $25 million was to help meet the 1977 foreign exchange requirements of the Bangladesh Shilpa Bank, which provides medium- and long-term financing to industry. Two loans of $4 million each similarly supplied foreign exchange to the Industrial Development Bank of Jordan and the Rwanda Development Bank.

Education

Credits totalling $75 million were granted for education during 1976, more than $26 million below the total of similar credits in 1975.

Zaire borrowed $21 million for a project to improve education in rural areas. Five training institutes for teachers in rural primary schools were to be constructed, and six agricultural technician-training institutes and Zaire's Higher Institute of Agricultural Studies were to be rehabilitated. They were expected to train 4,500 agricultural technicians and specialists by 1990.

Madagascar received a credit of $14 million to assist a programme for improving basic education. Five regional educational centres and one national teaching materials centre were to be constructed and equipped under the programme.

Non-project credits

Three non-project credits totalling $300 million were granted in 1976, an increase of $71 million over the 1975 total. India borrowed $200 million to help finance essential imports of raw materials, components and spare parts to enable some 800 high-priority medium- and large-scale industrial enterprises to maintain and expand production and export volume. The industries involved were vital to the key sectors of agriculture and power and to further development of engineering goods for export.

Bangladesh and Pakistan borrowed $50 million each to finance similar imports necessary to maintain production in key industries.

Population

Financing in this category consisted of a $4.8 million supplement to a previous credit to Tunisia.

Electric power

Credits for electric power development in 1976 amounted to $176 million, a gain of $65 million over the previous year.

A $150 million credit to India was to finance part of a $509 million equivalent investment programme in high-voltage power transmission facilities for the period 1976-1979. Four state electricity boards were involved—Maharashtra, Gujarat, Bihar and West Bengal. The project included the construction of 2,800 kilometres of transmission lines and the installation of facilities to increase the aggregate capacity of 30 substations by 2,700 megavolt-amperes.

Afghanistan received a $10 million credit to finance the purchase and installation of a 40-megawatt thermal power station needed to increase power supply in Kabul. A credit of $16 million to Haiti was to finance a 21-megawatt diesel power station and related distribution and transmission equipment in the Port-au-Prince area.

Technical assistance

Lending for technical assistance increased sharply in 1976 to a total of $23.2 million, $6 million more than the previous year.

A $7.5 million credit supported Bangladesh's efforts to improve the identification, preparation and implementation of high-priority development projects. The credit was to finance technical assistance in pre-investment planning, feasibility and engineering studies, consulting services and training. Emphasis was given to agricultural and water development projects.

Tourism

Jordan borrowed $6 million from IDA to finance the improvement and expansion of the historic sites of Petra and Jerash and the preservation of their antiquities.

Transport

Transport credits accounted for $120 million in 1976, a drop of $210 million from 1975.

Madagascar borrowed $22 million for a highway project that was to provide an all-weather direct land link between Tananarive, the capital, and the western part of the country. The project included the construction of a 370-kilometre highway that was to open up an area with substantial agricultural potential.

A $20 million credit was granted to the Upper Volta to help finance the reconstruction to paved standard of 183 kilometres of highway serving the south-west, the most important agricultural region of the country.

Water supply and sewerage

Lending in this category amounted to $58.1 million in 1976. A $26.6 million credit was made to Pakistan to finance a water supply and sewerage project in Lahore, the country's second largest city. With a population of 2.5 million and an annual growth rate of 4.3 per cent, the city's water and sewerage facilities were becoming increasingly inadequate. The project was to improve existing facilities and add 75,000 water connexions, increasing the number of people served from 1.4 to 2 million. An additional 250,000 people were to benefit from a 20 per cent expansion of the sewer system.

Zaire borrowed $21.5 million for a project to improve the water supply in six major cities, whose populations totalled 1.5 million, two thirds of whom were without access to safe water. Sana'a, the capital of Yemen, was granted a $10 million credit to provide 18,000 water and 8,700 sewer connexions to serve the most densely populated areas of the city.

Chapter IX

The International Monetary Fund (IMF)

Activity by the International Monetary Fund<sup>1</sup> showed a marked increase in volume and variety during 1976. Drawings on the Fund totalled the equivalent of 7,010 million special drawing rights (SDRs), the largest amount ever recorded. At the end of the year, net drawings outstanding reached SDR 15,000 million, compared with SDR 9,400 million at the end of 1975.

During 1976, negotiations on a comprehensive amendment to the Fund's Articles of Agreement were completed. The proposed Articles were designed to adapt the Fund and its operations to current conditions, providing for a substantial increase in the subscription quotas of Fund members, expanded access to the Fund's resources, flexibility in exchange-rate arrangements, reduction in the role of gold, and the possible establishment of a permanent Council of Governors as a new decision-making organ of the Fund.

The year also saw a substantial increase in the use of the compensatory financing facility, which assisted members encountering balance-of-payments difficulties caused by temporary export shortfalls.

Arrangements to reduce the Fund's gold holdings by one third (50 million ounces) were partly implemented in 1976. Half of the 50 million were to be sold at public auctions for the benefit of developing countries, and the other half distributed to members in proportion to their quotas at a price equivalent to SDR 35 per ounce.

During 1976, one new member joined the Fund—the Comoros on 21 September—bringing total membership to 129. The Comoros' quota was set at SDR 1.9 million.

Fund operations

Drawings on the Fund set a record in 1976, totalling the equivalent of SDR 7,009.9 million, compared with SDR 4,658.1 million in 1975. A purchase of the equivalent of SDR 700 million made in May 1976 by the United Kingdom contributed substantially to the overall increase.

Repurchases amounted to SDR 1,266 million, as against SDR 429.1 million repaid in 1975. Net drawings outstanding as at 31 December 1976 were equivalent to SDR 15,000 million, compared with SDR 9,400 million at the end of the previous year. Total drawings on the Fund since March 1947 reached the equivalent of SDR 41,973.6 million at the end of 1976.

During 1976, 44 member countries used the compensatory financing facility, drawing amounts of currencies totalling the equivalent of SDR 2,268 million, compared with SDR 239 million during 1975. This increase in purchases was partly due to the considerable export shortfalls experienced by Fund members during the recession in world trade, and partly due to an extensive liberalization, agreed upon at the end of 1975, of members' access to the facility. The countries and the amounts of their purchases under the facility are listed in the following table.

Oil facility

Operations under the Fund's oil facility were concluded in May 1976. Total purchases under this facility since 1 January 1976 amounted to the equivalent of SDR 2,100 million. In all, between September 1974 and May 1976, 55 members purchased nearly SDR 7,000 million in 156 transactions. The oil facility was established in June 1974 to assist member countries to meet the impact on their balances of payments of increases in the cost of oil. It was financed from borrowed funds, obtained mainly from major oil exporters but also from a number of industrial countries.

Subsidy account

In July 1976, the first payments under the Fund's subsidy account were made to 18 member countries belonging to the group most seriously affected by the world economic crisis. These payments were in amounts totalling the equivalent of SDR 13.8 million. The subsidy account was established in 1975 to assist the most seriously affected members in meeting the cost of using the oil facility for 1975. The subsidy account was financed from voluntary contributions from a number of Fund member countries.

The substantial expansion in the use of the Fund's resources during 1976 was met by using the Fund's existing holdings of currencies and by borrowing to finance drawings under the oil facility. Some of the currencies included in Fund transactions in 1976, such as Algerian dinars, Colombian pesos, Guatemalan quetzales, Luxembourg francs, Paraguayan guaranies, and Trinidad and Tobago dollars, were used for the first time.

A further development in the Fund's liquidity was the increase in the amount of Japan's credit arrangement, under the General Arrangements to Borrow, from the equivalent of SDR 270 million to approximately SDR 1,000 million. Under the Arrangements, 10 member countries of the Fund (Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States) were to provide their currencies to the Fund (up to the equivalent of SDR 6,200 million) when supplementary resources were needed to provide assistance to a member that participated in the General Arrangements. The Fund's currency holdings were replenished in December 1976 by SDR 2,560 million, which was to be used in prospective purchases by the United Kingdom under the two-year stand-by arrangement.

Trust fund

In May 1976, the Executive Directors established a trust fund for the purpose of providing special balance-of-payments assistance to developing country members. The fund used profits from the sale of gold and any financing that might be available from voluntary contributions or from loans.

Five auctions of gold on behalf of the trust fund were held by IMF in 1976. In these auctions, 3.9 million ounces of gold were sold, yielding approximately US $320 million for the benefit of developing countries. No disbursements were made from the trust fund in 1976.

Special Drawing Account

There was no new allocation of SDRs in 1976; the total in existence remained at SDR 9,300 million, unchanged since January 1972.

As at 31 December 1976, 121 members had become participants in the Special Drawing Account. The members' quotas represented almost 99 per cent of total quotas in the Fund. During 1976, one new Fund member (the Comoros) became a participant.

