Foreword

As the United Nations enters its fourth decade, its essential role as a catalyst in the striving for international peace and co-operation becomes ever more apparent. Governments and peoples are seeking to bring about a fundamental change in the world order, and their agenda of priority items reflects not only a shift in emphasis—as in the expanding dialogue between developed and developing countries—but also a greatly increased readiness on the part of the international community to tackle truly complex global problems through the processes made uniquely available by the United Nations family.

The great range and variety of these efforts and of the political and economic trends throughout 1976 are reflected in the pages of this volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations. Its aim is to provide authoritative, objective and concise information and source material which will help in understanding the new efforts and trends in the world. I hope that its publication will provide a comprehensive work of reference on the complex workings of the World Organization.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

To assist readers who wish to make a more detailed study of subjects discussed in Part One of this Yearbook of the United Nations, documentary references are provided at the end of each chapter and sub-chapter. These references give the symbols and titles of documents of the principal organs of the United Nations dealing with the subject concerned, records of voting and texts of adopted resolutions. Also listed are the numbers of the meetings of the various organs at which the subject dealt with was discussed. These meeting numbers indicate the relevant discussion records.

For those unfamiliar with United Nations documentation, the following information may serve as a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly; A/31/-, to documents issued for consideration at its thirty-first (1976) session; and A/31/1, to the first document in the series, A/31/2, to the second document, and so forth. A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.2/-, a document of the Second Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/AC.- documents are those of ad hoc bodies of the Assembly, e.g. A/AC.105/- refers to a document of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. Documents of limited circulation are so designated by "L", e.g. A/SPC/31/L.5 would refer to the fifth document that was of limited circulation issued by the Special Political Committee for the thirty-first session of the Assembly.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council. E/AC.- and E/C.- documents are those of Committees of the Council, e.g.

E/AC.6/- refers to a document of the Economic Committee, and E/C.2/- to a document of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. E/CN.- documents are those of the Commissions of the Council, each of which also has its own number. E/ICEF/- indicates documents of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council.

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council.

DC/- refers to documents of the Disarmament Commission.

DP/- refers to documents of the United Nations Development Programme.

ID/- refers to documents of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

ITC/- refers to documents of the International Trade Centre.

TD/B/- refers to documents of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

UNEP/- refers to documents of the United Nations Environment Programme.

U.N.P. designates United Nations sales publications.

Full titles are given for documents of the International Court of Justice.

Disarmament and related matters

During 1976, negotiations and debates on disarmament and related matters continued to be held under the auspices of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) and in the United Nations General Assembly.

The Conference of the Committee on Disarmament held two sessions at Geneva, Switzerland, during the year, at which it continued its discussions of matters relating to nuclear disarmament, to non-nuclear and collateral measures, to general and complete disarmament and to the organization of the work of CCD. Also, a special report was prepared for the General Assembly on CCD's deliberations concerning a convention to prohibit environmental warfare.

At its thirty-first (1976) session, the General Assembly had before it, among other things, the report of CCD, as well as a report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference, a report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, a report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Disarmament and a report of the Secretary-General's Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets.

In all, the General Assembly had 18 disarmament items on its agenda and it adopted 21 resolutions concerning them.

Many of these resolutions were concerned with nuclear disarmament. Two of them called for the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests (resolutions 31/66 and 31/89), while two dealt with matters relating to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, including implementation of the conclusions of the 1975 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (resolutions 31/75 and 31/189 D). Five resolutions were concerned with nuclear-free zones: the study of nuclear-weapon-free zones (resolution 31/70); the ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (resolution 31/67); implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa (resolution 31/69); and the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in the Middle East (resolution 31/71) and in South Asia (resolution 31/73). A related resolution dealt with the security needs of non-nuclear-weapon States (resolution 31/189 C).

The Assembly also adopted a resolution concerning the strategic arms limitation talks (resolution 31/189 A) and resolutions by which it called for implementation of the objectives of the Disarmament Decade (resolution 31/68), asked the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference to continue its work (resolution 31/190) and decided to convene a special Assembly session on disarmament in 1978 (resolution 31/189 B).

Additional questions dealt with in resolutions were: implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace (resolution 31/88); chemical and biological weapons (resolution 31/65); napalm and other incendiary weapons (resolution 31/64); the banning of new weapons of mass destruction (resolution 31/74); a convention to ban action to influence the environment for purposes incompatible with international security (resolution 31/72); the reduction of military budgets (resolution 31/87); and the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament (resolution 31/90).

Report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament

The Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) held two sessions during 1976, the first from 17 February to 22 April and the second from

22 June to 3 September. The following 30 States participated in the work of the Committee: Argentina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Canada, Czecho-Slovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, India, Iran, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Romania, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States, Yugoslavia and Zaire. As in previous years, France, though a member of the Committee, did not participate.

The United Nations Secretary-General in a message to the opening meeting observed that the General Assembly had invited CCD to review the progress made in implementing the objectives of the Disarmament Decade (the 1970s) and to re-appraise its tasks in order to accelerate the pace of its efforts. The Secretary-General hoped that the Committee's scheduled consideration of the organization of its work would lay the basis for new and more concrete progress. He noted several encouraging events in the sphere of security and disarmament during the preceding 12 months, among them the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>1</sup> which had confirmed the commitment of the parties to achieve full implementation of that Treaty.<sup>2</sup>

The Secretary-General stressed that the highest priority continued to be attached to the question of nuclear disarmament and emphasized again the supreme importance of an early cessation of all nuclear-weapon tests. He reiterated his conviction that the risks of continuing nuclear-weapon tests were far greater than the risks involved in any tests that might conceivably go undetected or unverified. The Secretary-General urged the early achievement of a complete ban on all chemical weapons along the lines of the joint initiative announced by the United States and the USSR in July 1974. He also hoped that the Committee could work out, during its 1976 session, a broadly acceptable agreement to prohibit the use of environmental modification techniques for hostile purposes and could make progress towards a ban on the production of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons.

During the year, the Committee continued to work, in accordance with its agenda, on the following matters: (a) further effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament; (b) non-nuclear measures; (c) other collateral measures; and (d) general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control. A further topic of discussion was the organization of the work of the Committee itself. In addition to the formal plenary meetings, there were informal meetings of a Working Group on the Prohibition of Military and Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, an Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative

Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, and meetings with the participation of experts on such subjects as new weapons of mass destruction, the cessation of nuclear-weapon tests and chemical weapons.

In its 1976 report to the General Assembly, the Committee provided an account of the year's work in the main areas. It also submitted a special report on the question of a convention to prohibit military or other hostile use of environmental modification techniques.

Nuclear disarmament

During its discussions, members of CCD stressed the need for early and substantial progress towards the cessation of the nuclear arms race and towards nuclear disarmament. The USSR considered the cessation of the nuclear arms race to be one of the major disarmament tasks, and stressed the importance of a complete ban on nuclear-weapon tests in that respect. The USSR, as well as Bulgaria, held that the refusal of some nuclear-weapon States to take part in negotiations on nuclear disarmament was one of the main factors still hindering progress in that field. Hungary said it recognized the particular importance of nuclear disarmament, but it maintained that CCD must not lessen its efforts to achieve other measures of arms limitation and disarmament.

Mexico emphasized the threat posed by the vast nuclear arsenals of the two major nuclear powers and the alarm aroused by the constant growth in the number of nuclear weapons and in their qualitative improvement.

In Romania's view, disarmament, and in the first instance nuclear disarmament, had become the major world problem; it suggested a number of measures to solve the problem, including cessation of development and production of nuclear arms and their means of delivery, cessation of production of fissionable materials for military purposes and the use of existing materials for peaceful purposes, and the total prohibition and destruction of all nuclear weapons and their means of delivery.

Canada, India, Japan, Mexico and Sweden also urged that the question of nuclear disarmament be given the highest priority and that the nuclear-weapon States make greater efforts towards that goal. The first step in that direction, India said, should be a cessation of the production of fissile materials for weapons purposes, combined with a ban on the production of nuclear weapons and a comprehensive nuclear-weapon test ban. In the opinion of the Netherlands, the slow progress towards nuclear disarmament was the result of the development of new and sophisticated weaponry that blurred the distinction between nuclear and conventional warfare and that could not be restricted because of verification problems.

The strategic arms limitation talks (known as SALT) between the USSR and the United States were discussed in this context. The USSR said that the SALT agreements concluded over the previous five years had not only defined the relations between the two powers on the basis of the principles of peaceful coexistence but constituted an important contribution to international detente, to the elimination of the threat of a global nuclear conflict and to the curbing of the arms race.

The United States observed that the bilateral talks had already led to important agreements which represented notable progress towards nuclear disarmament and laid the foundation for future measures.

Bulgaria, Italy, Mongolia, Poland and the United Kingdom emphasized the importance of these bilateral talks, at the same time urging further progress.

In the view of Mexico and Sweden, there had been a lack of real progress towards the limitation of strategic nuclear weapons; they urged the participating powers to keep CCD informed of the talks. Mexico also urged that the scope of the talks be broadened. Sweden and Nigeria noted that the 1974 Vladivostok accord between the USSR and the United States, which would set ceilings on the number of nuclear weapons that could be deployed by the two parties to it, not only permitted quantitative expansion but allowed the qualitative nuclear arms race to continue unabated.

Question of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

Members of CCD continued to address themselves to the question of a comprehensive test-ban agreement in accordance with a request of the General Assembly to give this matter the highest priority. A comprehensive ban would extend to underground tests the existing ban on tests in all other environments contained in the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, signed on 5 August 1963 in Moscow (the partial test-ban Treaty).

The priority of this question was emphasized by Canada, Italy, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nigeria and Sweden, among others. The Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Iran, Mongolia, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States stressed the need for continued efforts of the Committee towards that important goal. Noting that its 1975 treaty proposal for the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests had been submitted by the General Assembly to a special negotiating group, the USSR held that CCD should continue its examination of the problem to facilitate progress towards its solution.

Many States stressed the importance of a comprehensive ban as a first step towards halting the arms race and achieving nuclear disarmament; some considered that such a ban was a necessary prerequisite to halting the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

The USSR, other Eastern European States and Mongolia continued to hold the view that the participation of all nuclear-weapon States was essential in a comprehensive test-ban agreement; they opposed any moratorium on such tests without the participation of all nuclear-weapon States, on the general grounds that any agreement without such full participation would violate the principle of equal security for all States.

On the other hand, Canada, Iran, Japan, Mexico, Sweden and Yugoslavia, among others, took the general view that, although universal adherence to a comprehensive test ban was a most desirable goal, the USSR and the United States, as vastly superior nuclear powers, could take the initiative in implementing such a ban without detriment to their security and should take such an initiative if any progress in the matter was to be achieved. Canada urged the United States and the USSR to reach a formal agreement, not a moratorium, to halt all nuclear-weapon tests, open to all States, if necessary for a specified period only. Such an agreement, in Canada's view, would put considerable pressure on non-adhering States to stop such testing.

The United States said it had not yet made a determination whether a comprehensive test ban should require the participation of all nuclear-weapon States before it could enter into force. It questioned the desirability of taking a position on the participation issue before resolving the principal problems holding up agreement, namely verification difficulties, including the question of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes. Once those questions were resolved, several options would be open: (a) an agreement that would not enter into force until all nuclear-weapon States had adhered to it; (b) an agreement of limited duration, not requiring adherence by all nuclear-weapon States, which would provide for review and extension; and (c) an agreement of unlimited duration not requiring adherence by all nuclear-weapon States but containing a withdrawal provision.

On the verification question, the USSR and most other States continued to hold the view that national means of verification, combined with international co-operation in the exchange of seismic data, could ensure effective control for any comprehensive test-ban agreement. The United States and several others, however, continued to insist on the need for on-site inspection to ensure against any tests which, though too small to be identified, might be of military significance.

Early in its 1976 session, on the initiative of Sweden, the Committee held a series of informal meetings on the verification problem in a further effort to clarify this aspect. Sweden, among others, continued to express the view that a global seismic monitoring system could provide adequate means to deter any clandestine testing under an agreement. The Committee adopted a Swedish proposal to establish a group of scientific governmental experts to consider international co-operative measures to detect and identify seismic tests. This group met in August 1976 and was scheduled to meet again early in 1977.

Mexico, noting that the General Assembly had repeatedly declared that there was no valid reason for delaying achievement of a comprehensive test ban and that there was almost universal acceptance that national means of verification would be sufficient, criticized the Committee for repeatedly holding technical meetings which, in Mexico's view, served only to obscure a lack of political will in this matter on the part of some nuclear-weapon States.

In late June, the USSR and the United States announced to CCD that on 28 May 1976 they had signed a Treaty on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes. The United States noted that the verification procedure in this Treaty was the most detailed ever set forth in any arms-control agreement and included provisions for seismic data exchange and for on-site inspection under certain circumstances. The USSR said that the Treaty, while aimed directly at curbing the arms race, would undoubtedly promote the development of international co-operation in the field of peaceful uses of nuclear energy for the benefit of all countries of the world; it was an additional link in the chain of agreements designed to achieve the goal of the complete and general cessation of nuclear-weapon tests.

A number of CCD members welcomed the limitations placed on both military and peaceful nuclear explosions by the Treaty and its companion agreement on the limitation of underground nuclear-weapon tests, signed in July 1974 by the USSR and the United States (the threshold test-ban agreement providing for a ban on nuclear-weapon tests above a yield of 150 kilotons by early 1976). However, the threshold of 150 kilotons permitted under both treaties was considered to be excessive. Sweden called for a phased reduction of the established threshold until a complete ban on nuclear-weapon tests was achieved. The Netherlands and Sweden suggested that the verification procedures of the two agreements might be used as a model for a comprehensive ban. Japan suggested consideration of expanding the threshold test-ban agreement into a multilateral agreement and, simultaneously, lowering the threshold of 150 kilotons.

Some members considered that there would be difficulty in holding nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes under a comprehensive nuclear-weapon test ban. The Netherlands, for example, observed that in view of the difficulty of agreeing on a verification system to ensure that no peaceful nuclear explosion could be used as a weapon test, peaceful nuclear explosions might have to be abandoned under a nuclear-weapon test ban. The United States mentioned the danger of peaceful nuclear explosions being used under a weapon-test ban to conceal tests for military purposes; it held that any weapon-test ban should embody a solution to that problem.

Japan suggested that studies be made of the possibility of authorizing all nuclear explosions exclusively under international observation or of banning nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes over the threshold for a given period, say five years.

Nigeria suggested that the United Nations should open a register for nuclear explosions, whether for peaceful purposes or weapons testing, and that all States should accept the obligation to record their nuclear explosions in that register. Iran hoped the problem related to peaceful nuclear explosions would not create a new obstacle to a comprehensive test ban.

India and the USSR maintained, however, that a solution to the problem of peaceful nuclear explosions could be found after a weapon-test ban had been agreed upon; they did not believe that a comprehensive ban would create obstacles to the benefits which could come from peaceful nuclear explosions.

Other aspects of nuclear disarmament

Many members of CCD emphasized the importance of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (the non-proliferation Treaty) and the need for universal adherence to it.

Poland contended that the threat of the spread of nuclear weapons could not be removed until all States with significant military and technological potential had adhered to the Treaty. It felt that, following the 1975 Review Conference, there were no valid arguments to be advanced in justification of further non-adherence. Mongolia suggested that the General Assembly might adopt a special declaration on the strengthening of the non-proliferation régime containing an urgent appeal to the States that were not parties to the Treaty to adhere to it as soon as possible.

Japan announced that on 8 June 1976 it had deposited instruments of ratification of the non-proliferation Treaty. It expressed the hope that as many States as possible, in particular France and China, would accede to the Treaty. The Committee was also aware of the recent ratification of the Treaty by Yemen and the current efforts of Switzerland to ratify the Treaty.

A number of the Committee's members called upon the nuclear-weapon States to take concrete nuclear disarmament measures to give effect to article VI of the non-proliferation Treaty.<sup>3</sup> Sweden held that the outcome of the 1975 Review Conference of the Treaty had revealed the fragile basis of the non-proliferation efforts; the highest priority should be given, in Sweden's view, to curbing the arms race and thereby halting vertical proliferation (i.e. the further development and stockpiling) of nuclear weapons before the second review conference which was scheduled for 1980. Japan also urged the nuclear-weapon States to take steps in that direction, calling upon them, in their efforts to strengthen the non-proliferation régime, to seek a balance between responsibilities and obligations.

Similarly, Romania urged the nuclear-weapon States to put an end to the nuclear arms race which, it said, was responsible for the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the world. Romania added that in the absence of concrete results in halting the arms race, and in view of the insecurity caused by the existence of nuclear weapons, the non-nuclear-weapon States were fully justified in demanding definite guarantees against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. It further stressed the importance of the principle of equal security and obligations in all disarmament matters. India reiterated its opposition to both horizontal nuclear-weapons proliferation (the further spread of nuclear weapons) as well as vertical proliferation. Italy hoped for progress at SALT, to complement the provisions of article VI of the non-proliferation Treaty.

Nigeria, contending that South Africa did not need nuclear reactors for energy for peaceful purposes, said it regretted that nuclear-weapon powers were providing South Africa with assistance and material for the production of nuclear weapons. Mongolia said it shared the anxiety expressed by African and Arab States with respect to the continued nuclear commerce between certain Western powers and the régimes in South Africa and Israel.

A number of other members expressed views on various measures for strengthening the non-proliferation régime, in respect of the international transfer of nuclear material, equipment and technology and the question of safeguards.

The Federal Republic of Germany said that the international nuclear explosive services to be set up under the terms of the non-proliferation Treaty (article V) should be provided through the International Atomic Energy Agency and under its supervision. It added that all nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes, including those not covered by the non-proliferation Treaty, should be carried out under appropriate international observation.

Referring to those provisions of the 1976 USSR–

United States Treaty on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes relating to the intention of the parties to co-operate in the field of underground explosions for peaceful purposes, the USSR pointed out that all countries of the world would benefit from the results of such co-operation. The United States referred to its recent effort in co-ordination with other countries for more effective separation of assistance for truly peaceful applications of nuclear technology from the kind of assistance that might violate article I of the Treaty—relating to prohibition of the transfer of nuclear weapons or other explosive devices or of control over them.

Several CCD members commented on the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones. Mexico maintained that the extraordinary increase in the number of General Assembly items relating to nuclear-weapon-free zones revealed the impatience of non-nuclear-weapon States with the lack of progress in the field of nuclear disarmament. Faced with the reluctance of the nuclear-weapon States to adopt effective disarmament measures, Mexico said, the States of the third world would be inclined to expand gradually those areas of the world in which nuclear weapons were banned for ever, to the point where the territories of States possessing those weapons would appear as contaminated islands subject to quarantine. Mexico emphasized the importance of the declaration adopted by the General Assembly on 11 December 1975 containing a definition of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone and setting forth the principal obligations of nuclear-weapon States towards such zones.<sup>4</sup>

Iran referred to the proposal on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East and expressed the view that adherence to the non-proliferation Treaty by all the States involved would help to establish a viable zone in the region.

Mongolia, Poland, and the USSR held that the General Assembly should not define the concept or the scope of nuclear-weapon-free zones or claim the right to decide which zones could be recognized and which could not, this being a prerogative of the sovereign authority of every State.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR referred to the proposal for non-use of force made at the twenty-fifth congress of the Communist Party and stressed its importance for strengthening world peace, for prohibiting the use of all types of weapons, including nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, and for achieving progress towards disarmament. In this context, Mongolia and the USSR also referred to the importance of implementing the General Assembly's declaration of 29 November 1972 on the non-use of force in international relations and the permanent prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons.<sup>5</sup>

Non-nuclear measures

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The major part of CCD'S substantive consideration of the subject of banning chemical weapons related to the scope of a possible ban, the definition of agents to be included and the question of verification. Several informal meetings with the participation of technical experts were held on the subject. Those meetings were generally regarded as constructive in evolving a more precise definition of the substances to be covered by a convention.

Iran, Japan, Mexico, Nigeria, Sweden and Yugoslavia expressed regret that the joint initiative on an international agreement prohibiting the most dangerous, lethal means of chemical warfare, which the USSR and the United States had agreed to consider in 1974, had not materialized. Nigeria also expressed dissatisfaction that there had not been further discussion on proposals on a chemical weapons ban put forward by Canada, Japan, Sweden and others. Sweden, referring to a statement made in CCD by the United States in 1975 to the effect that an initial prohibition should deal with all lethal agents, said that if agreement was emerging on agents to be covered by the provisions of a treaty, an attempt should be made to determine what activities should be within the scope of such a treaty. As to verification, Sweden said that non-intrusive methods might be of some value, but to verify destruction of existing stockpiles on-site inspection would be needed.

Japan submitted a working paper in which it suggested toxicity as a primary criterion for delimiting prohibited chemical warfare agents, the lethal-dose concept serving as a reliable index suitable to be applied for any chemical substance.

The United States said that a complete prohibition of chemical weapons could not be realized in a single comprehensive agreement in the absence of means to verify clandestine stockpiles. Therefore, it supported a phased approach, such as had been suggested by Canada in 1974, in which the first-stage agreement might involve a ban on the production of all lethal chemical weapons and the destruction of stocks of such weapons over a specified period. It considered that verification was the principal problem in the way of reaching agreement, and therefore efforts should be made to achieve a fuller understanding of the issues involved, particularly of those techniques that might contribute significantly to a reliable verification system. Both inspection by challenge and mandatory inspection should be considered. The United States believed that it would be possible to devise verification procedures capable of confirming that the type and quantity of agents being destroyed had been correctly represented without revealing military or industrial secrets.

The USSR noted that it continued to advocate complete and general prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons and the destruction of stockpiles, as laid down in the draft convention submitted by the USSR and other Eastern European members of CCD in 1972. Most CCD members were in favour of a total prohibition, the USSR said, but it recognized the possibility of a step-by-step approach, which it was ready to accept in order to promote the earliest possible attainment of the goal of banning chemical weapons. As a first step, the most dangerous and lethal means of chemical warfare would be banned. The USSR was also prepared to continue co-operating with the United States on a joint initiative in that regard. The position of the USSR was supported by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia and Poland.

Towards the close of the session, the USSR expressed the view that differences of opinion in the Committee had narrowed, in particular on the scope of a ban, on the definition of the chemical agents to be covered and on the need to adopt the purpose criterion, supplemented by the criterion of toxicity.

Views of CCD members on verification ranged from insistence upon the need for on-site inspection, at least under certain circumstances, through acceptance of selective procedures, such as verification of reduction of stockpiles and technical-exchange visits to certain production facilities, to the view that a combination of national means of control supplemented by international procedures would provide a realistic, suitable and acceptable solution. The USSR, which held the latter view, referred to current research into the possibility of using national, instrumental methods of monitoring compliance at long range.

Iran, while supporting the United States position as to an initial ban on all lethal and other highly toxic agents, observed that such a ban could lead to complicated questions of definition and verification in respect of dual-purpose agents. It suggested seeking agreement on the most effective and least intrusive means of verification before attempting the search for a verification organ that would reconcile the need for international supervision with the need to protect national industrial interests.

On 12 August 1976, the United Kingdom submitted a draft convention which, it noted, incorporated suggestions put forward by seven members—Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania and the USSR (along with the Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR which were not members of CCD)—in their 1972 draft convention,<sup>6</sup> ideas from the 1973 working paper tabled by 10 CCD members (Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Egypt, Ethiopia, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Sweden and Yugoslavia),<sup>7</sup> the 1974 Japanese draft convention<sup>8</sup> and a Canadian suggestion for a comprehensive convention encompassing all chemical warfare agents, while destruction of stocks should be gradual, subject to consultation.

By article I each State party would undertake never to develop, produce or otherwise acquire or use: lethal chemical agents and other toxic agents (of a nature and intended primarily to cause long-term physiological harm to human beings), of types and in quantities that had no justification for productive or other peaceful purposes; munitions, equipment or systems designed to deliver such agents for hostile purposes or in armed conflict.

By article II, each signatory or acceding State would undertake: to declare whether or not it was in possession of the agents and equipment specified in article I; to supply information about the types and quantities of those agents in its possession; to supply information regarding production facilities capable of producing those agents and equipment, regarding the types and quantities of those agents produced for protective or peaceful purposes, the locations of the factories producing them—and thereafter to render such information annually—and information as to which national authority was charged with collecting the required information and ensuring that public and private agents complied with the convention. Further, by article II the declarations and information called for would be communicated to the depositary until the consultative committee was established in accordance with article VIII and thereafter to that committee.

By the terms of article III each signatory or acceding State would undertake: to close down, dismantle or convert to peaceful purposes any factories producing the banned agents; not to convert from production for peaceful purposes any of the factories on that list; not to construct any new factories for production of banned agents; and to close down, dismantle or convert to peaceful purposes factories producing the munitions, equipment or systems specified in article I.

Article IV provided that the undertakings accepted by the signatories would cease to apply if the convention did not enter into force within [a period to be specified].

Article V provided that each State party would take any necessary measures to prohibit and prevent development, production, stockpiling, acquisition or retention of the banned agents and munitions, equipment and systems within its territory or under its control anywhere.

By article VI, each State party would undertake not to transfer to any recipient directly or indirectly, and not to assist, encourage or induce any State or group of States or international organization to manufacture or acquire any of the banned agents or equipment.

Article VII provided that each State party would undertake to destroy the banned agents or convert them to peaceful purposes under international observation according to a phased programme agreed upon by the consultative committee. Munitions, equipment or systems would be converted to conventional use or destroyed.

Article VIII provided for the establishment of a consultative committee from among the States parties to oversee the working of the convention. The functions of the committee would include: analysing and evaluating information submitted by each State party; calling for such supplementary information as was considered necessary; requesting information and conducting inquiries if asked to do so by a State party; verifying destruction of stockpiles and conducting other inspections; reporting to all States parties following verification procedures; and co-operating with national authorities.

Each State party, by the terms of article IX, would undertake to accept: inspection within six months of the entry into force of the convention by persons appointed by the consultative committee of any factory formerly producing banned agents, to ensure that it had ceased such production; the employment and periodic inspection of tamper-indicating seals on doors and other designated locations of former military chemical-agent factories not demolished or converted to conventional uses; a number [to be specified] of on-site inspections each year, by persons appointed by the consultative committee, of chemical factories selected from those listed under article II to make sure they were not producing banned agents; in the case of States possessing agents, munitions, equipment and systems specified in article I, inspection by persons appointed by the consultative committee who would be given such access to the destruction process as the committee agreed was necessary for verification.

By article X, States parties undertook to consult one another directly or through the consultative committee and to co-operate in solving any problems that might arise in relation to the objective of, or in the application of, the provisions of the convention. Any State party suspecting a breach of convention obligations might request an explanation, directly or through the consultative committee, and might also call for a special investigation which might involve on-site inspection. Each State party would agree to accept such on-site inspection as the consultative committee might consider necessary.

Article XI would provide that nothing in the convention was to be interpreted as limiting or detracting from the obligations assumed by any State under the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, or under the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, opened for signature on 10 April 1972.<sup>9</sup>

By article XII, each State party would undertake to facilitate and would have the right to participate in the exchange of equipment, materials and information for the use of chemical agents for peaceful purposes. They would also co-operate in developing and applying scientific discoveries in the field of chemistry for peaceful purposes and for therapy against chemical agents.

Articles XIII through XVII dealt with procedures for amendment, for a review conference, for the duration of the convention, the right of withdrawal, notification of entry into force and depositary arrangements.

The United Kingdom said the draft convention was comprehensive in the weapons prohibited, but phased in application. One innovation was that in the first stage States signing the convention would provide information on their stocks of chemical agents and on production facilities and would stop further production of chemical agents. The next stage would be ratification of the convention by an agreed minimum number of States; at that time further provisions would come into effect. The third and final stage, which might last a number of years, would require the phased destruction of stockpiles of chemical warfare agents or their conversion to peaceful uses. The United Kingdom also said that it considered important the inclusion of munitions under article I, as that might help to overcome the problem of binary weapons, and it envisaged that there would be a protocol specifying in greater detail the banned agents. The provisions on verification, which called for on-site inspection, would undoubtedly need to be elaborated in a detailed protocol.

At the final meeting of CCD in 1976, the representatives of the USSR and the United States announced that useful bilateral consultations had taken place between their two Governments on a possible joint initiative in CCD concerning the conclusion of an international convention relating to the most dangerous and lethal means of chemical warfare, as a first step towards the complete and effective prohibition of chemical weapons; these consultations were to continue at a future date.

Environmental modification

As requested by the General Assembly, CCD continued in 1976 to negotiate for an early agreement on the prohibition of environmental warfare. The USSR and the United States, sponsors of identical drafts of a convention,<sup>10</sup> urged that every effort be made to reach an agreement in the course of that session. The USSR emphasized that the Assembly expected to have a widely acceptable draft submitted to it. The United States noted that the major issues had been identified. Though some formulations in the draft might not be perfect, the United States held that it constituted an effective and workable means for dealing with the problem of preventing environmental warfare and merited the support of the other CCD members. Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia and Poland also fully supported the draft convention and urged early agreement on it with a minimum of change.

While supporting the concept of a ban on environmental warfare, other CCD members suggested modifications in the proposed convention. Among those changes were a proposal that a clearer distinction should be drawn between military and peaceful uses, that the ban should be total, not limited to techniques having widespread, long-lasting or severe effects, that some international machinery should serve as a guarantee that objective verification procedures were available at the international level, and that a provision be added for a mechanism to review the operation of the convention.

An ad hoc working group to consider modifications to the identical texts of the draft convention was established by CCD. The Working Group on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques held 29 meetings between 2 July and 1 September 1976, attended by all CCD members present at the 1976 session. Several modifications were agreed upon. Among these were an understanding relating to article I interpreting for the purposes of the convention the terms "widespread," "long-lasting" and "severe." A list of phenomena that could be caused by environmental modification techniques became part of an understanding relating to article II; the understanding noted that the list was not exhaustive and stated that all phenomena meeting the criteria of article I would be prohibited.

To article III were added a provision that the terms of the convention were to be without prejudice to generally recognized principles and applicable rules of international law, and a reference to economic and scientific co-operation concerning the environment and the needs of the developing countries; an understanding noted that the convention did not deal with the question of whether or not the use of modification techniques for peaceful purposes was in accordance with generally recognized principles and applicable rules of international law.

Also added to the draft convention was a provision concerning the convening of review conferences.

The Working Group could not agree on other proposed modifications and reported on the dissenting views of some members.

Argentina and Mexico, for instance, continued to hold the view that the qualifying phrase "having widespread, long-lasting or severe effects" referring to the modification techniques cited in article I might legitimize many acts of environmental warfare. In the view of the USSR, the choice of those words was due above all to the fact that those were the types of effects which presented the main danger and, therefore, constituted the crux of the problem under discussion. The United States added that the low threshold of applicability of the prohibition in article I raised a strong practical inhibition against any hostile use of techniques having, or expected to have, effects anywhere near the threshold criteria.

As consensus on the draft convention was not possible, CCD transmitted to the General Assembly, as an annex to its report, the report of the Working Group containing the text of the draft convention (see page 42), as well as comments, dissenting views and reservations thereon.

Banning new weapons of mass destruction

Also discussed during the 1976 CCD session was the question of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction. On 11 December 1975, the General Assembly had asked CCD to work out as soon as possible the text of an agreement on this question and to report thereon in 1976. The Assembly had transmitted to CCD the text of a draft agreement proposed by the USSR.<sup>11</sup> In April and August 1976, informal meetings were held on this matter with the participation of experts from Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Poland, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The USSR considered that the subject was urgent and expressed its readiness to take part in a detailed examination of the specific categories of weapons that should be covered by the ban. It held that if areas of development and manufacture of such weapons not covered by the agreement emerged later, the parties should conduct subsequent negotiations with a view to extending the prohibition to cover such new types and systems of weapons. This view was supported by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Iran, Mongolia, Poland and Yugoslavia. Bulgaria observed that while disarmament negotiations had theretofore focused on quantitative limitations, there was general recognition that qualitative limitations were also necessary; the first task should be that of defining the types and systems of weapons to be included in the proposed ban in specific terms.

On 3 August, the USSR submitted a working paper containing a draft agreement and later it submitted a paper containing draft definitions. These definitions, the USSR said, had a universal character. Some of the types of weapons might already be covered by existing agreements or agreements then in course of preparation; that circumstance must be taken into account when formulating provisions on the scope of the prohibition embodied in the agreement.

The United States, noting the complexity of the USSR proposal, held that it remained conceptually elusive and felt that further efforts must be made to establish a clear and generally acceptable foundation, as well as to ensure a harmonious relationship with existing agreements and negotiations, particularly those relating to nuclear, chemical, biological and environmental warfare. The United States said that it had not come to a policy decision regarding a possible treaty of the type proposed by the USSR and that it would give the proposal careful attention.

The United Kingdom expressed the view that potential mass-destruction weapons either fell within existing categories of atomic, biological and chemical weapons or were thought to spring from branches of science that would require many years of research before there could be a real threat of the military use of such weapons. Current negotiations should not be complicated by the introduction of an overlapping category of new weapons of mass destruction. Further, the United Kingdom said, to ensure that such new weapons did not emerge through peaceful scientific research, the United Nations or CCD could consider new scientific developments as they arose.

Sweden stated that, on the basis of the 1948 definition of weapons of mass destruction by the United Nations Commission for Conventional Armaments, which had not been seriously challenged, two conclusions could be drawn with respect to the proposals of the USSR: (a) atomic, biological and chemical weapons were already considered to be mass-destruction weapons and should therefore not be covered by the proposal, as they were already covered by agreements in existence or being negotiated; and (b) future weapons with the destructive capability of such weapons should also be considered to be weapons of mass destruction.

the subject was increasing, some CCD members did not fully recognize the relevance of this important new proposal. Poland and Bulgaria could not agree with those experts who had advanced the theory that action to prohibit new weapons of mass destruction should be taken only when and if such new weapons were on the drawing-boards, since the primary objective of such action was to prevent such weapons ever reaching the drawing-board stage.

Other measures

A number of CCD members commented on such disarmament questions as the reduction of military budgets, European security and reduction of forces, and limitations on conventional arms and the arms trade.

The United Kingdom, noting that the report of the Group of Consultant Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets, submitted to the General Assembly in 1974,<sup>12</sup> was a useful basis for further study and discussion, said that the establishment of common criteria for measuring military expenditure and the publication by Governments of more detailed information on their budgets would be a useful contribution. It hoped that the countries of Eastern Europe would participate in the work of the second Group of Experts appointed by the Secretary-General which was currently seeking agreed solutions to the problem of definition and comparison of national defence budgets, particularly since the exercise on reduction of military budgets stemmed from an initiative of the USSR. The Federal Republic of Germany said it would have preferred that the 1976 Group of Experts had been convened under the auspices of CCD. Poland and the USSR emphasized the importance of reducing military budgets.

Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Poland called for the successful conclusion of the talks being held at Vienna on the reduction of armed forces and armaments in Central Europe. Bulgaria observed that in Europe implementation of the confidence-building measures adopted in 1975 at the conclusion of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (Helsinki Conference) had begun, i.e. prior notification of military manoeuvres, invitation of observers to such manoeuvres, etc.

The question of limitations on the transfer of conventional arms was raised by several members, including the United States and the United Kingdom. The United States expressed the view that the concept of developing regional agreements to constrain conventional arms had not received the serious attention it deserved. Constructive constraints on the international arms trade would, in the United States view, enhance the security of all countries and in the long run might permit resources to be shifted from defence to development. The Federal Republic of Germany considered that a regional approach to partial measures of disarmament would raise the level of security and confidence in those regions and free resources that were indispensable for development. Nigeria stated that it could not agree with the United States that the emphasis of CCD'S work should be shifted from the over-all problem of halting the nuclear arms race and of achieving general and complete disarmament to such questions as the arms trade.

WORLD DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

Several CCD members spoke on the question of a world disarmament conference at the 1976 session. Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR again stressed the importance of holding such a conference, while Iran and Yugoslavia also indicated support of the idea.

Italy and the United Kingdom reiterated their support for a world disarmament conference provided that it was well prepared and that all nuclear-weapon powers participated in it.

MID-TERM REVIEW OF THE DISARMAMENT DECADE

A number of meetings were given to a discussion of the mid-term review of the Disarmament Decade (the 1970s) during CCD'S 1976 session. The arms-control agreements achieved during the first half of the Disarmament Decade were welcomed but members also expressed concern over the lack of tangible progress in halting the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, and in achieving nuclear disarmament.

Nigeria again stated its concern over the lack of disarmament progress in CCD and said that the continued and accelerating diversion of resources to armaments, particularly to nuclear arms, was contrary to the spirit and programme of the Decade. Nigeria considered that the Committee had not addressed itself sufficiently to duties incumbent upon it under the General Assembly's resolution proclaiming the Disarmament Decade<sup>13</sup> and that it should give immediate and consistent attention to the primary objective of the Decade, namely, to halt the arms race and to adopt concrete measures of disarmament. In so doing, the Committee should, inter alia, adopt a comprehensive programme of specific negotiations, beginning with a comprehensive nuclear-weapon test ban and the prohibition of chemical weapons and with established priorities for negotiating other measures. Nigeria also submitted a working paper on conclusions of the mid-term review of the Disarmament Decade, which would have CCD express concern at the meagre achievements of the Decade and decide to work out a comprehensive programme at its 1977 session. Romania and Yugoslavia endorsed the Nigerian suggestion for adoption of a programme of priority tasks. The Federal Republic of Germany commented that, in considering the priority of disarmament measures, it was also necessary to consider their feasibility.

Romania said that the first five years of the Disarmament Decade had not yet yielded the expected disarmament results and, disturbingly, during that period the arms race had continued to grow and accelerate. It urged CCD to renew its efforts in implementing the task entrusted to it by the General Assembly on 11 December 1975 when it called for a review of progress during the Decade,<sup>14</sup> and to this end to elaborate a comprehensive programme of action for general and complete disarmament under effective international control. Romania again stressed the need for a treaty on general and complete disarmament elaborated with the participation of all States on an equal basis.

Sweden urged the Committee to contribute to making the link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade truly meaningful and, in so doing, to maintain contact with the Committee for Development Planning, which was preparing a report on disarmament and development and had recently concluded that the single most significant obstacle to development efforts was the unjustifiably high world-wide military expenditure and allocation of scarce technical manpower to military activities.

Italy reaffirmed its support for a comprehensive disarmament programme and for any proposal which might help the cause of disarmament.

The United States said that it was committed to general and complete disarmament under effective international control and that to achieve that goal the Committee must not take an all-or-nothing approach without regard to world realities, but should build on each achievement by seeking a solution to other questions ready for concrete action. The solution to nuclear disarmament, the United States went on to say, must be sought in a context of world security but must also encompass conventional disarmament, a subject to which the Committee should pay more attention. Consideration of items that were ready for action would result in greater progress than could be achieved by seeking to set time-tables, priorities and a more rigid organization of work. Similar views were expressed by the United Kingdom.

India said it recognized that the international disarmament agreements negotiated or being negotiated in CCD were not insignificant, but nevertheless the Committee must not lose sight of the fact that its task of highest priority was to negotiate treaties and conventions relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race and to nuclear disarmament.

Poland was of the opinion that it was not realistic to expect all disarmament-related problems to be overcome by the end of the Disarmament Decade and that, while there were some grounds for dissatisfaction, the progress achieved must not be ignored. A step-by-step approach was the only practical and effective way to reach the desired goal. The USSR proposal for the reduction of military budgets would be the best way of achieving the goal and demonstrating in a tangible way the close link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade.

In the USSR's view, the results achieved in the first half of the Disarmament Decade were substantial, but not altogether satisfactory. It noted that the arms race, although limited in certain specific aspects, was still continuing and that both developed and developing countries were becoming involved in it, thus diverting vast resources from their peaceful and constructive development programmes. The approach of the USSR was that while not losing sight of the main goal—general and complete disarmament—it would tirelessly look for directions and areas in which, on the basis of joint efforts by States, early and concrete results could be achieved.

Japan said that progress during the first half of the Disarmament Decade had not adequately reflected the expectations held at the time the Decade was declared, particularly with regard to nuclear disarmament, including a comprehensive nuclear-weapon test ban, and to the prohibition of chemical weapons. During the remaining period of the Decade, Japan suggested, the Committee should, in addition to completing its work on a convention banning environmental warfare, achieve a ban on chemical weapons and a comprehensive test ban and, as a preliminary step to the latter, reduce the threshold in the bilateral USSR-United States threshold test-ban agreement and expand it into a multilateral agreement.

Bulgaria expressed the belief that the process of detente was creating favourable conditions for consolidating progress in the field of disarmament.

The Federal Republic of Germany held, with particular regard to disarmament and development, that progress should be sought in each field independently of the other.

Mexico commented that the ever-spiralling arms race was incompatible with efforts to establish a new international economic order.

On 2 September 1976, CCD, taking into account the Nigerian recommendation made in its working paper, decided to consider during its 1977 session the question of a comprehensive programme dealing with all aspects of the problem of the cessation of the arms race and general and complete disarmament under effective international control, in accordance with the General Assembly's resolution of 16 December 1969 proclaiming the Disarmament Decade.

General and complete disarmament

The question of general and complete disarmament continued to be recognized by CCD members as the ultimate goal of disarmament. Most members commented on it in the context of a world disarmament conference or the Disarmament Decade.

The USSR drew attention to the 1976 report of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, which emphasized the importance of eliminating the dangers inherent in the arms race, with the ultimate goal of general and complete disarmament, and which set forth a number of specific problems requiring solution in that general context. Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic stressed their support for the same report, while Czechoslovakia pointed out that its Communist Party had also stressed the need for disarmament and expressed its support for recommendations on the subject put forth by the 1976 Conference of the Communist and Workers' Parties and by the World Peace Council.

Organization of the Committee's work

The question of the organization of the Committee's work and participation in it was taken up early in the 1976 session. A group of 15 members proposed that CCD: set up a permanent sub-committee; request the Secretariat to prepare the first draft of the Committee's annual report; and include in the communiqués issued after each plenary meeting a brief factual summary of the substance of the discussions at that meeting.

Sweden expressed the view that a change in the system of co-chairmanship of the Committee was long overdue and suggested the creation of a bureau of four members, two from the Western and Eastern European groups of countries and two from the so-called non-aligned countries, with annual rotation of the chairmanship. Nigeria urged that CCD adopt a more specific agenda and forge a more formal link with the General Assembly.

Mexico, Nigeria, Romania, Sweden and Yugoslavia criticized the traditional procedures of the Committee and urged changes therein in order to achieve more positive results, while Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Iran, Poland, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed doubts that procedural changes could facilitate substantive progress in the Committee. The United States questioned the utility of dealing with procedural matters on a piecemeal basis and suggested a comprehensive review of such matters, with codification of the resulting decisions in a single set of rules. The United States felt it should not be forgotten that the Committee was unique in its substantive functions as a disarmament negotiating body. It urged care, therefore, to avoid detracting from the Committee's usefulness by seeking to make it conform with some abstract model of an international committee. Sweden and Romania supported the suggestion for a comprehensive review of procedures and, on 3 September, the Committee decided to discuss the question in informal meetings at the outset of its 1977 session.

The Committee also decided that its 1976 report should be prepared by the Secretariat, and should contain all significant views expressed by members, as well as their analyses of the issues discussed; that an ad hoc working group open to all members should be established, with a rotating chairmanship, to consider any changes in the identical texts of a draft convention on the prohibition of hostile use of environmental modification techniques, submitted by the USSR and the United States (see above) and to facilitate negotiation of an agreed text of the convention; that CCD communiqués should reflect more substantially the proceedings of the plenary meetings; and that CCD should, at the beginning of its 1977 session, determine appropriate arrangements for considering the issues before it.

Welcoming these decisions, Nigeria and Romania urged that the next step should be an agreed comprehensive programme of measures to be negotiated in order to achieve the final objective of general and complete disarmament.

Mexico expressed satisfaction that the Committee had accepted the concept of a sub-committee, even though it had been designated as a working group, but considered it unfortunate that the Committee had failed to make significant modifications in its procedures and felt that the lack of the political will to agree on true disarmament measures had again been demonstrated on the part of the two major nuclear powers.

In the view of the USSR, the results of the Committee's work in 1976 constituted fresh proof of the adequacy and effectiveness of its working procedures. The USSR noted that many States had supported the Committee as the most appropriate and best-qualified forum for multilateral disarmament negotiations.

With regard to participation in the Committee, Japan expressed the hope that China and France might soon join CCD. Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR also stressed the need for all nuclear-weapon States to participate in disarmament negotiations. Though it also regretted the absence of two nuclear powers in the Committee, Yugoslavia urged that decisions not be held up pending such participation.

Consideration of disarmament questions by the General Assembly

The disarmament debate at the thirty-first (1976) session of the General Assembly covered a broad range of topics. The Assembly had 18 disarmament items on its agenda; 21 resolutions concerning them were adopted. Two of these items were on the disarmament agenda for the first time. These were the questions of implementing the conclusions of the 1975 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, proposed by Sweden, and strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, placed on the agenda by a 1975 Assembly decision.

The remainder of the questions discussed were also on the agenda by virtue of Assembly decisions taken in earlier years. With regard to nuclear disarmament measures, the Assembly discussed and adopted resolutions on the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests, strengthening of the safeguards régime of the International Atomic Energy Agency, nuclear-weapon-free zones, the security of non-nuclear-weapon States and the bilateral (USSR/United States) strategic arms limitation talks. In connexion with the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones, the Assembly considered the comprehensive study on such zones and renewed attention to four areas: Latin America, Africa, the Middle East and South Asia.

As for non-nuclear disarmament measures, the Assembly again considered and took decisions on the questions of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, biological and chemical weapons, napalm and incendiary weapons, new weapons of mass destruction and the reduction of military budgets.

The Assembly had before it a draft convention on the prohibition of military or hostile use of environmental modification techniques, submitted by the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD). Following an intensive debate, the Assembly referred the convention to all States for signature and ratification.

The Assembly also discussed the implementation of the objectives of the Disarmament Decade and called for further efforts to support the link between disarmament and development. It continued to consider the question of holding a world disarmament conference and it decided to convene a special session devoted to disarmament in May/June 1978. In another action, the Assembly endorsed a strengthened role for the United Nations in the field of disarmament, reflected in its establishment of the United Nations Centre for Disarmament.

The Assembly's First Committee held a general debate on the 18 items together and then proceeded to take up separately the draft resolutions on each item. These deliberations took place at meetings held between 1 November and 3 December. The discussions and the decisions taken are described in the sections that follow.

Questions relating to nuclear weapons

Prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests

At the 1976 session of the General Assembly, the question of the cessation of nuclear-weapon tests appeared under two separate items—one entitled "Urgent need for cessation of nuclear and thermonuclear tests and conclusion of a treaty designed to achieve a comprehensive test ban: report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD)" concerning the negotiation of such a ban in CCD, and the other entitled "Conclusion of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests" concerning negotiation of a treaty by a special negotiating group as called for by the General Assembly on 11 December 1975.<sup>15</sup>

Before the Assembly, which discussed this matter in its First Committee, were: a report by CCD on its discussions of a comprehensive test ban in 1976 (see pp. 5-6); the text of the Treaty between the

United States and the USSR on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, signed on 28 May 1976, as transmitted by those two States; a memorandum from the USSR on questions of ending the arms race and disarmament; a letter from Nigeria transmitting a request to the Secretary-General from 25 non-nuclear-weapon States asking that he convene a meeting of nuclear-weapon States and the 25 non-nuclear-weapon States nominated to take part in the negotiation of a treaty to prohibit nuclear-weapon tests, in order to discuss the modalities of the negotiations.

Also before the Assembly was a report by the Secretary-General advising it that the negotiations on a comprehensive test ban envisaged in the Assembly's resolution of 11 December 1975 had not taken place as only one nuclear-weapon State—the USSR—had agreed to participate; 26 non-nuclear-weapon States had indicated willingness to participate—Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nigeria, Peru, Poland, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zaire.

In addition, the Assembly had before it a revised text of a draft treaty on a comprehensive test ban, submitted by the USSR.

During a combined debate on these items, speakers urged, or recognized the need for, an early cessation of all nuclear testing, but opinions continued to differ on how the aim could be accomplished. Among the issues on which views differed was the question of verification (on-site inspection versus verification by national technical means), the question of whether all nuclear-weapon States would have to be parties to such an agreement, or even participate in its negotiation, and the question of how nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes would be carried out under a comprehensive test ban.

In connexion with verification, the USSR indicated in its memorandum on disarmament that it saw no particular difficulties in elaborating a compromise basis for a test-ban agreement that would ensure a voluntary framework for taking decisions relating to on-site ascertainment of relevant circumstances. Subsequently, it stated that it was ready to discuss the means and methods of on-site inspection in a voluntary framework, and that it was ready to agree to a compromise based on a provision for voluntary on-site inspection. Further, the USSR expressed the view that the reliable verification system agreed to in the bilateral (USSR/United States) treaties limiting underground nuclear-weapon tests (the 1974 threshold test-ban agreement providing for a ban on nuclear-weapon tests above a yield of 150 kilotons by early 1976) and peaceful nuclear explosions (signed in May 1976) could be used to solve similar problems with regard to a general and complete test ban.

The USSR also submitted a revision of the text of the draft treaty on the subject that it had submitted to the General Assembly in 1975,<sup>16</sup> to conform with the new approach. This revision involved the addition of a new paragraph in article II of the original text which provided that, in case a State party had doubts regarding the nature of a seismic event that occurred in the territory of another State party, it had the right to raise the question of carrying out an on-site inspection in order to ascertain the true nature of the event. It must cite appropriate grounds to support the necessity of the inspection. The party which was the object of doubts might take a favourable position regarding the carrying out of an inspection in its territory provided it found the grounds convincing, or it might take another decision. Such an inspection would be carried out according to rules established by the inviting State party.

These proposals by the USSR were welcomed by many Members, including the United States, which favoured on-site inspections. A number of countries, including Kuwait, Mexico, Morocco and the Philippines, continued to hold the view that on-site inspections were unnecessary.

Finland, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Mongolia, Turkey and the United Kingdom were among those which described the bilateral threshold-test-ban and peaceful-nuclear-explosion agreements as a step towards a comprehensive test ban. Several other Members, including Cyprus, Denmark, Japan, Norway and Sweden, advocated use of those agreements as the basis for a phased reduction of test ceilings (lowering the threshold) to achieve a comprehensive test ban.

Australia, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iran, Ireland, Japan, New Zealand, Pakistan and Sweden expressed the view that negotiation of a comprehensive test ban did not require the participation of all nuclear-weapon States, at least initially, and that the adherence of all such States to an agreement in the matter was not necessary before the entry into force of the agreement. In Australia's view the question of the participation of all nuclear-weapon States, rather than verification, had become the major obstacle to agreement on a comprehensive test ban.

In that general connexion, Australia, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, New Zealand and Sweden contended that CCD was the best available and most suitable forum for the negotiation of a comprehensive test ban.

With regard to the problem of regulating nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes, the debate revealed the belief of a number of States that the question should be solved in the context of any test-ban that might be achieved. Among those supporting this view were Denmark, Iran, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States. Norway expressed doubts as to the practical utility of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes and, considering the danger of nuclear proliferation, proposed a moratorium on them.

On other points related to the question, the United States, the United Kingdom and others expressed support for the work of the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, set up by CCD on the initiative of Sweden, and urged broader participation in it.

During the Assembly session, Australia, Belgium, Fiji, Japan, Mongolia, Peru, the Philippines and New Zealand objected to the continuation of nuclear-weapon tests in the atmosphere.

China commented that it would be willing to cease all nuclear-weapon testing if the two major nuclear powers completely destroyed all their nuclear weapons. A mere cessation of such tests would not keep those two powers from continuing to increase their arsenals of such weapons, nor would it prevent a nuclear war, China added.

Two draft resolutions were submitted on this subject. One, sponsored by Afghanistan, Australia, Austria, Colombia, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, Ireland, Mexico, Nepal, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Sweden, the United Republic of Cameroon and Venezuela, was adopted by the Assembly as resolution 31/66. By the preamble to resolution 31/66, the Assembly, among other things, expressed grave concern at the continuation of atmospheric and underground nuclear-weapon testing in the previous year, noted the information concerning agreements concluded by two nuclear-weapon States limiting the scope of underground tests and making provision for the control and supervision of peaceful nuclear explosions, including in certain cases arrangements for on-site verification, and observed that conditions were favourable for those two nuclear-weapon States to step up their efforts to reach agreement on the means of verifying a comprehensive test-ban agreement.

By the operative provisions, the Assembly: (1) condemned all nuclear-weapon tests in whatever environment they might be conducted; (2) declared its profound concern that substantive negotiations towards a comprehensive test ban had not begun; (3) again called upon all nuclear-weapon States to suspend the testing of nuclear weapons by agreement, subject to review after a specified period, as an interim step towards the conclusion of a formal test ban; (4) emphasized the particular responsibility in this regard of the nuclear-weapon States that were parties to international agreements in which they had declared their intention to achieve the cessation of the nuclear arms race at the earliest possible date; (5) called upon States not parties to it to adhere forthwith to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (the 1963 partial test-ban Treaty); (6) urged CCD to continue to give the highest priority to conclusion of a comprehensive test-ban agreement; and (7) decided to consider the matter again at its 1977 session.

Resolution 31/66 was adopted on 10 December 1976 by a recorded vote of 105 to 2, with 27 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 29 November by a roll-call vote of 101 to 2, with 23 abstentions. The First Committee voted separately on the first operative paragraph, by which the Assembly condemned all nuclear-weapon tests, approving it by a roll-call vote of 82 to 5, with 38 abstentions. (For text of resolution and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Speaking in explanation of vote, the USSR said that the resolution did not represent the fundamental solution to the testing problem which it was seeking. It specifically protested that the resolution included the USSR among those responsible for continuing tests, putting it on the same footing as those which refused to participate in negotiations for a test ban. Further, the USSR could not agree that it bore responsibility for the lack of progress on a comprehensive test ban.

Czechoslovakia held that the resolution did not provide feasible measures for the achievement of a comprehensive test ban and did not sufficiently reflect the need for consensus on the part of all nuclear powers.

The United States said it had abstained on the same grounds that had led it to abstain on the similar resolution adopted the year before, namely, that the resolution ignored or minimized the problems that must be solved if the objective was to be attained. Those problems included effective verification procedures with respect to nuclear-weapon tests and nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes, protecting against clandestine tests, and military benefits from peaceful nuclear explosions.

Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands expressed regret that the resolution contained no reference to the work of the CCD group of scientific experts on seismic events; the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands noted that it gave no attention to the unsolved question of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes and the Netherlands also held that it gave insufficient attention to the verification question.

The second draft resolution presented to the First Committee on this matter was sponsored by the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Jordan, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR. It was adopted by the Assembly as its resolution 31/89 on 14 December 1976, by a recorded vote of 95 to 2, with 36 abstentions.

By the preamble to resolution 31/89, the Assembly recalled that on 11 December 1975 it had called upon all nuclear-weapon States to enter into negotiations not later than 31 March 1976, with a view to reaching agreement on a comprehensive test ban, with 25 to 30 non-nuclear-weapon States participating; it deplored the fact that such negotiations had not begun. Among other things, it then noted that during the current session proposals had been made with a view to finding a compromise basis for a generally acceptable understanding regarding the supervision of compliance with such a test ban, and it expressed the view that the conclusion of the treaties between the USSR and the United States on limiting underground nuclear-weapon tests and on underground nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes had contributed to the creation of favourable conditions for the cessation of all tests. The Assembly also noted that 26 non-nuclear-weapon States were ready to participate in the negotiations for a comprehensive test ban.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly again called upon all nuclear-weapon States to proceed as soon as possible with negotiations on the test-ban treaty with the participation of non-nuclear-weapon States. It asked the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance to the group and decided to consider the matter again at its 1977 session.

The Assembly acted on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved the text on 29 November by a roll-call vote of 82 to 2, with 37 abstentions. (For text of resolution and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Speaking in explanation of vote, a number of the countries which abstained made the following points, among others: that the resolution did not recognize the value of CCD as a forum for negotiating an agreement on a test ban (Australia, Canada, Ireland, Italy, Sweden and the United States); that it implied a general test ban could be negotiated only with the participation of all nuclear-weapon States, including those which did not appear to be interested in such a ban, and that it must be ratified by all of them before entering into effect (Australia, Canada, Ireland, Japan and the Netherlands); that it failed to indicate the need for adequate verification of the ban (Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States); that it failed to deal with the problem of peaceful nuclear explosions (Ireland, the United Kingdom and the United States); and that it did not provide for the suspension of all nuclear-weapon testing while the proposed negotiations were in progress (Australia).

Matters relating to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons

Following its discussion on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, the General Assembly, at its 1976 session, adopted two resolutions on the matter. The first—resolution 31/75—was concerned with implementation of the conclusions of the first Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.<sup>17</sup> The second resolution—31/189 D—was concerned with strengthening the safeguards system of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

By the operative provisions of resolution 31/75, the Assembly, inter alia, called urgently for determined efforts by all nuclear-weapon States to bring about the cessation of the nuclear arms race, to undertake effective measures in the direction of nuclear disarmament, and to find an early solution to the difficulties in reaching agreement to discontinue all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time as a step towards the realization of those objectives.

It emphasized the particular responsibility of the two major nuclear-weapon States in that regard and stressed the urgency of international co-operative efforts in appropriate fora to prevent the further proliferation of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices. In addition, the Assembly recognized that States accepting effective non-proliferation restraints had a right to full access to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and it underlined the importance of all efforts to increase the availability of energy, particularly for the needs of the developing countries of the world.

The Assembly asked IAEA to accord high priority to its programme of work in those areas and it decided to discuss at its regular 1978 session an item entitled "Implementation of the conclusions of the first Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and establishment of a preparatory committee for the second Conference."

Resolution 31/75 was sponsored by Austria, Denmark, Ecuador, Iceland, Nigeria, Norway and Sweden. It was adopted on 10 December 1976, by a recorded vote of 115 to 2, with 19 abstentions, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved the text on 3 December by a recorded vote of 99 to 1, with 17 abstentions. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Sweden, commenting on the resolution, expressed the view that the danger of further proliferation of nuclear weapons continued to be the most urgent problem in the disarmament field. It believed that the first Review Conference had not been able to halt trends that might lead to further proliferation of nuclear weapons; the second Review Conference in 1980 would be looked upon by most States, whether parties to the non-proliferation Treaty or not, as a moment of truth for the credibility of the non-proliferation régime. If today, Sweden said, eight years after its conclusion, the non-proliferation Treaty was still not universally adhered to and its efficiency was called into question, that was to a considerable extent due to the fact that the nuclear-weapon States which were parties to it were still reluctant to accept the full consequences of their accession to it. They must give concrete evidence that they took seriously their obligations to pursue negotiations on effective measures of disarmament.

Sweden emphasized the strong support of the sponsors of the resolution for the non-proliferation Treaty as the best currently available instrument for the promotion of the idea of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. In their view, the main task of the General Assembly was to give the strongest possible support to the overriding objective of non-proliferation.

The USSR observed, in connexion with the provision of the resolution which emphasized the particular responsibility of the two major nuclear-weapon States in regard to the problem of nuclear disarmament, that a solution to that problem could only be brought about if all nuclear-weapon States were involved in it. Poland said it would have preferred a text that placed responsibility evenly on all the nuclear-weapon powers for the cessation of the nuclear arms race and it would have preferred if the appeal for universal adherence to the non-proliferation Treaty had been incorporated as an operative rather than a preambular provision. Ireland also would have liked the Assembly to call for additional accessions to the non-proliferation Treaty.

India said it could not support the resolution, given its position of opposition to the non-proliferation Treaty as a discriminatory instrument. Further, India said, the resolution referred to nuclear explosive devices and thus did not make a distinction between nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes and the testing or manufacture of nuclear weapons.

Pakistan objected to what it considered ambiguities in the text, citing among other things the term "non-proliferation restraints."

France noted that it was not a signatory to the non-proliferation Treaty, had not participated in the Review Conference and thus had abstained in the vote.

Japan, Mexico, Nigeria and Yugoslavia had reservations on various other provisions of the resolution. Cyprus expressed the view that there should be no inhibition on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

The resolution concerning the safeguards system of IAEA was sponsored by Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway and adopted on 21 December 1976. By the operative part of this text, the General Assembly recognized that States accepting effective non-proliferation restraints had a right to enjoy fully the benefits of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and it underlined the importance of increased efforts in this field, particularly for the needs of the developing areas of the world.

The Assembly requested IAEA to give special attention to its programme of work in the non-proliferation area and to continue its studies on the questions of multinational fuel-cycle centres and an international régime for plutonium storage as effective means to promote the interests of the non-proliferation régime. It also asked IAEA to give careful consideration to all relevant suggestions aimed at strengthening the safeguards régime.

Resolution 31/189 D was adopted by a recorded vote of 106 to 2, with 22 abstentions. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved the text on 3 December by a recorded vote of 97 to 1, with 21 abstentions. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The sponsors pointed out, in connexion with the resolution, that they sought to stress the importance of preserving the essential achievements of the non-proliferation Treaty Review Conference as agreed by consensus in the Final Declaration<sup>18</sup> and to strengthen the non-proliferation régime by strengthening IAEA safeguards on a comprehensive basis. Finland referred to its suggestion that the proposal under study for common export requirements for nuclear materials be complemented by common import requirements, i.e. that parties to the non-proliferation Treaty could also consider committing themselves to import nuclear material or other equipment only from countries parties to the non-proliferation Treaty or those that had accepted fuel-cycle safeguards or had otherwise shown that they followed responsible nuclear export policies, including the application of IAEA safeguards.

India cited its opposition to the non-proliferation Treaty and noted that for this and other reasons it could not support the resolution. Argentina, Mexico, Romania and Yugoslavia considered, among other things, that the four-power resolution had been submitted too late in the Committee's deliberations to permit study of all its aspects and implications. In Zambia's view, the operative paragraph concerning the rights of States accepting non-proliferation restraints discriminated against States not parties to the non-proliferation Treaty; Zambia was not a party to that Treaty and thus abstained in the vote.

Australia said it would have liked to include in the resolution a reference to the important work being carried out by the IAEA Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes and the Standing Advisory Group on safeguards implementation; these were important aspects of the work of IAEA relating to non-proliferation.

Japan, noting that it had recently ratified the non-proliferation Treaty, attached particular importance to the right of States accepting effective non-proliferation restraints to enjoy fully the benefits of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. It considered that care should be taken to ensure that the right of parties to that Treaty to participate fully in the promotion of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy was not impaired in any respect.

Nigeria also emphasized the significance of the Assembly's recognition that States, particularly the developing countries, accepting effective non-proliferation restraints had the right to enjoy fully the benefits of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. Nigeria did not accept the thesis that the safeguards system should be used to qualify the right of States that had already decided not to acquire nuclear capability to gain full access to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

Trinidad and Tobago expressed the hope that the safeguards system of IAEA would be strengthened and that non-nuclear-weapon States that had accepted the principle of safeguards on all their peaceful nuclear activities would not one day find that such acceptance had locked them into a position of dependence on other States.

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly adopted five resolutions on the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones. These dealt with the comprehensive study of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in all its aspects, signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco), implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, and the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.

Study of nuclear-weapon-free zones

The discussion at the 1976 Assembly session of the comprehensive study undertaken in 1975 by the Ad Hoc Group of Qualified Governmental Experts for the Study of the Question of Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones<sup>19</sup> was based on a report prepared by the Secretary-General at the Assembly's request.<sup>20</sup>

This report contained views, observations and suggestions on the comprehensive study by 33 Governments, IAEA and other international organizations concerned. Governments submitting comments were: Austria, Belgium, Brazil, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Iran, Israel, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Mongolia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Romania, Spain, Surinam, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States. In general, the views expressed were similar to those set forth in the study itself and in the debate at the thirtieth (1975) session of the Assembly. Concern over the problem of security guarantees and the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes was again expressed. The United States reiterated the view that nuclear-weapon-free zone arrangements should not seek to impose restrictions on the exercise by extrazonal States of rights recognized under international law, particularly freedom of navigation of the high seas, in international air space and in straits used for international navigation.

On 10 December the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/70, by the operative part of which it took note of the report of the Secretary-General and conveyed that report and the comprehensive study to the Governments concerned, to interested international organizations and to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament for further consideration and measures they might deem appropriate. The Assembly also reiterated its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones could contribute to the security of the members of such zones, to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to general and complete disarmament.

Resolution 31/70 was adopted by a recorded vote of 132 to 0. The First Committee approved the text, which was sponsored by Finland, by a recorded vote of 114 to 0, with 1 abstention, on 1 December 1976. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Nuclear-weapon-free zone in Latin America

During the First Committee's discussion in 1976 of nuclear-weapon-free zones, several Members, including Ecuador and Uruguay, appealed again to the USSR to adhere to Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco).

Mexico, introducing a draft resolution on behalf of 23 Latin American and Caribbean States, recalled that the Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 3472 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, had defined the principal obligations of nuclear-weapon States towards nuclear-weapon-free zones and the States included therein.<sup>21</sup> Mexico said the resolution was intended to have the Assembly reaffirm its conviction that the co-operation of nuclear-weapon States was necessary for the greatest effectiveness of any treaty setting up a nuclear-weapon-free zone. By the operative part, the Assembly would again urge the USSR to sign and ratify Additional Protocol II and would decide to take up the matter again at its 1977 session.

On 1 December, the First Committee approved the draft resolution by 97 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. On 10 December the text was adopted by the Assembly as resolution 31/67 by a recorded vote of 119 to 0, with 14 abstentions. (For text of resolution, sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Speaking in explanation of vote, the USSR said that the Treaty of Tlatelolco had a number of shortcomings which seriously weakened its effectiveness. There was no ban in the Treaty on the carrying out by States parties of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes, nor a ban on the transit of nuclear weapons through their territory. The radius of action of the Treaty covered a broad expanse of the high seas, which was not in keeping with the universally acknowledged norms of international law.

Denuclearization of Africa

On 10 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/69, reaffirming its call upon all States to respect and abide by the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa and to respect that continent, including Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone.

By the preambular part of the resolution the Assembly took cognizance of the concern of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) over the continuing collaboration between certain Members and the racist régime of South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields, enabling it to acquire nuclear-weapon capability. The Assembly expressed concern that this would frustrate efforts to establish nuclear-weapon-free zones in Africa. By the operative part, the Assembly appealed to all States not to deliver to South Africa or place at its disposal any equipment, fissionable material or technology that would enable the racist régime to acquire nuclear-weapon capability. The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to OAU towards the realization of the Declaration.

The resolution, adopted without vote, was sponsored in the First Committee by 36 African States; the Committee approved the text by consensus on 2 December. (For text of resolution and list of sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Those who referred to the subject in the debate commented on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa within the broader context of the creation of such zones in various regions of the world. African States, for instance Nigeria, expressed particular concern over the continuing assistance that, they asserted, certain powers were giving to South Africa to achieve a nuclear capability. Sudan, referring to the danger to which that capability would expose Africa, said that the fear was not of nuclear technology per se, but rather that the technology might be used as a means of blackmail. As long as IAEA safeguards were not strictly complied with and adherence to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons was not universal, Africa's concern remained unabated.

Speaking after the First Committee vote, Nigeria, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom said they were not contributing and did not intend to contribute in any way to developing South Africa's nuclear-weapon potential.

Nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East

The question of establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East was discussed in the First Committee at the Assembly's 1976 session. A draft resolution sponsored by Bahrain, Egypt, Iran, Jordan, Kuwait, Mauritania, Sudan and the United Arab Emirates was approved by the Committee on 29 November 1976 by 121 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, and was adopted by the Assembly on 10 December as its resolution 31/71, by a recorded vote of 130 to 0, with 1 abstention.

By this resolution, the Assembly expressed the need for further action to generate momentum towards realization of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. It urged all parties directly concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons as a means of promoting this objective and repeated its previous recommendation that the parties concerned, pending the establishment of such a zone under an effective system of safeguards, should: proclaim their intention to refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons in their territory or the territory under their control by any third party; refrain from any action that would facilitate the acquisition or use of such weapons or would be detrimental to the objective of a nuclear-weapon-free zone; and agree to place all their nuclear activities under IAEA safeguards.

The Assembly also reaffirmed its recommendations to the nuclear-weapon States to refrain from any action contrary to the purpose of this resolution and to co-operate with the States of the region in promoting the objective of a nuclear-weapon-free zone. It then invited the Secretary-General to explore the possibilities of making progress towards the establishment of this zone and decided to take up the question again in 1977. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Both in the First Committee and at the plenary meeting, the two paragraphs by which the Assembly called for adherence to the non-proliferation Treaty and set forth recommendations to the parties of the area were voted on together by a separate vote. In the First Committee the paragraphs were adopted by 107 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions; in the plenary they were adopted by 117 votes to 0, with 13 abstentions.

During the debate, Egypt said that Israel was the only country in the area not to support the resolutions calling on the countries of the area to adhere to the non-proliferation Treaty and that Egypt was ready to ratify the Treaty as soon as Israel declared its adherence to it. Egypt called on Israel to adhere to the principle of non-proliferation, to commit itself unequivocally to abstain from producing or acquiring nuclear weapons, to cease to create and acquire sophisticated weapons and to subject all its nuclear activities to IAEA safeguards.

Iran was encouraged by the wide support given to the initiative for a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, which, it felt, indicated the shared concern about the danger nuclear weapons would pose in the region.

Israel expressed readiness to participate in negotiations on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East that would lead to a formal multilateral convention on the lines of such precedents as the Treaty of Tlatelolco, and to negotiate on the limitations to be imposed with regard to the transfer of arms in the region, but noted that the Arab countries had continued to refuse to take part in such consultations with it. Israel said it would abstain in the vote because the text did not call for consultations, which would be the only way to realize the objective.

The United States commented that it continued to support the objective of establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East under conditions that would assure its effectiveness, however it also continued to question the advisability of asking States to undertake commitments to establish a zone in the region in advance of actual negotiations.

Democratic Yemen, while welcoming the objective, thought that the violation of the security of small peoples, together with the arms race and the existence of foreign military bases, were factors making it impossible to implement a declaration of the Middle East as a nuclear-weapon-free zone.

Nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

On 10 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/73, by which it reaffirmed its endorsement in principle of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, once again urged the States of South Asia and neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States to continue efforts to establish such a zone and to refrain from any action contrary to that objective, and requested the Secretary-General to render such assistance as might be required to promote those efforts.

The text was adopted by a recorded vote of 91 to 2, with 43 abstentions, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved it on 29 November by a roll-call vote of 85 to 2, with 42 abstentions, as sponsored by Pakistan. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the debate, India reiterated its view that the States of the region must first agree themselves on the idea of creating a zone in an appropriate region of Asia before bringing the question to the United Nations. It said it would vote against the resolution, as the area, which was a subregion of the Asian and Pacific regions, was not suitable for a nuclear-weapon-free zone. It was surrounded by nuclear-weapon States or countries belonging to their alliances and thus could not be treated in isolation. Additionally, the General Assembly had decided in 1975<sup>22</sup> to consider the matter further only when the concept had developed and matured among the States concerned, which was not the case. India reaffirmed its intention to refrain from manufacturing nuclear weapons. It held, however, that consultations on the basis of the current or similar resolutions were not possible, as such concepts should not be given international endorsement prior to discussions within the region concerned.

Pakistan held there was broad agreement on the subject among States of the region; the most fundamental point of agreement was their common commitment not to acquire or develop nuclear weapons. It said that it had an open mind in respect of the considerations mentioned by India, including the questions of the extent of the region, military alliances, foreign bases and the need for wider and fuller consultations.

Support for the proposal was expressed by Thailand and the Philippines, while Bhutan said it was opposed because of lack of consultations and agreement in respect of the zone.

Several Members, including France, Hungary, Sweden and Yugoslavia, although they supported the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, announced abstentions, on the grounds of lack of agreement among the countries of the region.

Security of non-nuclear-weapon States

The question of strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States was raised by many Member States during the General Assembly's disarmament debates at the 1976 session.

On 21 December 1976, the Assembly adopted a six-power resolution (31/189 C) by which it requested the nuclear-weapon States, as a first step towards a complete ban on the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, to consider undertaking, without prejudice to their obligations arising from treaties establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones, not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States. The Assembly also decided to review at its 1977 session the progress made on the question of strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States.

Resolution 31/189 C was adopted by a recorded vote of 95 to 0, with 33 abstentions. The text was approved in the First Committee on 3 December by 88 votes to 0, with 35 abstentions, as sponsored by Iran, Kuwait, Morocco, Nicaragua, Pakistan and Panama. (For text of resolution and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Pakistan, speaking in support of the resolution, referred to the necessity of promoting the security of non-nuclear-weapon States and emphasized its importance, not only for those States, but also for the international community's effort to prevent nuclear proliferation and to achieve general and complete disarmament.

Sweden considered that the matter of security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States parties to the non-proliferation Treaty must be solved. It favoured a general pledge by the nuclear-weapon States parties not to use those weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States, and it felt members of military alliances might need another type of commitment.

The Netherlands also emphasized the need to strengthen the security of non-nuclear-weapon States, particularly those which had formally renounced the nuclear option. It suggested that nuclear-weapon States might wish to consider solutions to this matter other than that set forth in the resolution.

Nigeria expressed hope that the action taken by the General Assembly would prepare the ground for formal instruments that would secure for the non-nuclear-weapon States the guarantees they required to enable them to devote their energies to economic and social development.

Explaining its abstention in the vote, the United States said that it had sought through a variety of means to promote the security of non-nuclear-weapon States, but that it had not been able to accept proposals for universally applicable assurances on the non-use of nuclear weapons because it had not discovered any formulation that would effectively serve the varied security needs of such States. It reiterated that the United States stood ready to consider appropriate means of strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States, provided such means did not detrimentally affect existing security arrangements, but believed that the non-use formulation contained in the resolution did not fully meet that criterion.

Canada, too, felt it would be difficult to apply general assurances relating to the non-use of nuclear weapons, in view of the complexity of existing defence security arrangements.

France, which also abstained in the voting, noted that in specific circumstances the French Government would be prepared to give guarantees on the non-use of nuclear weapons, as it did when it signed Additional Protocol II to the Tlatelolco Treaty. However, the resolution addressed the problem of assurances given to non-nuclear-weapon States by nuclear-weapon States from a very general point of view, which was not in keeping with French views on matters of national defence.

Strategic arms limitation talks

The progress of the USSR-United States talks on strategic arms limitations, known as SALT, were discussed at the 1976 session of the General Assembly. The USSR told a plenary meeting of the Assembly that the importance of the talks far transcended the interests of the two countries. The parties were ready to continue their efforts to translate the well-known 1974 Vladivostok understanding into the text of an agreement.

Speaking in similar vein, the United States said that unprecedented agreements limiting and controlling nuclear weapons had been reached. A historic effort had been made to place a ceiling on the strategic arsenals of both sides in accordance with the Vladivostok accord. Once this was achieved, the parties were ready to seek immediately to lower the levels of strategic arms.

During the disarmament debates in the Assembly's First Committee, a number of Member States, including Australia, Finland, Hungary, Italy, Mongolia, Norway, Poland and Turkey, said they attached particular importance to the continuation of the negotiations, since success would, in their opinion, provide a fresh impetus in the field of disarmament.

Hungary considered that the USSR-United States talks were of exceptional importance and could have a considerable impact on reducing armaments and on improving the international climate and strengthening security throughout the world.

The Netherlands, too, attached much importance to the early conclusion of a second agreement (SALT II), which would provide a badly needed stimulus for world-wide nuclear-arms control measures. It considered that the General Assembly should appeal to the two powers to bring their negotiations to a speedy conclusion.

Turkey, which deemed the first agreement on strategic arms limitation (SALT I) to be an important turning-point in regard to limitations, agreed that the USSR and the United States should be urged to conclude the second agreement and thus open the way for further negotiations, no longer on limitations but on an effective reduction.

At the same time, other Members again expressed concern at the lack of greater progress in slowing down the nuclear arms race. Canada, Ireland, Madagascar and Somalia considered that the agreements achieved thus far, valuable as they had been, had not produced the hoped-for results. In Albania's view the SALT agreements were an attempt by the two super-powers to cover up their arms race and to deceive world opinion about their so-called disarmament efforts. Kuwait maintained that the SALT agreements had limited the quantitative size of the deterrent without imposing any restrictions on its quality. In this sense they had not brought about any change in the vital character of the arms race.

Several Members, for instance Ireland and Turkey, referred to the ultimate goal of the negotiations which, in their opinion, was an effective reduction of nuclear-weapon systems as well as qualitative restrictions, rather than quantitative limitations only. Mexico drew attention to the fact that the General Assembly had repeatedly expressed its conviction that all peoples had a vital interest in the success of the disarmament negotiations; it held that the Vladivostok agreement, by placing too high a ceiling on the strategic delivery vehicles and by its failure to restrict qualitative improvements, had not in fact curbed the nuclear arms race.

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/189 A by which it: (1) expressed regret at the absence of positive results during the previous three years of the SALT negotiations between the USSR and the United States; (2) expressed its concern for the very high ceilings on nuclear arms set for themselves by both States and for the total absence of qualitative limitations on such arms; (3) again urged the two States to broaden the scope and accelerate the pace of their talks; and (4) reiterated its previous invitation to both Governments to keep it informed in good time of the progress and results of their negotiations.

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 107 to 10, with 11 abstentions. It acted on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved the text on 2 December by 94 votes to 10, with 12 abstentions, on the proposal of Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, Nigeria, Peru and Sweden. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Speaking in the First Committee, the USSR, while stressing its readiness to step up efforts to conclude a new agreement with the United States on the limitation of strategic offensive weapons, held that the resolution, to which it was opposed, gave a distorted picture of the results of the talks and in it an illegal attempt was made to prejudice the order, concrete orientation and possible results of those talks, which represented interference in the conduct of the talks.

The United States also objected to the resolution, in particular to the language of the provisions expressing regrets at results and concern for high ceilings on nuclear arms and absence of qualitative limitations, because in its view they seriously misrepresented the facts.

Australia, Canada, Denmark, Finland and the Netherlands wished to put on record that, in spite of their support for the resolution, they maintained serious reservations as to the language, in particular to the provisions concerning the results of the talks and the arms ceilings, which, in their opinion, gave too negative an assessment of the results achieved thus far and failed to recognize the complexity of the strategic arms limitation process.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its conviction that the cessation of nuclear-weapon testing would be in the supreme interest of mankind, both as a major step towards controlling the development and proliferation of nuclear weapons and to relieve the deep apprehension concerning the harmful consequences of radioactive contamination for the health of present and future generations,

Gravely concerned at the continuation of both atmospheric and underground nuclear-weapon testing since the thirtieth session of the General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this subject, the most recent being resolution 3466(XXX) of 11 December 1975,

Recalling the stated aim of the parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time,

Noting the information concerning agreements concluded by two nuclear-weapon States limiting the scope of underground nuclear-weapon tests and making provision in this connexion for the control and supervision of peaceful nuclear explosions including, in certain cases, arrangements for on-site verification,

Considering that conditions are favourable for these two nuclear-weapon States to step up their efforts to reach agreement on the means of verifying a comprehensive test-ban agreement,

Taking note of that part of the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament relating to the question of a comprehensive test-ban treaty,

1. Condemns all nuclear-weapon tests, in whatever environment they may be conducted;

2. Declares its profound concern that substantive negotiations towards a comprehensive test-ban agreement have not yet begun and re-emphasizes the urgency of concluding a comprehensive and effective agreement;

3. Calls once again upon all nuclear-weapon States to suspend the testing of nuclear weapons by agreement, subject to review after a specified period, as an interim step towards the conclusion of a formal and comprehensive test-ban agreement;

4. Emphasizes in this regard the particular responsibility of the nuclear-weapon States which are parties to international agreements in which they have declared their intention to achieve at the earliest possible date the cessation of the nuclear-arms race;

5. Calls upon all States not yet parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water to adhere to it forthwith;

6. Urges the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to continue to give the highest priority to the conclusion of a comprehensive test-ban agreement and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the progress achieved;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Urgent need for cessation of nuclear and thermonuclear tests and conclusion of a treaty designed to achieve a comprehensive test ban."

A/31/384. Report of First Committee.

Resolution 31/89, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/384, adopted by Assembly on 14 December 1976, meeting 98, by recorded vote of 95 to 2, with 36 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Central African Empire, Chad, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Republic, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire

Against: Albania, China

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bhutan, Botswana,

Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, Comoros, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Mauritania, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Zambia.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3478(XXX) of 11 December 1975, in which it called upon all nuclear-weapon States to enter into negotiations, not later than 31 March 1976, with a view to reaching agreement on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests, with twenty-five to thirty non-nuclear-weapon States participating in such negotiations,

Deploping the fact that such negotiations have not yet begun,

Convinced that the early cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, including underground tests, everywhere and by everyone, would contribute to the reduction of the nuclear-arms race and to the further relaxation of international tension,

Also convinced of the need for again exerting every effort to achieve an international agreement on the cessation of all types of nuclear-weapon tests,

Noting that during the thirty-first session of the General Assembly proposals have been made and relevant documents submitted with a view to finding a compromise basis for a generally acceptable understanding regarding the supervision of compliance with such an agreement,

Believing that the conclusion between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America of treaties on the limitation of underground nuclear-weapon tests and on underground nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes contributes to the creation of favourable conditions for the cessation of all nuclear-weapon tests,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General stating that twenty-six non-nuclear-weapon States are ready to participate in the negotiations with a view to reaching agreement on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests,

1. Again calls upon all nuclear-weapon States, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3478(XXX), to proceed as soon as possible with negotiations on the conclusion of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests with the participation of non-nuclear-weapon States;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to render such assistance as may be necessary for the negotiations and to transmit to the group referred to in paragraph 1 above all documents relating to the consideration by the General Assembly at its thirty-first session of the item entitled "Conclusion of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests,"

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Conclusion of a treaty on the complete and general prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests."

*The vote of Nigeria should have been recorded as being in favour.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the danger of nuclear warfare remains a grave threat to the survival of mankind,

Convinced that the prevention of any further proliferation of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices remains a vital element in efforts to avert nuclear warfare,

Convinced that the promotion of this objective will be furthered by more rapid progress towards the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and the initiation of effective measures of nuclear disarmament,

Further convinced that the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time would constitute an important step in these efforts,

Noting that the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to which about one hundred States are parties, implies a balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations of all States parties to the Treaty, nuclear-weapon as well as non-nuclear-weapon States,

Recalling that the States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons met at Geneva from 5 to 30 May 1975 to review the operation of the Treaty with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble and the provisions of the Treaty were being realized,

Further recalling that the Final Document of the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons includes, inter alia, a Final Declaration and a number of interpretative statements in connexion with the Final Declaration,

Noting that the Conference has called for universal adherence to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Recognizing the necessity of effective international safeguards in order to ensure that the peaceful applications of nuclear energy will not lead to further proliferation of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices,

Underlying the important role of the International Atomic Energy Agency in implementing international non-proliferation policies in connexion with the peaceful uses of nuclear energy,

Concerned that the nuclear-arms race continues unabated, Recognizing that various appropriate means are necessary to meet the security concerns of non-nuclear-weapon States,

1. Urgently calls for determined efforts by all nuclear-weapon States:

(a) To bring about the cessation of the nuclear-arms race;

(b) To undertake effective measures in the direction of nuclear disarmament;

(c) To find an early solution to the difficulties in reaching agreement to discontinue all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time as a step towards the realization of these objectives;

2. Emphasizes the particular responsibility of the two major nuclear-weapon States in this regard;

3. Stresses the urgency of international co-operative efforts in appropriate forums to prevent the further proliferation of nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;

4. Recognizes that States accepting effective non-proliferation restraints have a right to full access to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and underlines the importance of all efforts to increase the availability of energy, particularly for the needs of the developing countries of the world;

5. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to accord high priority to its programme of work in these areas;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-third session an item entitled "Implementation of the conclusions of the first Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and establishment of a preparatory committee for the second Conference."

A/C.1/31/L.34. Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway: draft resolution, as orally amended by sponsors, approved by First Committee on 3 December 1976, meeting 52, by recorded vote of 97 to 1, with 21 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, Libyan Arab Republic, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zaire

Abstaining: Algeria, Argentina, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, France, India, Lesotho, Mexico, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Romania, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

A/31/386. Report of First Committee (on general and complete disarmament), draft resolution D.

Resolution 31/189D, as recommended by First Committee. A/31/386, adopted by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106, by recorded vote of 106 to 2, with 22 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Republic, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire

Against: Albania, China

Abstaining: Algeria, Argentina, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Chile, Colombia, France, India, Lesotho, Mauritius, Mexico, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Romania, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 2373(XXII) of 12 June 1968, in which it commended the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and expressed the hope for the widest possible adherence to that Treaty,

Noting that one hundred States now are parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Noting further that the non-nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons have accepted the principle of safeguards on all their peaceful nuclear activities,

Recognizing that the accelerated spread and development of peaceful applications of nuclear energy may, in the absence of an effective and comprehensive safeguards system, increase the danger of proliferation of nuclear weapons or equivalent nuclear explosive capabilities,

Noting that the objectives of the International Atomic Energy Agency, as defined in its statute, are to promote the peaceful applications of nuclear energy while ensuring that they are not used in such a way as to further any military purpose,

Underlining the important role of the International Atomic Energy Agency in implementing international non-proliferation policies in connexion with the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and noting in this context the communication from Finland concerning the strengthening of International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards on a comprehensive basis,

Recognizing the necessity of continued international co-operation in the application and improvement of International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards on peaceful nuclear activities,

1. Recognizes that States accepting effective non-proliferation restraints have a right to enjoy fully the benefits of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and underlines the importance of increased efforts in this field, particularly for the needs of the developing areas of the world;

2. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to give special attention to its programme of work in the non-proliferation area, including its efforts in facilitating peaceful nuclear co-operation and increasing assistance to the developing areas of the world within an effective and comprehensive safeguards system;

3. Further requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to continue its studies on the questions of multinational fuel cycle centres and an international régime for plutonium storage as effective means to promote the interests of the non-proliferation régime;

4. Calls upon the International Atomic Energy Agency to give careful consideration to all relevant suggestions aiming at strengthening the safeguards régime that have been presented to the Agency;

5. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to report on the progress of its work on this question to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3261 F (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, by which it decided to undertake a comprehensive study of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in all its aspects,

Recalling further its resolution 3472 (XXX) of 11 December 1975, by which it, inter alia, commended the special report containing the comprehensive study to the attention of all Governments, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other relevant international organizations and invited them to transmit to the Secretary-General before 30 June 1976 such views, observations and suggestions on the special report as they might deem appropriate,

Having considered the special report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament containing the comprehensive study of the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones in all its aspects prepared by the Ad Hoc Group of Qualified Governmental Experts for the Study of the Question of Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones,

Having noted the comments made by States members of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament concerning the study, Considering that the question of nuclear-weapon-free zones is included in the provisional agenda of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament as adopted on 15 August 1968,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General containing the views, observations and suggestions on the special report by Governments, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America;

2. Expresses once more its appreciation to the Ad Hoc Group of Qualified Governmental Experts for the Study of the Question of Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones for the preparation of the study and conveys its thanks to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency and other relevant international organizations for the assistance they have given for the preparation of the study;

3. Reiterates its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones can contribute to the security of members of such zones, to the prevention of proliferation of nuclear weapons and to the goals of general and complete disarmament;

4. Draws the attention of Governments to the comprehensive study and the views, observations and suggestions on that study contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

5. Expresses the hope that the comprehensive study and the views, observations and suggestions on that study will enhance further efforts of Governments concerning nuclear-weapon-free zones and will be of assistance to States interested in the establishment of such zones;

6. Conveys the comprehensive study and the report of the Secretary-General to the Governments concerned, to interested international organizations and to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament for the further consideration and measures that they may deem appropriate within their respective fields of competence.

NUCLEAR-WEAPON-FREE ZONE IN LATIN AMERICA

A/31/1. Report of Secretary-General on work of Organization, 16 June 1975-15 June 1976, Part One, Chapter IV I and M.

A/C.1/31/L.18. Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Surinam, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela: draft resolution, approved by First Committee on 1 December 1976, meeting 48, by 97 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions.

Resolution 31/67, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/375, adopted by Assembly on 10 December 1976, meeting 96, by recorded vote of 119 to 0, with 14 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Republic, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal,

Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

Against: None

Abstaining: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Hungary, Maldives, Mongolia, Poland, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1911(XVIII) of 27 November 1963, 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 2456 B (XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2666(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2830(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2935(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3079(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3258(XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 3467(XXX) of 11 December 1975, eight of which contain appeals to the nuclear-weapon States regarding the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Reiterating its firm conviction that, for the maximum effectiveness of any treaty establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone, the co-operation of the nuclear-weapon States is necessary and that such co-operation should take the form of commitments likewise undertaken in a formal international instrument which is legally binding, such as a treaty, convention or protocol,

Recalling with particular satisfaction that the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, France and the People's Republic of China are already parties to Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

1. Again urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to sign and ratify Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco);

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 31/67 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)."

DENUCLEARIZATION OF AFRICA

A/31/379. Report of First Committee.

Resolution 31/69, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/379, adopted without vote by Assembly on 10 December 1976, meeting 96.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 3261 E (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 3471(XXX) of 11 December 1975, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, including the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recognizing that implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in 1964 would contribute to the security of all the African States and to the goals of general and complete disarmament,

Bearing in mind that the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirteenth ordinary session, held at Port Louis from 2 to 6 July 1976, expressed grave concern over the continuing collaboration between certain States Members of the United Nations and the racist régime of South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields, thereby enabling it to acquire nuclear-weapon capability,

Concerned that further development of South Africa's military and nuclear-weapon potential would frustrate efforts to establish nuclear-weapon-free zones in Africa and elsewhere as an effective means for preventing the proliferation, both horizontal and vertical, of nuclear weapons and for contributing to the elimination of the danger of a nuclear holocaust,

1. Reaffirms its call upon all States to respect and abide by the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

2. Further reaffirms its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, including the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

3. Appeals to all States not to deliver to South Africa or place at its disposal any equipment or fissionable material or technology that will enable the racist régime of South Africa to acquire nuclear-weapon capability;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance to the Organization of African Unity towards the realization of its solemn Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, in which the African Heads of State and Government announced their readiness to undertake, in an international treaty to be concluded under the auspices of the United Nations, not to manufacture or acquire control of nuclear weapons;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, in which it overwhelmingly commended the idea of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also its resolution 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, in which it recognized that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East enjoys wide support in the region,

Mindful of the prevailing political situation in the region and the potential danger emanating therefrom that would be further aggravated by the introduction of nuclear weapons in the area,

Concerned that the lack of any appreciable progress in the direction of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone, in the present atmosphere in the region, will further complicate the situation,

Convinced that progress towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East will greatly enhance the cause of peace both in the region and in the world,

Conscious of the particular nature of the problems involved and the complexities inherent in the situation in the Middle East, and the urgency of keeping the region free from involvement in a ruinous nuclear-arms race,

1. Expresses the need for further action to generate momentum towards realization of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East;

2. Urges all parties concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons as a means of promoting this objective;

3. Reiterates its recommendation that the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 above, pending the establishment of the nuclear-weapon-free zone under an effective system of safeguards, should:

(a) Proclaim solemnly and immediately their intention to refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons in their territory or the territory under their control by any third party;

(b) Refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from any other action that would facilitate the acquisition, testing or use of such weapons, or would be in any other way detrimental to the objective of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region under an effective system of safeguards;

(c) Agree to place all their nuclear activities under the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

4. Reaffirms the recommendations to the nuclear-weapon States to refrain from any action contrary to the purpose of the present resolution and the objective of establishing, in the region of the Middle East, a nuclear-weapon-free zone under an effective system of safeguards and to extend their co-operation to the States of the region in their efforts to promote this objective;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to explore the possibilities of making progress towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the area of the Middle East;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures which can contribute most effectively to halting the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promoting progress towards nuclear disarmament as a step towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control, with the ultimate goal of total destruction of all nuclear weapons and their means of delivery,

Bearing in mind the comprehensive study prepared by the Ad Hoc Group of Qualified Governmental Experts for the Study of the Question of Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones, Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will strengthen the security of the States of the region against nuclear threat or attack,

Noting the affirmation by the States of South Asia not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Recalling that in the above-mentioned resolutions the General Assembly had called upon the States of the South Asian region and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as might be interested to initiate, without delay, necessary consultations with a view to establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone and urged them, in the interim, to refrain from any action contrary to the achievement of the objectives of such a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling that in resolution 3265 B (XXIX) the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting for the purpose of the above-mentioned consultations to render such assistance as might be required,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement in principle of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as may be interested to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the meantime, from any action contrary to this objective;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to render such assistance as may be required to promote the above efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia."

Security of non-nuclear-weapon States

General Assembly—31st session

Plenary meeting 106.

A/C.1/31/L.33. Iran, Kuwait, Morocco, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama: draft resolution, approved by First Committee on 3 December 1976, meeting 52, by 88 votes to 0, with 35 abstentions.

A/31/386. Report of First Committee (on general and complete disarmament), draft resolution C.

Resolution 31/189C, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/386, adopted by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106, by recorded vote of 95 to 0, with 33 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Indonesia, Iran, Israel, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, São Tomé and Príncipe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia

Against: None

Abstaining: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bhutan, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Mongolia, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race and the threat to mankind due to the possibility of the use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that only nuclear disarmament resulting in the complete elimination of nuclear weapons will assure perfect security in the nuclear era,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to devise effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recalling its resolution 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, in which it recommended that Member States should consider in all appropriate forums, without loss of time, the question of strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting that the non-nuclear-weapon States have called for assurances from nuclear-weapon Powers that they will not use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against them,

Deeply concerned over any possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons in any contingency,

1. Requests the nuclear-weapon States, as a first step towards a complete ban on the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, to consider undertaking, without prejudice to their obligations arising from treaties establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones, not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States not parties to the nuclear security arrangements of some nuclear-weapon Powers;

2. Decides to review at its thirty-second session the progress made on the question of strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States.

Strategic arms limitation talks

A/31/386. Report of First Committee (on general and complete disarmament), draft resolution A.

Resolution 31/189 A, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/386, adopted by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106, by recorded vote of 107 to 10, with 11 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Central African Empire, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

Against: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United States

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Israel, Italy, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Luxembourg, Malawi, Turkey, United Kingdom.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 2602 A (XXIV) of 16 December 1969 relating to the initiation of bilateral negotiations between the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the limitation of offensive and defensive strategic nuclear-weapon systems,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2932 B (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3184 A and C (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3261 C (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 3484 C (XXX) of 12 December 1975,

Bearing in mind that the above-mentioned Governments agreed on 21 June 1973 to make serious efforts to work out and sign in 1974 the agreement on more complete measures on the limitation of strategic offensive arms called for in the interim agreement of 26 May 1972, and that on the same occasion they expressed their intention to carry out the subsequent reduction of such arms,

Conscious of the fact that the interim agreement referred to above will expire next year,

Noting that, as a result of the discussions held at the highest level in November 1974 also between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, both sides reaffirmed their intention to conclude an agreement on the limitation of strategic offensive arms to last until 31 December 1985 inclusive,

Noting also that at the same meeting it was agreed to set ceilings both on the strategic offensive nuclear-delivery vehicles as well as on such of those vehicles as may be equipped with multiple independently targetable warheads, and that both sides stated that favourable prospects existed for completing the work on the new agreement in 1975 and stressed that it would include provisions for further negotiations beginning no later than 1980-1981 on the question of further limitations and possible reductions of strategic arms in the period after 1985,

Noting further the information submitted by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America,

Reiterating its opinion that disarmament negotiations move very slowly in comparison to the obvious perils posed by the enormous arsenals of nuclear weapons,

1. Regrets the absence of positive results during the last three years of the bilateral negotiations between the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the limitation of their strategic nuclear-weapon systems;

2. Expresses its concern for the very high ceilings of nuclear arms set for themselves by both States, for the total absence of qualitative limitations of such arms, for the protracted time-table contemplated for the negotiation of further limitations and possible reductions of the nuclear arsenals and for the situation thus created;

3. Urges anew the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to broaden the scope and accelerate the pace of their strategic nuclear arms limitation talks, and stresses once again the necessity and urgency of reaching agreement on important qualitative limitations and substantial reductions of their strategic nuclear-weapon systems as a positive step towards nuclear disarmament;

4. Reiterates its previous invitation to both Governments to keep the General Assembly informed in good time of the progress and results of their negotiations.

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

During 1976, the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, as requested by the General Assembly on 11 December 1975,<sup>23</sup> continued their consultations on the convening of a conference on the Indian Ocean, with particular reference to the purpose of the conference, date and duration, venue, provisional agenda, participation and level of participation. On 11 May, these States held an informal meeting on the matter presided over by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean.

The Ad Hoc Committee also continued its work and consultations during the year. Between 10 May and 17 September 1976, it held eight formal and a number of informal meetings. The report of the Ad Hoc Committee to the General Assembly contained a summary of the comments of the littoral and hinterland States on the points related to the convening of an Indian Ocean conference. Among the suggestions for the agenda of such a conference were the following: measures to create conditions of security in the area, delimitation of the zone, elaboration of measures to eliminate foreign military bases conceived in the context of great-power rivalry, and a system of collective security without military alliances. The Committee also transmitted a draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly.

On 14 December 1976, the Assembly adopted the proposed text as its resolution 31/88. It thereby, among other things, requested the Ad Hoc Committee and the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean to continue their consultations with a view to formulating a programme of action leading to the convening of a conference on the Indian Ocean, renewed its invitation to all States, in particular the great powers and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean, to co-operate in a practical manner with the Ad Hoc Committee, which was requested to continue its work and consultations and to report again in 1977.

Resolution 31/88 was adopted by a recorded vote of 106 to 0, with 27 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's First Committee, which approved the text on 29 November by 97 votes to 0, with 27 abstentions. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

When the Assembly's First Committee discussed the Ad Hoc Committee's report, it also had before it documents of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August 1976 (which included a resolution on the Indian Ocean peace zone), as well as a resolution adopted by the Seventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul, Turkey, in May 1976, and a message dated 9 February 1976 from the President of Madagascar to the Secretary-General relating to sources of tension in the Indian Ocean area.

During the discussion, a number of the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, including China and Sri Lanka, referred to the support expressed by the Colombo Conference for a conference on the Indian Ocean and emphasized again the need to implement the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace in order to eliminate great-power military rivalry from the area. Sri Lanka observed that, far from circumscribing the freedom of navigation on the high seas, this zone of peace would ensure the safety of international navigation.

Indonesia, Mauritius, Sri Lanka and the United Republic of Tanzania noted that an Indian Ocean peace zone had positive significance for certain regions, in particular Africa and South-East Asia.

Indonesia recalled that the Association of South-East Asian Nations at meetings in Kuala Lumpur (Malaysia) in 1971 and Bali (Indonesia) in 1976, had reaffirmed their support for establishing an Indian Ocean peace zone.

Mauritius and the United Republic of Tanzania criticized the reported establishment by the United States of a naval facility on Diego García in the Indian Ocean, which, Mauritius said, was its territory. Mauritius also contended that recent military and nuclear developments in South Africa emphasized the need to implement the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.

The USSR indicated that it was sympathetic towards the proposal to convert the Indian Ocean to a zone of peace. It stressed that the key issue for establishing such a peace zone was the elimination of foreign military bases from the area, and stated that it neither had nor intended to establish military bases in the Indian Ocean region. The USSR also said it was prepared to join with other powers in seeking ways to reduce, on a mutual basis, the military activities of non-coastal States in the Indian Ocean and in the regions directly adjacent to it. Such measures, however, should take fully into account freedom of navigation on the high seas, freedom of scientific research and the need for commercial stops at the ports of coastal States of the Indian Ocean area. The USSR added that it was prepared to consider the question of convening an Indian Ocean conference in the light of these considerations. It was abstaining in the vote on the resolution, however, as its views had not been duly taken into account by the sponsors.

Mauritius commented, in this connexion, that an Indian Ocean peace zone would not interfere with free and unimpeded peaceful navigation.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United States expressed reservations on, inter alia, provisions of the resolution related to freedom of navigation and to the criticism directed against its naval facility on Diego García. The United States said it deployed only modest forces in the Indian Ocean to ensure that lines of communication vital to world peace and security were not interfered with. As for a preambular reference to the Colombo Conference's resolution on the Indian Ocean, the United States noted that in that resolution its naval facility on Diego García had been singled out, while only veiled references had been made to the military activities of other powers that were external to the Indian Ocean region. The United States could not accept that comparable activities by different States should be judged according to different standards.

In the United States view, practical steps to prevent a competitive expansion of military strength in the Indian Ocean area should be based on restraint by the States in the region and restraint by the great powers.

Canada expressed its support for the idea of creating demilitarized or denuclearized zones where feasible, but noted that it maintained its reservations on the concept defined in earlier resolutions on this subject as it implied obligations for States outside the zone, including the maritime users of the Indian Ocean.

Pakistan, while supporting the earliest possible implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, abstained in the vote; certain preambular provisions of the resolution, it said, did not fully reflect its views.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action in furtherance of the objectives of the Declaration would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Noting the resolution adopted at the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries on the subject of the Indian Ocean Peace Zone Proposal,

Deeply concerned that there has been an escalation of the military presence of the great Powers conceived in the context of great-Power rivalry in the Indian Ocean, and believing therefore that the implementation of the purposes and objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace has acquired a new urgency,

Regretting that, despite repeated invitations, certain great Powers as well as certain major maritime users of the Indian Ocean have not so far found it possible to co-operate with the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, in particular section II thereof concerning the consultations entered into by the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean in pursuance of paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 3468(XXX);

2. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee and the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean to continue their consultations with a view to formulating a programme of action leading to the convening of a conference on the Indian Ocean;

3. Invites once again all States, in particular the great Powers and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean, to co-operate in a practical manner with the Ad Hoc Committee in the discharge of its functions;

4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to continue its work and consultations in accordance with its mandate and to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session a report on its work;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records.

The question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

For its consideration of the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, the General Assembly at its 1976 session had before it the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD). In the course of the debate, which was held in the Assembly's First Committee, the need for further efforts towards an early achievement of a ban on chemical weapons was again emphasized, and many Members expressed concern about the slow pace of the negotiations in CCD. Kuwait, for example, said that negotiations concerning the conclusion of a treaty on chemical weapons had not met with any real success; in Kuwait's view, the prospects for such a treaty were more remote than ever.

Canada, on the other hand, considered that the discussions in CCD and elsewhere had provided some glimmer of hope for at least a modest breakthrough in resolving the problems, particularly that of verification, which had stood in the way of achieving a convention. Czechoslovakia believed that the discussions on the subject conducted by experts, under the auspices of CCD, had helped to bridge the gap between the differing views. Many Members referred to the initiative announced jointly by the USSR and the United States in 1974 to achieve, as a first step, a convention dealing with the most dangerous, lethal means of chemical warfare.

Also discussed were the matters of approach to a convention and the scope of a convention. Many Members indicated acceptance of the concept of a phased agreement, starting with a ban on the most lethal agents and leading to a comprehensive ban. The USSR and other Eastern European States, including Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Poland, said that while they favoured a comprehensive prohibition and elimination of all chemical weapons, they were willing to accept a phased approach in order to facilitate a solution to the problem. Finland and Nigeria also expressed a preference for a comprehensive ban, but believed that the phased approach might be a necessary means to achieve that essential goal.

The United States was one of those supporting the phased approach towards a comprehensive ban; it was encouraged by the increasing acceptance of that concept. The Netherlands believed that the phased approach was a means to facilitate negotiations towards early agreement on a ban on lethal chemical weapons, and it emphasized that the final goal must be a comprehensive ban including non-lethal agents.

Japan felt that the prevailing view in respect of the scope of agents to be banned initially was that general-purpose criteria would be used, supplemented by toxicity criteria.

While divergent views continued to be expressed on the question of verification (national technical means as opposed to on-site inspection), hope for a compromise was voiced by representatives of the Eastern European States and of the Western States. The United States noted with interest the statement on verification of destruction of chemical-weapon stocks contained in the disarmament memorandum submitted to the current General Assembly session by the USSR. In this memorandum, the USSR had reiterated its position that supervision of compliance with the prohibition of chemical weapons should be based on national means, but had noted that it was ready to examine the possibility of using additional supervision procedures and, in particular, to discuss methods of verifying the destruction of stockpiles of chemical weapons.

Japan expressed the view that, while on-site inspections undoubtedly were required for such specific purposes as the destruction of stockpiles, it was becoming widely recognized that national means of verification could be supplemented in a manner not unreasonably obtrusive. Finland referred to studies it had made aimed at developing a national chemical-weapon control capability, which, if needed, could be put to international use.

Argentina, Finland, Iran, Italy and the United States, among others, welcomed the draft convention that the United Kingdom had submitted to the 1976 session of CCD (see pp. 9-10 for summary). Italy commented that the draft convention seemed to offer an alternative to or to complement the USSR-United States joint initiative announced in 1974. While it hoped that those bilateral discussions would lead to a concrete proposal, it felt that the United Kingdom draft might provide a useful basis for negotiations in CCD.

On 10 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/65 dealing with the question of a ban on chemical weapons. By the preamble to this text, the Assembly, inter alia, noted the risk of continued development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons in the absence of an agreement on the question. It noted that intensified efforts in CCD had led to increased understanding in identifying practical approaches towards the prohibition of chemical weapons, and their destruction, and recognized the importance of developing methods for providing adequate assurance of compliance with effective measures to ban all chemical weapons, including methods of verifying the destruction of stockpiles. The Assembly also commented that a chemical-weapons ban should not impede the utilization of science and technology for the economic development of States.

By the operative provisions of resolution 31/65, the Assembly reaffirmed the objective of reaching early agreement on an effective ban on chemical weapons and urged all States to make every effort to this end. It requested CCD to continue negotiations as a matter of high priority. The Assembly also invited all States which had not done so to accede to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction,<sup>24</sup> as well as to accede to or ratify the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925.

Resolution 31/65 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved the text on 24 November 1976 by consensus. The sponsors were Afghanistan, Argentina, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chad, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Hungary, India, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Poland, Sierra Leone, Sweden, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia.

France said it had reservations on the explicit reference to CCD in the text; its participation in the consensus did not imply a change in its position with respect to that body. China said that if the draft resolution had been put to a vote, it would not have participated in that vote.

Resolution 31/65, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/373, adopted without vote by Assembly on 10 December 1976, meeting 96.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2454 A (XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2603 B (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2662 (XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2827 A (XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2933 (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3077 (XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3256 (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 3465 (XXX) of 11 December 1975,

Convinced that the process of international detente is conducive to the implementation of further disarmament measures and of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Reaffirming the necessity of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925,

Convinced that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction constitutes an important step towards early agreement on the effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their elimination from arsenals of all States,

Recalling in that connexion the undertaking contained in article IX of the Convention to continue negotiations in good faith with a view to reaching early agreement on effective measures for the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for their destruction,

Stressing the importance of early agreement on the complete prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, which would contribute to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Noting the risk of continued development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons in the absence of such agreement,

Having considered the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,

Noting that drafts of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, as well as other working documents, proposals and suggestions, have been submitted to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament and constitute valuable contributions to reaching appropriate agreement,

Noting also the comments addressed to this problem and relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-first session,

Noting further that intensified efforts in the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament have led to increased understanding in identifying practical approaches towards the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons, and their destruction, including definition of the agents to be banned,

Recognizing the importance of developing methods for providing adequate assurance of compliance with effective measures for the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons, including methods of verifying the destruction of stockpiles of such weapons.

Having in mind that agreement on the complete prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction should not impede the utilization of science and technology for the economic development of States,

Desiring to contribute to a successful conclusion of the negotiations on effective and strict measures for the complete prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for their destruction,

1. Reaffirms the objective of reaching early agreement on the effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their elimination from arsenals of all States;

2. Urges again all States to make every effort to facilitate early agreement on the effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

3. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations as a matter of high priority, taking into account the existing proposals, with a view to reaching early agreement on effective measures for the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and for their destruction;

4. Invites all States that have not yet done so to accede to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, as well as to accede to or ratify the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and calls again for strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of those instruments;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament all documents of the thirty-first session of the General Assembly relating to chemical weapons and to chemical means of warfare;

6. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to report on the results of its negotiations to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

Questions concerning napalm and other incendiary weapons

On 11 December 1975, the General Assembly invited the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts, at its third session in 1976, to continue its consideration of the question of the use of incendiary and other specific conventional weapons and requested the Secretary-General to report to it on that aspect of the work of the Conference and on the Conference of Government Experts on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons, which was to be held in Lugano, Switzerland, under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross.<sup>25</sup>

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly had before it the report of the Secretary-General in connexion with its consideration of the agenda item dealing with incendiary and other specific conventional weapons which might be banned or restricted for humanitarian reasons. The Secretary-General reported that at the second session of the Conference of Government Experts, at Lugano from 28 January to 26 February 1976, the experts had studied the possibility, content and form of proposed bans or restrictions, which were subsequently to be considered also by the Diplomatic Conference at its third session in mid-1976. Proposals had been submitted to the Conference by a group representing 21 States calling for bans on the use of incendiary weapons. Other proposals concerned delayed-action and treacherous weapons, small-calibre projectiles and blast and fragmentation weapons. Some experts representing States that did not support the 21-State proposals offered compromise proposals in the categories of incendiaries and delayed-action weapons, largely designed to ban specifically the use of such weapons against civilian populations. These were judged insufficient by experts desiring more sweeping bans. The Secretary-General's report indicated that only limited progress was achieved.

The report of the Secretary-General also indicated that the discussion in the Ad Hoc Committee on Conventional Weapons during the third session of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts, held at Geneva from 21 April to 11 June 1976, showed a moderate degree of optimism regarding the results of the Lugano Conference. Some held that the weapons in question had been thoroughly analysed and that the time had come to negotiate specific agreements. Others, however, considered that while that stage had been reached in respect of some weapons, more thorough research was still needed in the case of others, including small-calibre projectiles, cluster bombs, fléchettes and fuel-air explosives. Proposals were before the Ad Hoc Committee concerning the various categories of weapons. These were discussed but no decisions were taken.

At the 1976 session of the General Assembly, the question of banning the use of napalm and other specific conventional weapons was taken up in the First Committee. Sixteen members—Algeria, Austria, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ireland, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Tunisia, Venezuela and Yugoslavia—proposed a draft resolution which was adopted by the Assembly without vote on 10 December as resolution 31/64.

By this resolution, the General Assembly, inter alia: took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Diplomatic Conference; invited that Conference at its fourth session in

1977 to accelerate its consideration of the use of specific conventional weapons, including any which might be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects, and to do its utmost to agree for humanitarian reasons on possible rules prohibiting or restricting the use of such conventional weapons; and requested the Secretary-General to report again on aspects of the work of the Diplomatic Conference relevant to the resolution.

The text was approved by consensus in the First Committee on 2 December 1976. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Sweden appealed to Governments to examine the data presented at the various conferences held on the subject and urged them to make a maximum effort during the fourth session of the Diplomatic Conference to achieve results. Sweden considered that, while efficiency and economy were important factors in the assessment of a weapon, humanitarian considerations must prevail. It believed that enough data had already been compiled on a variety of conventional weapons to make decisions possible, and noted the widespread condemnation of the use of napalm and other incendiary weapons. Rules also seemed within reach regarding mines, some perfidious weapons and weapons that relied for their effect on fragments not detectable by X-ray, and regarding fuel-air explosives, which should be used only to destroy material objects.

Austria and Egypt similarly stressed that the Diplomatic Conference in 1977 should succeed in reaching agreement on humanitarian grounds to ban the use of conventional weapons that caused great suffering. Austria added that it would not oppose the convening, at a later date, of a conference separate from the Diplomatic Conference exclusively devoted to the question of banning or limiting the use of certain conventional weapons. It favoured the establishment of a periodic review mechanism to ensure the sustained development of humanitarian rules with regard to certain conventional weapons.

The Netherlands hoped for early agreement to ban the use of weapons that injured by fragments undetectable by X-rays and to regulate the use of mines and booby-traps. The Netherlands also stressed the duty of each country to determine whether new weapons were compatible with humanitarian principles. It urged the adoption of national procedures to that end, as had been done in the Netherlands and the United States. In that connexion, the Netherlands recalled a suggestion it had previously put forward to set up some sort of special institute for collecting data on the actual and potential effects of certain kinds of conventional weapons.

Others expressing hope for progress in the matter at the 1977 session of the Diplomatic Conference included Canada, Cuba, Denmark and Liberia.

France, Italy and the USSR made statements to the general effect that consideration of the question of banning the use of specific weapons was a disarmament matter directly affecting the security of nations. Italy and the USSR held that further consideration of the matter should therefore take place in an appropriate disarmament forum, such as the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, while France considered the General Assembly to be the proper forum.

Resolution 31/64, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/372, adopted without vote by Assembly on 10 December 1976, meeting 96.

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the suffering of civilian populations and combatants could be significantly reduced if general agreement can be attained on the prohibition or restriction for humanitarian reasons of the use of specific conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects,

Mindful that positive results as regards the non-use or restriction of use for humanitarian reasons of specific conventional weapons would serve, in addition, as encouragement in the broader field of disarmament and might facilitate subsequent agreement on the elimination of such weapons which were completely banned for use,

Recalling that the issue of prohibitions or restrictions for humanitarian reasons of the use of specific conventional weapons has been the subject of serious and substantive discussion for a number of years, notably at the sessions of the Conference of Government Experts on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons held, under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross, at Lucerne from 24 September to 18 October 1974 and at Lugano from 28 January to 26 February 1976, and at three sessions of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts and in the General Assembly since 1971.

Noting that the discussions and proposals regarding the prohibition or restriction for humanitarian reasons of the use of certain weapons have focused on napalm and other incendiary weapons, on indiscriminate methods of using land mines, on perfidious weapons and weapons which rely for their effect upon fragments invisible on X-ray, on certain types of small-calibre projectile which may be especially injurious and on certain blast and fragmentation weapons,

Noting that the issue will come before the fourth session of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts, to be held at Geneva from 17 March to 10 June 1977,

Convinced that the work of the fourth session of the Diplomatic Conference should be inspired by a sense of urgency and the wish to attain concrete results which was stressed in the appeal by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, concerning particularly the prohibition of the use of napalm and other incendiary weapons,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts as regards the work of the Conference relevant to the present resolution;

2. Invites the Diplomatic Conference to accelerate its consideration of the use of specific conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects, and to do its utmost to agree for humanitarian reasons on possible rules prohibiting or restricting the use of such weapons;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, who has been invited to attend the Diplomatic Conference as an observer, to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on aspects of the work of the Diplomatic Conference relevant to the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Incendiary and other specific conventional weapons which may be the subject of prohibitions or restrictions of use for humanitarian reasons."

Prohibition of new weapons of mass destruction

The General Assembly continued at its 1976 session to consider the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons. The matter was discussed in the Assembly's First Committee, which had before it a report from the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) (see pp. 11-12); CCD had been requested by the Assembly on 11 December 1975 to work out the text of an agreement banning these weapons.<sup>26</sup>

In the course of the debate, the socialist States of Eastern Europe and a number of developing countries called for concrete negotiations on this issue, stressing its importance. In the view of the USSR, the question of prohibiting the development of new systems of weapons of mass destruction was a major topic calling for speedy and responsible action, primarily from the industrially developed countries. The USSR referred to the memorandum it had submitted to the General Assembly on disarmament questions, and said that it was ready to propose an approach that would include among new types of weapons of mass destruction any type of weapon based on qualitatively new principles of action in terms of method of use, targets, or nature of the effect. These would include ray weapons capable of affecting blood and intracellular plasma, infrasound weapons designed to damage internal organs and affect human behaviour, and genetic weapons whose use would affect the mechanism of heredity. Taking into account the fact that the development of science never stopped, the USSR observed, it was not difficult to realize that possibilities for the development of even more dangerous types of weapons might emerge in the future.

In China's view, talk about prohibiting non-existent new types of weapons more formidable than nuclear weapons was designed to mislead the public and divert the attention of the world's people.

Canada was among those that felt that the proponents of the agreement had not adequately clarified the kinds of weapons and weapon systems they had in mind. Some of the examples cited would seem to call into question arms-control agreements already in force or under negotiation.

The Netherlands, speaking for the nine members of the European Communities (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom), expressed reservations on the approach chosen to the problems of new weapons—that is, a convention encompassing all new types of weapons. They felt such a convention would not be practical and held that individual agreements on specific systems would be more effective. They noted that some of the examples of new weapons cited were already covered by existing treaties. However, they maintained in principle a positive attitude towards the problem of preventing the development of new weapons of mass destruction. They would be ready to engage in technical discussions in CCD on potentially dangerous developments, whenever such developments came into view.

Canada, Cyprus and Japan stated that they supported the resolution with the understanding that consideration of new weapons of mass destruction must not detract from the priority accorded to nuclear disarmament and a ban on chemical weapons. Sweden said it supported the resolution because of its belief that the development and manufacture of new weapons should be prevented. It held that a clear definition of the scope and content of this new field must be reached before a draft convention was presented to the General Assembly. In particular, a delineation must be made in relation to existing disarmament agreements covering atomic, biological and chemical weapons.

The United States said it continued to have doubts about the approach reflected in the resolution and had thus abstained. It believed that controls on arms, including new types and systems of weapons, should be applied through the development of specific agreements that established a definite scope and that were susceptible of adequate verifications of compliance. It would, however, participate constructively in an exchange of views on the arms-control aspects of new developments as they might arise.

On 10 December 1976, the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 120 to 1, with 15 abstentions, adopted resolution 31/74 on this question. By this resolution, the Assembly requested CCD to continue negotiations, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, aimed at working out the text of an agreement prohibiting development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons. The Assembly asked CCD to report on the results in 1977 and it placed the question on the provisional agenda of its 1977 session.

The Assembly acted on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved a 12-power text on 1 December by a recorded vote of 101 to 1, with 13 abstentions. China did not participate in the voting. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Sponsors of the resolution were Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia.

Recalling its resolution 3479(XXX) of 11 December 1975, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to proceed as soon as possible to work out the text of an agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons.

Being convinced of the importance of concluding an agreement to prevent the use of scientific and technological progress for the development of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction,

Taking into account the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament with regard to this question,

Taking note of the discussion at the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament of the question of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Taking into account the suggestions and relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly on this subject at its thirty-first session,

1. Requests the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to continue the negotiations, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, aimed at working out the text of an agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons and to submit a report on the results achieved for consideration by the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the discussion of this item by the General Assembly at its thirty-first session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament."

Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques

An item entitled "Convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques: report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament" was included in the agenda of the thirty-first (1976) session of the General Assembly on the basis of an Assembly decision of 11 December 1975.<sup>27</sup> The item was discussed in the Assembly's First Committee, which had before it the draft text of a convention transmitted by the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD). Identical draft conventions had been submitted to CCD by the USSR and the United States in 1975<sup>28</sup> and discussed in 1976 (see pp. 10-11).

The text of the convention submitted by CCD consisted of a preamble and 10 articles. By article I, each State party would undertake not to engage in, assist, encourage, or induce other States or international organizations to engage in military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques having widespread, long-lasting or severe effects as the means of destruction, damage or injury to another State party.

Article II defined the term "environmental modification techniques" as referring to any technique for changing, through the deliberate manipulation of natural processes, the dynamics, composition or structure of the earth, including its biota, lithosphere, hydrosphere and atmosphere, or of outer space.

Article III specified that the provisions of the convention were not to hinder the use of environmental modification techniques for peaceful purposes. Parties would undertake to facilitate the fullest possible exchange of scientific and technological information on use of such techniques for peaceful purposes, with due consideration for the needs of developing areas.

By article IV each party would undertake, in accordance with its constitutional processes, to prohibit and prevent any violation of the provisions of the convention.

By article V, each party would undertake to consult and co-operate in solving any problems that might arise in relation to the objectives or application of the provisions of the convention. Such consultation might be undertaken through appropriate international procedures within the framework of the United Nations and in accordance with its Charter. For those purposes, the depositary was, on receipt of a request from a party, to convene a consultative committee of experts which would prepare a summary of its findings of fact.

Further, any party which believed another party was acting in breach of its obligations might lodge a complaint with the Security Council. Each party would undertake to co-operate in a Security Council investigation and to provide or support assistance in accordance with the United Nations Charter to any party which so requested, if the Security Council decided that such party had been harmed or was likely to be harmed as a result of violation of the convention.

Article VI provided a procedure for amending the convention and article VII specified that the convention was to be of unlimited duration.

Article VIII provided that a review conference would be convened five years after the entry into force of the convention and at five-year intervals thereafter.

Articles IX and X provided, respectively, for signature and depositary arrangements. The depositary was to be the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

An annex to the convention set forth the terms of reference of the consultative committee of experts referred to in article V.

Also before the First Committee was a working paper submitted by Mexico on the scope of the prohibition of military or other hostile use of environmental modification techniques, in which Mexico stated that it found the wording of article I of the draft convention unacceptable.

During the First Committee debate, significant differences in viewpoint emerged, as they had in CCD, and draft resolutions representing those viewpoints were submitted.

On 9 November 1976, Mexico introduced a draft resolution, also sponsored by Argentina, Cyprus, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Grenada, Jamaica, Mauritius, Panama, Peru, Trinidad and Tobago, and Venezuela.

Expressing the views of those States, Mexico said they shared a concern that the text of article I of the draft convention, which banned military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques "having widespread, long-lasting or severe effects," was merely a partial prohibition. Mexico considered that the phrase "having widespread, long-lasting or severe effects" by inference legitimated techniques that did not have such effects, and proposed its deletion. Mexico and the other sponsors felt that with a little more effort CCD might come to an agreement on a text that would not pose insuperable difficulties for many States. Accordingly the draft resolution they proposed would have the General Assembly, inter alia, request CCD, without prejudice to the priorities established in its programme of work, to continue negotiations on the text of a draft convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques, bearing in mind the proposals and suggestions that had been submitted as well as the relevant discussion by the General Assembly, with a view to reaching agreement as early as possible on a text that would be widely acceptable to Members of the United Nations, and to submit a report on the results achieved to the Assembly at its 1977 session.

On 2 December, these 12 powers, joined by Haiti, submitted a revised version of the original text. This added a preambular paragraph noting that Member States had not had time to give the text of the draft convention the consideration it deserved. By the revised operative provisions, the Assembly would request the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the draft convention and other relevant documents to all States, invite the views and suggestions of Member States and decide to include the question on the agenda of its 1977 session.

Twelve Member States had, meanwhile, proposed a draft resolution by which the Assembly would: commend the convention on the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques; request the Secretary-General, as depositary of the convention, to open it for signature and ratification at the earliest possible date; and express its hope for the widest possible adherence to the convention. The 12 sponsors were Canada, Denmark, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Japan, Mongolia, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, the United Kingdom and Zaire.

A final revision of this text submitted on 2 December was sponsored by 30 powers: Austria, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, India, Iran, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Mongolia, Mozambique, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Zaire.

The revised text incorporated two changes proposed by Nigeria and accepted by the sponsors. One of these changes added a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly would note that the convention was intended to prohibit effectively military or other hostile use of environmental modification techniques in order to eliminate the dangers to mankind resulting from such use. The other change deleted the operative paragraph by which the Assembly would commend the convention and replaced it with a paragraph by which the Assembly would refer the convention to all States for their consideration, signature and ratification.

On 3 December 1976, on a procedural motion initiated by India, the First Committee decided, by a recorded vote of 59 in favour to 31 against, with 30 abstentions, to give priority to the 30-power revised draft resolution. That draft was adopted by the Committee by a recorded vote of 89 to 11, with 25 abstentions. The Committee then decided, on the proposal of Finland and India, by a recorded vote of 49 to 42, with 35 abstentions, not to put the other draft resolution to a vote.

On 10 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted the text recommended by the First Committee by a recorded vote of 96 to 8, with 30 abstentions.

By the preamble to this resolution (31/72) the Assembly, inter alia: noted with satisfaction the draft convention, which was intended to prohibit effectively military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques; observed that draft agreements submitted by CCD should be the result of a process of effective negotiations and should duly take into account the views of all States so that they might be adhered to by the greatest possible number of countries and that the convention made provision for a review conference five years after entry into force with a view to ensuring that its purposes were being fulfilled; was convinced that the convention should not affect the use of environmental modification techniques for peaceful purposes; and was anxious that in 1977 CCD should concentrate on negotiations for disarmament and arms limitation.

By the operative provisions, the Assembly referred the convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, whose text was annexed to the resolution, to all States for their consideration, signature and ratification. It requested the Secretary-General to open it for signature and ratification at the earliest possible date and expressed hope for the widest possible adherence. The Assembly then called on CCD, without prejudice to the priorities established in its programme of work, to keep under review the problem of effectively averting the dangers of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques and asked the Secretary-General to transmit to CCD all relevant documents.

Explanations of vote were made in the First Committee by a number of States. China said the so-called prohibition of military or other hostile use of environmental modification techniques was a fraud of sham disarmament; proceeding from that stand, China was not participating in the vote.

France welcomed in principle the idea of subjecting to control the military use of environmental modification techniques. However, it had as yet taken no decision on the Convention and therefore abstained in the vote.

New Zealand expressed misgivings concerning a text which it felt did not completely prohibit military or other hostile uses of environmental modification techniques. It considered that by suspending formal action on the Convention for a year, States not party to the negotiation would be permitted to study it and communicate their views to the Secretary-General. Therefore it supported the 13-power proposal and abstained on the 30-power resolution.

Kenya, Kuwait, Panama and Peru were among Members which said they would vote against the 30-power resolution because of their opposition to article I of the Convention. Malaysia expressed the view that no convention should be opened for signature if there was not a consensus on the substance of one of its articles.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3264(XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 3475(XXX) of 11 December 1975,

Recalling its resolution 1722(XVI) of 20 December 1961, in which it recognized that all States have a deep interest in disarmament and arms control negotiations,

Determined to avert the potential dangers of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques,

Convinced that broad adherence to a convention on the prohibition of such action would contribute to the cause of strengthening peace and averting the threat of war,

Noting with satisfaction that the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament has completed and transmitted to the General Assembly, in the report on its work in 1976, the text of a draft Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques,

Noting further that the Convention is intended to prohibit effectively military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques in order to eliminate the dangers to mankind from such use.

Bearing in mind that draft agreements on disarmament and arms control measures submitted to the General Assembly by the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament should be the result of a process of effective negotiations, and that such instruments should duly take into account the views and interests of all States so that they can be adhered to by the widest possible number of countries,

Bearing in mind that article VIII of the Convention makes provision for a conference to review the operation of the Convention five years after its entry into force, with a view to ensuring that its purposes and provisions are being realized,

Also bearing in mind all relevant documents and negotiating records of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament on the discussion of the draft Convention,

Convinced that the Convention should not affect the use of environmental modification techniques for peaceful purposes, which could contribute to the preservation and improvement of the environment for the benefit of present and future generations,

Convinced that the Convention will contribute to the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Anxious that during its 1977 session the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament should concentrate on urgent negotiations on disarmament and arms limitation measures,

1. Refers the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution, to all States for their consideration, signature and ratification;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, as Depositary of the Convention, to open it for signature and ratification at the earliest possible date;

3. Expresses its hope for the widest possible adherence to the Convention;

4. Calls upon the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, without prejudice to the priorities established in its programme of work, to keep under review the problem of effectively averting the dangers of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the discussion by the General Assembly at its thirty-first session of the question of the prohibition of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques.

ANNEX

Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques

The States Parties to this Convention,

Guided by the interest of consolidating peace, and wishing to contribute to the cause of halting the arms race, and of bringing about general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, and of saving mankind from the danger of using new means of warfare,

Determined to continue negotiations with a view to achieving effective progress towards further measures in the field of disarmament,

Recognizing that scientific and technical advances may open new possibilities with respect of modification of the environment,

Recalling the Declaration of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, adopted at Stockholm on 16 June 1972,

Realizing that the use of environmental modification techniques for peaceful purposes could improve the interrelationship of man and nature and contribute to the preservation and improvement of the environment for the benefit of present and future generations,

Recognizing, however, that military or any other hostile use of such techniques could have effects extremely harmful to human welfare,

Desiring to prohibit effectively military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques in order to eliminate the dangers to mankind from such use, and affirming their willingness to work towards the achievement of this objective,

Desiring also to contribute to the strengthening of trust among nations and to the further improvement of the international situation in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Have agreed as follows:

Article I

1. Each State Party to this Convention undertakes not to engage in military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques having widespread, long-lasting or severe effects as the means of destruction, damage or injury to any other State Party.

2. Each State Party to this Convention undertakes not to assist, encourage, or induce any State, group of States or international organization to engage in activities contrary to the provisions of paragraph 1 of this article.

Article II

As used in article I, the term "environmental modification techniques" refers to any technique for changing—through the deliberate manipulation of natural processes—the dynamics, composition or structure of the Earth, including its biota, lithosphere, hydrosphere and atmosphere, or of outer space.

Article III

1. The provisions of this Convention shall not hinder the use of environmental modification techniques for peaceful purposes and shall be without prejudice to the generally recognized principles and applicable rules of international law concerning such use.

2. The States Parties to this Convention undertake to facilitate, and have the right to participate in, the fullest possible exchange of scientific and technological information on the use of environmental modification techniques for peaceful purposes. States Parties in a position to do so shall contribute, alone or together with other States or international organizations, to international economic and scientific co-operation in the preservation, improvement and peaceful utilization of the environment, with due consideration for the needs of the developing areas of the world.

