Question of Namibia 1067

Namibia. (For a summary of the first section, on Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe), see p. 1106.)

By the Final Document, the Committee, having considered the question of Namibia in the context of the Declaration on granting independence, drew the attention of the international community to the extremely serious situation prevailing in the territory, calling for support for the Namibian people and their authentic liberation movement, SWAPO, in their struggle to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence. Condemning the racist regime of South Africa for violence against the African peoples under its domination and for defying United Nations efforts to bring about the genuine and complete decolonization of Namibia, the Committee reaffirmed that any settlement must be based on genuine independence and with the full participation of the people. Accordingly, the Committee called on the entire international community to denounce all South African manoeuvres to impose a so-called internal settlement aimed at giving the illegal regime a semblance of legitimacy. The Committee, noting the continuing political, military and economic links of certain States with that regime, appealed to all Security Council members, and particularly to the Western countries that were permanent Council members, to facilitate the imposition of measures under Chapter VII of the Charter. The Committee denounced the latest attempts by the South African regime to proclaim a unilateral declaration of independence in Namibia, reiterating its demand that the regime accept and implement the United Nations plan for Namibia endorsed by the Security Council in 1978.

The Committee noted that despite intensified endeavours by the United Nations, the situation in the territory continued to worsen rapidly, primarily because of the intransigence of the South African regime. It was therefore more imperative than ever that the United Nations take steps to cause South Africa to comply with its decisions, so that the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO, could exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

Accordingly, the Committee reaffirmed that Namibia was the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and national independence were achieved. To that end, reiterating that Walvis Bay was an integral part of Namibia, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay, and the legitimacy of their struggle by all means at their disposal, and strongly condemned South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, repression of its people and efforts to destroy the territory's national unity and integrity.

The Committee also condemned the so-called elections held by South Africa in Namibia from 4 to 8 December 1978 and declared them null and void, calling on all States not to recognize any representative installed or organ established as a result of those elections.

Condemning the South African administration for its repression of the people of Namibia and SWAPO, the Committee reaffirmed that the only political solution for Namibia must be based on the termination of the illegal occupation, the withdrawal of South Africa's armed forces and the free exercise by the Namibian people of their right to self-determination and independence within a united Namibia. To this end, the Committee reaffirmed the need to hold free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations in the whole of Namibia as one political entity; any negotiations leading to Namibian independence must be entered into by South Africa with SWAPO, under the auspices of the United Nations, with the sole purpose of deciding the modalities of the transfer of power.

The Committee demanded that South Africa release all Namibian political prisoners and ensure that all Namibians currently in exile for political reasons might return to their country, without risk. It reaffirmed that SWAPO was the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people and appealed to all Member States to grant it all necessary support and assistance.

The Committee strongly condemned South Africa for its military build-up in Namibia, its recruitment of Namibians for tribal armies, its illegal use of Namibian territory for acts of aggression against independent African countries and the continued forcible removal of Namibians from the northern border of the territory for military purposes. It also condemned the continuous military collaboration between South Africa and other States, and expressed grave concern at continued nuclear collaboration, which it considered to be a serious violation of the Security Council resolution imposing a military embargo against South Africa⁵ and a threat to international peace and security.

The Committee, strongly condemning South Africa and foreign corporations which continued to exploit and plunder the human and natural resources of the territory, demanded that such exploitation cease and that those States whose transnational corporations continued to operate in Namibia immediately withdraw all investments.

Given South Africa's increasing resort to force to perpetuate its domination of the territory, its refusal to comply with the 1976 Security Council resolution calling for free elections under United Nations supervision, and its repeated acts of aggression against neighbouring African States, the Committee recommended that the Council urgently convene to consider taking effective measures, including comprehensive economic sanctions, provided for under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

The Committee attached particular importance to the reconvening of the Assembly's thirty-third (1978) session to consider fully the question of Namibia and expressed its determination to work closely with the Council for Namibia for the success of the International Year of Solidarity with the People of Namibia (1979), proclaimed by the Assembly in 1978.

The Committee, conscious of the mandate of the Council for Namibia as the only legal authority for Namibia until independence, reaffirmed its support for Council activities and endorsed the policies and programmes defined by the Council in co-operation with SWAPO to promote Namibian self-determination and independence. It also urgently called on all States to continue supporting programmes both to aid Namibians in exile and to prepare Namibians for service in a free and independent Namibia.

The opening statement of the Committee's meetings at Belgrade was made by the Federal Secretary for Foreign Affairs of Yugoslavia, who read a message of welcome from President Josip Broz Tito. President Tito said that the colonial system, racism and apartheid constituted a gross violation of human rights and the freedom and dignity of men, thus jeopardizing international peace. The South African regime, relying upon the support of various imperialist interests, was endeavouring to keep the people of Namibia under occupation and, by trying to impose a so-called internal settlement, it was seeking to substitute another form of neo-colonialist occupation on the people of the territory.

The Committee Chairman said that over the past few months South Africa had proceeded to consolidate its illegal occupation of Namibia. South Africa had continued to obstruct the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978,* by which the Council had reiterated its call for free elections in Namibia under United Nations control, and the regime proceeded to commit repeated acts of aggression against Angola, which supported SWAPO. He hoped that during its current meetings the Committee would focus on means to support SWAPO effectively and to mobilize support for the front-line States, including Angola, so they could continue to assist Namibia in its struggle for independence.

Guyana, speaking on behalf of the Council for Namibia, told the Committee that South Africa had intensified its campaign of terror in an attempt to divide the Namibian people and impose a puppet regime. South Africa's continued acts of aggression had obstructed prospects for a peaceful solution and had compelled Namibians to intensify their legitimate armed struggle, under the leadership of SWAPO. Noting that in the final analysis the liberation of the territory was a task for the Namibian people, the Council representative expressed the hope that the current Committee meetings would result in more international support for Namibia. He challenged the Western powers, in particular, to use their undisputed influence with South Africa to secure the territory's early independence.

In his statement to the Committee, Mr. Shihepo of SWAPO said that the meetings were taking place at a time when the situation in southern Africa was critical. Both the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia and the South African Government, with the collaboration of certain Western powers, were engaging in manoeuvres to impose puppet regimes on the peoples of the territories in order to maintain economic exploitation and political control. In Namibia, these manoeuvres began with the socalled internal elections held in December 1978 and culminated in the establishment of a socalled Constituent Assembly, which in turn decided to set up a so-called interim government with the final aim of declaring a unilateral declaration of independence. At the same time, South Africa was committing constant acts of aggression against neighbouring States, aimed primarily at forcing the front-line States into abandoning their commitment to support the national liberation movements in southern Africa.

The representative said SWAPO remained committed to the United Nations plan for independence in accordance with Security Council resolution 385(1976), and had made serious concessions in order to find an acceptable solution. South Africa, on the contrary, continued to put forth pre-conditions that clearly deviated from the plan and were unacceptable to the Namibian people, and, by this manoeuvre, was trying to deceive public opinion into believing that further negotiations would be useful, while at the same time planning to impose a so-called internal settlement in Namibia.

Because of South Africa's intransigent attitude, SWAPO considered that the Security Council should apply a comprehensive mandatory economic embargo against that country. Such an embargo would have to be supported by the five Western powers—Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, which in 1978 had submitted a proposal for a settlement of the Namibian situation or they would lose their integrity and credibility as negotiators.

The majority of members of the Committee agreed that no progress had been made during the past year towards the attainment of independence for Namibia and that, in fact, South Africa had continued to consolidate its position in the territory. Although South Africa was still ostensibly engaged in negotiations with the United Nations regarding implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978), it had increased its militarization of the territory and had continued its policy of repression as well as its attacks against neighbouring States. This consensus was embodied in the Final Document. Members denounced in particular the December 1978 elections, in which SWAPO did not participate, which had resulted in the creation of a so-called Constituent Assembly dominated by the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance.

The Ivory Coast, although not dissociating itself from the consensus, drew the attention of the Committee to the wording of the paragraph by which particularly those Western States which were permanent members of the Security Council were asked to facilitate the imposition of sanctions. The Ivory Coast, regretting this formulation, said this was the first time that a United Nations organ had explicitly singled out the permanent Council members. The USSR felt that the paragraph was addressed to the permanent members and all the other Council members.

Sweden said that the holding of illegal elections indicated that South Africa was striving for long-term domination of Namibia and had ruled out the possibility of free elections that might result in a SWAPO Government. The world community, however, could not accept a solution based on the continuing South African occupation of Namibia which would only lead to a widening of the guerrilla war. Efforts to obtain South Africa's withdrawal from the territory must continue. Sweden felt that the document reflected the Committee's determination to reject illusory solutions in southern Africa and also the frustration of the international community at the difficulties encountered in reaching negotiated and peaceful settlements there.

Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Tunisia and the United Republic of Tanzania expressed similar views. Indonesia observed that events during the year, especially the illegal elections, constituted ominous signs that South Africa was getting closer to a so-called internal settlement without the participation of SWAPO or the United Nations, which, far from resolving the question, would only exacerbate the situation in the territory and lead to prolonged fighting. Indonesia stressed that to avoid this the international community must refuse to accord recognition to any Government or set of leaders installed in the territory without United Nations approval and SWAPO participation.

Iran said it appeared that there was no longer any hope for resolution of the problem through negotiations. Because of this, and because the situation in the territory posed a threat to international peace and security, Iran advocated the imposition by the Security Council of appropriate measures under Chapter VII of the Charter. The imposition of sanctions against South Africa as the only means of compelling it to co-operate with the United Nations was also supported by Bulgaria, Ethiopia, India, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia and the United Republic of Tanzania. The United Republic of Tanzania added that it was imperative that the Western powers, which had thus far prevented the Council from adopting such measures on the grounds that they would be counterproductive, should act in concert with the Council or their credibility in efforts to reach a settlement would be seriously compromised.

Cuba and the USSR, among others, considered that the Western powers were continuing to give support to South Africa in order to preserve their own economic interests in the region and were thus responsible for South Africa's failure to co-operate in the implementation of the settlement plan which they had co-authored. The USSR charged that evidence of the West's lack of will to achieve a settlement could be seen from the fact that North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) weapons, helicopters, tanks and aircraft continued to reach South Africa.

China, among others, maintained that the independence of the territory would be achieved by the Namibians themselves, through the military struggle they were waging with the aid of the front-line States. South Africa's last strenuous efforts to retain control of the territory with the aid of foreign powers were thus doomed to failure. This view of the role of armed struggle was shared by Afghanistan and Ethiopia, who stressed the importance of providing increased military and financial assistance to SWAPO, as well as to the front-line States.

A number of States, including Australia, Fiji and the Ivory Coast, continued to believe in the possibility of a negotiated settlement if sustained pressure against South Africa was applied through the international community. Fiji expressed the hope that ongoing diplomatic initiatives would compel South Africa to respond fully to the demands of the Namibian people.

Decisions of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

At its February/March 1979 session, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a number of resolutions containing provisions relating to Namibia. On 21 February, the Commission adopted a resolution on the right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation, by which, among other things, it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference. (See p. 833.)

By a resolution of 5 March the Commission invited the Special Rapporteur of its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities (charged with studying the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance to colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa) to bear in mind—in preparing a list identifying organizations, groups and State representatives whose activities constituted assistance to the colonial and racist regimes of southern Africathe Governments, transnational corporations and individuals whose military, economic, financial and other forms of assistance, including nuclear aid, to those regimes constituted a denial of the enjoyment of human rights in Namibia. (See

On 6 March, the Commission adopted a resolution on the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on violations of human rights in southern Africa. By this resolution, the Commission reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence and their right to enjoy all the rights recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and declared that in the case of Namibia this right could only be exercised in accordance with directives given by the competent organs of the United Nations. It requested the Ad Hoc Working Group to continue instituting inquiries in respect of any persons suspected of having been guilty in Namibia of the crime of apartheid or of a serious violation of human rights.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council that fresh efforts be made to give the Group an opportunity to make an on-the-spot study of living conditions in Namibian prisons and the treatment of prisoners. It condemned the activities of countries which, either directly or through their nationals, were helping to perpetuate the situation in Namibia and demanded the immediate release of all political prisoners in Namibia, particularly those suspected of sympathizing with SWAPO. It appealed to Member States to assist SWAPO in its struggle, to contribute to measures for safeguarding the cultural heritage and wealth of the Namibians, and to give special attention to Namibian children, in particular to accord them scholarships and study grants.

The Commission also decided that the Group should continue to study the policies and practices that violated human rights in Namibia and carry out a comprehensive study of action taken to implement the Group's recommendations since its establishment. (See p. 812.)

On 2 August, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1979/50 on the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations. By the resolution, the Council urged the United Nations—related organizations to do everything possible to render urgently, in consultation with OAU, increased assistance to the people of Namibia and their liberation movement. It also requested those organizations to continue withholding any assistance from South Africa until it restored to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal domination of Namibia. (For details see p. 1021; refer to INDEX OF RESOLU-TIONS AND DECISIONS for page reference to text of resolution 1979/50.)

By resolution 1979/75 of 3 August, on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes, the Council reiterated that the activities of transnational corporations in that area and their collaboration with those regimes were detrimental to the interests of the oppressed people in Namibia. It requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its 1980 session an in-depth analysis of the role of transnational corporations in the industrial, military and nuclear sectors of Namibia. (For details, see p. 627; refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS for page reference to text of resolution 1979/75.)

Communications and reports (January-May)

In a letter dated 14 February to the Secretary-General, the representative of South Africa transmitted a message sent that day by the South African Minister for Foreign Affairs, charging that a force of approximately 250 SWAPO terrorists had launched an unprovoked attack the previous day on the South African base at Nkongo, South West Africa, in the course of which several members of the South African Security Forces were wounded. Stating that he had repeatedly urged the Secretary-General to decide on a cease-fire date and to ensure that the process of implementation of the 1978 settlement proposal of the five Western powers¹² would start by 26 February 1979, the Minister charged that, as the time for implementation drew nearer, SWAPO was becoming ever more desperate and wished to provoke South Africa into an action which SWAPO, whose object was clearly to prevent the implementation of the settlement, could turn to its own advantage.

In a letter dated 17 February to the South African Foreign Minister, the Secretary-General stressed that he fully recognized the importance of securing an atmosphere of peace and tranquillity in Namibia during current efforts to bring about the implementation of the settlement proposal in accordance with resolution 435 (1978). He assured the Minister that he and his Special Representative, Martti Ahtisaari, United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, would pursue their efforts to secure clarification of important points in the proposal, accepted but given different interpretations by the parties.

By a letter dated 20 February to the Secretary-General, the South African representative transmitted the text of a letter of the same date from his Foreign Minister reiterating that SWAPO's attack of 13 February violated the spirit of the settlement proposal and made a mockery of the whole project for peaceful resolution of the Namibian problem. In the view of the South African Government, there were no outstanding issues of such a nature as to prevent the start of implementation of the settlement plan. Such clarifications as were necessary on the size of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG), the United Nations role in regard to the police and the principle of consultation had been completed for some time. Relatively speaking, he said, the two issues of a status agreement and the composition of the military component of UNTAG must be considered to be of secondary importance.

In contrast to South Africa's attitude, he continued, were SWAPO's outrageous demands recently stated at Luanda, Angola, by the President of SWAPO, Sam Nujoma. They included the establishment of five armed bases inside South West Africa, the complete withdrawal of South African troops and the refusal to place SWAPO forces under United Nations monitoring. The letter stated that there was clearly no basis in the Western proposal or in the Secretary-General's report of 29 August 1978¹³ for such claims by SWAPO. They were diversionary tactics deliberately aimed at delaying and wrecking the entire initiative for a peaceful settlement. On such a basis, the emplacement of UNTAG would be out of the question.

According to the letter, South Africa had consistently honoured its commitments in terms of the proposal and the negotiations which had preceded it. During the Special Representative's visit to Cape Town in mid-January 1979, he had proposed to start the settlement mechanism with a view to beginning implementation on 26 February, to which the Foreign Minister had immediately agreed. The Minister appealed to the Secretary-General to do his utmost to initiate that stage with the greatest urgency, by announcing the date of and the arrangements for a ceasefire. It was imperative that implementation of Council resolution 435(1978) begin at once, to fit in with the holding of elections not later than 30 September, as had been suggested by the Secretary-General. South Africa could not associate itself with any move to delay the elections beyond the end of September.

In a report of 26 February to the Security Council concerning the implementation of Council resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978),¹⁴ the Secretary-General stated that his Special Representative, the Commander of UNTAG's military component and United Nations officials had visited South Africa and Namibia from 13 to 22 January to complete consultations on the transitional arrangements set out in the settlement proposal and the operational requirements for UNTAG's deployment. The Special Representative had visited the front-line States of Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia, as well as Nigeria, between 28 January and 12 February and had held talks with SWAPO's President on 9 and 10 February at Luanda.

Both South Africa and SWAPO had expressed willingness to co-operate in the implementation of resolution 435(1978), but the meetings had revealed different interpretations and perceptions regarding implementation of certain provisions of the proposal.

¹² See footnote 10.

¹⁴ Ibid., p. 916, resolution 439(1978) of 13 November 1978.

With a view to resolving those differences, the Secretary-General had consulted with the five Western powers and the front-line States. In the light of those consultations, he considered that the outstanding issues should be resolved along the following lines.

- (a) Regarding the return of Namibian refugees and detainees, provision had been made by UNHCR for establishing and supervising entry points and facilities to assist returning Namibians. Their arms or military equipment would be placed under United Nations control.
- (b) Cessation of hostilities would coincide with restriction to base of all South African Defence Forces in Namibia and their subsequent phased withdrawal, and restriction of SWAPO armed forces to base at designated locations. All SWAPO forces in neighbouring countries would be restricted to base in those countries. Although there was no specific provision for the monitoring by UNTAG of SWAPO bases in neighbouring countries, those countries had been requested in the proposal to afford the necessary facilities to Special Representative and all United Nations personnel to carry out their functions and to facilitate all measures necessary to ensure tranquillity in the border areas. The Secretary-General had sought the agreement of Angola, Botswana and Zambia for the establishment of UNTAG offices in those countries to co-operate with them in implementing the proposal.
- (c) For commencement of the cease-fire, the Secretary-General proposed to send identic letters, annexed to the report, to South Africa and SWAPO setting out the specific hour and date: 0000 hours on 15 March. Both parties were requested to inform him in writing, not later than 5 March, of their agreement to abide by these terms.
- (d) The Secretary-General had communicated to the parties with which he had consulted a list of best possible troop-contributing countries for UNTAG. Before commencement of the United Nations operation in Namibia, he would submit to the Security Council the proposed composition of UNTAG's military component.
- (e) Agreement had been reached with South Africa on most of the provisions of an agreement on the status of UNTAG. The privileges and immunities provided for under the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations¹⁵ must be accorded to UNTAG, as well as those especially required for the proposed operation.

Finally, the Secretary-General stated that the proposal required that all its provisions be completed to the satisfaction of his Special Representative and emphasized that there was no basis for unilateral determinations or actions by any party. If the co-operation of the parties concerned was forthcoming, he would designate 15 March for the cease-fire and the beginning of the emplacement of UNTAG. In the meantime, he appealed to all parties to exercise restraint and refrain from actions which might jeopardize the settlement.

In a letter dated 2 March, the Acting President of the Council for Namibia transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of his statement of the same date strongly condemning, as an obvious challenge to resolution 439(1978), remarks attributed to the Prime Minister of South Africa, in a press release of 26 February of the South African Permanent Mission to the United Nations, that the South African Government must consult the Constituent Assembly of South West Africa regarding matters currently to be discussed on the settlement question.

By a letter dated 5 March to the Secretary-General, Angola transmitted the text of a press communique, issued by the front-line States on 4 March at the end of a two-day summit meeting held at Luanda, which strongly condemned South Africa's manoeuvres to frustrate the implementation of resolution 435(1978), including the bogus elections of December 1978. The meeting and SWAPO, while categorically rejecting South Africa's demand to have SWAPO forces outside Namibia monitored, reaffirmed their commitment to ensure scrupulously the observance of the cease-fire agreement.

In a letter dated 6 March, the representative of South Africa transmitted a letter of 5 March to the Secretary-General from the Minister for Foreign Affairs enclosing the text of a motion adopted that day by the Constituent Assembly of South West Africa. The letter stated that it had consistently been the policy of South Africa to consult fully with the people of South West Africa, who, as represented in the Constituent Assembly, had emphasized in the adopted motion serious deviations in the Secretary-General's report as compared with the settlement proposal, relating, inter alia, to the establishment of SWAPO bases in the territory and the monitoring of its bases in neighbouring countries. By the motion, the Constituent Assembly confirmed that there were no SWAPO bases inside South West Africa and expressed the belief that, should the deviations be accepted, the fairness of the election would be seriously affected and the safety of the inhabitants jeopardized.

Question of Namibia 1073

During its contacts with the United Nations, the Minister continued, South Africa had proposed several African, Asian, Latin American and Western European States for the composition of UNTAG, none of which had been accepted. None the less, South Africa was prepared to consider the composition of UNTAG announced by the Secretary-General on 1 March, on the understanding that the settlement proposal in its final and definitive form was not changed, that the composition, although not favourable to South Africa, was not altered to the further detriment of the South West African parties committed to a peaceful solution, and that South Africa could reasonably accept two further countries to be added to the list. South Africa stood by the settlement proposed and took it to mean that: (a) SWAPO armed personnel, like the South African forces, were to be restricted to existing bases; (b) SWAPO would have no right either to create bases or be designated bases in South West Africa; (c) a comprehensive cessation of all hostile acts was an essential prerequisite to the implementation of resolution 435(1978); (d) the election date would be no later than 30 September; and (e) political detainees in neighbouring countries would be allowed to return to South West Africa and to participate in the election process.

By another letter of 6 March to the Secretary-General, the representative of South Africa transmitted the text of a statement made that day in the House of Assembly by the South African Prime Minister, who outlined events and incidents since 21 December 1978 and charged that there were numerous instances of the breach, on the part of the five Western powers, of understandings reached with South Africa on the settlement proposal and its implementation. He also charged that those powers supported departures from the settlement plan: new provisions contained no assurance of effective monitoring of SWAPO bases in neighbouring territories and gave SWAPO the right to obtain bases in South West Africa where it had never previously had a base or been able to establish one. Other examples of breach of understandings were support by the five Western powers of a resolution in the Security Council declaring that Walvis Bay must be reintegrated into the territory, their acquiescence to a sizable increase in the proposed number of troops in UNTAG, and a statement that all weapons should be surrendered, rather than only those requiring operation by two or more persons.

In a letter dated 7 March to the Secretary-General, Sri Lanka, as current Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, transmitted the text of a communique issued by the Bureau that day appealing to the international community to give all necessary assistance to the front-line States, which constituted the strategic rear base of the liberation struggle in southern Africa.

A number of communications, as well as Security Council action, followed an attack by South African forces on Namibian refugee camps in Angola in early March. Ethiopia transmitted a statement issued on 8 March by the group of African States at the United Nations condemning the aggression, as did the Council for Namibia in a statement of the same date by its Acting President. Angola on 16 March requested a Security Council meeting; on 19 March, South Africa's Foreign Minister addressed a letter to the Council President in connexion with that request and defended South Africa's action. (For details and Security Council consideration, see p. 225.)

In a letter dated 8 March to the South African Prime Minister, the Secretary-General categorically rejected any accusation that he had deliberately omitted, in his report of 26 February, any express reference to the views of SWAPO on certain matters while nevertheless accepting them or adopting them into his proposals. The Secretary-General said the Prime Minister appeared to have misinterpreted his proposals on the restriction to base of SWAPO forces, and stressed that no party to a conflict might expect to gain, after a cease-fire, a military advantage that it was unable to obtain before it. He again appealed to all parties to exercise restraint and refrain from actions which might jeopardize the settlement.

By a letter dated 15 March, the representative of South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General the Prime Minister's reply of the same date. The Prime Minister wished to know whether, in the Secretary-General's opinion, the settlement proposal provided for: (a) restriction to base of all SWAPO forces; (b) such restriction to be monitored by UNTAG; (c) designation of locations inside South West Africa to which SWAPO forces could be restricted; (d) cessation of all hostile acts as a prerequisite for implementation, including in particular the reduction of South African troops, and therefore for a practical implementation based on the proposal; (e) release of all South West Africans wherever detained, including those in the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia; and (f) consultation, inter alia, on the composition of UNTAG - specifically, whether such consultation required South Africa's views to be given due recognition. Attached to the letter was a military deployment plan for UNTAG entitled "Operational Implementation Document," which he said had been prepared in January by the Secretary-General's military representative and his South African counterparts to avoid misunderstandings and differing interpretations of the practical implementation of the settlement proposal.

In a letter of 15 March to the Prime Minister, the Secretary-General replied that: the proposal provided for the restriction to base of all forces of the parties; UNTAG would monitor such restriction to base of all forces in Namibia; the reference in his report to any SWAPO armed forces in Namibia at the time of the cease-fire was designed exclusively to solve the practical problem that might be created by the presence of any such forces; his report offered a reasonable proposal for a workable cease-fire arrangement; the release of all Namibians was provided for in the original text of the proposal; and the object of the process of consultation with the parties was to try to reach a composition of UNTAG which, although not necessarily approved in all its parts by them, could be reasonably accepted as a working compromise, without giving veto power to any of the parties in such a situation.

The Secretary-General added that, after study of the Operational Implementation Document, which had emerged from conversations held between the military adviser to his Special Representative and South African military authorities in Cape Town, it had been concluded that the document could not be accepted as an accurate interpretation of the proposal and the South African representative in New York had been so informed on 26 January.

In a letter dated 15 March, Sri Lanka transmitted to the Secretary-General the final communique of an Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned countries held at Maputo, Mozambique, from 26 January to 2 February to consider the situation in southern Africa. The Bureau reiterated its support for SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the people of Namibia, and emphasized the need for increased assistance to the peoples of southern Africa in their struggle for national liberation, their right to freedom and independence and their right to decide on their future without foreign interference. In this connexion, it called for increased support for the front-line States to preserve and strengthen their independence and territorial integrity.

By letters sent to the Secretary-General between 28 March and 7 April, the representative of South Africa transmitted four letters from the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

On 27 March, the Minister charged that SWAPO terrorists had made premeditated attacks on 26 March from across the border against unarmed and innocent civilians inside South West Africa. Such attacks were continuing unabatedly and made it clear that SWAPO had not abandoned its efforts to take over political power by force, thus frustrating the inhabitants' quest for independence through constitutional means. In addition, he charged that the silence of the United Nations with respect to SWAPO's terrorism against the people of South West Africa was prejudicial, and stressed that the South African Security Forces would not abdicate responsibility for the safety and security of all South West Africans.

On 30 March, he charged that the death on 28 March of Eliaser Kalangula, the brother of a member of the Constituent Assembly and of the Executive of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, as a result of a land-mine explosion at Omungwelume in South West Africa, confirmed the violent nature of SWAPO.

Calling attention to attacks on 31 March and 2 April in which three civilians were injured, the Foreign Minister stated on 4 April that the spate of atrocities committed by SWAPO terrorists against the civilian population of South West Africa and increased infiltration from across the northern border accorded with SWAPO's claims to be allowed to establish bases inside the territory.

Further incidents of 4 and 6 April, resulting in one civilian death and one injury, were reported on 7 April. The Minister charged that SWAPO continued to resort to cold-blooded killing in South West Africa, as part of its campaign of intimidation. He declared that such violence by SWAPO must cease if there was to be any hope of the settlement proposal's being implemented.

By a letter dated 24 April, the Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a statement issued that day with reference to a recent decision of the illegal Constituent Assembly in Namibia. The Council strongly condemned this latest manoeuvre by South Africa to set up a so-called interim government in Namibia and reaffirmed its rejection of all the persistent attempts by South Africa to promote the political interests of its puppets in Namibia in an effort to perpetuate its control over the territory.

In another statement, on 30 April, the Acting President recorded the Council's strong condemnation of the arrest and detention by the South African administration in Namibia of some 40 SWAPO leaders. It demanded their immediate and unconditional release.

By a letter of 8 May, the President of the Council for Namibia transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a communication issued by SWAPO on 30 April, containing lists of SWAPO leaders and members arrested and detained by the South African administration in Namibia, of imprisoned Namibians and prisoners of war from Angola.

By a letter of 10 May to the Secretary-General, the South African representative transmitted a letter of the same date from the Minister for Foreign Affairs calling attention to recent acts—five persons murdered and a sixth wounded—perpetrated by SWAPO in South West Africa. The Organization's silence on SWAPO atrocities, he charged, was a further example of hypocrisy and double standards.

By a letter dated 11 May, the President of the Council for Namibia transmitted a Council statement issued that day on a recent initiative of the illegal South African administration in Namibia, namely, its expressed intention to bestow on the so-called Constituent Assembly in Windhoek extensive legislative and executive powers. The Council demanded the release of Namibian patriots, part of the SWAPO leadership, whom it said South Africa continued to arrest and detain.

A letter from the Council President dated 9 May transmitted to the Secretary-General the texts of messages from Governments, specialized agencies and solidarity groups on the occasion of the Council's solemn meeting, held on 4 May, to proclaim the International Year of Solidarity with the People of Namibia.

By a letter of 22 May, the representative of South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a letter of the same date from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, who stated that the forthcoming resumed session of the General Assembly on the question of South West Africa/Namibia, to commence on 23 May, was uncalled for. He again charged that two provisions of the Secretary-General's report of 26 February on the settlement proposal, concerning restriction to base, had in effect conceded the demands made by SWAPO by providing specifically for the exemption of SWAPO from monitoring by UNTAG outside South West Africa/Namibia and for the establishment of armed SWAPO personnel at "designated locations" inside the territory. Those provisions, he continued, constituted a violation of the terms of the settlement proposal. Holding that SWAPO never had and did not currently have any bases inside the territory, he said it followed that troop restrictions could be monitored only at their bases outside South West Afri-. ca/Namibia, wherever those might be. The clear understanding on the part of South Africa and the South West Africans that SWAPO troop restrictions, like South African troop restrictions, would be monitored by UNTAG was an important element in the acceptance of the proposal by the leaders of the democratic parties in the territory. Contrary to the deviations introduced in the Secretary-General's report, the Minister continued, the language of the proposal clearly indicated that SWAPO personnel inside the territory at the time of the cease-fire were required to return to their bases, where they would be restricted under UNTAG monitoring. If they wished to come back afterwards, provision was made for them to be repatriated peacefully from across the border, under United Nations supervision, through designated entry points. He said SWAPO could not freely continue its acts of subversion and aggression and should not be afforded sanctuaries by Members of the United Nations from where it could launch attacks on the territory.

South Africa, he stated, supported by the overwhelming majority of the people of South West Africa, had agreed to everything demanded of the territory for years by the United Nations. South Africa would continue to respect the interests and wishes of the people of the territory and could not be a party to persuading them to accept proposals which would render them vulnerable to a take-over by force.

Consideration by the General Assembly (23-31 May)

At its resumed thirty-third session, during 12 meetings held between 23 and 31 May, the Assembly, in accordance with its resolution of 21 December 1978, ¹⁶ considered fully the question of Namibia and the implications of South Africa's continued defiance of Assembly and Security Council resolutions.

Among the documents before the Assembly were the May 1979 letters from the United Nations Council for Namibia and the letter of 22 May from South Africa (see preceding section), and a letter of 11 May from the Chairman of the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence, transmitting the section on Namibia of the Final Document on the Decolonization of Zimbabwe and Namibia adopted at Belgrade in April (see section above on CONSIDERATION BY THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE).

Other documents included a letter of 22 May from Poland, transmitting a joint communique issued in Warsaw on 12 May by the Polish Government and a mission of consultation of the Council for Namibia-which visited Poland from 9 to 12 May—expressing the expectation that the resumed thirty-third session would devise a strategy to expedite the independence of Namibia without further delay; and a letter of 24 May from Bulgaria, transmitting a joint communique issued in Sofia on 22 May by the Bulgarian Government and a Council mission of consultation—which visited Bulgaria from 20 to 22 May—condemning the policies and practices of South Africa with regard to Namibia and expressing the view that the United Nations must take urgent measures to end the occupation of the territory.

Several documents referred to the credentials of representatives to the session. Identic letters of 21 May from Viet Nam to the Secretary-General and the Assembly President transmitted a message of 18 May, signed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, expressing solidarity with the struggle of the Namibian people and stating that the sole legitimate and legal representative of Kampuchea in any United Nations forum was the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea and that the so-called Government of Democratic Kampuchea no longer existed on Kampuchean soil. Letters from Viet Nam and the USSR, dated 24 May, and from the German Democratic Republic and Hungary, dated 25 and 30 May, respectively, expressed support for that statement.

South Africa annexed to a letter of 23 May to the Assembly President a letter addressed to the Chairman of the Credentials Committee requesting a meeting with the Chairman or the full Committee to present South Africa's position on its representative's credentials to represent it in all United Nations organs.

In the Assembly on 23 May, Ghana, on behalf of the African group of States at the United Nations, challenged the presence of the representative of South Africa at the resumed thirty-third session. The Credentials Committee was asked to meet immediately to consider those credentials.

Meeting that day, the Committee had before it a memorandum by the Secretary-General of 23 May to which was attached a communication of 7 March from the South African Minister for Foreign Affairs pertaining to the representation of his country in all United Nations organs. With reference to South Africa's request to be heard, the Chairman stated that it was not the Committee's practice to give the floor to States not members of the Committee.

China, India, Sierra Leone, Thailand and Zaire stated that they did not recognize the authority that had issued the credentials. Suriname felt the communication did not constitute valid credentials, and the USSR supported the demand of the African States that such credentials should not be recognized. Denmark and the United States, while reiterating their abhorrence of the policy of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia, upheld the right of every Member State to be heard.

The Committee, by 7 votes to 2, decided that the communication before it did not constitute valid credentials for South Africa for the General Assembly's thirty-third session; it then, without a vote, recommended approval of its report by the Assembly.

On the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly on 24 May adopted resolution 33/9 B, by which it approved the report of the Credentials Committee containing an account of its deliberations. The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 96 to 19, with 9 abstentions. The Assembly President stated that the decision indicated that the majority of Members did not wish to permit South Africa to participate in the work of the session, but that the Assembly had not taken a decision concerning the status of South Africa as a Member of the United Nations. The President also noted that as a result of the vote the South African representatives had left the Assembly meeting.

France, on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Community, in explanation of their votes, said the Credentials Committee's powers were limited by the Assembly's rules of procedure to verification of credentials and had nothing to do with the policies of the Governments concerned; since the Committee had rejected the credentials of a delegation for reasons not provided for in the rules, they had been left with no choice but to vote against the report. The Nordic countries, on whose behalf Sweden spoke, said they supported the principle of universality in the United Nations, and to decide other than on the basis of the rules of procedure was tantamount to suspension of membership, which required a Security Council recommendation and an Assembly decision.

Similar reservations based on legal considerations were also given as the reason for the negative votes of Australia, Austria, Canada and the United States, and for the abstentions of Costa Rica and Greece. Mexico, although it voted in favour of the proposal since it favoured expelling South Africa from the Organization, objected to other than direct legitimate action to attain that goal.

By a letter of 24 May, the representative of South Africa addressed to the Secretary-General a copy of the statement he had intended to deliver to the Assembly on the question under consideration. In that statement, South Africa expressed concern at the Assembly's repeated breaches of the Charter on questions relating to southern Africa. South Africa believed that it had fulfilled all its obligations to the people of South West Africa/Namibia except one: to ensure that they were guaranteed the right to determine their own future, freely and without coercion from any quarter. It had no intention of reneging on this final responsibility.

The Assembly, he said, had gone even further than arrogating to itself the right to determine who should be and who should not be the representatives of the people of the territory; it had torn to shreds the principle that international disputes should be settled by peaceful means and reasoned negotiations and had urged that the problem should be solved by violence.

South Africa had tried to find a peaceful settlement in co-operation with the five Western powers. It had agreed to grant independence to the territory on the basis of a unitary State, one man/one vote, the removal of discrimination based on colour, the holding of free and fair elections to the satisfaction of the United Nations, and the right of return of all South West Africans to participate peacefully in the political process.

Referring to the letter South Africa had sent to the Secretary-General on 22 May (see preceding section), South Africa again summarized its main points: the elements that were at the basis of the dispute between South Africa and the United Nations had been eliminated; SWAPO should not be allowed to rely on the Assembly for support in its acts of aggression against the territory and its people; the agreements and understandings reached between the five Western powers and South Africa should be safeguarded when translated into United Nations reports and Security Council decisions; any censure of South Africa by the Assembly would be a travesty of iustice; and South Africa's respect for the interests and wishes of the people of the territory, which were paramount, made it impossible for it to persuade them to accept proposals that would render them vulnerable to a take-over by force. South Africa felt that this last point made its approach to the problem of the territory abundantly clear.

During its meetings, the Assembly heard statements by Sam Nujoma, President of SWAPO, and Mose Garoeb, a member of SWAPO, who participated in an observer capacity. The President of the United Nations Council for Namibia also made a statement.

On 31 May, following its discussion of the question, the Assembly adopted resolution 33/206, sponsored by 92 powers (see DOCUMENTA-RY REFERENCES below), by a recorded vote of 118 to 0, with 16 abstentions.

By the preambular paragraphs, the Assembly: expressed its indignation at South Africa's persistent refusal to withdraw from Namibia in defiance of numerous United Nations resolutions and its grave concern at South Africa's brutal repression of the Namibian people and its measures to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia; expressed its conviction that South Africa was seeking to establish a puppet regime in Namibia; and strongly reiterated its support for the national liberation movement of Namibia, SWAPO, in the struggle to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly declared the urgent need to ensure the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Namibian people to genuine self-determination and national independence in Namibia, including Walvis Bay, in accordance with the Charter, the Declaration on granting independence and subsequent United Nations resolutions relating to Namibia, and supported the legitimacy of their struggle by all means at their disposal against the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa. It solemnly reaffirmed direct United Nations responsibility for Namibia, renewed its determination to ensure the discharge of this responsibility and called upon all Member States and United Nations bodies to support fully the Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence. The Assembly determined that South Africa had acted deceitfully during the protracted period of talks for a negotiated settlement, to the detriment of the Namibian people and SWAPO, and in contravention of Security Council and Assembly resolutions.

The Assembly strongly condemned South Africa for its arrogant and defiant actions in imposing on the Namibian people a so-called internal settlement through an illegal "national assembly" designed to achieve international recognition for its puppets and perpetuate its occupation. It called on all Member States and the international community not to accord recognition to or co-operate with that assembly or any regime that South Africa might impose upon the Namibian people. The Assembly solemnly reaffirmed that a just and durable settlement of the question of Namibia was possible only with the full participation of SWAPO, and that the parties to the conflict in Namibia were South Africa, which was illegally occupying the territory and committing aggression against the people, and the Namibian people, under SWAPO leadership and supported by the United Nations, which had direct responsibility for the territory until independence.

The Assembly also strongly condemned South Africa for its escalated arrests and detentions of leaders and members of SWAPO, and other acts of violence against the Namibian people, as part of its attempts to frustrate genuine national liberation, to destroy SWAPO and to impose a so-called internal settlement in Namibia. It demanded that South Africa immediately and unconditionally release all leaders and members of SWAPO and cease all violence against the Namibian people, and called on Member States, specialized agencies and other international organizations to render increased and sustained support and material, financial, military and other assistance to SWAPO to enable it to intensify its struggle. The Assembly solemnly declared that South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, its defiance of the United Nations, its war of repression, its acts of aggression launched from bases in Namibia against independent African countries, its colonialist expansion and its policy of apartheid constituted a serious threat to international peace and security. The Assembly demanded again the immediate and unconditional end of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and called on the Security Council to convene urgently to take enforcement measures against South Africa, as provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter, to ensure South Africa's compliance with United Nations resolutions and decisions on Namibia.

Several States, including Australia, Austria, Costa Rica, El Salvador, France (on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Economic Community (EEC)), Guatemala, Iceland, New Zealand and Spain, expressed reservations with regard to provisions which they said seemed to support armed struggle, particularly the call on the international community to provide military and other assistance to intensify the struggle in Namibia. In agreement with that view, Norway and Sweden said their support for the resolution had been given despite the fact that it could have better reflected the principle that every possible peaceful alternative should be pursued; Norway did not believe that all negotiating efforts had been exhausted. Finland said its reservations were similar to those of Norway and Sweden. Greece and Portugal observed that their abstentions should be interpreted as meaning that the door should not be closed to South Africa, and further efforts should be made to bring about a negotiated solution.

The call on the Security Council to take enforcement measures against South Africa under the Charter was the subject of reservations by Australia, El Salvador, Guatemala, New Zealand and Sweden, which did not see it as the proper function of the Assembly to call on the Council to take mandatory measures, which was a matter within the competence of the Council alone. Botswana said it was compelled by circumstances—its geographical position vis-a-vis South Africa—to reserve its position on that paragraph.

Mexico felt the resolution was shortsighted; the actions requested were correct but far from providing a solution to the Namibian problem.

On behalf also of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States, the United Kingdom said they did not want their initiative to be complicated by their taking a position on the substance of the resolution; on purely procedural grounds, they abstained.

In his statement, Mr. Nujoma said that SWAPO had done everything possible to facilitate a political solution to the Namibian problem through United Nations—controlled elections. It had made substantial concessions to South Africa, proposed a cease-fire agreement and offered to co-operate in implementing the United Nations plan for Namibia. On the other hand, he said, South Africa was continually sabotaging the political process: it had unilaterally appointed Marthinus Steyn as Administrator-General of the territory, massacred Namibian refugees at Kassinga in Angola, staged sham elections in Namibia and established a so-called Constituent Assembly and subsequently an illegal national assembly, or "interim government."

The SWAPO President stated that the Assembly's task was to adopt measures to meet the challenge. Among other actions, it should recommend that the Security Council meet urgently to take effective enforcement measures against South Africa, including mandatory economic sanctions, an embargo on trade, arms and oil and the severance of all commercial and diplomatic links, in order to isolate the regime.