Over-all activity in the Special Drawing Account set a record during 1976. Total transfers of SDRs amounted to 2,651 million. Transactions in which the Fund designated countries to provide foreign exchange to users of SDRs totalled SDR 216 million. Total transfers for 1976 also included the use of SDR 349 million in voluntary transactions by agreement between pairs of participants. Transactions between those European countries that maintained their currencies within narrow margins accounted for much of this.

Transfers from participants to the Fund's General Account totalled SDR 1,096 million in 1976, over three times the amount recorded in 1975. Most of these transfers were payments of charges on balances in excess of quotas; repurchases with SDRs also increased significantly during the year. Transfers from the Fund's General Account amounted to SDR 990 million, of which about half were for the purpose of acquisitions to promote reconstitution. The remainder was accounted for mainly by a large purchase of SDRs by one participant that used the same amount to make a repurchase on the same day. As a result of these transfers, the General Account's holdings increased to SDR 657 million at the end of 1976.

Consultations and technical assistance

During 1976, the Fund completed 88 regular consultations with member States. Due to the international economic situation, the role of consultations as an instrument of international monetary co-operation gained additional importance and special consultations were held with a number of member countries whose exchange-rate and other policies had a major impact on other members.

The demand for technical assistance from member States continued at a high level. A number of members that were in the process of strengthening their financial institutions and improving their techniques of economic management called on the Fund for technical assistance.

As at 31 December 1976, 22 staff members were on assignments of six months or more in 21 countries as Fund resident representatives, assistant resident representatives, or as advisers in other capacities;

92 outside experts were on long-term assignments in member countries under the Fund's technical assistance programmes.

The training facilities offered by the International Monetary Fund Institute in Washington, D.C., to officials of member Governments and their financial organizations continued to be used fully. In 1976, the Institute conducted eight courses, lasting from eight to 24 weeks, for a total of 222 participants.

Monetary reform

An amendment to the Fund's Articles of Agreement was approved by the Board of Governors on 30 April 1976. In accordance with constitutional procedures, the amendment was to become effective after acceptance by three fifths of the members with four fifths of the total voting power. By December 1976, 15 members with 29.35 per cent of the total voting power had formally accepted the amendment.

Among the main areas of change provided by the amendment were exchange arrangements of each member's choice, the possible adoption of a system of par values, and a reduction of the role of gold in the international monetary system, including the disposition of part of the Fund's gold holdings. Also included were changes in the characteristics and expansion of the possible uses of the SDR, simplification and expansion of the Fund's financial operations and transactions, and the possible establishment of a Council with decision-making powers as a new organ of the Fund.

A substantial increase in members' quotas was approved by the Board of Governors on 22 March 1976. The increase was to come into force after the effective date of the amendment of the Articles; it would bring the size of the Fund from the equivalent of SDR 29,200 million to SDR 39,000 million, thereby improving liquidity.

Publications

Publications issued by the Fund during 1976 included: Annual Report, Annual Report on Exchange Restrictions, Balance of Payments Yearbook, Surveys of African Economies, and the periodicals International Financial Statistics, IMF Survey, Staff Papers, and Direction of Trade. The periodical Finance and Development was issued jointly with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1976, the total number of full-time staff employed by the Fund under permanent, fixed-term, and short-term appointments was 1,464, drawn from 93 nationalities.

Chapter X

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)<sup>1</sup> reported total traffic of the world's scheduled airlines to be 93,200 million tonne-kilometres during 1976, an increase of 13 per cent over 1975, representing a strong recovery from the slow growth during the two previous years. The airlines carried about 580 million passengers, 10 per cent more than in 1975. Air freight amounted to 21,800 million tonne-kilometres in 1976, a 13 per cent increase over 1975. Air mail traffic in 1976 was 2 per cent higher than in the previous year.

The elected President of the ICAO Council, Assad Kotaite (Lebanon), assumed his post in 1976. Yves Lambert (France) was elected Secretary-General by the Council during the year.

As at the end of 1976, membership of ICAO had risen to 135, with the admission of Papua New Guinea on 14 January, Surinam on 4 April, and Cape Verde on 18 September 1976.

Activities in 1976

Air navigation

During 1976, the main efforts of ICAO in the air navigation field continued to be directed to the updating and implementation of ICAO Specifications and ICAO Regional Plans. The Specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices, contained in 16 technical Annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, and of Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS), contained in three PANS documents. The Regional Plans set forth the air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in the nine ICAO regions.

The Specifications in nine Annexes and one PANS document were amended during 1976. The Regional Plans were kept current through amendments processed in consultation with States.

To promote the uniform application of the Specifications, ICAO made available guidance material in the form of technical manuals and circulars.

The ICAO regional offices assisted States in implementing the regional plans. Their efforts were supplemented by the work of experts who advised States on the installation of new facilities and services and on the operation of existing ones.

Eight air navigation meetings were held in 1976 and special attention was given to the following subjects: airworthiness of aircraft; aircraft operations; aircraft accident prevention; aerodrome physical characteristics; visual aids; automated data interchange systems; air traffic control; aeronautical communications; unification of units of measurement; aircraft/infrastructure compatibility; the impact of civil aviation development on the human environment; aviation security; and air transport of dangerous goods.

Air transport

Publications in 1976 included studies on various aspects of air transport, digests of civil aviation statistics, and preparation of the first issue of a year-book containing the most widely used statistical information on civil aviation.

Preparations continued for the world-wide air transport conference to convene at ICAO Headquarters in Montreal, Canada, in April 1977. The conference was to consider four subjects: enforcement of approved airline tariff; policy concerning international non-scheduled air transport; regulation of capacity in international air transport services; and machinery for the establishment of international air transport fares and rates.

The problem of traffic peaks at international airports was further studied. In co-operation with the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, ICAO worked on the development of noise abatement policies, providing information on the technical aspects of aircraft noise and ICAO's role in the determination of airport charges.

Informal regional meetings were held during 1976 in the fields of facilitation (Mexico City, Mexico, September), economics of airports and route facilities (Lima, Peru, June; Cairo, Egypt, December) and civil aviation forecasting (Lima, June; Bangkok, Thailand, November).

The Organization continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies: the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission. Air transport officers in the six regional offices of ICAO provided liaison with States on air transport matters.

The joint financing agreement on air navigation services in Greenland and the Faeroe Islands and the agreement for services in Iceland continued to be administered by ICAO. A review was undertaken during the year to evaluate the needs and financing of these services, specifically whether the services should continue to be jointly financed by those States, parties to the two agreements, whose civil aircraft crossed the North Atlantic. Recommendations and questions were to be considered by a conference of States scheduled for early 1977.

Legal matters

The ICAO Legal Committee, at its 1976 session, established a general work programme, later approved by the ICAO Council, to study the following subjects: lease, charter and interchange of aircraft in international operations; liability for damage caused by noise and sonic boom; legal status of the aircraft commander; consolidation of the instruments of the Warsaw Convention of 1929 as amended by the Hague Protocol of 1955 (relating to liability of air carriers) into a single convention; liability of air traffic agencies; aerial collisions; possible consolidation of international rules contained in the Rome Convention (on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties on the Surface, 1952); the draft convention on aerial collisions and the liability of air traffic control agencies; the legal status of the aircraft; aspects other than those found in the Tokyo Convention (on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft, 1963); and proposed simplification of convention-making procedures.

The Legal Committee reviewed the work of the Sub-Committee that met in 1976 to consider a study of the consolidation of the instruments of the Warsaw system into a single convention. The Committee concluded that, due to divergent points of view on the resolution of the 1975 International Conference on Air Law,<sup>2</sup> which had called for the study, it would be premature to attempt the consolidation. The Legal Committee recommended to the ICAO Council that it refer the item to the Legal Bureau for further study and for the preparation of a text to be sent to States for comment. The ICAO Council agreed to these proposals and decided to await comments from States before determining future action.

The Legal Committee also considered the report of the Legal Sub-Committee on the Rome Convention of 1952 on noise and sonic boom, and the comments received from States thereon. The Committee developed certain specific amendments to the Rome Convention on noise and sonic boom generated by civil aircraft. It recommended to the Council that it convene a diplomatic conference to consider the amendments, and decided to leave the question of limits of liability open for a decision by that conference.

In view of the urgency of the noise and sonic boom problem, the Committee also recommended that a sub-committee study the question of liability for damage caused by noise and sonic boom, having regard to the need to obtain all the necessary information from States and environmental and legal experts. The ICAO Council agreed in principle to these two recommendations.

