Annex to the letter dated 11 December 2015 from the Permanent Representative of Azerbaijan to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General

Memorandum concerning the International Day of Commemoration and Dignity of the Victims of the Crime of Genocide and of the Prevention of This Crime

The Republic of Azerbaijan supported the adoption of General Assembly resolution 69/323 on the International Day of Commemoration and Dignity of the Victims of the Crime of Genocide and of the Prevention of This Crime.

As a country that throughout its history has repeatedly been the target of genocidal acts by Armenia and Armenian extremist forces, Azerbaijan shares the pain of the other nations that suffered acts of genocide and supports the commemorative events honouring the victims and survivors of the Holocaust and the genocides in Rwanda and Bosnia.

The Republic of Azerbaijan attaches great importance to the implementation of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. The Government has spared no efforts to educate on the lessons of the genocide committed both against the Azerbaijani population and against other nations, to prevent their recurrence in the future and support the survivors.

In remembrance of the victims of genocide committed by Armenians against Azerbaijanis in 1918, a special Decree on the genocide of the Azerbaijani people was issued on 26 March 1998 by the then President of the Republic of Azerbaijan, Mr. Heydar Aliyev (see attachment). The Decree proclaims 31 March as the Day of Genocide of the Azerbaijanis.

Unfortunately, the modern generation of Azerbaijan has also had to face crimes of war and genocide. On the night of 25 and 26 February 1992, the Armenian armed forces seized Khojaly and perpetrated a murderous campaign against the Azerbaijani population, with 613 civilians killed, including 106 women, 63 children and 70 elderly persons. Another 1,000 people were wounded and 1,275 were taken hostage. To date, 150 people from Khojaly still remain missing. The aim of this intentional slaughter of the people of Khojaly was their mass extermination, only because they were Azerbaijanis, and served Armenia's goal of further occupation and ethnic cleansing of the Azerbaijani territories.

The Government and civil society of Azerbaijan take actions to honour the victims of genocide, including the victims of Khojaly, with 26 February designated as the Day of Khojaly Genocide by decision No. 791 of 24 February 1994 of the Milli Majlis (Parliament) of Azerbaijan. Since 8 May 2008, the International Awareness Campaign "Justice for Khojaly" has been conducted by Ms. Leyla Aliyeva, Vice-President of the Heydar Aliyev Foundation, the leading non-governmental organization in Azerbaijan.

The Campaign aims at raising international awareness of the crimes committed in Khojaly and at bringing its perpetrators to justice and thus honouring the victims and survivors. Events organized within the framework of the Campaign are designed to galvanize actions to prevent and combat genocide, ethnic cleansing and racial, ethnic or religious discrimination.

As the most heinous of acts, the crime of genocide sets forth the moral obligation of all States to end impunity by holding the perpetrators accountable and to renew their commitment to preventing, combating and halting any future act of genocide.

Decree of the President of the Republic of Azerbaijan, Heydar Aliyev, on the genocide of the Azerbaijani people

Azerbaijan's attainment of independence made it possible to recreate an objective picture of our people's historical past.

The long years of secrecy during which the truth could not be told are being revealed, and the true nature of facts that were falsified at the time is coming to light.

The act of genocide that has been repeatedly committed against the Azerbaijani people, which for a long time was not subjected to proper political and legal assessment, is one of these unopened pages of history.

The dismemberment of the Azerbaijani people and the division of our historical lands began with the treaties of Gulistan and Turkmanchay, signed in 1813 and 1828. The national tragedy of the divided Azerbaijani people continued with the occupation of their lands. As a result of the implementation of this policy, a very rapid mass resettlement of Armenians in Azerbaijani lands took place. The policy of genocide became an integral part of the occupation of Azerbaijani lands.

Despite the fact that the Armenians who settled in the territory of the Erevan, Nakhichevan and Karabakh khanates were a minority in comparison with the Azerbaijanis living there, they were able, with the help of their protectors, to create an administrative and territorial unit known as the "Armenian region". This artificial territorial division in essence created the preconditions for implementing the policy of expelling Azerbaijanis from their lands and annihilating them. The concept of "greater Armenia" began to be propagated. In order to "justify" the attempts to create this artificial state on Azerbaijani land, large-scale programmes were conducted for the purpose of creating a false history of the Armenian people. The distortion of the history of Azerbaijan and of the Caucasus as a whole was an important part of these programmes.

Inspired by dreams of creating "greater Armenia", the Armenian usurpers, not even caring to conceal their intentions, carried out between 1905 and 1907 a series of large-scale bloody actions against Azerbaijanis. The atrocities committed by the Armenians began in Baku and then extended over the whole of Azerbaijan and Azerbaijani villages in the territory of present-day Armenia. Hundreds of settlements were destroyed and wiped off the face of the earth, and thousands of Azerbaijanis were barbarically killed. The organizers of these events, by preventing the truth of what had happened from being revealed and subjected to a proper political and legal assessment, and concealing their reckless territorial claims, created a negative image of Azerbaijanis.

Taking advantage of the situation following the end of the First World War and the February and October 1917 revolutions in Russia, the Armenian nationalists began to pursue the implementation of their plans under the banner of Bolshevism. Under the watchword of combating counter-revolutionary elements, in March 1918, the Baku commune began to implement a criminal plan aimed at eliminating Azerbaijanis from the whole of Baku province. The crimes perpetrated by Armenians in those days have imprinted themselves forever in the memory of the Azerbaijani people. Solely because of their ethnic affiliation, thousands of peaceful Azerbaijanis were slaughtered. The Armenians set fire to homes and burned people alive. They destroyed national architectural treasures, schools, hospitals, mosques and other facilities, and left the greater part of Baku in ruins.