During the Assembly's discussion, the majority of Members agreed that South Africa had deliberately aggravated the situation in Namibia. It was pointed out that during the past year South Africa had stepped up its policy of apartheid and the fragmentation of the territory into homelands. It had instructed its Administrator-General for Namibia to carry out the so-called internal elections to install a puppet regime in the territory, had continued its policies of exploitation, repression and racial discrimination, including the arrest and detention of SWAPO officials and supporters, and had also used the territory to wage armed aggression against neighbouring independent African States, thus seriously jeopardizing peace and security in the region.

A number of States expressed the view that the only approach likely to have any effect on South Africa and ensure its compliance with United Nations resolutions on Namibia was the taking of concrete measures by the Security Council. Yugoslavia stated that the Assembly itself should take appropriate measures if the Council was not capable of action. Indonesia suggested that the Assembly should draw up a list of possible sanctions for submission to the Council, and Sweden noted that the current arms embargo had to be supplemented with other selective measures, including the possibility of an oil embargo. In the view of Senegal, all States must terminate relations with South Africa as long as it continued to occupy Namibia illegally, and denounce the continued illegal operation of transnational corporations in Namibia. Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Mali also called for action by the Assembly, while Jordan proposed a campaign to urge the peoples of the world to pressure their institutions, corporations and other bodies to cease their investments in South Africa, together with a recommendation to the Security Council to apply the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter.

Australia, Guatemala and New Zealand did not share the view that the proper function of the Assembly was to call on the Council to take mandatory measures under Chapter VII. The Netherlands did not consider that the moment had come for enforcement measures against South Africa. Australia, the Netherlands and New Zealand, among others, stated that while they recognized SWAPO as a major political force in the territory they did not regard it as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people.

Senegal and Sierra Leone called for expulsion of South Africa from the United Nations.

Among others, Bolivia, Bulgaria, Burundi, the German Democratic Republic, Honduras, Hungary, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Poland, Tunisia, the United Arab Emirates and Viet Nam pointed out that any suitable solution of the Namibian problem must be based on respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Namibia, cessation of Namibia's illegal occupation by South Africa and unconditional withdrawal of South African troops. They emphasized that the fundamental principles underlying a just solution included recognition by all parties concerned that SWAPO was the sole authentic and legal representative of the Namibian people and respect by all parties of the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay.

Algeria, the Byelorussian SSR, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the USSR, among others, favoured the transfer of power to SWAPO upon the withdrawal of South African troops and administration from Namibia.

With regard to the plan submitted by the five Western members of the Security Council and adopted by the Council, Australia, Austria, Chile and Lesotho considered that the proposals represented the most promising way of bringing about the early independence of Namibia by peaceful means.

Norway and Sweden said that the leading principle must continue to be the exploration of every possible peaceful means of furthering and supporting the legitimate interests of the Namibian people.

Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian

SSR, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, India, Iraq, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania stated that behind the Western powers' efforts for a peaceful settlement there was a lack of political will to resolve the Namibian problem in accordance with United Nations resolutions. They said that South Africa, through the protraction of the settlement talks, had won time to evade United Nations decisions and had intensified its actions against SWAPO. The USSR stated that practical steps were being taken to implement a neocolonialist decision; the situation played into the hands of the South African regime.

Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR noted with concern South Africa's collaboration with NATO powers in the nuclear field.

Ethiopia, India, Nigeria, Panama, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia said that special responsibility lay with those Western countries that maintained close ties with South Africa; it was for them to ensure the successful implementation of their plan by the application of measures provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The Sudan, which spoke on behalf of OAU, said that the international community, together with the Western powers, had the responsibility to take every possible action to deal with the deteriorating situation. Somalia and Zambia hoped that the Western powers would recognize the need for drastic action. Sweden and Tunisia observed that so far those powers had not shown any readiness to back up their negotiations with effective pressure. Egypt, Kenya and Venezuela, among others, considered that the talks had failed and called for stronger measures to be applied against South Africa. Egypt felt that the constant assistance of the Western powers encouraged South Africa.

The United States, speaking on behalf of the "Western five" - Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States—said that the effort to obtain an internationally acceptable and peaceful settlement had been maintained in the face of many difficulties, and it was important that it be manifested in practical agreement and the emplacement of UNTAG. The overriding issue was the willingness of the principal participants and other vitally interested parties to continue their efforts towards a negotiated settlement. These Western powers continued to believe that that was the best available course for preventing further bloodshed and for bringing about an internationally acceptable settlement in Namibia.

Algeria, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Mali, Sierra Leone, Spain and Turkey acknowledged the increasingly important role being played by the Council for Namibia. They urged Member States to give all possible assistance to the Nationhood Programme, the Institute for Namibia and the United Nations Fund for Namibia. Support for the Nationhood Programme was also expressed by Australia, Colombia, Indonesia, Nepal, Panama, Sweden, the United Arab Emirates and Yugoslavia. Senegal proposed that the powers of the Council be increased.

Angola felt that, during the negotiations of the five Western powers and the agreement of the front-line States and SWAPO to the United Nations plan for Namibia, South Africa had been buying time, strengthening its military and colonialist structures and trying to give them a semblance of legitimacy.

Zambia, introducing the resolution, said it felt that South Africa had used the past two years of negotiations not only to disguise its internal settlement scheme for Namibia but also to try to weaken SWAPO's position both inside Namibia and on an international level. Zambia felt that South Africa had left the people of Namibia no option but to intensify their struggle by all means at their disposal and the United Nations no option but to evoke measures against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter.

Holding a similar view, China expressed concern that South Africa was planning a so-called constellation of States made up of Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and South Africa itself, in order to bring the whole of southern Africa under its control.

France, speaking on behalf of the nine EEC countries, reaffirmed support for the efforts being made by the five Western powers, the front-line States and the Secretary-General to carry out the United Nations plan. In the course of ministerial talks in March at New York, the five Western Ministers had received assurances from the front-line States and from SWAPO that they would scrupulously respect the cease-fire provisions. Despite these assurances, South Africa had thus far maintained its objections to the arrangements proposed by the Secretary-General for SWAPO forces. The EEC countries wished to point out to South Africa the consequences of further delay in implementing a peaceful and internationally acceptable settlement.

Communications and reports (July-December)

By a letter dated 24 July to the Secretary-General, the President of the Council for Namibia transmitted a statement, issued that day, on the arrest of some 15.000 SWAPO members and sympathizers, killings, detention in open concentration camps and other acts of brutality committed within the past three months by South Africa against the people of Namibia. The Council called on United Nations Members and organizations throughout the world to condemn the renewed genocidal acts of South Africa.

On 27 July, the representative of South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement made the day before by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, completely rejecting the Council's statement of 24 July.

By a letter of 26 October to the Secretary-General, the Council for Namibia transmitted a statement issued that day by its President, calling the attention of the international community to the implications for peace and security, particularly in southern Africa, of the revelation that South Africa had detonated a nuclear device on 22 September.

South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General on 31 October a letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs containing a list of acts of violence he charged had been committed between 11 and 28 October by SWAPO terrorists, infiltrating from Angola, against the inhabitants of South West Africa.

In November, the Secretary-General and the Foreign Minister exchanged a number of communications concerning a proposed high-level meeting of the front-line States, the Western five, South Africa and SWAPO, to be held at Geneva between 12 and 15 November, to clarify questions arising from a working paper of the Secretary-General on the monitoring and establishment of a proposed demilitarized zone in connexion with the settlement of the question of Namibia.

On 5 November, the Secretary-General invited South Africa to be represented at the meeting. By a letter of 7 November, the Foreign Minister stressed that his country had repeatedly made it clear that the views of the leaders of the democratic political parties of the territory in such matters were of paramount importance. He also stated that discussions between the UNTAG Commander and South African military authorities would best provide answers to problems associated with the proposed demilitarized zone. The Secretary-General indicated in a letter of 7 November that all relevant military issues could be considered early in the meeting, as part of the wider effort to implement Security Council resolution 435(1978).

Letters of 8, 9 and 10 November from the Foreign Minister again stressed the importance of inviting leaders of the democratic parties in their own right to attend the consultations, which South Africa indicated could not be regarded as other than exploratory.

Further communications from the Secretary-General, dated 7, 8, 9 and 12 November, answered questions and clarified issues raised by the South African Foreign Minister concerning representation and issues. On 8 and 12 November, the Secretary-General indicated that, should members of the organizations referred to by South Africa be in Geneva, his representatives would be prepared to meet with them, in the same manner and with the same access as during talks in New York between 18 and 26 March 1979—held with a view to resolving issues related primarily to restriction-to-base provisions in the settlement proposals. By a letter of 9 November, he stressed the importance of the consultations' making real progress towards agreement on the principles of the working paper and of their not being viewed as merely a further round of exploratory talks. The Secretary-General's communications to South Africa between 7 and 12 November were transmitted to the Security Council by a note of 13 November.

On 13 November, the Minister noted that the leaders of the democratic parties had accepted the Secretary-General's invitation, conveyed by the five Western powers, to participate in the Geneva consultations in their own right, and not as part of a South African delegation, on the assumption that they would be accorded the same treatment as any other invited party. The letter concluded with South Africa's decision to attend the Geneva meeting on that basis.

On 20 November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the text of his reply of 16 November to that letter, in which he acknowledged receipt of it and referred to his previous letters, which he said fully reflected his position on the matter.

Also on 20 November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council a supplementary report concerning the implementation of Council resolutions 435(1978) and 439(1978) on the question of Namibia. He recalled that on 26 February he had reported on the differing interpretations and perceptions of SWAPO and South Africa regarding the implementation of certain provisions of the settlement proposal (see section above on COMMUNICATIONS AND REPORTS (JANUARY-MAY)). Consultations aimed at resolving the principal outstanding issues—centring on two paragraphs of the report concerning restriction to base—had been held in New York in March but agreement had not been reached, and the Secretary-General had been informed by the South African Government that certain elements of those paragraphs remained unacceptable.

The Secretary-General reported that he had met at Luanda on 15 July with President Agostinho Neto of Angola, who had suggested the establishment of a demilitarized zone on the northern frontier of Namibia with a view to facilitating the implementation of resolution 435(1978), had asked the Secretary-General to explore and develop the concept and had stated that Angola would have no objection to the establishment of a United Nations liaison office. In Luanda, the Secretary-General had also held talks with the President of SWAPO. During the meetings of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, held at Monrovia, Liberia, in July 1979, the Secretary-General had discussed the latest developments concerning the question of Namibia with African leaders, including those of the front-line States and the then Chairman of OAU. Early in August 1979, the Secretary-General was informed that the summit meeting of front-line States, held at Lusaka, had endorsed the proposed demilitarized zone. Further views were exchanged in September with the Chairman and the Secretary-General of OAU.

On 1 October, the Secretary-General submitted for consideration by the neighbouring States and by South Africa a working paper concerning monitoring and the establishment of a demilitarized zone on the Angola/Namibia and Zambia/Namibia frontiers, aimed at facilitating the implementation of the United Nations plan. Following preliminary reactions from Governments, he had extended invitations to all those that had participated in the consultations in New York in March to attend consultations in Geneva under United Nations auspices to clarify questions arising from the working paper.

The consultations, held between 12 and 16 November, had covered all aspects of the concept of the demilitarized zone in relation to the United Nations plan. The functions of UNTAG arising from the zone, the role of the neighbouring States, SWAPO and South Africa, and arrangements for the cessation of hostilities were also considered. The representatives of the Secretary-General had also met with the representatives of other Namibian organizations present in Geneva.

The front-line States and SWAPO had accepted the concept of the demilitarized zone, and the front-line States had accepted the broad outline of the working paper. It was indicated that, provided South Africa also accepted the concept, detailed technical discussions could follow. Extensive consultations were held with the South African representatives on all aspects of the concept. They undertook to report urgently to their Government, with a view to obtaining its earliest possible reaction.

By a letter of 27 November to the Secretary-General, South Africa transmitted the text of a letter of the same date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, who charged that recent statements by the President of SWAPO at Geneva had placed the current initiative there under an additional cloud of suspicion and clearly showed that SWAPO had not abandoned its consistent commitment to violence against the people of South West Africa/Namibia.

The Security Council met on 28 November, at the conclusion of which its President issued the following statement:

The Security Council met in informal consultations to hear a statement made by the Secretary-General in connexion with his report submitted in pursuance of Council resolution 435(1978) and to exchange views on the question of Namibia.

The Security Council expressed its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General to implement resolution 435(1978) but noted with grave concern that it had not been possible so far to achieve this.

The Security Council noted that the front-line States and the South West Africa People's Organization had accepted the concept of the demilitarized zone and that a South African reaction was still awaited.

The Security Council calls on South Africa to give an urgent reaction concerning an acceptance of the concept of the demilitarized zone, bearing in mind that the General Assembly is to begin its consideration of the question of Namibia on 6 December 1979.

In a letter dated 30 November to the South African Foreign Minister, the Secretary-General said he looked forward to receiving South Africa's reaction concerning the acceptance of the concept of the demilitarized zone.

On 5 December, South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a letter of the same date from its Foreign Minister reiterating his Government's commitment to ensure that the security of the people of South West Africa/Namibia was not endangered, and that the wishes of the people of the territory as to their constitutional future were not thwarted by intimidation and terrorism. Within the framework of that commitment, South Africa had examined, in consultation with the democratic parties of the territory, the idea of a demilitarized zone on both sides of the northern borders of the territory. On the basis of those consultations, South Africa accepted the concept of the zone, provided agreement was reached in further discussions, inter alia on: the number of South African bases remaining in the zone; acceptable arrangements regarding the disarmament of SWAPO personnel on the closure of bases, i.e. seven days after certification of the election; the deployment of an acceptable percentage of UNTAG inside the zone in the light of practical requirements; agreement on practical arrangements between the UNTAG Commander and the South African military authorities; confirmation that the settlement proposal accepted by South Africa on 25 April 1978 remained unchanged; and confirmation that the claim for SWAPO bases inside South West Africa/Namibia, which, in any case, was not provided for in the settlement proposal, would not be revived.

Report of United Nations Council for Namibia

The United Nations Council for Namibia reported to the General Assembly at its 1979 regular session on developments concerning the territory and on the Council's activities from 26 October 1978 to 31 October 1979. The Council's report also contained a number of recommendations that were subsequently approved by the Assembly when it adopted resolutions 34/92 A-G on 12 December (see section immediately below).

The Council reported that during 1979 it continued to act both as a policy-making organ of the United Nations and as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence. Its efforts to bring Namibia to independence, however, had thus far been impeded by the racist regime of South Africa which, in defiance of United Nations decisions, persisted in its illegal occupation of Namibia. The Council had continuously and resolutely supported the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole and authentic representative.

During the year, the Council continued to hold consultations with Governments to further implementation of United Nations resolutions on Namibia, representation of Namibian interests in international organizations and conferences, provision of material assistance to Namibians and dissemination of information. In the first half of 1979, the Council sent consultation missions to Austria, Bulgaria, China, Czechoslovakia, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Singapore, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey and the USSR. In late 1978, the Council had obtained full membership for Namibia in UNESCO.

As in previous years, the Council continued to co-operate with the Special Committee on the Declaration on the granting of independence and the Special Committee against Apartheid. It also participated in conferences and meetings of international organizations, specialized agencies and United Nations organs and represented Namibia at: the Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries (January/February, Maputo); the eighth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea (March/April, Geneva); the International Conference in Support of the Liberation Movements of Southern Africa and in Solidarity with the Front-line States (April, Lusaka); the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (May/June, Manila, Philippines); the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries (June, Colombo, Sri Lanka); the sixty-fifth session of the International Labour Conference (June, Geneva); the seventy-fifth session of the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) (June, Rome); the thirty-seventh session of the UNESCO International Conference on Education (July, Geneva); the International Conference against Military Pacts and Bases, for International Security and Co-operation (July, Nicosia, Cyprus); the FAO World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development (July, Rome); the second regular session of the Council of the International Centre for Public Enterprises in Developing Countries (July, Ljubljana, Yugoslavia); the fourth Regional Conference of the National Commissions for UNESCO of the African member States (July, Ouagadougou, Upper Volta); and the sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (September, Havana, Cuba).

Publications included a new booklet, Namibia: A Unique UN Responsibility; other initiatives in the area of dissemination of information were a new poster and information kit, the issuance of a new stamp on Namibia and the beginning of work on a yearbook on Namibia.

The Council continued to provide material assistance to Namibians by means of the United Nations Fund for Namibia, whose activities were concentrated in three main programmes: the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, the Institute for Namibia in Lusaka, and general educational, social and relief assistance for Namibians in the struggle for independence.

With respect to the Nationhood Programme, the Council approved a group of preindependence projects, either training projects or sectoral surveys, providing approximately 150 individual fellowships, as well as group training for about 60 participants. An additional 116 Namibians were studying abroad on scholarships provided directly from the Fund. The Institute's student body reached 302 in 1979, and its training programme was expanded to include shortterm courses for the upgrading of teachers, the training of secretaries and special preparatory courses in English and mathematics.

The Council continued to concern itself with foreign economic interests operating in Namibia whose activities were contributing to the maintenance of the illegal South African occupation régime and were therefore impeding self-determination. The Council carried out an extensive review of the economic exploitation of Namibia by South African and Western economic interests, particularly the plundering and ruthless exploitation of the territory's human and material resources. The Council had taken steps to notify the Governments of States whose corporations operated in Namibia of the illegality of such operations.

On 15 November 1978, the Council's Steering Committee had discussed the terms of reference of the Council's three standing committees and of the Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia, and had requested the Chairmen of those bodies to make recommendations to the Council. Standing Committees I, II and III in 1978 had each recommended adoption of a resolution concerning the question of their terms of reference, which the Council adopted on 17 April 1979.

Standing Committee I was to: recommend the representation of Namibia in international organizations and conferences; consider recommendations relating to consultations with Governments of Member States, OAU and political organizations interested in supporting the cause of the Namibian people for self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia; and consult with representatives of SWAPO in all matters under its consideration.

Standing Committee II was to: review the progress of the liberation struggle in Namibia in its political, military and social aspects and report periodically to the Council; consider the compliance of Member States with the relevant United Nations resolutions on Namibia, taking into account the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971; ¹⁸ consider the activities of foreign economic interests operating in Namibia; consider all legal issues relating to the liberation struggle of the Namibian people and the illegal South African administration in the territory; consider South African military installations and operations in Namibia; and consuit with representatives of SWAPO in all matters under its consideration.

Standing Committee III was to: consider ways of increasing dissemination of information about Namibia, in consultation with the Department of Public Information, and recommend policies to the Council; organize and co-ordinate for the Council contacts with leading opinion-makers; and consult with representatives of SWAPO in all matters under its consideration.

On 17 April, the Council also adopted a resoution setting forth the terms of reference of its Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia (see subsection below).

The Council also reviewed the activities of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, noting that, among other things, his Office had continued to collect and analyse information on Namibia, had closely followed internal developments there, had been responsible for a number of publications and had acted as co-ordinator for the implementation of the Nationhood Programme. He had carried out extensive fund-raising activities for the Institute for Namibia, the Nationhood Programme and other programmes financed from the Fund. The Regional Office of the Commissioner at Lusaka had during 1979 further diversified its operations, emphasizing assistance programmes for Namibians. The Regional Office at Gaborone had conducted a survey to assess opportunities for implementing Nationhood Programme projects in Botswana.

On 4 May 1979, the Council officially opened the International Year of Solidarity with the People of Namibia with a solemn meeting at United Nations Headquarters, New York, to commemorate the first anniversary of the massacre at Kassinga. On 23 August, the Council held a solemn meeting at Headquarters to commemorate Namibia Day.

From 29 October to 2 November, the Council observed a Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and its Liberation Movement, SWAPO. The Council held two special meetings on 29 October, at which messages from Governments, specialized agencies and support groups were read. The Week of Solidarity was also marked by a new commemorative stamp on Namibia.

Consideration by the General Assembly (December)

General aspects

At its thirty-fourth (1979) session, the General Assembly considered the question of Namibia at eight plenary meetings held between 6 and 20 December. The Assembly had before it reports of the Special Committee on granting independence and the United Nations Council for Namibia, including the report of its Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia. The Secretary-General reported on 13 August, in implementation of an Assembly resolution of 21 December 1978¹⁹ calling for non-recognition of the December 1978 elections and demanding South Africa's compliance with Security Council resolutions on Namibia, that that resolution had been transmitted to all Member States and any information received would be made available.

In addition to a number of communications that had previously also been circulated to the Security Council (see sections above COMMUNICATIONS AND REPORTS), the Assembly also had before it several letters of transmittal addressed to the Secretary-General: Sri Lanka on 6 July transmitted documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 4 to 9 June; Morocco on 27 July transmitted the texts of the resolutions and final communique of the tenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Fez from 8 to 12 May; Cuba on 1 and 16 October transmitted the text of the Final Declaration of the sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September, and the final communique adopted by an Extraordinary Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries, held in New York from 4 to 6 October; and Lesotho on 8 October circulated the texts of resolutions of the thirty-third ordinary session of the Council of Ministers of OAU, held at Monrovia, Liberia, from 6 to 20 July, and declarations, resolutions and decisions of the sixteenth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, held at Monrovia from 17 to 20 July.

On 21 September, the Assembly decided that hearings of petitioners would be held in the Fourth Committee. Accordingly, on 14 November the Committee heard statements on Namibia by the Reverend G. Michael Scott, Romesh Chandra and Amos Ngwenya of the World Peace Council, and Michael Meyers of the International League for Human Rights, who spoke as the Assistant Director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The Reverend Scott said that unless an effective system of legal sanctions was applied, the problem of Namibia would never be solved. Mr. Chandra supported this opinion, noting that the World Peace Council had organized a major international campaign in favour of the imposition of military sanctions against South Africa. Mr. Meyers said that the South African authorities employed any means to maintain their dominance in Namibia and showed absolute resistance to the forces of change.

On 6 December, on an oral proposal by its President, the Assembly, by decision 34/421 adopted without a vote, took note of the report of the Fourth Committee on the 14 November meeting.

Question of Namibia 1085

During its meetings, the Assembly heard a statement by the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Rapporteur of the Special Committee, who introduced the reports of their respective bodies, and by Peter Mueshihange, Secretary for Foreign Affairs of SWAPO, who participated as an observer. He said that a state of war existed in Namibia and called for enforcement measures against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter.

On 12 December, the Assembly adopted seven resolutions concerning Namibia (34/92 A-G). One of these—resolution 34/92 E on the United Nations Fund for Namibia—is dealt with in a separate section below. Summaries of the others follow.

Resolution 34/92 A concerned the programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia. It was sponsored by 36 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and adopted by a recorded vote of 138 to 0, with 5 abstentions.

The Assembly, noting with appreciation the efforts of the Council in the discharge of the responsibilities entrusted to it, approved the report of the Council, including its recommendations, and decided to make adequate financial provisions for their implementation. It decided that the Council, in discharging its responsibilities as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia and as a policy-making organ of the United Nations, was to: denounce all attempts by South Africa to perpetuate colonial oppression and exploitation of Namibia and its people; try to ensure non-recognition of any entity installed in Windhoek not issuing from free elections conducted under the supervision and control of the United Nations in accordance with Security Council resolutions; secure the territorial integrity of Namibia as a unitary State comprising, inter alia, Walvis Bay; counter South African policies against the Namibian people, the United Nations and the Council for Namibia; continue to mobilize international political support to press for withdrawal of the illegal administration from Namibia; hold a series of plenary meetings in Africa in 1980 at the highest possible level and request the Secretary-General to defray their cost and provide staff and services for them; inform leading opinion-makers, political and academic institutions and concerned non-governmental organizations about the Council's objectives and functions and the Namibian people's struggle, also inviting those personalities and institutions on special occasions to participate in the Council's deliberations; represent Namibia to ensure that its rights and interests were protected in all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, bodies and conferences; take all appropriate measures to ensure the full application of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the Council on 27 September 1974;²⁰ formulate and co-ordinate aid for Namibia provided by United Nations bodies and United Nations—related organizations; act as trustee of and administer and manage the United Nations Fund for Namibia; co-ordinate, plan and direct the Nationhood Programme for Namibia in consultation with SWAPO; provide broad guidelines and formulate policies for the Institute for Namibia; continue to consult with SWAPO in the formulation and implementation of its work programme; and continue to entrust executive and administrative duties to the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia.

The Assembly decided to increase the financial provision in the Council's budget to finance the Office of the South West Africa People's Organization in New York, thus ensuring appropriate representation of the people of Namibia at the United Nations through SWAPO. It also decided to continue to defray the expenses of SWAPO representatives whenever the Council required.

It declared that the United Nations was committed to genuine self-determination and independence for Namibia and that all United Nations programmes for the Namibian people would be carried out in accordance with Assembly resolutions in support of the struggle of the Namibian people under SWAPO leadership, and requested the Secretary-General to review requirements of the units which serviced the Council so that they might fully discharge all additional tasks and functions arising out of the new situation concerning Namibia.

Resolution 34/92 B on the intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia, sponsored by 34 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was adopted by a recorded vote of 134 to 0, with 9 abstentions. By the preambular paragraphs, the Assembly among other things strongly deplored the policies of States that maintained relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, as well as military or strategic collaboration, all of which had the effect of supporting or encouraging South Africa in its defiance of the United Nations.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly called on States which had not done so to comply with United Nations resolutions on Namibia and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, ²¹ urging them to break off economic relations with South Africa that concerned Namibia and take measures to compel South Africa to withdraw immediately from Namibia. It declared that the natural resources of Namibia were the birthright of the Namibian people and that their exploitation by foreign interests under South Africa's protection was illegal, in violation of the United Nations Charter and United Nations resolutions, and contributed to the maintenance of the illegal occupation regime.

The Assembly strongly condemned the activities of all foreign corporations operating in Namibia which were exploiting its human and natural resources, demanding that such exploitation cease forthwith. It appealed to Governments to discourage private investors from participating in business ventures in Namibia, which benefited South Africa by making available additional resources to meet the military costs of its repressive policies, and requested the Council for Namibia to urge corporations to cease supplying arms and ammunition to South Africa. It again requested all Member States to ensure the full application of, and compliance with, Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia. It requested the Council: to continue efforts to implement that Decree; to continue examination of the exploitation and trade of Namibian uranium by foreign interests and to report on its findings to the Assembly in 1980; and to notify the Governments of States whose corporations were operating in Namibia as well as the administering and managing bodies of those corporations—of the illegality of their operations.

Another text, resolution 34/92 C, dealt with action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to Namibia. It was sponsored by 34 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 136 to 0, with 7 abstentions.

By this text, the Assembly requested all United Nations—related organizations and conferences to grant full membership to the Council for Namibia so that it might participate in their work as the Administering Authority for Namibia, asking them to grant a waiver of the assessment of Namibia during the period in which it was represented by the Council. It also requested all intergovernmental and nongovernmental organizations, bodies and conferences to ensure that the rights and interests of Namibia were protected and to invite the Council to participate, in its capacity as the Administering Authority for Namibia, as a full member whenever such rights and interests were involved.

The Assembly decided to grant full membership to Namibia, represented by the Council, in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea.

A decision on the Nationhood Programme for Namibia—resolution 34/92 D sponsored by 35 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below)—was adopted by the Assembly without a vote.

By the preambular part of the resolution, the Assembly recalled its resolution of 9 December 1970²² by which it established the United Nations Fund for Namibia, as well as subsequent resolutions relating to the Fund, and its resolution of 20 December 1976²³ by which it launched a comprehensive assistance programme within the United Nations system, covering both the period of struggle for independence and the initial years of independence of Namibia. The Assembly said it was aware of the decisive stage achieved in the struggle of the Namibians under SWAPO leadership and recognized that the United Nations and its Member States had assumed the responsibility for assisting the people of Namibia morally and materially.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly requested the Council for Namibia to continue to direct and co-ordinate, in consultation with SWAPO, the planning and implementation of the Nationhood Programme, with the aim of consolidating all measures of assistance to Namibians by United Nations—related organizations and bodies into a comprehensive programme. It commended the progress made in bringing the pre-independence components of the Programme to the implementation stage and requested the Council to elaborate and consider policies and contingency plans regarding the transitional and post-independence phases.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation to: the organizations and bodies that had contributed to the Programme, calling on them to continue their participation and requesting them to plan and initiate new assistance measures for Namibia within the context of the Programme; the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for its contribution to the financing and administration of the Nationhood Programme, calling on it to continue to allocate funds to implement projects; UNESCO for its emphasis on the cultural identity of the Namibian people and the preparation and implementation of an educational programme for their benefit in cooperation with SWAPO; FAO for its emphasis on the development of agricultural skills of Namibians in co-operation with SWAPO; and all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that had made voluntary contributions to the Programme. It appealed to them to make further financial contributions through the Fund for Namibia.

The Secretary-General and the President of the Council were requested to appeal for additional financial contributions to the Programme through the Fund. The Secretary-General was requested also to provide the Office of the Commissioner for Namibia with the necessary resources to perform its responsibilities as the coordinating authority for implementing the Programme.

Resolution 34/92 F on dissemination of information on Namibia, sponsored by 36 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was adopted by a recorded vote of 139 to 0, with 5 abstentions.

The Assembly thereby, among other things, requested the Secretary-General to assist the Council for Namibia in disseminating information related to its activities and to direct the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, in consultation with the Council, to continue to generate publicity and disseminate information for mobilizing public support for the independence of Namibia. It also requested all United Nations-related organizations to intensify the dissemination of information on Namibia in consultation with the Council. The Assembly requested the Council to review the most effective means for publishing a United Nations Yearbook on Namibia as the authoritative source on the question.

It requested the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) to assign adequate frequencies to the Council for broadcasting inside Namibia, and authorized the Council, pending the establishment of its own broadcasting service, to assign those frequencies to neighbouring African countries for use inside Namibia. The Council, in consultation with ITU, was asked to investigate jamming by South Africa of radio broadcasts reaching Namibia, with a view to instituting legal proceedings before the International Frequency Registration Board.

The Assembly allocated $100,000 for the Council's activities related to the International Year of Solidarity with the People of Namibia, ending on 3 May 1980.

Resolution 34/92 G concerning the situation in Namibia resulting from its illegal occupation by South Africa, sponsored by 41 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was adopted by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 17 abstentions.

By the operative provisions, the Assembly, after approving the report of the Council for Namibia, reiterated that Namibia was the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and national independence were achieved and reaffirmed the mandate given to the Council as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence. All Member States were asked to co-operate fully with the Council in the discharge of its mandate.

The Assembly reaffirmed that SWAPO was the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people. It also reaffirmed their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay, and the legitimacy of their struggle by all means at their disposal, including armed struggle, against the illegal occupation of their territory. The Assembly declared that the continued illegal occupation constituted an act of aggression against the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, as well as against the United Nations.

The Assembly strongly condemned South Africa for its persistent refusal to comply with Assembly resolutions on Namibia, as well as for its manoeuvres to impose in Namibia a so-called internal settlement, designed to give a semblance of power to a puppet regime and a cover of legality to the racist occupation, as an alternative to SWAPO, which was fighting for the genuine liberation of Namibia as a united political entity. It was solemnly reaffirmed by the Assembly that a just and durable settlement of the question of Namibia was possible only with the full participation of SWAPO, and that the parties to the conflict in Namibia were, on the one hand, South Africa, which was illegally occupying the territory and committing aggression against the people, and, on the other, the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO, supported by the United Nations.

All States were called upon to take effective legislative measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia and to continue to refrain from according any recognition to or co-operating with any regime which South Africa might impose upon the Namibian people in disregard of the provisions of Security Council resolution 385(1976)²⁴ and other United Nations resolutions.

The Assembly reiterated that Walvis Bay was an integral part of Namibia, and any decision by South Africa to annex it was illegal, null and void, and appealed to Member States to assist SWAPO in its struggle to achieve national independence in a united Namibia.

South Africa was strongly condemned for its repression of the Namibian people and SWAPO.

²⁴ See footnote 6.

The Assembly demanded that South Africa immediately release all Namibian political prisoners and strongly condemned South Africa for its military build-up in Namibia, its recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, its military attacks, threats and aggression against neighbouring States, and forcible and wholesale displacement of Namibians from their homes for military and political purposes. The Assembly declared that South Africa's consistent defiance of the United Nations, its illegal occupation of Namibia and war of repression against the Namibian people, its persistent acts of aggression launched from bases in Namibia against independent African countries, its policies of colonial expansion and apartheid and its development of nuclear weapons constituted a serious threat to international peace and security.

Western States that had helped South Africa develop a nuclear capability were condemned, and all Member States were urged again to frustrate South African attempts to develop nuclear weapons. The Assembly also strongly condemned the activities of all foreign corporations that operated in Namibia under the illegal administration and illegally exploited the human and natural resources of the territory, demanding that transnational corporations immediately abstain from any new investment in Namibia, withdraw from the territory and end their cooperation with South Africa.

South Africa was strongly condemned also for obstructing the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976), 435(1978)²⁵ and 439(1978).26 The Assembly demanded South Africa's immediate and complete compliance with Council resolutions and called upon the Council to act decisively against any dilatory manoeuvres and fraudulent schemes of the illegal occupation regime. The Assembly solemnly called on the Council to convene urgently to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, as provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter, in order to ensure South Africa's immediate compliance with United Nations resolutions and decisions on Namibia.

During the general debate, the representative of SWAPO noted that the session was taking place at a time when the possibility of implementing a peaceful settlement in Namibia seemed increasingly doubtful. In March, SWAPO had reiterated its readiness to implement the United Nations settlement plan and had accepted the concept of a demilitarized zone, which was intended to allay South Africa's fears that SWAPO would continue its military activities in the territory, but South Africa continued to resort to delaying tactics, obstructing any progress. He stressed that, due to South Africa's consistent defiance of the authority of the United Nations, its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its campaign of terrorism and repression against Namibians, its constant acts of aggression against independent African States and its commitment to developing nuclear weapons for aggression, the situation in Namibia constituted a serious threat to world peace and security. Accordingly, the task before the Assembly was to call on the Security Council to impose comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa to compel it to withdraw from Namibia.

The majority of speakers deplored the fact that, despite intensified endeavours of the United Nations to put an end to the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, the situation in the territory had continued to deteriorate because of the intransigence of the South African regime.

A large number of Members, among them the Congo, Egypt and the Ukrainian SSR, maintained that South Africa had succeeded in defying United Nations resolutions only because of the broad political, economic and military support it continued to receive from a number of Western countries, which were exploiting the territory's vast reserves of minerals, including uranium. Bulgaria condemned especially the nuclear co-operation of the Western powers, which had allowed South Africa to develop a nuclear capability.

Many other speakers, including Bangladesh, the Gambia, Grenada, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Pakistan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yemen, condemned South Africa for having allegedly detonated a nuclear device on 22 September.

The Federal Republic of Germany, speaking also on behalf of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, said that the five Governments, which had originally formulated the settlement plan, continued to spare no effort to bring about an internationally acceptable settlement of the Namibian question and were working closely with the Secretary-General in an effort to secure the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978). Since February, the five Governments had striven to find a way, consistent with the terms of the United Nations plan, to overcome South Africa's objections to various aspects. These efforts had centred on the concept of a demilitarized zone along Namibia's northern borders with Angola and Zambia, which South Africa had accepted provided that agreement was reached on a number of concerns. Technical discussions were to start as soon as possible to work out the details of the zone so that it could be established and implementation of the settlement plan begun. If agreement was not reached in the near future, then Member States must collectively examine appropriate next steps.

²⁶ See footnote 14.

Support for the settlement plan was expressed by a number of Members, including Austria, Greece, Ireland, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates. Ireland, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, voiced the view that the plan was the best way to bring South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia to an end. Norway and Spain considered South Africa's acceptance in principle of the demilitarized-zone proposal as opening the way for early implementation of the plan and urged that speedy efforts be made to resolve the outstanding questions so that UNTAG might arrive in Namibia at an early date. Similar views were expressed by Argentina, Austria, Brazil and Japan.

Many States, including Algeria, Hungary, Morocco and Pakistan, emphasized that to be just and lasting, any political solution must be based on the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence in a united country, including Walvis Bay, and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of South African troops and administration. Any negotiations leading to independence must be entered into by South Africa with SWAPO under United Nations auspices and such negotiations must be conducted for the sole purpose of deciding the modalities for the transfer of power to the people. The international community should refuse to recognize and to co-operate with any puppet regime installed by South Africa. The Byelorussian SSR and the USSR also stressed that power in Namibia should be transferred to the people of Namibia, as represented by SWAPO.

Angola, Bhutan, Jamaica, Sweden and the United Arab Emirates, among others, considered that the five Western powers, because of their economic, political and military influence on South Africa, had a special responsibility to persuade that regime to comply with Security Council resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978). As evidence of their desire to achieve a settlement, they should terminate all forms of collaboration with South Africa.

Many States, including Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Indonesia and Senegal, shared the view that further action by the Security Council, especially the imposition of comprehensive economic sanctions, including embargoes on trade and oil, under Chapter VII of the Charter, would be required before South Africa would finally comply with those Council resolutions. China, among others, while supporting the imposition of mandatory sanctions, considered that in the final analysis the intensification of the armed struggle would be necessary to achieve the liberation of the territory.

Botswana said that, together with the other front-line States, it had been engaged for more than two years in complicated negotiations along with the five Western powers. The front-line States felt that those powers had a special responsibility, because of their special relationship with South Africa, to make sure that South Africa acceded to the United Nations plan, which was based on Western proposals. Any hesitation by those powers would seriously endanger their credibility.

Finland, Norway and Sweden voted in favour of resolution 34/92 G, but had reservations with regard to those paragraphs that seemed to legitimize the use of force. The nine member States of EEC abstained; Ireland, speaking on their behalf, dissociated them from explicit and implicit endorsement of armed struggle. Botswana and Lesotho recorded reservations on the provision calling for the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter.

By a letter of 17 December to the Secretary-General, South Africa rejected in their entirety Assembly resolutions 34/92 A-G of 12 December on Namibia as well as resolutions 34/93 A-R of 12 and 17 December on the policies of apartheid of South Africa (see p. 179) as unconscionable and egregious breaches of the United Nations Charter. In the words of the South African Minister for Foreign Affairs, they supported strife rather than sought genuine and constructive solutions and amounted to no more than political manoeuvring to bring pressure to bear on South Africa.

United Nations Fund for Namibia

The 1979 report of the United Nations Council for Namibia to the General Assembly contained the Council's report on the United Nations Fund for Namibia, for which the Council served as trustee.

The Council reported that since 1972, when the Fund became operational, the assistance programmes financed by the Fund had been continuously expanded by the Assembly and were currently concentrated in three main areas: (1) the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, launched in 1972 to mobilize the organizations and bodies within the United Nations system to assist Namibians in their struggle and preparation for self-determination and independence; (2) the United Nations Institute for Namibia, established to undertake research, training, planning and related activities with special reference to the establishment of an independent State of Namibia; and (3) educational, social and relief assistance during the struggle for independence.

The Council noted that during the year it had approved 46 projects for the pre-independence period in Namibia as part of the Nationhood Programme. The projects, which would be executed by bodies within the United Nations system, fell into two main categories: training projects and sectoral surveys. The total cost would be $5,721,260, of which about two thirds would be covered by the Fund (voluntary contributions), one fourth by UNDP and one tenth by the executing agencies.

The Institute for Namibia, open to all Namibians who fulfilled requirements established by the Institute's Senate, continued to expand its curriculum and the size of its student body. It also undertook applied research on a variety of topics. Projects had been completed and published on manpower estimates and development implications, constitutional options, and agrarian and land reform options. In 1979, the Institute had 302 students. On 29 December, the first group of 66 students was graduated from the Institute with diplomas in management and development studies.

The Senate, which administered the Institute, held its ninth meeting at Lusaka on 23 and 24 April. It also held an extraordinary meeting in New York on 17 September to consider proposals of a task force it had established at its April meeting to advise and make recommendations on the future of the Institute. The task force-composed of the Senate Chairman, the Rapporteur of the Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia, the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, the Vice-President of SWAPO and the Director of the Institute as Secretary—had met at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 24 to 26 July. The Senate at the September meeting approved a draft charter contained in the report of the task force, with amendments, and referred it to the Council which, after receiving a report on the charter from the Committee on the Fund, approved it on 5 December.

Educational, social and relief assistance for current needs of Namibians included primary and secondary education, remedial training, vocational and technical training, higher education, nutrition, health and medical care and social welfare.

The Council noted that the Fund was supported by voluntary contributions from Governments, United Nations bodies and related organizations, particularly UNDP, governmental and non-governmental organizations and the regular budget of the United Nations. The income of the Fund was $4,657,739 for 1979, including a contribution of $500,000 from the regular budget of the United Nations. Expenditures from the Fund for 1979 on behalf of its three main programmes were: the Nationhood Programme, $117,129; the Institute for Namibia, $2,344,431; and educational, social and relief assistance, $700,320.

The Council approved the terms of reference of its Committee on the United Nations Fund for Namibia on 17 April. The Committee was to formulate and review policies on: the utilization of the resources of the Fund; the Nationhood Programme; the co-ordination of the Council's work with United Nations—related organizations; and the activities of the Institute for Namibia. The Committee was also to undertake any other tasks the Council might entrust to it.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Committee on the Fund for Namibia said that in order to streamline the assistance activities for Namibians, the Council should request the United Nations system's organizations and bodies to plan and initiate new assistance measures within the context of the Nationhood Programme and the Institute for Namibia. Also, the Council should assign the Institute the responsibility of serving as a centre for information and documentation on Namibia.

On 12 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/92 E, sponsored by 34 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), on the United Nations Fund for Namibia. By this text, the Assembly, among other things: took note of the report of the Council on the Fund for Namibia; approved the conclusions and recommendations in that report; expressed its appreciation to all States, organizations and individuals that had contributed to the Fund; asked organizations in the United Nations system to give priority, in consultation with the Council, to the allocation of assistance funds to Namibians; and asked the Secretary-General and the Council to intensify their appeals for contributions. The Assembly decided to allocate, as a temporary measure, $500,000 to the Fund from the United Nations regular budget for 1980. It also decided that Namibians should continue to be eligible for assistance through the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa.