During 1976, the ICAO Council examined the problems arising from lease, charter and interchange of aircraft in international operations and considered the report of a panel of experts established to study the problems concerned. The Council agreed to request the Air Navigation Commission and the Air Transport Committee to study possible amendments to the relevant technical Annexes, in order to cover the situation of an aircraft operated by a foreign operator, a condition not provided for in the Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation (1944). The Council also decided to charge a special sub-committee of the Legal Committee with the study of the problems raised by Articles 12, 31 and 32 of the Chicago Convention concerning the operation of an aircraft registered in one State by an operator belonging to another State. The special sub-committee was also to formulate a draft protocol for amendment of the Rome Convention of 1952 and the Tokyo Convention of 1963 with the aim of solving the problems raised under the same circumstances with regard to those two Conventions.

In 1976, the ICAO Council considered the question of preparation of a digest of judicial decisions relating to multilateral international private air law conventions. The Council studied the comments on the subject received from States and decided to reconsider the matter in 1977 on the basis of a model of judicial decisions prepared by the Secretary-General.

During 1976, the following ratifications and accessions to conventions concluded under ICAO auspices were made:

Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft (Tokyo, 1963)
Indonesia and Iran

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft (The Hague, 1970)
Bahamas and Indonesia

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation (Montreal, 1971)
Belgium, France, Gabon and Indonesia

Technical assistance

During 1976, ICAO provided technical assistance to 119 States, 62 of which had resident missions of one or more experts. Assistance was also provided in the form of equipment, fellowships and scholarships and short missions by experts.

One new large-scale project, for which ICAO was to be the executing agency, was approved by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). This project, at a cost of more than $500,000, was to provide assistance to the East African Community in developing its civil flying school at Soroti, Uganda.

During all or part of 1976, 420 experts from 43 countries were employed, including 87 on funds-in-trust projects and 3 associate experts. Five United Nations volunteers also worked in the technical assistance field. The number in the field at any time fell during the year from 307 to 222 due to UNDP funding limitations.

Equipment purchases represented a substantial proportion of ICAO technical assistance, with deliveries in 1976 amounting to $5,870,000. Some 11 Governments or organizations formally registered with ICAO under the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service, with commitments during 1976 of $535,000.

Expert services, fellowships and equipment were provided during the year under funds-in-trust and cost-sharing arrangements to Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Republic, Nigeria, Peru, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Surinam and Yemen. The 499 fellowships awarded in 1976 was a drop from the 1975 record of 1,197, the reduction due to UNDP funding restrictions.

Total UNDP funds disbursed by ICAO in 1976 for the execution of short-term and long-term projects amounted to $18,319,900. Countries and territories aided were the following:

Africa: Botswana, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Empire, Chad, Comoros, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Mauritania, Mauritius, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Swaziland, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Zambia.

Americas: Antigua, Argentina, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Cayman Islands, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Montserrat, Netherlands Antilles, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, St. Kitts, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Trinidad and Tobago, Turks and Caicos Islands, Uruguay.

Asia/Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, India, Indonesia, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Tonga.

Europe, Mediterranean and Middle East: Algeria, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Greece, Hungary, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Morocco, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Tunisia, Turkey, Yemen.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1976, the total number of staff members employed in the ICAO secretariat was 756. Of these, 272 (drawn from 63 nationalities) were in the professional and higher categories and 484 were in the general service category. Among them were 166 persons employed at the regional offices. In addition, there were 130 in the professional category serving as technical assistance experts on UNDP projects in the field.

Budget

Appropriations for the 1976 financial year totalled $20,363,878, including carry-over from 1975 and supplementary appropriations authorized by the ICAO Council. Modifications were approved by the ICAO Council as reflected below:

Chapter XI

The Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU),<sup>1</sup> established at Berne, Switzerland, in 1874 for the reciprocal exchange of postal services between nations, is one of the oldest international intergovernmental organizations. Its aim is to promote the organization and improvement of postal services and to further the development of international collaboration in this sphere. It also participates in various forms of postal technical assistance requested by its member States.

In 1976, the number of member States increased from 153 to 156 following the removal of the Spanish Territory of Africa from membership and the admission of the following countries: Surinam (20 April), Papua New Guinea (4 June), the Comoros (29 July) and Cape Verde (30 September).

Activities of UPU organs in 1976*Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, composed of all member States, is the supreme legislative authority of UPU. The Congress meets, in principle, every five years. The most recent Congress (the seventeenth since the establishment of the Union) was held at Lausanne, Switzerland, in 1974, and the next meeting was to be held at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 1979. The work of the Congress consists mainly of examining and revising the Acts of the Union on the basis of proposals submitted by member States, by the Executive Council of UPU or by the Consultative Council for Postal Studies, and of making administrative arrangements concerning the activities of UPU. The Acts in force since 1 January 1976 were those of the Congress of Lausanne, 1974.

Executive Council

The 40-member Executive Council of UPU is responsible for carrying out the work of UPU during the five-year intervals between meetings of the Congress. During its annual session, held at Berne, Switzerland, from 4 to 20 May 1976, the Council considered administrative affairs and examined several studies concerning the international mail that had been referred to it by the Congress of Lausanne.

Among the other questions examined by the Council were technical assistance for developing countries, vocational training, international postal co-operation, relations with the United Nations and other international organizations, and improvement and simplification of postal services.

The Council also approved the budget estimates of UPU for 1976 (gross expenditures of 15,564,600 Swiss francs, or approximately $6,379,000) and for 1977 (gross expenditures of 15,932,800 Swiss francs, or approximately $6,530,000).

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

The 35-Member Consultative Council for Postal Studies is responsible for organizing the study of technical, operational, economic and technical co-operation problems concerning the Postal Administrations of UPU member States, and matters of particular interest to the new and developing countries.

During its annual session held at Berne from 8 to 20 November 1976, the Consultative Council examined the problems of mechanization and automation in the postal field, the financial aspects of international mail operations and the application of science and technology for development.

International Bureau

The International Bureau of UPU, which is under the general supervision of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, constitutes the secretariat of UPU and serves the Postal Administrations of UPU member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation.

The International Bureau is responsible for collecting, co-ordinating, publishing and distributing information relating to the international postal service. It also conducts inquiries requested by Postal Administrations and acts as a clearing-house in the settlement of certain accounts between Postal Administrations.

As at 31 December 1976, the total number of permanent and temporary staff members employed at the International Bureau of UPU was 117, of whom 53 were in the professional and higher categories (drawn from 35 countries) and 64 were in the general service category. Also, there were 16 officials manning the English, Arabic and Spanish translation services.

Technical co-operation

In 1976 technical co-operation was provided by UPU under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), by the UPU Special Fund, and through bilateral assistance programmes. Of this assistance, the multilateral aid provided under UNDP was the most significant, amounting to approximately $1.7 million.

The Union provided the services of consultants and of development experts, who carried out missions in different regions of Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Mid-East to examine questions of postal organization and training and to make forecast studies. These experts were also associated with the formulation of UNDP training projects and the organization of seminars, study courses and vocational training courses.

During the year UPU also held training courses for postal instructors to answer the needs of developing countries. Such courses, held at Paris and London, were attended by 16 students.

In 1976, within the framework of UNDP, 37 national, regional and interregional projects relating to postal services were undertaken, 38 expert missions were carried out and 67 scholarships granted. In addition, 63 scholarships were awarded to students to attend study courses organized by Postal Administrations of technologically advanced countries in order to provide students with a broad professional knowledge that would enable them to organize and improve their postal and financial services administrations.

The projects were concerned with almost all the principal branches of postal service, and included the inception of professional training centres on the national and regional levels. Equipment was also provided for several projects, to a value of $31,000.

Within the framework of direct, bilateral technical assistance, several countries were granted aid in the form of equipment, expert services, advisory services and vocational and advanced training. Various Postal Administrations also exchanged the results of experiments, inquiries and experience obtained in various fields.

The UPU Special Fund, which is maintained by voluntary contributions in cash and kind from member States, carried out a programme in 1976 that included fellowships, the provision of teaching materials and an assistance project for the drought-stricken Sahelian region. Contributions in kind included fellowships and provision of expert services. The budget for the 1976 programme was $213,525.

Chapter XII

The International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

In 1976, the following countries became members of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU):<sup>1</sup> Comoros (5 January), Guinea-Bissau (15 January), Surinam (15 July), Sao Tome and Principe (1 September), Cape Verde (10 September) and Angola (13 October). As at 31 December 1976, the total number of members of ITU was 152.

Administrative Council

The thirty-first session of the Administrative Council of ITU was held from 14 June to 2 July 1976 at ITU headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. The Council approved a schedule of conferences, including the following: the World Administrative Radio Conference for planning the broadcasting satellite service in the 12 gigahertz (GHz) band in 1977, the World Administrative Radio Conference for the Aeronautical Mobile (R) Service in 1978, the Plenary Assembly of the International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) in 1978, the World Administrative Radio Conference for the general revision of the Radio Regulations in 1979, and the Plenipotentiary Conference of ITU in 1980.

The international consultative committees

Study groups of the two ITU international consultative committees—CCIR and the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT)—held numerous meetings during the year.