Article IV

Each State Party to this Convention undertakes to take any measures it considers necessary in accordance with its constitutional processes to prohibit and prevent any activity in violation of the provisions of the Convention anywhere under its jurisdiction or control.

Article V

1. The States Parties to this Convention undertake to consult one another and to co-operate in solving any problems which may arise in relation to the objectives of, or in the application of the provisions of, the Convention. Consultation and co-operation pursuant to this article may also be undertaken through appropriate international procedures within the framework of the United Nations and in accordance with its Charter. These international procedures may include the services of appropriate international organizations, as well as of a Consultative Committee of Experts as provided for in paragraph 2 of this article.

2. For the purposes set forth in paragraph 1 of this article, the Depositary shall, within one month of the receipt of a request from any State Party to this Convention, convene a Consultative Committee of Experts. Any State Party may appoint an expert to the Committee whose functions and rules of procedure are set out in the annex, which constitutes an integral part of this Convention. The Committee shall transmit to the Depositary a summary of its findings of fact, incorporating all views and information presented to the Committee during its proceedings. The Depositary shall distribute the summary to all States Parties.

3. Any State Party to this Convention which has reason to believe that any other State Party is acting in breach of obligations deriving from the provisions of the Convention may lodge a complaint with the Security Council of the United Nations. Such a complaint should include all relevant information as well as all possible evidence supporting its validity.

4. Each State Party to this Convention undertakes to co-operate in carrying out any investigation which the Security Council may initiate, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, on the basis of the complaint received by the Council. The Security Council shall inform the States Parties of the results of the investigation.

5. Each State Party to this Convention undertakes to provide or support assistance, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, to any State Party which so requests, if the Security Council decides that such Party has been harmed or is likely to be harmed as a result of violation of the Convention.

Article VI

1. Any State Party to this Convention may propose amendments to the Convention. The text of any proposed amendment shall be submitted to the Depositary, who shall promptly circulate it to all States Parties.

2. An amendment shall enter into force for all States Parties to this Convention which have accepted it, upon the deposit with the Depositary of instruments of acceptance by a majority of States Parties. Thereafter it shall enter into force for any remaining State Party on the date of deposit of its instrument of acceptance.

Article VII

This Convention shall be of unlimited duration.

Article VIII

1. Five years after the entry into force of this Convention, a conference of the States Parties to the Convention shall be convened by the Depositary at Geneva, Switzerland. The conference shall review the operation of the Convention with a view to ensuring that its purposes and provisions are being realized, and shall in particular examine the effectiveness of the provisions of paragraph 1 of article I in eliminating the dangers of military or any other hostile use of environmental modification techniques.

2. At intervals of not less than five years thereafter, a majority of the States Parties to this Convention may obtain, by submitting a proposal to this effect to the Depositary, the convening of a conference with the same objectives.

3. If no conference has been convened pursuant to paragraph 2 of this article within ten years following the conclusion of a previous conference, the Depositary shall solicit the views of all States Parties to this Convention concerning the convening of such a conference. If one third or ten of the States Parties, whichever number is less, respond affirmatively, the Depositary shall take immediate steps to convene the conference.

Article IX

1. This Convention shall be open to all States for signature. Any State which does not sign the Convention before its entry into force in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may accede to it at any time.

2. This Convention shall be subject to ratification by signatory States. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. This Convention shall enter into force upon the deposit of instruments of ratification by twenty Governments in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article.

4. For those States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of this Convention, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The Depositary shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and the date of the entry into force of this Convention and of any amendments thereto, as well as of the receipt of other notices.

6. This Convention shall be registered by the Depositary in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article X

This Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall send duly certified copies thereof to the Governments of the signatory and acceding States.

In witness whereof, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto, have signed this Convention.

Annex to the Convention

Consultative Committee of Experts

1. The Consultative Committee of Experts shall undertake to make appropriate findings of fact and provide expert views relevant to any problem raised pursuant to paragraph 1 of article V of this Convention by the State Party requesting the convening of the Committee.

2. The work of the Consultative Committee of Experts shall be organized in such a way as to permit it to perform the functions set forth in paragraph 1 of this annex. The Committee shall decide procedural questions relative to the organization of its work, where possible by consensus, but otherwise by a majority of those present and voting. There shall be no voting on matters of substance.

3. The Depositary or his representative shall serve as the Chairman of the Committee.

4. Each expert may be assisted at meetings by one or more advisers.

5. Each expert shall have the right, through the Chairman, to request from States, and from international organizations, such information and assistance as the expert considers desirable for the accomplishment of the Committee's work.

*The Convention was opened for signature at Geneva, Switzerland, on 18 May 1977.

Reduction of military budgets

The Secretary-General submitted to the 1976 session of the General Assembly a report entitled "Measurement and international reporting of military expenditures." The report was prepared by a Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets he had appointed at the Assembly's request.<sup>29</sup>

The Group of Experts had been asked to study four specific technical issues of the measurement of military expenditures, namely: the definition and scope of the military sector and of military expenditures, and a standardized accounting system; the valuation of resources in the military sector; the deflation for price change in military production; and the international value comparison and exchange rates relevant to military production.

The experts noted that to fulfil their mandate they had applied the following criteria to their study: reasonable comprehensiveness in defining the scope of the military sector and in determining what constituted military expenditure, balanced by pragmatic selectiveness in excluding unessential elements; identification of measurement objectives that were as close as practicable to the fundamental disarmament goal of the resolution; and consistency of valuations to ensure comparability over time and between States.

They emphasized that one of the major recommendations of the report was the implementation of an international reporting system for military expenditures, while other technical issues concerning the agreed reduction of military budgets remained to be solved.

In the substantive chapters of the report, they formulated a definition of the scope and content of the military expenditures, and, on that basis, designed a reporting formula (matrix) as an instrument for a standardized reporting system. They observed that standardized reporting in the form recommended would require considerable effort, and therefore suggested a step-by-step implementation of this system. They put forward also suggestions concerning the valuation of resources in the military sector, price and volume measures of military expenditures, and methods for international value comparisons of military expenditures.

The experts considered that while their recommendations were not necessarily exhaustive, they were viable, and they suggested that the international reporting instrument they had developed should be made operational, tested and refined. At a later stage other issues involved in the expenditure limitation, such as verification, should be discussed. At the appropriate time, further consideration should be given to the utilization of part of the resources released from the reduction of military expenditures for social and economic development, particularly that of the developing countries.

The report was discussed in the Assembly's First Committee, which held a general debate on disarmament issues. States participating in the debate continued to support the desirability of the reduction of military budgets as a concrete contribution to disarmament, and most regarded that as an appropriate method to provide increased development assistance. Developing countries which spoke on the subject, including Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Ghana and Morocco, urged action and drew attention to the increase of military expenditures, reduction of which could make significant funds available to meet part of the needs of developing countries. Pakistan considered that reductions should be made in such a manner that the military balance would not be upset, either globally or regionally, and believed that the success of the idea would depend ultimately on the extent to which existing differences among the great powers could be decreased.

The report of the Group of Experts was considered as helpful by some developing countries, for instance Ecuador, Nepal and Sierra Leone, while Sudan and Somalia expressed the hope that technical considerations would not long delay implementation of the valuable initiative.

Iran held it to be significant that a reasonably methodical approach had been envisaged to arrive eventually at a standardized system of comparison and reporting of military budgets. It stated at the same time that the cardinal principle guiding its decision on this issue was the conviction that the defence postures of States were closely linked to their perception of security. Jordan commented on the complexities of the technical issues of the reduction of military expenditures, and felt that difficulties in this connexion in the highly industrialized countries were enhanced by the fact that military producing-capabilities had become inherent components of their economies.

The USSR and others, including Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Mongolia, recalling the Assembly's decision of 7 December 1973 calling for a reduction of the military budgets of the permanent members of the Security Council,<sup>30</sup> considered that the practical realization of this proposal had been delayed due to the fact that certain permanent members of the Council continued to display reluctance to implement the appeal of the General Assembly. The USSR said it was prepared to be flexible and consider higher or lower figures than the 10 per cent originally suggested, from which reductions could begin in 1977 as a first step, if other permanent members would show a similar readiness.

Austria felt that the experts' suggestion for testing and refining the reporting instrument deserved careful study, while Finland believed that the report constituted a valuable basis for further consideration. The Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the members of the European Economic Community, stressed that those nine Governments were greatly concerned at the high level of spending on armaments. They hoped that eventual agreements on the reduction of military budgets would lead to the release of resources for peaceful purposes, including aid to others. The Netherlands also said these Governments felt that the problem of reducing military budgets could be approached only by the development of adequate verification and measurement techniques, and therefore the work of the Group of Experts was welcome.

Sweden considered the report as an important and promising contribution towards resolving the analytical and technical problems involved, and held that the definition, scope and content of military expenditures recommended in the report should constitute the basic framework for further procedures. Sweden was prepared to furnish information according to the standardized reporting instrument, but noted that such reporting might require a considerable effort on the part of many States. Sweden therefore supported step-by-step implementation to overcome any difficulties encountered. Any improved flow of information on military expenditures would contribute to confidence-building among States, in Sweden's view.

The United Kingdom hoped that with the necessary international co-operation the reporting method devised by the experts would prove to be a sound basis for progress. Japan considered the report objective and practical and supported the implementation of the suggestions in the report.

Introducing a draft resolution on the question in the First Committee, Mexico quoted the conclusions of the experts, who had commented that the orderly reporting of military expenditures was the first major step towards the objective of limiting and reducing such expenditures.

The text, sponsored also by Ecuador and Sweden, was approved by the First Committee on 1 December 1976 by 104 votes to 2, with 12 abstentions, and was adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December by a recorded vote of 120 to 2, with 11 abstentions, as resolution 31/87.

The Assembly thereby expressed appreciation for the report of the experts, asked the Secretary-General to distribute it widely and invited all States to submit their comments before 30 April 1977 on the matters covered therein, in particular their views on the proposed reporting instrument, any information on their military-expenditure accounting practices and suggestions on possible practical approaches for the further development of the standardized reporting system.

The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to submit an analysis of the comments provided by States and decided to discuss the matter again at its next session.

Among the States explaining their votes in the First Committee was the USSR, which said that in its view the resolution did not promote the solution of the problem of reduction of military budgets; it diverted States from the political solutions needed. The USSR believed that efforts should be directed not to abstract searches for things that did not yield practical results but to genuine realistic measures to reduce military budgets. For those reasons, the USSR abstained in the vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 3463(XXX) of 11 December 1975 the General Assembly, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of a group of qualified experts, a report containing an analysis and examination in concrete terms of issues regarding a system of international measurement, reporting and comparison of military expenditures,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in response to the aforementioned resolution,

Reaffirming its conviction of the urgent necessity that the States permanent members of the Security Council, as well as any other State with comparable military expenditures, carry out reductions in their military budgets,

Reaffirming also its conviction that part of the resources thus released should be utilized for social and economic development, particularly that of the developing countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the Group of Experts on the Reduction of Military Budgets which assisted in the preparation of the report;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the report to be issued as a United Nations publication and widely distributed;

3. Invites all States to communicate to the Secretary-General before 30 April 1977 their comments with regard to matters covered in the report and, in particular:

(a) Their views and suggestions on the proposed standardized reporting instrument contained in the report;

(b) Any information they may wish to convey on their military expenditure accounting practices, including a description of methods currently in use;

(c) Suggestions and recommendations concerning possible practical approaches for the further development and operation of a standardized reporting system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of an intergovernmental group of budgetary experts appointed by him, a report containing an analysis of the comments provided by States pursuant to paragraph 3 above, in the light of the suggestions contained in the above-mentioned report, as well as any further conclusions and recommendations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to distribute that report not later than 31 August 1977;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets."

Implementation of the objectives of the Disarmament Decade

On 10 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/68 dealing with the question of implementing the purposes and objectives of the Disarmament Decade (the 1970s).

By this resolution, the Assembly, inter alia, reaffirmed the purposes of the Disarmament Decade; deplored the meagre achievements of the Decade in terms of disarmament measures and arms limitation agreements, and the detrimental effects on world peace and economy of the continuing unproductive arms race, particularly the nuclear one.

The Assembly called upon all States to place at the center of their preoccupations the adoption of effective measures for the cessation of the arms race, the reduction of military expenditures, and progress towards general and complete disarmament, and it called upon Member States and the Secretary-General to intensify their efforts in support of the link between disarmament and development. Further, the Assembly urged the Committee of the Conference on Disarmament (CCD) to adopt a comprehensive programme for the cessation of the arms race, requested the Secretary-General to ensure proper co-ordination of disarmament and development activities within the United Nations system, and called on non-governmental organizations and other international institutions to further the goals of the Decade.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/68, without vote, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved the text by consensus on 29 November. The text was sponsored by Austria, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Finland, India, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, the Niger, Nigeria, the Philippines, Romania, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Republic of Cameroon and Yugoslavia.

The resolution adopted by the Assembly reflected the discussion in the First Committee, where many Members had expressed their concern at the meagre achievements of the Disarmament Decade. Also referred to in the discussion was the link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade. Nigeria considered that discussions of the link had been assuming an air of artificiality and said the sponsors of the resolution hoped to restore a balance of concern to those discussions. Members also noted that CCD had discussed this question at its 1976 session.

Following the vote in the First Committee, Australia, Canada, the Netherlands (on behalf of the nine members of the European Communities) and the United States explained their positions on the resolution. They had joined in the consensus despite a number of reservations on the text. Though supporting disarmament and development, these Members continued to question the assertion of a direct link between the two concepts. They felt that progress towards each goal depended on the solution of distinct types of problems and each should be considered independently of the other. The United States added that, while it would welcome greater progress in the field of disarmament, it did not believe that the achievements of the first half of the Disarmament Decade were meagre.

Referring to the operative paragraph by which CCD was urged to adopt a comprehensive disarmament programme at its 1977 session, Canada expressed the view that discussion of such a comprehensive programme should not divert CCD'S attention from the priority questions of achieving agreement on a treaty banning all nuclear-weapon tests and a treaty to prohibit the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons, as well as on their destruction.

China stated that had the resolution been put to the vote it would not have participated.

A/31/378. Report of First Committee.

Resolution 31/68, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/378, adopted without vote by Assembly on 10 December 1976, meeting 96.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 2602 E (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it declared the decade of the 1970s the Disarmament Decade and envisaged a link between the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade, Deeply concerned that, despite the repeated requests by the General Assembly for the implementation of effective measures aimed at its cessation, the arms race, particularly of nuclear armaments, has continued to increase at an alarming speed, absorbing enormous material and human resources from the economic and social development of all countries and constituting a grave danger for world peace and security,

Considering that the ever spiralling arms race is not compatible with the efforts aimed at promoting international peace and security as well as establishing a new international economic order, as defined in the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974,

Recalling its resolution 1722 (XVI) of 20 December 1961, in which it recognized that all States have a deep interest in disarmament negotiations,

Convinced that the participation of all nuclear-weapon States in the efforts to contain the nuclear-arms race and to reduce and eliminate all armaments is indispensable for a full measure of success in these efforts,

Conscious that, disarmament being a matter of grave concern to all States, there is a pressing need for all Governments and peoples to be informed about and understand the situation prevailing in the field of the arms race and disarmament, and that the United Nations has a central role in this connexion in keeping with its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the suggestion made by the Secretary-General in the introduction to his report on the work of the Organization that the General Assembly might discuss various ways in which public concern about disarmament could be stimulated and channelled in constructive ways,

Having received the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, including, in particular, the part dealing with its mid-term review of the Disarmament Decade with a view to reappraising its tasks and duties in order to accelerate the pace of its efforts to negotiate truly effective disarmament and arms limitation agreements,

1. Reaffirms the purposes and objectives of the Disarmament Decade;

2. Deplores the meagre achievements of the Disarmament Decade in terms of truly effective disarmament and arms limitation agreements, and the detrimental effects on world peace and economy of the continuing unproductive and wasteful arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race;

3. Calls again upon all States, as well as the organs concerned with disarmament issues, to place at the centre of their preoccupations the adoption of effective measures for the cessation of the arms race, especially in the nuclear field, and for the reduction of military expenditures and to make sustained efforts with a view to achieving progress towards general and complete disarmament;

4. Calls upon Member States and the Secretary-General to intensify their efforts in support of the link between disarmament and development, envisaged in General Assembly resolution 2602 E (XXIV) on the Disarmament Decade, so as to promote disarmament negotiations and to ensure that the human and material resources freed by disarmament are used to promote economic and social development, particularly in the developing countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure a proper co-ordination of disarmament and development activities within the United Nations system of organizations and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to offer appropriate assistance and information to Member States that may require them in pursuance of the purposes and objectives of the Disarmament Decade;

7. Urges the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to adopt, during its 1977 session, a comprehensive programme dealing with all aspects of the problem of the cessation of the arms race and general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2602 E (XXIV) proclaiming the Disarmament Decade;

8. Calls upon non-governmental organizations and international institutions and organizations to further the goals of the Disarmament Decade;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Effective measures to implement the purposes and objectives of the Disarmament Decade."

World disarmament conference

The Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference established by the General Assembly in 1973<sup>31</sup> was convened again in 1976, and held eight meetings at United Nations Headquarters between 1 March and 14 July 1976. In addition to the States appointed to serve on the Committee, France, the USSR and the United Kingdom participated in the Committee's work, while China and the United States maintained contact with the Committee through its Chairman. The German Democratic Republic attended meetings as an observer.

In its report to the General Assembly, the Ad Hoc Committee presented an outline of the current thinking of Governments with respect to the convening of a world disarmament conference.

A large group of States, the report said, demanded the convening of a world disarmament conference as soon as possible, after due preparation, and had proposed resolutions to that end. Those States held that the participation of all nuclear-weapon States was essential, although the participation of all States should be on an equal footing. In the opinion of those States, such a conference could approve guidelines for universal disarmament, in particular with respect to nuclear disarmament, and for utilization of resources freed through disarmament. They also indicated that if it became evident that it would not be possible to convene a world disarmament conference, a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament issues should be convened.

Other States, the report went on to say, considered as useful the idea of convening a world disarmament conference, which might play a catalytic role in stimulating action in international fora provided it was adequately prepared and the participation of all nuclear-weapon States was assured.

Another group of States, the report continued, decisively supported the holding of a world disarmament conference, maintaining that the idea assumed ever greater momentum and political relevance each year, that political conditions for the convening of a conference, being especially promoted by the relaxation of international tension and the ever increasing importance of disarmament, were ripe, and that the conference should be convened as soon as possible and preparatory steps be taken without delay, including, as their primary element, the concrete definition of questions to be discussed at the conference. They believed that issues advanced as pre-conditions could be more appropriately dealt with by the conference itself.

Also, some States held that the Ad Hoc Committee had completed the study of the attitudes of States, and that the General Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session should take a decision on an appropriate course of action towards the convocation of a world disarmament conference.

Another viewpoint expressed, the Committee continued, was that the Ad Hoc Committee should draw the attention of the General Assembly to the fact that, while mindful of the uniqueness of certain features of its work and collective efforts aimed at achieving progress, the Committee nevertheless felt that the mechanism it provided, although significant, was far more adequate.

One nuclear-weapon State considered that a world disarmament conference could play a role in the disarmament process at an appropriate time and held that it was not the lack of a suitable forum but the lack of political agreement that constituted the principal obstacle to progress in disarmament. A world disarmament conference would be unlikely to overcome this lack of agreement and thus would probably hinder rather than assist efforts to reach concrete arms-control agreements. Therefore, it would be premature to set a date or start preparations for a world disarmament conference.

Another nuclear-weapon State held the view that a world disarmament conference could only be convened if certain prerequisites conducive to genuine disarmament were met. The convening of or preparations for such a conference could only be acceptable, according to that view, if all nuclear-weapon States, in particular the two major nuclear-weapon powers, would undertake an obligation (a) not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, particularly against non-nuclear-weapon States and (b) to end all forms of military presence on the territory of other countries by those concerned. If such preconditions were met, a world disarmament conference could be convened with a clear aim, namely, to consider the question of the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of all nuclear weapons.

The Ad Hoc Committee also presented the Assembly with an analysis of the conclusions it had submitted to the thirtieth (1975) Assembly session. Among other things, it said that the concept of a world disarmament conference to be held after adequate preparation and with universal participation, including that of the nuclear-weapon States, enjoyed wide support, but that there was a basic divergence of opinion among the nuclear-weapon States with regard to the timing and conditions for the convening of such a conference.

Regarding the main objectives envisaged for a world disarmament conference, the report noted that they ranged between two specific conference models: a conference aimed at arriving, during its course, at agreements on concrete measures of disarmament in nuclear and conventional fields, and a conference streamlining the machinery, proposing guidelines and providing impetus to disarmament negotiations. The scope and nature of the conference would vary with the function that might be assigned to it, the report pointed out, and the political conditions that might apply to a conference aiming at actual measures of disarmament might not of necessity be essential for a conference with more limited goals.

The Ad Hoc Committee noted that no consensus with respect to convening a world disarmament conference had been reached among the nuclear-weapon States; it appeared to the Committee that efforts towards the creation of appropriate conditions for the convening of such a conference should continue and that opportunities conducive to the achievement of progress in disarmament should be fully explored.

This report was before the General Assembly's First Committee when it took up the question. The concept of a world disarmament conference continued to receive support, particularly from the socialist States of Eastern Europe and Mongolia. However, a 75-power proposal to convene a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, which was also before the First Committee (see pp. 54-55), was considered by many Members to offer an alternative approach for the consideration of disarmament problems in a universal forum. Sri Lanka, introducing the 75-power text, pointed out that it was an initiative of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, who had met in Colombo in August 1976. The sponsors expected that the special session would be concerned with substantial matters covering the whole field of disarmament and that it might bring about practical results.

Some Members, for instance the German Democratic Republic, Poland and the USSR, emphasized that a special session should be seen as an interim stage which by its decisions could help prepare for a future world disarmament conference. They pointed out that the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries had proposed that the question of convening a world disarmament conference should be included in the agenda of the special session.

With respect to the future mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference, its Chairman (Iran) observed that it would be natural to expect that the Committee's mandate would be renewed only if clear-cut guidelines emerged as to how its efforts should be channelled.

The socialist States of Eastern Europe and several others maintained that the Ad Hoc Committee should continue its work. Bulgaria said that preparation for a world disarmament conference should be conducted along with the preparation for the special session of the General Assembly; Mongolia suggested that the Ad Hoc Committee's mandate should be extended and that it should be requested to report to the General Assembly in 1977.

A draft resolution to this effect was submitted by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR.

By this text, the General Assembly would request the Ad Hoc Committee to prepare a report containing observations and proposals on a world disarmament conference, including any recommendations it deemed appropriate, with a view to facilitating the discussion of the question at the special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament.

Introducing the text in the First Committee, the USSR emphasized the sponsors' view that the special session could play a useful role in preparing for a world disarmament conference.

Another draft resolution was sponsored by 17 Members: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Mali, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Peru, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia. This text was subsequently adopted by the Assembly as its resolution 31/190. The General Assembly thereby requested the Ad Hoc Committee to maintain close contact with the representatives of States possessing nuclear weapons in order to remain currently informed of their respective attitudes and to consider any relevant comments and observations. For this purpose, the Ad Hoc Committee was to meet briefly and submit a report to the General Assembly in 1977. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

When Argentina introduced this resolution, it stated that the text was the result of intense negotiations not only among its sponsors but also with other interested Members, including the nuclear-weapon States.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/190 without a vote on 21 December 1976, as did the First Committee, which approved the text on 2 December. The six-power text was not pressed to a vote by its sponsors.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3260(XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 3469(XXX) of 11 December 1975,

Reiterating its conviction that all peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that all States should be in a position to contribute to the adoption of measures for the achievement of this goal,

Stressing anew its belief that a world disarmament conference, adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time, could promote the realization of such aims and that the co-operation of all nuclear-weapon Powers would considerably facilitate this attainment,

Noting the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference, Noting further that in its resolution 31/189 B of 21 December 1976 the General Assembly decided to convene a special session devoted to disarmament,

1. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference to maintain close contact with the representatives of the States possessing nuclear weapons in order to remain currently informed of their respective attitudes, as well as to consider any relevant comments and observations which might be made to the Committee and, for this purpose, to meet briefly and submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, in accordance with its established procedure;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "World Disarmament Conference."

General and complete disarmament

Among the topics dealt with by the General Assembly at its 1976 session under the agenda item on general and complete disarmament was a proposal for a special session of the Assembly on disarmament, the international transfer of conventional arms, the declaration of a new disarmament philosophy and regional arms control.

Among the documents before the Assembly was a memorandum submitted by the USSR on the question of ending the arms race and achieving disarmament. Emphasizing the gravity of the armaments question and the urgency of finding a solution, the USSR identified what it considered to be the main areas for co-ordinated action. These were: cessation of the nuclear arms race and reduction and subsequent elimination of nuclear weapons; prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests; consolidation of the régime of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons; prohibition and destruction of chemical weapons; prohibition of the development of new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction; reduction of armed forces and conventional armaments; zones of peace in the Indian Ocean and other regions; reduction of military budgets; and convening of a world disarmament conference.

Special session of the General Assembly on disarmament

The question of convening a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament was widely discussed at the 1976 Assembly session. Mexico, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia were among those which saw in the special session a means of extricating efforts in the area of disarmament from their current state of stagnation. They, among others, referred to the declaration of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo in August 1976, submitted to the Assembly by Sri Lanka, which had recommended, inter alia, the holding of a special session of the General Assembly as early as possible, and not later than 1978.

Mexico said that, although it still considered that the institutionalization of a world disarmament conference would fill a gap in the available international machinery in the field of disarmament, it supported the idea of holding a special session since it had been found impossible to achieve genuine progress on the convening of a world disarmament conference. Australia expressed the hope that a special session would create a better atmosphere for the disarmament negotiations. France emphasized that the impact that might be anticipated from such a meeting would not be comparable to that generated by a world conference, but did not wish to minimize the advantages to be expected from such an initiative and therefore supported it. The United States and Iran were prepared to consider action to set in motion preparations for a special session to be held in 1978.

Most of the States of Eastern Europe expressed sympathy with the idea of convening a special session on disarmament, but considered that this could not supplant the holding of a world disarmament conference. The USSR, for instance, viewed such a special session as an intermediate stage, the decisions of which would pave the way for comprehensive and radical consideration of the whole complex of issues involved at a world disarmament conference. In Romania's view a special session would provide the opportunity for comprehensive debates on the armaments situation and the principles that should govern disarmament, as well as for recommendations that might serve as a basis for negotiations.

Some scepticism was also voiced. Thus, China, supported by Albania, stated that lack of progress in disarmament was due to the lack of will for genuine disarmament on the part of the super-powers. Under those circumstances, the convening of a session in whatever form could not possibly achieve any progress in genuine disarmament.

Notes of caution about the expectations concerning a special session on disarmament, as well as the results emanating therefrom, were sounded by a number of States, including Colombia, Denmark and the United States.

The importance of careful and thorough preparatory work was stressed by Australia, Belgium, Denmark, Indonesia, Kuwait, Mexico, the Netherlands, Spain, Sri Lanka, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. Both Belgium and the Netherlands felt that if the session did not yield positive results, the consequence would be an acceleration of the arms race and the prospects of fruitful negotiations would become even more remote.

During the course of the debate, various suggestions were made concerning the priorities and objectives of the special session, as well as agenda items. Egypt, Ireland and Norway, among others, referred to the link between disarmament and development. Norway drew attention to the fact that the current decade was both the Disarmament Decade and the Second United Nations Development Decade, and considered it appropriate that a special session reflect that fact by including on its agenda the question of the relationship between armaments and resources.

Iraq considered that the agenda should include the detailed study of the different aspects of disarmament, the preparation of a list of priorities with provision for their study, and the convening of a world disarmament conference.

Argentina, Chile, the United States and Yugoslavia stressed that the special session should not be considered as a substitute for or alternative to existing disarmament bodies. Japan urged that the proposed session should not interfere with the concrete negotiations being conducted in such existing disarmament bodies as the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament.

Italy suggested that it would be wise, if the special session was convened, to adjourn momentarily any preparations for a world disarmament conference; the deliberations on the matter should be left to the special session.

A resolution by which the Assembly decided to convene a special session in May/June 1978 was sponsored by 75 Member States and adopted without vote on 21 December 1976. The Assembly further decided by this resolution (31/189 B) to establish a Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, composed of 54 Member States appointed by the Assembly President on the basis of equitable geographical distribution. The Preparatory Committee was to examine all relevant questions relating to the special session, including its agenda, and submit recommendations in 1977. The Assembly then invited all Member States to submit their views on the agenda and other relevant questions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The sponsors of resolution 31/189 B were Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, Canada, Chad, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the Upper Volta, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

The Assembly acted on the recommendation of the First Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 2 December.

Statements in explanation of position were made in the First Committee by several Members. China said that the special session could not be expected to achieve any progress in genuine disarmament, because the lack of progress in disarmament was due to the lack of will for genuine disarmament on the part of the super-powers. China said it would not participate in the vote.

The USSR reiterated that it saw a special session as an interim stage before the convening of a world disarmament conference, entrusted with the task of laying the groundwork for such a conference; in its work there should be a reflection of the responsibility for the cause of disarmament on the part of all States of the world, primarily the major powers, which possessed the most powerful armaments and armed forces.

The German Democratic Republic stated that while it supported the Assembly's decision, it regretted that there was no mention in the resolution of the question of convening a world disarmament conference, despite the fact that the Colombo Conference had considered that the item should be included on the agenda of the special session.

Declaring its support for the text, the United States warned, however, that unrealistic public expectations could be stimulated by the promises often associated with large conferences and were just as frequently disappointed. Consequently, the United States would approach the proposal for a special session with both caution and hope.

International transfer of conventional arms

increase in the flow and acquisition of arms, mainly conventional. In their view, the increased international trade in armaments contributed to conflict and other forms of insecurity and was a wasteful diversion of resources from social and economic development programmes.

A draft resolution on this matter was introduced, sponsored by Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Liberia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, the Philippines, Singapore, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Venezuela. By this draft, the General Assembly would, inter alia, invite all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on the question of the international transfer of conventional arms, and request him to report those views to the Assembly and also, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, to make a factual study of the question, which would be placed on the agenda of the 1977 Assembly session.

Pakistan submitted amendments to the draft resolution to include the question of production as well as transfer of arms and to indicate that the acquisition of conventional arms might be for the exercise of the legitimate rights of peoples to self-determination or in response to the remaining vestiges of colonialism and to international disputes. Following consultations between the sponsors and Pakistan, the original text was modified, inter alia, to the effect that the future deliberations of the issue were to include not only the international transfers but also the production of conventional weapons. Pakistan agreed not to press its other amendments to a vote.

Speaking on this draft resolution, Argentina said that it could share the concern about the arms trade if it were directed towards agreement among the few nations that had a significant military-equipment industry to halt the production and dissemination of conventional weapons, but could not share that concern if the idea was designed to suggest to developing countries what level of military equipment met their defence needs. India, observing that the question had been considered in the First Committee on at least two previous occasions without a resolution having been adopted, argued that the proposal would restrict the freedom of small powers while leaving the major powers free to increase their arsenals. In the absence of other disarmament measures, including nuclear disarmament, the draft resolution was, in its opinion, discriminatory against the smaller and less developed countries.

On 2 December, India, on behalf also of Algeria, Egypt, Mexico, Nigeria and Yugoslavia, moved to adjourn the debate on the question of the international transfer of conventional arms. The motion was adopted by a recorded vote of 51 to 32, with 33 abstentions. China did not participate in the vote.<sup>32</sup>

New disarmament philosophy

By the terms of a draft resolution submitted by Liberia in the First Committee, the General Assembly would issue a declaration of a new philosophy on disarmament. The proposed declaration would state, inter alia, that improvements in the world political climate and the launching of a new international economic order had made disarmament essential.

When Liberia introduced the draft resolution, it emphasized that increasing military expenditures were incompatible with the establishment of a new international economic order. It expressed doubt over the concept of deterrence and stressed that the draft resolution aimed at making a breakthrough for disarmament negotiations and was supplementary to other disarmament resolutions.

Subsequently, Liberia agreed to a suggestion by Canada that, in view of the fact that some Members would be unable to obtain instructions on the draft resolution in the limited time remaining, Liberia would request the Secretary-General to circulate the draft resolution as a General Assembly document rather than seek a formal decision on it at the 1976 session.

Regional arms control

At the thirty-first (1976) session of the General Assembly, Belgium suggested that the Assembly should consider possibilities for negotiations on disarmament and arms control, particularly in the conventional area, at the regional level. Referring to the example of regional negotiations in Latin America and to the Vienna talks on mutual force reductions in central Europe, Belgium expressed the view that security requirements were more easily perceived among States in the same region. It considered that regional and global disarmament were complementary and that each had a contribution to make to the strengthening of international security, which could be endangered by imbalances or conflicts at the regional level.

Because of the complexity of the subject, Belgium said it would like to see the General Assembly, at that time or at a later stage, call for a general and exhaustive examination of all the measures which, at the regional or subregional level, could be the subject of negotiations. Such a comprehensive study might be made by the Secretary-General with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, and perhaps be modelled on the 1975 study of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

On 26 November 1976, Belgium transmitted to the Secretary-General an aide-memoire setting forth a number of these points. Belgium did not submit a resolution on the matter, but invited the comments of other Members on its proposal.

A number of other Members, including Pakistan, Singapore, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Kingdom, also expressed support for phased or regional approaches to arms control and disarmament.

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Bahrain, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Central African Republic, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Oman, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, Yemen, Yugoslavia

Against: Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Liberia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Philippines, Portugal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Austria, Bangladesh, Burma, Chad, Costa Rica, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guinea-Bissau, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Malawi, Malaysia, Mauritius, Mozambique, Niger, Pakistan, Panama, Romania, Sweden, Togo, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Zaire, Zambia.

Resolution 31/189 B, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/386, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Mindful that the continuation of the arms race endangers international peace and security and also diverts vast resources urgently needed for economic and social development,

Convinced that peace can be secured through the implementation of disarmament measures, particularly of nuclear disarmament, conducive to the realization of the final objective, namely, general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Reaffirming that disarmament is one of the essential objectives of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, called for a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament and made specific suggestions in this regard in its Political Declaration and its resolution on disarmament,

1. Decides to convene a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to be held in New York in May/June 1978;

2. Further decides to establish a Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament, composed of fifty-four Member States appointed by the President of the Assembly on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, with the mandate of examining all relevant questions relating to the special session, including its agenda, and of submitting to the Assembly at its thirty-second session appropriate recommendations thereon;

3. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on the agenda and all other relevant questions relating to the special session of the General Assembly not later than 15 April 1977;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the replies of Member States pursuant to paragraph 3 above to the Preparatory Committee and to render it all necessary assistance, including the provision of essential background information, relevant documents and summary records;

5. Requests the Preparatory Committee to meet for a short organizational session of not longer than one week, before 31 March 1977, inter alia to set the dates for its substantive sessions;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session an item entitled: "Special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament: report of the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament."

Strengthening the role of the United Nations in the disarmament field

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Disarmament, established by a General Assembly decision of 12 December 1975<sup>33</sup> met at United Nations Headquarters from 26 to 29 January, from 14 to 24 June and from 7 to 10 September 1976. The Committee had before it views of Governments and of the Secretary-General on the matter.

The Committee decided to take as the basis for its discussions a working paper submitted by Sweden. This paper embodied the points on which Sweden felt a consensus could be reached.

A working group of the whole was established at the June session. It held 11 meetings between 16 and 24 June 1976. In addition to the Swedish paper, it considered informal proposals by several members and a Mexican paper dealing with the work of the First Committee, the publishing of a United Nations disarmament periodical and the

After completing its review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, the Ad Hoc Committee agreed on a number of proposals which it submitted to the General Assembly.

These proposals dealt with, inter alia: improved methods of work of the First Committee of the General Assembly in disarmament matters, making available the annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to the First Committee before it was dealt with in plenary; consideration of the future role of the United Nations Disarmament Commission; making available the report of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) by 15 September each year and all CCD documents to all United Nations Members on a regular basis; increased use of in-depth studies of the arms race and related matters; annual publication of a disarmament yearbook containing a descriptive review of main developments, factual information and so forth; consideration of publication of a disarmament periodical; and continued dissemination by the Secretariat of information on disarmament.

Also, the Ad Hoc Committee recommended that States participating in disarmament negotiations should explore the possibilities of entrusting appropriate functions to the United Nations, its specialized agencies or IAEA with respect to the implementation of multilateral disarmament agreements, and should consider including a review conference provision in disarmament agreements, requesting the United Nations to service such conferences. Finally, the Ad Hoc Committee suggested strengthening the Secretariat to undertake these new tasks; it proposed establishment of a United Nations centre for disarmament headed by an assistant secretary-general.

At the final meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee in September, several participants made interpretative statements and expressed views on the Committee's agreed proposals. Those views were recorded in the annex to the Committee's report to the General Assembly. Several members stated that they had joined in the consensus of the Committee so as to help obtain general agreement, but they had submitted more comprehensive views, which were on record, reflecting their stands on the strengthening of the United Nations role in the field of disarmament.

At the Assembly's thirty-first (1976) session, the First Committee took up the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee.

There was general agreement among Members that disarmament was a primary task of the United Nations and its role in that field should be strengthened. Among the actions called for were: intensification of United Nations activities in respect of negotiations on and conclusion of agreements on disarmament and arms control; improvement of the necessary organizational machinery and working procedures; and more active involvement of the Secretariat, notably in compiling, analysing and distributing information on matters of disarmament.

Australia, Austria, Belgium, France, Ireland, Liberia, Mauritius, Norway, Romania and Sweden were among those expressing the view that the recommendations contained in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee represented only a first step; they should be implemented urgently, and followed by further reinforcement of the role of the United Nations. Austria, for example, considered the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee to be only a very moderate first step towards a comprehensive reform of the disarmament machinery; the vital question of the relationship between the General Assembly and CCD had not been discussed in detail and most of the proposals by Governments for reinforcing the role of the Organization in the field of disarmament were insufficiently reflected in the Committee's proposals.

France believed that a comprehensive analysis, both of the substance and the institutional procedures of disarmament, should reveal the conditions which would make it possible to achieve concrete results. It found the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee very modest and not commensurate with the need to make the adjustments in the United Nations that should bring about progress in disarmament. That called for a thorough study of structural and institutional problems that had so far acted as a brake on the development of the work.

A number of States, among them particularly the Eastern European countries, shared the view that the United Nations should increase its contribution to curbing the arms race. At the same time, however, some of those States, for instance Bulgaria, expressed doubt about the usefulness of seeking new devices or procedures and felt that the United Nations should rather take energetic measures to implement the decisions on disarmament it had already adopted.

Brazil expressed scepticism as to the utility of rationalizing negotiation procedures when the essential political will to reach agreement was lacking on the part of the States concerned. India and Mauritius felt that it would have been more appropriate for the Assembly to wait for the special session devoted to disarmament before taking action on the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Referring to various recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee, several Members, including Australia, Austria, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Romania and Sweden, emphasized the General Assembly's role in matters of disarmament, and called for more effective working methods in the First Committee. In Austria's view, the proposals of the Ad Hoc Committee in this respect amounted to no more than cosmetic changes. Spain felt that the Security Council might be requested to play a more active role in the context of disarmament pursuant to Articles 26 and 29 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>34</sup>

Also referred to in this context were the functioning of CCD and its relationship with the United Nations. Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Sierra Leone, Tunisia, the USSR and the United States were among those which considered CCD to have important achievements to its credit. Other States, however, criticized the lack of substantive progress in CCD's work. Among these States were Brazil, Colombia, Ethiopia, France, Kuwait and Qatar. Denmark, France and Kuwait expressed regret that CCD was not formally a part of the United Nations.

The measures proposed by the Ad Hoc Committee to achieve a closer link between CCD and the United Nations were supported. Also the suggestion was made that non-members of CCD be enabled to submit disarmament proposals to it.

Support was expressed for the Ad Hoc Committee's recommendation that the United Nations should stimulate the concern and interest of the public and inform it on disarmament. However, the USSR felt that the proposal for the publication of a yearbook on disarmament providing various types of information, and also the preparation of criteria for assessing such information, diverted attention from a solution to the problem of actual disarmament and, because of that, was used by the opponents of disarmament to cover up their reluctance to agree to practical measures in that field.

On 14 December 1976, the General Assembly, with the adoption of resolution 31/90, endorsed the agreed proposals of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Disarmament relating to: improved methods of work in the First Committee on disarmament matters; relationship between the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies in the field of disarmament; role of the United Nations Disarmament Commission; role of the United Nations in providing assistance on request in multilateral and regional disarmament negotiations; relationship between the General Assembly and CCD; increased use of in-depth studies of the arms race, disarmament and related matters; improvement of existing United Nations facilities for the collection and dissemination of information on disarmament issues in order to keep Governments and the public informed; assistance by the Secretariat to States parties to multilateral disarmament agreements regarding the effective functioning of such agreements; and strengthening of the resources of the Secretariat.

The Assembly decided to keep the question under review and asked the Secretary-General to implement as soon as possible the measures recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee that fell within his area of responsibility, bearing in mind the importance of recruiting the staff for the proposed centre for disarmament on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

Resolution 31/90 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which approved the text by consensus on 1 December. The text was sponsored by Austria, Belgium, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, Ghana, Grenada, Ireland, Italy, Liberia, Morocco, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, the Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Tunisia and Venezuela. Amendments by India, Mauritius and Nigeria, which related to adequate geographical distribution of posts in the proposed disarmament centre, were withdrawn after the sponsors had revised the text to include this point.

Resolution 31/90, as recommended by First Committee, A/31/387, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1976, meeting 98.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3484 B (XXX) of 12 December 1975, in which it decided to carry out a review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Disarmament has carried out the task entrusted to it by the General Assembly in the aforementioned resolution,

Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee, which contains, inter alia, a set of agreed proposals with regard to the following subjects:

- (a) Improved methods of work of the First Committee in disarmament matters,
- (b) Relationship between the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies in the field of disarmament,
- (c) Role of the United Nations Disarmament Commission,
- (d) Role of the United Nations in providing assistance on request in multilateral and regional disarmament negotiations,
- (e) Relationship between the General Assembly and the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,
- (f) Increased use of in-depth studies of the arms race, disarmament and related matters,
- (g) Improvement of existing United Nations facilities for the collection, compilation and dissemination of information on disarmament issues, in order to keep all Governments, as well as world public opinion, properly informed on progress achieved in the field of disarmament,

(h) Assistance by the Secretariat, on request, to States parties to multilateral disarmament agreements in their duty to ensure the effective functioning of such agreements, including appropriate reviews,

(i) Strengthening of the resources of the Secretariat,

Recognizing the vital interest of all States of the world, including developing States, in contributing to the cause of disarmament,

1. Endorses the agreed proposals made by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Review of the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Disarmament as a step towards the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament;

2. Decides to keep the question of the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament under continued review;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to implement as soon as possible the measures recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee falling within his area of responsibilities, bearing in mind the importance of recruiting the staff for the proposed Centre for Disarmament on as wide a geographical basis as possible, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

4. Urges Member States to make every effort to realize the objectives set out in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Chapter II

The peaceful uses of outer space

Questions relating to the scientific, technical and legal aspects of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space continued to be discussed during 1976 in the General Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (the Outer Space Committee), in its two sub-committees and in the Assembly itself.

The Outer Space Committee reported to the Assembly that its Legal Sub-Committee had continued work on the draft treaty relating to the moon, on the principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting and on the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space. The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee had discussed the organizational and technical aspects of remote sensing by satellites, the United Nations programme on space applications, and the options concerning a possible international conference on outer space matters.

On 8 November 1976, at its annual session, the General Assembly considered the recommendations of the Outer Space Committee and unanimously adopted a resolution—31/8—on United Nations activities in the realm of outer space affairs. By this resolution, the Assembly asked the Outer Space Committee and its sub-committees to continue their work, making full use of their existing terms of reference. The resolution also dealt with further studies to be undertaken, with the programmes of States concerning the generation or transmission of solar energy, with United Nations sponsorship of rocket launching stations and with the space-related work of the specialized agencies.

These and other developments are described in the following sections.

During 1976, as in previous years, consideration of the legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space continued in the General Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, its Legal Sub-Committee, and in the Assembly itself.

The Legal Sub-Committee met at Geneva, Switzerland, from 3 to 28 May 1976, giving priority to the following items: the preparation of a draft treaty relating to the moon; the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting; and the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space. Work also continued on an item concerning the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities.

The Outer Space Committee, which met in New York from 21 June to 2 July 1976, noted in its report to the General Assembly the views expressed by the Sub-Committee on these matters and recommended that it continue work on its priority items as well as on other topics.

On 8 November 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its First Committee, unanimously adopted a resolution covering all aspects of the work of the Outer Space Committee. Among other things, the Assembly, by this resolution (31/8), endorsed the Committee's report and noted with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee had achieved considerable progress by formulating nine draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements, and by formulating five draft principles and identifying three new common elements in drafts submitted and views expressed by Member States relating to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space.

The Assembly noted further that the Sub-Committee had continued its work on the draft treaty relating to the moon, giving priority to the question of natural resources of the moon, and had discussed questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities.

The Assembly recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee at its following (1977) session should, as matters of high priority, continue: to consider the draft treaty relating to the moon; to consider completing the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements; and to give detailed consideration to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the particular aim of formulating draft principles on the basis of common elements identified in its discussion of the matter.

The Assembly also recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee should pursue its work on questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities in the remaining time available.

Also, the Assembly invited Member States which were not parties to a number of multilateral treaties relating to the peaceful uses of outer space to consider ratifying or acceding to them.

The text of resolution 31/8, approved by consensus by the Assembly's First Committee on 21 October 1976, was proposed by the following 40 States: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Luxembourg, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela.

Questions relating to the moon

At its May 1976 session, the Legal Sub-Committee of the Outer Space Committee re-established a working group to continue consideration of the draft treaty relating to the moon.

In the course of the previous sessions of the Sub-Committee, no agreement could be reached on articles concerning the scope of the treaty, the information to be furnished on missions to the moon, and the natural resources of the moon. The working group decided again to give priority to the question of natural resources, regarded by many members as the problem whose solution would facilitate an agreement on the two remaining issues.

The working group used as a basis for its work the texts of two draft articles elaborated during the Sub-Committee's previous session which, owing to a lack of consensus, contained some provisional language and alternative proposals.<sup>1</sup> The group also had before it three working papers—two on the question of the natural resources of the moon submitted by Italy and one submitted jointly by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Indonesia, Mexico, Nigeria, Romania, Sierra Leone and Venezuela—as well as several informal working papers.

Although serious efforts were made to reach a compromise solution, they proved unsuccessful, and the working group was unable to produce a new text on the question of the natural resources of the moon.

During the discussion in the Legal Sub-Committee, attention continued to be focused on the legal status of the moon and its natural resources. A number of members, including Argentina, Brazil, Egypt, India, Italy, Mexico, Nigeria, and Romania, remained of the view that the moon and its natural resources were a common heritage of all mankind, and suggested that a provision on common heritage should be proclaimed in a separate article of the draft treaty. This group of members repeated their call for an international régime to govern the exploitation of the moon's natural resources: some among them, including Romania and Sierra Leone, favoured its establishment as soon as such exploitation became feasible or practicable; others, such as Argentina, Chile and Mexico, preferred that its creation be determined by a conference of the States parties to the future treaty, to be held following its entry into force. All members of this group felt that a set of agreed rules should be applied to the activities of States in this field between the time of the adoption of the treaty and the establishment of an international régime.

Japan shared the concept of common heritage, but considered that a final decision on the natural resources of the moon and the establishment of an international régime for their exploitation would be premature because of the lack of knowledge on the subject.

Other members of the Sub-Committee, including Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, could not agree with the proposal that the concept of the common heritage of mankind should be immediately applicable to the moon and other celestial bodies and their natural resources. But they were prepared to accept a provision to the effect that within a specific period of time, for instance 10 years, and thereafter every 10 years, the Secretary-General should convene an assembly of States parties to a treaty relating to the moon which would concern itself with the question of whether it was in fact possible to exploit the moon's natural resources.

The question of the scope of the treaty was touched upon only briefly in the course of the discussion. Argentina, Chile and Mexico favoured extending the treaty's scope to all celestial bodies; the German Democratic Republic wanted to limit it to the moon.

At its June-July 1976 session, after considering the report of the Legal Sub-Committee, the Outer Space Committee expressed the hope that the Sub-Committee would make further determined efforts at its 1977 meetings to complete the text of the draft treaty relating to the moon.

onesia, Kuwait, Mexico, Romania, Turkey and Yugoslavia—maintained, as in previous years, that the treaty should declare the moon and its natural resources to be the common heritage of mankind; most of them also favoured the establishment of an international régime to regulate the use of those resources.

Mexico said that if the Legal Sub-Committee found itself unable to make progress on the moon treaty at its next session, then high priority should be given to the items on direct television broadcasting and remote sensing. Other Assembly Members, including Australia, Canada, Czechoslovakia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Liberia, Spain and the USSR, urged further efforts to find a compromise solution to the moon question.

On 8 November 1976, in unanimously adopting resolution 31/8 concerning international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space, the General Assembly noted that the Legal Sub-Committee had continued its work on the draft treaty relating to the moon, giving priority to the question of natural resources of the moon, and recommended that the Sub-Committee continue to consider the draft treaty at its next session as a matter of high priority.

Direct-broadcast satellites

Substantive progress continued in 1976 on the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting. Following past practice, the Legal Sub-Committee in 1976 re-established a working group to consider the question.

The working group examined a set of draft principles, drawn up at its previous session, with a view to removing remaining differences.<sup>2</sup> As a result of discussions and informal consultations, the working group was successful in completing the texts of nine principles concerning: the purposes and objectives of direct broadcasting by satellites; the applicability of international law; the rights of States to carry out and benefit from direct broadcasting; the need for international co-operation; State responsibility; the duty and right of States to consult; the peaceful settlement of disputes; copyright and neighbouring rights; and notification to the United Nations of activities in the field of direct broadcasting by satellites.

The working group decided not to formulate principles on the spill-over of broadcasting into the territory of other countries or on measures to prevent disruption. Views were expressed, but no conclusions reached, on the topics of prior consent and participation, programme content, and unlawful or inadmissible broadcasts.

The general exchange of views in the Sub-Committee reconfirmed the differing positions on the questions of prior consent and participation and free flow of information. The Chairman of the Outer Space Committee reported to the General Assembly later in the year that the centre of the controversy was whether or not direct satellite-broadcasting to other countries required the specific consent of the countries concerned.

Brazil, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Iran, Mexico, Nigeria, Poland and the USSR, among other States, continued to stress that the principle of prior consent and participation was an indispensable provision since it embodied the concept of respect for the sovereignty of States and non-interference in their internal affairs. Some of these members believed that a proper balance could be found between the principle of sovereign rights and that of free flow of information.

The Federal Republic of Germany and Italy were also of the view that freedom of information was not incompatible with the sovereignty of States. Italy further considered that consent should be taken for granted unless withdrawn due to abuse of the principle of free flow of information to the detriment of a particular political situation or of the social, economic or cultural values of the countries concerned.

Supporting the principle of free flow of information, Belgium felt at the same time that provisions for State responsibility, consultations and respect for cultural, moral, philosophic and religious diversity should be envisaged.

The system of consultations proposed by the United States in 1975<sup>3</sup> was supported by several members, including Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom. Poland, the USSR and others felt that consultations alone were insufficient, since any broadcasting aimed at a country without prior consent was a violation of the sovereign rights of the receiving State.

At its June-July 1976 session, the Outer Space Committee noted the exchange of views on consent and participation, programme content and unlawful or inadmissible broadcasts. It also noted with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee made considerable progress in the elaboration of principles for direct television broadcasting. The Committee agreed that the Legal Sub-Committee should continue to consider this topic with high priority.

During the debate on the peaceful uses of outer space in the Assembly's First Committee, France said that freedom of information should be coupled with the commitment, within a bilateral framework, to respect certain minimum rules in order to prevent abuses that might victimize the smallest and least developed countries. Some Members—Brazil, Ghana, Indonesia, Israel and Nigeria among them—called for a balanced solution which would reconcile the free flow of information with the sovereignty of States. Panama emphasized the importance of preventing a one-way flow of information.

Other Members, including Algeria, Argentina, Bulgaria, Chile, Mexico and the USSR, continued to emphasize the importance of the principle of advance consent by a State to which a broadcast was directed. Canada and Sweden considered that proposals they had submitted in previous years constituted a sound basis for compromise.

By its resolution 31/8, adopted on 8 November 1976, the General Assembly noted with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee had achieved considerable progress by formulating nine draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements, and recommended that the Sub-Committee consider completing the elaboration of draft principles at its next session as a matter of high priority.

Remote sensing

At its 1976 session, the Legal Sub-Committee of the Outer Space Committee formulated five principles for governing the activities of States in the field of remote sensing of the earth from space. The texts contained certain passages upon which no agreement was reached.

The Sub-Committee began its consideration of remote sensing in 1976 by re-establishing a working group to deal with the item. Among other documents, the working group had before it three working papers considered at the previous session of the Legal Sub-Committee (one submitted jointly by France and the USSR, one by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico and Venezuela, and one by the United States).<sup>4</sup> Additional informal working papers were also submitted in the course of the group's 1976 meetings.

The working group, in its efforts to formulate generally acceptable principles and to identify common elements, understood the term "data" to mean the raw products emanating from a remote-sensing satellite as well as the pre-processed but non-analysed products obtained from these raw products; the term "information" was understood to mean the results of the analysis of pre-processed data. The group recognized the necessity of reaching agreement on a definition of the subject-matter of remote-sensing activities that would fall within the scope of the draft principles. Various terms, such as sensing of "the natural environment of the earth" or of "the natural resources of the earth and its natural environment" were suggested as the basis for such a definition, but no agreement was reached on a single formula.

In the course of the debate on remote sensing in the Outer Space Committee's Legal Sub-Committee, the question of transfer of information obtained through remote sensing was discussed in some depth. Some members, including Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States, held the view that such information should be disseminated freely, without any restrictions.

Others, including Argentina, France, the German Democratic Republic, India, Iran, Mexico, Romania and the USSR, favoured certain forms of regulation in the dissemination of data to prevent any abuses regarding the interests of sensed States. They stated that the permanent sovereign right of peoples and nations over their national resources was a legal basis for their sovereign right to data concerning those resources.

Austria, Canada and Sweden emphasized the necessity of striking a balance between the need for States to have access to data regarding their own territory and efforts to prevent abuses by other States. Austria and Sweden suggested that many of the existing legal and political problems of remote sensing might eventually resolve themselves once agreement was reached on some form of organizational framework, both in the current pre-operational and in future operational phases.

On other related aspects of the question, Austria, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and others supported the idea of a declaration of principles on remote sensing, while Brazil, Indonesia and Romania, among others, advocated a binding legal document.

There were unresolved differences of opinion on the scope of such an instrument and on the question of whether States were free to conduct remote-sensing activities from outer space, as advocated by Austria, Canada, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, or whether the prior consent of sensed States should be sought, as proposed by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Egypt, Mexico and Romania.

At its June-July 1976 session, the Outer Space Committee noted with satisfaction the progress made by the Sub-Committee and recommended that it continue, on a high priority basis, to give detailed consideration to the legal implications of remote sensing.

other Members continued to call for prior consent by sensed States before remote sensing of their territories was undertaken. Also, they held that the consent of the sensed State was necessary for the dissemination of information regarding its natural resources.

Others, including Italy and the United Kingdom, supported the idea of free dissemination of remote-sensing data. Norway stressed the importance of the sensed State's access to data on its resources and its right to keep such data confidential. Sweden again emphasized the value of the organizational aspect of remote sensing and its consequences for legal principles.

Finland was of the view that future operational activities in this field should be carried out under the administration of the United Nations, with data to be provided to sensed States at little or no cost. Nepal called for consultations between sensing and sensed States when remote-sensing activities were involved.

By its resolution 31/8 of 8 November 1976 on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space, the General Assembly noted with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee had achieved considerable progress by formulating five draft principles and identifying three new common elements in the drafts submitted and the views expressed by Member States relating to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space. The Assembly recommended that the Sub-Committee continue at its next session, as a matter of high priority, to give detailed consideration to the subject.

Other matters

Definition and/or delimitation of outer space

Discussions were continued in 1976 on the question of the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities.

At the May 1976 session of the Legal Sub-Committee, a number of members, including Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, France, Indonesia, Iran and Italy, emphasized the urgent need for a definition and/or delimitation of outer space. They contended that an agreement on the subject would end an ambiguous situation which, in their view, might give rise to conflicts and which left in doubt the sphere of application of legal standards. They drew attention to the growing number of new international instruments in the field and to the intensification and diversification of space activities by an increasing number of States, and considered that the Legal Sub-Committee already had sufficient material to make progress in the selection of criteria for a definition of outer space and to decide on the approach to be taken.

Argentina, Belgium and Italy recalled their earlier suggestions and arguments in favour of establishing the lower boundary of outer space at an altitude of approximately 100 kilometres. They could not agree with the proposals advanced by some equatorial countries, including Colombia and Ecuador, that the boundary be set at 35,871 kilometres above the surface of the earth. The United Kingdom, however, considered that there was no pressure to reach a rapid solution to this problem, since no practical difficulties had arisen in the nine years following the entry into force of the Outer Space Treaty (the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies).<sup>5</sup>

At the 1976 session of the Outer Space Committee, Belgium and France again referred to the urgency of defining and/or delimiting outer space and outer space activities. They thought the subject should receive priority attention and should be given a more comprehensive title which would include the definition of outer space, of space objects and vehicles and of activities conducted in outer space.

In its report to the General Assembly, the Committee noted the hope expressed by some States that the Legal Sub-Committee would proceed to examine the question in greater detail. To facilitate the work of the Sub-Committee, the Committee requested the Secretariat to prepare a synoptic table of relevant proposals made within the framework of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies. The Committee recommended to the Legal Sub-Committee that it bear in mind constantly the possible implications for existing instruments in the realm of outer space law.

During the discussion on outer space questions at the Assembly's 1976 session, Colombia and Ecuador repeated their claims of sovereign rights to the geostationary orbit at an altitude of about 36,000 kilometres. That orbit, it was stated, was limited by physical laws and generated a natural resource belonging to the countries located along the equator as an extension of their earth sovereignty.

France said that the question of the definition and/or delimitation of outer space was of definite and renewed importance because there were potential legal, practical and political risks in failing to define the sphere of application of the law of outer space.

Kuwait also called for a decision on this problem, stating that the Legal Sub-Committee should base its work on factual scientific data provided by neutral and disinterested scientific institutes.

The General Assembly, in adopting resolution 31/8 on 8 November 1976, noted with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee had discussed this topic and recommended that it pursue its work in 1977 as time allowed.

International treaties

By its resolution 31/8, adopted unanimously on 8 November 1976, the General Assembly inter alia welcomed the entry into force on 15 September 1976 of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space.<sup>6</sup> It also thereby invited States that were not parties to that instrument—or to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,<sup>7</sup> the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space,<sup>8</sup> or the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects<sup>9</sup>—to give early consideration to ratifying or acceding to those international agreements.

The General Assembly,

2. Invites States which have not yet become parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of

Objects Launched into Outer Space, the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects and the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space to give early consideration to ratifying or acceding to those international agreements;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space has:

(a) Achieved considerable progress by:

(i) Formulating nine draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements;

(ii) Formulating five draft principles and identifying three new common elements in the drafts submitted and the views expressed by Member States relating to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space;

(b) Continued its work on the draft treaty relating to the moon, giving priority to the question of natural resources of the moon;

(c) Discussed questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities;

4. Recommends that the Legal Sub-Committee at its sixteenth session should:

(a) Continue, as matters of high priority:

(i) To consider the draft treaty relating to the moon;

(ii) To consider completing the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements;

(iii) To give detailed consideration to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the particular aim of formulating draft principles on the basis of common elements identified by it;

(b) Pursue its work on questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities in the remaining time available;

Scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

As in previous years, consideration of various scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space continued during 1976 in the General Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and in the Assembly itself.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee met at Geneva, Switzerland, from 22 March to 7 April 1976, giving priority to the consideration of items dealing with remote sensing of the earth from space, the United Nations programme on space applications, and options relating to a possible international conference on outer space matters.

The Outer Space Committee, which met in New York from 21 June to 2 July 1976, noted in its report to the General Assembly the views expressed by the Sub-Committee on these and other matters and endorsed the recommendation that the Sub-Committee continue to give priority to the three items mentioned above.

By its resolution on matters relating to the peaceful uses of outer space (resolution 31/8, adopted unanimously on 8 November 1976), the Assembly endorsed the report of the Outer Space Committee and, inter alia, noted with satisfaction that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee had examined further the question of remote sensing of the earth from space, having considered in detail both the current pre-operational/experimental as well as the possible future global/operational phase of a remote-sensing system or systems. It endorsed the recommendation of the Committee that full utilization be made by the Committee and its subsidiary bodies of their terms of reference with regard to the establishment of an appropriate coordinating role for the United Nations in the field of remote sensing and the recommendation that further studies and reports on remote sensing be prepared by the Secretariat.

The Assembly also endorsed the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee's programme of work, the United Nations 1977 programme on space applications, and the Outer Space Committee's recommendation that the Secretariat should prepare a study in depth on the question of convening a United Nations conference on space matters. It asked Member States to provide information on programmes or plans for the generation or transmission of solar energy by means of space technology.

Also by resolution 31/8, the Assembly approved continuing sponsorship by the United Nations of rocket launching stations in Argentina and India, reiterated its request to the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) to pursue actively the implementation of its tropical-cyclone project and other programmes and requested the specialized agencies to report to the Outer Space Committee on relevant questions.

The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to consider strengthening the Outer Space Affairs Division of the United Nations Secretariat, and accepted with appreciation the invitation of Austria to hold the next (1977) session of the Outer Space Committee at Vienna.

The text of resolution 31/8, which was approved by consensus by the Assembly's First Committee on 21 October 1976, was sponsored by the following 40 States: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Luxembourg, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela.

Remote sensing of the earth from space

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, which had before it at its 1976 session several studies prepared by the Secretariat on the organizational aspects of international co-operation in the area of remote sensing, discussed the current experimental pre-operational phase of remote sensing activity as well as a possible global/international operational system for the future. It made a number of observations on those topics.

The Sub-Committee noted that pre-operational experience had arisen largely in connexion with the United States LANDSAT system, and concluded that although it was likely that other systems would be set up in the next few years, those too would be of an experimental nature; fully operational systems would not come into being until the 1980s. Current feasibility studies and deliberations in the United Nations concerning organizational and other aspects of an operational system should, in the view of the Sub-Committee, be seen as part of the build-up of information gained from the pre-operational phase and needed for possible decisions about the future operational phase.

With regard to the prospect of other systems that might become available to assist Member States, the USSR reported to the Sub-Committee its intention in the near future to make remote-sensing data available to other States under negotiated arrangements, the first of which had been concluded with Bulgaria.

On the question of the future global/international operational phase, the Sub-Committee noted that no commitment had been made on the establishment of an operational system but believed that the progress achieved thus far suggested that satellite remote-sensing systems would one day become operational and could be expected to become an integral part of national economies and their planning activities. In view of the wide variety of practical problems to be solved by means of a remote-sensing system, an operational system could consist of several types of space objects specifically designed for particular purposes.

The Sub-Committee also reaffirmed its preference for a world network of ground stations, based on regional centres, for the reception, pre-processing and dissemination of remote-sensing data. It felt that the ground facilities would likely be financed, owned and operated by individual users or associations of users.

Giving preliminary consideration to possible scientific and technical criteria relevant to the definition, for the purposes of remote sensing, of such terms as "natural resources of the earth" and "data on the natural resources of the earth acquired by means of remote sensing," the Sub-Committee noted the view expressed by the USSR that it would be necessary to define clearly the type of data whose dissemination should be regulated. The USSR suggested that remote-sensing data might be separated into two categories: "global" and "local." Global data would not affect the sovereign rights of States and therefore would not require the elaboration of legal principles. The dissemination of local data, however, would require the establishment of a certain legal régime. The Sub-Committee felt that this approach deserved further consideration and urged the USSR to expand on its details.

The Sub-Committee was of the view that the United Nations might play a co-ordinating role in the field of remote sensing even in the current experimental pre-operational phase of the activity. Without infringing existing bilateral agreements, such a role might comprise co-ordination inside and between regions on such points as training, technical assistance and programme orientation for the special interests of developing countries. The scope of United Nations involvement would probably be considerably greater in a future operational phase. The Sub-Committee concluded at the same time that it was not currently possible to take any decisions regarding specific steps beyond what was already being done under the auspices of the Outer Space Committee. Outlining options for consideration by its parent body, the Sub-Committee said that a working group or ad hoc body of experts could be created for the purpose of considering the developing role of the United Nations in remote sensing, or that full utilization of existing terms of reference could be made by the Outer Space Committee and its sub-committees.

With regard to its own future work in this area, the Sub-Committee indicated that further study of organizational, technical and financial matters should progress together with consideration of the legal aspects of remote sensing. Accordingly, it recommended that the Secretariat should prepare or bring up to date a number of studies to be considered at its next session. It asked that a revised version of the feasibility study on a possible co-ordinating function for the United Nations in future operational activities be submitted; the study should explore, among other things, the arguments for and against the establishment of an international centre during the pre-operational phase of remote-sensing activity, and its possible functions.

The Outer Space Committee, at its June-July 1976 session, considered the views of the Sub-Committee and endorsed its recommendations. It shared the Sub-Committee's conclusion that, since satellite remote-sensing systems, like satellite weather and communication systems, would one day become operational, international co-operation would be needed in order to assure a cost-effective approach to remote sensing in the interest of all countries. Of the options for the future role of the United Nations brought to its attention by the Sub-Committee, the Committee favoured the full utilization by existing bodies of their terms of reference.

During the debate on the peaceful uses of outer space in the First Committee of the General Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session, a number of Members expressed views on the scientific and technical aspects of the question of remote sensing.

The United States said that the uses of remote-sensing technology identified by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee—mapping, agricultural forecasting, hydrological and land-use surveying, etc.—were of interest to developed and developing countries alike. A working system would be practicable only if data dissemination policies were marked by non-discriminatory access. The fully operational phase remained some years away, but neither in the current experimental phase nor in an operational framework could remote-sensing technology develop unless there was continuing regional co-operation. As a practical matter, observation from space could only be accomplished without regard to boundaries.

Kuwait noted the many benefits that could be derived from the acquisition of data on the earth's resources; it believed that actions in this area would represent a test of the goodwill of technically advanced countries and that assistance should be provided without strings attached, preferably through programmes organized under the aegis of the United Nations.

Indonesia considered that the organizational framework for remote sensing was important and hoped to see an identifiable United Nations element either as a focal point or as a co-ordinating mechanism for future remote-sensing systems. This would ensure technical co-operation in training to enable developing countries to have full access to space technology.

Other Members, including the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Norway, also stressed the importance of remote sensing to the improvement of economic conditions in developing countries. Norway felt that those countries should have at their disposal all information that might assist them in their economic development.

Finland believed that remote-sensing data should be made available, at least to sensed States, as soon as possible and at no or little cost. It also said that every effort should be made to render more effective the training in interpretation and use of remote-sensing data, with special emphasis on the needs of developing countries.

Australia was of the view that great prospects for international co-operation with respect to the ground segment of remote sensing by satellites existed if the realistic goals of building on national and regional activities were pursued. It felt that regional co-operation between countries that shared a single ground facility should emphasize the sharing of data analysis facilities and experience. On another level, there should be co-operation between countries in an economic region that might be covered by several ground facilities.

Brazil, commenting on the future operational system, said that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee should clarify the fundamental notion of regional, international and national co-operation. The Sub-Committee, before advocating a specific alternative, should envisage clear definitions of the criteria governing the scope and responsibilities of all possible systems.

With the adoption of resolution 31/8 on 8 November 1976, the General Assembly inter alia recommended that the Sub-Committee continue its work on remote sensing, endorsing the recommendation of the Outer Space Committee that full utilization be made by the Committee and its subsidiary bodies of their existing terms of reference with regard to the establishment of an appropriate co-ordinating role for the United Nations in this field. It further endorsed the Committee's recommendation that the Secretary-General should undertake the necessary studies and reports on remote sensing.

Space applications

In a review of the United Nations programme on space applications, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its 1976 session expressed its appreciation to Governments that had hosted United Nations-sponsored seminars during 1975 on the following topics: remote sensing (sponsored jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and held in Canada in May 1975); satellite broadcasting systems for education and development (sponsored jointly with UNESCO and held in Mexico in September 1975); analysis and interpretation of meteorological-satellite data and their application to tropical areas of Africa (sponsored jointly with WMO and held in Kenya in October 1975); and training in remote-sensing techniques applicable to tropical environments (sponsored jointly with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and held in Indonesia in November 1975). It also expressed appreciation to India for serving as host country in January 1976 for an experimental school, planned jointly by the United Nations and UNESCO, on satellite instructional television.

The Sub-Committee further expressed appreciation to the Federal Republic of Germany, Pakistan, the USSR and the United Kingdom, and to the International Astronautical Federation, for their offers to host various seminars and workshops on the practical applications of space technology during 1976 and 1977, and to Austria, Belgium, India, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States for their offers of fellowships for training in that field.

At its 1976 session, the Outer Space Committee endorsed the United Nations programme on space applications for 1977 and noted the continued progress made by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee in the implementation of that programme. It noted in particular the views expressed in the Sub-Committee to the effect that the programme should be extended in content and scope.

When questions concerning the peaceful uses of outer space were discussed in the General Assembly's First Committee, a number of Members expressed support for the United Nations space applications programme. Austria, Brazil, India and Poland, among others, were of the view that the programme should be extended in content and scope and should receive greater financial support. Some Members, including Argentina, Iraq and Sierra Leone, felt that particular attention should be given to the needs and interests of developing countries.

With the adoption of resolution 31/8 on 8 November 1976, the Assembly inter alia noted with satisfaction the report of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Outer Space Committee, which provided for the continuation of the United Nations programme on space applications. The Assembly endorsed the programme for 1977 and recommended further priority consideration of the item by the Sub-Committee.

International conference on outer space matters

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee continued in 1976 to consider options relating to a possible United Nations conference on outer space matters. On the basis of the work of an informal group set up to examine various options, the Sub-Committee noted that of those Member States expressing views on the possibility of convening such a United Nations conference, most of those favouring it believed it should be contingent on a clear definition of objectives. Some, while not opposing a conference in principle, had reservations as to the advisability or need for it in the near future.

The Sub-Committee recommended that the Secretary-General be requested again to seek the views of Member States on conference objectives and that the United Nations Secretariat be asked to follow up by preparing a study in depth on all pertinent aspects of the question.

The Outer Space Committee endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendations.

With the adoption on 8 November 1976 of resolution 31/8, the General Assembly inter alia noted with satisfaction the provision for further study of a possible United Nations conference on outer space matters and endorsed the recommendation that the Secretary-General should prepare a study in depth on the question. It recommended that the Sub-Committee continue to give priority consideration to the topic at its following (1977) session.

Other scientific and technical questions

The General Assembly, in adopting resolution 31/8 unanimously on 8 November 1976, took a number of other actions concerning scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space. It requested the specialized agencies to provide the Outer Space Committee with progress reports on their work relating to outer space, and reiterated its request to WMO to pursue actively the implementation of its tropical-cyclone project while continuing and intensifying its other action programmes, including World Weather Watch, and its efforts to discover ways of mitigating the harmful effects of tropical storms.

The Assembly approved continuing sponsorship by the United Nations of the Thumba Equatorial Rocket Launching Station in India and the CELPA (Centro Experimental para el Lanzamiento de Projectiles Autopropulsados) Mar del Plata Station in Argentina, and expressed satisfaction at the work being carried out at those ranges.

The Assembly also endorsed the recommendation of the Outer Space Committee that the Secretary-General should request Member States to provide information on programmes or plans for the generation or transmission of solar energy by means of space technology.

On procedural matters concerning the work of the Outer Space Committee, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to consider strengthening the Outer Space Affairs Division of the United Nations Secretariat. Also, the Assembly accepted with appreciation the invitation extended by Austria to hold the Committee's 1977 session at Vienna. Finally, it requested the Committee to continue its work and to report again in 1977.

In other actions, the Outer Space Committee, in its report to the Assembly, noted that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee had considered the Committee's request, made in connexion with efforts to co-ordinate the activities of the Committee's subsidiary bodies, that it review at an appropriate time possible scientific and technical criteria relevant to the work of the Legal Sub-Committee. The Sub-Committee had concluded that in order to be able to consider the request thoroughly, it would require more specific guidance regarding the purposes for which the criteria should be reviewed.

The Committee reported that it shared the Sub-Committee's view that questions relating to remote sensing required particular attention from the point of view of co-ordination.

Also, the Committee welcomed the decision taken by the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to establish a sub-committee on outer space activities and expressed the hope that, in consequence, the co-ordination of activities within the United Nations system, especially those relating to practical applications of space technology, would be effectively accomplished.

On the topic of information exchanges, the Committee noted with satisfaction the reports submitted by Member States on their national and co-operative space programmes and welcomed a report of the Secretary-General on ways and means by which the United Nations might implement a full-scale programme of public information on the peaceful uses of outer space, particularly on those aspects of space applications that had a special reference to the problems faced by developing countries.

Resolution 3188 as recommended by First Committee, A/31/285, adopted unanimously by Assembly on 8 November 1976, meeting 57.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3388(XXX) of 18 November 1975, Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Reaffirming the common interest of mankind in furthering the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in extending to States the benefits derived therefrom as well as the importance of international co-operation in this field, for which the United Nations should provide a focal point, as expressed in General Assembly resolution 1721(XVI) of 20 December 1961,

Reaffirming the importance of international co-operation in developing the rule of law in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space,

Welcoming the entry into force on 15 September 1976 of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Invites States which have not yet become parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space, the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects and the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space to give early consideration to ratifying or acceding to those international agreements;

3. Notes with satisfaction that the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space has:

- (a) Achieved considerable progress by:
- (i) Formulating nine draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements;

- (ii) Formulating five draft principles and identifying three new common elements in the drafts submitted and the views expressed by Member States relating to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space;
- (b) Continued its work on the draft treaty relating to the moon, giving priority to the question of natural resources of the moon;

(c) Discussed questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities;

4. Recommends that the Legal Sub-Committee at its sixteenth session should:

- (a) Continue, as matters of high priority:

- (i) To consider the draft treaty relating to the moon;
- (ii) To consider completing the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting with a view to concluding an international agreement or agreements;

(iii) To give detailed consideration to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the particular aim of formulating draft principles on the basis of common elements identified by it;

(b) Pursue its work on questions relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities in the remaining time available;

5. Notes with satisfaction the report of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on its thirteenth session, which, inter alia:

(a) Examines further the question of remote sensing of the earth from space, as set out in paragraphs 26 to 81 of the report, considering in detail both the current pre-operational/experimental as well as the possible future global/operational phase of a remote sensing system or systems;

(b) Continues in effect the United Nations programme on space applications;

(c) Provides for further study of a possible United Nations conference on outer space matters;

6. Recommends that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee should continue at its fourteenth session its work on the matters before it, giving priority to the three items contained in paragraph 71 of the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

7. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space that full utilization be made by the Committee and its subsidiary bodies of their existing terms of reference with regard to the establishment of an appropriate co-ordinating role for the United Nations in the field of remote sensing;

8. Further endorses the recommendation of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space that the Secretary-General, for consideration by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its fourteenth session, should:

(a) Undertake the various studies and reports on remote sensing of the earth from space, as referred to in paragraph 42 of the report of the Committee;

(b) Prepare a study in depth on the question of convening a United Nations conference on space matters, as referred to in paragraphs 55 and 56 of that report;

(c) Request Member States to provide information on programmes or plans for the generation or transmission of solar energy by means of space technology, as referred to in paragraph 72 of that report;

9. Endorses the United Nations programme on space applications for 1977, as referred to in paragraph 46 of the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

10. Approves continuing sponsorship by the United Nations of the Thumba Equatorial Rocket Launching Station in India and the CELPA Mar del Plata Station in Argentina and expresses its satisfaction at the work being carried out at those ranges in the peaceful and scientific exploration of outer space;

11. Reiterates its request to the World Meteorological Organization to pursue actively the implementation of its tropical cyclone project while continuing and intensifying its other related action programmes, including the World Weather Watch and, especially, the efforts being undertaken towards obtaining basic meteorological data and discovering ways and means to mitigate the harmful effects of tropical storms and to remove or minimize their destructive potential, and looks forward to its report thereon in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions;

12. Requests the specialized agencies to provide the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space with progress reports on their work, including particular problems in the fields within their competence relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of paragraph 73 of the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, to consider strengthening the Outer Space Affairs Division of the Secretariat;

14. Notes the invitation extended by the Government of Austria to hold the twentieth session of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at Vienna in 1977 and accepts that invitation with appreciation;

15. Requests the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to continue its work, as set out in the present and previous resolutions of the General Assembly, and to report to the Assembly at its thirty-second session.

Registration of space launchings

In 1976, United Nations Member States launching objects into orbit around the earth or further into space continued to supply information on such launchings to the United Nations, in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 20 December 1961.<sup>10</sup>

Fifteen notifications on launchings were received during the year and were distributed as documents of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. (Notifications included information on objects launched during the latter part of 1975 as well as during 1976.)

Japan reported and submitted information on the launching of one space vehicle; the USSR reported on 97; and the United States reported on 92.

The Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space<sup>11</sup> came into force on 15 September 1976. In accordance with its provisions, the Secretary-General established a register in which information furnished would be recorded.

On 24 August 1976, Canada informed the United Nations that it had established, under the terms of the same Convention, a registry of the space objects it launched.

Chapter III

Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea*Fourth session of the Conference on the Law of the Sea

The fourth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea was held from 15 March to 7 May 1976 at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

The first session of the Conference, held in New York from 3 to 15 December 1973, had been devoted primarily to organizational and procedural matters.<sup>1</sup> The second session, held at Caracas, Venezuela, from 20 June to 29 August 1974, had begun substantive work on the questions of ocean law before the Conference.<sup>2</sup> At the third session, held at Geneva, Switzerland, from 17 March to 9 May 1975, each of the Chairmen of the three main committees prepared a single negotiating text for a proposed Convention on the Law of the Sea which was issued on 7 May 1975 and presented to the Conference on the final day of the session. After the third session, the President circulated a fourth part of the single negotiating text on settlement of disputes.<sup>3</sup>

A total of 149 States participated in the fourth session. In addition, two territories that had not gained independence, 11 specialized agencies or United Nations bodies, nine intergovernmental organizations, 33 non-governmental organizations having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and three national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) or the League of Arab States participated as observers.

The 149 States which participated were Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, the Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, the Holy See, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nauru, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Western Samoa, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

The two territories which sent observers, in accordance with invitations issued as a result of a General Assembly decision of 17 December 1974,<sup>4</sup> were the Netherlands Antilles and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The specialized agencies and United Nations bodies which were represented at the fourth session were the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the United Nations Development Programme.

The intergovernmental organizations that participated as observers were the Commonwealth Secretariat, the Council of Europe, the European Communities, the Inter-American Development Bank, the International Hydrographic Bureau, the League of Arab States, OAU, the Organization of American States and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The national liberation movements that participated as observers were the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (South Africa) and the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO).

The officers of the Conference were elected at its first session. The President was H. S. Amerasinghe (Sri Lanka); there were also three Chairmen for the three main committees, which dealt with the substantive work of the Conference, a Rapporteur-General, 31 Vice-Presidents, and a Rapporteur and three Vice-Chairmen for each of the main committees. In addition, there was a General Committee of 48 members, to assist the President in the general conduct of the business of the Conference; a Drafting Committee, which consisted of 23 members, to formulate draft texts and give drafting advice when requested; and a nine-member Credentials Committee to examine the credentials of representatives. The only changes made to the officers or members elected at the previous sessions<sup>5</sup> were that Andres Aguilar (Venezuela) was elected to replace Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador) as Chairman of the Second Committee; consequently El Salvador replaced Venezuela as a member of the Drafting Committee. Also, Austria replaced the Netherlands as a member of the Drafting Committee; Belgium replaced Ireland as a Vice-President of the Conference; and Abdel Magied Ali Hassan (Sudan) replaced Charles Manyang d'Awol (Sudan) as Rapporteur of the Third Committee.

The rules of procedure of the Conference remained as adopted at the second session and as amended at the third, as did the "gentleman's agreement" annexed to the rules, by which the Conference was to make every effort to reach agreement on substantive matters by consensus, and by which there was to be no voting on such matters until all efforts at consensus had been exhausted.

The aim of the Third Conference on the Law of the Sea was to have a comprehensive convention on all ocean issues, including those which were outstanding from the first two Conferences held in 1958 and 1960<sup>6</sup> and, in particular, to try to establish a definition of and an international régime for the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and to ensure that the resources of the marine environment would be exploited for the benefit of mankind.

Specific issues for discussion included: the questions of who might exploit the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond national jurisdiction and what the basic conditions of exploration and exploitation should be, to be covered by the First Committee; definitions of and régimes for such concepts as the territorial sea, international straits, the continental shelf and an exclusive economic zone, to be covered by the Second Committee; and regulations to cover the preservation of the marine environment, marine scientific research and the development and transfer of technology, to be covered by the Third Committee.

The basis for the work of the Conference, in addition to the formal documentation before it, was the single negotiating text of a proposed Convention on the Law of the Sea (Law of the Sea Convention).

At the plenary meeting on 15 March 1976, the President informed the Conference that it had been agreed that: there would be no general discussion on the informal single negotiating text; no formal documents concerning amendments to it would be circulated; formal meetings should be avoided as far as possible and, after negotiation of each main part of the texts in the respective committees, the revision of the single negotiating text should be made by each Chairman in his committee, reflecting as far as possible the results of the informal negotiations. A few days would be set aside for a general debate on two items which had not yet been discussed in plenary: the settlement of disputes; and peaceful uses of ocean space—zones of peace and security.

The main committees began their work through informal closed meetings; no records of proceedings were published. Reports of the informal meetings where the texts were discussed in detail were submitted to the Chairmen of the three committees who, in turn, informed the President at regular intervals. The Chairmen reported weekly to the General Committee on the progress of work in their committees.

Work of the First Committee

The First Committee (which dealt with the international legal régime for the area of the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond national jurisdiction) met on 16 March under the chairmanship of Paul Bamela Engo (United Republic of Cameroon) to organize its work. The Chairman suggested that informal meetings be held under his chairmanship; at the beginning of these meetings, he would submit first-impression drafts of various articles so that they could be studied and commented on to help in the revision of the single negotiating text. Thirty-nine informal meetings were held.

The section (Part I) of the revised single negotiating text submitted by the First Committee Chairman is described later in this chapter.

Work of the Second Committee

The Second Committee (dealing with general aspects of the law of the sea), under the chairmanship of Andres Aguilar (Venezuela), held only one formal meeting, on 16 March 1976, but met informally to discuss Part II of the single negotiating text, article by article. In 52 informal meetings, it heard more than 3,700 statements, and 1,000 informal amendments were proposed.

The section (Part II) of the revised single negotiating text submitted by the Second Committee Chairman is described later in this chapter.

In an introduction to this section, the Chairman identified issues on which negotiations were most needed. These included: (1) delimitation of the exclusive economic zone between adjacent or opposite States (article 62 of Part II); (2) definition of the continental shelf (article 64); (3) definition of the high seas (article 75); (4) right of access of land-locked States to and from the sea and freedom of transit (articles 109-117); (5) definition of the enclosed or semi-enclosed seas (article 129) and co-operation of States bordering these seas (article 130); and (6) a transitional provision on territories under foreign occupation.

The Chairman noted that the matter on which the Committee had been most divided was whether or not the exclusive economic zone should be included in the definition of the high seas.

On the question of the transitional article dealing with territories under foreign occupation or colonial domination (article 136 in the Geneva text), the Chairman stated that there had been a long debate in the Committee. It had been recognized that the article raised issues which went beyond the scope of the law of the sea. By placing it separately as a transitional provision, the Chairman added, he had adopted a solution which would not in any way imply that the matters dealt with were permanent and immutable in nature.

Work of the Third Committee

The Third Committee (dealing with the marine environment, marine scientific research and the development and transfer of technology), under the Chairmanship of Alexander Yankov (Bulgaria), held two formal meetings. At the first, on 16 March, the Chairman, following the guidelines set out by the President, decided that, as at the previous sessions, Jose Luis Vallarta (Mexico) should preside over the informal discussions on the protection and preservation of the marine environment, and Cornel Metternich (Federal Republic of Germany) over the informal discussions on marine scientific research and the transfer of technology.

At the second formal meeting, on 28 April 1976, the Committee met to hear the representative of Spain describe the new Convention for the Protection of the Mediterranean Sea against Pollution, adopted at Barcelona in February 1976 by a conference of Mediterranean countries.

The section of the revised single negotiating text submitted by the Third Committee Chairman is described later in this chapter.

Work in plenary

Settlement of disputes

Opening the discussion on procedures for the settlement of disputes, the President presented an explanatory memorandum on the informal single negotiating text on the settlement of disputes. Sixty-five States, as well as the International Ocean Institute, took part in a debate on this issue. The Conference decided that the President should prepare a new informal single negotiating text on settlement of disputes, taking into account the views expressed in the debate and the observations submitted as a result of informal meetings and communications.

Peaceful uses of the ocean

space: zones of peace and security

The question of peaceful uses of the ocean space and zones of peace and security was discussed at three plenary meetings.

The President stated that the discussion could not be divorced from disarmament negotiations or other United Nations action to restrict the arms race in ocean areas, but that duplication should be avoided. He added that the deliberations of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, the existence of treaties such as the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof,<sup>7</sup> the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,<sup>8</sup> the proposed establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the South Pacific and proposals for similar zones elsewhere should be borne in mind in the course of the debate.

A number of countries, including China, Ecuador, Iran, Iraq, Madagascar, Malta, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Somalia and Tunisia, considered that the Conference should deal with the problem and should incorporate in the future

Some others, including Bulgaria, Cuba, the USSR and the United States, said it was not appropriate to open a general debate on the substance of the problem.

The representative of Peru contended that there was no basis for the view of some States that the Conference was not competent to discuss this item. The existing Treaty banning nuclear weapons on the sea-bed and ocean floor, he said, had not prohibited the emplacement of conventional armaments in zones under the jurisdiction of other States and in the international sea-bed area. It was therefore necessary for the Conference to define principles and measures that would ensure the peaceful uses of ocean space.

General Assembly resolutions to create zones of peace, he went on to say, had not been respected by some naval powers, and those powers had systematically opposed proposals in the Conference to ensure the peaceful use of the sea. There was no provision for the peaceful uses of the seas in the single negotiating text, he concluded.

Ecuador expressed similar views, adding that the proposed International Sea-Bed Authority (see below) might keep a watch to ensure the peaceful uses of the oceans.

Romania proposed that the Convention should contain a provision on the non-use of force and should promote peaceful relations and good-neighbourly relations among all nations. China supported proposals for the establishment of zones of peace and the demands by many countries for the withdrawal of troops and military bases; proposals made during the Conference aimed at resisting maritime hegemonism and safeguarding the sovereignty of small and medium-sized countries should be explicitly provided for in the Convention.

Madagascar would support any attempt to consolidate into a single chapter of the Convention certain provisions touching on peaceful uses of ocean space in various areas of the sea, and also suggested that the Conference should decide whether amendments should be prepared to the existing Treaty on disarmament of the sea-bed<sup>9</sup> or whether such provisions should be annexed to the Law of the Sea Convention. The signing of such a protocol should be obligatory for all States parties to the Convention.

In Iraq's view, the exclusive economic zone had been extracted from the high seas and was not a territorial zone. Therefore the denuclearization of that zone would be consistent with the purposes of the new Convention.

Malta added that it firmly believed that the Mediterranean should be utilized as a corridor of peace serving international trade and communications, and the Philippines recalled that the Association of South-East Asian Nations had issued a declaration in 1971 urging that the South-East Asia region be made a zone of peace and neutrality.

Iran felt that it was urgent to draft an article to the effect that non-civilian aspects of the question of the peaceful uses of the sea-bed should be tackled in an appropriate forum. The proposed Authority, in co-operation with the International Atomic Energy Agency, should regulate and control the dumping of nuclear wastes and biological and chemical agents in the sea-bed. Further, Iran said that all foreign military installations should be excluded from the area of the exclusive economic zones and continental shelves of the coastal States.

Somalia added that it was necessary to reserve within a new Law of the Sea Convention a prominent place for the denuclearization of the oceans and the establishment of zones of peace in ocean space.

The representative of the USSR said that the problem of the peaceful uses of ocean space and of establishing zones of peace could not be dealt with in isolation from the other problems relating to the maintenance of international peace and disarmament and thus was beyond the scope of the task of the Conference. A solution to those problems could be found only within the framework of appropriate United Nations bodies or at other international conferences and forums dealing with problems of disarmament, the strengthening of international security and universal peace. The Conference's contribution to that goal should be the preparation of a mutually acceptable legal régime for the use of the world's oceans.

In the view of Bulgaria, while the preamble of the Convention on the Law of the Sea should contain a special paragraph stating that the contracting parties considered the peaceful uses of ocean space to be the fundamental principle governing the activities of States in the uses of the seas and the exploration and exploitation of their resources, the Conference was not the adequate forum for discussion of this item. Cuba expressed a similar view.

The United States said it had consistently supported texts providing for the peaceful uses of ocean space, but the term "peaceful purposes" did not preclude military activities generally. The United States held that the conduct of military activities for peaceful purposes was in full accord with the Charter of the United Nations and international law. Any specific limitation on military activities would require a detailed arms-control agreement. The United States said the Conference was not charged with such a purpose and was not prepared for such negotiation.

Procedures for the fifth session

After a procedural debate, the Conference decided: that the President should prepare proposals on the organization of work for submission well in advance of the opening of the fifth session; that the Secretary-General should be requested to prepare draft alternative texts of the preamble and final clauses of the revised single negotiating text, collating historical precedents without giving the draft any political substance; and that the Secretariat should prepare for the fifth session, in co-operation with the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, an annotated directory of global, regional and subregional organizations dealing with ocean affairs. The directory should indicate the constitution, powers, membership and area of work of the organizations.

The Conference also decided that the next session would be held in New York from 2 August to 17 September 1976.

Revised single negotiating text

The four-part revised single negotiating text, issued on 6 May 1976, reflected the results of the informal negotiations on each part of the informal single negotiating text (referred to as the Geneva text) within each of the committees and the discussion on the settlement of disputes in plenary.<sup>10</sup> Parts I, II and III were prepared by the Chairmen of the First, Second and Third Committees, respectively, and Part IV by the President of the Conference.

Part I set out general principles to implement the basic concept that the resources of the international sea-bed area beyond the limits of national jurisdiction were the common heritage of mankind. The text would establish an International Sea-Bed Authority that would be empowered to exploit the ocean bottom for its mineral wealth and contract with outside entities, including States and corporations, to permit them to engage in mining under the Authority's control.

A procedure was proposed by which sea-bed areas with good mining prospects could be reserved for exploitation by the Authority or by developing countries while at the same time comparable areas would be made available early for contractors who were qualified to engage in sea-bed mining.

A sea-bed Tribunal was one proposed element in a machinery for settling international disputes over sea-bed resources, including disputes between the Authority and a contractor.

Part II, covering general aspects of the law of the sea, contained provisions on the rights and duties of States in a 12-nautical-mile territorial sea, in a contiguous zone extending up to 24 miles from shore, in a 200-mile exclusive economic zone, on the continental shelf underlying these areas, archipelagic waters (around States which consist of archipelagos) and on the high seas. The provisions on the economic zone, a new concept in international law, would give coastal States sovereign rights over the fish and other living resources of that zone while reserving freedom of navigation and certain other freedoms to all States.

A revenue-sharing system was proposed under which coastal States would turn over to the International Sea-Bed Authority a percentage of the value of minerals (including oil) they obtained from parts of their continental shelf lying more than 200 miles from shore. Other provisions would give land-locked States certain rights to fish in the economic zone of neighbouring States, subject to bilateral and regional agreements.

Part III, dealing with the marine environment and scientific research, would permit States to conduct research on the high seas or the economic zone of other States, but would require the coastal State's consent for research in the exclusive economic zone or on the continental shelf, with the proviso that such consent could not be withheld unless the proposed research bore substantially on the zone's resources.

With regard to the marine environment, different groups of States would have different powers to enforce anti-pollution regulations, depending on which sea areas were involved and whether the State was the country of registry of a vessel (flag State), a coastal State, or a port State (a State in whose port a vessel was temporarily located). Other provisions called for action to promote the development and transfer of marine technology.

Part IV, prepared by the President of the Conference, proposed a system for the compulsory settlement of disputes, by means freely chosen by the parties. The choices available would include referring a dispute to a proposed Law of the Sea Tribunal, as well as resort to the International Court of Justice, arbitration tribunals, conciliation commissions and a new type of committee for handling technical disputes over fisheries, pollution, scientific research and navigation. This part of the text was in a different position from the other three parts, in that it had not yet been discussed article by article by an organ of the Conference; such a discussion was expected at the fifth (August 1976) session.

Part I

Part I of the revised single negotiating text contained 63 articles—compared to 75 in the Geneva text—and three annexes. The annexes dealt with the basic conditions of exploration and exploitation, the statute of the international Enterprise that would be set up to conduct sea-bed mining, and the statute of a sea-bed dispute settlement system. A special appendix was added concerning financial arrangements between the Authority and the contractor.

A brief summary of new articles or articles where important changes were made follows.

Article 1 of the text specified that when this part of the treaty referred to activities in the area (defined in article 2 as the sea-bed and ocean floor and subsoil thereof beyond the limits of national jurisdiction) it meant all exploration and exploitation of sea-bed resources. The principles of the régime were set out in articles 2-19.

A provision on economic aspects (article 9) specified three new means of protecting mineral-producing developing countries from the adverse effects on their export earnings that could result if production of the same minerals from the sea-bed led to a drop in mineral prices: (a) commodity agreements covering these minerals, in which the proposed International Sea-Bed Authority could participate; (b) authorizing the Authority to limit sea-bed production for at least 20 years in accordance with a formula tied to the price of and demand for nickel; and (c) compensation for economic harm caused to affected countries.

Scientific research in the area would be carried out exclusively for peaceful purposes and for the benefit of mankind as a whole, according to article 10. Article 11 called for international co-operation to promote the transfer of technology from country to country. In the conduct of activities in the area, protection of the marine environment (article 12) and human life (article 13) were to be ensured.

Prior consent of the coastal State concerned would be required if activities in the area resulted in the exploitation of resources within national jurisdiction (article 14). States would be made responsible for ensuring that activities in the area carried out by their nationals were in accordance with the Convention (article 17). Effective participation of developing countries in sea-bed activity was to be promoted, with due regard to the special needs of the land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States (article 18).

Articles 20 to 63 described the international machinery to be established to apply the new régime. By article 21, the Authority would be the organization through which States parties would organize and control activities in the area, particularly with a view towards the administration of the resources of the area. Under the exploration and exploitation system (article 22), activities in the area would be conducted directly by the Authority and, in association with the Authority and under its control, by States parties or State enterprises or persons natural or juridical possessing the necessary qualifications, or any group of the preceding.

The Authority would have five main organs: an Assembly, a Council, a Tribunal, a Secretariat and the Enterprise (article 24). The Assembly, consisting of all members of the Authority, would decide questions of substance by a two-thirds vote of members (article 25). As the supreme organ of the Authority, the Assembly would prescribe the general policies to be pursued by the Authority on any questions or matters within the competence of the Authority (article 26).

Article 27 dealt with the structure of the Council. As the executive organ of the Authority, the Council would prescribe the specific policies of the Authority, exercising control over activities in the area and adopting and applying rules and regulations (article 28). The organs of the Council would be an Economic Planning Commission, a Technical Commission and a Rules and Regulations Commission (article 29).

The Economic Planning Commission would be composed of 18 experts appointed by the Council, upon nomination by States parties, taking into account the need for equitable geographical distribution. The Commission would, inter alia, review the supply, demand and price situation affecting sea-bed minerals and recommend measures to protect countries from its adverse effects (article 30).

The Technical Commission would make recommendations on scientific research and transfer of technology, advise the Rules and Regulations Commission, assess environmental implications of activities in the area, supervise all operations in the area, make recommendations in cases of non-compliance of the rules of the Authority by sea-bed contractors, direct a staff of inspectors whose job would be to determine whether the contractors were following the rules, and issue emergency orders to suspend operations so as to prevent serious environmental harm (article 31).

The Rules and Regulations Commission would formulate and submit to the Council rules, regulations and procedures governing sea-bed activities in the area (article 32).

The Tribunal, composed of 11 judges appointed by the Assembly on the Council's recommendation, would have jurisdiction over international disputes between States parties or between States parties and nationals of other States about the interpretation or application of this part of the Convention or about contracts for sea-bed activities (article 33).

A State questioning the legality of measures taken by any organ of the Council or Assembly, on specified grounds, would be able to bring the matter before the Tribunal, as could any national of a State party to the Convention (article 36). [Articles 34, 35 and 37 to 39 contained further provisions concerning the Tribunal, while article 40 specified that parties to a dispute could submit the dispute to an arbitration commission.]

By article 41, the Enterprise would be the organ of the Authority which would conduct activities in the area directly, subject to the general policy directives and control of the Council.

The Secretariat would consist of a Secretary-General (article 42) as well as scientific, technical and other personnel (article 43). Its staff would be forbidden to seek or receive instruction from any external source or to disclose or receive industrial secrets (article 44). Arrangements would be made for co-operation with non-governmental organizations (article 45).

Articles 46 to 60 dealt with financial questions. Members of the Authority two years behind in paying their financial contributions to the Authority would lose their vote (article 61).

If the Tribunal found that a State grossly and persistently violated the provisions of this part of the Convention, that State's membership rights could be suspended by the Assembly on the recommendation of the Council (article 62). A final article (article 63) would permit the provisional application of the Convention under specified conditions.

Annex I contained the basic conditions of prospecting, exploration and exploitation. It set forth, in 21 paragraphs, the principles and rules to govern, inter alia: rights in the area and its resources; title to minerals and processed substances; prospecting, exploration and exploitation; qualification and selection of applicants for contracts; rights and obligations of the contractors; rules, regulations and procedures; conditions under which a contract might be suspended, terminated, revised or transferred; and responsibility and liability for damage arising from the conduct of operations by the contractor.

A special appendix set out two alternative approaches to financial arrangements between the Authority and the contractor.

Annex II contained the proposed statute of the Enterprise, setting out the provisions on, inter alia, the Enterprise's relationship to the Authority, its membership, its organization and management (including the structure of the Governing Board and financing) and how it should conduct its operations.

Annex III contained the proposed statute of the sea-bed dispute settlement system and set out provisions for the sea-bed Tribunal and the organization of special chambers to exercise the contentious jurisdiction of the Tribunal when requested.

Part II

Part II of the revised single negotiating text, submitted by the Chairman of the Second Committee, contained 131 articles (compared to 137 in the Geneva text), a transitional provision and an annex, on a wide range of subjects relating to the law of the sea involving the delimitation of ocean areas and the rights and duties of States in those areas. The articles were grouped under 10 chapter headings: (1) the territorial sea and the contiguous zone (articles 1 to 32); (2) straits used for international navigation (articles 33 to 43); (3) the exclusive economic zone (articles 44 to 63); (4) the continental shelf (articles 64 to 74); (5) the high seas (articles 75 to 108); (6) the right of access of land-locked States to and from the sea and freedom of transit (articles 109 to 117); (7) archipelagic States (articles 118 to 127); (8) régime of islands (article 128); (9) enclosed or semi-enclosed seas (articles 129 and 130); and (10) settlement of disputes (article 131). There was also a transitional provision as well as a brief annex listing species of highly migratory fish.

Pan III

Part III of the text, revised by the Chairman of the Third Committee, consisted of 89 articles (compared to 92 in the Geneva text) and was divided into three chapters. Chapter I dealt with the protection and preservation of the marine environment (articles 1 to 47), Chapter II with marine scientific research (articles 48 to 77) and Chapter III with the development and transfer of technology (articles 78 to 89).

The only change in Chapter I was in article 27, which would require flag States to enforce international standards on board vessels flying their flags or of their registry by not allowing those ships to leave port when they failed to comply, by inspecting the ships and certifying their conformity, by investigating and prosecuting violations, by informing other States and international organizations of their actions and by providing penalties severe enough to discourage violations.

There was also a new article dealing with ice-covered areas (article 43). That article said that coastal States would have the right to establish and enforce non-discriminatory laws and regulations against pollution from vessels in ice-covered areas within the exclusive economic zone, where particularly severe ice conditions obstructed navigation and where pollution could cause major harm or irreversibly disturb the ecological balance.

The changes in Chapter II were the following.

Article 60 specified that marine scientific research was to be conducted in the exclusive economic zone or on the continental shelf with the consent of the coastal State, but such consent must not be withheld unless the project bore substantially upon the exploration and exploitation of the living or non-living resources, involved drilling or the use of explosives, unduly interfered with the economic activities performed by the coastal State or involved artificial islands or installations.

By article 64, a research project in the exclusive economic zone could proceed four months after the coastal State was given the required information unless within two months of the date of receipt of such information the coastal State withheld its consent on the grounds that it bore on the exploration and exploitation of the living and non-living resources, found the information inaccurate or requested supplementary information.

By article 65, the coastal State could call a halt to such research if its sponsors failed to supply the required preliminary data or gave inaccurate information.

Article 76 provided that any dispute relating to marine scientific research would be settled by negotiation, conciliation or other procedures for settlement agreed upon by the parties to the dispute. If not so settled, there would be a conciliation procedure under which two or three outside experts would assist the parties to reach agreement, failing which the general procedures for dispute settlement would apply. Article 77 provided that pending settlement of a dispute, research could not commence or continue without the approval of the coastal State.

There were no changes in Chapter III.

Settlement of disputes

The revised text on settlement of law-of-the-sea disputes, submitted by the President of the Conference as Part IV of the negotiating text, contained 18 articles and seven annexes. The annexes set out the procedure to be followed for conciliation and for arbitration, a statute for a proposed Law of the Sea Tribunal, and special procedures to govern disputes dealing with fisheries, pollution, scientific research and navigation.

Article 1 of the text set out the obligation of States parties to the Convention to settle by peaceful means any dispute between them over the interpretation or application of the Convention. By the terms of article 2, nothing in the text was to impair the right of the parties to agree to settle such a dispute by any peaceful means of their own choice. A dispute might also be referred to arbitration or judicial settlement under any other regional or special agreement accepted by the parties (article 3), and parties to a dispute were obliged to exchange views expeditiously regarding its settlement (article 4).

According to article 5, if the parties agreed to their own choice of settlement procedure and to a time-limit for such proceedings, the binding settlement procedures specifically provided for in the Convention would apply only after that time-limit expired without a settlement having been reached. Further, by article 6, the conciliation procedure set out in the Convention could be applied if one party accepted the invitation of another to make use of them.

Article 7 set out that parties to a dispute who could not agree to settle it by means of their choice would be obliged to submit it to a compulsory and binding procedure under the Convention. Article 8 contained provisions on the relationship between the various dispute settlement procedures, including those relating to the international sea-bed area, as set out in Part I of the Convention.

As to the choice of a compulsory procedure, article 9 specified that when ratifying the Convention each State would be free to accept one or more of four different settlement procedures: the proposed Law of the Sea Tribunal, the International Court of Justice, an arbitral tribunal or a special committee of experts. Unless the parties agreed on which tribunal or committee would deal with a dispute, the complainant could only apply to a procedure chosen by the defendant. The extent of jurisdiction of these tribunals was spelled out in article 10. The decision rendered or any settlement effected by the tribunals mentioned in the Convention would be final and binding only on the parties to the dispute and in respect of that particular dispute, according to article 17. The various tribunals would be entitled to seek expert advice and assistance on scientific or technical matters (article 11) and to prescribe binding provisional measures to preserve the rights of the parties or prevent harm to the marine environment, pending final adjudication (article 12).

Article 13 specified that all the dispute settlement procedures under the Convention would be open to all States adhering to it.

In a dispute over the sovereign rights, exclusive rights or exclusive jurisdiction of a coastal State, another State would not be entitled to resort to the dispute settlement procedures of the Convention if local remedies (involving proceedings in the coastal State's courts), where appropriate, had not been exhausted, according to article 14. Article 18 added that the dispute settlement procedures of the Convention could not be invoked in regard to disputes over the exercise of sovereign or exclusive rights or exclusive jurisdiction of a coastal State, except when it was claimed: that a coastal State had violated its obligations under Convention provisions by interfering with freedom of navigation, overflight or communications; that any other State had violated its obligations under the Convention or appropriate national laws when exercising those freedoms; or that a coastal State had failed to apply international standards relating to the marine environment, subject to certain specified conditions.

By article 15, if a vessel registered in one State was detained by the authorities of another, the State of the vessel's registry, the owner, captain or operator could bring the matter before the Law of the Sea Tribunal, unless the parties agreed to another tribunal, in order to secure prompt release of the ship, its crew or passengers.

The law to be applied by any of the tribunals mentioned in this section of the Convention would be the law of the Convention, other rules of international law and any other applicable law (article 16).

Article 18 further specified that a State ratifying the Convention could declare that it did not accept some or all of the dispute settlement procedures with respect to disputes concerning military activities, disputes in which the United Nations Security Council determined that specified proceedings would interfere with the exercise of its functions, and disputes over sea boundary delimitations, provided that in boundary disputes a State could not decline to accept settlement procedures under the Convention unless it accepted another procedure calling for a binding decision.

Annex I A to the President's text on dispute settlement provided the procedure to be followed in conciliation. An international list of conciliators was to be drawn up, with each contracting State entitled to nominate four persons. When a dispute was referred to conciliation, each party would appoint two persons from this list as members of a Conciliation Commission, and the four conciliators would choose a fifth to act as Chairman. The Commission would decide its own procedure, could draw the parties' attention to any measures which might facilitate an amicable settlement, and would make proposals to the parties with a view to reaching such a settlement. Its report, to be made within 12 months, would not be binding on the parties. The parties to the dispute would bear the costs of the Commission and the Registrar of the Law of the Sea Tribunal would provide facilities.

Annex I B, on arbitration procedure, provided for the establishment by the parties to a dispute of a five-member arbitral tribunal: two of its members would be appointed by the parties; the other three would be appointed from nationals of third States, by agreement between the parties, from whom they would appoint a President. Failing agreement of the parties, these members would be appointed by the President of the Law of the Sea Tribunal or another agreed person or State. In the absence of agreement to the contrary by the parties, the arbitral tribunal would lay down its own procedure.

Absence or default of any party would not impede the arbitration procedure. The parties would be required to facilitate the tribunal's work. The expenses of the tribunal would be shared equally by the parties unless the tribunal decided otherwise. Decisions of the tribunal would be taken by majority vote, with the President casting the deciding vote in the event of a tie.

The tribunal's award, which might be accompanied by separate or dissenting opinions, would be final and without appeal, and the parties would have to comply with it immediately. Controversies over interpretation of the award could be submitted to the same or another arbitral tribunal.

The statute of the proposed Law of the Sea Tribunal was set out in Annex I C. The Tribunal would have 15 independent members, representing the principal legal systems of the world, chosen in accordance with a geographical pattern set out in the text. They would be elected for nine-year terms, initially by a meeting of States parties to the Convention, from among a list of nominees of those States; vacancies would be filled by the same procedure.

No member would be permitted to exercise any political or administrative function, or be actively associated with or financially interested in any enterprise concerned with a commercial use of the sea or sea-bed, nor could members act as agent, counsel or advocate in any case. A member's seat could be declared vacant if the other members unanimously considered that he had ceased to fulfil the required conditions. Members would enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities while on the Tribunal's business and would be required to make a public declaration that they would exercise their powers impartially and conscientiously.

The Tribunal could set up chambers to deal with particular disputes or categories of disputes, such as those relating to fishing, sea-bed exploration or exploitation, marine pollution or scientific research. To speed its business, it would set up annually a special chamber which could hear and determine disputes by summary procedure. The Tribunal could seek the advice of outside assessors on technical questions or of a fact-finding board. If one party had a national on the Tribunal, any other party to the dispute could choose a person to participate as a member.

The Tribunal's jurisdiction would comprise all disputes submitted to it under the Convention and all matters mentioned in any other international agreement conferring jurisdiction on it. Whenever an existing treaty provided for referring a law-of-the-sea subject to a special tribunal, the parties could agree to refer the matter to the Law of the Sea Tribunal.

The Tribunal would be open to States parties to the Convention and other States, while intergovernmental organizations and natural and juridical persons (including individuals and corporations) would have access to it in cases relating to the sea-bed area and the detention of vessels.

Members would receive an annual salary and a special allowance for each dispute; the amounts were to be decided by the States parties to the Convention. The Tribunal's expenses would be borne by those States, as well as other States and intergovernmental organizations having access to the Tribunal.

On procedural matters, the proposed statute specified that disputes could be brought before the Tribunal by a party or parties by notification of a special agreement or by written application. The Tribunal would make orders for the conduct of each case. When one party did not appear before the Tribunal or failed to defend its case, the other party might call on the Tribunal to decide in its favour.

All questions would be decided by a majority of members present, with the President casting the deciding vote in the event of a tie. Members would be entitled to deliver a separate opinion. The Tribunal's decision would have no binding force except between the parties to a dispute, and would be final and without appeal.

States, intergovernmental organizations or persons with a legal interest that might be affected by the Tribunal's decision could request to intervene. Every State party to the Convention would be entitled to intervene in proceedings whenever the interpretation or application of the Convention was in question, but it would then be bound by the Tribunal's judgement on that point. Each party would bear its own costs unless the Tribunal decided otherwise.

The statute could be amended by the same procedure that could be used for amending the Convention.

Annexes II A through D provided for special procedures to deal with disputes relating to fisheries, pollution, scientific research and navigation. Each would permit the submission of such disputes, at the request of any party, to a five-member committee appointed by agreement between the parties from a list of experts established by the appropriate international organization: the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for fisheries; the United Nations Environment Programme for pollution; the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission for research; and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization for navigation. Failing agreement among the parties on the membership of such a committee, the head of the appropriate international organization (the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the case of a marine research committee) could be asked to appoint the members in consultation with the parties. Each State party to the Convention could designate two experts for inclusion in the list of potential members of these special bodies.

The committee would decide how costs were to be apportioned among the parties, failing their agreement on this point. At a party's request, the committee could prescribe binding provisional measures to preserve the parties' rights or prevent harm to the marine environment. The committee would give its decision within five months, with a possible three-month extension in regard to fisheries disputes.

Where the committee found that a dispute involved interpretation of the Convention, that aspect would have to be sent to the appropriate tribunal for a finding. In reaching its decisions, the committee would have to comply with the Convention, the rules of international law and any special agreement between the parties with a view to settling the dispute. The committee's decisions would be taken by majority vote and would be binding, although subject to appeal on specific grounds. At the parties' request, the committee could carry out fact-finding, in which case its findings would be considered conclusive and it could make recommendations that did not have the force of a deci-

Fifth session of the Conference on the Law of the Sea

The fifth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea was held from 2 August to 17 September 1976 at United Nations Headquarters, New York.

A total of 150 States participated in the fifth session. In addition, three territories, 10 specialized agencies and United Nations bodies, eight intergovernmental organizations, 31 non-governmental organizations having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, and three national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) or the League of Arab States participated as observers.

The 150 States which participated were Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, the Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, the Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, the Holy See, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nauru, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Surinam, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Western Samoa, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

The three territories which sent observers were the Netherlands Antilles, the Seychelles and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The specialized agencies and United Nations bodies which were represented at the fifth session were the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Development Programme.

The intergovernmental organizations that participated as observers were the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the Commonwealth Secretariat, the Council of Europe, the European Communities, the Inter-American Development Bank, the League of Arab States, OAU and the Organization of American States.

The national liberation movements that participated as observers were the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (South Africa) and the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO).

The officers of the Conference were elected at its first session. The President was H. S. Amerasinghe (Sri Lanka). There were also three Chairmen for the three main committees, which dealt with the substantive work of the Conference, a Rapporteur-General, 31 Vice-Presidents, and a Rapporteur and three Vice-Chairman for each of the main committees. In addition, there was a 48-member General Committee, to assist the President in the general conduct of the business of the Conference; a Drafting Committee of 23 members, to formulate draft texts and give drafting advice; and a nine-member Credentials Committee, to examine the credentials of representatives. The only changes made to the officers or members elected at the previous sessions were that Ireland replaced Belgium as a Vice-president of the Conference and Thailand replaced Bangladesh as a member of the Drafting Committee. Jens Evensen (Norway) was designated as the Vice-President to replace the President during his absence from New York.

The rules of procedure of the Conference remained as adopted at the second session and as amended at the third, as did the "gentleman's agreement" annexed to the rules, by which the Conference was to make every effort to reach agreement on substantive matters by consensus, and by which there was to be no voting on such matters until all efforts at consensus had been exhausted.

The aim of the Third Conference on the Law of the Sea was to have a comprehensive convention on all ocean issues, including those which were outstanding from the first two Conferences held in 1958 and 1960.<sup>11</sup> In particular, the Conference was to try to establish a definition of and an international régime for the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and to ensure that the resources of the marine environment would be exploited for the benefit of mankind.

Specific issues for discussion included: the question of who might exploit the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond national jurisdiction and what the basic conditions of exploration and exploitation should be, to be covered by the First Committee; definitions of and régimes for such concepts as the territorial sea, international straits, the continental shelf and an exclusive economic zone, to be covered by the Second Committee; and regulations for the preservation of the marine environment, marine scientific research and the development and transfer of technology, to be covered by the Third Committee. The basis for the work of the Conference was the revised single negotiating text for a proposed Convention on the Law of the Sea, submitted by the committee Chairmen and the Conference President at the end of the fourth session of the Conference in May 1976 (see the preceding section).

When the Conference opened, the President suggested that it should endeavour to reach agreement on the key issues, which in his view were the following: matters relating to the international area of the sea-bed; interests of countries whose geographical location might deprive them of the benefit of an exclusive economic zone; the relationship between such a zone and the high seas; the rules for marine scientific research beyond the territorial sea; dispute settlement machinery; and formulation of final clauses. He noted that each committee would decide on the issues for negotiation and he made a number of procedural proposals.

The Conference then decided that there would be a general debate on the preamble and final clauses, to be held in two parts, dealing first with the purely formal aspects of the draft and then with more substantive matters such as entry into force, reservations and denunciations.

The committees devised several procedural innovations, aimed at permitting specialized consideration of topics in eight different negotiating groups while at the same time enabling all interested countries to take part in the negotiations. The concentration on main issues was a departure from the procedure of the previous session, at which the committees had held an article-by-article reading of the single negotiating text.

The results of the session, most of them coming from informal meetings, were summed up on the closing day by the Chairmen of the three main committees, in written reports and oral statements.

Work of the First Committee

The First Committee under the chairmanship of Paul Bamele Engo (United Republic of Cameroon) held 13 formal meetings from 4 August to 14 September 1976. Its main concern was the question of the organization of the future mining system for the deep-sea bed; discussions and negotiations dealt with the conditions to be laid down for prospecting, exploring and exploiting the area. Included was the issue of the circumstances under which States and corporations would have access to sea-bed minerals. It was generally understood that an International Sea-Bed Authority would be set up to administer the area, and that an organ of the Authority, known as the Enterprise, would be authorized to conduct exploration and mining on the Authority's behalf.

Before the First Committee was the revised single negotiating text submitted by the First Committee Chairman in May 1976 at the close of the previous session. Annexed to the text was a suggested set of provisions on the basic conditions of prospecting, exploration and exploitation, calling for the creation of a dual system under which activities in the area would be conducted either directly by the Authority or by States or their nationals acting in association with the Authority and under its control.

A contractual system would be established, conferring exclusive rights on the contractor in the contract area but ensuring control by the Authority at all stages of operation. The choice of the contract area would be made as follows: the outside applicant would propose an area or areas he wished to explore or exploit, and the Authority would allow him to work in a designated half of that area (or one or two equivalent areas proposed by the applicant), reserving the other half for exploitation either directly by the Authority or by developing countries or their nationals operating in association with the Authority and under its control. The Authority would adopt procedures and rules for ascertaining the qualifications of a would-be contractor.

The contract would spell out the rights and obligations of the Authority and the contractor, determining the apportionment of proceeds between them, requiring the contractor to transfer data and to train personnel from the Authority and developing countries, and giving him security of tenure and the exclusive right to seek and exploit specified minerals in the contract area.

After two weeks of discussions on how to organize its work, the Committee decided on 5 August to establish a workshop, open to all countries, with a mandate to negotiate on all matters relating to the future system for sea-bed exploration and exploitation. The workshop elected two Co-Chairmen: S. P. Jagota (India) and Hans H. M. Sondaal (Netherlands).

The workshop, which met 13 times from 9 August to 8 September, decided in turn to set up an informal negotiating group, giving it the task of seeking consensus on the system of exploitation. The negotiating group had 26 members—13 industrialized and 13 developing countries—but was open to all other countries. The regular members of this group, which held 12 meetings, were Australia, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Indonesia (later replaced by the Philippines), Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States and Zambia.

The Co-Chairmen of the workshop reported once a week to the First Committee on the activities of the workshop; their final report was submitted on 9 September.

The report contained summaries of three papers submitted at the outset of the workshop's meetings, proposing different systems for exploiting the sea-bed. These papers, which were not formal documents of the Conference, were: workshop paper No. 1, submitted by the developing countries belonging to the "Group of 77," calling for the exercise by the International Sea-Bed Authority of full and effective control over exploitation (known as the unitary system); workshop paper No. 2, submitted by the USSR, providing for exploitation by States and by the Authority, and giving all States equal opportunity to mine the sea-bed; and workshop paper No. 3, submitted by the United States, providing for a so-called parallel system of exploitation placing sea-bed mining by States and corporations on an equal footing with that carried out by the Authority, and permitting mining to be conducted in accordance with contracts between the Authority and others.

The paper submitted by the Group of 77 proposed that sea-bed exploration and mining be conducted exclusively by the world Authority, in two ways: directly through its Enterprise, or operating arm, and through some kind of association between the Enterprise and outside entities (States or corporations) pursuant to a contract between them. To secure compliance with international rules, the Authority would exercise full and effective control over sea-bed activities. It would be bound to avoid discrimination when it exercised its powers, but special consideration for the developing countries would not be deemed discriminatory.

The Authority would have to adopt procedures and regulations by which outside entities could apply for access to the sea-bed, as well as those stipulating the qualifications to be required of an applicant. Such qualifications would include financial standing, technological capability and satisfactory performance under any previous contracts with the Authority. Each applicant would have to be treated on an equal footing and would be required to fulfil four specific requirements: it must undertake to comply with all obligations and accept them as enforceable; it must accept control by the Authority; it must give satisfactory assurance that it would fulfil its obligations in good faith; and it must undertake to promote the interests of developing countries.

The Authority would determine when to conduct sea-bed activities in association with other entities. It would negotiate with applicants on the terms of a contract, provided that they possessed the requisite qualifications and complied with established procedures, that the application did not relate to those parts of the sea-bed retained for the use of the Authority, and that the contract complied with the resource policy and other decisions of the Authority. The contract would set out what contributions the Authority and the contractor would make in terms of funds, materials, equipment, skills and know-how, and what the financial arrangements would be for a particular deep-sea mining venture.

The USSR paper proposed that sea-bed exploration and mining be conducted both by States parties to the Convention and directly by the Authority. The Authority would determine the part or parts of the area in which it would conduct its activities; its area would be no larger than that in which States could operate.

The activities of States would be conducted on the basis of contracts with the Authority and they would come under its effective financial and administrative supervision. They could carry out activities through State enterprises or through juridical persons (including corporations) registered in and sponsored by States. As a sponsor, the State would be responsible for ensuring that the entity it sponsored complied with the Convention and with the Authority's rules and regulations.

All States parties would have equal rights to participate in sea-bed exploration and mining, irrespective of their location, social system and level of industrial development. Particular consideration would be given to the needs of developing countries, particularly the land-locked or geographically disadvantaged.

The United States paper proposed that States parties to the Convention and other entities (such as corporations) would be able to engage in sea-bed exploration and mining directly by entering into contracts with the Authority. The Authority would have effective fiscal and administrative supervision over all activities in the area to secure effective compliance with the Convention and the Authority's rules and regulations.

The Authority would be bound to promote and encourage activities in the area and to avoid discrimination in granting access to the sea-bed and in implementing its powers and functions. It would be forbidden to impair any rights granted under Part I of the Convention (see preceding section) and would be obliged fully to safeguard such rights. It would be empowered to give special consideration to the interests and needs of developing countries, particularly the land-locked and geographically disadvantaged.

The Authority would enter into a contract with an outside entity if the applicant was qualified by virtue of financial standing and technological capability. The Enterprise and States parties to the Convention would be presumed to be so qualified. All contractors would be required to accept the supervision of the Authority.

Subject only to those requirements, the Authority would award a contract, doing so on a competitive basis if it received more than one application for the same area. If no such competing application was received, a properly qualified applicant would be granted a contract within 90 days. The Authority would not have the right to refuse to enter into such a contract if financial arrangements had been satisfied and the contract was in strict conformity with the Convention and the Authority's rules and regulations. The contractor would be obligated to provide the funds, materials, equipment, skills and know-how needed for the conduct of operations under the contract.

The report of the workshop to the First Committee noted that the proposal of the Group of 77 was also supported by some developed countries, some of which opposed the USSR and the United States proposals on the ground that they ignored the principle that the international sea-bed was the common heritage of mankind. Others, which said they were prepared to support the general approach of the Group of 77 paper, stated that the Law of the Sea Convention must give some assurance of access to the sea-bed for States parties to the Convention and other entities (such as corporations).

Those who supported the USSR paper, according to the workshop report, argued that the right of States to explore and exploit the sea-bed should be guaranteed in the Convention and not left to the discretion of the Authority. The system of exploitation would have to take account of the needs and interests of the socialist system.

The United States paper, the report said, was supported by a number of developed countries. These accepted the principle of direct operations by the Authority, provided that the Convention guaranteed access for States parties and other entities on equal and acceptable economic terms and that the Convention specified the conditions for treating favourably the Enterprise and the developing countries.

The report also noted that additional suggestions were advanced by Norway in a search for a middle ground. These sought to ensure that the exclusive conduct of sea-bed activities by the Authority would take place in accordance with the Convention, that the manner in which the Authority determined a form of association with States or other entities would be in accordance with the Convention, and that the Authority would be able to exercise its control over activities in the area in order to secure continuous and consistent compliance with the Convention and the Authority's rules and procedures.

Another informal proposal was later submitted directly to the First Committee by Nigeria, which described it as falling midway between the unitary and dual schemes. It called for the establishment of a single system of joint ventures between the Authority and other entities interested in sea-bed mining.

In an assessment concluding the workshop report, the Co-Chairmen said that the central question seemed to be whether any dual system of exploitation would be permitted, particularly one in which States parties and other entities would be assured of access to the area. Other important issues were whether exploitation by States and corporations would occupy a higher or lower place in the scheme compared to direct exploitation through the Enterprise, and whether a dual system would be permanent or temporary.

The Co-Chairmen also mentioned two points of view about how to implement the concept, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1970,<sup>12</sup> that the sea-bed and its resources were the common heritage of mankind. One view was that the principle imposed the obligation to ensure that the system of exploitation did not create a monopolistic situation with respect to sea-bed mining. The other view was that there was an obligation to ensure that the resources of the sea-bed would be explored and exploited efficiently.

The Co-Chairmen pointed out, in connexion with the issue of assured access to the sea-bed, that one group of countries (the industrialized) would prefer to set out in an exhaustive manner all basic conditions relating to exploration and exploitation: a qualified applicant would be entitled to a contract and the Authority would be obliged to enter into a contract with such an applicant. Another group of countries (the developing) placed great importance on retaining certain discretionary powers for the Authority, particularly concerning the qualifications and selection of an applicant and the conclusion of a contract. They regarded that as an important role to be played by the Authority.

The Co-Chairmen believed it was doubtful that any country supported an automatic assurance of access, since there seemed to be general agreement that the Authority would presumably have some degree of discretion in applying the relevant provisions. The question, they felt, was rather the degree of allowable discretion and the manner in which that discretion could be used.

Another aspect of the central question, the Co-Chairmen said, was the principle of ensuring equal rights for all States parties to conduct or participate in sea-bed mining. While there appeared to be no disagreement on the need to promote the interests of the developing countries, it was clear from the discussion that the Convention would have to specify the circumstances in which that principle would

Another phase of the Committee's work concerned arrangements for financing the sea-bed Authority's operating arm, the Enterprise. A preliminary Secretariat paper suggested that the Enterprise might have to spend between $364 million and $563 million over a six-year period on research, development and capital investment before it began to receive a return from its mining ventures. It concluded that a consortium of Governments would have to guarantee the borrowings of the Enterprise. It estimated that three deep-sea mining operations producing a total of 3 million tons of minerals a year might eventually net the Enterprise some $125 million to $170 million annually, after costs.

In presenting the paper, the Secretary-General's Special Representative to the Conference stressed the scanty and often speculative data on which it was based.

During the assessment of the Committee's work in the final days of the session, a number of countries drew attention to matters not yet discussed which they felt should be taken up at the next session. These included: the financial arrangements for the Enterprise; the powers and functions of the Assembly and the Council of the Authority; the composition of the Council; financial arrangements between the Authority and contractors, including the question of how proceeds from sea-bed mining should be shared; how the Enterprise should function; and how disputes over the sea-bed should be handled.

In his report to the Conference on the work of the First Committee, the Chairman said the Committee had come to the central and most difficult problem: should the new system of exploitation provide for a guaranteed permanent role in sea-bed mineral exploitation for States parties and private firms? Or should such a role for States parties and private firms be considered only at the option of and subject to conditions negotiated by the Authority? Or again, should their role be conceived of as essentially temporary, to be phased out over a defined period agreed to beforehand?

The Chairman noted that the countries belonging to the Group of 77 had reformulated during the session their earlier position on the system for exploiting the sea-bed, in an attempt to meet some of the expressed concerns of the industrialized countries. The USSR and the United States had submitted texts which were helpful in the negotiations, but regrettably the discussion tended to cover old ground and failed to produce new approaches.

Stating that the Committee had reached an impasse, he said there appeared to be no indication that the proponents of any of the three proposals would accept the others. The only way out was through a change in positions and attitudes.

Reviewing the changes in the situation over the past two years, he recalled that in 1974 the exploitation systems envisaged by the two major interest groups were diametrically opposed, with the developing countries insisting that the Authority be the sole sea-bed miner and the technologically advanced countries insisting on private commercial operations. At this session, the industrialized nations had accepted the Enterprise on an equal footing with other entities, while the Group of 77 nations had agreed that other entities could participate in sea-bed mining in association with the Authority.

The Chairman reported further that during the Conference the United States Secretary of State had advanced ideas concerning the financing of the Enterprise. He had said that the United States would be prepared to agree to a means of financing the Enterprise in such a manner that it could begin its mining operations either concurrently or nearly concurrently with State or private firms. Also, the United States was prepared to include in the Convention agreed provisions for the transfer of technology so as to equalize the advantages held by certain industrialized States. The Chairman remarked that the proposal came with the clear condition that a parallel system of exploitation be accepted. The Secretary of State had also spoken of periodic review conferences for the Convention, perhaps at 25-year intervals, to allay fears that a system which might prove unsuitable would be permanently imposed.

Continuing, the Chairman suggested that if a mechanism could be found to achieve the common objective of increasing the availability of less costly raw materials deriving from the sea-bed, it might be possible to break through the current impasse. The Chairman suggested two ways to increase the availability of those minerals: to stipulate in the Convention that exploitation should be conducted for the explicit purpose of increasing the availability of raw materials, and to ensure that metals produced from sea-bed mining would be made available on the world market. Also, consideration should be given to how private companies with technology and managerial skills could help strengthen the Enterprise and facilitate its rapid entry into commercial production.

Work of the Second Committee

The Second Committee under the chairmanship of Andres Aguilar (Venezuela) held no formal meetings during the fifth session of the Third Conference. The Committee decided, rather than embarking on another article-by-article discussion of the Chairman's negotiating text, to engage in detailed study of the controversial questions which had given rise to difficulties at previous sessions.

The questions to which it gave this priority were:

(1) the legal status of the exclusive economic zone and the rights and duties of the coastal State and of other States (especially neighbouring land-locked States) in the zone;

(2) the rights of access of land-locked States to and from the sea and freedom of transit;

(3) revenue-sharing by the international community in respect of the exploitation of the continental shelf beyond 200 nautical miles;

(4) the definition of the outer edge of the continental margin (and thereby the outer limits of the continental shelf);

(5) the rules for passage of ships through straits used for international navigation; and

(6) the delimitation of the territorial sea, the exclusive economic zone and the continental shelf between adjacent or opposite States.

The Committee established five negotiating groups open to all member States to consider these questions. Subsequently, smaller consultative groups were established. The negotiating groups were chaired by Mr. Aguilar. The only record issued by the Second Committee was the report made by the Chairman to the Conference. The Chairman noted that the report reflected solely his personal opinions and did not bind any delegation.

In his report, the Chairman summarized the work and the conclusions of the negotiating groups on the various issues.