By resolution 34/93 B on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, also adopted on 12 December, the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa were commended for their efforts to promote humanitarian assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discrim-

Related General Assembly decisions

At its thirty-fourth session in 1979, the Assembly adopted a number of resolutions concerning aspects of the question of Namibia. (For page references to texts of those mentioned below, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

On 13 December, by resolution 34/94 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Assembly requested all States to withhold all assistance from South Africa until it restored to Namibians their right to selfdetermination and independence and to take no action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the régime's domination of the territory, urged them to provide assistance to Namibians and requested the Special Committee to enlist world-wide support to achieve the objectives of the Declaration and to implement United Nations resolutions on Namibia. (For details, see p. 1015.)

On 21 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/41 on the activities of foreign economic and other interests which were impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence. By this text, the Assembly reaffirmed provisions of the documents adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo in 1977,27 and of the 1977 Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid,28 and condemned all activities of foreign economic interests operating in Namibia, declaring their collaboration with South Africa detrimental to the interests of the people. The Assembly reiterated that the exploitation and plundering of the territory's natural resources was illegal and contributed to the maintenance of the occupation regime and strongly condemned South Africa for its continued exploitation of those resources. It called again on all States to discontinue relations with South Africa, acting on behalf of or concerning Namibia. (For details, see p. 1030.)

By resolution 34/42 on the implementation of the Declaration by specialized agencies and United Nations—associated international institutions, the Assembly on 21 November expressed concern that assistance by those organizations to Namibians and their liberation movement was inadequate. Regretting that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund had not fully implemented the Declaration and deploring the fact that they continued to co-operate with South Africa, the Assembly again urged United Nations organizations to withhold any assistance and support from South Africa until it restored to the people of Namibia their right to selfdetermination and independence and to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of its domination of the territory. (For details, see p. 1023.)

On 9 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/21 on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU by which it called on the United Nations Council for Namibia, among other bodies, to continue to associate OAU closely with all its work concerning Africa. (For details, see p. 264.)

On 15 November, by resolution 34/24, the Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Council for Namibia, among other United Nations bodies, for its contribution to the implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.29 In an annexed programme of activities for the second half of the Decade, the Assembly said that particular attention should be paid to specific measures for ensuring implementation of numerous documents on self-determination in southern Africa, and recommended that the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the Commission on Human Rights should study, in co-operation with the Council for Namibia and other United Nations bodies, measures which would make it possible to end all collaboration with South Africa, including all commercial, financial and technological assistance to the regime in Namibia. (For details, see p. 798.)

In adopting resolution 34/44 on 23 November concerning the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to selfdetermination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to selfdetermination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference. (For details, see p. 833.)

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/174 by which it decided to enlarge the assistance programme for South African student refugees living in neighbouring States to include needs of refugee students from Namibia, requested the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to organize and implement an education and assistance programme for student refugees from southern Africa who had found asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia, and urged all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to co-operate with those officials and to contribute generously to the programme. (For details, see p. 185.)

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1979, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued to provide scholarships to Namibians. During the period 1 October 1978 to 30 September 1979, the Programme granted 45 new awards to Namibians and extended 187, making a total of 232 scholarship holders studying in 19 foreign countries. During the same period, 49 awards were completed.

On 21 November, the Assembly, by resolution 34/31 adopted without objection, expressed its appreciation to all who had made voluntary contributions or provided scholarships and appealed for generous financial support to the Programme in order to ensure its continuation and expansion. (For details about the Programme and the Assembly's decisions thereon, see p. 266; for page reference to text of resolution 34/31, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Appointment of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia

On 20 December, acting on a proposal of the Secretary-General, the General Assembly, by decision 34/326 adopted without a vote, extended the appointment of Martti Ahtisaari (Finland) as United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for a further one-year term beginning on 1 January 1980.

The General Assembly.

Gravely concerned at the critical situation in Namibia, Having heard the statements by the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the President of the South West Africa People's Organization, Bearing in mind its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and reaffirming the inalienable rights of the Namibian people to selfdetermination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia.

Recalling its resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967 and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to the question of Namibia, as well as the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, which emphasized both the illegality of South Africa's occupation of Namibia and the direct responsibility of the United Nations for the Territory,

Recalling also its resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978 containing the Declaration on Namibia and Programme of Action in Support of Self-Determination and National Independence for Namibia.

Indignant at South Africa's persistent refusal to withdraw from Namibia in utter defiance of numerous resolutions of the United Nations and gravely concerned at South Africa's escalated brutal repression of the Namibian people as well as the measures it has taken to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia, Convinced that South Africa is seeking to establish a puppet regime in Namibia in contravention of resolutions of the United Nations, in particular Security Council resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976 and 435(1978) of 29 Septem-

Strongly reiterating its support for the national liberation movement of Namibia, the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people in their struggle by all means, including armed struggle, to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia,

1. Declares the urgent need to ensure the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Namibian people to genuine selfdetermination and national independence in Namibia, including Walvis Bay, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples as well as all subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, including Council resolution 385(1976), relating to Namibia, and supports the legitimacy of their struggle by all means at their disposal against the illegal occupation of their

Territory by South Africa;

2. Solemnly reaffirms the direct responsibility of the United Nations for Namibia, renews its determination to ensure the effective and complete discharge of this responsibility and, to this end, calls upon all Member States and bodies and organs of the United Nations to support fully the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence in the implementation of its mandate;

3. Determines that South Africa has acted deceitfully through unilateral measures and sinister schemes within Namibia during the protracted period of talks for a negotiated settlement in Namibia to the detriment of the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, and in contravention of resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 431 (1978) of 27 July 1978, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 and 439(1978) of 13 November 1978, and relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

4. Strongly condemns the racist regime of South Africa for its arrogant and defiant actions in imposing on the Namibian people a so-called internal settlement through a fraudulent and illegal "national assembly" designed to achieve international recognition for its puppets therein in order to perpetuate South Africa's illegal occupation and its colonial and racist exploitation of Namibia;

5. Calls upon all Member States and the international community to refrain from according any recognition to, or cooperating with, the illegal national assembly or any regime which racist South Africa may impose upon the Namibian people in disregard of resolutions of the United Nations;

6. Solemnly reaffirms that a just and durable settlement of the question of Namibia is possible only with the direct and full participation of the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, and that the parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, South Africa, which is illegally occupying the Territory and committing aggression against the people, and, on the other, the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, supported by the United Nations, which has direct responsibility for the Territory until independence;

7. Strongly condemns South Africa for its escalated arrests and detentions of leaders and members of the South West Africa People's Organization, and other acts of violence against the Namibian people, as part of its attempts to frustrate the aspirations of the Namibian people for genuine national liberation, to destroy the South West Africa People's Organization and to impose a so-called internal settlement in

Namibia;

8. Demands that the racist regime of South Africa immediately and unconditionally release all leaders and members of the South West Africa People's Organization and cease all violence against the Namibian people;

9. Calls upon Member States, specialized agencies and other international organizations to render increased and sustained support and material, financial, military and other assistance to the South West Africa People's Organization to enable it to intensify its struggle for the liberation of Namibia;

Solemnly declares that South Africa's illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia, its consistent defiance of the United Nations, its war of repression being waged against Namibians, its persistent acts of aggression launched from bases in Namibia against independent African countries, its colonialist expansion and its policy of apartheid constitute a serious threat to international peace and security;

11. Demands once again the immediate and unconditional end of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa;

12. Calls upon the Security Council to convene urgently to take enforcement measures against South Africa, as provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter in order to ensure South Africa's compliance with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on Namibia.

Programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Namibia,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967, by which it established the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority of Namibia until independence,

Reaffirming that the Territory and people of Namibia are the direct responsibility of the United Nations and that the Namibian people must be enabled to attain self-determination and independence within a united Namibia,

Convinced of the urgent need to intensify consultations with the South West Africa People's Organization in the formulation and implementation of the programme of work of the Council as well as in any matter of interest to the Namibian people,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia in the discharge of the responsibilities entrusted to it under resolution 2248(S-V) and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly relating to Namibia,

1. Approves the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia, including the recommendations contained therein, and decides to make adequate financial provisions for their implementation:

2. Decides that the United Nations Council for Namibia, in the discharge of its responsibilities as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence and as policymaking organ of the United Nations, shall:

(a) Denounce all fraudulent constitutional or political schemes through which South Africa may attempt to perpetuate its system of colonial oppression and exploitation of the people and resources of Namibia;

- (b) Endeavour to ensure non-recognition of any administration or entity installed in Windhoek not issuing from free elections in Namibia, conducted on a territory-wide basis, under the supervision and control of the United Nations, in accordance with Security Council resolution 385(1976) of 30 January 1976 and subsequent resolutions in their entirety;
- (c) Secure the territorial integrity of Namibia as a unitary State comprising, interalia, the total area of Walvis Bay;
- (d) Counter the policies of South Africa against the Namibian people and against the United Nations and the legal Administering Authority for Namibia, the United Nations Council for Namibia;
- (e) Continue to mobilize international political support in order to press for the withdrawal of the illegal South African administration from Namibia in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia;
- (f) Hold a series of plenary meetings in Africa in 1980 at the highest possible level, as required for the further proper discharge of its functions, and request the Secretary-General to defray the cost of those meetings in Africa and provide the necessary staff and services for them;

(g) Inform leading opinion makers, media leaders, political and academic institutions and other concerned non-governmental organizations of Member States about the objectives and functions of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization and also hold consultations with, and seek the co-operation of, those personalities and institutions by inviting them on special occasions to participate in the deliberations of the Council, thereby ensuring the most effective mobilization of public opinion in support of the cause of the Namibian people;

(h) Represent Namibia to ensure that the rights and interests of Namibia shall be protected, as appropriate, in all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, bodies and conferences;

(i) Take all appropriate measures to ensure the full application of, and compliance with, the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and such other measures as may be necessary to assist in the protection of the natural resources of Namibia;

(j) Formulate policies of assistance to Namibians and coordinate aid for Namibia provided by the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies within the United Nations system;

(k) Act as trustee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia and, in this capacity, administer and manage the Fund;

(I) Co-ordinate, plan and direct the Nationhood Programme for Namibia in consultation with the South West Africa People's Organization;

(m) Provide broad guidelines and formulate the principles and policies for the United Nations Institute for Namibia at Lusaka.

(n) Continue to consult with the South West Africa People's Organization, as appropriate, in the formulation and implementation of its programme of work as well as in any matter of interest to the Namibian people;

(o) Continue to entrust such executive and administrative duties as it deems necessary to the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, who, in the performance of his tasks, shall report to the Council;

3. Decides to increase the financial provision in the budget of the United Nations Council for Namibia to finance the Office of the South West Africa People's Organization in New York, in order to ensure appropriate representation of the people of Namibia through the South West Africa People's Organization at the United Nations;

4. Decides to continue to defray the expenses of representatives of the South West Africa People's Organization, whenever the United Nations Council for Namibia so requires;

5. Declares that the United Nations is committed to genuine self-determination and national independence for Namibia and that all United Nations programmes for the benefit of the Namibian people will be carried out in accordance with the resolutions of the General Assembly in support of the struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic liberation movement, to achieve genuine self-determination and national independence for Namibia;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, to review the requirements of the units which service the Council so that they may fully discharge all additional tasks and functions arising out of the new situation concerning

Namibia.

Intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Namibia,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967, as well as its subsequent resolutions relating to Namibia,

Recalling also the Declaration on Namibia and Programme of Action in Support of Self-Determination and National Independence for Namibia, contained in General Assembly resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978,

Affirming that the natural resources of Namibia are the birthright of the Namibian people and that the depletion of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the repressive illegal South African administration is in violation of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Strongly deploring the policies of those States which, despite the relevant decisions of the United Nations and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, continue to maintain diplomatic, economic, consular and other relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, as well as military or strategic collaboration, all of which has the effect of supporting or encouraging South Africa in its defiance of the United Nations,

Strongly condemning the support which the illegal South African administration continues to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests which are collaborating with it in its exploitation of the human and natural resources of, and in the further entrenchment of its illegal and racialist domination over, the international Territory of Namibia,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of the human and natural resources of Namibia, which contributes to the perpetuation of the illegal South African occupation of Namibia,

- 1. Calls upon those States which have not yet done so to comply with the relevant provisions of the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to Namibia and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971;
- 2. Urges those States which have not yet done so to break off economic relations with South Africa that concern Namibia and to take measures with a view to compelling the Government of South Africa to withdraw immediately from Namibia accordance with General Assembly resolutions 2145(XXI) and 2248(S-V), as well as subsequent resolutions of the Assembly and the Security Council relating to Namibia;
- 3. Declares that the natural resources of Namibia are the birthright of the Namibian people and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the repressive racist colonial administration, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, of the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, is illegal and contributes to the maintenance of the illegal occupation regime;
- 4. Strongly condemns the activities of all foreign corporations operating in Namibia under the illegal South African administration which are exploiting the human and natural resources of the Territory, and demands that such exploitation cease forthwith;
- 5. Appeals to Governments to discourage private investors from their countries from participating in business ventures in Namibia which benefit the South African regime by making available additional resources to meet the military costs of its repressive policies in Namibia;
- 6. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to communicate with corporations supplying arms and ammunition to South Africa and urge them to cease such activities;
- 7. Requests once again all Member States to take all appropriate measures to ensure the full application of, and compliance with, the provisions of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, and such other measures as may be necessary to assist in the protection of the natural resources of Namibia;
- 8. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue its efforts to implement Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia;
- 9. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to continue to examine the exploitation of and trade in Namibian uranium by foreign economic interests and to report on its findings to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;
- 10. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to notify the Governments of States whose corporations, whether public or private, operate in Namibia of the illegality of such operations and of the position of the Council in this regard;
- 11. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to contact administering and managing bodies of foreign corporations operating in Namibia to warn them of the illegal basis on which they are operating in Namibia and of the position of the Council in this regard.

A/34/L.47 and Add.1. Algeria, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Burundi, Congo, Cyprus, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia: draft resolution.

A/C.5/34/82, A/34/807. Administrative and financial implications of, inter alia, 34-power draft resolution, A/34/L.47 and Add.1. Statement by Secretary-General and report of Fifth Committee.

Resolution 34/92 C, as proposed by 34 powers, A/34/L.47 and Add.1, adopted by Assembly on 12 December 1979, meeting 100, by recorded vote of 136 to 0, with 7 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

Action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations with respect to Namibia

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

Colonial Countries and Peoples, Recalling its resolution 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967, by which it established the United Nations Council for Namibia to administer the Territory until independence,

Taking into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977.

Recalling the Declaration on Namibia and Programme of Action in Support of Self-Determination and National Independence for Namibia, contained in General Assembly resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978,

Taking into account the statement of the representative of the South West Africa People's Organization and conscious of the urgent and pressing need of Namibians outside Namibia for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations relating to Namibia, particularly in the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the people of Namibia and their sole and authentic liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization,

1. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations and conferences within the United Nations system to grant full membership to the United Nations Council for Namibia so that it may participate in that capacity as the Administering Authority for Namibia in the work of those agencies, organizations and conferences;

2. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to grant a waiver of the assessment of Namibia during the period in which Namibia is represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia;

- 3. Requests all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, bodies and conferences to ensure that the rights and interests of Namibia shall be protected and to invite the United Nations Council for Namibia to participate, in its capacity as the Administering Authority for Namibia, as a full member whenever such rights and interests are involved:
- 4. Decides, in accordance with section I of its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, by which it established the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as an organ of the General Assembly, to grant full membership in the Conference to Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia;
- 5. Decides, in accordance with paragraph 8 (b) of its resolution 3067(XXVIII) of 16 November 1973, by which it convened the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, to grant full membership in the Conference to Namibia, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia.

- 3. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies within the United Nations system which have contributed to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and calls upon them to continue their participation in the Programme by:
- (a) Implementing projects approved by the United Nations Council for Namibia;
- (b) Preparing new project proposals at the request of the Council
- (c) Allocating funds from their own financial resources for the implementation of the projects approved by the Council;
- 4. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies within the United Nations system, when planning and initiating new assistance measures for Namibia, to do so to the extent feasible within the context of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;

Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Development Programme for its contribution to the financing and administration of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and calls upon it to continue to allocate, at the request of the United Nations Council for Namibia, funds from the indicative planning figure for Namibia for the implementation of the projects within the Nationhood Programme;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for its substantial contribution to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in particular for its emphasis on the cultural identity of the Namibian people and the preparation and implementation of an educational programme for the benefit of the Namibian people in close co-operation with the South West Africa People's Organization;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for its substantial contribution to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in particular for its emphasis on the development of agricultural skills of Namibians in close and continuous co-operation with the South West Africa People's Organization;

8. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have made voluntary contributions to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and appeals to them to make further financial contributions to the Programme through the United Nations Fund for Namibia;

9. Requests the Secretary-General and the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia to appeal to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals for additional financial contributions to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia through the United Nations Fund for Namibia;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia with the necessary resources for the performance of its responsibilities, entrusted to it by the United Nations Council for Namibia, as the co-ordinating authority in the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia.

Dissemination of information on Namibia

The General Assembly.

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to

Colonial Countries and Peoples,
Recalling its resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967, as well as subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to Namibia,

Recalling also the Declaration on Namibia and Programme of Action in Support of Self-Determination and National Independence for Namibia, contained in General Assembly resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978,

Stressing the urgent need to arouse world public opinion on a continuous basis with a view to assisting effectively the people of Namibia to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia and, in particular, to intensify the widespread and continuous dissemination of information on the struggle for liberation being waged by the people of Namibia, guided by their liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization,

Reiterating the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the mandate given by the General Assembly to the United Nations Council for Namibia and mindful of the pressing need for the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to intensify its efforts to acquaint world public opinion with all aspects of the question of Namibia,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to direct the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, in consultation with the United Nations Council for Namibia, to continue to make every effort to generate publicity and disseminate information with a view to mobilizing public support for the independence of Namibia;

2. Requests all specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to intensify the dissemination of information on Namibia in consultation with the > Situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling, in particular, its resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967 and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to Namibia, as well as the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, delivered in response to the request addressed to it by the Council in its resolution 284(1970) of 29 July 1970,

Taking into consideration the resolution on Namibia adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-third ordinary session, held at Monrovia from 6 to 20 July 1979, especially its decision that, in the event of the failure of the Security Council to adopt effective enforcement measures against the regime in South Africa and to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity should meet in an extraordinary session to devise a new strategy for the liberation of Namibia,

Taking into consideration the decision on Namibia adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September

Reaffirming that the Territory and people of Namibia are the direct responsibility of the United Nations and that the Namibian people must be enabled to attain self-determination and independence within a united Namibia,

Stressing the grave responsibility of the international community to take all possible measures in support of the Namibian people in their liberation struggle under the leadership of their sole and authentic representative, the South West Africa People's Organization,

Indignant at the arbitrary imprisonment and detention of political leaders and followers of the South West Africa People's Organization, the killing of Namibian patriots and other acts of brutality, including the wanton beating, torture and murder of innocent Namibians, and the arbitrary inhuman measures of collective punishment and measures designed to intimidate the Namibian people and to destroy their will to fulfil their legitimate aspirations for self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia,

Strongly condemning South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its brutal repression of the Namibian people and its ruthless exploitation of the people and resources of Namibia, as well as its efforts to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia,

Strongly condemning South Africa for its refusal to comply with Security Council resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 431 (1978) of 27 July 1978, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 and 439(1978) of 13 November 1978 and for its decision to promote bogus arrangements under the pretence of conducting a bona fide electoral process and to create a neocolonial pupper regime in Namibia in order to maintain its policies of domination and exploitation of the people and the natural resources of the Territory,

Renewing its call upon the international community, especially all Member States, to refrain from according any recognition to or co-operating with any regime which the illegal South African administration may impose upon the Namibian people in disregard of the provisions of the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to Namibia,

Noting with satisfaction the persistent opposition of the Namibian people to South Africa's illegal presence in the Territory and to its oppressive racist policies and, in particular, the progress of their struggle in all its forms for national liberation under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization

Strongly reiterating its support for the national liberation movement of Namibia, the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people in their struggle to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia,

Reaffirming its full support for the armed struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization,

Strongly condemning, as an act of colonial expansion, the decision of South Africa to annex Walvis Bay, thereby undermining the unity and territorial integrity of Namibia,

Strongly deploring the policies of those States which, despite the relevant decisions of the United Nations and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971, continue to maintain diplomatic, economic, consular and other relations with South Africa, purporting to act on behalf of or concerning Namibia, as well as military or strategic collaboration, all of which has the effect of supporting or encouraging South Africa in its defiance of the United Nations.

Strongly condemning the racist regime of South Africa for its efforts to develop a nuclear capability for military and aggressive purposes,

Deeply concerned by the increasing militarization of Namibia and by the continuing acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African countries, including the most recent acts of aggression against Angola and Zambia which resulted in extensive loss of human lives and destruction of economic infrastructures,

Reaffirming that the natural resources of Namibia are the birthright of the Namibian people and that the exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests under the protection of the repressive racist colonial administration, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, of the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, is illegal and contributes to the maintenance of the illegal occupation regime,

Strongly supporting the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia in the discharge of the responsibilities entrusted to it under the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

 Approves the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

2. Reiterates that Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and national independence are achieved in the Territory and, for this purpose, reaffirms the mandate given to the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence;

3. Reaffirms that the national liberation movement of Namibia, the South West Africa People's Organization, is the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people;

- 4. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and as recognized in resolutions 1514(XV) and 2145(XXI), as well as in subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly relating to Namibia, and the legitimacy of their struggle by all means at their disposal, including armed struggle, against the illegal occupation of their Territory by South Africa;
- Requests all Member States to co-operate fully with the United Nations Council for Namibia, the legal Administering Authority for the Territory until independence, in discharging the mandate entrusted to it under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 2248(S-V) and subsequent resolutions of the Assembly;
- 6. Declares that the continued illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa constitutes an act of aggression against the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, as well as against the United Nations, which has direct responsibility over the Territory until independence;
- 7. Strongly condemns the South African regime for its persistent refusal to comply with the resolutions of the General Assembly relating to Namibia;
- 8. Strongly condemns also the manœuvres of South Africa to impose in Namibia a so-called internal settlement, designed to give a semblance of power to a puppet regime and a cover of legality to the racist occupation, as an alternative to the South West Africa People's Organization, which is fighting for the genuine national and social liberation of Namibia as a united political entity;
- 9. Solemnly reaffirms that a just and durable settlement of the question of Namibia is possible only with the direct and full participation of the South West Africa People's Organization, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, and that the parties to the conflict in Namibia are, on the one hand, South Africa, which is illegally occupying the Territory and committing aggression against the people, and, on the other, the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, supported by the United Nations, which has direct responsibility for the Territory until independence;

10. Calls upon the international community, especially all Member States, to continue to refrain from according any recognition to or co-operating with any regime which the illegal South African administration may impose upon the Namibian people in disregard of the provisions of Security Council resolution 385(1976) and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Council;

11. Reiterates that Walvis Bay is an integral part of Namibia in accordance with United Nations resolutions, in particular General Assembly resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978 and Security Council resolution 432(1978) of 27 July 1978, and that any decision by South Africa to annex Walvis Bay is therefore illegal, null and void;

12. Supports the armed struggle of the Namibian people, led by the South West Africa People's Organization, to achieve self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

- 13. Appeals to all Member States to grant all necessary support and assistance to the South West Africa People's Organization in its struggle to achieve national independence in a united Namibia:
- 14. Strongly condemns the illegal South African administration for its massive repression of the people of Namibia and their national liberation movement, the South West Africa People's Organization, with the intention of establishing, among other things, an atmosphere of intimidation and terror for the purpose of imposing upon the Namibian people a political arrangement aimed at subverting the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia as well as perpetuating the systematic plunder of the national resources of the Territory;

15. Demands that South Africa immediately release all Namibian political prisoners, including all those imprisoned or detained in connexion with "offences" under the so-called internal security laws, martial law or any other arbitrary measures, whether such Namibians have been charged or tried or are being held without charge in Namibia or South Africa;

16. Strongly condemns South Africa for its everincreasing military build-up in Namibia, its recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies and the use of other agents to carry out its policy of military attacks against neighbouring States, its threats and acts of aggression against independent African countries and the forcible and wholesale displacement of Namibians from their homes for military and political purposes;

17. Calls upon all States to take effective legislative measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia;

18. Declares that South Africa's consistent defiance of the United Nations, its illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia and its war of repression against the Namibian people, its persistent acts of aggression launched from bases in Namibia against independent African countries, its present policy of colonial expansion, its policy of apartheid and its development of nuclear weapons constitute a serious threat to international peace and security;

19. Condemns those Western States which have assisted South Africa in developing a nuclear capability and urges again all Member States, individually and collectively, to frustrate the attempts by South Africa to develop nuclear weapons;

20. Strongly condemns the activities of all foreign corporations operating in Namibia under the illegal South African administration which are exploiting illegally the human and natural resources of the Territory and demands that transnational corporations comply with all pertinent resolutions of the United Nations by immediately abstaining from any new investment in Namibia, by withdrawing from the Territory and generally by putting an end to their co-operation with the illegal South African administration;

21. Strongly condemns South Africa for obstructing the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976),

435(1978) and 439(1978) and its manœuvres, in contravention of those resolutions, designed to consolidate its colonial and neo-colonial interests at the expense of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people for genuine self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia;

22. Demands that South Africa urgently comply fully and unconditionally with the resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 385(1976) and subsequent resolutions of the Council relating to Namibia;

23. Calls upon the Security Council to act decisively against any dilatory manœuvres and fraudulent schemes of the illegal occupation regime aimed at frustrating the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people, under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, for self-determination and national liberation as well as negating the achievements of their just struggle;

24. Solemnly calls once again upon the Security Council to convene urgently to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, as provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, in order to ensure South Africa's immediate compliance with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Namibia.

United Nations Fund for Namibia

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia on the United Nations Fund for Namibia,

Recalling its resolution 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966, by which it decided that the United Nations would terminate the Mandate of South Africa over Namibia and assume direct responsibility for the Territory until independence, and its resolution 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967, by which it established the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Recalling also its resolution 3112(XXVIII) of 1 2 December 1973, by which it appointed the United Nations Council for Namibia trustee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia,

Reaffirming its determination to continue to discharge its responsibility with regard to the Territory in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2248(S-V) and subsequent resolutions of the Assembly and the Security Council, Mindful that, by assuming direct responsibility for Namibia, the United Nations accepted a solemn obligation to grant all possible support to the Namibian people in their struggle for self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia.

Convinced of the need to grant all possible material assistance to Namibians and their dependants who are victims of South Africa's repressive and discriminatory policies,

- 1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia on the United Nations Fund for Namibia and approves the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;
- 2. Expresses its appreciation to all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, governmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have made voluntary contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia;
- 3. Decides that the utilization of the resources of the United Nations Fund for Namibia should be considered also in the context of the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia;
- 4. Decides to allocate as a temporary measure to the United Nations Fund for Namibia the sum of $US 500,000 from the regular budget of the United Nations for 1 980;
- 5. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations Council for Namibia to intensify appeals to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals for generous voluntary contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia;
- 6. Invites Governments to appeal once more to their national organizations and institutions for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia;
- 7. Expresses its appreciation to the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system for their assistance to Namibians and requests them to give Priority, in consultation with the United Nations Council for Namibia, to the allocation of funds for material assistance to the Namibian people;
- 8. Expresses its appreciation of the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to assist Namibian refugees;

- 9. Decides that Namibians shall continue to be eligible for assistance through the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa:
- Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;
 10. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Chapter IV

Situatio n in Souther n Rhodesi a

Developments concerning the situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) in 1979 included several meetings of the Security Council and the holding of a Constitutional Conference on the territory.

The Security Council met in March and April. On 8 March, it adopted resolution 445(1979), by which it condemned recent armed attacks by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia against front-line African States, declared any election managed by that regime null and void and requested the administering power the United Kingdom—to prevent further illegal executions in the territory. It also asked its Committee on sanctions to meet to consider widening sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. On 30 April, the Council adopted resolution 448 (1979), by which it condemned all attempts by the regime to prevent Zimbabwe's achieving independence and genuine majority rule, reaffirmed that the so-called elections held from 17 to 21 April 1979 were null and void, and reiterated its call on all States not to recognize any representative or organ established by that process and to observe the mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. (For details of Security Council action in March and April, see pp. 205-11.)

On 27 April, at the conclusion of a series of meetings at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples' adopted the text of the Final Document on the Decolonization of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

Other important developments were a meeting at Lusaka, Zambia, in August, of heads of Government of Commonwealth countries (see p. 212), and a Constitutional Conference at Lancaster House, London, whose objective was to provide for majority rule in the territory and consider arrangements for a transitional period leading to independence, including the holding of elections supervised by the United Kingdom.

In December, at its thirty-fourth session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/192 on the question of Southern Rhodesia. The Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure that right by all means at their disposal. It also reaffirmed that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe, called for the full implementation of the agreements reached at Lancaster House, and commended the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe for its contribution to the negotiations. Condemning South Africa for its intervention in Southern Rhodesia, it called upon the administering power to ensure withdrawal of South African forces and mercenaries from the territory. In addition, the Assembly asked for assistance to the front-line States.

The Assembly also adopted several other resolutions with provisions pertaining to the situation in Southern Rhodesia.

Meeting on 21 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 460(1979), by which it called on Member States to terminate all existing United Nations sanctions and decided to keep the situation in Southern Rhodesia under review until the territory attained full independence. By the same resolution, the Council dissolved its Committee on sanctions, established in pursuance of resolution 253(1968).² (For details, see p. 214.)

Decisions on Southern Rhodesia were also taken during the year by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council. Details of action taken by these bodies and by the General Assembly and its Special Committee are described below.

Also during 1979 a number of communications were received by the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, several of which were circulated as documents of both the Council and the General Assembly.

Decision s of Human Rights Commission and of the Economic and Social Council

On 21 February, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution on the right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation, by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference. (For details, see p. 833.)

lution on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other assistance given to colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa. By this text, it invited the Special Rapporteur on this topic in its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities when preparing a list requested in 1977³ identifying those whose activities constituted aid to the colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa to bear in mind those Governments and transnational corporations whose military, economic, financial and other assistance, including nuclear aid, to those regimes constituted a denial of the enjoyment of human rights in Namibia, Zimbabwe and South Africa. (For details, see p. 811.)

On 6 March, the Commission adopted a resolution on the report of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on the question of the violation of human rights in southern Africa. Reaffirming the right of the people of Zimbabwe to enjoy all the rights recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,4 the Commission condemned activities of countries which were helping to perpetuate the current situation in Zimbabwe and urged them to refrain from such activities. It demanded the immediate release of all political prisoners held in Zimbabwe and in the interim requested protection for them in accordance with the applicable provisions of the third Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949. It also recommended that Member States intensify their co-operation in the humanitarian field so as to strengthen their assistance to Zimbabwe's neighbours for facing the refugee situation; continued evaluation of that situation and aid and protection should be ensured by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The Ad Hoc Working Group was to continue studying the policies and practices violating human rights in Zimbabwe, including a comprehensive study of action taken to implement its recommendations, in order to assess the further efforts needed. (For details, see p. 812.)

On 2 August, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1979/50, on the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence by specialized agencies and other United Nations—associated international institutions, by which it urged them, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe, to do everything possible urgently to render increased assistance, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), to the people and national liberation movement of Zimbabwe. The Council asked those organizations to continue to withhold any assistance to the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, to discontinue all support to it until it restored to the people of Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, its illegal domination of the territory. (For details, see p. 1021.)

On 3 August, the Council adopted resolution 1979/75, on activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes in that area, by which it reiterated that such activities were detrimental to the interests of the oppressed peoples in Southern Rhodesia. It asked the Secretary-General to submit an in-depth analysis of the role of transnationals in the industrial, military and nuclear sectors of the territory. (For details, see p. 627.)

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Southern Rhodesia at meetings held at Belgrade from 23 to 27 April. Tirivafi Kangai and John Nkomo, representatives of the Patriotic Front, participated as observers.

Associating himself with a message of welcome from President Josip Broz Tito of Yugoslavia, the Yugoslav Federal Secretary for Foreign Affairs called for immediate measures to liquidate the colonial racist rule in southern Africa. He considered it timely for the Committee to request all United Nations Member States not to recognize the so-called Government established in Southern Rhodesia on the basis of sham elections. Yugoslavia felt there should be no lifting of existing sanctions; those sanctions should indeed be more vigorously applied and stricter sanctions introduced to cover everything from oil to nuclear technology.

The United Kingdom provided an account of major developments affecting Southern Rhodesia which had taken place since its address to the Special Committee in August 1978. These developments included a visit to southern Africa of Cledwyn Hughes, personal representative of the United Kingdom Prime Minister, to talk to the leaders of the parties and Governments most closely concerned, a decision of the Executive Council in Salisbury to postpone the internal elections until April 1979, a deterioration of the military situation in the territory, and Southern Rhodesian raids into front-line States.

The United Kingdom also informed the Committee of the situation created by the regime's having published a draft constitution, endorsed by the white electorate of the territory in a referendum of 30 January 1979. In this connexion, the United Kingdom repeated its Government's public statement that it did not regard the referendum as a measure of the acceptability of the regime's constitutional proposal to the people of Southern Rhodesia as a whole. In the view of the United Kingdom, elections supervised by the United Nations following a cease-fire and an internal transitional administration, as provided for in the Anglo-American proposals, remained essential to a viable settlement. Such a settlement must include the Patriotic Front. The United Kingdom had also opposed the lifting of international sanctions against the Salisbury regime.

Mr. Kangai of the Patriotic Front criticized the internal settlement constitution, which he said did not address itself to the transfer of real power to the majority. He said that the elections which had taken place in the territory in April were bogus and he accused the regime of intimidation of voters and widespread economic blackmail of the African population.

Mr. Nkomo, also of the Patriotic Front, said that the situation in southern Africa, especially in Zimbabwe, had continued to deteriorate. An analysis of the contents of the 3 March 1978 Salisbury agreement, under which the so-called elections were held, clearly revealed the intrigues forced upon the people of Southern Rhodesia. The position of the Patriotic Front was that, since the colonial State machinery could conduct only elections that perpetuated colonial interests, an independent Zimbabwe must therefore first of all destroy that machinery. He called on the Committee to ensure that decolonization continued unimpeded, that States Members of the world body were dissuaded from according any form of recognition to the criminal regime of Southern Rhodesia, that the regime was condemned for its wanton aggression against the front-line States and the destruction of life and property, and that continued moral and diplomatic support for the anti-colonial forces was Almost all Committee members condemned the so-called internal settlement and rejected the constitution drawn up as a result of this settlement as well as the results of the so-called elections. Most speakers expressed their country's support for the Patriotic Front in its struggle for the genuine independence of the territory and condemned the acts of aggression of the Salisbury regime against the front-line States.

The United Republic of Tanzania said that majority-rule government in Zimbabwe would be brought about by either a properly negotiated settlement which took the realities of Zimbabwe into account, including in particular the armed liberation struggle which had entered a crucial phase, or the continuation and intensification of the armed struggle to its ultimate conclusion. No action by any minority regime in Zimbabwe, or by anyone else, could keep the Patriotic Front from winning the liberation war.

India said it was clear that the illegal regime of Ian Smith had survived only with the encouragement of well-entrenched foreign economic interests. Security Council sanctions had been rendered ineffective by the massive and undisguised support provided by South Africa. India felt that the Committee should recommend a review of the existing sanctions against Southern Rhodesia with a view to tightening and extending them under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. India would also support the imposition of comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa as a means of terminating the Smith regime.

USSR said that politico-diplomatic manœuvres for the achievement of a so-called internationally acceptable settlement for Southern Rhodesia had been used by neo-colonialist circles only as a pretext for postponing the process of decolonization. These manœuvres had once again demonstrated the hypocrisy of those who in recent years had disseminated the notorious lie about the readiness of the racists to accept a just settlement of the problems of Southern Rhodesia and Namibia and to transfer power to the indigenous populations of those territories. By transferring power to their puppets, the racists and their Western supporters had tried to continue to plunder the natural and human resources of southern Africa and to use the neocolonialist regimes there as operational bases in their fight against the national liberation movements and against the strengthening of the independence of newly independent African States.

Australia and Sweden were of the opinion that negotiations must involve all political movements. Any equitable solution required the full participation of the people of Zimbabwe. Only such a solution could be lasting, stable and viable. Arrangements and manœuvres to perpetuate their own positions by those currently in power were not acceptable and could only lead to further civil strife, economic and social chaos and increased human suffering. In such a situation, the risk of intervention in the conflict by external powers might increase and further exacerbate a situation which already constituted a threat to international peace and security.

Chile said it was regrettable that there was growing hostility and rivalry among the various groups claiming to represent the people of Zimbabwe. This rivalry existed not only between the illegal regime and the national liberation movements but also in the movements themselves, and made it very difficult to have a constructive dialogue in the search for a solution to the question of Southern Rhodesia. Chile supported the Anglo-American plan and believed it represented a valid option for dealing with the crisis, but recalled that the parties concerned had denounced it as impractical and obsolete.

The Syrian Arab Republic observed that the racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia was becoming stronger and even more rigid in its defiance of the international community. It felt it was high time to search for the reasons that all the proposals for settlement had thus far failed. It supported the imposition of full sanctions against the racist regimes of southern Africa, condemnation of all States that collaborated, directly or indirectly, with those regimes, and full recognition and endorsement of the armed struggle of the African national liberation movements.

China felt that the old colonial system was disintegrating as a result of the long struggle waged by the peoples of southern Africa. History showed that armed struggle was the way to victory; political struggle must be backed by military struggle. China maintained that the mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia should be strengthened, and truly effective measures, including sanctions, should be taken against South Africa.

On 27 April, at the conclusion of its meetings at Belgrade, the Committee adopted without objection the Final Document on the Decolonization of Zimbabwe and Namibia.

By this Document, the Committee, having considered the question of Southern Rhodesia in the context of the Declaration on granting independence, drew the attention of the international community to the extremely serious situation prevailing in the territory, and called for support for the Zimbabwean people and their authentic liberation movement, the Patriotic Front, in their struggle to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence. Condemning the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia for violence against the African peoples under its domination and for defying United Nations efforts to bring about the genuine and complete decolonization of Southern Rhodesia, the Committee reaffirmed that any settlement must be based on genuine independence and with the full participation of the people. Accordingly, the Committee called on the entire international community to denounce all manœuvres by the Salisbury regime to impose a so-called internal settlement aimed at giving that regime a semblance of legitimacy. The Committee, noting the continuing political, military and economic links of certain States with the South African regime, appealed to all Security Council members, and in particular to the Western countries that were permanent members, to facilitate the imposition of measures under Chapter VII of the Charter.

⁶ Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter reads as follows: "The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations."

The Committee stated that in Southern Rhodesia the illegal racist minority regime had further intensified its inhuman practices of oppression, terror and intimidation against the people. In a desperate bid to retain its domination over the territory, the regime had resorted to repeated, massive acts of aggression against neighbouring African States—acts which the Committee strongly condemned—and had attempted to deceive world opinion by imposing the so-called internal settlement.

Thus, the Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure that right by all means at their disposal; it also reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule and that any settlement relating to the territory's future must be worked out with the full participation of the Patriotic Front and in accordance with the people's true aspirations.

It strongly condemned South Africa and other countries for their direct and indirect support of the illegal regime; it condemned and rejected the so-called internal settlement reached at Salisbury on 3 March 1978 as null and void, called on all States not to recognize it, and strongly denounced all other manœuvres by that regime aimed at the retention of power, in particular the illegal constitution drawn up in pursuance of that settlement and the so-called elections held under it, calling on all States not to recognize any so-called majority Government that might be formed following those sham elections.

The Committee expressed its firm support to the people of Zimbabwe, under the leadership of the Patriotic Front, in their legitimate struggle, and called on all States to support them as fully as possible in that regard. It requested all States to exert pressure on the regime to terminate repressive measures, to effect the release of political prisoners, remove restrictions on individuals and political activity and restore fundamental human rights, and to end all acts of aggression and preparations for such acts against neighbouring States. The Committee strongly condemned States which allowed recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries and called on them to prevent such activities or advertisement of them. It asked all States to give immediate and substantial aid to Angola, Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia to enable them to strengthen their defence capability and overcome economic difficulties in connexion with their application of economic sanctions against the regime and its acts of aggression. It strongly condemned Governments, particularly that of South Africa, which continued to collaborate with the regime and urged them to cease such collaboration. It condemned Governments that violated the mandatory sanctions and certain Governments that failed to enforce them; it also expressed deep concern and indignation at current moves in the United States and the United Kingdom to lift sanctions against the regime and drew their attention to their responsibility and obligation to comply scrupulously with Security Council decisions.

The Committee called on all Governments to ensure compliance with the sanctions, prohibit collaboration with the illegal régime, prevent or discourage emigration to the territory, discontinue actions which might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the regime, invalidate passports and documents for travel to the territory, and take measures against international companies and agencies that supplied petroleum and oil products to the regime. It asked for maximum humanitarian assistance to Zimbabwean refugees and the Patriotic Front from States, directly and through their membership in the United Nations family of organizations and other governmental and non-governmental organizations.

The Special Committee deemed it imperative that the scope of sanctions against the regime be widened to include all the measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter and reiterated its request that the Security Council consider taking the necessary measures in that regard as a matter of urgency. It also requested the Council urgently to consider imposing sanctions—a mandatory embargo on oil and oil products as a first step—against South Africa, the main channel for violation of Council sanctions against Southern Rhodesia.