The International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee held its sixth plenary assembly at Geneva from 25 September to 8 October 1976.

Much of the work done by the CCIR study groups during the year was technical preparation for the 1977 World Administrative Radio Conference for planning the broadcasting satellite service.

Plan committees

Four regional plan committees of ITU were responsible for preparing plans for circuit and routing requirements for international telecommunications and for estimating the growth of international traffic. The plan committees also continued to work with the World Plan Committee, which was concerned with interregional relations.

The co-ordination committees of the plan committees for Asia and Oceania and for Europe and the Mediterranean Basin met at Geneva in October and November respectively, to make recommendations for the next plan committee meetings, taking into account the decisions of the 1976 CCITT plenary assembly concerning their terms of reference.

International Frequency Registration Board

The International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB) continued to register the frequencies that countries assigned to their radio stations in the Master International Frequency Register. During 1976 IFRB dealt with 81,428 frequency assignment notices and undertook a technical examination of 44,072 frequency assignments.

The Board also worked on the development of analytical methods that could be applied to frequency and orbital position planning and the assessment of the interference potential of different assignment plans, in preparation for the 1977 World Administrative Radio Conference.

Technical co-operation

In 1976, under various ITU programmes of technical co-operation in developing countries, 493 expert missions were carried out, 497 fellows were trained abroad, and equipment valued at $4,812,154 was delivered, mainly to telecommunication training centres. The total cost of this assistance was $20,241,527.

The three main objectives of ITU activity in the field of technical co-operation continued to be: (a) promoting the development of regional telecommunication networks in Africa, Asia and Latin America; (b) strengthening the telecommunication technical and administrative services in developing countries; and (c) developing the human resources required for telecommunications.

The Union continued to promote the development of telecommunication networks with a view to their integration into a world-wide telecommunication system, in accordance with objectives established by the world and regional plan committees. Studies and surveys were carried out by experts working in collaboration with member States.

In May 1976, the Union organized a meeting at Geneva of the Pan-African Telecommunications Network (PANAFTEL) Co-ordinating Committee, comprising the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Economic Commission for Africa, the African Development Bank and ITU, to review progress made in the financing and implementation of the network. The Committee made recommendations to the Council of Ministers of OAU and to bilateral and multilateral financing institutions concerning the follow-up action that would be necessary to operate, maintain and expand the network and to develop telecommunication services. Similar problems were also dealt with on a subregional basis during annual co-ordination meetings organized with the assistance of ITU among concerned countries in Central Africa, Eastern Africa and Western Africa.

The PANAFTTEL team assisted a number of countries in planning and co-ordination problems, tender evaluation and the preparation of tender documents. A routing plan was drawn up for the countries of the East African subregion. In addition, assistance was also provided by ITU under sub-contracted arrangements for the implementation of a microwave route between the Gambia and Senegal, and of a high-frequency link between Lesotho and Kenya. Additional pre-investment surveys undertaken by ITU in 1975 for subregional links in six countries of Eastern and Central Africa were also completed in 1976. The financial constraints facing the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in 1976 precluded initiating additional surveys as had been planned, although it was possible to carry out some of these studies under bilateral arrangements.

Many countries indicated increased interest in the introduction of satellite telecommunication systems, pending full implementation of the PANAFTTEL network. The Union expressed concern at the large number of unco-ordinated proposals put forward for satellite links and continued to emphasize the high priority which should be given to completing the PANAFTTEL network.

Co-operation with and assistance to the Telecommunication Commission for Central America and its member States was pursued in 1976 with a view to expanding the regional network in Central America.

During the year the continuation of assistance to a majority of countries of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) in the field of tariffs and regulations for international services permitted better definition of specific development requirements of the countries concerned. Such assistance helped to increase the "know-how" of Government administrations and make countries more aware of the necessity of a common approach to the problems of regional development. To this end, in May 1976 a technical meeting was held in St. Kitts, in which countries of the Eastern Caribbean Common Market and representatives of the CARICOM secretariat exchanged views on matters of common concern, especially in regard to the legislation, tariffs and international regulations applicable to telecommunication services.

During 1976 ITU continued to assist the Asian countries in establishing a regional telecommunication network. Project assistance included a survey for suitable sites for a troposcatter link between Afghanistan and India, preliminary assistance for a microwave link between India and Sri Lanka, co-ordination and servicing of intergovernmental technical-level meetings for the network implementation, and servicing of various meetings of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Pacific dealing with telecommunications.

In the Pacific region, ITU assisted three projects, as an executing agency of UNDP, for maritime radio-communications, network development and the establishment of a regional training centre, all of which were in preparatory phases.

The studies in maritime radiocommunications were completed in April 1976 and were expected to form the basis for future development action by the countries concerned. Considerable progress was made in the establishment of a regional training centre for the Pacific area, with bilateral inputs from Australia and New Zealand, as well as assistance from the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-operation. The preparatory action for network development principally involved identification of needs and traffic requirements as a basis for feasibility studies.

Work continued on the feasibility study and pre-investment survey for a Middle East telecommunication network comprising all Arab League member countries, as well as Bulgaria, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Greece, Malta, Spain, Turkey and Yugoslavia. During the second phase of the project, studies of certain links were undertaken and technical documentation and specifications were to be provided to Governments to enable them to identify required investments.

In 1976, 40 expert missions were carried out in connexion with the promotion of development of telecommunication networks in Africa, the Americas, Asia and the Pacific, and the Middle East.

The improvement and modernization of telecommunication facilities made it necessary to reorganize or to reinforce administrative and technical services in many developing countries. In 1976, 125 expert missions provided assistance in this area.

As in previous years, almost two thirds of total field expenditures were utilized for training in order to meet demands for human resources in various sectors of telecommunications.

As at 31 December 1976, the total staff of ITU numbered 589 (excluding staff on short-term contracts). Of these, nine were elected officials, 517 had permanent contracts and 63 had fixed-term contracts. Thirty-seven nationalities were represented in those posts subject to geographical distribution.

Chapter XIII

The World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

During 1976, five States became members of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO):<sup>1</sup> Papua New Guinea (15 January), Comoros (18 April), Mozambique (21 July), Surinam (25 August) and Sao Tome and Principe (23 December). The Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and the Republic of South Viet-Nam were replaced as members by the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam. Thus, total membership in WMO as at 31 December rose to 145—136 States and 9 territories. (Angola was provisionally retained on the membership list in its former status as a territory pending action by the Angolan Government for membership consonant with its status as an independent State.) Additionally, Malta deposited an instrument of accession to the Convention of WMO on 28 December 1976; its membership became effective 30 days thereafter.

The Executive Committee of WMO held its twenty-eighth session at Geneva, Switzerland, in June 1976.

The twenty-first International Meteorological Organization Prize was awarded to E.K. Federov (USSR) for his outstanding contributions to the science of the atmosphere, his important scientific work in the Arctic, his leadership in research and in the organization of research institutes, his contribution to large-scale geophysical experiments and his services to the cause of international collaboration in meteorology.

Activities in 1976*World Weather Watch

The World Weather Watch is the basic programme of WMO. Its primary aim is to make available to members basic meteorological and other information needed to provide the most efficient and effective meteorological and related environmental services.

The World Weather Watch plan for 1976-1979, adopted by the seventh World Meteorological Congress in 1975, was a refinement and extension of plans for previous periods. During 1976, new scientific and technical advances in the field of meteorology, in particular the use of meteorological satellites, were integrated into the system. Developments in this field culminated in a plan for a global system of geo-stationary and near-polar orbiting satellites. Continued progress was also made in the use of advanced data-processing techniques essential for the optimum utilization of the meteorological and environmental information generated by the World Weather Watch.

Assistance to members in implementing the plan under their national meteorological programmes was provided by WMO under bilateral or multilateral programmes and through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), supplemented as necessary by WMO's own Voluntary Assistance Programme.

Ocean affairs

The Commission for Marine Meteorology continued to develop and co-ordinate international arrangements for the provision of meteorological services on the high seas, in coastal and off-shore waters and in ports, directed toward the safety and efficiency of marine operations. At the seventh session of the Commission, in December 1976, a number of projects were formulated to improve these services, to effect closer co-ordination with other international organizations and to prepare regulatory and guidance material. A technical conference on the applications of marine meteorology to the high seas and to coastal zone development was held in November 1976.

Nine volumes of annual marine climatological summaries were published in 1976. Closely linked to this programme was a project to publish marine climatological tables, based on 1860-1960 data. The Commission also developed an international plan for the exchange, storage and processing of current sea surface data.

An informal planning meeting on marine applications of satellite data, held in September 1976, proved helpful in fostering close co-ordination among meteorologists, oceanographers and satellite operators in, among other things, identifying the applications of satellite imagery for marine purposes. The organization continued to co-operate with the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission on programmes of mutual interest.

An international agreement for the joint financing of a new network of North Atlantic ocean stations, administered by WMO, entered into force on 1 December 1976. This replaced the network previously administered by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO).