Concerning the economic zone, the Chairman said a small consultative group on the legal status of the exclusive economic zone, set up by negotiating group No. 1, did not achieve concrete results but in his assessment was very close to reaching a generally acceptable solution. It had worked on articles 44 and 46 of the Chairman's negotiating text, which would establish economic zones in which coastal States would have sovereign rights over resources, exclusive jurisdiction over other economic activities and scientific research, and jurisdiction with regard to environmental preservation; all other States would enjoy traditional freedoms such as navigation and overflight. The discussion had centred on the two articles with a view to reformulating them in order to avoid assimilating the economic zone to the zones on either side of it—the territorial sea and the high seas.

Concerning the item on the rights and duties of States with respect to the living resources of the economic zone, the groups of States most directly concerned organized, outside the framework of the Committee, a consultative group composed of 21 States. Twenty of these were designated in equal proportions by the two groups (the coastal State group and the group of land-locked and geographically disadvantaged States), and the remaining member was chosen by agreement between the two to preside over the consultative group. The Chairman did not report on the activities of this group.

On another issue, the States most directly concerned informed negotiating group No. 1 that they had reached agreement on the text of article 56, dealing with catadromous species—fish such as eels which live mainly in fresh water but spawn in the sea. The article provided that the coastal State in whose waters such species spent the greater part of their life cycle would be responsible for their management, that fishing for such species should take place only in areas (including the economic zone) other than the high seas, and that the management of and fishing for such species migrating through the economic zone of another State would be regulated by agreement among the States directly involved.

With regard to highly migratory species—such as whales and tuna, which ranged widely over the oceans—the Chairman said there was a desire among the States directly concerned to consult after the session on provisions for the Convention.

On the question of access to the sea and transit for land-locked States, Chapter VI of the Chairman's negotiating text provided that land-locked States had the right of access to and from the sea, and that the terms and conditions under which they were to exercise freedom of transit across neighbouring States must be agreed between the States concerned.

The Chairman reported that negotiating group No. 2 went over this chapter article-by-article, but after its presiding officer reported on the results to the Committee, indicating the points on which he thought an agreement acceptable to the majority had been reached, several members expressed reservations. These included representatives of one transit State and several land-locked States. The Chairman said he continued to believe Chapter VI represented a good compromise solution that could, with minor changes, have been the basis for a formal agreement during the session.

Negotiating group No. 3 had considered two main issues in connexion with the continental shelf, the Chairman reported. These were: how to define the outer edge of the continental margin, and thereby of the continental shelf; and how the international community might share in the revenue derived by coastal States from the exploitation of those parts of the continental shelf lying more than 200 miles off shore.

With regard to the revenue-sharing idea, a consultative group discussed such details as the rate of contributions by coastal States and the possibility of revising the rate after exploitation of the area began, whether all States with broad continental shelves had to contribute or whether the developing countries, or the least developed, would be exempt, which States would benefit from the contributions, and what authority would be responsible for collecting and distributing them.

Concerning the definition of the outer edge of the continental margin, the discussions of a small consultative group centred on a detailed study of its implications and on the possibility of applying a formula presented by one member to complement the definition contained in the Chairman's negotiating text, which had defined the continental shelf of a coastal State as the sea-bed and subsoil of the submarine areas that extended beyond its territorial sea throughout the natural prolongation of its land territory to the outer edge of the continental margin, or to a distance of 200 nautical miles from the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea was measured where the outer edge of the continental margin did not extend up to that distance.

The Chairman observed in his report that the hopes to reach agreement on these questions had not materialized. At the final meeting of the consultative group, some members had reiterated their original position that the continental shelf should not extend beyond 200 miles, while representatives of States with broad shelves repeated their position that the question was an important part of the "package deal" and that a compromise might lie in revenue-sharing. In the Chairman's view, recognition of the rights invoked by States with broad continental shelves was one of the main components of the package deal.

Negotiating group No. 4 had before it Chapter II of the negotiating text, which would give ships of all nations the right to pass through straits used for international navigation, on the understanding that they must proceed without delay and without threatening the bordering States, and that States alongside the straits could regulate navigation and other aspects of passage. The group heard some general statements and received some informal amendments to the text. In his report, the Chairman said the debate showed that Chapter II appeared to provide an acceptable negotiating basis for the majority. He added, however, that some States bordering straits took the view that their acceptance of the text was conditional on certain changes aimed at achieving a better balance between their interests and the interests of users of the straits.

In negotiating group No. 5 and a smaller consultative group, discussion centred on the principles to be used in delimiting the economic zone and continental shelf of States adjacent to one another along a coastline or facing one another across a body of water. Specifically, the issue was which of two methods should be given primary importance: dividing the area along the median line (midway between the coasts of opposite States or equidistant from the coasts of adjacent States), or dividing it according to so-called equitable principles.

After reporting that these two positions continued to be maintained by different countries, the Chairman said he continued to believe that the negotiating text he had submitted in 1975 could lead to general agreement, as it contained both elements. This text stated that the delimitation of the exclusive economic zone and of the continental shelf between adjacent or opposite States was to be effected by agreement in accordance with equitable principles, employing, where appropriate, the median or equidistant line, and taking account of all the relevant circumstances.

The Chairman of the Second Committee also reported that the Committee had held several meetings to hear comments on matters not dealt with in the negotiating groups. He divided these into four categories: issues affecting a limited number of countries, which could be solved only by agreement among the States concerned; articles of interest to a larger number of countries, which could also be dealt with by the States concerned (archipelagic waters, enclosed or semi-enclosed seas); proposals which had met with little or no support; and articles concerning which no comments had been made, which might imply that they commanded broad support. He added that 50 of the 131 articles in Part II of the negotiating text fell into the latter category.

Work of the Third Committee

The Third Committee, under the chairmanship of Alexander Yankov (Bulgaria) held six formal meetings from 3 August to 15 September 1976, as well as informal meetings.

The jurisdiction of States over pollution control in different areas of the sea, the extent to which marine scientific research in the economic zone should require the consent of the coastal State concerned, and the ways in which the transfer of marine technology among nations should be promoted were the key issues examined by the Third Committee.

The main issue for the session in regard to protection and preservation of the marine environment was how to define in the Law of the Sea Convention the respective powers of three categories of States in different ocean zones: coastal States, through whose sea areas the ships of foreign States passed; flag States, the countries where ships were registered; and port States, the countries whose ports were visited by foreign vessels. The question to be resolved was the relative balance of authority among these three categories of States, and, specifically, which had the authority to legislate and enforce pollution standards under various circumstances, especially in relation to pollution caused by ships (vessel-source pollution).

On marine scientific research, the main issue at the session was what rights a coastal State should have, by withholding its consent, to prevent foreign nationals from carrying out research in its economic zone or continental shelf.

The main question which the Committee dealt with in regard to the transfer of technology was the role that the International Sea-Bed Authority should play in this area.

In his reports to the Committee, and later to the Conference, the Chairman described the stage which the negotiations had reached on each subject and informed it of the text of a few paragraphs agreed to informally in the Committee's negotiating group on vessel-source pollution, established under the chairmanship of Jose Luis Vallarta (Mexico). The Committee Chairman expressed the view that the issues before the Committee had been successfully narrowed.

With reference to the marine environment, the Chairman noted that the Committee had concentrated on key issues related to vessel-source pollution, although it had also received suggestions and comments on other aspects of marine pollution. The basic concepts reflected in the negotiating text he had submitted at the fourth session in May 1976 had received wide support and there were few proposals that would alter the balance of the package.

The Committee had first devoted attention to the competence of coastal States to establish laws and regulations for the prevention and control of pollution by vessels in the territorial sea, the Chairman reported. It had then studied the legislative powers of the coastal State to prevent and control vessel-source pollution in the economic zone and in special areas within that zone. Next, it had considered issues relating to the enforcement of laws and regulations by the flag State, port State and coastal State, as well as the closely related question of safeguards against illegal actions directed at vessels.

As to other environmental issues, whether related to pollution from vessels or to other sources of pollution, he said the Committee had considered informal amendments to 20 articles, mostly of a drafting nature, which it had to study further.

While the Committee had succeeded in narrowing differences, important issues remained on which it must especially focus its attention in the future. In addition to the major question of coastal State competence in the territorial sea, other questions where clarification would be useful were the nature—civil or criminal—of proceedings by the port State against ships suspected of pollution, whether port State jurisdiction was universal, and the degree of acceptance needed for the establishment and application of international rules and standards.

Continuing, the Chairman reported agreement in the Committee's negotiating group on paragraph 5 of article 21 of Part III, which would permit coastal States, under certain circumstances, to establish laws and regulations against pollution from vessels in certain portions of their economic zone. [Article 21 as a whole, as contained in the revised single negotiating text, defined the various authorities competent to establish regulations against vessel-source pollution in different ocean areas—international agreements, flag State and coastal State legislation—and provided that the coastal State's laws affecting the economic zone must conform to established rules and standards.]

Paragraph 5 concerned cases where international regulations were deemed inadequate for particular portions ("special areas") of the economic zone. It stated that when a coastal State had reasonable grounds for believing that special mandatory measures were needed in such areas to prevent pollution from vessels, it might submit relevant data to the competent international organization. If the organization determined within 12 months that the conditions in those areas justified such measures, the State might establish anti-pollution laws and regulations for the areas.

Four other agreed paragraphs reported on by the Chairman related to article 27 of the negotiating text, which defined various measures a State might take against ships flying its flag in order to enforce international standards on pollution. These new paragraphs provided that: (1) flag States were to ensure that vessels flying their flag were prohibited from sailing until they complied with international anti-pollution standards; (2) flag States were to ensure that their vessels were periodically inspected, and certificates issued by them were to be accepted by other States unless there were clear grounds for believing that the condition of the vessel did not correspond with the particulars of the certificates; (3) flag States were to investigate, on request, any alleged violation by their vessels and, if sufficient evidence was available, ensure that proceedings were taken in accordance with their laws; and (4) penalties in flag States' legislation were to be adequate in severity to discourage violations.

The Chairman also reported that the negotiating group had been unable to resolve some issues pertaining to article 28 of the negotiating text, which specified conditions under which a port State could investigate and undertake proceedings against a ship in one of its ports violating international standards for discharge. However, there had been agreement on a paragraph of this article providing that a port State was, as far as practicable, to comply with requests from any State for investigation of discharge violations of international rules believed to have occurred in the internal waters, territorial sea or economic zone of the requesting State, as well as with requests from the flag State of the vessel for investigation of such violations wherever they had occurred.

Another issue which arose in the negotiating group, the Chairman noted, related to the powers of States within their territorial sea. Specifically, it concerned provisions on this subject in two different parts of the negotiating text: article 20, paragraph 2, of Part II (the part of the text being studied by the Second Committee), which would bar coastal States from applying laws and regulations affecting the design, construction, manning or equipment of foreign ships engaged in innocent passage through the territorial sea, and article 21, paragraph 3, of Part III (the Third Committee's part), which would confer powers on the coastal State to establish laws to prevent or control pollution from vessels, provided they did not hamper innocent passage.

The Chairman advised that some countries found the two provisions contradictory, since in their view the Part II text would unduly erode the sovereignty recognized in the Part III text. Other countries, however, took the view that the article from Part II was a necessary complement to the other article and constituted an indispensable safeguard for the right of innocent passage.

On the question of marine scientific research, the Chairman reported to the Committee that great progress had been made on some points relating to marine research while on others there was still a need to bridge the gap between national positions.

The Chairman reported he had submitted a test proposal on this issue. A modification of article 60 in the revised single negotiating text, this proposal specified that coastal States had the right to regulate and authorize research in their economic zones and on their continental shelves, that such research was to be conducted with the consent of the coastal State in accordance with the Convention, that coastal States should normally grant their consent and establish rules and procedures to avoid unreasonable delay or denial of consent, that such research must not interfere with coastal State activities, and that consent might be withheld when research bore on exploration and exploitation of living and non-living resources or involved such other factors as the introduction of harmful substances or the use of artificial islands.

A number of countries upholding coastal State rights had said they could accept the Chairman's proposal, though amendments were suggested to specify inter alia that a coastal State's consent must be express. On the other hand, countries favouring relatively unfettered research opposed the Chairman's text, arguing that it would prevent research from being conducted in some parts of the oceans.

Concerning research in the territorial sea, the Chairman indicated that a possible compromise text for article 57 had been accepted, pending the resolution of other articles. The new text would give coastal States the exclusive right to regulate, authorize and conduct research in the territorial sea, specifying that research in that area could be conducted only with the express consent of and under the conditions set forth by the coastal State.

The Chairman reported that informal discussions on facilitating the transfer of technology had focused on the participation of the International Sea-Bed Authority in this activity. The discussions took place both in the Committee and in a negotiating group chaired by Mr. Metternich (Federal Republic of Germany).

Article 85 of the revised single negotiating text, one of the two articles discussed in this connexion, was one of four articles suggesting various ways for promoting international co-operation in technology transfer and development, including bilateral and multilateral programmes, the establishment of accepted guidelines for transfer, co-ordination of activities by international organizations, and co-operation with the Sea-Bed Authority. The article called for international co-operation in the transfer to developing countries of skills relating to sea-bed exploration and exploitation.

On this article, the Chairman reported, there had been amendments which sought to introduce the element of co-operation between the Authority and other international organizations, the idea being to strengthen the role of the Authority by giving it a co-ordinating role in the international transfer of technology. Other amendments were intended to limit the Authority's role in this matter to areas coming within its scope.

The Chairman then referred to article 86, which specified various ways in which the Authority should assist the transfer of technology, such as training and the provision of documentation. Amendments to that text, he stated, made reference to particular interests, such as the rights and duties of holders, suppliers and recipients of technology. They also dealt with the proposed establishment of an over-all co-ordination system and a joint international fund for those activities of the Authority promoting technology transfer.

Some countries had proposed the deletion of the two articles, he continued, on the ground that the First Committee should deal with the matter. The idea seemed to have emerged that a procedural device should be found which would enable the Third Committee to deal with the articles in collaboration with the First Committee.

Work in plenary

Dispute settlement

The Conference devoted 36 informal plenary meetings to its first article-by-article discussion on procedures for the settlement of law-of-the-sea disputes. The discussions were based on a text submitted by the Conference President at the close of the fourth session in May 1976, as Part IV of the negotiating text before the Conference.

Summarizing the discussion in a brief oral report to the closing meeting of the session, the President said there had been controversy over some issues in his text dealing with compulsory procedures for dispute settlement. The text would give States the option of choosing from among three procedures: a Law of the Sea Tribunal, the International Court of Justice and an arbitral tribunal, with the option of a special committee of experts for certain technical disputes.

Pointing to areas of particular controversy, he mentioned the freedom of States to choose among the various tribunals, the jurisdiction of those tribunals, provisional measures which a tribunal might take before making a final adjudication, the access of parties to the different tribunals, the provision allowing a ship's owner, operator or master or flag State to seek prompt release of a detained vessel, and a provision exempting from compulsory settlement certain kinds of disputes over the exercise of certain coastal State's rights in its economic zone.

The President said a less controversial discussion had been held on the first six articles in the text—a series of provisions which imposed a general obligation on States parties to the Law of the Sea Convention to settle by peaceful means any dispute between them over the interpretation or application of the Convention.

The President added that he would circulate a revised negotiating text on dispute settlement which could be the subject of further discussion at the next session.

Organization of the sixth session

The President said that the General Committee had agreed on a set of proposals on how the Conference should conduct its business at the next session. Included was a proposal that the Conference should try to have its officers produce a consolidated text by the end of the sixth week of the session. On the basis of that text, the Conference, in the last week, should prepare a draft Convention on which it should act, if possible, by consensus and without resorting to a vote.

The Conference decided to hold its sixth session in New York, from 23 May to 8 July 1977, with a possible extension to 15 July.

Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, Official Records, Vol. VI, Fifth Session: New York, 2 August-17 September 1976. Summary Records of Meetings (Plenary meetings: 71st to 76th; General Committee: 21st to 28th meetings; First Committee: 25th to 37th meetings; Third Committee: 28th to 33rd meetings) and Documents (issued during 5th session). U.N.P. Sales No.: E.77.V.2.

Decisions of the General Assembly on the Conference on the Law of the Sea

On 10 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/63 concerning the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. By that resolution, the Assembly noted a letter of 20 September 1976 from the President of the Conference to the President of the General Assembly regarding the decisions of the fifth session of the Conference concerning the next session. It approved the convening of the sixth session of the Conference from 23 May to 8 July 1977, with a possible extension to 15 July should the Conference so decide. It also decided to accord priority to the Conference in relation to other United Nations activities, except those of organs established by the Charter of the United Nations.

The Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to make available, as appropriate, the necessary facilities for private consultations between sessions among Governments and delegations. Recalling the decision of the Conference to accept the invitation of the Government of Venezuela to meet at Caracas at an appropriate date to sign the Final Act and related instruments adopted by the Conference, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to that end.

Resolution 31/63 was adopted without objection. It was sponsored by Bulgaria, El Salvador, Nepal, Nigeria and Norway.

In another action relating to the Conference, the Assembly decided that the provisions of regulation 5.9 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, as amended, should be applied to the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea with regard to the financial assessment of participating non-member States. Thus, those States were required to contribute towards Conference expenses at rates to be determined by the General Assembly. This action was embodied in decision 31/407, adopted without objection on 10 December 1976 on the report of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. The Fifth Committee approved the decision without vote on 8 December.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 3067(XXVIII) of 16 November 1973, 3334(XXIX) of 17 December 1974 and 3483(XXX) of 12 December 1975,

Noting the letter dated 20 September 1976 from the President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea to the President of the General Assembly regarding the decisions reached at the fifth session of the Conference, held in New York from 2 August to 17 September 1976,

Having considered the decision of the Conference, as conveyed in the letter of its President, that its sixth session should be convened in New York on 23 May 1977 for a period of seven weeks, with a possible extension to eight weeks should the Conference so decide,

Bearing in mind the request of the Conference, referred to in the letter from its President, that the Secretary-General should provide the necessary facilities for private consultations between sessions among Governments and delegations,

Taking into account the recommendation made by the Conference that the General Assembly should study measures to ensure stability and continuity for the secretariat personnel recruited for the Conference,

1. Approves the convening of the sixth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in New York for the period from 23 May to 8 July 1977, with a possible extension to 15 July should the Conference so decide;

2. Reiterates its decision at its thirtieth session to accord priority to the Conference in relation to other United Nations activities, except those of organs established by the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Authorizes the Secretary-General to make available, as appropriate, the necessary facilities for private consultations between sessions among Governments and delegations;

4. Further authorizes the Secretary-General to continue to make the necessary arrangements originally provided under paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 3067(XXVIII) for the efficient and continuous servicing of the Conference in 1977 and of subsequent activities as may be decided upon by the Conference, as well as to take appropriate measures to ensure stability and continuity for the secretariat personnel recruited for the Conference;

5. Recalls, in this connexion, that it noted in paragraph 4 of its resolution 3334(XXIX) the decision of the Conference to accept the invitation of the Government of Venezuela to meet at Caracas at an appropriate date for the purpose of signing the Final Act and related instruments adopted by the Conference and authorized the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to that end.

Chapter IV

Questions concerning the uses of atomic energy*The effects of atomic radiation

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation (established by the General Assembly in 1955) held its twenty-fifth session in Vienna, Austria, from 6 to 15 September 1976.

The Committee reported to the General Assembly that it had discussed, on the basis of drafts prepared by the Secretariat, the scientific annexes of a comprehensive report to be submitted to the Assembly in 1977. The Committee had reviewed the information available on population exposures from natural radiation sources, from power production by nuclear fission, and from environmental contamination due to nuclear explosions; it had also dealt with occupational exposure to radiation and with medical irradiation. In addition, the Committee's discussions had covered the effects of ionizing radiation, including genetic effects and the induction of malignancies, and effects on embryonic development.

The General Assembly, at its thirty-first (1976) session, referred the report of the Scientific Committee to the Special Political Committee, which considered the report and, on 19 October, approved without a vote the text of a draft resolution sponsored by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Chile, Japan, Liberia, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, the Philippines, the Sudan, Sweden and Venezuela.

On 8 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted the text, also without a vote, as resolution 31/10.

By the preamble to this resolution, the Assembly inter alia expressed its concern about the potentially harmful effects on existing and future generations resulting from the radiation levels to which man was exposed; it also expressed awareness of the continuing need for compiling information about atomic radiation and for analysing its effects on man and his environment. It noted that the organizational responsibility for servicing the Scientific Committee had been transferred from the Offices of the Secretary-General to the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly inter alia noted with appreciation the report of the Scientific Committee and requested it to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels and effects of atomic radiation from all sources. The Assembly requested all Member States, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned to supply to the Scientific Committee further relevant data in order to facilitate the preparation of the Committee's comprehensive report to the General Assembly in 1977. Also, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the growing co-operation between the Scientific Committee and UNEP, and it asked UNEP to provide the Committee with the full support necessary for the effective conduct of its work and for the dissemination of its findings.

During the debate in the Special Political Committee, Australia noted the continuing preparations for submission of the comprehensive report in 1977.

New Zealand said it was gratified to note that, since the termination of French atmospheric testing in the Pacific, the average deposition of strontium 90 had declined and no new fission products had been detected at six monitoring stations in the South Pacific. Venezuela also noted the downward trend in the quantities of strontium 90 and cesium 137 on the earth's surface, and shared Fiji's opinion that underground nuclear tests were not a solution, since vertical seepage of radio-active pollution had been observed.

The USSR and others, including Liberia, New Zealand and the Syrian Arab Republic, emphasized the need for a total ban on nuclear-weapon tests. In this connexion, Ireland expressed concern about the danger that nuclear energy for peaceful purposes might be used in secret for the manufacture of nuclear weapons and it called for strict controls on the transfer of nuclear technology.

Ecuador and Iraq voiced concern about the situation in developing countries with regard to radiology safety facilities and implementation of radiation protection standards.

Progress in the application of atomic energy for the benefit of humanity was noted by India, which mentioned the work done in the application of isotopes and radiation techniques for food preservation and storage.

A/31/293. Report of Special Political Committee.

Resolution 31/10, as proposed by Special Political Committee, A/31/293, adopted without vote by Assembly on 8 November 1976, meeting 57.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, in particular resolution 3410(XXX) of 28 November 1975,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continuing need for compiling information about atomic radiation and for analysing its effects on man and his environment,

Noting the intention of the Scientific Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session a comprehensive report reviewing population exposures from natural radiation sources, from the production of power by nuclear fission and from the environmental contamination due to nuclear explosions, occupational exposure to radiation, medical irradiation, and the genetic and carcinogenic effects of ionizing radiation,

Noting further that the organizational responsibility for servicing the Scientific Committee has now been transferred from the Offices of the Secretary-General to the United Nations Environment Programme,

1. Notes with appreciation the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation;

2. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordination activities, to increase knowledge of the levels and effects of atomic radiation from all sources;

3. Notes the intention of the Scientific Committee to hold its twenty-sixth session at Vienna from 13 to 22 April 1977;

4. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests all Member States and the United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned to supply to the Scientific Committee by the end of 1976 further data relevant to its work, with a view to facilitating the preparation by the Committee of its comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

6. Notes with satisfaction the growing co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme, particularly on projects to which the Committee can make a significant contribution;

7. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to provide the Scientific Committee with the full support necessary for the effective conduct of its work and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public.

Annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) was presented to the General Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session by the Director-General of IAEA, Sigvard Eklund, on 9 November 1976.

Introducing the report to the Assembly, the Director-General gave an account of the Agency's activities in the fields of nuclear power, safeguards and technical assistance.

Discussing nuclear energy, which continued to be the only immediately available alternative to coal and oil, the Director-General spoke about its vital role in raising the living standards in developing countries and maintaining those of the industrialized societies. To consider the safe and economic implementation of nuclear power programmes and to remove some of the uncertainties concerning the nuclear fuel cycle, IAEA was preparing for a major international conference, to be held in May 1977, which was to give energy planners a comprehensive overview of nuclear power and its fuel cycle.

The Director-General said that, in addition to helping maintain the high safety record of the nuclear industry, the Agency had among its tasks the discovery and confirmation of new uranium resources and the expansion of its programme of promoting and co-ordinating research and development in the field of long-term waste-disposal.

Turning to questions of proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive capacity, the Director-General stated that the Agency had consulted with member States in order to design a realistic programme for the physical protection of nuclear facilities and materials. He noted that the ratification by Japan of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>1</sup> bringing the total number of signatories to 100, constituted a major event with regard to the Agency's safeguards responsibilities. The Director-General expressed hope that the agreement under this Treaty between the European Atomic Energy Community (EURATOM) and IAEA would soon come into force and he urged other countries still outside the scope of the Treaty to ratify it. In this context he referred to the crucial importance of the complete cessation of all nuclear-weapon tests.

Under the mandate of article V of the non-proliferation Treaty, which provides that peaceful applications of nuclear explosions be made available to non-nuclear-weapon States, the Agency advised member States on economic, technical, safety and legal aspects of the use of nuclear explosive devices for peaceful purposes.

The Director-General referred to the problems of applying appropriate safeguards in all cases of production or sale of nuclear materials or equipment. He pointed out that countries which had not voluntarily placed all their nuclear activity under IAEA safeguards would be able to develop nuclear techniques of their own towards nuclear explosives or nuclear weapons; he urged that manufacturing countries stipulate, as an irrevocable condition for the delivery of nuclear material or equipment, that the receiving State accept IAEA safeguards on its entire nuclear programme.

Speaking about the growing cost of technical assistance, the Director-General said that, though the target for voluntary contributions had risen from $1.5 million in 1959 to $6 million in 1976, the increase was not substantial in terms of purchasing power. The Agency had therefore decided to try to reduce costs by subcontracting substantial components of technical assistance projects to an institute or semi-official body.

On 10 November, the General Assembly took note of the IAEA report, welcomed the important steps taken by the Agency in concluding safeguards agreements with many States, and urged all States to continue to co-operate with IAEA.

The Assembly also referred to the 1977 conference on nuclear power and its fuel cycle and asked the Agency to inform it of the results. It noted with satisfaction that the report of the IAEA Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes would deal with all aspects of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes as well as factors involved in operating an international service on such explosions.

The Assembly then commended IAEA for its work on the survey of uranium resources, production and demand, and urged that the survey be kept under constant review; it also noted with appreciation IAEA'S efforts regarding the physical protection of nuclear materials and its detailed study of the concept of regional fuel-cycle centres.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 31/11, adopted, without a vote, on the proposal of India, Poland and Senegal.

During the Assembly's discussion, Austria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Poland and the USSR, among others, expressed support for IAEA'S efforts to expand and increase the effectiveness of the safeguards system. The USSR considered this a political question of international security, saying it was essential to have strict safeguards so that international activities in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy could not become a channel for the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Concern about the possible diversion of nuclear energy to military purposes was also expressed by Japan. India was of the opinion that safeguard functions should be strictly governed by the provisions of IAEA'S statute.

The United Kingdom believed that the non-proliferation Treaty offered the surest available means of containing the danger of the spread of nuclear explosive devices, and urged those Governments not party to the Treaty to accede to it. Austria, Poland and the USSR also stressed the importance of the Treaty. (See also pp. 18—20.)

The vital role of nuclear technology in economic development was pointed out by Brazil, which expressed the hope that IAEA would promote the dissemination of peaceful nuclear technology, especially among developing countries which needed such technology.

Support for the study of regional fuel-cycle centres was expressed by Canada, the German Democratic Republic, the USSR, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia, among others. Though there were dangers inherent in the uncontrolled availability of excess-plutonium stocks, Canada observed, the benefits to world energy supply and international security were obvious if well-managed and internationally controlled stocks of fuel were available as needed by the world community.

Resolution 31/11, as recommended by 3 powers, A/31/L.16, adopted without vote by Assembly on 10 November 1976, meeting 61.

The General Assembly,
Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1975, Aware that the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 9 November 1976 provides additional information on the main developments in the Agency's activities,

Considering the nearly unanimous projection of ever increasing world demand for energy and noting that in 1977, its twentieth anniversary, the International Atomic Energy Agency will hold a major conference on nuclear power and its fuel cycle at Salzburg, Austria, to assess the over-all role to be played by nuclear energy as an alternative energy source presently available,

Appreciating the efforts of the International Atomic Energy Agency in helping developing countries, through its expanded training programmes, to meet their manpower requirements for the management, safety and engineering aspects of their nuclear power projects,

Noting with satisfaction that the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, set up by the International Atomic Energy Agency, will deal with the economic, technical, safety and legal aspects of nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes as well as the factors involved in the establishment and operation of an international service on nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Welcomes the important steps taken during the year by the International Atomic Energy Agency in concluding safeguards agreements with many States;

3. Urges all States to continue to co-operate with the International Atomic Energy Agency and to take all necessary measures to enhance the recognized efforts of the Agency in the fulfilment of its tasks in the various fields of the peaceful uses of atomic energy, in accordance with its statute;

4. Commends the International Atomic Energy Agency on the role it played in the preparation of the latest survey of uranium resources, production and demand and urges that this survey should be kept under constant review;

5. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the International Atomic Energy Agency in connexion with its work regarding the physical protection of nuclear materials and its detailed study of the concept of regional fuel cycle centres;

6. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to inform the General Assembly at its thirty-second session of the results of the Salzburg conference;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency the records of the thirty-first session of the General Assembly relating to the Agency's activities.

Chapter V

Strengthening of international security*Implementation of the Declaration on Strengthening International Security

During 1976, implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security<sup>1</sup> was again the subject of a number of communications to the Security Council and the Secretary-General, and was again considered by the General Assembly, which, with the adoption of resolution 31/92, inter alia called upon all States to seek strict and consistent implementation of the Charter of the United Nations and of the Declaration and to extend the process of detente to all regions, reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle for self-determination and of the right of any State to dispose freely of its natural resources, reaffirmed its opposition to attempts to violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of States, recommended urgent measures to promote disarmament, and recommended that the Security Council consider steps to carry out effectively its primary responsibility to maintain international peace and security.

By a second resolution (31/91), the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of every State to determine freely its political, social and economic system, denounced any form of interference by a State in the affairs of other States, and called upon all States to prevent any hostile act or activity from taking place within their territory.

During the year, a number of States transmitted to the Security Council or to the Secretary-General texts of joint communiqués and declarations of friendship and co-operation made between countries on the occasion of a State or official visit. Such declarations were submitted by: Angola and Bulgaria; Benin and Romania; Bulgaria and the USSR; the German Democratic Republic and Guinea-Bissau; Guinea-Bissau and Romania; Mauritania and Romania; Mexico and Yugoslavia; and Romania and Senegal. The declarations set out the principles on which the pairs of countries had agreed to conduct their bilateral and international relations.

Further communications received during 1976 included:

— a letter dated 9 February from Poland containing the text of a resolution of the Seventh Congress of the Polish United Workers' Party, held at Warsaw, Poland, in December 1975;

— a letter dated 8 April from Bulgaria transmitting excerpts from the report of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party, issued at the opening of its Eleventh Congress on 29 March 1976;

— a letter dated 17 June from Algeria containing the text of the final communiqué of the Ministerial Meeting of the Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Algiers, Algeria, from 30 May to 2 June 1976;

— a letter dated 7 July from the German Democratic Republic transmitting the text of a document issued by a conference of 29 communist and workers' parties of Europe, held at Berlin on 29 and 30 June 1976;

— a note verbale dated 5 August from Czechoslovakia containing an excerpt from a report delivered at the Fifteenth Congress of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia, held in April 1976;

— a note verbale dated 13 August from the USSR stating that further efforts had to be made to reinforce political detente with military détente and that one of the primary tasks in the strengthening of international security was the elimination of tension and military conflict in the Middle East and Cyprus and the elimination of colonial oppression and of any infringement of the equality of rights and independence of peoples;

— a letter dated 10 September from Poland containing an appeal of the European Assembly of Youth and Students for Lasting Peace, Security, Co-operation and Social Progress, held at Warsaw, Poland, from 19 to 24 June 1976;

— a letter dated 13 December from Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, Romania and the USSR, containing the texts of three documents adopted at the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of the States Parties to the Warsaw Treaty, held at Bucharest, Romania, on 25 and 26 November 1976.

In addition, a letter dated 2 July was received from Chile refuting statements made by the USSR in a Security Council meeting on 29 June. The letter referred to Chile's permanent policy of supporting initiatives aimed at strengthening peace and recalled that the refusal of the USSR to sign Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America evidenced the negative attitude of the USSR in matters of disarmament. By a letter dated 7 July, the USSR stated that Chile had not correctly read and interpreted the statement made at the Security Council meeting and reaffirmed its support of the establishment of nuclear-free zones.

Two communications concerned the repatriation of displaced persons of the Western Sahara. By a letter dated 27 July, Morocco transmitted the text of a message from its Minister for Foreign Affairs to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which contained an appeal to native Saharans to return to their respective countries and invited the competent international organizations to co-operate with a view to ensuring the repatriation of such persons.

By a letter dated 28 July, Mauritania and Morocco transmitted the text of a joint communiqué issued at the end of talks between the King of Morocco and the President of Mauritania at Rabat on 23 July. The two leaders reiterated the appeal to native Saharans to return to their respective countries and reaffirmed their determination to strengthen their co-operation in all fields and to mobilize all their potential in order to counter all manoeuvres aimed at jeopardizing peace and stability in the region.

In accordance with the General Assembly's request of 18 November 1975,<sup>2</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security. In the introduction to this report, the Secretary-General said that on 17 February 1976 he had addressed a note to Members of the United Nations and to members of the specialized agencies asking for information and suggestions regarding the implementation of the Declaration.

The report contained the substantive parts of the replies which had been received from the following States: Barbados, the Byelorussian SSR, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Guatemala, Hungary, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Republic, Malta, Mongolia, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Surinam, Thailand, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At the General Assembly's 1976 session, the question of implementing the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security was taken up in the First Committee, which considered the matter at six meetings. The Committee had before it the report of the Secretary-General containing the views of Governments on the item and the various communications which had been submitted during the year.

On 14 December 1976, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted two resolutions on this matter. By the preamble to resolution 31/91, on non-interference in the internal affairs of States, the Assembly, inter alia, noted with great concern that several Member States had been subjected to various forms of interference, and referred to Article 2 of the United Nations Charter, requiring all Member States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State.<sup>3</sup>

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable sovereign right of every State to determine freely, and without any form of foreign interference, its political, social and economic system and its relations with other States and international organizations, and declared that the use of force to deprive peoples of their national identity constituted a violation of their inalienable rights and of the principle of non-intervention. The Assembly denounced any form of interference, overt or covert, direct or indirect, including recruiting and sending mercenaries, by one State or group of States and any act of military, political, economic or other form of intervention, and accordingly condemned all forms of overt, subtle and highly sophisticated techniques of coercion, subversion and defamation aimed at disrupting the political, social or economic order of other States or destabilizing the Governments seeking to free their economies from external control or manipulation.

The Assembly called upon all States, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter, to undertake necessary measures in order to prevent any hostile act or activity taking place within their territory and directed against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of another State, and requested the Secretary-General to invite all Member States to express their views on ways by which greater respect for the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States could be assured, and to report on this matter in 1977.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/91 by a recorded vote of 99 to 1, with 11 abstentions. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The First Committee had approved the text on 10 December 1976, by 81 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. Its sponsors were Algeria, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Botswana, Burundi, Chad, Cuba, Egypt,

Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, India, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Morocco, Nepal, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

Also on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/92 on implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security.

By the preambular paragraphs, the Assembly, inter alia, welcomed new achievements and trends in international relations and all other efforts contributing to the strengthening of international security and the promoting of peaceful co-operation. It noted the successful outcome of the 1975 Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (Helsinki Conference), emphasizing that the security of Europe should be considered in the broader context of world security and was closely inter-related, in particular, to the security of the Mediterranean, the Middle East and other regions, and expressed its conviction that the Final Act of the Conference through agreed means would contribute to the strengthening of international security.

It also noted with grave concern the existence of focal points of crises and tensions in various regions, the continuation of the arms race as well as acts of aggression, the threat or use of force, foreign occupation and alien domination, and the existence of colonialism, neo-colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid. The Assembly also emphasized the need constantly to strengthen the peace-keeping and peacemaking role of the United Nations and its role in promoting development through equitable co-operation.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly: solemnly called upon all States to seek strict and consistent implementation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of all the provisions of the Declaration; reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial and alien domination to achieve self-determination and independence, and appealed to all States to increase their support and solidarity with those peoples in their struggle against colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid.

The Assembly also called upon all States to extend the process of relaxation of tensions to all regions of the world and reaffirmed that any measure or pressure directed against any State while exercising its sovereign right freely to dispose of its natural resources constituted a flagrant violation of the right of self-determination and the principle of non-intervention, which, if pursued, could constitute a threat to international peace and security.

It also reaffirmed its opposition to any threats or use of force, intervention, aggression, foreign occupation and measures of political and economic coercion which attempted to violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of States. It then recommended urgent measures to stop the arms race and promote disarmament, dismantling of foreign military bases, creation of zones of peace and co-operation and achievement of general and complete disarmament and strengthening of the role of the United Nations, in accordance with the United Nations Charter, in order to eliminate the causes of international tensions and ensure international peace, security and co-operation.

The Assembly further recommended to the Security Council that it consider appropriate steps towards carrying out effectively, as provided in the Charter and the Declaration, its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international security and peace, and invited the States parties to the 1975 Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to implement fully and urgently all the provisions of the Final Act of the Conference, including those relating to the Mediterranean, and to consider favourably the conversion of the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and co-operation in the interests of international peace and security.

In addition, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to report again in 1977 on the implementation of the Declaration.

Resolution 31/92 was adopted on 14 December 1976, by a recorded vote of 95 to 0, with 17 abstentions. On 10 December, the First Committee had approved the text by 103 votes to 1, with 16 abstentions, as sponsored by Algeria, Cyprus, Egypt, Grenada, India, Iraq, Malta, Mauritius, Morocco, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Yugoslavia.

(For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In its discussion of this item, the First Committee also had before it a draft resolution sponsored by Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and Poland. By the preamble to this text, the Assembly, inter alia, would have welcomed the successful results achieved through the implementation of the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference. By the operative part, the Assembly would have: once again called upon all States to seek full implementation of the Declaration and by this way to support the processes of international détente; considered it imperative to give greater force to political détente by achieving that in the military field, and for this purpose to achieve progress in the practical application of means that would lead to ending the arms race; and recommended that all States take effective measures to stop the race of both nuclear and conventional armaments, and also achieve progress in general and complete disarmament.

Also, the Assembly would have: called upon all

States to apply all possible means to make abstention from the use of force a real and inviolable law of international relations; reaffirmed that the elimination of continuing and menacing focal points of tension was one of the most important tasks for the strengthening of international peace and security; called upon all States to increase the effectiveness of the United Nations in the preservation and consolidation of international peace and security; reaffirmed that peace, security and peaceful coexistence of States with different systems were the prerequisite of the development of international economic co-operation and the rapprochement of nations; called upon all States to strengthen co-operation through intensified efforts towards promoting regional systems of security and co-operation; and appealed to all States to take urgent and effective measures to achieve total elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid, and reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination to achieve self-determination and independence.

Finally, the Assembly would have: called upon all the organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations to use all possibilities of strengthening the confidence of States and broadening co-operation in all fields, thereby creating conditions favourable to the strengthening of international security; and taken note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to report again on the implementation of the Declaration.

The three sponsors of this draft resolution decided not to press for a vote in the First Committee, when aspects of this text referring to the Helsinki Conference were reflected in a revised preambular paragraph of resolution 31/92.

During the debate in the Assembly's First Committee, many speakers referred to the importance of detente and mentioned in this context the decisions of the Helsinki Conference. The USSR, which opened the debate, noted that there was no sensible alternative to detente and urged that the results achieved be preserved and perpetuated. Among the many comments was that of Hungary, which felt that the process of detente had become broader, as had peaceful coexistence and mutually advantageous co-operation among States. Qatar was concerned that detente remained limited in scope because tensions and conflicts still existed in many regions. Ghana said the developing countries believed that detente must be extended to all regions of the world. As a function of interdependence among nations, Ghana observed, detente had to perform as the moral conscience of the world by assuring increased democratization in relations among States.

In this context, Bulgaria and the USSR stressed the importance of the Declaration, terming it a document of great political significance, containing fundamental guidelines for the efforts of States towards the strengthening of international peace and security. Czechoslovakia suggested it would strengthen the United Nations if the Declaration were made a legally binding international instrument, on the same basis as the United Nations Charter. In the view of Cyprus, the Declaration was the most significant document since the United Nations Charter, covering the whole range of the Charter and throwing light on its important parts. The representative of the Netherlands, on behalf of the States members of the European Communities (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom), said that those States attached particular importance to the aspects of the Declaration relating to the principles of international law and co-operation among States.

A number of States, including Cyprus, Qatar, Sierra Leone and Yugoslavia, expressed dissatisfaction with the progress achieved in the implementation of the Declaration. Zambia suggested that discussions on international security focused on effects rather than the causes of conflicts, while Malta stressed the need for concrete measures and effective results, including the setting up of appropriate machinery to give effect to decisions.

The necessity of international action to achieve disarmament in order to reduce the dangers of conflict in the world was widely supported. Thus, the USSR called disarmament the most urgent task of the day and recalled that it had proposed the early convening of a world conference on this subject. Cyprus felt that a prerequisite for disarmament was international security which, it said, should be established through the United Nations. Chad commented that the arms race was incompatible with efforts to establish a new international economic order and pointed out that the resources used for the purchase of arms could effectively promote socio-economic development, particularly in developing countries.

The creation of zones of peace was supported by Nepal, Qatar and Romania, among others. Romania observed that a non-nuclear zone of peace in the Balkans would serve the cause of peace and co-operation in Europe and the whole world. Malta referred to the Mediterranean area where, it said, the super-powers deployed the biggest array of deadly armaments, and called for a reduction of naval forces there. Romania and Yugoslavia also called for a conversion of the Mediterranean into a zone of peace.

Reference was also made to the dangers that regional conflicts presented to world peace and security. Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates stated that international security would be threatened as long as the question of Palestine was not settled. Bulgaria, Nepal and Poland were among other States calling for the elimination of tension in the Middle East. The USSR expressed the view that there had to be a withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Arab territories they had occupied in 1967, guaranteed rights for the Arab people, including the right to create their own State, the assurance of the right to an independent existence of all States of the area, including Israel, and the cessation of the state of war between the Arab States in question and Israel.

During the debate, many speakers emphasized the need for peaceful settlements in other areas. Thus, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR called for withdrawal of foreign troops in Cyprus and an internal settlement there on the basis of respect for sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity. The need for a settlement of the problems in Korea was mentioned by Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Poland, the USSR and others. Hungary called for the peaceful democratic unification of Korea without intervention from outside and for the withdrawal of foreign troops from southern Korea.

Another area of tension discussed during the debate was southern Africa. Cuba observed that oppression of the peoples in southern Africa had to be ended, while in the view of the German Democratic Republic and others apartheid and racial discrimination linked with the growing militarization of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia posed a threat to international peace and security. Ghana said that those who actively collaborated with South Africa in defence, trade and nuclear technology were encouraging the occupation of Namibia and the continuation of the policy of apartheid. Sierra Leone referred to the accumulation of arms and weapons by the South African Government and commented that talk of disarmament in that part of the world appeared an impossible dream.

The question of achieving a new international economic order was also felt to be related to the topic of international security. Political decolonization, Bulgaria said in this connexion, had to be followed closely by economic decolonization, and it called for a new world economic order based on principles of equality. The Syrian Arab Republic considered the current economic order unjust and inequitable and warned that the gulf between developed and developing countries was increasing. Yugoslavia warned that postponing solutions to the problems of raw materials and foreign debts of developing countries was going to have serious consequences for international peace and security.

Sri Lanka, speaking on the question of non-interference in the internal affairs of States, pointed out that the developing countries were susceptible to numerous forms of pressure from the developed countries; these were a form of interference in the internal affairs of States and tended to destabilize the political, social and economic equilibrium of countries. Chad and Cuba also called for a cessation of foreign interference. The principle of non-interference, Chad observed, constituted a true foundation for the strengthening of international peace and security.

Also during the debate, reference was made—by Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Nepal, the Ukrainian SSR and Yugoslavia, among others—to the need to strengthen the United Nations in order to help maintain international security. Some of the developing countries, such as Bangladesh, Ghana and the Syrian Arab Republic, raised the issue of reviewing the United Nations Charter. These States contended that the ideal of collective security was never translated into practice due to the use of the veto in the Security Council which, Ghana observed, had not been employed to further the interests of the Organization, but to uphold national positions. Such use of the veto, Sierra Leone believed, made the need for a review of the Charter extremely urgent. The Syrian Arab Republic suggested that the expansion in membership of the United Nations alone justified a fundamental amendment of the Charter.

A number of Members expressed reservations or explained their votes on the two resolutions. With regard to the resolution on non-interference in the internal affairs of States, Portugal said it had voted in favour of the resolution, but felt that its wording was too vague and might create difficulties of interpretation. The Netherlands, on behalf of the members of the European Communities, also said that the resolution was too vague to guide States in their international relations and that it contained unspecified accusations and recommendations. The United States said it could not support the resolution because the text would not contribute to strengthening the commitment of the international community to the non-interference principle.

With reference to the resolution on the implementation of the Declaration, Austria said it voted in favour, but expressed reservations concerning the operative paragraph by which States which participated in the Helsinki Conference were invited to implement the provisions of the Final Act relating to the Mediterranean. This paragraph made special reference to one part of the Final Act, Austria noted, but all provisions had to be considered as having the same weight and ought to be applied on an equal footing.

Zambia said that, while supporting the resolution, it wished to express its strong reservation on the preambular paragraph reflecting a Eurocentric notion of international security that treated Europe as being the centre on the questions of war and peace. Pakistan also voted in favour of the resolution, but expressed the view that a serious omission had been made by not including a reference to nuclear-weapon-free zones.

The United States, opposing the resolution, said that it firmly objected to the paragraph which appeared to suggest that traditional peaceful measures of diplomatic protection of foreign investment or other legal actions constituted a violation of the right of self-determination and the principle of non-intervention: this proposition had no basis in the Charter, international law or the contemporary practice of States.

The spokesman for the Netherlands, on behalf of the members of the European Communities, said he wished to repeat the reservations of those Members about the annual repetition of the discussion of this item, which had gradually undermined the unanimity that gave force and value to the original Declaration. The Declaration was sufficient in itself, he stated, and the subsequent debates had not contributed to the implementation of its aims. Moreover, the resolution adopted a selective approach which did not take balanced account of the different aspects of the Declaration. Canada, Portugal and Turkey had similar reservations. Canada also expressed opposition to the paragraph in which it was stated that all signatories of the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference had agreed that the security of Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East were interconnected.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2734(XXV) of 16 December 1970 containing the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,

Recalling its resolution 2131(XX) of 21 December 1965 containing the Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention in the Domestic Affairs of States and the Protection of Their Independence and Sovereignty,

Recalling further its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the right to self-determination, freedom and independence of peoples under colonial or other forms of alien domination as well as their right to struggle to that end and to seek and receive support in accordance with the principles of the Charter,

Reaffirming the right of each State to choose its own economic, cultural and social system in accordance with the will of its people, free from outside interference, coercion or threat in any form,

Noting with great concern that several Member States have been subjected to various forms of interference, pressure and organized campaigns of vilification and intimidation designed to deter them from pursuing their united and independent role in international relations,

Aware that a wide range of direct and indirect techniques, including withholding assistance and the threat of withholding assistance, subtle and sophisticated forms of economic coercion, subversion and defamation with a view to destabilization, are being mobilized against Governments which seek to free their economies from foreign control and manipulation, to restructure their societies and to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources,

Conscious that the use of such techniques of destabilization can produce distrust and cause unrest and disorder within and between States, adversely affecting thereby the maintenance of international peace and security,

Mindful of the provisions of Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter, which requires all Member States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable sovereign right of every State to determine freely, and without any form of foreign interference, its political, social and economic system and its relations with other States and international organizations;

2. Declares that the use of force to deprive peoples of their national identity constitutes a violation of their inalienable rights and of the principle of non-intervention;

3. Denounces any form of interference, overt or covert, direct or indirect, including recruiting and sending mercenaries, by one State or group of States and any act of military, political, economic or other form of intervention in the internal or external affairs of other States, regardless of the character of their mutual relations or their social and economic systems;

4. Accordingly condemns all forms of overt, subtle and highly sophisticated techniques of coercion, subversion and defamation aimed at disrupting the political, social or economic order of other States or destabilizing the Governments seeking to free their economies from external control or manipulation;

5. Calls upon all States, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, to undertake necessary measures in order to prevent any hostile act or activity taking place within their territory and directed against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of another State;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to invite all Member States to express their views on ways by which greater respect for the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States can be assured, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,"

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, contained in General Assembly resolution 2734(XXV) of 16 December 1970, and the relevant resolutions of the Assembly concerning the implementation of the Declaration,

Welcoming new achievements and trends in international relations and all other efforts contributing to the strengthening of international security and the promoting of peaceful co-operation in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Welcoming also, in this context, the successful results of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, which represents a further significant contribution to the strengthening of international security and the development of equitable international relations.

Noting the successful outcome of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, emphasizing that the security of Europe should be considered in the broader context of world security and is closely interrelated, in particular, to the security of the Mediterranean, the Middle East and other regions of the world, and expressing its conviction that the implementation of the Final Act of that Conference through agreed means will contribute to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Noting with grave concern, however, the continuing existence of focal points of crises and tensions in various regions endangering international peace and security, the continuation of the arms race as well as acts of aggression, the threat or use of force, foreign occupation and alien domination, and the existence of colonialism, neo-colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid, which remain the main obstacles to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Reaffirming the close link existing between the strengthening of international security, disarmament, decolonization, development and the need for a more intensive national and international effort to narrow the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries, and also stressing, in this connexion, the importance of the early implementation of the decisions adopted at its sixth and seventh special sessions,

Emphasizing the need constantly to strengthen the peace-keeping and peacemaking role of the United Nations in accordance with the Charter, as well as its role in promoting development through equitable co-operation,

1. Solemnly calls upon all States to seek strict and consistent implementation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of all the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security;

2. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial and alien domination to achieve self-determination and independence and appeals to all States to increase their support and solidarity with them in their struggle against colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid;

3. Also calls upon all States to extend the process of relaxation of tensions, which is still limited in both scope and geographical extent, to all regions of the world, in order to help bring about just and lasting solutions to international problems with the participation of all States so that peace and security will be based on effective respect for the sovereignty and independence of all States and the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own destiny freely and without outside interference, coercion or pressure;

4. Reaffirms that any measure or pressure directed against any State while exercising its sovereign right freely to dispose of its natural resources constitutes a flagrant violation of the right of self-determination of peoples and the principle of non-intervention, as set forth in the Charter, which, if pursued, could constitute a threat to international peace and security;

5. Reaffirms its opposition to any threats or use of force, intervention, aggression, foreign occupation and measures of political and economic coercion which attempt to violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of States;

6. Recommends urgent measures to stop the arms race and promote disarmament, the dismantling of foreign military bases, the creation of zones of peace and co-operation and the achievement of general and complete disarmament and strengthening the role of the United Nations, in accordance with the Charter, in order to eliminate the causes of international tensions and ensure international peace, security and co-operation;

7. Recommends that the Security Council should consider appropriate steps towards carrying out effectively, as provided in the Charter and the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security;

8. Invites the States which participated in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to implement fully and urgently all the provisions of the Final Act, including those relating to the Mediterranean, and to consider favourably the conversion of the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and co-operation in the interests of international peace and security;

9. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, requests him to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session a report on the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security."

Proposed treaty on the non-use of force in international relations

At the request of the USSR, the General Assembly, at its 1976 session, considered the question of the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations.

By a letter dated 28 September 1976 addressed to the Secretary-General requesting inclusion of this matter in the Assembly's agenda, the USSR noted that the conclusion of such a treaty would be a natural continuation of the efforts of the United Nations and its Members to consolidate international peace and security and would reduce the risk of another world war. It indicated that this would create more favourable conditions for curbing the arms race, for reducing armaments, including nuclear arms, and for moving towards general and complete disarmament. The conclusion of such a treaty, the USSR stated, should in no way prejudice the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples for their freedom and independence.

As an annex to its request, the USSR submitted a draft world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations.

The draft Treaty consisted of a preamble and eight articles. By article I each party would undertake not to use force or the threat of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State. Accordingly, the parties would commit themselves to refrain from the use of armed forces involving any types of weapons, including nuclear or other types of weapons of mass destruction. By article II, parties would reaffirm their undertaking to settle disputes among them by peaceful means.

Article III stated that nothing in the treaty would affect the rights and obligations of States under the United Nations Charter and treaties and agreements concluded by them earlier. By article IV each party would make all possible efforts to implement effective measures for lessening military confrontation and for disarmament which would constitute steps toward the achievement of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control. Each party would consider, by article V, the question of what measures would have to be taken in accordance with its constitutional processes for ensuring compliance with its obligations under the treaty. Articles VI, VII and VIII provided, respectively, for duration, signature and depositary arrangements.

Consideration by General Assembly

The General Assembly decided, on the recommendation of its General Committee, to allocate the question of the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations to the First Committee and, at an appropriate stage, to the Sixth Committee for examination of its legal implications.

On 8 November 1976, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted on this item resolution 31/9, sponsored by 18 powers.

By the preamble to this resolution, the Assembly noted with satisfaction that the principle of the non-use of force or the threat of force had been incorporated into a number of bilateral and multilateral international instruments, treaties, agreements and declarations, including resolutions adopted by the United Nations. It noted the need for universal and effective application of this principle in international relations and for assistance by the United Nations in this endeavour, and took note of the draft treaty submitted by the USSR.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly invited Member States to examine further the draft treaty as well as other proposals and statements made during the consideration of this item. It requested Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions on the subject not later than 1 June 1977. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to report to it on these communications and decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its 1977 session.

The sponsors of the 18-power resolution were Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Mauritius, Mongolia, Mozambique, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR. The text was adopted by the General Assembly by a recorded vote of 88 to 2, with 31 abstentions, and was approved by the First Committee on 29 October by a roll-call vote of 94 to 2, with 35 abstentions. (For text of resolution and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Later in the session, on 25 November 1976, the Sixth Committee decided by consensus to note the adoption by the General Assembly of resolution 31/9 and request the Assembly to recommend that Member States, in their consideration of statements and proposals on the item to be reported to the Secretary-General, should give due weight to the important legal issues involved. The Committee recalled the role it had played in elaborating the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations<sup>4</sup> and the Definition of Aggression,<sup>5</sup> and observed that the legal issues involved would need to be examined in deliberations on the subject which any further consideration of the item by the General Assembly would entail.

The General Assembly, on 13 December 1976, approved the decision of the Sixth Committee and adopted it, without a vote, as its decision 31/410.

Opening the debate on this item in the Assembly's First Committee, the USSR stated that, in view of the large number of unresolved problems and unsettled disputes in the world, the principle of non-use of force should become an immutable law of international life. The development of weapons of mass destruction, it believed, gave an increased sense of urgency to the conclusion of such a treaty. A commitment on the part of States not to use force or the threat of force, the USSR continued, would strengthen detente by offering new and more reliable guarantees for security and help make progress towards disarmament. Further, the USSR said, the provisions of the draft treaty were based on existing international documents, including the United Nations Charter; they would enhance Charter provisions on the non-use of force in a manner similar to the development of Charter provisions related to human rights.

Many speakers, including Benin, Egypt, Greece, India, Nepal, Romania, Tunisia, Yugoslavia and Zaire, expressed their support for a treaty consolidating existing legal rules concerning the prohibition of the use or threat of force.

The close link between the question of non-use of force and disarmament was often pointed out during the debate. Bulgaria, Finland, Iran, Mexico, Morocco, Tunisia and the USSR were among the States which considered that disarmament would logically follow upon the conclusion of the proposed treaty. Mexico suggested amending article

IV of the treaty to reflect the priorities established by the General Assembly in respect to disarmament, while Austria pointed out that the principle of the non-use of force could be credible only if it were accompanied by tangible and effective disarmament measures. Similarly, Japan considered that the practical implementation of the principle of the non-use of force could not be secured by the mere repetition of the principle, but depended on the conclusion of concrete measures of disarmament and arms control, especially in the nuclear field. Iran considered that only the abolition of nuclear weapons could engender a true sense of security in the world.

Many Members emphasized that any actions aimed at strengthening the commitment of States to refrain from the threat or use of force required more concentrated efforts in two related areas: elimination of existing disputes which could generate new armed conflicts; and development of procedures and machinery for peaceful settlement of disputes. Egypt suggested that the effort to prohibit the use of force should begin with a study of the causes that had led to the use of force, while Pakistan contended that the use of force was rooted in the basic inequality which currently characterized the world. In the view of Romania and Zaire, the proposed treaty, in order to be effective, should be accompanied by increased efforts to eliminate sources of conflict. In this connexion, Bangladesh and Ghana underlined the responsibility of the international community for peace and security.

Austria, Iran, Morocco and Nepal, among others, held that the proposed treaty should contain provisions for its implementation. Austria noted that international instruments which dealt with the renunciation of force also contained the obligation to settle disputes in a peaceful manner and most provided some sort of machinery for that purpose. In this connexion, Liberia suggested the establishment of a permanent peace-keeping force of the United Nations capable of being dispatched instantly to areas of danger; this, it said, was the surest way of redressing inequalities and imbalances posed by the power structure.

In order to make the treaty applicable to all cases of use or threat of force, Bangladesh, Mauritius and Peru suggested that the treaty should contain a definition of force." Algeria, the Congo and Senegal noted that force was not restricted to aggression against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of a State, but also included racial discrimination, denial of the right of peoples to self-determination, interference in the domestic affairs of States, subversion or economic pressures. Afghanistan considered that the prohibition should also cover the imposition of an economic blockade against a land-locked country. Trinidad and Tobago was of the opinion that the treaty should, furthermore, prohibit other non-military manifestations of force, such as environmental modification techniques, broadcasting by satellite and remote sensing of the earth's resources. These endeavours, it observed, were beneficial to mankind, but their improper manipulation could be considered a form of non-military force and could lead to the use of military force.

Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Greece, Madagascar, Tunisia and the USSR were among those which held the opinion that the treaty should reaffirm the right of States to individual and collective self-defence as well as the legitimacy of the armed struggle of colonial peoples for self-determination and national independence. Iraq, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Republic and Qatar further held that the right to self-defence included the right to use force for the recovery of territories occupied by force.

Zambia proposed the inclusion in the treaty of an additional paragraph affirming that the proposed treaty would not be prejudicial to the rights of peoples and countries struggling against imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and foreign domination in all their forms and manifestations. Algeria, for its part, considered that it was less a question of defining the form of the principle of the non-use of force than of inducing States to comply with it in their international relations.

Several speakers stressed during the debate that the effectiveness of the proposed treaty would be directly dependent on its universal acceptance. Kuwait considered that the entry into force of the treaty should be contingent upon ratification by a certain number of States. Zaire suggested that the minimum number of ratifications should be about 50 before entry into force. Liberia called for a specific escape clause allowing individual signatory States to withdraw should they find that their association with the treaty was detrimental to their interests.

The Netherlands (on behalf of the States members of the European Communities: Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom), New Zealand, Sweden and the United States expressed doubt as to the usefulness and efficacy of the proposed treaty. In their view, the proposal would weaken the provisions of the United Nations Charter and undermine its authority by casting doubt on the solemnity of the legal commitments undertaken therein.

The United States pointed out that there was no lack of obligations and standards regarding the non-use of force; they were set out in their most forceful and authoritative version in the Charter. What was needed was the will to adhere to the rules that existed.

In Australia's view, the proposed treaty should have been considered at the outset by the Sixth Committee for examination of the legal issues.

China said that the USSR proposal for a world treaty on the non-use of force was sheer fraud. A treaty which left untouched the military arms race of the super-powers for world hegemony, and which was not accompanied by a commitment of the nuclear powers not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, could not reduce the danger of war. China was of the opinion that the proposal totally evaded the fundamental issue of the root cause for aggression and war. Albania expressed similar views.

Later in the session, during consideration of the item in the Sixth Committee, a number of Members, including Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, expressed reservations about the utility of the draft treaty. They again expressed the view that the proposed treaty was a mere reaffirmation of the principles contained in the Charter. The implication that States were free to adopt or reject the basic prohibition of the threat or use of force, the United States added, had to be avoided.

The United Kingdom asked if a reaffirmation of principles would increase the prospects for their observance, while the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel referred to the importance of the political will of States to inject life into existing international instruments, particularly the Charter.

Australia, Denmark, Pakistan, Spain and the United Kingdom commented that the draft treaty failed to mention peace-keeping machinery and sanctions for non-performance. Pakistan added that it should also require non-interference in the internal affairs of States and refer to the right of individual and collective self-defence.

Senegal and Afghanistan were among those which suggested that the concept of force should not be limited to military force, but also cover any other procedure used by one State to influence another. Brazil believed that disarmament was still the only possible and infallible deterrent to the use of force.

Bulgaria, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic and the Syrian Arab Republic, among others, again welcomed the proposal for the draft treaty. The German Democratic Republic was of the opinion that the conclusion of such a treaty would make the process of detente irreversible and general and promote international co-operation. Saudi Arabia suggested that the international community had nothing to lose in examining the draft treaty and proposed referring it to a working group for study.

In response to statements made during the debate, the USSR said that the draft treaty was designed not to modify or weaken the Charter but to strengthen one of its basic principles. The draft treaty emphasized that the principle of non-use of force should apply in all media, including outer space, a point that was not covered by the Charter and that had been made necessary by scientific and technological progress. Similarly, the draft article imposing the obligation to refrain from the use of nuclear weapons took account of the contemporary level of States' technical and military capabilities.

Chapter VI

Review of the question of peace-keeping operations*Consideration by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations

During 1976, the question of United Nations peace-keeping operations was considered by the General Assembly and by its Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations. The Committee, acting in accordance with an Assembly resolution of 10 December 1975,<sup>1</sup> devoted its attention to the elaboration of agreed guidelines for carrying out peace-keeping operations in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations.

The Special Committee held two meetings in 1976, on 19 March and 19 November. In its report to the General Assembly, the Committee expressed regret that it had not been able during the year to fulfil the task of achieving agreed guidelines for United Nations peace-keeping operations; it noted that more time and greater accommodation were needed to reach agreement on the guidelines and to consider the specific questions related to the practical implementation of the operations.

The Committee's Working Group met on 12 May and between 6 and 29 October 1976. A report on the activities of the 13-member Working Group was received by the Special Committee and annexed to its report to the General Assembly.

As the basis for its discussions, the Working Group used draft formulae prepared in 1974, comprising 13 articles,<sup>2</sup> and it considered a number of concrete proposals put forward during the discussions. The Working Group reported that a measure of agreement had been reached with regard to the title, introduction and the first four draft articles, dealing with the authority and responsibilities of the Security Council and the possible establishment by the Security Council of a committee under Article 29 of the United Nations Charter.<sup>3</sup> The Working Group also succeeded in significantly reducing the number of alternative draft formulae for the remaining articles.

The Working Group emphasized in its report that these texts represented preliminary drafts which were subject to further consideration and should not be referred to as having been agreed upon.

The document resulting from the deliberations of the Working Group was contained in its report, together with views and suggestions submitted by members of the Special Committee and by troop-contributing countries on matters such as training, national forces for United Nations peace-keeping operations and the safety of peace-keeping units.

The Special Committee observed in its report that it shared the belief of the Working Group that progress towards achieving agreed guidelines was made during the year.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At the thirty-first (1976) session of the General Assembly, the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations was referred for consideration to the Assembly's Special Political Committee.

The Rapporteur of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations (Egypt), introducing the report, stated that the Working Group had reached agreement on a number of articles for agreed guidelines for peace-keeping operations. Reservations had been made on some points, he noted, while a number of draft articles had not been discussed.

The discussion in the Special Political Committee, in which 29 Members participated, included the following topics: role of the Security Council and other main United Nations organs in peace-keeping operations; composition of peace-keeping forces and financing of the operations; establishment of a subsidiary organ of the Security Council relative to peace-keeping operations; possible specific questions to be considered by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations; and working methods of that Committee and its Working Group.

A majority of Members participating in the debate expressed satisfaction over the progress achieved in the formulation of guidelines, but cautioned against optimistic expectations.

Austria, Poland and the United Kingdom agreed that the stalemate of the past years seemed to be resolved, and Sweden felt that the work achieved during the year could serve as a basis for further efforts.

Canada and France held the view that substantial differences of opinion still remained to be solved, and India believed that the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations might be terminated if it could not agree on guidelines by the time of the next session of the General Assembly.

Speaking on the peace-keeping role of the main United Nations organs, Czechoslovakia and the USSR said that the Security Council alone had the authority to decide on the establishment, direction and control of peace-keeping operations. Czechoslovakia felt that the Security Council should exercise directly all peace-keeping functions. The USSR believed that strict observance of Charter provisions constituted a guarantee against misuse of force under the United Nations flag.

The success of peace-keeping operations in the Middle East and Cyprus, according to the United States, underlined the importance of the flexibility required of the Secretary-General, the Security Council and the force commander to deal with the special circumstances of each operation. Spain expressed the view that the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations, in drafting the guidelines, overlooked the competence of the General Assembly and seemed to confer exclusive powers on the Security Council. Under the Charter, the General Assembly could also recommend measures for peace-keeping whenever the Council was unable to act.

Several Members discussed the interconnexion between peace-keeping and the peace-making process. The Libyan Arab Republic urged the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to deal with the causes of conflicts in order to create the basis for a lasting peace. Greece stressed the prevention of situations that gave rise to the need for peace-keeping forces. Cyprus spoke of the obligation of Member States to carry out the decisions of the Security Council, as stated in Article 25 of the United Nations Charter.<sup>4</sup>

The establishment, under Article 29 of the Charter, of a subsidiary organ of the Security Council to direct individual peace-keeping activities was approved by most of the Members that spoke on this point, though opinions were divided over its functions.

Indonesia welcomed the possibility, and Japan stressed that such an organ would succeed in associating host countries, as well as countries contributing troops or supplying facilities, financing and services, in peace-keeping operations. The USSR believed that such a body would assist the Council in the performance of its peace-keeping functions. Italy was of the opinion that an excessively close tie to the Security Council would reduce the organ's effectiveness, and Tunisia felt that the composition of the organ should not be a replica of the Security Council. Canada had reservations on the feasibility of making it mandatory for a subsidiary organ of the Security Council to have direct operational control over a force in the field but did not rule out the possibility that such an organ could play a useful role, and especially in a capacity that was advisory.

France suggested that the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations consider the draft formula dealing with the establishment of a subsidiary organ separately and independent of the guidelines as a whole. Yugoslavia felt that this idea deserved careful study, while Ireland considered it unwise to give selective effect to specific provisions of the guidelines. Australia also expressed reservations, saying that the elements of the guidelines were indivisible.

With regard to the composition of United Nations peace-keeping forces, several Members emphasized the importance of the application of equitable geographical representation in the establishment of such forces. Finland and Tunisia said that the principle of broad geographic representation was essential to maintain political balance in peace-keeping operations. Poland pointed out that this principle had been recognized and applied when the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force were established. As freedom of movement was a condition of the success of the peace-keeping forces, Poland noted with regret that Israel's policy was a very serious hindrance in that regard.

In discussing the financing of peace-keeping operations, Finland and Sweden noted the delay in reimbursing troop-contributing countries for their expenses and called the solution of this problem a matter of vital importance. Canada called for the necessary financial support for the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus. Austria, Ireland, Norway and the United States, among others, urged support for the principle of collective financial responsibility for peace-keeping operations.

Continued consideration of the question of stand-by peace-keeping forces, training for such forces, and the preparation of an operations manual was urged by Nigeria. Regional training seminars were suggested by Austria and Norway, while the training of military personnel participating in peace-keeping operations was stressed by Nepal. Yugoslavia, however, considered it sufficient to train units for peace-keeping operations within the framework of a country's regular armed forces training programmes. Czechoslovakia maintained that the Committee's priority should lie with the preparation of guidelines and that other aspects were secondary.

The working methods of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations and of its Working Group were reviewed, and while most Members favoured the methods employed, Peru raised the idea of the rotation or expansion of the Special Committee's membership. Yugoslavia suggested expanding membership of the Working Group, and Brazil called for more frequent meetings.

Italy welcomed the fact that members of the Special Committee who did not belong to the Working Group had been permitted to express their views and take part in its work.

On 15 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted by consensus resolution 31/105, by which it requested the Special Committee to renew efforts towards the completion of agreed guidelines for carrying out peace-keeping operations and urged its members to demonstrate political will and a spirit of conciliation to that end. The Assembly further requested the Special Committee to give attention to the consideration of specific questions related to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations and to report to it in 1977.

The Special Political Committee had approved the text of the resolution by consensus on 9 December 1976. The text was sponsored by Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, India, Italy, Japan, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965, 2053 A (XX) of 15 December 1965, 2249(S-V) of 23 May 1967, 2308(XXII) of 13 December 1967, 2451(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2670(XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2835(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, 2965(XXVII) of 13 December 1972,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations and the report submitted to the Special Committee by its Working Group,

Conscious that there is urgent need for an early agreement on guidelines that would govern United Nations peace-keeping operations and strengthen the capability of the United Nations to respond to future peace-keeping needs in an effective manner,

Noting that limited progress has been made towards the completion of agreed guidelines for conducting peace-keeping operations in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations,

Considering that a demonstration of political will and greater conciliation remain necessary for an early completion of such agreed guidelines,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations;

2. Requests the Special Committee and its Working Group to renew efforts and to intensify negotiations for an early completion of agreed guidelines for peace-keeping operations, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, before the thirty-second session of the General Assembly;

3. Urges members of the Special Committee and its Working Group, including the permanent members of the Security Council represented therein, to demonstrate political will and a spirit of conciliation during the negotiations to be held in 1977;

4. Requests the Special Committee to give further attention to the consideration of specific questions related to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations;

5. Requests the Special Committee to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

Chapter VII

Questions concerning the United Nations Charter and the strengthening of the role of the Organization*Report of the Special Committee

In pursuance of a General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975,<sup>1</sup> the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization met at United Nations Headquarters from 17 February to 12 March 1976 and submitted a report on its work to the Assembly's thirty-first (1976) session.

The Special Committee examined at its meetings a report of the Secretary-General and working papers containing observations and proposals submitted by Member States on questions dealt with under the Special Committee's mandate, i.e. those concerning the Charter itself and the enhancement of the ability of the United Nations to achieve its purposes in three broad areas: the maintenance and consolidation of international peace and security; the development of co-operation among all nations; and the promotion of rules of international law in relations between States. The Secretary-General's report included observations received from Romania and, subsequently, from Austria, Bulgaria, Guinea and the Netherlands.

The Special Committee also had before it an analytical study by the Secretary-General which presented the views of Governments on various aspects of the functioning of the United Nations, including those relating specifically to the Charter. The analytical study was divided according to the following principal headings: general questions concerning the United Nations and the Charter; the maintenance of international peace and security; means, methods and procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes; economic and social questions; decolonization; the rationalization of existing procedures; administrative, financial and other aspects of the functioning of the United Nations; and other matters, including admission to and expulsion from the Organization and the effectiveness of United Nations decisions.

The Special Committee established an open-ended working group to carry out, on the basis of the analytical study, the tasks entrusted to the Committee by the General Assembly. The group conducted a partial examination of the analytical study, covering mainly the views of a general nature expressed by Governments on the role of the United Nations in the present-day world and the strengthening of that role.

At the final meeting of its session, on 12 March, the Special Committee discussed the report of the working group, took note of it and transmitted it to the Assembly. It was the general view in the Special Committee that progress had been achieved in its work and that it had not completed the mandate under the Assembly's 15 December 1975 decision. The Special Committee's report to the Assembly stated that many members had supported renewal of the mandate, while others were not prepared to do so at that time.

In the course of the debate in the Special Committee, Romania was among those members which favoured a review of the Charter. Romania stated that the basic idea underlying its proposals for strengthening the role of the United Nations was that a lasting solution to the complex problems facing mankind required the active participation of all States, regardless of size, geographical situation or social and political system. It proposed that the role of the General Assembly, as the Organization's most representative body, be increased. The practice of holding special sessions when circumstances warranted should be expanded.

The membership of the Security Council, in Romania's view, should be increased and the role therein of small countries enhanced. The right of veto should be used only in exceptional cases in the interests of world peace.

The United Kingdom welcomed Romania's initiative in seeking a more effective United Nations, but could not agree with all its proposals, in particular with any that would tend to upset the existing relationship between the General Assembly and the Security Council or would affect their relative powers. The United Kingdom was joined in that view by several other members, including Belgium, France, Iran and Italy.

The United Kingdom said that the root of the matter lay not in the structure of the United Nations but in the practices of Member States. A General Assembly resolution adopted by genuine consensus had a strong moral force, and it was the aim of the United Kingdom to find ways to achieve that result more often. But currently, it stated, only Se-

The USSR also disagreed with suggestions aimed at broadening the authority of the General Assembly at the expense of the Security Council. There was no need to revise the Charter, it said, and the Special Committee should consider proposals to increase the effectiveness of the United Nations within the limits and on the basis of the Charter.

It was the view of the USSR that the recommendatory nature of General Assembly decisions was a necessary consequence of the sovereignty of Member States. Enforcement measures could be taken against a State only if it committed an act of aggression or a breach of the peace; giving Assembly resolutions mandatory force, the USSR said, would imply the possibility of using threatening action against Members for any reason whatsoever. As long as there were States in the world with different socio-economic systems, the United Nations would not be viable without the rule of unanimity among the permanent members of the Security Council.

Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic also shared the view that the shortcomings of the United Nations were due not to defects in the Charter but to the lack of political will of States to observe it strictly and to utilize the possibilities contained in it.

In Poland's view, there was nothing in the Charter that prohibited or restricted the maximum amount of international co-operation in all possible fields. The principle of unanimity of the permanent members of the Security Council did not involve a superiority of right, but a priority of action, which was the natural consequence of the responsibilities of the major powers.

Poland said that among the areas where improvements in the Organization's effectiveness could be made was the public image of the United Nations. Media reports in some countries presented a false image of the Organization, a situation which called for the adoption of constructive measures by Member States.

The United States said that it was not convinced that a review of the Charter as such was a useful or productive undertaking. The Special Committee should work within its mandate and should ensure that its work did not overlap with that of any other body. An over-all goal worth bearing in mind, it said, would be a United Nations system which functioned in such a way that decision-makers would become habituated to using it to resolve basic problems, rather than engaging in parallel multilateral exercises.

Liberia outlined a number of proposals for Charter review, holding that realistic modification or even deletion of sections that contained defects or were outdated could only benefit the United Nations. The principle of unanimity in the Security Council had been abused and had frustrated the will of the international community. Liberia supported the concept of extending the veto power to Africa, Asia and Latin America on a geographical basis, with rotation in membership for each continent. With regard to methods of settling international disputes, consideration might be given to the establishment of a world board of arbitration and a world panel of mediators.

On the financing of the United Nations, Liberia recalled a suggestion that a 1 per cent duty could be paid to the Organization on all international movements of tangible goods for purposes of sale. The duty could be borne in equal portions by the exporting and importing States.

China said that it was in favour of reviewing the Charter and making necessary amendments. Nothing was immutable and the situation within and outside the United Nations had changed. The demand for implementing the principle of equality of all States was a just one.

Venezuela said that, since the trusteeship functions of the United Nations had been reduced considerably, the future activities of the Trusteeship Council should be reviewed. It also supported the deletion of certain Charter provisions it considered to be obsolete, such as the references to "enemy States." The German Democratic Republic opposed the deletion of those clauses, asserting that they illustrated the development of the Organization and should serve to stimulate a more complete application of its provisions.

In Egypt's view, the role of the Organization might be strengthened by specific and limited amendments to the Charter, each to be considered on its own merits and on the basis of general agreement. The Charter, however, had proved to be capable of adapting to changing conditions in the world; the real need, Egypt said, was to modify the behaviour of certain States that violated its provisions and refused to comply with United Nations decisions.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the Special Committee was considered by the Sixth (Legal) Committee at the General Assembly's 1976 session. Among the other documents before the Assembly for its consideration of this item was a letter dated 1 September 1976 from Sri Lanka, transmitting the declarations and resolutions of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August 1976.

On 29 November 1976, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on this question. By the preambular portion of the text, the Assembly, among other things reaffirming its support for the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, considered that the Special Committee had not completed the mandate given to it.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly inter alia decided that the Special Committee should continue its work in accordance with the mandate set forth in the Assembly's resolution of 15 December 1975.<sup>3</sup> The Assembly also invited Governments to submit or bring up to date their observations and proposals on the question and requested the Special Committee to submit a further report in 1977 when the matter would again be taken up.

The Assembly took these actions in adopting resolution 31/28, by consensus. The Sixth Committee had approved the text, also by consensus, on 22 November. The following Member States sponsored the resolution: Algeria, Australia, Bangladesh, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, the Congo, Egypt, El Salvador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Mexico, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

The Sixth Committee's debate centred mostly on procedural matters, particularly on an evaluation of the work of the Special Committee and the appropriateness of the extension of its mandate.

Many Members, including Algeria, Austria, Brazil, Chad, Egypt, El Salvador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Kenya, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, the Philippines, Romania, Sierra Leone, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Zaire, supported the extension of the Special Committee's mandate. In the opinion of these Members, the Special Committee had made substantial progress and should be given more time to complete its work. Despite the divergences of opinion that had arisen, it was observed, attention should be drawn to the atmosphere of frankness that had prevailed and that had contributed to the clarification and, often, to the reconciliation of different points of view. The Philippines noted that the Special Committee provided the two thirds of the Members which had not participated in the founding of the United Nations with the opportunity to take part in the process of its further refinement.

These Members felt that there was no justification for hesitation about renewing the mandate of the Special Committee; they were confident that it would be able to make further progress in its work. Austria reiterated its observation that a rotation system of membership would enable all interested countries to take part in the work of the Special Committee.

On the other hand, Poland was of the opinion that the question of review of the Charter should be taken off the agenda of the General Assembly or, at least, that the work of the Special Committee should be suspended until the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System finished its work and presented its conclusions (see pp. 364-66). Other Members, including Canada, Hungary, the Ukrainian SSR and the United States, while not raising objections to the proposal that the Special Committee's mandate be renewed, expressed the view that, if the Committee was to expedite its work, it should concentrate on areas where general agreement was possible and avoid duplicating the work of other United Nations bodies.

Chapter VIII

Matters relating to Africa*Matters concerning South Africa's apartheid policies

During 1976, aspects of the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa, and ways and means of promoting concerted international action to secure the elimination of apartheid, were under review by various United Nations bodies.

The Security Council on 19 June 1976 adopted resolution 392(1976) concerning events in Soweto and other areas in South Africa. The Special Committee against Apartheid submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council reports on its work for the year and on the major developments in South Africa during that period and made a number of recommendations on ways and means to intensify concerted international action against apartheid. It also submitted special reports on the Soweto massacre of 16 June 1976 and its aftermath, relations between Israel and South Africa, and information activity against apartheid by the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

The Secretary-General submitted a report on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which was annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Fund.

At its thirty-first (1976) session, the General Assembly considered the reports before it and adopted 11 resolutions relating to various aspects of apartheid, namely: the so-called independent Transkei and other bantustans; the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa; solidarity with South African political prisoners; the arms embargo against South Africa; relations between Israel and South Africa; apartheid in sports; the programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid; economic collaboration with South Africa; the situation in South Africa; the programme of action against apartheid; and investments in South Africa.

Details of these and other related decisions are given in the sections that follow.

Political and related developments*Events in Soweto and other areas

Communications to Security Council (June 1976)

On 18 June 1976, the representatives of Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania, on behalf of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, requested that an emergency meeting of the Security Council be convened to consider what they described as the measures of repression, including wanton killings, perpetrated by the apartheid régime in South Africa against the African people in the Johannesburg suburb of Soweto and other areas in South Africa.

Also on 18 June, the President of Madagascar stated in a telegram to the Secretary-General that the outburst of violence in Soweto and several other places in South Africa was the logical and inevitable consequence of the legal violence which had been inflicted for decades by the white minority on the black majority of that country. He asked that the Security Council be convened as a matter of urgency and that the Council call upon all nations, particularly the developed countries, to implement the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and put an immediate and unconditional stop to all economic and military assistance to South Africa.

Consideration by Security Council (18-19 June 1976)

The Security Council considered the question at two meetings held on 18 and 19 June. The representatives of Algeria, Cuba, India, Liberia, Madagascar, South Africa, the United Republic of Cameroon, Yugoslavia and Zambia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. An invitation under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure<sup>1</sup> was also extended to Thami Mhlambiso of the African National Congress of South Africa and to David M.

<sup>1</sup> Rule 39 reads as follows: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Sibeko of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, as well as to the Rapporteur of the Special Committee against Apartheid, all of whom made statements to the Council.

Following a discussion, the Council on 19 June adopted by consensus, as resolution 392(1976), a draft resolution sponsored by Benin, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, Panama, Romania, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania. By the preamble to this text, the Council among other things expressed itself as being deeply shocked over large-scale killings and wounding of Africans in South Africa, following the callous shooting of African people, including schoolchildren and students, demonstrating against racial discrimination on 16 June 1976. It expressed its conviction that the situation had been brought about by the continued imposition by the South African Government of apartheid and racial discrimination in defiance of resolutions of the Council and the General Assembly.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Council:

- (1) strongly condemned the South African Government for its resort to massive violence against and killings of the African people, including schoolchildren and students and others opposing racial discrimination;

- (2) expressed its profound sympathy to the victims;

- (3) reaffirmed that the policy of apartheid was a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind and seriously disturbed international peace and security;

- (4) recognized the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination;

- (5) called upon the South African Government urgently to end violence against the African people and take urgent steps to eliminate apartheid and racial discrimination; and

- (6) decided to remain seized of the matter.

Opening the Council's discussion, the representative of Liberia said that the events in Soweto, during which more than a hundred students had been gunned down by the racist police of the South African régime, was reminiscent of the savage holocaust at Sharpeville in 1960. She added that the death toll continued to rise and that over 800 persons had been wounded. She and other speakers, among them Algeria, Benin, Cuba, Guyana and the Libyan Arab Republic, observed that the immediate cause of the student protests at Soweto was the insistence of the South African Government that high-school students who had never studied the Afrikaans language should currently be taught mathematics and social studies in Afrikaans. This insistence, they said, was part of a grand design to retard the educational progress of the Africans.

Why, they asked, were white students not forced to learn the African languages?

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania pointed out that the educational expenditure per pupil for Africans was less than one tenth of the expenditure per pupil for whites, that a large percentage of the teachers in the African schools were unqualified and that African education remained segregated and totally controlled by the white minority régime. He said also that the imposition of the Afrikaans language was not the only source of the problem in South Africa; it was only one of many measures imposed on the African people that had forced them into the uprising which the Council was discussing.

He went on to say that the struggle in South Africa was not one of race but rather a struggle against racial superiority: it was against the behaviour of a group of people who believed that somehow God had created them to be the "chosen people," to deny Africans their fundamental rights and to continue to suppress them by the use of the most brutal force. The South African authorities did not really want a dialogue with the African people but rather a monologue, and had no intention of discussing with the legitimate representatives of the African people the question of how to effect changes in South Africa that would avoid a racial conflagration. The violent incidents in Soweto and other areas in South Africa during the past three days had shown, he said, that there could be no peace in South Africa so long as the régime there maintained its infamous policy of apartheid. Those who still gave succour and assistance to the régime—thereby contributing to the strengthening of its economic, technical, military and even nuclear potential—should be stirred by the massacre at Soweto and halt such collaboration and assistance. The duty of the Security Council was to condemn without reserve the terror and repression used by South Africa against the African people, to call upon it to halt such actions and to put an end to its policy of apartheid.

The representative of South Africa said that the policy regarding the medium of instruction had remained unaltered since 1955, namely, the mother-tongue in primary schools, and the official languages—English and Afrikaans—on a so-called 50/50 basis in secondary schools. The equal-status requirement for the two official languages had never been enforced unreasonably, he added. Why then, he asked, the massive demonstrations and recourse to violence? Once the disturbances started, pillaging marauders had joined in the general disorder, settling private scores and seeking to turn the situation to their own advantage in different ways. In circumstances such as had developed in his country over the past few days, it was the undeniable duty of the Government of any State to maintain law and order as a first step; none the less, throughout the period of demonstrations and rioting, the police had exercised the utmost restraint, using their weapons only as a last resort.

The South African representative went on to say that the problem in southern Africa was basically one not of race but of nationalism, which was a world-wide problem. There was a white nationalism and there were several black nationalisms, and a just and lasting solution to the problems of the region had to cater to the aims of all of them. His Government's objective was to promote the well-being and progress of all, and the standards achieved compared very favourably with the rest of Africa. His Government's principal aim, he maintained, was to make it possible for each nation, black and white, to achieve its fullest potential, including sovereign independence, so that each individual could enjoy all the rights and privileges that his or her community was capable of securing.

According to the Chinese representative, the Soweto incident was the most serious incident of barbarous slaughter created single-handedly by the South African racist régime since the Sharpeville massacre of 1960; it was also a most flagrant provocation against the Azanian and the entire African people. The shocking atrocities of brute force committed by the régime, he declared, had totally exploded the fraud of "reconciliation" and "dialogue" it had recently been peddling. The Security Council, he said, had to take action immediately to condemn the atrocities committed by the South African racist authorities, mete out the necessary punishment to them, enjoin them to stop their persecution and repression of the African people, and call upon all States and peoples of the world to give active support to the just struggle of the Azanian people against racism and for liberation until they had won complete victory.

In the view of the USSR representative, the mass shootings and killings of completely innocent children, adolescents and young Africans perpetrated in cold blood by the South African police and soldiers in Soweto and other parts of South Africa could not fail to arouse strong indignation, outrage and condemnation. The General Assembly had, he noted, frequently called on all States to cease completely all co-operation with the criminal racist regime of South Africa, and that included halting co-operation in the military field. Nevertheless, a number of States Members of the United Nations, primarily certain Western countries, continued to disregard those appeals and decisions. The events in South Africa required that the international community, and primarily the Security Council, take decisive and urgent measures to halt the criminal policy of apartheid: the Council should call for an immediate halt to the violence against the African population and the strongest sanctions should be applied against South Africa, as provided for in the Charter of the United Nations. Together with the African countries and all progressive mankind, the USSR Government and people would, he stated, continue to provide the courageous fighters against racism and apartheid with every active assistance.

The representative of Romania added that all those who were helping South Africa and providing it with economic and military assistance were accomplices in the crimes being perpetrated by the racist authorities and had therefore to share the heavy responsibility for the tragic events.

The representative of Sweden said that what was happening in South Africa demonstrated with terrifying clarity how repressive the apartheid system really was. The total lack of legal outlet for protest and indignation among the oppressed and the complete denial of their political and social rights had inevitably led to explosions like the one the world was witnessing. Panama's spokesman said that what was occurring in southern Africa had shaken the conscience of the world and required urgent and effective decisions by the Security Council. The black and white populations of South Africa—torn between fury and fear—required United Nations intervention to provide them with the means of conciliation so as to avoid a civil war of incalculable proportions. The Japanese representative urged the Government of South Africa to take urgent measures to put an end to its policies of apartheid and promote a society based on racial equality and harmony.

The spokesman for Pakistan, observing that the trouble that started in Soweto had spread to other townships and had assumed the shape of a popular revolt, said that in the 16 years since Sharpeville nothing seemed to have changed in the minds of South Africa's rulers and nothing had changed in the policies they followed.

The United States representative said his Government had joined the consensus in support of the resolution because of its strong conviction that apartheid was wrong and that only tragedy could follow if South Africa persisted in its racial policies. However, he added, the United States was sensitive to the limits of the Security Council's jurisdiction imposed by Article 2, paragraph 7, of the United Nations Charter,<sup>2</sup> whereby no United Nations organ was authorized to intervene in matters essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, except in cases in which enforcement measures under Chapter VII were to be applied. Such measures were not being applied under the resolution just adopted, he noted. The position of the United States, he said, was that South Africa, in its policy of apartheid, represented a flagrant violation of human rights, but that it would be wrong, indeed hypocritical, not to add that South Africa was not the only Government which pursued deliberate policies which resulted in flagrant violations of human rights.

The representative of the United Kingdom said that the weight of the evidence was clear and overwhelming and justified the adoption of the resolution. Such support in no way indicated any diminution of the importance his Government attached to the strictest adherence to Article 2 (7) of the Charter, but, he added, that Article was qualified by the parallel duty of the United Nations, under Charter Articles 55 and 56, to concern itself with questions of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Security Council was therefore not precluded from expressing its legitimate detestation of apartheid and of the deplorable situations which that policy inevitably produced. The United Kingdom, he said, was thus able to accept the formulations used in the resolution because it interpreted them as being essentially directed to apartheid itself and to events and situations which were the concern of the Council precisely because they were the consequences of apartheid.

The representative also said that the United Kingdom did not regard the use of the term "struggle" as connoting the use of violence; his Government did not regard resort to violence as desirable even in the current tragic circumstances and could not join in encouraging it. He concluded by saying that so long as apartheid existed the dangers of violence would exist; so long as discrimination was institutionalized those discriminated against would resist those institutions.

Communications and special report of Special Committee against Apartheid (June-August 1976)

By a letter dated 24 June 1976, the USSR representative transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement of TASS (the Telegraphic Agency of the Soviet Union), dated 23 June, which stressed that the USSR had decisively and consistently condemned the criminal policy of apartheid, and had called for the application of effective measures aimed at isolation and boycott of the South African régime and for the implementation of the decisions adopted by the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and other international organizations.

By a letter dated 29 June, the representative of China transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement by the spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of China on 28 June, in which he declared that the Chinese Government and people, who had always firmly supported the Azanian and other southern African peoples in their just struggle against the white racist régimes, expressed their utmost indignation at and strongly condemned the new crime committed by the reactionary South African authorities against the Azanian people.

In a letter dated 25 June, the representative of Brazil informed the Secretary-General of his Government's firm endorsement of the Security Council's resolution of 19 June (392(1976)), and stated that the Brazilian conscience had been deeply shocked by the incidents in South Africa in which so many victims of apartheid had lost their lives.

On 3 August, the General Assembly's Special Committee against Apartheid unanimously adopted a special report entitled "The Soweto massacre and its aftermath." According to the report, the uprising in South Africa against apartheid and racial discrimination that began on 16 June and the brutal massacres perpetrated by the South African régime against African schoolchildren and others, represented a new stage in the struggle of the South African people for freedom and an inescapable challenge to the international community. Those events had clearly shown that there could be no solution to the grave situation in South Africa without the replacement of the minority racist régime by a Government based on the principle of equality and the exercise of the right of self-determination by all the people of South Africa.

The Special Committee went on to recommend that the Security Council again consider the situation in South Africa in the light of the defiance by the South African régime of the relevant resolutions of the Council, in particular that of 19 June (392(1976)), and of that régime's continued aggravation of the situation by massive repression. The Special Committee further recommended that the Security Council declare that the fast-worsening situation in South Africa resulting from apartheid was a grave threat to international peace and security, and recommended that the Council take early action under Chapter VII of the Charter.

In a letter dated 9 August, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Madagascar called attention to what he termed the alarming situation prevailing in South Africa following serious incidents which had taken place on 4 August and succeeding days at Soweto. He said that South African police had opposed by force peaceful marches organized by unarmed African students to protest in front of police headquarters in Johannesburg against the continued detention of their comrades arrested during the events of June. At least eight demonstrators had been killed and 41 injured. With his letter he transmitted a letter dated 4 August from David M. Sibeko of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, expressing grave fear of further massacres by the South African police of innocent Africans and other peaceful demonstrators. A telegram attached to Mr.

Sibeko's letter contained initial news reports from Soweto on the incidents of 4 August.

Reports of Special Committee against Apartheid

On 7 October 1976, the Special Committee against Apartheid submitted its annual report to the General Assembly and the Security Council. It also submitted three special reports during the year on the Soweto massacre and its aftermath (see above), relations between Israel and South Africa, and information activity against apartheid by the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

In its annual report, the Special Committee reviewed its work during the year and submitted a number of conclusions and recommendations. In an annex, the Committee reviewed major developments in South Africa since September 1975.

Included in the report was an account of the International Seminar on the Eradication of Apartheid and in Support of the Struggle for Liberation in South Africa, which was organized by the Special Committee in co-operation with OAU and held in Havana, Cuba, from 24 to 28 May 1976, in pursuance of a 1975 decision of the General Assembly.<sup>3</sup> The seminar was attended by more than 200 participants, including the members of the Special Committee as well as representatives of Governments, other United Nations bodies concerned with southern African problems, the specialized agencies, OAU, South African liberation movements, anti-apartheid movements, trade unions and other non-governmental organizations active in the struggle against apartheid, and several individual experts. A number of proposals made by participants on ways and means to promote effective international action against apartheid were discussed and a declaration and a programme of action were adopted, which the Special Committee transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council.

As in previous years, the Special Committee promoted the solemn observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination held to commemorate the incident at Sharpeville, South Africa, on 21 March 1960, in which 69 demonstrators against pass laws were killed and 180 wounded. The 1976 meeting was held at United Nations Headquarters on 19 March (21 March having fallen on a Sunday), and was attended by representatives of permanent missions to the United Nations, specialized agencies of the United Nations, OAU and South African liberation movements.

The Special Committee continued its efforts to promote the signature and ratification by Member States of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;<sup>4</sup> by 18 June 1976, the Convention had received the requisite number of ratifications and accessions and came into force on 18 July.

The Special Committee's report contained an account of its consideration of developments and topics relating to apartheid, in particular: South African aggression against Angola and Namibia; military, nuclear and other collaboration with South Africa; bantustans; repression against opponents of apartheid; repression against African workers; and apartheid in sports. Other sections of the report dealt with missions to and consultations with Governments, co-operation with United Nations organs, association of South African liberation movements with the work of the Special Committee, co-operation with the non-aligned movement, and co-operation with non-governmental organizations.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Special Committee said that during the period under review the crisis of colonialism and racism in southern Africa had developed into a new stage in which the minority racist régimes, in their desperation, had resorted to massacres and massive repression against the great majority of the people of South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, and to criminal acts of aggression against independent African States. The Special Committee believed that a major conflict enveloping the whole region, with its enormous international repercussions, appeared inevitable unless the international community took energetic and decisive measures to compel the minority régimes to abide by United Nations resolutions. Even those who had earlier resisted international action against apartheid had come to recognize the imminent danger of a wider conflict in southern Africa. The Special Committee considered that the United Nations should adopt a comprehensive programme of political and material assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa to enable them to eradicate apartheid so that all the people of the country, without regard to race, colour or creed, could exercise their right of self-determination.

The Special Committee noted that despite the repeated acts of aggression launched by the South African racist régime, its massacres and the universal recognition of the explosive situation in the area, some Member States—the main trading partners of South Africa—continued to refuse to recognize that the situation constituted a threat to the peace in the context of Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. France, the United Kingdom and the United States, it said, misused their veto power in the Security Council and consistently prevented mandatory action under Chapter VII against the South African racist régime. In that connexion, the Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly call on the three States to desist from misusing their veto power to protect the régime and enable the Security Council to determine the existence of a threat to the peace in South Africa and exercise its responsibilities under the Charter.

The Special Committee also recommended that the Assembly reaffirm categorically the right of the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements to resort to armed struggle for securing their freedom so long as the racist régime continued to answer their legitimate demands by violence.

The Special Committee considered it imperative that urgent action be taken to end all political, military, economic, cultural, sports and other collaboration with the South African racist régime, companies and apartheid institutions in accordance with the relevant Assembly resolutions.

In connexion with the General Assembly's repeated condemnation of the establishment of bantustans, the Special Committee further recommended that the Assembly: condemn the declaration of the "independence" of Transkei as utterly invalid; call on all Governments to refrain from extending any form of recognition to Transkei and any contact with the authorities of that bantustan; call on all corporations, organizations, institutions and individuals to refrain from any dealings with the puppet authorities; and declare that the inhabitants of Transkei and all others designated as its "citizens" remain citizens of South Africa, with full rights to decide the destiny of that country as a whole.

Concerning assistance to the South African liberation movements, the Special Committee recommended that the United Nations consult urgently with OAU to formulate concrete measures of assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and that consideration be given to the establishment of a joint United Nations/OAU fund, financed by voluntary contributions from Member States and other donors, to assist the South African liberation movements recognized by OAU.

The Special Committee noted that the South African régime had, in the period under review, committed repeated acts of aggression against neighbouring independent States, as demonstrated by its acts of aggression against Zambia and Angola. (See pp. 163-66 and 171-79.) The "front-line" States had been subjected to threats and acts of aggression because of their support, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations, of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa, and the Special Committee recommended, among other things, that the General Assembly and the Security Council proclaim that any aggression against a front-line State, because of such support was an act of aggression against the United Nations and the international community as a whole.

The Special Committee attached particular importance to action by the national and international trade union movements against the policies of apartheid—policies which, it observed, were a negation of the fundamental principles of trade unionism—and recommended that the General Assembly authorize it to convene the second International Conference of Trade Unions against Apartheid, as requested by the workers delegates at the International Labour Conference of the International Labour Organisation in June 1976.

The Special Committee pointed out that during the year under review there had been substantial progress in the implementation of United Nations resolutions on apartheid in sports but it noted with serious regret that some Governments had failed to take action and that the administrators of some sports bodies had remained insensitive to the problem of apartheid and encouraged exchanges with apartheid teams. In the light of the continued violations of those resolutions by a few Governments and sports bodies, the Special Committee welcomed the proposal by the Prime Minister of Jamaica, in his message to the international seminar in Havana in May 1976, for an international convention on apartheid in sports.

The need for the widest dissemination of information on apartheid and on the struggle of the oppressed was again emphasized by the Special Committee, and the importance of devoting adequate resources and attention to that activity was stressed.

Finally, the Special Committee recommended that a world conference for action against apartheid be organized in 1977 to consider concrete measures for the implementation of the programme of action formulated at the Havana seminar as well as the decisions to be taken by the General Assembly at its 1976 session.

On 3 August 1976, the Special Committee submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council a special report entitled "The massacre at Soweto and its aftermath" (see above).

In a second special report, submitted on 9 September and entitled "Relations between Israel and South Africa," the Special Committee noted that the rapidly increasing collaboration between the apartheid régime in South Africa and the Government of Israel had reached a new stage in April 1976, when the South African Prime Minister, B. J. Vorster, visited Israel and concluded agreements on economic, scientific and industrial collaboration between the two countries. The report included a general outline of the development of relations between Israel and South Africa in connexion with diplomatic and consular relations, military collaboration, trade, investment, science and technology, airlines and shipping, cultural relations and collaboration in sports.

On 21 October, the Special Committee submitted a third special report entitled "Information activity against apartheid by the United Nations and the specialized agencies," in which it stressed the need for close co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in order to expand the dissemination of information and underline the common commitment of the entire family of agencies to the struggle against apartheid. To that end, the Committee suggested that the Joint United Nations Information Committee regularly consider the question of dissemination of information on apartheid as a matter of priority, with the participation of the Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid. The Special Committee also recommended, in connexion with the observance of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners, that the Office of Public Information should prepare, in consultation with the Centre against Apartheid, special information kits on apartheid. An annex to the special report contained a review of information activity against apartheid by the United Nations.

Decisions of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

Decade for action to combat racism

The Economic and Social Council on 11 May 1976 adopted resolution 1989(LX), concerning implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. The resolution contained the text of a draft resolution which the Council recommended for adoption by the General Assembly at its session later in the year. (For details, see pp. 563-66.)

Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts

On 4 March 1976, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution concerning a report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, by which among other things the Commission deplored the fact that policies of apartheid and racial discrimination persisted in southern Africa. The Economic and Social Council, by its resolution 1991(LX) adopted on 12 May 1976, after inviting the Ad Hoc Working Group to continue its work, expressed its concern to the General Assembly regarding the situation in southern Africa—which it considered constituted a serious threat to international peace and security—and appealed to all States to co-operate with international organizations in measures they were taking to combat racial discrimination and apartheid.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of aid to racist régimes in southern Africa

By a resolution adopted on 1 March 1976, the Human Rights Commission among other things denounced with indignation the political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given by certain States to South Africa directly or through corporations which they controlled; it considered that the sales of arms, the nuclear co-operation agreements and the economic activities of national and multinational corporations in South Africa, Namibia or Southern Rhodesia constituted blatant acts of complicity in the policy of apartheid—a crime against humanity. The Commission strongly condemned the attitude of any country which, by such assistance, became an accomplice in apartheid and racial discrimination and thus contributed to the perpetuation of those policies, and called on States among other things to take steps to bring about a total embargo by the Security Council on sales, gifts and transfers of all kinds of military supplies to South Africa.

By its resolution 31/33, adopted on 30 November 1976, the General Assembly took similar decisions.

Consideration by the General Assembly

General aspects

An item entitled "Policies of Apartheid of the Government of South Africa" was included in the agenda of the thirty-first (1976) session of the General Assembly, which considered it at plenary meetings held between 26 October and 9 November.

In accordance with a decision of the Assembly, the Special Political Committee on 4 November heard statements by: Romesh Chandra, Secretary-General of the World Peace Council; George Houser, Executive Director of the American Committee on Africa; Timothy Smith, Director of the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility; Miss Sikose Mji of the Black Consciousness Movement; and Edward Martin Sloan, Chairman of the Conseil québécois de la paix.

During the Assembly's deliberations, statements were made by, among others, the Rapporteur of the Special Committee against Apartheid, who introduced the Special Committee's report, and by its Chairman. Statements were also made by: the representative of Mauritius, speaking for the Organization of African Unity; by Oliver Tambo, representative of the African National Congress (ANC) of South Africa; and by David M. Sibeko, representative of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC).

The representative of Mali spoke on behalf of the African group of States Members, which, he noted, had asked that the debate on the item on apartheid be transferred from the Special Political Committee to the plenary Assembly to permit a substantive debate at the highest level. He also thanked the Assembly for authorizing the representatives of ANC and PAC to take part in the debate. In that connexion, the representative of the United States, and the representative of the Netherlands speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Communities, expressed reservations on the ground that the plenary Assembly had been traditionally reserved for presentation of views by Member States, not by observers or other parties. The representatives of the organizations in question should, they maintained, be given full hearings before the whole membership in one of the Main Committees.

The Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid said in that connexion that the long struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa had at last been rewarded: the South African régime was absent from its seat, and the representatives of the great majority of the people of South Africa were being heard in the Assembly. That was also a tribute to those who had died since the Soweto massacre of 16 June 1976, he added, and said he looked forward to the day when the freedom fighters of South Africa would accede to power and would take their rightful seat in the world body.

During the discussion in the General Assembly, it was generally held that, far from accepting the prerequisites for peaceful solutions contained in the relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, the South African régime had maintained its traditional, defiant attitude and had heightened the level of repression—as was clear in its brutal response at Soweto and to the later uprisings. The régime had, it was charged, held hundreds of African people, many of them women and children, in detention and had maimed and massacred many of them.

South Africa's bantustan policy was condemned by a large number of speakers, among them Bangladesh, Brazil, Colombia, Democratic Yemen, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, Malaysia, Mozambique and Zambia. They said that the bantustan policy was an attempt to consolidate the inhuman policy of apartheid, calculated to divide the African population and ensure the continuation of white minority supremacy through the appointment of puppet tribal chiefs and their isolation from the rest of the land and people. They denounced the so-called independence of Transkei and said they would not recognize it.

The representative of the Netherlands, on behalf of the European Communities, rejected the policy of apartheid as a violation of the principles of freedom and democracy. Regrettably, there were as yet no indications that the situation would improve. The nine countries, he said, supported appeals for the release of political prisoners and for contributions to the United Nations funds for southern Africa. They also felt strongly that all the inhabitants of South Africa, whatever their race or colour, should have an equal right to participate in the institutions of the country.

Many Members, among them Equatorial Guinea, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, Jamaica, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia, expressed concern at the continued collaboration by States and foreign interests with the apartheid régime. Political, economic and military co-operation by some Western countries encouraged South Africa's defiance, they said, and enabled it to acquire the most sophisticated weapons, which it had already used for internal repression and against neighbouring independent countries, mainly Angola and Zambia.

The representative of Zambia, among others, condemned the "triple veto" exercised by France, the United Kingdom and the United States in the Security Council to thwart the imposition of a mandatory arms embargo against the Pretoria régime under Chapter VII of the Charter. Ghana and others charged that those States which shielded South Africa by the use of the veto power had acted as accomplices of the régime, which would remain stubborn and would never abandon apartheid as long as it could count on outside support.

Several speakers called for an end to nuclear collaboration with the South African régime. The representatives of Benin and the United Republic of Tanzania, for example, deplored the fact that France was currently supplying South Africa with nuclear reactors and the two countries were collaborating in the production of the "crotale" missile system.

Several speakers, among them the German Democratic Republic and Zambia, observed that the South African régime was countering pressures and demands for change by making what amounted to only superficial, not fundamental, changes in its policy of apartheid. Such manoeuvres were unlikely to deceive the international community and the people of South Africa, they said. South Africa's policy of "detente" and "dialogue" with African countries was described as a manoeuvre to establish neo-colonialist white domination of southern Africa and to create satellites in the form of bantustans. Instead, a call was made for a genuine dialogue with the overwhelming majority of the oppressed people of South Africa and their authentic leaders in the liberation movements as a prerequisite for peaceful change.

The representatives of Denmark, Sweden and other States said that the time had come for the Security Council to apply pressure on South Africa through a policy of effective sanctions, such as a binding arms embargo and action to discourage further investments in South Africa.

Many Members—Jamaica, Madagascar and Somalia among them—supported the adoption of measures such as a total embargo on the supply of weapons to South Africa, a total and unconditional cessation of trade and of economic and political co-operation with the racist régime, and effective support for the liberation struggle. Member States were urged to take effective action to prevent their nationals from engaging in any form of economic or other collaboration with South Africa.

Others, among them the representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the members of the European Communities, expressed doubt about a strategy of economic boycott and isolation of the South African régime as the best means for helping the oppressed people of South Africa. They said that instead they considered it their responsibility to keep open channels of communication and continue to make known their views to the people and Government of South Africa.

The General Assembly adopted 11 resolutions, one of which—resolution 31/6 B—concerned the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and is described in the section of this chapter that follows. The others are described immediately below.

THE SO-CALLED INDEPENDENT TRANSKEI AND OTHER BANTUSTANS

On 26 October 1976, a resolution on the so-called independent Transkei and other bantustans—introduced by Nigeria on behalf of 68 Members—was adopted by the General Assembly by a roll-call vote of 134 to 0, with 1 abstention, as resolution 31/6 A.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things took note that the racist régime of South Africa had that day, 26 October, declared the sham "independence" of Transkei. By the operative part of this resolution, the Assembly:

(1) strongly condemned the establishment of bantustans as designed to consolidate the inhuman policies of apartheid, to destroy the territorial integrity of the country, to perpetuate white minority domination and to dispossess the African people of South Africa of their inalienable rights;

(2) rejected the declaration of "independence" of Transkei and declared it invalid;

(3) called upon all Governments to deny any form of recognition to Transkei and to refrain from having any dealings with it or with other bantustans; and

(4) requested all States to take effective measures to prohibit all individuals, corporations and other institutions under their jurisdiction from having any dealings with it or with other bantustans.

(For text of resolution 31/6 A, list of sponsors

Several Members, including Australia, Austria, Canada, the Netherlands (on behalf of the countries of the European Communities) and Sweden (on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), had reservations about the last paragraph which, they said, might give rise to legal and administrative problems. Canada's representative, for example, said it was the policy of his Government not to interfere in the activities of Canadian citizens abroad except when the Security Council adopted mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The representative of the United States said his Government had abstained in the vote because it considered it unwise to preclude contacts with any elements of the South African population which strove for social justice and racial equality, including those who had been relegated to bantustans. The United States, he said, also objected to imposing a type of sanction on private relationships with people in the so-called homelands, which was a matter for the Security Council to decide.

In connexion with the situation concerning Transkei, the Secretary-General received letters from Liberia and the Central African Republic, dated 22 and 28 October 1976, respectively.

See also pp. 167-70 for an account of a complaint by Lesotho against South Africa in connexion with the closing of the border between South Africa and the southern border of Lesotho adjacent to Transkei.

SOLIDARITY WITH SOUTH AFRICAN POLITICAL PRISONERS

A resolution on solidarity with South African political prisoners—introduced by Norway on 5 November and eventually sponsored by 79 Members—was adopted without a vote by the General Assembly on 9 November as resolution 31/6 C.

By the preamble part of the text, the Assembly among other things noted that the racist régime of South Africa had constantly defied United Nations resolutions calling upon it to end repression of the leaders of the oppressed people and other opponents of apartheid and to release all persons imprisoned or restricted for struggling against the system of apartheid. The Assembly also expressed its grave concern about the brutal massacres in Soweto and other areas of South Africa and the incarceration of schoolchildren and other persons demonstrating against apartheid and about the continuation of those atrocities in defiance of Security Council resolution 392(1976) of 19 June 1976 (see above).

(1) condemned the racist régime of South Africa for its ruthless repression of opponents of apartheid;

(2) reaffirmed its solidarity with all South Africans struggling against apartheid for the establishment of majority rule and the exercise of their right to self-determination and for the principles enshrined in the Charter;

(3) demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all persons imprisoned or restricted for their involvement in the liberation struggle in South Africa;

(4) proclaimed 11 October as the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners; and

(5) requested the Centre against Apartheid, in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to intensify publicity for the cause of all those persecuted for their opposition to apartheid in South Africa.

ARMS EMBARGO AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

On 9 November, by a recorded vote of 110 to 8, with 20 abstentions, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/6 D on the arms embargo against South Africa. The text, introduced by Mauritius, was sponsored eventually by 48 Members.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things noted that the racist régime of South Africa had used weapons received from its traditional allies—particularly France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the United Kingdom and the United States—as well as other countries, for repression in South Africa and aggression against other States. It also noted with concern the continued rapid increase in South Africa's military budget and the continued violations of the arms embargo against South Africa by its traditional allies and other countries.

Also by the preamble to this text, the Assembly noted that the Security Council had primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and expressed its strong conviction that mandatory measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter, to secure the full implementation of the arms embargo were essential to prevent further aggravation of the situation. The Assembly expressed regret that three permanent members of the Council—France, the United Kingdom and the United States—had thus far prevented such measures, thereby facilitating the militarization of South Africa.

By the operative part of the resolution, the General Assembly requested the Security Council to take urgent action under Chapter VII, to ensure a complete cessation by all States of the supply of arms, ammunition, military vehicles and spare parts, and any other military equipment, as well as of any co-operation that would enable the building-up of military and police forces in South Africa.

The Assembly further requested the Security Council to call on all Governments: (a) to implement fully the arms embargo against South Africa without any exception as to type of weapon, and to prohibit any violations of the embargo by companies and individuals within their jurisdiction; (b) to refrain from importing any supplies manufactured by, or in collaboration with, South Africa; (c) to terminate any existing military arrangements with the racist régime and refrain from entering into or planning any such arrangements; and (d) to prohibit any transfers, at any level, of equipment or fissionable material or technology that would enable South Africa to acquire nuclear-weapon capability.

The Assembly called upon the Governments of France, the United Kingdom and the United States to adopt a positive policy to enable the Security Council to take effective action under Chapter VII of the Charter, and authorized the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue to promote the full implementation of the arms embargo and, to that end, to launch a special campaign to secure the widest public support for the embargo.

Several Members—Japan and the United States among them—expressed reservations about the appropriateness of invoking Chapter VII of the Charter at that time. The United States also objected strongly to the preambular paragraphs by which it was alleged that the United States was sending weapons to South Africa. The representative of the Federal Republic of Germany also rejected the charges levelled against his Government as entirely unjustifiable. Australia, Canada and the Netherlands also objected to what Australia called opportunistic references to other countries. It was unacceptable to the Netherlands Government that some Member States were labelled allies of the racist régime and several of them accused by name of being accomplices in the oppression in South Africa.

The representative of Ireland, while supporting the general objectives of the resolution, said his Government had had to abstain because some of the formulations had been drafted without due regard to the specific policies announced by certain countries. Several countries—Australia, Canada, Ireland, Japan and New Zealand—said they had consistently supported and strictly observed the voluntary arms embargo against South Africa.

RELATIONS BETWEEN ISRAEL AND SOUTH AFRICA

Another resolution (31/6 E) adopted by the Assembly concerned relations between Israel and South Africa. The text was introduced by the Libyan Arab Republic and eventually sponsored by 45 Members; it was adopted on 9 November by a recorded vote of 91 to 20, with 28 abstentions.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things recalled that since 1973 it had repeatedly condemned the strengthening of relations and collaboration between the racist régime of South Africa and Israel in the political, military, economic and other fields. It also expressed its deep concern about the fact that Israel had sent paramilitary personnel to train South African troops and about the sale of warships and other war materiel by Israel to South Africa in flagrant violation of the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council.

By the operative part of this resolution, the Assembly strongly condemned the continuing and increasing collaboration by Israel with the racist régime of South Africa as a flagrant violation of United Nations resolutions and as an encouragement to that régime to persist in its criminal policies. The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to disseminate widely the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, in various languages, in order to mobilize public opinion against Israel's collaboration.

The Israeli representative said that the Arab representatives had taken the apartheid question—a subject close to the hearts of African Members—and converted it into a barren discussion of the Middle East problem, as they did on every possible occasion. The resolution called for a condemnation of Israel for alleged crimes in which Arab States were the major culprits. Israel had to be singled out because the Arab States had so decided, even though Israel's trade with South Africa was only two fifths of 1 per cent of that country's trade. Not one item on the list of equipment and weapons maintained in South Africa's defence establishment had been supplied by Israel. He said the Assembly was being called on to participate in an act of deceit and a cynical vote based on international hypocrisy and unscrupulous falsehood. Israel, he said, would not participate in the voting on any of the draft resolutions on the item; it would not be a party to a legislative process which revealed the depths to which the Organization had descended.

Several Members had reservations about the text. Bolivia said that it would abstain because the draft resolution was politically motivated and its implications might affect and further delay the implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions on the Middle East. Nepal could not support the resolution because it saw no justification in the practice of isolating and condemning one State. Canada, Fiji, Ireland, Mexico and New Zealand shared this view. Malawi also could not support the resolution, which gave the impression that Israel—and Israel only—traded with South Africa; if the resolution was to have any impact at all, it ought to have included every country in the world that had similar relations with South Africa. The United States voted against the resolution because, it said, while it did not condone Israel's military trade with South Africa, other nations were also involved in such trade. The report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the unbalanced resolution stemmed, the United States said, from anti-Israel political motives rather than from a decision to investigate impartially those countries which were trading in military material with South Africa.

APARTHEID IN SPORTS

On 9 November, the General Assembly, by a recorded vote of 128 to 0, with 12 abstentions, adopted resolution 31/6 F on apartheid in sports, based on a proposal revised and eventually sponsored by 59 Members.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed its unqualified support of the Olympic principle that there should be no discrimination in sports on the grounds of race, religion or political affiliation. It recognized the importance in the international campaign against apartheid of the boycott of South African sports teams selected on the basis of apartheid and expressed regret that some national and international sports bodies and individual sportsmen had continued contacts with racist South African sports bodies in violation of the Olympic principle and United Nations resolutions.

The Assembly also noted that at the fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, from 16 to 19 August 1976, a resolution had been adopted endorsing the proposal for an international convention against apartheid in sports and requesting the United Nations to give urgent consideration to the formulation of such a convention. The Assembly also noted the recommendations of the Special Committee against Apartheid in this regard.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly: welcomed the proposal for such an international convention to promote adherence to the Olympic principle of non-discrimination and to discourage and deny support to sporting events organized in violation of that principle. It decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, which it requested to prepare a draft declaration on apartheid in sports, as an interim measure, to undertake preparatory steps towards drafting an international convention and to report to the Assembly in 1977.

The Assembly also by this resolution urged all States to implement the recommendations of the Special Committee, namely: (a) to convey the United Nations resolutions on apartheid in sports to all national sports bodies and request that they be implemented; (b) to refuse any official sponsorship, assistance or encouragement to sports contacts with South Africa, including official receptions to teams and payments of grants to sports bodies, teams or sportsmen involved in sporting competitions with South African teams or sportsmen; (c) to refuse visas to South African sports bodies, teams or sportsmen, except for non-racial sports bodies endorsed by the Special Committee and the liberation movements; (d) to deny facilities to sports bodies, teams or sportsmen for visits to south Africa; and (e) to encourage national sports bodies to support the exclusion of South Africa from international bodies and tournaments.

Finally, by this text, the Assembly called upon Member States and international sporting organizations actively to support projects undertaken in collaboration with the liberation movements to form non-racial teams truly representative of South Africa.

(For text of resolution 31/6 F, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The representatives of New Zealand and the United States said they had had to abstain in the vote because the resolution would have their Governments intervene in the affairs of private sports bodies, which they would not do. New Zealand also objected to recommendations in the resolution which were contrary to its consistent policy of refraining from restrictions on travel.

PROGRAMME OF WORK OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID

On 9 November, the Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 133 to 0, with 8 abstentions, resolution 31/6 G on the programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid, based on a proposal sponsored by 57 Members. By this text, the Assembly among other things requested the Special Committee to continue and to intensify its activities to promote concerted international action against apartheid. It authorized the Special Committee to send missions for consultations to the headquarters of specialized agencies, other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and trade union confederations, and to participate in conferences concerned with apartheid. The Special Committee was authorized to organize a World Conference for Action against Apartheid in 1977 and to convene an International Conference of Trade Unions against Apartheid. It was also authorized to establish an award to be presented to persons who had, in co-operation with the United Nations and in solidarity with the South African liberation movements, contributed significantly to the international campaign against apartheid.

ECONOMIC COLLABORATION WITH SOUTH AFRICA

On the question of economic collaboration with South Africa, the General Assembly on 9 November adopted resolution 31/6 H by a recorded vote of 110 to 6, with 24 abstentions. By this resolution, sponsored by 63 Members, the Assembly, after noting with concern that some Governments, in pursuing strategic, economic and other interests, continued to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa and thereby encouraged it to persist in its criminal policies:

(1) proclaimed that any collaboration with the racist régime constituted a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and a contemptuous defiance of the United Nations and the international community;

(2) strongly condemned the action of States and foreign economic and other interests which continued to collaborate with that régime;

(3) called upon Member States engaged in economic collaboration and trade with that régime to implement the relevant Assembly resolutions and to cease such collaboration forthwith;

(4) called upon all Governments to take effective action to prohibit all loans to or investments in South Africa by banks and corporations within their national jurisdiction;

(5) condemned the intensified activities of transnational corporations, which continued to exploit the racially oppressed people of South Africa and plunder its natural resources and thereby were accomplices to the crimes of the apartheid régime;

(6) requested all agencies within the United Nations system to refrain from any dealings with corporations which loaned to or invested in South Africa;

(7) requested the Economic and Social Council to invite the Commission on Transnational Corporations to study and publicize the involvement of transnational corporations in the apartheid economy;

(8) requested the International Monetary Fund to refrain forthwith from extending credits to South Africa;

(9) requested the Economic and Social Council to invite the Commission on Human Rights to give special attention to the scope and consequences of the activities of the transnational corporations there;

(10) commended all those Governments which had ceased all economic collaboration with the racist régime in compliance with United Nations resolutions; and

(11) commended all anti-apartheid movements, churches, trade unions and other organizations engaged in activities to discourage collaboration by transnational corporations with South Africa.

(For text of resolution 31/6 H, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Canadian representative, explaining his country's abstention, said it was Canada's practice to carry on trade in peaceful goods with all countries of the world, except Southern Rhodesia, on the grounds that the maintenance of normal trade and commercial relations with other States did not in any way imply support for their political policies. Canada accordingly could not accept the premise that the existence of economic relations constituted collaboration in, or encouragement for, the policies of apartheid.

Australia, which also abstained, said it was necessary to distinguish between legitimate economic involvements in the South African economy and involvements that tended to bolster and maintain the apartheid system. The United States held the view that a decision to impose economic sanctions against South Africa was of the utmost seriousness and could be taken only by the Security Council; in its opinion, the facts did not warrant such a decision nor could it accept the thesis that economic relations with South Africa worked to the disadvantage of the population or necessarily resulted in their exploitation. The Netherlands took exception to what it called the implacable and unrealistic language of the resolution and its ill-considered recommendations. In its view, effective measures could be taken only by the Security Council acting under the powers entrusted to it by the Charter.

SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA

A resolution on the situation in South Africa, sponsored by 48 Members, was adopted by the Assembly on 9 November by a recorded vote of 108 to 11, with 22 abstentions, as resolution 31/61.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things expressed outrage at the continuing massacres and other atrocities by the racist régime of South Africa. It also expressed concern about the military and other activities of the régime and, in particular, about nuclear collaboration aimed at the establishment of nuclear installations and the transfer of nuclear technology to South Africa. The Assembly expressed its conviction that the situation in South Africa constituted a grave threat to international peace and security, and it reaffirmed that the policy and practice of apartheid constituted a crime against humanity.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly:

(1) proclaimed that the racist régime of South Africa was illegitimate and had no right to represent the people of South Africa;

(2) reaffirmed that the national liberation movements recognized by OAU—the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania—were the authentic representatives of the overwhelming majority of the South African people;

(3) strongly condemned the racist régime for its criminal policies and practices of apartheid, its massacres of black people, including schoolchildren, and its ruthless repression of all those struggling against apartheid;

(4) reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements, by all possible means, for the seizure of power by the people and the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination;

(5) recognized, in particular, that the consistent defiance of United Nations resolutions on apartheid by the régime and its continued brutal repression, including indiscriminate mass killings, left no alternative to the people but to resort to armed struggle to achieve their legitimate rights;

(6) declared that the situation in South Africa resulting from the policies and actions of the racist régime constituted a grave threat to the peace requiring action under Chapter VII of the Charter;

(7) demanded the cessation of any form of military and nuclear co-operation with that régime;

(8) condemned it for encouraging and using mercenaries and their organizations against the African peoples and States members of OAU;

(9) urgently appealed to all States to enact laws declaring the recruitment, financing, training, transit and assembly of mercenaries for the racist régime of South Africa in their territories a punishable crime and prohibiting their citizens from enlisting as mercenaries;

(10) called on France, the United Kingdom and the United States, in particular (a) to desist from misusing their veto power in the Security Council to protect the racist régime, (b) to enable the Council to determine the existence in South Africa of a threat to the peace and to exercise its responsibilities under the Charter, and (c) not to obstruct but to facilitate the adoption of a mandatory arms embargo and other indispensable measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter, to deal with the situation;

(11) appealed to all States and organizations to provide all assistance required by the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movements during their legitimate struggle, in the light of the recommendations of the Special Committee against Apartheid;

(12) further called on Member States and the specialized agencies, through emergency joint projects and financial assistance, to help Lesotho and other countries bordering South Africa to ensure the provision of educational facilities to the rapidly growing number of refugee students from South Africa;

(13) appealed to all Governments to become parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

(14) authorized the Special Committee against Apartheid to take all appropriate steps to promote such assistance, including the establishment of a joint United Nations/OAU fund financed by voluntary contributions, and to assist ANC and PAC to maintain offices at United Nations Headquarters in New York;

(15) commended the anti-apartheid and solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations that had taken action against apartheid and in support of the South African national liberation movements;

(16) condemned the racist régime of South Africa for its acts of aggression against neighbouring independent States that had assisted the movements, and invited all Governments to provide those States, at their request, with all necessary assistance for defence against aggression; and

(17) proclaimed 16 June the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa and called on Member States to commemorate this day in the most fitting way.

Canada said it supported the provision designed to help Lesotho and other countries bordering on South Africa provide educational facilities for refugee students, but had to vote against the resolution as a whole. Japan said it had had to abstain because it could not accept five of the first six, or the tenth, operative paragraphs. The United States, which voted against the resolution, did not believe that the situation in South Africa, however abhorrent the policies of the Government, constituted a threat to international peace or security. It was clear to the United States that the resolution was tantamount to a call for an uprising in South Africa that would, in effect, result in a racial blood-bath. The United States Government could not subscribe to the thesis that that was the best or only way to work for peace in South Africa.

New Zealand said it had abstained because of the extreme language of the resolution and because it did not consider that there was no alternative to armed struggle as the means of achieving the legitimate rights of the disenfranchised majority in South Africa. Ireland said it had voted against the resolution because it called into question the legitimacy of the Government of South Africa and because it used language implying the seizure of power by means not sanctioned by the United Nations Charter.

PROGRAMME OF ACTION AGAINST APARTHEID

On 9 November, a resolution commending a Programme of Action against Apartheid, which was sponsored by 59 States, was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 105 to 8, with 27 abstentions.

By this text, the Assembly among other things: commended to all Governments, organizations and individuals the Programme of Action annexed to the resolution; requested all United Nations organs and specialized agencies concerned to participate in the implementation of the Programme, in close co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid; requested the Special Committee, in co-operation with OAU, to promote its implementation and report from time to time on the progress achieved; and requested the Secretary-General to ensure maximum publicity for the Programme and to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Committee in promoting its implementation.

In the Programme of Action, the General Assembly recommended ways in which action against apartheid could be taken by Governments, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, trade unions, churches, anti-apartheid and solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations, and the Special Committee against Apartheid.

(For text of resolution 31/6J annexing the Programme of Action, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The United States said it had voted against the resolution because it was not prepared to support a comprehensive régime of sanctions against South Africa or to provide assistance for a violent uprising there. It also had reservations about the financial implications of the Programme and the fact that it aimed at drawing the specialized agencies into what was clearly a political campaign.

INVESTMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA

A resolution concerning investments in South Africa, sponsored by 23 States, was adopted by the Assembly on 9 November by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 16 abstentions, as resolution 31/6 K.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly: noted the increase of foreign investments in South Africa, which abetted and encouraged that country's apartheid policies; welcomed as a positive step the decision of some Governments to achieve the cessation of further investments in South Africa; and considered that a cessation of new foreign investments would constitute an important step in the struggle against apartheid.

By the operative paragraph of the resolution, the Assembly urged the Security Council, when studying the problem of the struggle against the apartheid policies of South Africa, to consider steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments in South Africa.

(For text of resolution 31/6 K, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE FOR SOUTH AFRICAN REFUGEE STUDENTS

On 16 December, on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/126 on emergency assistance for South African refugee students. The text was sponsored by 32 Members.

By the preambular part of the text, the Assembly among other things expressed its concern about the continuing influx of refugees, including in particular large numbers of South African students fleeing to the bordering States of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland, thus imposing a heavy burden on the limited resources and employment opportunities of those countries.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly:

(1) reaffirmed that humanitarian assistance by the international community to all those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia was appropriate and essential;

(2) recognized the urgent need to organize an effective programme of international assistance to help deal with the recent South African student refugee problem in countries bordering South Africa;

(3) requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to consult with the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland and the liberation movements concerned with a view to organizing and providing appropriate emergency financial and other assistance for the care, subsistence and education of the refugee students;

(4) urged all States to respond generously to appeals which the Secretary-General might make for assistance for the refugees;

(5) called on the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and other United Nations bodies and organs, as appropriate, to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in implementing the programme of assistance; and

(6) requested him to keep the situation under review and to report to the General Assembly as necessary.

The Assembly adopted the text—which had been approved without a vote in the Third Committee—without a vote, after an oral amendment by Nigeria to add the reference to the liberation movements had been adopted by 98 votes to 0, with 29 abstentions.

(For text of resolution 31/126 and list of sponsors, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Related General Assembly decisions

The General Assembly at its 1976 session adopted a number of resolutions which had a bearing on the question of apartheid. Relevant portions of these are described briefly below.

STATUS OF THE CONVENTION ON THE CRIME OF APARTHEID

By a resolution (31/80) adopted on 13 December 1976, on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the General Assembly among other things welcomed the entry into force of the International Convention on 18 July 1976. It appealed to States that were not parties to the Convention to accede to it and invited the Commission on Human Rights to undertake certain functions in connexion with its implementation.

DECADE FOR ACTION TO COMBAT RACISM AND RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

By resolution 31/77 adopted on 13 December 1976, on implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, the General Assembly among other things reaffirmed that the policies of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid were flagrant violations of the principles of, and obligations of Member States under, the Charter. It condemned the intolerable conditions prevailing in southern Africa and elsewhere, including the inhumane and odious application of apartheid and racial discrimination, and reaffirmed its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of oppressed peoples to liberate themselves from racism and racial discrimination, apartheid, colonialism and alien domination. It urged States to co-operate in achieving the goals of the Decade and, in particular: to provide full support and assistance, morally and materially, to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination and to the liberation movements; to ensure the release of political prisoners in South Africa and of those subjected to restrictions for their opposition to apartheid; to review internal laws and regulations with a view to identifying and rescinding those which provided for, gave rise to, or inspired racial discrimination or apartheid; and to sign and ratify the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and all other relevant instruments. It further urged United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to ensure the continuation of their activities related to the Decade with emphasis on, among other things, providing moral and material support to the national liberation movements and the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination and examining the socio-economic and colonial roots of racism, apartheid and racial discrimination with a view to eliminating them.

ADVERSE CONSEQUENCES FOR HUMAN RIGHTS OF AID TO RACIST REGIMES IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

By resolution 31/33, adopted on 30 November 1976—on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa—the General Assembly concluded that the political, military, economic and other assistance given by certain States to the racist and colonial régimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia was the major factor in the perpetuation of the abominable policies of those régimes. It noted that France, the United Kingdom and the United States, by the use of the veto, prevented the Security Council from taking effective action against the South African apartheid régime, thus impairing the exercise and the enjoyment of human rights of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa. The Assembly reaffirmed that the States and organizations that gave assistance to the colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa were accomplices in the inhuman practices of racial discrimination, apartheid and colonialism perpetrated by those régimes. (For details, see pp. 578-80.)