The Ivory Coast, although not dissociating itself from the consensus, said it regretted the wording of the paragraph explicitly singling out the Western States which were permanent members of the Council to facilitate the imposition of sanctions. The USSR felt that the paragraph was addressed to the permanent members and all the other Council members.

Consideratio n by the General Assembly

General aspects

At its thirty-fourth session in 1979, the General Assembly referred the question of Southern Rhodesia to its Fourth Committee, which considered the item between 8 November and 11 December.

During its consideration of the question, the Assembly had before it, in addition to the report of the Special Committee and a number of communications that had also been circulated to the Security Council (see pp. 205, 208 and 211), a letter of 24 May from Ghana, current Chairman of the African group of States at the United Nations, containing a report of the National Bar Association of the United States on recent developments with respect to Southern Rhodesia. The report had been submitted to 12 United States Senators on 8 May and presented to the African group on 21 May; it was endorsed by that group. The report concluded that the United Nations Charter imposed on the United States and other Members an affirmative obligation to co-operate with enforcement actions of the Security Council, that the new constitution adopted by the white minority of Southern Rhodesia preserved existing power relationships and denied majority rule, and that the elections there had been conducted in an atmosphere of coercion and intimidation.

By a note of 26 September, the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Assembly to the 1979 report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights (see p. 811).

On 4 December, Madagascar transmitted a Government communique of the same date appealing to the United Kingdom and to the Patriotic Front to establish a pre-independence transitional period of at least six months to enable refugee supporters of that Front to return to Southern Rhodesia to participate.

Messages of congratulations by its President to the leaders of the Patriotic Front and to the United Kingdom Prime Minister on the successful conclusion of the Rhodesia Constitutional Conference were circulated by Malawi in a letter to the Secretary-General on 19 December.

Other letters to the Secretary-General transmitted texts of documents or results of various meetings and conferences that had discussed, among other subjects, the question of Southern Rhodesia: Sri Lanka on 6 July transmitted documents of the Colombo Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries in June; Morocco on 27 July transmitted those of the Tenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers at Fez in May; Cuba transmitted on 1 and 16 October, respectively, the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries at Havana in September and the final communique adopted on 6 October at an Extraordinary Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries at New York, at which Assembly items they considered to be priority issues were discussed; and Lesotho circulated on 8 October documents and decisions of the thirty-third session of the Council of Ministers of OAU and of the sixteenth session of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, both held in July at Monrovia, Liberia.

During the Fourth Committee's consideration of the item, Josiah Chinamano, Edgar Tekere and Mtshana Ncube, representatives of the Patriotic Front, participated as observers. The statements by Mr. Chinamano and Mr. Ncube to the Committee were reproduced as Committee documents. Requests for hearings were also granted to Romesh Chandra and Amos Ngwenya of the World Peace Council, and to the Reverend G. Michael Scott.

The representative of the United Kingdom, whose statement was reproduced as a Committee document, informed the Fourth Committee of the internal and international developments concerning Southern Rhodesia which had led to the Constitutional Conference at Lancaster House beginning on 10 September.

He said that although internal elections held in Southern Rhodesia in April had been condemned by the Security Council and had indeed been based upon a constitution which was defective in important respects, those elections had represented a step forward, in that: they had been conducted on the basis of one man, one vote; there had been a substantial turn-out; the new Parliament had a substantial majority of black members; and the first black Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia had been about to take office. At the meeting of the heads of Government of Commonwealth countries at Lusaka in August (see p. 212), he continued, the foundations had been laid for the negotiations currently in progress at Lancaster House. Within a week, invitations had been issued to Bishop Abel Muzorewa, leader of the Salisbury regime, and to the Patriotic Front each to appoint delegations, and both sides had accepted.

The Constitutional Conference, he said, was addressing itself to proposals put forward by the United Kingdom after the necessary consultations. These proposals concerned a detailed description of the independence constitution put forward on 3 October, which necessarily represented a compromise between the positions of the Salisbury representatives and those of the Patriotic Front. The proposed constitution indisputably provided for genuine majority rule, yet contained adequate safeguards for minorities. At the same time, it gave the elected legislature and the Government deriving its authority from it full power to implement policies, on the basis of which they would be elected. Those constitutional proposals had been agreed to by the Salisbury delegation and, after further discussion, by the Front on 18 October, conditional upon satisfactory arrangements being agreed for their implementation.

On 22 October, he said, the United Kingdom had put forward proposals for the preindependence period, seeing no merit in prolonging the two-month transitional period beyond what was strictly necessary to enable the people to elect their Government, and accepting its responsibility to see that conditions for the election campaign were fair and impartial. More detailed proposals had been put forward on 3 November for the interim period under which the United Kingdom was prepared to appoint a Governor and an Election Commissioner, and an Election Council would be appointed.

Continuing, he said that after both the Salisbury and Patriotic Front representatives had accepted the proposals for the interim period, on 5 and 15 November respectively, the Conference had begun to discuss arrangements for a ceasefire. An amplified version of the United Kingdom proposals on this issue had been put forward on 22 November. Giving details, the United Kingdom representative explained that the proposals envisaged that the primary responsibility for observance of the cease-fire would rest with the forces of both sides and with their commanders, who would be represented on a Ceasefire Commission under the chairmanship of the Governor's military adviser. To reassure both sides that the cease-fire would operate and would be fair, the United Kingdom Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had proposed the establishment of a cease-fire monitoring force under United Kingdom auspices with the participation of Commonwealth Governments.

Mr. Chinamano said that, in accepting the invitation to attend the London Conference, the Patriotic Front had made it clear that it was merely indicating its willingness, as a matter of policy, to negotiate a solution to the problems of Zimbabwe, and had also made clear its rejection of the proposed constitutional outline enclosed by the United Kingdom in its letter of invitation to the Conference. He stressed that the participation of the Patriotic Front in the Conference did not mean that it could accept any formula at any cost.

The Patriotic Front spokesman then gave a detailed account of the Front's position at the Lancaster House Conference and said that it had disagreed with the United Kingdom on, among other things, the length of the transition period, the composition of the security forces, the nature of the Presidency, special minority representation, qualifications for citizenship and the Bill of Rights (particularly the clause on protection against deprivation of property). He also said that despite the Front's serious reservations on certain important aspects of the independence constitution as proposed by the United Kingdom, an agreement on this subject had finally been reached.

Mr. Ncube of the Patriotic Front said that the United Kingdom proposals sought to keep much of the political and economic power in the hands of the current puppet regime and he accused the United Kingdom of not being concerned with a permanent peace that could lead to the creation of a stable and prosperous Zimbabwe. He said that the aim of the United Kingdom was rather to bequeath to Zimbabwe not only the ravages of colonialism but also an inherent political, social and economic instability which would be exploited by those who had, together with the United Kingdom, resisted the genuine decolonization of Zimbabwe.

The majority of speakers in the Committee acknowledged the significance of the Lancaster House talks and expressed hope for their success, although Ethiopia, Guinea and the Niger were disappointed at the lack of real progress.

Sweden said that for the first time in a very long period there had been a hopeful development in the continuing struggle in Southern Rhodesia between a small minority fighting to protect privileges based on discrimination and illegal power and an oppressed majority fighting for their civil rights, liberation and independence. It stated that if and when a peaceful settlement was reached which had the support of the administering power and the Zimbabwean parties concerned, it would be the duty of the international community to respect that solution.

The United States said that it fully supported the United Kingdom's efforts at the London Conference to negotiate a peaceful and enduring solution. It believed that previous joint efforts by the United States and United Kingdom to find an acceptable basis for agreement among the Southern Rhodesian parties to the conflict, as well as Security Council sanctions imposed against Southern Rhodesia, had played an important role in moving the Salisbury regime to take preliminary steps towards majority rule and had also helped to lay the groundwork for the current negotiations.

Speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Economic Community, Ireland expressed their hope that the Committee would not take any action that would prejudice the chances of reaching agreement during negotiations.

Argentina, Barbados and Guyana welcomed the progress made at the London negotiations. Argentina cautioned that States should avoid taking positions which might circumscribe the freedom of action of parties involved. Barbados called on the United Kingdom to ensure that the cease-fire arrangements took account of the concerns of the Patriotic Front.

Japan, Norway and Yugoslavia also advocated peaceful solutions to the problem. They had supported the plan agreed upon by the heads of Government of Commonwealth countries at their August meeting at Lusaka and subsequent efforts at the current Constitutional Conference in London. Japan, New Zealand and Norway said that the Lusaka communique had provided the first hope of a negotiated settlement. However, the successful implementation of whatever agreements resulted from the London negotiations depended on the degree of mutual confidence.

Yugoslavia also cautioned that the final outcome was uncertain. The situation in Southern Rhodesia had not changed for the better; on the contrary, the conflict had intensified. Yugoslavia emphasized that all attempts to perpetuate existing colonial relationships and the oppression and exploitation of the peoples of southern Africa and their natural resources would have catastrophic consequences, not only for the population of the region but also for the economic, political and military strategic interests of those who had contributed to such a development.

The USSR said that it continued to advocate a political settlement of the problems in southern Africa, including Southern Rhodesia. It emphasized that the possibilities of a political settlement should be utilized fully and honestly in the interests of all parties and that the demands put forward by the Patriotic Front at Lancaster House must be met. It said that the representatives of the Front had from the outset of the Conference been subjected to a series of ultimatums and blackmail.

The Niger felt that the United Kingdom should not be given too much credit for having agreed, after long avoiding the issue, to bring the opposing factions to the negotiating table, since the London negotiations were largely due to the efforts made by independent African countries and the sacrifices of the people of Zimbabwe and the front-line States.

The United Republic of Tanzania said that it had encouraged those negotiations because the people of Zimbabwe had agreed to take part through the Patriotic Front, because at the Lusaka meeting the administering power had undertaken to decolonize Southern Rhodesia by means of negotiations, and because the United Republic of Tanzania, as a matter of policy, supported every attempt to reach a peaceful settlement of the question.

China and Egypt, among others, said that they had always firmly supported the just struggle of the Zimbabwean people against colonialism and racism and expressed hope that the Assembly would contribute to peace and stability in southern Africa by resolutely supporting that struggle. They hoped that any proposed solution to the problem would be compatible with the interests and wishes of the people of Zimbabwe and consistent with the procedures recommended by OAU and the United Nations. Cuba said that the results of the London talks would only gain international acceptance if they led to a Government based on majority rule, in conformity with OAU and United Nations resolutions.

Viet Nam said that, despite those resolutions, the Salisbury regime was intensifying its policy of repression and enforcing the so-called internal settlement, which had been condemned by all progressive public opinion. In the mean time, the Western countries continued to claim that they were seeking a negotiated solution to the problem of Southern Rhodesia, while in reality they had deliberately prolonged negotiations and were using them as a cover to safeguard their colonial interests. Viet Nam pointed out that a number of Western countries had become even more brazen in their political, economic and military support, whether direct or indirect, of the Southern Rhodesian administration. If those countries had not encouraged the Salisbury regime, Southern Rhodesia would already have become independent, and a black majority regime would have been established.

Democratic Yemen disapproved of the manner in which the negotiations were being conducted and doubted the impartiality of the administering power, which, it said, appeared to be negotiating on behalf of the white minority while putting pressure on the Patriotic Front.

Equatorial Guinea, Ghana and Pakistan, among others, considered that any unilateral action to lift sanctions imposed on Southern Rhodesia in defiance of Security Council decisions should be treated as a serious violation of Charter obligations. India said that the sanctions had been evaded and violated over the years, chiefly by multinational companies based in Western countries. Nevertheless, they had served an important political purpose, and it was therefore incumbent on all Governments to ensure that they were maintained within the framework of the relevant Council resolutions. Premature dismantling of the sanctions would be counter-productive, India added.

Bangladesh and India stressed that a just and permanent solution of the problem of Zimbabwe had to be consistent with the total transfer of power from the minority to the people of Zimbabwe, in recognition of their inalienable national right to self-determination, freedom and genuine independence. Pending such arrangements, the international community should condemn all acts of aggression against independent African countries launched by Southern Rhodesian rebel forces, for which the administering power had ultimate responsibility. While negotiations proceeded, mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia could not be relaxed without prejudicing a final solution.

Ethiopia and the Ukrainian SSR expressed their support for the position of the Patriotic Front, stressing its repeated assurances that it sought the speediest possible end to the destructive war, but not at the cost of the vital interests of the people of Zimbabwe.

Guinea said that several prerequisites for the holding of valid elections should be observed: hostilities should be ended; political prisoners should be released with full civic rights; displaced persons should be resettled in their homes; a reasonable time—agreed with the Patriotic Front—should be allowed for refugees to return and be entered on the electoral roll; mercenaries should be disarmed and their activities ended; and impartial security forces should be used to guarantee the frontiers and internal order.

On 11 December, the Chairman of the Fourth Committee stated that it had been suggested by a number of States that any decision to be taken by the Assembly on the question of Southern Rhodesia should take due account of the possible results of the ongoing Lancaster House Conference. He proposed that the Committee recommend to the Assembly that a decision on the question of Southern Rhodesia should be taken directly in plenary meeting, as appropriate. The members of the Committee approved the proposal without objection.

On 13 December, by decision 34/424, adopted, without objection, on an oral proposal of its President, the Assembly took note of the report of the Fourth Committee.

On 17 December, the United Kingdom announced to the Assembly that the final agreement had been initialled at Lancaster House by the United Kingdom and the Patriotic Front on arrangements for a cease-fire, completing the work of the Conference. The three-phase package of the Conference—the constitution, the transitional arrangements and the cease-fire—had thus been agreed by all parties, permitting the conduct of free elections to bring Zimbabwe to sovereign independence.

On 18 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/192, sponsored by 22 countries: Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Burundi, Cape Verde, the Comoros, the Congo, Egypt, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mozambique, Nigeria, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia. The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 107 to 16, with 21 abstentions.

By the preambular part of the resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the responsibility of the United Nations in support of the struggle of the people of Southern Rhodesia for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, as well as the primary responsibility of the United Kingdom, as the administering power, for decolonizing Southern Rhodesia and for putting an end to the critical situation in the territory. The Assembly, bearing in mind a July 1979 resolution on Zimbabwe of the Council of Ministers of OAU, especially its affirmation of the Patriotic Front as the sole, legitimate and authentic representative of its people, expressed concern about threats posed by mercenaries and by South Africa to the independence, unity and peace of Zimbabwe. By the final preambular paragraph, it deplored the moves by certain States to lift sanctions unilaterally, in violation of the measures imposed by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right. It also reaffirmed the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and, in that regard, took note of the agreements reached at Lancaster House aimed at bringing about genuine independence on the basis of free and fair elections. It commended the Patriotic Front for its decisive contribution in the negotiations, solemnly declaring that a just and lasting settlement in Zimbabwe was possible only with the full participation of the Front at every stage of implementation of the agreements and calling for their full and faithful implementation.

The Assembly strongly condemned the racist regime of South Africa for its intervention in Southern Rhodesia, including the presence in the territory of its military and security forces, and also condemned the presence of mercenaries, calling on the administering power to ensure the immediate and complete withdrawal of those forces and mercenaries. It also called on that power to ensure that South Africa did not carry out its threats to undermine the implementation of the agreements reached at Lancaster House.

The Assembly declared that Security Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968, imposing mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, could only be revoked by a Council decision and that any unilateral action in this regard would be in violation of the obligation assumed by Member States under Article 25 of the Charter; it called on the Council to follow the situation closely until the people of Zimbabwe achieved genuine independence and majority rule.

The Assembly requested all States urgently to give substantial material assistance to Angola, Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia to enable them to rebuild their socio-economic infrastructure, adversely affected by constant acts of aggression by the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia and by the application of sanctions. It asked the Special Committee on granting independence to keep the situation in the territory under review and to report to the Assembly in 1980.

The sponsors revised their original text to have the Assembly deplore, in the final preambular paragraph, moves by certain States, rather than certain Western States, to lift sanctions. They also deleted an operative paragraph by which the Assembly would have decided to meet in a special session on the question in 1980, authorizing the Assembly President to undertake appropriate consultations therefor. A separate vote was requested by Senegal on the final preambular paragraph, which was adopted by a recorded vote of 95 to 17, with 21 abstentions.

A number of States—Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Finland, Greece, Guatemala, Ireland, the Ivory Coast, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Turkey and the United States—expressed reservations about some parts of the text, because of which they either voted against the resolution or abstained. Most of these Members did not support the resolution because they felt it took insufficient account of the Lancaster House agreements. The Philippines was among those who voted in favour but nevertheless held a similar view.

Canada and Ireland expressed regret that some elements of the resolution were not conducive to the aim of implementing the agreements. Some paragraphs appeared to Ireland to contradict the key provision that the people of Zimbabwe should themselves elect representatives to determine their future. Guatemala abstained in the vote because, in its view, the resolution dealt with a situation that no longer existed once the London agreements had been reached.

Austria, Greece, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the United States had reservations on the paragraph referring to the affirmation of the Patriotic Front as the sole legitimate representative of the people of Zimbabwe, since the primary purpose of the agreement, as accepted by the Front at London, had been to devise a procedure to allow the people to decide for themselves who would represent them. Gabon, which supported the text, also expressed reservations on this formulation.

The Netherlands felt that the resolution accentuated differences rather than areas of agreement and the Assembly had expressed itself too emphatically on matters that belonged to the competence of the Security Council. The Netherlands could not support endorsement of the struggle for the right to self-determination by all means, when the means of self-determination had been laid down in the Lancaster House agreements, which limited them to the democratic means of free elections. The United States expressed similar views regarding the resolution, which it felt dwelt on the past and reaffirmed the right of armed struggle as though there had been no agreements reached at Lancaster House.

Argentina expressed reservations about paragraphs opposing the lifting of sanctions, pointing out that there were differing views on whether States continued to be legally bound by Council resolutions imposing sanctions on the former illegal Salisbury regime. It felt that the Assembly should have refrained from a decision and instead asked for an opinion from the competent United Nations legal authorities.

Australia abstained, finding it surprising that the text contained no reference to the central contribution made to the process of settlement by the Commonwealth heads of Government at their Lusaka meeting.

Albania, which did not participate in the vote, expressed reservations on several paragraphs, particularly with respect to the Lancaster House agreements and their role in preparing the conditions needed for true national independence of the Zimbabwean people.

Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Indonesia and the USSR, among others, in explanation of their votes in favour of the resolution, welcomed the fact that it contained a number of provisions aimed at meeting the direct concern, interests and responsibilities of the United Nations with respect to Southern Rhodesia concerning the people of Zimbabwe and its national liberation struggle for the implementation of its inalienable right to self-determination and genuine independence.

The USSR stressed that all United Nations decisions on the question of Southern Rhodesia stated that the Patriotic Front was the sole authentic representative of the people of Zimbabwe. It warned that the patriotic forces of Zimbabwe, the African countries and the United Nations should show the utmost vigilance to ensure that developments in the territory did not follow a neo-colonialist path. It felt it would have been useful to retain the deleted operative paragraph, and regretted there was no paragraph directly stating that the administering power should prevent any South African attempt to invade Zimbabwe. Cuba felt that the resolution correctly reflected support for the Patriotic Front, agreed with the appeal for substantial material assistance to the front-line States, and opposed the unilateral lifting of sanctions.

Related General Assembly decisions

At its 1979 regular session, the Assembly took a number of decisions relating to various aspects of the situation in Southern Rhodesia. They are described briefly below. (For page references to texts of resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

On 13 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/94, on implementation of the Declaration on granting independence, by which it requested all States to withhold all assistance from the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia until the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination and independence had been restored, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territory by that regime. It urged all States to provide all moral and material assistance to the oppressed people of Zimbabwe, and asked the administering power to enlist and use all possible assistance in strengthening the territory's economy.

In addition, the Special Committee was requested to enlist world-wide support among Governments and national and international organizations with special interests in decolonization to achieve the objectives of the Declaration and to implement the relevant United Nations resolutions. (For details, see p. 1015.)

On 21 November, by resolution 34/42 on implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations, the Assembly expressed concern that the assistance extended thus far by United Nations—related organizations to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe, and to its national liberation movement was far from adequate for their needs.

The Assembly expressed regret that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund had not fully implemented the Declaration and other relevant Assembly resolutions and urged that they formulate specific programmes beneficial to Zimbabwe. It also urged United Nations—related organizations to withhold all assistance from the illegal regime, to discontinue all support to it until it restored to the people their right to self-determination and independence and to refrain from taking any action that might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of its domination of the territory. (For details, see p. 1023.)

On 21 November, the Assembly also adopted resolution 34/41, on activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding implementation of the Declaration, by which it reaffirmed provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the 1977 International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the 1977 World Conference for Action against Apartheid. 10

Condemning all activities of foreign economic and other interests operating in Southern Rhodesia, the Assembly declared that their collaboration with the regime was detrimental to the interests of the people and impeded implementation of the Declaration. It also condemned countries that maintained relations with that regime. Expressing its conviction that the scope of the sanctions adopted against Southern Rhodesia should be expanded, the Assembly called on the Security Council to consider adopting such measures. It condemned all violations of the Council's sanctions, the failure of certain Members to enforce them, and the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to Southern Rhodesia by United Kingdom oil companies, deploring the complicity of successive United Kingdom Governments in sanction violations.

In addition, the Assembly strongly condemned South Africa, which continued its collaboration with the regime in Southern Rhodesia, and called on the Security Council to impose economic sanctions against South Africa. It appealed to all international non-governmental organizations to continue to mobilize international public opinion for the enforcement of sanctions against the Salisbury regime. (For details, see p. 1030.)

On 12 December, by resolution 34/93 B on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, the Assembly commended the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa for their humanitarian assistance efforts to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see p. 204.)

By resolution 34/21 of 9 November, on cooperation between the United Nations and OAU, the Assembly reiterated its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts on behalf of the international community to organize and mobilize special economic assistance programmes for African States experiencing grave economic difficulties, in particular for the newly independent and front-line States, to help them to cope with the situation caused by acts of aggression by the minority regime in Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see p. 264.)

In adopting resolution 34/24 on 15 November, the Assembly annexed a programme of activities to be undertaken during the second half of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, launched in December 1973.11 The programme indicated that particular attention should be paid to specific measures to ensure implementation of the main provisions of the Maputo Declaration and numerous other documents on self-determination in southern Africa. In addition, the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the Commission on Human Rights were asked to study, in cooperation with other United Nations bodies, measures that would make it possible to end all collaboration with Southern Rhodesia, including all commercial, financial and technological assistance. (For details, see p. 798.)

of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights. By this text, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference. The Assembly also condemned violations of the Council's sanctions imposed against Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see p. 833.)

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/174, by which it decided to enlarge the assistance programme for South African refugee students living in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia to include needs of student refugees from Zimbabwe, requested the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to organize and implement an educational and assistance programme for student refugees from southern Africa who had found asylum in those neighbouring States, and urged all States and intergovernmental and nongovernmental organizations to co-operate with those officials and to contribute generously to that programme. (For details, see p. 185.)

Between October 1978 and 30 September 1979, a total of 654 Southern Rhodesian students were studying abroad in 23 countries on scholarships granted under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa. During the same period, the Programme received 2,519 requests from Southern Rhodesians for assistance, granted 183 new awards and extended 471 awards.

On 21 November 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/31, by which, recognizing that a substantial increase in contributions was required in order to enable the Programme to meet higher costs, current obligations and increased demand, it appealed to all States, organizations and individuals to recognize the increasing demand for educational opportunities by the people of Southern Rhodesia and to acknowledge the rapidly growing costs of higher education and training by offering generous financial support to the Programme. (For details, see p. 267.)

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe),

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statements of the representative of the administering Power,

Having heard also the statements of the representatives of the Patriotic Front who participated in an observer capacity in the consideration of the item,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions relating to the question of Southern Rhodesia adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Special Committee,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the United Nations in support of the struggle of the people of Southern Rhodesia for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and

independence,

Bearing in mind that the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, has the primary responsibility for decolonizing Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) in conformity with resolution 1514(XV) and putting an end to the critical situation which, as repeatedly affirmed by the Security Council, constitutes a threat to international peace and security

Noting that the Government of the United Kingdom has resumed its responsibility as the administering Power and is committed to decolonize Southern Rhodesia on the basis of free and democratic elections which will lead Southern Rhodesia to genuine independence accepted by the international community.

Bearing in mind the resolution on Zimbabwe adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-third ordinary session, held at Monrovia from 6 to 20 July 1979, especially its affirmation of the Patriotic Front as the sole, legitimate and authentic representative of the people of Zimbabwe,

Bearing in mind also the relevant provisions of the Political Declaration adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at

Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979,

Concerned about the threats South Africa poses to the independence, unity and peace of Zimbabwe,

Concerned also about the threat posed by mercenaries to the establishment of genuine independence in Zimbabwe,

Bearing in mind that the negotiations at Lancaster House in London were the direct result of the armed struggle by the people of Zimbabwe led by the Patriotic Front, their sole legitimate representative,

Commending the firm determination of the people of Zimbabwe, under the leadership of the Patriotic Front, to achieve freedom and independence,

Deploring the moves by certain States to lift sanctions unilaterally, in violation of the measures imposed by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure by all means at their disposal the enjoyment of that right, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in conformity with the objectives of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

Reaffirms the principle that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe and, in this regard, takes note of the agreements reached at Lancaster House intended to bring about genuine independence on the basis of free and fair elections;

3. Commends the Patriotic Front for its decisive contribution in the negotiations and solemnly declares that a just and lasting settlement in Zimbabwe is possible only with the full participation of the Patriotic Front at every stage of implementation of the agreements reached at Lancaster House;

4. Calls for the full and faithful implementation of the

- agreements reached at Lancaster House;
 5. Strongly condemns the racist regime of South Africa for its intervention in Southern Rhodesia, including the presence in the Territory of its military and security forces;
- 6. Strongly condemns also the presence of mercenaries in Southern Rhodesia;
- 7. Calls upon the administering Power to ensure the immediate and complete withdrawal of South African forces as well as all mercenaries from Southern Rhodesia;
- 8. Calls upon the administering Power also to ensure that South Africa shall not carry out its threats to undermine the implementation of the agreements reached at Lancaster House;
- 9. Declares that Security Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968, imposing mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia, can be revoked only by a decision of the Council and that any unilateral action in this regard would be in violation of the obligation assumed by Member States under Article 25 of the Charter;

10. Calls upon the Security Council to follow the situation closely until the people of Zimbabwe achieve genuine independence and majority rule; 11. Requests all States to give urgently substantial material assistance to the Governments of Angola, Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia to enable them to rebuild their socio-economic infrastructure adversely affected by constant acts of aggression by the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia and by the application of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council;

12. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to keep the situation in the Territory under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Chapter V

Other question s relating to non-self-governing territorie s

Transmissio n of informatio n

Territories on which information was submitted in 1979

In accordance with Chapter XI, Article 73 e, of the Charter of the United Nations, Members responsible for the administration of territories which had not attained a full measure of selfgovernment were obligated to send each year to the Secretary-General information on economic, social and educational conditions in the territories for which they had responsibilities, subject to such limitations as security and constitutional considerations might require.

Australia, France, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States regularly included information on constitutional developments in the territories on which they transmitted information. Additional information on political and constitutional developments in the territories under their administration was also given by these States during meetings of the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Supplementary information was also made available by the United Kingdom and the United States concerning territories under their administration.

During 1979, information was transmitted to the Secretary-General with respect to the following territories:

Australia: the Cocos (Keeling) Islands

France: the New Hebrides (condominium with the United Kingdom)

New Zealand: Tokelau

United Kingdom: Belize, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Montserrat, the New Hebrides (condominium with France), Pitcairn, St. Helena, Southern Rhodesia, the Turks and Caicos Islands

United States: American Samoa, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly at its 1979 regular session that he had received no information concerning Antigua or St. Kitts—Nevis—Anguilla. In that connexion, the United Kingdom had declared at previous sessions of the Assembly that those territories, having achieved the status of Associated States, had attained a full measure of self-government. The Associated States of Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent attained their independence on 22 February and 27 October 1979 respectively. The Gilbert Islands, on which the United Kingdom formerly reported, attained its independence on 12 July as Kiribati.

The Secretary-General also reported that he had received no information concerning Brunei. On 18 September 1972, the United Kingdom had notified the Secretary-General that this territory had attained full internal self-government and that, consequently, the transmission of information thereon was no longer appropriate.

The Secretary-General had also received no information concerning Western Sahara. On 26 February 1976, the representative of Spain had informed him that the Spanish Government, as of that date, had definitively terminated its presence in the territory of Sahara and deemed it necessary to place on record that Spain considered itself exempt from any responsibility of an international nature in connexion with the administration of the territory, having ceased its participation in the temporary administration established for the territory.

With respect to East Timor, the Government of Portugal informed the Secretary-General on 6 April 1979 that the conditions prevailing in East Timor, which Portugal had previously brought to the attention of the Secretary-General and a number of United Nations organs, had prevented the Portuguese Government from assuming its responsibilities for the administration of that territory. In such circumstances the Portuguese Government was unable to supply any information relating to economic, social and educational conditions there.

Study of information from administering Members

Since 1964, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples has examined information transmitted by administering powers on non-self-governing territories, acting under a mandate given it by the General Assembly. The Committee was requested to study the information and take it fully into account in examining the situation in each of the territories.

On 8 August 1979, the Special Committee approved a resolution on this question, operative provisions of which were subsequently incorporated in Assembly resolution 34/33, adopted later in the year.

By this resolution, adopted on 21 November, the Assembly reaffirmed that, in the absence of a decision by the Assembly that a non-self-governing territory had attained full self-government, the administering power should continue to transmit information with respect to that territory. The Assembly requested administering powers to transmit or continue to transmit information, including the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments. It asked the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it.

Resolution 34/33 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 136 to 0, with 3 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 6 November by a recorded vote of 77 to 0, with 4 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Algeria, Angola, Barbados, the Congo, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia.

Explaining their abstentions in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom and France stated that they had transmitted information on their territories to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 e. However, they did not agree that the Assembly had the power to decide when a dependent territory had attained a full measure of self-government. Denmark and Japan also had reservations in this regard but voted for the draft resolution.

Offers of study and training facilities

In 1979, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that, up to 12 October, the following 32 Member States had made available to persons from non-self-governing territories scholarships for secondary, vocational and postgraduate studies: Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Israel, Italy, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Mexico, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United States and Yugoslavia.

On 21 November, the General Assembly, after considering the Secretary-General's report on the subject, expressed appreciation to those Member States that had made scholarships available. It invited all States to make and publicize offers of study and training facilities to inhabitants of non-self-governing territories, particularly those in southern Africa, and to provide travel funds whenever possible.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 34/32, adopted, without objection, by the Assembly on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which on 6 November had unanimously approved the text, sponsored by Algeria, Angola, Australia, Austria, Barbados, the Congo, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, India, Madagascar, New Zealand, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration, Recalling also its resolution 33/37 of 13 December 1978, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII).

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee dealing with the transmittal of information under Article 73 e of the Charter and the action taken by the Committee in respect of that information, Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on the item.

Deploring the fact that some Member States having responsibilities for the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories have ceased to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter.

- 1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;
- 2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;
- 3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to transmit, or continue to transmit, to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;
- 4. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under General Assembly resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution 33/43 of 13 December 1 978,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared under General Assembly resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1 954,

Bearing in mind the continued need to provide educational and training facilities at all levels for the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

- 1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
- Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
- 3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly those in southern Africa, and, whenever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;
- 4. Requests the administering Powers to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;
- 5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;
- 6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Continental shelf (Tunisia/Libyan Arab Jamahiriya)

On 19 February 1979, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya communicated to the International Court of Justice a copy of a Special Agreement which it had concluded with the Government of Tunisia on 10 June 1977 and which had come into force on 27 February 1978. The Special Agreement, a copy of which had already been filed by Tunisia on 1 December 1978, provided for reference to the Court of a dispute regarding delimitation of the continental shelf between the two States. By an Order of 20 February 1979, the Vice-President of the Court, taking into account an agreement between the two States on the timing of written pleadings, fixed 30 May 1980 as the time-limit for the filing of Memorials by both Governments.

United States diplomatic and consular staff in Teheran (United States v. Iran)

On 29 November 1979, the United States, citing inter alia the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, filed an Application with the International Court of Justice instituting proceedings against Iran in respect of a dispute concerning the situation in the United States embassy in Teheran and the seizure and holding as hostages of members of the United States diplomatic and consular staff in Iran. The United States requested the Court to adjudge and declare, inter alia, that the Government of Iran had violated its obligations to the United States as provided by various treaties and was under a particular obligation immediately to secure the release of all United States nationals detained at the embassy and ensure that they and all other United States nationals in Iran were allowed to leave the country safely. It further claimed that the Government of Iran should pay reparation for the alleged violations and see to the prosecution of the persons responsible for the crimes committed.

On the same date, the United States filed a request for the indication of provisional measures in accordance with Article 41 of the Statute of the Court.²

On 9 December, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iran, in a letter to the Court, expressed the opinion that it could not, and should not, take cognizance of the case. In his Government's view, the question of the hostages represented a marginal and secondary aspect of an overall problem; examination of the repercussions of the Islamic revolution of Iran, he argued, was a matter essentially and directly within the national sovereignty of Iran and the request for an indication of provisional measures implied the passing of judgement by the Court on the actual substance of the case.

On the following day, the Court held a public sitting at which oral arguments were presented on behalf of the United States. The Iranian Government was not represented at this hearing.

On 15 December, the Court made an Order unanimously indicating provisional measures to the effect that the Government of Iran: should ensure the immediate restoration to the United States of possession of its embassy, chancery and consulates and should ensure their inviolability and effective protection; should further ensure the immediate release of all persons of United States nationality held in the embassy or the foreign ministry, or held as hostages elsewhere, and afford full protection to all such persons in accordance with the treaties in force between the two States and general international law; and should thereafter afford to all the diplomatic and consular personnel of the United States the full protection, privileges and immunities to which they were entitled, including immunity from any form of criminal jurisdiction and freedom and facilities to leave Iran.

The Court further indicated that the two Governments should not take any action, and should ensure that no action was taken, which might aggravate the tension between the two countries or render the dispute more difficult of solution.

In its Order, the Court held it to be manifest that the Optional Protocols on disputesettlement attached to the 1961 and 1963 Vienna Conventions furnished a basis on which its jurisdiction might be founded in respect of the claims concerning the hostages. It further stated that: the objections raised on behalf of Iran did not afford legal grounds for declining to entertain the request of the United States for an indication of provisional measures; there was no more fundamental prerequisite for the conduct of relations between States than the inviolability of diplomatic envoys and embassies; and respect for the privileges and immunities of consular staff and the inviolability of consular premises were principles deep-rooted in international law. Considering further that the continuance of the situation exposed human beings to privation, hardship, anguish and danger to life and health, the Court concluded that the circumstances required it to indicate the provisional measures in

By an Order of 24 December 1979, the President of the Court fixed 15 January and 18 February 1980 as the respective time-limits for the filing of a Memorial by the United States and a Counter-Memorial by Iran.

Chapter II

Question s concernin g the Internationa 1 Law Commissio n

At its thirty-first session, held at Geneva from 14 May to 3 August 1979, the International Law Commission completed its first reading of draft articles for the codification of international law on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties. It also continued its work on draft articles for codifying State responsibility and articles on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations. In addition, the Commission considered other topics, including: the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses; the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier; jurisdictional immunities of States and their property; and a review of the multilateral treaty-making process.

The General Assembly, at its 1979 regular session, considered the Commission's report and adopted a resolution commending its progress and making recommendations on its programme of work for 1980.

Report of the Internationa 1 Law Commissio n

Succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 19 December 1978, the International Law Commission at its 1979 session completed its first reading of draft articles on succession of States in respect of State property and State debts, in connexion with its work on codifying international law on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties. The Commission reviewed the first 25 draft articles, which had been approved during its 1973 and 1975 to 1978 sessions.² The Commission deleted former articles 9 and 11, on the general principle of the passing of State property and the passing of debts owed to the State, provisionally adopted at the 1975 session, and took decisions on certain pending questions relating to four former articles, which were renumbered and incorporated, as approved, as articles 9, 12, 16 and 18 of the completed draft.

The Commission was thus able to adopt on first reading the text of a 23-article draft on the succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties. The Commission also considered a report containing six draft articles on the question of succession of States in respect of State archives, submitted by its Special Rapporteur on the topic, Mohammed Bedjaoui (Algeria), and adopted on first reading texts for two of the articles—A and B—which were appended to the general draft on the understanding that their ultimate placement would be decided in the light of comments by Governments. The Commission decided to transmit the draft articles, through the Secretary-General, to Governments of Member States for their observations.

The draft articles as transmitted were in three parts with commentaries on each article: an introduction and two sets of articles on the effects of a succession, one in respect of State property and the other in respect of State debts. Part I, the introduction, contained three articles defining the scope of and terms used in the draft as a whole. Parts II and III were each divided into two sections, the first containing a set of general provisions, and the second, provisions relating to types of succession of States.

Parts II and III each contained parallel articles defining the scope of the articles in that particular part and the terms "State property" or "State debt" (articles 4 and 5, and 15 and 16, respectively) as well as articles dealing with: the rights of the successor State to State property passing to it (article 6) and the obligations of that State in respect of State debts (article 17); the transfer of part of the territory of a State (articles 10 and 19); the question of newly independent States (articles 11 and 20); the uniting of States (articles 12 and 21); the separation of part or parts of the territory of a State (articles 13 and 22); and the dissolution of a State (articles 14 and 23). The remaining articles of the general provisions of part II, on State property - articles 7 to 9—dealt with the date of the passing of State property, the passing of State property without compensation, and the absence of effect of a succession of States on third party State property. The remaining article of the general provisions of part III, on State debts-article 18—dealt with the effects of the passing of State debts with regard to creditors.

Articles A and B of the addendum on State archives defined the term "State archives" and dealt with the passing of such archives in the case of a newly independent State.

State responsibility

The Commission in 1979 continued its work on State responsibility, provisionally adopting texts of five additional draft articles codifying rules governing the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts. The articles adopted by the Commission, on the basis of the eighth report of its Special Rapporteur, Roberto Ago (Italy), pertained to part I of the draft, concerning the origin of international responsibility. One of the articles adopted (article 28) dealt with the responsibility of a State for an internationally wrongful act of another State and concluded chapter IV, which was devoted to the implication of States in wrongful acts of other States. The other four articles—29 to 32formed the opening provisions of chapter V, concerning circumstances precluding wrongfulness, and covered, respectively, cases in which the wronged State had consented to commission of the wrongful acts, acts committed as legitimate countermeasures to a prior internationally wrongful act, cases of wrongful acts committed under force majeure or due to fortuitous events, and those committed under conditions of extreme distress.

Only articles dealing with two preclusive circumstances, relating to states of necessity and cases of self-defence, remained to be added to chapter V at the close of the 1979 session in order to complete the Commission's first reading of part I of the draft. The Commission decided to continue its consideration of the subject at its 1980 session and appointed Willem Riphagen (Netherlands) as its Special Rapporteur for the topic, Mr. Ago having taken up new duties as a Judge of the International Court of Justice.

Treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations

At its 1979 session, the Commission pursued its work on preparing draft articles on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between two or more international organizations. It brought to 60 the number of articles provisionally adopted, by approving on first reading texts for 22 additional articles on the basis of the seventh (1978) and eighth reports submitted by its Special Rapporteur on the topic, Paul Reuter (France).

Three of the articles adopted (39 to 41) comprised part IV of the draft, dealing with amendment and modification of treaties, while the balance (articles 42 to 60) comprised a substantial portion of part V, covering questions of invalidity, termination and suspension of the operation of treaties. Only articles 61 to 72 of part V, certain outstanding questions regarding article 36 bis (on the effects of a treaty to which an international organization is party with respect to third States members of that organization), and the eight articles of parts VI and VII, covering miscellaneous provisions and depositaries, notifications, corrections and registration of treaties, remained to be considered by the Commission to complete its first reading of the draft. In keeping with its past practice in the case of long and complex texts, therefore, the Commission decided to transmit to Governments and principal international organizations, through the Secretary-General, the draft articles already provisionally adopted, for their comments and observations, in order to expedite its second reading of the completed draft.

Of the new articles adopted, articles 39 to 41 dealt with, respectively, a general rule regarding the amendment of treaties, the amendment of multilateral treaties, and agreements to modify multilateral treaties between certain of the parties only, Articles 42 to 45, which constituted section 1 (general provisions) of part V, related respectively to the validity of treaties and their continuance in force, to obligations imposed by international law independently of a treaty, to separability of treaty provisions, and to loss of a right to invalidate, terminate, withdraw from or suspend the operation of a treaty.

Section 2 (invalidity of treaties) dealt with violation of internal law or organizational rules as it affects competence to give consent to be bound by a treaty (article 46), the effect of non-observance of specific restrictions on the authority of a representative to give consent to be bound by a treaty (article 47), invalidation of treaties on grounds of error (article 48), fraud (article 49), corruption of (article 50) or coercion of (article 51) a representative of a State or international organization, coercion of a State or international organization by the threat or use of force (article 52), and cases of treaties in conflict with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) (article 53).

Finally, articles 54 to 60, forming a substantial portion of section 3 (termination and suspension of the operation of treaties) of part V covered: termination of or withdrawal from a treaty under its provisions or by consent of the parties (article 54) or likewise suspension of its operation (article 57); reduction of the parties to a multilateral treaty below the number necessary for its entry into force (article 55); denunciation of or withdrawal from a treaty containing no provision pertaining thereto (article 56); suspension of the operation of a multilateral treaty by agreement between certain of the parties only (article 58); termination or suspension implied by conclusion of a later treaty (article 59); and termination or suspension as a consequence of the breach of a treaty (article 60).