Research and development

In 1976, the broadened research programme of WMO included such topics as weather modification and the effects of human activities on global climate and on the stratospheric ozone layer. Some work was done in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The Global Atmospheric Research Programme, a joint project of WMO and the International Council of Scientific Unions, is a world-wide scientific undertaking involving both advanced theoretical work and complex experimental field research intended to improve the physical and mathematical basis of long-range weather prediction and understanding of the climate. During 1976, data assembled from the Programme's Atlantic Tropical Experiment in 1974 was integrated with information provided by the World Weather Watch network and meteorological satellites and was applied to co-ordinated studies and investigations carried out in other parts of the world. Planning continued for the Programme's first global experiment, scheduled for 1978-1979.

The first annual register of national weather modification projects, for the year 1975, was issued by WMO in 1976. Sixteen members reported some form of weather modification activity. In addition, an internationally planned, executed and evaluated precipitation enhancement project was undertaken with the collaboration of some WMO members. The main cloud-seeding experiment, to be carried out over at least five years, was tentatively scheduled for 1981 to 1986.

An intensive global ozone research and monitoring project, to be carried out over a period of years, was approved by the WMO Executive Committee in 1976.

A 1976 WMO statement on climatic change was followed up by preparations for an integrated international effort in related studies. Plans were also prepared for a coherent WMO programme of research in tropical meteorology, as a means of helping tropical developing countries enhance the contribution of their meteorological services to their economies.

Meteorological applications and environment programme

The WMO programme on meteorological applications and environment includes all activities aimed at applying meteorological knowledge to human activities and conditions of life. During 1976, the Commission for Special Applications of Meteorology and Climatology studied problems related, among other things, to land use and town planning, building construction, energy production and consumption, human health and well-being, the human environment, and the use of natural resources. The Commission also considered the appropriate use of statistical methods in relation to work in these fields and the development of appropriate guidance material for member countries.

In accordance with a 1975 decision of the World Meteorological Congress, WMO placed considerable emphasis in 1976 on efforts to assist member countries in improving their capabilities in the application of meteorology to agriculture. Activities included organization of short-term missions to developing countries, the convening of symposia, development of closer collaboration between agriculturists and meteorologists and improvement in the exchange of data required for agricultural purposes. Action was also initiated to provide WMO input to the Global Information and Early Warning System of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). A WMO-sponsored symposium on the agrometeorology of the maize crop was held in the United States in July 1976. Based on recommendations of an interagency group (WMO, FAO, UNDP and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization), work was begun in 1976 on the preparation of a WMO technical note on the methodologies used in interagency agroclimatological surveys.

In the field of meteorological services for aviation, a major achievement was the adoption of a new set of common international regulations for the provision of these services to international air navigation. The new regulations resulted from the efforts of the WMO Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology and ICAO and went into force on 12 August 1976.

Research in aeronautical meteorology and climatology, particularly relating to the safety and efficiency of commercial and general aviation, continued in 1976. A technical note on the applications of satellite data to aeronautical meteorology was prepared.

A global network initiated in 1970 to measure background air pollution continued to expand during 1976 and, by the close of the year, consisted of 80 stations fully or partly operational and another 50 in various stages of planning; these stations were located in 74 countries. In co-operation with UNEP, experts had visited 70 countries by the end of 1976 in connexion with the establishment of monitoring stations. Specialized instrumentation and training of personnel was provided to a number of countries.

The World Meteorological Organization continued to co-operate closely with the World Health Organization in the field of air pollution control systems, especially with respect to the meteorological aspects of the development of these systems and to the standardization of monitoring.

In addition to on-going programmes connected with the monitoring of marine pollution deriving from petroleum, WMO was also actively involved in the development of a new programme for monitoring background levels of selected pollutants in open ocean waters. Special attention was given in 1976 to the problem of the interchange of pollutants between the ocean and the atmosphere, and a report was published on the determination of the atmospheric contribution of petroleum hydrocarbons to the oceans.

The WMO Commission for Hydrology, at its fifth session in Ottawa, Canada, in July 1976 formulated plans for the implementation of an operational programme and laid the groundwork for the launching of the Hydrological Multipurpose System, a co-operative facility which would integrate observing, transmitting, processing and modelling sub-systems into a comprehensive modular system. Seven working groups of the Commission continued work during the year on implementation of the operational hydrology programme. Rapporteurs of the Commission studied such specific matters as water-quality monitoring, forecasting of ice conditions, hydrological aspects of weather modification activities and training of hydrological personnel.

The Advisory Committee for Operational Hydrology, which deals with the co-ordination of co-operation among the national hydrological services of members of WMO, held its third session in October 1976. The six WMO regional associations continued through their working groups on hydrology to implement various technical and regulatory aspects of WMO hydrological and water resources programmes.

Technical co-operation

In 1976, WMO continued to provide assistance to developing countries in the establishment and improvement of national meteorological and hydrological services, the application of meteorological data to national economic development, and the training of personnel, through its regular budget and Voluntary Assistance Programme as well as through UNDP, UNEP and funds-in-trust arrangements.

Seventy-six countries received technical assistance under the UNDP programme: 141 expert missions were carried out in 47 countries and territories, 240 students from 51 countries and territories received training under fellowships, and approximately $1.6 million was spent on equipment. The total cost of the UNDP-financed programme was about $6.7 million.

Of a total of 28 small-scale expert missions, seven experts served in the field of administration and organization of meteorological services and five were full-time instructors. The remaining experts were engaged in hydrometeorology or hydrology, agrometeorology, climatology, meteorological telecommunications and other special fields. Three of these experts served in an operational capacity.

Two new large-scale UNDP projects were approved in 1976: strengthening of the national meteorological service in Bangladesh and development of a regional meteorological centre in Venezuela. The main objectives of the first project were the establishment of a small training school, the rehabilitation of an instruments workshop, the organization of a division of climatology and the improvement of techniques in radar meteorology. The purpose of the project in Venezuela was to expand the activities of the Department of Meteorology and Hydrology in the Faculty of Civil Engineering of the Central University of Venezuela and to introduce the teaching of modern techniques in the field of meteorology and hydrology.

During the year 27 other large-scale projects were under way: development, improvement and expansion of meteorological and hydrological services in Afghanistan, Ecuador, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Mongolia, Nepal, Tunisia, Uruguay, Yemen, the Sahelian countries, and the Central American isthmus; establishment or support of training and research institutions in Algeria, the Caribbean, the East African Community, Egypt, Iran and the Republic of Korea; water resources assessment in Colombia and the Lake Malawi catchment; cyclone and thunderstorm warning systems in Burma and Madagascar; technical support to the typhoon programme for the Asia-Pacific region; improvement of the flood forecasting system in Pakistan; hydro-meteorological survey of the catchments of Lakes Victoria, Kyoga and Mobutu Sese Seko in Africa; and fellowships for an intercountry meteorological training project in Latin America.

Five funds-in-trust projects, in Algeria, Iran, Pakistan, Rwanda and the Sahelian countries, were implemented or approved for implementation during the year.

Assistance provided through the Voluntary Assistance Programme consisted of expert missions, equipment and supplies, and fellowships. During the year, 210 projects were under way, of which 52 were completed and 60 were new.

Education and training

The education and training activities of WMO continued to expand during 1976. These activities included preparation of training publications, establishment of meteorological training centres, holding of training seminars, awarding of fellowships and co-operation with other international organizations.

Special attention was given to the preparation of compendia of lecture notes for training purposes. Three new training publications were issued and two major training seminars were held in 1976.

A total of 200 students received graduate or post-graduate training under long-term fellowships in 1976: 129 through the Voluntary Assistance Programme, 51 through UNDP and 20 through the WMO regular budget. In all, 384 students had completed or were still undergoing studies by means of fellowships awarded by WMO through these programmes.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1976, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding 63 professionals on technical assistance projects) on permanent and fixed-term contracts stood at 272. Of these, 111 were in the professional and higher categories (drawn from 36 nationalities) and 161 in the general service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1976 was the first year of WMO's seventh financial period (1976-1979), for which the seventh World Meteorological Congress (1975) established a maximum expenditure of $40,542,000, while also authorizing additional expenditures, not to exceed $1 million, to provide for particular circumstances such as losses resulting from changes in currency exchange rates.

The regular budget for 1976 amounted to $9,401,500. In June, the Executive Committee approved supplementary estimates for 1976 in the amount of $799,710. The 1976 budget for technical co-operation was $1,676,300, all from extra-budgetary sources.

At its June 1976 session, the Executive Committee approved a regular budget of $10,353,900 for 1977:

Chapter XIV

The Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO)

The Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO)<sup>1</sup> continued during 1976 to pursue its aims of facilitating intergovernmental co-operation and exchange of information on technical matters affecting international shipping, and of achieving the highest practicable standards of maritime safety and efficient navigation, with special emphasis on safety of life at sea and on the control and prevention of marine pollution.