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF THE RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

By resolution 31/34—on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights—adopted on 30 November 1976, the General Assembly among other things condemned the policy of bantustanization and reiterated its support for the oppressed people of South Africa in their struggle against the racist minority régime in Pretoria. It again condemned the policies of those members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and other countries whose political, economic, military or sporting relations with the racist régimes of southern Africa and elsewhere encouraged those régimes to persist in their suppression of aspirations for self-determination and independence. It also strongly condemned the massacres of innocent and defenceless people, including women and children, by the racist minority régimes of southern Africa in their desperate attempt to thwart the legitimate demands of the people.

IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION ON THE GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

By resolution 31/143 adopted on 17 December 1976, on implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the General Assembly among other things strongly condemned all collaboration in both the nuclear and military fields with South Africa and called on all States concerned to refrain from extending to its Government, directly or indirectly, any facilities or collaboration which increased its nuclear and military potential.

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

By resolution 31/7—on the activities of foreign economic and other interests which were impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia and in all other territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa—adopted on 5 November 1976, the Assembly strongly condemned the collaboration, in both nuclear and military fields, between the racist minority régime of South Africa and all countries, in particular France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the United Kingdom and the United States, which continued to supply that régime with nuclear and military equipment and technology. It called on those Governments in particular, and all others, to refrain from extending facilities, directly or indirectly, to South Africa enabling it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment.

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE ORGANIZATION OF AFRICAN UNITY

By resolution 31/13 adopted on 16 November 1976, on the question of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, the General Assembly, aware of the urgent need to give increased assistance to the victims of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid, requested the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, particularly with regard to the provision of assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa. In this connexion it drew attention to the Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid established by OAU.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1976, a total of 347 South African students were studying abroad—in 15 countries—on scholarships granted under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa established by the General Assembly in 1967.

During the period from 1 November 1975 to 22 October 1976, 323 applications from South Africans were received. Fifty new awards were granted and 297 awards were extended.

The Programme was reviewed by the General Assembly at its 1976 session. Among other things, it concluded, by resolution 31/31 of 29 November, that the Programme had been a significant and worth-while effort of the international community and should be continued and expanded, and it appealed once again for generous contributions from States, organizations and individuals.

(For additional information about the Programme and the Assembly's decisions thereon, see pp. 202-4.)

Resolution 392(1976), as proposed by 8 powers, S/12103, adopted by consensus by Council on 19 June 1976, meeting 1930.

The Security Council,

Having considered the letter of the representatives of Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania, on behalf of the African Group at the United Nations, concerning the measures of repression, including wanton killings, perpetrated by the apartheid régime in South Africa against the African people in Soweto and other areas in South Africa,

Having considered also the telegram from the President of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar to the Secretary-General,

Deeply shocked over large-scale killings and wounding of Africans in South Africa, following the callous shooting of African people including schoolchildren and students demonstrating against racial discrimination on 16 June 1976,

Convinced that this situation has been brought about by the continued imposition by the South African Government of apartheid and racial discrimination, in defiance of the resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly,

1. Strongly condemns the South African Government for its resort to massive violence against and killings of the African people including schoolchildren and students and others opposing racial discrimination;

2. Expresses its profound sympathy to the victims of this violence;

3. Reaffirms that the policy of apartheid is a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind and seriously disturbs international peace and security;

4. Recognizes the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination;

5. Calls upon the South African Government urgently to end violence against the African people and to take urgent steps to eliminate apartheid and racial discrimination;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The so-called independent Transkei and other bantustans

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3411 D (XXX) of 28 November 1975 condemning the establishment of bantustans by the racist régime of South Africa,

Taking note that the racist régime of South Africa declared the sham "independence" of the Transkei on 26 October 1976,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and its special reports,

1. Strongly condemns the establishment of bantustans as designed to consolidate the inhuman policies of apartheid, to destroy the territorial integrity of the country, to perpetuate white minority domination and to dispossess the African people of South Africa of their inalienable rights;

2. Rejects the declaration of "independence" of the Transkei and declares it invalid;

3. Calls upon all Governments to deny any form of recognition to the so-called independent Transkei and to refrain from having any dealings with the so-called independent Transkei or other bantustans;

4. Requests all States to take effective measures to prohibit all individuals, corporations and other institutions under their jurisdiction from having any dealings with the so-called independent Transkei or other bantustans.

Resolution 31/6 C, as proposed by 79 powers, A/31/L.7 and Add.1-3, adopted without vote by Assembly on 9 November 1976, meeting 58.

Solidarity with South African political prisoners

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the total eradication of apartheid and the exercise of the right of self-determination by all the inhabitants of South Africa,

Noting that the racist régime of South Africa has constantly defied the United Nations resolutions calling upon it to end repression of the leaders of the oppressed people and other opponents of apartheid and to release all persons imprisoned or restricted for struggling against the system of apartheid,

Gravely concerned about the brutal massacres in Soweto and other areas of South Africa and the incarceration of schoolchildren and other persons demonstrating against apartheid and about the continuation of these atrocities in defiance of Security Council resolution 392(1976) of 19 June 1976,

Commending the heroism and sacrifices of the South African people in their struggle for liberation,

1. Condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its ruthless repression of the oppressed people of South Africa and other opponents of apartheid;

2. Reaffirms its solidarity with all South Africans struggling against apartheid for the establishment of majority rule and the exercise of their right to self-determination and for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all persons imprisoned or restricted for their involvement in the struggle for liberation in South Africa;

4. Proclaims 11 October the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners;

5. Requests the Centre against Apartheid, in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to intensify publicity for the cause of all those persecuted for their opposition to apartheid in South Africa.

Arms embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions concerning the arms embargo against South Africa,

Deeply concerned over the explosive situation in South Africa resulting from the wanton killings by the racist régime of hundreds of peaceful demonstrators against apartheid and racial discrimination, including many schoolchildren,

Condemning the racist régime of South Africa for its colonial war against the Namibian people and its repeated acts of aggression against the People's Republic of Angola and the Republic of Zambia,

Noting that the racist régime of South Africa has used weapons received from its traditional allies, particularly France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, as well as other foreign countries, for repression in South Africa and aggression against other States,

Noting further that the racist régime of South Africa has supplied military equipment to the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia in flagrant violation of the resolutions of the Security Council,

Noting with concern the continued rapid increase in the military budget of South Africa and the continued violations of the arms embargo against South Africa by its traditional allies, particularly France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as other foreign countries,

Mindful of the primary responsibility of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Strongly convinced that mandatory measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to secure the full implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa are essential to prevent a further aggravation of the situation,

Expressing serious regret that three permanent members of the Security Council—France, the United Kingdom and the United States—have so far prevented such measures and thereby facilitated the militarization of South Africa,

1. Requests once again the Security Council to take urgent action, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to ensure the complete cessation by all States of the supply of arms, ammunition, military vehicles and spare parts thereof, and any other military equipment to South Africa, as well as any co-operation to enable the building-up of military and police forces in South Africa;

2. Further requests the Security Council to call upon all Governments, in particular:

(a) To implement fully the arms embargo against South Africa, without any exception as to the type of weapons, and to prohibit any violations of the arms embargo by companies and individuals within their jurisdiction;

(b) To refrain from importing any military supplies manufactured by, or in collaboration with, South Africa;

(c) To terminate any existing military arrangements with the racist régime of South Africa and to refrain from entering into or planning any such arrangements;

(d) To prohibit any institutions, agencies or companies, within their national jurisdiction, from delivering to South Africa or placing at its disposal any equipment or fissionable material or technology that will enable the racist régime of South Africa to acquire nuclear-weapon capability;

3. Calls upon the Governments of France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America to adopt a positive policy to enable the Security Council to take effective action under Chapter VII of the Charter;

4. Requests and authorizes the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue to promote the full implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa and, to this end, to launch a special campaign to secure the widest public support for the arms embargo.

A/31/L.9 and Corr.1,2 and Add.1-3. Algeria, Benin, Botswana, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Qatar, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yemen, Zambia: draft resolution.

Resolution 31/6 E, as proposed by 45 powers, A/31/L.9 and Add.1-3, adopted by Assembly on 9 November 1976, meeting 58, by recorded vote of 91 to 20, with 28 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

Relations between Israel and South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its repeated condemnations of the strengthening of relations and collaboration between the racist régime of South Africa and Israel in the political, military, economic and other fields, as contained in General Assembly resolutions 3151 G (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3324 E (XXIX) of 16 December 1974 and 3411 G (XXX) of 10 December 1975,

Deeply concerned about the fact that Israel has sent paramilitary personnel to train South African troops and about the sale of warships and other war materiel by Israel to South Africa in flagrant violation of the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid concerning relations between Israel and South Africa,

1. Strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration by Israel with the racist régime of South Africa as a flagrant violation of the resolutions of the United Nations and as an encouragement to the racist régime of South Africa to persist in its criminal policies;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to disseminate widely the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, in various languages, in order to mobilize public opinion against the collaboration by Israel with the racist régime of South Africa.

Apartheid in sports

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2775 D (XXVI) of 29 November 1971 and 3411 E (XXX) of 28 November 1975 on apartheid in sports,

Reaffirming its unqualified support of the Olympic principle that there should be no discrimination on the grounds of race, religion or political affiliation,

Recognizing the importance in the international campaign against apartheid of the boycott of South African sports teams selected on the basis of apartheid,

Regretting that some national and international sports bodies and individual sportsmen have continued contacts with racist South African sports bodies in violation of the Olympic principle and resolutions of the United Nations,

Convinced that effective measures must be taken, as a matter of priority during the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to abolish apartheid in all fields,

Taking note of the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the International Seminar on the Eradication of Apartheid and in Support of the Struggle for Liberation in South Africa, held at Havana from 24 to 28 May 1976,

Noting also the resolution of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, endorsing the proposal for an international convention against apartheid in sports and requesting the United Nations to give urgent consideration to the formulation of such a convention,

Noting further that in its report the Special Committee against Apartheid, inter alia, recommended that the General Assembly should consider the proposal for an international convention against apartheid in sports and that meanwhile the Assembly should adopt a declaration on apartheid in sports,

1. Welcomes the proposal for an international convention against apartheid in sports to promote adherence to the Olympic principle of non-discrimination and to discourage and deny support to sporting events organized in violation of that principle;

2. Decides to establish an Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, composed of the existing members of the Special Committee against Apartheid and seven other Member States to be appointed by the President of the General Assembly on the basis of equitable geographical distribution;

3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to prepare a draft declaration on apartheid in sports, as an interim measure, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

4. Further requests the Ad Hoc Committee to undertake preparatory steps towards the drafting of an international convention against apartheid in sports and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

5. Urges all States to implement the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid concerning apartheid in sports, namely:

(a) To convey the United Nations resolutions on apartheid in sports to all national sports bodies with a request that necessary action be taken to implement those resolutions;

(b) To refuse any official sponsorship, assistance or encouragement to sports contacts with South Africa, including official receptions to teams and payments of grants to sports bodies or teams or sportsmen involved in sporting competitions with South African teams or sportsmen;

(c) To refuse visas to South African sports bodies or teams or sportsmen, except for non-racial sports bodies endorsed by the Special Committee and the liberation movements;

(d) To deny facilities to sports bodies or teams or sportsmen for visits to South Africa;

(e) To encourage national sports bodies concerned to support the exclusion of South Africa from international sports bodies and tournaments;

6. Calls upon Member States and international sporting organizations to support actively projects undertaken in collaboration with the liberation movements towards the formation of non-racial teams truly representative of South Africa.

A/31/474 and Add.1. Appointment of members of Ad Hoc Committee on Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports. Notes by Secretary-General.

A/31/L.11 and Add.1-3. #### Programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid

The General Assembly, Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and its special reports,

Commending the Special Committee for its activities in the discharge of the mandate given to it by the General Assembly, Noting with appreciation the work of the Centre against Apartheid in assisting the Special Committee,

Considering the need for further expansion of the activities of the Special Committee—in close co-operation with the specialized agencies, the movement of non-aligned countries, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations—at this crucial stage of the struggle for the total eradication of apartheid and the exercise by the South African people of their right to self-determination,

1. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue and to intensify its activities to promote concerted international action against apartheid in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

2. Requests all organs of the United Nations concerned with problems of decolonization to co-operate and consult with the Special Committee with a view to ensuring the co-ordination of efforts;

3. Authorizes the Special Committee:

(a) To send missions composed of members of the Special Committee and representatives of the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania to Governments of Member States, to the headquarters of specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as trade union confederations, as required, for consultations to promote the international campaign against apartheid;

(b) To take appropriate steps to promote closer co-operation with the movement of non-aligned countries, the Organization of African Unity and other appropriate intergovernmental organizations;

(c) To participate in conferences concerned with apartheid;

(a) To invite representatives of the South African national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and those of other organizations, as well as experts on apartheid, for consultations on various aspects of apartheid and on action against apartheid;

4. Authorizes the Special Committee to organize a World Conference for Action against Apartheid in 1977, in accordance with the recommendations contained in paragraphs 296 to 302 of its report;

5. Further authorizes the Special Committee to convene an International Conference of Trade Unions against Apartheid, in accordance with paragraphs 269 to 274 of its report;

6. Approves the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee concerning information activity against apartheid by the United Nations and the specialized agencies and requests it to take appropriate action towards the implementation of those recommendations;

7. Authorizes the Special Committee to establish an award to be presented to persons who have, in co-operation with the United Nations and in solidarity with the South African liberation movements, contributed significantly to the international campaign against apartheid;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to enable the Centre against Apartheid to continue to provide effective assistance to the Special Committee;

9. Invites all specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its task.

A/31/L.12 and Add.1-3. Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia: draft resolution.

Resolution 31/6H, as proposed by 63 powers, A/31/L.12 and Add.1-3, adopted by Assembly on 9 November 1976, meeting 58, by recorded vote of 110 to 6, with 24 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Canada, Central African Republic, Denmark, Finland, Grenada, Guatemala, Iceland, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lesotho, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Uruguay.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and its special reports,

Recalling its resolutions on the policies of apartheid of the racist régime of South Africa,

Noting with grave concern that some Governments, in pursuing strategic and economic and other interests, continue to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa and thereby encourage it to persist in its criminal policies,

1. Proclaims that any collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa constitutes a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and a contemptuous defiance of the United Nations and the international community;

2. Strongly condemns the action of those States and foreign economic and other interests which continue to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa;

3. Calls upon Member States still engaged in economic collaboration and trade with the racist régime of South Africa to implement the relevant General Assembly resolutions and to cease forthwith any such collaboration with that régime;

4. Calls upon all Governments to take effective action to prohibit all loans to or investments in South Africa by banks and corporations within their national jurisdiction;

5. Condemns the intensified activities of transnational corporations, which continue to exploit the racially oppressed people of South Africa and plunder its natural resources and thereby are accomplices to the crimes of the apartheid régime;

6. Requests all agencies within the United Nations system to refrain from any dealings with corporations which provide any loans to, or make any investment in, South Africa;

7. Requests the Economic and Social Council to invite the Commission on Transnational Corporations to study and publicize the involvement of transnational corporations in the apartheid economy of South Africa;

8. Requests the International Monetary Fund to refrain forthwith from extending credits to South Africa;

9. Requests the Economic and Social Council to invite the Commission on Human Rights to give special attention to the scope and consequences of the activities of the transnational corporations in South Africa;

10. Commends all those Governments which have ceased all economic collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in compliance with the relevant United Nations resolutions;

11. Commends all anti-apartheid movements, churches, trade unions and other organizations which are engaged in shareholder actions or other activities to discourage collaboration by transnational corporations with South Africa.

A/31/L.13 and Corr.1 and Add.1-3. Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Iraq, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia: draft resolution.

Resolution 31/61, as proposed by 48 powers, A/31/L.13 and Add.1-3, adopted by Assembly on 9 November 1976, meeting 58, by recorded vote of 108 to 11, with 22 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Surinam, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

Situation in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and its special reports,

Taking note of the national uprising of the oppressed people of South Africa against the apartheid régime,

Outraged by the continuing massacres and other atrocities by the racist régime of South Africa against schoolchildren and other peaceful demonstrators against apartheid and racial discrimination,

Gravely concerned about the military and other activities of the racist régime of South Africa and, in particular, about the nuclear collaboration aimed at the establishment of nuclear installations and the transfer of nuclear technology to South Africa,

Conscious that mercenaries and their organizations are active in the territory of South Africa and participate in the acts of aggression of that country against the African peoples and States members of the Organization of African Unity,

Convinced that the situation in South Africa constitutes a grave threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming that the policy and practice of apartheid constitutes a crime against humanity,

Welcoming the coming into force of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,

Mindful of the special responsibility of the United Nations and the international community towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements and towards those imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their struggle against apartheid,

1. Proclaims that the racist régime of South Africa is illegitimate and has no right to represent the people of South Africa;

2. Reaffirms that the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity—the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania—are the authentic representatives of the overwhelming majority of the South African people;

3. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its criminal policies and practices of apartheid, its massacres of black people, including schoolchildren, and its ruthless repression of all those struggling against apartheid;

4. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements, by all possible means, for the seizure of power by the people and the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination;

5. Recognizes, in particular, that the consistent defiance by the racist régime of South Africa of United Nations resolutions on apartheid and the continued brutal repression, including indiscriminate mass killings, by that régime leave no alternative to the oppressed people of South Africa but to resort to armed struggle to achieve their legitimate rights;

6. Declares that the situation in South Africa, resulting from the policies and actions of the racist régime, constitutes a grave threat to the peace, requiring action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

7. Demands the cessation of any form of military and nuclear co-operation with the racist régime of South Africa;

8. Condemns the racist régime of South Africa for encouragement of the activities of the mercenaries and their organizations in its territory and for their use against the African peoples and States members of the Organization of African Unity;

9. Urgently appeals to all States to enact laws declaring the recruitment, financing, training, transit and assembly of mercenaries for the racist régime of South Africa in their territories a punishable crime and prohibiting their citizens from enlisting as mercenaries;

10. Calls upon the Governments of France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, in particular:

(a) To desist from misusing their veto power in the Security Council to protect the racist régime of South Africa;

(b) To enable the Security Council to determine the existence in South Africa of a threat to the peace and to exercise its responsibilities under the Charter;

(c) Not to obstruct but to facilitate the adoption of a mandatory arms embargo and other indispensable measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter, to deal with the grave situation in South Africa;

11. Appeals to all States and organizations to provide all assistance required by the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movements during their legitimate struggle, in the light of the recommendations of the Special Committee against Apartheid;

12. Further calls upon Member States and the specialized agencies, through emergency joint projects and financial assistance, to help Lesotho and other countries bordering South Africa to ensure the provision of educational facilities to the rapidly growing number of refugee students from South Africa;

13. Appeals to all Governments which have not yet done so to become parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

14. Authorizes the Special Committee against Apartheid to take all appropriate steps to promote such assistance, including the establishment of a joint United Nations/Organization of African Unity fund financed by voluntary contributions, as recommended in paragraph 264 of its report, and to assist the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania to maintain offices at United Nations Headquarters in New York;

15. Commends the anti-apartheid and solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations which have taken action against apartheid and in support of the South African national liberation movements;

16. Condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African States which have assisted the South African national liberation movements, and invites all Governments to provide those States, at their request, with all necessary assistance for defence against aggression;

17. Proclaims 16 June the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling People of South Africa and calls upon Member States to commemorate this day in the most fitting way.

A/31/L.14 and Corr.1,2 and Add.1,2. Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia: draft resolution.

Resolution 31/6 J, as proposed by 59 powers, A/31/L.14 and Add.1,2, adopted by Assembly on 9 November 1976, meeting 58, by recorded vote of 105 to 8, with 27 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Surinam, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

Against: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Botswana, Brazil,

Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, Denmark, El Salvador, Finland, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, Iran, Ireland, Japan, Liberia, Malawi, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Portugal, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Uruguay.

Programme of Action against Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and its special reports,

Welcoming the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the International Seminar on the Eradication of Apartheid and in Support of the Struggle for Liberation in South Africa, held at Havana from 24 to 28 May 1976,

Taking note of the resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-seventh ordinary session, held at Port Louis from 24 June to 3 July 1976,

Taking note also of the declarations and resolutions of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976,

Considering the need for a programme of action to be implemented by Governments, intergovernmental organizations, trade unions, churches, anti-apartheid and solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations in order to assist the people of South Africa in their struggle for the total eradication of apartheid and the exercise of the right of self-determination by all the people of South Africa irrespective of race, colour and creed,

1. Commends to all Governments, organizations and individuals the Programme of Action against Apartheid annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests all United Nations organs and specialized agencies concerned to participate in the implementation of the Programme of Action, in close co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid;

3. Requests the Special Committee, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to promote the implementation of the Programme of Action and report, from time to time, on the progress achieved;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure maximum publicity to the Programme of Action and provide all necessary assistance to the Special Committee in promoting its implementation.

INTRODUCTION

1. The abolition of racist domination and exploitation in South Africa and assistance to the South African people to establish a non-racial society have become one of the primary concerns of the United Nations and the international community.

2. Apartheid, like slavery, must be eradicated because it is a crime against humanity.

3. Apartheid must be eradicated because it is an affront to human dignity and a grave threat to international peace and security.

4. Apartheid must be eradicated so that the continent of Africa may be finally emancipated, after all the miseries and tragedies to which it has been subjected for centuries, and enabled to play its rightful role in international affairs.

5. Apartheid must be eradicated because that is indispensable for the elimination of racism and for laying the basis for genuine international co-operation.

6. For thirty years the United Nations has been seized with the problem of racism in South Africa. It has made patient efforts to persuade the racist minority régimes to abandon the bitter legacy of the past and to work for a peaceful solution in accordance with the principles of human equality and international co-operation.

7. But these régimes have proved to be immune to persuasion. They have met the peaceful and just demands of the oppressed people by ruthless repression and have caused immense suffering in a desperate effort to preserve and consolidate racist domination.

8. The record of the apartheid régime which seized power in 1948 has few parallels in history for its inhumanity.

9. The black people, who constitute the overwhelming majority of the population of the country, have been constantly humiliated and brutally exploited. Millions of people have been forcibly moved from their homes to barren reserves or urban ghettos in an attempt to enforce racial segregation. Millions of Africans have been imprisoned under pass laws and other racist legislation. Thousands of patriots have been sentenced to long years in prison or tortured or banished. Hundreds of people have been massacred for peaceful demonstrations against racism.

10. The African workers have been denied elementary trade-union rights; they have been imprisoned or killed for nothing more than the "offence" of participating in strikes.

11. The struggle of the South African people against this racist monster has constituted a notable contribution to the struggle of humanity for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

12. The General Assembly recalls that, in resolution 3411 C (XXX) of 28 November 1975, it proclaimed that the United Nations and the international community have a special responsibility towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements, and towards those imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their struggle against apartheid, and reiterated its determination to devote increasing attention and all necessary resources to concert international efforts for the speedy eradication of apartheid in South Africa and the liberation of the South African people.

13. The General Assembly commends the courageous struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa, under the leadership of their national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, to abolish racism. It reaffirms that their struggle for the total eradication of apartheid and the exercise of the right to self-determination by all the inhabitants of South Africa is fully legitimate. It reiterates its solidarity with all South Africans struggling against apartheid and for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

14. The General Assembly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its repeated and flagrant defiance of United Nations resolutions. It denounces the manoeuvres of that régime to perpetuate and obtain acquiescence in its abhorrent apartheid policies. It denounces, in particular, the creation of bantustans as designed to deprive the African people of their inalienable rights in the country as a whole.

15. The General Assembly declares that the racist régime of South Africa is illegitimate and has no right to represent the people of South Africa. It recognizes that the national liberation movements are the authentic representatives of the great majority of the people of South Africa.

16. It is convinced that the collaboration by some Governments and vested interests with the racist régime of South Africa and their total disregard of United Nations resolutions and the legitimate demands of the South African people have impeded efforts for the eradication of apartheid and encouraged the racist régime to persist in its inhuman policies.

17. Those Governments and economic interests have enabled the racist régime of South Africa to build up a military machine for the suppression of the people and for aggression against neighbouring States. They have made profits, amounting to billions of dollars, through the exploitation of African labour in South Africa. They bear a grave responsibility for the sufferings of the South African people and for the threat to international peace resulting from the situation.

18. The General Assembly considers apartheid a matter of universal concern. Governments, organizations and peoples all over the world must increase their support to the righteous struggle of the South African people for justice and for their inalienable right to self-determination, under the leadership of their national liberation movements.

19. The General Assembly mandates the Special Committee against Apartheid to launch—in co-operation with Governments, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, trade unions, churches and other non-governmental organizations—an international campaign to assist the oppressed people of South Africa at this crucial and decisive stage of their struggle for liberation:

No arms to South Africa!
No profit from apartheid!
No compromise with racism!

I. ACTION BY GOVERNMENTS

20. The General Assembly calls upon all Governments, irrespective of any other differences, to unite in action against the crime of apartheid and to take vigorous and concerted measures in implementation of United Nations resolutions to isolate the apartheid régime and assist the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements until they attain freedom.

21. The General Assembly calls upon all Governments, in particular:

A. Diplomatic, consular and other official relations

(a) To terminate diplomatic, consular and other official relations with the racist régime of South Africa, or to refrain from establishing such relations;

B. Military and nuclear collaboration

(b) To implement fully the arms embargo against South Africa without any exceptions or reservations and, in this connexion:

- (i) To refrain from the sale and shipment of arms, ammunition of all types and any vehicles or equipment for use of the armed forces and paramilitary organizations in South Africa;
- (ii) To refrain from the sale and shipment of equipment and materials for the manufacture and maintenance of arms, ammunition and military vehicles and equipment in South Africa;
- (iii) To refrain from the supply of spare parts for vehicles and equipment used by the armed forces and paramilitary organizations in South Africa;
- (iv) To revoke any licences or patents granted to the racist régime of South Africa or to South African companies for the manufacture of arms, ammunition and military vehicles and equipment and to refrain from granting such licences and patents;
- (v) To prohibit investment in, or technical assistance for, the manufacture of arms and ammunition, aircraft, naval craft and other military vehicles and equipment in South Africa;
- (vi) To terminate any existing military arrangements with the racist régime of South Africa and to refrain from entering into any such arrangements;
- (vii) To refrain from providing training for members of the South African armed forces;

- (viii) To refrain from any joint military exercises with South Africa;
- (ix) To prohibit warships or military aircraft from visiting South African ports and airports, and South African warships or military aircraft from visiting their territories;
- (x) To prohibit visits of military personnel to South Africa and visits by South African military personnel to their countries;
- (xi) To refrain from exchanges of military, naval or air attaches with South Africa;
- (xii) To refrain from purchasing any military supplies manufactured by, or in collaboration with, South Africa;
- (xiii) To refrain from any communications or contacts with the South African military establishment or installations;
- (xiv) To refrain from any other form of military co-operation with South Africa;
- (xv) To prohibit any violations of the arms embargo by corporations, institutions or individuals within their jurisdiction;
- (xvi) To refrain from any collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field;
- (xvii) To prohibit any institutions, agencies or companies, within their national jurisdiction, from delivering to South Africa or placing at its disposal any equipment or fissionable material or technology that will enable the racist régime of South Africa to acquire nuclear-weapon technology;

C. Economic collaboration

- (c) To terminate all economic collaboration with South Africa and in particular:
  - (i) To refrain from supplying petroleum, petroleum products or other strategic materials to South Africa;
  - (ii) To refrain from extending loans, investments and technical assistance to the racist régime of South Africa and companies registered in South Africa;
  - (in) To prohibit loans by banks or other financial institutions in their countries to the racist régime of South Africa or South African companies;
  - (iv) To prohibit economic and financial interests under their national jurisdiction from co-operating with the racist régime of South Africa and companies registered in South Africa;
  - (v) To deny tariff and other preferences to South African exports and any inducements or guarantees for investment in South Africa;
  - (vi) To take appropriate action in international agencies and organizations—such as the European Economic Community, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development—for denial by them of all assistance and commercial or other facilities to the South African régime;
  - (vii) To take appropriate action, separately or collectively, against transnational companies collaborating with South Africa;

D. Airlines and shipping lines

- (d) To refuse landing and passage facilities to all aircraft belonging to the racist régime of South Africa and companies registered under the laws of South Africa;
- (e) To close ports to all vessels flying the South African flag;
- (f) To prohibit airlines and shipping lines registered in their countries from providing services to and from South Africa;

E. Emigration

- (g) To prohibit or discourage the flow of immigrants, particularly skilled and technical personnel, to South Africa;

F. Cultural, educational, sporting and other collaboration with South Africa

- (h) To suspend cultural, educational, sporting and other exchanges with the racist régime and with organizations or institutions in South Africa which practise apartheid;
- (i) To implement United Nations resolutions on apartheid in sports and, in particular:
  - (i) To refrain from all contact with sports bodies established on the basis of apartheid or with racially selected sports teams from South Africa;
  - (ii) To withhold any support from sporting events which are organized in violation of the Olympic principle with the participation of racially selected teams from South Africa;
  - (iii) To encourage sports organizations to refrain from any exchanges with racially selected teams from South Africa;

G. Assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa

- (j) To provide financial and material assistance, directly or through the Organization of African Unity, to the South African liberation movements recognized by that organization;
- (k) To encourage public collections in the country for assistance to the South African liberation movements;
- (l) To contribute generously and regularly to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, the United Nations Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid and other intergovernmental and non-governmental funds for assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements;
- (m) To encourage judicial organizations, other appropriate bodies and the public in general to provide assistance to those persecuted by the racist régime of South Africa for their struggle against apartheid;
- (n) To grant asylum and extend travel facilities and educational and employment opportunities to refugees from South Africa;
- (o) To encourage the activities of anti-apartheid and solidarity movements and other organizations engaged in providing political and material assistance to the victims of apartheid and to the South African liberation movements;

H. Dissemination of information on apartheid

- (p) To ensure, in co-operation with the United Nations and the South African liberation movements, the widest possible dissemination of information on apartheid and on the struggle for liberation in South Africa;
- (q) To encourage the establishment of national organizations for the purpose of enlightening public opinion on the evils of apartheid;
- (r) To encourage the information media to contribute effectively to the international campaign against apartheid;
- (s) To provide broadcasting facilities to South African liberation movements;
- (t) To take all necessary measures against the operations of propaganda organizations of the racist régime of South Africa and of private organizations which advocate apartheid;

I. Other measures

- (u) To accede to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;
- (v) To observe annually the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, on 21 March, and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners, on 11 October;
- (w) To promote action by intergovernmental organizations in support of the struggle for liberation in South Africa;
- (x) To provide, at their request, all necessary assistance to independent African States subjected to acts of aggression by the racist régime of South Africa in order to enable them to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity.

II. ACTION BY THE SPECIALIZED AGENCIES AND OTHER INTERGOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

22. The General Assembly calls upon all specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to contribute to the maximum to the international campaign against apartheid. It suggests in particular that they:

- (a) Exclude the racist régime of South Africa from any participation in their organizations;
- (b) Deny any assistance to the racist régime of South Africa;
- (d) Invite representatives of the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to attend, inter alia, their conferences and seminars and make financial provision for their participation;
- (d) Provide appropriate assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and to their liberation movements;
- (e) Disseminate information against apartheid in co-operation with the United Nations;
- (f) Provide employment within their secretariats and assistance for education and training to the oppressed people of South Africa.

III. ACTION BY TRADE UNIONS, CHURCHES, ANTI-APARTHEID AND SOLIDARITY MOVEMENTS AND OTHER NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

23. The General Assembly commends the activities of all public organizations in denouncing the racist régime of South Africa, in supporting United Nations resolutions against apartheid, in assisting the oppressed people of South Africa and in mobilizing public opinion against apartheid.

24. The General Assembly encourages them to concert and redouble their efforts, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid and with the Centre against Apartheid. and, in particular:

- (a) To exert their influence to persuade Governments which continue to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa to desist from such collaboration;
  - (b) To press all Governments to implement United Nations resolutions against apartheid;
  - (d) To expand campaigns for the boycott of South African goods;
  - (cf) To intensify campaigns against banks and other transnational companies which collaborate with South Africa;
  - (e) To establish solidarity funds and provide assistance to the South African liberation movements;
  - (f) To assist political refugees from South Africa;
  - (g) To publicize the struggle for liberation in South Africa;
  - (h) To observe annually the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, on 21 March, and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners, on 11 October.
25. The General Assembly calls upon trade unions, in particular:
- (a) To organize rallies and information campaigns among the workers to make them fully aware of the problem of apartheid and to secure their collaboration in industrial action against South Africa;
  - (b) To support internationally co-ordinated boycotts of South African goods;
  - (c) To organize international trade-union action to ban the handling of goods going to and from South Africa;
  - (d) To investigate the operations of companies with subsidiaries inside South Africa;
  - (e) To undertake, in the countries concerned, industrial action against transnational companies which refuse to recognize African trade unions in South Africa and fail to comply with internationally recognized labour standards;
  - (f) To give moral and financial support to the African and non-racial trade unions in South Africa, including legal assistance to imprisoned and restricted trade unionists;

(g) To intensify the campaigns against the emigration of workers to South Africa;

(h) To request workers not to handle any arms orders to South Africa and to give full support to those workers who, on grounds of conscience, refuse to work on such orders.

26. The General Assembly appeals to churches and religious organizations, in particular:

- (a) To exert all their influence and efforts to oppose any form of collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa;
- (b) To expand campaigns against banks and transnational corporations collaborating with South Africa;
- (c) To provide all forms of assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and to their liberation movements;
- (d) To disseminate information on the inhumanity of apartheid and on the righteous struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa.

27. The General Assembly appeals to sports bodies and sportsmen:

- (a) To uphold the Olympic principle that no discrimination be allowed on the grounds of race, religion or political affiliation;
- (b) To refrain from all contact with sports bodies established on the basis of apartheid or with racially selected sports teams from South Africa;
- (c) To assist sportsmen and sports administrators persecuted in South Africa for their opposition to apartheid in sports;
- (d) To take appropriate action to expel racist South African sports bodies from all international sports federations and competitions.

IV. ACTION BY THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID

28. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee against Apartheid, with the assistance of the Centre against Apartheid, to take all appropriate measures to encourage concerted action against apartheid by Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. It invites the Special Committee, in particular, to promote co-ordinated international campaigns:

- (a) For assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements;
- (b) For an effective arms embargo against South Africa;
- (d) Against all forms of nuclear co-operation with South Africa;
- (d) Against all collaboration by Governments, banks and transnational corporations with South Africa;
- (e) Against propaganda by the racist régime of South Africa and its collaborators;
- (f) For the unconditional release of South African political prisoners;
- (g) For the boycott of racially selected South African sports teams.

29. The General Assembly invites all specialized agencies, the Organization of African Unity and other intergovernmental organizations as well as trade unions, churches and other non-governmental organizations to co-operate with the Special Committee in the implementation of this Programme of Action.

Investments in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and its special reports,

Noting the increase of foreign investments in South Africa which abets and encourages the apartheid policies of that country,

Welcoming as a positive step the decision of some Governments to achieve the cessation of further investments in South Africa,

Considering that a cessation of new foreign investments in South Africa would constitute one important step in the struggle against apartheid,

Urges the Security Council, when studying the problem of the continued struggle against the apartheid policies of South Africa, to consider steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments in South Africa.

Emergency assistance for South African refugee students

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/61 of 9 November 1976 relating to the item entitled "Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa,"

Noting, in particular, that paragraph 12 of the above-mentioned resolution calls upon Member States and the specialized agencies, through emergency joint projects and financial assistance, to help Lesotho and other countries bordering South Africa to ensure the provision of educational facilities to the rapidly growing number of refugee students from South Africa,

Concerned about the continuing influx of refugees, including in particular large numbers of South African students fleeing to the bordering States of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland, thus imposing a heavy burden on the limited resources and employment opportunities of these countries,

1. Reaffirms that humanitarian assistance by the international community to all those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia is appropriate and essential;

2. Recognizes the urgent need to organize an effective programme of international assistance to help in dealing with the recent South African student refugee problem in countries bordering South Africa;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to consult with the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland and the liberation movements concerned with a view to taking immediate steps to organize and provide appropriate emergency financial and other forms of assistance for the care, subsistence and education of these refugee students;

4. Urges all States to respond generously to any appeals which the Secretary-General might make for assistance for these refugees;

5. Calls upon the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and other United Nations bodies and organs, as may be appropriate, to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the implementation of the programme of assistance;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation under review and to report to the General Assembly as and when necessary.

The United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

Reports of the Secretary-General and of the Committee of Trustees

On 22 October 1976, the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa reported to the General Assembly that, since October 1975, the Fund had received contributions totalling $701,270. Pledges from 14 Governments totalling $41,187 were outstanding.

In accordance with decisions of the Committee of Trustees, eight grants totalling $843,550 had been made from the Trust Fund during the period under review. Total contributions to the Trust Fund since its inception in 1965, including interest, amounted to $4,388,519 and the total of grants made from the Fund was $4,311,950.

The Fund, made up of voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals, was used to make grants to voluntary organizations, Governments of host countries of refugees from South Africa, and other appropriate bodies towards: (a) legal assistance to persons persecuted under the repressive and discriminatory legislation of South Africa; (b) relief to and education of such persons and their dependants; (c) relief for refugees from South Africa; and (d) assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in Namibia and Southern Rhodesia and to their families.

In its report, the Committee of Trustees said it had continued to encourage direct contributions to voluntary organizations engaged in providing assistance to victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia; in that connexion it said it had been informed of direct contributions to the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa by Denmark, Finland, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden, and of a new contribution of $1,000 made by the Church of Greece towards the World Council of Churches programme of assistance to victims of apartheid.

The Committee of Trustees said it was gravely concerned at the decline of contributions to the Trust Fund during the previous year, when the needs for assistance had greatly increased as a result of numerous arrests and trials under the repressive and discriminatory legislation enforced by the Government of South Africa and by the illegal administrations in Namibia and Southern Rhodesia. On 14 June 1976, the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman had issued an appeal to Governments and organizations to consider making generous contributions to the Fund and an appeal to voluntary agencies for humanitarian assistance.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At the General Assembly's thirty-first (1976) session, the reports of the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees were discussed during the Assembly's consideration of the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa.

On 9 November 1976, the Assembly adopted, without a vote, resolution 31/6 B, sponsored by 47 Members.

By the preamble to the text, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed that humanitarian assistance by the international community to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia was appropriate and essential, and expressed deep concern over the massive repression of opponents of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa, including the killing of numerous peaceful demonstrators.

The Assembly then: expressed its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that had contributed to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa; endorsed the urgent appeal of the Committee of Trustees for more generous contributions; and commended all voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination.

Add.1-5, adopted without vote by Assembly on 9 November
1976, meeting 58.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Trust Fund
for South Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the Trust Fund, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa,

Reaffirming that humanitarian assistance by the international community to all those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia is appropriate and essential,

Deeply concerned over the massive repression of opponents of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa, including the killing of numerous peaceful demonstrators,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

2. Endorses the urgent appeal of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa for more generous contributions to the Trust Fund;

3. Commends all voluntary agencies which are engaged in rendering humanitarian assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination.

The situation in Southern Rhodesia

During 1976, aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) continued to receive consideration by various United Nations bodies.

On 6 April, the Security Council unanimously adopted a resolution by which the scope of mandatory sanctions against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia was expanded to include insurance, trade names and franchises. The Council acted on a 1975 recommendation of its Committee on sanctions established in pursuance of a Council resolution of 29 May 1968.<sup>5</sup> Later in the year, the Committee submitted its ninth report, covering its work from 16 December 1975 to 15 December 1976, and a second special report.

In June, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>6</sup> adopted resolutions on general aspects of the situation in the territory and on the question of sanctions. It also adopted a resolution commending for the Assembly's consideration the observations of an Ad Hoc Group of six of its members which earlier in the year had visited London and several States in Africa to provide the Special Committee with first-hand information on developments in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia.

Later in 1976, at its thirty-first session, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia, by which among other things it reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in the territory and expressed the hope that the conference on Zimbabwe then under way at Geneva, Switzerland, would succeed in establishing conditions for early independence on that basis. The Assembly also condemned Governments which continued to collaborate with the illegal régime, as well as all violations of the mandatory sanctions, and reiterated its conviction that the scope of the sanctions had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>7</sup> Governments were again urged to take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance with the sanctions.

Also at its 1976 session, the Assembly, endorsing a recommendation of the Special Committee and its Ad Hoc Group, adopted a decision that a conference would be held during 1977 at Maputo, Mozambique, to mobilize world-wide support for and assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia in their struggle for self-determination and independence.

were also taken during the year by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Details of these and other related decisions on Southern Rhodesia taken by United Nations bodies in 1976 are described in the sections that follow.

Consideration by Security Council (6 April 1976)

On 6 April 1976, the Security Council held a meeting to consider a special report on the expansion of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia that had been submitted to it on 15 December 1975<sup>8</sup> by its Committee on sanctions (established in pursuance of Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968).<sup>9</sup> In that report, the Committee had, among other things, recommended to the Security Council that insurance, trade names and franchises be included within the scope of the mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia.

The Council unanimously adopted resolution 388(1976), the text of which had been sponsored and submitted by all 15 members following consultations.

By the preamble to this text, the Security Council among other things reaffirmed its previous decisions on the question and also reaffirmed that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security. Stating that it was acting under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter,<sup>10</sup> the Council then, by the operative paragraphs of the text:

(1) decided that all Member States were to take appropriate measures to ensure that their nationals and persons in their territories did not insure (a) any commodities or products exported from Southern Rhodesia after the date of this resolution (6 April 1976) in contravention of Council resolution 253(1968) which they knew or believed to have been so exported, (b) any commodities or products which they knew or believed to be intended for importation into Southern Rhodesia after 6 April in contravention of resolution 253(1968), or (c) commodities, products or other property in Southern Rhodesia of any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking in Southern Rhodesia in contravention of resolution 253(1968);

(2) decided that all Member States were to take appropriate measures to prevent their nationals and persons in their territories from granting to any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking in Southern Rhodesia the right to use any trade name or from entering into any franchising agreement involving the use of any trade name, trade mark or registered design in connexion with the sale or distribution of any products, commodities or services of such an undertaking; and

(3) urged States not Members of the United Nations to act in accordance with the above provisions.

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania observed that the adoption of the resolution was a logical follow-up of the special report of the Committee on sanctions. Though hampered by the different political attitudes existing in the Council, the Committee on sanctions had nevertheless managed to make a unanimous recommendation on expanding sanctions to cover commodity insurance franchises and trade names, which was an important step in the right direction. He and others—including China, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Romania, Sweden and the USSR—felt, however, that the sanctions could not be effective until they were comprehensive, effectively supervised and fully implemented by the whole international community. Resolution 253(1968) and other relevant resolutions, it was pointed out, were not yet comprehensive, and the provisions of Article 41 of the Charter had not been exhausted. The largest loop-hole for sanction-breaking, according to the Tanzanian representative, existed in South Africa; he and the representatives of China and Romania held that sanctions would have to be extended to include South Africa so long as the régime there continued to support the rebel régime in Zimbabwe and provide it with facilities for evading sanctions.

The United Kingdom reaffirmed its view that sanctions were, despite their short-comings, an important weapon in the international community's armoury against the illegal Salisbury régime. If existing sanctions had been more efficiently and universally applied, they would have had considerably greater direct impact on the economy of Southern Rhodesia—and thus on Ian Smith and his colleagues—than any possible extensions.

Several members, including France, Italy, Japan, Pakistan, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania, expressed the view that the unanimity shown in the Council would serve as a warning to Ian Smith's illegal minority régime and make the Salisbury authorities understand that it was time to choose the path of justice and reason.

Several speakers, including China, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the USSR, called on the United States to halt the importation of chrome from Southern Rhodesia, which was in contravention of the Council's resolution of 29 May 1968.

The United States representative said his Government had scrupulously enforced sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, except with regard to the importation of minerals covered by the so-called Byrd Amendment. He stated that the administration of President Gerald R. Ford recognized the need to repeal that Amendment, not only for the intended effect in Southern Rhodesia but also in the interest of upholding the country's international obligations.

The representative of Benin welcomed the presence of the United States among the sponsors of the resolution as a commitment to see that the sanctions would no longer be violated.

Decisions of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

On 1 March 1976, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa. The Commission among other things denounced such assistance given by certain States to the régimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, directly or through national and multinational corporations. It considered that the sales of arms, the nuclear co-operation agreements and the economic activities of such corporations in South Africa, Namibia or Southern Rhodesia constituted blatant acts of complicity in the policies of apartheid and racial discrimination. It called upon States among other things to observe scrupulously the sanctions decreed against Southern Rhodesia and to prohibit the recruitment of mercenaries in their territories. (For details, see pp. 578-79.)

On 3 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (2015(LXI)) on implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by which, among other things, it stressed the critical need of the peoples who were still living under oppressive colonial and alien domination in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and other territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and international institutions within the United Nations system, and asked those bodies to render increased moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples in Africa struggling for liberation from colonial rule. In particular, the Council recommended that the organizations concerned initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with those peoples, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), and work out and implement concrete programmes for such assistance, with the active collaboration of the national liberation movements concerned.

Also by the resolution, the Council asked the agencies and other bodies to continue to withhold any assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held in New York on 1 April and between 12 May and 17 June 1976.

At its meeting on 1 April, the Special Committee decided to send a high-level Ad Hoc Group of six of its members to several States in Africa to provide the special Committee with first-hand information on developments in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia.

Between 13 April and 6 May, the Ad Hoc Group visited London (United Kingdom), Dar es Salaam and Zanzibar (United Republic of Tanzania), Lusaka and Livingstone (Zambia), Gaborone (Botswana), Maputo (Mozambique) and Addis Ababa (Ethiopia). It held consultations with officials and leaders of the Governments concerned, with officials of OAU and with representatives of the national liberation movement—the African National Council of Zimbabwe (ANC (Zimbabwe)). In its report, the Group recommended that the Secretary-General be requested, in consultation with OAU, to convene an international conference in the year 1977 in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, in order to mobilize world public opinion in support of their struggle towards self-determination, freedom and independence. The Group also, among other things, urged the international community to render effective assistance to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia in their struggle, and stressed the need for intensified dissemination of information about their liberation struggle.

The Special Committee considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held between 8 and 17 June, with the participation of the representative of the United Kingdom—the administering power—as well as representatives of ANC (Zimbabwe): the Reverend Ndabaningi Sithole and Luke Munyawara. On 16 June, the Special Committee unanimously adopted two resolutions, one relating to the question of Southern Rhodesia in general, the other on sanctions. On 17 June, it adopted, also unanimously, a resolution on the report of the Ad Hoc Group.

The United Kingdom representative gave the Special Committee an account of recent developments in efforts by his Government to help promote a settlement providing for an early and orderly transfer of power in Southern Rhodesia. The constitutional talks which had been continuing between Ian Smith and Joshua Nkomo of the African National Council had broken off on 17 March. The position of the United Kingdom—as outlined on 22 March by the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary—remained the same: first, acceptance of the principle of majority rule; second, elections for majority rule to take place in 18 months to two years; third, agreement that there would be no independence before majority rule. Negotiations were not to be long drawn out, he added, and there would need to be assurances that the transition to majority rule and to an independent Rhodesia would not be thwarted and would be orderly. If those preconditions were accepted, the negotiation of the actual terms of a constitution for independence could then begin.

The United Kingdom, he said, believed that those proposals remained valid. As the international isolation of Rhodesia increased and the guerrilla war became more intense, the ruling white minority would, he believed, come to recognize that a negotiated transfer of power was preferable to a prolonged struggle which they could not win. Similarly, he added, the African nationalists should recognize that it would be better to negotiate to achieve their aim of majority rule rather than to fight to the finish. The United Kingdom would take no part in imposing a military solution in Rhodesia but it was determined to remain in close contact with all concerned and to use its influence to promote early majority rule and consequent independence.

The Reverend Sithole questioned whether the United Kingdom could play an effective role in the prevailing situation or even if it should still be regarded as the administering power in Rhodesia. He went on to state that South Africa's intervention had helped the illegal régime to defeat United Nations sanctions. Currently it was supplying the régime with weapons, helicopters and military aeroplanes. There was no doubt that it was committed fully to the cause of white supremacy in Rhodesia and its continued intervention could not fail to bring about a racial war in southern Africa. In his view, the consistent refusal of the United Kingdom to intervene militarily in the Rhodesian situation had justified the armed struggle on which the people of Zimbabwe had embarked and from which they would not desist until their national objective—majority rule—was attained.

During the discussion in the Special Committee, regret was expressed by many speakers that attempts made over the past year by the Presidents of the front-line States, by ANC (Zimbabwe) and by others to reach a negotiated settlement had failed because of the intransigence of Ian Smith and his illegal régime. Trinidad and Tobago observed that a new and tragic phase had begun, characterized by increasing military activity on the part of the liberation movement and increasingly brutal and repressive measures by the illegal régime against the Zimbabwe people, involving destruction of property, human suffering and loss of life.

The representative of Norway pointed out that the changing geopolitical situation in southern Africa provided the international community with a unique opportunity to assist the people of Zimbabwe in their quest for self-determination and freedom. However, he added, it was the Zimbabweans and their liberation movement which would have to bear the brunt of the burden and it was ANC'S duty to close its ranks: continued division would weaken the liberation struggle.

Several speakers—Cuba and India among them—felt that sanctions had been ineffective and that it was time for the Security Council to broaden their scope to include all measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter.

The Chinese representative said that the broad masses of the Zimbabwe people had come to realize that genuine national liberation could be achieved only by persevering in armed struggle. Nevertheless, the Smith régime, though essentially weak and in dire straits, was still putting up a last-ditch struggle, strengthening its armed forces and intensifying its repressive measures.

The spokesman for Bulgaria said that the illegal régime had been able to survive for more than 10 years only because of the massive assistance and the covert and overt support it had been receiving from South Africa and certain imperialist States and monopolies. According to the representative of Yugoslavia and others, the illegal régime was continuing to recruit mercenaries from various Western countries and South Africa.

Cuba and others said the United Nations had an unavoidable duty to aid the people of Zimbabwe and support its liberation with the same courage and decisiveness displayed by the States bordering Southern Rhodesia. Yugoslavia was among those that said the United Nations also had the obligation to continue and strengthen its assistance to the front-line countries—Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia—which were unevenly burdened by the economic and other consequences of their decisions to impose economic sanctions against the Smith régime. Yugoslavia also expressed concern over the difficulties those countries were encountering as a result of the problem of refugees.

By one of the resolutions it adopted on 16 June, the Special Committee among other things:

(1) reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right;

(2) reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the territory had to be worked out with the full participation of ANC (Zimbabwe), the sole and authentic representative of the true aspirations of the people of Zimbabwe;

(3) strongly condemned the continued brutal and repressive measures perpetrated by the illegal racist minority régime against the people of Zimbabwe, and in particular the wanton killings of Africans carried out by that régime;

(4) called upon the United Kingdom, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population, and not under any circumstances to accord to the illegal régime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty;

(5) commended to the administering power for appropriate action the relevant sections of the report of the Special Committee's Ad Hoc Group;

(6) firmly supported the people of Zimbabwe under the leadership of ANC (Zimbabwe) in their struggle to achieve majority rule, and emphasized the importance of maintaining a united leadership within the liberation movement;

(7) demanded (a) the termination of the executions of freedom fighters, (b) the release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, the removal of all restrictions on political activity and the establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, as well as the restoration of fundamental human rights, (c) the discontinuance of all repressive measures, in particular the brutality committed in "the operational area," the arbitrary closure of African areas, the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of so-called protected villages, and (d) the cessation of the influx of immigrants into the territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom;

(8) appealed to all States to take all necessary and effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia;

(9) requested all States, non-governmental organizations concerned and the various programmes within the United Nations to extend, in consultation with OAU, to the people of Zimbabwe and their national liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable rights;

(10) invited all Governments, specialized agencies and other organizations and concerned bodies within the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization, and the Secretary-General to give widespread and continuous publicity through all the media at their disposal to information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant United Nations decisions and actions, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal régime; and

(11) decided to keep the situation under review.

By the second resolution, the Special Committee among other things:

(1) strongly condemned the policies of the Governments, particularly the Government of South Africa, which in violation of United Nations resolutions and in open contravention of their obligations under Article 25 of the United Nations Charter,<sup>11</sup> continued to collaborate with the illegal racist minority régime, and called on them to cease;

(2) condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions strictly, as being contrary to their Charter obligations;

(3) condemned the continued importation of chrome and nickel from Southern Rhodesia into the United States and called on the United States to repeal speedily all legislation permitting such importation;

(4) called upon all Governments that had not done so (a) to take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance with the sanctions and to prohibit collaboration by them with the illegal régime, (b) to take effective steps to prevent or discourage the emigration to Southern Rhodesia of individuals or groups under their jurisdiction, (c) to discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal régime, inter alia by forbidding the operation of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board and the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravened the aims and purposes of the sanctions, and (d) to invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the territory;

(5) highly commended the action taken by Mozambique in closing its borders with Southern Rhodesia and imposing total sanctions against the Ian Smith régime, and considered that that action constituted an important contribution in support of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and towards the maximum isolation of his régime;

(6) requested all States and the various programmes within the United Nations to extend to Mozambique all forms of assistance to enable it to overcome any economic difficulties in connexion with its application of the economic sanctions, and requested the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to Mozambique and Zambia; and

(7) endorsed the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Group that the scope of sanctions against the illegal régime had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter, and reiterated its request that the Security Council consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency.

By the resolution concerning the report of the Ad Hoc Group, the Special Committee among other things commended the Group's observations to the General Assembly for consideration and expressed its gratitude to the Governments and peoples of Botswana, Ethiopia, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia and to the officials of OAU for their collaboration with the Ad Hoc Group. The Special Committee also noted the continuing and intensified efforts of the Heads of State of the front-line countries towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples with respect to Southern Rhodesia and Namibia.

It requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in co-operation with the Chairman of the Special Committee and in consultation with OAU, for approval by the General Assembly at its 1976 session, a proposal to convene in 1977 an international conference in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, as suggested by the Ad Hoc Group, for the purpose of mobilizing world public opinion in support of those peoples.

The Special Committee's Chairman was to continue to maintain a close working relationship with the Governments of the front-line States and with officials of other bodies concerned. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the report of the Ad Hoc Group to the Security Council.

The representative of Norway recalled the position of his Government with regard to references, direct or indirect, to armed struggle in United Nations resolutions. The Australian representative said his Government was not able to accept any interpretation in the first-mentioned resolution which might be regarded as lending unqualified approval to resort to armed struggle. The representative of Fiji also said that his Government was not able to support the use of arms by liberation movements in their struggle for independence.

General aspects

At its thirty-first session, in 1976, the General Assembly referred the question of Southern Rhodesia to its Fourth Committee, which considered the item at meetings held between 6 and 14 December.

The Rapporteur of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples introduced the chapters of the Special Committee's report on Southern Rhodesia and on the meetings in Africa of the Ad Hoc Group established by the Special Committee on 1 April 1976. The Rapporteur drew the attention of the Fourth Committee to the resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia adopted by the Special Committee in June.

The representative of the United Kingdom observed that the Fourth Committee's debate was taking place at a time when a conference in Geneva, Switzerland, under United Kingdom chairmanship, was engaged in intensive negotiations to establish an interim Government to see Rhodesia through the difficult transitional period before full independence. After 11 years of illegal rule, there were grounds for hope that the régime of Ian Smith had finally accepted the inevitable, and prospects for a peaceful and rapid transition to majority rule and independence were good, he said.

The representative went on to describe the events leading to the convening of the Geneva conference and the developments to date in the work of the conference. The United Kingdom, he said, had always considered a resolution of the Rhodesian problem as one of its most important and direct responsibilities and believed—currently more than ever—in a negotiated solution. Violence would not necessarily bring about independence any earlier and might well leave the territory in ruins, carrying the risk of a more general conflagration in southern Africa. The United Kingdom whole-heartedly supported the maintenance of sanctions until such time as the illegal régime had given way to an interim government. The pressure upon the régime, which the United Kingdom believed had contributed to the régime's change of heart in recent months, had to be kept up until power had passed to a legal government.

The representatives of Argentina, Canada, Cyprus, Pakistan, the Sudan and the United States, among others, expressed support for the efforts being made at Geneva to achieve a peaceful solution to the problem of Southern Rhodesia. For the first time in a decade, the United States representative said, the General Assembly could look forward to a realistic prospect of majority rule in an independent Zimbabwe. His Government was pleased to have played a part in the negotiations which had brought about the conference.

The spokesman for Mali said that all countries saw the Geneva conference as the last chance for a peaceful settlement of the Southern Rhodesian crisis but it would be successful only if the United Kingdom—instead of acting as umpire between the Zimbabwean nationalists and the white minority régime—ensured that power was transferred to the Zimbabweans without bargaining or compromise. Mali and others held the view that Ian Smith's previous reversals of attitude showed that he was not a man to be trusted. Even as diplomatic efforts were proceeding at Geneva, his régime was intensifying its oppression against the African population. The Byelorussian SSR and the USSR, and several other speakers, also made this point.

The USSR representative condemned the military build-up in Southern Rhodesia, the Draconian repressive laws, the oppression of the indigenous population and its forced transfer and resettlement in so-called protected villages.

He went on to say that he welcomed the fact that negotiations were being held in Geneva and hoped they would be successful. However, he said, that would be difficult if the Western powers, which had publicly undertaken to exert pressure on the Smith régime and ensure the transfer of power, continued to support the régime's repressive actions. Perhaps if the Smith régime were deprived of oil and weapons it would participate more sincerely in the discussions. However, he noted, it had been reported that British and United States multinational corporations had met Southern Rhodesia's needs for oil and petroleum derivatives for more than a decade, and South Africa had supplied the régime with military aircraft and other types of armaments. He also expressed concern over the continued escalation in the recruitment of mercenaries—from Australia, the Federal Republic of Germany, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The USSR believed, he said, that the armed struggle had to continue at the same time as negotiations were being held: the freedom fighters should not relax nor should their supporters reduce their assistance to them.

The representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine members of the European Communities, welcomed the convening of the Geneva conference. Ian Smith's acceptance of the concept of majority rule within two years demonstrated the effectiveness of concerted international action, he said, adding that it would be tragic if the opportunity to reach a solution were lost. The nine countries meanwhile would continue to comply strictly with the sanctions imposed by the Security Council: they would look forward to establishing links with a legal government in Southern Rhodesia and, in due course, with the government of an independent Zimbabwe.

The representatives of Cuba, Guyana and other States said that the downfall of colonialism in southern Africa would be the result of the victories achieved by the national liberation movements. The Geneva conference had come about not because of a "superman" of imperialist diplomacy who had caused the Smith régime to change its mind but because of resounding victories by the liberation movements in Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique, the advances of the South West Africa People's Organization in Namibia and the thrust of the liberation movement in Zimbabwe.

Cuba and other speakers, including India, Nepal and Yugoslavia, paid tribute to Mozambique for closing its borders with Southern Rhodesia and applying full sanctions. Nepal urged the international community to heed the appeal made by the Security Council to render assistance to Mozambique by all means available. (See also pp. 190-97.)

Tribute was also paid by, among others, Indonesia, Papua New Guinea and Sierra Leone to the efforts of the other front-line States—Botswana, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia—which had assisted the people of Zimbabwe. They appealed for economic and material assistance to those countries to compensate for the losses they had suffered as a direct result of their involvement in the struggle.

Many Fourth Committee Members, among them Ethiopia, Ghana, Mozambique and Poland, expressed their appreciation to the Ad Hoc Group of the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence for shedding useful light on the internal situation in Southern Rhodesia and for its observations on the situation in southern Africa.

On 14 December 1976, the Fourth Committee approved two draft resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia. The first text, sponsored by 54 Members, related to the territory as a whole and was approved without objection. The General Assembly adopted it on 20 December, also without objection, as resolution 31/154 A.

By the preambular part of the text, the Assembly among other things: reaffirmed that any attempt to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal régime on the basis of independence before majority rule would be in contravention of the inalienable rights of the people of the territory; took note of the declared position of the administering power that there would be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe; took note of the convening of the Geneva conference on Zimbabwe; condemned the illegal racist minority régime for its intensified oppression of the people of Zimbabwe; and commended the firm determination of those people, under the leadership of their national liberation movement, to achieve freedom and independence.

(1) reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Zimbabwe people to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right;

(2) reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to its future had to be worked out with the full participation of the Zimbabwe people;

(3) strongly condemned the illegal régime for its continued brutal and repressive measures and in particular its wanton killings of Africans within and outside Zimbabwe;

(4) further strongly condemned the régime for its systematic acts of aggression against neighbouring States;

(5) called upon the United Kingdom, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population, and not in any circumstances to accord to the illegal régime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty;

(6) commended to the administering power for appropriate action the relevant sections of the report of the Special Committee's Ad Hoc Group;

(7) firmly supported the Zimbabwe people in their struggle to achieve majority rule;

(8) demanded: the termination of executions of freedom fighters by the illegal Smith régime; the unconditional and immediate release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, removal of all restrictions on political activity, establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, and restoration of fundamental human rights; the discontinuance of all repressive measures, in particular the brutality committed in the "operational area," of the arbitrary closure of African areas, of the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of so-called protected villages and of the persecution of Christian missionaries supporting the cause of Zimbabwe liberation; and the cessation of the influx of immigrants into the territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom;

(9) called upon all States to take all necessary measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia;

(10) requested all States, directly and through their action in other organizations, to extend, in consultation with OAU, to the Zimbabwe people and their national liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle;

(11) invited all Governments, specialized agencies, other organizations and bodies concerned, and the Secretary-General, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the situation in Zimbabwe and to the relevant United Nations decisions and actions, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal régime;

(12) expressed the hope that the conference on Zimbabwe at Geneva would succeed in establishing the conditions for early independence on the basis of majority rule, in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions;

(13) requested the United Kingdom to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate, and to report thereon to the Special Committee as well as to the Assembly at its 1977 session; and

(14) requested the Special Committee to keep the situation in the territory under review as a matter of priority and to report thereon to the General Assembly in 1977.

The second text, having to do with sanctions, was approved by the Fourth Committee by a recorded vote of 121 to 1, with 6 abstentions. It was sponsored by 50 Members. The General Assembly adopted it on 20 December by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 7 abstentions, as resolution 31/154 B.

By the preambular part of this text, the Assembly among other things strongly deplored the increasing collaboration that certain States, particularly South Africa, maintained with the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia, thereby seriously impeding the effective application of the sanctions and other measures taken against the régime. It was also deeply disturbed at recent reports of widespread violations of the sanctions, and considered that developments in the area called for positive, concerted international action with a view to imposing maximum isolation on the illegal régime. It reaffirmed its conviction that sanctions would not put an end to the régime unless they were comprehensive, mandatory and effectively supervised, enforced and complied with, particularly by South Africa. The Assembly also noted with appreciation the decision of Mozambique to close its borders with Southern Rhodesia and to impose sanctions against the illegal régime in compliance with the relevant decisions of the Security Council.

By the operative paragraphs of the text, the Assembly:

(1) strongly condemned those Governments, particularly the racist régime of South Africa, that continued to collaborate with Southern Rhodesia's illegal racist minority régime, and called upon them to cease all such collaboration;

(2) condemned all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions strictly, as being contrary to their obligations;

(3) condemned the continued importation of chrome and nickel from the territory into the United States, which was called upon to repeal speedily all legislation permitting such importation;

(4) called upon all Governments which had not done so (a) to take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions imposed by the Security Council and to prohibit any form of collaboration by them with the illegal régime, (b) to take effective steps to prevent or discourage emigration to Southern Rhodesia of any individuals or groups under their jurisdiction, (c) to discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal régime—among other things by forbidding the operation of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board, the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravened the aims and purposes of the sanctions, and (d) to invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the territory;

(5) highly commended the action taken by Mozambique in closing its borders with Southern Rhodesia and imposing total sanctions against the Smith régime, and considered that that action constituted an important contribution in support of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and towards the maximum isolation of the illegal régime;

(6) requested all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and the various organizations and programmes within the United Nations system to extend to Mozambique all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to enable it to overcome any economic difficulties in connexion with its application of the economic sanctions;

(7) further requested the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to Mozambique, as well as to Zambia;

(8) reiterated its conviction that the scope of the sanctions had to be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter and requested the Security Council to consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency; and

(9) requested the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence to follow the implementation of this resolution and invited the Security Council's Committee on sanctions to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee.

(For text of resolution 31/154 B, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Following the voting on the draft resolutions, the United Kingdom representative informed the Fourth Committee that the Geneva conference had been adjourned until 17 January 1977 so that its Chairman could carry out intensive consultations in southern Africa. The United Kingdom's intention was to meet the concern of the nationalists that the process of transition to independence should be guaranteed and the anxieties of the Europeans that it should be orderly. He associated his Government with the reference in the first resolution to the Geneva conference, whose main objective was to bring about a rapid and orderly transfer of power to the people of Zimbabwe.

The representatives of Australia, Austria, Canada, Japan, the Netherlands (speaking for the nine countries of the European Communities) and Sweden (speaking also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway), said they had supported both resolutions but as a matter of principle objected to the call for effective measures to prevent immigration and tourism to Southern Rhodesia. Such measures, they said, would limit the constitutional right of their citizens to travel freely. Canada also believed it was preferable to avoid cutting off all communications with Southern Rhodesia so that pressures of international opinion might continue to be brought to bear on the régime.

The United States said it had voted against the second resolution not because it opposed such sanctions or wished to see them vitiated in any way but because it deeply resented being singled out for criticism when its imports from Southern Rhodesia did not account for more than 5 per cent of the territory's export earnings. In a year when the United States had exerted every effort to bring about the peaceful transition to majority rule in Southern Rhodesia, it was petty and unjust for the Assembly to criticize the United States alone while other nations—some of them African—went unmentioned for their secret and much more extensive trade with Southern Rhodesia.

International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia

On 17 June 1976, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, after considering the report of its Ad Hoc Group, recommended that the General Assembly at its 1976 session approve a proposal to convene in 1977 an international conference in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for the purpose of mobilizing world public opinion in support of those peoples.

On 17 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted by consensus, as resolution 31/145, a draft text proposed by 40 Members concerning the holding of such a conference.

By the preamble of the text, the Assembly among other things expressed its deep concern at the situation obtaining in Zimbabwe and Namibia as a result of the continued oppression and domination of their peoples by the racist régimes in Southern Rhodesia and South Africa; it noted the recommendation by the Special Committee that the United Nations should convene a conference in support of those peoples and noted the endorsement of that recommendation by the United Nations Council for Namibia.

decided that the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia would be held during 1977 to mobilize world-wide support for and assistance to the peoples of those territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence. It welcomed the fact that the Government of Mozambique was prepared to hold the conference at Maputo, and asked the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Special Committee and the Council for Namibia, to organize the conference in that city, in consultation with OAU; he was also asked to give it the widest possible publicity. The Special Committee and the Council for Namibia were asked to report to the Assembly at its 1977 session on the results of the conference.

Related General Assembly decisions

At its session in 1976, the General Assembly took several decisions that referred to various aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia. These are described briefly below.

IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION ON THE GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

On 17 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/143) relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by which, among other things, it condemned the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans in Namibia by South Africa and in Zimbabwe by the illegal racist minority régime. It was conscious of the pressing need to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism, particularly with respect to Namibia and Zimbabwe, and strongly deprecated the policies of States that continued to collaborate with South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia.

It asked all States to withhold assistance from South Africa and the illegal régime until they restored to the people of Namibia and Zimbabwe their right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those régimes. All States were urged to provide all moral and material assistance to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe. The Special Committee was asked to continue to examine the compliance by Member States with the Declaration and other relevant resolutions, particularly those relating to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and to enlist support among Governments and organizations in the achievement of the objectives of those decisions, particularly as concerned the oppressed peoples of the two territories. (For details, see pp. 690-94.)

On 29 November, by another resolution (31/30)

relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence, the General Assembly expressed its concern that the assistance extended thus far by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements was far from adequate; it once again urged those agencies and organizations to withhold any assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime of Southern Rhodesia, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those régimes. (For details, see pp. 700-2.)

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

On 5 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/7, by which it condemned the support which the régimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia continued to receive from the foreign economic, financial and other interests that were collaborating with them in their exploitation of the natural and human resources of Namibia and Zimbabwe. It also condemned all Governments that violated the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions, and called upon the régime in South Africa to cease immediately all forms of collaboration with the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see pp. 708-11.)

ADVERSE CONSEQUENCES FOR HUMAN RIGHTS OF AID TO RACIST REGIMES IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

On 30 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/33) relating to the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa, expressing the conviction that such aid given to the régimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia by certain States was the major factor in the perpetuation of the abominable policies of those régimes.

The Assembly among other things reaffirmed the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination, independence and the enjoyment of the natural resources of their territories and called on all States scrupulously to observe the sanctions imposed on the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia.

(For details, see pp. 578-80.)

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF THE RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

On 30 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/34) relating to the importance of the universal realization of the right to self-determination by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, of the Palestinian people and of all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, independence and sovereignty without external interference. (For details, see pp. 590-91.)

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE ORGANIZATION OF AFRICAN UNITY

By resolution 31/13, relating to co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and adopted on 16 November, the General Assembly among other things expressed its awareness of the urgent need to give increased assistance to victims of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid resulting from intensified acts of repression against the African peoples by the Government of South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see pp. 200-2.)

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1976, 363 Southern Rhodesian students were studying abroad in 19 countries on scholarships granted under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1967. Between 1 November 1975 and 30 September 1976, the Programme received 1,168 applications from Southern Rhodesians, granted 40 new awards and extended 323 awards.

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly reviewed the Programme and, by resolution 31/31 adopted on 29 November, among other things noted with satisfaction the increase in contributions to the Programme which permitted the continuance in 1975/1976 of a substantial level of assistance, and appealed once again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to ensure its continuation and expansion.

Reports of the Committee on sanctions

On 21 December 1976, the Security Council's Committee on sanctions (established in pursuance of Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968)<sup>12</sup> adopted its ninth report, covering its work from 16 December 1975 to 15 December 1976. The report contained an account of the action taken by Governments and by the Committee to ensure implementation of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, and of the action taken by States in implementation of the relevant provisions of the Security Council's resolution (388(1976)) of 6 April 1976, by which the Council decided that various aspects of commodity insurance, trade names and franchises were to be included within the scope of mandatory sanctions (see pp. 147-48 for details).

The Committee also reported that during the period under review it had taken action or considered matters relating to: consular and other representation in Southern Rhodesia and representation of the illegal régime abroad; sports activities involving participants travelling to and from Southern Rhodesia; publication of lists of Governments failing to respond to the Committee's inquiries within the prescribed period of two months; the question of airlines operating to and from Southern Rhodesia; and immigration and tourism.

Annexes to the report included the following: a report of the Chairman of the Committee on his personal contacts with representatives of Governments; cases carried over from previous reports, and new cases; a report on the importation of chrome, nickel and other material from Southern Rhodesia into the United States; transactions conducted with the consent or knowledge of reporting Governments; and cases opened on the basis of information supplied by individuals and non-governmental organizations.

On 31 December 1976, the Committee submitted to the Security Council its second special report on the expansion of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. The Committee noted that, although the question had been the subject of a 1975 special report to the Council and of a subsequent Council resolution (388(1976)) adopted on 6 April, it was felt that all aspects of the question had not been dealt with exhaustively and that other aspects could be considered during 1976. It reported that it had accordingly examined proposals pertaining to: prohibition of the flow of capital from Southern Rhodesia for certain purposes; denial by Member States of landing rights in their respective territories to flights whose route schedule included stopovers in Southern Rhodesia to load or unload passengers and/or goods; application of Article 41 of the United Nations Charter, with particular reference to the complete or partial interruption of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio and other means of communication; and the extension of sanctions to include South Africa. The Committee was able to agree on only the first of these and, accordingly—bearing in mind the reservations expressed by some delegations—decided to recommend to the Security Council that the flow of capital from Southern Rhodesia for certain purposes be included within the scope of mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. The text of a possible draft resolution on the question, for submission to the Security Council, was recommended by the United Kingdom. Statements of positions were set forth in an annex to the special report.

Communications

Several communications relating to Southern Rhodesia were received during the year by the President of the Security Council or the Secretary-General.

On 5 April 1976, the Permanent Representative of Luxembourg transmitted the text of a statement issued by the Council of the European Communities by which the nine member countries among other things confirmed that they would continue to apply strictly Security Council decisions concerning Southern Rhodesia.

Letters dated 23 June and 19 July were received from the Permanent Representatives of Brazil and Finland, respectively, notifying the Secretary-General of the formal adoption by their Governments of Security Council resolution 388(1976) of 6 April 1976.

By a letter dated 20 July, the Permanent Representative of the Federal Republic of Germany transmitted a communiqué outlining the position of his Government on problems of southern Africa, including Southern Rhodesia.

On 4 October, the Permanent Representative of Ghana transmitted the text of a statement concerning the situation in Zimbabwe by the Government of Ghana.

By a letter dated 19 October, the Permanent Representative of the Netherlands transmitted a statement issued on 18 October by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the nine members of the European Communities welcoming the action of the United Kingdom in convening a conference on Rhodesia at Geneva and confirming that they would meanwhile continue to comply strictly with their obligations relating to sanctions.

Resolution 31/154 A, as recommended by Fourth Committee, A/31/447, adopted without objection by Assembly on 20 December 1976, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,
Having considered the question of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the administering Power,

Taking into account the report of the Ad Hoc Group established by the Special Committee at its 1029th meeting on 1 April 1976,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions relating to the question of Southern Rhodesia adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Special Committee,

Bearing in mind that the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, has the primary responsibility for putting an end to the critical situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) which, as repeatedly affirmed by the Security Council, constitutes a threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming that any attempt to negotiate the future of Zimbabwe with the illegal régime on the basis of independence before majority rule would be in contravention of the inalienable rights of the people of the Territory and contrary to the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and of resolution 1514(XV),

Taking note of the declared position of the administering Power that there shall be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe,

Reaffirming also its endorsement of the relevant provisions of the Dar es Salaam Declaration on Southern Africa, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its ninth extraordinary session, held from 7 to 10 April 1975,

Endorsing the relevant provisions of the Political Declaration adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, relating to southern Africa,

Taking note of the convening of the conference on Zimbabwe at Geneva,

Condemning the illegal racist minority régime for its intensified oppression of the people of Zimbabwe, the arbitrary imprisonment and detention of political leaders and others, the illegal execution of freedom fighters and the continued denial of fundamental human rights, including in particular the wanton beating, torture and murder of innocent villagers, arbitrary criminal measures of collective punishment and measures designed to create an apartheid State in Zimbabwe,

Commending the firm determination of the people of Zimbabwe, under the leadership of their national liberation movement, to achieve freedom and independence,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all the means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in conformity with the objectives of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

2. Reaffirms the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and that any settlement relating to the future of the Territory must be worked out with the full participation of the people of Zimbabwe and in accordance with their true aspirations;

3. Strongly condemns the illegal racist minority régime for its continued brutal and repressive measures perpetrated against the people of Zimbabwe and in particular the wanton killings of Africans carried out by the régime within and outside Zimbabwe;

4. Further strongly condemns the illegal racist minority régime for its systematic acts of aggression against neighbouring African States;

5. Calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, in the discharge of its primary responsibility as the administering Power, to take all effective measures to enable Zimbabwe to accede to independence in accordance with the aspirations of the majority of the population and not under any circumstances to accord to the illegal régime any of the powers or attributes of sovereignty;

6. Commends to the administering Power for appropriate action the relevant sections of the report of the Ad Hoc Group established by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples at its 1029th meeting, on 1 April 1976;

7. Firmly supports the people of Zimbabwe in their struggle to achieve majority rule;

8. Demands:

(a) The termination forthwith of the executions of freedom fighters being carried out by the illegal Smith régime;

(b) The unconditional and immediate release of all political prisoners, detainees and restrictees, the removal of all restrictions on political activity and the establishment of full democratic freedom and equality of political rights, as well as the restoration to the population of fundamental human rights;

(c) The discontinuance forthwith of all repressive measures, in particular the brutality committed in the "operational area," the arbitrary closure of African areas, the eviction, transfer and resettlement of Africans and the creation of so-called protected villages, and the persecution of Christian missionaries supporting the cause of the liberation of Zimbabwe;

(cf) The cessation of the influx of foreign immigrants into the Territory and the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries therefrom;

9. Calls upon all States to take all necessary and effective measures to prevent advertisement for, and recruitment of, mercenaries for Southern Rhodesia;

10. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members, as well as the non-governmental organizations concerned and the various programmes within the United Nations system, to extend, in consultation and co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to the people of Zimbabwe and their national liberation movement all the moral, material, political and humanitarian assistance necessary in their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable rights;

11. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, the United Nations bodies concerned and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization, as well as the Secretary-General, to take steps, as appropriate, to give widespread and continuous publicity through all the media at their disposal to information on the situation in Zimbabwe and on the relevant decisions and actions of the United Nations, with particular reference to the application of sanctions against the illegal régime;

12. Expresses the hope that the conference on Zimbabwe at Geneva will succeed in establishing the conditions for early independence on the basis of majority rule, in accordance with the relevant resolutions adopted by the United Nations;

13. Requests the Government of the United Kingdom, in keeping with its express readiness to do so, to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of the mandate entrusted to the latter by the General Assembly, and to report thereon to the Special Committee and to the Assembly at its thirty-second session;

14. Requests the Special Committee to keep the situation in the Territory under review as a matter of priority and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

The General Assembly,

Having adopted resolution 31/154 A above on the question of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Strongly deploring the increasing collaboration, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations and of the relevant decisions of the United Nations, which certain States, particularly South Africa, maintain with the illegal racist minority régime, thereby seriously impeding the effective application of sanctions and other measures taken thus far against the illegal régime,

Seriously concerned at the continued importation of chrome and nickel into the United States of America from Southern Rhodesia, in violation of the relevant decisions of the Security Council and in disregard of the related resolutions of the General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed at recent reports of widespread violations of United Nations sanctions, including the operation of Southern Rhodesian aircraft for international passenger and cargo traffic, as well as the continued functioning of information and airline offices of the illegal régime outside Southern Rhodesia and the resultant influx of foreign tourists into the Territory,

Considering that developments in the area call in particular for positive, concerted international action with a view to imposing maximum isolation on the illegal régime,

Reaffirming its conviction that the sanctions will not put an end to the illegal racist minority régime unless they are comprehensive, mandatory and effectively supervised, enforced and complied with, particularly by South Africa,

Noting with appreciation the decision of the Government of Mozambique to close its borders with Southern Rhodesia and to impose sanctions against the illegal racist minority régime in compliance with the relevant decisions of the Security Council,

1. Strongly condemns those Governments, particularly the racist régime of South Africa, which, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and in open contravention of their specific obligations under Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations, continue to collaborate with the illegal racist minority régime, and calls upon those Governments to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

2. Condemns all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions strictly, as being contrary to the obligations assumed by them under Article 2, paragraph 5, and Article 25 of the Charter;

3. Condemns the continued importation of chrome and nickel from Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) into the United States of America and calls upon the Government of the United States to repeal speedily all legislation permitting such importation;

4. Calls upon all Governments which thus far have not done so:

(a) To take stringent enforcement measures to ensure strict compliance by all individuals, associations and bodies corporate under their jurisdiction with the sanctions imposed by the Security Council and to prohibit any form of collaboration by them with the illegal régime;

(b) To take effective steps to prevent or discourage the emigration to Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) of any individuals or groups of individuals under their jurisdiction;

(c) To discontinue any action which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal régime, inter alia, by forbidding the operation and activities of Air Rhodesia, the Rhodesia National Tourist Board and the Rhodesian Information Office, or any other activities which contravene the aims and purposes of the sanctions;

(d) To invalidate passports and other documents for travel to the Territory;

5. Highly commends the action taken by the Government of Mozambique in closing its borders with Southern Rhodesia and imposing total sanctions against the Smith régime, and considers that that action constitutes an important contribution in support of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and towards the maximum isolation of the illegal régime;

6. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members, and the various programmes within the United Nations system to extend to the Government of Mozambique all forms of financial, technical and material assistance in order to enable it to overcome any economic difficulties in connexion with its application of economic sanctions against the illegal régime;

7. Further requests the Security Council to undertake a periodic review of the question of economic assistance to the Government of Mozambique as well as to the Government of Zambia;

8. Reiterates its conviction that the scope of the sanctions against the illegal régime must be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter and requests the Security Council to consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency;

9. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to follow the implementation of the present resolution and invites the Security Council Committee established in pursuance of resolution 253(1968) concerning the question of Southern Rhodesia to continue to co-operate in the related work of the Special Committee.

A/C.5/31/96, A/31/442 and Rev.1. Administrative and financial implications of 40-power draft resolution, A/31/L.31. Statement by Secretary-General and report of Fifth Committee.

Resolution 31/145, as proposed by 40 powers, A/31/L.31 and Add.1-3, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 17 December 1976, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the situation obtaining in Zimbabwe and Namibia as a result of the continued oppression and domination of their peoples by the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia and the racist régime of South Africa in defiance of the decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly,

Mindful of the special responsibility of the United Nations to support the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Having approved the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, including in particular the findings of the Ad Hoc Group established by the Special Committee at its 1029th meeting on 1 April 1976,

Deeply conscious of the urgent and continuing need to arouse world public opinion with a view to assisting effectively the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia to self-determination, freedom and independence, and to intensify the widespread dissemination of information on the struggle for liberation being waged by the peoples of those Territories and their national liberation movements against the repressive, colonialist and racist domination of their countries by the minority régimes concerned,

Bearing in mind the constructive results of the International Conference of Experts for the Support of Victims of Colonialism and Apartheid in Southern Africa, held at Oslo from 9 to 14 April 1973,

Noting the recommendation by the Special Committee that the United Nations should convene during 1977 an international conference in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the endorsement of this recommendation by the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Noting the statement of the Government of Mozambique that it would welcome a decision by the General Assembly to hold a conference at Maputo,

1. Decides that the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia shall be held during 1977 for the purpose of mobilizing world-wide support for and assistance to the peoples of those Territories in their struggle for self-determination and independence;

2. Welcomes the fact that the Government of Mozambique is prepared to hold the Conference at Maputo;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia, to organize the said Conference at Maputo, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, and authorizes the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and services for the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to give the widest possible publicity to the Conference through all the media at his disposal, including press releases, radio and television;

5. Requests the Special Committee and the United Nations Council for Namibia to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the results of the Conference.

The question of Namibia

In 1976, as in previous years, the question of Namibia again received consideration by various United Nations bodies. The Security Council, the General Assembly, the Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia all took decisions on the matter. Related decisions were taken by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Economic and Social Council.

A detailed account of the deliberations of these bodies and their decisions is given on pp. 759-93. A brief summary of these actions follows.

On 26 November 1975, the General Assembly urged the Security Council urgently to take up again the question of Namibia.<sup>13</sup> The Council did so in late January 1976 and unanimously adopted resolution 385(1976) on 30 January, sponsored by eight members, by which, among other things, it:

condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia and its illegal and arbitrary application of racially discriminatory and repressive laws and practices in the territory; condemned the South African military build-up in Namibia and utilization of the territory as a base for attacks on neighbouring countries; demanded that South Africa urgently make a solemn declaration accepting the provisions in that resolution for holding free elections in Namibia under United Nations supervision, undertaking to comply with relevant United Nations decisions and with the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971,<sup>14</sup> and recognizing the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia as a nation.

The Council reiterated its demand that South Africa take the necessary steps, with the assistance of the United Nations, to effect the withdrawal of its illegal administration in Namibia. Pending the transfer of powers, the Council demanded that South Africa take certain measures, including the release of all Namibian political prisoners, the abolition of all racially discriminatory and politically repressive laws and practices, particularly bantustans and homelands, and the granting to all Namibians in exile for political reasons full facilities for return, without risk of arrest, detention, intimidation or imprisonment.

Furthermore, the Council decided to remain seized of the matter and to meet on or before 31 August 1976 to review South Africa's compliance with the resolution and, in the event of non-compliance, to consider appropriate measures to be taken under the Charter of the United Nations.

The Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence considered the question of Namibia at meetings held between 12 May and 17 June. It adopted a consensus statement on 17 June whereby, among other things, it once again emphatically denounced the Government of South Africa for its persistent refusal to terminate its illegal occupation of Namibia and condemned the efforts by the South African régime to bolster its illegal presence by creating an atmosphere of terror and intimidation and by employing tactics, based on apartheid and bantustanization, aimed at destroying the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia.

The Special Committee also noted that, in its efforts to destroy the national unity of Namibia, South Africa had in 1975 resorted to the stratagem of a so-called constitutional conference from which representatives of non-white political parties were excluded and which had to be regarded as a device to give a semblance of validity to the régime's own preconceived policies.

The Special Committee also considered that, in the event that South Africa did not comply with the Security Council's resolution of 30 January (385(1976)), the Council should consider the adoption of appropriate measures under Chapter VII of the Charter.<sup>15</sup>

The Special Committee also condemned the militarization of Namibia by South Africa, as well as South Africa's failure to take measures providing for the release of political prisoners, the abolition of all racially discriminatory and politically repressive laws and practices and full facilities for the return of political exiles without risk of arrest, detention, intimidation or imprisonment. In that connexion, the Special Committee noted with grave concern the wave of arrests over the preceding six months, including the arrest of all the leaders of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) inside Namibia.

Also on 17 June, the Special Committee adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it approved the report of its six-member Ad Hoc Group, which had visited Botswana, Ethiopia, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia and had met with representatives of national liberation movements and the Organization of African Unity. The Group put forward a proposal, supported by the Special Committee, that an international conference be convened in 1977 for mobilizing world public opinion in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

The Security Council resumed its consideration of the question on 31 August and held additional meetings between 28 September and 19 October. A 7-power draft resolution was voted on but not adopted, owing to the negative vote of three permanent members (France, the United Kingdom and the United States).

By this rejected text, the Council would have, among other things, expressed itself as gravely concerned by the colonial war that South Africa was waging against the Namibian people, by its use of military force, torture and intimidation against the people of Namibia, and by South Africa's utilization of the territory to mount aggression against independent African States.

The Council would then have condemned South Africa's failure to comply with the terms of Council resolution 385(1976) and its attempts to evade the demand of the United Nations for holding free elections under United Nations supervision in Namibia; it would have denounced the so-called Turnhalle constitutional conference as a device for evading the responsibility to comply with the requirements of Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 385(1976).

Also by this text, the Council would have: reaffirmed the legal responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and support for the struggle of its people for self-determination and independence; reiterated its demand that South Africa immediately withdraw its illegal administration in Namibia and transfer power to the people of Namibia, with United Nations assistance; demanded that South Africa end its policy of bantustans and so-called homelands aimed at violating Namibia's national unity and territorial integrity; reaffirmed its declaration that free elections under United Nations supervision be held for Namibia as one political entity; demanded that South Africa urgently comply with the foregoing provisions and with the 1971 advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, and recognize the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia as a nation; demanded again that South Africa, pending the transfer of power, release all Namibian political prisoners, abolish the application in Namibia of all racially discriminatory and politically repressive laws and practices, particularly bantustans and so-called homelands, and permit the return of all Namibians currently in exile for political reasons.

Stating that it was acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council would then have determined that the illegal occupation of Namibia and the war being waged there by South Africa constituted a threat to international peace and security, and would have decided that all States were to cease and desist from any form of military consultation, co-operation or collaboration with South Africa and were to take effective measures to prevent the recruitment of mercenaries for service in Namibia or South Africa. They were also to prevent any supply of arms, ammunition, aircraft, vehicles and military equipment to South Africa, and equipment and materials for the manufacture and maintenance of arms and ammunition in South Africa and Namibia.

In its 1976 report to the General Assembly, the United Nations Council for Namibia said, among other things, that it had continued to mobilize world public opinion in support of the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia, had provided material and moral assistance to Namibians and had closely followed political, military and economic conditions in the territory. It had fully supported the activities of SWAPO, the authentic liberation movement of Namibia, and strongly condemned the proposals of the so-called constitutional conference in Namibia as totally lacking in legitimacy; those proposals did not approach any of the requirements for genuine self-determination and independence laid down by the United Nations.

The Council reported that the United Nations Institute for Namibia, proposed by the Council and endorsed by the General Assembly in 1974, was officially opened at Lusaka, Zambia, on Namibia Day, 26 August 1976.

The Council also made a number of recommendations for action to be taken by the Assembly.

On 20 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, adopted eight resolutions on the following aspects of the question of Namibia: the situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa; the programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia; intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia; action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to Namibia; dissemination of information on Namibia; the United Nations Fund for Namibia; observer status for SWAPO; and a Nationhood Programme for Namibia.

Complaint by Zambia against South Africa

Communications to Security Council (July 1976)

On 19 July 1976, in a letter to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Zambia requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider what he termed racist South Africa's repeated acts of aggression against Zambia, the latest of which, he said, had taken place on 11 July at Sialola village in the Kaungamashi area of the Western Province, some 30 kilometres inside Zambian territory. More than a platoon of South African troops, supported by the air force, attacked the village; 24 people were killed and 45 seriously injured.

In a letter dated 27 July, the representative of Zaire said that the President and people of Zaire firmly supported the complaint against South Africa by Zambia; Zaire condemned the loss of human lives and the acts of aggression and repression which the Pretoria régime had made a constant feature of its policy.

Consideration by Security Council (27-30 July 1976)

The Security Council considered the Zambian complaint against South Africa at meetings held between 27 and 30 July. The representatives of Botswana, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guinea, Liberia, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mozambique, Qatar, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Uganda, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Acting President and two members of the United Nations Council for Namibia and a representative of the Special Committee against Apartheid were also invited to participate, under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.<sup>16</sup>

Also under rule 39, and in accordance with a request by Benin, an invitation was extended to O. T. Emvula of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO).

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Zambia charged that, on 11 July 1976, South African military aircraft had hovered over Sialola village and had dropped armed men who planted landmines all around a SWAPO freedom-fighter transit camp. They had subsequently attacked and shelled the camp, killing some 24 of its inhabitants and injuring 45 others. In his view, that act of aggression by South Africa was perpetrated in blatant violation of Zambia's sovereignty and territorial integrity; moreover, it was cruel and totally without justification for the South African régime to attack Namibians fighting to liberate their country from illegal occupation. South Africa's aggression, he said, was not an isolated incident, but was part of a series to which Zambia had been subjected during the 12 years of its independence.

He went on to say that, since South Africa was not prepared to promote genuine independence in Namibia, the rightful owners of the territory had no alternative but to struggle, using all means at their disposal. Zambia had an obligation to the oppressed Namibians to offer transit facilities, he said, and in rendering all possible support to the liberation movements, Zambia and other front-line States were in fact assuming the burden that should equally be the responsibility of the international community as a whole. He urged the Security Council to condemn South Africa's aggression against Zambia and its senseless murder of innocent people, demand that South Africa henceforth respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Zambia and other front-line States and declare that South Africa should relinquish its illegal hold on Namibia. It should also declare that peace and security in southern Africa were inextricably linked to the liberation of the region and express its unqualified support for SWAPO and the other liberation movements in southern Africa. Everything had to be done to isolate South Africa and other forces of evil in southern Africa, speed up the liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia and destroy the evil policy of apartheid.

The representative of South Africa said his Government had no knowledge of an attack on a Zambian village on 11 July and would never have authorized such an attack. There had been a number of incidents on both sides of the border in the past, he noted, involving Zambian nationals and hostile elements enjoying refuge in Zambia, and South Africa had had occasion to make representations with respect to some of those incidents. Lately, he said, such complaints had been handled by notes exchanged between the two Governments—a commendable procedure.

However, in the case of the alleged incident at Sialola, the South African Government had learnt only by way of press reports of what was said to have taken place. South Africa, he declared, was willing to discuss the situation with Zambia, with a view to establishing the facts and, on that basis, taking any further joint steps which appeared appropriate.

The representative went on to say that South Africa was not the initiator, instigator or supporter of regional unrest: it was the unsettled nature of the situation in southern Africa itself which was to blame for developments such as those which had given rise to the current discussion. At the root of the trouble was the toleration of armed groups in the region, owing allegiance to no one, frequently acting on their own initiative without regard to the interests of the sovereign States of the region or the region as a whole. What the area needed, he said, was a solution wider in scope than the issues of shooting incidents and aggravations, a solution which promised hope of stability, of permanence, not only for one boundary or locality but for the whole of southern Africa.

He appealed to the Council not to mete out condemnations, criticisms and pejoratives to South Africa. Such an approach had a counter-productive effect. What was needed in southern Africa was encouragement for efforts and successes in moving away from old and outmoded attitudes to more constructive conceptions that would result in fruitful co-operation and dissipation of the fear of domination of one nation or group by another. What was needed was conciliation, not vituperation, communication, not exacerbation.

The spokesman for Liberia said that South Africa's categorical denial of any knowledge of the attack at Sialola raised serious questions; she asked, through the South African representative, whether the Government of South Africa was willing to accept and co-operate fully with a fact-finding mission of the Security Council and whether it was willing to make available to that mission all relevant information on its troop movements during the period in question.

A letter dated 29 July from the South African representative in reply to the Liberian representative was circulated at the Council's next meeting. The letter stated that the authorities of the areas concerned had been consulted and had indicated their willingness to co-operate fully. Accordingly, it continued, the South African Government had in principle agreed to the proposal made by the representative of Liberia, and would give its full co-operation as requested. Should the Security Council approve of the proposal, the composition of the fact-finding mission and other modalities would no doubt be decided by consultation, the letter added.

The representative of Mauritania, current Chairman of the Group of African Member States in the United Nations, said that the assistance Zambia gave to SWAPO and other liberation movements—assistance cited by South Africa to justify its aggression—was completely in accordance with many decisions and recommendations adopted by the United Nations, and particularly by the Security Council. He and a number of other speakers—among them Botswana, Egypt, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Pakistan, Romania, Sweden and Yugoslavia—also recalled in particular that the Security Council, by its resolution 300(1971) of 12 October 1971,<sup>17</sup> had called upon South Africa to respect fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Zambia and had declared that it would reconvene in the event of another violation by South Africa of Zambia's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

It was pointed out by these and other speakers that no part of the international territory of Namibia could be used by South Africa as a staging-ground either to violate the territorial integrity of Zambia or to attack Namibians fighting for the liberation of their country. In their view, South Africa was thus in a situation of twofold juridical illegality, inasmuch as the Security Council, in any decision it took on the aggression against Zambia, could not ignore South Africa's illegal military occupation of Namibia. The Council, they said, should strongly condemn South Africa for its aggression against Zambia and for using Namibia as a base of aggression.

The representative of SWAPO charged further that, because of its dismal failure to match and contain the determined forces of SWAPO, the apartheid régime and its occupation forces of aggression had resorted to flagrant armed attacks in neighbouring independent States and to harassment, torture, murder, rape, arrest and detention of SWAPO political cadres and sympathizers at home.

According to the representative of China, the aggression committed against Zambia by the South African racist authorities was another revelation of their reactionary nature and a manifestation of their last-ditch struggle. In order to maintain its tottering rule, the racist régime was actively employing counter-revolutionary dual tactics with super-power abetment and support: while advertising "racial reconciliation" at home and talking profusely about "dialogue and talks" abroad, it had greatly intensified its barbarous suppression of the South African people and had continued its military provocations against neighbouring independent countries in an attempt to put out the revolutionary flames of the Azanian people and obstruct the African States giving support to the just struggle of the Azanian people. To date, South Africa was still illegally occupying Namibia and using it as a base for military aggression against neighbouring independent States. In China's view, the Security Council should adopt a resolution strongly condemning the South African racist régime for its atrocities of aggression against Zambia and demanding the non-recurrence of such gangsterism, and adopt other necessary corresponding measures in accordance with the relevant provisions of the United Nations Charter.

The USSR representative said that the attack against Zambia was another link in the endless chain of aggressive acts committed by South Africa.

It was no secret, he said, that the arsenals of South Africa were replete with weapons which the leaders in Pretoria were ready to use—not only against their own people but also against other peoples in Africa. The responsibility for such a state of affairs must be borne not only by the racist régime but also by those Western powers, in particular members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, that were helping South Africa to strengthen its military forces and were expanding their contacts with it in economic and other fields. The Security Council should adopt a resolution that would ensure the full implementation of all its earlier decisions and those of the General Assembly with regard to South Africa. The racist régime of South Africa had to be totally and completely isolated in the international arena, he declared, and an embargo binding upon all countries had to be placed on the delivery to it of weapons and on economic and other assistance.

The representative of France said that for a long time there had been a danger that the Caprivi Strip and the entire northern border of Namibia would become the scene of serious incidents. The abnormal situation of Namibia was at the root of the problem: there would have been no violation of Zambia's sovereignty if Namibia were exercising the true self-determination and independence so often called for.

The representative of the United Kingdom said his Government considered that South Africa was in unlawful occupation of Namibia, and that the international territory could not and must not be used as a base for attacks on neighbouring countries. The United Kingdom did not believe that war, or increased guerrilla activity, was either inevitable or desirable; peaceful solutions were still possible. However, they would require great statesmanship on South Africa's part, and restraint and flexibility on the part of both South Africa and SWAPO. The more incidents there were like that at Sialola, however caused, the greater would be the obstacles in the way of negotiation and the attainment of a just settlement.

At its meeting on 30 July 1976, the Security Council adopted, as resolution 393(1976), a draft text proposed by Benin, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and the United Republic of Tanzania. The vote was 14 in favour to 0 against, with 1 abstention (United States).

By the preamble to this text, the Council among other things expressed grave concern at the numerous hostile and unprovoked acts by South Africa violating Zambia's sovereignty, air space and territorial integrity and at South Africa's use of the international territory of Namibia as a base for attacking neighbouring countries. It reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Namibia to liberate their country from the illegal occupation of the racist régime of South Africa and expressed its conviction that the continuance of the deteriorating situation in southern Africa could constitute a threat to international peace and security.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Council:

(1) strongly condemned South Africa's armed attack against Zambia, which constituted a flagrant violation of Zambia's sovereignty and territorial integrity;

(2) demanded that South Africa scrupulously respect Zambia's independence, sovereignty, air space and territorial integrity;

(3) demanded that South Africa desist forthwith from using Namibia as a base for launching armed attacks;

(4) commended Zambia and other front-line States for their steadfast support of the people of Namibia in their legitimate struggle for liberation from illegal occupation;

(5) declared that the liberation of Namibia and Zimbabwe and the elimination of apartheid in South Africa were necessary for the attainment of justice and lasting peace in the region; and

(6) further declared that, in the event South Africa committed further acts of violation of Zambia's sovereignty and territorial integrity, the Council would meet again to consider the adoption of effective measures, in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the United Nations Charter.

(For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Explaining his abstention, the representative of the United States said that if South Africa had been responsible for the raid on Sialola and had utilized Namibia as the base for its operation, then South Africa was clearly in violation of international law. However, the United States believed that an investigation could have produced a more careful and authoritative statement on the part of the Council. He regretted that there had been no inclination to authorize such an investigation, which could well have resulted in strong Security Council action. As a result, several paragraphs of the resolution contained language which was too categorical in the light of the evidence that had been made available. Moreover, it would have been appropriate for the Council by the resolution to have welcomed current efforts to make progress towards solutions in southern Africa, which the Security Council had long advocated, and to have encouraged every possible assistance to them.

Resolution 393(1976), as proposed by 7 powers, S/12158, and as orally amended by sponsors, adopted by Council on 30 July 1976, meeting 1948, by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (United States).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letter of the representative of the Republic of Zambia contained in document S/12147,

Having considered the statement of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Zambia,

Gravely concerned at the numerous hostile and unprovoked acts by South Africa violating the sovereignty, air space and territorial integrity of the Republic of Zambia, resulting in death and injury of innocent people as well as in the destruction of property and culminating on 11 July 1976 in an armed attack which resulted in the regrettable loss of 24 innocent lives and the injury of 45 other persons,

Gravely concerned at South Africa's use of the international Territory of Namibia as a base for attacking neighbouring African countries,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Namibia to liberate their country from the illegal occupation of the racist régime of South Africa,

Convinced that the continuance of the deteriorating situation in southern Africa could constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Conscious of the need to take effective steps for the prevention and removal of threats to international peace and security,

Recalling its resolution 300(1971) of 12 October 1971, which, inter alia, called upon South Africa to respect fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Zambia,

Bearing in mind that all Member States must refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

1. Strongly condemns the armed attack of South Africa against the Republic of Zambia, which constitutes a flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Zambia;

2. Demands that South Africa scrupulously respect the independence, sovereignty, air space and territorial integrity of the Republic of Zambia;

3. Demands that South Africa desist forthwith from the use of the international Territory of Namibia as a base for launching armed attacks against the Republic of Zambia and other African countries;

4. Commends the Republic of Zambia and other "front-line" States for their steadfast support of the people of Namibia in their legitimate struggle for the liberation of their country from illegal occupation by the racist régime of South Africa;

5. Declares that the liberation of Namibia and Zimbabwe and the elimination of apartheid in South Africa are necessary for the attainment of justice and lasting peace in the region;

6. Further declares that, in the event of South Africa committing further acts of violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Zambia, the Security Council will meet again to consider the adoption of effective measures, in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.

Complaint by Lesotho against South Africa

Communications to Security Council (November-December 1976)

By a letter dated 27 October 1976 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Lesotho transmitted a communication from the Prime Minister of Lesotho, calling attention to the worsening situation which had developed in South Africa over the four months since the events at Soweto in June, during which hundreds of Africans had been killed or injured (see pp. 117-21). The Prime Minister recalled that the Foreign Minister of Lesotho had, in his statement to the United Nations General Assembly on 13 October, indicated clearly the scope and dimensions of the problems faced by Lesotho as a result of the actions of the agents of the apartheid administration in Pretoria. Since then, the Prime Minister stated, Lesotho was faced with new problems arising from the instability created on its borders. The area was seething with discontent of the inhabitants of Transkei, who moved from one so-called bantustan to another, as an expression of their dissatisfaction with political arrangements of the newly styled "Republic of Transkei."

Conditions of that nature were bound to affect the prevailing peace and stable economy of Lesotho, he said, and he appealed for support for the African people of South Africa in their struggle for basic rights, and for Lesotho, which had become part and parcel of that struggle.

In a letter dated 12 November, the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic, on behalf of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, called attention to the explosive situation created by the closure on 26 October by the South African Government of the border between South Africa and the southern border of Lesotho, adjacent to the so-called independent Transkei. Closure of the border, the letter charged, was calculated to coerce Lesotho into according recognition to the bantustan Transkei, which was an appendage of the apartheid Government of South Africa. The African group, the letter added, viewed South Africa's action as a flagrant breach of international law, which stipulated safe passage of transit goods to and from land-locked countries. The situation in that area not only posed a serious economic problem to Lesotho but also constituted a threat to the peace and security in that region.

They maintained that the international community had to assume its responsibility and give Lesotho every support it required for its existence and the welfare of its people.

By a letter dated 16 November, the representative of South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General a note from the South African Minister for Foreign Affairs stating that the Republic of Transkei had already denied that it had closed the borders between Lesotho and Transkei. It was merely insisting, as was its right, on valid travel documents for people crossing the border into Transkei. The allegation that South Africa had breached international law was completely without foundation. It had taken no action of any kind to interfere in any way with the safe passage either of transit goods or of persons crossing the borders between the Republic of South Africa and Lesotho: such traffic continued to flow normally at all established points of entry on those borders.

The Minister further pointed out that, as a land-locked country, Lesotho's normal access to the sea lay through the Republic of South Africa along existing road and rail routes and not through the Republic of Transkei. He declared that there had been no interference of any kind with Lesotho's use of access along those routes.

In a letter dated 16 December to the Security Council, the representative of Lesotho requested the Council President to convene a meeting of the Council to consider the grave situation affecting Lesotho following the closure of the border by the Republic of South Africa between the south-eastern part of Lesotho and that part of South Africa referred to as Transkei.

Consideration by Security Council (21 and 22 December 1976)

The Security Council considered Lesotho's complaint at meetings held on 21 and 22 December 1976. The President, with the consent of the Council, invited the representatives of Botswana, Lesotho, Madagascar and Mauritius, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Lesotho said that since 26 October the South African Government—in violation of the Customs Union Agreement and the Labour Agreement which had been in force since 1973 between South Africa and Lesotho—had unilaterally closed three border posts between the two countries, namely Tele Bridge, Qacha's Nek and Ramats'eliso's Gate. This action, he said, had had profound consequences for the politico-economic life of Lesotho, which relied heavily upon the posts for export and import of goods and services, as well as for movement of persons, including labourers, to and from South Africa. The Lesotho Government had argued that the closure not only was disrupting the free flow of goods and free movement of persons between Lesotho and South Africa but also was a denial of Lesotho's transit rights and rights of access to the sea with respect to that area.

He went on to say that South Africa had subsequently advised Lesotho to negotiate the reopening of the border with the Government of the so-called independent Transkei. The Lesotho Government, he said, had refused and continued to refuse to have anything to do with Transkei. So far as Lesotho was concerned, the onus was on South Africa, a country with which Lesotho had dealings and specific agreements, to open the border posts. It was as a result of South Africa's indifference and lack of co-operation, he declared, that Lesotho had brought the matter to the Security Council.

During the discussion in the Council, the representatives of Benin, Botswana, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mauritius, Pakistan and the United Republic of Tanzania were among those who made one or more of the following points.

The so-called independence of Transkei had been rejected by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU). The General Assembly by various resolutions—in particular by resolution 3411 D (XXX) of 28 November 1975<sup>18</sup>—had condemned the establishment of bantustans and had called on all Governments not to recognize them. Moreover, in its resolution 31/6 A of 26 October 1976 (see page 134), the Assembly had rejected the declaration of "independence" of Transkei, had declared it invalid, and had called upon all Governments to deny any form of recognition to Transkei. Also, they recalled, the Council of Ministers of OAU, at its June-July 1976 session in Mauritius, had invited all States not to accord recognition to any bantustan, particularly Transkei, and the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August 1976, had also urged all States not to accord it recognition.

In the view of these speakers, the question under discussion was clear: the racist régime of South Africa wished to pressure Lesotho into recognizing the so-called independent Transkei and then the policies of bantustanization and apartheid. Transkei was the first of 10 bantustans whose establishment on the borders of independent African States was designed by South Africa primarily to strengthen the white racist minority's grip and to serve as a means of blackmail to force the independent States of Africa to co-operate. As more bantustans bordering Swaziland and Botswana were brought into being, the same tactics would no doubt be applied by South Africa to coerce those States, whose economic lifelines ran through South Africa, to bring them to accept the situation.

These representatives stressed that the Government and people of Lesotho should not be left to stand alone to be cowed by the Pretoria régime. The Security Council, they said, should take appropriate steps: first, to implement effective measures against the racist régime of South Africa in order to end its defiance of United Nations resolutions and of world opinion; second, to condemn South Africa's plans to create so-called independent bantustans; and, third, to support Lesotho's plans for an emergency programme to offset the effects of closing the border.

The representative of France noted the censure that had been expressed of South Africa's attempt to coerce Lesotho into recognizing an entity—Transkei—whose establishment had been condemned by the entire international community. He said that the countries of the European Communities had already decided to grant emergency assistance to Lesotho. By recommending the granting to Lesotho of the aid required as a result of the situation imposed on it by South Africa, the Security Council would be carrying out an act of solidarity and justice. Similar views were expressed by Japan.

The spokesman for Sweden said that, by suddenly applying administrative measures against the traditional transit movements of people and goods between various parts of Lesotho through border areas of South Africa, the South African Government was trying to put pressure on Lesotho to give up its loyal support of the General Assembly's resolution 31/6 A of 26 October, in an obvious effort to force Lesotho to become the first country to have dealings with the so-called independent Transkei. Sweden, he said, considered it a natural and logical step by the international community to come to the support of the people of Lesotho in this difficult situation.

For several years, he went on to say, the Swedish Government had assisted the small independent countries in southern Africa with the purpose of supporting their efforts to preserve their independence and help them build an economy less dependent on South Africa. It should be a common task, he said, in particular for the industrialized countries, to encourage the economic strengthening of African States standing up to South Africa's ambition for domination; otherwise, the danger of neo-colonialism based in Pretoria would remain. It was Sweden's view that only when all African States had also gained their full economic independence could there be hope for an end to the new forms of imperial ambitions represented by the South African régime.

According to the representative of China, neither the evil doings on the part of the racists and colonialists nor the conspiratorial schemes on the part of imperialism and hegemonism could check the forward stride of the African people and the complete victory of their struggle for national liberation. The Security Council should: endorse Assembly resolution 31/6 A and, in the spirit of that resolution, sternly condemn the South African authorities for their scheme of concocting the sham independence of Transkei and their criminal activities against Lesotho and other countries; enjoin those authorities to put an immediate end to such schemes and criminal activities; and call upon all Governments and peoples to give firm support to the people of Lesotho and other parts of southern Africa in their just struggle against colonialism and racism until they won complete victory.

The USSR representative urged the Security Council to stand fully behind the General Assembly's decisions as expressed in its resolution 31/6 A. South Africa, in his view, was striving to conduct relations with the liberated African countries from a position of brute force and overt coercion, with the collusion of certain circles in Western countries and the broad economic co-operation of certain transnational monopolies which facilitated the development of South Africa's economy and military potential. The USSR, he said, would support a resolution by which the Council, condemning South Africa's actions and practices, would set forth steps that would force South Africa to end its blockade of Lesotho, would require the implementation of General Assembly and Security Council decisions demanding an end to military assistance, economic co-operation and other forms of help to South Africa, and would envisage steps to be taken to respond to the burdensome economic situation that had arisen in Lesotho.

At its meeting on 22 December, the Security Council, by consensus, adopted as resolution 402(1976) a draft proposal by Benin, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and the United Republic of Tanzania.

By the preamble to this text, the Council among other things: expressed grave concern at the serious situation created by South Africa's closure of certain border posts between South Africa and Lesotho aimed at coercing Lesotho into according recognition to the bantustan Transkei; noted with appreciation Lesotho's decision not to recognize the Transkei bantustan in compliance with United Nations decisions; and took note of the urgent and special economic needs of Lesotho arising from the closure of the border posts.

By the operative part of the text, the Council:

(1) endorsed General Assembly resolution 31/6 A of 26 October, by which the Assembly among other things called on all Governments to deny any form of recognition to the so-called independent Transkei and to refrain from having any dealings with it or with other bantustans;

(2) commended the Government of Lesotho for its decision not to recognize the so-called independence of Transkei;

(3) condemned any action by South Africa intended to coerce Lesotho into according recognition to the bantustan Transkei;

(4) called on South Africa immediately to reopen the border posts;

(5) appealed to all States to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Lesotho so that it could carry out its economic development programmes;

(6) requested the United Nations and the organizations and programmes concerned, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme and all the specialized agencies, to assist Lesotho and to consider periodically the question of such economic assistance to Lesotho;

(7) requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize, with immediate effect, all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to Lesotho to enable it to overcome the economic difficulties arising from the closure of the border posts;

(8) further requested him to keep the situation under constant review and to report to the Security Council at its subsequent meeting on the question; and

(9) decided to remain seized of the question.

The representative of the United States noted that one of the operative paragraphs of the resolution quoted and endorsed General Assembly resolution 31/6 A, on which the United States had abstained. He said his Government had already made it clear that it had no intention of recognizing the so-called Transkei. However, it reserved the right to attend to the welfare and protection of American citizens and the occasion might arise when it would be necessary to have some contact with the authorities of the entity in question.

The main purpose of the resolution, he added, was clearly to encourage assistance to Lesotho, and the United States had accordingly joined in the consensus. In that connexion, he noted that the United States was already extending substantial assistance to the Lesotho Government.

The United Kingdom representative said his Government endorsed the Council's appeal for economic assistance but did not think it appropriate for a Security Council resolution to endorse a resolution of the General Assembly. The functions of the Assembly and the Council were separate and it was neither appropriate nor necessary for one to have the endorsement of the other for its actions.

The representative went on to recall that, on the question of Transkei, the position of his Government had been clearly stated in the General Assembly in October 1976 during the debate on apartheid, when the Netherlands representative explained the vote of the nine member States of the European Communities to the effect that they did not intend to recognize the so-called independence of Transkei, and that that consensus decision of the Assembly did not prejudice the manner in which the nine Governments would deal with specific problems of a practical and legal nature with regard to that territory and its inhabitants.

The representative of the United Kingdom also said that his Government had been a major donor of aid to Lesotho over the years since its independence.

Resolution 402(1976), as proposed by 7 powers, S/12260, adopted by consensus by Council on 22 December 1976, meeting 1982.

The Security Council,

Having heard the statement of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Kingdom of Lesotho on 21 December 1976,

Gravely concerned at the serious situation created by South Africa's closure of certain border posts between South Africa and Lesotho aimed at coercing Lesotho into according recognition to the bantustan Transkei,

Recalling relevant General Assembly resolutions, in particular resolution 3411 D (XXX) of 28 November 1975, condemning the establishment of bantustans and calling on all Governments to deny recognition to the bantustans,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 31/6 A of 26 October 1976, on the so-called independent Transkei and other bantustans, which, inter alia, calls upon all Governments to deny any form of recognition to the so-called independent

Transkei and to refrain from having any dealings with the so-called independent Transkei or other bantustans,

Noting with appreciation the decision of the Government of Lesotho not to recognize the bantustan Transkei in compliance with United Nations decisions,

Considering that the decision of Lesotho constitutes an important contribution to the realization of United Nations objectives in southern Africa in accordance with the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking note of the urgent and special economic needs of Lesotho arising from the closure of the border posts,

1. Endorses General Assembly resolution 31/6 A, which, inter alia, calls upon all Governments to deny any form of recognition to the so-called independent Transkei and to refrain from having any dealings with the so-called independent Transkei or other bantustans;

2. Commends the Government of Lesotho for its decision not to recognize the so-called independence of the Transkei;

3. Condemns any action by South Africa intended to coerce Lesotho into according recognition to the bantustan Transkei;

4. Calls upon South Africa to take immediately all necessary steps to reopen the border posts;

5. Appeals to all States to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Lesotho so that it can carry out its economic development programmes and enhance its capacity to implement fully the United Nations resolutions on apartheid and bantustans;

6. Requests the United Nations and the organizations and programmes concerned, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme and all the United Nations specialized agencies, to assist Lesotho in the present situation and to consider periodically the question of economic assistance to Lesotho as envisaged in the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize, with immediate effect, all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to the Kingdom of Lesotho to enable it to overcome the economic difficulties arising from the closure of the border posts by South Africa owing to the refusal of Lesotho to recognize the so-called independence of the Transkei;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation under constant review, to maintain close liaison with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions, and to report to the Security Council at its subsequent meeting on the question;

9. Decides to remain seized of the question.

Complaint by Botswana

In a letter dated 22 December 1976, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Botswana drew attention to what he termed the serious acts of aggression committed against Botswana by the illegal white minority régime in the British colony of Southern Rhodesia. The most recent of these, he said, had occurred between 17 and 19 December 1976.

As a result of these acts, the letter went on, tension between Botswana and the illegal régime had mounted steadily. Under the pretext that Botswana was harbouring freedom fighters, the illegal régime had stepped up its acts of subversion, murder, arson and kidnapping, and continued to harass and blackmail the Government and people of Botswana into abandoning their support for the legitimate struggle of the people of Zimbabwe.

Transmitted with the letter was an excerpt from a statement made by the Vice-President of Botswana on 17 December, saying among other things that, since December 1966, Botswana had noted 31 violations of its territorial sovereignty by members of the Rhodesian security forces. With limited financial and human resources, Botswana could not hope to provide sufficient security forces to safeguard its border with Southern Rhodesia.

The representative of Botswana said that in the view of his Government the hostile acts of armed aggression endangered Botswana's security and constituted a threat to international peace and security. He therefore requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the serious situation.

The situation in Angola

Communications to Security Council (January-March 1976)

Between 19 January and 28 March 1976, the Security Council received a number of communications relating to the situation in Angola.

On 19 January 1976, the representative of Zaire transmitted a letter of 18 January addressed to the Secretary-General by the Commissioner of State of the Department of Foreign Affairs of Zaire. In the letter it was charged that, on 10 January, Cuban and USSR forces fighting in Angola with the Movimento Popular de Libertação de Angola (MPLA) had blown up the rail and road bridges linking Dilolo (Zaire) with Teixeira de Sousa (Angola) and had intensively bombed Dilolo. Those acts, the Commissioner added, were threatening the sovereignty, territorial integrity and security of his country.

The representative of Cuba rejected the charges in a letter dated 23 January, and denied that the Cuban presence in Angola was motivated by hostility towards Zaire, which he charged with helping the forces of aggression against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola.

In a letter dated 26 January, the representative of the USSR categorically rejected what he termed the slanderous fabrications contained in the letter from the representative of Zaire and said that, in reality, armed intervention was being carried out against the People's Republic of Angola by South African racists and mercenary units. It was no secret, he said, that South African troops and mercenary gangs were bringing with them the restoration of the former colonial order in Angola and were attempting to tear apart the People's Republic of Angola, which had been recognized by the majority of sovereign States of Africa. He also emphasized that not a single Soviet citizen was fighting on Angolan soil, nor was the USSR seeking any economic, military or other advantages there. Its sole concern was to help the People's Republic defend its freedom and independence against South African forces and mercenary units operating in Angolan territory. The USSR condemned the aggression of the South African racists against the People's Republic of Angola and, together with the majority of African countries, urged the immediate and unconditional withdrawal from Angola of South African armed forces and fascist mercenary units.

In three letters dated 22 January and 6 and 13 February, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa requested that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees provide emergency assistance for Angolan refugees and displaced persons currently in the care of the South African authorities.

In replies dated 11 and 17 February, the Secretary-General stated that according to the information provided by South Africa, the refugees concerned fell into two groups, namely, the group located in four camps in southern Angola near the border with Namibia, and the group consisting of those who sought entry at the port of Walvis Bay in Namibia. As to the first group, located on Angolan territory, he said that the United Nations would not be able to respond to South Africa's request since it could undertake programmes of humanitarian assistance only in co-operation with the competent authorities of the country concerned. He understood that arrangements were in hand for the dispatch of urgently needed supplies by the International Committee of the Red Cross.

As to the second group, the Secretary-General said that both he and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees had made an appeal that, for humanitarian considerations, the refugees be allowed to disembark pending a solution to their problems.

Commenting on South Africa's request, the representative of Cuba, in a letter dated 23 February, stated that South Africa sought to confuse public opinion and to conceal its aggressive actions by invoking humanitarian objectives. He added that the camps for refugees and displaced persons set up by South Africa were on Angolan territory, where South African troops had no right to be.

In a letter dated 10 March, the representative of Kenya, on behalf of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, requested a meeting of the Security Council to consider "the act of aggression committed by South Africa against the People's Republic of Angola."

By two letters dated 20 and 23 March, the representative of South Africa transmitted the texts of statements by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Defence of South Africa concerning the withdrawal of South African troops from the area of the Calueque Dam and from the area of the refugee camps. The Prime Minister said that the South African forces were at the Calueque Dam site solely to protect the lives of the workers and to safeguard the installations there. They had been forced to occupy the site in August 1975 because of the complete breakdown of law and order and had remained at the request of the Portuguese Government, he said. They would remain until assurances were received that no harm would come to the workers, that the work would continue and that the flow of water to Owambo would be assured. He added that his Government was considering assurances received through a third party. If it found them acceptable, it would withdraw its forces from the area not later than 27 March. The Minister of Defence in his statement said that the South African forces, with the exception of elements at Calueque and Ruacana, were now south of the border.

In the second letter, the representative of South Africa stated that the reference to the Calueque area in the Prime Minister's statement applied to the northern portion of the Ruacana construction site which fell within Angola, and to any other part of Angola,

In a letter dated 23 March, the representative of Portugal stated that the assertion—in South Africa's letter of 21 March—that the Portuguese Government had asked South Africa to remain in the Calueque area and to continue to assume responsibility for the safety of work in progress at the dam was completely without foundation. Portugal had given no advance authorization to South Africa to undertake such action and had not failed to protest, once it became aware of it.

By a letter dated 25 March, the representative of South Africa transmitted excerpts from a statement of that date by the South African Minister of Defence to the effect that South Africa had decided to withdraw all its forces from Angola by 27 March.

By a letter dated 28 March, he confirmed that the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola had been completed by 27 March.

Consideration by Security Council (26-31 March 1976)

The Security Council considered the complaint by Kenya made on behalf of the African group of States at meetings held between 26 and 31 March.

The Council President noted that the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Angola had requested that Pascal Luvualu, member of the Central Committee of the Movimento Popular de Libertação de Angola and Ambassador-at-Large of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Angola, be invited to participate in the Council's discussion. The President, after drawing attention to Article 32 of the Charter of the United Nations,<sup>19</sup> proposed that the request be acceded to.

The representative of the United States stated for the record that his Government had agreed to the participation in the discussion of representatives of MPLA on the customary understanding that such agreement in no way constituted an act of recognition.

With the consent of the Council, the President invited the Angolan representative to participate in the Council's discussion.

Also with the consent of the Council, the following were invited to participate in the discussion: the President and four members of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the representatives of Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea (in her capacity as

<sup>19</sup> Article 32 of the Charter reads as follows: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under consideration by the Security Council, shall be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it deems just for the participation of a state which is not a Member of the United Nations."

Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid), Guinea-Bissau, India, Kenya, Madagascar, Mali, Mozambique, Nigeria, Poland, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South Africa, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The representative of Angola said that his country, while still under the so-called Government of transition, had been the victim of an unjustified invasion: imperialism had sent into Angola not only mercenaries of diverse nationalities but also the regular South African army. The invasion had taken place at the exact moment when the puppet armies had been all but defeated and MPLA, the vanguard of the Angolan people, controlled most of the country. The purpose was to offset the failures of the internal agents of imperialism, to cut off the vanguard of the Angolan people and to prevent the declaration of independence scheduled for 11 November 1975.

The Angolan representative went on to say that he would not accuse individual countries or try to expose the various motives underlying that invasion but his country demanded that South African forces withdraw immediately from Angola. Not only was its sovereignty being violated on its southern boundary but there were violations of principles universally recognized by the international community. Certain circles in international politics had been concerned, he said, about Soviet and Cuban support for Angola, but when the South African invasion had apparently succeeded, those same voices remained silent. Only later, after 11 November and independence, was Angola accused of using the assistance of friendly countries to drive out the invader. In reality, Angola was exercising its sovereignty by asking for assistance from those that from the beginning had a clear understanding of the Angolan struggle. It was Angola's right to appeal to any country for help when necessary; any concern of that kind about Angola was unquestionably an unjustified interference in its internal affairs.

It was the situation in Namibia, South Africa and Zimbabwe that gave rise to concern, he went on. If the Namibian question had been settled, if South Africa had responded to the recommendations of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), then nothing out of the way would have occurred on Angola's southern boundary.

The South African invasion had caused great loss to the Angolan people, he declared. Aside from the barbaric massacres committed among the civilian population, South Africans had carried off with them goods essential to the Angolan economy. A considerable part of Angola's fleet had been taken, as well as trucks, thousands of prime-quality cattle, household and hotel furniture, and light aircraft. Money had been taken from banks, roads had been destroyed or damaged, as were bridges, airports, industrial factories and radio broadcasting stations. The South Africans had also taken with them to the Namibian border thousands of individuals, he declared.

Angola, the representative continued, had been accused of wanting to annex Namibia and to deprive its people of water and electricity. That was entirely false. Angola was a large, self-sufficient country. It would discuss with the Namibians the problem of the use of electricity and water from the Cunene River project when they gained their independence.

He said in conclusion that Angola demanded the unconditional withdrawal of the forces of the South African army and it hoped that the Council would take a decision so that the withdrawal might take place immediately. Angola also hoped that the Council would take action to see to it that South Africa guaranteed respect for the independence and territorial integrity of Angola, that it stopped using the territory of Namibia as a base for acts of aggression against Angola and that it returned material property and compensated Angola for the injury done to its economy and people.

The representative of Kenya, speaking as current Chairman of the African group of States, said that the group could do no less than ask the Security Council to condemn the racist régime of South Africa for using Namibia for aggressive purposes against the People's Republic of Angola and to demand that South Africa compensate Angola for the destruction it had inflicted there. The Council also had a straightforward duty to call once more on South Africa to vacate Namibia as soon as possible.

The representative of China charged that the South African racist régime, which had always harboured wild ambitions of aggression and expansion, had openly carried out armed aggression against Angola and directly interfered in its internal affairs under the pretext of protecting its so-called interests in Angola. Because of the stern condemnation and resolute struggles of the Angolan people, the African people and people throughout the world, the South African racist régime was forced to declare complete withdrawal of its aggressor troops from Angola on 27 March. Whether that became a reality remained to be seen, he added.

He went on to charge that the serious situation in Angola had been created by the fierce contention between the two hegemonic powers. China, he said, condemned Soviet social-imperialism for its aggression and intervention in Angola; some 1,000 Soviet military personnel and over 10,000 foreign mercenary troops supported by the Soviet Union, he charged, were hanging on in Angola and refused to withdraw. The Council could not evade such a serious state of affairs, still less condone it.

The USSR, he said, had supported one of the three Angolan liberation organizations against the other two, deliberately created division and time and again undermined the joint agreements and cease-fire agreements among the three liberation organizations. It alone had wrecked the transitional government which was a symbol of Angolan national unity. It had never extended any real support to the Angolan people during their protracted and courageous struggle to free themselves from Portuguese colonial rule. Right after the collapse of the old colonial rule and the attainment of independence by the Angolan people, it had sent tanks, rockets, armoured cars and fighter bombers, with a value of several hundred million dollars, in addition to military officers and mercenaries, to stir up and directly join the civil war.

The aggression and intervention by Soviet social-imperialism in Angola was by no means an accidental and isolated event, China's spokesman charged, but was the continuation of its ceaseless aggression and expansion abroad over the past decade and more, constituting a component part of its quest for South Atlantic and world hegemony in contention with the other super-power. It wanted to seize naval and air bases in Angola with a view to dominating the southern Atlantic, and it intended to make Angola a springboard for expansion in central and southern Africa, further undermine the national liberation movements in all of southern Africa and grab the region's strategic resources.

The representative of Guinea, speaking also as Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, said that to avert further acts of South African aggression against Angola it was imperative for the Council to take appropriate measures, as it had been requested to do by the General Assembly, to ensure the full application of the arms embargo against South Africa, without any exceptions or reservations, and the cessation of all military co-operation with that régime. It had become essential, she added, for the international community to take preventive measures by providing all necessary assistance to the Governments and peoples of the countries bordering on South Africa to help them consolidate their independence and resist South African aggression and pressure.

According to the Cuban representative, South Africa had launched its aggression against Angola in a desperate attempt to wrest complete victory from MPLA and frustrate genuine independence. Early in August 1975, South African armed forces had crossed the border of Namibia, occupied large parts of the southern part of Angola and, in conjunction with bands of Angolan traitors, had begun its armed intervention in what was then still a territory under Portuguese administration. The Portuguese Government had protested against that invasion. No other foreign military force had been in Angola at that time. Between August and October 1975, the imperialist interference continued, its purpose being to seize Luanda, the capital, and control the vital centres of the country before independence was declared on 11 November. He added that agents of the United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), white mercenaries and puppet troops had intervened at the side of the South Africans.

He went on to say that it was not until October that Cuba had sent its first instructors to Angola. When they arrived, the South Africans and their lackeys had been shamelessly intervening in the country for many months. Following a massive invasion by South African troops which marched on the capital while mercenaries attacked in the north, Cuba had decided on 5 November, at the request of MPLA, to send the first military unit to Angola.

The Cuban representative said that China's spokesman had tried to convey the impression that the People's Republic of Angola was not fighting against South African aggression, but that "mercenaries"—meaning Cubans and nationals of other African countries—fought on behalf of Angola "under the leadership of the Soviets." Cuba, he said, categorically rejected the racist, anti-African overtone of that assertion. He produced photographs and documents which he said had been found in the city of Carmona, showing Chinese advisers acting together with the CIA.

The representative of Zambia, speaking as President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, said the aggression committed against Angola by the racist régime of South Africa had been launched from Namibia, a territory under the direct responsibility of the United Nations. The illegal character of the presence of South Africa in Namibia had been stated by the International Court of Justice and repeatedly reaffirmed by the Security Council and the General Assembly. Therefore, in carrying out its act of aggression against Angola from Namibia, South Africa had compounded its defiance of the consensus of the international community against its illegal occupation of the territory. It had committed a double offence in international law.

South Africa, he went on to say, was reported to have withdrawn from Angola, but its withdrawal was into Namibia. Surely that was totally unacceptable, since Namibia was not part of South Africa. The Council had to condemn the withdrawal into Namibia as an attempt to mislead world opinion.

He also said that, as South Africa's presence in Namibia was illegal, it had no authority to negotiate new contracts regarding utilization of the Cunene River project. The legal authority with respect to Namibia rested with the United Nations Council for Namibia, he stated.

The representative of the USSR said that in August 1975 the armed columns of South Africa, equipped with tanks and armoured trucks and helped by mercenaries, were advancing from the south towards Luanda. Like all socialist countries, the USSR could not remain indifferent to the fate of the Angolan people and had decided to help them, but not because it had any interests in Angola. There were riches in Angola such as minerals and oil, but the USSR had more of them at home.