The genocide of the Azerbaijanis was carried out with particular cruelty in Baku, Shemakha and Guba districts and in the Karabakh, Zangezur, Nakhichevan, Lenkoran and other regions of Azerbaijan. In these areas, the civilian population was exterminated en masse, villages were burned and national cultural monuments were destroyed and obliterated.

After the proclamation of the Azerbaijani Democratic Republic, the events of March 1918 were at the centre of attention. To investigate the tragedy, on 15 July 1918, the Council of Ministers adopted a decision to establish a special commission of inquiry. The commission investigated the March tragedy, studying first the atrocities committed by the Armenians in Shamakhi and the serious crimes committed by them in Erevan province. A special unit was set up in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to inform the international community of the true course of events. In 1919 and 1920, the Azerbaijani Democratic Republic observed 31 March as a national day of mourning. This was in fact the first attempt to make a political assessment of the policy of genocide against Azerbaijanis and of the occupation of our lands for over a century. However, the demise of the Azerbaijani Democratic Republic meant that this work could not be completed.

In 1920, taking advantage of the Sovietization of Transcaucasia for their own foul purposes, the Armenians declared Zangezur and a number of Azerbaijani lands to be part of the territory of the Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic. Subsequently, new means came to be used for the further expansion of the policy of deporting Azerbaijanis from these territories. To this end, the Armenians secured the adoption, on 23 December 1947, of a special decision by the Council of Ministers of the USSR on the resettlement of collective farm workers and other Azerbaijanis from the Armenian SSR to the Kura-Araks lowlands in the Azerbaijani SSR, and between 1948 and 1953, were able to have a mass deportation of Azerbaijanis from our historical lands conducted at the State level.

Beginning in the 1950s, the Armenian nationalists, with the aid of their protectors, began a frenzied campaign of psychological warfare against the Azerbaijani people. In books, magazines and newspapers disseminated periodically in the former Soviet Union, they sought to prove that the most treasured masterpieces of our national culture and the classical legacy of our architecture belonged to the Armenian people. At the same time, they stepped up their efforts to spread a negative image of Azerbaijanis throughout the world. Creating the image of the “unfortunate, unhappy Armenian people”, they deliberately falsified the events that took place in the region at the beginning of the century: having perpetrated genocide against Azerbaijanis, they portrayed themselves as victims of genocide.

Our persecuted compatriots were driven en masse from the town of Erevan, most of the population of which at the beginning of the century consisted of Azerbaijanis, and from other districts of the Armenian SSR. The Armenians grossly violated the rights of Azerbaijanis, made it difficult for them to be educated in their mother tongue and pursued a policy of repression. The historical names of Azerbaijani villages were changed; old toponyms were replaced with modern names on a scale unprecedented in the history of toponymy.

The falsification of Armenian history, the purpose of which was to create a basis for raising Armenian youth in a spirit of chauvinism, became State policy. Our rising generation, brought up in the spirit of the great humanistic ideals of Azerbaijani literature and culture, was targeted for persecution by this extremist Armenian ideology.

The policy of slandering the spiritual values, national honour and dignity of the Azerbaijani people formed the ideological basis for political and military aggression. In the Soviet press, Armenians distorted historical facts, misleading public opinion.

The leaders of the Azerbaijani Republic at that time did not conduct a proper and timely assessment of the anti-Azerbaijani propaganda waged by Armenians taking advantage of the opportunities afforded them by the Soviet regime. In the mid-1980s, this propaganda began to intensify.

The Azerbaijani Republic also did not make the correct political assessment of the expulsion of hundreds of thousands of Azerbaijanis from their historical lands that took place in the initial phase of the so-called Nagorny Karabakh conflict, which began in 1988. The anti-constitutional decision of the Armenians to incorporate the Nagorny Karabakh Autonomous Region of Azerbaijan into the Armenian SSR, thereby removing the Autonomous Region from Azerbaijani jurisdiction by means of the Special Administering Committee, established by Moscow, was met by our people with indignation, and Azerbaijanis were faced with the prospect of taking serious political action. In spite of the fact that the policy of seizing our lands was resolutely denounced at rallies, the Azerbaijani leaders remained passive. This resulted in the movement of troops into Baku in January 1990 in order to suppress the growing popular movement. Hundreds of Azerbaijanis were killed or wounded, mutilated or subjected to various forms of physical pressure.

In February 1992, the Republic of Armenia committed the unprecedented massacre of the population of the town of Khojaly. This bloody tragedy, which became known as the Khojaly genocide, involved the extermination of thousands of Azerbaijanis; the town was razed from the face of the earth.

As a result of the adventurist policy pursued by Armenian nationalist-separatists in Nagorny Karabakh, today more than 1 million of our citizens have been expelled from their homes by Armenian aggressors and forced to live in tents. During the Armenian occupation of 20 per cent of our territory, thousands of our fellow citizens have been killed or disabled.

All of Azerbaijan's tragedies, which took place in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, were accompanied by the seizure of land, and represented various stages of the Armenians' deliberate and systematic policy of genocide against Azerbaijanis. Only one of these events — the March 1918 massacre — resulted in an attempt to make a political assessment of what was taking place. The Azerbaijani Republic, at the behest of history, perceives the need to conduct a political assessment of such acts of genocide and to take to their logical conclusion the decisions that the Azerbaijani Democratic Republic did not manage to implement fully.

In commemoration of all of the tragic acts of genocide perpetrated against the Azerbaijani people, I hereby decide:

1. To proclaim 31 March as the Day of Genocide of the Azerbaijanis;
2. To recommend that the Milli Majlis (Parliament) of the Azerbaijani Republic consider holding a special session devoted to the events involving the genocide of the Azerbaijanis.

Heydar Aliyev
President of the Republic of Azerbaijan

Baku, 26 March 1998