Membership of IMCO rose to 101, plus one associate member, with the admission of the following nine States in 1976: Portugal (17 March), Gabon (1 April), Papua New Guinea (6 May), Jamaica (11 May), Bangladesh (27 May), the Bahamas (22 July), Cape Verde (24 August), Bahrain (22 September) and Surinam (14 October).

Two major conferences were held in 1976. The conference on the establishment of an international maritime satellite system held its second and third sessions in February and September respectively and adopted the Convention on the International Maritime Satellite Organization (INMARSAT) and a companion Operating Agreement. The main purpose of INMARSAT, which was to have its headquarters at London, was to administer and manage a world-wide satellite system for shipping. The second conference, held in November, adopted the Convention on Limitation of Liability for Maritime Claims, which was designed to replace the 1957 Brussels treaty; the provisions of the new Convention increased the limits of liability in line with conditions currently prevailing in sea transport.

International conventions

The organization was the depositary authority for the following international conventions, most of which resulted from conferences convened by IMCO in fulfilment of its statutory functions:

International Conventions for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1948, 1960 and 1974

International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil, 1954, as amended in 1962

Convention on Facilitation of International Maritime Traffic, 1965

International Convention on Load Lines, 1966

International Convention on Tonnage Measurement of Ships, 1969

International Convention relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties, 1969

International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, 1969

Convention relating to Civil Liability in the Field of Maritime Carriage of Nuclear Material, 1971

Special Trade Passenger Ships Agreement, 1971

Convention on International Compensation Fund for Oil Pollution Damage, 1971

International Convention for Safe Containers, 1972

Convention on International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972

International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973

Athens Convention relating to the Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea, 1974

Convention on the International Maritime Satellite Organization, 1976

Convention on Limitation of Liability for Maritime Claims, 1976

Activities in 1976

Marine pollution

The Marine Environment Protection Committee of IMCO continued to study questions associated with the 1973 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, such as guidelines on port reception facilities for oil waste, information on oil-discharge monitoring and control equipment, revision of recommended performance specifications for oily-water separating equipment, and a manual on methods of dealing with oil pollution. A number of scientific and environmental questions were studied with advice from an inter-agency group of experts on the scientific aspects of marine pollution.

In March 1976 a Marine Pollution Symposium, which was jointly sponsored by IMCO and the Government of Mexico, was held at Acapulco.

A regional centre combating oil pollution in the Mediterranean was established in December 1976 by IMCO and the United Nations Environment Programme in Malta, to facilitate co-operation among Mediterranean States in cases of massive oil spillages, and to assist those States in developing anti-pollution capabilities.

Training

Preparatory work for a 1978 conference on the training and certification of seafarers continued during 1976. A preliminary draft convention on the subject was presented for consideration to the Committee on Training, which is jointly sponsored by IMCO and the International Labour Organisation.

Safety of fishing vessels

A draft treaty on the safety of fishing vessels was completed and was to be discussed at an international conference to be held at Torremolinos, Spain, in March and April 1977.

Safety of navigation

Work on navigation safety included development of a standard marine navigational vocabulary to be recommended for use by IMCO member States in ship-to-ship and ship-to-shore communications. Progress was made on the harmonization of buoyage systems and a conference was proposed to adopt one unified or two regionally harmonized systems. Additional traffic separation schemes were developed for congested shipping areas; the value of such schemes in safer navigation would be increased when the new Collision Regulations became operative in 1977, as the new Regulations would make it mandatory for ships, if navigating in any such scheme, to follow the general traffic flow.

Radiocommunications

In the field of radiocommunications, work designed to improve the maritime distress system continued. Progress was also made on a plan for a world-wide system of radio navigational warnings; arrangements for the Mediterranean and Black Sea areas were completed.

Ship design and equipment

During 1976, a code for dynamically supported craft (e.g. hovercraft and hydrofoils) was completed, and an ad hoc group was established to draft a code for nuclear propelled merchant ships. The scope of the code was to be restricted to light water reactors.

Legal questions

The Legal Committee of IMCO worked on the revision of the existing treaty on limitation of ship-owners' liability. A new convention on limitation of liability for maritime claims was adopted by an international conference in November 1976.

Technical co-operation

The appointment in 1976 of two regional advisers for Asia and the Pacific, who were to be based at Bangkok, Thailand, and Jakarta, Indonesia, was expected to strengthen IMCO's role in technical co-operation. In March, IMCO's regional office for Latin America was formally inaugurated at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

Technical assistance provided by IMCO included aid in the prevention and control of marine pollution, the training of maritime personnel and the drafting of maritime legislation.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1976, the number of full-time staff employed by IMCO under permanent and fixed-term contracts was 192. Of these, 71 were in the professional and higher categories (drawn from 31 States) and 121 were in the general service category. An additional 19 professional staff members were employed on technical assistance projects in the field.

Budget

The budget for the two-year period 1976-1977, as voted by the ninth IMCO Assembly in November 1975, was $11,249,400.

The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) became a member of the United Nations system in 1974.<sup>1</sup> During 1976, six States became members of WIPO: Turkey (12 May), Ghana (12 June), Qatar (3 September), Mauritania (17 September), Mauritius (21 September), and the Libyan Arab Republic (28 September). In addition, Surinam deposited a declaration of continued application of the WIPO Convention. As at 31 December 1976 the number of members was 73. Membership in the two principal unions administered by WIPO—the Paris Union and the Berne Union—also increased. Three States, Ghana, the Libyan Arab Republic and Mauritius, became party to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property. In addition, the Bahamas and Surinam made declarations of continued application of the Paris Convention and became, as from the dates of their accession to independence (10 July 1973 and 25 November 1975, respectively) members of the Paris Union, bringing the number of its members to 87. Also, the Bahamas made a declaration of continued application of the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works and became a member of the Berne Union as from the date of its accession to independence. As at 31 December 1976, 66 States were members of the Berne Union.

The seventh WIPO Conference, a series of meetings of the governing bodies of WIPO and of the unions administered by it, was held in September and October 1976. During the Conference, 19 separate organizations also held their sessions, including the Assembly and Conference of the Hague Union for the International Deposit of Industrial Designs, which met for the first time.

Among other actions, the Conference approved a new date of payment—the beginning of each year—for contributions to the budgets of the unions. It also decided to enlarge the scope of its legal and technical programme for the acquisition by developing countries of technology related to industrial property and to name it the Permanent Programme for Development Co-operation related to Industrial Property.

The Conference also set up a Permanent Programme for Development Co-operation related to Copyright and Neighbouring Rights, with a Permanent Committee, to assist in planning and implementing co-operation activities in those fields.

Activities in 1976*Industrial property

The Ad Hoc Committee of Governmental Experts on the Revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property continued its deliberations at meetings in June 1976. Later in the year, at the September-October WIPO Conference, the Assembly of the Paris Union decided that a diplomatic conference for the revision of the Convention should be convened by the Director General of WIPO on a date to be determined by the Union's Executive Committee. It established a Preparatory Intergovernmental Committee for the conference, which met in November 1976. The Preparatory Committee decided, among other things, that working groups should be established on questions such as compulsory licences and inventors' certificates.

In September and October 1976, the Assembly and the Council of the Lisbon Union modified the regulations for carrying out the Lisbon Agreement for the Protection of Appellations of Origin and their International Registration, principally to take into account the situation of the entry into force in 1973 of the Stockholm Act (1967) of the Lisbon Agreement. The modified regulations also provided for the possibility of renouncing protection in one or some of the countries party to the Lisbon Agreement and for treating a subsequent request for protection in a given country as a modification rather than as a new international registration.

A working group on the regulations under the Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs met in February 1976 and adopted new draft regulations. These were intended to replace, after the entry into force of the 1975 Geneva Protocol to the Hague Agreement, the regulations for carrying out the Agreement as revised in 1934 and 1960.

A working group on scientific discoveries met in May 1976 and established drafts of a resolution together with regulations and a treaty concerning the international recording of scientific discoveries with the International Bureau of WIPO. Later in the year the WIPO Assembly agreed that the institution of such a system should be effected by means of a treaty and asked the Director General to make proposals to the 1977 session of the WIPO Co-ordination Committee for the convening of a diplomatic conference for the adoption of such a treaty.

The Ad Hoc Committee for Co-ordinating the Technical Activities of WIPO met twice in 1976 to review technical activities within the framework of the Patent Co-operation Treaty, the Strasbourg Agreement concerning the International Patent Classification (IPC), and the Paris Union Committee for International Co-operation in Information Retrieval among Patent Offices, in order to make recommendations to the competent bodies.