When South Africa went into Angola, he went on, it was not to defend a hydroelectric project but so that there would be no independent Angola; it wanted a colony where different kinds of companies would continue to exploit Angola's wealth. The USSR representative said his Government resolutely condemned the South African racists for their aggression against Angola and for their use of Namibia as a base for that aggression. But the South Africans were not alone: they were part of a multifarious alliance of the most reactionary forces in the modern world, which used the services of mercenaries who would kill anywhere in the world for dollars.

The USSR, he said, continued to extend moral, political, diplomatic and other types of aid and support to Angola. Although it had helped Angola to defend its independence, the hero of the struggle was the Angolan people and no one else. The USSR, he said, felt that peace in the area could be achieved only if there was no intervention and no aggression against Angola or any other African people struggling against racism and apartheid.

The representative of Pakistan said that the representative of Angola was within his rights in suggesting that Angola, as a sovereign and independent country, might choose to seek help where it wished, even to invite and retain within its borders the military forces of foreign countries that it considered friendly to its cause and whose assistance it felt it needed. The spokesmen for the Congo, Guinea-Bissau and Mali said that the aid which friendly socialist countries had made available to Angola at its request needed no justification.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Republic said the Council should adopt a resolution covering the following points: condemnation of the aggression committed by the racist régime of South Africa against Angola and the violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity; condemnation of the utilization by South Africa of the international territory of Namibia to commit that aggression; a demand that South Africa respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola; a demand that South Africa refrain from the utilization of Namibia to initiate acts of aggression against Angola; and a demand that South Africa pay full compensation for the damage inflicted on Angola as a result of the aggression and restore immediately to the people of Angola the equipment and material seized and looted by the invading forces. Several other speakers, among them Egypt, India, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the United Republic of Cameroon, Yugoslavia and Zambia, made similar recommendations for action by the Security Council.

The representative of South Africa said that as he spoke South Africa had no forces on Angolan territory and he wondered what justification there was for the current Council meeting. On the other hand, if the Council sought to identify the real threat to the stability of the African continent it need look no further than the alien army on Angolan soil, armed and supported by a huge foreign power on another continent and manipulated in the interest of its global ambitions. Not South Africa but that super-power, he declared, ought to account to the people of Angola and to the peoples of Africa for the brutal aggression they had committed in Angola. South Africa was accused of aggression when not a single South African soldier was still in Angola, although thousands of Cubans remained.

He went on to say that South Africa—unlike the USSR and Cuba—had played a very limited role in the recent events, motivated by essentially protective and humanitarian considerations. It had sought to protect a hydroelectric project constructed at great cost for purely peaceful purposes, and had been forced to undertake the purely humanitarian task of caring for thousands of displaced persons fleeing from the Soviet and Cuban onslaught. Any involvement of South Africa beyond that was the direct result of the intervention by the USSR and Cuba.

South Africa had expressed readiness to withdraw from Angolan soil on 5 September 1975, long before Angola became an independent State; however, because of the Portuguese Government's inability to provide the necessary protection, South Africa had had no choice but to protect the workers and the construction work at the Calueque Dam. Should the construction work on the dam be destroyed or not completed, the economic consequences to the people of Angola and to those of South West Africa would be tragic indeed, he added.

In September 1975, South Africa was told by Portugal that it had become physically impossible for Portugal to send the required forces to the area. Furthermore, in the last week of September, the Portuguese High Commissioner in Luanda had informed the South African authorities through an emissary that the Portuguese authorities would like South Africa's troops to stay until a take-over by the new Government of Angola.

On many occasions before and after the independence of Angola, he said, South Africa had declared that it would terminate its protective measures as soon as Angola was in a position to take over the task. South Africa had played its limited role in the hope that it would secure for the people of Angola the necessary time to reach a peaceful, political settlement for themselves or with the help of OAU, without interference from outside. Throughout, he stated, South Africa would have withdrawn immediately had the blatant interference by the USSR and Cuba ceased.

South Africa, he said, rejected all charges of plundering. With regard to refugees, South Africa had done everything in its power to interest the world in their plight. With the exception of the positive response of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), with limited facilities at its disposal, South Africa had had little success—so little, in fact, that it had eventually had to withdraw its assistance from the refugee camps. He was at a loss to understand how South Africa could be accused of having abducting thousands of individuals when in fact it had repeatedly, albeit unsuccessfully, called for the appropriate international bodies to relieve it of their care. On the other hand, no sooner had South Africa withdrawn its assistance than the refugees followed by the thousands, and South Africa was urged to continue caring for them. He deplored such double standards so blatantly applied.

The countries and peoples of southern Africa and their problems would not simply disappear from the map, he said, and an unrealistic Security Council resolution would not contribute one iota to a solution. South Africa had assiduously sought a peaceful solution of the differences that existed but it would never bargain over its right of existence and its right to govern itself.

The representative of Portugal rejected the arguments of the South African representative to the effect that South African troops had penetrated Angolan territory with the knowledge and prior agreement of the Portuguese Government. Presenting what he termed the correct version of the facts, he said that Portugal was not ready to provide unjustly any shield, pretext or justification for the invasion of the territory of Angola. Portugal had repeatedly confirmed and reconfirmed, by means of diplomatic protests, written notes and public statements, its opposition to the armed action undertaken by the Pretoria Government, an opposition he was currently once again confirming before the Security Council.

[In a letter dated 31 March and circulated as a Security Council document, the representative of South Africa responded to some of the points made by the Portuguese representative.]

The representative of Italy said his Government would favour any proposal based on the following points: the interests of the Angolan people; the lack of justification for the violation by South Africa of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola and the utilization of the international territory of Namibia to the same effect; the responsibility of the Security Council, which transcended the interests of each of its members; and the ending of any outside interference in Angola that would increase the danger of power politics and negatively affect any prospect for a peaceful and positive solution of the whole complex situation in the southern part of Africa.

He noted that the member States of the European Communities had, on 23 February, among other things condemned all foreign military intervention in Angola, and had later urged the immediate withdrawal of South African forces from Angolan territory.

The representative of the United Kingdom said his Government had refused to intervene in any way in the internal affairs of Angola and had consistently maintained that the future of the country was for the people of Angola alone to decide. The United Kingdom had also consistently stated that South African troops had no right whatsoever, morally or legally, to intervene in the affairs of Angola and had urged South Africa to withdraw its forces from Angola immediately. But, he said, his wider concern was the withdrawal of all foreign troops. Their continued presence anywhere in southern Africa could only make more difficult an African solution to an African problem and could only make the white minority régimes of Rhodesia and Namibia still more stubborn in their resistance to international opinion. The responsibility for what was happening rested with those in southern Africa who had consistently denied to Africans their basic human rights; but African questions were best settled by Africans. As far as the United Kingdom was concerned, he added, Western imperialism was dead. It would be a tragic irony if new imperialisms were to arise in its place.

The representative of the United States said that the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola could only serve to highlight the tragic fact that there remained other, larger interventions in southern Africa. The continued illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa was one case of such wrongful international behaviour; another was the presence in the African continent of a large Cuban expeditionary force, numbering over 13,000 men—an adventure which could never have been begun or continued without the support of the USSR, and which was based on the assumption that Cuba could introduce itself as an arbiter of intra-African affairs. That was a dangerous precedent, he said, not only for Africa but for the entire world.

Just as the end to South Africa's wrongful intervention was very welcome, he went on, so the continuing Cuban and USSR intervention was wrong, because it deprived the Angolan people of the ability to exercise self-determination freely and because of its massive size. The radical departure from modern African tradition represented by the massive Cuban movement in Angola must be terminated, he stated. The continued presence of combat forces in Africa ran the risk of establishing a pattern of action and competition for foreign sponsorship that could fundamentally undermine what had been achieved in Africa over the past 20 years.

According to the spokesman for France, there was no excuse for those who, under the pretext of civil war and the weakening of sovereignty resulting therefrom, had violated the territory of a country. It was undeniable that South Africa's behaviour corresponded neither to the historical requirements of decolonization nor to the independence of a State that wished to live at peace with other countries of the region. It was for Africans to define their destiny without any interference in the exercise of their sovereignty. Angola's civil war was no excuse for intervention by the Pretoria authorities or others.

The Swedish representative said that military attacks of such magnitude and duration as were made by South African forces against Angola's territory had clearly to be characterized as aggression. The fact that South Africa used its illegal occupation of Namibia for aggressive purposes was a further aggravating factor. South Africa's action, he stated, was clearly inadmissible under international law and the Charter.

The Council President, speaking as the representative of Benin, said it was high time that those who supported the régime that had been rejected by the international community realized that profound political changes were taking place in southern Africa. They should give up the anachronistic policy of supplying arms to the clique of B. J. Vorster to perpetuate his régime and to give up trying blindly to stop the wheel of history. It was clear that, if the will existed, the backbone of the apartheid régime could be broken. It was a snake that had to be killed at all costs and Benin would truly and warmly applaud its traditional friends if they could decide, one day, to help Africa administer the coup de grace to that abject régime.

In the view of the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, the Council had a clear responsibility to take concrete actions to put an end to the dangerous policies of expansion, harassment, provocation and aggression that seemed to be part of the grand arsenal of the apartheid régime of South Africa, whose main objective in invading Angola had been a last-minute desperate attempt to rob the people of Angola of victories they had won after their heroic armed struggle led by MPLA.

On behalf of Benin, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Panama, Romania and the United Republic of Tanzania, he then introduced a draft resolution by the preambular part of which the Council would, among other things, recall the principle that no State or group of States had the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other State, as well as recall the inherent and lawful right of every State, in the exercise of its sovereignty, to request assistance from any other State or group of States. The Council would express grave concern at the acts of aggression committed by South Africa against the People's Republic of Angola and the violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, condemn the utilization by South Africa of the international territory of Namibia to mount that aggression, express concern at the damage and destruction done by the South African invading forces and by their seizure of Angolan equipment and materials, and note the letter of 18 March from South Africa regarding the withdrawal of its troops.

By the operative part of the six-power text, the Council would:

(1) condemn South Africa's aggression against the People's Republic of Angola;

(2) demand that South Africa scrupulously respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola;

(3) demand also that South Africa desist from the utilization of Namibia to mount provocative or aggressive acts against Angola or any other neighbouring State;

(4) call on South Africa to meet the just claims of Angola for full compensation for the damage and destruction inflicted and for the restoration of the equipment and materials which its invading forces seized; and

(5) request the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the resolution.

On 31 March 1976, the six-power draft text was adopted by the Council by 9 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions (France, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States) as resolution 387 (1976). China did not participate in the vote.

(For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Chinese representative, explaining his non-participation in the vote, said the resolution's provisions failed to condemn Soviet social-imperialism and its mercenaries for their intervention and aggression against Angola, and had not reflected the just demand for their complete and immediate withdrawal from Angola. Among other objections, he said that the text could set a dangerous precedent for the super-powers to create pretexts to commit aggression and intervention against other sovereign States, and China absolutely could not agree to it.

The representatives of France, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States said they could not support the text because, while the intervention of South Africa in Angola was mentioned and rightly condemned, they would have liked to see that condemnation extended to all foreign military intervention in Angola. France and the United Kingdom had reservations concerning the use of the term "aggression" since, with the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola, it applied to a situation in the past. They also felt that the Security Council was not the appropriate forum to determine questions of restitution and compensation for damages.

Communications (November 1976)

On 12 November 1976, the representative of South Africa transmitted a letter addressed to the Secretary-General by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of his country, stating that South Africa was still caring for 3,400 Angolan refugees. A new wave of refugees, approximately 2,700 in number, had crossed the border from Angola to Owambo, and South Africa was also caring for them. He asked that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees be authorized to lend his active assistance in the matter.

In a reply dated 22 November, the Secretary-General expressed his concern over the plight of the latest group of refugees which had crossed the border from Angola to Namibia the previous week but stated that, in accordance with the decisions of the United Nations General Assembly, South Africa did not have legal standing in the territory of Namibia and was therefore not a competent authority with which the United Nations could deal in resolving the problem. The Secretary-General said he had discussed with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees the possibility of enlisting the co-operation of ICRC in channelling assistance to the refugees which the United Nations might be able to provide.

Resolution 387(1976), as proposed by 6 powers, S/12030, adopted by Council on 31 March 1976, meeting 1906, by 9 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions (France, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States) (China did not participate in voting).

The Security Council,

Having considered the letter of the Permanent Representative of Kenya on behalf of the African Group of States at the United Nations,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the People's Republic of Angola,

Recalling the principle that no State or group of States has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other State,

Recalling also the inherent and lawful right of every State, in the exercise of its sovereignty, to request assistance from any other State or group of States,

Bearing in mind that all Member States must refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned at the acts of aggression committed by South Africa against the People's Republic of Angola and the violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity,

Condemning the utilization by South Africa of the international Territory of Namibia to mount that aggression,

Gravely concerned also at the damage and destruction done by the South African invading forces in Angola and by their seizure of Angolan equipment and materials,

Noting the letter of the Permanent Representative of South Africa regarding the withdrawal of South African troops,

1. Condemns South Africa's aggression against the People's Republic of Angola;

2. Demands that South Africa scrupulously respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the People's Republic of Angola;

3. Demands also that South Africa desist from the utilization of the international Territory of Namibia to mount provocative or aggressive acts against the People's Republic of Angola or any other neighbouring African State;

4. Calls upon the Government of South Africa to meet the just claims of the People's Republic of Angola for a full compensation for the damage and destruction inflicted on its State and for the restoration of the equipment and materials which its invading forces seized;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

Communications to Security Council (January-February 1976)

In a telegram dated 28 January 1976 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Head of State of the Comoros said that the French Government intended to organize a referendum in the island of Mayotte on 8 February 1976. Mayotte, the telegram stated, was an integral part of Comorian territory under the French laws which had recognized the defacto and de jure unity of the Comorian archipelago ever since 1912. On 12 November 1975, the United Nations had admitted to membership the Comorian State consisting of the four islands of Anjouan, Mayotte, Mohéli and Grande-Comore. In view of this flagrant aggression, the telegram went on, the Head of the Comorian State was requesting that the Security Council be convened urgently, in order to maintain peace in the archipelago and take all necessary action to safeguard the integrity of the Comoros.

The representative of Guinea-Bissau, on behalf of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, in a letter dated 3 February, also requested a Security Council meeting to consider the request of the Government of the Comoros.

On 4 February the representative of Uganda transmitted a message from the President of Uganda, current Chairman of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), on the position of OAU regarding France's proposed referendum in Mayotte. He said that Mayotte was an integral part of the Comoros and that any attempt by France to conduct a referendum there constituted a gross interference in the internal affairs of an independent OAU member State and had to be deemed an act of aggression.

The message went on to say that recent history had shown that referendums carried out by France in its colonial territories had had the effect of perpetuating French colonial status in Africa. Knowing this, the overwhelming majority of the population of the Comoros, through a referendum of 22 December 1974, totally rejected France's manoeuvres on the archipelago and expressed their desire to accede to full independence. The Comoros was facing serious difficulties as a result of France's retaliatory measures; OAU called on France to stop its malicious policies and on the world community to assist the young State to consolidate its hard-won independence.

Consideration by Security Council (4-6 February 1976)

The Security Council considered the question at meetings held on 4, 5 and 6 February 1976. The representatives of Algeria, the Comoros, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Madagascar, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia and Somalia, at their request, were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The representative of the Comoros read out the telegram of 28 January from the Head of the Comorian State, and said the head of his delegation would make a full statement on his arrival.

The representative of France, reviewing the background of the matter, said that on 22 December 1974 France had organized a consultation of the Comorian population, whose results showed a strong majority of voters in favour of independence. However, two thirds of the votes from the island of Mayotte had been negative. In order to take into account that difference of opinion, the French Parliament had on 30 June 1975 adopted a law providing for the drafting of a constitution that would preserve the political and administrative identity of the islands. In order to come into effect, he said, that constitution had to be approved by a majority of voters in each of the four islands. Only the French Parliament, he stressed, could on that basis decide to transfer sovereignty, but the Chamber of Deputies of the Comoros, ignoring this procedure, decided on 5 July 1975 to proclaim independence. In spite of that unilateral action, France had taken cognizance of the new situation and on 31 December 1975 the French Parliament had adopted a law recognizing the independence of the islands of Grande-Comore, Anjouan and Mohéli, but providing that the people of Mayotte should have a choice between remaining within the French Republic or being integrated into the new Comorian State. That consultation, he said, would be held on 8 February 1976, in conformity with the French constitutional provisions.

The French representative went on to say that France had not objected to the admission of the Comoros to the United Nations but it had made a reservation at the time to the effect that it could not agree to a geographical definition of the State which prejudged the will of the people concerned.

The referendum to be held on 8 February, he went on, was in scrupulous observance of the principle of self-determination. He wondered how it could be regarded as "aggression" to ask the inhabitants of Mayotte to choose their future. They had the right to clarify their will as to their future and France had the duty to provide them with the means for making a democratic and impartial choice. It was ready to invite—as observers of the voting—representatives of members or non-members of the Council who wished to attend.

The representative of Guinea-Bissau maintained that France had the moral obligation to preserve the group of four islands as a united republic and a viable entity. He saw the case of Mayotte as one of political manipulation of local parties by the French Government, in order to preserve some degree of French influence in the area. He appealed to France not to carry out the referendum. Similar views were expressed by Algeria, Benin, Equatorial Guinea, Kenya, Madagascar and Nigeria, among others.

The representative of the Comoros said the people of his country would never accept a division, of whatever nature, of their new State. France, he said, had never questioned the unity of the archipelago, but now it seemed determined to remain in Mayotte indefinitely, despite the global vote for independence.

The representative of Pakistan said that, in accepting the Security Council's recommendation to admit the Comoros to membership, the General Assembly had specified that the State should consist of the four islands which had always formed part of its territory; France's reservation on that decision could not affect the legal validity of the Assembly's action.

Several other speakers—China, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Sweden and the USSR—urged unconditional respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comorian State.

The spokesman for Japan said that, in the absence of a solution mutually acceptable to the two parties, talks between France and the Comoros should resume; the French Government might find it conducive to a settlement to suspend the Mayotte referendum pending the outcome of the talks.

The representative of the United Kingdom said his Government understood both the strongly held view of the Government of the Comoros that its former colonial boundaries should be retained now that it was independent and the constitutional imperatives with which the French Government was confronted. The United Kingdom hoped that the differences between the two Governments could be settled by continuing negotiations.

On 6 February, a draft resolution sponsored by Benin, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Panama and the United Republic of Tanzania received 11 votes in favour, 1 against (France), and 3 abstentions (Italy, United Kingdom, United States); it was not adopted, owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Security Council.

By the preambular paragraphs of this rejected text, the Council among other things would have recalled General Assembly resolution 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974,<sup>20</sup> by which the Assembly reaffirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago. It would also have recalled that Assembly resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975<sup>21</sup>—by which the Comoros was admitted to membership in the United Nations—had reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli. It would have expressed its concern at any action or threat of action likely to violate the unity and territorial integrity of the Comorian State, and its concern at the declared intention of the French Government to organize a referendum in Mayotte on 8 February 1976.

By the operative paragraphs of the five-power draft resolution, the Security Council would have:

(1) considered that holding such a referendum constituted interference in the internal affairs of the Comoros;

(2) called upon France to desist from proceeding with it;

(3) called upon France to respect, and to refrain from taking any action which might jeopardize, the independence, sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comorian State;

(4) requested France to enter into immediate negotiations with the Comoros to take appropriate measures to safeguard the unity and territorial integrity of the State of the Comoros composed of the four islands;

(5) requested all States to respect faithfully that unity and territorial integrity; and

(6) asked the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the resolution and report to the Council as soon as possible.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the French representative said France could not disregard the problem posed by Mayotte and could not let an international decision go through that would pre-judge the solution of the difficulty. The French Government, he said, remained sincerely ready to undertake negotiations with the Comoros on the differences of opinion between the two States.

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania said that, despite what had happened in the Council and despite the veto that France had exercised, he believed that the responsible authorities in France would pay heed to the overwhelming support of the Council for the Comorians. He hoped that the framework of the negotiations would take into account the decision which the Council would have taken but for the veto.

The representative of the Comoros said that, but for the French veto, the Security Council would have adopted a resolution confirming and reinforcing the legitimate position of his Government. He hoped that the responsible authorities in France would reconsider their current course of action.

By a letter dated 13 February, the representative of Madagascar transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a message dated 9 February from the President of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar stating, among other things, that the first referendum held by France in December 1974 should have settled once and for all the question of the Comoro Archipelago, since in any event the Comoros became a Member of the United Nations in November 1975. Under these circumstances, Madagascar failed to understand why another referendum should be held on the same question. The balkanization of the Comoros would resolve nothing and friendly co-operation between France and the Comoros would be more effective if conducted through a united, free and independent grouping of the Comoros, from which Mayotte would naturally benefit. The Malagasy people, the message said, considered their independence incomplete as long as portions of African territory remained under foreign domination.

The President of Madagascar requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with OAU and the non-aligned group of States, to do everything possible to eliminate the various sources of tension which stood to endanger the security of the countries in the region and to serve imperialist aims of delaying the establishment of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, free of foreign military bases and of all foreign military presence.

Consideration by General Assembly

By a letter dated 30 August 1976, the representative of Madagascar, on behalf of the group of African States at the United Nations, requested that an item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte" be included in the agenda of the General Assembly's thirty-first (1976) session.

An explanatory memorandum said that, at their

June-July 1976 meeting in Mauritius, the Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity had considered that so-called referendums of 8 February and 11 April 1976 imposed on the inhabitants of the Comorian island of Mayotte constituted aggression against the whole of the Comorian people and a violation of the territorial integrity of the Comorian islands, and that the continued occupation of Mayotte by France was a flagrant violation of the principles and relevant resolutions of OAU upholding the inalterable character of the borders inherited from the colonial administration.

The General Assembly considered the question at seven plenary meetings held between 18 and 21 October.

The representative of the Comoros said that by an abuse of its right of veto, France had been able to obstruct Security Council condemnation of French aggression against the Comorian State on the island of Mayotte. In organizing belated, unjustified and illegal referendums on Mayotte, after the Comorian State had been admitted in its entirety to membership in the United Nations, France once again revealed its total scorn for its own institutions and its commitments to the Comorian people.

The representative of France said that the right of peoples to self-determination had been and remained his country's guiding principle with regard to decolonization. In that spirit France could not ignore the existing differences between the population of Mayotte and that of the other parts of the Comorian archipelago. These differences had been clearly expressed in freely conducted referendums. France, he said, was not in Mayotte arbitrarily or through force but by the democratic choice of a freely consulted people. He quoted a statement by the French Minister for Foreign Affairs earlier in the session to the effect that France was prepared to forget any misunderstandings of the past and was looking only to the future; the proposal on the status of Mayotte, to be submitted to the French Parliament, would leave open all possibilities, with due respect for the wishes of the people.

During the discussion, the spokesmen for a large number of States urged support for the territorial integrity of the Comoros and insisted that France withdraw from the island of Mayotte.

The representative of Benin charged that the question of Mayotte had been artificially created by French colonialists and neo-colonialists in a last-minute attempt to consolidate in the Mozambique Channel the strategic position of Western imperialism, which was more and more threatened by the dislocation of the Portuguese empire. He deplored the alleged referendums of 8 February and 11 April 1976 and the suppression of all French assistance to the new State. Mozambique's representative said his Government felt that the establishment of French bases in the Indian Ocean constituted a menace to the freedom of the peoples of African and Asian States. He also deplored the situation created by the cut-off of all French financial, economic and cultural assistance to the Comorian State and called on Member States to help meet the needs of the Comoros.

According to the Somali representative, France, instead of decolonizing Mayotte, had recolonized it in utter disregard of the expressed wishes of the people and of France's own commitment. He and several other speakers noted that OAU had condemned France for its action. The representative of Sri Lanka for his part noted that the fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, in August 1976, had among other things condemned and considered null and void the referendums of 8 February and 11 April and had rejected in advance any other kind of referendum in Mayotte or any French legislation aimed at legalizing any sort of French colonial presence in Mayotte. It had also demanded that France immediately withdraw its occupation troops from the island and appealed to all its members to provide technical and material assistance to the State of the Comoros to enable it to cope with its serious difficulties.

The Chinese representative said that the State sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros had to be protected and respected and the island of Mayotte, an inalienable part of the territory of the State of the Comoros, had to be returned to the Comorian people.

The representative of Japan observed that in the two referendums almost all participants had expressed their preference for being part of France. The Assembly faced a real dilemma in which the fundamental principles of territorial integrity and self-determination were in conflict and had to be reconciled. He hoped the dialogue between France and the Comoros would soon be resumed.

On 21 October, by a recorded vote of 102 to 1, with 28 abstentions, the Assembly adopted, as resolution 31/4, a draft text sponsored by 43 Member States.

By the preambular paragraphs of the text, the Assembly, among other things, recalled that the people of the republic of the Comoros as a whole, in the referendum of 22 December 1974, had expressed by an overwhelming majority their will to accede to independence in conditions of political unity and territorial integrity. The referendums imposed on the inhabitants of the Comorian island of Mayotte, the Assembly considered, constituted a violation of the sovereignty of the Comorian State and of its territorial integrity, and occupation of Mayotte by France constituted a flagrant encroachment on the national unity of the Comorian State—a Member of the United Nations. The Assembly also considered that such an attitude on the part of France constituted a violation of the principles of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, in particular of Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960<sup>22</sup> concerning the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples, which guaranteed the national unity and territorial integrity of such countries.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly:

(1) condemned and considered null and void the referendums of 8 February and 11 April 1976 organized by France in the Comorian island of Mayotte and rejected (a) any other form of referendum or consultation which might be organized in Mayotte by France, and (b) any foreign legislation purporting to legalize any French colonial presence on Comorian territory in Mayotte;

(2) strongly condemned the presence of France in Mayotte, which constituted a violation of the national unity, territorial integrity and sovereignty of the independent republic of the Comoros;

(3) called on France to withdraw immediately from Mayotte and to respect its sovereignty;

(4) invited all Member States to render effective assistance, individually and collectively, to the Comorian State and to co-operate with it in all fields with a view to enabling it to defend and safeguard its independence, the integrity of its territory and its national sovereignty;

(5) appealed to all Member States to intervene, individually and collectively, with the Government of France to persuade it to abandon its plan to detach Mayotte from the Comoros; and

(6) called upon the Government of France to enter into negotiations immediately with the Government of the Comoros concerning the implementation of the resolution.

A number of countries—including Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland (speaking also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden), Italy, the Netherlands, Paraguay, Portugal, Spain, Turkey and the United Kingdom—said they had had to abstain from voting on the 43-power text because it contained language which could serve only to exacerbate the differences between the parties and was not conducive to a reconciliation of common interests or to constructive and fruitful negotiations.

and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights—the General Assembly among other things condemned any interference in the internal affairs of the Comoros and demanded the immediate withdrawal of the French administration from the Comorian island of Mayotte. (For details, see pp. 590-91.)

Communications from France and Somalia concerning an incident of 4 February 1976

Communications to Security Council (February 1976)

In a letter dated 4 February 1976, the representative of France requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider an incident which had taken place on the same day at the post of Loyada on the frontier between the French Territory of the Afars and the Issas<sup>23</sup> and Somalia. The incident had occurred when French forces, which were engaged in freeing a bus in which 31 children were being held hostage, had been fired upon from Somali territory and had been obliged to react to protect themselves and the children.

By a note dated 5 February, the representative of Somalia transmitted a telegram addressed to the Secretary-General on 26 January by the President of the Supreme Revolutionary Council of the Somali Democratic Republic, drawing attention to the critical situation in French Somaliland and its implication for the stability and peace of the region. The President appealed to the Secretary-General to intervene in order to assist the people of that territory to attain unconditional independence.

On 5 February, the representative of Somalia requested an urgent meeting of the Council to consider, as a matter of urgency, what he termed an act of open and unprovoked aggression by France against Somalia. He charged that on 4 February French armed forces based in French Somaliland had launched an attack with tanks, armoured cars and heavy artillery on the border town of Loyada in the Somali Democratic Republic, killing and injuring a number of people, including women and children, and destroying all buildings in the town. On 10 February, the representative of Somalia gave details of the Somali casualties suffered in the incident.

The representative of France, in a letter dated 11 February, said that, as the incident had not led to any immediate consequences and the situation had returned to normal, his Government considered it unnecessary for the Council to convene immediately. He rejected absolutely the accusation of aggression and gave a detailed account of the incident which, he said, showed that French forces had merely responded to fire directed at them by troops in position on the Somali side of the frontier. France, he said, deeply regretted it if any Somali civilians had been killed or wounded, and appreciated the return on 7 February of a child abducted to Somalia by terrorists. In an addendum, the representative of France provided a sketch map of the locality, indicating where the incident had occurred.

By a letter dated 13 February, the representative of Somalia requested the circulation of a letter he had addressed on 11 February to the President of the Security Council, in which he had said that although his request for a meeting remained standing, he would not press for a meeting until the following week, in view of initiatives taken by a third party to mediate in the matter.

In a letter dated 18 February, the representative of Somalia said that serious, meaningful effort had not been reciprocated by the other party during the week's postponement. Therefore, he requested the President of the Security Council to convene an urgent meeting of the Council to consider his Government's complaint of aggression by France.

Consideration by Security Council (18 February 1976)

The Security Council considered the matter at a meeting held on 18 February. The representatives of Ethiopia and Somalia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The representative of France said that on 3 February, at 7 a.m., four armed terrorists claiming to be members of the Front de liberation de la Côte des Somalis (FLCS) seized a school bus, in a suburb of Djibouti, that was carrying 30 children from six to 12 years of age. The driver was forced at gunpoint to run through a police barrier and head for the Somali frontier, where he was forced to place the bus some 10 or 15 metres from the Somali barrier. The terrorists then revealed the conditions—which were political in nature—under which they would free the children.

At the end of the morning, the representative of France continued, a man calling himself the Vice-President of FLCS, an organization with headquarters in Mogadiscio, claimed that FLCS was responsible for the kidnapping. The French Minister for Foreign Affairs immediately requested the Ambassador of Somalia in Paris to intervene with his Government out of humanitarian considerations. On the same day, the French Ambassador in Mogadiscio asked to be received by Somalia's Minister for Foreign Affairs. For 48 hours he was unable to make any contact with the Somali Government.

On the morning of 4 February, the Somali Consul in Djibouti, who had spent the night at the Somali frontier post, brought before French officials at the frontier three messengers from FLCS who handed to those officials a typewritten list recapitulating the political demands of the terrorists and specifying that the French Government had 24 hours to comply or else the children would be executed. When he was asked to intervene as a mediator and for humanitarian reasons, the Consul refused, saying that the matter concerned only France and FLCS and that he did not wish to be involved in any way.

In the afternoon, the French representative went on to say, the children's lives seemed gravely threatened by the behaviour of the terrorists, who appeared increasingly nervous, and the French authorities decided to take action. At exactly 3.45 p.m., five marksmen fired simultaneously and killed five terrorists. The sixth terrorist managed to fire a machine-gun volley at the children, who had instinctively lain down inside the bus; he killed one and wounded five others, as well as a social worker and the bus driver, before being killed himself by one of the French soldiers. Immediately thereafter, two rapid-fire automatic weapons opened fire from a small wood located in Somali territory to the east of the frontier post, and several marksmen on the balconies of the Somali frontier post fired at the French soldiers. A French lieutenant was severely wounded. The French forces returned the fire, and in a few minutes had silenced the two automatic weapons and the marksmen who were on the balconies.

The French representative went on to say that it could not seriously be claimed that the French forces had attacked the village of Loyada or that "all the buildings" of Loyada had been destroyed: eye-witnesses had been able to ascertain that the village was still standing and had suffered no damage.

He said that France deeply regretted any loss among Somali civilians during the brief encounter between French forces and the accomplices of the terrorists stationed on Somali territory. France wanted relations of friendship and good neighbourliness with Somalia and was prepared at any time to enter into talks with the authorities in Mogadiscio.

The representative of Somalia stated that on 4 February French troops, supported by armoured cars, positioned along the border of French Somaliland and the Somali Democratic Republic, launched an unprovoked attack on the Somali customs post and village of Loyada. The French armed units opened intensive fire and crossed the border into the territory of Somalia. People on the Somali side were fired upon indiscriminately and, as a result of the vicious attack, 15 men, women and children were killed and 14 others wounded, some of them very seriously.

The French assertion that Somali armed forces instigated the Loyada incident was completely untrue, he said. There were no Somali military units in the area. There were no marksmen on the balconies of the Loyada customs post or anywhere else in the area, nor were there machine-guns in the possession of any customs policemen. Any machine-guns fired on the Somali side of the border during the incident belonged to the French forces who had crossed into Somali territory.

When reports of the kidnapping reached Mogadiscio that day, the Somali Government instructed the Somali Consul in Djibouti to offer his good offices to ensure that no harm came to the children and that they would be released. He proceeded to Loyada that same afternoon, with the knowledge and co-operation of the French authorities, and contacted the kidnappers, who said they would not enter into any negotiations in the absence of their leaders.

Early on 4 February 1976, in response to the Consul's request, three FLCS emissaries arrived at Loyada; the Consul immediately informed the French authorities of their arrival, and they were permitted to approach the bus. Although the emissaries could not obtain the immediate release of the children, they did succeed in persuading the kidnappers to allow the children to receive food and drink, medicine and blankets.

The Somali Consul returned to Djibouti encouraged by the successful contact made with the kidnappers and hopeful that the children would be released unharmed in due course. He urged the French authorities not to take precipitate action, as a high-level delegation was to reach Loyada in the afternoon to secure the children's release. The French authorities, however, were bent on taking dramatic action rather than on handling the situation with the restraint it demanded. The mediators, ironically, were among those shot to death by the French sharpshooters. The tragic death of one child in the assault on the bus and the wounding of several other children were the direct result of the intemperate and precipitate action of the legionnaires, whose bloody and mercenary-like methods had long been familiar not only to the people of French Somaliland but to those in all parts of the former French colonial empire.

Throughout the years, the Somali spokesman went on to say, France had always resisted demands by the General Assembly for the dispatch of observers to French Somaliland. In view of the threatening situation which existed there, and in view of the conflicting versions of the Loyada incident that had been given, the Security Council should arrange for the immediate dispatch of a fact-finding mission to the area to ascertain the truth and assess the extent of the damage to life and property at Loyada to determine the compensation to be paid by France.

He then requested the Security Council to take particular note of the Assembly's finding that the situation in French Somaliland had become a threat to the peace and stability of the region and could have adverse effects on international peace and security.

The French representative read from the text of a statement of the French Government made on 31 December 1975 confirming that the French Territory of the Afars and the Issas was destined for independence and stipulating the ways and means of obtaining that end. The statement, he said, left no room for doubt as to the intentions of the French Government.

At the end of the Council's meeting, the President said he would remain in touch with Council members concerning further meetings or consultations on the matter.

On 18 February, the representatives of France and Somalia submitted sets of photographs each had referred to during the Security Council's meeting.

On 3 March, the representative of Somalia transmitted the text of a position paper regarding current developments in French Somaliland (Djibouti). In this document, the Government of Somalia among other things expressed its concern at the increasingly tense and dangerous situation in French Somaliland resulting from repressive measures taken by the French authorities and its disappointment that such measures were being taken at a time when France had formally declared its intention to grant the territory full independence. It charged that France intended to grant nominal independence to the territory while maintaining a military base in Djibouti, and was insisting on maintaining a pro-French puppet régime in power. Those steps were part of a French manoeuvre to perpetrate a form of neo-colonialism in defiance of the resolutions of the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations and other international bodies.

Economic assistance to Angola

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly considered the question of assistance to Angola. It adopted a resolution (31/188) by which it expressed its deep concern at the widespread destruction and damage caused to the social and economic infrastructure during the struggle for independence in Angola and in defence of its national sovereignty.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to mobilize an international programme for financial, technical and material assistance, with a view to channelling the proceeds into an international reconstruction fund for Angola to meet its development needs. The Assembly appealed to all Member States and economic and financial institutions concerned to provide assistance, and requested the Committee for Development Planning to consider the question of including Angola in the list of least developed countries. The Assembly also invited, in the meantime, Member States and the organizations of the United Nations system to grant Angola benefits comparable to those enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries. It further strongly recommended that Angola be included in the list of countries most seriously affected by the international economic crisis and that it be considered by the United Nations Special Fund for urgent assistance. Finally, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to keep the matter under review and to report at its 1977 session.

The resolution was adopted without a vote by the Assembly on 21 December 1976. On 13 December, the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the text by consensus; it was submitted by Pakistan (on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing Member States) and by Portugal. Oral drafting changes were made by the sponsors.

Resolution 31/188, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/338/Add.2, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the widespread destruction and damage caused to the social and economic infrastructure during the course of the struggle for independence in Angola and in defence of its national sovereignty,

Taking note of the inadequate base of socio-economic development in the rural areas inherited from the colonial period,

Considering the urgent problem of absorbing and resettling the large numbers of returning refugees into the permanent fabric of society,

Further concerned by the adverse effects which the international economic situation continues to impose on the weakened economy of Angola,

Recalling its resolution 3421(XXX) of 8 December 1975 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Recalling further recommendation 99(IV) of 31 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, particularly paragraph 4 thereof, in which the Conference recommended that measures of assistance should be undertaken by the appropriate organs of the United Nations system in favour of the newly independent States of Africa,

Welcoming the efforts of the Government and the people of Angola aimed at national reconstruction,

Taking note of the statement made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Angola before the General Assembly on 1 December 1976 proposing the establishment of an international fund for the national reconstruction of Angola,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize an international programme for financial, technical and material assistance with a view to channelling the proceeds into an international reconstruction fund for Angola to meet its long-term and short-term development needs;

2. Urgently appeals to all Member States and to the international economic and financial institutions concerned to respond generously to the needs of Angola and to provide assistance on a bilateral and/or multilateral basis;

3. Requests the Committee for Development Planning at its thirteenth session, as a matter of priority, to consider the question of the inclusion of Angola in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session;

4. Invites, in the meantime, Member States and the organizations of the United Nations system to grant Angola benefits comparable to those enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries in the light of prevailing conditions in Angola;

5. Strongly recommends that Angola should be included in the list of the most seriously affected countries and be considered by the United Nations Special Fund for urgent assistance;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep this matter under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic assistance to Cape Verde

On 24 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/17, by which it expressed its deep concern about the economic situation in Cape Verde as a result of eight successive years of drought, the return of large numbers of refugees and the total lack of infrastructures for development inherited from the colonial period.

The Assembly noted that Cape Verde was included in the list of the countries most seriously affected by the world economic crisis and urgently appealed to Member States and the international institutions concerned to assist the Government of Cape Verde effectively and continuously to enable it to deal with the catastrophic drought situation and its consequences.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, and requested the Committee for Development Planning to give favourable consideration to the inclusion of Cape Verde in the list of least developed countries; meantime, Member States and the organizations in the system were invited to grant Cape Verde the same benefits as those enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries. The Assembly further requested the Secretary-General to keep this matter under review and to report in 1977 on implementation.

Resolution 31/17 was adopted without a vote. The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had also approved the draft text without vote on 19 November 1976, as sponsored by Austria, Canada, Pakistan (also on behalf of the States Members belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries), Portugal and Sweden.

Resolution 31/17, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/338, adopted without vote by Assembly on 24 November 1976, meeting 77.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the serious economic situation in Cape Verde as a result of eight successive years of drought, the return of large numbers of refugees and the total lack of infrastructures for development inherited from the colonial period,

Noting that Cape Verde, in December 1975, shortly after independence, joined the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, Recalling its resolutions 3054(XXVIII) of 17 October 1973 and 3512(XXX) of 15 December 1975 on the economic and social situation in the Sudano-Sahelian region, victim of the drought, and measures to be taken on its behalf,

Recalling further that Cape Verde is included in the list of the most seriously affected countries,

Noting the efforts on behalf of the Sahel by the Office for Sahelian Relief Operations of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Sahelian Office,

Recalling its resolution 3421(XXX) of 8 December 1975 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Noting the outline of the economic and social situation in Cape Verde submitted by the Government of Cape Verde to the Secretary-General, and the appeals of the Secretary-General of 26 March 1975 and 18 October 1976 for assistance to Cape Verde,

1. Urgently appeals to Member States and the international institutions concerned, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme, to assist the Government of Cape Verde in an effective and continuous manner so as to enable it to deal effectively with the catastrophic drought situation and its consequences;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular the developed countries and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to meeting the short-term and long-term development needs of this newly independent country;

3. Requests the Committee for Development Planning at its thirteenth session, as a matter of priority, to give favourable consideration to the question of the inclusion of Cape Verde in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session;

4. Invites in the meantime Member States, particularly the developed countries, and the organizations of the United Nations system to grant Cape Verde the same benefits as those enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries in the light of prevailing conditions in Cape Verde;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep this matter under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic assistance to the Comoros

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/42) on assistance to the Comoros.

By this resolution, the Assembly urgently appealed to Member States and to the specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system to assist the Comoros in its efforts to face the critical situation resulting from economic difficulties.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to mobilize financial, technical and economic assistance to meet the development needs of this newly independent country and requested the Committee for Development Planning to give favourable and priority consideration to including the Comoros in the list of least developed countries.

The Assembly invited Member States to grant the Comoros in the meantime the same benefits as those enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries and requested the Secretary-General to keep the matter under review.

The Assembly adopted the text, without a vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text by consensus on 29 November 1976 on a proposal by Pakistan (on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing Member States) and Turkey.

Resolution 31/42, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/338/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 1 December 1976, meeting 84.

The General Assembly,

Recalling recommendation 99(IV) of 31 May 1976, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fourth session, held at Nairobi from 5 to 31 May 1976, in which the Conference noted the serious and disturbing nature of the economic situation in the Comoros, where the per capita income is one of the lowest in the world,

Being aware, moreover, that the Comoros is faced with certain specific tasks arising from its recent attainment of independence,

Recalling further its resolution 3421(XXX) of 8 December 1975 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the matter under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic assistance to Mozambique

Communications to Security Council (8-15 March 1976)

By a note dated 8 March 1976, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had received in two telegrams information about the situation that had arisen as a result of the decision of the Government of Mozambique to impose sanctions against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia.

The first telegram, from the President of Mozambique and dated 5 March, stated that, in order to support the just struggle for national liberation by the people of Zimbabwe against the illegal minority régime, in keeping with the relevant decisions of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the People's Republic of Mozambique had, as of 3 March 1976, decided to apply sanctions fully against the illegal régime.

The second telegram was dated 6 March and was from the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth, stating that the Commonwealth Sanctions Committee welcomed the announcement that Mozambique was fully implementing the United Nations sanctions against Southern Rhodesia and had agreed to recommend to Commonwealth Governments that they react urgently in accordance with the conclusions reached at their meeting in Kingston, Jamaica, in May 1975, to the effect that Commonwealth Governments at the United Nations should establish a programme of assistance for Mozambique in terms of Articles 49 and 50 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>24</sup>

By a letter dated 8 March, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Mozambique transmitted the full text of a statement made on 3 March 1976 by the President of Mozambique in which the President had proclaimed the imposition of sanctions against the illegal régime of Southern Rhodesia, in accordance with the decisions of the United Nations.

Also on 8 March, the representative of Nigeria transmitted the text of a statement published by the Federal Military Government expressing its active solidarity with the people of Zimbabwe in their struggle and proclaiming Nigeria's support for the important role that the Government and people of Mozambique were playing. In that connexion, the statement announced that a special envoy of the Federal Military Government would visit Mozambique to ascertain in what areas it could be of help to the peoples of Mozambique and Zimbabwe.

In a telegram dated 10 March, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Mozambique requested, under Article 50 of the Charter, an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation which had arisen as a result of Mozambique's decision to impose sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in full implementation of the relevant decisions of the United Nations. He also drew attention to acts of aggression committed by the troops of the illegal régime, supported by aircraft, against two villages in Mozambique during the night of 23/24 February, and appealed to the Security Council to take the necessary steps to help Mozambique to defend itself.

On 15 March, the Secretary-General brought to the Council's attention two telegrams he had received from the Secretary-General of OAU. In the first, dated 12 March, OAU appealed through the United Nations to the entire international community for massive assistance to Mozambique to enable it to overcome the economic difficulties resulting from its decision to sever all road, air and rail communications with Southern Rhodesia, in accordance with United Nations resolutions. The message said the situation was aggravated by acts of armed aggression carried out by the Ian Smith régime, and it asked that Member States take the necessary measures to support Mozambique.

The second OAU message, dated 15 March, asked the Secretary-General, on the eve of the Council's meeting, to ensure that the Security Council energetically condemned the aggression by the Rhodesian régime and accorded substantial assistance to Mozambique, commensurate with the immense sacrifices it had made.

Consideration by Security Council (16 and 17 March 1976)

The Security Council considered Mozambique's request at three meetings held on 16 and 17 March 1976. The representatives of Egypt, Jamaica, Kenya, Mozambique and Zambia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Mozambique said that the decision by his Government to apply the sanctions fully was not, as claimed in some quarters, a result of aggressions of which Mozambique had been a victim, but was in line with his Government's determination to fulfil its international obligations. The application of economic sanctions against the illegal régime in Southern

Article 50 of the Charter reads: "If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems."

Rhodesia, the closure of the borders and the suspension of all forms of communication with that country had heavy effects on some fundamental sectors of the economy of Mozambique. That, he said, was because Mozambique's ports, its communication networks and its entire economic infrastructure had, under Portuguese domination, been dedicated to the service of Southern Rhodesia and South Africa; its agriculture as well as its industry had been reserved to supply raw materials and fuel to them, getting from them financial means and technical support and equipment. Mozambique, he added, was the natural market for South African and Rhodesian products, especially in the food sector.

He went on to say that Mozambique's manpower had been exported—under degrading conditions—to labour in the mines and on the farms of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, constituting one of the main sources of foreign-exchange earnings for Mozambique. Now, however, some 80,000 Mozambican workers currently in Southern Rhodesia risked losing employment, thus substantially reducing the entry of hard currency into Mozambique and depriving their families in Mozambique of their source of maintenance. Over 5,000 railway workers and stevedores would also become unemployed; Mozambique's ports and railways would lose more than one third of their revenues—about $42 million—and its airlines would both incur extra expenses and lose revenue as a result of deviations from normal routes and the suspension of flights to Southern Rhodesia. The over-all effects of the sanctions on the economy of Mozambique would thus be great, he stressed, and it needed material support to convert its economy within the general plan of national reconstruction.

Mozambique, he continued, was asking the Security Council to give the Secretary-General the necessary authority to study with Mozambique the technical and financial means of implementing projects that would create new structures and new employment. However, he added, because such evaluation would of necessity take some time, he requested that the following be urgently guaranteed to Mozambique: (a) the annual volume of port and railway revenues from Southern Rhodesia; (b) compensation for the rise in cost of the annual importation of 30,000 tons of maize previously imported from Southern Rhodesia (about $2 million); (c) the value of the equivalent of all revenues from the usual exports from Mozambique to Southern Rhodesia (calculated at about $5 million) until Mozambique could find alternative markets or reconvert its economic structures; and (d) compensation for the debts owed Mozambique by Southern Rhodesia for services rendered by Mozambican ports and railways (about $8 million), and compensation for maintenance of the prices of all products previously imported from Southern Rhodesia besides maize (a value to be calculated on the basis of total imports from Southern Rhodesia, amounting to more than $18 million annually). The annual compensation due to Mozambique, he said, thus amounted in principle to at least $49 million, in addition to the $8 million owed by Southern Rhodesia.

During the discussion in the Council, Mozambique was commended for its action and there was agreement that it should be granted assistance to help it overcome the economic consequences of that action.

The representatives of Italy, Jamaica and the United Kingdom pointed out that the May 1975 meeting of Commonwealth Heads of Government in Kingston had already recommended economic assistance to Mozambique similar to that which Mozambique was currently requesting from the entire international community. Zambia's spokesman, citing what he called an inadequate response to Zambia's own earlier request for assistance in similar circumstances, expressed the hope that concrete and effective measures of assistance to Mozambique could be spelt out. The representative of Kenya, speaking as current Chairman of the African group of States at the United Nations, wanted the United Nations to mobilize all its agencies, in particular the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to assist Mozambique in its current economic difficulties, and the Egyptian representative called for a coordinator of United Nations assistance in Mozambique.

The USSR representative stated that his country was already rendering the necessary substantial material assistance to Mozambique. The burden of compensation for damage caused, however, should be borne by those States that were, in fact, politically responsible for maintaining the régime in Southern Rhodesia, as well as those States that continued to maintain close economic and other contacts with the territory.

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania emphasized that the Council was not being called upon to give charity or disinterested assistance to Mozambique but was, rather, being called upon to fulfil obligations envisaged under Articles 49 and 50 of the Charter.

On 17 March, the Security Council unanimously adopted, as resolution 386(1976), a draft text sponsored by Benin, Guyana, Italy, Japan, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, Panama, Romania, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United Republic of Tanzania.

By the preambular part of the text, the Council among other things expressed concern at the situa-lion created by the provocative and aggressive acts committed by the illegal minority régime in Southern Rhodesia against the security and territorial integrity of the People's Republic of Mozambique. It recalled previous decisions by which it imposed sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, and noted with appreciation Mozambique's decision to sever immediately all trade and communication links with Southern Rhodesia, a decision which constituted an important contribution to the realization of United Nations objectives in Southern Rhodesia in accordance with the principles and purposes of the Charter.

By the operative paragraphs of the text, the Council:

(1) commended Mozambique for its decision to sever all economic and trade relations with Southern Rhodesia;

(2) condemned all provocative and aggressive acts, including military incursions, against Mozambique by the illegal régime of Southern Rhodesia;

(3) took note of the urgent and special economic needs of Mozambique arising from its decision;

(4) appealed to all States to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique, so that it could carry out its economic development programme normally and enhance its capacity to implement fully the system of sanctions;

(5) requested the United Nations and the organizations and programmes concerned, in particular the Economic and Social Council, UNDP, the World Food Programme and all United Nations specialized agencies, to assist Mozambique in the current economic situation and to consider the question periodically; and

(6) requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize, with immediate effect, all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique to enable it to overcome the economic difficulties arising from its application of economic sanctions against Southern Rhodesia.

The Secretary-General, in a statement following the adoption of the resolution, said he hoped there would be a prompt and favourable response from all Member States to the Council's appeal for assistance to Mozambique. It was his intention, he said, to send a mission to Maputo, Mozambique, without delay for detailed discussions with the Government on an effective programme of assistance, geared to the immediate and long-term needs of the country.

The representative of Mozambique said he was sure that the international community understood that the solution of the crisis did not depend on temporary measures but on basic ones, capable of altering the nature of the economic structure existing in Mozambique. He felt confident that in addition to the $57 million requested for immediate assistance, the international community would not fail to pool its efforts to help Mozambique in solving many problems, the quantification of which had not yet been possible.

In subsequent communications, the representative of Rwanda on 17 March transmitted the text of a telegram dated 12 March 1976 from the President of Rwanda to the President of Mozambique pledging Rwanda's unconditional support in Mozambique's just struggle against the illegal minority régime of Southern Rhodesia. On 25 March, Algeria's representative transmitted two messages, one from the President of Algeria and the other from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, addressed to the Heads of State and Government of the non-aligned countries and to their Ministers for Foreign Affairs, respectively, concerning the situation resulting from Mozambique's decision to impose sanctions against Southern Rhodesia and calling for the assistance and effective support of the non-aligned countries to ensure the success of the struggle undertaken by the people of Mozambique.

Report of the Mission to Mozambique

By a note dated 30 April 1976, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the report of the Mission to Mozambique.

The report stated that, following consultations with the Foreign Minister of Mozambique, the Secretary-General had appointed a five-member Mission to advise him—within the framework of Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976—on the organization of an effective programme of financial, economic and technical assistance for Mozambique. The Mission arrived in Maputo on 7 April and spent 16 days in Mozambique. On the way to Maputo, consultations were held with the League of Arab States in Cairo (Egypt) and with OAU in Addis Ababa (Ethiopia).

The Mission's programme in Mozambique included meetings with the President of Mozambique and government ministers and other officials. The Mission visited several key projects and problem areas affected by the sanctions and met with provincial governors, mayors, government and party officials, and representatives of displaced and unemployed workers.

In its report, the Mission observed that under colonial rule the economies of Mozambique, southern Africa and Southern Rhodesia had been closely linked. At independence, Mozambique found itself with a relatively large and sophisticated modern sector created and developed by the colonial authorities mainly to service the transport needs of neighbouring countries. Since the application of sanctions, traffic to and from Southern Rhodesia had been halted, resulting in the rise of unemployment as well as the loss of revenue from the traffic. A significant amount of foreign exchange remitted by migrant workers in Southern Rhodesia would cease, leaving many families destitute. Mozambique would also suffer an increased trade deficit, further reducing its ability to finance imports for development and to carry out normal development projects.

The Mission said that the direct costs to Mozambique of applying sanctions could be estimated at between $ 139 million and $ 165 million for the next 12 months, and many of these costs would continue until the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia was ended. Meanwhile, financial and material assistance of an emergency nature would be necessary for the next 18 months to two years. The Government would require technical assistance as well as professional manpower.

The Mission also submitted with its report tables showing urgently needed materials and commodities, equipment and spare parts, as well as a list of emergency projects in the domains of power and water supplies, telecommunications and transport that would not have been necessary except for the application of sanctions. Short-term projects for food production were also necessary, the report said, to replace supplies previously imported from Southern Rhodesia. An addendum to the report, issued on 5 May, gave detailed information on emergency projects, an emergency list of critically needed manpower, development projects and programmes, and estimated costs of projects.

Consideration by Economic and Social Council

On 11 May 1976, at its sixtieth session, the Economic and Social Council adopted without a vote, as resolution 1987(LX), a draft resolution sponsored by 31 members, by which, among other things, the Council: endorsed the Security Council's appeal to the international community to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance, bilaterally and multilaterally, whenever possible in the form of grants, to enable Mozambique to bear the great cost arising from the implementation of sanctions; requested the United Nations and all its organizations and the specialized agencies to make every effort to assist Mozambique; requested UNDP to consider on an urgent basis both the restoration of the 1976 indicative planning figure for Mozambique and an increase in that figure for the next programme cycle; and requested the United Nations Special Fund to give special consideration to the needs of Mozambique.

By the resolution, the Council also: welcomed the arrangements made by the Secretary-General to establish machinery to co-ordinate the activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and to be the channel of communication between the Government of Mozambique and the United Nations system. It also requested him to give the Mission's report the widest possible circulation, to establish a special account to facilitate channelling international assistance to Mozambique, to keep the situation under constant review, to hold regular consultative meetings with representatives of Governments, regional organizations, intergovernmental agencies, financial institutions and specialized agencies, and to report to the Council at its next session.

In accordance with the Economic and Social Council's resolution, the Secretary-General submitted a progress report on mobilization of the assistance programme for Mozambique. Among other things, he reported that on 3 May he had appealed for assistance to all Governments. On 27 May, at a meeting of permanent representatives at Headquarters, the situation had been reviewed both from the point of view of the needs of Mozambique and with respect to the effort to mobilize assistance. A special account was established to facilitate the channelling through the United Nations of international assistance to Mozambique. During April through July, assistance amounting to about $98 million had been pledged in food materials and money, technical assistance, and development projects. He said that although the response of the international community had been encouraging it fell far short of Mozambique's requirements.

On 3 August, the Economic and Social Council adopted, without a vote, resolution 2020(LXI). The text, which was orally revised by its sponsors, was put forward by Egypt on behalf of the States members of the Economic and Social Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries and later joined by Norway and Sweden.

By this text, the Council among other things noted with satisfaction the measures taken by the Secretary-General to organize an effective programme of international assistance to Mozambique and expressed appreciation for the assistance thus far provided. It noted that the assistance received to date fell short of the amount required to deal with Mozambique's special economic problems and called on all Member States to respond generously to the Security Council's appeal and to provide bilateral and multilateral assistance, whenever possible in the form of grants, to enable Mozambique to bear the great cost arising from the implementation of sanctions and to carry out its normal development programme.

The Council then asked the United Nations and all its organizations and specialized agencies to continue their efforts to assist Mozambique and requested the United Nations Special Fund to give special and favourable consideration to the country's needs. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure the continuation of an effective programme of assistance for Mozambique during 1977, to continue close co-operation with its Government in mobilizing the necessary resources, to ensure that financial and budgetary arrangements were made to continue that mobilization and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Mozambique, to keep the situation under constant review, to hold regular consultative meetings with Member Governments, regional organizations, intergovernmental agencies, financial institutions and specialized agencies, and to report to the Economic and Social Council in 1977.

Consideration by General Assembly

On 19 October 1976, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report reviewing the economic situation in Mozambique and assessing the specific food and material requirements for the remainder of 1976 and the outlook for 1977. The report gave a detailed analysis of several key sectors of the country's economy and concluded that, in spite of the encouraging initial response of the international community, the current economic situation was so critical that Mozambique could not hope to carry out any kind of normal development programme; significantly more financial, material and technical assistance was required. Annexes to the report contained a list of countries and intergovernmental and regional organizations responding to appeals for assistance and the amount of their pledges or donations, and a table showing UNDP indicative planning figure commitments and estimates for 1975-1979.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted, without a vote, a resolution (31/43) by which, among other things, the Assembly expressed concern that the total assistance thus far contributed or pledged fell far short of the amount required by Mozambique. It drew the attention of the international community to the list of emergency projects required by Mozambique and to the assessment of financial assistance, food and other material needs contained in the Secretary-General's report.

The Assembly urged all Member States and regional and intergovernmental organizations to respond generously and to provide assistance, bilaterally and multilaterally, whenever possible in the form of grants, to enable Mozambique to bear the cost arising from the implementation of sanctions and to carry out its normal development programmes, and called upon all Member States which had not responded to the Security Council's appeal to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique.

The specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, including UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Food Programme, were asked to continue to assist and to consider periodically the question of economic assistance to Mozambique, and the United Nations Special Fund was asked to give special and favourable consideration to Mozambique's application for assistance.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General: (a) to continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of assistance to Mozambique during 1977; (b) to ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements were made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Mozambique; (c) to arrange for a new assessment of the economic situation during the first quarter of 1977 and give the resulting report the widest possible circulation; and (d) to keep the situation under constant review and maintain close liaison with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and international financial institutions, and report to the Assembly at its 1977 session.

The resolution was adopted on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text by consensus on 29 November on a proposal by 46 Members.

Resolution 386(1976), as proposed by 11 powers, S/12013, adopted unanimously (15-0) by Council on 17 March 1976, meeting 1892.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the statement made by the President of the People's Republic of Mozambique on 3 March 1976, Having heard the statement of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Mozambique,

Gravely concerned at the situation created by the provocative and aggressive acts committed by the illegal minority régime in Southern Rhodesia against the security and territorial integrity of the People's Republic of Mozambique,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of the people of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) to self-determination and independence, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure the enjoyment of such rights, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968 imposing sanctions against Southern Rhodesia,

Recalling further its resolutions 277(1970) of 18 March 1970 and 318(1972) of 28 July 1972,

Noting with appreciation the decision of the Government of Mozambique to sever immediately all trade and communication links with Southern Rhodesia in accordance with the decision of the Council and in strict observance of economic sanctions,

Considering that this decision constitutes an important contribution to the realization of the United Nations objectives in Southern Rhodesia in accordance with the principles and purposes of the Charter,

Recognizing that the action of the Government of Mozambique is in accordance with resolution 253(1968), Bearing in mind the provisions of Articles 49 and 50 of the Charter,

1. Commends the Government of Mozambique for its decision to sever all economic and trade relations with Southern Rhodesia;

2. Condemns all provocative and aggressive acts, including military incursions, against the People's Republic of Mozambique by the illegal minority régime of Southern Rhodesia;

3. Takes note of the urgent and special economic needs of Mozambique arising from its implementation of resolution 253(1968), as indicated in the statement by its Minister for Foreign Affairs;

4. Appeals to all States to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique, so that Mozambique can carry out its economic development programme normally and enhance its capacity to implement fully the system of sanctions;

5. Requests the United Nations and the organizations and programmes concerned, in particular the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and all United Nations specialized agencies, to assist Mozambique in the present economic situation and to consider periodically the question of economic assistance to Mozambique as envisaged in the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize, with immediate effect, all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique to enable it to overcome the economic difficulties arising from its application of economic sanctions against the racist régime in Southern Rhodesia.

Resolution 1987(LX), as proposed by 31 powers, E/L.1716, adopted without vote by Council on 11 May 1976, meeting 1999.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Security Council resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia, in particular resolution 232(1966) of 16 September 1966, in which it was declared that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security, and resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968, imposing mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia,

Commending the decision of the People's Republic of Mozambique to apply sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in implementation of Security Council resolution 253(1968),

Recalling also Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976, and the appeal therein to all States and to the United Nations system to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique, so that Mozambique could carry out its economic development programme normally and enhance its capacity to implement fully the system of sanctions,

Noting with satisfaction the measures already taken by the Secretary-General to organize an effective programme of international assistance to Mozambique, including the dispatch of a mission to conduct a detailed assessment of the situation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General's Mission to Mozambique, which indicated, inter alia, that:

(a) The real cost to Mozambique of applying sanctions against Southern Rhodesia includes not only the direct cost of applying sanctions and the cost of the emergency projects necessitated by them, but also heavy recurrent expenditure, and a burden on the country's long-term development,

(b) The direct cost to Mozambique of applying sanctions is estimated at over $140 million for the next twelve months and over $110 million for the subsequent year,

(c) The assistance required by Mozambique is estimated at over $210 million for the next twelve months and over $175 million for the subsequent year,

(d) The Government of Mozambique has put forward a number of longer-term development projects designed to overcome the burden of sanctions and to implement its normal development programme,

(e) Mozambique is faced with urgent requirements for professional and skilled manpower,

Having heard the statement of the Secretary-General on the nature and extent of assistance necessary to meet the immediate and longer-term requirements of the situation in Mozambique,

Having heard also the statement of the Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs and Head of the Special Delegation of Mozambique confirming the information contained in the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the provisions of Articles 49 and 50 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that Mozambique is confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of the measures decided upon in Security Council resolution 253(1968),

1. Strongly endorses the appeal of the Security Council to the international community to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique;

2. Calls upon all Member States to provide Mozambique with generous assistance, bilaterally and multilaterally, whenever possible in the form of grants, to enable Mozambique to bear the great cost arising from the implementation of sanctions;

3. Requests the United Nations, all its organizations and the specialized agencies to make every effort to assist Mozambique;

4. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to consider on an urgent basis the restoration of the 1976 indicative planning figure for Mozambique and an increase in its indicative planning figure for the next programme cycle;

5. Requests the United Nations Special Fund to give special consideration to the needs of Mozambique;

6. Welcomes the arrangements made by the Secretary-General to establish machinery at Maputo and at United Nations Headquarters to co-ordinate the activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and to be the channel of communication between the Government of Mozambique and the United Nations system;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to give the report of the Mission the widest possible circulation so that the international community may be made aware of the needs and priorities of Mozambique;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, for the convenience of the international community, to establish a special account to facilitate the channelling through the United Nations of international assistance to Mozambique;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation under constant review, to hold regular consultative meetings with representatives of Governments of all interested Member States, regional organizations, intergovernmental agencies, regional and international financial institutions, and specialized agencies, and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-first session.

Resolution 2020(LXI), as proposed by Egypt, Norway and Sweden, E/L.1735, and as orally amended by sponsors, adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1976, meeting 2030.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling Security Council resolutions on the question of Southern Rhodesia, in particular resolution 232(1966) of 16 September 1966, declaring that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security, and resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968, imposing mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, Commending the decision of the Government of Mozambique to implement mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253(1968),

Appreciating the very substantial sacrifices made by the Government and the people of Mozambique as a consequence of the closure of the border with Southern Rhodesia,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976, appealing to all States to provide immediate technical, financial and material assistance to Mozambique and requesting the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize with immediate effect all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its policy of economic independence from the racist régime of Southern Rhodesia and enhance its capacity to implement fully the United Nations mandatory sanctions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1987(LX) of 11 May 1976, strongly endorsing the appeal of the Security Council to the international community to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique,

Taking note of the report by the Secretary-General on assistance to Mozambique,

1. Notes with satisfaction the measures taken by the Secretary-General to organize an effective programme of international assistance to Mozambique;

2. Expresses appreciation for the assistance so far provided to Mozambique by Member States and the United Nations system;

3. Takes careful note of the fact that the assistance received to date falls short of the amount required by Mozambique to deal with the special economic problems arising from the implementation of the measures decided upon in Security Council resolution 253(1968);

4. Calls upon all Member States to respond generously to the appeal of the Security Council and to provide assistance, bilaterally and multilaterally, whenever possible in the form of grants, to enable Mozambique to bear the great cost arising from the implementation of sanctions and to carry out its normal development programme;

5. Requests the United Nations and all its organizations and specialized agencies to continue their efforts to assist Mozambique;

6. Requests the United Nations Special Fund to give special and favourable consideration to the needs of Mozambique;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the continuation of an effective programme of financial, material and technical assistance for Mozambique during 1977, and to continue close co-operation with the Government of Mozambique in the mobilization of the necessary resources;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that appropriate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources, and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Mozambique;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the review mentioned in his report to be given the widest circulation as soon as it is completed;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation under constant review, to hold regular consultative meetings with representatives of Governments of all interested Member States, regional organizations, intergovernmental agencies, regional and international financial institutions, and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session.

Resolution 31/43, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/338/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 1 December 1976, meeting 84.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the resolutions of the Security Council on the question of Southern Rhodesia, in particular resolution 232(1966) of 16 December 1966, in which the Council declared that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security, and resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968, in which mandatory sanctions were imposed against Southern Rhodesia,

Recalling with appreciation the decision of the Government of Mozambique to implement mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253(1968),

Having regard to the very substantial sacrifices made by the Government and the people of Mozambique as a consequence of the closure of its border as well as the Zambian border with Southern Rhodesia,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976, in which the Council appealed to all States to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize, with immediate effect, all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its policy of economic independence from the racist régime of Southern Rhodesia and enhance its capacity to implement fully the United Nations mandatory sanctions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987(LX) of 11 May 1976 and 2020(LXI) of 3 August 1976, in which the Council strongly endorsed the appeal of the Security Council to the international community to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations Mission to Mozambique, which in April 1976 ascertained the financial, technical and material assistance required by Mozambique to pursue its normal development and to overcome the economic difficulties arising from the application of economic sanctions against Southern Rhodesia,

Noting further the report of the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council on the mobilization of a programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique,

Having studied the report, transmitted by the Secretary-General, reviewing the economic situation in Mozambique as at August 1976 and containing, inter alia, an assessment of the status of emergency projects formulated by the Government of Mozambique, as well as estimates of specific food and material requirements for the remainder of 1976 and the outlook for 1977,

1. Expresses its deep appreciation of the measures taken by the Secretary-General to organize an effective programme of international assistance to Mozambique;

2. Notes with satisfaction the assistance so far contributed or pledged to Mozambique by Member States, regional and intergovernmental organizations and the United Nations system;

3. Expresses concern that the total assistance so far contributed or pledged falls far short of the amount required by Mozambique to deal with the special economic problems arising from the implementation of the measures decided upon in Security Council resolution 253(1968);

4. Draws the attention of the international community to the list of emergency projects required by Mozambique and described in the reports submitted by the Secretary-General;

5. Further draws the attention of the international community to the assessment contained in the report of the Secretary-General reviewing the economic situation in Mozambique that, in addition to significant financial assistance, Mozambique will require substantial assistance, in cash or in kind, to meet the food and other material needs listed in tables 2 and 3 of that report;

6. Urges all Member States and regional and intergovernmental organizations to respond generously and to provide assistance, bilaterally and multilaterally, whenever possible in the form of grants, to enable Mozambique to bear the cost arising from the implementation of sanctions and to carry out its normal development programmes;

7. Calls upon all Member States which have not yet responded to the appeal of the Security Council to provide immediate financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique, so that Mozambique can carry out its economic development programme normally and enhance its capacity to implement fully the system of sanctions;

8. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Food Programme, to continue to assist Mozambique and consider periodically the question of economic assistance to Mozambique;

9. Requests the United Nations Special Fund to give special and favourable consideration to Mozambique's application for assistance;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts for the mobilization of resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, material and technical assistance to Mozambique during 1977;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the mobilization of resources and to co-ordinate the international programme of assistance to Mozambique;

(c) To arrange for a new assessment of the economic situation during the first quarter of 1977 and to give the resulting report the widest possible circulation;

(a) To keep the situation under constant review and maintain close liaison with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and international financial institutions, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

Economic assistance to Sao Tome and Principe

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/187 on assistance to Sao Tome and Principe. By this resolution, the Assembly expressed its deep concern about the economic and social situation in Sao Tome and Principe as a result of the total lack of infrastructures for development and also the adverse effects which the international economic situation had had on the frail economy.

The Assembly noted that Sao Tome and Principe had not been included in the list of countries most seriously affected by the world economic crisis and urgently appealed to Member States and the international institutions concerned to assist its Government in an effective and continuous manner so as to enable it to establish the necessary social and economic infrastructures. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to mobilize financial, technical and economic assistance with a view to meeting the short-term and long-term development needs of this newly independent country and requested the Committee for Development Planning to give favourable consideration to including Sao Tome and Principe in the list of the least developed countries and submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council.

In the meantime, the Assembly invited Member States and the international organizations of the United Nations system to grant Sao Tome and Principe the same benefits as those enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries. It strongly recommended that Sao Tome and Principe be included in the list of the most seriously affected countries and requested the Secretary-General to report to the 1977 session on the implementation of the resolution.

The Assembly adopted resolution 31/187, without a vote, as recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. On 7 December 1976, the Second Committee had approved the draft resolution, also without vote. Its sponsors were Algeria, Angola, Benin, Cape Verde, the Congo, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, India, the Ivory Coast, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Mozambique, Portugal, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Togo, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Yemen and Zambia.

Resolution 31/187, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/338/Add.2, adopted without vote by Assembly on 21 December 1976, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the serious economic and social situation in Sao Tome and Principe as a result of the total lack of infrastructures for development inherited from the colonial period,

Further concerned by the adverse effects which the international economic situation has caused to the frail economy of Sao Tome and Principe,

Noting that Sao Tome and Principe has not been included in the list of the most seriously affected countries,

Recalling its resolution 3421(XXX) of 8 December 1975 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Recalling further recommendation 99(IV) of 31 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, particularly paragraph 4 thereof, in which the Conference recommended that measures of assistance should be undertaken by the appropriate organs of the United Nations system in favour of the newly independent States of Africa,

1. Urgently appeals to Member States and the international institutions concerned, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to assist the Government of Sao Tome and Principe in an effective and continuous manner so as to enable it to establish the necessary social and economic infrastructures essential for the well-being of the people;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular the developed countries and the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, with a view to meeting the short-term and long-term development needs of this newly independent country;

3. Requests the Committee for Development Planning to give favourable consideration at its thirteenth session, as a matter of priority, to the question of the inclusion of Sao Tome and Principe in the list of the least developed countries and to submit its conclusions to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session;

4. Invites in the meantime Member States, particularly the developed countries, and the organizations of the United Nations system to grant Sao Tome and Principe the same benefits as those enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries in the light of prevailing conditions in Sao Tome and Principe;

5. Strongly recommends that Sao Tome and Principe should be included in the list of the most seriously affected countries;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep this matter under review and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic assistance to Zambia

On 27 July 1976, the Co-ordinator of United Nations Assistance for Zambia, on behalf of the Secretary-General, reported on the current situation in Zambia to the Economic and Social Council. His report was based on an economic survey, conducted at the request of the Government of Zambia, by a special mission to Zambia in June/July 1976. While earlier reports to the Council had estimated the cost in monetary terms of closing Zambia's southern border in 1973, the Co-ordinator stated, this mission analysed the underlying factors controlling the economy and the cost of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia since their introduction in 1967.

The Economic and Social Council, on 3 August 1976, took note of the statement made by the Co-ordinator on 2 August and adopted a resolution (2012(LXI)) on assistance to Zambia. By the preambular paragraphs, the Council noted that the real cost to Zambia included not only the direct cost of applying sanctions and the cost of the contingency measures necessitated by them, but also heavy recurrent expenditure and the diversion of limited financial and human resources from the country's national development. The direct cost to Zambia of applying sanctions, the Council noted, was estimated at approximately $650 million over the past 10 years, of which approximately $450 million had been incurred during the period 1973-1976.

By the operative paragraphs, the Council strongly endorsed the appeal of the Security Council to the international community to provide financial, technical and material assistance to Zambia and called upon all Member States to continue to provide Zambia with ample and appropriate assistance to enable it to bear the great cost of sanctions and to carry out its normal development programme. The Council requested the United Nations and all its organizations and specialized agencies to make every effort to assist Zambia and also requested the United Nations Special Fund to give special consideration to the needs of Zambia.

In addition, the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue the programme of co-operation between Zambia and the United Nations until the end of 1977 and also asked him to keep the situation under constant review, to hold consultations as appropriate, and to report to the Council at its mid-1977 session.

The text, which was adopted by the Council without a vote, was submitted by Egypt on behalf of the States members of the Economic and Social Council belonging to the "Group of 77."

Appreciating the very substantial sacrifices made by the Government and the people of Zambia in terms of the opportunities forgone for the economic and social development of the country since the unilateral declaration of independence by Southern Rhodesia in November 1965,

Recalling Security Council resolution 277(1970) of 18 March 1970 requesting inter alia Member States and the United Nations system to increase their assistance to Zambia as a matter of priority,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 329(1973) of 10 March 1973, appealing to all States for immediate technical, financial and material assistance to Zambia to enable it to enhance its capacity to implement fully the mandatory sanctions policy and requesting the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize with immediate effect all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to enable Zambia to carry out its policy of economic independence from the racist régime of Southern Rhodesia,

Appreciating the assistance received until now from certain Member States and the United Nations system,

Noting with satisfaction the measures taken so far by the Secretary-General to organize an effective programme of international assistance to Zambia,

Having heard the statement made on behalf of the Secretary-General and that of the representative of Zambia, Noting that:

(a) The real cost to Zambia includes not only the direct cost of applying sanctions and the cost of the contingency measures necessitated by them, but also heavy recurrent expenditure, and the diversion of limited financial and human resources from the country's national development,

(b) The direct cost to Zambia of applying sanctions is estimated at approximately US$650 million over the past ten years, of which approximately $450 million has been incurred during the period 1973-1976,

(c) The Government of Zambia has already undertaken a number of longer-term development projects designed to counter the adverse effects of sanctions,

(d) The Government of Zambia wishes to continue the programme of co-operation between Zambia and the United Nations until the end of 1977,

Bearing in mind the provisions of Articles 49 and 50 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that Zambia is confronted with special economic problems arising from the implementation of the measures decided upon in Security Council resolution 253(1968), and especially in the context of the increasing momentum and pressure of political developments in southern Africa,

1. Strongly endorses the appeal of the Security Council to the international community to provide financial, technical and material assistance to Zambia;

2. Calls upon all Member States to continue to provide Zambia with ample and appropriate assistance, bilaterally and multilaterally, whenever possible in the form of grants, to enable Zambia to bear the great cost arising from the implementation of sanctions and to carry out its normal development programme;

3. Requests the United Nations and all its organizations and specialized agencies to make every effort to assist Zambia;

4. Requests the United Nations Special Fund to give special consideration to the needs of Zambia;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the programme of co-operation between Zambia and the United Nations until the end of 1977;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation under constant review, to hold consultations, as appropriate, with representatives of Governments of all interested Member States, regional organizations, intergovernmental agencies, regional and international financial institutions, and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its sixty-third session.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

In a report to the 1976 session of the General Assembly, on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Secretary-General described developments regarding: consultations and exchange of information; co-operation with regard to the situation in southern Africa; co-operation in the field of economic and social development; and co-operation in the field of information and publicity.

The Secretary-General noted that there had been consultations, exchange of information and reciprocal representation at meetings at both the political and secretariat levels of the two organizations. The Secretary-General had attended and addressed the thirteenth Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU in July 1976 at Port Louis, Mauritius, and had conferred there with many African Heads of State and leaders of liberation movements on matters of mutual concern. At the invitation of OAU, the Secretary-General had also sent an observer to the twenty-seventh ordinary session of the OAU Council of Ministers at Port Louis in June 1976.

Also during the year, the Secretary-General maintained close contact with OAU regarding the question of international assistance to Mozambique. A United Nations mission was appointed to ascertain the required financial, material and technical assistance, and consulted with the Chairman and the Administrative Secretary-General of OAU on areas of co-operation.

The report also noted that the General Assembly's Special Committee against Apartheid, in consultation with OAU, organized at Havana, Cuba, in May 1976, the International Seminar on the Eradication of Apartheid and in Support of the Struggle for Liberation in South Africa. At the invitation of OAU, the Chairman of the Special Committee also addressed the twenty-seventh session of the OAU Council of Ministers.

The report further noted the continuing close liaison between OAU and the United Nations Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid, particularly with regard to publicity against apartheid. The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa also maintained close co-operation with OAU, especially with OAU's Bureau for the Placement and Education of African Refugees.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia continued to maintain a close working relationship with OAU; an OAU representative participated in their work. Both bodies were represented at meetings of the OAU Council of Ministers and the thirteenth Assembly of Heads of State and Government.

The Special Committee also sent a delegation to the capitals of Botswana, Ethiopia, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia to hold, inter alia, consultations with OAU officials.

Also during the year, the report noted, OAU attended as an observer the session of the Commission on Human Rights held at Geneva, Switzerland, in February/March 1976 and participated in the meeting of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (Geneva, August/September 1976).

In other evidences of co-operation described in the report, the Human Rights Commission's Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa received OAU assistance during a field mission to Dar es Salaam (United Republic of Tanzania), Maputo (Mozambique), Lusaka (Zambia) and London (United Kingdom).

A meeting between representatives of United Nations organizations and OAU was convened in April 1976 at Geneva to review and co-ordinate activities relating to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) maintained contact with the OAU Co-ordinating Committee for the Liberation of Africa with regard to UNICEF assistance to vulnerable groups (children, adolescents and mothers) under the care of liberation movements in African countries. The report went on to state that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) also collaborated with the OAU Liberation Committee to implement projects designed to assist liberation movements. The form and modalities of this collaboration were discussed at the June 1976 session of UNDP's Governing Council, which led to a strengthening of the relations between OAU and UNDP.

Co-operation continued during the year between the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and OAU, which jointly organized the second meeting of the follow-up Committee on Industrialization in Africa. Recommendations established at this meeting included, among other things, the promotion of programmes and projects to foster intra-African co-operation, and the establishment and development of instruments for action in the African region, which was to be a joint effort by ECA, OAU and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. Also during the year, the report stated, periodic and ad hoc consultations, reciprocal attendance at meetings, and exchange of information and technical collaboration continued to strengthen co-operation in economic and social development between OAU and United Nations bodies and specialized agencies. In addition, dissemination of relevant information was co-ordinated with OAU.

On 16 November 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/13) by which it took note of the Secretary-General's report on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU and commended his efforts to promote such co-operation. The Assembly expressed its appreciation of the outstanding contribution made by OAU in the work of the United Nations bodies concerned. It welcomed OAU's efforts to find African solutions to some of the issues of vital importance to the international community and reaffirmed the determination of the United Nations to intensify its efforts to find a solution to the current grave situation in southern Africa.

In addition, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General among other things to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen co-operation with OAU, particularly with regard to assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa. It drew the attention of all United Nations bodies to the continued need to take effective measures to associate OAU closely and on a regular basis with all their work concerning Africa, invited the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned within the United Nations system to intensify their co-operation with OAU, and requested the Secretary-General to report again in 1977.

Resolution 31/13 was adopted by the Assembly, without vote, on the basis of a proposal by 46 powers.

Resolution 31/13, as recommended by 46 powers, A/31/L.18 and Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 November 1976, meeting 67.

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, including in particular resolution 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirteenth ordinary session, held at Port Louis from 2 to 6 July 1976,

Taking into account the statement made by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at the 31st plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 14 October 1976.

Aware of the important role which the Organization of African Unity is playing in helping to achieve the objectives of the United Nations in the world in general and on the African continent in particular,

Noting with satisfaction the continued efforts of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to help solve the serious problems which principally affect southern Africa,

Aware of the urgent need to give increased assistance to the victims of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid resulting from the intensified acts of repression against the African peoples by the Government of South Africa and the illegal racist minority régime in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Conscious of the need to take effective steps for the widest possible dissemination of information relating to the struggle of the African peoples concerned for their liberation from colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Bearing in mind the positive results achieved in the work of the United Nations bodies concerned as a direct consequence of the participation of representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity in the relevant proceedings of these bodies in an observer capacity,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and commends his efforts in promoting such co-operation;

2. Again expresses its appreciation of the outstanding contribution made by the Organization of African Unity in the relevant work of the United Nations bodies concerned, including in particular the positive role played by the Administrative Secretary-General and the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity;

3. Welcomes the efforts of the Organization of African Unity to find African solutions to some of the issues of vital importance to the international community;

4. Reaffirms the determination of the United Nations, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to intensify its efforts to find a solution to the present grave situation in southern Africa;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen co-operation at the political, economic, cultural and administrative levels between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, particularly with regard to the provision of assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa, and, in this connexion, draws attention to the Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid established by the Organization of African Unity;

6. Draws once again the attention of United Nations bodies, in particular the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia, to the continued need to take effective measures to associate closely the Organization of African Unity regularly with all their work concerning Africa;

7. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned within the United Nations system to continue and intensify their co-operation with the Organization of African Unity;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and the organizations concerned within the United Nations system.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued during 1976 to grant scholarships to persons from Namibia, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia for education and training outside their own countries. In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 13 December 1974,<sup>25</sup> assistance under the Programme was also made available for a transitional period—at the request of the Governments concerned—for the inhabitants of the territories covered by the Programme that attained independence during 1974-1975. Scholarships for inhabitants of territories formerly under Portuguese administration were no longer approved in 1976, but scholarships granted in previous years were continuing until completion of the course of study for which they had been granted.

In his report to the General Assembly on the progress of the Programme, covering the period from 1 November 1975 to 22 October 1976, the Secretary-General stated that 31 States had contributed $1,420,801 to the Programme; pledges from 10 Member States, totalling $194,954, were outstanding. Total contributions to the Programme since its inception in 1967 amounted to $9,707,260. In addition, scholarships for study in their own countries were offered by 20 States: Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Israel, Jamaica, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mauritius, Nigeria, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, the Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and the USSR.

As at 30 September 1976, the total number of scholarship holders was 1,222, including 230 from Angola, 24 from Cape Verde, 38 from Guinea-Bissau, 45 from Mozambique, 163 from Namibia, 12 from Sao Tome and Principe, 347 from South Africa and 363 from Southern Rhodesia.

Applications and awards under the Programme for the period from 1 November 1975 to 30 September 1976 were as follows:

|  | Applications received | New awards granted | Awards extended | Current scholarship holders |
|--|-----------------------|--------------------|-----------------|-----------------------------|
| Namibia  | 40                    | 36                 | 127             | 163                         |
| South Africa   | 323                   | 50                 | 297             | 347                         |
| Southern Rhodesia                                    | 1,168                 | 40                 | 323             | 363                         |
| Territories formerly under Portuguese administration | 334            | —           | 349      | 349                  |
| Total  | 1,865                 |                    | 1,096           | 1,222                       |

The Advisory Committee on the Programme, established by the General Assembly in 1968, held three meetings in 1976 at which it considered various aspects of the development and growth of the Programme. The Committee discussed, in particular, possibilities of raising the level of financial resources to meet the rising costs of scholarship awards.

On 29 November 1976, the General Assembly, without objection, adopted resolution 31/31, by which, inter alia, it considered that the Programme had been a significant and worth-while effort of the international community, and that its continuation and expansion was desirable to meet increased needs arising from recent developments in the territories concerned. It expressed its appreciation to all those who had made voluntary contributions to the Programme, commended the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee for strengthening and expanding the Programme and appealed once again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions.

Resolution 31/31 was adopted on the recommendation of the Assembly's Fourth Committee, which had approved it without objection on 15 November 1976 on the basis of a proposal by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Brazil, Canada, Chad, Colombia, Denmark, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Lesotho, Malaysia, Mali, Mozambique, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Portugal, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Swaziland, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta, Venezuela, Zaire and Zambia.

In accordance with the Advisory Committee's recommendation, the allocation of $100,000 from the regular budget of the United Nations, which had annually been made to the Programme since its inception, was discontinued.

Resolution 31/31, as recommended by Fourth Committee, A/31/354, approved without objection by Assembly on 29 November 1976, meeting 82.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 3422(XXX) of 8 December 1975,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Programme for 1975/76,

Taking note with satisfaction of the increase in contributions to the Programme which permitted the continuance in 1975/76 of a substantial level of assistance, in the form of individual awards, for the education of persons from the Territories concerned,

Recognizing however that, because of significant increases in the costs of educational and training awards, additional funds are essential if the Programme is to continue in operation at a satisfactory level,

Considering that the Programme has been a significant and worth-while effort of the international community, and that a continuation and expansion of the Programme is desirable to meet the increased needs arising from recent developments in the Territories concerned,

1. Expresses its appreciation to all those who have made voluntary contributions to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

2. Commends the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa for the work they have accomplished in strengthening and expanding the Programme;

3. Appeals once again to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to the Programme in order to ensure its continuation and expansion, particularly during this most important period.

Communication from the Ivory Coast

By a letter dated 6 July 1976, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the Ivory Coast transmitted the text of a statement made by the President of the Ivory Coast following the broadcasting by Radio Conakry (Guinea) of an editorial concerning aggression by mercenaries which was allegedly being organized against Guinea from within the borders of Senegal and the Ivory Coast.

In his statement, the President noted that the only concern of the Ivory Coast was its own economic and social development and that the entire civilian and military population was mobilized for the task of national construction. He appealed to all ambassadors accredited to the Ivory Coast to see for themselves whether the allegations by Guinea had any foundation. He also called upon the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity to dispatch missions to investigate the accusations made against the Ivory Coast by Guinea. Finally he called upon the President of Guinea to prove that there were mercenaries in the Ivory Coast.

He stated that there were no disputes outstanding between the two countries. The only point at issue between them had been the request by Guinea for the extradition of four Guinean nationals. The President of the Ivory Coast concluded his statement by reaffirming that his country bore no hostility towards Guinea, that they had collaborated against colonialism and for political independence and that the struggle for economic independence required that Africans maintain a united front.

Communication from Mozambique

By a letter dated 20 December 1976, the representative of Mozambique transmitted the text of a communication from the Ministry of Information of Mozambique protesting what it described as a campaign in recent weeks to present Mozambique as a threat to peace and security in the area and attributing to it the intention of attacking South Africa and other countries in the area. The communiqué also said that the Western press had spread alarmist news about the instability of the Mozambique Republic. These and other lies, it said, were being used in preparation for aggression against Mozambique.

Communications from the Sudan

By a letter dated 4 July 1976, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the Sudan stated that his Government, on 2 July, had suffered an act of armed banditry designed to overthrow its Government. An aide-mémoire annexed to the letter stated that there was concrete evidence that the act of aggression was conceived, prepared and executed by the Libyan Arab Republic, which had provided training, arms, ammunition and transport vehicles.

As a consequence of that aggression, the Sudan had sustained substantial loss of life; damage to property was estimated to amount to at least $300 million. The Government of the Sudan protested this violation of its territorial integrity and requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Republic, by a letter dated 7 July 1976 to the President of the Security Council, rejected the allegations by the Government of the Sudan. Bringing the issue before the Security Council, the letter stated, served merely propaganda purposes which would ultimately lead to more serious complications in the relations between the two countries and would undermine the efforts being made or contemplated by the Organization of African Unity and the League of Arab States. The letter rejected the claim that the Libyan Arab Republic had provided war matériel and transportation and cited geographical and seasonal factors creating insurmountable obstacles to undetected movement across the border. The Government of the Libyan Arab Republic had no interest in overthrowing the Government of the Sudan, it said, and was currently co-operating with the Sudan in fields such as agriculture, maritime concerns and transportation.

Chapter IX

Questions concerning Asia and the Far East*Questions pertaining to Korea

By a letter addressed to the Secretary-General, dated 10 August 1976, Algeria, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, China, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, Iraq, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia requested the inclusion in the agenda of the thirty-first (1976) session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Removal of the danger of war and maintenance and consolidation of peace in Korea and acceleration of the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea."

In the attached explanatory memorandum, it was recalled that at its previous session the Assembly had adopted a resolution<sup>1</sup> on dissolving the "United Nations Command," withdrawing all the foreign troops stationed in South Korea under the flag of the United Nations, replacing the Korean Military Armistice Agreement (Armistice Agreement of 29 July 1953)<sup>2</sup> with a peace agreement, preventing armed conflicts between the North and the South of Korea, reducing armed forces and armaments, and easing tension.

However, the memorandum continued, serious attention could not but be directed to the fact that not only had that resolution remained unimplemented but tension had been continuously aggravated in Korea and the division of the country continued. It further recalled that on 5 August 1976 a statement and a memorandum of the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea had been issued in connexion with the critical situation created in Korea.

A draft resolution for consideration by the Assembly was also annexed to the letter. By the operative provisions thereof, the Assembly would demand the immediate cessation of all acts of foreign military involvement and aggression against Korea, the immediate withdrawal of new types of weapons and military equipment, including nuclear weapons, introduced into South Korea, and an end to the acts of aggravating the tensions and increasing the danger of a new war in Korea.

Further, the Assembly would appeal to all Members of the United Nations to check all acts of interfering in the internal affairs of Korea and of fabricating "two Koreas" to hinder reunification. It would express the hope that the reunification of Korea would be realized by the Korean people themselves without the interference of any outside forces, through such forms of negotiation and dialogue as a great national congress which might extensively reflect the will of the entire nation, in accordance with the three principles of independence, peaceful reunification and great national unity clarified in the North-South joint statement of 4 July 1972.<sup>3</sup>

The Assembly would also, by this resolution, reaffirm that the "United Nations Command" should be dissolved, that all the foreign troops stationed in South Korea under the United Nations flag should be withdrawn and that the 1953 Armistice Agreement should be replaced with a peace agreement, and would consider that substantial measures should be arranged at the earliest possible date for realizing these objectives.

By a letter addressed to the Secretary-General, dated 20 August 1976, Belgium, Bolivia, Canada, the Central African Republic, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Gabon, the Federal Republic of Germany, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Paraguay, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay requested the inclusion in the Assembly's agenda of an item entitled "Need for constructive dialogue and negotiation towards a peaceful settlement of the Korean problem and the reunification of Korea."

The explanatory memorandum annexed to the letter declared that the solution of the Korean question essentially depended upon conciliation and agreement between the South and the North of Korea and upon continued efforts for the maintenance of peace and security in the area. It recalled that the General Assembly, by a consensus statement adopted on 28 November 1973,<sup>4</sup> had expressed its satisfaction over the joint communiqué of 4 July 1972 issued by the South and the North of Korea and had urged them to continue their dialogue and to widen their many-sided exchanges and co-operation in the spirit of that communiqué.

The memorandum went on to say that the South-North dialogue, however, remained suspended, and that there had been no progress in efforts for negotiations on new arrangements among the parties directly concerned to permit the adaptation or replacement of the Armistice Agreement, which would enable the dissolution of the United Nations Command, the reduction of tensions and the establishment of lasting peace in Korea.

The memorandum further recalled that on 22 July 1976 the United States had made a concrete proposal to meet with the parties directly concerned to seek an agreed new legal structure for the armistice. Such a meeting or conference, it said, could also replace the armistice with more permanent arrangements, in any form acceptable to all parties, which could ease tensions throughout Asia. That proposal, it continued, had not met with a positive response. The memorandum stressed that the General Assembly at the 1976 session should urge all concerned to do everything possible to facilitate the resumption of talks and the negotiation of durable arrangements for the maintenance of peace in the Korean peninsula and the achievement of reunification.

A draft resolution was also annexed to this letter. By its operative provisions, the Assembly would declare that, in the interest of the Korean people, the highest priority should be given to the establishment of conditions that would lead to national reconciliation and a lasting peace in Korea in order to achieve its reunification.

The Assembly would call upon the South and the North of Korea to resume promptly their dialogue in order to achieve by negotiation the settlement of their outstanding problems, and would urge them, and the other parties directly concerned, to enter into early negotiations with the objective of permitting the dissolution of the United Nations Command as soon as possible by adapting the Armistice Agreement or by finding a new basis to replace the Agreement with more permanent arrangements.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly would call upon all concerned to exercise the utmost restraint so as to create an atmosphere conducive to peace and dialogue.

By a letter of 21 September 1976, the United Republic of Tanzania informed the Secretary-General that the request for inscription of the agenda item concerning removal of the causes of war in Korea was withdrawn. By a letter of the same date, Japan informed the Secretary-General that the countries requesting inscription of the agenda item concerning the need for a constructive dialogue on the Korean problem had noted the withdrawal of the other item on Korea and withdrew their request.

On 23 September 1976, the Assembly's General Committee took note of the fact that the requests had been withdrawn.

Two communications on questions pertaining to Korea were also received by the President of the Security Council during 1976.

By the first, dated 19 August 1976, the United States, on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to a 1950 Security Council decision,<sup>5</sup> transmitted a report of the United Nations Command on an incident which had taken place on 18 August 1976 at the site of the Military Armistice Commission meetings in the demilitarized zone.

According to the report, 30 North Korean guards had attacked a group of 10 United Nations Command security guards accompanying a work party. The incident resulted in the beating to death of two United Nations personnel and the wounding of several other personnel of the United Nations Command and the Republic of Korea by North Koreans.

This incident, the report said, was the culmination of a long series of harassments and violence on the part of North Korean personnel in the Joint Security Area of the demilitarized zone. It maintained that the United Nations Command had repeatedly called for a concerted effort to reduce tension and eliminate points of dispute along the Military Demarcation Line but that there had been no satisfactory response to those proposals.

By a letter dated 23 December 1976 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the United States transmitted, on behalf of the Unified Command, a report of the United Nations Command concerning the maintenance of the 1953 Armistice Agreement during the period 1 September 1975 through 20 December 1976. The report dealt with such topics as armistice structure and procedures, activities of the Military Armistice Commission, developments during the period covered, violations of the Agreement and dangerous incidents.

Among the developments mentioned was the unilateral disarming by the United Nations Command on 22 January 1976 of 50 per cent of the Command guards. That was done, the report stated, in the hope of achieving mutual progress in reducing tension in the area. In the absence of any response, however, the full authorized complement of 35 armed personnel was restored in May 1976; they continued to be under strict orders to avoid contact or conflict with the other side and to refrain from using their weapons except when necessary to protect themselves against armed attack.

The report also indicated that the United Nations Command had repeatedly called for the convening of joint observer teams to investigate violations charged by both sides; in the absence of a favourable response to those proposals, the Command had unilaterally investigated over 27,000 charges of armistice violations presented by the other side.

The report stated that during the past year the United Nations Command had reported 10,801 violations of the Armistice Agreement by North Korea, including the incident of 18 August 1976. As a result of that incident, the Military Armistice Commission on 6 September 1976 agreed on the text of a supplement to the 1953 Agreement on the Military Armistice Commission Headquarters Area, Its Security and Its Construction; that text was annexed to the report of the United Nations Command. It provided for additional measures which it stated were designed to guarantee the security of personnel and particularly to preclude conflicts between military personnel of both sides.

The report concluded that despite the existing tension and hostility, the Armistice Agreement and the Military Armistice Commission had continued to operate and to facilitate communication between the two sides.

Situation relating to withdrawal of Ganges waters

By letters dated 21 and 26 August and 8 September 1976 addressed to the Secretary-General, Bangladesh requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's thirty-first (1976) session of an item entitled "Situation arising out of unilateral withdrawal of Ganges waters at Farakka."

In an explanatory memorandum, Bangladesh stated that it was faced with a problem of crisis proportions resulting from the construction and, from June 1975, the operation by India of a barrage across the Ganges River at Farakka, 17 kilometres up-stream from its border with Bangladesh, diverting much of the waters of the Ganges into the Hooghly River in India. The ostensible purpose of this unilateral diversion, it continued, was to flush out deposits of silt in the Hooghly to improve the navigability of the port of Calcutta.

In the course of lengthy negotiations between the two States, the memorandum said, India had given solemn assurances that before the Farakka barrage was operated, a mutually satisfactory solution to the problem would be reached. Despite this, the barrage became a fait accompli. The adverse consequences of the Indian withdrawal of Ganges waters had been devastating and would worsen with time.

The memorandum said that Bangladesh was bringing the dispute to the attention of the General Assembly in consonance with Article 14 of the Charter of the United Nations.<sup>6</sup> The situation directly threatened the economic sovereignty of Bangladesh and had a direct bearing on the economic welfare of millions of people. Failure to resolve the issue expeditiously, it concluded, carried with it the potential threat of conflict affecting peace and security in the region as a whole.

On 24 September 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its General Committee, decided to include the item in its agenda and to allocate it to the Special Political Committee for consideration.

Speaking in opposition to that decision, India said that the problem Bangladesh sought to bring before the Assembly was essentially a bilateral one. India believed that the involvement of any third party, including the United Nations, was bound to complicate the situation and possibly worsen relations between the two countries.

The USSR was of the view that discussion of the question at the current session would create additional difficulties and would hinder normalization of the situation on the subcontinent.

The Special Political Committee considered the question at meetings held on 15, 16 and 24 November 1976. The Committee heard statements by Bangladesh and India and, subsequently, approved the text of a consensus statement which was later adopted by the Assembly.

Bangladesh, speaking in the Special Political Committee, stated that the Ganges was an international river whose basin spread over the territories of several States. It asserted that customary international law clearly recognized the community of interests of the riparian States in the waters of an international river.

Bangladesh outlined the details of the problem and said its dependence on the Ganges was preponderant. The river directly affected 37 per cent of the area of Bangladesh, and 33 per cent of the country's population inhabited the basin. During the dry season, from November to May, the available flow from the Ganges was only 15 per cent of its total annual flow. To reduce that flow would not only affect irrigation in Bangladesh but would also affect the entire ecological balance of the area. In the apportionment of waters, particularly during the months of scarcity, Bangladesh claimed it was entitled to the natural flow of the Ganges in order to satisfy human and ecological needs that could not be met in any other way.

Bangladesh was raising the issue before the General Assembly in the hope that United Nations impetus would speed up the process towards an early and mutually acceptable settlement. It was concerned that, failing such a solution, it would have no other recourse but to accept without redress the dictates of a more powerful neighbour. Bangladesh felt that no State should be denied the right to a fair and impartial hearing in the world forum.

It was clear to Bangladesh that the General Assembly could not enter into the specific technical elements of the matter and that the parties must engage in continuing bilateral talks. It felt that the Assembly could, however, assist by providing the momentum which could promote an expeditious and fair solution to the problem.

Bangladesh submitted to the Special Political Committee the text of a draft resolution by which the Assembly would call upon the parties concerned to arrive at an immediate resolution of the dispute and would recommend that no unilateral action be taken that would adversely affect the historical and traditional usages of the Ganges River waters. The Assembly would also, among other things, decide to take up the question again at its 1977 session.

Addressing the Committee, India said it had serious misgivings about the desirability of involving the General Assembly in an issue which was intrinsically bilateral, since it was convinced that the internationalization of the issue would only complicate and politicize the problem.

Regarding the utilization of the waters of an international river, India felt that when a river crossed more than one country, each country was entitled to an equitable share of the waters of that river, taking into consideration such factors as geography, the economic and social needs of the population and the availability of other resources. Insistence on the continued natural flow of an international river was inconsistent with the concept of equitable utilization of its waters.

The Farakka barrage had been constructed, India said, for the purpose of saving the port of Calcutta, the operation of which directly affected the well-being of over 100 million people in the hinterland. The problem of the port of Calcutta had been studied in depth for more than a century, and all experts, India said, had reached the conclusion that the only means of saving the port was to increase and regulate the headwater supply through the construction of a barrage near Farakka.

Throughout the period of designing and constructing the project, India said, great care had been taken to ensure that its operation would not have any adverse effect on Bangladesh. Bilateral co-operation between the two countries achieved commendable results up to August 1975. Unfortunately, a drastic change in the climate of co-operation had taken place after that, culminating in the decision of the Government of Bangladesh to politicize and internationalize the Farakka issue and to use it as an instrument of hostile propaganda against India.

Under any practicable approach, the Farakka problem lent itself to solution only on a bilateral basis. India said it would be willing, as a matter of urgency, to initiate bilateral talks with Bangladesh in the conviction that that was the only means of progressing towards the establishment of an equitable relationship. There was no legal dispute between the two countries, India said. The problem was one of sharing the limited flow of the Ganges waters during the lean season from mid-March to mid-May; otherwise there might not be enough water for both countries during those months. There was no reason for the intervention of any third party to decide to what extent each country should be affected.

India could not agree that Bangladesh was entitled to the entire natural flow of the Ganges or that India was not entitled to draw any water from the river without the prior consent of Bangladesh. It was prepared, however, to co-operate in the search for a long-term solution for augmenting the flow of water. The United Nations, India felt, should urge the two countries to persist in their efforts to reach a solution to this problem.

On 24 November 1976, following consultations between Bangladesh and India, the former withdrew its draft resolution and the Special Political Committee approved a consensus statement on this question. The General Assembly acted on 26 November by adopting (as its decision 31/404) the text of the statement as representing the consensus of the Members of the Assembly.

By that text, the parties affirmed their adherence to the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations<sup>7</sup> and stressed, in that regard, their unalterable commitment to strengthen their bilateral relations by applying those principles in the settlement of disputes.

Further, the parties agreed that the situation called for an urgent solution, and decided to meet urgently at Dacca for negotiations with a view to arriving at a fair and expeditious settlement. They asserted that the prime objective of this contact was to promote the well-being of their peoples. They undertook to give due consideration to the most appropriate ways of utilizing the capacity of the United Nations system.

Chapter X

Questions concerning Latin America*Tribute to Simón Bolívar

By a letter of 16 July 1976 addressed to the Secretary-General, the Dominican Republic, on behalf of the countries members of the Latin American group, requested the inclusion in the agenda of the thirty-first (1976) session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "One hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Amphictyonic Congress of Panama."

In an explanatory memorandum, it was stated that the idea of the Amphictyonic Congress of Panama, which met on 22 June 1826, was born of the universalist thinking of Simón Bolívar, the Liberator, and his vision of a united, strong America, unified not only in order to solve internal problems but also in order to confront dangers from external sources.

In commemorating the anniversary of the Panama meeting, the Latin American group wanted to pay a tribute to Simón Bolívar and to recall his universalist ideas.

On 24 September 1976, on the recommendation of its General Committee, the Assembly decided to include this item in its agenda for consideration at a plenary meeting. On 17 December, it adopted a resolution proposed by 27 Members. By the operative provisions of that text, the Assembly paid a tribute to Simón Bolívar as a promoter of Latin American integration and a builder of constructive plans for international organization, and decided to place a commemorative plaque in the United Nations Headquarters building as a permanent tribute to his memory.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly recognized that the Amphictyonic Congress of Panama represented the most outstanding unionist experiment at the international level in the nineteenth century, with features which anticipated and coincided with the objectives of the United Nations system. It expressed the hope that the ideals of Bolívar would inspire the establishment of a more just international order of respect for law, devoted to the maintenance of peace, the preservation of democratic principles, the promotion of economic and social progress and the freedom of all peoples.

The Assembly, by the same resolution, formulated the wish for a successful outcome of the negotiations for the conclusion of a new treaty on the Panama Canal, which would eliminate the causes of conflict between Panama and the United States, in accordance with principles agreed to by the parties concerned.

Finally, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to arrange for the circulation to all Member States of a document reproducing the instrument of convocation and the agreements of the Amphictyonic Congress of 1826.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting, by consensus, resolution 31/142. The sponsors of the text were Argentina, the Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Surinam, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay and Venezuela. Resolution 31/142, as recommended by 27 powers, A/31/L23/Rev.2, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 17 December 1976, meeting 103.

The General Assembly,
Having decided to hold a special commemorative plenary meeting to pay a tribute to Simón Bolívar, the Liberator, on the occasion of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Amphictyonic Congress of Panama, which met on 22 June 1826,

Considering that the main objective of that Congress was to constitute an assembly of confederated countries which should establish the legal foundations for the relations between the American Republics and all the nations of the world, and should serve as "a council during periods of great conflicts, to be appealed to in the event of common danger, and to be a faithful interpreter of public treaties when difficulties arise, in brief, to conciliate all our differences," concepts which form the basis of the international law of the American countries and are thus the direct predecessors of the Covenant of the League of Nations and the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that Bolívar envisaged a Latin American region of free and brotherly countries united by common ideals, a dream which makes him the precursor of the integration of that region,

Recognizing that the Treaty of Perpetual Union, League and Confederation, signed in Panama on 15 July 1826, reflects a universalist spirit which is currently embodied by the United Nations, in that it reaffirms the sovereignty and independence of States and their intention "to secure to themselves from this time forward the enjoyment of unalterable peace, and to promote in this behalf better harmony and good understanding as well between the countries, citizens and subjects, respectively, as with the other Powers with which they should maintain or enter into friendly relations,"

Recalling that Simón Bolívar referred on several occasions to the need for a possible opening of a canal in Panama, which "will shorten distances throughout the world, strengthen commercial ties" between the continents and promote the exchange of projects "from the four corners of the globe,"

1. Pays a tribute to Simón Bolívar, the Liberator, as a promoter of Latin American integration and as a builder of constructive plans for international organization on a continental and world-wide scale and, in this connexion, decides to place a commemorative plaque in the United Nations Headquarters building as a permanent tribute to his memory;

2. Recognizes that the Amphictyonic Congress of Panama represents the most outstanding and audacious unionist experiment at the international level in the nineteenth century, with oecumenical features which anticipate and coincide with the objectives of the United Nations system;

3. Expresses the hope that the ideal of Bolívar will inspire the establishment of a more just international order of respect for law, devoted to the maintenance of peace, the preservation of democratic principles, the promotion of economic and social progress, and the freedom of all peoples;

4. Formulates the wish for a successful outcome of the negotiations for the conclusion of a new treaty on the Panama Canal, which will eliminate the causes of conflict between the Republic of Panama and the United States of America, in accordance with the Declaration of Principles, signed by the parties concerned on 7 February 1974, where it is stated that the Panamanian territory of which the Panama Canal is a part shall be returned promptly to the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama and that the Republic of Panama "will assume total responsibility for the operation of the Canal upon the termination of the treaty";

5. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the circulation to all Member States of a document reproducing the instrument of convocation and the agreements of the Amphictyonic Congress of 1826, the original texts of which, currently kept in Rio de Janeiro, will be deposited in Panama by decision of the Government of Brazil, at an appropriate time, to be preserved in the monument to be erected in that country as part of the Bolívar commemoration.

Communication concerning the Panama Canal

By a letter of 25 March 1976, subsequently circulated as a document of the Security Council, Panama informed the United Nations of what it termed an illegal strike by United States workers in the Panama Canal Zone, in protest against policies introduced by the United States Government. The strike had seriously delayed maritime traffic through the Canal, prejudicing international trade.

The Government of Panama wished to draw attention to the attitude of these United States employees, which, it said, demonstrated that the colonial situation in the Canal Zone posed a threat to peace and security in the region and to the normal operation of the interoceanic passage. The colonialist attitude of those workers threatened the negotiations between Panama and the United States in the search for a reasonable solution to the Canal problem.

Panama stated in the letter that in the history of the Canal, no Panamanian had ever been involved in an act of sabotage against the waterway.

Annexed to the letter was a communiqué issued on 21 March by the Head of Government of Panama; among other things, it declared that the virtual closing of the Panama Canal was due exclusively to the decision taken by United States workers against the United States agency administering the Canal. Panamanians working in the Canal Zone, the communiqué said, had at all times demonstrated a high sense of responsibility for keeping the Canal in operation on conditions of equality, without preference for any flag.

Questions relating to the Middle East

Various aspects of the situation in the Middle East continued during 1976 to receive consideration by the Security Council and the General Assembly, among other United Nations bodies.

With regard to the Egypt-Israel sector, the Security Council on 22 October renewed for one year—to 24 October 1977—the mandate of the United Nations Emergency Force. The Force was deployed in the zone of disengagement between the Egyptian and Israeli forces in accordance with the Agreement between Egypt and Israel of 4 September 1975<sup>1</sup> which, together with its Protocol of 22 September 1975, superseded the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces of 18 January 1974.<sup>2</sup>

The Council's decision of 22 October 1977 was embodied in resolution 396(1976), by which the Council also, among other things, called on all the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.<sup>3</sup> That resolution, after calling for a cease-fire in the October 1973 hostilities, called on the parties concerned to start immediately after the cease-fire the implementation of Security Council resolution 242(1967)<sup>4</sup> in all of its parts. Negotiations were to start immediately aimed at establishing a just and durable peace.

With regard to the Israel-Syria sector, the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force continued to supervise the Agreement on Disengagement between Israeli and Syrian Forces of 31 May 1974.<sup>5</sup> The Security Council twice renewed the mandate of the Force in 1976 for further six-month periods—on 28 May and again on 30 November—by its resolutions 390(1976) and 398(1976). The Council also called on the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973).

The General Assembly approved expenditures for financing the two Forces at its 1976 session.

The status of the cease-fire between Israel and Lebanon continued during 1976 to be the subject of reports by the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine; the Security Council was not convened.

The situation along the Israel-Jordan cease-fire line remained unchanged in 1976. No complaints were received from either country regarding cease-fire violations.

In the continuing search for a peaceful settlement, the Security Council in January discussed the Middle East problem including the Palestinian question, and considered a draft resolution—by which, among other things, it would have affirmed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to establish an independent state in Palestine, and the right of Palestinian refugees to

"1. Calls upon all parties to the present fighting to cease all firing and terminate all military activity immediately, no later than 12 hours after the moment of the adoption of this decision, in the positions they now occupy;

"2. Calls upon the parties concerned to start immediately after the cease-fire the implementation of Security Council resolution 242(1967) in all of its parts;

"3. Decides that, immediately and concurrently with the cease-fire, negotiations shall start between the parties concerned under appropriate auspices aimed at establishing a just and durable peace in the Middle East."

Resolution 242(1967), adopted unanimously on 22 November 1967, reads as follows:

"The Security Council,

"Expressing its continuing concern with the grave situation in the Middle East,

"Emphasizing the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war and the need to work for a just and lasting peace in which every State in the area can live in security,

"Emphasizing further that all Member States in their acceptance of the Charter of the United Nations have undertaken a commitment to act in accordance with Article 2 of the Charter,

"1. Affirms that the fulfilment of Charter principles requires the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East which should include the application of both the following principles:

"(i) Withdrawal of Israel armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict;

"(ii) Termination of all claims or states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force;

"2. Affirms further the necessity

"(a) For guaranteeing freedom of navigation through international waterways in the area;

"(b) For achieving a just settlement of the refugee problem;

"(c) For guaranteeing the territorial inviolability and political independence of every State in the area, through measures including the establishment of demilitarized zones;

"3. Requests the Secretary-General to designate a Special Representative to proceed to the Middle East to establish and maintain contacts with the States concerned in order to promote agreement and assist efforts to achieve a peaceful and accepted settlement in accordance with the provisions and principles in this resolution;

"4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the progress of the efforts of the Special Representative as soon as possible."

return to their homes or receive compensation for their property. The Council would also have affirmed that Israel should withdraw from all Arab territories occupied since 1967 and that the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries should be guaranteed. The draft resolution was not adopted because of the negative vote of the United States, a permanent member of the Security Council.

In June, the Security Council considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, established by the Assembly in 1975. A draft resolution was not adopted because of the negative vote of the United States, a permanent member of the Council. By this rejected text, the Council among other things would have taken note of the Committee's report and affirmed the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including the right of return and the right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

During the year, the Secretary-General continued his efforts to find ways and means to resume the negotiating process and concluded that, while there was general agreement on the necessity of resuming negotiations for a just and lasting settlement, there were important differences of view between the parties concerned.

The General Assembly, during its thirty-first (1976) session, took decisions on: the question of Palestine; general aspects of the situation in the Middle East; and the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East. By the first resolution (31/20), the Assembly among other things endorsed the recommendations of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, authorized it to promote the implementation of those recommendations and urged the Security Council to consider the recommendations once again as soon as possible. The Assembly also decided to enlarge the membership of the Committee. By the second resolution (31/61) the Assembly took a number of decisions concerning the situation in the Middle East. Among other things it reaffirmed that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East could not be achieved without Israel's withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied since 1967 and the attainment by the Palestinian people of their inalienable rights. By the third resolution (31/62), the Assembly called for the convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East not later than the end of March 1977.

The situation in the Arab territories occupied by Israel was considered by the Security Council at meetings in March, May and November. The Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly both took decisions during the year based on the findings of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories. During these deliberations, the Council and the Assembly both considered questions bearing on the status of Jerusalem and the Holy Places. The Assembly also adopted a resolution on the question of permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories.

In related decisions taken during 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution concerning assistance to the Palestinian people and the Assembly adopted a resolution by which it asked the Secretary-General to report on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories.

The Assembly again took a number of decisions concerning the Palestine refugees. Among other things it urged Governments to respond generously to the urgent needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

The situation in the Middle East: status of the cease-fire

Egypt-Israel sector: United Nations Emergency Force

Report of Secretary-General (18 October 1976)

Prior to the expiration of the mandate of the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) on 24 October 1976, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the activities of the Force for the period from 17 October 1975 to 18 October 1976.

The situation in the UNEF area of operations had remained stable throughout the period under review, he said, and the Force had continued to discharge its responsibilities efficiently. He noted that

UNEF had assumed new functions and responsibilities under the terms of the Agreement between Egypt and Israel of 4 September 1975 and its Protocol of 22 September<sup>6</sup> that were far more extensive and complex than those it had discharged previously. He also pointed out that the Force was now deployed in an area more than four times the size of the former area of disengagement. As at 17 September 1976, its strength stood at 4,174, made up of contingents from Australia, Canada, Finland, Ghana, Indonesia, Poland and Sweden, and assisted by 124 military observers of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine.

The report went on to say that the Chief Co-ordinator of the United Nations Peace-keeping Missions in the Middle East, Lieutenant-Général Ensio P. H. Siilasvuo, and the Commander of UNEF, Lieutenant-General Bengt Liljestrand, had continued the practice of holding separate meetings with the military authorities of Egypt and Israel concerning the implementation of the terms of reference of the Force and the inspections carried out by UNEF in the areas of limited forces and armaments. The Chief Co-ordinator was maintaining contact with the parties at the ministerial level on important issues.

The Secretary-General reported that the problem of restrictions on the freedom of movement of personnel of certain contingents still existed. He again stressed as he had in the past that UNEF had to function as an integrated and efficient military unit, that its contingents had to serve on an equal basis under the command of the Force Commander and that no differentiation could be made regarding the United Nations status of various contingents.

During the period under review, the Secretary-General said, UNEF had continued to receive the full co-operation of the parties in carrying out the functions entrusted to it. There were no significant violations of the cease-fire or the Agreement of 4 September 1975, although numerous limited incursions in the buffer zone by both parties by land and air had been observed and reported. In such cases, however, assurances that remedial action would be taken had been received from the party concerned. A number of complaints from both parties, alleging violations, had been taken up with the party concerned by the Force Commander or the Chief Co-ordinator and, in some instances, discussed at meetings of the Joint Commission set up under the Agreement.

The report went on to say that UNEF had maintained close contact with representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross and had extended its assistance in providing facilities for family reunions and student exchanges. During the period under review, 5,230 persons crossed from Egypt to Israeli-occupied territory and 4,351 crossed from Israeli-occupied territory to Egypt.

The Secretary-General also said that during the period under review efforts had been made at several levels to promote an early resumption of negotiations aimed at establishing a just and durable peace in the Middle East, as called for by the Security Council in its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.<sup>7</sup> Those efforts were described in his report of 18 October 1976 to the General Assembly and also to the Security Council (see page 238).

The Secretary-General concluded his report by observing that the presence of UNEF in the Egypt-Israel sector had undoubtedly been a major factor in maintaining the cease-fire and in helping to deal with urgent problems on the ground. However, if there was a continuing lack of progress in efforts to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973), the situation in the Middle East would inevitably remain unstable in spite of peace-keeping and other arrangements. He considered that the continued presence of UNEF in the area was essential, and he therefore recommended the extension of its mandate for one year.

Consideration by Security Council (22 October 1976)

When the Security Council met on 22 October 1976 to consider the Secretary-General's report on the United Nations Emergency Force, the President of the Council drew attention to a draft resolution which had been drawn up during consultations among Council members. In a complementary statement on behalf of the Council, he pointed out that by the resolution the Council would ask the Secretary-General to report to it by the end of the period stipulated—that is, by 24 October 1977—on developments in the situation and the steps taken to implement Council resolution 338(1973); Council members had made it clear, however, that they would expect him to report sooner if he considered it appropriate, and to continue his efforts to assist the early resumption of the negotiations for a comprehensive settlement. The President added that China and the Libyan Arab Republic had informed him that they would not participate in the vote on the draft resolution and did not therefore subscribe to the Council's statement.

The Council adopted the draft resolution as 396(1976) by 13 votes to 0, with China and the Libyan Arab Republic not participating. By this text, the Council, after among other things noting that the Secretary-General recommended the extension of the mandate of UNEF for one year, decided: to call on all the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973); to renew the mandate of the Force for one year, until 24 October 1977; and to request the Secretary-General to submit at the end of the period a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973). The Council also expressed its confidence that the Force would be maintained with maximum efficiency and economy.

The Secretary-General said he wished to emphasize, as mentioned in his report, that both the area of operation of UNEF and its responsibilities had been greatly enlarged as a result of the Agreement of 4 September 1975 and its Protocol, and he recalled that in October 1975<sup>8</sup> he had proposed certain increases in personnel and equipment so that the Force could effectively carry out its new tasks. In the light of the experience over the past year, however, it had been possible to make a reduction both in the number of troops actually required and in the budget estimates, and he assured the Council that he would keep continuously in mind the necessity of practising the utmost economy consonant with the efficient performance of the Force.

The representative of Romania said the extension of the mandate of the Force could not be viewed as anything but a provisional measure of limited duration; it could not be an end in itself. Sweden observed that UNEF remained in the Middle East not to serve as a substitute for a settlement but to provide a foundation for negotiations towards a settlement. The presence of UNEF could not be allowed to have the effect of causing the quiet prevailing in the area to degenerate into stagnation. The representatives of Guyana, Japan, Pakistan, Panama and the United Kingdom, among others, expressed similar views: UNEF could not serve as a substitute for a settlement of the Middle East problem. The time afforded by the renewal of its mandate should be used to get the negotiating process restarted.

The USSR representative said he had not objected to the extension of UNEF's mandate on the understanding that urgent steps would be taken to achieve a settlement based on three interdependent elements: namely, the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Arab territories occupied since 1967; the right of the Palestinian people to a homeland; and the right of all States in the area, including Israel, to exist within universally recognized boundaries. As an adequate forum for a comprehensive political settlement, the USSR proposed the immediate resumption of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East, with the participation of all interested parties, including the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The reconvening of the Conference was also urged by Guyana, Pakistan and Panama and by the representative of France, who said that any lasting peace settlement had to be based on three fundamental principles: withdrawal from the territories occupied by Israel in 1967; recognition of the right of the Palestinians to a homeland; and recognition of the right of all the States in the area to live in peace within secure, recognized and guaranteed frontiers. As to the guarantees of the future settlement, France was prepared to contribute actively to a system of over-all guarantees so as to strengthen peace in the region.

The United States representative said that maintenance of the cease-fire was only one element of the carefully balanced formulation contained in Security Council resolution 338(1973), whose ultimate purpose was, after all, the negotiation of a just and durable peace. The United States, he said, remained committed to a determined effort to achieve an over-all settlement in the Middle East acceptable to all the parties.

The representatives of China and the Libyan Arab Republic said the position of their Governments with regard to UNEF had not changed. The Libyan representative stated further that the Security Council resolutions on which the UNEF presence was based were irrelevant as a framework for any just and lasting solution of the Palestinian problem and the Middle East question; recent General Assembly resolutions concerning the Palestinian question had elucidated profound changes in the attitude of the United Nations and international opinion, and called for a re-examination of the entire question and the method of dealing with it.

On 30 November 1976, the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council that he had agreed to release Lieutenant-Général Liljestrand as Commander of UNEF as from 1 December 1976. Major-General Rais Abin was to serve as Acting Commander of the Force from that date.

Israel-Syria sector: United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

Reports of Secretary-General (May 1976)

Before the expiration of the six-month mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) on 31 May 1976, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a comprehensive report on the operations of the Force covering the period from 25 November 1975 to 24 May 1976. He said that the Force had continued to supervise the area of separation between Israeli and Syrian forces and inspect the areas of limitation of armaments and forces in accordance with its mandate. With the co-operation of both parties, it had been able to contribute to the maintenance of the cease-fire called for by the Security Council in its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.<sup>9</sup>

As at 24 May 1976, the strength of the Force—which continued to be commanded by Major-General Hannes Philipp—stood at 1,194, made up of contingents from Austria, Canada, Iran and Poland and including 78 military observers detailed from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine.

The report went on to say that UNDOF's task had been facilitated by the close contact maintained by the Force Commander and his staff with the military liaison staffs of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic. In his capacity as Chief Co-ordinator of the United Nations Peace-keeping Missions in the Middle East, Lieutenant-General Ensio P. H. Siilasvuo had continued to take part in high-level contacts and, as occasion required, in meetings between the Force Commander and military representatives of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic concerning the functioning of the Force.

With regard to the freedom of movement of the Force, the Secretary-General said that the arrangements that had been worked out fell short of what was required and of what had been provided for in the Protocol to the Agreement on Disengagement between Israel and Syrian Forces of 31 May 1974.<sup>10</sup> However, he said, efforts to secure full acceptance of that important principle were continuing.

Regarding the financial aspects, the Secretary-

General said that, should the Security Council renew the mandate beyond 31 May, the costs for UNDOF's maintenance up to 31 October 1976 would be within the level of the authorization to enter into commitments provided by the General Assembly at its thirtieth (1975) session.<sup>11</sup>

In an additional report, submitted on 27 May following a visit to Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, the Secretary-General observed that the situation in the UNDOF area of operations had remained quiet, there having occurred no incidents of a serious nature. However, he went on, while the Israel-Syrian sector was quiet, the situation in the Middle East as a whole remained tense and unstable; unless further progress could be achieved towards a just and durable peace, it would become increasingly dangerous.

The Secretary-General went on to report that efforts to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973), calling for negotiations between the parties, had continued on several levels, including contacts he had maintained with all the parties concerned and with the Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East. He intended to continue his efforts towards the resumption of the negotiating process called for by the Security Council. In the circumstances, he considered the presence of UNDOF to be essential and he recommended to the Security Council that it extend the mandate of UNDOF for a further period of six months, until 30 November 1976, a proposal to which the Governments of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic had given their assent.

Consideration by Security Council (28 May 1976)

The Security Council met on 28 May 1976 to consider the Secretary-General's reports on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force. It first heard a statement by the Secretary-General about his visit to Damascus. He said that, following the Council's debate in January 1976 (see pp. 229-33), he had taken certain steps with a view to reactivating the negotiating process. In the course of consultations with the parties concerned on the prolongation of the UNDOF mandate, he had accepted President Hafez Al-Assad's invitation to visit Damascus; during their talks, President Assad had expressed his concern that no progress had been made with regard to a global solution of the Middle East problem and had emphasized that he could not permit UNDOF to become a permanent institution. The President had expressed support for the efforts of the Secretary-General, had said he was aware that more time was needed to advance the cause of peace and had consented on 27 May to the renewal of UNDOF's mandate for a further six-month period.

The Secretary-General went on to say that while he was en route to Damascus, Israel had informed him that the consent it had given previously for the prolongation of the UNDOF mandate was conditional on a similar agreement by the Syrian Arab Republic, without political conditions. Israel's assent to the continuation of UNDOF was confirmed on 27 May, the Secretary-General said.

He also told the Council that he felt obliged once again to express his concern at the continued lack of progress towards a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

The Council adopted a draft resolution, sponsored by Benin, Guyana, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and the United Republic of Tanzania, by which, after among other things noting the efforts made to establish a durable and just peace in the Middle East area and expressing concern over the prevailing state of tension in the area, it decided: to call on the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973; to renew the mandate of UNDOF for another period of six months; and to request the Secretary-General to submit at the end of that period a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

The text was adopted as resolution 390(1976) by a vote of 13 to 0. China and the Libyan Arab Republic did not participate in the vote.

Introducing the six-power draft resolution, the representative of Guyana said that, when the United Nations peace-keeping Forces in the Sinai and the Golan Heights were established, it was the expectation of the overwhelming majority of the international community that after 25 years of denied rights and postponed solutions there would be concerted efforts to install a régime of peace in the Middle East. The Forces were not to be regarded as façades behind which those whose policies made an investment in aggression and occupation could hide. He stressed that UNDOF had to be seen as part of a process leading to lasting peace, not as a substitute for a peace settlement nor as intended to lead to a freezing process whereby a situation caused by aggression would become acceptable with the passage of time.

He went on to say that the terms of the six-power resolution followed the pattern of previous resolutions, but the similarity of language should not be taken as reflecting an automatic approach. In view of the urgency of the situation and the expectations of the international community, the sponsors expected the Security Council to live up to its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations and to take the necessary action in the months ahead to accelerate the search for an over-all solution.

Council members generally shared the view that the Disengagement Agreement was not intended to be an end in itself nor to serve as an instrument for preserving the status quo. It was regretted that the negotiating process was currently at a standstill and the hope was expressed that the time gained by the extension of UNDOF's mandate would be used to make renewed efforts towards the search for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East problem.

In the view of the USSR, the Council could not indefinitely extend the time-limit for the presence of United Nations troops in the Middle East, since those extensions had been used by the Israeli aggressor and by its protectors to freeze the existing situation and preserve for the aggressor the fruits of its aggression. The United Nations could not assist in that, nor could Member States agree to an endless continuation of the burdensome financial expenses involved in maintaining the United Nations Forces.

In that connexion, the representative of Sweden said that the costs involved in United Nations peace-keeping operations constituted only a fraction of the size of the military expenditures of the major military powers, and was totally insignificant in comparison with the human and material costs of renewed hostilities.

The United States representative said that UNDOF was a continuing credit to the United Nations. While its presence on the Golan Heights was not an end in itself, positive steps between the parties involved would be much less likely if the Force were to be withdrawn. The continued presence of peace-keeping forces in the Middle East was an essential element in maintaining a stable environment which allowed efforts towards an over-all settlement to proceed. Expressing similar views, the spokesman for the United Kingdom said the Force was an essential instrument through which peace could be achieved.

According to the representative of France, the momentum created by the latest peace efforts, including the Secretary-General's contacts with the parties, should be maintained, and new efforts made towards a general settlement based on three principles: namely, the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied territories; the right of the Palestinian people to their own homeland; and the right of all the States in the area, including Israel, to an independent existence within secure and recognized boundaries. Those principles were also upheld by the representatives of Italy, Pakistan, Panama, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania, among others. In the view of the representatives of Italy and Pakistan, the Palestinian question was a central factor to be reckoned with in the search for a peaceful solution to the Middle East problem. Several speakers, including Benin, Panama, Romania and the USSR, called for the reconvening of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Republic, who together with the representative of China did not participate in the vote, said that the resolutions of the Security Council on which the presence of UNDOF was based had been overtaken by events and developments both inside and outside the United Nations and consequently had become irrelevant as a framework for any just and lasting solution to the Palestinian problem and to the Middle East question. Resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 1974 and 1975 concerning aspects of the Palestinian problem reflected profound changes and developments in the attitude of the United Nations and international public opinion and called for a review of the entire question and the method of dealing with it.

Communications (July-August 1976)

In a letter dated 22 July, the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic charged that, on 21 June, Israeli military forces had twice opened fire on Syrian civilians working in fields near Breiq, causing damage to crops. Israel's representative replied on 28 July that the charge was untrue and that the Syrian Arab Republic was attempting to inflate a routine weapons-test into an international incident.

By a note verbale dated 29 July, the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted the text of a letter dated 10 July addressed to the Commander of UNDOF, in which the senior Syrian delegate to the Israeli-Syrian Mixed Armistice Commission charged that on 2 July an Israeli military vehicle had entered the area of separation and opened fire on Syrian civil police at a check-point in the area, injuring one Syrian policeman. The accusation was denied by the representative of Israel in a letter dated 10 August.

Report of the Secretary-General and communications (November 1976)

As the mandate of UNDOF was due to expire on 30 November 1976, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council on 22 November a report giving an account of the activities of the Force from 25 May to 22 November. He said that throughout that period the situation in the UNDOF area of operations had remained quiet. The Force had continued to perform its functions effectively with the co-operation of the two parties.

With regard to the question of freedom of movement of UNDOF contingents, he said the existing arrangements still fell short of what was required and of what was provided for in the Protocol to the Agreement on Disengagement. Efforts to secure full acceptance of that important principle were continuing.

The Secretary-General also referred to the Council's request that he report on the implementation of resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and said that the efforts made during the year to promote an early resumption of the negotiations aimed at establishing a just and durable peace, as called for by the Council in that resolution, were described in his report of 18 October to the Council and the General Assembly (see p. 238).