Other topics

During its 1979 session, the Commission held a general debate on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses based on a first report by its Special Rapporteur on the topic, Stephen M. Schwebel (United States), and the observations of Governments submitted in response to a questionnaire circulated by the Commission in 1975. The Commission again requested comments from Governments that had not replied to the questionnaire and authorized the Special Rapporteur to explore possibilities of finding professional technical advice, preferably within existing resources.

In accordance with two General Assembly resolutions of 19 December 1978,³ the Commission also continued its study of the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, with a view to the possible elaboration of an appropriate legal instrument. The Commission reconstituted a working group, first established in 1977, to consider the question in the light of comments made at the 1978 session of the General Assembly or received from Member States and summarized in a Secretariat report. On the recommendation of the working group, the Commission requested the Secretariat to complete a follow-up report on the subject and appointed Alexander Yankov (Bulgaria) as its Special Rapporteur to prepare a preliminary set of draft articles based on the materials already assembled.

Following a general discussion of jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, based on a preliminary report by its Special Rapporteur, Sompong Sucharitkul (Thailand), the Commission recommended further study of the topic through, among other things, circulation of a questionnaire and consideration of the information and observations provided by Governments of Member States in response to a January 1979 request for material on the topic, including national legislation, national tribunal decisions and diplomatic and official correspondence.

The Commission also appointed Leonardo Díaz-González (Venezuela) as its new Special Rapporteur for the second part of the question on relations between States and international organizations, which was to deal with the status, privileges and immunities of international organizations and persons engaged in their activities who were not representatives of States. Mr. Díaz-González replaced Abdullah Ali El-Erian (Egypt), who had been elected to the International Court of Justice. Work on the first part of the topic, dealing with the status, privileges and immunities of representatives of States to international organizations, had been completed with the adoption in 1975 of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character.4

In response to a General Assembly invitation of 8 December 1977,⁵ the Commission adopted the report of a working group it had established in 1978 and reconstituted in 1979 with an enlarged membership, containing observations on the review of the multilateral treaty-making process, and transmitted it to the Secretary-General for inclusion in a report, to be prepared by him, on the techniques and procedures used in the elaboration of multilateral treaties.

The fifteenth session of the International Law Seminar was organized during the Commission's 1979 session. The Seminar, for advanced students and junior Government officials, was held between 5 and 22 June, with 21 participants. Ten fellowships, for participants from developing countries, were made available by Austria, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Kuwait, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden.

Consideratio n by the General Assembly

The report of the International Law Commission was considered by the General Assembly at its 1979 regular session, mainly in the Sixth (Legal) Committee. In addition, the Assembly had before it a note by the Secretary-General containing the texts of the draft articles provisionally adopted by the Commission on topics considered at its thirty-first session, and a note prepared by the Secretariat collating the numbers of the articles on the succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties adopted on first reading at the Commission's 1979 session with those of the draft articles approved at earlier sessions.

On 17 December 1979, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, adopted, without vote, resolution 34/141, whereby, inter alia, it noted with appreciation the progress made by the Commission on the various topics it examined during its 1979 session, approved the Commission's proposed programme of work for 1980 and particularly recommended that the Commission should:

- continue work on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties with the aim of completing, at its 1980 session, the study of the question of State archives and, at its 1981 session, the second reading of the entire set of draft articles on the succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties;
- continue work on State responsibility with the aim of completing, at its 1980 session, the first reading of the articles constituting part I of the draft on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, and proceed to the remainder of the draft with a view to making as much progress as possible in elaborating a set of draft articles on the subject within the current term of office of the Commission's members;
- proceed with draft articles on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations with the aim of completing, at its 1980 session, the first reading; and
- continue work on the law of the nonnavigational uses of international watercourses, jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, and the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier.

The Assembly also asked the Commission to continue work on the remaining topics in its current programme—international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law and the second part of the topic of relations between States and international organizations—and expressed confidence that the Commission would continue to keep the progress of its work under review, adopting the methods of work best suited to the speedy completion of the tasks entrusted to it.

In addition, the Assembly: expressed its appreciation to the Swiss Federal Council for its decision of 9 May 1979 to accord to Commission members the privileges and immunities accorded to the judges of the International Court of Justice, thereby facilitating the Commission's work; called the attention of Governments and appropriate institutions to the need to ensure that members of the Commission would have adequate time to fulfil their responsibilities; and reaffirmed its previous decisions concerning research required by the Commission and an increased role for the Codification Division of the Secretariat's Office of Legal Affairs. The Assembly expressed the wish that the Commission would continue enhancing its co-operation with legal organs of intergovernmental organizations working in its field and that more participants from developing countries would be given the opportunity to attend seminars held in conjunction with Commission sessions.

The text of the resolution had been sponsored by 41 States in the Sixth Committee (see DOCUMENTA-RY REFERENCES below), which approved the draft by consensus on 5 December 1979.

creased importance to its role in relations among States,

Noting further with appreciation the progress made by the International Law Commission in the preparation of draft articles on State responsibility and on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations, as well as the work done by it regarding the study of the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses, jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and the review of the multilateral treaty-making process,

Taking note of the decision of the Swiss Federal Council on the question of the privileges and immunities of the members of the International Law Commission,

Welcoming the considerations and recommendations contained in the report of the International Law Commission regarding the programme and methods of work of the Commission with a view to the timely and effective fulfilment of the tasks entrusted to it.

Recognizing the importance of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics which might be submitted to the International Law Commission, thus enabling the Commission further to enhance its contribution to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

- 1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its thirty-first session, including the fact of the transmittal to the Secretary-General of the Commission's observations on the techniques and procedures used in the elaboration of multilateral treaties as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 32/48 of 8 December 1977;
- 2. Expresses its appreciation to the International Law Commission for the work accomplished at that session;
- 3. Approves the programme of work planned by the International Law Commission for 1980;
- 4. Recommends that the International Law Commission should:
- (a) Continue its work on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties with the aim of completing, at its thirty-second session, the study of the question of State archives and, at its thirty-third session, the second reading of all of the draft articles on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties, taking into account the written comments of Governments and views expressed on the topic in debates in the General Assembly;
- (b) Continue its work on State responsibility with the aim of completing, at its thirty-second session, the first reading of the set of articles constituting part one of the draft on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, taking into account the written comments of Governments and views expressed on the topic in debates in the General Assembly, and proceed to the study of the further part or parts of the draft with a view to making as much progress as possible in the elaboration of draft articles within the present term of office of the members of the Commission;

(c) Proceed with the preparation of draft articles on treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations with the aim of completing, at its thirty-second session, the first reading of those draft articles;

(d) Continue its work on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses, taking into account the replies of Governments to the questionnaire prepared by the Commission and the views expressed on the topic in debates in the General Assembly;

(e) Continue its work on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property, taking into account information furnished by Governments and replies to the questionnaire addressed to them, as well as views expressed on the topic in debates in the General Assembly;

(f) Continue its work on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier, taking into account the written comments of Governments and views expressed on the topic in debates in the General Assembly, with a view to the possible elaboration of an appropriate legal instrument;

5. Requests the International Law Commission to continue its work on the remaining topics in its current programme, namely, international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law and the second part of the topic of relations between

States and international organizations;

- 6. Expresses its appreciation to the Swiss Federal Council for the decision to accord, by analogy, to the members of the International Law Commission, for the duration of the Commission's sessions at Geneva, the privileges and immunities to which the judges of the International Court of Justice are entitled while present in Switzerland, thereby facilitating the performance of the functions of the Commission's
 - 7. Draws the attention of the Governments concerned and the appropriate institutions to the need to enable members of the International Law Commission, in particular those who are Special Rapporteurs and officers of the Commission, to have adequate time available for the fulfilment of their responsibilities to the Commission, especially at its sessions;

8. Expresses confidence that the International Law Commission will continue to keep the progress of its work under review and to develop the methods of work best suited to the speedy completion of the tasks entrusted to it;

9. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning research projects and studies required by the work of the International Law Commission and the increased role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, as well as those concerning the need for continuing provision of summary records of the Commission's meetings;

10. Expresses the wish that the International Law Commission will continue to enhance its co-operation with legal organs of intergovernmental organizations whose work is of interest for the progressive development of international law and its codification;

11. Further expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the op-portunity to attend those seminars;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the discussion on the report of the Commission at the thirtyfourth session of the General Assembly and to prepare a topical summary of the discussion to be made available to the Commission.

Chapter III

Internationa ltradelaw

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) held its twelfth session at Vienna from 18 to 29 June 1979, during which it pursued a number of the topics contained in its new programme of work, adopted in 1978, including aspects of international trade contract practices, problems of international payments and issues related to international commercial arbitration. The Commission in 1979 considered a 27-article preliminary draft of UNCITRAL conciliation rules and determined the composition and terms of reference of its Working Group on the New International Economic Order. On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolutions on co-ordination in international trade law and on the continuing work of the Commission.

Work of the Commissio n

International trade contracts

The Secretary-General reported to the Commission in 1979 on the progress of a Secretariat study on contract practices in international The Secretariat had collected from Governments and international organizations examples of certain types of contract clauses slated for priority consideration by the Commission, including clauses relating to "hardship," force majeure, liquidated damages and penalty, and clauses protecting parties against the effects of currency fluctuations.

Notwithstanding expressions of caution in the Commission that model clauses would not necessarily reflect consistent commercial practice and that their interpretation might vary according to law or context, there was general agreement that the Secretariat should be requested to continue its collection, with special attention to achieving equitable geographical representation, and pursue its study of contemporary contract practices, with a view to identifying generally acceptable clauses or areas in which the Commission might usefully prepare guidelines

The Commission also had before it three preliminary studies on the subject of contemporary practice in international trade contracts.

The first of these—a report of the Secretary-General on barter or exchange in international trade—noted that since the true barter contract, in which parties exchanged goods for goods, remained relatively rare, it might not be useful to attempt to unify the law relating to barter in the strict legal sense. Barter-like transactions, on the other hand, which sought to minimize the ultimate transfer of funds between parties by rendering at least part of the payment in non-monetary terms, might lend themselves to action by the Commission, particularly in respect of two types of clauses—relating to payment terms and to remedies for non-performance-which distinguished such transactions from ordinary contracts. The Commission requested the Secretariat to include clauses of particular importance in barter-like transactions in its survey of current contract practices, and to report to it on work being conducted on such transactions by other organizations within the United Nations system, such as the Economic Commission for Europe.

A second report of the Secretary-General concerned liquidated damages clauses (aimed at preestimating compensation payable on breach of contract) and penalty clauses. It described the nature and purpose of these and similar provisions in international trade contracts, detailed their varying treatment under different legal systems and outlined obstacles to the formulation of unified rules governing their use.

The report indicated widespread legal acceptance of contract and general conditions clauses which merely sought to pre-estimate levels of damage and compensation. On the other hand, clauses which set penalties at a sufficiently high level to help coerce performance of a contract, while recognized under the civil law of most countries, were not generally acknowledged under the common law, and efforts at unification, therefore, would need to be directed chiefly towards clauses of this kind. As these differences were rooted in local law, however, it was observed that the preparation of model clauses would not suffice to achieve such unification and that an international convention or a model law available for adoption by States would be required.

The Commission concluded that uniform rules to eliminate or reduce uncertainties arising from varying treatment of liquidated damages and penalty clauses under different legal systems were desirable and, without prejudging the form its action might take, by a decision of 19 June entrusted its Working Group on International Contract Practices (formerly the Working Group on the International Sale of Goods) with consideration of the feasibility of formulating such uniform rules applicable to a wide range of international trade contracts.

The Working Group held its first session at Vienna from 24 to 28 September 1979, when it considered preliminary draft rules prepared by the Secretariat relating to: the scope of rules applicable to liquidated damages and penalty agreements; the accessory nature of such agreements; the relationship between the right to obtain performance of a contractual obligation and performance of the accessory agreement; the relationship between the right to obtain performance of the accessory obligation and damages for breach of the primary contractual obligation; and limitations on the parties' freedom to stipulate the amount of penalties and the power of courts or tribunals to modify the stipulated sum. The Working Group, in agreeing to consider the matter further, noted that a greater degree of consensus might perhaps be achieved on a set of rules limited to liquidated damages and penalty clauses in particular types of international trade contracts. It asked for a Secretariat study on the drafting of such clauses in various types of contracts, the types of contracts that might usefully be regulated by uniform rules, and the practical legal difficulties arising from the application of the clauses, as shown by court and arbitral decisions. The Group also requested the Secretariat to submit a revised set of draft rules for further consideration.

A third report of the Secretary-General, on contract clauses protecting parties against the effects of currency fluctuations, was also considered by the Commission. The report analysed two broad categories of protective clauses—those of a purely monetary character and those aimed at the maintenance of purchasing value—and concluded that some form of valuemaintenance clause was advantageous in international trade, that despite historical restrictions on such clauses no insurmountable obstacles prevented their use in international transactions, and that a basket-of-currencies unit-of-account based on the International Monetary Fund's special drawing rights seemed to offer the most practicable starting-point for a uniform modern system of protections.

There was wide agreement in the Commission that the development of clauses of the kind described in the report would be beneficial to international trade. The Commission accordingly, by a 19 June decision, requested the Secretariat, in consultation with the Study Group on International Payments—composed of experts provided by interested international organizations and banking and trade institutions—to examine the subject further, to circulate a questionnaire on the topic to Governments, interested international organizations and trade and banking circles, and, after consulting with the Commission's Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments, to report with recommendations on whether it was desirable and feasible for the Commission to work on the topic.

International payments

During its 1979 session, UNCITRAL also considered a number of matters relating to international payments.

The Commission's Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments reported on the work of its seventh session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 3 to 12 January 1979. The report indicated the Group's progress in drafting a convention on international bills of exchange and international promissory notes, designed to establish uniform rules applicable to an international instrument for optional use in international payments.

During its session, the Working Group had continued its second reading of a revised draft prepared by the Secretariat on the basis of the discussions and decisions at its six previous sessions, and approved texts for articles concerning the rights of holders of negotiable instruments, the manner in which an instrument might be presented for payment, recourse procedures to be followed by a holder who was denied payment, and discharge from liability of a party by whom payment had been made.

Inasmuch as some articles remained to be reviewed, the Commission agreed to the Group's request to hold another session in 1979. The Commission also authorized proceeding in accordance with a 1972 request that the Group consider the desirability of preparing a set of uniform rules applicable to international cheques, either by extending the draft convention to cover such instruments or by drawing up separate draft rules on the subject. Finally, the Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue assistance to the Working Group in connexion with the draft uniform law on international bills of exchange and with inquiries regarding the use of cheques for settling international payments, in consultation with the Study Group on International Payments.

The eighth session of the Working Group on International Negotiable Instruments was held at Geneva from 3 to 14 September 1979, during which articles were approved dealing with the payor's discharge of liability upon payment, statutes of limitation for the payment of international instruments and procedures applicable in the case of lost instruments. The Group agreed that it would be desirable to prepare uniform rules covering cheques as a means of international payment and requested the Secretariat to undertake preliminary studies and prepare a set of draft articles on the subject for the Group's consideration.

The Commission also had before it in 1979 two reports by the Secretary-General concerned, respectively, with stand-by letters of credit and with the use of security interests in the financing of international trade. The first report considered methods of reducing fraudulent claims made by beneficiaries under stand-by letters of credit, by means of third-party certification or determination of the claimed default or by compulsory arbitration. The Commission recommended that the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) be encouraged to continue work on the topic, together with UNCITRAL, since ice's work on documentary letters of credit and contract guarantees had a direct bearing on stand-by letters of credit. The Commission asked ICC to consider work done by the UNICTRAL Study Group on International Payments relating to means of protection against fraud, and to submit the results of its work prior to their final adoption by its competent organs.

On the topic of security interests, the Secretary-General's report noted the diversity of laws governing such interests in various legal systems and the hindrances such diversity imposed on international trade. In view of the rudimentary development of the law in this area, the report suggested that it would not be feasible to attempt unification by means of a legal convention, but some degree of harmony could nevertheless be achieved through the formulation of a model law, with suggested alternative provisions dealing with particular difficulties, for adoption by interested States.

The Commission requested the Secretariat to prepare a further report setting out the issues to be considered in formulating uniform rules on security interests together with recommendations on the manner in which those issues might be addressed.

In addition, the Commission in 1979 heard an oral report by its Secretary on the work of the UNCITRAL Study Group on International Payments at meetings in September 1978 and April 1979 relating to legal problems of electronic funds-transfer and to the determination of a universal unit of account for international conventions. The Commission asked the Secretariat to continue preliminary work on these topics within the framework established by the Study Group and to report on its progress.

International commercial arbitration and conciliation

The Commission on International Trade Law had before it in 1979 a number of reports relating to international commercial arbitration and conciliation.

A note by the UNCITRAL secretariat reported on the increased application of the 1976 UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules² in administered arbitration by independent arbitral institutions. Such use had been deliberately excluded from the scope of the Rules, which had been designed for ad hoc arbitration. The note indicated potential ambiguities arising from unregulated adaptations of the Rules and invited the Commission to consider preparing a separate set of rules on administered arbitration or guidelines to facilitate application of the existing Rules in arbitration of this kind. The Commission decided to retain the Rules as drafted but, by a decision of 22 June, requested the Secretary-General to prepare, for its 1980 session, preliminary guidelines for administering arbitration under the Rules or a checklist of problematic issues that might arise when they were used in administered arbitration.

The secretariat note also indicated a need to designate appointing authorities under the Rules, and invited the Commission to consider the desirability of compiling a list of arbitral institutions which had expressed a willingness to serve in that capacity. The Commission requested the Secretary-General, by a decision of 22 June, to study further and report on the advantages and disadvantages of maintaining a list of this kind, as well as to consider means of promoting wider use of the Rules.

A study by the Secretary-General surveyed court decisions taken in the light of the 1958 New York Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards³ and identified certain difficulties arising from the application and interpretation of the Convention. An accompanying note by the Secretariat summarized, among other things, the views of a consultative meeting with various international organizations, held at Paris in September 1978, which had suggested that UNCITRAL commence work on a model law to assure uniformity in international arbitral procedures and encourage universal recognition of international arbitral decisions.

It was the general view in the Commission that whatever was done should not involve amendment of the New York Convention, either by revision or by the addition of a protocol, since such amendment might give rise to confusion and inhibit further ratifications or accessions. The Commission agreed, however, to undertake consideration of a model law on arbitral procedures, aimed at reducing possible conflicts between national laws and international arbitration rules. By a decision of 25 June, it requested the Secretary-General to prepare a comparative study on the subject as well as a preliminary draft of a model law applicable to international commercial arbitration. It also drew the General Assembly's attention to the desirability of inviting States to ratify or accede to the New York Convention, so as to achieve world-wide adherence.

The Commission had before it a 27-article preliminary draft of UNCITRAL conciliation rules and an accompanying commentary, prepared in consultation with the International Council for Commercial Arbitration and ICC.

While not reaching a final determination on the desirability of elaborating a set of conciliation rules, the Commission agreed to discuss the draft in detail. Following its discussion, by a decision of 27 June, the Commission requested the Secretary-General: to prepare a revised draft, taking into account the views expressed by the Commission; to transmit the draft, together with a commentary, to Governments, international organizations and arbitral institutions for their observations; and to submit the draft, commentary and observations received to the Commission at its 1980 session.

New international economic order

The Commission discussed in 1979 a report by the Secretary-General reviewing subjects relevant to international trade which might be suitable for consideration by the Commission in the context of the new international economic order. The report had been requested by the Commission in 1978, in response to calls by the General Assembly that the Commission take account of Assembly resolutions laying down the foundations of the new international economic order and the need for United Nations organs to participate in their implementation.⁴

The Commission focused its discussion on two issues in the report—the proper scope of UNCITRAL'S work in this area and the coordination of international trade law activities. On the first issue, views were divided between those who felt the Commission should involve itself with the legal basis of international trade relations among States and others who thought work should be limited to matters of private law applicable to trade practice rather than to questions of policy. The Commission entrusted further consideration of the report and related questions to its Working Group on the New International Economic Order, established in 1978. On 29 June 1979, the Commission appointed 17 States as members of the Group. By the same decision, UNCITRAL requested the Group to recommend in 1980 specific topics for the Commission's work programme, and to make recommendations on steps to implement an UNCITRAL decision of 27 June calling for close co-ordination and co-operation with the Commission in the field of international trade law by the organizations and bodies concerned in the United Nations system.

Other matters

The Commission had before it in 1979 a report of the Secretary-General surveying work by international organizations in five areas of transport law: multimodal transport, charter parties, marine insurance, transport by container and forwarding of goods.

The Commission decided on 21 June not to initiate work in any of these areas, four of which—multimodal transport, transport by container, charter parties and marine insurance were under consideration by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see p. 989). It considered that the need for uniform rules on regulation of contracts for the forwarding of goods had not been clearly established. It requested the Secretariat, however, to continue to report to it on developments in transport law and to inform the UNCTAD Working Group on International Shipping Legislation of its willingness to undertake legal work, if desirable, on charter parties and marine insurance.

The Commission was informed by the Secretary-General of efforts to resume biennial symposia on international trade law initiated by UNCITRAL in 1975 but deferred in 1977 and 1979 for lack of funds. Funds were still inadequate for financing a symposium in 1980, but the question of financing was to be taken up at its next session with a view to organizing a symposium in 1981. The Commission noted with appreciation offers of fellowships in international trade law made available to candidates from developing countries by Austria, Belgium and Poland.

Pursuant to a standing item of UNCITRAL'S agenda on the state of signatures, accessions and ratifications relating to conventions concluded on the basis of texts it had prepared, the Secretary-General reported that, as at 30 April 1979, 27 States had signed—and Egypt on 23 April had ratified—the United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea (Hamburg Rules), concluded at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, on 30 March 1978⁵ and opened for signature on the following day. The Convention was to enter into force one year after the deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession. The 27 signatory States were Austria, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, Chile, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, the Holy See, Hungary, Madagascar, Mexico, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, the Philippines, Portugal, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sweden, the United States, Venezuela and Zaire.

The Commission agreed to a decision of the General Assembly's Committee on Conferences that sessions of UNCITRAL and its working groups, which had previously alternated between New York and Geneva, would thenceforth alternate between New York and Vienna, to where the International Trade Law Branch of the Secretariat's Office of Legal Affairs was transferred in 1979.

Action by the General Assembly

The report of UNCITRAL on the work of its twelfth session was considered by the General Assembly at its 1979 regular session, mainly in the Sixth (Legal) Committee.

On 1 November, the Committee approved, without objection, a resolution on co-ordination in the field of international trade law recommended for adoption in the Commission's report. On 17 December, the Assembly adopted the text without vote as resolution 34/142.

By this resolution, the Assembly, noting that increasing economic and trade relations between States had given rise to increased legislative activities by international bodies, and holding the view that such activities should not lead to duplication of work or the establishment of conflicting rules, which might prevent their ratification by States or their application by the courts:

- reaffirmed the mandate of the Commission in co-ordinating legal activities in the field of international trade law;
- invited concerned organs and organizations to co-operate with UNCITRAL by providing it with information on their activities and by consulting
- requested the Secretary-General to take steps to secure close co-ordination, especially among the units of the Secretariat serving UNCITRAL, the International Law Commission, UNCTAD, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Commission on Transnational Corporations; and
- requested the Secretary-General to report to each session of UNCITRAL on the legal activities of concerned international bodies, with recommendations on steps to be taken.

A resolution on the report of UNCITRAL was approved by consensus by the Sixth Committee on 3 December. It was sponsored in the Committee by Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Morocco, Nigeria, the Philippines, Romania, Spain, Sweden, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. The Assembly adopted it without vote on 17 December as resolution 34/143. By this resolution, the Assembly commended UNCITRAL for its progress and its efforts to enhance the efficiency of its working methods, and noted with satisfaction that the Commission had commenced work on subjects included in the new programme of work adopted at its 1978 session. The Assembly called upon the Commission to continue to take account of relevant provisions of resolutions concerning the new international economic order, and expressed satisfaction at the establishment of the Working Group on the New International Economic Order.

The Assembly recommended that UNCITRAL should continue: work on the topics in its work programme and on training and assistance in international trade law, taking into account the special interests of developing countries; the holding of symposia on international trade law; close collaboration with UNCTAD and other international organizations; and liaison with the Commission on Transnational Corporations regarding legal problems susceptible of action by UNCITRAL.

It also recommended that UNCITRAL give special consideration to the interests of developing countries and that it bear in mind the concerns of countries with special geographical problems.

Finally, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the completion of the transfer to Vienna of the International Trade Law Branch, expressed confidence that the Branch's needs for research facilities would receive continued attention, expressed appreciation to Austria for its financial contribution to the establishment of a law library for UNCITRAL, requested the Secretary-General to provide for the library's maintenance and acquisitions, and appealed to Governments to contribute materials to the library.

Resolution 34/142, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/34/780, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Noting that the significant increase in economic and trade relations between States and their peoples has given rise to increased activities of a legislative nature by international bodies and organs both within and without the United Nations system,

Being of the view that such activities should not lead to the duplication of work or the establishment of conflicting rules, resulting in non-ratification by States or non-application by

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it established the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and conferred upon that Commission the mandate of furthering the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade by, inter alia, coordinating the work of organizations active in that field and encouraging co-operation among them,

Considering that, by virtue of the mandate conferred upon it by the General Assembly, it is among the tasks of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law to ensure that legal texts prepared by various international organizations in the field of international trade law contribute to a coherent and generally acceptable system of international law,

Bearing in mind the establishment by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law of the Working Group on the New International Economic Order and its mandate, as well as the programmes of work of the other working groups of the Commission,

Reaffirming its resolution 33/92 of 16 December 1978,

1. Reaffirms the mandate of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law in the co-ordination of legal activities in the field of international trade law;

Draws the attention of all organs and bodies within the United Nations system to this mandate of the United Nations

Commission on International Trade Law;

3. Invites all organs and organizations concerned to co-operate with the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law by providing it with relevant information on their activities and by consulting with it;

4. Calls upon all Governments to bear in mind the importance of improved co-ordination of activities related to participation in the various international organizations concerned with international trade law;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

- (a) To take effective steps to secure close co-ordination, especially among those parts of the Secretariat which are serving the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, the International Law Commission, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Commission on Transnational Corporations;
- (b) To place before the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, at each of its sessions, a report on the legal activities of the international organs, organizations and bodies concerned, together with recommendations regarding steps to be taken by the Commission.
- A/C.6/34/L.16. Resolution 34/143, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/34/780, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1 979, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twelfth

Recalling its resolutions 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it established the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and defined the object and terms of reference of the Commission, 3108(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, by which it increased the membership of the Commission, and 31/99 of 15 December 1976, by which Governments of Member States not members of the Commission were entitled to attend as observers the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, as well as its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Commission on the work of its annual sessions,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) 1 May 1974, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 and

3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1 975,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic co-operation among all States on a basis of equality and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Having regard for the need to take into account the different social and legal systems in harmonizing the rules of international trade law,

Stressing the usefulness and importance of organizing symposia for promoting better knowledge and understanding of international trade law and, especially, for the training of young lawyers from developing countries in this field,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twelfth session;

- 2. Commends the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for the progress made in its work and for its efforts to enhance the efficiency of its working methods;
- 3. Notes with satisfaction that the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law has commenced work on subjects included in the new programme of work adopted at its eleventh session;
- 4. Calls upon the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law to continue to take account of the relevant provisions of the resolutions concerning the new international economic order, as adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions, and notes with satisfaction that the Commission has taken positive action in this respect by establishing a Working Group on the New International Economic Order and by conferring on it a specific mandate;
- 5. Recommends that the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law should:
- (a) Continue its work on the topics included in its programme of work;
- (b) Continue its work on training and assistance in the field of international trade law, taking into account the special interests of the developing countries;
- (c) Maintain close collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and continue to collaborate with international organizations active in the field of international trade law;
- (d) Continue to maintain liaison with the Commission on Transnational Corporations with regard to the consideration of legal problems that would be susceptible of action by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law;
- (e) Continue to give special consideration to the interests of developing countries and to bear in mind special problems of countries due to their geographical situation;
- (f) Keep its programme of work and working methods under review with the aim of further increasing the effectiveness of its work;
- 6. Expresses the view that the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law should continue to hold symposia on international trade law;
- 7. Notes with satisfaction that the transfer to Vienna of the International Trade Law Branch of the Secretariat, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 31/194 of 22 December 1976, has now been completed and, in this connexion;
- (a) Expresses its confidence that continued attention will be paid to the need for adequate research facilities for the International Trade Law Branch so that it can fulfil its functions as the substantive secretariat of the Commission;

(b) Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Austria for its financial contribution to the establishment of a law library for the Commission and its secretariat;

(c) Requests the Secretary-General to earmark, out of the funds allocated to the common library of the Vienna International Centre, such an amount as is necessary for the maintenance of the law library of the Commission and for the acquisition of materials that are required in the context of the programme of work of the Commission;

(d) Appeals to Governments to contribute to the law library of the Commission legislative and other materials that are of relevance to the work of the Commission;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law the records of the discussion on the report of the Commission at the thirty-fourth session of the General Assembly.

Treatie's and multilatera 1 convention s

Registratio n and publicatio n of treaties pursuant to Article 102 of the Charter

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 19 December 1978, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly's 1979 regular session on the question of the registration and publication of treaties and international agreements carried out under the terms of Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.²

In his report, the Secretary-General noted significant improvements and savings resulting from the Assembly's decision to give effect to Article 102—which called for registration and publication of Member States' treaties and agreements as soon as possible—by authorizing publication in abridged form of certain categories of treaties and international agreements registered with the Secretariat. The new procedure, along with certain changes in the publishing format, had made it possible to reduce from 276 volumes in August 1978 to 244 volumes in August 1979 the backlog of materials awaiting publication under the United Nations Treaty Series programme.

The report also indicated measures taken to expedite registration and publication by a staff increase in the Treaty Section of the Office of Legal Affairs. The United Nations Treaty Information System was awaiting the replies, due by 31 March 1980, to a questionnaire sent on 9 October 1979 to States and concerned intergovernmental organizations to help determine the best ways of putting that System to use for the benefit of the international community.

In a separate report containing revised estimates to his programme budget for the 1980-1981 biennium, the Secretary-General outlined his long-range proposals for eliminating the continuing backlog in publication of the United Nations Treaty Series. Due to the late availability of the document, however, consideration of this report, which was allocated to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, was postponed to the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly.

Consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the current status of the registration and publication of treaties and international agreements was entrusted to the Sixth (Legal) Committee, which, on 15 October 1979, reestablished an open-ended informal working group, first set up in 1977, to study the question. On 26 November, the Committee approved, without objection, a draft resolution recommended by the working group, by which the Assembly would, among other things: invite the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to eliminate the backlog; note the questionnaire which had been sent in October with a view to improving international co-ordination in this area and to preparing, if necessary, modifications in the Assembly's regulations to give effect to Charter Article 102; and express the hope that by the end of March 1980 sufficient information would have been received to permit preparation of a

On 17 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted, without a vote, the Sixth Committee's draft as resolution 34/149.

Registratio n and publicatio n of treatie s and agreement s

Between 1 January and 31 December 1979, approximately 1,700 international agreements and subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 271 ex-officio registrations.

As of 31 December 1979, a total of 21,580 international agreements and 11,737 subsequent actions (certified statements) relating to those agreements had been registered or filed and recorded with the Secretariat.

The texts of treaties and international agreements registered or filed and recorded are published by the Secretariat in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1979, five volumes of the Treaty Series, covering treaties registered or filed and recorded in 1972, were issued. (For volume numbers, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Status of multilatera 1 treaties deposite d with the Secretary-Genera 1 as at 31 December 1979

The number of multilateral treaties for which the Secretary-General performs depositary functions stood at 301 at the end of 1979.

During the year, 38 signatures were affixed to treaties for which the Secretary-General exercises depositary functions and 326 instruments of ratification, accession and acceptance or notifications were transmitted to the Secretary-General. In addition, the Secretary-General received 66 communications from States expressing observations on declarations and reservations made by certain States at the time of a signature, ratification or accession.

The following multilateral treaties, in respect of which the Secretary-General acts as depositary, came into force during 1979:

Agreement establishing the International Tea Promotion Association. Concluded at Geneva on 31 March 1977; entered into force on 23 February 1979

International Convention against the Taking of Hostages

Report of the Ad Hoc Committe e

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 29 November 1978, the Assembly's Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Taking of Hostages held its third session at Geneva from 29 January to 16 February 1979. The Committee had before it the various working papers submitted at its first and second sessions, held in 1977 and 1978, including a 14-article draft convention against the taking of hostages, tabled in 1977 by the Federal Republic of Germany, which continued to form the basis of its work.²

On 29 January 1979, the Committee reestablished the two working groups it had constituted in 1978, the first to deal with the thornier questions presented by the draft on which agreement had not been reached, and the second to review less controversial articles or those on which agreement had been achieved.

Working Group I was entrusted in particular with the following outstanding questions: (1) the scope of the convention and its application to national liberation movements; (2) the definition of the taking of hostages; (3) questions of extradition and the right of asylum; and (4) questions concerning the principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity of States with regard to the release of hostages. The Group's deliberations concentrated mainly on the first, third and fourth questions.

In light of the opinion of several members that the issue of national liberation movements was the key to agreement on other questions, discussion focused on this problem. A compromise text was accepted for an article (which became article 12 of the draft convention presented by the Ad Hoc Committee), specifically excluding acts of hostage-taking committed in the course of armed conflicts defined in the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims or the Additional Protocols thereto, including armed conflicts involving peoples fighting against colonial domination and alien occupation and against racist regimes in the exercise of their right of self-determination.

Substantial agreement was reached on the text of an article—formulated in connexion with the Group's discussion of respect for the principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity of States with regard to the release of hostages—debarring justification under the convention of the violation, in contravention of the Charter of the United Nations, of the territorial or political independence of a State. The accepted text was subsequently incorporated as article 13 of the draft convention presented by the Ad Hoc Committee (becoming article 14 of the Convention).

Consultations on the third issue before the Group, that of extradition and the right of asylum, led to the preparation of a provisional text of an article on which, however, final agreement was not reached. It was to be the subject of subsequent deliberations in the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee.

The remaining issues before the Working Group, namely, other aspects of the scope of the convention and the definition of the act of hostage-taking, were referred to Working Group II as being more of a technical than of a political nature.

In addition to reviewing the less controversial articles of the draft convention as they stood at the close of the Ad Hoc Committee's 1978 session, Working Group II considered changes to those articles submitted by members, the texts of two new articles proposed, respectively, by Jordan and Nigeria, as well as articles agreed upon or referred to it by Working Group I.

The Group was able to reach general agreement, with few or no changes but subject to some reservations, on texts for the following articles which were approved by and reported out of the Ad Hoc Committee: article 1, defining the act of hostage-taking; article 2, concerning penalties for hostage-taking; article 4 (ultimately article 3), on measures to ease the situation of the hostage, secure his release and return his property; article 5, on the establishment of jurisdiction over hostage-taking offences; article 6, on custody or other measures to be taken, before legal proceedings, by contracting States in whose territory an alleged offender might be found; article 8, requiring contracting States either to extradite or to prosecute offenders; article 10, on the relationship between the convention and existing extradition treaties or procedures; article 11, calling for co-operation between States parties in the prosecution of offenders; a provision of article 12 (later article 13), limiting the scope of the convention to incidents of an international character; article 15 (subsequently incorporated in article 16), on arbitration or referral to the International Court of Justice of disputes between States parties; and articles 16 to 18 (ultimately articles 17 to 19) consisting of a set of final clauses for the convention.

Article 3 (ultimately article 4), the text of which had been agreed upon in 1978, calling for international co-operation to prevent incidents of hostage-taking, was not considered by the Working Group.

In addition, general agreement was reached on the text of a new article 7, proposed by Nigeria, calling for communication of the outcome of proceedings against hostage-takers to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

No agreement was reached, however, on a generally acceptable text for the second new article, proposed by Jordan, which sought to constrain contracting States from extraditing an alleged offender if grounds existed for believing that his position might thereby be prejudiced on account of his race, religion, nationality or political opinion or that the State of which he was a national might be denied communication with him in protection of his rights. This article was also the subject of deliberations in the Sixth Committee.

The Ad Hoc Committee approved the reports of its Working Groups on 16 February 1979; the reports reflected informal discussions which did not prejudge the final positions of States. On the same date, it adopted its report to the General Assembly, recommending for further consideration and adoption the draft of an international convention, of which two provisions—the provision on the right of asylum and the new article introduced by Jordan—had not been agreed upon.

The Ad Hoc Committee was unable for lack of time to discuss the preamble to the convention or pronounce itself on a preambular paragraph, proposed by the USSR, by which the Assembly would record its conviction that it was urgently necessary to develop international co-operation between States in devising and adopting effective measures for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of all acts of hostage-taking as manifestations of international terrorism. The proposed paragraph subsequently became the concluding preambular paragraph of the Convention as adopted by the Assembly on 17 December 1979.

Action by the General Assembly

The General Assembly's Sixth Committee examined the draft convention at 12 meetings held between 26 September and 7 December 1979.

The draft convention prepared by the Ad Hoc Committee was, after initial consideration in the Sixth Committee, referred to a working group for review on an article-by-article basis.

The working group was composed of the States which had been members of the Ad Hoc Committee, with the understanding that all Members could participate in its work. The group met 10 times between 8 October and 13 November. After completing a first reading of the draft, it entrusted a drafting group of limited membership with the task of reviewing the articles in the light of preceding discussions and preparing texts of those articles and a draft preamble. The report of the drafting group was considered at five meetings of the working group, which in turn reported to the Sixth Committee on 27 November.

In introducing the report of the working group to the Sixth Committee, its Chairman explained the nature and intent of the various changes made. While the majority of these were of a formal or linguistic character, introduced to ensure clarity, conciseness, inclusiveness or consistency with existing conventions and international legal norms, others were substantive in nature. In particular, it was explained, the new article proposed by Jordan (article 9) had been reformulated to remove objections to its drafting in the form of a strict obligation and had further been supplemented by a paragraph intended to take care of possible incompatabilities between its provisions and existing extradition treaties and arrangements.

With respect to article 14 (ultimately article 15), regarding the right of asylum, the Chairman indicated that the Ad Hoc Committee's text had been replaced by a parallel provision from the 1973 New York Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents.3 A similar borrowing had led to the inclusion of a new final article, comprising one of the final clauses for the convention, concerning its authentic languages, and of a new subparagraph to article 6 expanding its coverage. Also new to article 6, the Chairman explained, were two additional paragraphs, one borrowed from the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, designed to cover possible incompatibilities between the laws of contracting States and certain protections afforded under the convention, and the other originating in the drafting group, allowing for invitation of the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit alleged offenders.

Still another substantive change noted by the Chairman concerned the extension from six months to one year in the period required for denunciations of the convention by contracting States to enter into effect under the article which became article 19.

Regarding the preamble, the Chairman noted that, following submission of the group's report, agreement had been reached after informal consultations on two outstanding paragraphs intended to reaffirm, respectively, the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and the requirement under the convention that hostage-takers be either extradited or prosecuted. The final preambular paragraph remained as submitted by the Ad Hoc Committee, despite reservations by some States, such as France and Japan, on its description of hostage-taking as a manifestation of international terrorism. Japan said the term "international terrorism" lacked an agreed definition.

The draft convention presented by the working group was generally well received by the Sixth Committee. The majority of Members who took the floor also welcomed the successful outcome of the work of the Ad Hoc Committee and commended it for its efforts. Cuba, however, held the view that the phenomenon of hostagetaking was a manifestation of international terrorism and should be discussed in that context. Spain considered the convention as drafted too timid in condemning or prohibiting hostagetaking and expressed regret that it did not provide for the regulation of certain legal questions, such as conflicting requests for extradition and statutory limitation in respect of offences and sentences.

A number of reservations were expressed on various specific articles and provisions thereof.

Jordan had reservations about the inclusion of certain provisions of article 5, dealing with establishment of jurisdiction over hostage-taking offences, considering that an alleged offender could be exposed to a number of jurisdictions under those provisions, since the basis on which jurisdiction would be established was not universally recognized. Nor was Jordan satisfied with article 10, which in respect of extraditable offences bound States in their bilateral relations, both past and future.

Malta, which said its constitution prohibited the extradition of political offenders, expressed serious reservations on several parts of the convention, observing that the almost absolute obligation either to extradite or prosecute might prove impractical or impossible in many instances.

Several Members, including Bulgaria, Poland, Romania and the USSR, maintained their objections to the new article proposed by Jordan on non-extradition in special circumstances (article 9) as weakening the force of the convention. The USSR considered that it undermined the principle of the inevitability of punishment for the crime of hostage-taking; Poland found it imprecise and susceptible of subjective interpretation.

Reservations were also registered by Spain, among others, regarding the wording of article 12, which, Spain felt, might be construed as compromising the force of existing conventions and protocols and which, by referring to other instruments, recognized a certain type of armed conflict. Mali thought the text would be clearer if those references were deleted. Other States, including Pakistan, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yugoslavia, felt the article might jeopardize the necessary protections afforded by the convention to national liberation movements.

Some Latin American States, such as Ecuador, Mexico, Peru and Venezuela, which had raised objections to the provisional wording of an article on asylum as reported out of the Ad Hoc Committee, felt the article introduced a contradiction that would render it legally meaningless. Some of these States advocated deletion of the provision; others, such as Chile, proposed replacing it with a provision similar to one contained in the 1973 New York Convention. Algeria, Colombia, Cuba and Ecuador were among those which reiterated objections to the article in its final form (article 15), as posing a threat to established rights of asylum. France regretted the inclusion of a provision which established a difference between the obligations of States parties.

Lebanon considered the denunciation provision (article 19) to be an unfortunate one in such a treaty.

At the conclusion of debate, the Sixth Committee approved article 9 by a roll-call vote of $^{^3}$ See Y.U.N., 1973, p. 774, resolution 3166(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, annexing text of Convention.

103 to 10, with 4 abstentions; Israel and the Lao People's Democratic Republic indicated that they would not participate in the voting. The Committee then approved without vote, on 7 December, a draft resolution introduced by the Federal Republic of Germany annexing the convention.