A committee of experts met in April 1976 to discuss a draft treaty and regulations on international recognition of the deposit of micro-organisms for the purposes of patent procedure. It recommended that a diplomatic conference be convened, and the Paris Union Assembly at its 1976 session accepted the invitation of the Government of Hungary to hold a conference in Budapest in 1977 for the adoption of such a treaty.

The Advisory Group of Non-Governmental Experts on the Protection of Computer Programmes in May 1976 discussed model provisions for national laws on the protection of computer software. It recommended that WIPO prepare new draft provisions, with notes explaining choices and alternative solutions, as well as an account of the arguments for and against the establishment of a system for the deposit or registration of computer software. It further asked WIPO to prepare a draft agreement for the protection of computer software and its international deposit.

Preparations for the entry into force of the Trademark Registration Treaty continued in 1976. The International Bureau of WIPO prepared an inventory of the matters to be regulated by the administrative instructions under the Treaty for the Treaty's Interim Advisory Committee at its second session in January 1977.

The Working Group for the Computerization of Trademark Operations met in September 1976 and discussed the international aspects of a computerization of trademark operations and computerized searching of word marks, including the possibilities of collaboration in the exchange of data bases, establishment of a common data base of trademark registrations and continuation of WIPO studies on the criteria of similarity between marks.

The Ad Hoc Committee of Experts for the Revision of the Nice Agreement concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purposes of the Registration of Marks met in March 1976. A temporary working group established by the Committee held three meetings in 1976 and reviewed the Alphabetical List of Goods and Services with a view to improving the text on the basis of the existing list of classes. At its session in September and October 1976, the Nice Union

Assembly decided to convene a diplomatic conference on the revision of the Agreement in 1977. The revision would deal with the procedure for the adoption by the Committee of Experts of amendments to the International Classification.

The Provisional Committee of Experts for the International Classification of Figurative Elements of Marks met in June and July 1976 and adopted a number of amendments and additions to the Classification.

Three interim committees for the entry into force of the Patent Co-operation Treaty met in November 1976. The Interim Committee for Administration Questions dealt with the draft of the Treaty's administrative instructions and other related matters. The Committee for Technical Assistance dealt with the availability of collections of patent documents, the channelling of such collections to developing countries and the progress achieved in technical assistance projects. The Committee for Technical Co-operation dealt among other things with the Treaty's minimum list of non-patent literature and with an inventory of the national patent documents to be included in the minimum documentation.

The Committee of Experts of the IPC Union and its Steering Committee, which met twice in 1976, established a tentative time schedule for the preparation of the third edition of IPC and its layout and presentation. They also discussed amendments of the classifications.

The International Bureau of WIPO in 1976 assisted the International Patent Documentation Centre in the negotiation of agreements of co-operation between the Centre, the Industrial Property Offices of Austria, the Federal Republic of Germany and the USSR, and the International Patent Institute. The Paris Union Committee for International Co-operation in Information Retrieval among Patent Offices also took actions to promote co-operation in the patent field. Among other things, it conducted a survey of the needs of developing countries and dealt with the monitoring of the implementation of search systems and the development of new search systems and guidelines for testing commercial search systems. It continued to study problems concerning standards or guidelines relating to the identification of States, organizations or other entities which issue patent documents, the identification of patent documents, and other related matters.

Copyright and neighbouring rights

The acceptance of international instruments in the fields of copyright and neighbouring rights increased during 1976. France deposited its instrument of ratification of the Vienna Agreement for the Protection of Type Faces and their International Deposit and of the Protocol to that Agreement. Colombia and Guatemala deposited instruments of accession to the International Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations (Rome Convention). Chile, Denmark, Guatemala, Italy, Kenya and New Zealand deposited instruments of ratification or accession in respect of the Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms against Unauthorized Duplication of their Phonograms (Phonograms Convention). Kenya, Mexico and Yugoslavia deposited instruments of ratification of the Convention relating to the Distribution of Programme-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite (Satellites Convention).

The International Bureau of WIPO, in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), continued the work requested in 1975 by the Executive Committee of the Berne Union and the Intergovernmental Copyright Committee (established by the Universal Copyright Convention), namely: a survey of problems arising from the use of audiovisual cassettes and discs; the transmission by cable of television programmes; the use of electronic computers and related facilities for access to or the creation of works; and the application of the 1971 revised texts of the Berne and Universal Conventions with respect to their applications to developing countries.

In December 1976, WIPO and UNESCO convened a second committee of governmental experts to discuss the problem of double taxation of copyright royalties remitted from one country to another. The committee expressed the view that the solution might be the adoption of a multilateral instrument limited to general principles fitting a wide variety of cases, accompanied by a model bilateral agreement, certain provisions of which might be drawn up in several alternative versions. The committee asked the secretariats of WIPO and UNESCO to prepare such texts, together with a commentary, to be submitted to Governments and interested organizations for comments.

Other activities concerning copyright included an East Asian/Pacific seminar, organized jointly by the Australian Government and Australian non-governmental organizations with the co-operation of WIPO and UNESCO, which was held in Sydney in August 1976.

Development co-operation activities

In addition to the establishment of a Permanent Programme for Development Co-operation related to Copyright and Neighbouring Rights and the enlargement of the permanent programme for industrial property, WIPO carried out a number of projects in co-operation with the developing countries in 1976.

In co-operation with various industrial property and copyright offices, 38 traineeships for a duration of up to two months were arranged for officials from the following 33 countries: Algeria, Benin, Bolivia, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gambia, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zaire and Zambia. Of these traineeships, 29 were in the field of industrial property and 9 in the field of copyright. A symposium on copyright matters was organized for a number of the trainees in Geneva, Switzerland, in September 1976 in which the International Publishers Association participated.

During 1976, WIPO gave assistance to or was actively considering requests for assistance from the following countries: Algeria, Brazil, Cuba, Ecuador, Iraq, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Niger, Nigeria, the Philippines, Rwanda, Senegal, the Sudan, Togo, Tunisia, Venezuela and Zaire.

In addition, WIPO co-operated in the planning or implementation of projects with the African Intellectual Property Organization (establishment of a patent documentation centre and advice on the revision of the Libreville Agreement); with the English-Speaking Countries in Africa (inter alia, the convening, with the Economic Commission for Africa, of a diplomatic conference for the adoption of an agreement on the creation of an industrial property organization for English-speaking Africa); with the Industrial Development Centre for Arab States (inter alia, establishment of a patent documentation centre and publication of a model law for Arab States on trademarks); with the Economic Commission for Latin America (implementation of a research programme in the field of patents); with the Caribbean Community (harmonization of the industrial property legislation of member States); and with the Round Table Conference on the Revision of the Paris Convention held in Mexico City in May 1976.

The Working Group on the Model Law for Developing Countries on Inventions and Know-how held two meetings in 1976 and made recommendations on drafts prepared by WIPO. A group of Government experts, convened by the Government of Tunisia with the assistance of WIPO and UNESCO in Tunis in February and March 1976, adopted the text of the Tunis Model Law on Copyright for Developing Countries, the draft of which was prepared by WIPO and UNESCO.

The Expert Working Group on Information from Patent Documents met in March 1976 to discuss the use of the International Patent Classification and activities aimed at facilitating access by users in developing countries to technological information in patent documents. The Working Group on Guidelines for Industrial Property Licensing in Developing Countries met in June to examine a WIPO draft text of a guide to the legal aspects of the negotiation and preparation of industrial property licences and technology transfer agreements appropriate to the needs of developing countries.

Under agreements concluded in 1975 and 1976 between the Government of Austria and WIPO, Austria provided, free of charge, search reports on the state of the art in technological fields of patent activity, in response to requests from Algeria, Argentina, Cuba, Egypt, Israel, Uruguay, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

Expenditures for development co-operation

Total expenditure in 1976 for technical assistance activities for the benefit of developing countries was $1,780,000. Of this amount, $1,140,000 was financed from the ordinary contributions of the member States of WIPO and the unions administered by it and represented approximately 40 per cent of those contributions. The remainder was financed by the United Nations Development Programme ($584,000) and other extra-budgetary sources.

Assistance to more than 40 individual countries, including Algeria, Argentina, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Ghana, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Kenya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zaire and Zambia, amounted to about 55 per cent of total development co-operation expenditure. Regional assistance totalled $305,000 (17 per cent), which was allocated as follows: Africa, 34 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 25 per cent; Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East, 34 per cent; and Latin America and the Caribbean, 7 per cent. Some $491,000, or 28 per cent of the total, was allocated to global assistance.

The percentage breakdown for technical assistance activities by type of expenditure in 1976 was as follows:

|                            | Percentage |
|----------------------------|------------|
| Project personnel          | 29         |
| Expert missions            | 12         |
| Other consultant services  | 1          |
| Training                   | 15         |
| Equipment and publications | 7          |
| Meetings, workshops, etc.  | 14         |
| Travel assistance          | 22         |

Budget

The principal financial resources of WIPO are ordinary and special contributions from member States and income derived from international registration services.