He went on to observe that in spite of the prevailing quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the area would remain unstable and potentially dangerous unless real progress could be made towards a just and lasting settlement of the problem in all its aspects. The Disengagement Agreement, he emphasized, was not a peace agreement but only a step towards a just and durable peace on the basis of Council resolution 338(1973). It was important, he believed, that renewed efforts be made to resume the negotiating process. He considered the continued presence of UNDOF in the area to be essential, and therefore proposed the extension of its mandate for a further period of six months. In that connexion, he noted that the Syrian and Israeli Governments had both given their assent to the proposed extension.

The position of the Syrian Arab Republic was set forth in a statement the text of which was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 22 November and in which the Syrian Government said that, although it could not accept Israel's endless occupation of Arab territories and its persistence in depriving the Palestinian people of their rights, it had none the less agreed to a further extension of UNDOF's mandate, hoping that this time the international community would prevent Israel from continuing to undermine the chances for peace, to violate the United Nations Charter and to defy the United Nations and its resolutions on the question of Palestine and the Middle East problem.

In a note verbale addressed to the Secretary-

General on 23 November, Israel reiterated that it was ready at any time to conduct peace negotiations with Syria in accordance with Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967<sup>12</sup> and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.<sup>13</sup>

Consideration by Security Council (30 November 1976)

The Security Council met on 30 November 1976 to consider the Secretary-General's report on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and adopted a draft resolution which had been prepared during consultations among Council members.

By this text, the Council, after noting the efforts made to establish a durable and just peace in the Middle East area and the urgent need to continue and intensify such efforts, and after expressing concern over the prevailing state of tension in the area, decided: to call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973); to renew the mandate of UNDOF for another six months, until 31 May 1977; and to request the Secretary-General to submit at the end of that period a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

The text was adopted by 12 votes to 0 as resolution 398(1976). Benin, China and the Libyan Arab Republic did not participate in the vote.

The President of the Council read a complementary statement on behalf of Council members, noting that in his report the Secretary-General had stated that, in spite of the current quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, there could be no question that the situation in the Middle East would remain unstable and potentially dangerous unless real progress could be made towards a just and lasting settlement of the problem in all its aspects. That statement, the President said, reflected the view of the Security Council. He also noted that he had been asked by Benin, China and the Libyan Arab Republic to state that as they had not participated in the vote on the resolution they took the same position with regard to the statement read on behalf of the members of the Council.

Council members then made statements in explanation of their positions regarding the renewal of the mandate of UNDOF. Most of them endorsed the Secretary-General's view that the Disengagement Agreement was not a peace agreement but rather a step towards a just and durable peace on the basis of the relevant Security Council resolutions. It was generally held that the new extension of UNDOF's mandate should not be an end in itself but rather a measure favouring the creation of conditions conducive to progress towards a final peace in the Middle East.

The hope was expressed by several members that renewed efforts would be made by all concerned to bring about an early resumption of the negotiating process. The spokesman for the United Kingdom felt the time might at last be ripe for progress towards a settlement and he hoped that the six months provided by the extension of the mandate would be used to good effect. Some speakers, among them France, Japan, Pakistan, Romania and the USSR, favoured an early resumption of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East, with the participation of all the parties concerned.

The USSR representative took exception to the "step-by-step" policy. So-called partial measures concluded on a separate basis and excluding key questions could only lead to a legalization of the annexation of a considerable part of the Arab territories, ensuring that Israeli troops would in fact never be withdrawn. The USSR favoured an all-embracing political settlement, an approach which, he said, was also supported by the overwhelming majority of United Nations Members.

The representative of the United States paid tribute to the co-operation of the Governments of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic with UNDOF, thus ensuring the success of its mission. Their agreement to the resolution extending UNDOF's mandate had been a major element in the Council's action, which was an important contribution to peace.

The Libyan Arab Republic, which, together with Benin and China, did not participate in the vote, recalled its position concerning Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) on which the presence of UNDOF was based. It reiterated its view that those resolutions were irrelevant as a framework for any just and lasting solution to the Palestinian question and the Middle East problem.

The situation in the Israel-Lebanon sector

During 1976, the situation in the Israel-Lebanon sector continued to be the subject of reports on the status of the cease-fire submitted by the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO) and transmitted to the Security Council by the Secretary-General. From January to December, the Chief of Staff issued monthly reports in which he assessed the nature and frequency of incidents occurring in the sector, including incidents of crossing or firing across the Armistice Demarcation Line as reported by UNTSO observation posts, flights over Lebanese territory, as well as complaints submitted by the parties and the results of UNTSO investigations. Occasionally, the Chief of Staff also issued special reports on individual incidents or complaints by the parties.

The reports for January and February 1976 showed that there had been a low level of activity during those months. A special report of 27 February concerned a Lebanese complaint that Israeli soldiers had penetrated Lebanese territory on 26 February, dynamited a house and caused other material damage and the death of a Lebanese citizen.

Another special report on 3 March concerned a Lebanese complaint that Israeli soldiers had dynamited a house in another village and had abducted three Lebanese citizens.

Reports on developments in March, April and May 1976 showed that activity had remained at a low level, with few cases of firing across the Armistice Demarcation Line and fewer complaints from the Lebanese authorities. However, the Chief of Staff reported that Israeli forces had continued daily to occupy, during daylight hours, five positions on the Lebanese side of the Armistice Demarcation Line.

For the months of June, July, August and September 1976, the Chief of Staff reported that ground activity had remained at a low level, marked only by a few cases of firing across the Demarcation Line and crossing violations. There were some 20 to 30 overflights of Lebanese territory each month by Israeli military aircraft.

In October and November, the Chief of Staff reported that there had been a general increase in ground and air activity; in December, activity both on the ground and in the air returned to a low level.

Financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly in 1976 considered the question of the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) at both Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee meetings and at plenary meetings.

In order to allow adequate time for consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the financing of the Forces and other related documents, the General Assembly decided, by two resolutions adopted on 26 October and 1 December 1976, to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into short-term commitments for UNEF and UNDOF.

By resolution 31/5 A, adopted without a vote on 26 October, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments not exceeding $6,916,666 per month for UNEF from 25 October to 30 November 1976, and not exceeding $1,288,636 for UNDOF from 1 to 30 November 1976.

By resolution 31/5 B, adopted by a recorded vote of 112 to 2 on 1 December, the Assembly extended its authorization to the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for UNEF and UNDOF at a rate not to exceed $6,739,205 and $1,393,607 per month, respectively, for the period from 1 to 21 December 1976 inclusive.

The General Assembly also decided to apportion the expenses involved in both decisions in accordance with a scheme set forth in resolutions it had adopted in 1975.<sup>14</sup>

The two resolutions had been submitted to the Fifth Committee by its Chairman. The first—after a correction had been made to the rate authorized for UNEF until 30 November—was approved on 22 October by consensus; the second was approved on 30 November by a vote, requested by Albania and Iraq, of 81 to 2, with 3 abstentions.

Before deciding to recommend the two resolutions to the General Assembly, the Fifth Committee heard the views of a number of representatives who, for the most part, expressed their Governments' reservations regarding the mode of financing the two Forces. China, for example, which, together with Democratic Yemen, Iraq and the Libyan Arab Republic, did not participate in the vote, said that expenses incurred in connexion with UNEF and UNDOF should not be regarded as United Nations expenditures. China said it would not assume responsibility for them. The USSR said it did not consider the sum appropriated to be fully justified. The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic stated that the high costs of financing the Forces were the result of continued Israeli aggression against Arab territories and of Israel's refusal to withdraw from the occupied lands, in violation of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and numerous resolutions. The expenses, he said, should therefore be borne by Israel. As a victim of aggression, the Syrian Arab Republic could not be expected to finance the occupation of its own territory.

Others, for example the United Arab Emirates, also felt that Israel and the countries supporting it should bear the costs that were associated with the Forces.

Albania and the Libyan Arab Republic reaffirmed their long-standing opposition to UNEF and UNDOF. The Libyan representative recalled that the existence of the two Forces derived from Security Council resolutions 242(1967)<sup>15</sup> and 338(1973)<sup>16</sup> which, in the view of the Libyan Government, did not provide an adequate basis for the settlement of the Palestinian question or the Middle East problem.

The representative of Albania declared that the Forces had merely served the expansionist policies of the two super-powers—the United States and the USSR—undermined the just struggle of the Arab peoples, and allowed the Israeli Zionists time to strengthen their military machine.

When the Fifth Committee next discussed the financing of UNEF and UNDOF, in mid-December, it had before it the Secretary-General's report and a related report by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

In his report, the Secretary-General reviewed the expenditures and obligations of both Forces during the third financial period of their existence—25 October 1975 to 24 October 1976. He also submitted cost estimates for the financial period 25 October 1976 to 24 October 1977.

With regard to the 1975-1976 period, the Secretary-General said that a number of developments had affected UNEF and UNDOF estimates of obligations, resulting in a net savings off 11 million in the allocations for that period. He indicated in particular that the actual size of UNEF during that period had been less than projected, due in part to the withdrawal in June 1976 of one of its contingents (Senegal) without replacement. Other reductions in budgeted requirements had also been achieved, including those relating to the estimates for construction of premises and to rations, the purchase of transportation equipment and the welfare programme.

The Secretary-General proposed that he be authorized to use the $11 million unencumbered balance to meet the costs of relocating UNEF headquarters in Ismailia—the Egyptian Government having requested the return of the buildings currently used by the Force, which were the property of the Suez Canal Authority. Should the General Assembly not accept his proposal, the Secretary-General said, a suitable provision to that end would have to be made in the 1976-1977 appropriations.

The Secretary-General indicated that, as at 31 October 1976, he had received $226.2 million in contributions for the three-year period from 25 October 1973 to 24 October 1976 (to 31 October 1976 in respect of UNDOF). He pointed out that the balance due from Member States amounted to $43.6 million, of which $17.3 million was deemed uncollectable, being apportioned among States that had stated their intention not to make any payments to UNEF and UNDOF.

With regard to the cost estimates beyond 24 October 1976, the Secretary-General estimated the cost of UNEF during its current mandate at $81.1 million and the cost of UNDOF—subject to a further extension of its mandate by the Security Council until 24 October 1977—at $16.6 million. [On 30 November 1976, the Security Council, by resolution 398(1976), renewed UNDOF's mandate until 31 May 1977 (see p. 221).] The total for UNEF and UNDOF for the fourth year of their existence was thus estimated at $97.7 million.

In its report, ACABQ, indicated a number of areas where savings, totalling $5 million, could be achieved. Subject to the proviso that actual requirements for the Force in 1976-1977 depended on the decision to be taken by the Security Council regarding the mandate of UNDOF after 31 May 1977, the Advisory Committee was of the opinion that the cost of the Force in 1976-1977 should not exceed $92.6 million.

With regard to the proposal concerning the new accommodations for UNEF headquarters, the Advisory Committee recommended that, should the Assembly grant the necessary authorization, the Secretary-General not enter into any commitment until ACABQ had had the opportunity to review detailed plans and estimates. It further recommended that the necessary legal action be taken to ensure that ownership in whatever buildings were erected was properly vested in the United Nations.

During the discussion of the reports, it was generally recognized that the United Nations peace-keeping Forces in the Middle East continued to play an indispensable role in maintaining peace and stability in the region.

Support for UNEF and UNDOF was expressed by several representatives, including those of Australia, Finland, Ireland and Japan, who also reaffirmed their Governments' attachment to the principle of collective responsibility with regard to the financing of the Forces. They also expressed concern at the growing amount of uncollectable contributions and regretted the unwillingness of some Member States to contribute to the financing of UNEF and UNDOF. Unless a satisfactory solution was found, Finland said, it would be difficult for small States to make commitments to United Nations peace-keeping activities, thus endangering the principle of equitable geographical distribution in the selection of troops.

While recognizing the services rendered by UNEF and UNDOF, Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia, among others, emphasized that it should be borne in mind that the Forces were established on an emergency basis. Reaffirming their belief that a lasting peace in the Middle East could be achieved only through a comprehensive settlement based on the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, those States considered that nothing should be done with regard to the functioning of the Forces that might perpetuate the status quo in the area.

The representative of Poland stressed the need for all the units to enjoy complete freedom of movement. In regard to the building of permanent headquarters for UNEF at Ismailia, Poland said that expenses for the functioning of the peace-keeping Forces should in no way exceed the mandate established by the Security Council, and that the planning of such expenses beyond 24 October 1977 would be tantamount to a political demonstration against the interests of the victims of aggression.

The representative of the USSR stated that his delegation could not support the Secretary-General's proposal that he be authorized to utilize the $11 million economized in the previous year to relocate UNEF headquarters. The USSR took the view that, in accordance with United Nations Financial Regulations, that sum should be deducted from the 1976-1977 estimates for UNEF and UNDOF and credited to Member States. Furthermore, the costs of relocating UNEF headquarters should be appropriated only after the Secretariat had submitted a properly justified request, as was the usual practice.

The USSR representative also said that, due to a lack of information, it was impossible to assess the justification for the increase in expenditures proposed by the Secretary-General. He considered that many of the reasons given to justify that increase were unconvincing.

Australia, Austria, Finland and Sweden expressed satisfaction that, after arduous negotiations between the troop-contributors and the United Nations Secretariat, a satisfactory solution had been found to the question of reimbursement of the so-called usage factor for personal clothing, gear and equipment issued by Governments to their troops serving in the Force. In view of the steep rise in troop maintenance costs since the General Assembly established standardized rates for reimbursement, Finland proposed, and Australia, Austria, Ireland and Sweden agreed, that a review concerning rates of pay and allowances be undertaken by the Secretary-General, together with the troop contributors, and that the results be reported to the Assembly at its 1977 session. Several other States, including the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the USSR, expressed the view that Member States other than those contributing troops should be permitted to participate in the negotiations.

On 21 December 1976, Argentina, Austria, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Kenya, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Peru, Portugal, Sweden, Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia submitted a two-part draft resolution to the Fifth Committee.

The Fifth Committee approved the draft text on the same day by a recorded vote of 73 to 1, with 10 abstentions. Prior to approval of the draft as a whole, a separate vote was taken, at the request of the USSR, on the Secretary-General's proposal regarding the utilization of the $11 million unspent amount from the prior year's appropriations. The proposal was adopted by a vote of 73 to 10. In approving that proposal, the Committee also approved ACABQ's recommendations regarding the need to review plans and estimates before commitments were made and concerning action to ensure United Nations ownership of buildings.

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted the resolutions recommended by the Fifth Committee, with some editorial changes suggested by the Committee's Rapporteur, by recorded votes of 113 to 2, with 12 abstentions, and 112 to 2, with 12 abstentions, as resolutions 31/5 C and 31/5 D, respectively.

Under the first part of resolution 31/5 C, the General Assembly appropriated $76,276,000 for the operation of the United Nations Emergency Force for the period from 25 October 1976 to 24 October 1977 inclusive.

In apportioning that amount among Member States, the Assembly further apportioned the 1976 segment (totalling $14,147,968) in proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976, and the 1977 segment (totalling $62,128,032) in proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 (see p. 897).

The $76,276,000 appropriated for UNEF was apportioned in various specific amounts among four groups of States, as defined in Assembly resolutions of 11 December 1973<sup>17</sup> and 28 November 1975<sup>18</sup> (the five permanent members of the Security Council, 22 other States listed as economically developed, 83 States defined as economically less developed, and 28 least developed States); the amounts were subdivided according to whether the assessment was for 1976 or 1977.

The Assembly decided that six newly admitted Member States—namely, Cape Verde, the Comoros, Mozambique, Papua New Guinea, Sao Tome and Principe, and Surinam—would be included in the last-named group and that their contributions for UNEF would be calculated in accordance with the provisions of an Assembly resolution (31/95 B of 14 December 1976) relating to the contributions of those States under the scale of assessments for the United Nations budget (see pp. 901-2).

The Assembly specified that the apportionment formula was an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that might be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations.

The Assembly also stressed the need for voluntary contributions to UNEF both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, and asked him to ensure that the Force was conducted with the maximum efficiency and economy.

Under the second part of the proposal—adopted as resolution 31/5 D—the General Assembly appropriated, for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, $6,152,182 for the period from 1 June to 24 October 1976 and $9,824,086 from 25 October 1976 to 31 May 1977 inclusive.

In apportioning these amounts among Member States, the Assembly apportioned the 1976 segment (totalling $3,026,169) in proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976, and the 1977 segment (totalling $6,797,917) in proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977.

The $9,824,086 total for UNDOF for the period from 25 October 1976 to 31 May 1977 would be divided in various specific amounts among the four groups of Member States previously defined, and subdivided according to whether the assessment was for 1976 or 1977. The contributions for UNDOF of the six newly admitted Members would be calculated, as with UNEF, in accordance with the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1976 and included among the group of least developed States for this purpose.

By other provisions which paralleled those contained in the resolution on UNEF, the Assembly specified its ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to positions of principle, and stressed the need for voluntary contributions and for action to ensure maximum efficiency and economy.

Prior to the vote, several representatives stated their Governments' views regarding the financing of UNEF and UNDOF. Yemen said that it would abstain in the voting because any commitments stemming from the presence of UNEF and UNDOF were due to an aggression that had led to the occupation of the Egyptian Sinai and the Syrian Golan Heights. Those commitments should be Israel's responsibility. Expressing similar views, Iraq and the Libyan Arab Republic said they would not participate in the financing of the Forces. Benin and China also said they would not participate in the vote, for previously stated reasons.

Kuwait and Poland said they had reservations with regard to the application of the new scale of assessments for UNEF and UNDOF. Japan also wished to make it clear that it accepted the special scale of assessment under protest, in a spirit of compromise.

The Syrian Arab Republic said that its vote against the resolution should in no way be interpreted as an objection to the task performed by the Force or to the principle of financing per se. Its objection was rather to the implication of a resolution that compelled all Members, including the victims of aggression, to share a burden caused by Israeli aggression. It was up to Israel and its supporters to bear the responsibility and the costs arising from their violation of the Charter and disrespect of the principles of international law and human rights.

Israel said that the slander and accusations against it reiterated in connexion with the proposed allocations were part of the political warfare being carried out against Israel in almost every committee and on every item. It was not Israel which was at fault for the absence of peace in the Middle East, for the persistent hostility and warfare against it, or for the aggressive war as a result of which UNEF and UNDOF were established, Israel stated.

Resolution 31/5 A, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/31/278, adopted without vote by Assembly on 26 October 1976, meeting 41.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the present appropriation for the United Nations Emergency Force, as provided by section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3374 B (XXX) of 28 November 1975, does not extend to periods beyond 24 October 1976,

Recalling further that the present authority of the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as provided by section III of General Assembly resolution 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975, expires on 31 October 1976,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 396(1976) of 22 October 1976, which renewed the mandate of the United Nations Emergency Force for the period from 25 October 1976 to 24 October 1977 inclusive,

Noting further that the present mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, which was renewed by the Security Council in resolution 390(1976) of 28 May 1976, continues until 30 November 1976 inclusive,

1. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Emergency Force at a rate not to exceed $6,916,666 per month for the period from

25 October to 30 November 1976 inclusive, and for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force in an amount not to exceed $1,288,636 for the period from 1 to 30 November 1976 inclusive, in order to allow adequate time for consideration by the General Assembly of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Forces;

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the present authority of the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Emergency Force and for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as provided by paragraph 1 of General Assembly resolution 31/5 A of 26 October 1976, expires on 30 November 1976,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 396(1976) of 22 October 1976, which renewed the mandate of the United Nations Emergency Force for the period from 25 October 1976 to 24 October 1977 inclusive, and of Council resolution 398(1976) of 30 November 1976, which renewed the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 December 1976 to 31 May 1977 inclusive,

1. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Emergency Force and for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed $6,739,205 and $1,393,607 per month, respectively, for the period from 1 to 21 December 1976 inclusive, in order to allow adequate time for consideration by the General Assembly of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the Forces;

2. Also decides to apportion the above-mentioned expenses among Member States in accordance with the scheme set forth in General Assembly resolutions 3374 B (XXX) of 28 November 1975 and 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975.

Abstaining: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, Mongolia, Nigeria, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Yemen.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 340(1973) of 25 October 1973, 346(1974) of 8 April 1974, 362(1974) of 23 October 1974, 368(1975) of 17 April 1975, 371(1975) of 24 July 1975, 378(1975) of 23 October 1975 and 396(1976) of 22 October 1976,

Recalling its resolutions 3101(XVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 B (XXX) of 28 November 1975, 31/5 A of 26 October 1976 and 31/5 B of 1 December 1976,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $76,276,000 for the operation of the United Nations Emergency Force for the period from 25 October 1976 to 24 October 1977 inclusive;

2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of $14,147,968, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 25 October 1976 to 31 December 1976 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and the amount of $62,128,032, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 1 January 1977 to 24

October 1977 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs 2 of Assembly resolutions 31/5 A of 26 October 1976 and 31/5 B of 1 December 1976:

(a) To apportion an amount of $47,082,775 for the above-mentioned twelve-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (a) of General Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII), of which $8,948,590 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and $38,134,185 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977;

(b) To apportion an amount of $27,476,768 for the above-mentioned twelve-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (b) of resolution 3101(XXVIII) and section II, paragraph 2 (b), of resolution 3374 B (XXX), of which $4,899,441 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and $22,577,327 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977;

(c) To apportion an amount of $1,663,063 for the above-mentioned twelve-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (c) of resolution 3101(XXVIII) and section II, paragraph 2 (c), of resolution 3374 B (XXX), of which $290,033 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and $1,373,030 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977;

(d) To apportion an amount of $53,394 for the above-mentioned twelve-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (d) of resolution 3101(XXVIII) and section IV, paragraph 1, of resolution 3374 B (XXX), of which $9,904 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and $43,490 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977;

1. Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Emergency Force both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Emergency Force is conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

1. Decides that Cape Verde, the Comoros, Mozambique, Papua New Guinea, Sao Tome and Principe and Surinam shall be included in the group of Member States mentioned in paragraph 2 (d) of General Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII) and that their contributions for the United Nations Emergency Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (g) of Assembly resolution 31/95 B of 14 December 1976;

2. Decides further that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the United Nations Emergency Force until 24 October 1976 of the Members listed in paragraph 1 of the present section shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the appropriations apportioned in section I above.

Abstaining: Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, Mongolia, Nigeria, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Yemen.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, 363(1974) of 29 November 1974, 369(1975) of 28 May 1975, 381(1975) of 30 November 1975, 390(1976) of 28 May 1976 and 398(1976) of 30 November 1976,

Recalling its resolutions 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975, 31/5 A of 26 October 1976 and 31/5 B of 1 December 1976,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

1. Recalls that, subsequent to the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force beyond 31 May 1976, the amount of $6,443,180 was apportioned as authorized under section III of General Assembly resolution 3374 C (XXX) for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 31 October 1976 inclusive, and that the financial year of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force concludes on 24 October;

2. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $6,152,182 for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 24 October 1976 inclusive, with apportionment as authorized under section III of Assembly resolution 3374 C (XXX);

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of $9,824,086 for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 25 October 1976 to 31 May 1977 inclusive;

2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of $3,026,169, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 25 October 1976 to 31 December 1976 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and the amount of $6,797,917, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 1 January 1977 to 31 May 1977 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977 and, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs 2 of Assembly resolutions 31/5 A of 26 October 1976 and 31/5 B of 1 December 1976:

(a) To apportion an amount of $6,086,613 for the period from 25 October 1976 to 31 May 1977 inclusive among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (a) of General Assembly resolution 3101 (XXVIII), of which $1,914,052 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and $4,172,561 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977;

(b) To apportion an amount of $3,518,325 for the period from 25 October 1976 to 31 May 1977 inclusive among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (b) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and section II, paragraph 2 (b), of resolution 3374 C (XXX), of which $1,047,962 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and $2,470,363 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977;

(c) To apportion an amount of $212,271 for the period from 25 October 1976 to 31 May 1977 inclusive among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2(c) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and section II, paragraph 2 (c), of resolution 3374 C (XXX), of which $62,037 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and $150,234 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977;

(d) To apportion an amount of $6,877 for the period from 25 October 1976 to 31 May 1977 inclusive among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (d) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 3374 C (XXX), of which $2,118 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1974-1976 and $4,759 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1977;

Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed $1,359,583 per month for the period from 1 June to 24 October 1977 inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 398(1976) of 30 November 1976, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

IV

1. Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

1. Decides that Cape Verde, the Comoros, Mozambique, Papua New Guinea, Sao Tome and Principe and Surinam shall be included in the group of Member States mentioned in paragraph 2 (d) of General Assembly resolution 3101 (XXVIII) and that their contributions for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (g) of Assembly resolution 31/95 B of 14 December 1976;

2. Decides further that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force until 24 October 1976 of the Members listed in paragraph 1 of the present section shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the appropriations apportioned in section II above.

The search for a peaceful settlement

The Middle East problem including the Palestinian question

Communication (9 January 1976)

By a letter dated 9 January 1976, the representative of the USSR transmitted the text of a letter addressed to the Secretary-General by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the USSR in connexion with General Assembly resolution 3375 (XXX) of 10 November 1975,<sup>19</sup> which concerned an invitation to the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) to participate in the efforts for peace in the Middle East. The Foreign Minister said his Government had consistently advocated the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East and believed that the only reliable way of reaching a fundamental settlement of that problem was through joint collective efforts by all the parties directly concerned, including the Arab people of Palestine represented by PLO. He added that on 9 November the USSR had proposed to the United States that, as Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East, they should take a joint initiative for its resumption. His Government continued to hold the firm view that that Conference was the most appropriate forum for working out fundamental decisions on a Middle East settlement based on the relevant United Nations resolutions and resolutely advocated its speediest possible resumption with the full and equal participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Consideration by Security Council (12-26 January 1976)

By the resolution it adopted on 30 November 1975,<sup>20</sup> by which it extended the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), the Security Council also decided that it would reconvene on 12 January 1976 to continue the debate on the Middle East problem including the Palestinian question, taking into account all relevant United Nations resolutions. It was also the understanding of the majority of the Security Council—in accordance with an agreement reached following consultations between members—that, when it reconvened, the representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization would be invited to participate in the debate.<sup>21</sup>

When the Security Council convened on 12 January 1976, the Council President, with the consent of the Council, invited the representatives of Egypt, Jordan, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. At subsequent meetings, the representatives of Algeria, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, India, Iraq, Kuwait, Mauritania, Morocco, Poland, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, Tunisia, Yemen and Yugoslavia were also invited at their request to participate without the right to vote.

The President then proposed that the representative of PLO be invited to participate in the debate, pointing out that his proposal was not being put forward under rule 37<sup>22</sup> or rule 39<sup>23</sup> of the Security Council's provisional rules of procedure; if adopted by the Council, the invitation to PLO to participate would confer upon it the same rights of participation as were conferred when a Member State was invited to participate under rule 37.

Recalling that he had objected to the same proposal when it was made on 4 December 1975,<sup>24</sup> the representative of the United States again objected, stating that rule 37 made allowance for Members of the Organization that were not Council members to participate in the Council's debates. The Organization did not have Members which were not States. The Palestine Liberation Organization was not a State; it did not claim to be a State; it did not administer a defined territory. A decision to invite PLO to participate not under existing rules but as if it were a Member State with the same rights as a Member State would open a veritable Pandora's box of future difficulties, he said. There were groups in all parts of the world that could seek to participate in the Council's proceedings as if they were Member States.

Moreover, he went on to say, PLO, which did not recognize the right of the State of Israel, which was a Member State, to exist, also refused to acknowledge the authority of the Security Council, which, by its resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967<sup>25</sup> and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973,<sup>26</sup> had undertaken to uphold the rights of the States of the Middle East. Resolution 242(1967) for years had served and continued to serve as the only agreed basis for serious negotiations. Consequently, he said, the United States was not prepared to go along with an action which would also undermine the negotiation process, the only process that could lead to peace. He urged the Council not to repeat its mistaken ad hoc decision of 4 December 1975.

The representatives of the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, Panama, Romania and the USSR spoke in favour of the proposal to invite the representatives of PLO.

The United Kingdom representative said it was still his Government's view that the proposal constituted an undesirable and unnecessary departure from established Council practice. However, a majority of members of the Council as it was composed in November 1975 took the view that PLO representatives should be invited to participate in the debate; in those circumstances, the United Kingdom did not think it right to press procedural objections to the point of voting against the proposal.

The proposal was then put to a vote and received 11 votes in favour, 1 against (United States) and 3 abstentions (France, Italy, United Kingdom), and was therefore adopted.

France and Italy explained that their reservations concerned the terms under which the invitation to PLO was to be extended. Contrary to its rules of procedure, the Council attempted to confer upon

<sup>22</sup> Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure reads as follows: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

<sup>23</sup> Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure reads as follows: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

PLO the status of a State, which it was not and did not claim to be.

The PLO representative welcomed the Council's decision to invite PLO to participate in its discussion. He noted Israel's deliberate absence and suggested that its pretext for boycotting the Council's session was simply because representatives of the people of Palestine were present. He then retraced the history of the Palestine question since 1947 and pointed out that it was only to put an end to injustice and aggression that the Palestinian people had resorted to armed struggle. In 1967, after Israel had occupied what remained of Palestine, as well as Sinai and the Golan Heights, the Council met to study the Middle East crisis but ignored the heart and essence of the conflict: the question of Palestine. Resolution 242(1967) addressed itself to the so-called Middle East crisis but dealt neither with the Palestine question nor with the national rights of the Palestinian people to independence and sovereignty. Since then, he said, it had become commonplace to speak of the "Middle East crisis," with the intent of camouflaging, obscuring and evading the essential question, which was the question of Palestine. That had been the reason for the Palestinian people's rejection of resolution 242(1967), for its rejection of the cease-fire and for its determination to carry out its armed struggle.

Similarly, he went on to say, resolution 338(1973), subsequently adopted by the Council, was devoid of any reference to the question of Palestine and ignored the national rights of the Palestinian people. Again the Palestinian people had had to reject it.

In the aftermath of the October 1973 war, he said, PLO moved politically to rectify the mistaken view of the identity of the conflict in the Middle East. Thus, it requested inclusion of the question of Palestine as an independent item on the agenda of the twenty-ninth (1974) session of the General Assembly, a request that was supported by the overwhelming majority of Member States. The international community then came to recognize: first, that the question of Palestine was the central issue in the Middle East conflict; second, that peace in the Middle East was contingent upon the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, beginning with their rights to return, to self-determination and to sovereignty on their national soil; third, that the 1967 war was not in reality a conflict over regional frontiers between the Arab States and Israel, but one of the inevitable results of the continued Israeli usurpation of Palestinian land and violation of Palestinian rights; and fourth, that PLO had been decisively confirmed as the representative of the Palestinian people.

In conclusion, the PLO representative pointed out that PLO's struggle was not directed against the Jews but against the Zionist movement, its racist doctrines and its expansionist practices, which had led to the exile and homelessness of the Palestinian people, who expected the Security Council to adopt a resolution ending their tragedy and offering them a path to return to their homeland. Their aim was the establishment of an independent sovereign State on their national soil.

Spokesmen for Arab countries supported the views expressed by the PLO representative. The representative of the Libyan Arab Republic insisted that no international conference had the right to discuss the question of Palestine in the absence of PLO and that any resolution which ignored the national rights of the Palestinian people was to be rejected. He and others also maintained that the unjust and unlimited commitment of the United States to the Zionist cause constituted the main obstacle to the formulation of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

The representative of Egypt regretted that Israel—the party responsible for the occupation of Arab land and denial of the Palestinian people's national rights—should have found it fitting to declare its contempt of the Council and the international community by boycotting the Council's debate. He asked that the Geneva Peace Conference be reconvened in the near future, with PLO invited to attend on an equal footing with the other parties.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic pointed out that, inasmuch as the Zionist aggression against the Arab people did not start on 5 June 1967, the solution of the conflict could not be based on resolutions or solutions that took into account only what had happened since that date. That explained the inadequacy of resolution 242(1967), which was intended to deal with the immediate consequences of Israeli aggression and totally ignored the Palestine question and the Palestinian people. By adopting resolution 381(1975) of 30 November 1975,<sup>27</sup> he said, the Council had taken an important step towards fulfilling its responsibilities.

The spokesman for Jordan also deplored the "wilful and deliberate" absence of Israel—the party which had always proclaimed its desire for peace and its belief in dialogue. He went on to say that the endeavours of Israeli authorities to consolidate their occupation of the Arab territories was a process of national and cultural replacement much more fearful and radical than the traditionally known violations of human rights of people under conventional occupation. The Council could build peace if its programme involved a time-table for Israeli withdrawal from the territories occupied in 1967 and an endorsement of the Palestinian right to national self-determination. He added that the Palestinian reality, ignored in earlier Council resolutions, had to be recognized as an essential component of such a peace. A just settlement had to include national self-determination for the Palestinian people, their ingathering and the right of return for those who had been expelled from their homes.

Similar views were expressed by spokesmen for other Arab Member States, including the United Arab Emirates and Qatar.

The French representative said the Council should see to it that a just settlement of the Palestinian problem was brought about at the same time as recognition of secure and guaranteed frontiers for all the States of the area. Arab territories occupied as a result of the war of 1967 had to be evacuated and the rights of the Palestinian people to an independent homeland had to be recognized. However, it was not for the Council to determine for the interested parties the nature and status of the Palestinian homeland, which they themselves should determine in the light of the opportunities offered by life in the area. The procedure to be followed in seeking a settlement, he said, was established by resolution 338(1973), which remained entirely valid. A settlement could emerge only from negotiations among the parties and France favoured a Palestinian expression of views during those negotiations. It was for the Council to follow developments in the negotiating process, to endorse results and to determine the necessary international guarantees.

According to the USSR representative, Israeli troops had to withdraw from all the Arab territories occupied in 1967 and the legitimate national rights of the Arab people of Palestine had to be fully satisfied, including their inalienable right to create their own State. The USSR, he said, appealed for a comprehensive solution of the radical problems of a peace settlement within the Geneva Conference. It was firmly convinced that without the full participation of the Arab people of Palestine it would be impossible and pointless to attempt to settle the Middle East problem; the question of the participation of their representatives in the work of the Geneva Conference was directly related to the very substance of a settlement. Anyone who took a stand against the equal participation of the PLO representatives in the work of the Conference was against a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, the USSR representative stated.

The representative of the United Kingdom said that a settlement should be based on three main requirements. The first was Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories; the second, respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries. Those two basic principles were laid down in resolution 242(1967) and brought into effect as provided in resolution 338(1973), and the United Kingdom would oppose any unilateral attempt to alter those resolutions or detract from them. The third requirement, not expressed in resolution 242(1967), was that the right of the Palestinian people to the expression of their national identity had to be recognized. How their rights were to be further defined was a matter for negotiation between the parties, but it had to be done in a way consistent with the right of all States in the area, including Israel, to exist within secure and recognized boundaries.

The principle of Israel's existence was supported by the great majority of Member States, he observed, and those who did not recognize that fact—most of all, those Palestinians who did not do so—had to come to recognize it and begin the task of considering how they could live at peace with Israel. On the other side, Israel had to accept that Palestinian nationalist sentiment would have to be taken into account and, more important, Israel would have to do something about it. It was not enough, he said, simply to express willingness to find a solution.

The Chinese representative said it was mainly the two super-powers which were responsible for the situation in the Middle East. Although each of them had put forward this or that kind of proposal—for a "comprehensive" solution or a "step-by-step" solution—in fact neither of them had any intention or sincere desire to bring about a real settlement. The Chinese Government and people, he said, had always supported the Palestinian and other Arab peoples in their just struggle to regain their national rights and recover their lost territories, and firmly condemned Israeli Zionist aggression. In China's view, the Council had to affirm the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people and Israel had to withdraw from all the occupied Arab territories.

The United States representative said that one of the Security Council's greatest contributions had been to establish a framework within which contact between the parties to the problem could take place and the negotiating process maintained. Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), and the will to apply them, had been the foundation for the progress that had been made; they continued to provide hope for the future. But, he said, when all parties had agreed to a framework, all of them had to agree to any changes in it. The Council should not adopt resolutions leaving no commonly accepted basis for further negotiation. However, the United States believed there was enough leeway in the existing arrangements to achieve progress, if there was the will to use them; matters of procedure, such as the question of additional participants, and of substance could and should be addressed at Geneva or at a preparatory conference.

The Council should not seek to prejudge the work of the Geneva Conference.

The United States, he said, was prepared to co-operate with all the States involved on all the issues. It was aware that there could be no durable solution without every effort being made to promote a solution of the key issues of a just and lasting peace based on resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), taking into account the legitimate interests of all the peoples of the area, including the Palestinian people, and respect for the right to independent existence of all States in the area.

On 26 January, the representative of Pakistan introduced a draft resolution, sponsored also by Benin, Guyana, Panama, Romania and the United Republic of Tanzania, according to the preamble of which the Security Council would, among other things, express its conviction that the question of Palestine was the core of the conflict in the Middle East and its concern over the continuing deterioration of the situation there. It would deeply deplore Israel's persistence in its occupation of Arab territories and its refusal to implement the relevant United Nations resolutions, and reaffirm the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territories by the threat or use of force. Also by the preamble to the draft text, the Council would reaffirm further the necessity of the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter of the United Nations and its resolutions concerning the problem of the Middle East including the question of Palestine.

By the operative part of the six-power text, the Council would affirm: (a) that the Palestinian people should be enabled to exercise its inalienable right of self-determination, including the right to establish an independent state in Palestine in accordance with the Charter; (b) the right of Palestinian refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours to do so and the right of those choosing not to return to receive compensation for their property; (c) that Israel should withdraw from all the Arab territories occupied since June 1967; and (d) that appropriate arrangements should be established to guarantee, in accordance with the Charter, the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries.

The Council would, further, by this text: decide that the above provisions should be taken fully into account in all international efforts and conferences organized within the framework of the United Nations for the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East; request the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps as soon as possible for the implementation of the provisions of this resolution and to report to the Security Council on the progress achieved; and decide to convene within six months to consider that report and in order to pursue the Council's responsibilities regarding such implementation.

The representative of the United Kingdom said his Government attached great importance to maintaining the principles and the provisions of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) as an essential element in the draft if the resolution was to provide a real contribution towards the progress of negotiations. He therefore submitted an amendment in the form of a new operative paragraph by which the Council would reaffirm the principles and provisions of those resolutions and declare that nothing in the provisions of the current resolution superseded them.

In the view of the United States representative, the draft resolution, far from preserving the framework for negotiations established in the 1967 and 1973 resolutions, would in fact begin its destruction inasmuch as it proposed a fundamental and irremediable diminishment of the circumstances of one of the parties, fundamental rights were elided, entitlements impaired and expectations put in doubt. It would be incompatible for the same document both to alter those rights, entitlements and expectations—which were incorporated in the two resolutions—and, at the same time, to seek to reaffirm them. Therefore he would abstain on the United Kingdom amendment.

The representative of France, pointing out that the object of the Council's debate was to complement and complete the 1967 and 1973 resolutions, said he would vote in favour of the amendment since in France's view there was no contradiction between the draft resolution and the United Kingdom proposal, which shed light on the context in which the Council's work had to be done. Italy also supported the United Kingdom's proposal.

The USSR said it could not support the amendment as it would introduce ambiguity and confusion into the substance of the draft resolution.

The Libyan Arab Republic opposed the United Kingdom's amendment, reiterating its view that the two resolutions in question had been bypassed by events and developments both inside and outside the United Nations and were irrelevant as a framework for any just and lasting solution of the Middle East question.

Pakistan said it could not support the proposed amendment, not because of its substance but because it was not relevant.

The United Republic of Tanzania said that to accept the proposed amendment would create unnecessary difficulties for many that had been able to accept the draft resolution as it stood. The sponsors believed their draft to be an improvement on resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) because it was clearer and because it addressed itself seriously to the Palestinian question.

The amendment proposed by the United Kingdom was put to a vote and received 4 votes in favour (France, Italy, Sweden, United Kingdom), 2 against (China, Libyan Arab Republic) and 9 abstentions, and was therefore not adopted.

China's representative said his Government would not participate in the voting on the draft resolution. It considered that the most urgent task was to secure Israel's withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories. However, the draft resolution called for arrangements to guarantee the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries; that, according to China, could be used by Israeli Zionism to create pretexts for its policy of aggression and expansion and by the super-powers to continue to maintain the situation of "no war, no peace" which was single-handedly created by them.

The draft resolution was put to a vote and received 9 votes in favour, 1 against (United States) and 3 abstentions (Italy, Sweden, United Kingdom). China and the Libyan Arab Republic did not participate in the vote. The resolution was not adopted because of the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council.

The Secretary-General observed that the Security Council's debate had highlighted both the main elements of the Middle East problem and the extreme difficulty of reconciling those elements. It had in particular emphasized the Palestinian dimension of the problem; at the same time, there had been a reaffirmation of the right of every State in the area to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries. He said he felt it his duty to express the general and growing anxiety of the international community at large at the great difficulties being experienced in making progress towards a settlement and he appealed to all of the parties concerned to persist in their efforts so that further constructive steps could quickly follow the Council's debate.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of the United States said that, even if it stood alone, the United States felt the need to preserve the framework for negotiations established in resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973). The negative vote of the United States was not based on antipathy to the aspirations of the Palestinians but rather on the conviction that passage of the draft resolution would not ameliorate the condition of the Palestinians or be the most effective way of addressing the long-neglected problem of their future in the context of an over-all settlement.

France deplored the fact that the draft resolution, which was the product of lengthy consultation and which it termed realistic and equitable, had not been adopted. France did not believe, however, that the debate had been in vain, because the framework for a just and stable solution for the Middle East had become clearer.

A similar view was expressed by the representative of Japan, who said that the fact that many members had agreed on a formula aimed at solving the Middle East problem was in itself a point of departure for future discussions.

The USSR representative said there was general recognition that genuine peace was impossible unless the national rights of the Arab people of Palestine were respected and unless Israeli troops withdrew from all the occupied Arab territories. He noted that many speakers, having recognized that the Council could not work out a peace treaty on a Middle East settlement, had called for the reconvening of the Geneva Conference, with the participation of PLO. Israel and its supporters were now completely isolated internationally, he stated.

The PLO representative said that the majority of Council members had converged on the following basic concepts and conclusions: that PLO was the representative of the people of Palestine, who were entitled to national self-determination and independence in their Palestinian homeland, and that no peace and hence no just and durable solution of the Middle East crisis was feasible without PLO consent and participation. Finally, he said, Council resolution 242(1967) was inadequate, since it failed to deal with either the question of Palestine or the national rights of the Palestinian people to independence and sovereignty. The United States, he added, which had chosen to demonstrate its prejudiced and unwavering support of Israel at the cost of impairing the effectiveness of the Council, could no longer claim that its step-by-step diplomacy would yield any productive results.

Communications (January-May 1976)

By a letter dated 9 January 1976, the representative of the USSR transmitted the text of a statement setting forth the views of the USSR regarding the situation in the Middle East.

In a letter dated 10 January, the representative of Mexico declared that Mexico considered the Middle East situation to be the most serious potential threat to world peace and that a comprehensive solution to the problem was necessary within the framework of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations. Mexico also believed that the permanent members of the Security Council should demonstrate by action that they wished those resolutions implemented.

By a letter dated 14 January, the representative of Israel transmitted the text of a newspaper article containing a commentary on the "Palestinian National Covenant (1968)." He also commented on the PLO political programme and various statements made by its leaders which, he said, demonstrated that the principles and purposes of that organization were incompatible with the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations.

On 27 January 1976, the Secretary-General, in maintaining contact with the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, sent identical letters to them in which he inquired about their thinking on ways of making progress towards a solution of the Middle East problem. The representatives of the USSR and of the United States transmitted the replies of their Governments on 17 and 20 February.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the USSR stated that Israel's continuing occupation of the Arab territories and its disregard of the rights of the Arab people of Palestine perpetuated the danger of a new military explosion. The efforts of Israel and those who supported it to keep the settlement of the Middle East problem deadlocked, as demonstrated by the results of the recent debate in the Security Council, was a subject of concern. Because of the position of one of its permanent members, the Council had not been able to reach a decision, although the overwhelming majority of its members had spoken in favour of specific measures to achieve a comprehensive settlement. With few exceptions, Members of the United Nations had expressed, in the General Assembly and the Security Council, the view that genuine peace in the Middle East was impossible unless Israel withdrew its troops from all the Arab territories occupied in 1967 and unless the inalienable national rights of the Arab people of Palestine were safeguarded and the right of all States of the region to independent existence was guaranteed.

The USSR Foreign Minister went on to say that it had become evident that the only reliable way to achieve agreement on all the questions involved in a settlement was to resume, after careful preparation, the work of the Geneva Peace Conference, with the participation of all those directly concerned, including PLO and the Co-Chairmen of the Conference. Without the participation of the Palestinians, the Geneva Conference would be not a forum for business-like negotiations but a camouflage aimed at creating a semblance of negotiations, the Foreign Minister said.

In his reply, the Secretary of State of the United States said that he shared the Secretary-General's sense of urgency in pursuing the goal of a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. He said he had just concluded discussions with Israel's Prime Minister, and the United States was determined to continue its efforts towards meaningful negotiations. However, it believed that there would be no chance of further progress if the negotiating framework, erected around Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973),<sup>28</sup> were disrupted. It continued to believe that that framework was sufficiently flexible to provide the basis for working out fair and durable solutions to all the issues involved. Furthermore, the United States had repeatedly affirmed that there would be no permanent peace unless it included arrangements that took into account the legitimate interests of the Palestinian people.

The Secretary of State agreed that a resumption of the Geneva Peace Conference, after careful preparation, would serve the goal of achieving progress, and said that the United States had proposed—as a practical way of proceeding—a preparatory conference of those who had participated thus far in the negotiations. The United States, he said, was also prepared to consider holding bilateral consultations with the USSR in advance of such a preparatory conference.

By a letter dated 29 April, the representative of the USSR transmitted a statement by his Government dated 28 April, calling for an over-all political settlement of the problem of the Middle East based on: the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Arab territories; the satisfaction of the legitimate national demands of the Arab people of Palestine, including their inalienable right to establish their own State; and international guarantees for the security and inviolability of the frontiers of all Middle Eastern States. It favoured the resumption of the Geneva Peace Conference, with the participation of PLO, possibly in two stages, so that in the initial stage all organizational questions might be solved and appropriate working bodies established. The USSR was prepared to appoint its representatives to such meetings without delay. In the statement, it was stressed that the previous year's separate arrangements concerning some minor segments of the Israeli-occupied territories, by side-stepping the key questions in any Middle East settlement, had not only failed to alleviate the situation but had even further aggravated it.

On 19 May, the representative of Bulgaria transmitted the text of a statement his Government dated 11 May concerning the new initiative of the USSR for a political settlement of the conflict in the Middle East. The Government of Bulgaria expressed its full agreement with the USSR statement of 28 April and endorsed the proposals for the solution of the Middle East conflict contained therein.

Report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People

By a note dated 29 May 1976, the Secretary-General, as he had been requested to do by the General Assembly on 10 November 1975,<sup>29</sup> transmitted to the Security Council the report of the Assembly's 20-member Committee on the Exercise of the

Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. By that resolution, the Committee had been asked to submit its report and recommendations no later than 1 June 1976; the Security Council, in turn, was asked to consider as soon as possible after that date the question of the exercise by the Palestinian people of the inalienable rights recognized by the Assembly in its resolution 3236(XXIX) of 22 November 1974.<sup>30</sup>

In the first part of its report, the Committee gave a summary of its deliberations on: the nature of the question of Palestine, the role of the Committee, the right of return, the right to self-determination and to national independence and sovereignty, the status of Jerusalem, a programme of implementation of the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, proposals concerning steps to ensure implementation of that programme, and the interrelationship between the question of Palestine and the Middle East problem.

The second part of the report contained the Committee's recommendations, beginning with what it termed basic considerations and guidelines. It noted first of all that the question of Palestine was at the heart of the Middle East problem and stressed that, consequently, no solution in the Middle East could be envisaged that did not fully take into account the legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people.

Next, the legitimate and inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to return to their homes and property and to achieve self-determination, national independence and sovereignty were endorsed by the Committee in the conviction that the full implementation of those rights would contribute decisively to a comprehensive and final settlement of the Middle East crisis.

In the view of the Committee, the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization on an equal footing with other parties, on the basis of General Assembly resolutions 3236(XXIX)<sup>31</sup> and 3375(XXX),<sup>32</sup> was indispensable in all efforts, deliberations and conferences on the Middle East held under the auspices of the United Nations.

The Committee then recalled the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force and stressed the consequent obligation for complete and speedy evacuation of any territory so occupied.

The Committee considered it the duty and the responsibility of all concerned to enable the Palestinians to exercise their inalienable rights.

Next, the Committee recommended an expanded and more influential role by the United Nations and its organs, particularly the Security Council, in promoting a just solution to the question of Palestine and in the implementation of such a solution.

The Committee, then, in endorsing the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes, went on to propose a two-phase programme to implement the exercise of that right.

The first phase involved the return of Palestinians displaced as a result of the war of June 1967. The Committee recommended that the Security Council request the immediate implementation of its resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967<sup>33</sup> and that such implementation should not be related to any other condition. It also recommended that the resources of the International Committee of the Red Cross and/or of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East might be employed to assist in the solution of any logistical problems involved in the resettlement of Palestinians returning to their homes. Those agencies could also assist, in co-operation with the host countries and PLO, in the identification of the displaced Palestinians.

For the second phase, involving the return to their homes of the Palestinians displaced between 1948 and 1967, the Committee recommended that, while the first phase was being implemented, the United Nations, in co-operation with the States directly involved and PLO as the interim representative of the Palestinian entity, should make the necessary arrangements to enable those Palestinians to exercise their right to return to their homes and property, in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions, particularly General Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 November 1948.<sup>34</sup> Palestinians not choosing to return to their homes should be paid just and equitable compensation as provided for in that resolution.

In order to implement the inherent right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, the Committee recommended that a time-table be established by the Security Council for the complete withdrawal—no later than 1 June 1977—of Israeli occupation forces from the areas occupied in 1967. If necessary, temporary peace-keeping forces should be provided by the Council to facilitate the process of withdrawal.

The Committee also recommended that the Security Council request Israel to desist from the establishment of new settlements and to withdraw during this period from settlements established in the occupied territories since 1967. Israel should also be requested to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to declare, pending its speedy withdrawal from those territories, its recognition of the applicability of that Convention. The evacuated territories, with all property and services intact, should be taken over by the United Nations, with the co-operation of the League of Arab States, and subsequently handed over to PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people. The United Nations should, if necessary, assist in establishing communications between Gaza and the West Bank.

<sup>33</sup> See Y.U.N., 1967, pp. 190-91, text of resolution 237(1967), by which, among other things, the Security Council called upon Israel to ensure the safety, welfare and security of the inhabitants of the areas where military operations had taken place and to facilitate the return of those inhabitants who had fled the areas since the outbreak of hostilities. The Council recommended to the Governments concerned the scrupulous respect of the humanitarian principles governing the treatment of prisoners of war and the protection of civilian persons in time of war contained in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949.

The Committee recommended that, as soon as the independent Palestinian entity had been established, the United Nations, in co-operation with that entity and the States directly involved, should make further arrangements, taking into account General Assembly resolution 3375(XXX), for the full implementation of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, the resolution of outstanding problems and the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region, in accordance with all relevant United Nations resolutions.

Finally, the Committee recommended that the United Nations should provide the economic and technical assistance necessary for the consolidation of the Palestinian entity.

Consideration by Security Council (9-29 June 1976)

The Security Council considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People at meetings held between 9 and 29 June 1976. In the course of these meetings the following 29 Member States were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bahrain, Bulgaria, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Poland, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and Yugoslavia. The officers and other members of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, and the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations, were also invited to participate.

The Security Council decided, by a vote of 11 in favour to 1 against (United States), with 3 abstentions (France, Italy, United Kingdom), to invite, as on previous occasions, the representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization to participate in the debate, as requested by the Libyan Arab Republic and Pakistan.

The vote was requested by the United States representative who said he had no objection to hearing Palestinian views, but objected to the proposed method for hearing the PLO representatives, which, he said, was not in accordance with the Council's rules of procedure.

The Chairman and Rapporteur of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People emphasized that the recommendations contained in the Committee's report were based on previous resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and were in accordance with the spirit and letter of the United Nations Charter. They also stressed that the recommendations contained a call for effective and urgent action by the Security Council—action which was overdue. The Chairman pointed out that the Committee had decided, when it formulated its report to the General Assembly, to take full account of the decisions, proposals and suggestions of the Security Council.

The PLO representative said that the Security Council had thus far dealt with the Palestine problem only derivatively and its efforts had not borne fruit. It currently had an opportunity to confront the core of the question and to begin devising appropriate measures to promote the effective implementation of the resolutions of the General Assembly on the question of Palestine. The report of the Committee, he said, provided the basis for the adoption of measures by the Council that would facilitate the exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

The representatives of Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Jordan, Mauritania, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia also considered that the Committee's recommendations could serve as a realistic basis for enabling the Palestinian people to exercise their rights and thus promote the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, and they called on the Council to endorse the recommendations and take steps for their implementation.

The representative of Jordan believed that the attainment of Palestinian rights and the establishment of a just peace in the area were inseparable goals and he noted that while the Committee's report focused on Palestinian rights, it made it clear that such rights could be attained only in the context of a comprehensive, just settlement in the Middle East. The Syrian representative said it was time the Security Council—and in particular its permanent members—undertook some action to end the nightmare with which the region had been living for three decades. If, owing to the abuse of the right of veto by any of its permanent members, the Council was unable to act, then the Committee should recommend to the General Assembly that the Assembly itself carry out its responsibilities in the matter, in accordance with the United Nations Charter and existing precedents.

Support for the recommendations was expressed by the representatives of Cuba, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, Panama, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia, who urged the Security Council to endorse them. The spokesman for Yugoslavia pointed out that PLO's participation in the Committee's work showed its readiness to negotiate through the United Nations with the other side about the modalities for a solution of the Palestinian problem and, consequently, of the Middle East crisis. Israel had said it would not negotiate with PLO but it could not avoid for ever the necessity of dealing with the central factor, namely, the Palestinian problem.

The USSR representative also supported the recommendations and reiterated the view of the USSR that the Middle East problem could be solved only on the basis of three organically linked elements: withdrawal of Israeli troops from all the Arab territories occupied as a result of Israel's 1967 aggression; satisfaction of the lawful national demands of the Arab people of Palestine, including the right to establish their own State; and establishment of international guarantees for the security and inviolability of the frontiers of all States in the Middle East and their right to an independent existence and development. He also again called for the reconvening of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East—with the participation of all parties concerned, including PLO—as the appropriate international machinery for negotiating a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

According to the Chinese representative, the essence of the Palestine question and of the whole Middle East question lay in Israeli Zionist aggression and the contention between the two super-powers for hegemony in the region versus the struggle of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples against that aggression and hegemonism. China, he said, held that the Security Council had to rectify the unjust stand against the Palestinian people it formerly adopted under super-power manipulation and recognize the complete restoration to the Palestinian people of their national rights. That restoration, he stressed, was inseparable from the recovery of the lost Arab territories, from which Israel had to be enjoined to withdraw, immediately and unconditionally, completely and not partially.

The representatives of France, Italy, Japan, Sweden and the United Kingdom had reservations about the recommendations of the Committee that called for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the territories occupied in 1967 and the establishment of an independent Palestinian entity but did not take sufficiently into consideration the third fundamental element of a Middle East settlement—namely, the right of every State in the area to live in peace within secure, recognized and guaranteed frontiers. The recommendations thus did not accord with Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), which, they noted, provided a widely accepted basis for achieving a comprehensive settlement in the Middle East.

The representative of Sweden said that Israel had to recognize the national rights and interests of the Palestinian people, and their right to a homeland; PLO had to accept the right of Israel to continued existence within secure and recognized boundaries. He and others, including Japan and the United Kingdom, strongly supported the principle that a solution of the central elements of the Middle East problem had to be found in negotiations. Japan was among those urging resumption of the Geneva Conference on the Middle East, with the participation of PLO.

At a Security Council meeting on 29 June, a draft resolution was put forward by Guyana, Pakistan, Panama and the United Republic of Tanzania by the preambular part of which the Council would, among other things, express its deep concern that no just solution to the problem of Palestine had been achieved and that the problem therefore continued to aggravate the Arab-Israeli conflict, of which it was the core, and to endanger international peace and security. By the operative part of the text, the Council would take note of the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and affirm the inalienable rights of those people to self-determination, including the right of return and the right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the United Nations Charter.

The draft resolution received 10 votes in favour, 1 against (United States) and 4 abstentions (France, Italy, Sweden, United Kingdom), and was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Security Council.

The United States representative, explaining his Government's negative vote, said that the text was totally devoid of balance, stressing the rights and interests of one party and ignoring those of other parties. The political interests of the Palestinians and their role in a final settlement, he said, was a matter that had to be negotiated between the parties before it could be defined in Council resolutions.

The spokesmen for France, Italy and the United Kingdom said they had abstained in the vote because the text singled out one aspect of the question—recognition of Palestinian rights—and failed to mention other aspects.

Communications and reports (October 1976)

By a letter dated 7 October, the USSR representative transmitted the text of a proposal by his Government concerning a settlement in the Middle East and the Geneva Peace Conference, suggesting a resumption of the work of the Geneva Conference in October-November 1976, with the following agenda: (1) withdrawal of Israeli troops from all the Arab territories occupied in 1967; (2) realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestine Arab people, including their right to self-determination and the establishment of their own State; (3) preservation of the right to an independent existence and to security of all the States directly participating in the conflict—the Arab States bordering on Israel, on the one hand, and the State of Israel, on the other—and the granting to them of appropriate international guarantees; and (4) cessation of the state of war between the Arab States concerned and Israel.

The USSR proposed that the Conference be conducted in two phases, concluding with the adoption of a final instrument or instruments in the nature of a treaty, and that PLO should participate in the work of the Conference from the beginning and with equal status.

On 18 October, the Secretary-General submitted a report in response to a request by the General Assembly, set forth in a resolution of 5 December 1975<sup>35</sup> on the situation in the Middle East, that he report to the Security Council on the implementation of that resolution.

In the report, the Secretary-General reviewed the action he had taken in bringing the resolution to the attention of the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East and transmitting it to the Security Council, which, he noted, had held four series of meetings, between January and June 1976, on the relevant issues but had adopted no resolutions.

The Secretary-General then reported on the views expressed by the two Co-Chairmen (see p. 234) and he said that he had asked his Personal Representative for the Peace Conference on the Middle East, Under-Secretary-General Roberto E. Guyer, to undertake an exploratory mission to the Middle East, which he visited from 25 February to 2 March 1976. On the basis of the findings of that mission, the Secretary-General decided to continue his efforts to find ways and means to resume the negotiating process and, in identical aide-mémoires handed to the parties on 1 April, including PLO, he asked them to convey to him any ideas of a procedural or substantive nature that they might have with respect to action to be taken by the United Nations with a view to breaking the impasse in the peace efforts.

In their replies, Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic reiterated their demand for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from all the Arab territories occupied since June 1967; the USSR reaffirmed that the most appropriate forum for working out a solution was the Geneva Peace Conference, with the participation of all directly concerned parties, including PLO and the Co-Chairmen of the Conference; the United States emphasized that it intended to pursue actively contacts with the parties on efforts to bring about an agreement that would end the state of war in the Middle East as soon as the situation in Lebanon had improved; and Israel emphasized that it favoured the reconvening of the Geneva Peace Conference with the original participants, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and with the terms stated in the letters of 18 December 1973 addressed to the Secretary-General by the USSR and the United States concerning that Conference.<sup>36</sup>

The Secretary-General concluded that while there was general agreement on the necessity of resuming negotiations for a just and lasting settlement, there were still important differences of view among the parties concerned. He said he would continue his efforts towards the resumption of the negotiating process.

Also on 18 October, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly concerning the implementation of Assembly resolution 3375(XXX) of 10 November 1975<sup>37</sup> by which the Assembly had, among other things, called for an invitation to PLO to participate in all deliberations and conferences on the Middle East held under United Nations auspices.

Consideration by the General Assembly

Three resolutions on Middle East questions were adopted by the General Assembly during its thirty-first (1976) session—one on the question of Palestine, another on the situation in the Middle East and the third on the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East.

The question of Palestine

The Assembly considered the question of Palestine at meetings held between 15 and 24 November 1976.

In presenting the report of his Committee, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People recalled that the Security Council had examined the report in June: a draft resolution submitted by non-aligned members of the Council had not been adopted because of the negative vote of a permanent member. The Committee, he said, had subsequently decided to leave its report unchanged and resubmit it to the Assembly.

He also noted that none of the States that spoke in the Council had questioned the reality of the rights of the Palestinian people. The criticisms of the report went beyond the mandate of the Committee, which was neither to resolve the question of the Middle East nor to reaffirm the rights of Israel but to define ways and means to ensure recognition of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

The Chairman went on to say that the establishment of a just and definitive peace in the area required a basic change both in the political steps to be taken and in the attitudes of all parties to the dispute: Israel had to give up its expansionist aims and realize that it could not live and prosper in its present hostile and explosive environment and that peace and understanding with its neighbours were indispensable to the security and well-being of its people; the Arabs, for their part, had to adopt a more realistic approach to the question and recognize that the State of Israel was a reality and its existence could not be denied.

The representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization pointed out that the principles on which the Committee based its recommendations were the necessary basis for resolving the Palestine problem and for the realization of peace in the Middle East. He said that PLO strongly regretted the fact that the Security Council had been unable to take decisions aimed at implementing the Committee's report because of the United States veto. That, he said, made it incumbent on the Assembly to assume its international responsibility.

During the discussion, many Members—Algeria, Egypt, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Yemen and others—supported the Committee's report and urged that it be endorsed by the General Assembly. Egypt said the Assembly had to seek new ways and means of implementing the Committee's proposals.

The representative of Israel said that in the name of his Government he rejected out of hand the Committee's recommendations, which conflicted with existing Security Council resolutions and which, if implemented, would lead to the dismemberment of Israel. The core of the Arab-Israeli conflict was not the question of the Palestinian Arabs or the issue of territories occupied in 1967 but, rather, the non-recognition by the Arab world of Israel's right to exist. The spokesman for Israel made the following points, among others:

— with regard to the question of the return of refugees, he pointed out that the report dealt only with Palestinian refugees, and ignored the rights of about 800,000 Jews who had fled from Arab countries between 1948 and 1967 because of the conflict;

— the Committee's recommendations for Israeli withdrawal did not stop at the 1967 lines but implied the step-by-step truncation of the Jewish State until it totally disappeared;

— by not mentioning Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), the report ignored Israel's rights and the centrality of the process of negotiation in solving any conflict;

— Israel remained committed to the need for movement towards a comprehensive solution of the conflict on the basis of resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and in the forum established for that purpose, namely, the Geneva Peace Conference as originally constituted, or in any other forum in which the States parties to the conflict would decide to meet.

He said also that Israel was committed to a solution which took into account the question of Palestinian identity and included a just and constructive solution for the Palestine Arab problem. Approximately 80 per cent of the Palestinian Arabs were citizens of both Jordan and Israel, which led his Government to reiterate its belief that the ultimate solution of the Palestine Arab problem had to lie within the context of a peace agreement between Israel and Jordan.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic pointed out that it was incorrect to maintain that Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) were not taken into account in the recommendations of the Committee. The report specifically called for the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region in accordance with all relevant United Nations resolutions, which, in his view, included those two Council resolutions. If the Security Council could not preserve peace and security in the Middle East, then the General Assembly was under obligation to ensure the implementation of United Nations decisions, he said.

The spokesman for Iraq said he had reservations about references in the report to some of the United Nations resolutions which affirmed the existence of what he termed the Zionist entity. In Iraq's view, the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination could be exercised only in the whole territory of Palestine, exclusive of any foreign occupation of Palestine.

The USSR representative supported the Committee's recommendations on the understanding that the question of Palestine constituted an integral part of a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East problem. He reiterated his Government's view that such a settlement should be based on withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Arab territories occupied in 1967, on the implementation of the national rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to establish an independent state of their own, and on the recognition of the independent existence and development of all States of the area, under appropriate international guarantees. The USSR also supported the reconvening as soon as possible of the Geneva Peace Conference, with the participation of all directly interested parties, including PLO.

The representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine members of the European Communities (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom), said they could not endorse the Committee's recommendations because they took into account only two of the basic elements of a peace settlement mentioned in the Committee's report, namely, Israeli withdrawal and the rights of the Palestinians. The third element, namely, the principle of secure and recognized boundaries for all States of the region, did not appear in the recommendations, which therefore suffered from a fundamental imbalance.

The Chinese representative said that China, as always, firmly supported the Palestinian and other Arab peoples in their just struggle against Israeli Zionism and super-power hegemonism and for the recovery of the lost territories and the restoration of their national rights. China had always held that Israel had to withdraw from all the occupied Arab territories and that the national rights of the Palestinian people had to be regained, and therefore was in favour of the contents of the report of the Committee that reaffirmed or conformed to Assembly resolutions 3236(XXIX)<sup>38</sup> and 3376(XXX).<sup>39</sup> China was firmly convinced that whatever conspiratorial schemes and perverse acts the super-powers and the Israeli aggressors might resort to, the Palestinian and all other Arab peoples would heighten their vigilance, strengthen their unity, persevere in their struggle and finally accomplish their sacred cause of national liberation.

The representative of the United States said it was an elementary truth that the legitimate aspirations and interests of the Palestinian people had to be taken into account in working out a settlement in the Middle East; without doubt it was one of the central issues that had to be resolved in the negotiations to have a just and lasting peace and the United States, he said, was committed to such an outcome. However, the Committee's report was based only on that premise without consideration of other vital and absolutely essential issues. Among those were: the right of Israel to exist; the need for the Palestinians to accept the legitimacy and reality of the State of Israel; the need for Arab countries to maintain peaceful relations with Israel within the framework of an over-all peace settlement; and the need for the Arab States and Israel to end the state of war and arrive at a peaceful settlement in the area.

He went on to say that the recommendations also prejudged the outcome of the negotiations that had to take place between the parties themselves, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973). No solution to this or any other dispute could be imposed by the Assembly. Furthermore, he said, the recommendation that there be a complete withdrawal by Israeli occupation forces not later than 1 June 1977 utterly conflicted with the two Council resolutions of 1967 and 1973, which called for negotiations between the parties concerned for the purpose of settling all outstanding issues.

Finally, he said, the United States considered that the work of the Committee had been concluded and there was therefore no need for extending its mandate or for a reconsideration of its report by the Security Council. Lasting peace could come only through negotiations by the parties directly involved.

On 24 November, by a recorded vote of 90 to 16, with 30 abstentions, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/20, which was sponsored by 28 Members. By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things expressed its deep concern that no just solution to the problem of Palestine had been achieved and that this problem therefore continued to aggravate the Middle East conflict, of which it was the core, and to endanger international peace and security. The Assembly reaffirmed that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East could not be established without the achievement, inter alia, of a just solution of the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return and the right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the Charter.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly:

(1) expressed its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it;

(2) took note of the Committee's report and endorsed the recommendations contained therein, as a basis for the solution of the question of Palestine;

(3) decided to circulate the report to all the competent United Nations bodies and urged them to take necessary action, as appropriate, in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation;

(4) urged the Security Council to consider once again as soon as possible the recommendations in the report, taking fully into account the observations made thereon during the current Assembly debate, in order to take the necessary measures to implement the Committee's recommendations and achieve early progress towards a solution of the problem of Palestine and the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

(5) authorized the Committee to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations and to report thereon to the Assembly at its 1977 session;

(6) requested the Committee to promote the greatest possible dissemination of information on its programme of implementation through non-governmental organizations and other appropriate means;

(7) requested the Secretary-General to give the widest possible publicity to the Committee's work and provide it with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks, including summary records; and

(8) decided to include the item entitled "Question of Palestine" in the provisional agenda of its 1977 session.

The text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Comoros, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, India, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Pakistan, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia.

ENLARGEMENT OF COMMITTEE ON EXERCISE OF THE INALIENABLE RIGHTS OF THE PALESTINIAN PEOPLE

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted, by consensus, a decision by which it added Guyana, Mali and Nigeria to the membership of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.

A draft resolution to the same effect, proposed by Afghanistan, Cyprus, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Malta, Pakistan, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the Ukrainian SSR and Yugoslavia, was before the Assembly but was not voted upon.

The situation in the Middle East

The General Assembly discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East" at meetings held between 2 and 9 December 1976. It heard the views of more than 50 Member States and received three draft resolutions, two of which were adopted on 9 December as resolutions 31/61 and 31/62.

During the discussion there was wide agreement that the current situation in the Middle East continued to pose a serious threat to world peace and stability. Most speakers regretted the lack of progress in reaching a settlement and expressed the belief that the resumption of the negotiations between the parties was both urgent and timely. In enumerating the prerequisites for a just and durable peace in the area, many Members reiterated their view that Israel had to withdraw from the territories it occupied in 1967 and that the national rights of the Palestinians, including the right to establish their own State, had to be recognized. Others emphasized, at the same time, the right of all States in the area to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries. It was generally considered that the United Nations should continue to play an important role in promoting a settlement of the problem and that Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) continued to provide a basis accepted by all parties for such a settlement. It was felt by many Members, however, that the two resolutions did not fully take into account the universal recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people.

On the basis of these general principles, different views were expressed—especially by the representatives of the parties directly concerned—as to the appropriate action deemed necessary for reaching a settlement.

A draft resolution was submitted by Israel on 6 December by the preambular part of which the Assembly would have recalled that all Member States, in their acceptance of the Charter of the United Nations, had undertaken a commitment to act in accordance with Article 2 of the Charter<sup>40</sup> and to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice were not endangered. It would also have reaffirmed the urgent necessity of establishing a just and durable peace in the Middle East.

By the operative paragraph, the Assembly would have called on Egypt, Israel, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic to reconvene without delay at the Peace Conference on the Middle East under the co-chairmanship of the United States and the USSR in order to resume negotiations, without prior conditions, on the establishment of a just and durable peace in the Middle East, as called for in Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973).

The representative of Israel observed, in introducing the draft resolution, that it was the first time Israel had submitted a resolution for Assembly consideration. He appealed to Member States to adopt it so that the parties would begin negotiations in the very near future. Israel, he said, was prepared to go to Geneva immediately, without any pre-conditions whatsoever. He added that the Geneva Conference was sovereign and should be allowed to decide about participants and substantive matters.

Amendments to the draft resolution, proposed by India, Malta, Senegal, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia, would have added a new preambular paragraph by which the Assembly would have recalled all relevant United Nations resolutions concerning the Middle East, and would have amended the operative paragraph so that the Assembly would have called upon Egypt, Israel, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO to participate in the Peace Conference held under the auspices of the United Nations, with the co-chairmanship of the United States and the USSR, in order to negotiate without delay the establishment of a just and durable peace in the Middle East, as called for in resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and General Assembly resolution 3375(XXX).

In introducing the amendments on behalf of the sponsors, the representative of Sri Lanka wondered how there could be a peace conference on the Middle East without the participation of PLO. It was commonly accepted, he said, that there was a Palestinian dimension to the Middle East problem.

The draft resolution submitted by Israel and the proposed amendments to it were subsequently withdrawn.

On 9 December, the Assembly adopted two resolutions. The first, on the situation in the Middle East, was sponsored by 31 Members and was adopted by a roll-call vote of 91 to 11, with 29 abstentions, as resolution 31/61.

By the preamble to this 31-power text, the Assembly among other things expressed its deep concern at the increasing deterioration of the situation in the Middle East due to continued Israeli occupation and Israel's refusal to implement United Nations resolutions, and reaffirmed the necessity of establishing a just and lasting peace in the region based on full respect for the purposes and principles of the Charter as well as for the resolutions concerning the problem of the Middle East and the question of Palestine.

By the operative part of the text, the Assembly:

(1) affirmed that the early resumption of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, with the participation of all the parties concerned, including PLO, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3375(XXX), was essential for the realization of a just and lasting settlement in the region;

(2) condemned Israel's continued occupation of Arab territories in violation of the Charter, the principles of international law and repeated United Nations resolutions;

(3) reaffirmed that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East could not be achieved without Israel's withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied since 1967 and the attainment by the Palestinian people of their inalienable rights, which were the basic prerequisites enabling all countries and peoples in the Middle East to live in peace;

(4) condemned all measures taken by Israel in the occupied territories to change their demographic and geographic character and institutional structure;

(5) requested once again all States to desist from supplying Israel with military and other forms of aid or any assistance that would enable it to consolidate its occupation or to exploit the natural resources of the occupied territories;

(6) requested the Security Council to take effective measures, within an appropriate time-table, for the implementation of all relevant Council and Assembly resolutions on the Middle East and Palestine; and

(7) requested the Secretary-General to inform the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East of this resolution and to submit a report on the follow-up of its implementation to the General Assembly at its 1977 session.

The Assembly adopted the second resolution, concerning the Peace Conference on the Middle East, by a roll-call vote of 122 to 2, with 8 abstentions, as resolution 31/62. The text had 38 sponsors.

By the preamble to this text, the Assembly among other things expressed grave concern at the lack of progress towards the achievement of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, and said it was convinced that any relaxation in the search for a comprehensive settlement to that end constituted a grave threat to the prospects of peace in the Middle East as well as a threat to international peace and security.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly:

(1) requested the Secretary-General to resume contacts with all the parties to the conflict and the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, in accordance with his initiative of 1 April 1976 (see page 238), in preparation for the early convening of the Peace Conference, and to submit a report to the Security Council not later than 1 March 1977 on the results of his contacts and on the situation in the Middle East;

(2) called for the early convening of the Peace Conference, under the auspices of the United Nations and the co-chairmanship of the USSR and the United States, not later than the end of March 1977;

(3) requested the Security Council to convene, subsequent to the submission to it by the Secretary-General of the above report, in order to consider the situation in the area in the light of that report and to promote the process towards the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the area; and

(4) further requested the Secretary-General to inform the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference of this resolution.

Speaking in explanation of vote on the two resolutions, the representative of the United States said that the 31-power text on the situation in the Middle East contained blanket condemnations of one side which were unwarranted and which would have no positive effect. The United States, he said, saw no logic in a call on all States to desist from supplying military and other aid to one side but not to the other, and would not be guided by such a proposal. The resolution also lacked balance in its reference to the potential elements of peace: one side could not be expected to give everything and gain nothing. As for the request to the Security Council, it carried an implication that the Council ought to impose a settlement on the parties. He observed that the parties to the dispute had accepted the framework for a negotiating process—a mutual commitment to negotiate rather than rely on time-tables or imposed solutions. It was neither appropriate nor practical to look to the Council to impose its will on the parties to the negotiations.

He went on to say that the United States was opposed to the 38-power text on the Geneva Peace Conference, first, because it set an artificial deadline for reconvening the Conference and, second, because the request to the Secretary-General to resume his contacts with the parties to the conflict was phrased in such a way as to imply that PLO should be one of the parties consulted. The United States believed that the question of additional participants could be addressed only by the original participants themselves.

The representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine members of the European Communities, said they could not support the 31-power text because it was unbalanced and because some of the matters it mentioned could be effectively decided only in the negotiations themselves.

The Chinese representative said his Government had not participated in the vote on the two resolutions because they involved the Geneva Conference and Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) on which the Conference was based and on which China's position was well known.

Other communications

In a letter dated 23 August 1976 addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Israel charged that a criminal attack had been carried out on 11 August against passengers of an El Al Israel Airlines aeroplane in the Istanbul (Turkey) International Airport. Four passengers had been killed and 21 injured. The organization called the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine had claimed credit for the act but, the representative charged, the guiding force behind the attack was the Libyan Arab Republic, which, according to news reports, had armed and financed the terrorists. The role of the Libyan Government in aiding Arab terrorists was a violation of the United Nations Charter and the principles of international law, the representative of Israel said; he cited 12 cases of hijacking, murders and attacks on international airports from September 1971 to February 1974, and said the United Nations had to take immediate and effective action to put an end to terrorist attacks against innocent civilians.

In a letter dated 31 August 1976, addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic rejected the charges and recalled that the Libyan Government had declared that it did not approve of hijacking and considered it a foolish and irresponsible act. If it had allowed hijacked aeroplanes to land at its airports it was for purely human motives and sometimes in response to requests from the parties concerned. The Libyan Arab Republic hoped that the United Nations would be able to take effective measures to put an end to the terrorism exercised by all racist régimes in the world, including the racist Zionist entity in occupied Palestine.

By a letter dated 30 September, the representative of Yemen forwarded to the Secretary-General a letter from the Permanent Observer of the Palestine Liberation Organization charging that on 26 September two Israeli warships intercepted the Cypriot ship Phoenicia, carrying a number of Palestinians from Lebanon to Cyprus, rammed it and fired upon it. Two other vessels had been sunk by Israeli forces in Lebanese harbours.

In a letter dated 18 October addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Kuwait, in his capacity as Chairman of the Arab group of Member States for the month of October 1976, charged that there had been an escalation of Israeli acts of piracy against Arab civilians on the high seas. Numerous such acts had been reported in the mass media. He cited two recent acts of piracy, one involving a Cypriot yacht, the other the passenger ship Niyazi, en route from Lebanon to Cyprus, which had been hijacked to Haifa, Israel, detained for 30 hours, and some of its passengers had been maltreated. He asked that the necessary measures be taken to put an end to Israel's piratical acts.

Other decisions

Assistance to the Palestinian people

On 4 August 1976, at its sixty-first session, the Economic and Social Council among other things invited the United Nations Development Programme, the specialized agencies and other organizations in the United Nations system to intensify, as a matter of urgency and in co-ordination with the Economic Commission for Western Asia, efforts to identify the social and economic needs of the Palestinian people. It requested them to consult and co-operate with PLO in projects for improving the situation of the Palestinian people, urged the heads of the organs concerned to make proposals to their governing bodies for carrying out these activities, and requested the Secretary-General to report at the Council's second 1977 session on steps taken to implement the resolution.

The Council took this action when it adopted resolution 2026(LXI) by a roll-call vote of 36 to 1, with 11 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee, which approved the text on 30 July 1976, by a roll-call vote of 37 to 1, with 11 abstentions. The text was proposed by Bulgaria, Egypt (on behalf of Council members belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries) and the German Democratic Republic.

(For text of resolution 2026(LXI) and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Living conditions of the Palestinian people

During its consideration of the United Nations Environment Programme at its thirty-first (1976) session, the General Assembly on 16 December adopted, by a recorded vote of 107 to 2, with 26 abstentions, resolution 31/110 whereby, among other things, it recalled the Vancouver Declaration on Human Settlements, 1976, and the recommendations for national action adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, held at Vancouver, Canada, from 31 May to 11 June 1976.

It requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the relevant United Nations organs and specialized agencies, to report to the General Assembly in 1977 on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories; requested him, in preparing the report, to consult and co-operate with PLO, the representative of the Palestinian people; and urged all States to co-operate with him in this matter.

The Assembly took this action on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved the text on 17 November by a roll-call vote of 102 to 2, with 25 abstentions, on a proposal by Pakistan, on behalf of the States Members belonging to the Group of 77.

(For text of resolution 31/110 and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below. See also p. 447 for further details.)

Importance of universal realization of the right to self-determination

By its resolution 31/34, adopted on 30 November 1976, the General Assembly among other things reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, of the Palestinian people and of all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, independence and sovereignty without external interference. It also strongly condemned all Governments that did not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination and alien subjugation, notably the peoples of Africa and the Palestinian people. The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 3376(XXX) of 10 November 1975,
Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Deeply concerned that no just solution to the problem of Palestine has been achieved and that this problem therefore continues to aggravate the Middle East conflict, of which it is the core, and to endanger international peace and security,

Reaffirming that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East cannot be established without the achievement, inter alia, of a just solution of the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return and the right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Takes note of the report of the Committee and endorses the recommendations contained therein, as a basis for the solution of the question of Palestine;

3. Decides to circulate the report to all the competent bodies of the United Nations and urges them to take necessary action, as appropriate, in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation;

4. Urges the Security Council to consider once again as soon as possible the recommendations contained in the report, taking fully into account the observations made thereon during the debate in the General Assembly at its thirty-first session, in order to take the necessary measures to implement the above-mentioned recommendations of the Committee so as to achieve early progress towards a solution of the problem of Palestine and the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

5. Authorizes the Committee to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

6. Requests the Committee to promote the greatest possible dissemination of information on its programme of implementation through non-governmental organizations and other appropriate means;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to give the widest possible publicity to the Committee's work and to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks, including summary records of its meetings;

8. Decides to include the item entitled "Question of Palestine" in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975 and noting with concern that no progress has been achieved towards the implementation of that resolution, in particular its paragraph 4,

Recalling the debate held in the Security Council in January 1976 on the Middle East problem including the Palestinian question, in implementation of subparagraph (a) of Council resolution 381(1975) of 30 November 1975,

Deeply concerned at the increasing deterioration of the situation in the Middle East due to continued Israeli occupation and Israel's refusal to implement United Nations resolutions, Reaffirming the necessity of establishing a just and lasting peace in the region based on full respect for the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations as well as for the resolutions concerning the problem of the Middle East and the question of Palestine,

1. Affirms that the early resumption of the Peace Conference on the Middle East with the participation of all the parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3375(XXX) of 10 November 1975, is essential for the realization of a just and lasting settlement in the region;

2. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of Arab territories in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and repeated United Nations resolutions;

3. Reaffirms that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East cannot be achieved without Israel's withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied since 1967 and the attainment by the Palestinian people of their inalienable rights, which are the basic prerequisites enabling all countries and peoples in the Middle East to live in peace;

4. Condemns all measures taken by Israel in the occupied territories to change the demographic and geographic character and institutional structure of these territories;

5. Requests once again all States to desist from supplying Israel with military and other forms of aid or any assistance which would enable it to consolidate its occupation or to exploit the natural resources of the occupied territories;

6. Requests the Security Council to take effective measures, within an appropriate time-table, for the implementation of all relevant resolutions of the Council and the General Assembly on the Middle East and Palestine;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East of the present resolution and to submit a report on the follow-up of its implementation to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

The General Assembly,
Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East,"

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on this item and his initiative of 1 April 1976,

Gravely concerned at the lack of progress towards the achievement of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East, Convinced that any relaxation in the search for a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem to achieve a just peace in the area constitutes a grave threat to the prospects of peace in the Middle East as well as a threat to international peace and security,

1. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To resume contacts with all the parties to the conflict and the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, in accordance with his initiative of 1 April 1976, in preparation for the early convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East;

(b) To submit a report to the Security Council on the results of his contacts and on the situation in the Middle East not later than 1 March 1977;

2. Calls for the early convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations and the co-chairmanship of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, not later than the end of March 1977;

3. Requests the Security Council to convene subsequent to the submission by the Secretary-General of the report referred to in paragraph 1 (b) above, in order to consider the situation in the area in the light of that report and to promote the process towards the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the area;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to inform the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East of the present resolution.

3. Urges all States to co-operate with the Secretary-General in this matter.

The situation in the occupied territories

During 1976, questions relating to the situation in the territories occupied by Israel were considered by various United Nations bodies.

In response to three separate requests, the Security Council considered matters relating to the situation in the occupied territories—in March, May and November.

The Commission on Human Rights on 13 February adopted a resolution concerning the 1975 report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories.

In its 1976 report, the Special Committee said that Israel was following a policy directed towards the annexation of the occupied territories, manifested by the establishment of settlements and the transfer to them of Israeli citizens. It again urged the General Assembly to bring to an end the state of occupation as the only way of ensuring the human rights of the civilian population of the occupied territories.

At its thirty-first (1976) session, the General Assembly adopted four resolutions on the 1976 report of the Special Committee and a resolution on the question of permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories. Details of these actions are given below.

Treatment of the civilian population in Israeli-occupied territories and related matters

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights

At its thirty-second session in February/March 1976, the Commission on Human Rights considered the 1975 report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories,<sup>41</sup> and on 13 February adopted a resolution on the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East.

By the preambular part of the resolution, the Commission among other things expressed alarm at the continuation by Israel of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the occupied Arab territories, including the destruction of homes, the expropriation of Arab properties and the ill-treatment of prisoners, as well as measures aiming at annexation. It also expressed concern that the population of the occupied areas were hindered in the exercise of their inalienable rights to national education and cultural life.

By the operative provisions of the text, the Commission again deplored Israel's continued grave violations of the basic norms of international law and of relevant international conventions—in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (the fourth Geneva Convention). The Commission considered such violations to be war crimes and an affront to humanity. It also deplored Israel's persistent defiance of United Nations resolutions and its continued policy of violating the basic human rights of the inhabitants of the occupied territories.

The Commission reaffirmed that military occupation of territory constituted a grave threat to international peace and security and was, in itself, a continuous violation of the Charter of the United Nations and of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>42</sup> It reaffirmed its condemnation of Israel for the deliberate destruction of the Syrian town of Quneitra.

The Commission called upon Israel to take immediate steps for the return of the Palestinians and the other displaced inhabitants of the occupied Arab territories to their homes, to desist from establishing new settlements in the occupied lands and to commence immediately with the removal of the existing settlements.

The Commission deplored the measures taken by Israel to exploit the human, natural and all other resources and wealth of the occupied Arab territories. It declared that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic structure and status of the occupied territories, as well as those designed to change the institutional structure and established religious practices in the sanctuary of the Al-Ibrahimi Mosque in the city of Al-Khalil (Hebron), were null and void. It reaffirmed its call on Israel to ensure freedom of worship in accordance with established traditions in the region, particularly in Jerusalem.

The Commission called upon all States not to recognize any measures carried out by Israel aimed at effecting change in the occupied territories, and invited those States to do their utmost to ensure that Israel respected the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention. It censured in the strongest terms all measures taken by Israel to change the status of Jerusalem and condemned a number of specific Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories.

The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments and to give it the widest possible publicity. He was asked to report to the Commission at its 1977 session when, it was decided, the matter would again be given high priority.

Consideration by Security Council and communications

During 1976, the Security Council held three series of meetings on the situation in the occupied territories—in March, in May and in November. The Council and the Secretary-General also received a number of communications concerning the question.

Communications (1-12 March 1976)

Prior to the March series of meetings, the following communications were received.

By a letter dated 1 March, the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic transmitted the text of a letter dated 23 February from the Acting Permanent Observer of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) charging that, following a ruling by a Jerusalem magistrate's court on 28 January 1976 that Jews had the right to pray in the Al-Aqsa Mosque, some Zionist groups had announced plans to organize "pray-ins" in the Mosque. The ruling was in violation of several Security Council resolutions, the letter said, and it had sparked a wave of violent demonstrations in most major West Bank towns and in East Jerusalem. Scores of Palestinians had been arrested and four had died in the Nablus gaol. Two others had been killed in attacks on villages. Demonstrations and strikes continued in many towns and the continuing confrontation would, the letter added, inevitably lead to an increase in the severity of the acts of repression by the Israeli authorities.

By a letter dated 12 March, the representative of Saudi Arabia transmitted the text of a statement issued by members of the Islamic Conference at the United Nations—which had met to consider what was described as the grave situation in occupied Arab Jerusalem resulting from recent Israeli violations of Security Council resolutions—concerning the status of the Holy City and the profanation of the Al-Aqsa Mosque. The recent ruling of the Jerusalem magistrate's court was regarded as part of the systematic and persistent policy of the Israeli occupation authorities to change the status of Jerusalem and gradually obliterate the Moslem and Christian heritage in the Holy City. The members of the Conference noted with appreciation efforts made by the Secretary-General. They requested him and the President of the Security Council to keep under urgent attention the situation in Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied territories, and reaffirmed that immediate steps must be taken to stop the Israeli violations.

Security Council meetings (22-25 March 1976)

The Security Council met between 22 and 25 March at the request of the Libyan Arab Republic and Pakistan. In a joint letter dated 19 March, they said that, ever since the Israeli magistrate's ruling to the effect that Jews could not be prevented from praying in the Al-Aqsa Mosque, the situation had continued to deteriorate in Jerusalem and other parts of the occupied West Bank and was becoming explosive. The ruling, they said, could no longer be viewed in isolation but had to be seen, along with recent expropriations of Arab-owned lands in Jerusalem and the establishment of Jewish settlements in Arab areas, as part of a policy of absorbing occupied Jerusalem into Israel. The extensiveness, violence and tenacity of the demonstrations, they said, reflected the determination of the people of the occupied territories to resist Israel's attempt to annex East Jerusalem, and they called on the Security Council to take measures to halt the deterioration of the situation and put an end to Israel's defiance of the Council's decisions on Jerusalem. They also asked that PLO be invited to participate in the Council's discussion, as on previous occasions.

The Council agreed to invite PLO to participate in the discussion under the same conditions as had been proposed and agreed to at its meetings in January (see page 229). The procedural vote for PLO participation was 11 in favour to 1 against (United States), with 3 abstentions (France, Italy, United Kingdom).

Also invited to participate in the discussion, at their request, were Bangladesh, Egypt, India, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Mauritania, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Yugoslavia.

The representative of Egypt observed that for the first time in the protracted history of the Middle East conflict the Security Council was discussing the situation in the occupied Arab territories. After reviewing the background of the complaint, he said that peace could not prevail in the region unless Israel withdrew from all the occupied Arab territories, including Arab Jerusalem, and unless it recognized the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. The Council should, he declared, adopt a resolution calling for: exercise by the Palestinian people of the right to self-determination; condemnation of Israel's brutal and illegal actions in the occupied Arab territories; and immediate and effective steps to put an end to those actions and to rescind all previous measures taken by the occupation authorities in Jerusalem and in the West Bank.

The representative of Jordan recalled that at the beginning of 1975 the Knesset—the Israeli Parliament—had approved a Master Plan for Jerusalem according to which 30 per cent of the total area of the West Bank of Jordan would be annexed to Jerusalem so that it could be gradually absorbed into Israel. That area included nine towns and 60 villages, inhabited by 250,000 people. The locations of new Israeli quarters, to be built on the ruins of the Arab areas, extended over all of Arab Jerusalem. The Arabs of Jerusalem were being systematically displaced by various methods.

In this relentless enterprise, Israel had infringed the Islamic Waqf—Moslem endowments and religious properties—and had pulled down many of them, including mosques and venerated shrines. The historic quarter of Moslem saints and heroes, Hai Al-Magharibah, was one of the earliest targets of demolition. The Sharaf quarter, which contained 600 pieces of Islamic religious property, had already been taken over. Excavations had been undertaken under and around major Islamic sites, such as the Al-Aqsa Mosque, Hayit Al-Buraq and Al-Masjid Al-Umari. The Al-Aqsa Mosque had been violated not only physically but increasingly in more radical and ugly ways. Fanatics inside Israel called for division of the Mosque or for its elimination.

In such a climate of fanaticism, he said, came the ruling in January 1976 by an Israeli magistrate allowing Jews to exercise religious rites in the courtyard of the Mosque, thereby reversing practice and tradition and giving justification for more blatant encroachments.

The Jordanian representative went on to say that a parallel process was taking place in the rest of the occupied territories. Since 1967, Israel had been engaged in a policy of planting Israeli settlements in various parts of the occupied areas, constructed on confiscated land and in the midst of the Arab population. The spontaneous uprising in the West Bank was, he said, an agonized call for international awakening and decisive intervention to stop the agony by ending an anachronistic and indefensible military domination by one powerful—and powerfully backed—State over a peaceful and unarmed population living in its own homeland. The Council, he said, had to act immediately to emphasize the urgency and seriousness of the situation. Its essential aim had to be the final and irrevocable Israeli withdrawal from all the occupied Arab territories.

According to the spokesman for the Syrian Arab Republic, Israel's occupation of the Arab territories constituted a continued act of aggression according to the United Nations Charter, principles of international law and, in particular, the Definition of Aggression adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1974,<sup>43</sup> affirming that "any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from . . . invasion or attack" qualified as an act of aggression. The Zionist occupation of the Arab territories had been particularly cruel and ugly, he said, because, unlike other cases of military occupation, it had been designed to uproot the indigenous population and to replace it with alien settlers just because those alien invaders were Jews. The right of the Palestinians under occupation to resist the Zionist occupier with all means at their disposal was legitimate and recognized by the Charter and the principles of international law. There could be no peace or tranquillity for the Zionists until they evacuated the last inch of the occupied Arab territories and recognized the inalienable national rights of the Palestinians.

The representative of Israel said that the matter being discussed was a matter subjudice in the courts of Israel. The letter of complaint by Libya and Pakistan stated that the ruling of the magistrate's court was to the effect that Jews had the right to pray in Al-Aqsa Mosque. That allegation, he asserted, was a lie and had been made in a sinister and mischievous attempt to incite religious feeling for political purposes. No such ruling was ever made.

He said that the Temple Mount—the location of the First and Second Jewish Temples—was the most sacred site in the Jewish religion. In Islam, the Temple Mount was called Al-Haram Al-Sharif and was composed of the Al-Aqsa Mosque, the Dome of the Rock (the Mosque of Omar) housing the rock of Abraham, and a large open courtyard. The supporting wall of the Temple Mount was the Western or Wailing Wall, the most hallowed spot in Jewish religious tradition.

On 28 June 1967, Israel had enacted the Protection of Holy Places Law, whereby unrestricted access to the respective Holy Places was guaranteed to members of all faiths; it had refrained from issuing regulations for Jewish prayer on the Temple Mount in order not to offend the susceptibilities of the Moslem population and to prevent disturbances between the religious communities.

However, he went on, several Jews who had attempted to pray in the open courtyard of the area had been expelled by the Moslem police charged with the protection of the Holy Places. Charges were brought against them and the Jerusalem magistrate acquitted them on the grounds that their action did not constitute a case of public disorder within the meaning of the criminal code. At no point was the Al-Aqsa Mosque involved. Since then, the Israeli Minister of Police and the Minister for Religious Affairs had stated that Jews would not be allowed to pray on the Temple Mount and, on 21 March 1976, a Justice of the Israeli Supreme Court had rejected an application for an order to show cause why the Israeli police should not allow one of the accused to pray on the Temple Mount. In this case, he added, the interests of the Moslems were being protected by the Government of Israel.

During the Council's discussion, the following points were made, among others.

The occupation of Arab territories by Israel since 1967 should be terminated. The representatives of India and the United Republic of Tanzania said that the resistance displayed by the people of the occupied territories, in the form of demonstrations, strikes and other methods of mass protest, was a logical manifestation by proud people fighting against foreign occupation to regain their rights and self-respect. The Tanzanian representative added that Israel ought to know that the key to its own security lay in respect for the security of others and in recognizing the inalienable national rights of the dispossessed Palestinian people.

Strong opposition to any attempt on the part of Israel to annex the occupied territories was expressed by many speakers. The Japanese representative said his Government opposed any changes, physical or demographic, or other actions and policies intended to alter the legal status of the territories. Japan attached special importance to Israel's compliance with resolutions prohibiting all unilateral changes leading to the annexation by Israel of Jerusalem—a city venerated by Moslems, Christians and Jews alike. The representative of Panama urged that Jerusalem be given a special status, with international guarantees and supervision.

Many speakers emphasized the need for a political solution on the basis of resolutions 242(1967)<sup>44</sup> and 338(1973),<sup>45</sup> although Panama and Sweden, among others, felt that those resolutions lacked certain basic elements essential for a just and lasting peace in the Middle East and did not take into account the interests and rights of the Palestinian Arabs.

The representative of the USSR said that the issue before the Council was a whole series of completely impermissible actions by the Israeli occupation forces with respect to the Al-Aqsa Mosque, the recent expropriation of lands occupied by Arabs in Jerusalem and the creation of Israeli settlements in Arab lands—all of which had aroused mass protests by the Arab population. It was in no way a religious problem. The scale, the force and the stubbornness of the demonstrations had shown something more, namely, the resolve of the people to stand up to Israel's attempts to annex the occupied Arab lands.

According to the French representative, the situation which led to the recent incidents in the occupied territories and the resultant repression would be solved only within the framework of an over-all settlement. Jerusalem, a Holy City for three religions, was one of the most sensitive points of any settlement. France hoped that Israel would understand how much the international community was devoted to the preservation of the universal character of Jerusalem, that is, its Jewish, Christian and Islamic vocation.

The representative of China said that the Israeli authorities had been doing their utmost to change the status of Jerusalem and all the occupied territories in an attempt to perpetuate their occupation. The Security Council should adopt a resolution strongly condemning the Israeli Zionists for their atrocities and resolutely supporting the Arab people in their struggles in the occupied territories.

The representative of Italy said the Council should not lose sight of the deep-rooted causes of what was occurring in Jerusalem and in the West Bank; if turmoil and disturbances were taking place there, it was because of the perpetuation of the occupation. The basic framework of the negotiating process as outlined in resolution 242(1967) remained valid and should be revived. Israel should relinquish its occupation of all Arab territories and, in particular, withdraw its forces from occupied Jerusalem and the West Bank.

The representative of the United States said that the occupation of territories in the 1967 war had always been seen by the world community to be an abnormal state of affairs that would be brought to an end as part of a peace settlement. Security Council resolution 242(1967) established the basic bargain that would constitute a settlement. The complaint before the Council by the Libyan Arab Republic and Pakistan, he noted, had identified three issues: the administration of the Holy Places; the situation in Jerusalem; and Israeli actions with regard to the civilian population of the occupied territories and Israeli settlements in those areas. With regard to the first, he said that in the view of his Government Israel's punctilious administration of the Holy Places in Jerusalem had greatly minimized tension. Israel's responsibilities under the fourth Geneva Convention to preserve religious practices as they were at the time the occupation began could not be changed by the ruling of an Israeli court, and the United States was gratified that the Israeli Government's position had been upheld by the Supreme Court of Israel.

With regard to Jerusalem, he said, the United States, as had been stated many times, would not accept or recognize unilateral actions by any States in the area as altering the status of the City. Such unilateral measures, including expropriation of land or other administrative action by the Government of Israel, could not be considered other than as interim and provisional and could not affect the current international status of Jerusalem or pre-judge its final and permanent status.

The United States believed, he went on, that international law set the appropriate standards with regard to Israeli settlements in the occupied territories. An occupier had to maintain the occupied areas as intact and unaltered as possible, without interfering with the customary life of the area; any changes had to be necessitated by the immediate needs of the occupation and be consistent with international law. Therefore, he said, substantial resettlement of the Israeli civilian population in occupied territories, including East Jerusalem, was illegal under the fourth Geneva Convention and could not be considered to have prejudged the outcome of future negotiations between the parties on the location of the borders of States in the Middle East. Indeed, the presence of those settlements was seen by the United States as an obstacle to the success of negotiations for a just and final peace between Israel and its neighbours.

At the conclusion of its discussion, the Security Council voted on a draft resolution which had been proposed by Benin, Guyana, Pakistan, Panama and the United Republic of Tanzania. The vote was 14 to 1 (United States), and was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Security Council.

By the preambular part of this rejected text, the Council would, among other things, have expressed its deep concern at the measures taken by the Israeli authorities leading to the current grave situation, including measures aimed at changing the physical, cultural, demographic and religious character of the occupied territories and, in particular, the City of Jerusalem, the establishment of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories and other violations of the human rights of the inhabitants of those territories.

The Council would also have recalled and reaffirmed its resolutions and those of the General Assembly calling on Israel to rescind all measures already taken and to desist from taking any further action that would alter the status of the City of Jerusalem and the character of the occupied Arab territories. It would have noted that Israel was nevertheless persisting in its policy.

By the operative part of the text, the Council would have:

(1) deplored Israel's failure to put a stop to actions and policies tending to change the status of the City of Jerusalem and to rescind measures already taken to that effect;

(2) called on Israel, pending the speedy termination of its occupation, to refrain from all measures against the Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories;

(3) called on Israel to respect and uphold the inviolability of the Holy Places which were under its occupation and to desist from the expropriation of or encroachment upon Arab lands and property or the establishment of Israeli settlements thereon in the occupied Arab territories, and to desist from all other actions and policies designed to change the legal status of the City of Jerusalem and to rescind measures already taken to that effect; and

(4) decided to keep the situation under constant attention and meet again should circumstances so require.

The representative of the United States said his Government had carefully measured the draft resolution and concluded that it failed to meet the necessary criteria of United States policy, in particular because it reflected or implied judgement which did not correspond to the actual situation in the area. Parts of the text were based on the judgement that Israel was persisting in a policy aimed at changing the religious character of Jerusalem. The United States believed on the contrary that Israel's administration of the Holy Places had literally minimized tensions. The United States also believed that the draft resolution would not help in the peaceful settlement process.

In the view of the Libyan Arab Republic, the negative vote of the United States again made it clear that the unjust and unlimited United States commitment to the Zionist cause constituted the main obstacle to the formulation of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. Because of its unlimited support of Zionism, the United States had created hostile and bitter relations with all the Arab nations and most of their leaders. Because of its commitment, the United States had threatened and insulted the United Nations.

Communications (22 March-4 May 1976)

Between 22 March and 4 May 1976, the following communications were received by the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General.

By a letter dated 22 March, the representative of Israel transmitted the texts of resolutions adopted in December 1975 by the third plenary meeting of the Jerusalem Committee, a body established by the Mayor of Jerusalem to advise on matters pertaining to the City's restoration and beautification.

In a letter dated 29 March, the representative of Israel, citing a statement made by the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic at the meeting of the Security Council on 24 March to the effect that the "racist entity in the Middle East must be destroyed and it will be destroyed one day," quoted from Article 23 of the United Nations Charter,<sup>46</sup> having to do with the election of non-permanent members of the Security Council, and said his Government protested against the call for the destruction of a Member State made by a Council member at a public meeting of the Council. In a reply dated 6 April, the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic said the Israeli representative had chosen to interpret his comment that the "racist entity in the Middle East must be destroyed" as a call for the destruction of a Member State. However, the destruction of racism was a leading principle of the United Nations.

On 30 March, the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic transmitted the text of a letter from the Acting Permanent Observer of PLO charging Israeli occupation authorities with a persistent policy of brutal repression against the Palestinian people in occupied Palestine, citing examples and requesting the Council to take measures to put an end to the explosive situation and to deal with the prolonged occupation, which was the true cause of the mounting Palestinian resistance. Another letter from PLO, transmitted by the Libyan Arab Republic on 14 April, charged that Israel had acquired, either through purchase or expropriation, vast amounts of land on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and requested the Council to put an end to such acts and seriously to consider the termination of the Israeli occupation.

The representative of Oman, Chairman of the Arab group of States for April, conveyed to the Secretary-General on 14 April the group's deep concern about the continuous violation by Israel of United Nations resolutions and of the fourth Geneva Convention by secretly acquiring land in the occupied Arab territories. The letter asked the Secretary-General to send a representative to look into the matter.

By letters dated 22 April and 4 May, the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic transmitted the texts of two further letters from the Acting Permanent Observer of PLO charging that, on 17 April, Zionist demonstrators, with the protection of the Israeli army, had marched through the occupied West Bank in support of Israel's policy of territorial expansion and the establishment of Jewish settlements. The march had sparked counter-demonstrations of protest on the part of the Palestinian inhabitants. In the course of the inevitable clashes between them and Israeli forces a number of Palestinians had been murdered and many more wounded. On 1 May, Israeli troops had opened fire into a crowd of unarmed Palestinian demonstrators who were manifesting their unalterable opposition to the continuing illegal occupation of their lands and homes and to the imminence of additional Jewish settlements. One Palestinian had been killed and several others injured. He added that a curfew had been imposed on several Palestinian towns.

Security Council meetings (4-26 May 1976)

The Security Council met between 4 and 26 May 1976 in response to a request by Egypt that the Council consider the continued deterioration of the situation in the occupied territories. In a letter dated 3 May, Egypt said there had been popular uprisings on the part of the whole Palestinian people; Israel's aggressive expansionist policy in the occupied territories, through the establishment of settlements at the expense of the legitimate owners and through changes in the demographic composition of the territories, as well as its blatant outrages against the Holy Places and shrines sacred to both Moslems and Christians, had resulted in the flare-up of the feelings of the Palestinian people, the letter stated.

The Egyptian letter went on to say that the Israeli authorities had resorted to a violent terrorist campaign which had taken the lives of many innocent civilians and resulted in arrests, beatings and persecution of thousands of unarmed civilians. These actions violated the principles and resolutions of the United Nations as well as of the Geneva Conventions and were a direct threat to the peace efforts in the Middle East.

At Egypt's request, PLO was invited—under the same conditions as before—to participate in the discussion. As before, the vote on the procedural proposal was 11 to 1 (United States), with 3 abstentions (France, Italy, United Kingdom). Also invited to participate, at their request, were Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen.

In his statement, the Egyptian representative said that the situation had further deteriorated since the Council's meetings in March. Israel, he said, was deploying thousands of police and army patrols all over the occupied West Bank and Gaza in an effort to crush the natural yearning of the Palestinian Arabs for independence. Recent elections in the West Bank had demonstrated a complete victory for the Palestinian cause: all sections of the Palestinian community had come out for PLO as the only body representing the Palestinian people and their rights. Instead of accepting the results of the elections as a fact demonstrating the fallacy of its repressive policies, Israel had persisted in its brutal practices, the Egyptian representative asserted.

The PLO representative declared that the Palestinians would not vacate their land. They would resist and were manifesting their resistance against foreign occupation by militant and armed means. The route of armed struggle was a legitimate route, he stated.

The representative of Yemen made the point that the recent uprising of the Palestinian people was a reflection of the accumulated grievances of a population that had been under Zionist occupation for almost a decade. It was their prerogative to revolt against their oppressors until they attained their rights to self-determination, sovereignty and independence. Kuwait's spokesman said it was clear from the statements of Israeli officials that Israel had no intention of withdrawing from the occupied Arab territories. However, time would not erode the dauntless spirit of Palestinian resistance, and much more ferocious measures against the Israelis were in store.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic said that while the Zionist régime repeatedly claimed that it wanted peace—and that it was ready to negotiate with the Arabs without pre-conditions in order to reach that peace—it was secretly and feverishly carrying out a premeditated, evil plan to ensure the total usurpation of all the occupied Arab territories through expansion, overt and covert purchase, acquisition and expropriation. The establishment of some 70 Jewish paramilitary settlements in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, the Golan Heights and Sinai was a flagrant act of racist expansion, he stated.

According to the representative of Jordan, Israel had to be compelled to abide by the principles of international law governing the conduct of occupying powers in occupied areas. Israel had to refrain from any action designed to change the character of the occupied territories. It had to be compelled to respect the human rights of the inhabitants of those territories as provided for in international law. It had to act to end the occupation finally and irreversibly.

The representative of Israel stated that the focus of the problem was not Israel or the territories it administered or the Palestinian Arabs; it was the situation in Lebanon. Egypt, he said, had asked for the debate in order to indulge in a game of one-upmanship with Syria, and to take advantage of the tension and confrontation between Syria and PLO in Lebanon. The Palestinian Arabs were, as always, a convenient excuse, utilized by the Arab States as pawns in the inter-Arab game. He went on to say that Israel was proud of its record in the West Bank and Gaza. Among other things, he noted that free and democratic elections had taken place in the West Bank, even though it was obvious that candidates hostile to Israel would be returned. His Government had respected the results of the elections, he said.

At the heart of the conflict, he went on, there was still the Arab refusal to recognize the right of the Jewish nation to self-determination and national sovereignty. Israel would continue on its path towards peace, irrespective of the outcome of the Council's discussion. It was prepared to negotiate, but only on the basis of a recognition of Israel's sovereign rights. It would not negotiate its own suicide.

In the opinion of the USSR representative, the Council's duty was to condemn resolutely the violent terrorist actions of the occupation forces in the Arab territories, and to require that Israel end such actions. While the Palestinian Arab people, numbering 3 million, had the right to create its own State, a right equal to that of any other people in the Middle East or in the rest of the world, it continued to have the status of people in exile and of refugees, despite the fact that its right to create its own State in the territory of Palestine had been officially acknowledged and confirmed by the world community.

The Chinese representative condemned the series of fresh crimes committed by the Israeli Zionists and deeply sympathized with and supported the valiant struggles of the people in the occupied territories who, he said, feared no sacrifices. He added that the Council should adopt a resolution strongly condemning the Israeli Zionists' atrocities and voicing firm support for the just struggle of the Arab people in the occupied territories. A fundamental solution of the question of the occupied territories lay in the elimination of super-power interference, restoration of the national rights of the Palestinian people and the complete withdrawal of Israel from all the occupied Arab territories.

The representative of Benin said that the parties to the conflict had to recognize the imperative need of all States of the region, including Israel and the yet-to-be-created Palestinian State, to live together in peace and harmony; that meant that they would at last have to come to the conference table to discuss practical ways and means of arriving at that peace. The political will of the parties was linked to the determination of the great powers to encourage and promote that view with each one of their customary partners. Benin, he said, appealed to Israel to show common sense and courage by adopting measures that would give specific content to the desire it had so often expressed to negotiate peace with the Arabs. Benin also appealed to the United States to relinquish its isolationist policy dictated by domestic Jewish pressure and to follow the course of history.

On 26 May, at the conclusion of the Council's discussion, the President declared that on the basis of consultations with all the members of the Council, he had been authorized to make a statement to the effect that grave anxiety had been expressed in the Council over the current situation in the occupied Arab territories, as well as concern about the well-being of the population of those territories. The 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War was, the statement said, applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967. The occupying power was therefore called upon to comply strictly with the provisions of that Convention and to refrain from and rescind any measure that would violate them. In that connexion, the measures taken by Israel in the occupied Arab territories which altered their demographic composition or geographical character, and in particular the establishment of settlements, were deplored. Such measures, which could not prejudice the outcome of the efforts to achieve peace, constituted an obstacle to peace. The Security Council was to continue to follow the situation closely, the statement concluded.

The representative of Japan expressed agreement with the statement made by the President but warned that the situation in the occupied Arab territories had been deteriorating for some time, and there was no reason for optimism about an immediate improvement as a result of the statement.

The representative of the Libyan Arab Republic expressed regret and disappointment that the Council's discussion had ended in the drafting of a sadly weak text which fell far short of facing the true gravity of the situation in the occupied Arab territories and the ferocity of Zionist aggression and terrorism. The statement had been accepted by the majority of the Council in a spirit of compromise despite the objections of the main interested parties, in particular the representative of the Palestinian people, and it failed to condemn provocative Zionist policies and actions and failed to refer to the necessity for a speedy withdrawal from occupied Arab territories. In referring to the Arab territories occupied since 1967, the text also made an indirect reference to resolution 242(1967), a resolution his Government did not accept as a basis for a solution to the Palestine problem and to the Middle East conflict. He also regretted that the power which gave its unlimited support to the Zionist entity had exerted pressure to cause the text to be seriously watered down.

The representative of the United States said his Government dissociated itself from the statement of the majority and held that it lacked balance. While it contained references to certain provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention describing the obligations of an occupying power, there was no corresponding reference to the provisions that explicitly recognized that the occupying power had the duty to maintain law and order and the right to protect its forces. The United States also objected to the fact that the statement was unrelieved by any recognition of the many areas in which Israel's administration of the occupied territories had been responsible and just, as in its administration of the Holy Places in Jerusalem. However, he said, the United States would be remiss if it did not call Israel's attention to aspects of its policies in the occupied territories—in particular those involving the establishment of settlements—that were increasingly a matter of concern and distress to its friends throughout the world and were not helpful to the process of peace.

The representative of Israel said that the discussion had been nothing but a futile waste of time intended to divert attention from the major tragedy occurring in Lebanon. The majority statement read by the President followed the usual pattern, he went on. On the one hand, it deplored actions in the West Bank to maintain law and order; on the other, it called for the application of a Convention which specifically acknowledged Israel's right to maintain the orderly government of the territory. Israel also rejected the thesis that the establishment of its security settlements was an obstacle to peace.

The representative of Jordan said that if there was to be any interpretation of the Council's statement it would be that the message sent by the people of the occupied territories had reached the consciousness of the international community. The issue of the occupation had been restored to the forefront of world concern.

Communications (May 1976)

In May 1976, the following communications were addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.

On 13 May, the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic transmitted the text of a letter from a Jerusalem rabbi, on behalf of the Jerusalem Neturei Karta, protesting the closing of ritual slaughterhouses in Jerusalem by Israeli officials as a violation of religious freedom.

On 18 May, the representative of the Libyan Arab Republic transmitted the text of a letter from the Acting Permanent Observer of PLO charging, among other things, that Israeli occupation troops had murdered a young girl in Nablus and expressing PLO's deep concern about the lack of action by the Security Council to put an end to Israel's illegal occupation.

Security Council meetings (1-11 November 1976)

Between 1 and 11 November, the Security Council—again at the request of Egypt—held a third series of meetings on the situation in the occupied territories. Egypt had asked the Council, in a letter dated 20 October, to consider what it termed the dangerous and explosive situation in the occupied Arab territories as a result of continuing Israeli repressive measures against the inhabitants of the territories. Curfews were still being imposed on several Palestinian towns in the West Bank, the letter said, and many people had been arrested arbitrarily or severely beaten in recent weeks in the West Bank and Gaza by the occupying forces. Furthermore, acts of desecration of Holy Places in Al-Khalil by extremist Israeli elements had been condoned by the Israeli authorities. Israel had continued in its policy of establishing new Israeli settlements and consolidating the old ones in the occupied areas at the expense of the inhabitants and the legitimate owners of those lands. Egypt also requested the participation of PLO in the discussion.

When it convened on 1 November, the Council, by a vote of 11 in favour to 1 against (United States), with 3 abstentions (France, Italy, United Kingdom), invited PLO to participate in the discussions under the same conditions as on previous occasions. Also invited to participate, at their request, were the representatives of Bangladesh, Egypt, Indonesia, Israel, Jordan, Mauritania, Morocco, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The representative of Egypt said that Israel had complied with none of the provisions of the President's statement made at the conclusion of the Council's series of meetings in May 1976. Instead, the Israeli Government had continued to work methodically and persistently against all the points made in the statement. Four aspects of Israeli policy in the occupied territories had prompted Egypt to ask for the convening of the current meeting, he said: first, Israel's total disregard of human rights and of the fourth Geneva Convention; second, the establishment of Israeli settlements on Arab lands; third, the illegal exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of the occupied territories; and, fourth, the incitement to religious hatred against the Christian and Moslem inhabitants of the occupied territories by extremist Israeli elements.

Among those making statements was the representative of Jordan, who deplored the seizure of one of the holiest Moslem sanctuaries, the Al-Ibrahimi Mosque in Hebron (Al-Khalil), and its gradual but systematic conversion into preponderantly a synagogue, leaving tiny and constricted corners to Moslem worshippers, and the trampling upon and tearing up of the Holy Koran. The events in Hebron had triggered the recent events in the occupied territories and created a dangerous and explosive situation. Israeli practices in the occupied territories, he said, were pre-empting and even torpedoing all prospects of an equitable and just peace in the Middle East.

During the discussion, a number of speakers criticized what they described as the annexationist policies of Israel, which they said had refused to abide by the fourth Geneva Convention. They called for full recognition of the national rights of the Palestinian people and the evacuation of all Arab territories occupied by Israel.

On 11 November, the President read out a statement according to which he said the Council had agreed on the following points.

1. To express its anxiety and concern over the serious situation in the occupied Arab territories as a result of continued Israeli occupation.

2. To reaffirm its call upon Israel to ensure the safety, welfare and security of the inhabitants of the territories and to facilitate the return of those inhabitants who had fled the areas since the outbreak of hostilities.

3. To reaffirm that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and that therefore the occupying power was once again called on to comply with its provisions and refrain from measures that violated them. Measures already taken by Israel that altered the demographic composition or geographical nature of the territories, and particularly the establishment of settlements, were strongly deplored. Such measures had no legal validity, could not prejudice the outcome of peace efforts and were an obstacle to peace.

4. To consider once more that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, including expropriation of land and properties thereon and the transfer of populations, tending to change the status of Jerusalem, were invalid and could not change that status, and urgently called on Israel once more to rescind all such measures already taken and desist from any further action which tended to change the status of the City. The Council in that connexion deplored Israel's failure to show any regard for previous Council and General Assembly decisions.

5. To recognize that any act of profanation of the Holy Places, religious buildings and sites or any encouragement of, or connivance at, any such act might seriously endanger international peace and security.

Also according to the statement, the Council decided to keep the situation under constant attention and meet again if circumstances required.

Report of the Special Committee in 1976

The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, established by the General Assembly in 1969, adopted its eighth report to the Assembly on 17 September 1976. As in previous years, the report noted, because of the absence of co-operation by the Government of Israel and the consequent inability of the Special Committee to visit the occupied territories and verify at first hand the information it received, it had had to rely on oral testimony, day-to-day reports in the Israeli press of occurrences in the occupied territories and of Israeli Government pronouncements concerning the civilian population of the occupied territories, reports appearing in the Arab-language press and other sections of the international press, information appearing in United Nations documents, as well as information communicated to it by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and contained in ICRC publications.

In its report, covering the period from 13 October 1975, the Special Committee said that the policy of annexation and settlement continued to be implemented, new plans had been announced and other settlements had been established in the occupied territories. The prolonged occupation and the effect of those policies and practices had persisted. Violent demonstrations that lasted for several months had taken place, in addition to acts of sabotage which appeared to have been daily occurrences. Those incidents had in turn led to arrests of groups of persons, presenting a pattern of mass arrests. Other repressive measures had continued, as for example curfews, demolition of houses, expulsion and administrative detention.

The Special Committee also said that civilian inhabitants detained were treated in a manner incompatible with the fourth Geneva Convention and international humanitarian law in general governing treatment of civilians under detention.

The Special Committee divided the information it received under the following headings: evidence of the policy of annexation and settlement as practised in the occupied territories; evidence of treatment of civilian detainees from the occupied territories, including administrative detainees; evidence of the effects of the prolonged occupation in the form of mass manifestations, regular occurrence of incidents, adoption of repressive measures, ill-treatment, and a pattern of mass arrests, trials and convictions.

Included as an annex to the Special Committee's report was a field report by an expert, working with a team of engineers, on the destruction of the town of Quneitra in Golan Province and an assessment of the nature, extent and value of the damage caused. The expert, Edward Gruner, was selected by the Committee in accordance with an Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975.<sup>47</sup> His house-by-house survey revealed 4,180 structures, of which 4,088 were destroyed by deliberate action, according to the findings. The expert further estimated that the total value of the deliberate damage caused to Quneitra was in excess of 460 million Syrian pounds.

In its conclusions, the Special Committee said that in all its reports since 1970 it had stated that the main problem affecting the human rights of the population of the occupied territories had its roots in a policy followed by the Government of Israel directed towards a process of annexation of the territories. This process was shown to be the result of a number of direct or indirect measures or practices.

The most serious of the direct measures had been the establishment of Israeli settlements in accordance with previously approved plans of the Government and the transfer of Israeli citizens to these settlements. The information before the Special Committee indicated that 61 settlements had thus far been established in the occupied territories. A second direct measure was Israel's continued refusal to recognize the right to return of persons who had fled the occupied territories during and as a result of the hostilities of June 1967.

Examples of indirect measures, the report went on, were the excessively severe steps taken by the occupying power to repress all manifestations of protest against the occupation, including reprisals such as the demolition of houses and prohibition of exports of produce.

The Special Committee said that from its very inception it had been balked in the discharge of its mandate by the Government of Israel, whose obstructionist attitude had received a surprising degree of support and encouragement from Member States of the United Nations which professed to be interested in human rights. If a country whose conduct was in question was permitted to prevent an investigation of its conduct, the fourth Geneva Convention, which constituted a vital part of international law, would be brought into contempt, the Special Committee went on to state. It was for Members of the United Nations to consider what the future of the fourth Geneva Convention was to be and, in particular, why any country should be granted special immunity from the provisions of that Convention.

The Special Committee recalled the proposal it had made in each of its previous reports for the adoption of an arrangement<sup>48</sup> inspired by the protecting-power formula envisaged under the fourth Geneva Convention to protect civilian persons living in occupied territories.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories was considered at the General Assembly's thirty-first session in 1976 by the Special Political Committee, which also had before it two reports of the Secretary-General submitted in response to requests by the Assembly in 1975.

The first of these contained information relevant to the situation in the Al-Ibrahimi Mosque in Al-Khalil (Hebron), submitted to the Secretary-General by the Governments of Israel and Jordan, by the Islamic Conference and by the League of Arab States. This was in response to an Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975.<sup>49</sup> In letters to the Secretary-General on 1 and 3 November, Israel said that the information submitted by the Islamic Conference disregarded Jewish religious and historical connexions with the city of Hebron.

The second report by the Secretary-General was submitted in response to two other Assembly resolutions of 15 December 1975,<sup>50</sup> and stated that, as in previous years, he had continued to provide the facilities required by the Special Committee. He gave details of the measures undertaken by the Office of Public Information to ensure the widest circulation of the Committee's reports and of information regarding the activities and findings of the Special Committee.

Also before the Committee were communications dated 25 February and 29 March 1976 from the Syrian Arab Republic alleging violations of human rights by Israel in occupied areas, and a letter of 18 November 1976 from Iraq transmitting the Declaration of the International Symposium on Zionism, held at Baghdad in November 1976.

At its meeting on 12 November, the Special Political Committee viewed a film, "Quneitra: Death of a City," shown at the request of the Syrian Arab Republic. In a letter of the same day, Israel protested that the Special Political Committee had refused to allow an Israeli film to be shown and had thus prevented Israel from presenting its views. The Syrian representative replied to Israel's letter in a letter dated 22 November.

Opening the discussion in the Special Political Committee, the representative of Senegal introduced the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories. He said that the violation of human rights in the occupied territories posed, above all, the problem of the Palestinian people, who had been forced to abandon their homeland, to live far from the land of their ancestors and to be the daily victims of circumstance. The Special Committee, he said, upheld the right of self-determination, which applied to States and also to peoples temporarily deprived of their State. The second problem raised by the violation of human rights in the occupied territories was the occupation itself. The Special Committee considered that prolonged military occupation meant that right and justice were subordinated to arbitrary rule and force and violated the very spirit of the fourth Geneva Convention. The violation of human rights in the Gaza Strip, the Golan Heights, the West Bank and Sinai were, the Special Committee believed, closely linked to the occupation—the end of which was a pre-condition for the re-establishment of the fundamental rights of the population of those zones.

The representative of Israel said that his delegation had analysed before the Special Political Committee the seven previous reports of the Special Committee and had shown that they were partial, distorted or misrepresented the facts, and that their aims and conclusions were as questionable as the methods used. The eighth report was no exception, he said. The only obstacle to peace in the region, he continued, was not to be found in the imaginary causes of a "deterioration" of the existing situation but in the refusal of the Arab States, particularly those bordering on Israel, to accept Israel's existence and to live with it in peace, maintaining good-neighbourly relations.

The representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization said that the Special Committee's report was the result of laborious and objective work and not just another piece of anti-Israel propaganda. It was a document on the inhuman practices of Israeli occupation forces against the population of occupied areas; to allege otherwise was an affront to the United Nations. Many speakers, among them Egypt, Jordan and other representatives of Arab States, said they fully agreed with the conclusions reached by the Special Committee and with the validity of its report.

The representative of Jordan noted that in spite of having been refused access to the occupied territories the Special Committee had reached the conclusion—on the basis of information from the communications media—that the people of the occupied territories had reached a state of complete despair. The annexation of their territories not only was a grave infringement of the principle of the inviolability of territories under occupation but also was a question of vital concern to an innocent people and should therefore be the concern of all Members of the United Nations.

The spokesman for the German Democratic Republic said it was clear from the Special Committee's report that the Israeli authorities were stepping up their policy of oppression, that a systematic policy of settlement was being pursued and that the political representatives of the Arab population were being persecuted, imprisoned or expelled from the country in order to silence political opposition. The Israeli occupation had thus been transformed into a well-organized policy of annexation. He and others, including Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Hungary and the Ukrainian SSR, supported the reconvening of the Geneva Conference on the Middle East, with the participation of PLO, as had been proposed by the USSR.

According to the representative of Mali, Israel's refusal to co-operate with the Special Committee was both an act of defiance of the international community and a serious violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. The United Nations, he said, had to induce Israel to respect its decisions so that the Special Committee could enter the occupied Arab territories and carry out its mission. If Israel persisted in its refusal, sanctions should be applied against it.

The representative of the Netherlands, speaking on behalf of the nine members of the European Communities, said that owing to the conditions under which the Special Committee had been created and the difficulties it had had to face, through no fault of its own, in carrying out its task, the nine countries had always felt that, however well-intentioned its members might be, it would not have access to sufficient first-hand material to give its report adequate authority. Doubts about the balance and reliability of the evidence contained in the Special Committee's report were also expressed by Costa Rica and the United States.

The Netherlands representative went on to say that in the opinion of the nine members of the European Communities, no fully satisfactory solution of the humanitarian problem in the Middle East could be expected without a comprehensive solution. Israel's occupation should come to an end, they believed, and negotiations should be resumed as soon as possible. The authorities concerned should apply policies in the occupied territories which would not make the achievement of that goal more difficult.

On 16 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted four resolutions on the 1976 report of the Special Committee.

By the first of these—31/106 A—the Assembly among other things strongly deplored the measures taken by Israel in the Arab territories occupied since 1967 that altered their demographic composition or geographical nature, and particularly the establishment of settlements. The Assembly declared that such measures had no legal validity and could not prejudice the outcome of the search for the establishment of peace, and it considered that they constituted an obstacle to the achievement of a just and lasting peace in the area.

The Assembly declared, moreover, that all legislative and administrative measures taken by Israel purporting to change the legal status of Jerusalem were invalid and could not change the status of the City. It again urgently called upon Israel to rescind all those measures and to desist from taking others that would tend to change the demographic composition, geographical nature or status of the occupied territories or any part thereof, including Jerusalem.

This resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 129 to 3, with 4 abstentions. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 2 December 1976 by a roll-call vote of 102 to 3, with 4 abstentions, on a proposal by Bangladesh, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Comoros, Cuba, India, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Pakistan and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution 31/106 A and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the second resolution (31/106 B), the Assembly among other things reaffirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, was applicable to all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem. It deplored the failure of Israel to acknowledge the applicability of, and reiterated its call upon Israel to comply with the provisions of that Convention in all the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. It again urged all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all the occupied areas.

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 134 to 0, with 2 abstentions. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 2 December 1976 by a roll-call vote of 107 to 0, with 2 abstentions, as sponsored by Bangladesh, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Comoros, Cuba, India, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Mozambique, Pakistan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution 31/106 B and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Resolution 31/106 C concerned the work of the Special Committee. By its provisions, the Assembly among other things commended the efforts of the Special Committee in performing its tasks and deplored the continued refusal of—and again called upon—Israel to allow it access to the occupied territories.

The Assembly also by this resolution deplored Israel's continued and persistent violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and other applicable international instruments. It condemned in particular, and demanded that Israel desist forthwith from, the following policies and practices: annexation of parts of, establishment of Israeli settlements in, and transfer of an alien population to the occupied territories; evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of those territories and denial of their right to return; confiscation and expropriation of Arab property and other land transactions in occupied areas; destruction and demolition of Arab houses; mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population and of persons under detention; pillaging of archaeological and cultural property; interference with religious freedoms and practices, family rights and customs; and illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and population of the occupied territories.

The Assembly reaffirmed that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, were null and void, and that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and of United Nations resolutions. It demanded that Israel desist immediately from those policies and practices.

The Assembly reiterated its call upon all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions—including those in the field of aid—which might be used by Israel in pursuit of its policies.

The Special Committee was asked to continue to investigate Israel's policies and practices in the occupied Arab territories, to consult with the International Committee of the Red Cross as appropriate and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arose. The Secretary-General was asked to render all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including additional staff, to ensure the widest circulation of its reports, activities and findings, and to report to the Assembly in 1977, when the matter would again be taken up.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 100 to 5, with 30 abstentions. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 2 December 1976 by a roll-call vote of 84 to 3, with 22 abstentions; it was proposed by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Comoros, Cuba, Cyprus, the Gambia, Guinea, India and Pakistan. (For text of resolution 31/106 C and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the fourth resolution adopted on 16 December—31/106 D—the Assembly expressed appreciation to the expert engaged by the Special Committee for his assessment and it condemned the massive, deliberate destruction of Quneitra perpetrated during Israeli occupation and prior to the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the town in 1974. It recognized that the Syrian Arab Republic was entitled to full compensation, under international law and in equity, for this destruction, as well as to all other appropriate legal remedies, and it requested the Special Committee to complete its survey on all aspects of the damage in Quneitra.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 97 to 3, with 36 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which had approved the text on 2 December 1976 by a roll-call vote of 81 to 2, with 26 abstentions. The text was proposed by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Byelorussian SSR, the Comoros, Cuba, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, India, Malta, Pakistan, Uganda and the Ukrainian SSR.

(For text of resolution 31/106 D and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By a letter dated 20 December, the representative of Democratic Yemen, in his capacity as Chairman of the Arab group for the month of December 1976, transmitted the text of a letter from the Permanent Observer of PLO stating that, since 6 December, Palestinian civilians under occupation had been subjected again to barbarous treatment by the occupation troops, especially in Jerusalem, Ramallah, Jericho, Kalandya and Nablus, where a curfew had been imposed.