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted by consensus resolution 34/146, thereby adopting the International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, and opened it for signature and ratification or accession. The Assembly first took a separate vote, at the request of the USSR, on article 9 of the Convention, which it adopted by a recorded vote of 125 to 10, with 3 abstentions. The Convention was opened for signature on 18 December 1979.

Summary of the Convention

By the preamble to the Convention, States parties, reaffirming the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, as enshrined in the United Nations Charter, the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,4 and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, considered that the taking of hostages was an offence of grave concern to the international community and that, in accordance with this Convention, any person committing an act of hostage-taking was to be either extradited or prosecuted. Convinced of the urgent need for international co-operation in preventing, prosecuting and punishing acts of hostage-taking as manifestations of international terrorism, the parties agreed to the following measures, contained in the 20-article Convention.

Article 1 provided that any person who seized or detained and threatened to kill, injure or continue to detain another person (the "hostage") in order to compel a third party to do, or abstain from doing, any act as a condition for the hostage's release would be committing the offence of hostage-taking; also included as offences under the article were attempts to commit an act of hostage-taking and participation as an accomplice in such an act. Under article 2, States parties would undertake to make the offences in question punishable by appropriate penalties which took into account their grave nature. Appropriate measures were to be taken to ease the situation of the hostage, secure his release, facilitate his departure and return objects obtained through hostage-taking (article 3), and States parties were to co-operate in preventing acts of hostage-taking, in particular by taking measures to prevent preparations for such acts in their territories and by exchanging information and coordinating measures to prevent their commission (article 4).

Each State party was obliged, in accordance with article 5, to establish its jurisdiction over acts of hostage-taking committed in its territory, by any of its nationals, in order to compel that State to do or abstain from doing something, or with respect to a hostage who was one of its nationals, if it deemed it appropriate. By the same article, each State party was to establish its jurisdiction when an alleged offender was in its territory and it did not extradite him. Article 6 dealt with measures to be taken prior to the institution of criminal or extradition proceedings, with regard to custody, inquiry into facts, notification to interested States or organizations, as well as rights of communication for the alleged offender. States parties prosecuting offenders were to communicate the outcome of the proceedings to the United Nations Secretary-General for transmittal to States and organizations concerned (article 7).

States parties were obligated, without exception and whether or not the offence was committed in their territory, either to extradite the alleged hostage-taker found in their territory or to submit the case to the authorities for prosecution in accordance with the laws of the State, while guaranteeing fair treatment at all stages of the proceedings (article 8). Article 9 provided, however, that requests for extradition were not to be granted if the requested State party had grounds for believing that the request had been made to prosecute or punish the alleged offender, or that his position might be prejudiced in the requesting State, on account of his race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinion or that communication might be denied him with appropriate authorities entitled to exercise rights of protection. Existing extradition treaties and arrangements between States parties were modified by article 9 where they were incompatible with this Convention. Article 10 further detailed the relationship between the Convention and existing extradition systems, and article 11 called for mutual assistance between States parties in connexion with the prosecution of alleged offenders.

Articles 12 to 15 concerned the scope of the Convention. Article 12 assigned priority, where applicable, to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols in dealing with acts of hostage-taking committed in the course of armed conflicts as defined in those instruments; article 13 limited the applicability of the Convention to acts of hostage-taking having an international aspect; article 14 stated that nothing in the Convention was to be construed as justifying the violation of the territorial integrity or political independence of a State in contravention of the United Nations Charter; and article 15 provided that the Convention's terms were not to affect the application of treaties on asylum in force between concerned parties.

Finally, article 16 covered the question of disputes between States parties arising from the interpretation or application of the Convention, and articles 17 to 20 constituted a set of concluding clauses dealing with opening of the Convention for signature, ratification, accession, entry into force (30 days after deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession with the Secretary-General), denunciation and authentic texts.

The General Assembly,

Considering that the progressive development of international law and its codification contribute to the implementation of the purposes and principles set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Mindful of the need to conclude, under the auspices of the United Nations, an international convention against the taking of hostages,

Recalling its resolution 31/103 of 15 December 1976, by which it established the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Taking of Hostages and requested it to draft at the earliest possible date an international convention against the taking of hostages,

Further recalling its resolutions 32/148 of 16 December 1977 and 33/19 of 29 November 1978,

Having considered the draft Convention prepared by the Ad Hoc Committee in pursuance of the above-mentioned resolutions, Adopts and opens for signature and ratification or for accession the International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Internationa 1 Conventio n agains t the Takin g of Hostage s

The States Parties to this Convention,

Having in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations concerning the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of friendly relations and co-operation among States,

Recognizing, in particular, that everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person, as set out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Reaffirming the principle of equal rights and selfdetermination of peoples as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as well as in other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Considering that the taking of hostages is an offence of grave concern to the international community and that, in accordance with the provisions of this Convention, any person committing an act of hostage-taking shall be either prosecuted or extradited,

Being convinced that it is urgently necessary to develop in-ternational co-operation between States in devising and adopting effective measures for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of all acts of taking of hostages as manifestations of international terrorism,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

- 1. Any person who seizes or detains and threatens to kill, to injure or to continue to detain another person (hereinafter referred to as the "hostage") in order to compel a third party, namely, a State, an international intergovernmental organization, a natural or juridical person, or a group of persons, to do or abstain from doing any act as an explicit or implicit condition for the release of the hostage commits the offence of taking of hostages ("hostage-taking") within the meaning of this Convention.
 - 2. Any person who:

(a) Attempts to commit an act of hostage-taking, or

(b) Participates as an accomplice of anyone who commits or attempts to commit an act of hostage-taking likewise commits an offence for the purposes of this

Article 2

Each State Party shall make the offences set forth in article 1 punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account the grave nature of those offences.

Article 3

1. The State Party in the territory of which the hostage is held by the offender shall take all measures it considers appropriate to ease the situation of the hostage, in particular, to secure his release and, after his release, to facilitate, when relevant, his departure.

2. If any object which the offender has obtained as a result of the taking of hostages comes into the custody of a State. Party, that State Party shall return it as soon as possible to the hostage or the third party referred to in article 1, as the case may be, or to the appropriate authorities thereof.

States Parties shall co-operate in the prevention of the offences set forth in article 1, particularly by:

(a) Taking all practicable measures to prevent preparations in their respective territories for the commission of those offences within or outside their territories, including measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts of taking of

(b) Exchanging information and co-ordinating the taking of administrative and other measures as appropriate to prevent the commission of those offences.

Article 5

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over any of the offences set forth in article 1 which are committed:

(a) In its territory or on board a ship or aircraft registered in that State;

- (b) By any of its nationals or, if that State considers it appropriate, by those stateless persons who have their habitual residence in its territory;
- (c) In order to compel that State to do or abstain from doing any act; or

(d) With respect to a hostage who is a national of that State, if that State considers it appropriate.

2. Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 1 in cases where the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite him to any of the States mentioned in paragraph 1 of this article.

3. This Convention does not exclude any criminal jurisdiction exercised in accordance with internal law.

Article 6

1. Upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant, any State Party in the territory of which the alleged offender is present shall, in accordance with its laws, take him into custody or take other measures to ensure his presence for such time as is necessary to enable any criminal or extradition proceedings to be instituted. That State Party shall immediately make a preliminary inquiry into the facts.

2. The custody or other measures referred to in paragraph 1 of this article shall be notified without delay directly or through the Secretary-General of the United Nations to:

(a) The State where the offence was committed;(b) The State against which compulsion has been directed or attempted;

- (c) The State of which the natural or juridical person against whom compulsion has been directed or attempted is a national;
- (d) The State of which the hostage is a national or in the territory of which he has his habitual residence;
- (e) The State of which the alleged offender is a national or, if he is a stateless person, in the territory of which he has his habitual residence;

(f) The international intergovernmental organization against which compulsion has been directed or attempted;

(g) All other States concerned.

3. Any person regarding whom the measures referred to in paragraph 1 of this article are being taken shall be entitled:

(a) To communicate without delay with the nearest appropriate representative of the State of which he is a national or which is otherwise entitled to establish such communication or, if he is a stateless person, the State in the territory of which he has his habitual residence;

- (b) To be visited by a representative of that state.

 4. The rights referred to in paragraph 3 of this article shall be exercised in conformity with the laws and regulations of the State in the territory of which the alleged offender is present, subject to the proviso, however, that the said laws and regulations must enable full effect to be given to the purposes for which the rights accorded under paragraph 3 of this article are intended.
- 5. The provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 of this article shall be without prejudice to the right of any State Party having a claim to jurisdiction in accordance with paragraph 1 (b) of article 5 to invite the International Committee of the Red Cross to communicate with and visit the alleged offender.
- 6. The State which makes the preliminary inquiry contemplated in paragraph 1 of this article shall promptly report its findings to the States or organization referred to in paragraph 2 of this article and indicate whether it intends to exercise jurisdiction.

Article 7

The State Party where the alleged offender is prosecuted shall, in accordance with its laws, communicate the final outcome of the proceedings to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit the information to the other States concerned and the international intergovernmental organizations concerned.

Article 8

- 1. The State Party in the territory of which the alleged offender is found shall, if it does not extradite him, be obliged, without exception whatsoever and whether or not the offence was committed in its territory, to submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution, through proceedings in accordance with the laws of that State. Those authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any ordinary offence of a grave nature under the law of that State.
- 2. Any person regarding whom proceedings are being carried out in connexion with any of the offences set forth in article 1 shall be guaranteed fair treatment at all stages of the proceedings, including enjoyment of all the rights and guarantees provided by the law of the State in the territory of which he is present.

Article 9

- 1. A request for the extradition of an alleged offender, pursuant to this Convention, shall not be granted if the requested State Party has substantial grounds for believing:
- (a) That the request for extradition for an offence set forth in article 1 has been made for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing a person on account of his race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinion; or

(b) That the person's position may be prejudiced:

- (i) For any of the reasons mentioned in subparagraph (a) of this paragraph, or
- For the reason that communication with him by the appropriate authorities of the State entitled to exercise rights of protection cannot be effected.
- With respect to the offences as defined in this Convention, the provisions of all extradition treaties and arrangements applicable between States Parties are modified as between States Parties to the extent that they are incompatible with this Convention.

Article 10

- 1. The offences set forth in article 1 shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.
- If a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, the requested State may at its option consider this Convention as the legal basis for extradition in respect of the offences set forth in article 1. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize the offences set forth in article 1 as extraditable offences between themselves, subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

4. The offences set forth in article 1 shall be treated, for the purpose of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territories of the States required to establish their jurisdiction in accordance with paragraph 1 of article 5.

Article 11
1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connexion with criminal proceedings brought in respect of the offences set forth in article 1, including the supply of all evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.

2. The provisions of paragraph 1 of this article shall not affect obligations concerning mutual judicial assistance embodied in any other treaty.

Article 12

In so far as the Geneva Conventions of 1949 for the protection of war victims or the Protocols Additional to those Conventions are applicable to a particular act of hostage-taking, and in so far as States Parties to this Convention are bound under those Conventions to prosecute or hand over the hostage-taker, the present Convention shall not apply to an act of hostage-taking committed in the course of armed conflicts as defined in the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Protocols thereto, including armed conflicts, mentioned in article 1, paragraph 4, of Additional Protocol I of 1977, in which peoples are fighting against colonial domination and alien occupation and against racist regimes in the exercise of their right of self-determination, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 13

This Convention shall not apply where the offence is committed within a single State, the hostage and the alleged offender are nationals of that State and the alleged offender is found in the territory of that State.

Article 14

Nothing in this Convention shall be construed as justifying the violation of the territorial integrity or political independence of a State in contravention of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 15

The provisions of this Convention shall not affect the application of the Treaties on Asylum, in force at the date of the adoption of this Convention, as between the States which are parties to those Treaties; but a State Party to this Convention may not invoke those Treaties with respect to another State Party to this Convention which is not a party to those Treaties.

Article 16

- 1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention which is not settled by negotiation shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If within six months from the date of the request for arbitration the parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in conformity with the Statute of the Court.
- 2. Each State may at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of this article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 1 of this article with respect to any State Party which has made such a reservation.
- 3. Any State Party which has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 17

1. This Convention is open for signature by all States until 31 December 1980 at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

2. This Convention is subject to ratification. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. This Convention is open for accession by any State. The instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 18

- 1. This Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
- 2. For each State ratifying or acceding to the Convention after the deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after deposit by such State of its instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 19

1. Any State Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. Denunciation shall take effect one year following the date on which notification is received by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 20

The original of this Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall send certified copies thereof to all States.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention, opened for signature at New York on ... a

Measures to prevent international terrorism

Report of the Ad Hoc Committe e

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 16 December 1977,⁵ the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism met at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 19 March to 6 April 1979 to continue the work entrusted to it by the Assembly in 1972⁶ and 1976.⁷

The Committee had before it observations on international terrorism submitted by various States and an analytical study of the subject prepared by the Secretariat on the basis of these observations, as well as working papers submitted to it during its 1973 session.

The Ad Hoc Committee first held a general debate on questions related to international terrorism. The views expressed, as summarized in the Committee's report to the Assembly, revolved around general approaches to the problem of international terrorism, the major elements relevant to consideration of the problem, the tasks before the Committee, the causes of international terrorism and their elimination, and measures to combat the problem.

The Ad Hoc Committee established a working group of the whole to deal with questions of the causes of international terrorism and measures to be taken against it. In its consideration of underlying causes, the group's discussion centred on a working paper submitted jointly by Algeria, Barbados, India, Iran, Nigeria, Panama, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. This paper presented a list of underlying political and socioeconomic causes stemming from the desire for domination, exploitation, expansion, hegemony and imperialism, among other goals.

Among the political conditions noted were colonialism, racial discrimination, aggression, interference in the internal affairs of other States, massive terror resulting in an exodus of populations, and foreign occupation or domination. Among the social and economic conditions noted were an inequitable international economic order, foreign exploitation of natural resources or systematic destruction of environment or infrastructure, social injustice, large-scale violations of human rights, poverty, hunger and frustration.

Four working papers were submitted in connexion with the second question before the working group—practical measures to combat terrorism—by Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay. A number of oral proposals were also informally presented, as well as a draft resolution by India.

Following informal consultations based on the Indian draft and other proposals, the group agreed on a set of recommendations regarding practical measures of co-operation for the speedy elimination of the problem of international terrorism, which were adopted by the Ad Hoc Committee at its final meeting on 6 April.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly: condemn all acts of international terrorism which endangered or took human lives or jeopardized fundamental freedoms; take note of the study of its underlying causes as contained in the Committee's report; urge all States to contribute to the progressive elimination of those causes; call upon all States to fulfil their obligations under international law regarding terrorist acts and preparations for such acts; appeal to

States that had not done so to become parties to existing international conventions relating to various aspects of the problem of international terrorism within their respective spheres of responsibility; urge States to co-operate more closely in exchanging information and concluding or refining treaties on the subject; request the Secretary-General to prepare a compilation of relevant national legislation dealing with the problem; consider the need for an additional international convention, based on the principle of prosecution or extradition, to combat acts of international terrorism; and pay special attention, together with the Security Council, to all situations, including colonialism, racism and alien occupation, that might give rise to international terrorism and otherwise endanger international peace and security.

Consideration of the question of measures to prevent international terrorism was allocated by the General Assembly to the Sixth (Legal) Committee at its regular 1979 session.

The Committee took up the question at eight meetings held between 26 September and 4 December. The Committee had before it the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism as well as several letters addressed to the Secretary-General (see section below).

During the Committee debate, many Members, including Austria, Brazil, Hungary, Indonesia, Pakistan, the United States and Yugoslavia, welcomed the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and expressed support for its recommendations as a useful starting-point in dealing with the problem. Considerable disagreement remained, however, regarding the definition of international terrorism, the nature of its causes and appropriate measures to be taken to combat it

On the definition of international terrorism, some felt that kidnapping, the armed hijacking of aircraft and the taking of hostages constituted international terrorism; others felt that international terrorism was directed by States and Governments through espionage and mercenaries.

Algeria, Bangladesh, Indonesia, Pakistan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Republic of Tanzania were among the many Members who expressed concern that an indictment of terrorism might invite confusion with, or be used to compromise, the legitimate struggles of national liberation movements against colonial, racist and imperialist regimes. Furthermore, for a number of States, including China, Cuba, Cyprus and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, it was such regimes themselves that posed the greatest danger in international terrorism—through their exercise of "State terrorism"—and no examination of the problem, accordingly, would be complete without consideration of the role such regimes played. It was generally felt that further work was needed to define international terrorism accurately in all its various aspects. To the United States, however, it seemed less prudent to focus on an abstract definition, which would probably not achieve consensus, than to seek common ground by focusing on specific acts or categories of acts.

In regard to the causes of terrorism, many States, among them Burundi, the German Democratic Republic, India, Iraq, Mongolia and Zaire, agreed that a thorough study was required of the underlying socio-economic and political conditions and that, without a thorough reform in these areas, the problem of international terrorism could not be eliminated. A number of Members, including Argentina, Italy and Morocco, expressed doubts as to whether the complex phenomenon of terrorism could ever be satisfactorily explained in terms of rational causes; others, such as Turkey and Uruguay, argued that preventive measures to safeguard innocent lives and ensure international security could not be postponed while a complete study of the causes of terrorism was undertaken or the injustices underlying it corrected. Pakistan, Spain and the United States, among others, felt that certain terroristic acts were too heinous to be countenanced by the international community, regardless of their motive or underlying cause. Czechoslovakia, the USSR and Yugoslavia warned of the danger of using double standards in dealing with terrorism.

Finally, regarding specific measures to be taken, a number of States, including Argentina, Indonesia, Italy, Spain, Turkey and Uruguay, supported the drafting of a global convention against international terrorism. Other Members, such as Brazil, Pakistan and Sweden, had accepted that a step-by-step or regional approach might be more likely to bring early practical results; still others—Afghanistan, Hungary and Mongolia among them—favoured reliance on existing international conventions, which, when fully implemented, would set an effective curb on incidents of international terrorism. Primary responsibility for effectively preventing acts of international terrorism, in the view of the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, rested with individual States. Morocco, Nigeria and Yugoslavia were among the Members which urged the adoption by the General Assembly of a declaration against international terrorism,

At the conclusion of the debate, a draft resolution was submitted to the Sixth Committee, sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Benin, Guinea, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Mozambique, the Niger, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

1148 Legal questions

On 4 December 1979, the Sixth Committee approved the text, as orally amended by Austria and Jordan, by 96 votes to 1, with 20 abstentions. On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted it as resolution 34/145 by a recorded vote of 118 to 0, with 22 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly: expressed its conviction of the importance of international cooperation for dealing with acts of international terrorism; reaffirmed the inalienable right to selfdetermination and independence of all peoples under colonial and racist regimes and other forms of alien domination, and upheld the legitimacy of their struggle; adopted the recommendations submitted by the Ad Hoc Committee; and condemned all acts of international terrorism which endangered or took human lives or jeopardized fundamental freedoms as well as the continuation of repressive and terrorist acts by colonial, racist and alien regimes in denying peoples their legitimate right to self-determination and independence and other human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Assembly further: took note of the study of the underlying causes of international terrorism as contained in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and urged all States and relevant United Nations organs to contribute to the progressive elimination of those causes; called upon all States to fulfil their obligations under international law to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in acts of civil strife or terrorist acts in another State, or acquiescing in organized activities within their territory directed towards commission of such acts; appealed to States which had not done so to consider becoming parties to existing international conventions relating to various aspects of the problem of international terrorism; and invited Governments to submit observations and proposals, in particular on the need for an additional international convention or conventions on international terrorism.

The Assembly also invited all States to take national measures with a view to the speedy and final elimination of the problem of international terrorism, including the harmonization of domestic legislation with international conventions, the implementation of assumed international obligations and the prevention of the preparation and organization in their territory of acts directed against other States. It recommended that specialized agencies and regional organizations consider measures to prevent and combat international terrorism, and urged all States to cooperate more closely, especially through information exchange on preventing and combating international terrorism, conclusion of special treaties and/or incorporation into appropriate bilateral treaties of special clauses, in particular as to the extradition or prosecution of international terrorists.

Further, the Assembly recognized that, in order to contribute to the elimination of the causes and the problem of international terrorism, both the Assembly and the Security Council should pay special attention to all situations that might give rise to international terrorism or endanger international peace and security, with a view to the application, where feasible and necessary, of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, including Chapter VII thereof.8 The Secretary-General was asked to prepare a compilation on the basis of material provided by Member States of national legislation to combat international terrorism, and to follow up, as appropriate, and report on implementation of the Ad Hoc Committee's recommendations.

The Austrian amendment had added the words "as appropriate" to the request for follow-up to the recommendations. The Jordanian amendment, accepted by the sponsors, modified the Assembly's appeal to States to consider becoming, rather than to become, parties to existing international conventions relating to terrorism.

The preambular paragraph containing the reaffirmation of the inalienable right to selfdetermination and independence and upholding the legitimacy of the struggle, in particular of national liberation movements, in defence of that right, and the operative paragraph containing the condemnation of the continuation of terrorist acts by colonial, racist and alien regimes in denying peoples that legitimate right and other human rights and freedoms caused difficulties for several States. The United States objected to the selective nature of those paragraphs; all acts of terrorism were deserving of condemnation, and self-determination should be advocated for all peoples, not just those deprived of their rights for particular reasons. The United States also felt it was wrong to single out certain regimes while ignoring others whose repressive acts caused at least as much suffering. Austria and Sweden held similar views on that point and Japan also considered the paragraph not well balanced. Canada felt the reference to Chapter VII of the Charter was out of place, and Ireland (speaking on behalf of the members of the European Community) said they had abstained because of the extraneous matters introduced in those paragraphs. Israel added that it would have difficulty accepting any blanket endorsement of the study of the underlying causes of terrorism.

Mexico had reservations regarding the suitability of elaborating international criteria to define the concept of terrorism and felt provisions relating to this aspect went beyond the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee. Jordan expressed reservations on calling for treaties on the subject to provide for extradition or prosecution, as it was opposed to prejudging the structure of such treaties. Jordan also would have favoured a wider interpretation of the right to self-determination.

Cuba and Mali stated that they had voted in favour of the resolution on the understanding that the term "international terrorism" did not include the actions of national liberation movements, while Sierra Leone abstained because it objected to the idea that the struggles of those movements should be regarded as a form of terrorism. Turkey said it had abstained because the resolution appeared to postpone indefinitely any action on the problem of international terrorism.

Several communications were addressed to the Secretary-General during the year on the subject of international terrorism. By letters of 27 July, 7, 20 and 22 August, 1.9 September, 30 October and 13 and 20 November 1979, Israel drew the attention of the Secretary-General to various acts of terrorism committed and attempted in its territory. For a number of these acts, it said, the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) had taken responsibility. Those acts and attempts, involving bombs and other explosive devices, missiles and infiltration, Israel stressed, were aimed at the mass murder of innocent men, women and children in crowded public places, such as bus terminals and bus stops, amusement parks, railways, city streets and open markets. In the light of these facts, Israel felt duty-bound to take all necessary measures to protect the lives and safety of its citizens.

By a letter dated 19 December, Morocco, on behalf of the Arab group of States at the United Nations, transmitted a letter of 15 December from the Permanent Observer of PLO informing the Secretary-General of a terrorist act it attributed to Israel, which took place at the PLO'S mission to Cyprus and resulted in the death of two Palestinian officials. According to the letter, this act of terrorism should be condemned as a violation of international law and the norms of diplomacy.

Replying on 31 December, Israel denied the charges, adding that the PLO letter was yet another illustration of the way in which the United Nations was being used by the Arab Governments and PLO to disseminate falsehoods and propaganda against Israel.

Drafting of an international convention against activities of mercenaries

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 5 December 1979, the Permanent Representative of Nigeria, who said he was acting on behalf of a number of Member States, requested that an item entitled "Drafting of an international convention against activities of mercenaries" be added to the agenda of the General Assembly's current session.

An attached explanatory memorandum emphasized that efforts to reduce international terrorism could not be complete without consideration of the menace mercenary forces posed to many African States. The memorandum recalled that the 1967 Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) had demanded the immediate withdrawal of all mercenaries from the Democratic Republic of the Congo (later Zaire) and that repeated condemnations of mercenarism by OAU had culminated in the approval by its Council of Ministers in 1976 of a draft convention for the elimination of mercenaries in Africa.

Conscious of the fact, however, that the problem of mercenarism was a global rather than a regional one, Nigeria, in co-operation with other African States, had introduced a definition of mercenaries at the 1977 Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts. The definition, incorporated as article 47 of Protocol I Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, denied mercenaries the status of combatants or prisoners of war. In view of the seriousness of the activities of mercenaries and the concomitant threat to international peace and security, Nigeria felt that the General Assembly should give urgent consideration to an item concerning the need for an international convention on the recruitment, training, financing, transit and use of mercenaries. A draft resolution on the subject was attached to the memorandum.

On 14 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 34/140 on the subject, sponsored by 26 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The text was essentially the same as that annexed to the Nigerian letter.

In introducing the text, Nigeria drew attention to several resolutions of the Assembly and the Security Council arising from complaints by Member States, particularly from Africa, concerning attempts by mercenaries to subvert their political independence, immobilize their properly constituted institutions and paralyse their economies.

Barbados, Togo and Zaire explained that they had co-sponsored the resolution because they had experienced threats of mercenaries and in the hope that the proposed convention would give binding force to principles already embodied in a number of Assembly resolutions. Egypt also spoke in support of the resolution.

By the resolution, the Assembly, concerned about the increasing menace posed by the activities of mercenaries for all States, and in particular for African and other small developing States of the world, and recognizing mercenarism as a threat to international peace and security and, like murder, piracy and genocide, a universal crime against humanity, decided to consider the drafting of an international convention to outlaw mercenarism in all its manifestations. To this end, the Assembly decided to include an item on drafting an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries in the provisional agenda of its 1980 session and invited all Member States to communicate their views on the urgent need to elaborate such a convention to the Secretary-General prior to that session.

The Assembly also, inter alia: deplored the increasing use of mercenaries to overthrow Governments of Member States and to fight against national liberation movements of peoples struggling for self-determination; and called upon all States to ensure by administrative and legislative means that their territories and nationals were not used for planning subversion and recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries designed to subvert or overthrow the Government of any Member State or to fight the national liberation movements of peoples engaged in the exercise of their right of self-determination, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among. States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.1

The United States indicated that it had no objection to a study of the feasibility of a multilateral treaty concerning the activities of mercenaries but did not agree, in particular, with the description in the preamble of the relationship between mercenaries and national liberation movements and with the wording of the operative paragraph by which States were urged to consider measures to prohibit transit of persons within their territories.

Though it also associated itself with the consensus on adoption of the resolution, France said it had strong legal reservations to certain affirmations in the preamble, notably in the paragraph by which the Assembly recognized that mercenarism, like murder, piracy and genocide, was a universal crime against humanity.

In a separate action, the Assembly on 23 November 1979 adopted resolution 34/44 on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights.

By this resolution, the Assembly, inter alia, reaffirmed that mercenaries were criminals and that the practice of using them against national liberation movements and sovereign States constituted a criminal act. It called upon all Governments to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territory and the transit of mercenaries through their territory to be punishable offences and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries; such legislation was to be reported to the Secretary-General. (For further details, see p. 833; for page reference to text of resolution 34/44, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Resolution 34/140, as proposed by 26 powers, A/34/L.58 and Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1 979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the increasing menace which the activities of mercenaries represent for all States, particularly African States and other small developing States of the world,

Recognizing that mercenarism is a threat to international peace and security and, like murder, piracy and genocide, is a universal crime against humanity,

Recalling its resolutions 2395(XXIII) of 29 November 1968, 2465(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2548(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2708(XXV) of 14 December 1970 and 3103(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, in which it affirmed the precariousness of the activities of mercenaries in Africa and their effect on international peace and security, Recalling also Security Council resolutions 239(1967) of 10 July 1967, 405(1977) of 14 April 1977 and 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, in which the Council, inter alia, condemned any State which persisted in permitting or tolerating the recruitment of mercenaries, and the provision of facilities to them, with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations.

Recalling further the relevant resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and the Convention adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its fourteenth ordinary session, held at Libreville from 2 to 5 July 1977, condemning and outlawing mercenarism and its adverse effects on the independence and territorial integrity of African States,

Deploring the increased recruitment, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries for the purpose of overthrowing Governments of Member States and of fighting against the national liberation movements of peoples which are struggling against colonial domination or alien occupation or racist regimes in the exercise of their right of self-determination, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Calling upon ail States to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to ensure by both administrative and legislative measures that their territory and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the planning of subversion and recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries designed to subvert or overthrow the Government of any Member State and to fight the national liberation movements of peoples which are struggling against colonial domination or alien occupation or racist regimes in the exercise of their right of self-determination, as enshrined in the Charter and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

1. Decides to consider the drafting of an international convention to outlaw mercenarism in all its manifestations;

2. Urges all States to consider effective measures to prohibit the recruitment, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries within their territories;

3. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General before the thirty-fifth session of the General Assembly their views and comments on the need to elaborate urgently an international convention to prohibit the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item entitled "Drafting of an international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries."

Relations with the host country

Committe e on Relation s with the Host Country

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country held six meetings in 1979, retaining the list of topics provisionally adopted in 1972.

At the request of Iraq, the Committee met four times in July to consider the gasoline shortage problem affecting the diplomatic community attached to the United Nations.

Prior to the adoption of the agenda, the United States, the host country, observed that the problem was one of supply rather than of shortages and that it affected the host community and country as a whole and not just the members of diplomatic missions. The United States would therefore have preferred the item to refer to the energy situation in relation to the needs of the United Nations community, in keeping with phrasing adopted by the Committee in its deliberations during a similar period of difficulty in 1974.

Iraq contended that the normal work of the missions was disturbed when staff had to wait long hours to obtain gasoline and that there were fears that transport of the diplomatic bag might be interrupted. It was the responsibility of the host country to provide the diplomatic community with adequate fuel supplies, and to that end Iraq felt certain service stations should be assigned to supply gasoline to missions, fuel should be supplied through the gasoline pump at Headquarters, or other special procedures adopted. Various Committee members, among them Bulgaria, the Ivory Coast, Spain and the USSR, concurred in Iraq's views.

The United States informed the Committee that a special permit reserved for persons providing essential services, exempting them from gasoline restrictions imposed on private individuals, had been made available to all missions by the New York City Commission for the United Nations and for the Consular Corps, and pointed out that the situation showed promise of early improvement.

A representative of the Secretary-General briefed the Committee on the gasoline pump and tank installed at Headquarters. Structural problems, slow pumping, limited storage capacity and local fire department regulations, he said, limited the installation's ability to serve completely the needs of the diplomatic community or eliminate the problem of long waiting lines.

On 26 July 1979, the Committee adopted, without objection, a decision by which, mindful of changes in the international energy supply situation, the Committee recognized that the area, country and other nations were affected, and that adjustments in transportation and energy consumption patterns were necessary. Noting the measures taken by the host country and city and expressing appreciation to the New York City Commission for its efforts, the Committee recalled that permanent missions, in case of future disruption in the availability of gasoline, should be able to carry out the functions which were essential for the representation of their States, and acknowledged the complexities of the problem and the careful consideration given by the Secretariat to possible remedial measures.

The Committee requested the host country and the Secretariat to continue considering measures to ensure the essential functions of missions in case of a future disruption in the gasoline supply, asked the Secretariat to study the situation in other United Nations cities, the measures employed there and whether they might be usefully employed in the Headquarters district, and expressed the hope that, without prejudice to the effective functioning of missions and in case of future supply disruptions, members of the diplomatic corps would endeavour to conserve energy.

In accordance with the Committee's request, the Secretariat requested information on the fuel supply situation from various regional headquarters and reported the results of the survey to the Committee.

At two meetings held in November 1979, the Committee considered, among other matters, the security of missions and the safety of their personnel. The United States observed that on the whole relations between the United Nations and the host country had been good in 1979 and that there had been no serious incidents involving personal injury.

While it agreed that the situation in 1979 had improved somewhat in comparison with the preceding year, the USSR had lodged a series of complaints with the United States Mission between January and April 1979 regarding demonstrations by anti-Soviet groups in the vicinity of the Soviet Mission in November 1978 and March 1979 as well as what it termed other hostile and provocative acts. The USSR complained of inadequate police measures during the demonstrations, violations of a prohibition against picketing and other demonstrations within 100 feet of a mission, and inaction or inadequate action by authorities against thieves and vandals who had committed crimes against its property and Mission.

The United States, replying to the USSR, stated it had responded to most of the complaints of the USSR Mission. It emphasized that none of the incidents complained of had led to injury of Soviet Mission staff or had hampered the normal functioning of the Mission. The demonstrations referred to, it noted, had been conducted legally and ample security had been provided to ensure the safety of the Mission and its personnel.

The Committee also had before it a letter dated 29 December 1978, from the representative of Cuba, complaining of a bomb explosion at the Cuban Mission. The explosion, following a similar incident of September 1978, had caused material damage. The United States, in a reply of 22 January 1979, expressed deep regret over the incident and assured Cuba that the terrorist acts were being actively investigated.

In a series of recommendations approved on 12 November 1979, the Committee:

- noted with satisfaction the assurances given by the host country concerning the security of missions and the safety of their personnel and recognized the usefulness of the various measures taken and some improvement in the situation as compared to the previous year;
- urged the host country to continue to prevent any acts violating the security of missions, their property or the safety of their personnel and to ensure normal conditions for their existence and functioning, and to continue to bring to justice and punish all those committing criminal acts against missions;

- called on missions to co-operate as fully as possible with the Federal and local United States authorities in cases affecting the security of those missions and their personnel;
- called on the host country to avoid actions inconsistent with its obligations under international law;
- appealed to the host country to review its measures regarding the parking of diplomatic vehicles and to consider terminating the practice of serving summonses to diplomats;
- welcomed the diplomatic community's readiness to co-operate in solving traffic problems;
- expressed the hope that efforts would be intensified to acquaint the population of New York City with the privileges and immunities of mission personnel and with the importance of the international functions they performed;
- suggested that the Secretariat and others concerned work together to solve difficulties concerning unpaid bills of certain missions and individual diplomats;
- expressed its appreciation to the New York City Commission for the United Nations and for the Consular Corps and to the bodies which contributed to its efforts to assist the diplomatic community, provide hospitality and promote mutual understanding between the diplomatic community and the people of the City of New York; and
- considered that its further meetings should be organized both at the request of Member States and as necessary to fulfil its mandate.

In response to a General Assembly request of 16 December 1978, 12 the Secretary-General reported to the Committee on consultations held with the host country on procedures to be followed by the host State prior to the expulsion of a representative of a Member State accredited to the United Nations for abuse of the privileges of residence.

In his report, the Secretary-General stated that the United States had reiterated its position that the right to compel the departure of a member of a mission for abuse of privileges of residence derived from the sovereignty of the United States and was preserved by section 13 (b) (1) of the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations (the Headquarters Agreement), which laid down that the host country was required to conduct consultations with the Member States concerned in such cases, or with the Secretary-General, and that a request for departure of a diplomat could be made only with the authorization of the Secretary of State after such consultation. In the rare cases where the United States had exercised this right, it said it had complied with this obligation and would continue to do so. It also was its consistent practice to notify the Secretary-General of any such request and to keep him informed of developments. The United States had further observed that, for the purposes of section 13 (b) (1), a process of consultation implied a meaningful exchange of views in the sense that full opportunity should be afforded to each participant to express his considered opinion on the subject and make recommendations. However, the expression "after consultation with" did not mean "with the concurrence of."

During the Committee's consideration of the report, the USSR stated that while the report set forth and clarified the views of the United States, it failed to indicate the response of the Secretariat to those views. The USSR expressed doubt that the Assembly's request for consultations contained in its 1978 resolution had been fully respected.

The Legal Counsel, in supplementary observations made to the Committee on the report, said that there was no discrepancy between the Secretariat's understanding of the concept of consultations pursuant to the Headquarters Agreement and that of the host country.

Other matters considered by the Committee in 1979 included a complaint by Mali regarding the misplacement by an air carrier of one of its diplomatic bags, subsequently found and returned to the Mission; by the Palestine Liberation Organization concerning difficulties encountered in finding new accommodations for its Observer Mission, subsequently referred to appropriate city authorities; and by the USSR, protesting in one case the detention by police for an alleged traffic regulation infraction, in defiance of rules of diplomatic immunity, of two Soviet diplomats travelling in Georgia, and in another case calling attention to the need for improved parking facilities for personnel of the USSR Mission.

Consideratio n by the General Assembly

The report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country was considered during the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly by the Sixth (Legal) Committee. On 6 December, the Committee approved by consensus a resolution, sponsored by Bulgaria, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Mongolia and the USSR, by which the Assembly—considering that the problems related to diplomatic privileges and immunities and the security of missions and the safety of their personnel were of great concern to the Member States and the primary responsibility of the host country—would: accept the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country and decide to continue the Committee's work with the purpose of examining on a more regular basis all matters falling within its terms of reference.

Before the adoption of the resolution in plenary session on 17 December, Bulgaria and the USSR drew the Assembly's attention to events which had taken place in New York City since the Sixth Committee's approval of the text and which they said seriously affected the security of missions and were a threat to the lives of their personnel. The USSR referred to a bomb explosion which had taken place at its Mission on 11 December. In light of this incident, Bulgaria proposed to add to the resolution several new provisions on which consultations had taken place and which were included in the final text. The Assembly thereby expressed deep concern at recent acts of violence against missions that endangered their security and the lives of their personnel, strongly condemned such acts as incompatible with the status of missions and their personnel under international law, and urged the host country to take prompt effective measures to ensure adequate security for all missions and their personnel. The Assembly adopted the text, as thus amended, without vote as resolution 34/148.

During the debate on the question, the Byelorussian SSR and the USSR noted that, in spite of assurances of protection by the host country and of some improvement in the safety of representatives to the United Nations, incidents of violence and other illegal acts continued to occur. The Missions of the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR had been subjected to provocations and demonstrations by Zionist and anti-Soviet groups which carried on their activities with the virtual connivance of the host country, they charged.

The USSR stated that the recent criminal acts of terrorism against permanent missions to the United Nations demonstrated the continued failure of the host country to honour its international obligations to protect the missions of Member States. In particular it cited the host country's tolerant attitude towards certain groups engaging in terroristic actions against missions as an inducement to the continuation of such acts.

Cuba also complained of the host country's failure to take appropriate measures to guarantee its Mission's privileges and immunities. In 1976, 1978 and again on 27 October 1979, bomb explosions had occurred at the Cuban Mission, causing extensive material damage and endangering lives. Although the groups responsible for these acts were well known, the authorities of the host country had failed to detain or prosecute the persons concerned, it charged. During a recent visit by the President of Cuba, moreover, abusive demonstrations had been permitted in the vicinity of the Cuban Mission under the protection of local authorities. Cuba and the USSR further complained of the detention of their representatives by police in violation of the established laws of diplomatic immunity.

Egypt, while reaffirming the importance of the principles of diplomatic immunity, noted that the proper functioning of those principles required co-operation both from the host country and accredited diplomatic missions, as well as compliance by individual diplomats with the laws of the host country. Egypt also expressed its appreciation to the New York authorities for their attention to the needs of the diplomatic community. It joined other States, however, in reminding the host country of its responsibility for ensuring the safety and security of all missions to the United Nations.

The Byelorussian SSR and Egypt expressed concern over the effects the recent gasoline shortage had had on the functioning of United Nations missions and urged the host country to take measures to prevent the recurrence of such problems. The Byelorussian SSR and the USSR also remarked on the continuing shortage of parking facilities for diplomatic vehicles, the unauthorized use of parking spaces assigned to missions, and the unwarranted ticketing of mission vehicles. The Byelorussian SSR suggested that a public media campaign designed to improve understanding between countries with different social and economic systems would help to ameliorate the situation.

The United States said that it was honoured to be the host country and felt that the relationship between the United Nations and the New York community was generally beneficial to both. Some incidents of a regrettable character were inevitable in so large a community, but they were fortunately rare and showed signs of improvement, as noted in the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country. The United States agreed that threats to the security of missions and their personnel were intolerable, since no grievance could justify an attack on the means by which nations communicated. It regretted any action that caused embarrassment or inconvenience; it doubted, however, whether mere verbal abuse could be construed as threatening the safety of diplomatic staff or impeding the functioning of missions. It reminded those 1156 Legal questions concerned of their obligation to abide by the laws and regulations of the host country. The United States reiterated its condemnation of all acts directed against diplomatic premises or personnel, and expressed its profound regret concerning the isolated outrages that had occurred following the completion of the work of the Sixth Committee.

meeting 61. A/34/L.64. Bulgaria: amendments to 7-power draft resolution, A/C.6/34/L.15 and Corr.1.

A/34/802. Report of Sixth Committee.

Resolution 34/148, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/34/802, and as further amended by Bulgaria (A/34/L.64), adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Considering that the problems related to the privileges and immunities of the missions accredited to the United Nations, the security of the missions and the safety of their personnel are of great importance and concern to the Member States as well as the primary responsibility of the host country,

Deeply concerned at the recent acts of violence against permanent missions to the United Nations that endanger their security and the lives of their personnel,

1. Accepts the recommendations of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 42 of its report;

2. Strongly condemns the acts of violence against missions accredited to the United Nations and their personnel as incompatible with the status of such missions and their personnel under international law;

3. Urges once again the host country to take without delay effective measures to ensure adequate security for all permanent missions to the United Nations and their personnel;

4. Decides to continue the work of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971, with the purpose of examining on a more regular basis all matters falling within its terms of reference, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee with all necessary assistance:

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country."

Teaching and knowledge of international law

In a report to the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General outlined the activities of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law for 1978 and 1979.

