Office of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General

($9,435,200)

Background, mandate and objective

1. A serious political and security crisis developed in Burundi in April 2015. While the crisis crystallized around the elections, it had deeper political roots. New armed groups have formed and have been launching violent attacks in urban neighbourhoods in Bujumbura, which are at risk of spreading. The attacks are being met with reprisals by the security forces, which also continue to conduct crackdowns. Politically motivated violence and serious human rights violations and abuses are being committed at an increasing rate. Burundi stands on the brink of another armed conflict that could unravel years of painstaking work to consolidate and preserve peace and could have potentially disastrous effects in an already fragile region.

2. It is unlikely that politically motivated violence and human rights violations and abuses in Burundi can be halted without the prospect of a credible and inclusive political dialogue. However, until now, there has been very limited progress in launching a viable and transparent process that enjoys the confidence of all Burundian stakeholders and that would allow for political differences to be resolved through dialogue. The absolute priority for the international community remains the launching of such a dialogue, in coordination with regional partners, with a view to preventing the deterioration of the security situation and preventing violence on a larger scale.

3. In response to the situation, the Security Council, in its resolution 2248 (2015) of 12 November 2015, welcomed the decision by the Secretary-General to appoint a special adviser to work with the Government of Burundi and other concerned stakeholders, as well as subregional, regional and other international partners, in support of an inclusive Burundian dialogue and the peaceful resolution of conflict, and in support of national efforts to build and sustain peace.

4. In the same resolution, the Security Council invited the Secretary-General to deploy a team in Burundi to coordinate and work with the Government of Burundi, the African Union and other partners to assess the situation and develop options to address political and security concerns.

5. In a letter dated 1 December 2015 addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/2015/926), the Secretary-General noted that he would proceed with the deployment of a support team to the Special Adviser as soon as possible. The team would pursue the following objectives: (a) work with the Government of Burundi and other stakeholders to support a credible and inclusive political dialogue process that is nationally owned; and (b) advise the Burundian authorities on strengthening security and rule of law institutions, as well as the design and implementation of a credible disarmament programme. It will report to the Special Adviser and coordinate and develop partnerships with regional and subregional actors, namely, the African Union, the East African Community and the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, to promote coherent international responses to the situation in the country. It will closely monitor the situation on the ground to provide reporting and situational analysis to facilitate United Nations planning efforts, and will cooperate with the United Nations country team already on the ground, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR).

6. The Special Adviser will be supported by a core team of political and security sector advisers based in Bujumbura and a small political team in New York, but in view of the fluidity of the situation and evolving needs, he will also use the best available international consultancy expertise, as appropriate, to support the implementation of his mandate.

Cooperation with other entities

7. The Office of the Special Adviser will liaise closely with United Nations regional political offices, including the United Nations Regional Office for Central Africa, the Office of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes Region and the United Nations Office to the African Union, and will coordinate with those offices to ensure adequate support to regional and subregional initiatives for Burundi. The Office will cooperate with the Burundi configuration of the Peacebuilding Commission, OHCHR and the Office of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on the Prevention of Genocide to promote coherence on Burundian political issues.

8. The Office of the Special Adviser will collaborate closely with the office of the United Nations resident coordinator and the United Nations country team in Burundi. Where appropriate, it will seek synergies with ongoing programmes and projects that are relevant to the implementation of its mandate. In particular, the Special Adviser will depend on technical advice and support from the OHCHR country office to ensure that human rights are mainstreamed into all activities.

9. At the headquarters level, the Special Adviser will continue to chair the inter-agency task force and the crisis management team for Burundi, including representatives of all relevant Secretariat departments, United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies. The Special Adviser will convene coordination meetings with the numerous international envoys to Burundi and regional and subregional partners based in Addis Ababa, Nairobi and elsewhere.

10. In order to promote efficiency and avoid duplication, the staff of the Office of the Special Adviser deployed in Burundi will be serviced by the Regional Service Centre at Entebbe, Uganda. A small office support team deployed in Bujumbura will support the day-to-day administrative and logistical needs of the team and provide an administrative link with the Regional Service Centre.

Planning assumptions for 2016

11. As part of the deployment, the support team within the Office of the Special Adviser is expected to work with the Government of Burundi and other stakeholders to support a credible and inclusive political dialogue process that is nationally owned and to advise the Burundian authorities on strengthening security and rule of law institutions and on the design and implementation of a credible disarmament programme.

12. The deployment will also create the opportunity to develop a fuller situational analysis of the political and security environment that can inform contingency planning and any future review of the United Nations strategy for Burundi. Analysis undertaken by the Office of the Special Adviser will also inform future strategic planning exercises, which will be undertaken in consultation with the United Nations country team and other relevant United Nations entities.

13. In the event of significant deterioration of the security situation in Burundi, the Security Council may decide to implement a contingency plan to deploy United Nations uniformed personnel.

14. Support for the deployment in Burundi will entail extensive travel by the Special Adviser to Burundi and the region to support the dialogue. The support team based in Burundi will be able to call upon the Regional Service Centre at Entebbe and will adopt a streamlined structure. The team will utilize existing United Nations equipment and infrastructure in Burundi to minimize the requirements for extensive investment in facilities and equipment.

15. The objective, expected accomplishments, indicators of achievement and performance measures of the Office are set out below.