The General Assembly,
Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity,

Bearing in mind the rules of international law concerning occupation, in particular the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Strongly deplores the measures taken by Israel in the Arab territories occupied since 1967 that alter their demographic composition or geographical nature, and particularly the establishment of settlements;

2. Declares that such measures have no legal validity and cannot prejudice the outcome of the search for the establishment of peace, and considers that such measures constitute an obstacle to the achievement of a just and lasting peace in the area;

3. Declares further that all legislative and administrative measures taken by Israel, including the expropriation of land and properties thereon and the transfer of populations, which purport to change the legal status of Jerusalem are invalid and cannot change that status;

4. Urgently calls once more upon Israel to rescind all those measures and to desist forthwith from taking any further measures which tend to change the demographic composition, geographical nature or status of the occupied Arab territories or any part thereof, including Jerusalem.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 3092 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974 and 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Noting that Israel and those Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to that Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to that Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Deplores the failure of Israel to acknowledge the applicability of that Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967;

3. Calls again upon Israel to acknowledge and to comply with the provisions of that Convention in all the Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urges once more all States parties to that Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with the provisions thereof in all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem.

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations as well as the principles and provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, as well as of other relevant conventions and regulations,

Recalling its resolutions on the subject, as well as those adopted by the Security Council, the Commission on Human Rights and other United Nations bodies concerned and by specialized agencies,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, which contains, inter alia, public statements made by leaders of the Government of Israel,

1. Commends the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Deplores the continued refusal by Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

3. Calls again upon Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

4. Deplores the continued and persistent violation by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and other applicable international instruments;

5. Condemns, in particular, the following Israeli policies and practices:

(a) The annexation of parts of the occupied territories;

(b) The establishment of Israeli settlements therein and the transfer of an alien population thereto;

(c) The evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories, and the denial of their right to return;

(d) The confiscation and expropriation of Arab property in the occupied territories and all other transactions for the acquisition of land involving the Israeli authorities, institutions or nationals on the one hand, and the inhabitants or institutions of the occupied territories on the other;

(e) The destruction and demolition of Arab houses;

(f) Mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population;

(g) The ill-treatment of persons under detention;

(h) The pillaging of archaeological and cultural property;

(i) The interference with religious freedoms and practices, particularly as manifested most recently in Al-Khali, as well as family rights and customs;

(j) The illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and population of the occupied territories;

6. Reaffirms that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, or any part thereof, including Jerusalem, are null and void, and that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in the occupied territories constitutes a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

7. Demands that Israel desist forthwith from the policies and practices referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 above;

8. Reiterates its call upon all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, which might be used by Israel in its pursuit of the policies of annexation and colonization or any of the other policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

9. Requests the Special Committee, pending the early termination of the Israeli occupation, to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross in order to ensure the safeguarding of the welfare and human rights of the population of the occupied territories, and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To render all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories, with a view to investigating the Israeli policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

(b) To continue to make available additional staff as may be necessary to assist the Special Committee in the performance of its tasks;

(c) To ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee, and of information regarding its activities and findings, by all means available through the Office of Public Information of the Secretariat and, where necessary, to reprint those reports of the Special Committee which are no longer available;

(d) To report to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session on the tasks entrusted to him in the present paragraph;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-second session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3240 C (XXIX) of 29 November 1974 and 3525 C (XXX) of 15 December 1975,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, in particular section V thereof, entitled "Quneitra," and annex III thereto, a report entitled "Quneitra: report on nature, extent and value of damage," submitted by a Swiss expert engaged by the Special Committee,

1. Expresses its appreciation of the thoroughness and impartiality with which the expert engaged by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories discharged the tasks entrusted to him;

2. Condemns the massive, deliberate destruction of Quneitra perpetrated during the Israeli occupation and prior to the withdrawal of Israeli forces from that city in 1974;

3. Recognizes that the Syrian Arab Republic is entitled to full and adequate compensation, under international law and in equity, for the massive damage and deliberate destruction perpetrated in Quneitra while it was under Israeli occupation, and to all other legal remedies in accordance with applicable international law and practice;

4. Takes note of the statements made by the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic before the Special Political Committee, to the effect that his Government reserves all rights to full compensation in regard to all damages resulting from Israel's deliberate destruction of Quneitra, including those not covered by the expert's above-mentioned report or not falling within the scope of his assignment;

5. Requests the Special Committee to complete its survey on all the aspects referred to in paragraph 4 above and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with all the facilities required for the completion of the tasks referred to in the previous paragraphs.

S/12261. Letter of 20 December from Democratic Yemen (annexing letter of 16 December 1976 from Permanent Observer of PLO).

Permanent sovereignty over national resources

On 21 December 1976, at its thirty-first session, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/186) on the question of permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories. By this resolution, among other things the Assembly reaffirmed the right of the Arab States and peoples whose territories were under Israeli occupation to regain full and effective control over their natural and all other resources and economic activities, as well as the right to restitution and full compensation for the exploitation, loss and depletion of, and damage to, those resources and economic activities.

The Assembly also by this resolution took note of the regret expressed by the Secretary-General that the submission of a requested report on the adverse economic effects on the Arab States resulting from repeated Israeli aggression and continued occupation of their territories<sup>51</sup> would be postponed until the Assembly's thirty-second (1977) session. It asked him to take the necessary measures to submit his final comprehensive report to the 1977 session and also asked the heads of the relevant United Nations bodies, particularly the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Economic Commission for Western Asia, to co-operate in the preparation of that report.

The text of the resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a roll-call vote of 107 to 2, with 26 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved it on 8 December, also by roll call, by 94 votes to 2, with 24 abstentions, on a proposal by 46 Members.

The Second Committee had before it a note by the Secretary-General recalling that he had been requested to submit to the Assembly at its current session a final comprehensive report on the question and explaining the difficulties encountered in recruiting experts who were both qualified and available. Two experts had recently indicated that they would be prepared to undertake the assignment early in 1977. The Secretary-General expressed regret that the submission of the report had, in the circumstances, to be postponed until the 1977 session.

During the discussion in the Second Committee, the representative of Pakistan, introducing the 46-power text, said that it simply reaffirmed previous Assembly decisions on the question<sup>52</sup> and he expressed the disappointment of the sponsors that the Secretary-General had postponed submission of the report.

The representative of Israel regretted that the Second Committee was involving itself in a political subject which was not only extraneous to it but which had been fully dealt with elsewhere. The draft resolution had singled out one economic issue which in fact could not be divorced from the whole complex Middle East problem. Its motive was to attribute to Israel exclusive responsibility for all the consequences of the continuous aggression by the Arab States, including economic boycott, blockade of international waterways, armed raids and sabotage, political warfare and terror—all designed to strike a death-blow at Israel. The continuous occupation of the areas administered by his country was the outcome of that situation and the direct consequence of the refusal of the Arab States to negotiate the establishment of a just peace in the region.

He went on to say that Israel, under international law and relevant United Nations resolutions, was responsible for the security of the territories and of their population, and would not deviate from its policy of administering them in accordance with international law and binding international conventions. With regard to the so-called exploitation of natural resources in the area, he said that there was no rule of international law which could prevent Israel from using those resources.

The representative of Egypt said that the aggression committed by Israel in 1967 had imposed upon Egypt a heavy strain and had deprived it of its oil resources, which Israel was currently exploiting. A large percentage of Egypt's resources had had to be diverted to defend its territories against the continuous threat posed by Israel's expansionist plans. Israel's position on the draft resolution showed that it would not discuss peace.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the Japanese representative expressed solidarity with the position of the Arab countries and peoples on the natural resources of the occupied Arab territories. He hoped that the problem could be resolved quickly and by peaceful means, in accordance with the rules of international law.

The representative of the United States said his vote against the draft resolution was consistent with the position adopted by the United States on previous occasions: the subject was not within the competence of the Second Committee.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3336(XXIX) of 17 December 1974 entitled "Permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories,"

Recalling further its resolution 3516(XXX) of 15 December 1975 on the same subject, in which it was noted that the report of the Secretary-General on the adverse economic effects on the Arab States and peoples resulting from repeated Israeli aggression and continued occupation of their territories was inadequate in that it did not incorporate the necessary substantive and comprehensive studies required in conformity with paragraph 5 of resolution 3336(XXIX), the related statements made at the twenty-ninth session of the General Assembly on behalf of the co-sponsors of the resolution and submitted by the Secretary-General on the administrative and financial implications, as well as the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting that in its resolution 3516(XXX) the Secretary-General was requested to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-first session his final comprehensive report, which should fulfil the above-mentioned requirements, taking into account the related statements on the administrative and financial implications submitted by the Secretary-General and approved by the Assembly at its thirtieth session,

Taking into account the note by the Secretary-General of 1 November 1976,

Bearing in mind the pertinent provisions of its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

1. Reaffirms the right of the Arab States and peoples whose territories are under Israeli occupation to regain full and effective control over their natural and all other resources and economic activities, as well as the rights of those States, territories and peoples to the restitution and full compensation for the exploitation, loss and depletion of, and damage to, their natural and all other resources and economic activities;

2. Takes note of the regret expressed in the note by the Secretary-General that the submission of the report as requested by the General Assembly in resolutions 3336(XXIX) and 3516(XXX) and of the related statements will be postponed until the thirty-second session of the Assembly;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take immediately all the measures necessary to secure the submission to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session of his final substantive comprehensive report, which should fulfil all of the above-mentioned requirements;

4. Requests the heads of the relevant specialized agencies and United Nations organs, particularly the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Economic Commission for Western Asia, to co-operate actively and adequately with the Secretary-General in the preparation of his final substantive comprehensive report.

The question of Jerusalem

During 1976, the question of the status of Jerusalem and its Holy Places was raised in communications addressed to the Security Council and the Secretary-General. A complaint by the Libyan Arab Republic and Pakistan concerning, among other things, the Al-Aqsa Mosque and the situation in Jerusalem was discussed by the Security Council from 22 to 25 March. A draft resolution proposed by Benin, Guyana, Pakistan, Panama and the United Republic of Tanzania was not adopted owing to the negative vote of the United States, a permanent member of the Security Council.

By this rejected text, the Council among other things would have deplored Israel's failure to put a stop to actions and policies tending to change the status of the City of Jerusalem and to rescind meaasures already taken to that effect. It would also have called on Israel to respect and uphold the inviolability of the Holy Places under its occupation and to desist from the expropriation of or encroachment upon Arab lands and property or the establishment of Israeli settlements thereon in the occupied Arab territories, and to desist from all other actions and policies designed to change the legal status of the City of Jerusalem, and to rescind measures already taken to that effect.

At its thirty-first session later in 1976, the General Assembly, following its consideration of the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, adopted a group of resolutions which included in their provisions a number of decisions bearing on the question of Jerusalem.

By the first resolution (31/106 A), the Assembly among other things declared that all legislative and administrative measures taken by Israel purporting to change the legal status of Jerusalem were invalid and could not change the status of the City. It again urgently called upon Israel to rescind all those measures and to desist from taking any further measures which could tend to change the demographic composition, geographical nature or status of the occupied territories or any part thereof, including Jerusalem.

By the second resolution (31/106 B), the Assembly among other things reaffirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (the fourth Geneva Convention), was applicable to all the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem. It deplored the failure of Israel to acknowledge the applicability of the Convention to the occupied areas, and reiterated its call upon Israel to comply with its provisions in all the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. It again urged all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all the occupied areas.

By the third resolution (31/106 C), the Assembly among other things reaffirmed that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, were null and void; Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in the occupied territories constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and of United Nations resolutions. It demanded that Israel desist immediately from those policies and practices.

These and other matters touching on the status of Jerusalem and the Holy Places are described in detail in the preceding section of this chapter, under THE SITUATION IN THE OCCUPIED TERRITORIES.

Questions pertaining to refugees in the Near East

In 1976, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) maintained its relief, health and educational programmes of assistance for Palestine refugees in the Syrian Arab Republic, east Jordan, and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank of Jordan and the Gaza Strip. In Lebanon, despite the civil war which prevailed almost to the end of the year, programmes were maintained to a surprising extent. The Agency also provided emergency aid for some 30,000 refugees displaced from the refugee camps and their environs affected by the fighting.

During the year, UNRWA experienced the most serious financial crisis of its history, which brought it to the brink of suspension of services on 30 June and again in the final quarter of the year. The rise in the price of supplies, currency instability and inflation in all the countries of operation resulted in an estimated budget deficit of $53 million at the beginning of 1976. Substantial additional contributions were subsequently received, however, and the Agency was able to maintain its services until the end of the year at the expense of deferring some non-recurrent capital expenditure and forgoing the make-up of short issues of rations which had occurred earlier in the year for logistical reasons.

In November 1976, the General Assembly, by a five-part resolution (31/15A-E), called upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make generous efforts to meet the anticipated needs of UNRWA, urging non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions. The Assembly also: endorsed the efforts of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, to other displaced persons in the area who were in serious need of such assistance as a result of the June 1967 hostilities; called once more upon Israel to take immediate steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants and to desist from all measures that obstructed their return, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories; reiterated its call upon Israel to take effective steps immediately for the return of the refugees concerned to the camps from which they were removed in the Gaza Strip, to provide adequate shelters for them, and to desist from further removal of refugees and destruction of their shelters; and requested the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA to continue its efforts for another year.

Activities in 1976

The number of refugees registered with UNRWA at the end of 1976 rose through natural increase by 31,815, to 1,684,251, of whom an average of 828,000 were eligible to receive basic monthly rations and 1,443,984 were eligible for health and educational programmes. The Agency also distributed monthly rations to about 194,000 displaced persons and 38,000 displaced refugee children in east Jordan at the expense of the Jordanian Government.

At the end of 1976, there were 603,916 refugees (about 36 per cent of the total) registered for services and 37,302 displaced persons in 53 camps established before the 1967 hostilities and 10 emergency camps—six in east Jordan and four in the Syrian Arab Republic—established afterwards.

The Agency continued, in co-operation with the World Health Organization, to promote the health of the refugees through integrated family health care, with emphasis on preventive medicine, including supplementary feeding of nutritionally vulnerable groups, and health education.

Despite budgetary stringency, modest improvements were achieved in accordance with a three-year (1974-1976) health development plan designed to overcome deficiencies in the current health programme; expenditure on health services totalled $13.3 million in 1976.

During 1976, expenditure on education increased to $54.8 million, representing 47.7 per cent of the Agency's budget. The programme, operated jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), included the first nine years of general education (10 years in Lebanon), some assistance for refugee pupils in government and private secondary schools, vocational and teacher training in eight centres, and over 300 university scholarships. Of UNRWA's 16,000 employees, almost all Palestine refugees themselves, about 9,500 were teachers.

In the 1976/77 school year, some 296,000 children were enrolled in the 595 UNRWA/UNESCO elementary and preparatory schools, an increase of more than 7,500 over 1975/76. There were also some 70,500 refugee pupils enrolled in government and private schools, while about 8,700 children of displaced persons were in Agency schools in east Jordan. Double-shifting was necessary in 71 per cent of UNRWA/UNESCO schools (excluding schools in Lebanon, where many were unable to operate), despite the construction of 85 new schoolrooms during the year.

The eight UNRWA/UNESCO training centres had places for 4,512 young men and women. By the end of 1976, a total of more than 25,700 trainees had graduated from Agency centres. With most of the Agency's teachers professionally qualified, the UNRWA/UNESCO Institute of Education continued to emphasize refresher courses for qualified teachers and ad hoc courses in educational techniques and knowledge to meet special needs and curricula developments.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The situation of refugees in the Near East was considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-first (1976) session and, as in previous years, the subject was referred to the Assembly's Special Political Committee, which discussed it at 8 meetings held between 25 October and 8 November.

Four reports were submitted in connexion with the item, as follows: (1) the annual report of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA; (2) a report of the Secretary-General; (3) a report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine; and (4) a report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

Report of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA

In his annual report to the General Assembly, covering the period from 1 July 1975 to 30 June 1976, the Commissioner-General of UNRWA said that during that period the dominant feature in the Agency's area of operations had been the situation in Lebanon, which had degenerated into an anarchic civil war of appalling violence, in which the Palestine refugees in Lebanon were inextricably involved. The refugees in Lebanon, half of them residing in camps, half outside, were vitally affected by the fighting although, because of conditions in Lebanon, no casualty figures were available.

The report said UNRWA's own services were disrupted, but the extent to which it was possible to maintain its services in the north and south could be considered surprising. Many refugees fled the camps and suburbs of Beirut for the south, among them some who had earlier left the south to seek work in Beirut or to escape the effects of the Israeli attacks of 1974 and 1975.

In its other areas of operation, the report went on to say, the Agency's education/training, relief and health programmes had continued as normally as possible, given the adverse effect of the Agency's financial difficulties on the supply of flour—the most important ration component. However, the Agency had been compelled, in the interest of continuation of its mandate as a whole, to move its headquarters from Beirut, part to Amman (Jordan) and part to Vienna (Austria).

The Commissioner-General went on to state in his report that, during the period covered, UNRWA had experienced the most serious financial crisis of its history. Indeed, both in the final quarter of 1975 and on 30 June 1976 the Agency was on the brink of suspension of services. This, the Commissioner-General pointed out, demonstrated again the incompatibility of UNRWA's system of financing with the obligations it was expected to assume. No solution had been found to the problem of ensuring equivalence between pledged income and expenditure required to maintain normal programmes. Thus far it had been impossible to obtain an assurance from the beginning of the year of the full amount of funds the Agency required to finance the programmes the General Assembly expected to be maintained. If, in default, the Agency was to limit expenditure from the beginning of the year to what pledged income would support, increasing services only as pledged income increased, some guidance had to be given to the Commissioner-General on the priorities to be observed; thus far, both the General Assembly and the UNRWA Advisory Commission had been reluctant to give such guidance. The Commissioner-General reiterated that there were serious practical problems as well, because UNRWA operated ongoing programmes, most of which could not simply be turned on and off—for example, the educational and health programmes—and because parts of some programmes were financed by special contributions.

The report stated that on 30 June 1976, the total expenditure needed to maintain services in full in 1976 was $127.7 million. Pledged and other income was estimated at $98.2 million; there was thus a deficit of $29.5 million. The Agency's assets, including unpaid pledges for 1976 and inventories of supplies at book value, amounted to $62.4 million; liabilities, including a liability for payment of separation benefits to half the local staff, amounted to $16.7 million.

Report of the Secretary-General

On 4 October 1976, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly information it had requested concerning Israel's compliance with an Assembly resolution of 8 December 1975,<sup>53</sup> by which the Assembly had called upon Israel to take immediate steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants and to desist from all measures that obstructed their return, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories. The Assembly had reiterated its call upon Israel to take effective steps immediately for the return of the refugees concerned to the camps from which they had been removed in the Gaza Strip, to provide adequate shelters for them and to desist from further removal of refugees and destruction of their shelters. It had also condemned Israeli military attacks on refugee camps and called upon Israel to desist.

The Secretary-General reported that Israel had informed him on 8 September 1976 that the prevailing situation did not permit a large-scale return of the displaced persons, although Israel had continued to facilitate the return of persons displaced in 1967. The special arrangements for family reunions and hardship cases had been maintained, although the facilities established by Israel for the orderly movement of people across the cease-fire lines were being exploited by certain Arab Governments for purposes of subversion, to facilitate the entry of terrorists and explosives into Israel-administered territory.

The Secretary-General reported that in its reply Israel had also said that housing projects had been initiated in the Gaza Strip to enable refugees to move out of the camps; public order and economic prosperity were prevailing. In Lebanon, Israel said, the Arab terror organizations had taken over the refugee camps and Israeli forces had been constrained on occasion to act against the terror installations located in or near the camps. Israel said it had never attacked the refugee camps as such.

The Secretary-General also reported that he had obtained from the Commissioner-General of UNRWA such information as was available on the return of refugees registered with the Agency. So far as was known to the Agency, between 1 July 1975 and 30 June 1976, 250 displaced refugees returned from east Jordan to the West Bank, 44 from east Jordan to the Gaza Strip, and seven from Egypt to the Gaza Strip. Thus, the number of displaced refugees who, to the Agency's knowledge, had returned to the occupied territories since 1967 was slightly less than 8,800.

The report of the Secretary-General also contained information from the Commissioner-General to the effect that further demolitions of refugee shelters had taken place in the Gaza Strip either as punitive measures or in order to make way for new construction. Some of the refugees affected by these measures had been rehoused, but most of them had remained inadequately accommodated.

A further development was that the Israeli authorities had informed some 487 refugee families in the Beach camp that their shelters were to be demolished, and refugees inhabiting 36 shelters in Khan Younis camp had been informed that their shelters were also scheduled for demolition.

The Secretary-General reported that the information available to the Commissioner-General of UNRWA indicated that, since 2 December 1975, there had been no Israeli air attacks on refugee camps.

Report of Conciliation Commission for Palestine

The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine submitted its thirtieth report to the General Assembly on 30 September 1976. It informed the Assembly that, during the period covered, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People had asked to be provided with an inventory of Arab property in Israel and in the occupied territories. The Commission had had no objection to that Committee having access to the relevant documents in its possession.

The Commission also noted that the periods covered by its two previous reports (1974 and 1975) had been marked by intensive diplomatic activity directed towards a Middle East settlement which could lead to a just and lasting peace in the area. That momentum had not been maintained during the past year, owing in part to developments in the area. Accordingly, the circumstances governing the possibilities open to the Commission had remained essentially unchanged. The Commission, however, hoped that the situation in the region would improve in the near future, enabling it to carry forward its work more vigorously.

Report of Working Group on Financing of UNRWA

The Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA, established by the General Assembly in 1970 to assist in reaching solutions to the Agency's financial problems, submitted its report on 25 October 1976. It said it was duty-bound to emphasize once again the gravity of the continuing critical financial situation facing UNRWA. The Agency's cash position remained as precarious as ever, and the longer-term problems of financial security for the Agency's operations remained unsolved. If the working capital was depleted to the expected extent, the Agency would face serious operational problems at the beginning of 1977.

Although no new programmes had been developed, the Working Group said, the expenditure figures had doubled from $62.5 million in 1973 to an estimated $125.7 million (originally $139.7 million) in the current year—an increase primarily due to international and local inflationary pressures and currency instability. The Agency had managed only with great difficulty to avoid reduction in or suspension of its services by means of additional voluntary contributions primarily from a relatively small number of donor countries.

The Working Group said it was convinced that any reduction in the services provided would have very serious implications for the refugees themselves, for the countries in which they lived and for the prospects for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East as a whole. The Group considered the continuation of the Agency's services to be an obligation of the United Nations acting on behalf of the international community, and continued to believe that the financing of UNRWA should be put on a firmer basis. It reiterated its view that the situation whereby a small group of countries bore the major burden of financing the Agency's budget no longer corresponded with the requirements of the situation. It therefore urgently requested those Governments that had not contributed in the past and those that had so far contributed inadequately to reconsider seriously their position and contribute generously to the common effort.

General Assembly discussion

The Commissioner-General of UNRWA, in presenting his annual report to the Special Political Committee, said that the period covered in the report had been one of the most difficult in UNRWA's history, not only because of the financial and operational difficulties it had had to face, but also because many of the Palestine refugees whom the Agency served had once again experienced violence and deprivation, anguish, suffering and despair about their future.

Bringing his account of UNRWA's activities up to date, the Commissioner-General said that the port of Beirut had been out of operation for most of 1976 and supplies of food-stuffs had had to be shipped through Syrian ports. Road transport into or within Lebanon had been impossible at times but flour, other food commodities and medical and relief supplies had been moved through the Syrian Arab Republic to the main areas where the Palestine refugees lived—the Beirut and Tripoli areas, the Beka'a Valley and southern Lebanon—and the arrears of ration distribution were being overtaken. The clinics in some camps had had to function with only auxiliary staff, but professional medical staff had been redeployed in accordance with the movement of the refugee population.

He reported also that the Agency's central warehouse in Beirut, which held supplies of every kind, had been preserved intact until the previous week, when it was hit by incendiary rockets which set fire to the two main buildings. Preliminary reports suggested that hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of supplies had been destroyed.

The Commissioner-General said he believed that the best contribution UNRWA could make to the restoration of stability in Lebanon was to resume its full services as soon as possible, and that was what UNRWA was trying to do.

As to the financial situation of the Agency, the Commissioner-General said that expenditures for 1977 were estimated at just under $140 million. Even if the full amount of income represented by total government pledges in 1976, regular and special, were pledged from the beginning of the new year, UNRWA would face a deficit of about $25 million. If special contributions were not incorporated in pledges for 1977, the prospective deficit would be twice that amount.

In conclusion, the Commissioner-General said that the events in Lebanon were a shocking reminder of the urgency of reaching a just and lasting settlement in the Middle East which would take account of the legitimate rights and interests of the Palestinian people. Without such a solution, he said, there would be no solution to the problem of the Palestine refugees; talk of returning all the refugees to their camps—camps in which more than half of them had never lived and some of which had been destroyed—offered no solution.

The representative of Norway, speaking as Rapporteur of the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA, introduced the Working Group's report. He said the Group was convinced that any serious reduction in the services provided by UNRWA would have very serious repercussions for the refugees themselves, for the countries in which they lived and for the prospects for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. The Working Group, he said, urgently requested that Governments that had not contributed in the past and those that had thus far contributed inadequately reconsider their position and contribute generously.

During the discussion in the Special Political Committee, many speakers expressed appreciation for the efforts of the Commissioner-General and the Agency in carrying out programmes on behalf of the refugees in the face of adverse conditions, and shared the concern expressed by the Commissioner-General and the Working Group over the dangerous financial position of the Agency. The view was expressed by virtually all speakers that—pending an over-all solution of the Middle East question and hence of the refugee problem—UNRWA's services were indispensable and had to be maintained.

The United States representative, for example, said that her country's overriding objective in the Middle East was to bring about the political conditions which would permit the eventual disappearance of UNRWA in the context of a just and lasting peace in the area, and permit all Palestinians to lead meaningful and fruitful lives. In the meantime, she said, there was no practical alternative—in either political or humanitarian terms—to maintaining the essential services which UNRWA had so effectively delivered to Palestine refugees over the years. She urged all Member States to support the indispensable activities of UNRWA through increased financial contributions.

According to the USSR representative, the Palestinian refugee problem could be solved only within the context of a comprehensive Middle East settlement, involving the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all the Arab territories occupied in 1967, the fulfilment of the legitimate national aspirations of the Arab people of Palestine, including the right to establish their own State, and international guarantees to ensure the security of all the Middle East States, including Israel. The Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East should be reconvened with the participation of all parties concerned, including the Arab people of Palestine represented by the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). Similar views were expressed by the representatives of Cuba, Czechoslovakia and Romania.

The USSR representative went on to say that, with regard to financing the activities of UNRWA, the USSR had always been opposed to any infringement of the voluntary-contribution principle, first, because it would be tantamount to placing the countries that were impeding an equitable solution of the Palestinian problem on an equal footing with those striving to ensure that the legitimate national aspirations of the Arab people of Palestine were fulfilled, and, second, because it would perpetuate the Palestinians' status as refugees deprived of rights, which would amount to condemning them to eternal servitude.

The representative of the Netherlands spoke on behalf of the nine members of the European Communities, which, he recalled, had supported the Agency's activities from the very outset. Until a lasting solution was achieved in the Middle East, UNRWA remained indispensable and would continue to receive their support. The total contribution of the members of the Communities for 1976 amounted to approximately $31,750,000, including additional contributions made in response to the Commissioner-General's and the Working Group's appeals. It was to be regretted, he said, that in spite of significantly increased contributions from some other countries, the major part of the financial burden was still borne by a relatively small group of countries. All Members of the United Nations should support the Agency's efforts, he stated, adding that several countries, in spite of their political support of the Palestinian cause and their announced support of UNRWA, had not contributed to its financing.

Several Members held the view that UNRWA's financing should be placed on a more secure foundation. The spokesman for Austria, for example, felt that in the long term UNRWA's entire financial basis would have to be examined. Its operations had reached a point where it was no longer possible for a small group of countries to carry the whole financial burden. A thorough change in the Agency's financing was needed so that its revenues could be linked more closely with the collective responsibility of all countries, irrespective of their geographical location and political attitude on the Middle East question.

The representative of the Syrian Arab Republic noted that the annual reports of the Commissioner-General had, from the outset, concentrated on the humanitarian aspects of the problem without dealing with the heart of the matter, namely, Zionist expansionism, colonialism and racism. General Assembly and Security Council resolutions had recognized the right of the Palestine refugees to return to their homes and he therefore felt that if the Commissioner-General's report could have identified the Zionist entity and its allies as being responsible for the situation it would have been easier to solve the refugee problem, which was the single most important factor preventing the restoration of peace and stability in the Middle East and throughout the world.

The representative of Egypt said that a comparison of the amounts contributed to UNRWA with the assistance given to Israel to finance the destructive weapons it used to reinforce its hold on the occupied Arab territories provided the most striking proof of the need for the international community to solve the refugee problem as a whole before it became more complex. The services which the Agency provided were the bare minimum according to all international criteria and could not be reduced. An international community which spent more than $300 billion on armaments should be able to cover the deficit of UNRWA; furthermore, since Israel's wealth had been stolen from the Palestinians, Israel should bear the brunt of UNRWA's expenditures.

The representative of Jordan said that Israel's reply to the Secretary-General's request for information was evasive and showed Israel's scorn for United Nations resolutions. Israel had cited violence as an excuse for non-compliance with the General Assembly's resolutions, but there would have been no violence or even any Palestinian presence in Lebanon if the displaced Palestinians had been allowed to live normal lives in their homeland. He went on to say that Jordan, as host country to hundreds of thousands of refugees, had, during the period from 1 July 1975 to 30 June 1976, given the displaced persons and refugees direct government assistance amounting to $23.5 million. But there was a limit to what a small country like Jordan could do. He stressed that it had been the United Nations which, by partitioning the Palestinians' country, had set in motion the traumatic events that had resulted in their dispersal; likewise, it had been the failure of the United Nations to implement its own resolutions that had perpetuated the situation. The heart of the question was the degree of dedication, sensitivity and responsibility which the international community showed towards the Palestine refugees. Ad hoc arrangements and last-minute rescue miracles, commendable as they were, should not be the answer.

As to the abolition of UNRWA and the suspension of its services, he said, that should be an occasion for Palestinian and world-wide rejoicing because it would be a sign of the restoration of the Palestinians' rights. Pending that long-awaited day, all Governments should refuse even to contemplate such an eventuality.

In the opinion of the Tunisian representative, the refugee problem was not basically one of offering charity to an unfortunate people and it concerned not only the Arab States but all United Nations Members. The Agency should not be dependent on voluntary contributions; its expenses should, rather, be apportioned among all Member States and financed from the regular budget. It would thus become an item to be dealt with in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, while the Assembly's political committees would continue to concern themselves with the political aspects of the problem.

The Permanent Observer for PLO said that those responsible for creating the tragedy should continue to support the Agency until the displaced people could return to their homeland. The Palestinians had been the victims of the Zionist racist régime, and continued to be victims of persecution and oppression and were harassed even in refugee camps. The Zionist régime, he charged, resorted to Nazi methods such as punitive demolitions; its measures were inhuman and designed to perpetrate genocide on the Palestinian people.

The representative of the Sudan said that the problem of the Palestinians could not be solved by humanitarian charity alone but called for an approach based on its historical causes. The alternatives were to bow to Israel's ambitions and continue to give the bare minimum of assistance to the refugees, or to compel Israel to abide by United Nations resolutions.

The spokesman for Israel said that once again his country was being blamed for the problem of the Palestine refugees, although it was the Arab leaders themselves who had created and perpetuated that problem by encouraging the Palestinians to leave their homes at the time of the outbreak of hostilities in 1948, as had been proved time and again. For the past 28 years, the problem of the Palestine refugees had been exploited for political purposes by the Arab States, which hoped to destroy Israel by refusing to integrate and absorb those whom they themselves had uprooted, by insisting vociferously on their return en masse and by refusing to contribute to the financing of the Agency.

Israel, he went on to say, had settled the problem of Jewish refugees who had had to abandon their homes in order to escape discrimination and persecution suffered in Arab countries. Their numbers had been equal to or even exceeded those of the Palestinian refugees. The problem had been settled without United Nations assistance and with assistance only from Jewish communities throughout the world. The Arab States, he said, had refused to do the same for the Palestinians even though 85 per cent of them had remained in the same area, inhabited in many cases by the same families and the same clans. Arab spokesmen had rejected any constructive solution, deploring year after year in the United Nations the conditions in which the Palestinian refugees were forced to live—forced by whom, he asked—and had called for the adoption of resolutions which they used in their political campaign against Israel.

He pointed out that the economic situation of the refugees had improved markedly and that the great majority of them did not depend for their subsistence on the rations and other forms of assistance provided by the Agency—which, however, with a staff of some 16,000 people, mainly recruited from among the refugees, had become a veritable institution, with its own interests, and tended to perpetuate services that should be provided by the host countries. The distribution of rations should have been dispensed with long ago. People who earned a good living continued to draw rations and thus burdened the international community, he said.

With regard to the refugee camps in Lebanon, he recalled that PLO had taken them over and had gradually turned them into armed encampments, training bases, arms and supplies depots and the like. Israel had had to take action against the terrorist installations located in or near the camps, but it had always tried to spare the civil population. The blame for the destruction of property, deaths and great suffering inflicted on the population therefore lay solely with the Palestinian terrorist organizations.

With regard to the situation of the refugees in the Gaza Strip, the representative continued, many improvements had been made or were being made in the housing situation. No refugee had been asked to leave his shelter unless alternative accommodation had been provided for him. Both in the field of health and education, facilities had been expanded in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip; moreover, agricultural and economic development had brought full employment and security to the inhabitants of the administered areas. Israel's contribution to UNRWA's budget so far amounted to $7.5 million and the various services it furnished to refugees totalled some $12.3 million. There was considerable disproportion between those figures and the miserly contributions made by most of the oil-rich Arab countries, he added.

In the current situation in the United Nations, he said, nothing was easier than the adoption of further resolutions condemning Israel, but they could not solve a problem which could only be tackled through coexistence, co-operation and, eventually, peace and friendship.

Decisions by the General Assembly

Five draft resolutions were submitted to the Special Political Committee, which approved them on 5 and 8 November. The General Assembly adopted them as a five-part resolution (31/15 A-E) on 23 November.

By the first text (31/15 A), concerning general aspects of the question, the Assembly noted with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees, as provided for in General Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,<sup>54</sup> had not been effected, that no substantial progress had been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly on 26 January 1952<sup>55</sup> for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that therefore the situation of the refugees continued to be a matter of serious concern. The Assembly expressed its thanks to the Commissioner-General and staff of UNRWA and to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees. It noted with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine had been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of operative paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) and it asked the Commission to exert continued efforts towards that end and to report no later than 1 October 1977.

The Assembly directed attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of UNRWA; it noted with concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, the increased level of income was still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the current year, and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits would recur each year; and it called on all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the Agency's anticipated needs, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficits projected in the Commissioner-General's report, urging non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

The text was adopted by the Assembly by a vote of 115 to 0, with 2 abstentions. The Special Political Committee approved it on 5 November by 96 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, on a proposal by the United States.

<sup>54</sup> Operative paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) states, in part, that "the refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property. . . ." See Y.U.N., 1948-49, pp. 174-76, for full text of resolution.

<sup>55</sup> See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 315-16, text of resolution 513(VI).

By the second text (31/15 B), concerning assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities, the Assembly endorsed the efforts of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who were currently displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 hostilities.

It strongly appealed to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above-mentioned purposes to UNRWA and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

This text was adopted unanimously by the Assembly. It was sponsored in the Special Political Committee—which approved it unanimously on 5 November—by Austria, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, the Netherlands, Norway, the Philippines, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, and Uganda.

(For text of resolution 31/15 B, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A third resolution (31/15 C) concerned the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA. By the provisions of this resolution, the Assembly among other things expressed concern at the alarming financial situation of the Agency, imminently endangering the essential minimum services being provided, and emphasized the urgent need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain activities at least at their current minimum level. The Assembly commended the Working Group for its work and asked it to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of UNRWA for a further one-year period.

The Assembly adopted this text unanimously on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, where it was unanimously approved on 5 November, as sponsored by Austria, Belgium, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Iran, Malaysia, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Sudan, Uganda and Yugoslavia.

(For text of resolution 31/15 C, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By a fourth resolution (31/15 D), concerning population and refugees displaced since 1967, the General Assembly among other things: reaffirmed the right of the displaced inhabitants to return to their homes and camps in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967; deplored the continued refusal of the Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of those inhabitants; and called once more upon Israel to take immediate steps for their return and to desist from all measures that obstructed their return, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories. The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of UNRWA, to report on Israel's compliance with those provisions.

This text was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 118 to 2, with 2 abstentions. It was approved on 8 November by the Special Political Committee by a recorded vote of 101 to 2, with 2 abstentions, on a proposal by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Cyprus, Greece, Grenada, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mali, Pakistan, the Philippines, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia.

(For text of resolution 31/15 D and voting details, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the provisions of the fifth text (31/15 E), concerning Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip, the General Assembly called once more upon Israel to take effective steps immediately for the return of the refugees concerned to the camps from which they were removed in the Gaza Strip, to provide adequate shelters for them, and to desist from further removal of refugees and destruction of their shelters.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of UNRWA, to report to it at its 1977 session on Israel's compliance with the resolution.

The text was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 118 to 2, with 3 abstentions. The Special Political Committee approved it on 8 November by a recorded vote of 101 to 2, with 2 abstentions, on a proposal by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Cyprus, Greece, Grenada, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mali, Pakistan, the Philippines, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia.

Pledges and contributions for 1976

For the calendar year 1976, Governments and an intergovernmental organization pledged the equivalent of $112,261,271 towards UNRWA's budget. As at 31 December 1976, the equivalent of a total of $103,644,060 had been received in payment of those pledges; $3,261,311 was also received (in cash and in kind) in 1976 against prior years' pledges. In addition, contributions were received from United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations, private individuals and business corporations.

Total income from all sources in 1976 was $120,718,669.

Resolution 31/15 A, as recommended by Special Political Committee, A/31/333, adopted by Assembly on 23 November 1976, meeting 76, by 115 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions.

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 3419(XXX) of 8 December 1975 and all previous resolutions referred to therein, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the annual report of the Commissioner-

General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1975 to 30 June 1976,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for their continued dedicated and effective efforts under difficult circumstances to provide essential services for the Palestine refugees, and to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report as appropriate, but no later than 1 October 1977;

4. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as outlined in the Commissioner-General's report;

5. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year, and that, at presently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

6. Calls upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the Commissioner-General's report, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

Resolution 31/15 B, as recommended by Special Political Committee, A/31/333, adopted unanimously by Assembly on 23 November 1976, meeting 76.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2341 B (XXII) of 19 December 1967, 2452 C (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2535 C (XXIV) of 10 December 1969, 2672 B (XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2792 B (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 B (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 C (XXIX) of 17 December 1974 and 3419 A (XXX) of 8 December 1975,

Taking note of the annual report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1975 to 30 June 1976,

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the June 1967 hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 2252(ES-V), 2341 B (XXII), 2452 C (XXIII), 2535 C (XXIV), 2672 B (XXV), 2792 B (XXVI), 2963 B (XXVII), 3089 A (XXVIII), 3331 C (XXIX) and 3419 A (XXX);

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are at present displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Resolution 31/15C, as recommended by Special Political Committee, A/31/333, adopted unanimously by Assembly on 23 November 1976, meeting 76.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2964(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3090(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3330(XXIX) of 17 December 1974 and 3419 D (XXX) of 8 December 1975,

Having considered the report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Taking into account the annual report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1975 to 30 June 1976,

Gravely concerned at the alarming financial situation of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, imminently endangering the essential minimum services being provided to the Palestine refugees,

Emphasizing the urgent need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at their present minimum level, the activities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its work;

2. Notes with appreciation the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Chapter XII

Other Middle East questions*Humanitarian aid to Lebanon

On 26 February 1976, the Secretary-General, at the request of the Government of Lebanon, addressed an appeal to the international community to respond to the urgent humanitarian needs created by the conflict in that country. He named the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs, William B. Buffum, to serve as co-ordinator at Headquarters of international relief for Lebanon, and Mohamed-Said Al-Attar, Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Western Asia, to co-ordinate relief within Lebanon.

Shortly after the issuance of that appeal, the relative calm that had prevailed for a number of weeks was broken and heavy fighting resumed. Relief activities by governmental and international organizations continued, but at a severely curtailed level.

In the introduction to his annual report to the General Assembly, issued on 31 August 1976, the Secretary-General noted that the international community would be faced with a monumental challenge when the situation permitted the resumption of humanitarian assistance and the reconstruction of the society and economy of Lebanon.

The re-establishment of relative order towards the end of 1976 made possible the resumption on a larger scale of humanitarian relief efforts. This situation prompted a renewed appeal by the Secretary-General on 12 November and set in motion a renewed effort by the Co-ordinator to assure that the United Nations was able to act quickly and effectively, in co-operation with the Government of Lebanon, other Governments and other international organizations, to deal with the immense dislocation and human suffering that 19 months of strife had generated.

It was estimated that the population in need numbered 1,364,000, of which 764,000 were in total need. Despite the difficult security situation and the disruption of many of the local distribution systems, United Nations programmes and agencies were able to provide emergency relief, valued at over $14 million, in the form of food, medicines, clothing, shelter material and other basic supplies.

Pledges totalling $2.8 million were made during the year to the United Nations Trust Fund for Assistance to Lebanon as follows:

Communications concerning Lebanon

A number of communications concerning events in Lebanon were received by the Secretary-General during 1976.

By a letter dated 25 May 1976, the representative of Algeria to the United Nations transmitted a message addressed to the Secretary-General from the Algerian Minister for Foreign Affairs, who said that the position taken by the French Government concerning the dispatch of a French expeditionary force to Lebanon was likely to aggravate the Lebanese crisis. According to the statement, that position introduced a very dangerous precedent in the practice of international relations and one which was in flagrant violation of the principles of the United Nations concerning respect for the independence and territorial integrity of States and non-interference in their internal affairs. This scheme of foreign intervention was bound to create understandable apprehensiveness not only in the Arab world but in all third-world and, particularly, non-aligned countries.

The Algerian Foreign Minister expressed the hope that the Secretary-General would make every effort to discourage a venture which was incompatible with any code of international morality and calculated to undermine seriously the very basis of the Charter of the United Nations, international détente and the rules of conduct which should govern relations between large and small States.

The Permanent Representative of France to the United Nations, in a reply dated 27 May, rejected as untrue the allegations about French policy towards Lebanon—a policy motivated solely by a concern to preserve Lebanon's unity, integrity and sovereignty. Should it be deemed helpful by the President of the Lebanese Republic and the parties concerned with the civil war—including the various Lebanese parties and the interested Arab countries—France, the representative said, would be prepared to contribute to the machinery necessary to consolidate the cease-fire.

He went on to say that France's offer would be made good only if there was a request from the constituted authorities and a consensus of all the parties concerned with the conflict; the French initiative showed France's willingness to make a temporary and limited, but specific, contribution to the process of restoring peace. Given that context, the French representative said, it was particularly inappropriate to suggest that there had been an alleged threat of military intervention by France in Lebanon.

On 22 June, the representative of the United Arab Emirates transmitted a message from the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States concerning the situation in Lebanon and forwarding texts from resolutions adopted at an extraordinary session of the Council of the Arab States held at Cairo, Egypt, from 8 to 10 June 1976.

By a letter dated 17 August, the Permanent Representative of Lebanon transmitted the text of a letter from the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Lebanon to the President of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, concerning various aspects of the civil strife in Lebanon.

The President of the Council of Ministers of Lebanon in a communication dated 25 August commented on the above letter.

By a letter dated 2 September, the Permanent Representative of Yemen transmitted the text of a letter dated 1 September from a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization also commenting on the letter of 17 August.

Communications from Democratic Yemen, Iran and Oman

By a letter dated 26 November 1976, the representative of Democratic Yemen transmitted the text of a statement by an official spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Yemen. The spokesman said that, on 24 November, Iranian fighter-planes, stationed at air bases inside Oman, had crossed the border and violated the air space of Democratic Yemen over the eastern district of the Sixth Province; Democratic Yemen's ground forces had shot down one of the intruding aircraft. Democratic Yemen had been threatened and endangered by repeated violations of its air space by Iranian spy-planes and jet fighters bombarding its installations and villages and terrorizing its people. Furthermore, the Iranian armed forces and navy had repeatedly massed troops and navy ships along Democratic Yemen's eastern border and territorial waters. The Government of Democratic Yemen reserved its right to defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity, the statement added.

By a letter dated 26 November, the representative of Iran informed the President of the Security Council that, on 24 November, an Imperial Iranian Air Force aircraft, part of the Iranian contingent which was stationed in Oman, had been shot down during a training flight over Oman. The aircraft had been fired at from across the border of Democratic Yemen. This flagrant act of aggression was evidently designed to sabotage the Conference of the Foreign Ministers of the Persian Gulf Littoral States which was in session in Oman's capital. The Government of Iran was confident that this act of aggression would not adversely affect the determination and efforts of the Persian Gulf littoral States to maintain peace and security in the area. The Government of Iran condemned this hostile act and reserved its right to take appropriate action if and when it deemed it necessary.

By a letter dated 29 November, the representative of Oman referred to the incident mentioned in the Iranian letter and stated that his country strongly condemned the act of aggression committed by Democratic Yemen, which had violated the accepted norms of international law, the United Nations Charter and every concept of truth. Through a policy of aggression and intervention, Democratic Yemen was threatening peace and security in the area and was evidently trying to undermine the Gulf States Foreign Ministers' Conference. The letter said that the Government of Oman was adamant in maintaining peace and security in the area through the co-operation of friendly and neighbouring States. The aid and support which was being offered by sister States in the area was practical evidence of such regional co-operation.

Chapter XIII

The situation in Cyprus

During 1976, the situation on the island of Cyprus was relatively quiet but remained tense. The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council in December that, despite the passage of time, the main problems resulting from the events of 1974 remained unsolved. On the basic political issues, he said, the two Cypriot communities were still deeply divided.

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, continued to discharge its mandate, including supervision of the cease-fire. It also continued its efforts to carry out humanitarian tasks and to promote normalization of the living conditions of the Greek Cypriots remaining in the area under Turkish control. The Security Council twice renewed the Force's mandate for further six-month periods—on 15 June and 15 December—among other decisions it took on the question of Cyprus.

The Commander of the Force, Lieutenant-General Dewan Prem Chand (India), relinquished his post on 18 December 1976 and was replaced by Major-General James Joseph Quinn of Ireland.

The Secretary-General, pursuing the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council, convened the representatives of the two Cypriot communities in a fifth round of intercommunal talks at Vienna, Austria, in February. Problems subsequently arose and, in spite of his further efforts to resume the negotiating process, the Secretary-General reported in September that because of the differences persisting between the two communities no progress could be achieved.

The General Assembly considered the question of Cyprus at its thirty-first session later in 1976, and on 12 November, among other things, called on the parties to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in implementing its resolutions on the question and asked him to continue to provide his good offices for the negotiations between the representatives of the two communities.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continued during the year as Co-ordinator of United Nations humanitarian assistance in Cyprus. Also during 1976, matters concerning missing and displaced persons in Cyprus were discussed in the Commission on Human Rights.

Details of these and related matters are to be found in the sections which follow.

Political and related developments*Communication and reports of Secretary-General (January-March 1976)

In a letter dated 30 January 1976, addressed to Governments of States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, the Secretary-General appealed for voluntary contributions for the financing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP). He said that the accumulated deficit for the period through 15 December 1975 stood at $34.6 million and that it was estimated that $11.8 million would be required to maintain the Force during the six-month period ending 15 June 1976, as compared to $13.4 million for the previous six months. The reduced level of expenditure was the result of the reduction in the strength of UNFICYP, from 3,548 on 14 July 1975 to 2,950 by the end of January 1976. As a result of a shortfall in contributions, the bills presented by troop-contributing countries for reimbursement of their extra and extraordinary costs had been met only to June 1972, which meant that those Governments had continued to shoulder a disproportionate burden in providing contingents for a peace-keeping operation established and repeatedly extended by the Security Council in the exercise of its responsibilities for the maintenance of international peace and security. The Secretary-General felt that his responsibility in respect of UNFICYP could be discharged only if Governments provided the necessary support for that important peace-keeping effort.

On 24 February, pursuant to a Security Council resolution of 13 December 1975,<sup>1</sup> the Secretary-General submitted an interim report to the Council on the mission of good offices which had been entrusted to him by the Council on 12 March 1975.<sup>2</sup> He reported that a fifth round of talks had taken place in Vienna, Austria, from 17 to 21 February 1976, held in pursuance of his mission of good offices and in accordance with a procès-verbal agreed upon by the Foreign Ministers of Greece and Turkey in Brussels, Belgium, on 12 December 1975 (see p. 288). In the agreed press communiqué issued at the conclusion of the talks, it was stated that the representatives of the two communities had held substantive discussions on the territorial and constitutional issues. It had been agreed that an exchange of written proposals would take place in Cyprus within six weeks, through the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Cyprus, Ambassador Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, and that the talks under the auspices of the Secretary-General would resume in Vienna in May 1976 to establish a common basis prior to referring the matter to mixed committees in Cyprus. The representatives of the two Cypriot communities had also agreed to meet in Cyprus with the Special Representative to examine a number of humanitarian problems.

On 31 March, the Secretary-General, pursuant to the Council's resolution of 13 December 1975 and a General Assembly resolution of 20 November 1975,<sup>3</sup> submitted a report to the Security Council in which he reviewed developments during the first three months of 1976. After referring to the fifth round of talks held in February, he gave an account of developments in Cyprus relating to the agreement contained in the press communiqué of 21 February. His Special Representative had held seven meetings on humanitarian problems with the representatives of the two communities between 5 and 31 March. The Special Representative had also been in close touch with the two interlocutors concerning the exchange of written proposals on the territorial and constitutional issues foreseen in the Vienna communiqué.

The Secretary-General further reported that, since the end of the third round of talks on 2 August 1975, 1,103 Greek Cypriots had been transferred from the north to the south, 264 of them since the conclusion of the fifth round on 21 February 1976. It was expected that, in addition to dealing with the territorial and constitutional issues and humanitarian questions, the interlocutors would, in the future, also discuss other aspects of the Cyprus problem, set out in the General Assembly's resolution of 20 November 1975, in the context of the efforts towards a comprehensive agreement.

Communications (January-May 1976)

Between January and May 1976, a number of communications relating to various aspects of the situation in Cyprus were received from the parties concerned.

In a letter dated 15 January, the representative of Cyprus complained about a statement made on 9 January by Osman Orek, who represented himself as Vice-President and Minister of Defence of the so-called Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, that he considered the non-occupied areas of the Republic "unliberated Turkish areas." Greek Cypriots who remained in the north of the island, he added, were free to cross over to the "unliberated Turkish areas" if they so desired. The representative of Cyprus said that that and recent similar statements by Turkish leaders clearly revealed the aggressive intentions of Turkey and were calculated to undermine any positive efforts for the resumption of meaningful and constructive negotiations in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions.

A letter dated 2 February on the same subject was received from the representative of Cyprus. In it he said that the Turkish Cypriot negotiator, Rauf R. Denktash, had repeated and endorsed the statement of Mr. Orek, referring to the part of the territory of Cyprus not under Turkey's military occupation as the "unliberated Turkish areas of Cyprus." "Liberation" was thus used to refer to the aggressive military occupation of the territory of Cyprus, the Cypriot representative said, and the expulsion therefrom of its majority inhabitants, to be supplanted in their usurped homes by massive colonization from the aggressor country.

In a letter dated 29 January, the representative of Cyprus, Zenon Rossides, drew attention to what he termed the ever-increasing cases of harassment and forcible expulsion of the remaining Greek Cypriot people in the occupied areas of Cyprus. This, he said, was a breach of specific commitments undertaken by the Turkish side in an intercommunal humanitarian agreement during the Vienna talks in August 1975. Annexed to the letter were details of alleged violations of provisions of the Vienna agreement, involving the reunification of families, educational facilities, medical facilities and care of the Greek Cypriot population by Greek Cypriot medical practitioners, and freedom of movement of the Greek Cypriot people and of UNFICYP.

On 3 February, the Turkish representative forwarded a letter from Nail Atalay, whom he identified as "Acting Representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus." Mr. Atalay stated that the allegations contained in the letter of 29 January of Mr. Rossides, whom Mr. Atalay called the representative of the Greek Cypriot administration, were deliberately fabricated to raise suspicion in international circles about the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus vis-à-vis the Greek Cypriots living in the north who were, he said, leading a normal life. He also denied that authorities of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus were violating the Vienna agreements.

In a letter dated 10 February, the representative of Cyprus charged that, on the eve of the proposed resumption of the intercommunal talks to be held later in February, increased military activities were being initiated by the Turkish forces towards occupying the new town of Famagusta. The town, he said, had not been occupied during the second invasion of August 1974 and had remained sealed off, but its 50,000 inhabitants who had fled had not been allowed to return. He added that the expectation had been that these inhabitants would be allowed to return to their homes and properties, thereby substantially alleviating the refugee problem and generally creating a more positive climate for meaningful negotiations in good faith.

In a letter dated 14 February, the representative of Cyprus reiterated his charge of systematic harassment and expulsion of Greek Cypriot inhabitants of the north and, in an annex to the letter, listed inhabitants who had been expelled from northern villages.

On 17 February, the representative of Turkey transmitted a letter from Mr. Atalay, who in turn transmitted a letter from Mr. Denktash, identified as "President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus," deploring Mr. Rossides's letter of 10 February as an attempt to influence the Vienna negotiations. The letter said that Mr. Rossides did not represent a government that could speak for the whole of Cyprus; he represented only the Greek Cypriot community.

A letter from Mr. Atalay dated 18 February and forwarded by the representative of Turkey said that the representative of the Greek Cypriot community in his letter-publishing campaign was bombarding the United Nations with unnecessary and misleading communications, as was his practice immediately before the convening of each session of the intercommunal talks in order to disrupt them.

In a letter of 5 March, the representative of Cyprus denied that his letter of 10 February had tried to influence the intercommunal negotiations; it was a necessary alerting of the Secretary-General to the renewed wave of aggressive activities by the Turkish forces.

In a letter dated 10 March and transmitted by the Turkish representative, Mr. Atalay said that Mr. Rossides's stand cast serious doubts on the credibility of the Greek Cypriot representation at the United Nations.

The representative of Cyprus in a letter dated 16 March said that Turkey was preparing for the construction of a military air base in the area of Ayios Epiktitos, including Karakoumi, Kazaphani and Klepini, near Kyrenia in occupied northern Cyprus. The Turkish occupation forces had ordered the inhabitants to move elsewhere as their villages were to be used for the settlement of Turkish military. The victims of this action, the letter said, were the remaining Greek Cypriots of the area, a great number of Turkish Cypriots—about 2,000 who had been transported from the south—and a number of imported colonists from Turkey. The letter added that the element of aggressive possessiveness over the territory of an independent and sovereign country was amply discernible in Turkey's action, revealing that country's expansionist aims as the actual motivation behind its invasion of Cyprus. It was obvious that the continuing military stranglehold on the territory of Cyprus was an evil of increasing dimensions, engulfing the whole of its population, whether of Greek, Turkish or other origin, with wider repercussions.

In a letter dated 18 March transmitted by the Turkish representative, Mr. Atalay said that allegations concerning the areas in northern Cyprus hardly deserved a reply since those areas were under the full control and jurisdiction of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. There were no undertakings in the area under the control of the Turkish Cypriot community that would contravene the conviction of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus that the island should be a non-aligned country. Strategic bases that might jeopardize the non-alignment of Cyprus were located in the south, outside the territory under the jurisdiction of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

In a letter dated 18 March, the representative of Cyprus recalled that on the instructions of the Turkish Cypriot negotiator, Mr. Denktash, it had been stated in October 1975 that there were more than 300,000 Turks of Cypriot origin in Turkey alone. Yet in a subsequent statement on 23 February, Mr. Denktash had given the drastically reduced figure of 90,000 Turkish Cypriots living in Turkey. The truth was, he said, that the total number of Turkish Cypriots who emigrated during the 20 years from 1955 to July 1975 did not exceed 17,164, of whom only 302 went to Turkey. The corresponding number of Greek Cypriots who emigrated during that period was 79,185. Such misrepresentations were part of a campaign calculated to deceive world opinion, in an attempt to cover Ankara's schemes for altering the demographic character of the island, with an eye to annexation, the Cypriot representative said.

In a letter dated 26 March and forwarded by the Turkish representative, Mr. Denktash, specifically replying to the Cypriot representative's letter of 16 March, rejected the allegations that Turkey was preparing for the construction of a military air base near Kyrenia, and that Greek Cypriots were being forcibly evicted from the area. On the contrary, he said, Greek Cypriots residing in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus were transferred to the south either on their own written request or on the request of UNFICYP on their behalf. The re-settlers were not "colonialists" from Turkey, as alleged, but Turkish Cypriot refugees who had fled from Greek oppression in the south to safety in the north, as well as Turkish Cypriots who, having emigrated in the thousands to various parts of the world in the face of unbearable economic and social discrimination by Greek Cypriots in the past, were returning home. He went on to say that the legitimate and justified intervention of Turkey in Cyprus had been carried out under international agreements in order to save the Turkish community from complete annihilation and to safeguard the independence of the island.

In a letter dated 30 March, the representative of Cyprus referred to his complaint of Turkey's action in establishing a military base in Cyprus and rejected the postulation in the communications forwarded by Turkey that a federation existed in Cyprus. No such federated State was recognized or in existence; it was put forward by way of covering up Turkey's occupation of 40 per cent of the territory of Cyprus. The real interests of the Turkish Cypriots were, he said, of little concern to Ankara, whose main target was division and strife, with partition in prospect.

These charges were refuted in a letter dated 9 April from Mr. Denktash, forwarded by the Turkish representative on 22 April.

In a letter dated 12 April, the representative of Cyprus once again drew attention to what he termed the continuing wave of forcible expulsions of indigenous Greek Cypriot population from their homes and properties in the occupied areas of the Republic, in a breach of the specific humanitarian agreements made at the Vienna intercommunal talks of 2 August 1975. Details of the expulsions were given in an annex attached to the letter, together with an illustrative photograph.

A letter from Cyprus on the same subject dated 17 May said that the number of Greek Cypriots who remained in the occupied areas in northern Cyprus after the Turkish invasion of July/August 1974 had, through tactics of harassment and oppression as well as through brute physical eviction, dwindled to 7,783 and was constantly diminishing through a gradual but steady process of additional forced expulsions. Their number, the representative of Cyprus said, had stood at approximately 14,000 at the end of military operations in August 1974.

In a letter dated 20 May and forwarded by the Turkish representative, Mr. Atalay denied what he called completely false charges brought against the Turkish side regarding the alleged expulsion of Greek Cypriots from the northern region of Cyprus. It had been claimed that Greek Cypriots from various parts of the Turkish region had been forced out of the region; in reality, they had been transferred to the south upon their own written request or upon their application through UNFICYP. He reiterated that the policy of the Turkish Cypriot side regarding the Greek Cypriots in the north had been fully in line with the agreements reached at the intercommunal talks held in Vienna.

In a letter dated 11 May, the representative of Cyprus charged that, in a statement to the press on 9 May on relations between Greece and Turkey, the Prime Minister of Turkey had said that Turkey could have occupied the whole of Cyprus and could still do so. That statement, the Cypriot representative said, was an open admission of the fact that Turkish armed forces were in aggressive occupation of a large part of the territory of Cyprus and demonstrated Ankara's contemptuous disregard of United Nations resolutions calling for the withdrawal of all foreign armed forces from Cyprus and the cessation of all foreign interference in its affairs.

Other letters received from the parties during this period included a letter dated 12 January from Mr. Atalay containing a quotation from the Greek Cypriot newspaper Haravghi, concerning the activities of the organization known as "EOKA-B"; a letter from Mr. Atalay dated 3 February citing reports from the Greek Cypriot press concerning a pro-enosis (union with Greece) ceremony held in Limassol, Cyprus, on 25 January; a letter from Mr. Atalay dated 11 March containing a report by a Greek Cypriot priest to the effect that truck-loads of dead Greek Cypriots had been buried in mass graves, without record or identification, in the Nicosia Greek cemetery; letters from Mr. Denktash and Mr. Atalay dated 7, 12 and 13 April, and from the representative of Cyprus dated 17 April, concerning the fifth round of talks held in Vienna in February and subsequent proposals by the two sides; a letter dated 29 April from the representative of Cyprus concerning an incident in which a Greek Cypriot national guardsman was shot by a Turkish army officer for having fraternized with a Turkish Cypriot militiaman and fellow villager; and a letter dated 24 May from Mr. Atalay transmitting the text of a resolution on the Cyprus question and the Turkish Moslem community of Cyprus, adopted unanimously at the Seventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers in Istanbul, Turkey, on 15 May 1976.

All the letters from Mr. Atalay and Mr. Denktash cited above were forwarded to the Secretary-General by the representative of Turkey.

Report of Secretary-General (5 June 1976)

Before the mandate of UNFICYP was due to expire, the Secretary-General, on 5 June, submitted a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering the period from 9 December 1975 to 5 June 1976. He noted in the report that the situation relating to the maintenance of the cease-fire had improved. He reported that on 13 December 1975 his Acting Special Representative in Cyprus had signed, with His Excellency Mr. Rauf R. Denktash, a procès-verbal providing for discussions concerning the stationing, deployment and functioning of UNFICYP in the area under Turkish control.

Meanwhile, he went on to report, restrictions on its freedom of movement had prevented UNFICYP from contributing in any effective way to the security, welfare and well-being of the Greek Cypriots living in the Turkish-controlled part of the island, as it had done for the Turkish Cypriots in the past. Therefore, the Force had only been able to carry out humanitarian work on a limited basis, and the outflow of Greek Cypriots to the south continued. The procedure for UNFICYP screening of applications for transfer did not appear to be functioning effectively, he said, and UNFICYP could not verify whether people wished to leave. The Secretary-General considered the situation of those Greek Cypriots a matter of serious concern, not only on purely humanitarian grounds but also because it tended to affect adversely efforts towards a just and lasting peace. Such concern, he felt, could be considerably alleviated if UNFICYP were granted free and normal access to Greek Cypriot habitations in the area.

With regard to efforts to carry out the good offices mission entrusted to him by the Security Council, the Secretary-General referred to his reports of 24 February and 31 March 1976 (see above). He said that both he and his Special Representative had remained in close touch with the parties with regard to the exchange of territorial and constitutional proposals. The documents submitted by the two sides in this connexion were annexed to the report. Efforts to remove the various obstacles in the way of a resumption of the negotiating process were being continued, and the Secretary-General expressed the conviction that, despite the difficulties, the best hope of achieving a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem was through negotiations between the representatives of the two communities. Both sides, while expressing certain reservations, had indicated publicly that they shared his views in that regard. He felt, however, that for those negotiations to serve any useful purpose the parties had to be willing to show the necessary flexibility and to respect and carry out agreements reached at previous rounds of talks. The sixth round of talks, he reported, scheduled for May, had had to be postponed because the exchange of written proposals on the territorial issue had not been fully carried out as foreseen in the fifth-round agreement.

In the circumstances, he considered the continued presence of UNFICYP to be essential, not only to maintain quiet in the island but to facilitate the continued search for a peaceful settlement. He therefore recommended that the Security Council extend the stationing of the Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months. He also drew the Council's attention to the increasingly critical financial situation of UNFICYP. In spite of repeated appeals, he said, voluntary contributions continued to be insufficient and the deficit in UNFICYP's budget currently exceeded $40 million.

Consideration by Security Council (11-15 June 1976)

The Security Council met on 11, 14 and 15/16 June 1976 to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations peace-keeping operation in Cyprus. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation, at the request of Turkey, to Nail Atalay to participate.

In a letter dated 9 June, forwarded by the representative of Turkey on 11 June, Mr. Denktash said that the Greek Cypriot delegation, which had been sent to New York by the Greek Cypriot administration, headed by John C. Christophides and purporting to represent Cyprus as a whole at the Security Council meetings, could not under any circumstances represent the Government of Cyprus as a whole and in particular the Turkish Cypriot community.

Beginning the discussion, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Cyprus, John C. Christophides, said that because of Turkey's negative attitude a stalemate had been reached in the intercommunal talks. He also charged that Turkey, having secured the implementation of parts of the agreement reached at Vienna in 1975 relative to the movement of Turkish Cypriots to the Turkish-ruled areas, had, since August 1975, proceeded to violate the rest of the provisions by expelling 1,982 Greek Cypriots from the occupied areas. The wholesale expulsions had the purpose of "homogenizing the Turkish region," as Turkey called it, and, through the importation of Turks from Turkey, a mass population transfer had taken place. In formulating its proposals for the future of Cyprus, he went on, the Greek Cypriot side had had as its main objective a Cyprus that was independent, sovereign, territorially integral and non-aligned. The Turkish side, failing to put forward any concrete proposals on territory, aimed at the creation of two separate States connected in such a loose and fragile way as to lead unavoidably to the disintegration of the Republic of Cyprus. The Turkish position, he maintained, provided no basis for constructive negotiations and was flagrantly contrary to the fundamental concept of the relevant United Nations resolutions.

The representative of Turkey said that currently there were two separate administrations representing their respective national communities in Cyprus and for that reason there was no justification for the Greek Cypriot representative to presume to speak on behalf of the so-called Government of Cyprus.

The spokesman for Greece concurred with the Secretary-General's observation in his report that the continued presence of UNFICYP was essential. That report, he said, made grim reading; the image clearly emerged of a specific plan aimed at eradicating all traces of the Greek Cypriot population in the north of Cyprus and colonizing it with Turkish nationals. That was contrary not only to United Nations resolutions but also to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and to the Charter of the United Nations as well. He also deplored the lack of progress in the search for a solution of the Cyprus problem. After five rounds of intercommunal talks, stretching over one and a half years, the negotiations still had to enter the phase of substance. Greece, he said, fully agreed with the Secretary-General's statement in his report that, before reconvening the talks, it was necessary to have reasonable assurances that they would be meaningful and productive.

Mr. Atalay, who said he was speaking on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community, observed that, since the Council's last meeting on the Cyprus problem in December 1975, the most significant event contributing to the peaceful settlement of that problem had been the Brussels accord signed by Turkey and Greece on 12 December 1975 (see below). He accused the Greek Cypriot side of preventing the fulfilment of that accord. He said that the Greek Cypriots could not accept the reality that they would never again be able to impose their will on their Turkish Cypriot co-partners, whom they had tried to destroy for 12 years. The Turkish Cypriots were now gathered in one zone in Cyprus and were determined to preserve that situation. A peaceful and lasting solution depended on the establishment of a biregional federation in Cyprus based on the equality of the two communities.

The representative of Greece said that the procès-verbal signed at Brussels was of a purely procedural nature since it suggested a negotiating approach, namely, the "package-deal" approach. He read out the text of the procès-verbal, according to which the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Greece and Turkey, meeting at Brussels on 12 December 1975, had agreed on the following:

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations was to be asked to appeal to the representatives of the two communities to continue their talks without prior conditions with a view to arriving at a package deal on an agenda containing the following subjects: territorial issues; federal structure; and powers of a central Government.
2. Details of these subjects were to be examined by two sub-committees. If necessary, experts were to be invited from Greece and Turkey to take part in the work of the sub-committees to the extent required.
3. The two Ministers would encourage the representatives of the two communities to respond positively to the appeal of the Secretary-General and accept the earliest possible date for the first meeting under him.

4. Until the talks were completed, all the parties concerned would avoid revealing the content of the points on which there might be provisional agreement, since that would be contrary to the principle of a package agreement. The parties would also abstain from statements which could jeopardize progress already made. Therefore each party reserved the right to deny statements or leakages which would be contrary to this agreement.

The representative of Turkey emphasized that Turkey's intervention in Cyprus in July 1974 was motivated by the desire to remove the threat to the independence of Cyprus caused by the coup carried out by Greek military forces with the avowed aim of achieving enosis. Turkey, he said, had no intention of partitioning the island and its forces would be withdrawn as soon as a settlement had been reached. The allegations about the expulsion of Greek Cypriots from the north were totally unfounded, as were charges of a massive immigration of Turkish nationals. What was indeed happening was that skilled technicians and workers were being imported from Turkey on a temporary basis to meet the immediate needs of the economy. He emphasized that Turkey had no interest in Cyprus beyond the independence of the island, its non-involvement in any strategic arrangement or power politics, and the well-being and security of the Turkish community.

In the ensuing discussion, the USSR representative said that after almost two years there were still foreign troops in Cyprus—both those which had been there since colonial times and those which had recently invaded the island. Thousands of Cypriots continued to live as exiles and refugees in their own native land. Traditional economic links between the various regions had been destroyed. Attempts were continually made to solve the Cyprus problem in a grouping of States belonging to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, behind the backs of the Cypriot people, while events moved towards a partition of the island. The threat of annexation should not be overlooked, he said. The USSR favoured respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus, the withdrawal of all foreign troops, and the granting to its population—both of Greek and of Turkish origin—the right to decide on their future and manage the affairs of their own unitary State. The USSR representative also reiterated his Government's proposal that a representative international conference be convened under the aegis of the United Nations to consider the Cyprus question. He concluded by saying that the extension of UNFICYP's mandate could not by itself bring a settlement closer.

Most speakers held the view that UNFICYP's mandate should be extended as there was a real need for the Force to continue to perform its tasks. Many of them commented on the difficulties faced by the Force in carrying out its functions. Sweden's representative said that UNFICYP's efforts to assist the civilian population in the north, whose situation had given cause for concern, had been seriously hampered by the restrictions on its freedom of movement. The French representative also said that the Force should be permitted to bear witness impartially to what was happening and to carry out its mission under the same conditions in the north and in the south. The parties—which he noted had agreed to renewal of the mandate—should also ensure that the Force was enabled to carry out its mission fully. Italy also expressed concern that the free and complete functioning of UNFICYP was obstructed.

The representative of the United States said that permanent members of the Security Council had a special responsibility to contribute to international peace and security; surely the time had come for Governments interested in a just Cyprus settlement to donate their fair financial share to UNFICYP.

The spokesman for the United Kingdom said that while the immediate purpose of the Council's meetings was to renew UNFICYP's mandate, progress towards a political settlement should also be promoted; his Government and its partners in the European Community considered that a loss of momentum in the search for a solution represented a danger for peace and security in the eastern Mediterranean. They felt that conditions were such that negotiations under the personal aegis of the Secretary-General, within the framework of his current mandate, could be resumed. A restarting of the intercommunal talks could also help towards a solution of the humanitarian problem.

The spokesman for Romania felt, with regard to the intercommunal talks, that the Council should play a more active role in promoting the negotiations. He and a number of other speakers, including Japan, agreed with the view expressed by the Secretary-General that the parties concerned should show the necessary flexibility. He also believed that the Council should require respect for and faithful implementation of agreements reached previously.

At its meeting on 15 June, the Security Council voted on a draft resolution that had been prepared in the course of consultations. It was adopted as resolution 391(1976) by a vote of 13 in favour to 0 against, with Benin and China not participating in the vote.

By the preambular paragraphs of the resolution, the Council noted from the Secretary-General's report: that the presence of UNFICYP was essential not only to help maintain quiet in the island but also to facilitate the search for a settlement; that the freedom of movement of UNFICYP was still restricted in the north of the island although discussions on matters relating to UNFICYP were progressing; and that the best hope for a just and lasting settlement lay in intercommunal negotiations. The Council expressed its concern at actions that increased tension, and emphasized the need for the parties concerned to adhere to earlier agreements. It noted further that the parties concerned had concurred in the recommendation of the Secretary-General to extend UNFICYP's mandate for a further period of six months and that the Government of Cyprus had agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it was necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1976.

By the operative paragraphs, the Council reaffirmed the provisions of previous resolutions on the establishment and maintenance of UNFICYP and other aspects of the situation in Cyprus. It also reaffirmed its resolution of 13 December 1974,<sup>4</sup> by which it endorsed the General Assembly's resolution of 1 November 1974,<sup>5</sup> and called for the urgent and effective implementation of those resolutions and of its resolution of 12 March 1975.<sup>6</sup> It urged the parties concerned to act with the utmost restraint, extended the stationing of UNFICYP until 15 December 1976, in the expectation that by then sufficient progress towards a final solution would make possible a withdrawal or substantial reduction of the Force, and appealed again to the parties concerned to extend their fullest co-operation to UNFICYP. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to continue the mission of good offices entrusted to him by its resolution of 12 March 1975, to keep the Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report by 30 October 1976.

The Secretary-General said he would do his best to implement the resolution. He stressed that the full co-operation of the parties concerned was vital to the success of the Force in performing its difficult duties. Its function would be facilitated by the conclusion of the discussions with the representatives of the Turkish Cypriot community with regard to the stationing, deployment and functioning of UNFICYP in the north.

In connexion with the resumption of the negotiating process, he reiterated that the negotiations had to be meaningful and constructive, which meant not only that the parties should show the necessary flexibility but also that they must act with the utmost restraint and avoid actions tending to increase tension between the two communities and thus make the negotiations more difficult.

The United States representative agreed that, before reconvening the intercommunal talks, it was obviously necessary to have reasonable assurances that they would be meaningful and productive. He outlined the five principles which the United States considered essential to a permanent settlement: (1) a settlement had to preserve the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus; (2) it had to ensure that both the Greek Cypriot and the Turkish Cypriot communities could live in freedom and have a large voice in their own affairs; (3) the current dividing-lines could not be permanent, and there had to be agreed territorial arrangements reflecting the economic requirements of the Greek Cypriot community and taking account of its self-respect; (4) provision had to be made for the withdrawal of foreign military forces other than those present under the authority of international agreements; and (5) there had to be security for all Cypriots, and the needs and wishes of the refugees, who had been the principal victims, had to be dealt with speedily and with compassion.

Several speakers, Sweden among them, stressed that prolongation of UNFICYP's mandate was not an end in itself. The United Republic of Tanzania hoped that maximum efforts would be undertaken by all concerned to make use of the coming six months for a resolution of the outstanding problems, in particular the immediate implementation of the relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions.

Japan said that the extra time gained by the extension should not be used by any of the parties to drag out the negotiations in any way.

The representative of China said his Government had not participated in the vote because it had always held a different position in principle on the question of UNFICYP. China hoped that the two Cypriot communities and the parties concerned would further remove super-power meddling, intervention and sabotage and would avoid giving openings for exploitation by the super-power that was bent on sowing discord and fishing in troubled waters.

The spokesman for Benin said that the resolution was unacceptable in several respects and Benin could not participate in the vote. Benin, he said, felt that the Cyprus question could not and should not be solved merely by renewing UNFICYP's mandate, which meant that the Council was helping the forces of occupation to consolidate their position. He called for the withdrawal of all foreign troops—Turkish and other—so that the Cypriots could settle their own problems. He also supported the proposal of the USSR for the convening of an international conference on the question.

Communications (June–October 1976)

By a letter dated 22 June 1976, the representative of the USSR transmitted the text of a statement by the Telegraphic Agency of the Soviet Union (TASS) expressing concern at the unwarranted delay in a Cyprus settlement and stating that the USSR continued to believe that the best chance for solving the problem lay in convening a representative international conference on Cyprus within the framework of the United Nations.

In a letter dated 13 July, the representative of Cyprus charged that inhuman methods of physical violence and threats to life were being applied in the north of Cyprus by Turkish occupation forces and by imported mainland Turks, in order to terrorize the remaining Greek Cypriot people in the north and force them to sign written consents to be transferred to the south. Annexed to the letter was a report on the matter by the Head of Services on Humanitarian Matters.

A letter, with annex, dated 15 July from the representative of Cyprus dealt with the same subject. The letter noted that during the period from 1 January to 12 July 1976, 1,875 Greek Cypriots had been expelled from their homes and properties in the occupied north of Cyprus.

In another letter dated 15 July, the representative of Cyprus stated that a communication from Rauf R. Denktash, forwarded by the representative of Turkey on 26 May and purporting to be a reply to the Cypriot representative's letter of 26 April, did not even attempt to give an answer to the facts contained in that letter concerning the ongoing expulsion of the remaining indigenous Greek Cypriot people from the north. Those earlier letters were among several addressed to the Secretary-General and circulated as documents of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in connexion with their discussions of agenda items dealing with racial discrimination (see p. 564).

A letter from the representative of Cyprus on 20 August gave, in an attached annex, details concerning new cases of expulsions of indigenous Greek Cypriot inhabitants from their homes in the occupied area. Letters from Nail Atalay dated 3 August and 7 September, transmitted by the representative of Turkey, said that the allegations by Cyprus were unfounded, false and intended to mislead.

A number of communications were received during this period concerning other aspects of the situation in Cyprus.

On 2 August, the representative of Turkey forwarded a letter from Nail Atalay quoting a statement by Rauf R. Denktash that he would be willing to meet Archbishop Makarios as leader of the Greek Cypriot community under conditions of full equality.

The representative of Cyprus charged in a letter dated 24 August that the Turkish Minister of the Interior, who had been visiting the area of Cyprus occupied by Turkish forces, had made provocative and inflammatory statements concerning the possibility of a unilateral declaration of independence for the Turkish-occupied area of Cyprus; he was alleged to have said that no one in Turkey was against the proclamation of the independent Turkish State of Cyprus. The Minister had also said he had concluded that Famagusta should be resettled; it would be impossible for Turkey to return it. He had also, the representative of Cyprus said, declared himself to be firmly opposed to "even an inch" of territorial concessions.

On 31 August, the representative of Cyprus transmitted the text of the section concerning Cyprus of the Political Declaration adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Colombo, Sir Lanka, in August 1976. The Conference, among other things, urged the immediate implementation of United Nations resolutions, called on all States to respect the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and non-alignment of Cyprus, demanded the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of foreign armed forces and other foreign military presence from Cyprus, and called for the initiation of urgent measures to ensure the safe return of all refugees to their homes. It supported the continuation of meaningful and constructive negotiations between the representatives of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities freely conducted on an equal footing, which should lead to a mutually satisfactory and freely accepted agreement, and emphasized the need for the parties concerned to adhere to the agreements reached at all previous rounds of the talks held under the auspices of the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

In a letter dated 7 September and forwarded by the Turkish representative, Mr. Atalay protested against the candidacy of Andreas V. Mavrommatis, a Greek Cypriot, for membership in the Human Rights Committee established in connexion with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (see also pp. 609-10). He said that the Republic of Cyprus was a binational State, based on the existence of two ethnic communities, and that consequently membership of the Greek Cypriot administration on the Committee, representing Cyprus as a whole, was totally unacceptable to the Turkish Cypriot community.

On 12 October, by a letter forwarded by the Turkish representative, Mr. Atalay transmitted background information concerning Vassos Lyssarides, President of the Greek Cypriot Party, EDEK, who would shortly be leading a delegation in New York of the Afro-Asian Peoples' Solidarity Organization, of which he was Vice-President.

Communication and reports of Secretary-General (July-October 1976)

In a letter on 15 July, addressed to Governments of States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, the Secretary-General issued a further appeal for voluntary contributions to meet the costs of maintaining UNFICYP. He said that the accumulated deficit for the period through 15 June 1976 stood at $39.7 million; it was estimated that $12 million would be required to maintain the Force during the six-month period ending 15 December 1976.

In connexion with the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council, the continuation of which was requested by the Council on 15 June 1976, the Secretary-General reported on 30 October that his special Representative, Ambassador Pérez de Cuéllar, had had discussions with President Makarios and Rauf R. Denktash in Nicosia and had visited Ankara on 13 and 14 July and Athens on 15 and 16 July for talks with the Foreign Ministers of Turkey and Greece and other high officials. Upon his return to Cyprus, the Special Representative had held further talks with the leaders of the two communities.

The Secretary-General said that although both parties in Cyprus had expressed their readiness to send representatives to a sixth round of the inter-communal talks under his auspices, wide differences persisted as to the basis of the prospective talks and both sides considered that it would be counter-productive to convene a sixth round unless those differences were narrowed.

As to the substance of those differences, he said that the Greek Cypriot side considered that the exchange of written proposals referred to in the Vienna communiqué of 21 February 1976 had not been completed by the Turkish Cypriot side with regard to the territorial issue, and that the Turkish Cypriot side would be expected to submit concrete counter-proposals on that issue at the next round of talks, with a view to establishing a common basis at those talks prior to referring the matter to mixed committees.

The Turkish Cypriot side, he went on, considered that the exchange had been completed in April 1976, that substantive discussions at the next round should concern principles and criteria, but that concrete proposals—especially on territorial matters—should be discussed in the mixed committees in the presence of experts.

The Secretary-General also reported that he had invited the two interlocutors, Tassos Papadopoulos and Umit S. Onan to consult with him in New York before the opening of the General Assembly. During these consultations, he said he had put forward the idea of having the main talks, under his auspices, and the mixed committees, which could meet in the presence of his Special Representative, meet simultaneously. The two interlocutors had reacted positively but with reservations which in effect reintroduced the main elements of their conflicting positions. It was agreed that the Special Representative would continue the consultations at Nicosia.

The Secretary-General went on to report that the condition of the Greek Cypriots in the north continued to be a matter of serious concern not only on humanitarian grounds but also because it was a highly contentious issue between the two communities. They remained restricted to their respective villages and to the immediate surroundings thereof; medical, educational and religious facilities had declined; the movement of the Greek Cypriots to the south continued; and the question of persons still unaccounted for remained unchanged.

The Secretary-General said he continued to believe that, despite all the difficulties, the intercommunal negotiations represented the best hope of achieving an agreed, just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem. He regretted having to report that the difficulties in the way of resuming meaningful negotiations had yet to be overcome and that the differences between the two sides—both as to substance and procedure—had shown little sign of narrowing. The current procedural deadlock reflected the political difficulties of the interlocutors, he said; those difficulties had not been relieved by the passage of time and could be overcome only with the support, understanding and statesmanship of all the parties concerned. He would continue to try to help bring about a resumption of meaningful negotiations.

Consideration by the General Assembly

By a letter dated 20 July 1976, the representative of Cyprus requested that the question of Cyprus be included as an item in the agenda of the thirty-first (1976) session of the General Assembly. An explanatory memorandum, transmitted by a further letter from Cyprus dated 26 July, reviewed developments pertaining to the Cyprus question during the preceding year and stated that, despite repeated calls by the United Nations for the implementation of its resolutions on Cyprus, Turkey arbitrarily refused to comply with their provisions. While the Turkish side paid lip service to supporting the intercommunal talks, its continuing aggressive actions against Cyprus and its over-all record in the intercommunal negotiations clearly indicated its intent to render them devoid of any substance and meaning, the memorandum said. Turkey was using the talks to neutralize any other initiative which could contribute to a just solution of the problem. In their efforts to prolong and consolidate their military stranglehold over the occupied northern part of Cyprus, Ankara and the Turkish Cypriot leadership were constantly evading their commitment to submit concrete proposals on all aspects of the Cyprus problem and particularly on the territorial issue.

The Cyprus Government, the memorandum went on to say, viewed the negotiations as the best available means for a peaceful, just and viable solution. It was once again incumbent upon the General Assembly to support action by the Security Council for the effective and long-overdue implementation of the relevant resolutions.

A letter dated 21 September was forwarded by the representative of Turkey from Vedat A. Celik, whom he identified as Deputy Prime Minister of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Mr. Celik said that resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council since 1974 had established the principle of equality between the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities. The procedure adopted in 1975 by the Assembly, however, failed to uphold the principle of intercommunal equality, since it enabled the Greek Cypriots to participate in the debate on Cyprus throughout its course, while restricting the Turkish Cypriot side to a short intervention in the Special Political Committee. The Cyprus issue should be allocated to a forum where the two communities could and would fully participate on a basis of equality. Otherwise, the result would be a one-sided monologue, as in the previous year, and the Turkish Cypriot side would have no other alternative but to dissociate itself from the proceedings of the Assembly.

On 24 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its General Committee, decided to include the item in the agenda and to consider it in plenary meetings, on the understanding that it would, when considering the item, invite the Special Political Committee to meet for the purpose of affording representatives of the Cypriot communities an opportunity to express their views in the Committee, and that the Assembly would then resume its consideration of the item, taking into account the report of the Special Political Committee.

On 11 October, Nail Atalay, in a letter transmitted by the representative of Turkey, stated that John C. Christophides, who was scheduled to address the Assembly later that week on behalf of Cyprus, could not legally or morally represent the Republic of Cyprus as a whole. Anything said or done by him or any other Greek Cypriot representative was therefore void and could not be binding on the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

In a letter dated 26 October, transmitted by the Turkish representative to the President of the Assembly, Mr. Denktash referred to a ruling made that day by the Assembly President according to which representatives of the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania would be able to participate in the plenary discussions of the Assembly on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa (see p. 123). The decision of the Assembly's General Committee on the participation of the Cypriot communities in the Cyprus debate was in direct conflict with that ruling, he said, and he asked the President to apply the ruling made in the case of the apartheid item also in the case of Cyprus, thus enabling the representative of the Turkish Cypriot community to participate in the debate in the plenary.

The President of the Assembly replied in a letter dated 27 October to the representative of Turkey that his statement made in the Assembly on 26 October concerned the participation of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and representatives of national liberation movements recognized by OAU. He had consulted on the matter with interested parties; as the Assembly decided that the item on apartheid would be considered in plenary meetings, it was appropriate to permit the observers of the organizations directly concerned to participate in the plenary debate. Given the status of those organizations as observers, the same arrangement was not applicable in the case of the item on Cyprus, the President said.

Replying to that letter on 29 October, the representative of Turkey noted that the Assembly President had consulted with the interested parties concerning participation in the debate on apartheid but had considered consultations unnecessary in the case of the request of President Denktash. The Turkish representative said he did not accept the Assembly President's view that the arrangement applied in the apartheid matter was not applicable in the case of the agenda item on Cyprus. He also said it was not common practice for elected presidents of deliberative assemblies to take a stand before a question came up for discussion and before exponents of different views had had the opportunity to explain their positions.

The President replied on the same date that the General Assembly had, in two successive years, adopted a clear procedure in the case of the item on Cyprus.

On 8 November, when the General Assembly began its debate on the question of Cyprus, the representative of Turkey presented a motion for reconsideration of the decision adopted earlier by the Assembly on the participation of the Cypriot communities in the discussion. He argued that that decision fell significantly short of enabling the two communities to present their views on a basis of equality, since it enabled the Greek community to double its voice and speak in the capacity of the Greek Cypriot community in addition to that of the so-called Government of Cyprus.

Opposing the motion, the spokesman for Cyprus said that the Assembly's earlier decision gave full opportunity to the Turkish Cypriot community to express its point of view. The position of the Turkish Cypriot community was, he said, clearly different from that of the liberation movements allowed to speak in the plenary in connexion with the apartheid question. It was a minority community in a Member State—Cyprus—and as such could not appear in the Assembly, a forum reserved for Governments.

The Assembly, by a roll-call vote of 23 in favour to 70 against, with 35 abstentions, rejected the Turkish motion for reconsideration of the procedure adopted for the Cyprus question.

The Assembly then decided to invite the Special Political Committee to hold a meeting on 9 November to hear the views of the representatives of the Cypriot communities; the Assembly would resume its consideration of the item on 10 November.

At a meeting of the Special Political Committee on 8 November, the Turkish representative informed the Committee that the Turkish Cypriot representative would not participate in the Committee's meeting on the question of Cyprus.

On 9 November, the Special Political Committee heard a statement by Tassos Papadopoulos, the representative of the Greek Cypriot community, who said he was disappointed and surprised at the absence of the Turkish Cypriot representative. This, he said, was an opportunity for that community to air its views, but it appeared to be setting the stage in order to claim later that there had been a trial without a hearing.

Mr. Papadopoulos went on to observe that, three years after the Turkish invasion of Cyprus, there were still 200,000 people lingering behind an arbitrary line without their possessions or homes, which had been taken over by Turks who were being shipped to Cyprus daily in an effort to change the demographic structure of the island. No steps whatever had been taken by the Turkish side for the return of any of the refugees to their homes. Over 2,000 people remained missing. Faits accomplis were being carried out daily in a clear effort to bring about a de facto partition of the island.

He went on to say that negotiations between the two sides had come to a complete deadlock. In spite of the untiring efforts of the Secretary-General and despite the sincerity with which the Greek Cypriot side had participated in five rounds of talks, a solution was no nearer than when the talks began. That, he said, was because the Turkish side had steadfastly refused to submit any concrete proposals regarding the all-important and vital issue, namely, the territorial aspect of the Cyprus question.

The Special Political Committee's report to the General Assembly on its meeting was noted by the Assembly on 10 November by decision 31/403.

The General Assembly then resumed its consideration of the question during five plenary meetings held between 10 and 12 November, at the conclusion of which it adopted resolution 31/12, by a recorded vote of 94 to 1, with 27 abstentions.

By the preamble to the text—which was sponsored by Algeria, Ghana, Guyana, India, Mali, Sri Lanka, Swaziland and Yugoslavia—the Assembly expressed its deep concern over the prolongation of the Cyprus crisis, which endangered international peace and security, and reiterated its full support for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, and non-alignment of the Republic of Cyprus, calling once again for the cessation of all foreign interference in its affairs. The Assembly expressed regret that the United Nations resolutions on Cyprus had not been implemented, and said it was aware of the need to solve the problem without further delay by peaceful means in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly: reaffirmed its resolutions 3212(XXIX) of 1 November 1974<sup>7</sup> and 3395(XXX) of 20 November 1975<sup>8</sup> and demanded their urgent implementation. It called upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in that regard, and asked him to continue to provide his good offices for the negotiations between the representatives of the two communities.

The Assembly also by this resolution expressed the hope that the Security Council would consider appropriate steps for the implementation of Council resolution 365(1974) of 13 December 1974.<sup>9</sup> It requested the Secretary-General to follow up the implementation of the present resolution and report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second (1977) session; the item entitled "Question of Cyprus" would be included in the provisional agenda of that session.

During the discussion in the Assembly, the representative of Cyprus said that for the third consecutive year his country was before the Assembly seeking support for its survival as a sovereign, independent, territorially integral and non-aligned country. Its pleas in 1974 and 1975 did not go unheeded: the General Assembly at its 1974 session adopted resolution 3212(XXIX) and, at its 1975 session, resolution 3395(XXX), providing the framework and the guidelines for the settlement of the Cyprus problem. By these and other United Nations resolutions, he noted, the Assembly expressly called for the withdrawal of all foreign troops without delay, for the urgent return of the refugees to their homes in safety, and for meaningful and constructive negotiations between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots to be freely conducted, with a view to solving the constitutional issue. Turkey was also called upon to abstain from unilateral actions, including actions aimed at changing the demographic structure of Cyprus. But the contemptuous disregard shown by Turkey for those resolutions proved beyond any reasonable doubt, he said, that Turkey neither desired nor sought a just and lasting solution; what it wanted was a settlement that in name would be called federation but in reality would be tantamount to partition. It was trying to impose a solution that would permit it to annex de facto the occupied part of Cyprus and, at the same time, create conditions allowing it to occupy the whole of Cyprus at the first opportune date.

He went on to say that not only had Turkey failed to fulfil its own obligations under the United Nations resolutions but it had also prevented a meaningful dialogue by undermining the intercommunal talks through a policy of broken promises and intervening faits accomplis. A recent example of the negative attitude of the Turkish side towards the talks, he said, was the breaking of its express commitment to put forward concrete proposals at the negotiating table. Cyprus, the representative said, was struggling for its national and physical survival. Turkey, on the other hand, was engaged in carrying out a premeditated plan for the destruction and dissolution of the Republic of Cyprus.

The representative of Turkey said that his Government's intervention in Cyprus in 1974 was in conformity with the obligation of Turkey under the 1960 Treaty of Guarantee, of which Greece was also a signatory. The Turkish forces currently in Cyprus were not forces of occupation: they had been sent there to stop the invasion by Greece, to remove the threat to the independence of Cyprus, to pave the way for a new constitutional order and to protect the Turkish community. In all the stages of the Cyprus drama after 1963, he said, the Greek Government and Archbishop Makarios had followed co-ordinated and complementary policies designed to achieve the common goal of enosis—the union of Cyprus with Greece.

The Turkish representative recalled the statement made in the general debate by the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs to the effect that Turkey in no way intended to maintain its forces in Cyprus; it had no wish to impose a solution and had no interest in Cyprus beyond the independence of the island and the prosperity and security of the Turkish community. Turkey wanted Cyprus to remain outside any strategic arrangements and did not want it to become a pawn in the power politics of the major powers. Any solution acceptable to the Turkish community would also be acceptable to

Turkey and, as soon as a solution was found, Turkey would without delay withdraw its military forces.

The spokesman for Greece observed that Turkey invaded Cyprus in July 1974 under the pretext of restoring public order and protecting the Turkish Cypriots. Although legality had been restored, the Turkish invasion had not been terminated. Since then, a deadlock had persisted in all matters relating to Cyprus. The world community had expressed its concern over the continuing stalemate on the Cyprus problem. Since July 1974, there had been three resolutions of the General Assembly and 13 resolutions of the Security Council, offering a framework for the settlement of the Cyprus problem in both the political and humanitarian fields. But nothing had been done, and not a single provision had been implemented by the Turkish side. With regard to the Turkish preoccupation with enosis, the Greek representative said that both enosis and partition of the island had been rejected by Greece. The idea was being evoked by Turkey in order to justify its policies in Cyprus, as well as its expansionist tendencies. He wondered how long the Organization would accept the perpetuation of glaringly unjust situations where naked force could reign supreme and impose its will on small and independent States.

In the course of the discussion, it was generally agreed that the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Cyprus had to be safeguarded. A number of speakers expressed support for the non-aligned status of Cyprus. The representative of Democratic Yemen, for example, recalled that Cyprus was a founding member of the non-aligned movement and it was the responsibility of the United Nations to safeguard its independence by ensuring the withdrawal of foreign troops and bases. India, Mexico and Yugoslavia also held this view.

A number of Members, among them Bhutan, Cuba, India and Malta, deplored the fact that more than two years after the adoption of Assembly resolution 3212(XXIX), calling for the withdrawal of foreign forces and the return of refugees to their homes, none of its provisions had been implemented.

The spokesman for the USSR called for demilitarization of the island as an important prerequisite for a stable settlement. He reiterated his Government's view that the best way to settle the problem of Cyprus would be to convene—within the framework of the United Nations—a representative, international conference on Cyprus, with the participation of Cyprus, Turkey, Greece, States members of the Security Council and also possibly other States—including non-aligned States. Support for this proposal was expressed by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Mongolia, among others.

The representative of Albania held that the people of Cyprus had become the victims of the aggressive designs of the two imperialist super-powers and of their competition to divide the world into spheres of influence. The Chinese representative expressed similar views, adding that it was the Cypriot people and not one or two super-powers that would decide the destiny of Cyprus.

The representative of the United Kingdom said his Government regarded the intercommunal talks as representing the best and proper forum for the attainment of a political settlement. He said that if negotiations were to be resumed and have some hope of progress, both sides had to be more constructive in their approach. The Turkish Cypriot side should indicate its willingness to agree to rectifications that would ensure a fairer division of territory between the two communities; the Greek Cypriot side should be prepared to agree to a reordering of the Cypriot Constitution that would ensure the equal constitutional rights of both communities. He went on to say that, together with the other members of the European Communities and with the United States, his Government was actively working for a resumption of the intercommunal talks on a substantive basis.

In that connexion, the representative of the United States said his Government hoped that, shortly after the Assembly concluded its consideration of the Cyprus question, the two parties would come together again under the auspices of the Secretary-General and consider a set of ideas put forward by the United States Secretary of State, aimed at providing a path through the procedural barriers that had impeded progress.

Communications (November-December 1976)

The Secretary-General received several communications from the parties during November and early December.

In letters of 1 and 26 November, the representative of Cyprus transmitted the texts of a letter by the President of the House of Representatives of Cyprus and a resolution adopted on 18 November by the House of Representatives, respectively. By the first communication, the President conveyed the message that the House urged all Members of the United Nations, in view of the forthcoming debate on Cyprus in the General Assembly, not only to reaffirm previous resolutions but also to take steps for their implementation. By the resolution, the Cypriot House of Representatives appealed to the Security Council and the General Assembly to put an end to the expulsions of the enclaved Greek Cypriots in the Turkish-occupied areas and to the colonization of the occupied part of Cyprus by Turks from Turkey, to press for implementation of the resolutions on Cyprus and to put an end to the partition plans of the Turkish invaders.

In a letter dated 4 November, the representative of Cyprus charged that the Turkish Government continued to refuse to give information on the fate of over 2,000 persons missing as a result of the Turkish invasion in July/August 1974. There was concrete evidence that a great number of these persons had been taken prisoner by the invading forces. The Turkish Government persisted in not agreeing to any procedure for tracing these persons and refused to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to enter the area under occupation by the Turkish army.

The representative of Turkey forwarded a letter dated 24 November from Mr. Atalay with which he transmitted the text of a resolution on foreign policy of the "Legislative Assembly of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus," dated 5 November. The resolution envisaged the Republic of Cyprus as an independent, sovereign, secular and biregional federal republic no part of which would be annexed to any State. It would pursue a policy of non-alignment. Both communities were to be autonomous in their respective regions, as well as in their communal affairs. The federal status of the two federated States would be guaranteed by the respective motherlands of the two communities.

In a letter dated 10 November, the representative of Cyprus referred to the letters of the representative of Turkey containing letters from representatives of the "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus"—a fictitious entity set up by Ankara on the territory of Cyprus in flagrant violation of the relevant United Nations resolutions. The settlers from Turkey in the bogus "State" had already exceeded 40,000 in number, in an ongoing process of colonization, the representative stated.

In a letter dated 26 November, the representative of Cyprus called attention to what he described as unthinkable inhuman practices carried out by Turkish occupation troops against the enclaved Greek Cypriots in the north of Cyprus, thus forcing them to abandon their ancestral homes. Three annexes to the letter contained reports by the Head of Services on Humanitarian Matters.

The representative of Turkey forwarded a letter dated 1 December from Nail Atalay in which he stated that the allegations contained in the communication of 26 November and its annexes were totally unfounded. The dissemination of propaganda material by the Greek Cypriot representative on the eve of every Security Council meeting on Cyprus had become a matter of routine, he said. As had been stated in numerous letters in answer to previous allegations, all Greek Cypriots transferred to the south had made voluntary applications to do so and were not in any way being compelled to move.

Report of Secretary-General (9 December 1976)

Before the mandate of UNFICYP was due to expire on 15 December 1976, the Secretary-General on 9 December submitted a report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering the period from 6 June to 6 December 1976. He said that the situation in Cyprus had been relatively quiet during the period under review, but tension had persisted. The main problems resulting from the events of 1974 had remained unresolved and on the basic political issues the two Cypriot communities were still deeply divided.

There had been a continuing trend, he said, towards stabilization of military activity along the cease-fire lines; however, attempts to change the military status quo by movements forward of those lines had continued to cause concern to UNFICYP, as had also the measures taken to increase or strengthen positions on the cease-fire lines.

Referring to the buffer area between the two cease-fire lines, which was patrolled exclusively by UNFICYP, the Secretary-General stated that neither side could exercise authority or jurisdiction beyond its own lines. Between the lines, the status quo, including innocent civilian activities and the exercise of property rights, was maintained, with UNFICYP ensuring that legitimate security requirements were met. Local agreements, he said, had been concluded with the Turkish forces to facilitate farming. However, in the area of Avlona village, west of Nicosia, serious incidents had occurred when UNFICYP sought to prevent Turkish Cypriots from taking over land between the lines that belonged to, and had been tilled by, Greek Cypriots. Efforts to resolve the problem were continuing.

The Secretary-General mentioned the continuing rapid decline of the Greek Cypriot population in the north. The agreed procedure for screening Greek Cypriot applicants for transfer to the south had not been implemented, and UNFICYP was usually unable to establish whether those Greek Cypriots wished freely to leave the north. The Turkish Cypriot side denied allegations of pressure to evict the Greek Cypriots from the north. The Secretary-General also reported that UNFICYP's freedom of movement in the northern part of Cyprus continued to be restricted and restrictions were also applied to the United Nations civilian police (UNCIVPOL) teams.

On another question, he said it was a matter of deep concern that, despite the continued efforts of his Special Representative and of the International Red Cross, there had been no progress in making arrangements to trace persons missing since the events of 1974, or in discovering their burial places.

In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General said he believed that the best hope for achieving a lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem as called for by the Security Council was through negotiations between the representatives of the two Cypriot communities. He appealed to the parties concerned to make a determined effort and show the necessary flexibility in order to make it possible to resume the negotiating process at an early date. He was convinced, he said, that the continued presence of UNFICYP was essential and he recommended to the Security Council that it extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further six months. In making that recommendation he said he had again to draw the attention of the Council to the increasingly critical financial situation of UNFICYP: its budget deficit had grown to nearly $45 million, as a consequence of which he had been unable to meet the reimbursement claims of the troop-contributing Governments. If remedial measures were not taken, he warned, UNFICYP might well find itself unable to continue to function for lack of funds.

In an addendum to his report, issued on 14 December, the Secretary-General reported to the Council that the parties concerned had signified their concurrence with the proposed extension of UNFICYP's mandate.

Consideration by Security Council (14 and 15 December 1976)

The Security Council considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus at meetings on 14 and 15 December. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also agreed to extend an invitation to Vedat A. Celik to participate.

The President drew the Council's attention to a draft resolution which he said had been arrived at during the course of consultations. The text was adopted by a vote of 13 in favour to 0 against, as resolution 401(1976). Benin and China did not participate in the vote.

By the preambular paragraphs of the resolution, the Council noted from the Secretary-General's report that the further presence of UNFICYP was essential not only to help maintain quiet in the island but also to facilitate the search for a peaceful settlement, that freedom of movement of UNFICYP and UNCIVPOL was still restricted in the north of the island, and that the best hope of achieving a just and lasting settlement lay in intercommunal negotiations. The Council expressed its concern at actions that increased tension between the communities, emphasized the need for the parties concerned to adhere to the agreements reached at all previous rounds of talks, noted the concurrence of those parties with the Secretary-General's recommendation that UNFICYP's mandate be extended for six months, and noted also the agreement of the Government of Cyprus thereto.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Council reaffirmed earlier resolutions and called once again for their urgent and effective implementation, urged the parties concerned to act with the utmost restraint to refrain from action likely to affect adversely the prospects of negotiations and to accelerate determined co-operative efforts to achieve the Council's objectives. The Council extended once more the stationing of UNFICYP for a further period ending 15 June 1977, appealed again to all parties to extend their fullest co-operation so that UNFICYP could perform its duties effectively, and requested the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, keep the Council informed of progress made and submit a report on the implementation of the resolution by 30 April 1977.

The Secretary-General said he wanted to assure the Council that he would continue his efforts to bring about a resumption of the negotiations between the representatives of the two communities at an early date. He said he continued to believe that the best hope of achieving a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem was through negotiations and he was convinced that, if the current impasse was prolonged, the basic issues would inevitably become more and more intractable. He stressed the urgent need to make progress in solving the financial difficulties of UNFICYP.

The representative of Cyprus said that consideration of the question of renewing UNFICYP's mandate could not take place in isolation from the general situation prevailing in Cyprus, which continued to be grim and potentially explosive. Since June, there had been a turn for the worse. A disturbing new element was the effort of Ankara to interfere with the mission of UNFICYP and attempt to change the status quo in the buffer areas between the military areas.

He said that Cyprus was ready to co-operate with any investigative committee of the Council to establish whether the accelerated exodus of the Greek Cypriots from the occupied area was owing to unbearable pressure and intimidation practised by the Turkish occupation forces and colonizers from Turkey, or whether the Greek Cypriots opted to leave their homes of their own free will, as Turkey maintained. He invited the Turkish representative to state that the occupation forces would co-operate with such a committee.

The representative of Cyprus went on to state that after five rounds of talks in Vienna and New York, the Turkish side had managed to evade giving any indication of its intentions on the all-important aspect of the Cyprus problem, namely, the territorial issue. He also said that if an investigatory body were designated for tracing missing persons or their burial places, Cyprus would pledge its full co-operation. He asked for Turkey's co-operation in such a specific, humanitarian endeavour.

Mr. Celik said that the Turkish Cypriot side was unable to accept the resolution adopted by the General Assembly on 12 November, first, because it had been denied participation in the debate on an equal footing with the Greek Cypriot community; second, because it regarded the resolution as being seriously outdated and therefore unrealistic; and third, because resolutions of the General Assembly should not attempt to influence or prejudice the deliberations of the Security Council.

He went on to say that there had been considerable progress on certain aspects of the Cyprus problem, although the Greek Cypriot side might have reason to conceal that progress. Substantial progress had been achieved in the refugee problem, on constitutional and territorial aspects and on the withdrawal of troops, although a complete withdrawal of Turkish forces was impossible before the security of the Turkish Cypriot community was effectively guaranteed.

As far as the Turkish Cypriot side was concerned, he said, the question of missing persons was a non-issue which was being exploited by the Greek Cypriot side for propaganda purposes. Another issue so exploited was the movement of Greek Cypriots from the north to the south. He stated that there was no forcible expulsion and Greek Cypriots had freedom of movement subject only to minimal security precautions.

Mr. Celik said that the Turkish Cypriot side was accused by the Greek Cypriot side of not having submitted concrete proposals for the solution of the Cyprus problem when it was they themselves who had failed to put forward tangible or even remotely realistic proposals. The Turkish Cypriot side was ready to resume negotiations at any time. Its proposals were perfectly precise and clear, and had been circulated.

The spokesman for Greece reviewed what he called the most distressing and alarming facts in the Secretary-General's report concerning restrictions on the freedom of movement of UNFICYP and other matters. He said that the Greek Government would continue as in the past to give its full support to the Secretary-General's mission of good offices. A just and lasting solution would be found only through serious and meaningful negotiations in conformity with the Charter and through implementation of the relevant resolutions. He emphasized that the negotiating process should not be allowed to degenerate into delaying tactics in order to perpetuate faits accomplis.

The Turkish spokesman observed that UNFICYP had been in operation for more than 12 years; notwithstanding the dedication of its officers and men, it had been unable to prevent the recurrence of fighting and violence, and had been powerless vis-à-vis the fait accompli of 15 July 1974 and its consequences. It was the intervention of Turkish forces that saved Cyprus from annexation by Greece, he maintained. Turkey, he said, whole-heartedly supported the call for negotiations made by the Turkish Cypriot representative and Turkey hoped that the negotiating process would be resumed in the nearest possible future.

With regard to the resolution adopted by the Council, he said that Turkey could not concur with any document which referred to the so-called Government of Cyprus. Greek Cypriot representatives had no right to speak on behalf of Cyprus and there was at present no government which represented Cyprus. Turkey, he said, supported the call for a resumption of talks and urged the Secretary-General to convene a meeting between the representatives of the two communities at the earliest possible date.

Most Council members agreed with the Secretary-General that UNFICYP's continued presence in the island was essential and praised the Force for its achievements. The representative of China said he had not participated in the vote on the resolution just adopted because of his Government's well-known position on the Force.

Sweden's representative said that UNFICYP's task was not easy. It had to try to keep the areas between the two cease-fire lines open for innocent civilian activities and it was therefore important that the parties concerned co-operate fully with the Force in keeping intact the military status quo. He went on to note that UNFICYP reimbursements had run years behind the actual payment schedules owing to a shortfall in voluntary contributions. This was of great concern to the troop-contributing countries, of which Sweden was one, as they were in fact financing the deficit. A solution of the problem of reimbursement was therefore a matter of vital importance.

Several speakers commented on the problem of financing UNFICYP. The United Kingdom's representative, for example, said it was easy enough to give the Secretary-General a mandate to sort things out, but if members gave him such a mandate they had a common obligation to give him the means to carry it out.

He went on to say that the nine member States of the European Communities (Belgium, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom) were concerned about the situation in Cyprus and believed the way out of the impasse was by resumption of the negotiating process. But, in the apparent absence of any willingness to negotiate and with the growing impasse to which the Secretary-General had referred, the question arose in the minds of some whether UNFICYP's presence had provided an excuse for rigidity and inflexibility rather than a framework for negotiation, he added. The view had been expressed that if the Force were withdrawn, the parties, having been left face to face, would have no alternative but to deal with each other and achieve a modus vivendi. The United Kingdom rejected that view and believed that UNFICYP was instrumental in maintaining peace in Cyprus. If the Force were withdrawn, the incidents which UNFICYP was able to control could instead result in serious bloodshed, he said, adding that the parties to the dispute should remember that the possibility of withdrawing the Force had been openly voiced, and before they tested the patience of the international community too far, the representatives of the two communities must embark upon a process of reconciliation if Cyprus was not to risk being once again a site of bloodshed.

The spokesman for the United States reaffirmed his Government's continuing strong moral and material support for UNFICYP. The United States, he said, urged all nations materially able to do so to demonstrate their concern for the preservation of peace in the eastern Mediterranean by lending their material support to UNFICYP.

The representative of France agreed that the Force's presence continued to be essential but said that it was not an end in itself; it was intended to create or maintain a situation that would permit a resumption of negotiations. France hoped that the parties would realize that the only real progress towards a lasting peace could come from negotiations without ulterior motives on the substance of the problem—negotiations that were not allowed to become bogged down in prior procedural questions.

The representative of the USSR said that the results of flagrant military interference in the internal affairs of Cyprus were still being felt and certain circles had been trying to turn the island into a stronghold of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) in the eastern Mediterranean. The internal affairs of Cyprus had to be decided by the Cypriots themselves, he declared. He reiterated his Government's view that an important condition for a lasting settlement was the demilitarization of the island.

He also said that in the existing circumstances the USSR proposal to consider the Cyprus problem at a representative international conference within the framework of the United Nations was especially timely, as was its proposal to send a Security Council mission to Cyprus to make a first-hand study as to whether United Nations decisions were being implemented there and, if not, why not.

The spokesman for Guyana said that if no progress was reached in the coming six-month period, he would urge the Council when it next considered the Cyprus question to reactivate the idea of sending a fact-finding mission of the Council to the island. He said it was disturbing that the Council, after so many years, was still discussing the renewal of the UNFICYP mandate. The Force had been transformed from an ad hoc creation to an almost permanent fixture, he said, aiding the maintenance of the status quo. In Guyana's view, the parties had to co-operate with UNFICYP in the fulfilment of its tasks, and Guyana also hoped that they would make positive contributions to the creation of a new climate favourable to the resumption of negotiations.

The representative of Benin said his Government felt that the problem of Cyprus was a reflection of attempts by the imperialist powers of NATO to gain control of the region. The existence of UNFICYP should make it possible to normalize the situation in the area, he said, but in fact there had been a dangerous deterioration in the situation because of the attempts of imperialism to force Cyprus to abandon its policy of non-alignment. In Benin's view, the automatic renewal of UNFICYP's mandate might be a chronic error to which the Organization was succumbing. His Government, he said, thus did not participate in the Council's decision to renew the mandate. Those who were truly responsible for the Cyprus crisis—the imperialist powers and members of NATO—had to accept full responsibility for all costs of operating the Force.

Security Council, meetings 1925-1927.

S/12093. Report of Secretary-General on United Nations operation in Cyprus (9 December 1975-5 June 1976).

S/12096. Draft resolution.

Resolution 391(1976), prepared following consultations among Council members, S/12096, adopted by Council on 15 June 1976, meeting 1927, by 13 votes to 0 (Benin and China did not participate in voting).

The Security Council,

Noting from the report of the Secretary-General of 5 June 1976 that in existing circumstances the presence of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus is essential not only to help maintain quiet in the island but also to facilitate the continued search for a peaceful settlement,

Noting from the report the conditions prevailing in the island, Noting also from the report that the freedom of movement of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus and its civil police is still restricted in the north of the island and that progress is being made in discussions regarding the stationing, deployment and functioning of the Force, and expressing the hope that those discussions will lead speedily to the elimination of all existing difficulties,

Noting further that, in paragraph 70 of his report, the Secretary-General has expressed the view that the best hope of achieving a just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem lies in negotiations between the representatives of the two communities and that the usefulness of those negotiations depends upon the willingness of all parties concerned to show the necessary flexibility, taking into account not only their own interests but also the legitimate aspirations and requirements of the opposing side,

Expressing its concern at actions which increase tension between the two communities and tend to affect adversely the efforts towards a just and lasting peace in Cyprus,

Emphasizing the need for the parties concerned to adhere to the agreements reached at all previous rounds of the talks held under the auspices of the Secretary-General and expressing the hope that future talks will be meaningful and productive,

Noting also the concurrence of the parties concerned with the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that, in view of the prevailing conditions in the island, it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1976,

1. Reaffirms the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964, as well as subsequent resolutions and decisions on the establishment and maintenance of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus and other aspects of the situation in Cyprus;

2. Reaffirms once again its resolution 365(1974) of 13 December 1974, by which it endorsed General Assembly resolution 3212(XXIX) adopted unanimously on 1 November 1974, and calls once again for the urgent and effective implementation of those resolutions as well as of its resolution 367(1975) of 12 March 1975;

3. Urges the parties concerned to act with the utmost restraint to refrain from any unilateral or other action likely to affect adversely the prospects of negotiations and to continue and accelerate determined co-operative efforts to achieve the objectives of the Security Council;

4. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force, established under Security Council resolution 186(1964), for a further period ending 15 December 1976, in the expectation that by then sufficient progress towards a final solution will make possible a withdrawal or substantial reduction of the Force;

5. Appeals again to all parties concerned to extend their fullest co-operation so as to enable the United Nations Peace-keeping Force to perform its duties effectively;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the mission of good offices entrusted to him by paragraph 6 of resolution 367(1975), to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 October 1976.

Humanitarian assistance: missing and displaced persons

At the request of the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continued throughout 1976 as Co-ordinator of United Nations humanitarian assistance for Cyprus in consultation with the authorities in Cyprus, the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, other United Nations agencies and programmes concerned and the International Committee of the Red Cross. The Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the High Commissioner's activities in his June and December 1976 reports on the United Nations operation in Cyprus (see section above).

During the year, the High Commissioner continued to provide humanitarian assistance, supported by the World Health Organization through procurement of medical supplies and equipment and the provision of consultant services. The World Food Programme assisted in overseas procurement of food and provision of counsel from local staff experts. The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus continued to deliver supplies of food to various areas of the island and to provide logistical assistance.

Major commitments of humanitarian assistance to the displaced and needy population of approximately 200,000 included temporary accommodation and shelter materials, food purchases, medical supplies and health care facilities, and supplies to meet supplementary needs such as handicraft materials, special medical facilities, youth and community facilities, infant care, cash grants to the needy and immediate provision of clothing and footwear.

The situation of displaced and needy persons in the island improved to some extent during 1976, but need for continued humanitarian assistance in Cyprus was still felt at the end of the year. Upon the request of the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, therefore, agreed to continue as Co-ordinator for a limited but unspecified period into 1977.

Humanitarian problems: missing and displaced persons

During 1976, the question of missing and displaced persons in Cyprus was discussed by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-second session held in February/March at Geneva, Switzerland.

During consideration of this item, the Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General prepared in accordance with a General Assembly request of 9 December 1975.<sup>10</sup> The report contained information on the tracing and accounting for missing persons as a result of the events in Cyprus, on the good offices by the Secretary-General to the parties concerned, and on United Nations humanitarian assistance to the population of Cyprus. In addition, annexes set forth information on action taken by all parties concerned towards implementation of an appeal by the Commission on Human Rights to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, to international instruments in the field of human rights and to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council. The appeal also called for the full restoration of human rights to the population of Cyprus and urgent measures for the return of all refugees to their homes in safety.<sup>11</sup>

Information on this question was also submitted to the Commission on Human Rights by Cyprus and Turkey.

On 27 February 1976, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution by which it renewed its call upon the parties concerned to undertake urgent measures to facilitate the voluntary return of all refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and to settle all other aspects of the refugee problem and urged all parties to refrain from unilateral actions in contravention of the relevant United Nations resolutions, including changes in the demographic structure of Cyprus. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts in respect of missing persons in Cyprus and called upon the parties concerned to co-operate with him in the fulfilment of his task. The Commission also requested him to report on the matter to its 1978 session and decided to consider the question of human rights in Cyprus at that time.

Several communications were addressed to the Secretary-General by the representatives of Cyprus and Turkey for circulation to the Economic and Social Council. By letters of 19 and 30 April 1976, the representative of Turkey transmitted letters from Nail Atalay, whom the Turkish representative identified as the representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, providing the Council with information on racial discrimination in Cyprus and stating his community's views on political, economic, social and religious discrimination. By a letter dated 7 May 1976, Mr. Atalay protested the efforts of the Greek Cypriot Administration to put forward its candidature for membership in the Human Rights Commission, acceptance of which, it said, could not be regarded as valid or binding on the Turkish Cypriot community.

By letters of 26 April and 6 May 1976, the representative of Cyprus set forth his views on racial discrimination and refuted allegations made by Turkey.

Communications on this subject were also addressed by Turkey and Cyprus to the Secretary-General with the request that they be circulated as General Assembly documents.

Questions relating to the organs and membership of the United Nations

Admission of new Members and related matters

Admissions in 1976

During 1976, the number of United Nations Member States rose to 147. Three more States—the People's Republic of Angola, the Independent State of Western Samoa and the Republic of Seychelles—were admitted to United Nations membership by the General Assembly on the Security Council's recommendation, as indicated in the following table.

| Applicant  | Date of recommendation by Council | Date of admission by Assembly |
|------------|-----------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| Seychelles | 16 August 1976                    | 21 September 1976             |

The Security Council resolution by which the Council recommended to the Assembly the admission of Seychelles was adopted unanimously. The Assembly's resolution, proposed by 51 States, by which the Assembly decided to admit Seychelles to membership, was adopted by acclamation. The Council's resolution and the Assembly's 46-power resolution concerning the admission of Samoa were adopted unanimously. (For texts of resolutions, sponsors and supporting documentation, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The application of Angola gave rise to considerable discussion in the Security Council, which considered the matter twice. The Council, as well as the Assembly, also dealt with the application of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam in 1976. Details concerning these applications, and Angola's subsequent admission to membership, are described below.

Consideration of applications for membership

Application of Angola

On 23 June 1976, owing to the negative vote of a permanent member (the United States), the Security Council failed to adopt a 6-power draft resolution by which it would have recommended to the General Assembly that the People's Republic of Angola be admitted to membership in the United Nations. The vote was 13 in favour to 1 against. China did not participate in the vote. The sponsors of the measure were Benin, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Romania, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The Council had considered the matter in response to a letter of 22 April 1976 addressed to the Secretary-General from the President of the People's Republic of Angola, by which Angola applied for United Nations membership and declared that it accepted all the obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations and solemnly undertook to fulfil them.

Under Article 4 of the Charter, membership in the Organization is open to all peace-loving States that accept the obligations contained in the Charter and, in the judgement of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out those obligations; admission is effected by a General Assembly decision upon the recommendation of the Security Council.<sup>1</sup>

The Council held a brief meeting on 22 June 1976 at which, in accordance with procedure, it referred the application of Angola for admission to its Committee on the Admission of New Members. The Committee submitted its report the following day.

The report of the Committee summarized the positions of the Council members. The United States had urged the Committee to defer action on Angola's application to a date not later than 35 days in advance of the Assembly's 1976 session, scheduled to open on 21 September. Such a procedure, the United States believed, would maximize the chances for positive action by the Council and would permit the Assembly to act at the beginning of its session.

France, Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom had supported the United States suggestion for a deferral. Each said it fully supported Angola's application and would vote for it should it come before the Council. None wished to see its admission delayed.

They noted, however, that deferment of the Committee's decision as suggested by the United States would not cause a delay in admission and would probably improve the chances of a favourable outcome.

Panama had supported Angola's application for admission, but said it would have no difficulty in agreeing to the United States request for postponement.

Benin, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Romania, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania had opposed the suggestion for a deferral.

At the Council's 23 June meeting, the following Member States were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Algeria, Bulgaria, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, India, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Mongolia, Portugal and Yugoslavia. At the request of Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania, a representative of Angola was invited to make a statement.

In the course of the debate, the United States said it felt obliged to vote against Angola's application at that time because Angola did not yet meet the requirements for membership set forth in Article 4 of the Charter. It said that the continuing presence and apparent influence of Cuban troops in Angola, massive in number in that context, was the basis for that view. There was no justification, in the view of the United States, for such a large and armed foreign presence in a truly independent African State.

The United States expressed regret that the Angolan Government had seen fit, in an apparent spirit of confrontation, to press its application before time and developments in Angola might have permitted resolution of remaining concerns. It was particularly regrettable since the application could not be acted upon by the General Assembly in any event until the opening of its regular annual session in September.

China stated that, although Angola had won its independence, its internal affairs were still being subjected to crude interference. The national unity of Angola and its independence and sovereignty were still being seriously encroached upon as a result of the policies of aggression and expansion frantically pushed by what China termed Soviet social-imperialism. China firmly opposed the continued armed intervention in Angola and was against providing the USSR with a pretext for prolonging its acts of aggression and interference.

The USSR said that certain forces described as intervention what was in fact support of a just struggle against imperialism and racism and in defence of freedom and independence. The USSR said it had given assistance to the Angolan people during their national liberation struggle, and currently was continuing to give moral, political, diplomatic and other forms of assistance and support. That was being done on a legitimate basis and was entirely in keeping with the anti-colonial decisions of the United Nations and of the Organization of African Unity (OAU). Assistance to Angola was granted at the request of the lawful Government of that country, against which imperialist aggression had been committed.

Several Members supporting Angola's application said that the presence of foreign troops was irrelevant and extraneous. Many United Nations Member States had foreign troops on their soil, they said, and the requirements for admission said nothing about foreign troops. These Members, which included Bulgaria, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania, observed that Angola was an independent and sovereign country and had the right to request assistance from any State.

Cuba and others noted in that connexion that Cuban troops were in Angola at the request of the Government of Angola and that such action was in accordance with the Charter. The representative of Cuba stated that the Cuban troops would be withdrawn as soon as Angola had the capability to defend itself.

Yugoslavia, in supporting the application of Angola for admission, emphasized that the United Nations and the international community had a duty to help Angola strengthen its national sovereignty and ensure its economic development in order to eliminate the legacy of political subjection and colonial exploitation, of the long war for national liberation, and of the aggression committed against it by South Africa in the first days of its independence. Those views were stated in similar terms by India, Romania, Sweden and others.

France, Japan, Panama and the United Kingdom expressed firm support for Angola's admission to membership and regretted that special efforts to avoid a situation of division in the Council had failed.

Portugal said that the admission of Angola would represent the last page of the record of decolonization of the African territories under Portuguese administration. Portugal felt it was a matter of great importance for Angola, as a sovereign, independent State, to take this step towards full participation in international affairs.

Following the Council's vote, Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania denounced the use of the veto to prevent the admission of Angola. The representative of Angola, also speaking after the vote, said that the matter of the Cuban forces, which were composed of civilians and some military personnel, was strictly an internal affair. The Cubans and other friends had come at the request of Angola and would leave the country only when their presence was no longer necessary. Angola was an independent and sovereign State, the representative said, and it would not tolerate the United States or any other country dictating its domestic and foreign policies.

In accordance with its rules of procedure, the Security Council submitted a special report to the General Assembly on its decision on the application of Angola for membership.

Later in the year, by a letter addressed to the President of the Security Council, dated 15 November 1976, Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania requested that the Security Council be convened urgently in order to give renewed consideration to Angola's application for membership. On 19 November, the President referred the application to the Council's Committee on the Admission of New Members.

The Council met again on 22 November, on which date it adopted, on the Committee's recommendation, resolution 397(1976), by which it recommended to the General Assembly that Angola be admitted to United Nations membership. The vote was 13 in favour to 0 against, with 1 abstention (the United States). China did not participate in the vote. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Cuba, Egypt, India, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Mozambique, Sri Lanka, Yugoslavia and Zambia were invited, at their request, to participate in the debate without the right to vote. A representative of Angola was also invited to make a statement.

Most of the statements made during the debate reflected the view that Angola had fulfilled all the requirements set out in Article 4 of the Charter and therefore was qualified for membership in the United Nations. Italy voiced an opinion shared by others when it said Angola's admission would be an asset to the Organization by enhancing the universality of its representation.

Mauritius, Sri Lanka and the USSR noted that Angola, a newly independent, sovereign country, had received recognition and support from two thirds of the countries of the world. Benin stressed that the Angolan authorities had proved their determination to build their country in total independence and within the framework of the policy of non-alignment.

A number of States, including the Libyan Arab Republic, Madagascar, Panama, Romania, Sweden, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia, shared the view that the admission of Angola would mean the end of one of the most decisive chapters in the history of the liberation of Africa from foreign domination and exploitation.

The United Kingdom said it supported the principle of universality of membership in the United Nations and for that reason supported the admission of Angola, and expected it would play a constructive role in the work of the Organization.

France, speaking in favour of Angola's admission, expressed the wish that Angola would be able to overcome the difficulties that had surrounded its accession to independence and said it had no doubt that in the future Angola would be able to affirm its international sovereignty, without foreign interference.

China stated that after nearly five months, there was no fundamental change in the situation in Angola. China therefore had again decided not to participate in the vote.

The United States said it still had serious doubts about the true independence of the current Angolan Government. It was hard to reconcile the presence of a massive contingent of Cuban troops, it said, with the claim that Angola enjoyed a truly independent status. The Angolan Government exercised only tenuous control over those parts of the country that still resisted domination by the régime in Luanda. The heavy dependence of that régime on Cuban forces cast doubt on the degree of popular support it could command in the country.

There was absolutely no justification, in the view of the United States, for such a large foreign armed presence in an African State. Nevertheless, the United States had followed a consistent policy of support for African solutions to African problems and respect for the role of OAU. That organization had formally recommended United Nations membership for Angola and its members had asked the United States to facilitate Angola's admission. Out of deference to African views, the United States said, it would not oppose the application.

Cuba said that the presence in Angola of Cuban military personnel was the result of a request made by the Government of Angola, the only authority competent to decide who might lend it that kind of assistance.

Speaking in exercise of its right of reply, the United States rejected Cuba's contention that Cuban military personnel were in Angola at the request of a legitimate government. The first Cuban combat troops, the United States said, left Cuba bound for Angola in early September 1975, more than two months before Angolan independence. The Cuban intervention took place at the same time that OAU was calling on all States to refrain from further involvement in Angola. Regarding the task of the Cuban troops, the United States asserted that their location and displacements made it obvious that their role was to protect the Luanda Government from internal opposition and not from external aggression.

Cuba, in reply, said it did not regard as accurate the information the United States claimed it possessed regarding the exact location of Cuban personnel in Angola.

The representative of Angola, speaking after the vote, said there had been deliberate attempts to misrepresent the friendship and assistance given to Angola by certain States. Angola was sovereign and was master of its destiny and its policies. The Angolan representative expressed gratitude to Cuba, the USSR and the other countries that participated directly in or contributed indirectly to the defence of Angola's national sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Angola, its representative said, would join the United Nations to fight the evils and injustices it struggled against within its own borders. It was fully prepared to shoulder the responsibilities of membership.

On 1 December 1976, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Security Council, decided to admit the People's Republic of Angola to membership in the United Nations. The Assembly acted by adopting resolution 31/44 by a vote of 116 to 0, with 1 abstention. Sponsoring the resolution were 73 Members. (For text of resolution, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Application of Viet Nam

By a letter dated 10 August 1976 addressed to the Secretary-General, the Prime Minister of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam submitted an application for admission to membership in the United Nations. The letter declared that Viet Nam accepted the obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations and that it solemnly undertook to carry out those obligations.

On 15 November 1976, the Security Council failed to adopt an 11-power draft resolution by which it would have recommended to the General Assembly that the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam be admitted to membership. The draft resolution failed owing to the negative vote of a permanent member (the United States). The vote was 14 in favour to 1 against. The measure was sponsored by Benin, China, France, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, Panama, Romania, Sweden, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The Council considered the question briefly on 10 September and later at meetings held on 12 and 15 November. Among the documents before it was a letter of 8 September 1976 from Sri Lanka, to which was annexed a communiqué issued by the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries, strongly supporting the application of Viet Nam for admission.

The following Member States were invited, at their request, to participate in the debate without the right to vote: Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mexico, Mongolia, Poland, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and Yugoslavia. The Permanent Observer of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam was invited to make a statement after the vote was taken.

Nearly all Members participating in the Council's debate spoke in support of the immediate admission of Viet Nam. Many, China and Romania among them, voiced profound regret concerning the opposition of the United States to Viet Nam's admission, while some, including Cuba and the Libyan Arab Republic, condemned it as a deliberate attempt to frustrate the exercise of Viet Nam's legitimate right to membership.

Most speakers held the view that Viet Nam had met all the requirements for admission set forth in Article 4 of the Charter, which states that membership is open to all peace-loving States that accept the obligations contained in the Charter and, in the judgement of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out those obligations.<sup>2</sup> India, among others, considered that Viet Nam had fulfilled the conditions for membership and, in the interests of the universality of the Organization and of the maintenance of peace and security, the United Nations was obliged to admit it.

The USSR said that the application of Viet Nam, which had diplomatic relations with almost 100 States, was a logical and legitimate step, long awaited by international public opinion. In its relations with other States, Viet Nam had taken a firm stand in favour of peace. Its admission to membership, the USSR said, would contribute to the further strengthening of peace not only in South-East Asia but in the entire Asian continent and in the world. China, Japan, Pakistan, Romania and Yugoslavia spoke in similar vein.

The United States, explaining its vote, said it opposed Viet Nam's admission not because it doubted that Viet Nam was able to carry out the obligations of the Charter but because it had serious doubts about the willingness of Viet Nam to do so. That lack of demonstrated will, the United States said, led it to conclude that Viet Nam did not meet the standards established by the Charter.

Viet Nam, the United States went on, had failed to manifest satisfactory humanitarian or practical concern regarding United States servicemen missing in action. It had failed, despite the information available to it, to account satisfactorily for United States citizens missing in action and to return the remains of those killed in the recent conflict in Indo-China, despite repeated efforts by the United States to persuade it to do so. The United States believed that Viet Nam was persisting in its attempts to play upon the anguish and uncertainty of the families of those men in order to obtain some economic and political advantages.