Under the fellowship scheme, jointly administered by the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), 22 fellowships were awarded in 1979 to young Government legal officers and university teachers from Bolivia, Burma, Burundi, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, Dominica, Fiji, Lebanon, Madagascar, Malawi, Mauritius, Mexico, Mozambique, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sweden, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen and Zambia. The fellowships for the Romanian and Swedish candidates were funded by UNITAR, while those for the others were funded by the United Nations.

The fellows attended courses offered by the Hague Academy of International Law as well as special seminars, organized by UNITAR, on legal aspects of the new international economic order and on the law of the sea. A number of fellows also received practical training in the legal offices of the United Nations and its related organizations.

Also in 1979, UNITAR, in co-operation with the Hague Academy, sponsored a regional training and refresher course in international law at Mexico City, Mexico, in May. The course was attended by 45 young legal advisers and university teachers from Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Uruguay and Venezuela.

In addition, the International Law Commission as in the past sponsored an International Law Seminar during its annual session, held in June at Geneva. Twenty-one advanced students and young Government officials, each from a different country, attended the Seminar. (See also p. 1125.)

A second symposium on international trade law, planned by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for 1979, had to be deferred owing to a lack of funds and was tentatively rescheduled for 1981.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued to contribute to the Programme, the Secretary-General reported, both through the funding of fellowships and through sponsorship of seminars devoted to international law, in particular to the legal aspects of international disarmament and of human rights. In addition, UNESCO continued to publish a series of original educational materials devoted to new challenges to international law.

Finally, the Secretary-General reported on two programmes of advanced research which had received preliminary attention by UNITAR during 1979, one dealing with travaux préparatoires of major multilateral treaties adopted under the auspices of the United Nations and the other with the evolution of the concept of the legal liability of States for damage caused through scientific and technological innovations.

The Secretary-General proposed that the Programme be continued in 1980 and 1981 along the same lines as in previous years. In particular he recommended, among other things: keeping up to date a register of experts in international law; that legal advisory services continue to be provided through established technical assistance programmes; that legal questions under consideration by United Nations organs and conferences continue to be brought to the attention of interested bodies and otherwise publicized; that United Nations legal publications be made available to interested institutions in developing countries; that the Geneva International Law Seminar and the United Nations/UNITAR Fellowship Programme in International Law be continued as in the past; and that increased attention be devoted to training and assistance in international trade law.

The Secretary-General's recommendations were considered by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law at its meeting on 8 November 1979 and by the Sixth (Legal) Committee during the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly.

On 17 December 1979, the Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 34/144, the text of which had been approved by consensus by the Sixth Committee on 4 December; it had been proposed by Afghanistan, Austria, Barbados, Cyprus, Denmark, El Salvador, Fiji, Ghana, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Mali, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, the Philippines, Sierra Leone and Turkey, and amended by the United Republic of Tanzania.

By the resolution, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to carry out in 1980 and 1981 the activities specified in his report, including the provision for the use by developing countries of a minimum of 15 fellowships each year and travel grants for attendance at regional courses, to be financed from the regular budget of the United Nations and through voluntary contributions.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General, UNESCO and the Hague Academy of International Law for their efforts to promote training and assistance in international law. The Assembly also expressed appreciation for the contributions of UNITAR to the Programme, particularly in the organization of regional training courses and in the conduct of the Programme's fellowship scheme jointly with the United Nations.

In addition, the Assembly: urged all Governments to encourage the inclusion of courses on international law in legal studies at institutions of higher learning; requested the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme; reiterated its request to Member States, organizations and individuals to make voluntary contributions towards financing the Programme or to assist otherwise in its implementation and possible expansion; requested the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly at its 1981 session on the implementation of the Programme and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee, to submit recommendations for subsequent years. The Assembly also, by this resolution, appointed the members of the Advisory Committee for a four-year term beginning on 1 January 1980.

To the provision by which the Assembly expressed its appreciation to UNITAR for its participation in the Programme, the United Republic of Tanzania submitted in the Sixth Committee an amendment to add a phrase expressing the hope that, in appointing lecturers for its seminars for international law fellows and regional courses, UNITAR would take into account the need to secure representation of major legal systems and balance among various geographical regions. The amendment was adopted by the Sixth Committee by 101 votes to 1, with 13 abstentions. A subamendment by the United States—by which the Assembly would have noted that UNITAR should bear in mind the need to secure lecturers of the highest standards of competence and the desirability of representation of major legal systems and geographical balance-was withdrawn.

Resolution 34/144, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/34/801, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 105.

The General Assembly,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law and the recommendations made to the Secretary-General by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, which are incorporated in that report,

Considering that international law should occupy an appropriate place in the teaching of legal disciplines at all

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by States at the bilateral level to provide assistance in the teaching and study

Convinced, nevertheless, that States and international institutions and organizations should be encouraged to give further support to the Programme and to increase their activities to promote the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, in particular those activities which are of special benefit to persons from developing countries,

Recalling that, in the conduct of the Programme, it is desirable to use as far as possible the resources and facilities made available by Member States, international organizations and others,

Authorizes the Secretary-General to carry out in 1980 and 1981 the activities specified in section III of his report, including the provision of:

(a) A minimum of fifteen fellowships each year in 1980 and 1981, at the request of Governments of developing

(b) Assistance in the form of a travel grant for one participant from each developing country who will be invited to the regional courses to be organized in 1980 and 1981; and to finance the above activities from provisions in the regular budget and also voluntary financial contributions which would be received as a result of the requests set out in paragraphs 9 and 10 below;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his constructive efforts to promote training and assistance in international law within the framework of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemina-tion and Wider Appreciation of International Law in 1978 and 1979;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for its particular for the affort made ticipation in the Programme, in particular for the efforts made to support the teaching of international law;

 Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for its participation in the Programme, particularly in the organization of regional courses and in the conduct of the fellowship programme in international law sponsored jointly by the United Nations and the Institute, and expresses the hope that, in appointing lecturers for its seminars for international law fellows and the regional courses, the Institute will take into account the need to secure representation of major legal systems and balance among various geographical regions;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Mexico and the Centre for Economic and Social Studies of the Third World at Mexico City for providing host facilities for the regional training and refresher course held in 1979;

Expresses its appreciation to the Hague Academy of International Law for its valuable contributions to the Programme by enabling international law fellows under the sponsorship of the United Nations and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to attend its annual international law courses, providing facilities for seminars organized by the Institute in conjunction with the Academy courses and co-operating with the Institute in organizing and financing the regional training and refresher course held at Mexico City in 1979;

7. Notes with appreciation the contributions made by the Hague Academy of International Law to the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law and calls upon Member States and interested organizations to give favourable consideration to the appeal of the Academy for adequate assistance to solve its financial problems, preferably in such a way as to enable it to plan programmes extending over more than one year;

Urges all Governments to encourage the inclusion of courses on international law in the programmes of legal studies offered at institutions of higher learning;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme and to invite periodically Member States, universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, as well as individuals, to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme or otherwise assisting in its implementation and possible expansion;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session on the implementation of the Programme during 1980 and 1981 and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee, to submit recommendations regarding the execution of the Programme in subsequent years;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session the item entitled "United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law."

Legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, during its June/July 1979 session, completed drafting the text of an Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, prepared on the basis of recommendations of its Legal SubCommittee. On 5 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/68, which it adopted without vote, commended the Agreement and expressed hope for the widest possible adherence. The Agreement, annexed to the resolution, was opened for signature on 18 December 1979.

The Legal Sub-Committee also continued work on two other priority items during 1979: the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, and draft principles on the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space. Work also continued on the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind questions relating to the geostationary orbit. Also discussed was the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

By resolution 34/66, adopted without vote on 5 December, the Assembly endorsed the Outer Space Committee's recommendations that the Legal Sub-Committee should continue at its next session, with high priority, consideration of the legal implications of remote sensing from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles on that subject, and its efforts to complete draft principles governing State use of artificial satellites for direct television broadcasting. Also, while continuing to consider the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and space activities, bearing in mind inter alia questions relating to the geostationary orbit, the Sub-Committee was to include in its agenda a review of international law relevant to outer space activities to determine the appropriateness of supplementing such law with provisions relating to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

Resolutions adopted by the Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations

The General Assembly included in the agenda of its 1979 regular session an item concerning two resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations, held at Vienna in 1975.14 The resolutions, which formed part of an annex to the Final Act of the Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character, dealt, respectively, with the observer status, in such organizations, of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or the League of Arab States and with the application of the Convention in future activities of international organizations. The resolutions had been referred by the Conference to the General Assembly for consideration at its 1975 regular session.

Discussion of the resolutions, which had been annually allocated by the Assembly to the Sixth (Legal) Committee for consideration and report, was postponed owing to lack of time at the 1975 to 1978 sessions. In 1979, the Committee took up the item at four meetings. States which spoke in favour of taking a decision on the item were the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Egypt, India, Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Trinidad and Tobago, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates and Yugoslavia.

Among the points variously made by these States were that: many precedents existed within the United Nations system for inviting national liberation movements to participate as observers—in the work of the General Assembly and in other meetings and conferences convened under United Nations auspices; positive benefits would derive from such participation, both for national liberation movements seeking to express the legitimate aspirations of their peoples in their struggle for self-determination and for the international organizations themselves in their quest for equitable solutions to complex global and regional problems; there was a need to extend to duly recognized movements the diplomatic privileges and immunities necessary for the effective discharge of their duties in the international community; and it was desirable to elevate such protections to the status of a general norm protected by the United Nations, rather than leave them to the discretion of host States in whose territories international organizations of a universal character met or had headquarters.

Other Members, such as Canada and the United Kingdom, felt it would be preferable to defer consideration of the item to the following session, since the 1975 Convention had not entered into force.

Israel stated that there was no universally accepted legal position on according diplomatic status and protection to national liberation movements, which lacked the recognized attributes of States to which the Convention, and international law in general, applied.

By decision 34/433 of 17 December 1979, the Assembly decided, without vote, to include the item concerning the two resolutions in the provisional agenda of its 1980 regular session. The Sixth Committee had approved the text, without objection, on 3 December, as orally suggested by its Chairman. In view of objections to assigning priority to the item, raised by some Members, including New Zealand and the United States, the Chairman suggested and the Committee agreed that the record should state that many delegations had expressed the hope that the item would be given high priority at the next session.

Administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

Administrativ e arrangement s

Composition of the United Nations Secretariat

After considering the 1979 report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the United Nations Secretariat, the General Assembly requested him to submit information in 1980 bearing on the system of desirable ranges of posts subject to geographical distribution and on the possible modification of the system. These studies were to include detailed descriptions of the system of desirable ranges, which had been established to promote the equitable representation of Member States in the Secretariat.

In regard to possible modifications of the system, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to prepare alternative tables of desirable representation of Member States, based on a different weighting of the three factors taken into account in calculating desirable ranges. These factors were: contribution to the United Nations budget, membership in the Organization and population. Other studies requested by the Assembly were to deal with any possible additional criteria which could be used in determining desirable ranges, and the implications of establishing a ceiling to limit the weight of the contributions factor.

The Assembly's actions on this matter were contained in section I of resolution 34/219, adopted on 20 December 1979. Adoption of the resolution followed a debate in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, concentrating on the adequacy of the existing system of desirable ranges to achieve equitable representation of Member States in the Secretariat. (For information on the three other sections of resolution 34/219—concerning the roster of candidates for Secretariat posts, post classification and amendments to the Staff Rules—see under subchapter below on OTHER ADMINISTRATIVE AND PERSONNEL QUESTIONS.)

The Secretary-General's 1979 report to the General Assembly on the composition of the Secretariat gave statistics on the distribution of staff members by nationality, sex and age. It also described steps taken with regard to the recruitment and employment of Professional staff members, and recounted measures taken to implement Assembly resolution 33/143 of 20 December 1978 on personnel questions.

According to the report, of the 14,611 staff members in the central Secretariat holding contracts of a year or more as of 30 June 1979, 2,797 were in posts subject to geographical distribution. Excluded from this last category were General Service staff members as well as Professionals in posts with special language requirements (translators and interpreters).

Tables in the report showed the number of posts held by nationals of each Member State and the desirable range of posts for each nationality. According to these figures, the percentage of staff members in posts subject to geographical distribution was broken down by region as follows (mid-point of desirable range in parentheses): Western Europe, 23 per cent (23); North America and the Caribbean, 23 per cent (20); Asia and the Pacific, 15 per cent (21); Africa, 13 per cent (10); Eastern Europe, 11 per cent (14); Latin America, 9 per cent (7); and the Middle East, 5 per cent (4).

The report said that there were 19 Member States unrepresented in Secretariat posts subject to geographical distribution, four fewer than in mid-1978, and another 22 Member States were under-represented by comparison with the desirable range, an increase of two during the year. In order to meet the Assembly's request² that a target of 40 per cent of all appointments to such posts be established for the recruitment of nationals of unrepresented and under-represented Member States, the Secretary-General had established the guideline that at least two of every five candidates appointed in each department or office were to be nationals of such States. Nationals of over-represented States would be recruited only when no national of the other categories could be found through normal recruitment and when the post had to be filled without delay in the best interest of the Organization.

The Secretary-General had also drawn to the attention of all heads of departments and offices the Assembly's concern that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any Member State or group of States, especially when a retiring staff member was being replaced. He had pointed out that when a national of an under-represented or marginally represented Member State separated from service, another national of the same State might be appointed to a post in the same area of the Secretariat, but not necessarily to the same post or at the same level.

In response to the Assembly's request³ to apply existing regulations regarding age of retirement, the Secretary-General reported that he was strictly applying a guideline limiting extensions beyond the retirement age of 60 to six months in most cases. However, in his view it would benefit the Organization if the rule could be applied more flexibly in the case of interpreters, translators and General Service staff in localities where the compulsory retirement age was much above 60. The report also stated that the first competitive examination for promotion from the General Service to the Professional category would begin in November 1979, in response to a 1978 Assembly request.⁴

Speaking of the employment of women in the Secretariat, the report said that the proportion of female staff members in posts subject to geographical distribution had risen from 15.2 per cent in 1971 to 18.6 per cent in 1979. The Assembly had called in 1978 for an increase in women's share of such posts to 25 per cent over a four-year period. Among steps taken to improve conditions of service, efforts were being made to assign husbands and wives to the same duty station when one of them was transferred, and maternity leave with full pay had been extended from 12 to 16 weeks.

At the thirty-fourth (1979) session of the General Assembly, the composition of the Secretariat was discussed mainly in the Fifth Committee. During the debate, a number of representatives, including those of Algeria, Benin, the Federal Republic of Germany, Pakistan, the Philippines, Spain, the Ukrainian SSR and the United Kingdom, expressed support for Assembly resolution 33/143 on personnel questions, particularly in respect of the recruitment of nationals of unrepresented and under-represented Member States. Several Members, including Afghanistan, Australia, the Bahamas, Belgium, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, France, Nigeria, Sierra Leone and Somalia, noted some progress in carrying out the provisions of the resolution, particularly with respect to equitable geographical distribution. However, others—among them Benin, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Kuwait and the Ukrainian SSR—considered that little had been achieved, especially in the recruitment of nationals of unrepresented and under-represented Member States. The number of Member States remaining or under-represented unrepresented others were over-represented was a matter of concern to the Byelorussian SSR, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Greece, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates and others. It was also pointed out by Afghanistan, Burundi, Japan, Poland, the USSR and others that a large proportion of recruitment during 1978/1979 had been from over-represented States. Japan noted that, of eight appointments at the Assistant Secretary-General level during that 12-month reporting period, three had been of nationals of a single over-represented Member Benin, Kuwait, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR were of the opinion that the recruitment of nationals of over-represented States should be halted. A different position was taken by Algeria, Egypt, Kenya, Trinidad and Tobago, the United States and others, which held that resolution 33/143 could not be interpreted as calling for a halt to the recruitment of nationals of any Member State. Egypt, the United Kingdom and the United States said that such an interpretation would be contrary to Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations. 6

Among States which referred specifically to the need to increase their own representation in the Secretariat were the Bahamas, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Mauritania, Poland, Spain and the Ukrainian SSR. Some others, including Afghanistan, Australia, Chad, Italy, Japan, Nigeria and Portugal, emphasized that there were few or none of their nationals at the senior levels of the Secretariat. The under-representation of their regions, particularly at the senior levels, was underlined by Australia, Barbados, Brazil, Hungary, Poland, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic and the USSR.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the USSR had reservations about the holding of posts subject to geographical distribution by stateless persons and nationals of non-Member States. Others, including Argentina, Bangladesh, India, Malawi, Morocco and the Syrian Arab Republic, believed that the number of posts subject to geographical distribution was too small in comparison with the total number of staff and suggested that it should be increased, in particular by including General Service, language and United Nations Development Programme posts, with a view to improving the geographical composition of the Secretariat. New Zealand and Uganda held the view that not all posts could be subject to geographical distribution.

On the matter of recruitment, Austria, the Byelorussian SSR and the USSR found the results of recruitment missions to have been largely unsatisfactory, while Colombia said that recruitment missions should be sent only to unrepresented and under-represented Member States.

Many speakers commented on the system of desirable ranges for calculating the representation of Member States in the Secretariat. A number of countries, including Algeria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Brazil, Chad, Egypt, India, Jordan, Mauritania, Morocco, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey and Yugoslavia, believed that the system currently in use was linked too closely to budgetary contributions, to the detriment of the membership and population factors.

Trinidad and Tobago observed that, despite demands from the developing countries for a new set of desirable ranges, there had been little or no improvement over the years: the developing countries were grossly under-represented. The existing ranges should be revised by giving the fact of a State's membership at least equal weight with its budget contribution, and a new formula should be devised for desirable ranges weighted according to the levels of posts occupied by each nationality. In the view of India, the current system of calculating desirable ranges was manifestly unjust, in that it made the entitlement to posts not a right but a privilege that had to be paid for.

Several States which advocated a change in the system of desirable ranges, including Benin, Chad, Indonesia, Morocco and Sierra Leone, made the point that, since assessments were established on the basis of the capacity of Member States to pay, the financial burden of United Nations expenses was equitably distributed among all States.

Other countries believed that the current system, in which a special relationship existed between contributions and desirable ranges, should not be changed. Those expressing this view included Australia, Austria, Canada, Japan, Portugal, Spain, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United States. In Greece's opinion, neither the important role of the large contributors nor the increasing role of the developing world could be overlooked. Moreover, care should be taken to avoid any conflict with the legitimate aspirations of under-represented Member States or smaller countries at an intermediate level of development which had been assigned low desirable ranges.

On the balance between developing and developed countries at senior levels, a number of States, including Barbados, Benin, Brazil, Colombia, Madagascar, Nepal, Somalia and Turkey, said that the number of nationals of developing countries at these levels continued to be inadequate and that additional measures should be taken to increase it. This view was not shared by the United States, which noted the increase in the percentage of nationals of developing countries in the Secretariat as a whole and specifically at the senior levels. Cyprus considered that all developing countries, regardless of their geographical location, should be taken into account in implementing the principle of proper representation of developing countries in the top echelons. The Ukrainian SSR and the USSR observed that, at the Under-Secretary-General and Assistant Secretary-General levels, the number of nationals of developed States with market economies was several times the number of nationals of the socialist States of Eastern Europe.

The question of the proportions of permanent and fixed-term contracts was referred to by several Members. The Byelorussian SSR, Hungary, Mongolia, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates and others strongly favoured an increase in the share of fixed-term contracts. The Bahamas and Turkey advocated mobility between the Secretariat and the national services of Member States. They believed that this would be advantageous both to the Secretariat, whose staff would remain sensitive to national issues, and to the Member States, whose nationals would acquire valuable knowledge and experience in the United Nations system.

Many States, including Algeria, Austria, Chad, Colombia, Ecuador, Ghana, Hungary, Malawi, Nepal, Nigeria, Spain, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and the United States, supported measures taken to attain equal opportunity for female staff members and to increase at all levels the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution. The Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Nigeria, Romania, Senegal, the United Arab Emirates and others added that appointments of women should be made in accordance with the principle of geographical distribution. Nepal and Panama called for more attention to be paid to the recruitment of women from developing countries. Sierra Leone suggested that more African women should be recruited.

The adoption of measures designed to attract young people to the Secretariat and to establish a better age balance received the support of Afghanistan, Austria, the Bahamas, Burundi, Jordan, Nigeria, Oman, the United States, Yugoslavia and others. While Austria, the Byelorussian SSR, Japan, Poland, and Trinidad and Tobago, among others, called for strict compliance with the regulations governing the age of retirement, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United States believed that some flexibility could be exercised. Kenya, the Philippines, Portugal and Spain were among those willing to accept the exceptions to the regulations on retirement age proposed by the Secretary-General with respect to language and certain General Service staff.

Brazil, Italy, Japan, Madagascar, Trinidad and Tobago and others emphasized the usefulness of competitive examinations in the selection of young professionals. In addition, a large number of States, among which were Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Canada, Colombia, France, Ghana, Italy, Jordan, Nepal, New Zealand, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Uganda and Yugoslavia, supported the principle underlying the holding of competitive examinations for the passage from the General Service to the Professional category. Austria, Japan, and Trinidad and Tobago emphasized that the number of posts open to these examinations should remain within the proportion of 30 per cent of all appointments at the lower Professional levels, as established in resolution 33/143. The Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, on the other hand, were opposed to promotion of General Service staff to the Professional category. They held that such promotions were not in conformity with equitable geographical distribution because they often went to nationals of over-represented countries; in addition, successful candidates did not always have the necessary qualifications.

The existence of disquiet and concern among the staff with respect to the examinations was recognized by Algeria, Benin, Canada, Egypt, Jordan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. Barbados, Egypt, France, Kenya, New Zealand, Turkey and the United States, among others, underlined the need for transitional measures to take into account situations where General Service staff members were already occupying posts at the Professional level. Another concern was expressed by Belgium, Spain, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, which believed that the requirement to take the examinations in either English or French might discriminate against staff members whose principal language was another tongue. Guyana and Trinidad and Tobago believed that the best way to accommodate the aspirations of General Service staff would be to establish a new personnel structure with additional career opportunities.

Action on proposals. Following the debate, a draft decision was submitted to the Fifth Committee on 9 November by India on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations which were members of the "Group of 77" developing countries. It dealt mainly with requests for Secretariat studies on the system of desirable ranges.

An amendment to this text, sponsored by Australia, Austria, Denmark, Finland, Italy, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, was later placed before the Committee. It would have replaced most of the text, including proposed guidelines for the studies, by a request for a study on the composition of the Secretariat that would outline the criteria which the Secretary-General considered might be utilized in determining the system of desirable ranges, together with tables and other useful factual data. Speaking as a sponsor, Australia said the amendment asked for data on which an informed discussion could take place the following year, whereas the Group of 77 proposal asked the Secretary-General to provide statistical backing for conclusions already reached.

During the ensuing debate, a number of supporters of the text introduced by India argued that the new text was a counter-proposal rather than an amendment, and thus should be voted on afterwards. However, the United Nations Legal Counsel stated his view that the newer text was in fact an amendment. India advanced, but later withdrew, a proposal that the Committee vote on whether or not the 11-power text was an amendment. The amendment was then rejected by a recorded vote of 31 in favour to 83 against, with 1 abstention. The draft decision proposed by the Group of 77 was approved on 23 November by a recorded vote of 86 to 29, with 2 abstentions. This text was incorporated as section I of resolution 34/219, on personnel questions, adopted by the Assembly on 20

December. Section I was adopted by a recorded vote of 101 to 33, with 1 abstention.

Explaining their votes against the decision, Australia, Austria, Canada, Ireland, the USSR and the United States said in the Fifth Committee that the rigid criteria it contained prejudged the results of the studies requested. The United States added that the proposal, adopted over the opposition of all the major contributors to the budget, disturbed a consensus which had prevailed since the United Nations was founded—either a special relationship must be accepted between a State's budgetary contribution and its desirable range, or there must be an equal sharing of expenses in the name of sovereign equality.

The USSR said that the socialist States of Eastern Europe were strongly opposed to the formulae proposed for radical changes in the system of allocating posts; the current method relied on objective criteria, and those States could not accept any further decrease in the number of posts held by their nationals. Speaking in the Assembly in explanation of those States' votes, Bulgaria said that efforts should be directed towards eliminating disproportions in the representation of Member States in the Secretariat and not towards changing the methodology for calculating desirable ranges. The existing ranges were based on objective and scientific criteria; reconsideration of them might aggravate disproportions in geographical distribution.

Brazil, while voting in favour, reserved its final position until the studies requested of the Secretariat had been examined. In its view, the review of the ranges should correct existing imbalances by increasing the representation of developing countries in the Secretariat.

The General Assembly,

I
1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session:

(a) A detailed report outlining the basis on which the desirable ranges in effect in 1979 (posts subject to equitable geographical distribution) were established, including the factors and criteria, with their related percentage distributions, which determined those desirable ranges;

- (b) A series of alternative tables of desirable representation for all Member States on the basis of a redistribution of the percentages used at present for the criteria of contribution and membership so as to reflect a membership percentage of 50 per cent or a membership percentage equal to that of contribution while maintaining the existing percentage in respect of the population factor; these alternative tables, which shall take into account the new scale of assessment for 1980, 1981 and 1982, shall include:
 - A range of increases in the lower limit of the present minimum desirable range;
 - (ii) An increase in the upper limit of the present minimum desirable range;
 - (iii) Suggested formulae for the removal or relaxation of the upper limits of the desirable ranges of developing Member States;
 - (iv) Formulae for relating the population criterion directly to regional populations, with suggestions for its utilization by individual Member States;
- (c) An outline of any possible additional criteria which, in the Secretary-General's considered view, might also be utilized in determining a system of desirable ranges or representation with suggestions for their inclusion under subparagraphs (b) (i) to (iv) above;

(d) A study of the implications of the establishment of a ceiling on the percentage contribution for calculating the personnel entitlement of any Member State;

- (e) A detailed description of the way the present weighted desirable ranges have been calculated, with information as to the basis of this calculation, as well as a study dealing with an indicative evaluation of posts so as to ensure that Member States will have a balanced quantitative and qualitative representation;
- 2. Also requests the Secretary-General to present the reports and submissions outlined above for the consideration of Member States at least six weeks before the opening of the thirty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

United Nations salary system

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) became fully operational in 1979, assuming its responsibilities under all articles of its statute, covering salaries, allowances, other benefits and other conditions of service affecting the staff members in United Nations organizations belonging to the common system of pay and allowances. The General Assembly, after examining the ICSC report for 1979, approved a resolution affecting aspects of the salary and benefit system, including the repatriation grant, and asked ICSC to review the post adjustment system, used to align the pay of the international civil service with differences in cost of living.

Report of the Internationa 1 Civil Servic e Commissio n

The Commission held two sessions in 1979, both at United Nations Headquarters, New York: its ninth from 26 February to 16 March, and its tenth from 13 to 31 August. It submitted a report to the General Assembly and to the legislative bodies of other organizations in the common system, giving an account of its work during the year on such matters as its review of Professional and General Service salary levels, its actions in regard to 1978 decisions of the Assembly revising certain staff entitlements, and its preliminary work on job classification, career development and conditions of work for field staff. Its work on pensionable remuneration was dealt with by the Assembly in connexion with the United Nations pension system (see following subchapter).

The Commission's Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions held the first part of its fourth session at Geneva from 24 to 31 October.

Salary levels. The Commission pursued its comparison of grades in the international civil service and the United States Civil Service, the comparator national service used as the basis for establishing pay scales. The Commission had earlier matched the functions and levels of responsibility of jobs in the two services up to the Principal Officer (D-1) level, working out a set of grade equivalencies for use in its salary comparisons. Endorsing this set of comparisons in 1978, the General Assemblyhadrequested ICSC toextendits findings to the levels of Director (D-2) and above.

In its 1979 report, ICSC recommended that the Assembly approve an equivalency for the Director level and note, subject to reservations stated by ICSC, the approximate equivalencies obtained for the levels of Assistant Secretary-General and Under-Secretary-General. It used two or three United States grades as the basis for comparison with each United Nations grade, specifying in percentage points the weight given to each grade in the calculation. The equivalencies are as follows (in the United States Civil Service, GS grades are in the General Schedule and E grades in the Senior Executive Service):

International civil service		United States	Civil Service
D-2 (Director)	=	GS-17 GS-18/E-V	weight of 67 weight of 33
ASG (Assistant Secretary-General)	=	$\begin{cases} GS\text{-}18/E\text{-}V \\ E\text{-}IV \end{cases}$	weight of 67 weight of 33

See Y.U.N., 1974, p. 875, resolution 3357(XXIX) of 18 December 7 1974, annexing text of statute.

See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 991. Bibid., p. 995, resolution 33/119 of 19 December 1978, section III.

In its reservations with respect to the two higherlevels, ICSC concurred with the conclusion reached by the consultants who had proposed these equivalencies that they could be taken only as approximations in view of the difficulties involved in comparing high-level jobs.

The Commission also presented the latest figures comparing salary levels of the two services. It found that, in the year ended September 1979, international civil service salaries in New York had averaged 13.9 per cent above those of the United States, after adjusting for cost-of-living differences between New York and Washington, D.C.

The margin had increased from the 9.3 per cent difference reported in 1978. The Commission attributed the widening of the margin mainly to a narrowing of the cost-of-living gap between Washington and New York, and specifically to a sudden rise in the cost of home ownership in Washington, a factor which it considered to be of doubtful relevance to the United Nations post adjustment system, which adjusted salaries according to changes in purchasing power.

In view of doubts expressed as to whether the United States Civil Service remained the highest-paying national civil service and so should continue to be used as the basis for comparisoninsetting United Nations salaries, ICSC looked into proposals for a methodology that it might use to ascertain this point and decided to continue its study in 1980 on the basis of revised proposals.

WithregardtoGeneralServicesalaries,ICSC recommended new scales for London and Montreal following local salary surveys, and conducted surveys in New York and Rome on which it was to base recommendations in 1980. Its scale for the 150 General Service employees of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) in London resulted in salary increases ranging from 12 to 19 per cent and averaging 15 per cent; they were accepted by IMCO with effect from 1 January 1979. The scale recommended for 405 General Service workers of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) in Montreal, raising net salaries by 3 to 5 per cent or an average of 4 per cent, was accepted by the ICAO Council effective 1 April 1979.

Non-salary benefits. The Commission drew up rules to be followed in establishing Professional staff members' entitlements to two benefits on which the Assembly had acted in 1978—the repatriation grant and the assignment allowance.¹⁰

On the first of these, the Assembly had decided that persons settling in the country where they had last worked for the United Nations would not receive a repatriation grant. Previously, the grant, payable to expatriate Professional-category staff members on completion of their United Nations service, had been given to all qualified staff members regardless of where they planned to settle. The Commission's new rules required all departing Professional staff members to submit certain types of documentary evidence to prove that they had established residence in anothercountry. Inordertopreservewhat ICSC regarded as acquired rights, however, it specified that staff members already in service before the revised rules entered into force on 1 July 1979 would be entitled to part of the repatriation grant without submitting proof of relocation, the amount to depend on the length of their prior service. (See section immediately below.)

With regard to the assignment allowance, paid for service in the field outside Europe and North America, ICSC decided that this benefit could be paid during a maximum of seven years at a given location, in place of the previous five-year limit. The Commission thereby confirmed its 1978 decision on this point, which the Assembly had asked it to reconsider.

In another action pertaining to service in the field, ICSC began a study on how to classify duty stations according to the adversity of their living and working conditions. Once the Commission devised a formula for identifying hardship stations, it planned to consider what measures could be taken to counteract or compensate for the effect of adverse conditions.

Job classification and career development. The Commission approved a common classification of occupational groups as the basis for compiling and exchanging occupational data among United Nations organizations, and recommended the use of this scheme within individual organizations. It asked the organizations to review each of their jobs to see where they fell within this classification and to provide statistics to the Commission's secretariat by the end of 1979, for use in developing improved personnel management systems.

The Commission approved a plan for the preparation of job classification standards, to be used in determining the grade of each job within the various occupational groups. The plan called for the development of a three-tiered system: tier I would be a "master standard" applicable to all Professional jobs in the organizations belonging to the common system, and would be used to grade jobs according to an analysis of skills, responsibility, experience and other requirements, with differing numbers of points assigned to each factor; tier II would consist of grade-level standards for specific fields of work, such as economist or editor, providing specific examples of the types of duties typically carried out at a given grade level; and tier III would consist of "benchmark jobs" to be established by each organization, identifying actual jobs in terms of the standards set out in the first and second tiers.

The Commission recommended that career development programmes be introduced, for both permanent and fixed-term staff, in order to improve efficiency and expertise. Stressing the benefits that such a system could provide both to organizations and their staff, it suggested a series of steps to develop careers, including the identification of career needs and abilities and the use of training courses, reassignments and other actions.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/165 of 17 December 1979, acted on the recommendations of ICSC. The resolution was adopted by 133 votes to 0, following its approval in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 28 November by 88 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions.

By section I of this resolution, the Assembly requested ICSC to begin urgently a fundamental and comprehensive review of the purposes and operation of the post adjustment system with a view to eliminating distortions and anomalies in pay at various duty stations and grade levels. The aim, the Assembly stated, would be to improve the mechanism for adjusting United Nations remuneration to reflect more accurately the cost-of-living differences between places and over time, resulting from inflation and currencyrate fluctuations. The Commission was asked to report on this in 1980. Also, the Assembly urged ICSC to continue its work under its long-term function, which concerned such matters as job classification standards, recruitment standards, career development and staff evaluation, mentioned in articles 13 and 14 of its statute.

By section II, the Assembly approved the grading equivalency recommended by ICSC for use in comparing the pay of the international civil service with that of the United States Government. Also, it requested ICSC to examine the possibility of establishing a system of death benefits to which the staff would contribute (in place of the existing system of death grants payable to staff members who died in service, financed entirely by the employing organization). Finally by this section, the Assembly decided that, effective 1 January 1980, no staff member would be entitled to any part of the repatriation grant unless evidence of relocation away from the country of the last duty station was provided.

Section II was approved in Committee by 87 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions.

By section III of the resolution, the Assembly decided that no staff member who joined the United Nations Secretariat on or after 1 January 1980 would be entitled to reimbursement for national income taxes paid on any lump sum withdrawal from the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund.

The draft resolution on which this text was based was sponsored in Committee by Australia, Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Mauritania, Mexico, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Tunisia, the United Kingdom and Uruguay. The text originally introduced by these countries on 27 November was the one finally approved by the Assembly. However, on 28 November the sponsors revised their text to delete the provision on the repatriation grant. This provision was restored by the Committee on a proposal by the United States, approved by 59 votes to 5, with 24 abstentions.

Before approving the United States amendment, the Committee rejected, by 18 votes in favour to 45 against, with 26 abstentions, an oral subamendment by the Syrian Arab Republic which would have limited the repatriation grant to those departing staff members who provided evidence of relocation to their country of origin. The subamendment was supported by the USSR in the debate.

The United States did not agree to include in its proposal two oral subamendments which were not pressed by their sponsors in view of the introduction of the Syrian subamendment. The first of these, proposed separately by Morocco and the USSR, would have referred to the grant as a relocation, rather than repatriation, grant. The second subamendment, by Morocco, would have withheld entitlement unless the staff member could present proof of leaving the country of his or her last duty station.

In the Fifth Committee's discussion of the repatriation grant, Australia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Spain and the United Kingdom expressed objections to or doubts about the contention by ICSC that staff members employed by the United Nations prior to the application of the rule restricting the grant to persons resettling in another country had certain "acquired rights" which should not be taken away by altering the rule. These countries considered that the grant should not be paid automatically to all staff members entitled to repatriation, without regard for whether they were repatriated or not. Italy, on the other hand, opposed any restrictions based on place of retirement, stating that a staff member should receive the grant even if he or she merely moved to another part of the country where the last duty station was located.

Explaining why the sponsors had deleted the provision on the repatriation grant from their original text, the Federal Republic of Germany said they were convinced that their proposal was valid but they wanted to avoid divergences among United Nations organizations, some of which had already adopted new rules on the basis of the ICSC decision. In explanation of its vote against this provision when it was reintroduced as a United States amendment, Sierra Leone said any savings from the restricted application of the grant would be minimal; the provision would affect only a few staff members but it would affect the operations of ICSC, which had already taken a decision on the matter.

On 12 December, the Assistant Secretary-General for Personnel Services suggested that the Committee allow a one-month grace period, until 31 January 1980, before the new rule was applied, to permit staff members to resign without losing entitlement to the grant. The Committee took no action on this suggestion.

In the discussion on the ICSC report in general, a number of speakers commented on the salary levels of the international civil service. The United States said that Professional pay at the lower and middle levels was reasonable compared to that of the United States Civil Service, but at the upper levels the differences were unacceptable, ranging up to 50 per cent for Under-Secretaries-General above the comparable United States level. Italy wondered whether the United Nations should not practise more austerity with regard to salaries. Australia, the USSR, the United States and others questioned the workings of the post adjustment system, expressing the view that it over-compensated staff members in some locations.

The United States proposed on 27 November a draft decision that would have had the Assembly impose a temporary moratorium on post adjustment increases at the level of Director and above. The proposal was supported in the discussion by Canada. It was opposed by Barbados, Chad, Peru, Spain, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Kingdom. A vote was postponed at the sponsor's request, and the matter was not reopened.

Appointmen t of a member and designation of the Chairman of ICSC

On 20 December 1979, the General Assembly deferred to its 1980 session a decision on the designation of the Chairman of ICSC. The Commission's first Chairman, Raúl A. Quijano (Argentina), had resigned with effect from the end of ICSC's tenth session (31 August 1979). The Assembly appointed Gastón de Prat Gay (Argentina) as a member of the Commission until a Chairman was designated and decided that he would serve, on an exceptional basis, as full-time Acting Vice-Chairman.

These actions were taken by decision 34/325, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee. The Committee approved the text, also without vote, on 19 December, on an oral proposal of its Chairman, after the Secretary-General had informed it in a note that he had not been able to complete consultations in time to submit a candidate for the post. The question of appointing an ICSC member and designating the Chairman had been added to the agenda of the Assembly's 1979 session on the proposal of the Secretary-General, following the resignation of Mr. Quijano.

Compensatio n to ICSC officer s

On 20 December 1979, the General Assembly approved as an interim measure an annual compensation of $59,000 to the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of ICSC, with an additional $5,000 allowance for the Chairman, effective 1 January 1980.

This action was embodied in section XIII of Assembly resolution 34/233, dealing with compensation for officials, other than Secretariat officials, serving the Assembly. (For details, see p. 1180; refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS for page reference to text of section XIII of resolution 34/233.)

Resolution 34/165, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/774, adopted by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 1 06, by 133 votes to 0.

The General Assembly,

Taking note with appreciation of the fifth annual report of the International Civil Service Commission,

Reaffirming the central role of the Commission in the development of a single unified international civil service,

Endorsing the efforts of the Commission to strengthen the United Nations common system by adjusting it to changing circumstances, especially those caused by currency fluctuations,

Recalling its resolution 33/119 of 19 December 1978, in sections I and II of which it set down important objectives for maintaining and reinforcing the common system and established guidelines for the future work of the Commission,

Suggesting that the Commission should consider ways of reducing the length of its annual report while still making clear in the report or the annexes thereto any recommendations to the General Assembly and the precise effect, impact and costs of any proposals,

I

1. Expresses its satisfaction with the action taken by the International Civil Service Commission under articles 13 and 14 of its statute and urges the Commission to continue its work under its long-term function;

2. Requests the Commission to begin urgently a fundamental and comprehensive review of the purposes and operation of the post adjustment system with a view to eliminating distortions and anomalies in the resulting levels of remuneration at the various duty stations and grade levels and thereby achieving an improved mechanism for adjusting United Nations remuneration to reflect more accurately the differences in the cost of living at the various duty stations and their evolution over time as a result of inflation and currency fluctuations, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

II

1. Approves the grading equivalency recommended by the Commission in paragraph 119 of its report to be used in comparing United States civil service and United Nations remuneration:

Requests the Commission to examine the possibility of establishing a contributory system of death grant benefits;
 Decides that effective 1 January 1980 no staff member

3. Decides that effective 1 January 1980 no staff member shall be entitled to any part of the repatriation grant unless evidence of relocation away from the country of the last duty station is provided;

United Nations pension system

The General Assembly approved in 1979 several changes in the benefits payable to participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and took several other actions affecting the operations of the Fund. These measures were taken following consideration of recommendations by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, which oversees the pension system for staff members of the United Nations and of 12 other participating agencies. In addition, the Assembly adopted three resolutions on the investment policy of the Fund, with particular reference to investments in developing countries.

Among the approved actions affecting pension payments were interim measures, effective only during 1980, intended to protect from abnormally low pensions about a fourth of the 1,000 staff members of the United Nations system in the Professional category expected to retire in 1980. At the same time, the Assembly requested that proposals be submitted to it in 1980 aimed at correcting anomalies in the pension scheme, and it agreed to consider freezing the indexation of pensions to cost-of-living changes if a long-term solution was not forthcoming.

The 13 organizations that were members of the Fund in 1979 were: the United Nations (including the Registry of the International Court of Justice); the International Atomic Energy Agency; the International Labour Organisation; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); the World Health Organization; the International Civil Aviation Organization; the International Telecommunication Union; the World Meteorological Organization; the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization; the World Intellectual Property Organization; the International Fund for Agricultural Development; and the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization,

During the year ending 31 December 1979, the number of participants in the Fund increased from 44,983 to 46,904.

The principal of the Fund increased during the year from $1,610,512,081 to $1,870,216,859. The income of the Fund from interest and dividends during the year, less investment management costs, was $124,688,000.

As at 31 December 1979, 4,859 retirement benefits, 4,650 early and deferred retirement benefits, 1,699 widow's and widower's benefits, 325 disability benefits, 2,921 children's benefits, and 32 secondary dependant's benefits were in payment by the Fund.