Ordinary contributions are paid on the basis of a class-and-unit system by members of the Paris, Berne, Nice and Locarno Unions and by member States of WIPO that are not members of any of the Unions.<sup>2</sup> The amounts contributed by members of the IPC Union are based partly on a class-and-unit system and partly on a statistical system that takes into account the volume and nature of patent activity of the State in question. Special contributions, in the amount recommended by the competent organs responsible for certain programmes, are paid by the States participating in those particular programmes.

States members of the Paris, Berne, Nice and Locarno Unions are placed in seven classes (I to VII) for the purpose of determining the amounts of their ordinary contributions. States members of WIPO that are not members of any of the Unions are placed in three classes (A, B, or C) for the same purpose. States in Class I or A pay the highest contributions of their group and those in Class VII or C the lowest. The class in which any given State is placed is solely a matter for the State itself to decide. The rights of each State are the same, irrespective of the class chosen.

The contribution class for each member State of WIPO and of the Paris or Berne Unions, together with the amount of the ordinary contribution of each State, is given in Annex I to this chapter. (The class indicated for the Paris Union also applies to the Nice, Locarno and IPC Unions.) Members of one or more unions do not pay separate contributions to WIPO since the Unions themselves contribute towards the costs of WIPO's International Bureau.

The amounts of ordinary contributions assessed each class for 1977 are given in the table below. (Since contributions to IPC are subject to individual adjustment, amounts payable are listed by country, rather than by class.)

Chapter XVI

The Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, held at Havana, Cuba, from November 1947 to March 1948, drew up a Charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the organization (ICITO). Because of lack of acceptance of the Charter, establishment of ITO was postponed indefinitely. However, while the Charter was in preparation, the Preparatory Committee's members, deciding to proceed with tariff negotiations among themselves, also drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The Agreement—a multilateral treaty embodying reciprocal rights and obligations—entered into force on 1 January 1948, with 23 contracting parties. Since that date, ICITO has provided the GATT secretariat.<sup>1</sup>

In 1976, the number of contracting parties to GATT stood at 83, with three additional countries acceding provisionally and 24 other countries applying GATT rules in their trade. It was estimated that the contracting parties conducted about 85 per cent of all international trade.

Multilateral trade negotiations

The substantial reduction of tariffs and other barriers to trade is a main aim of the General Agreement. It has been the objective of a series of negotiations or "rounds" held within the framework of GATT, the latest of which was launched in Tokyo, Japan, in September 1973 by the Tokyo Declaration.<sup>2</sup> The Declaration among other things called for a review of the basic trading rules of GATT. Developed countries were expected to negotiate on a basis of reciprocity, while this was not expected from developing countries in the form of any contributions inconsistent with individual financial, trade and development needs.

Over 70 developing countries, including 28 non-members of GATT, were among the 97 participants in the Tokyo round negotiations in 1976. A special assistance unit was set up in the GATT secretariat to help the developing countries in the negotiations.

The progress of the seven negotiating groups in the Tokyo round in 1976 is outlined in the following sections.

Tariffs

During 1976, the tariff negotiating group focused on several proposed formulae for dismantling tariffs. At its meeting in December it decided that agreement on measures for giving special and more favourable treatment to exports of developing countries should be reached before, or at least by the time that, a tariff-cutting formula was chosen.

Non-tariff measures

Negotiations on non-tariff measures were based on a comprehensive inventory of some 850 notifications by Governments of measures that they believed had either hampered their exports or provided unfair advantage to their competitors. Major categories of non-tariff measures for which solutions were being negotiated in 1976 included technical standards, customs questions, subsidies and countervailing duties, quantitative restrictions, and Government procurement practices.

Sectoral approach

During 1976 negotiations, the possibilities for co-ordinated reduction or elimination of barriers to trade on the basis of trade and other data for the ores and metals sector were examined. The groups also looked at a number of sectors of interest to exporters in developing countries, and for this purpose examined information regarding handicrafts; fish and fish products; hides, skins and leather products; pulp and paper; and wood and wood products.

Safeguards

During 1976, the negotiating group on safeguards carried forward its examination of the adequacy of the multilateral safeguard system and in particular Article XIX of the General Agreement, which specifies the circumstances in which member countries may take emergency action of a non-discriminatory character to restrict imports of particular products when those products cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers.

At its meeting in May 1976 the group decided that the first phase of its work—examining the operation of the present safeguard system—had gone as far as it usefully could. At mid-year it began examining the possibility of a new or revised system. The United States put forward a proposal for an improved system, and comments were offered by other members.

Agricultural products

Experience in 1976 confirmed that agriculture, as in past negotiations, presented some of the most difficult problems facing the negotiators. During the year three sub-groups, dealing with cereals, dairy products and meat, examined negotiating possibilities under three headings: liberalization, stabilization and the particular problems of developing countries. Discussions also took place on other agricultural products, with particular attention to those exported by developing countries.

Tropical products

As a result of negotiations on tropical products, trade concessions and contributions on tropical products to developing countries by Australia, the European Economic Community, Finland, Norway, New Zealand, Sweden and Switzerland were to take effect on 1 January 1977. Austria, Canada and Japan were expected to make concessions or contributions during 1977, as soon as necessary domestic procedures were completed.

These were the first concrete results of the multilateral trade negotiations. Many of the products concerned were primary products, but a number were semi-processed and processed goods.

Framework for conduct of world trade

In November 1976, following a Brazilian proposal, the Trade Negotiations Committee for the Tokyo round established a group whose task was to seek to negotiate improvements in the international framework for the conduct of world trade, particularly with respect to trade between developed and developing countries and differential and more favourable treatment to be adopted in such trade.

Other GATT activities

Balance-of-payments consultations

The general prohibition on the use of quantitative restrictions on imports, together with the rule of non-discrimination, is one of the basic principles of GATT. The main exception allows a contracting party to apply import restrictions for the purpose of safeguarding its balance of payments and monetary reserves. Countries introducing new restrictions or substantially intensifying existing restrictions are required to hold consultations with their trade partners. In 1976, a number of countries whose balance-of-payments difficulties obliged them to restrict imports consulted with the Committee on Balance-of-Payments Restrictions. These countries included Bangladesh, Brazil, Finland, Ghana, Greece, Israel, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, Tunisia and Yugoslavia.

Regional trading arrangements

During 1976, several regional trading arrangements under the terms of Article XXIV of the General Agreement, which deals with such matters, were examined.

In 1975, the European Community and 46 countries of Africa, the Caribbean and the Pacific concluded the Lomé (Togo) Convention. Three more countries acceded to the Convention, which dealt with trade matters, in 1976, and GATT was duly notified. A special working group continued to examine the conformity of the Convention to GATT rules.

Other working groups were established for the same purpose in connexion with the first preferential trade agreement among developing countries of Asia, the Bangkok (Thailand) Agreement, which entered into force in June 1976, and with trade agreements concluded by Finland with Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Hungary.

Trade in textiles

In 1976, the GATT Textiles Committee undertook a major review of the operation of the four-year 1973 Arrangement Regarding International Trade in Textiles,<sup>3</sup> and began consideration of whether, after 31 December 1977, it should be extended, modified or discontinued. The Committee agreed to meet again early in 1977 with a view to reaching a decision on the future of the Arrangement.

Consultative Group of Eighteen

In 1975, an 18-member Consultative Group, providing balanced representation of GATT's membership, was established to help GATT members follow international trade developments more effec-lively, to forestall or deal with sudden disturbances in world trade, and to fulfil their role in the international adjustment process.

The Consultative Group held three meetings in 1976. One of the main topics discussed was the possibility of altering some GATT rules and procedures to improve the international framework for the conduct of world trade and to deal in a better way with trade measures taken for balance-of-payments purposes.

Training programme

The GATT secretariat held two trade policy courses in 1976 at Geneva, Switzerland, for officials from developing countries who contributed to the formulation and implementation of the foreign trade policies of their countries. Since 1955, 564 officials from 98 countries had attended these courses.

International Trade Centre

In 1964, GATT established the International Trade Centre to provide trade information and trade promotion advisory services for developing countries. Since January 1968 the Centre has been jointly operated by GATT and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). For information about the Centre in 1976, see pp. 418-19.

Publications

In 1976 GATT published the annual volumes of GATT Activities and International Trade.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1976, the GATT secretariat employed 198 staff members; of these, 96 were in the professional and higher categories, drawn from 23 nationalities, and 102 were in the general service category.

Financial arrangements

Governments party to GATT participate financially in accordance with a scale of contributions assessed on the basis of their share in the total trade of the Contracting Parties and associated Governments. The scale of contributions for 1977, assessed in Swiss francs, is given in Annex I below.

The GATT budget for 1976 was 34,195,400 Swiss francs.

The Charter of the United Nations and the Statute of the International Court of Justice

The Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council," the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

HAVE FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.
2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.
3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.
3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.
4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the