Charter obligations, the United States said, embraced not only the maintenance of international peace and security but also the observance of human rights. Should Viet Nam, by its actions, demonstrate its willingness to carry out fully the Charter obligations, the United States would reconsider its position.

Referring to the United States statement, Bulgaria, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Guyana, Mali, Panama and others stressed that the admission of a State to membership in the United Nations could not be conditional upon the degree of progress towards a resolution of bilateral problems. The normalization of relations between the two countries had no bearing at all on Viet Nam's application. The USSR said in that connexion that the artificial difficulties, old and new, raised to impede Viet Nam's admission were not understood by Members of the United Nations or by any people.

The Lao People's Democratic Republic expressed the view that the problem of the persons who disappeared during the war was tragic and urgent not only for the United States, which was responsible for it, but also for Viet Nam, which also had a long list of missing persons. Everyone felt the greatest compassion for the families of those missing in action, but that question was bilateral in nature and had nothing to do with Viet Nam's admission to the United Nations.

Several States, including France and Sweden, observed that it was not in the common interest of the Members of the United Nations to exclude any nation from joining the Organization; membership was of even more importance in cases where serious political differences and problems existed between States. France said it was by no means necessary that two States maintain diplomatic relations in order to meet at the United Nations in the quest for peace and co-operation.

The Permanent Observer of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam, speaking after the vote, said that Viet Nam categorically rejected the unfounded allegations made by the United States in a vain attempt to justify the erroneous and indefensible policies of its Government. Viet Nam, the representative said, had fulfilled all the requirements under Article 4 of the Charter, and no one could deny its legal status or its desire and ability to make an active contribution to the achievement of the Charter's purposes.

The problem of United States citizens missing during the war in Viet Nam, like the negotiations taking place in Paris between Viet Nam and the United States, was part of the bilateral relations between the two countries and had nothing to do with Charter Article 4, the representative continued. The Vietnamese Government had demonstrated its goodwill by transmitting lists of names and the remains of several United States soldiers killed in the war. Work was continuing in this effort. The United States, the representative said, must end its hostile policies towards the Vietnamese people and must prove by its actions that it had a sincere desire to settle the problems held over from the war.

At the conclusion of its debate, the Council approved the text of a special report to the General Assembly on its consideration of the application of Viet Nam.

On 26 November 1976, the Assembly considered that report and adopted a resolution sponsored by 81 Members. By the preambular part of the text, the Assembly inter alia reiterated its conviction that the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam was fully qualified for membership in the United Nations in accordance with Article 4 of the Charter of the United Nations and noted that in the general debate of the current Assembly session the admission of Viet Nam to membership had received the unequivocal and widespread support of the Members of the Organization.

The Assembly expressed deep regret and concern that, on 15 November 1976, one negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council prevented the adoption of the draft resolution supported by 14 Council members recommending the admission of Viet Nam to membership.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly considered that the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam should be admitted to membership in the United Nations and accordingly recommended that the Security Council reconsider the matter favourably in strict conformity with Article 4 of the Charter.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 31/21 by a roll-call vote of 124 in favour to 1 against, with 3 abstentions. (For text of resolution, list of sponsors and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly discussed this matter at two plenary meetings held on 26 November. In the course of the debate, the Permanent Observer of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam, who asked for and was given the opportunity to participate in the Assembly's discussion, said that the extensive support shown for the admission of Viet Nam constituted a categorical rejection of the fallacious arguments made by the United States. That country was trying to exploit the sensitive character of the problem of the missing United States citizens; its attitude was a serious affront to the Vietnamese people.

Viet Nam, the representative continued, had often shown its readiness to settle pending problems, which could only be solved on a bilateral and reciprocal basis. The long-term interests of the Vietnamese and American peoples would be served if the United States showed goodwill and adopted a serious attitude towards the settlement of problems in order to proceed to a normalization of relations.

Sri Lanka, speaking on behalf of the sponsors of the 81-power resolution, said it was unacceptable that a nation—albeit a permanent member of the Security Council—which had bilateral problems with another nation should be allowed to prevent that nation from taking its rightful place in the United Nations. If existing procedures permitted that to happen, then the time had come to consider whether those procedures should be reformed.

Bulgaria, Cuba, India, Poland and the USSR described the United States action as a challenge to the international community and its position as totally unjustifiable. Its use of the veto in this case could set an inadmissible precedent. The Security Council, they said, should be reconvened immediately so that positive action could be taken. China said the United States action in the Council was based on an absurd pretext. Views similar to these were voiced by Albania, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mauritius, Romania, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yugoslavia and others.

Singapore said that, as a matter of general policy, it made a favourable presumption with regard to all applicants because it favoured a United Nations whose membership was universal. It therefore supported the proposal before the Assembly.

France maintained that there could be no obstacle to the admission of a State whose sovereignty was uncontested and which maintained diplomatic relations with the majority of Member States of the Organization. To keep Viet Nam out of the United Nations was in itself a source of tension, France added.

The United States said that Viet Nam had shown itself unwilling to fulfil basic humanitarian obligations consistent with United Nations membership by its refusal to account for United States citizens missing in action during the recent conflict in South-East Asia. Once an accounting was rendered, there would be no significant obstacle to the normalization of relations between the two countries.

The United States opposed the 81-power resolution not because it objected in principle to the issue of Viet Nam's membership being discussed in the Assembly but because it objected to the direct criticism of its vote in the Security Council. The United States had no objection to a further meeting of the Council to consider the application of Viet Nam. It had no new information, however, that would lead it to change its views on the matter.

The General Assembly,

Having examined the special report of the Security Council to the General Assembly,

Taking note of the letter of 18 November 1976 from the Permanent Observer of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam to the United Nations addressed to the President of the General Assembly,

Convinced of the ability and willingness of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam to carry out the obligations of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reiterating its conviction that the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam is fully qualified for membership in the United Nations in accordance with Article 4 of the Charter,

Recalling that resolution 3366(XXX) of 19 September 1975, in which the General Assembly requested the Security Council to reconsider immediately and favourably the application of Viet Nam, was adopted by 123 votes in favour and none against,

Noting that in the general debate of the current session of the General Assembly the admission of Viet Nam to membership in the United Nations received the unequivocal and widespread support of the Members of the Organization,

Expressing deep regret and concern that, on 15 November 1976, one negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council prevented the adoption of the draft resolution supported by fourteen members of the Council recommending the admission of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam to membership in the United Nations,

1. Considers that the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam should be admitted to membership in the United Nations;

2. Accordingly recommends that the Security Council should reconsider the matter favourably in strict conformity with Article 4 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Appointment of the Secretary-General

After a closed meeting on 7 December 1976 on the question of its recommendation for the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the Security Council unanimously adopted a resolution by which it recommended to the General Assembly that Kurt Waldheim be appointed Secretary-General for a second five-year term of office from 1 January 1977 to 31 December 1981.

On 8 December, the General Assembly adopted by acclamation a resolution (31/60) appointing Mr. Waldheim as Secretary-General for a second term of office from 1 January 1977 to 31 December 1981. The text of the resolution was proposed by Romania.

Appoints Mr. Kurt Waldheim Secretary-General of the United Nations for a second term of office beginning on 1 January 1977 and ending on 31 December 1981.

Salary and retirement allowance of the Secretary-General

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly made certain changes in the salary and the retirement allowance of the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

The base salary of the Secretary-General had remained unchanged since 1 January 1974 at $77,600 gross per annum. The Assembly decided to increase the Secretary-General's salary to $110,650 gross per annum as from 1 January 1977. In accordance with the provisions of an Assembly resolution of 29 November 1971,<sup>3</sup> which inter alia set the Secretary-General's retirement allowance at one half of his gross annual salary, his retirement allowance increased to $55,325. The Assembly also decided to adjust proportionately, as from 1 January 1977, pensions in payment to former Secretaries-General or their surviving spouses whenever a decision was taken affecting the retirement allowance for the Secretary-General.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting section IX of resolution 31/208, without a vote, on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which had approved the text without a vote on 21 December 1976. The text was based on an oral proposal by the Fifth Committee Chairman, reflecting the recommendations of the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Chapter XV

Other political and security questions*Complaint of aggression by Israel against Uganda*Communications (4-12 July 1976)

On 4 July 1970, by a letter addressed to the Secretary-General, the representative of Israel submitted excerpts from a statement made that day by the Prime Minister of Israel in the Knesset (Parliament) of Israel with regard to the operation conducted by the Israel Defence Forces to rescue hostages hijacked by Palestinian terrorists on 27 June, and held in captivity in Uganda.

In the statement, the Prime Minister said that, in what he termed a bold and imaginative operation, the Israel Defence Forces had carried out the Government's decision to rescue and liberate the passengers of an Air France aeroplane held prisoner and in danger of their lives in Uganda. The aeroplane had left Israel for France on 27 June and had been hijacked after a stopover in Athens, Greece. The hijackers forced the French pilots to land first at Benghazi, Libyan Arab Republic, and then at Entebbe, Uganda. In the course of the rescue operation, he said, three of the Israeli passengers of the aeroplane were killed and one officer fell in action.

The Prime Minister went on to say that the decision to undertake the rescue operation had been taken by the Government of Israel, on its sole responsibility. No other Government had been consulted in advance. As the hijacked aircraft belonged to the French national airline, it was natural, he said, to regard the French Government as bearing the immediate and principal responsibility to do everything demanded for the release of all the passengers, and Israel immediately contacted the French Government, which accepted this responsibility. In addition, he said, Israel approached other Governments and institutions to do their utmost to ensure that no harm befell the hijacked passengers and to expedite their release. The terrorists transmitted their demands to the Governments of Israel, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Kenya and Switzerland, but it soon became clear that the attack against the Israeli and Jewish passengers was the main objective of the operation. The terrorists' demands were accompanied by the threat that the passengers would be killed if the Governments did not carry out their demand that murderers, terrorists and accessories to terrorism who had been apprehended and imprisoned for their crimes should be freed.

The Prime Minister charged that all indications were that the President of Uganda had co-operated with the terrorists, under a cloak of deception and false pretences. He described the rescue operation as an achievement of great importance in the struggle against terrorism.

By a letter dated 5 July, the representative of Uganda transmitted the text of a message dated 4 July from the President of the Republic of Uganda drawing attention to the very serious incident which had occurred at Entebbe International Airport on the night of 3/4 July. The President stated that at 2120 GMT three Zionist Israel transport planes had landed by surprise and without any authority from the Ugandan Government and had approached the old airport building, where the hostages and the crew of the French airbus were being held by Palestinian commandos. The Israeli invaders had attacked the hijackers, killing seven of them and some of the hostages, as well as a number of Ugandan soldiers, and injuring many others. The Israeli invaders also blasted the old airport building, and destroyed a number of Ugandan aircraft, which were parked nearby, as well as other equipment.

The President charged that the Israeli invasion had been well-planned and rehearsed, with the full co-operation of some other countries, including Kenya and several Western countries. The well-planned international collaboration had resulted in a plot to violate the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Uganda and had interrupted successful negotiations he had undertaken personally for the release of the hostages. It was the intention of the Government of Uganda to claim compensation arising from the aggression and, meanwhile, Uganda requested that Israel be condemned in the strongest possible terms for its aggression.

By a letter dated 6 July 1976, the representative of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) transmitted the text of a telegram from the Prime Minister of Mauritius, current Chairman of OAU, stating that on 4 July the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, meeting in Mauritius, had received information concerning the invasion of Uganda carried out early that day by Israeli commandos, and considered that that unprecedented aggression constituted a danger not only to Uganda and Africa but to international peace and security. The OAU Heads of State and Government requested that the Security Council meet urgently to consider this wanton act of aggression against a Member State of the United Nations.

In a letter dated 6 July, the representative of Mauritania, on behalf of the group of African Member States at the United Nations, requested the President of the Security Council to convene a meeting of the Council as a matter of urgency to consider the contents of the telegram of 6 July from the Chairman of OAU.

In a letter dated 7 July, the representative of Kenya replied to the charges contained in Uganda's letter of 5 July, denying that Kenya had been or ever would be used as a base for aggression against any country, least of all Uganda. The Israeli aircraft had been allowed to land at Nairobi airport after the Israeli raid only in response to a last-minute request for medical facilities with respect to the injured persons, purely on humanitarian grounds and in accordance with international law. Kenya could not, therefore, be held responsible in any manner or form for collaborating with those forces hostile to Africa.

By a note dated 8 July, the Permanent Mission of Algeria transmitted a message from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Algeria denouncing the Israeli raid against Uganda as a violation of Uganda's territorial integrity and an act of aggression against its sovereignty. The act constituted a dangerous precedent in the conduct of international relations, the Minister said, opening the way to all kinds of adventures, and the United Nations and the Security Council in particular should condemn it.

By a letter dated 9 July, the representative of the United States transmitted the full text of the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft (Hijacking), signed at The Hague, Netherlands, on 16 December 1970, together with a list of States that had ratified, acceded to or succeeded to it. The letter explained that the Convention had been registered with the United Nations on 8 March 1973, but as it had not to date been published the United States considered that the text should be readily available to Security Council members and other interested representatives.

In a letter dated 9 July, the representative of Mexico set forth the position of his Government with regard to the question before the Council: Mexico reiterated its condemnation of all terrorist acts, particularly when the lives of innocent persons were endangered, as had been the case in the hijacking of 27 June. Nevertheless, Mexico also rejected the use of armed force by any State as a means of trying to solve conflicts, because such acts were a flagrant violation both of the Charter of the United Nations and of universally accepted principles of international law.

The representative of Somalia, by a letter dated 8 July, transmitted the text of a telegram from the President of Somalia to the President of Uganda, strongly condemning the Israeli action against Uganda as an arrogant insult to the dignity of Africa and as a violation of all norms of international behaviour.

In a letter dated 12 July, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Kenya said that a very serious situation had arisen in the wake of the utterly false and malicious allegations by Ugandan authorities charging Kenya with collaboration in the recent Israeli raid at Entebbe airport. He charged that, since that incident, Ugandan military authorities had engaged in a systematic and indiscriminate massacre of Kenyan citizens in Uganda. The Government of Kenya wished to lodge the strongest possible protest at the wanton disregard by Uganda of its international responsibility to protect the lives and property of foreign nationals lawfully resident in its territory. The letter also charged that Uganda had built up its military forces along the border with Kenya, thus increasing tension and the danger of avoidable incidents in the area.

Consideration by Security Council (9-14 July 1976)

The Security Council considered the matter at five meetings held between 9 and 14 July 1976. The representatives of Cuba, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guinea, India, Israel, Kenya, Mauritania, Mauritius, Qatar, Somalia, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon and Yugoslavia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Secretary-General noted that he had issued a statement on 8 July, immediately after his return from Africa, in which he had given a detailed account of the role he had played in efforts to secure the release of the hostages at Entebbe. The case before the Council raised a number of complex issues because in this instance, he said, the response of one State to the results of an act of hijacking involved an action affecting another sovereign State. He observed that the world community was currently required to deal with unprecedented problems arising from acts of international terrorism, which he had consistently condemned and which raised many issues of a humanitarian, moral, legal and political character for which, currently, no commonly agreed rules or solutions existed. He hoped that the Council would find a way to point the world community in a constructive direction so that it might be spared a repetition of the human tragedies of the past and the type of conflict between States which was currently before the Council.

The Foreign Minister of Uganda gave a detailed account of the landing at Entebbe on 28 June of the hijacked aircraft and the subsequent actions of Ugandan President Idi Amin Dada in providing security arrangements and his efforts to obtain the release of the hostages. On 30 June, following a report by a medical team and President Amin's persistent appeals, the hijackers agreed to release 47 hostages, including the old, the sick and some children. It was on the same day that for the first time the hijackers issued their demand for the release of 53 persons imprisoned in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Kenya, and Switzerland. On 1 July—the first deadline set by the hijackers—President Amin was not only able to persuade the hijackers to extend the deadline but also continued to plead for the release of the remaining hostages. The response received from the hijackers was the release of 100 hostages belonging to nations other than Israel or having dual nationalities, and the extension of the deadline to 1100 hours GMT on 4 July so that the hijackers could secure their demands. On 2 July, the Foreign Minister said, President Amin had had to go to Mauritius for the opening of the thirteenth session of the Assembly of Heads of States and Government of OAU; he had returned on 3 July and re-established contact with all concerned, but had hardly settled down when Israel's invading force landed at Entebbe early on 4 July.

The Foreign Minister went on to say that Uganda had never condoned and would never condone international piracy and it was therefore not true, as Israel had alleged, that Uganda had collaborated with the hijackers. The Ugandan Government became involved in the affair accidentally and purely on humanitarian considerations. It had given all the help and hospitality it was capable of giving to all the hostages. The response by Zionist Israel to that humanitarian gesture had been to invade Uganda, kill Ugandans who were trying to protect the hostages and inflict great damage on Ugandan property. Uganda, he said, called upon the Council unreservedly to condemn in the strongest possible terms Israel's barbaric, unprovoked and unwarranted aggression, and it demanded full compensation from Israel for the damage to life and property caused during the invasion.

The representative of Israel said he wanted to make it clear that he was not present as the accused party but as an accuser of terrorist organizations and the countries that collaborated with them and supported them, whether by commission or omission. Israel's action at Entebbe, he said, had given rise to a world-wide wave of approval.

He went on to say that when the airbus landed at Entebbe airport on 28 June, in accordance with a previously prepared plan, the hijackers had been met by a reinforcement of heavily armed terrorists who were awaiting them at the terminal. President Amin arrived at the airport shortly before the hijacked aeroplane landed; when it did, he embraced the hijackers in a gesture of welcome and a promise of support and assistance. Ugandan soldiers were then positioned with their guns trained not on the hijackers but on the innocent civilians—men, women and children.

During the next days, he said, it gradually became apparent that President Amin was in fact co-operating with the terrorists under a cloak of deception and false pretence. The 100 hostages that were released on 1 July described, on their arrival in Paris, how Ugandan soldiers, under direct orders of President Amin, supervised the separation of Jewish passengers from non-Jewish passengers. Israel's apprehension was heightened by a knowledge of President Amin's attitude towards the Jewish people.

As time passed, the representative continued, the hijackers raised their demands. They announced that Israel would be held responsible for all the terrorists whose release they were demanding, including those terrorists not held in Israel, and they refused to allow the exchange to be made in France or on neutral territory outside Uganda. Israel was left with no alternative, he said, and, on the night of 3/4 July, the Israel Defence Forces rescued the hostages and escorted them to safety. He emphasized that Israel accepted full and sole responsibility for the action: no other Government was at any stage party to the planning or execution of the operation.

The weight of the evidence, the Israeli representative declared, revealed prior knowledge and active connivance on the part of the Government of Uganda in the whole episode. Uganda had violated a basic tenet of international law in failing to protect foreign nationals on its territory, and had violated the 1970 Hague Convention on the Suppression or Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, which had been ratified by both Israel and Uganda. Israel called on the Council to declare war on international terror, to outlaw it and eradicate it wherever it might be.

The representative of Kenya said that the aggression committed against Uganda by Israeli commandos came as a complete surprise to his country, contrary to some baseless accusations that Kenya had had prior knowledge of it and had collaborated with the Israelis. Kenya's first contact with the Israeli aeroplanes was when they requested permission to land on an emergency basis as they were carrying sick and injured people. Kenya, he said, had been duty-bound to allow the aeroplanes to land on purely humanitarian grounds and in accordance with international law.

The spokesman for France said the hijacking started on 27 June over Corfu (Greece) and that the French authorities, when informed of it, alerted some of their embassies, including the one in Kampala, Uganda, asking them to take steps for the aeroplane to be given permission to land, since it was soon going to run out of fuel. The French Ambassador in Kampala approached the Ugandan authorities on the matter, and permission to land was granted immediately. The representative of France then summarized the various stages of negotiations leading up to the Israeli military operation, and said it was clear that the Council was faced by a complex set of circumstances in which the events and the responsibilities were inextricably interwoven. He added that it could not be denied that the tragic affair had been marked by violent and illegal acts. The initial action—the hijacking of a civilian aircraft and the taking of innocent hostages—was in particular an intolerable violation of international morality and of jus gentium which could not be justified by any cause and against which the international community had to adopt effective measures and resolve to implement them.

The representative of Qatar, who spoke on behalf of the Arab group of Member States, said the Council was concerned not with the hijacking but with the fact that a Member State had violated the territorial integrity of another Member State by flagrantly landing its troops on that State's territory and menacing its population and security forces. While the Israeli murderers were preparing for their aggression, the Israeli Government was bluffing the rest of the world and declaring its readiness to negotiate, all with the intention of assuring success in its surprise attack on this unsuspecting, peaceful country in the heart of Africa. Equally disturbing, he said, was that this illegal act of state terrorism, endangering world peace and security, had been hailed by some members of the world community despite its flagrant violation of international law and the United Nations Charter.

The implication, he went on to say, was that stronger countries could at any time land troops in smaller countries without a declaration of war and commit unpunished aggressions. The Arab States, he said, called upon the Security Council to condemn Israel in the strongest possible terms for its aggression against the Republic of Uganda and show its disapproval of those Governments whose statements might be misunderstood as encouragement of this act of piracy. The Council should also consider sanctions against this long-time violator of the United Nations Charter and of international law, including the suspension of its membership until it pledged to respect all provisions of the Charter and the resolutions of the various United Nations bodies.

A number of speakers—Benin, China, Cuba, Guinea, Mauritius, Romania, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, and others—made the point that it was inadmissible to react to terrorist acts of individuals or groups, which had been condemned by the international community, by another terrorist attack. Israel's action, they said, was a premeditated and naked act of aggression committed against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Uganda; they called on the Council to condemn the action in the most vigorous manner and compel Israel to pay compensation for the damage inflicted on Uganda. It was further pointed out that Israel had prepared and launched a military attack on Entebbe airport while negotiations for the release of the hostages were yielding positive results. Continuation of those negotiations, they felt, could conceivably have avoided the destruction of Entebbe and the loss of lives.

The spokesman for Guyana said that in justification of Israel's action against Uganda it was being argued that the principle of sovereignty was subordinate to the principle of human freedom and that Israel had the right to violate the sovereignty of other States in order to secure the freedom of its own citizens. That, he said, was nothing but a modern-day version of gunboat diplomacy; acceptance of such a principle would send the international community down a slippery path to a situation in which might and power reigned supreme.

The Chinese representative said that China had always disapproved of such adventurist acts of terrorism as assassination, kidnapping and the hijacking of aircraft. However, they could in no way be used as a pretext for Israel to commit armed aggression against a sovereign State. Over a long period, he went on, the Israeli Zionists had subjected the Palestinian and other Arab peoples to frenzied aggression and brutal massacre. Whatever excuses they might find to justify and whitewash their criminal acts of aggression were completely untenable and of no avail. China, he said, held that the Security Council should adopt a resolution in support of the just demand of the African countries and the OAU summit conference, condemning Israeli Zionism for its aggressive atrocities against Uganda and enjoining the Israeli authorities to compensate Uganda for all its losses and to guarantee against the recurrence of similar incidents.

Other speakers, including the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, strongly condemned the act of air piracy and the subsequent holding of over 250 innocent passengers and crew as hostages for several days at Entebbe airport. They deeply deplored the loss of human life which resulted from the action. At the same time, they expressed satisfaction that the lives of so many innocent hostages had been saved as the result of the Israeli operation. They stressed the need for the international community, and the United Nations in particular, to create effective instruments to combat terrorism and in particular the taking of hostages.

The representative of the United Kingdom said it would seem incredible if the Council were to address itself to what happened at Entebbe without at the same time considering what should be done about hijacking. What was needed now, he said, was first to make the existing international action against hijacking, which had already been taken, as effective as possible and to ensure the maximum compliance with it by all members of the international community. Second, the Council should consider whether there was any further action which the international community, and specifically the United Nations, could take to supplement those measures so as to prevent further acts of hijacking and to punish those responsible. The representatives of the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Sweden expressed similar views.

The representative of the United States said that Israel's action in rescuing the hostages necessarily involved a temporary breach of the territorial integrity of Uganda. Normally, such a breach would be impermissible under the Charter; however, there was a well-established right to use limited force for the protection of one's own nationals from an imminent threat of injury or death in a situation where the State in whose territory they were located was either unwilling or unable to protect them. The right, flowing from the right of self-defence, was limited to such use of force as was necessary and appropriate to protect threatened nationals from injury. The requirements of that right to protect nationals were, he said, clearly met in the Entebbe case.

Two draft resolutions were submitted to the Council, the first of which was sponsored by the United Kingdom and the United States.

By the preambular paragraphs of this two-power text, the Council would among other things recall its decision on hijacking adopted by consensus on 20 June 1972,<sup>1</sup> the 1970 Hague Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, and the Standards and Practices Governing Airport Security and Aircraft Safety recommended by the International Civil Aviation Organization. It would also remind all States signatory to the Hague and Montreal Conventions of their obligations flowing from their accession to these agreements.

By the operative paragraphs, the Council would:

(1) condemn hijacking and all other acts which threatened the lives of passengers and crews and the safety of international civil aviation and call upon all States to take every necessary measure to prevent and punish all such terrorist acts;

(2) deplore the tragic loss of human life which resulted from the hijacking of the French aircraft;

(3) reaffirm the need to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law; and

(4) enjoin the international community to give the highest priority to the consideration of further means of assuring the safety and reliability of international civil aviation.

The second draft resolution was put forward by Benin, the Libyan Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania. By the preamble to this text, the Council, bearing in mind that all States Members of the United Nations had to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations Charter, would, among other things, express its concern at the premeditated military raid committed by Israel against Uganda in violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, and its grief at the tragic loss of human life caused by the Israeli invasion of Ugandan territory. Expressing grave concern at the damage and destruction done by the Israeli invading forces in Uganda, the Council would, by the operative paragraphs of the text:

(1) condemn Israel's flagrant violation of Uganda's sovereignty and territorial integrity;

(2) demand that the Government of Israel meet the just claims of the Government of Uganda for full compensation for the damage and destruction inflicted on Uganda; and

(3) request the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the resolution.

Speaking as the representative of Italy, the President stated that the Council had a unique opportunity: firmly to uphold the principle of unconditional respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, and at the same time to propose action against international terrorism, the follow-up of which should be undertaken within the competent organs of the United Nations.

As the Council was completing its discussion, and before it proceeded to the vote, the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania said that, in view of the confrontations which had been exhibited in the Council and in view of the fact that there seemed to be a determination to ignore completely, or at least to gloss over, Africa's legitimate complaint, the sponsors of the three-power draft resolution had agreed not to press for a vote.

The representatives of Benin, Guyana, Pakistan, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania declared that the two-power draft resolution dealt with a subject-matter—the problem of hijacking—which was not on the agenda of the Security Council. They would therefore not participate in the vote on that draft.

On 14 July, the Council voted on the draft resolution sponsored by the United States and the United Kingdom. It received 6 votes in favour (France, Italy, Japan, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United States) to 0 against, with 2 abstentions (Panama, Romania) and was not adopted, having failed to obtain the required majority of votes. Seven members (Benin, China, Guyana, the Libyan Arab Republic, Pakistan, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania) did not participate in the vote.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of Japan said that, although Japan had supported the two-power draft resolution, it wished to state that the Israeli military action, prima facie, constituted a violation of the sovereignty of Uganda which Japan very much deplored. The draft would have been much better if it had taken care of that point.

Complaint by Greece against Turkey

Communications (August 1976)

During August 1976, Greece addressed several communications to the United Nations Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, alleging violations by Turkey of Greek sovereign rights on its continental shelf in the Aegean Sea.

The letters were dated 10, 11 and 21 August; by the first, Greece asked for an urgent meeting of the Security Council. Greece charged that Turkey had been conducting seismological explorations on the Aegean continental shelf, which Greece considered its own. Greece added that it had offered to submit the question of delineating the Aegean continental shelf to the International Court of Justice, but that Turkey had declined to co-operate. Discussions between the two countries on the question of delineation of the continental shelf had proceeded until the recent dispatch by Turkey of a vessel for seismological research in the Aegean Sea. In view of this situation, the Greek Government had decided to address a note of protest to the Government of Turkey, to appeal to the Security Council to avert the threat of disturbing the peace, and to appeal unilaterally to the International Court of Justice in order to obtain a clarification of the delineation of the Aegean continental shelf.

On 11, 13 and 18 August 1976, Turkey addressed several letters to the Secretary-General in reply to the Greek communications. In them, Turkey rejected as unfounded the allegations made by Greece and protested the harassment and intimidation of the Turkish civilian research vessel by Greek vessels and aircraft.

Such provocations were groundless, according to Turkey, and the Greek claim of violation of Greek sovereign rights was unfounded since the delimitation of the Aegean continental shelf between Turkey and Greece had not been effected. Turkey pointed to the peculiar geographic configuration of the Anatolian Peninsula, closely encircled by a number of islands; this configuration necessitated the reconciliation of the sovereignty over those islands with the security imperatives of the Peninsula. Turkey also drew attention to what it called the flagrant violation by Greece of its treaty obligations in the Aegean, and referred to the 1923

Treaty of Peace signed at Lausanne and the 1947 Treaty of Peace with Italy signed at Paris, which stipulated the demilitarization of the eastern Aegean islands. Turkey asserted that Greece, in complete disregard of the treaties, had established military positions on those islands.

Consideration by Security Council (August 1976)

On 12, 13 and 25 August 1976, the Security Council met to consider Greece's complaint and invited the representatives of Greece and Turkey, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

In the debate, the representative of Greece said that in November 1973, Turkey had published a decision in the official Turkish Gazette, granting permits to the Turkish Petroleum Company to explore and exploit on the continental shelf of the Aegean, including the continental shelf of seven Greek islands. Despite a protest note addressed to the Turkish Government and the offer by Greece to negotiate, Turkey, in June 1974, dispatched a hydrographic vessel under the escort of a fleet of 32 warships and under cover of the Turkish Air Force to carry out magnetometric exploration of the continental shelf. In July 1974, the Turkish Government granted new exploration permits en bloc to the Turkish Petroleum Company, again to the west of other Greek islands and over their continental shelf. Greece had protested those actions.

While consultations were proceeding in order to resolve the dispute, Turkey on 6 August 1976 dispatched a research ship into the Aegean Sea to carry out seismic explorations on those parts of the continental shelf that Greece considered its own.

Greece stated that it was not asking the Security Council to decide on its legal dispute with Turkey since the International Court of Justice had already been seized of that matter, but it requested the Council to call upon Turkey to stop activities that were endangering peace and security in the eastern Mediterranean.

The blame for the threat to peace in the Aegean, according to the representative of Turkey, lay entirely with Greece. He said that Greece started some years ago with the militarization and arming of the Greek islands facing Turkey in the Aegean—some of them only a few miles from the Turkish shores—in flagrant violation of the international treaties pertaining to the status of those islands. Turkey had repeatedly protested those actions.

Greece seemed to consider its allegations and claims over the continental shelf of the Aegean as already acquired and its sovereign rights as established. Yet, by continuing bilateral negotiations on the dispute, Greece implicitly accepted the fact that the continental shelf of the Aegean had not been delimited. Greece also continued negotiations while fully informed about the Turkish research programme in the Aegean, and it was without any legal right that Greece had resorted to military harassment of a Turkish civilian ship outside Greek territorial waters.

Turkey, as one of the two coastal States of the Aegean, had equal rights to the sea's continental shelf. In that connexion, the representative of Turkey noted that while the Turkish ship was in the Aegean, a Greek vessel was conducting similar activities in the area.

Since Greece possessed no delimited sovereign rights in the Aegean beyond its own territorial waters, the representative of Turkey said, it was impossible to imagine a violation of what was no more than a unilateral claim.

Turkey did not exclude recourse to the International Court of Justice to settle certain relevant aspects of the problem, but maintained that the dispute should first be negotiated between the two countries. Then, those aspects of the problem that could not be resolved through negotiations could be referred to the International Court or to any other legal or judicial instance. Such a referral, however, could only be made jointly.

On 25 August, the President of the Council drew attention to a draft resolution sponsored by France, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States, by which the Council would: (1) appeal to Greece and Turkey to exercise the utmost restraint in the current situation; (2) urge them to do everything in their power to reduce tension so that the negotiating process might be facilitated; (3) call on those Governments to resume direct negotiations; (4) invite them to continue to take into account the contribution that appropriate judicial means, in particular the International Court of Justice, were qualified to make to the settlement of any remaining legal differences.

All Council members voiced support for the draft resolution and indicated their desire that international disputes be settled peacefully, through direct negotiations, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

Pakistan, however, expressed a reservation regarding mention of the International Court. Since Greece had proceeded unilaterally to make reference to the International Court, Pakistan said, the Council should have been unambiguous in urging bilateral negotiations. Recourse to the International Court should be taken jointly and only after negotiations.

The Libyan Arab Republic said it would abstain if the draft resolution were put to a vote, as it felt that the text did not fully meet with the satisfaction of the interested parties.

The Libyan Arab Republic and Pakistan having asked for a consensus decision, the Security Council adopted the draft resolution by consensus as resolution 395(1976) on 25 August 1976.

After the adoption of the resolution, Turkey said there had been no action on its part that necessitated the adoption of a resolution by the Council. Turkey had violated no international treaties nor infringed the rights of other countries. It did not recognize the jurisdiction of the International Court as binding. Turkey was willing to negotiate a peaceful solution to all problems between the two countries, but the resumption of negotiations implied that no unilateral action should be undertaken that would be in contradiction with the concept of negotiation.

Greece thanked the Council for having adopted a resolution which it hoped would help the resumption of a dialogue between the interested parties and lead to a solution by peaceful means.

The Security Council,
 Taking note of the letter of the Permanent Representative of Greece dated 10 August 1976, Having heard and noted the various points made in the statements by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Greece and Turkey, Expressing its concern over the present tensions between Greece and Turkey in relation to the Aegean Sea,

Bearing in mind the principles of the Charter of the United Nations concerning the peaceful settlement of disputes, as well as the various provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter concerning procedures and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes,

Noting the importance of the resumption and continuance of direct negotiations between Greece and Turkey to resolve their differences,

Conscious of the need for the parties both to respect each other's international rights and obligations and to avoid any incident which might lead to the aggravation of the situation and which, consequently, might compromise their efforts towards a peaceful solution,

1. Appeals to the Governments of Greece and Turkey to exercise the utmost restraint in the present situation;

2. Urges the Governments of Greece and Turkey to do everything in their power to reduce the present tensions in the area so that the negotiating process may be facilitated;

Communications concerning the question of Icelandic Fisheries Zone

By a series of letters addressed to the President of the Security Council, Iceland and the United Kingdom continued their dispute regarding fishing rights in the waters around Iceland.

By letters dated 23 and 29 January 1976, the representative of Iceland presented additional evidence concerning the incident of 11 December 1975, which was considered by the Security Council on 16 December 1975.<sup>2</sup> The representative of Iceland stated that a maritime inquiry conducted in Iceland regarding the incident—in which two British tugboats one mile off the Icelandic coast were said to have repeatedly rammed an Icelandic Coast Guard vessel that had approached in order to find out the reason for the presence of the British vessels—seemed to give ever stronger reason to conclude that the British vessels entered the internationally recognized territorial waters of Iceland with the direct intent of creating an incident, possibly with the objective of sinking an Icelandic Coast Guard vessel. It was also clear from the inquiry, the representative of Iceland said, that many of the remarks of the representative of the United Kingdom before the Security Council were either unfounded allegations or purely fictitious. The representative of Iceland also presented evidence to refute the statement by the United Kingdom representative that Iceland had seriously overfished the herring stock around its shores.

More charges against the United Kingdom were raised by letters of 1 April and 11 May 1976. The representative of Iceland stated that British naval deployment within the fisheries jurisdiction of Iceland continued to be aggressive and seemed to have been stepped up. He cited ramming attacks by British naval frigates on 27 March and on 6 and 10 May 1976, for which the Government of Iceland reserved the right to claim full reparation for damages. He also stated that British warships and tugboats were continuing to assist British trawlers in their violation of Icelandic fisheries jurisdiction. The Government of Iceland protested the serious attacks in the strongest possible terms.

By letters of 18 February, 9 April and 25 May 1976, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that his Government totally denied Iceland's allegations. He said that British vessels did not provoke the incident of 11 December 1975, but that they were sheltering from a storm and were fired on by Icelandic Coast Guard vessels.

As to the presence of British frigates, the representative stated that they had a purely defensive role, with no orders to ram Icelandic vessels. Moreover, the United Kingdom Government took a most serious view of the action of the Icelandic Coast Guard vessel that attempted to arrest a British trawler on 12 May and fired shots across the bow and stern of the trawler.

Communications from Argentina and the United Kingdom

By a letter of 6 February 1976 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the United Kingdom described an incident on the high seas between an Argentine warship and the British research ship R.R.S. Shackleton. He stated that the unarmed Shackleton had been engaged in scientific research connected with theories of continental drift. On 4 February, the Shackleton was intercepted 87 miles south of Cape Pembroke, Falkland Islands, by the Argentine destroyer Almirante Storni. The Shackleton was ordered to stop her engines and accept a boarding party, a command which the captain of the Shackleton declined to obey. The Argentine warship then fired five shots towards the Shackleton, despite the warning that explosives for scientific purposes were aboard the research vessel.

The United Kingdom rejected the Argentine claims to exercise maritime jurisdiction in the area where those acts occurred and maintained that the action of the Argentine vessel would have been unlawful even if it had occurred within the territorial sea or other maritime jurisdiction of Argentina. It deplored the incident, which it termed provocative, and called upon the Argentine Government to refrain from any further harassment. The United Kingdom also reserved the right to request appropriate action by the Security Council.

By a letter of 10 February 1976, the representative of Argentina informed the President of the Security Council of a serious violation of the legislation concerning Argentine maritime jurisdiction.

Argentina claimed that the United Kingdom vessel Shackleton had conducted research directed towards the exploitation of possible hydrocarbons on the Argentine continental shelf. The event was called particularly serious in view of the fact that on 14 November 1975, the United Kingdom Government was notified that it had to comply with Argentine legislation concerning scientific research conducted in maritime areas under Argentine jurisdiction.

On 4 February, the Argentine destroyer Almirante Storni approached the Shackleton for the purpose of inspecting the vessel. Warning shots were fired from small arms when the United Kingdom vessel disregarded the instructions, but in the knowledge that the Shackleton was carrying explosives, the commander of the Argentine vessel was instructed not to use force. Taking note of the United Kingdom letter of 6 February, the representative of Argentina said it was striking that the United Kingdom should appeal to the Security Council when it had been refusing to comply with United Nations resolutions urging it to continue negotiations with Argentina in the dispute concerning sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands. This attitude contrasted with that of Argentina, which had always affirmed its resolve to continue the negotiations.

On 23 February, an identical letter addressed to the Secretary-General was sent by the representative of Argentina.

Communications from Ethiopia and Yemen

By a letter of 30 August 1976, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Yemen stated that on 10 August an Ethiopian military boat had stopped a Yemeni sailboat in the Yemeni territorial sea and forced it to proceed to the Ethiopian port of Assab. On 18 August, another Ethiopian military boat apprehended three Yemeni fishermen, also in Yemeni territorial waters. The representative of Yemen protested this violation of Yemen's sovereignty and requested that the sailboat and sailors and the fishermen be released immediately and that an Ethiopian pledge be officially issued to the effect that such acts of aggression would not be repeated.

By a letter of 4 September 1976, Ethiopia transmitted to the President of the Security Council its reply to the Yemen Embassy in Addis Ababa. It stated that the sailing boat and the persons involved were immediately released after an investigation, which had confirmed that the Ethiopian patrol boats had been carrying out their responsibilities within Ethiopian jurisdiction. Because of the traditionally close neighbourly relations between Yemen and Ethiopia, the Government of Ethiopia believed that similar matters should be handled routinely without in any way reflecting on the relations between the two countries.

Status of intergovernmental organizations in the General Assembly

By a letter dated 10 August 1976, the Permanent Representative of Papua New Guinea requested the inclusion in the agenda of the Assembly's thirty-first (1976) session of an item entitled "Observer status for the Commonwealth Secretariat at the United Nations."

An explanatory memorandum, attached to the request, stated that the Commonwealth Secretariat, established in 1965 as a symbol of the spirit of co-operation among member countries of the Commonwealth, was also dedicated to the goals and objectives of the United Nations. Activities of the Commonwealth Secretariat, the memorandum stated, were concerned with major international issues relevant to the United Nations in the political, economic, social and humanitarian fields. A closer working relationship with the United Nations would therefore advance and strengthen the endeavours of both organizations in all areas of common activities.

On the recommendation of its General Committee, the General Assembly included the item in its agenda and considered it at a plenary meeting.

On 18 October, the Assembly decided to invite the Commonwealth Secretariat to participate in the sessions and work of the Assembly and of its subsidiary organs in the capacity of observer.

This decision was set forth in resolution 31/3, adopted by consensus on the basis of a proposal sponsored by the following 33 States: Australia, the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Botswana, Canada, Cyprus, Fiji, the Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

Chapter I

Questions concerning development and international economic co-operation and the establishment of a new international economic order

At its sixth special session in 1974, which was convened to consider the question of raw materials and development, the General Assembly adopted a wide-ranging Declaration and Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.<sup>1</sup>

Following this, at its regular 1974 session, the Assembly adopted the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, which also dealt with the principles outlined in the Declaration and the Programme of Action and made many specific recommendations.<sup>2</sup>

In 1975, the seventh special session of the Assembly was convened to consider progress in development and international economic co-operation, and a major resolution setting forth further measures for action was adopted.<sup>3</sup>

Thus, in 1976 the main business of the United Nations in the economic and social fields was to consider the question of action on these resolutions.

During 1976, decisions on development and a new international economic order were taken by the Economic and Social Council and by the General Assembly, which on 22 December suspended its 1976 session in order to await the results of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation being held in Paris.

The Economic and Social Council met in Africa for the first time, holding the first part of its mid-year session in Abidjan, Ivory Coast, and adopting the Declaration of Abidjan on 9 July.

The General Assembly in December adopted decisions and resolutions on several related matters, including emergency relief and development assistance, the United Nations Special Fund, ways and means of accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries, debt problems of developing countries, economic co-operation among developing countries, measures in favour of land-locked and island developing countries, and preparations for a new international development strategy.

Also, in June 1976, the Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour was held in Geneva, Switzerland.

Details of these and other matters are described in the sections which follow in this chapter.

Information may also be found on pp. 464-69 (food problems), 412-13 (transfer of technology), 362-63 (the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States) and 455-58 (financing of economic development), among the related topics discussed in this volume.

Implementation of General Assembly decisions on development strategy and establishment of a new international economic order

Decisions of Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council held the first part of its mid-1976 session in Abidjan, Ivory Coast. Welcoming representatives to the session, the President of the Ivory Coast said inter alia that economic development could lose all significance if it became an end in itself; a consistent policy of sharing the benefits of growth needed to be pursued. The United Nations Secretary-General in his address called upon the Council to assume a revitalized role in enabling the world community to maintain a continuing watch over the whole range of economic and social issues as they related to and interacted with one another.

The Council's discussion of a wide range of issues concerning the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,<sup>4</sup> the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States<sup>5</sup> and a new international economic order<sup>6</sup> was reflected in its unanimously adopted resolution 2009(LXI) of 9 July, entitled the Declaration of Abidjan. The draft resolution was submitted by the Council's Vice-President following consultations among Council members.

By this resolution, the Council among other things urged all countries and international organizations to give added impetus to the efforts towards achievement of the goals of the developing countries, taking fully into account the relevant decisions of the General Assembly. It further urged those countries and organizations to pursue with urgency the implementation of agreements reached within the United Nations system, such as those of the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) held in May 1976, and to search for further agreements.

It reaffirmed the need for special measures in favour of the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, and expressed its concern over the critical nature of the problems of development in Africa, which contained a large number of these countries. It called for increased food production in the developing countries, particularly those in Africa, and for the necessary political will on the part of all nations for adequate resources to be placed at the disposal of the United Nations. The Council declared its adherence to the principles of national independence, sovereignty and self-reliance, and its faith in co-operation, dialogue and negotiation between developed and developing countries, based on a real political will to promote an equitable and just system of international economic relations.

The Council also noted that this was its first meeting in Africa and welcomed the statement at the opening of the session by the President of the Ivory Coast. It welcomed also the emergence of independent States, the majority of them in Africa, as a result of their struggle for self-determination and national liberation and called for the elimination of all forms of colonialism, neo-colonialism, foreign aggression and occupation, alien domination, racial discrimination and apartheid from Africa and elsewhere.

(For text of resolution 2009(LXI), see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Also on 9 July, on a proposal by its Vice-President, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 2010(LXI), expressing its appreciation to the President, Government and people of the Ivory Coast.

At the second part of its mid-year session, held in Geneva, Switzerland, the Council continued its consideration, through a sessional Special Economic Committee, of issues related to development and international economic co-operation. The developing States members of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" introduced a draft resolution, which they subsequently withdrew in favour of a text proposed by the Committee Chairman after consultations. That draft was approved by the Committee without a vote on 5 August and adopted by the Council on the same day, again without a vote, as resolution 2042(LXI).

By this resolution, the Council expressed concern that there had been serious shortfalls in achieving the objectives of the International Development Strategy. It was also concerned at the slow pace of progress in the implementation of the measures specified in the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions, the limited nature of the agreements reached at the fourth session of UNCTAD and the current deadlock and lack of concrete results at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation. It expressed the hope that the deadlock would be promptly overcome and called upon all countries, in particular the developed countries, to redouble their efforts to implement the International Development Strategy during the rest of the Second United Nations Development Decade and help offset the shortfalls recorded during the first half of the Decade.

The United Nations Secretariat was urged to respond fully to United Nations resolutions and decisions and to ensure that documentation it prepared was fully consistent with the directives of the relevant legislative texts.

Finally, the Council urged Member States to take appropriate steps to ensure the success of the revision of the International Development Strategy, as called for by the General Assembly in 1975.<sup>7</sup>

Japan, the United States and the United Kingdom (speaking on behalf of the European Economic Community) reminded the Council that the reservations they had previously expressed in connexion with the resolutions of the sixth and/or seventh special sessions of the General Assembly remained unchanged. The United States and Australia noted in connexion with the paragraph concerning documentation that their participation in the consensus did not conflict with their support of the Secretariat's impartiality and integrity.

A position paper on international economic and social policy was presented to the Council by the members belonging to the Group of 77. On the proposal of Pakistan, the Council decided, without a vote (decision 158(LXI)), on 9 July to annex the paper to its report to the General Assembly.

The position paper presented proposals which dealt inter alia with the basic environment for international co-operation, including the elimination of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and with the effective control by developing countries of their natural resources. The paper expressed a deep concern over the absence of a commitment on the part of developed countries to implement General Assembly decisions on the establishment of a new international economic order, on the International Development Strategy, on the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and on other decisions concerning development and international economic co-operation. It called upon all countries to demonstrate their political will to reach adequate solutions to problems through dialogue and negotiation in order to facilitate the establishment of a new international economic order. In addition, it emphasized the role of the Economic and Social Council and called upon it to play a more effective role in development and international economic co-operation.

In their debate on general economic and social policy, members touched on many aspects of international development efforts. The fact that recent world events had adversely affected the economies of developing countries in particular, and had widened the income gap between them and the industrialized countries as well as among the developing countries themselves, was noted by many speakers representing groups of developing, developed market economy and centrally planned economy countries. The urgent need for sufficient resources to be made available to the developing countries, especially the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked, and island developing countries, by the industrialized economies was emphasized, although, as pointed out by Pakistan, speaking for the Group of 77, the developing countries acknowledged that the fundamental development effort must come from themselves. While the concept of interdependence of the world's economies was recognized by most members, several representatives—including those from Belgium and the Federal Republic of Germany among the developed market economies, and Ethiopia, Jordan and Zambia among the developing countries—spoke of the special importance of regional co-operation in the development effort. New assistance programmes, including those focusing on agricultural assistance, compensatory financing for fluctuations in export earnings, and a proposed link between the creation of international liquidity and development aid, were called for by many developing-country representatives as well as by China, Denmark, Italy, Japan and Portugal.

Of importance to many members, including the developing countries, as expressed by Pakistan for the Group of 77, was the lack of commitment by the industrialized nations in implementing existing development programmes and the failure to achieve the goals and objectives for the development of the developing countries outlined in previous resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and in other international fora.

Decisions of the General Assembly

The implementation of decisions on development strategy and the establishment of a new international economic order was discussed by the General Assembly at its regular 1976 session, mainly in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

The Second Committee had before it several documents, including: a report of the Secretary-General on the Paris Conference on International Economic Co-operation; a report of the Secretary-General of UNCTAD on the results of the Conference's fourth session; a report of the Economic and Social Council on its discussion of international economic and social policy; documents of the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of

Non-Aligned Countries on development and international economic co-operation, submitted by a letter of 1 September from Sri Lanka; and a statement by the USSR on the restructuring of international economic relations, transmitted by a letter of 3 October. The Committee also took into consideration the progress report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the response of the United Nations system to the decisions taken by the General Assembly at its seventh special session in 1975 covering international trade, the transfer of real resources to developing countries, science and technology, food and agriculture, and co-operation among developing countries.<sup>8</sup>

During the debate on questions relating to the implementation of the Assembly's resolutions on world economic relations, many Members took positions similar to those expressed earlier in the year by members of the Economic and Social Council. There was some optimism, though mingled with disappointment with the results of various recent international negotiations.

Finland and the United Kingdom, among others, said that the spirit of the seventh special session had prevailed and the will to negotiate persisted. Zaire, although disappointed with the response of the industrialized countries to some of the proposals of the developing countries, was also glad that a dialogue was being maintained. Venezuela said that the many conferences in 1976 had constituted an unprecedented effort in international co-operation. Algeria and Mexico, on the other hand, while agreeing that dialogue was needed, said that dialogue did not mean merely travelling from one conference to another and that the major economic meetings held thus far in 1976 had contributed little.

Ireland, in response to views expressed by some of the centrally planned economy countries of Eastern Europe, said it did not agree that some developed countries bore less responsibility than others for development assistance. To link this responsibility to a history of colonialism was to perpetuate the indignity of colonialism. Ireland accepted its responsibility to contribute to the best of its abilities.

Many Members expressed particular disappointment with the results thus far of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation, among them Cuba, Egypt, Iran, Kuwait, Nepal, Nigeria, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, Uganda and Yugoslavia. However, Argentina, Kuwait, Senegal, the Sudan, Tunisia, Yugoslavia and others still hoped for progress in those negotiations.

On the fourth session of UNCTAD, certain Members, including China, Fiji, Mauritania, the Philippines and Somalia, expressed satisfaction with at least some of its results, while others, such as Afghanistan, Botswana, Cuba, Egypt, Greece, Iran, Senegal and Tunisia, found the session disappointing.

There was much discussion, by Algeria, Brazil, Cuba, Mali, Senegal, Turkey and others, of the defects and need for revision of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, and Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Indonesia, Madagascar, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Surinam, Turkey and Yugoslavia, among others, emphasized the need to begin preparations for the Third Development Decade. The Netherlands said it was time to begin formulating a strategy for the rest of the century.

Several centrally planned economy countries, as well as Liberia and Mexico, spoke of the need to reduce military spending. These States said this would free considerable resources for development.

Some countries, including Brazil, France and Jamaica, expressed the view that economic improvements in the poor countries would benefit the wealthy nations as well. Several Members, including Austria, Nigeria and Peru, called attention to the urgency of the international debt problem. The problem of protectionism on the part of the developed industrialized countries was also brought up, in particular by Argentina, Pakistan and Singapore. The United States said it did not agree with those who suggested that the substantial efforts it had made in behalf of development were of little value. It noted that as of January 1976 it had effected a generalized system of preferences covering 2,700 items from about 100 countries.

Following this debate, the Second Committee on 13 December approved a draft resolution proposed by its Vice-Chairman following informal consultations, by a recorded vote of 105 to 1, with 7 abstentions. The draft was adopted by the Assembly on 21 December as resolution 31/178, by a recorded vote of 128 to 1, with 8 abstentions.

By this resolution the Assembly, inter alia, affirmed that its earlier resolutions concerning a new international economic order reflected a commitment on the part of all countries to ensure equitable economic relations between developed and developing countries and a sustained effort to contribute to the development of developing countries. It said that specific serious shortfalls in the implementation of the International Development Strategy had been identified, and that urgent, vigorous and concrete action still needed to be taken to end all forms of foreign aggression and occupation, racial discrimination, apartheid and colonialism. It expressed deep concern over the failure of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation to achieve concrete results and over the slow pace of progress in the implementation of decisions adopted by the Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions, as well as the limited nature of agreements reached at the fourth session of UNCTAD. The Assembly urged the international community, particularly the developed countries, to display the necessary political will in the ongoing negotiations in this area.

The Assembly then decided to undertake a detailed assessment, at its 1977 session, of progress made in the implementation of its resolutions on the International Development Strategy, on the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and on a new international economic order, and it asked the Economic and Social Council and the Committee on Review and Appraisal to prepare a preliminary assessment for its consideration. The Secretary-General, the heads of United Nations bodies concerned and Member States were asked to take the forthcoming assessment into account when preparing their review and assessment reports on the implementation of the International Development Strategy.

By a similar resolution, introduced and subsequently withdrawn by the Group of 77, developing Member States, the Assembly would, in addition, have expressed the view, in a preambular section, that interdependence did not imply that the development of developing countries should be construed as merely a by-product of growing affluence in the developed countries; in an operative section it would have stated that failure to achieve early and concrete results in negotiations on the establishment of a new international economic order would have adverse effects on international economic co-operation.

Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel, among others, expressed reservations about the political implications of some paragraphs of the resolution that referred to the obstacles to development arising from foreign aggression and occupation, racial discrimination, apartheid, colonialism and neo-colonialism. Egypt commented that these items had been recognized in previous resolutions concerning a new international economic order and said they were an integral part of the resolution in view of the need to eliminate political obstacles to economic emancipation of the developing countries. Similarly, Pakistan, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77, stated that those paragraphs took a comprehensive view of the issues relating to economic development and reflected most of the considerations propounded by the developing countries.

Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Japan were among those expressing reservations on the question of the political will of the developed countries; they felt that all countries should display the necessary political will for economic co-operation. These countries, as well as France, the United Kingdom and the United States, considered it inappropriate to pass judgement on the global effort at co-operation. Furthermore, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States reiterated their reservations on some of the elements contained in the concept of the new international economic order referred to in the preambular paragraphs of the resolution.

Spain supported the resolution, though it felt that the reference to a lack of political will on the part of the developed countries did not reflect the compromise necessary for promoting co-operation. Moreover, Spain did not consider the reference to the failure of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation to be appropriate.

Canada noted that there was no positive reference to the efforts of the developed countries in the resolution, acknowledgement of which might have helped produce the needed public support for such efforts.

The representative of Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, supported the resolution as an affirmation of the principles embodied in the declaration adopted by the Political Consultative Committee of the member States of the Warsaw Pact, held in Bucharest, Romania, in November 1976. That declaration called for the restructuring of international economic relations on a basis that would be just and equitable, and it expressed support for the programme of international economic co-operation drawn up by the developing and non-aligned countries.

On 22 December 1976, the General Assembly decided not to close the current session and to hold a resumed session solely for the consideration of the question of development and international economic co-operation at a time to be decided by the President. The resumed session would assess the results of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation and other relevant negotiations. (See pp. 337-40.)

Resolution 2009(LXI), as recommended in E/L.1729, adopted unanimously by Council on 9 July 1976, meeting 2020.

The Economic and Social Council,
Meeting for the first time in Africa, from 30 June to 9 July 1976, at the invitation of the Government of the Republic of the Ivory Coast,

1. Welcomes the important statement of His Excellency the President of the Republic of the Ivory Coast before the Council at the opening meeting of its sixty-first session, in which he eloquently analysed problems of developing countries in general and those of Africa in particular;

2. Remains mindful of the fundamental purposes of the United Nations, as laid down in the Charter of the United Nations, in particular the maintenance of international peace and security through, inter alia, effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to peace and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, the development of friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and the achievement of international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character;

3. Welcomes the emergence to independence of States—the majority of which are in Africa—as a result of their struggle for self-determination and national liberation;

4. Calls for the speedy elimination of all forms of colonialism, neo-colonialism, foreign aggression and occupation, alien domination, racial discrimination and apartheid from the African continent and from wherever they exist and affirms that this should continue to receive very high priority among the major preoccupations of the international community;

5. Determines that there is an imperative need to eliminate injustice and inequality which afflict vast sections of humanity and to accelerate the development of developing countries;

6. Urges all countries and international organizations to give added impetus to the efforts of the international community towards the achievement of the goals, targets and objectives of the development of developing countries through individual or collective action, taking fully into account the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order (General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974), as well as the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States (General Assembly resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974), the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade (General Assembly resolution

2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970) and General Assembly resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation;

7. Further urges all countries and international organizations to pursue with the maximum sense of urgency the implementation of agreements reached within the United Nations system, including those reached at the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in other international conferences and fora, the search for further agreements and the widening of the existing ones where appropriate, bearing in mind the need to conduct negotiations and, where agreed, preparatory meetings for this purpose, so as to provide concrete solutions to the problems of developing countries;

8. Reaffirms the need to implement special measures or specific action adopted in favour of the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked, and island developing countries;

9. Expresses its concern over the critical nature of the problems of development in Africa, reflected by the large number of African countries identified as least developed or most seriously affected countries, and urges developed countries, developing countries which are in a position to do so and the appropriate organs of the United Nations system to increase assistance to these countries;

10. Affirms the need to increase substantially the level of food production in developing countries, particularly those in Africa, and to extend adequate assistance to them for this purpose;

11. Urges all nations to display the necessary political will and place adequate resources at the disposal of the United Nations, in order to enable it to fulfil its role in the economic and social fields;

12. Finally declares that

The objective of eliminating injustice and inequality and of achieving international co-operation for the promotion of economic progress and better standards of life, as well as social advancement and the encouragement of respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction, has yet to be achieved in large areas of the world; to this end, the Council declares its adherence to the principles of national independence, sovereignty, and self-reliance and its faith in co-operation, dialogue and negotiation between developed and developing countries, based on a real political will to promote an equitable and just system of international economic relations in conformity with the principles of the United Nations Charter.

Resolution 2010 (LXI), as orally proposed by Council Vice-President, adopted unanimously by Council on 9 July 1976, meeting 2021.

The Economic and Social Council,
Meeting for the first time on the continent of Africa, Conscious of its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that its historic meeting at Abidjan has given new impetus to fulfil those responsibilities,

1. Expresses its profound appreciation to His Excellency the President of the Republic of the Ivory Coast and to the Government of the Republic of the Ivory Coast for making this meeting possible;

2. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to convey an expression of its deep gratitude to the people of the Republic of the Ivory Coast, and in particular to those responsible for the excellent arrangements for the meeting, for the generous hospitality and warm welcome accorded to the Council on every side.

Resolution 2042(LXI), as recommended by Special Economic Committee, E/5886, adopted without vote by Council on 5 August 1976, meeting 2032.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970 on the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 on the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 3517(XXX) of 15 December 1975 on the mid-term review and appraisal of progress in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, Noting with concern the view of many members of the Council, including the developing countries, that some of the documentation prepared by the United Nations Secretariat, including the World Economic Survey, 1975, is not fully consistent with the spirit and directives of the General Assembly resolutions on the establishment of a new international economic order.

Taking note of the summary of the data relating to performance under the International Development Strategy, the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its twelfth session, the progress report by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the response of the United Nations system to General Assembly resolution 3362(S-VII), and the report of the Secretary-General on his participation in the Conference on International Economic Co-operation,

Further taking note of the statement by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the results of the fourth session of the Conference,

1. Expresses deep concern that, during the first half of the Second United Nations Development Decade, there have been serious shortfalls, as elaborated in General Assembly resolution 3517(XXX), in achieving the goals, objectives and policy measures specified in the International Development Strategy;

2. Expresses deep concern, despite some progress in certain areas, at the slow pace of progress in the implementation of the measures specified in the resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly adopted at its sixth and seventh special sessions and at the limited nature of agreements reached at the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

3. Urges therefore all countries, in particular the developed countries, to continue to press for the achievement of these goals in all sectors, and to agree on concrete and urgent solutions to the pending issues, taking fully into account the relevant decisions and the resolutions of the United Nations on the establishment of the new international economic order;

4. Expresses concern and disappointment, in this context, at the deadlock currently reached in the Conference on International Economic Co-operation, accompanied by the lack of concrete results so far in the Conference;

5. Expresses the hope that the deadlock will be promptly overcome and that rapid progress will be made towards the achievement of concrete results by the end of 1976, and also bears in mind the on-going work on international economic co-operation and development within the United Nations system;

6. Calls upon all countries, in particular the developed countries, to redouble their efforts to implement the International Development Strategy during the remaining time of the Second United Nations Development Decade and, in particular, to help to offset the shortfalls recorded during the first half of the Decade;

7. Urges the United Nations Secretariat to respond fully to United Nations resolutions and decisions and to ensure that documentation prepared by the Secretariat be fully consistent with the directives of the relevant legislative texts;

8. Urges Member States, in view of the magnitude of the task, to take appropriate steps to make the exercise provided for in paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 3517(XXX) a successful one.

E/L.1728/Rev.1 and Rev.1/Corr.1. Position paper of "Group of 77" in context of consideration of agenda item 3 of 61st session of Economic and Social Council (on general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral development).

Recalling further its resolution 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the goals, targets and policy measures of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, which have been complemented and strengthened by its resolutions on the establishment of a new international economic order and its resolution 3517 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 on the mid-term review and appraisal of progress in the implementation of the International Development Strategy,

Noting the reports on the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held at Nairobi from 5 to 31 May 1976, and the interim report of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation, as well as other relevant reports,

Noting further the pertinent decisions on the establishment of the new international economic order adopted at the Third Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, held at Manila from 26 January to 7 February 1976, the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, and the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Mexico City from 13 to 22 September 1976,

Considering with deep and increasing concern that parts of the developing world are still subject to foreign aggression and occupation, apartheid, racial discrimination and colonial and neo-colonial domination, which constitute major obstacles to the economic emancipation and development of the developing countries as a whole as well as major threats to international peace and security,

Noting the regret expressed by the developing countries that the developed countries have yet to display the necessary political will to implement these fundamental decisions of the United Nations and fulfil their commitments and obligations and to adjust their policies for this purpose,

Deeply concerned that during the current Second United Nations Development Decade the terms of trade of the majority of developing countries have deteriorated, together with unprecedented and growing balance-of-payments deficits, that the burden of debt has reached unmanageable proportions in many developing countries and growth in the developing countries is expected to fall short not only of the 6 percent target of the International Development Strategy but also of the rate of growth achieved in the First United Nations Development Decade and that, for many developing countries, particularly among the least developed, land-locked, island and most seriously affected developing countries, real per capita income could, if present trends persist, be lower in 1980 than at the start of the Decade.

Considering that the inequity in economic relations between the developed and the developing countries is one of the primal issues confronting the international community, a situation which could adversely affect international economic co-operation and the promotion of world peace and security,

I

1. Affirms that its resolutions on the establishment of a new international economic order reflect a commitment on the part of all countries to ensure equitable economic relations between developed and developing countries and a deliberate, sustained and planned effort to contribute to the development of the developing countries;

2. Emphasizes the conclusions reached in the midterm review and appraisal of progress in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, contained in its resolution 3517(XXX), which specifically identified serious shortfalls in the implementation of its resolution 2626(XXV) during the first half of the Decade;

3. Expresses its deep concern and disappointment at the failure of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation to achieve thus far any concrete results;

4. Reaffirms that urgent, more vigorous and concrete steps and actions still remain to be taken, collectively and individually, by all members of the International community to end without delay all forms of foreign aggression and occupation, racial discrimination, apartheid, colonialism and neo-colonialism and that it is also the duty of all States effectively to support and extend assistance to the countries, territories and peoples subjected to them so as to restore their national sovereignty, their territorial integrity and their inalienable and fundamental rights in order to promote development and international co-operation, peace and security;

5. Expresses deep concern, despite some progress in certain areas, at the slow pace of progress in the implementation of the measures specified in the resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly adopted at its sixth and seventh special sessions and at the limited nature of agreements reached at the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

6. Urges the international community, particularly the developed countries, to display the necessary political will in the ongoing negotiations in different United Nations forums and elsewhere so as to reach the concrete and urgent solutions necessary to promote the establishment of a new international economic order;

II

1. Decides to undertake during the course of its thirty-second session a detailed assessment of the progress made in the implementation of its resolutions 2626(XXV), 3202(S-VI), 3281(XXIX) and 3362(S-VII) under a single item entitled "Assessment of the progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 2626(XXV), 3202(S-VI), 3281(XXIX) and 3362(S-VII) entitled, respectively, 'International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,' 'Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,' 'Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States' and 'Development and international economic co-operation'";

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council and the Committee on Review and Appraisal to prepare a preliminary assessment, for consideration by the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, bearing in mind the provisions of the preceding paragraphs and the reports at the sectoral and regional level submitted by the United Nations organs and organizations concerned, and such other developments as may take place in the interim;

3. Requests the Secretary-General and the heads of the United Nations bodies and organizations concerned, in preparing for the review and assessment, and Member States, in preparing their national reports on the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, to take fully into account the provisions of the present resolution, in particular section II, paragraph 1.

Emergency relief and development assistance

Report on immediate needs

At its mid-1976 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a report by the Secretary-General on immediate needs resulting from economic emergency situations, prepared pursuant to a 1975 General Assembly resolution.<sup>9</sup> The report described disaster situations, permanent or semi-permanent emergency situations, and disaster-like economic emergency situations and summarized existing arrangements within the United Nations system for dealing with each of these. It observed that there were already far-reaching arrangements for emergency relief of disaster situations and that attention was being focused on the special needs of the least developed countries, which were particularly prone to permanent or semi-permanent emergency situations. It noted that more systematic procedures might be established for mobilizing and co-ordinating the response of the international community to disaster-like economic emergency situations; the United Nations capacity for responding to such situations could be rendered more effective if the Secretary-General had machinery at his disposal that would encompass, on an interagency basis, all appropriate elements of the United Nations system.

The report suggested that a small special unit might be established at United Nations Headquarters to report to the Secretary-General. On the basis of information communicated to it by the organizations of the United Nations system and by appropriate departments of the Government or Governments concerned, the unit would make a rapid assessment of the situation, simultaneously apprising the Secretary-General of the situation to enable him to initiate whatever immediate action might be necessary and to convene an appropriate interagency mechanism to advise and assist him. The unit would also prepare a preliminary report and formulate specific recommendations for remedial action. The unit would then be responsible for co-ordinating any programme of assistance called for by the emergency until the situation either improved or became permanent or semi-permanent, in which case other arrangements would be made.

The report was considered by the Council's Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee. On 30 July, a draft decision on the Secretary-General's report, sponsored by Jamaica, Mexico, the Netherlands and Norway, was approved without a vote and subsequently adopted by the Council, also without a vote, on 5 August. By this decision (177(LXI)), the Council recommended that the General Assembly take note of the report, invite the Secretary-General to continue the preparation of proposals, and report to the Council in 1977.

On 21 December, the General Assembly took the action proposed by the Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text of the draft decision, without a vote, on the proposal of the Chairman, on 8 December. This became Assembly decision 31/422 C, adopted without a vote.

United Nations Special Fund

At its second regular session, from 19 to 23 January, the Board of Governors of the United Nations Special Fund elected its officers for 1976. The President of the Board, Ole Algard (Norway), reported on the contacts he had made and consultations he had carried out with potential donor countries on both an individual and group basis with a view to obtaining contributions to the Special Fund. He informed the Board that Norway and Venezuela would be in a position to make contributions to the Fund totalling $27 million.

The Board decided to postpone a decision on whether to convene a pledging conference in 1976 until its third (March 1976) session, and to ask the President to make a special appeal to potential donors. The Board also considered requests for assistance from the Central African Republic, Cyprus, El Salvador and Sao Tome and Principe. It further decided, at their request, to include the Gambia and Nepal in the list of countries most seriously affected by the economic crisis as defined in a 1974 General Assembly resolution.<sup>10</sup>

The Board considered other matters, such as the organization of monitoring operations and rules of procedure, but decided to postpone further consideration of these issues until its third session.

The third session of the Board was held on 31 March 1976. The President announced that Venezuela had made a first contribution of $16.6 million to the Special Fund and that Norway would make a contribution of $10 million in the near future. The Board considered and approved the request of Guatemala for inclusion in the list of most seriously affected countries, bringing the number of countries on the list to 45. The Board decided to hold a special session later in 1976, but this session was subsequently cancelled.

The report of the Board was considered by the Economic and Social Council on 15 November 1976. Introducing the report, the President of the Board said, inter alia, that the immediate task of the Fund and its responsibility to the two donor countries was to disburse the available resources with minimum delay. By decision 198(LXI), adopted, without a vote, at the suggestion of the President of the Council, the Council took note of the report of the Board and transmitted it to the General Assembly.

On 16 November, the President of the Board addressed the Assembly's Second Committee and reiterated his statement made to the Council the previous day. During the discussion, several Members, including Egypt, India, Nepal, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Uganda and the United Republic of Cameroon, expressed appreciation to Norway and Venezuela and regret over the negative attitude of other potential donors. On 30 November, the Committee recommended, without a vote and at the suggestion of its Chairman, that the Assembly take note of the Board's report; the Assembly did so on 16 December, also without a vote. At the same time, the Assembly took note of a decision by the Secretary-General not to appoint an executive director of the Special Fund for the time being. These actions were embodied in decisions 31/412 and 31/311, respectively.

During the Assembly's consideration of world food problems, at the same session, Norway and Venezuela proposed a draft resolution by which the General Assembly inter alia would authorize the Special Fund to transfer to the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) Norway's contribution and $10 million of Venezuela's contribution. This draft resolution was subsequently withdrawn and the sponsors instead proposed a draft decision by which the Secretary-General would release the contributions from the Special Fund, taking note of the sponsors' declared intention to contribute these amounts to IFAD (for information about IFAD, see pp. 468-69). The Second Committee approved the draft decision by a recorded vote of 52 to 11, with 57 abstentions, on 15 December. The Assembly adopted the decision (31/413) by 56 votes to 12, with 64 abstentions, on the following day.

Speaking in explanation of the vote, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Jamaica, Pakistan and Yugoslavia, among others, expressed serious reservations on the principle involved in the proposal, namely the removal of funds already donated to an established United Nations body. Colombia and the Ivory Coast believed that the proposal should be judged on the basis of the urgency of needs rather than on questions of principle. Canada, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait and Peru expressed support for the intentions of the sponsors, while others, including Algeria and Mexico, were convinced that the decision would be gravely detrimental to the most seriously affected countries. Argentina, Ghana, Spain, Tunisia, Sierra Leone and others stated that they did not consider the decision as a precedent with regard to other funds.

Conference on International Economic Co-operation

By a resolution of 15 December 1975,<sup>11</sup> the General Assembly asked the Secretary-General to assist the participants in the Conference on International Economic Co-operation (CIEC) and to report on his participation to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council.<sup>12</sup> His report, covering the period through April 1976, described the arrangements made by the Conference regarding its functioning and the participation of observers, listed the organs and organizations of the United Nations system invited as observers by the four

<sup>12</sup> The Conference on International Economic Co-operation was convened on the proposal of the President of France to discuss the international economic situation. It was attended by representatives of Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Egypt, the European Economic Community, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Republic of Cameroon, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

commissions (on energy, raw materials, development and financial affairs) and briefly described their contributions to the work of the commissions.

The Economic and Social Council on 5 August 1976 adopted resolution 2042(LXI), which dealt with development and international co-operation. By part of this resolution, the Council voiced concern and disappointment at the lack of results from the Conference thus far and expressed the hope that concrete achievements would be attained by the end of 1976. (For text of resolution, see p. 333.)

In accordance with the 1975 General Assembly resolution cited above, CIEC was invited to report on its conclusions to the Assembly in 1976. Due to its work schedule, the Conference could only submit an interim report on its activities up to mid-September 1976. This report briefly described the arrangements made by the Conference to fulfil its mandate, the activities of the commissions during the first six months and those of the senior officials' meeting held in July 1976. A number of documents were attached to the report, including the work programmes of the various commissions.

Introducing the report on 2 November 1976 in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, Manuel Pérez-Guerrero (Venezuela), speaking as Co-Chairman of the Conference, said that in spite of some positive signs the Conference had lacked so far the political will necessary for its success. He expressed his hope that the Conference would progress in the weeks ahead, so that the international community would not lose that opportunity for dialogue.

The representative of Canada, the other Co-Chairman, said that the first phase of the Conference, devoted to analysis and exchange of information, had helped establish a better understanding and a common ground for the negotiations to come. He added that the Conference would be a useful experiment, even if it were not successful. But no judgement, he said, could be made before the Conference had concluded its work.

On 18 November, the Second Committee approved a draft resolution, submitted by the "Group of 77" developing Member States, by a roll-call vote of 96 to 0, with 30 abstentions.

The General Assembly adopted the draft resolution on 19 November by a recorded vote of 99 to 0, with 30 abstentions, as resolution 31/14.

A modified text of the draft resolution, proposed by the Vice-Chairman of the Committee on the basis of his consultations, was withdrawn because it was not possible to achieve a consensus on it. Among the ways in which it differed from the text of the Group of 77 was that the Assembly would have expressed concern at the lack of evidence thus far that CIEC would succeed, rather than express deep concern at the failure of the Conference to achieve any concrete results thus far.

By resolution 31/14, the General Assembly inter alia also noted that the developed countries participating in the Conference had yet to demonstrate the necessary political will to achieve concrete results. It urged all participating countries to make the necessary efforts to ensure the success of the Conference and further urged the developed countries to respond positively to the proposals of the developing countries. It affirmed the interrelationship of the four commissions of CIEC and said their work should proceed in a parallel manner and achieve an interrelated, positive and concrete set of results. It decided to consider the results of the concluding Ministerial Meeting of the Conference, scheduled to be held from 15 to 17 December 1976, before ending its current session.

The representative of Bulgaria, also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, noted that CIEC was being held outside the United Nations and was of a limited nature. He hoped questions being considered would be resolved taking into account the interests of all countries affected.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Canada, the Netherlands (on behalf of the members of the European Economic Community), Portugal and Spain were among those expressing the view that the text of the resolution was unbalanced. Canada characterized it as a statement of the objectives of the Group of 77. However, Canada, as Co-Chairman of the Conference, and Australia, Sweden, and the United States, as CIEC participants, said that they would continue to make every effort to achieve results in all areas. Japan and the United States were among those that felt that several provisions of the resolution would not be conducive to the success of the Conference. Several of these countries also stated they could not accept the judgement that most of the developed countries at the Conference lacked political will.

In a separate action on 21 December 1976, the Assembly, adopting decision 31/421 C without a vote, took note of the Secretary-General's report on CIEC. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved the text without a vote on 13 December on the proposal of its Chairman.

Following a decision by the member countries of CIEC to postpone the Ministerial Meeting of the Conference, the Group of 77 met and issued a communiqué on 16 December which they transmitted to the President of the General Assembly. They affirmed the hope of the developing countries that substantive results would be reached when CIEC resumed its work, in the early part of 1977. They stated that the Group wished to emphasize the central role of the United Nations, especially the General Assembly, in the field of international economic co-operation. In view of the postponement of the Ministerial Meeting, the Group considered that the Assembly should not close its current session on the scheduled date but should meet again in the early part of 1977 to discuss the agenda item on development and international economic co-operation, assessing the results of CIEC and other relevant negotiations.

On 22 December, at the suggestion of its President, the Assembly decided without objection (decision 31/429 A) not to close the current session and to hold a resumed session solely for the consideration of this question, at a time and for a duration to be decided by the Assembly President after consultations with Member States and the Secretary-General.

By the annex to a letter to the President of the Assembly from Bulgaria, dated 23 December, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR expressed doubts on the justification for the convening of a resumed session, citing, among other things, their view that the international economic problems under discussion at CIEC should be treated in broad fora and that the Assembly had decided to consider at its regular 1977 session the question of progress in the establishment of a new international economic order.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling further its resolution 3515 (XXX) of 15 December 1975 on the Conference on International Economic Co-operation,

Taking note of the interim report of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation on its activities as at mid-September 1976,

Noting with growing concern that most of the developed countries participating in the Conference on International Economic Co-operation have yet to demonstrate the necessary political will to achieve concrete results,

Considering that the achievement of concrete and substantial results in all areas under consideration at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation is a prerequisite for the success of the Conference and should make a substantial contribution to the economic development of developing countries and constitute a significant advance in international economic co-operation,

1. Expresses its deep concern and disappointment at the failure of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation to achieve any concrete results so far and its profound concern at the adverse effect which the failure of the Conference will have on international economic co-operation;

Other aspects of the implementation of decisions on development strategy and the establishment of a new international economic order

Energy institute

At its seventh special session in 1975, the General Assembly addressed itself, inter alia, to the problem of providing more effective assistance in the energy field to developing countries. It invited the Secretary-General to carry out a preliminary study on the possibility of establishing within the framework of the United Nations system an international energy institute to assist all developing countries in energy resources research and development.<sup>13</sup>

The Secretary-General reported to the 1976 session of the General Assembly that he had consulted the concerned organizations and agencies within the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, and, in view of the ramifications of the question, had convened an interagency task force to discuss the matter.

Those consultations had revealed a considerable divergence of views on the need for an international energy institute. While some organizations felt that the need for such an institute was not fully evident, others were of the opinion that it should be set up as soon as possible. As to the functions of the institute, while certain organizations agreed with the idea that any new mechanism within the United Nations system should complement rather than duplicate or take over work being done elsewhere, others felt that an international energy institute should be a very strong and visible entity within the United Nations system, which would inevitably mean that some of the functions currently performed by other organs would have to be transferred to the proposed institute. However, it was generally agreed that there was a need for a careful appraisal of the situation before proceeding to consider the desirability of the specific proposal for the establishment of an institute.

In his report, the Secretary-General expressed the view that it would be highly desirable to convene an ad hoc working group on energy resources research and development composed of recognized senior energy specialists nominated by Governments.

The General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report by decision 31/421 C, adopted without a vote on 21 December 1976. The decision was proposed by the Chairman of the Second Committee and approved by the Committee without a vote on 13 December.

International economic development law

The question of consolidation and progressive evolution of the norms and principles of international economic development law was considered by the Sixth (Legal) Committee during the 1976 session of the General Assembly. The Committee had before it a working paper containing a draft convention on the topic, and a draft resolution, both submitted by the Philippines. By the draft resolution, the Assembly would, inter alia, invite Member States to submit their views on the question of embodying the norms and principles relating to international economic development in an appropriate instrument. It would also ask the Secretary-General to study the question and submit a report for the Assembly's consideration in 1977.

On 8 December 1976, at the suggestion of its Chairman, the Sixth Committee agreed without a vote to recommend that the General Assembly include this question in the provisional agenda of its 1977 session.

The Assembly adopted the recommendation without a vote on 13 December as decision 31/409.

Questions relating to the Second United Nations Development Decade

Transfer of real resources to developing countries

Accelerating the transfer of real resources

At its 1976 session, the General Assembly, pursuant to a 1975 decision,<sup>14</sup> had before it a report by the Secretary-General which drew attention to the increase in the need of developing countries for financial flows from abroad. The report noted projections by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) which indicated that such flows would have to more than double in real terms by 1980 if the growth targets of the Second United Nations Development Decade were to be achieved. It observed that the principal problems encountered in generating a sufficient volume of development assistance did not relate to the ways and means of providing such flows, but stemmed from the relatively low priority that development assistance was accorded in the budgets of a number of developed countries; discussions of ways and means of accelerating financial flows to developing countries would lack relevance so long as the required political commitment was absent.

In view of the extraordinary payments deficits faced by the non-oil-exporting developing countries, the report pointed out the importance of balance-of-payments financing facilities and attributed major responsibility for discontinuities in the growth process that had occurred in the recent past to the inadequacy of such facilities.

In connexion with providing continuity in aid flows, the report identified several areas within budgeting practices where improvements might be made, such as multiyear programming and the automatic allocation of debt-service reflows to aid agencies. It also suggested that flows of development assistance would be enhanced if agreement could be reached to reduce current military expenditures and to devote these saved resources to financial co-operation for development.

The question of the establishment of a so-called development tax was raised in the report. The success of such a proposal was considered to rely directly upon the extent to which the process of raising funds for development was facilitated by making it highly visible. Other proposals discussed included the establishment of a link between special drawing rights and additional development finance and the use of revenues derived from exploitation of the mineral resources of the sea-bed.

Mechanisms which might improve access to private capital were also considered in the report. One idea was the provision of a multilateral guarantee for the debts of developing countries. A further suggestion was the establishment of a mechanism to subsidize the interest rates on borrowings by developing countries in private capital markets—a mechanism of the sort embodied in the Third Window of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank).<sup>15</sup>

In connexion with the activities of multilateral financial institutions, the report suggested that there appeared to be scope for improvement of policies affecting the predictability and continuity of the flow of resources through these institutions. The capital subscription underpinning the regular lending of these institutions should be adequate to support a rapid growth in lending; the concessional financing at the disposal of these institutions needed to be forthcoming under more assured conditions; and replenishment procedures needed to be improved and the commitments of donors honoured.

On 21 December 1976, the Assembly adopted resolution 31/174 on ways and means of accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries on a predictable, assured and continuous basis. By this resolution, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and reiterated its appeal to developed countries to meet the target for official development assistance set by the International Development Strategy.<sup>16</sup> It urged developed countries to accelerate the transfer of real resources to developing countries on a predictable, continuous and increasingly assured basis and, towards that end, to consider seriously the various suggestions contained in the report of the Secretary-General, particularly, inter alia, the pledging of development assistance on a multiyear basis, appropriation of assistance in a manner which would prevent erosion in real value of aid in terms of the national currency of the donor country, and endowment of assistance with non-lapsing authority. The Assembly recommended that developed countries give serious consideration to the establishment of a development tax and that appropriate policies be developed to increase flows of private capital to developing countries. It requested the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the implementation of the resolution in 1977.

Resolution 31/174 was sponsored by Bangladesh, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Indonesia, Mali, Paraguay, the Philippines, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon and Yemen.

The text was approved in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 13 December 1976 by a recorded vote of 74 votes to 1, with 19 abstentions. The Assembly adopted it, on the Committee's recommendation, by a recorded vote of 117 to 1, with 18 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, many Members, including Australia, Canada, Denmark, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Turkey, expressed reservations about the advisability or feasibility of a development tax. Several developed countries had reservations concerning aspects of the provision of the resolution calling upon States which had not done so to achieve the aid target of the International Development Strategy; these included Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States. Some countries, such as the Federal Republic of Germany and Ireland, said that they would have difficulty, for reasons of their constitutions or established budgetary procedures, in considering seriously some of the proposals in the report of the Secretary-General. Bulgaria, on behalf also of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that the basic recommendations of the resolution were not applicable to economic relations between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Mongolia on the one hand and developing countries on the other.

Debt problems of developing countries

The General Assembly on 21 December 1976 adopted resolution 31/158 on debt problems of developing countries. By this resolution, the Assembly, inter alia, noted with grave concern that several factors in the world economic situation had combined to impose a serious strain on the import capacity and reserves of developing countries and to aggravate their debt burden. It was convinced that the situation could be mitigated and observed that there were sufficient common elements in the debt-servicing difficulties of the developing countries to warrant the adoption of general measures.

The Assembly considered it integral to the establishment of a new international economic order to orient procedures of reorganization of debts owed to developed countries away from a primarily commercial framework towards a developmental approach. It affirmed the urgency of reaching a general and effective solution to the debt problem and agreed that future debt negotiations should be considered within the context of internationally agreed development targets, national development objectives and international financial co-operation.

The Assembly stressed that measures should be considered and implemented in a manner not prejudicial to the credit-worthiness of any developing country. It urged the Conference on International Economic Co-operation to reach an early agreement on the question of immediate and generalized relief of the official debts of the developing countries, in particular of the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, and on the reorganization of the entire system of debt renegotiations to give it a developmental rather than a commercial orientation. The Assembly also asked the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board to review the results of negotiations on this question in other fora and to reach agreement on concrete measures to provide an immediate solution to the debt problems of developing countries. The Secretary-General of UNCTAD was requested to report thereon to the Assembly in 1977.

The resolution, sponsored by Bangladesh, the Central African Empire, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, India, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Sudan, Uganda and the United Republic of Cameroon, originally included a detailing of relief measures for particular categories of debt and for particular groups of developing countries. However, the sponsors revised the draft resolution by, inter alia, deleting these details; when put to the vote in the Second Committee on 13 December, it was approved by 92 votes to 1, with 28 abstentions.

The Assembly adopted the resolution, as recommended by the Second Committee, by a recorded vote of 99 to 1, with 31 abstentions.

Statements in explanation of vote were made by Australia, Japan, the Netherlands (on behalf of the members of the European Economic Community), Sweden and the United States. These States questioned the appropriateness of the timing of the resolution in view of current and forthcoming negotiations on the question in other fora. Bulgaria (on behalf also of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR) considered that the resolution's recommendations were not applicable to them.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

Pursuant to a General Assembly decision of 9 December 1975,<sup>17</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report to the 1976 session of the Assembly on the activities undertaken by the United Nations and by the organizations of the United Nations system to promote and support economic co-operation among developing countries. The report covered the relevant activities of the Secretariat at Headquarters, the regional commissions, UNCTAD, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Food Programme, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the International Labour Organization (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the International Telecommunication Union, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The report of the Secretary-General, together with other documents, was considered by the Assembly's Second Committee and a draft resolution on economic co-operation among developing countries was introduced by Pakistan, on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing Member States. The draft resolution was approved without a vote in the Second Committee on 13 December 1976. It was adopted by the Assembly, also without a vote, on 16 December as resolution 31/119.

By this resolution, the Assembly, inter alia, recalled earlier relevant resolutions and took note of the Secretary-General's report and of the programmes and measures adopted by the Third Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven in February 1976, the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries in August 1976, and the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries in September 1976.

It asked the Secretary-General to study the relevant decisions and programmes with a view to formulating appropriate support measures for the realization of the objectives of economic co-operation among developing countries, and to submit a report in 1977, together with organizational and financial implications, to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

The Secretary-General was requested to continue to include in the medium-term plan of the United Nations an intersectoral presentation of activities to implement the relevant United Nations resolutions on economic co-operation among developing countries and, in co-operation with organizations of the United Nations system, to secure the same kind of intersectoral presentation on a system-wide basis. The specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system were urged, in accordance with established procedures and practices, to support measures of economic co-operation among developing countries, including, as and when requested, the continued provision of necessary secretariat services and other suitable arrangements to facilitate the holding of meetings by developing countries to promote mutual co-operation.

The Assembly welcomed the establishment by the Trade and Development Board in October 1976 of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries. It asked the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to assist developing countries, at their request and after consideration and appropriate action by the new Committee, in carrying out studies on specific issues relating to trade and development. The Assembly then urged the developed countries to provide appropriate support for the implementation of measures of economic co-operation among developing countries. Finally, it asked the Secretary-General to submit a progress report in 1977 on all relevant measures taken by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system.

Statements concerning the resolution were made by a number of Members. Bulgaria, also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Mongolia were ready to give the maximum support possible to the developing countries. However, they wished to place on record that they had their own understanding of certain issues such as the concept of interdependence and the question of the responsibility of the developed countries for the economic development of the developing countries. They had stated their position on those issues on previous occasions, and that position remained unchanged.

Australia hoped that, in making the arrangements for secretariat support and other services, the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations would exercise an appropriate sense of responsibility and act in accordance with their established financial procedures and regulations. The United States also expressed reservations on this provision of the resolution.

Measures in favour of land-locked developing countries

Special fund for land-locked developing countries

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (31/177) by which it approved the Statute of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, which it had decided to establish in 1975.<sup>18</sup> The Assembly asked UNDP, in collaboration with the UNCTAD secretariat, to manage the Fund during the interim period. It appealed to all international organizations and financial institutions as well as potential donors to provide the financial resources to make the Fund operational in the interim period, and it called on the Secretary-General to convene a pledging conference. States were called upon to contribute generously.

The Statute provided, inter alia, that the Fund would provide resources and assistance to offset the disadvantages of additional transport and transit costs to the land-locked developing countries, to reduce these costs, and to improve transit and transport arrangements. Assistance from the Fund was not to serve as a means of interference in the internal affairs of recipient countries and was not to be influenced by the nature of those countries' economic, social and political systems. The Fund's resources were to consist of voluntary contributions by Governments, international organizations and private sources, and pledging conferences were to be convened by the Secretary-General.

A Board of Governors, numbering 36, would formulate the policies and procedures of the Fund. The Board was to report annually to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. It was empowered to establish an Executive Committee to supervise operations on a continuous basis. The chief officer of the Fund was the Executive Director, who would be appointed by the Secretary-General.

To carry out its purposes, the Fund was empowered to make grants and loans and, as appropriate, to participate in investments and to allocate assistance in kind. Recipient countries were to ensure the effective utilization of resources provided by the Fund and to report fully on this utilization.

(For text of resolution, and of the Statute, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Resolution 31/177 was adopted by a recorded vote of 115 to 0, with 19 abstentions, as recommended by the Second Committee, where it was approved by 82 votes to 0, with 20 abstentions, on 10 December. The sponsors were Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Burundi, the Central African Empire, Chad, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, Mongolia, Nepal, the Niger, Paraguay, Rwanda, Swaziland, Uganda, the Upper Volta, Zaire and Zambia.

Speaking in explanation of the vote, several Members, including Canada, Finland and Sweden, expressed reservations about the usefulness of establishing many special funds. The United States said it believed the objectives of the Fund could be better achieved through existing organs. The members of the European Economic Community and New Zealand said that they still held the reservalions they had expressed at the time the Assembly decided to establish the Fund.

Other measures in favour of land-locked developing countries

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/157 proposing specific action in favour of land-locked developing countries. By this resolution, the Assembly, inter alia, asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, the land-locked countries and the United Nations specialized agencies, to find ways and means of improving the economic situation in land-locked countries through the urgent implementation of two UNCTAD resolutions by which UNCTAD had, among other things, called for specific actions such as cancellation of the official debts of land-locked developing countries and highly concessional terms of relief for them.

The Assembly asked Member States and the entire international community to give special attention to the trade requirements of land-locked developing countries, including the possible provision of preferential treatment of their goods. It invited the appropriate organs of the United Nations system and the regional development banks to pay particular attention to the transit problems of land-locked countries in financing infrastructural projects. It urged developed countries and others in a position to do so to provide technical and financial assistance as grants or on concessional terms for the construction, improvement and maintenance of transit roads. It called upon all Governments to invite and urge shipowners, members of liner conferences and insurance companies to establish freight rates and premiums for land-locked developing countries that would encourage the expansion of their trade and the promotion of non-traditional exports. Finally, the Assembly invited all Member States and competent international organizations to assist the land-locked countries in facilitating the exercise of their right of access to and from the sea.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 7 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, where it was approved by 85 votes to 0, with 15 abstentions, on 10 December. The sponsors were Afghanistan, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Burundi, Chad, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, Nepal, the Niger, Paraguay, Rwanda, Singapore, Swaziland, Uganda, the Upper Volta, Zaire and Zambia.

An oral amendment by the Federal Republic of Germany and a drafting amendment by Colombia were accepted by the sponsors.

A separate vote was taken in the Second Committee and also in the plenary on the provision by which the Assembly called for assistance to the land-locked developing countries in facilitating the exercise of their right of free access to and from the sea. It was approved in the Second Committee by a recorded vote of 37 to 3, with 78 abstentions. The Assembly adopted it by a vote of 42 to 3, with 84 abstentions.

Speaking on this provision, many Members, including Algeria, the Gambia, Guinea, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, the Libyan Arab Republic, Mauritania, Nigeria, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Tunisia and Yemen, said that the question of free access to the sea was being negotiated in other fora, in particular the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea; some of them considered that the matter should therefore not be taken up by the General Assembly. Others, including India, Kenya, Pakistan and the United Republic of Cameroon, said that the exercise by land-locked countries of free access to and from the sea was contrary to the principle of national sovereignty and was not acceptable. A number of Members expressed the view that the question of access to the sea should be settled on a bilateral basis; these included China, Japan, Morocco, Peru and Turkey.

Measures to aid island developing countries

On 21 December 1976, the General Assembly adopted resolution 31/156 concerning island developing countries. Recalling earlier relevant resolutions, and in particular a resolution adopted by UNCTAD at its fourth session in May 1976, the Assembly invited the executive heads of organizations in the United Nations system, especially UNDP, to continue their efforts for those countries and to incorporate in their regional and interregional programmes the relevant recommendations adopted by the fourth session of UNCTAD.

The Assembly urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to support in their assistance programmes the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries within the framework of those countries' plans and priorities, and it asked the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the subject in 1977.

The resolution, sponsored by the Bahamas, Bahrain, Barbados, Cyprus, Fiji, Jamaica, Madagascar, Maldives, Malta, Mauritius, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, Trinidad and Tobago, and Uganda, was approved without a vote in the Second Committee on 8 December, following oral drafting amendments by the sponsors and the Federal Republic of Germany. It was adopted without a vote by the Assembly, as recommended by the Second Committee.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the representative of Bulgaria, on behalf also of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, pointed out that reservations which had been expressed by those countries on some of the provisions of the UNCTAD resolution, especially on the debt question, remained unchanged. The United States considered that the resolution would have been more appropriately worded if it had generally urged Governments of countries in a position to do so to lend their support.

Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour

The Tripartite World Conference on Employment, Income Distribution, Social Progress and the International Division of Labour (also known as the World Employment Conference) was held in Geneva, Switzerland, from 4 to 17 June 1976, in accordance with a 1974 resolution of the International Labour Conference. It was attended by representatives of labour, management and Governments.

The World Employment Conference adopted by acclamation, subject to reservations by some countries, a Declaration of Principles and a Programme of Action.

By the Declaration of Principles, the Conference, inter alia, expressed the conviction that the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade needed to be complemented by a programme of action to guide international and national development efforts towards fulfilling the basic needs of all peoples, particularly the elementary needs of the lowest income groups. It pointed out that the International Labour Organisation, particularly through its World Employment Programme, had a direct responsibility for elaborating such a strategy with regard to the achievement of full productive employment in decent working conditions, and for ensuring respect for freedoms and rights of association and collective bargaining.

The Programme of Action contained sections on: basic needs; international manpower movements and employment; technologies for productive employment operation in developing countries; active manpower policies and adjustment assistance in developed countries; and the role of transnational enterprises in employment creation in the developing countries.

In the area of basic needs, the Conference recommended that ILO undertake promotion of short-term and quick employment-generating programmes that would have an immediate impact on the prevailing levels of poverty and waste of human resources. The Conference also recommended that a portion of the $ 1,000 million International Fund for Agricultural Development (see pp. 468-69) be used for generating employment in the rural sector. It asked that policies required to meet basic needs be incorporated in the strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

In the field of manpower movements and employment, the Conference said that the aim of national and international policies should be: to provide more attractive alternatives to migration in the country of origin; to protect migrants and their families from difficulties and distress which sometimes follow migration; and to take care that neither migration nor its alternatives were prejudicial to the rest of the population or harmful to economic and social development in either the country of origin or the country of employment.

Action on both national and international levels was recommended in regard to technologies for productive employment creation in developing countries. The Conference said that promotion of research should be a fundamental priority to increase the national technological capacity of developing countries and that international agencies, bilateral and multilateral aid programmes and transnational corporations should devote resources and technical assistance to complement the efforts of developing countries.

Concerning manpower policies and adjustment assistance in developed countries, the Conference stressed that the Governments of developed countries should pursue a determined policy to achieve and maintain full employment, while continuing to pursue and expand trade liberalization policies. For its part, ILO should contribute to the exchange of information and experience on the functioning and problems of active manpower policies and to the improvement of an international safeguard system covering employment and income guarantees, fair labour standards and adjustment measures.

The Conference was unable to reach a consensus on the role of transnational enterprises in developing countries. Some Governments stressed their positive aspects, such as direct employment creation, the linkage effects on the economy and the creation of social services. Others stated that transnational enterprises were responsible for worldwide economic imbalance, that they infringed the sovereignty of States and that they sometimes tended to constitute monopolies and engage in market sharing and price fixing.

Employers' representatives said it was not possible for transnational enterprises to solve the problems of employment and meet the basic needs of the world, but that such enterprises had a contribution to make in that field. Although direct creation of employment by transnational enterprises was limited, the indirect effects were significant and could stimulate national economic development and know-how.

Labour representatives expressed the concerns and preoccupations of trade unions and workers with regard to the effects of the activities of transnational enterprises on employment and on development in general. They considered that ILO, within the framework of a reform of the mechanisms for examining questions concerning violations of trade union freedom, should provide for a procedure to be applied to transnational corporations.

The report of the Conference was considered by the Economic and Social Council at its mid-1976 session. In the Council's Special Economic Committee, the Group of 77 developing member States belonging to the Economic and Social Council introduced a draft resolution by which the Council would, inter alia, urge ILO to pursue and intensify its activities in line with the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted at the Conference and with the aim of developing and implementing policies for the satisfaction of basic needs, with particular emphasis on the promotion of quick, short-term and adequate productive employment-generating programmes of a lasting character, in the rural, urban and urban informal sectors, that would make an immediate impact on the prevailing levels of poverty and massive waste of human resources.

The Council would, by this resolution, urge the organizations in the United Nations system to co-operate fully with ILO in that endeavour and would ask developed countries to increase aid to and facilitate access to technology by developing countries that were implementing strategies for the satisfaction of basic needs. The Council would also recommend that the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) review, monitor and report annually on the work of the organizations of the United Nations system in those fields.

The sponsors subsequently withdrew the draft resolution and proposed instead a draft decision by which the Council would take note of the report of the Conference and transmit it to the General Assembly. The Committee approved the draft decision without a vote on 4 August, and it was adopted by the Council the following day, also without a vote, as decision 182(LXI).

The General Assembly considered the report of the Conference at its 1976 session. A draft resolution sponsored by Austria, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, Greece, Iraq, Jordan, Mali, Mauritania, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, the Philippines, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Sweden, Tunisia, Uganda and Yemen was approved without objection in the Second Committee on 9 December and adopted without a vote by the Assembly on 21 December as resolution 31/176.

By the preambular paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly referred to earlier relevant resolutions and to fundamental economic and social objectives of the United Nations, such as full productive employment and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Assembly took note with satisfaction of the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the Tripartite World Conference and requested ILO to submit a special report to the Economic and Social Council on measures for implementation of the Programme of Action. It also asked the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps, through ACC, with a view to promoting and co-ordinating active participation by the various organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system in implementing the Programme of Action. It further asked the Economic and Social Council to appraise the activities of the system in the light of the Programme of Action and to report to the Assembly thereon in 1977.

The Netherlands and Sweden (on behalf of the Nordic group of countries) expressed their support for the proposed strategies for satisfying basic needs in the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action. They emphasized the need for action by individual countries at the national level. Pakistan said that the developing countries lacked the necessary resources not only to carry out social development programmes but even to survive. Only with the establishment of a new international economic order could they practise policies that would benefit their people. The representative of China observed that his country had not participated in the Tripartite Conference.

World economic survey

The Economic and Social Council had before it at its mid-1976 session the World Economic Survey, 1975, as well as a summary of data relating to performance under the International Development Strategy and summary economic surveys for 1975 of Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, and Latin America. The Secretary-General provided a note explaining that, due to the disturbed situation in Lebanon, it had not been possible to complete a review of recent economic developments in Western Asia.

The World Economic Survey, 1975 summarized data relating to performance under the International Development Strategy during the first half of the Second United Nations Development Decade and examined the implications of the outlook for the second half of the Decade. The instability of world economic conditions in the first half of the 1970s, as compared with those of the 1960s, and the longer-term implications of the pre-eminence of short-term problems were highlighted.

The first chapter of the Survey examined the sources of instability in the first half of the Decade, including the wide swings in the business cycles of major industrial countries that affected demand, the external shocks resulting from the breakdown of the international monetary system, the changes that had occurred in the world food and energy situation, and the extraordinary movements in commodity prices. The adverse impact of the economic fluctuations in the developed market economies on the growth of developing countries and on their external balances was also discussed. The second chapter of the Survey looked ahead to the second half of the Decade to examine what efforts might be needed to improve the world economic situation to the point required for fulfilment of the International Development Strategy and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.<sup>19</sup>

The over-all situation in the first half of the Decade, as reported in the Survey, was one of economic upturn at the beginning of the period followed by very rapid growth and ending in deep recession. Price inflation remained a persistent problem due to the combined effects of poor 1972 harvests in some of the centrally-planned-economy and developing countries, rising raw material prices during the 1972-1973 industrial boom, and a dramatic increase in the price of crude petroleum in 1973-1974. Altogether, the combination of declining production, rising unemployment and price inflation that existed in the developed market economies during the 1974-1975 recession not only created problems within those countries but also unfavourably affected development prospects for the developing nations.

The annual growth rate of the world gross domestic product accelerated from 4.4 per cent in 1971 to 6.6 per cent in 1973 and fell to virtually zero in 1975, averaging out to 3.7 per cent a year over the five-year period. This pattern was followed in each country group, although the swings were most pronounced in the developed market economies. The developing countries achieved an average annual growth rate of 5.5 per cent over the 1971-1975 period which, although slightly above that recorded in the 1960s, fell below the 6 per cent target for the 1970s set by the International Development Strategy. Growth in the petroleum-exporting countries, while following the trend, was at a substantially higher rate than that in other developing countries. For the developing countries combined, the increase in agricultural production was less than the population increase in three of the five years examined and grew at only 2.2 per cent per annum over the 1971-1975 period, only slightly more than half the target rate of 4 per cent. Industrial production fared better: manufacturing output in the developing countries rose by 7.8 per cent a year over the first half of the Decade, only slightly below the Strategy target rate of 8 per cent a year.

As reported in the Survey, world trade at current values increased at an average annual rate of almost 23 per cent during the first half of the 1970s, accelerating from 12 per cent in 1971 to 46 per cent in 1974, followed by a sharp deceleration to about 3 per cent in 1975 (representing a decline in real terms) as a result of the recession in the developed market economies.

Export earnings continued to increase in the industrialized economies in 1975 while declining in the developing countries. The deterioration in the terms of trade of the non-petroleum-exporting developing countries contributed to very substantial trade deficits in 1974 and 1975, which were financed by inflows of grants, loans and investments—mainly from developed market economies but also, after 1973, from petroleum-exporting nations—as well as by far greater recourse to Eurocurrency and commercial bank borrowings. The developing countries' external debt rose steeply to an estimated total of $160,000 million by the end of 1975.

The Economic Survey of Europe in 1975 reviewed the consequences of recession experienced by the industrialized market economies of Europe in 1975: unused capacity and declining industrial production, rising prices and the first significant decline in world trade volume in the post-World War II period. The gross national product of the industrialized Western European countries declined by nearly 3 per cent in 1975 in contrast to an increase of about 2 per cent in 1974, 6 per cent in 1973, and an average growth rate of about 4.5 per cent in the 1960s. Between 1974 and 1975, industrial production declined by about 10 per cent. The components of demand largely responsible for the decline in output in 1975 were stocks and investments.

The Survey reported that prices continued to increase in 1975 but at a slightly lower rate than in the 1973-1974 period. Also, the rise in foreign trade prices decelerated sharply in 1975 following a decline in primary commodity prices as well as a slow-down in the rate of increase in the price of manufactures. This resulted in an improvement in the terms of trade of Western Europe and, combined with a somewhat bigger drop in import than in export volumes, reduced Western Europe's aggregate trade deficit by over $10,000 million in 1975. Most of this improvement was in trade with oil-exporting countries.

Though in most Western European countries employment did not fall as much as might have been expected on the basis of production declines in 1975, unemployment generally reached record levels. In southern Europe especially, unemployment increased rapidly in consequence of the slack labour markets of industrialized Western Europe and the outflow of foreign workers from there.

Because of high inflation rates and fear lest the 1972-1973 experience of overheating be repeated, the economic policies adopted by the Western European Governments remained somewhat cautious in 1975. The Survey warned of the possible consequences of such a stance and suggested further fiscal and monetary stimulation to prevent prolonged stagnation.

The Survey noted that, in contrast to the countries of Western Europe, Eastern Europe and the USSR enjoyed a substantial economic expansion in 1975, although their combined growth rate of 5.1 per cent in net material product fell below the previous year's expansion. A sharp decline in agricultural output, attributable to adverse weather conditions throughout most of the 1974-1975 agricultural year, contributed largely to the slowdown in total growth in the USSR; agricultural production also declined in several other Eastern European countries. The Survey pointed out that the year 1975 marked the conclusion of the five-year plans for 1971-1975 in all the countries of the region. High and sustained growth rates of net material product were achieved throughout the period and the plans' targets were surpassed in all the Eastern European countries. Expansion in industrial production contributed most to the rise in net material product.

The survey of economic and social conditions in Africa for 1975 focused attention on the expected widespread shortfall in the growth of the real gross domestic product in the developing countries of Africa compared with the target figure for the Decade of at least 6 per cent per annum. Average real growth for the developing countries of Africa was 5.1 per cent per year between 1970 and 1974 and estimated at 2 per cent in 1975, giving a five-year average of 4.5 per cent.

The agricultural output of these countries during the period 1970 to 1975 fell well below the target rate of 4 per cent a year set in the Strategy and also below the region's rate of population growth. Severe and extensive drought limited food production, particularly in 1973. The survey concluded that the target was unlikely to be achieved in the 1970s. Manufacturing output expanded by an average annual rate of about 7 per cent over the 1970-1975 period, with much of the growth in the oil-exporting countries.

The survey emphasized the importance of the external sector for African developing countries and pointed out the declining position of their external balances. While import values soared in 1974 and 1975, largely due to higher oil costs, exports, after rising in 1974 on the basis of favourable commodity prices, fell in 1975. The growth rate of import volumes also exceeded that of export volumes over the 1970-1975 period.

The Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1975 reviewed recent developments and emerging policy issues in the region in 1974-1975 and examined in depth the specific problem of rural development. In its general review, the Survey reported that in 1974 and 1975 growth in the gross national product of the developing countries of the region fell far below the targets set in the Strategy, reflecting the combined effects of the recession in developed market economies, the reduced availability of imports and stagnant agricultural production.

An adverse shift in the terms of trade, caused by higher import (mainly petroleum and food) costs and lower export volumes and prices, had resulted in more than doubling the combined trade deficit of non-oil-exporting developing countries in Asia and the Pacific, from $4,400 million in 1974 to $10,100 million in 1975. The rate of price inflation, which reached record levels in the region in 1974, decelerated in 1975, partly as a result of domestic policies and a fall in foreign-exchange reserves.

The situations in the three developed economies in the region—Australia, Japan and New Zealand—were also influenced by world economic trends, resulting in low rates of real growth and high inflation rates in Australia and New Zealand during 1975. Japan's gross national product fell in 1974 and only negligible growth was secured in 1975.

A report on the Latin American economy in 1975 cited a drop in the rate of economic expansion to 2.6 per cent from an average rate of growth of 6.7 per cent per year over the period 1971-1974. The deceleration in 1975 was most marked in the larger countries of the region, especially Argentina, Brazil and Mexico; the oil-exporting countries (Bolivia, Ecuador and Venezuela) on the other hand, recorded faster growth in 1975 than in the year before.

Declines in the growth rates in the manufacturing and construction industries were primarily responsible for the drop in the pace of economic expansion in Latin America in 1975. Agricultural production also lagged, although by less than other goods-producing sectors. In 19 of the 22 countries of the region the reduction in the growth rate of productive activity in 1975 was accompanied by a reduction in the price-inflation rate from the extremely high levels of 1974.

The fall in some commodity prices and general economic stagnation halted the expansion in Latin America's external trade in 1975. A 7 per cent drop in the value of exports (compared with a 71 per cent increase in 1974), together with a decline in volume, caused an over-all reduction of about 11 per cent in the value of exports of goods. The rate of increase in the value of imports was 7 per cent in 1975. The resulting deterioration in terms of trade was 16 per cent.

On 5 August 1976, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2042(LXI) dealing with development and international economic co-operation. By one part of the preamble of the resolution, the Council noted with concern the view of many of its members that an inconsistency existed between the spirit and directives of General Assembly resolutions concerning a new international economic order and some of the documentation prepared by the Secretariat, including the World Economic Survey, 1975. (For text of resolution, see p. 333.)

Australia, the United States and the United Kingdom (speaking for the members of the European Economic Community) expressed reservations on this provision. The United States said it supported the Secretariat's impartiality and integrity. Australia did not support the suggestion that Secretariat documentation be made to conform to the spirit of General Assembly resolutions on a new international economic order, since these were not legislative texts and had not been wholly accepted by all Member States. The United Kingdom remarked on the lack of known precedent for the expression of an opinion about a document of which the Council had not been formally invited to take note.

Speaking on behalf of the Group of 77 developing States members of the Economic and Social Council, Pakistan said that while the developing countries appreciated the impartiality and ability of the Secretariat as a whole, they felt that the general tone and thrust of the documents produced over the preceding two years had not been in keeping with the resolutions of the General Assembly on a new international economic order, in that they did not give due weight to the needs and interests of the developing world.

Preparations for a new development strategy

The General Assembly in 1976 considered the question of preparations for a new international development strategy. On 13 December, on the proposal of its Vice-Chairman following informal consultations, the Second Committee approved, without a vote, a draft resolution on the question, which the Assembly adopted, also without a vote, on 21 December as resolution 31/182.

By this resolution, the Assembly—recalling earlier resolutions on the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade and on the establishment of a new international economic order, as well as the results achieved at a number of major United Nations conferences on world economic and social problems—expressed its awareness of the need to introduce profound changes in economic relations between developed and developing countries. It asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee for Development Planning, ACC and the organizations of the United Nations system, to collect data and information relevant to the formulation of a new international development strategy, taking into account inter alia the resolutions on the establishment of a new international economic order; he was asked to report on this information to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council in 1977. He was also asked to ensure that studies and reports in the field of development and economic co-operation were in accordance with the objectives of those resolutions, and to utilize all appropriate research institutions and expertise, especially those of the developing countries, in preparing those studies and reports.

A similar draft resolution on the same question, sponsored by the Group of 77, was withdrawn.

Speaking in explanation of vote on resolution 31/182, the representative of the Netherlands expressed regret that the resolution called for only a part of the action he felt was necessary. France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and Sweden said that the preparations for a new international development strategy were too important not to be dealt with thoroughly in 1977 by an inter-governmental body, specifically the Economic and Social Council, which could give the Secretary-General valuable guidance. The Netherlands would also have preferred to stress more specifically the interdisciplinary character of the preparations.

The United Kingdom considered that the general guidelines given by the resolution were adequate to enable the technical work for the next development decade to start. Nevertheless, there should be a clear understanding about what work would be undertaken subsequently.

Report of Committee for Development Planning

The Committee for Development Planning, at its session held from 29 March to 7 April 1976, considered development performance, changes and prospects in the framework of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade. In its report, the Committee expressed the opinion that over-all performance thus far in the Decade had been disappointing. After a fast start in the first three years, aggregate economic growth of developing countries had been trailing off ominously. Sectorally, growth had been poorly balanced. Agricultural production had been increasing at a slow rate. Worse still were the widening disparities among the developing countries. The position of the poorest countries continued to worsen relatively. Thus, the International Development Strategy's promise of alleviating hunger and poverty in their grossest and gravest appearances seemed hollow. The Committee said that, considering the targets set in 1970, the performance of the international community in contributing to the development process was the most disappointing of all.

It was the Committee's view, however, that the targets of the Strategy should not be revised for the remaining years of the Decade. The Strategy was a historical compact, made after exhaustive discussions at the technical and political levels. It contained bench-marks that the world had set itself for measuring the adequacy of its efforts in behalf of development. The need was to revise the performance, not the bench-marks against which the performance was to be measured.

The Committee said that a great deal remained to be done with regard to the flow of international funds to developing countries. The Strategy's targets in that respect called for redoubled effort. Especially important was the target for official development assistance. Financial assistance to developing countries needed to be divorced from political considerations and linked unambiguously to the development requirements of recipient countries. A large and growing proportion of official grants and concessional loans needed to be directed to countries facing acute problems of poverty and under-development.

The Committee pointed out that, of the countries that had been sharing the unhappy convergence of low levels of income, slow economic growth and scant resource transfers, all but a few of the smaller among them were located contiguously in two regions, one stretching across the middle of Africa and the other across southern parts of Asia. The case of those two depressed regions was so extreme in terms of the human suffering it entailed that it became a problem involving the conscience of the whole world, calling for concerted and effective action on a new and dramatic scale.

In the discussion of the report in the Economic Committee of the Economic and Social Council at its mid-1976 session, general agreement was expressed with the views put forward by the Committee for Development Planning regarding the transfer of resources to developing countries and the problems facing countries in the depressed regions of the world. On 20 July, the Economic Committee approved, without a vote, a draft decision proposed by Argentina, which the Council, also without a vote, adopted on 3 August. By the decision (163(LXI)), the Council took note of the report of the Committee for Development Planning and drew the attention of Governments to the comments and recommendations made by that Committee on the transfer of resources to developing countries and on the problems of countries in depressed regions, as well as to the comments made during the Council's deliberations on these subjects.

Budgeting and planning for development

At its mid-1976 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a report on the meeting of the Expert Group on Budgeting and Planning for Development in Developing Countries held in October 1975. The Policy and Programme Co-ordination Committee considered the report and, on 28 July 1976, approved without a vote a draft resolution on the subject sponsored by Bangladesh, Egypt and Pakistan. The Council adopted it, also without a vote, on 3 August as resolution 2018(LXI).

By this resolution, the Council took note of the report and drew the attention of Member States to the importance of early measures being taken to further strengthen and reorient major elements of public financial infrastructures, including public budgeting, taxation, public enterprises, financial institutions and financial management. The Council asked the Secretary-General to formulate specific measures and programme proposals at the international level to assist developing countries in meeting changing demands on their public financial infrastructures and to submit the findings to the Council in 1977. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to initiate appropriate measures to assist developing countries in the training of their personnel in various fields of public finance.

Tax treaties

At its April-May 1976 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a progress report by the Secretary-General on the work of the Group of Experts on Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries at meetings held in December 1973 and from 8 to 19 December 1975. The report also summarized the discussions of the Group that had led to the publication in 1974 of Guidelines for Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries. The report indicated that at its 1975 meetings the Group had begun formulating guidelines on two of the most difficult aspects of tax treaties: exchange of information among tax authorities and the allocation of income and expenses in transactions between enterprises that were related or under common control, including the determination of transfer prices.

A draft resolution on the progress report, sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Nigeria, Pakistan, Thailand, Tunisia, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela, was submitted to the Council in plenary meeting.

During the debate, the representatives who spoke commended the work of the Group of Experts, and the representatives of Austria and Norway, among others, expressed the hope that greater use would be made of this work.

On 13 May the draft resolution was adopted without a vote as resolution 2007(LX). The Council thereby commended the useful work undertaken by the Group of Experts and recommended that the Commission on Transnational Corporations take account of the Group's work in relevant areas and consider utilizing its services as appropriate.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970 containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling further its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, in which it, inter alia, called for an increased, predictable, continuous and increasingly assured flow of concessional financial resources for development on more favourable terms and conditions,

Disturbed by the stagnating flows of official development assistance, which during the Second United Nations Development Decade has remained well below the target stipulated in the International Development Strategy,

Recognizing that increased volume, predictability and continuity of such flows are necessary to enhance socio-economic progress and promote more systematic and effective development planning and implementation in developing countries,

Noting with concern that the need for long-term sustained development assistance has become more urgent in the light of increasing economic difficulties which have hampered the continuity of the economic growth and long-term development plans of many developing countries,

Recalling also its resolution 3489(XXX) of 12 December 1975, in which it requested the Secretary-General to submit a study on ways and means of accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries on a predictable, assured and continuous basis,

1. Takes note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General in response to General Assembly resolution 3489(XXX);

2. Reiterates its appeal to developed countries which have not yet done so to meet the target of 0.7 per cent of the gross national product for official development assistance set out in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade;

3. Urges developed countries to accelerate the transfer of real resources to developing countries on a predictable, continuous and increasingly assured basis and, towards that end, to consider seriously the various suggestions proposed in the report of the Secretary-General, including wider implementation of the current practices of some developed countries, particularly:

(a) The pledging of development assistance on a multiyear basis, in order to provide developing countries with more reliable projections of aid on a longer-term basis to facilitate their development planning;

(b) The appropriation of development assistance in such a manner as to prevent the erosion in the real value of aid in terms of the national currency of the individual donor country;

(c) The endowment of development assistance with non-lapsing authority to ensure that budgetary allocations unexpended at the end of the fiscal year for which they are appropriated are carried forward;

(cf) The reallocation to development aid budgets of both interest and amortization receipts derived from development loans;

4. Recommends that developed countries give serious consideration to the establishment of a development tax to be earmarked for international development assistance;

5. Further recommends that appropriate policies be developed further to increase flows of private capital to developing countries, including the examination and where appropriate, the revision of rules and regulations concerning access of developing countries to private money and capital markets to the extent that the situation in each country permits;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session and decides to consider the report at that session under a separate item.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974 and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975,

Further recalling resolution 94(IV) of 31 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Noting with grave concern that heavy debt-service payments, current account deficits stemming from maladjustments in the world economy, inadequate balance-of-payments support and long-term development assistance, coupled with tight conditions and the high cost of loans in international capital markets and difficulties of access to markets in developed countries for exports of developing countries, as well as declining real prices of primary commodities exported by developing countries, have, among other things, combined to impose a serious and critical strain on the import capacity and reserves of developing countries, thus jeopardizing their development process,

Aware that the deterioration in the terms of trade of developing countries and the high-cost short-term borrowing to which they have had to resort recently have seriously aggravated their debt burden,

Convinced that the situation facing the developing countries can be mitigated by decisive and urgent relief measures in respect of both their official and commercial debts and that these measures are essential to restore the momentum of growth lost during the economic crisis and to achieve the targets of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Acknowledging that, in the present circumstances, there are sufficient common elements in the debt-servicing difficulties faced by various developing countries to warrant the adoption of general measures relating to their existing debt,

Recognizing the especially difficult circumstances and debt burden of the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked and island developing countries,

1. Considers that it is integral to the establishment of the new international economic order to give a new orientation to procedures of reorganization of debt owed to developed countries away from the past experience of a primarily commercial framework towards a developmental approach;

2. Affirms the urgency of reaching a general and effective solution to the debt problems of developing countries;

3. Agrees that future debt negotiations should be considered within the context of internationally agreed development targets, national development objectives and international financial co-operation, and debt reorganization of interested developing countries carried out in accordance with the objectives, procedures and institutions evolved for that purpose;

4. Stresses that all these measures should be considered and implemented in a manner not prejudicial to the creditworthiness of any developing country;

5. Urges the Conference on International Economic Co-operation to reach an early agreement on the question of immediate and generalized debt relief of the official debts of the developing countries, in particular of the most seriously affected, least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, and on the reorganization of the entire system of debt renegotiations to give it a developmental rather than a commercial orientation;

6. Requests the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its ministerial session to be held in 1977, to review the results of negotiations on this question in other fora and to reach agreement on concrete measures to provide an immediate solution to the debt problems of developing countries, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session.

A/31/428. Report of Second Committee.

Resolution 31/119, as recommended by Second Committee, A/31/428, adopted without vote by Assembly on 16 December 1976, meeting 101.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3177(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973, 3241(XXIX) of 29 November 1974 and 3442(XXX) of 9 December 1975, and resolution 92(IV) of 30 May 1976 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on measures of support by developed countries and international organizations for the programme of economic co-operation among developing countries,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation.

Noting the programme of economic co-operation among developing countries, adopted at the Third Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, held at Manila from 26 January to 7 February 1976,

Noting also the decisions of the non-aligned movement on economic co-operation among developing countries and, in particular, the Action Programme for Economic Co-operation and other relevant resolutions adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976,

Noting further the measures set out in the report of the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Mexico City from 13 to 22 September 1976,

Noting that the developing countries have set in motion an irreversible trend towards the consolidation of their unity and mutual co-operation and noting their desire to maintain their efforts to strengthen further such co-operation and solidarity,

Recognizing that, in the context of global economic co-operation, the achievement of the goal of greater co-operation and collective self-reliance espoused by the developing countries will not only promote their economic development, but also facilitate effective and meaningful negotiations with the developed countries on the establishment of a new international economic order,

Stressing that fundamental structural changes in existing international economic relations on the basis of equity and justice are important in providing an enduring solution to the world economic problems so essential for the promotion of international peace and security,

Reaffirming that the efforts towards mutual co-operation by the developing countries do not diminish the responsibilities of all other countries for establishing just and equitable economic relations between them and the developing countries and for contributing to the development of the developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on economic co-operation among developing countries;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to study the relevant decisions on economic co-operation among developing countries, including the Programme of Action adopted by the Third Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, the Action Programme for Economic Co-operation adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and the report of the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, with a view to formulating appropriate support measures for the realization of the objectives of economic co-operation among developing countries, and to submit a report thereon, together with the organizational and financial implications, to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to include in the medium-term plan of the United Nations an intersectoral presentation of the activities envisaged to implement the relevant United Nations resolutions on economic co-operation among developing countries and, in co-operation with the organizations of the United Nations system, to secure the same kind of intersectoral presentation on a system-wide basis;

4. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in accordance with their established procedures and practices, to support measures of economic co-operation among developing countries, including, as and when requested, the continued provision of the necessary secretariat support services and other suitable arrangements to facilitate the holding of meetings by the developing countries in pursuance of the objectives of economic co-operation among developing countries;

5. Welcomes the establishment by the Trade and Development Board, in decision 142(XVI) of 23 October 1976, of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries as an open-ended main committee of the Board to consider and recommend measures to provide, in the field of competence of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as and when requested, support and assistance to developing countries in strengthening and enlarging their mutual co-operation at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3362(S-VII) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, while taking all the necessary measures requested by the Trade and Development Board in its decision 142(XVI), to assist developing countries, at their request and after consideration and appropriate action by the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, in carrying out studies on specific issues relating to trade and development, especially those relating to the promotion of trade and financial co-operation among developing countries, and to make those studies available to all delegations;

7. Urges developed countries to provide appropriate support, as and when requested from them by developing countries, for the implementation of measures of economic co-operation among developing countries;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report to the General Assembly, at its thirty-second session, on all measures taken by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in support of measures of economic co-operation among developing countries.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3311(XXIX) of 14 December 1974 in which it requested the Secretary-General to submit to it at its special session devoted to development and international economic co-operation a comprehensive study on the transit problems of the land-locked developing countries and a complete study on the establishment of a fund in favour of the land-locked developing countries,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1755(LIV) of 16 May 1973 in which the Council defined the scope of a complete study on the establishment of a fund,

Recalling further the decision taken at its seventh special session and its resolution 3504(XXX) of 15 December 1975, in which it decided to establish immediately a special fund for the land-locked developing countries to compensate for their additional transport and transit costs,

Reaffirming that the land-locked developing countries, as a result of their geographical limitations, are doubly disadvantaged, especially with regard to their additional transport, transit and transshipment costs,

Having considered the draft statute of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries contained in the note by the Secretary-General prepared in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 3504(XXX),

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for the preparation of proposals on the organizational arrangements of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, including the draft statute;

2. Approves the statute of the Fund, annexed to the present resolution;

3. Requests the United Nations Development Programme, in close collaboration with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to manage the Fund during the interim period and report on its activities to the General Assembly at its thirty-second session;

4. Appeals to all international organizations and financial institutions, as well as potential donor countries, to provide the necessary financial resources in order to make the Fund operational during the interim period;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to convene the pledging conference as envisaged in article 3, paragraph 2, of the statute;

6. Calls upon Member States and the entire international community to contribute generously to the Fund.

ANNEX

Statute of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

INTRODUCTION

The United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries (hereinafter referred to as the Fund) shall operate as an organ of the General Assembly in accordance with the provisions set forth below.

Article 1 PURPOSE

In order to compensate the land-locked developing countries for their additional transport and transit costs, the Fund shall:

- (a) Provide resources to offset the disadvantages created by the additional transport and transit costs facing the land-locked developing countries;
- (b) Provide financial and technical assistance for projects aimed at reducing the transit and related transport costs incurred by the land-locked developing countries, and at other improvements in the transit and related transport facilities and arrangements for these countries;
- (c) Provide financial support for studies, to be carried out by appropriate United Nations organs, of existing transit and related transport facilities and arrangements for land-locked developing countries, and of ways of improving them;
- (cf) Co-ordinate its activities with:
  - (i) The programme of studies and technical assistance concerning the transit and related transport needs of land-locked developing countries being carried out by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions;
  - (ii) Related programmes in the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat and other United Nations bodies;
  - (iii) Programmes of technical and financial assistance on behalf of land-locked developing countries in the United Nations Development Programme and other multilateral and bilateral assistance agencies.

Article 2 GUIDING PRINCIPLES

1. The provision of assistance shall be in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

2. Assistance from the Fund shall not serve as a means for economic and political interference in the internal affairs of recipient countries and shall not be influenced by considerations relating to the nature of their economic, social and political systems.

Article 3 RESOURCES

1. The resources of the Fund shall consist of voluntary contributions in cash or in kind by Governments. The Fund shall also be empowered to receive contributions from international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, and from other private sources.

2. Contributions to the Fund may also be made by means of pledging conferences convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the first pledging conference to be convened not later than twelve months after the adoption of the statute of the Fund. Contributions as pledged to the Fund shall be payable within the twelve months following the pledge.

3. Cash contributions shall be made in convertible currencies or in currency readily usable by the Fund.

4. Contributions shall be made without limitation to a specific recipient country.

Article 4 ORGANIZATION AND SUPERVISION

1. The policies and procedures of the Fund shall be formulated by a Board of Governors, composed of representatives of thirty-six States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency, elected by the General Assembly keeping in view, inter alia, the need for balance among the representation of the beneficiary land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours, on the one hand, and potential donor countries, both developed and developing, on the other. States elected to the Board of Governors shall do their utmost to ensure that their representatives possess the expertise required for the efficient operation of the Fund.

2. The members of the Board of Governors shall be elected for a term of three years, provided, however, that, of the members elected at the first election, the terms of one third of the members shall expire at the end of one year and the terms of a further one third of the members at the end of two years. Retiring members shall be eligible for re-election.

3. The Board of Governors shall report annually to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. The comments of the Council on the report shall also be transmitted to the Assembly.

4. The Board of Governors shall meet at least once a year and as often as may be necessary for the conduct of the work of the Fund.

5. The Board of Governors may, in the light of requirements, establish an Executive Committee which shall supervise the operations of the Fund on a continuous basis and report to the Board on its activities at regular intervals. Beneficiary land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours, on the one hand, and potential donor countries, on the other, shall be represented on the Executive Committee in proportions similar to such representation on the Board of Governors.

Article 5 QUORUM AND VOTING

1. A majority of the members of the Board of Governors or of the Executive Committee shall constitute a quorum.

2. Each member of the Board of Governors and each member of the Executive Committee shall have one vote.

3. Decisions on all questions shall as far as possible be made on the basis of consensus. In the absence of consensus, decisions shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting. For the purpose of the present article, the phrase "members present and voting" means members present and casting an affirmative or negative vote. Members which abstain from voting are considered as not voting.

Article 6 MANAGEMENT

1. The chief executive officer of the Fund, who shall be appointed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations subject to confirmation by the General Assembly, shall be the Executive Director of the Fund.

2. The Executive Director shall discharge his functions under the guidance and supervision of the Board of Governors and the Executive Committee, if established, in whose deliberations he will participate without the right to vote. He shall exercise over-all responsibility for the day-to-day operations of the Fund and shall report directly, on a regular basis, to the Board of Governors, or through the Executive Committee, if established, on the operations of the Fund.

3. The Executive Director shall be assisted by a small secretariat within the framework of the United Nations Secretariat. The Fund may enter into management contracts with the competent international organizations, including the regional development banks, to conduct its operations. The contracts shall ensure the full and effective control, at all times, of the Fund over the operations. The Executive Director shall make effective use of the existing facilities of the United Nations Secretariat, including those of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the regional commissions and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, as well as those of the United Nations Development Programme. Where appropriate, the Fund may also use the facilities of the specialized agencies.

Article 7 MODES OF OPERATION

1. To carry out its purposes as specified in article 1, the Fund is empowered to make grants and loans, including loans on concessionary terms, and, as appropriate, to participate in investments and to allocate assistance in kind under its control and direction.

2. The Fund shall ensure an equitable distribution of its resources, taking into account the needs of each of the land-locked developing countries as well as relevant problems at the regional and subregional levels.

Article 8 RESPONSIBILITIES OF GOVERNMENTS OF RECIPIENT COUNTRIES

Governments of recipient countries shall ensure the effective utilization of the resources provided by the Fund, shall maintain the records required by the Fund in connexion with the administration of its financial and technical assistance and shall report fully on the utilization of such assistance.

Article 9 FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION

1. The financial regulations for the Fund shall be drafted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations in consultation with the Executive Director of the Fund, for approval by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Board of Governors. In the preparation of these regulations, account shall be taken of the special requirements of the operations of the Fund.

2. Pending the approval by the General Assembly of financial regulations for the Fund, the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations shall apply.

Article 10 FUTURE INSTITUTIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

The General Assembly shall review, in the light of experience, the effectiveness and further evolution of these institutional arrangements with a view to deciding upon such changes and improvements as may be necessary in order to meet fully the purposes of the Fund.