Annual report of the Unite d Nation's Joint Staff Pension Board

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board held its twenty-fifth session at Manila, Philippines, from 9 to 20 July, and its twentysixth (special) session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 3 to 5 October 1979. Its report to the General Assembly contained, in addition to recommendations for Assembly action (described below): the audited accounts of the Fund for the year ended 31 December 1978, together with the report of the Board of Auditors on the annual audit of the Fund; a summary of the Fund's investments as at that date; statistical tables reflecting the operation of the Fund during 1978; an account of the Board's deliberations on the subject of pensionable remuneration—the proportion of salary counted in determining pension benefits; and information on decisions taken or recommendations made by the Board within its own authority, on matters such as the annual review of the Fund's investment position and policy and the fifteenth actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1978.

Acting on recommendations by the Board and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), the General Assembly, on 20 December 1979, adopted by a recorded vote of 123 to 0, with 13 abstentions, resolution 34/221 on the pension system. The six sections of the resolution related to: (i) amendments to the Regulations of the Fund with regard to benefit payments and maximum age of entry into the Fund; (ii) agreements with other organizations on transfer of pension rights; (iii) continuation of the Emergency Fund to assist pensioners facing acute hardship; (iv) approval of administrative expenses of the Pension Fund; (v) authorization to implement in 1980 interim measures involving supplementary payments to certain staff members retiring during that year; and (vi) a request for the submission of proposals on pensionable remuneration.

On the last-mentioned subject, the Assembly also adopted decision 34/456, stipulating that if a long-term solution to the question of pensionable remuneration was not forthcoming at its thirty-fifth (1980) session, the Assembly would seriously consider freezing the weighted average of post adjustments (WAPA) — a world-wide index used to adjust pension payments to cost-of-living changes. This decision was taken without vote on 20 December.

The resolution and decision on the pension system were adopted by the Assembly on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which approved them on 12 December. The Committee's vote on the resolution, submitted by ACABQ and approved with amendments, was 86 to 0, with 7 abstentions. The decision, orally proposed by Pakistan, was approved in Committee without vote.

Amendments to Pension Fund Regulations

By section I of resolution 34/221, the Assembly decided to make four amendments, effective 1 January 1980, in the Regulations of the Pension Fund. All four changes had been recommended by the Pension Board. They were:

- (a) to allow staff members to join the Fund after age 60;
- (b) to allow staff members to accrue pension benefits for service up to 35 years, rather than the 32 years previously authorized, at the rate of 1 per cent of pensionable remuneration for every year after the thirtieth;
- (c) to raise the benefits of staff members who retired between ages 55 and 60, after 30 years or more of service, by reducing their early retirement benefit by only 1 per cent rather than 2 per cent a year from the pensions they would have received if they had waited until age 60 to retire; and
- (d) to raise the benefits of staff members who retired before age 55 following 25 years or more of service and who elected to begin receiving their pension between ages 55 and 60.

The Advisory Committee, in its draft resolution on pension matters, had proposed approval of only the first two of these amendments. It had recommended against approval of the other two in view of their cost. However, the Fifth Committee approved on 12 December, by 73 votes to 18, with 16 abstentions, an amendment by Colombia, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Italy, the Philippines, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela and Yugoslavia to have the Assembly endorse all four changes recommended by the Pension Board.

On 20 December, before adopting resolution 34/221 as a whole, the Assembly adopted section I by a recorded vote of 122 to 10, with 2 abstentions.

Transfer of pension rights

By section II of resolution 34/221, the General Assembly concurred in agreements approved by the Pension Board with the European Space Agency and the European Free Trade Association for the reciprocal transfer of pension rights between the Fund and the two organizations. The agreements followed principles established in the agreement concluded with the Commission of the European Communities in 1977, approved that year by the Assembly.11 The Assembly also concurred in revised texts of the existing transfer agreements with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund. The revised agreements were intended to update agreements concluded in 196012 in the light of changes which had taken place in the pension systems of the parties. The texts of all the agreements were contained in an addendum to the Pension Board's report.

Section II was included in the draft resolution on the pension system proposed by ACABQ. It was approved by the Fifth Committee on 12 December and by the Assembly on 20 December.

Emergency Fund

Renewed authorization enabling the Pension Board to supplement voluntary contributions to the pension system's Emergency Fund, established in 1973 to alleviate hardship among individual pensioners, was given in section III of resolution 34/221. The authorization was limited to one further year and to a maximum of $100,000. This provision had been recommended by the Pension Board and was included in ACABQ's draft resolution approved by the Fifth Committee on 12 December and by the Assembly on 20 December.

Administrative expenses

The sum of $3,881,500 (net) for administrative expenses of the Pension Fund in 1980 was approved by the General Assembly in section IV of resolution 34/221. The Board had submitted estimates totalling $3,908,000, including funds to establish five new posts and to upgrade two existing ones. However, ACABQ recommended that only three new posts be established and only one upgrading be approved, thereby reducing costs by $26,500. The total of $3,881,500 recommended by ACABQ was approved by the Fifth Committee on 12 December and adopted by the Assembly on 20 December. Also adopted was a $42,500 addition to the Fund's 1979 expenses, recommended by the Board as a supplement to the $3,726,500 total approved by the Assembly in 1978.¹³

Interim measures

An interim supplement to the retirement benefits payable to certain participants in the Pension Fund who retired in 1980 was authorized by the General Assembly in section V of resolution 34/221. This section was recommended by ACABQ as an alternative to a scheme for interim supplementary payments put forward by the Pension Board. It was approved by the Fifth Committee on 12 December. The Assembly took a separate vote on this section, approving it on 20 December by a recorded vote of 121 to 10, with 3 abstentions, before adopting resolution 34/221 as a whole.

The approved interim payments would be payable monthly during 1980 to persons retiring during that year, when their benefits in local currency fell below a specified minimum level. In recommending this interim solution, ACABQ said it had been informed that it would benefit about 250 of the 1,000 Pension Fund participants expected to retire in 1980 and would cost the Fund about $300,000.

The interim scheme proposed by the Pension Board had called for the payment of pension supplements if the local currency amount, after application of the pension adjustment system, fell below a minimum level determined by reference to the pay received by a serving staff member with an identical salary classification in the country of retirement. The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) recommended a modified version of this scheme, including a higher minimum level, and also proposed suspension of the existing mechanism for indexing benefit entitlements to changes in cost of living and currency rates. The Pension Board did not endorse these suggested modifications and favoured continuation of the adjustment mechanism.

The Advisory Committee, in making the alternative proposal which the Assembly subsequently approved, observed that the Board's scheme departed from the method used to determine pensions in the past by linking benefits to total net pay in a particular country, including post adjustment, rather than to a figure based on a world-wide average.

Before approving this section of the resolution, the Fifth Committee rejected, by 11 votes in favour to 73 against, with 21 abstentions, an oral amendment by the United States that would have had the Assembly decide that there would not be any interim measures in 1980. The Committee approved without a vote an amendment by Australia specifying that the interim measures created no entitlement beyond 1980.

Pensionable remuneration

In the final section of resolution 34/221, the General Assembly requested the Pension Board and ICSC to conclude in 1980 their comprehensive examination of pensionable remuneration with a view to submitting proposals to the Assembly at its 1980 session for correcting anomalies in the pension system brought about by the current economic and monetary circumstances. In a separate action (decision 34/456), the Assembly decided that, if a long-term solution to the question of pensionable remuneration was not forthcoming by its 1980 session, it would seriously consider freezing the indexation of pensionable remuneration to cost-of-living and currency changes.

The Assembly had approved in 1978 the intention of ICSC to examine the functioning, methods of establishment and adjustment, and appropriate level of pensionable remuneration, in particular with a view to preparing, in co-operation with the Pension Board, proposals to be submitted to the Assembly in 1979 for correcting anomalies in the pension system brought about by economic and monetary circumstances. However, the Board and ICSC reported in 1979 that they had been unable to complete their studies and would require a further year.

During 1979, ICSC, in co-operation with the Board, developed four alternative approaches to the question of how pensionable remuneration should be fixed. The first two would refine the existing system by maintaining a uniform world-wide pensionable remuneration but allowing for limited variations through the establishment of a ceiling and/or floor pension. The second pair of solutions would involve fundamental changes in the pension system, replacing uniform pensionable remuneration by variable levels that would differ according to the country of retirement, with post adjustment rates used to determine the differential payments.

As noted in the subsection immediately above, ICSC proposed suspension of the mechanism for indexing pensionable remuneration to changes in purchasing power, a system which uses the world-wide index called WAPA. The Commission pointed out that, because it resulted in adjustments based on an average movement throughout the world, the increase in pensionable remuneration had been too high in some countries and too low in others. This freezing of WAPA would be linked to interim measures (described in the subsection above) to avoid prejudicing the position of pensioners, and would be taken pending adoption of a long-term solution. The Pension Board, however, opposed the freezing of WAPA, stating that this would have detrimental actuarial implications for the Pension Fund and would prejudice the entitlements of all the staff concerned.

The Advisory Committee, whose draft resolution on pension matters was approved by the Assembly, recommended that the WAPA system continue to be applied in 1980. In its opinion, retention or discontinuance of the system should be considered in the context of an over-all solution, and not on its own or in conjunction with interim measures.

Section VI of resolution 34/221, by which ICSC and the Pension Board were asked to conclude their study of pensionable remuneration in 1980, was included in the resolution on a proposal by Colombia, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Italy, the Philippines, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. It was accepted without a vote in the Fifth Committee, as subamended by Pakistan to add a request that due consideration be given to the fact that the adverse effects of currency fluctuations and inflation could less readily be absorbed by those with smaller pensions.

Decision 34/456, by which the Assembly would consider freezing the WAPA mechanism if a long-term solution to the question of pensionable remuneration was not forthcoming by 1980, originated in the Fifth Committee on an oral proposal by Pakistan. After it was introduced, Belgium and Tunisia withdrew an amendment to add to the resolution on the pension system a provision by which the Assembly would have decided, pending a long-term solution, to maintain pensionable remuneration at its 1979 level of 125 per cent of gross salary.

Other matters

The Pension Board reported on the results of the actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1978, which had shown an imbalance of $121.7 million. On the advice of the Committee of Actuaries, the Board concluded that the actuarial status of the Fund was reasonably satisfactory and recommended to the General Assembly that there was no need at that time to invoke article 27 (a) of the Fund's Regulations, requiring member organizations to make good the deficiency. The Board noted that the Committee would review the rate of contributions to the Fund at the time of the next valuation, as at 31 December 1980. The Board further noted the concern of the Committee on the adverse cost implications of adopting personnel policies which would prevent staff members from remaining in service beyond six months following their sixtieth birthday.

The Pension Board, in the draft resolution it submitted for action by the Assembly, proposed that the International Centre for the Study of the Preservation and Restoration of Cultural Property (ICCROM) be admitted to membership in the Pension Fund. However, ACABQ recommended that this proposal be deferred to 1980 so as to allow time to consider whether ICCROM should be admitted as a member of the Fund or whether, instead, its staff should be regarded for purposes of pension coverage as staff of its parent organization, UNESCO, which was already a member of the Fund. The Advisory Committee also recommended that the Board be asked to review the criteria for admitting organizations to the Fund. The matter was not dealt with in resolution 34/221, adopted by the Assembly on ACABQ's recommendation.

Investment s of the Unite d Nation s Join t Staff Pension Fund

Three resolutions on the investments of the Pension Fund were adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1979, following their approval by the Fifth Committee on 12 December.

By the first of these, resolution 34/222 A, the Assembly noted with concern that the Fund's investments in developing countries had shown little increase in the preceding year and that its investments in transnational corporations had been maintained at an appreciable level. The Assembly renewed its request that the Secretary-General: ensure that the resources of the Fund invested in shares of transnational corporations were reinvested in developing countries, subject to careful observance of the requirements of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility and in conformity with the Fund's Regulations; and report to the Assembly in 1980 on implementation of the resolution.

By resolution 34/222 B, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to redouble his efforts to make substantial investments in Africa on safe and profitable terms, and to report on those efforts in 1980.

By resolution 34/222 C, the Secretary-General was requested to continue to diversify the Fund's investments in developing countries whenever that served the interests of participants and beneficiaries and accorded with the criteria of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility. The Assembly also affirmed its complete confidence in the Secretary-General as trustee of the Fund's assets.

Resolution 34/222 A was approved by the Fifth Committee by 76 votes to 18, with 4 abstentions, and by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 110 to 21, with 3 abstentions. It originated in a draft resolution sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Cape Verde, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ethiopia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mozambique, Nicaragua and Panama. An earlier version of the draft contained a paragraph, which the sponsors dropped from their revised version, by which the Secretary-General would have been requested to ensure an appropriate geographical distribution of the Fund's investments in developing countries.

Introducing the initial version of the draft resolution, Cuba said that the Assembly's 1978 resolution on Pension Fund investments in developing countries¹⁵ was far from being implemented. Direct investments in those countries had risen by only $7 million and a high proportion of the Fund's investments continued to go to transnational corporations.

Opposition to the draft was expressed by Ireland (on behalf of the member countries of the European Economic Community), Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. Ireland said the proposal attempted to undermine the need to safeguard pension benefits and added that the Fund's resources belonged to the staff members and pensioners. Portugal felt it was not within the competence of the Fifth Committee to instruct the Secretary-General where and on what grounds to make investments.

Resolution 34/222 B, on investments in Africa, was approved by consensus by the Committee and adopted without vote by the Assembly. Morocco introduced the text, whose other sponsors were Algeria, Cape Verde, Chad, Egypt, Ghana, Guinea, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo, Tunisia and the Upper Volta.

Resolution 34/222 C was approved by the Fifth Committee by a recorded vote, requested by the United Kingdom, of 40 to 13, with 35 abstentions, and by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 91 to 15, with 28 abstentions. Its sponsors were Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States,

The sponsors did not accept an oral amendment by Chad to delete the provision affirming confidence in the Secretary-General as trustee of the Fund's assets. They also did not accept another Chad oral amendment to make the requested diversification of investments in developing countries in accordance with the four criteria for management of the Fund's resources — safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility —rather than whenever such diversification served the interests of the participants and beneficiaries. The sponsors did agree to add a specific reference to the four criteria, however.

Introducing the text, the United Kingdom

said it met the justified concerns of the staff and the Secretary-General as trustee of the Fund. If Members had confidence in the Secretary-General and the Investments Committee, they should let them do their work.

Opposition to the proposal was expressed by Cape Verde, Cuba, Ethiopia and Peru. They said the concerns of resolution 34/322 C were met by the 13-nation text introduced by Cuba. Chad and Senegal objected to the fact that the text made no mention of previous resolutions adopted on the matter. Algeria found the wording of the request to the Secretary-General to be tendentious, and abstained. The Syrian Arab Republic said it could not participate in the vote; the affirmation of confidence in the Secretary-General seemed to imply doubts about his actions as trustee.

Before the Fifth Committee when it discussed these three proposals was a report by the Secretary-General on Pension Fund investments. According to this report, development-related investments of the Fund had increased by 25 per cent in the year ended 30 June 1979, to $206 million. About half of all the Fund's investments, amounting to $907 million, were securities of transnational corporations, down from 52 per cent a year earlier.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund for 1979, chapter III of the report of the International Civil Service Commission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Amendments to the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

Decides that the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund shall be amended, without retroactive effect, from 1 January 1980, as set forth in annex VI to part one of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board:

Transfer of pension rights

Concurs in the agreements approved by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board with the European Space Agency and the European Free Trade Association, and in the revised texts of the transfer agreements with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, concluded in 1960 under article 13 of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, with respect to continuity of pension rights between those agencies and the Fund;

III Emergency Fund

Authorizes the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to supplement the voluntary contributions to the Emergency Fund, for a further period of one year, by an amount not exceeding $100,000;

IV Administrative expenses

Approves expenses, chargeable directly to the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, totalling $3,881,500 (net) for 1980 and supplementary expenses of $42,500 (net) for 1979 for the administration of the Fund;

V Interim measures

Authorizes the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund to implement in 1980 the interim measures recommended in paragraphs 34 and 39 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, this authorization being given on the clear understanding that it does not create any entitlement to those additional payments or their equivalent beyond 1980 and that, should any long-term scheme adopted in 1980 result in a pension payment which would eliminate some or all of the additional payments deriving from the interim measures, the lower payment would be the one applicable for 1981 and beyond;

VI Pensionable remuneration

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to conclude in 1980 their comprehensive examination of the functioning, methods of establishment and adjustment and appropriate level of pensionable remuneration with a view to submitting proposals to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session for correcting, no later than January 1981, anomalies in the United Nations pension system brought about by the current economic and monetary circumstances, giving due consideration in the elaboration of those proposals to the fact that the adverse effects of currency fluctuations and inflation can less readily be absorbed by those with smaller pensions than by those with higher pensions;

2. Invites, to that end, the International Civil Service Commission and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to take full account of the views expressed on this and related matters in the Fifth Committee during the thirty-fourth session of the General Assembly.

A/34/775 and Corr.1. Report of Fifth Committee, para. 20: recommendation (draft decision), as orally proposed by Pakistan, approved without vote by Fifth Committee on 12 December 1979, meeting 78.

Decision 34/456, by which the General Assembly decided that if a long-term solution to the question of pensionable remuneration was not forthcoming at its thirty-fifth session the Assembly would give serious consideration to the freezing of the Weighted Average of Post Adjustments at its 1980 level, effective 1 January 1981, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/775 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 20 December 1979, meeting 111.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 31/197 of 22 December 1976 and 32/73 A of 9 December 1977, in which it requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the resources which the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund holds invested in transnational corporations are invested on safe and profitable terms and, to the greatest extent practicable, in investments in developing countries,

Recalling also its resolution 33/1 21 of 19 December 1978, in which the provisions of the aforementioned resolutions were restated

Reaffirming its belief that investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in shares of transnational corporations may contradict the objectives and purposes of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension

Fund

Noting with concern that investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in developing countries have shown little increase in the past year and investments of the Fund in shares of transnational corporations have been maintained at an appreciable level,

1. Renews its request to the Secretary-General that, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 33/121, he should redouble his efforts, in consultation with the Investments Committee, to ensure that the resources which the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund holds invested in shares of transnational corporations are reinvested in developing countries to the greatest extent practicable, subject to careful observance of the requirements of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility and in conformity with the Regulations of the Fund;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

tion IIB.

Resolution 34/222 B, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/775 and Corr.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 20 December 1979, meeting 111.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/121 B of 19 December 1 978, Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to redouble his efforts with the Governments of all States members of the Organization of African Unity, as well as financial institutions in Africa, with a view to making substantial investments in Africa on safe and profitable terms, in keeping with the development requirements of the African countries;

¹ 2. Requests the Secretary-General to report on those efforts to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the Secretary-General's fiduciary responsibility for the interests of the participants and beneficiaries of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund under the Regulations and Rules of the Fund,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to diversify the investments of the Fund in appropriate investments in developing countries whenever this serves the interests of the participants and beneficiaries and is in accordance with the criteria of safety, profitability, liquidity and convertibility;

2. Affirms its complete confidence in the Secretary-General as trustee of the assets of the Fund.

Other administrative and personnel questions

Participatio n of Unite d

Nation's staff in consultative bodies

The General Assembly decided in 1979 to permit representatives of the United Nations staff and the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA) to submit in writing to the Assembly each year their views on personnel issues.

The decision was taken on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee after the Secretary-General, in a note to the Committee at the Assembly's 1979 regular session, proposed that staff representatives be invited to present their views to the Committee both orally and in writing. In making this proposal, he said he had been guided by two considerations: the declared wishes of the staff as expressed by FICSA and the United Nations Staff Union, and the past position of the Fifth Committee. The note reviewed the background of the principle of consultation with elected staff representatives in the decision-making process, staff access to other United Nations committees and commissions, existing joint staff/management administrative machinery, the practice in other United Nations organizations, and the current practice of transmitting staff representations to the Fifth Committee through the Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General concluded that both psychological and practical benefits could be obtained by granting the staff the right to have their views presented directly to the Fifth Committee both in writing and orally. Accordingly, he proposed that the Committee respond favourably to the staff request, subject to the establishment of appropriate modalities; he suggested that the procedures for staff participation in the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) be used as a guide. He further believed that a clear delineation should be made between agenda items of interest to FICSA and those mainly affecting United Nations Secretariat staff. He therefore suggested that, at the beginning of its consideration of the annual item on the report of ICSC, the Committee invite a representative of FICSA to present its views, comment on draft resolutions or decisions and respond to questions by delegations. Similarly, a representative of the United Nations Secretariat staff could be invited during consideration of the item on personnel questions.

In the discussion of this matter in the Fifth Committee, several representatives, including those of Australia, Barbados, Canada, Chad, Egypt, France, India, Jordan, New Zealand, Panama, Senegal and Spain, indicated support for some form of access by the staff to the Committee.

The Byelorussian SSR, Tunisia and the USSR were among those which opposed direct access by the staff to the Committee, pointing out that machinery for staff/management consultation already existed. Brazil, Chad, Egypt, France, Nigeria and the United States stressed that the authority of the Secretary-General under the Charter of the United Nations should be safeguarded, while Australia, Canada, Indonesia, Morocco, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the Upper Volta warned against the danger of the Fifth Committee becoming an arbiter between the Secretary-General and the staff.

Chad, Egypt, France, Sierra Leone and others felt that the staff should not participate in the Committee's work by negotiating or commenting on draft resolutions and other documents, but should only provide it with information not otherwise available. Australia and Canada believed that the staff should submit working papers to the Committee.

A working group, established by the Committee to hold informal consultations on the question, met between 30 November and 3 December but was unable to reach a consensus.

Two decisions were then proposed to the Committee. The first, sponsored by Denmark, Finland, France, the Netherlands, Senegal and Sweden, would have had the Assembly accord to the staff, without prejudice to the Secretary-General's authority, an increased measure of access to the Committee by enabling the Secretariat staff to circulate a paper to the Committee setting out their views under the agenda item on personnel questions. This paper would be introduced before the Committee in a statement to be made by a single recognized representative of the staff. The Assembly would also enable FICSA to circulate a paper under the item on the report of ICSC which would be introduced by a single recognized representative of FICSA.

The second draft was sponsored by Australia, Barbados, Chad, Chile, Egypt, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda and the United States. On 12 December, the Committee approved, by a recorded vote of 51 to 19, with 17 abstentions, a proposal by Panama that priority be given to this 14-power text. It was then approved by the Committee by 68 votes to 11, with 11 abstentions, and the six-power draft was withdrawn by the sponsors.

The Assembly adopted the text on 20 December as resolution 34/220, by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 17 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly, taking note of the requests by staff members and the comments and suggestions of the Secretary-General on this question, reaffirmed the Secretary-General's responsibility and authority as Chief Administrative Officer under Article 97 of the United Nations Charter. ¹⁶ It expressed readiness to receive and consider fully the views of the staff as set out by a single recognized representative of the Secretariat staff and by a designated representative of FICSA, each in a document to be submitted through the Secretary-General and issued, respectively, under the agenda items on personnel questions and on the report of ICSC.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1980 a report on the various forms of staff participation in the consultative bodies of the Secretariat and within the United Nations system which dealt with matters of direct concern to personnel and on the extent to which those bodies had fulfilled the purpose of better staff involvement. In preparing the report, due account should be taken of the views of the staff on the subject. The Assembly expressed further its disposition to consider, as appropriate, other forms of communication between the staff and the Fifth Committee.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Committee, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands and Portugal said they viewed the resolution in the light of their belief that some measure of staff access to the Committee was better than none at all. Senegal said it did not believe that the decision afforded a substantive solution to the question and could not endorse it. The Federal Republic of Germany and New Zealand said they had voted against the resolution not because they opposed staff access to the Committee but because they preferred the six-power text, a position supported by India and Spain. Spain said it considered the proposed access too restricted.

Indonesia said it had voted in favour because the resolution did not preclude further consideration of the matter. Nigeria said it, too, had been impressed with the disposition to consider other forms of communication. The Philippines said it hoped there would be further consideration of other forms of staff access to the Committee, and the Upper Volta expressed its readiness to consider further proposals by the Secretary-General.

The USSR said it would not have supported in a separate vote the paragraphs referring to the report requested of the Secretary-General and expressing the Assembly's disposition to consider other forms of communication.

Travel expenses of United Nations staff

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 21 December 1977,¹⁷ the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on the use of first-class travel paid by the United Nations. The report indicated that a savings of $195,261 had been achieved between 1 October 1978 and 30 September 1979 as a result of implementation of that resolution, which restricted the use of first-class travel. The Secretary-General indicated that he had exercised discretion in making exceptions to allow first-class travel in certain cases, details of which had been provided to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

On 27 November 1979, the Fifth Committee, after hearing on oral report by the Chairman of ACABQ, approved without vote the Fifth Committee Chairman's oral suggestion that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report. On 20 December, the Assembly adopted this recommendation without vote as section VII of resolution 34/233.

On 18 December, the Fifth Committee considered a draft resolution by the USSR to reduce by

$1 million the appropriations recommended by ACABQ for official travel of United Nations staff during 1980-1981. The Secretary-General would be asked to distribute the reduction among the sections of the programme budget for that biennium. This draft was rejected by 13 votes in favour to 54 against, with 27 abstentions.

Candidates roster for recruitment

A decision by which the General Assembly would request the Secretary-General to pursue the improvement of the computerized roster of candidates for employment in the Secretariat was sponsored in the Fifth Committee by Australia, Japan, and Trinidad and Tobago. It was approved without vote by the Committee on 29 November and was incorporated, as section III, into Assembly resolution 34/219 on personnel questions. Section III was adopted without a vote on 20 December.

Postclassification

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note on 20 December of a report by the Secretary-General on implementation of a system of classifying Secretariat posts according to the level of their responsibility.

In this report, which covered staff in both the Professional and General Service categories, the Secretary-General outlined how he planned to proceed with the task, under a mandate contained in a 1976 Assembly resolution.18 He said that classification specialists in the Secretariat had confirmed the existing grades of 85 per cent of the Professional staff surveyed at Headquarters and overseas offices, and had recommended the downgrading of 259 posts (7 per cent of the total) and the upgrading of 212 (6 per cent). The adjustment of staffing tables would take place gradually. While only the Assembly could approve individual post upgradings, it was proposed that the Secretary-General be authorized to adjust post levels up and down, provided that the total number of posts at each grade within each budget section remained the same.

In regard to General Service posts, the report stated that the classification of 2,500 posts at Headquarters was expected to start in 1980 and, under favourable conditions, would take two years to complete. The initial classification of all such posts at Geneva was expected to be finished before the end of 1981.

On 17 December, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee, the Chairman of ACABQ said his Committee recommended that the following year's report by the Secretary-General on this subject should relate progress achieved in implementing the classification system in the Professional and General Service categories.

On the same date, the Fifth Committee, on an oral proposal of its Chairman, decided without vote to recommend that the Assembly take note of the reports of the Secretary-General and the ACABQ Chairman, and request the Secretary-General to report on progress in 1980. This decision was incorporated, as section IV, into resolution 34/219 on personnel questions, adopted without vote by the Assembly on 20 December.

Amendments to the Staff Rules

The General Assembly at its 1979 session took note of a report of the Secretary-General on amendments made to the Staff Rules during the period from 1 July 1978 to 30 June 1979. Most of the amendments reflected decisions by the Assembly in its 1978 resolution on the report of ICSC. The changes related to the terms and conditions governing payment of the education grant, the repatriation grant and the death benefit. Other amendments to the Staff Rules were based on decisions taken by the Commission.

The recommendation that the Assembly take note of these amendments was approved, without vote, by the Fifth Committee on 28 November, on an oral proposal by the Committee Chairman. This decision was incorporated, as section II, into resolution 34/219 on personnel questions, adopted without vote by the Assembly on 20 December.

Death and disability compensation to members of commissions and committees

On 20 December 1979, the General Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to promulgate a revised set of rules governing compensation to members of commissions, committees and similar bodies in the event of death, injury or illness attributable to service with the United Nations. This authorization was given in section VI of resolution 34/233, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, which had acted, also without vote, on 23 November. The rules, previously revised in 1956, were drafted by the Secretary-General and their new version was approved with changes proposed by ACABO.

The rules fixed maximum compensation at $100,000 in the event of death, rather than the $25,000 maximum that had been applicable since 1950. Smaller amounts would be payable in the event of permanent disfigurement or loss of function. The United Nations would pay all reasonable medical, hospital and directly related expenses not reimbursable from insurance or other sources, as well as funeral and transportation expenses in the event of death. In endorsing the rules, the Assembly decided that the Secretary-General should review the scale of compensation at least every four years in the light of inflation and currency fluctuations, and make recommendations in the relevant proposed programme budget.

The revised rules broadened the definition of death, injury or illness attributable to service, to make it comparable to the rules applicable to staff members injured or killed while on United Nations duty. Compensation would be payable when the affected individual was performing official functions as a commission member, when an accident occurred at the member's place of work if his or her presence there was connected with those functions, or while travelling to that place, or when the member had to be in a hazardous place on official duty or was engaged in official United Nations travel. The rules equalized compensation payable to male and female surviving spouses.

The persons covered by the rules were defined as those members of United Nations bodies receiving annual remuneration or a daily subsistence allowance from the United Nations. The reference to annual remuneration was added on ACABQ's recommendation. As revised by ACABQ, the rules specified that no compensation under them be paid to staff members or to anyone otherwise covered by the United Nations or by a specialized agency for death, injury or illness attributed to service.

The revised text was submitted by the Secretary-General in accordance with a 1978 request by ACABQ that he recommend amendments. This request had been endorsed by the Assembly on 21 December 1978. 20

When authorizing the new rules on 20 December 1979, the Assembly also approved an ACABQ recommendation that the Secretary-General examine the feasibility of providing insurance coverage for members of the bodies in question to meet the cost of emergency medical or dental treatment which became necessary during a period of service to the United Nations but which was not connected with a service-incurred injury and not covered by insurance.

In the discussion, the USSR reiterated its opposition in principle to the idea of compensating members of expert or intergovernmental organs of the United Nations.

Compensation to ICSC and ACABQ officers

The General Assembly approved on 20 December 1979 an interim increase of $4,000, to a total of $59,000, in the annual compensation of the two full-time members of ICSC-the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman—as well as the Chairman of ACABO. The two Chairmen were to continue receiving an additional allowance of $5,000 each. The increases, effective 1 January 1980, were approved as an interim measure pending a review at the Assembly's 1980 session.

The Assembly took these actions by adopting section XIII of resolution 34/233, a 14-section text which dealt with a number of matters relating to the United Nations budget. The section was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 11, with 8 abstentions. It originated in a draft decision by Pakistan, incorporating a drafting change proposed by the Netherlands, which the Fifth Committee approved on 18 December by 76 votes to 10, with 13 abstentions.

By this section of the resolution, the Assembly recalled its 21 December 1978 action on this matter,21 when it had decided that the compensation of the three officials would continue to be reviewed every four years or when the consumer price index in the United States had risen by 10 per cent since the previous review, whichever came first.

In reply to a question by the United Kingdom, the Assistant Secretary-General for Financial Services told the Fifth Committee that, if the cost-of-living figures for January to October 1979 were projected to cover November and December, it was likely that the increase would exceed 10 per cent, but that assumption could not be confirmed at the time of his statement. Explaining their votes in the Fifth Committee against the Pakistan proposal, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States said the data needed to justify the increase were lacking.

Honoraria payable to members of United Nations organs

The Fifth Committee approved without a vote on 27 November 1979 a suggestion by its Chairman to postpone to the 1980 Assembly session consideration of a report of the Secretary-General on the comprehensive study of the question of honoraria payable to members of organs and subsidiary organs of the United Nations. The report had been prepared for the 1978 session²² at the request of ACABQ, but the Assembly had decided to defer its consideration until its regular 1979 session.23

The General Assembly

Compensation to members of commissions, committees or similar bodies in the event of death, injury or illness attributable to service with the United Nations

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General to promulgate the proposed rules governing compensation to members of commissions, committees or similar bodies in the event of death, injury or illness attributable to service with the United Nations, amended as indicated in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides that the rules shall apply to members of all commissions, committees and similar bodies in respect of which the United Nations pays daily subsistence allowance or annual remuneration and any such bodies as may in future be certified by the Secretary-General as falling into such a category;

3. Also decides that the scale of compensation contained in the rules shall be reviewed by the Secretary-General at least once every four years, in the light of inflation and currency fluctuations since the previous review, and that he shall make appropriate recommendations in the context of the proposed programme budget for the appropriate biennium;
4. Further decides that the Secretary-General should examine the feasibility of providing insurance coverage for members of commissions, committees or similar bodies to meet the cost of medical or dental treatment of an emergency nature which becomes necessary during a period of service to the Organization but which would not be connected with a service-incurred injury (for which compensation would already be payable under the rules recommended above), on the understanding that coverage paid for by the United Nations would be provided only to the extent that the affected person is not otherwise covered by an insurance or compensation scheme;

United Nations programme budget

Programm e budget for the bienniu m 1980-198 1

On 20 December 1979, the General Assembly voted appropriations totalling $1,247,793,200 to meet the expenses of the United Nations under the regular budget for the biennium 1980-1981. It also approved estimates of income in the amount of $221,343,200, including $188,028,600 to be derived from staff assessment on salaries and wages.

Member States were to be assessed a net total of $512,057,118 for 1980 (gross assessment less shares in the Tax Equalization Fund). This figure was based on half the total appropriations for the biennium less income and other adjustments, including the $5,927,300 reduction in appropriations for 1978-1979 approved by the Assembly on 20 December 1979 (see p. 1186).

These decisions were embodied in three Assembly resolutions adopted on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which approved them on 19 December. Resolution 34/230 A, on appropriations for 1980-1981, was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 119 to 9, with 9 abstentions, after having been approved in the Committee by 83 votes to 9, with 9 abstentions. Resolution 34/230 B, on income estimates, was approved without objection in the Committee and without vote in the Assembly. Resolution 34/230 C, on the financing of appropriations for 1980, was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 119 to 9, with 8 abstentions, after its approval in the Committee by a recorded vote of 80 to 9, with 9 abstentions.

The original expenditure estimates, submitted by the Secretary-General in his proposed programme budget for 1980-1981, amounted to $1,214,203,300. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended a reduction of $32,307,000 in this figure, and the Fifth Committee, during its section-by-section first reading of the budget between 18 October and 18 December, approved all but $224,500 of these recommended cuts. Subsequent to his initial estimates, the Secretary-General submitted additional requests totalling $60,714,500 in revised estimates and another $30,418,700 to meet the financial implications of decisions taken by the Assembly at its 1979 session. Of these requests, the Assembly approved $40,575,700 in revised estimates plus $25,096,700 as the financial implications of its own decisions during the session.

Income estimates originally submitted by the Secretary-General totalled $221,055,200. Reductions recommended by ACABQ amounted to $8,096,200, of which the Fifth Committee accepted all but $26,200. Revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General during the Assembly session would have added $10,546,800 to the initial figure, and financial implications resulting from Assembly decisions another $5,667,300. Of these sums the Fifth Committee, on ACABQ's recommendation, accepted $4,979,600 in revised estimates and $3,378,400 relating to financial implications.

The gross budget for 1980-1981 was 15.1 per cent higher than the revised appropriations for 1978-1979, also approved by the Assembly on 20 December (see p. 1186). According to a Secretariat calculation included in the 1980-1981 programme budget document issued after the session, the rate of real growth—discounting inflation and non-recurrent items—amounted to 2.4 per cent.

In the Fifth Committee's general debate preceding approval of the budget, a number of large contributors urged economies and restraint in the expenditure of United Nations funds. Those expressing this view included Australia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland (on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Economic Community (EEC)), Italy, Portugal, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States. The USSR in particular urged that a ceiling be placed on the 1980-1981 budget, and it suggested, along with Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic, that budget increases be limited to the percentage rise in the national incomes of the Member States. The United States called for a policy of zero growth in real terms. France expressed concern at the growth rate, while Canada asked for a concentration on high priority activities.

Algeria, Brazil, India and Indonesia warned that austerity measures advocated by many developed countries must not be allowed to hinder programmes of vital interest to developing countries. Kenya was disappointed that the major contributors were overwhelmed by concern to contain the budget while they ignored its substantive aspects, which were the main concern of the developing world. Trinidad and Tobago said no budget total could be fixed in advance; it was necessary to accommodate the desire for restrictions with the needs of developing countries.

Many speakers stressed the need for maximum efficiency in carrying out United Nations programmes. China, for example, urged simplified administration and a more efficient staff, as well as the avoidance of useless meetings and documents.

A number of speakers commended the Secretary-General's commitment to a policy of maximum budgetary restraint, as reflected in the real growth rate of 0.8 per cent in his proposed budget. But many also urged him to be more responsive to Assembly resolutions calling for the identification of obsolete, marginal and ineffective activities so that the intergovernmental bodies concerned could remove them from their programmes.

Many participants in the debate expressed concern at the impact of inflation and the devaluation of the United States dollar against other major currencies; the Secretary-General's proposed budget included more than $77 million to meet the projected impact of inflation over the two-year period. Several of those advocating budgetary restraint, including Japan, believed that the Secretary-General should take effective measures to absorb the impact of inflation through economies or redeployment of resources. The German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR believed that the losses incurred as a result of inflation should be borne by those developed countries where United Nations offices were located, since, in their opinion, those countries were responsible for inflation and benefited from the income generated by the presence of such offices. On the other hand, Barbados said it would only hurt the developing world not to make allowance for the impact of inflation on

Ireland, explaining the positions of the nine EEC members after the Fifth Committee recommended the budget for adoption, noted that none of the nine had opposed adoption but were gravely concerned by the absence of any significant redeployment of resources. Japan, observing that it had abstained on the budget for the first time, said the budget had grown substantially more than had been expected. The United States, also explaining its abstention, said the budget contained many unnecessary and unwarranted activities as well as some political activities that violated the Charter of the United Nations.

Among the majority which voted in favour of the budget, Chad said its level should be set according to the Assembly's instructions, not according to the wishes of a group of States. Canada found it to be a reasonable compromise between those who wanted rapid growth and those desiring a slow rate.

Explaining its vote against the budget to a plenary meeting of the Assembly, the USSR said it could not agree to the intolerably high growth rate of 26.5 per cent above the appropriations originally approved by the Assembly for 1978-1979.

Opposition to the Secretary-General's proposal to transfer a number of staff posts previously funded from extrabudgetary (voluntary) resources to the regular budget was expressed by Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Poland and the USSR. The USSR noted that it had withheld its share of the financing of such posts transferred to the regular budget two years previously and would not pay for them in the 1980-1981 budget.

Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR reiterated their objection to the inclusion in the regular budget of provision for the payment of amortization costs in respect of the 1966 United Nations bond issue. They stated that they were unwilling to contribute to those costs, since they had been used to finance United Nations peace-keeping operations in the Congo (later to become Zaire) and in the Middle East which, in their opinion, had been carried out in violation of the Charter. Most of these Members stated that the costs should be borne by the countries which they considered had imposed the operations on the Organization.

Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, France, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States objected to the inclusion of technical assistance expenditures in the regular budget, stating that this activity should be financed on a voluntary basis. Several of these countries suggested that the technical co-operation activities concerned be entrusted to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR reiterated their intention to pay their share of these costs, as in previous years, in their national currencies rather than in dollars.

Consideration by CPC and the Economic and Social Council

Before the General Assembly examined the proposed programme budget for 1980-1981, the Secretary-General's proposals were considered by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) and the Economic and Social Council.

The Committee, at its nineteenth session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 7 May to 1 June and resumed from 24 September to 4 October 1979, held a general discussion on the proposed budget and examined selected sections in detail. It strongly deplored the late submission of the document and criticized what it called deficiencies in programme content and analysis. It recommended that activities for which no authority had been given by intergovernmental bodies should be deleted from the proposed budget and that future budget documents should clearly identify completed, obsolete, marginally useful or ineffective activities.

These recommendations were endorsed by the Council in decision 1979/91 of 25 October, adopted, without objection, on an oral proposal by its President. By the same decision, the Council also took note of the relevant sections of the proposed programme budget.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1980-1981

The General Assembly, by adopting resolution 34/231, established the conditions under which the Secretary-General was authorized to enter into commitments to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses which might arise in 1980-1981 or in future biennia. He was required to report to the Assembly at its 1980 and 1981 sessions the circumstances and supplementary budget estimates relating to such commitments.

The Assembly adopted this resolution on 20 December 1979, by a recorded vote of 130 to 9, on the recommendation of its Fifth Committee, which had approved the text on 19 December by a recorded vote of 89 to 8. The text, which had been submitted by the Secretary-General, followed the pattern of previous years' resolutions on this subject.

Under this resolution, the prior concurrence of ACABQ would be required for making such financial commitments, except that the Secretary-General could authorize commitments of up to $2 million a year for expenses relating to the maintenance of peace and security, and up to specified amounts for certain activities of the International Court of Justice. The Assembly added that if, before its 1980 session or between its 1980 and 1981 sessions, commitments resulting from a Security Council decision with regard to the maintenance of peace and security were to exceed $10 million, the Secretary-General was to convene a special session of the Assembly.

Working Capital Fund for 1980-1981

On 20 December 1979, by resolution 34/232, the General Assembly established the level of the Working Capital Fund for the 1980-1981 biennium at $40 million, the same level as for preceding biennia. The Assembly also set forth the purposes for which the Fund could be used. As in previous years, it could be utilized to finance appropriations pending receipt of contributions, and also to pay for unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, miscellaneous self-liquidating purchases and activities financed from a revolving fund, and advance insurance premiums.

The resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 131 to 9. The Fifth Committee had approved the text on 19 December, as submitted by the Secretary-General, by a recorded vote of 87 to 9.

Final programm e budget for the bienniu m 1978-197 9

On 20 December 1979, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted two resolutions containing the final revisions to the programme budget for 1978-1979. By resolution 34/223 A, it approved revised appropriations totalling $1,084,186,200, representing a $5,927,300 decrease from the amount appropriated in the revised budget approved on 29 January 1979. By resolution 34/223 B, it approved revised income estimates totalling $190,856,900, representing a decrease of $4,863,600 from the revised estimates approved on 29 January. 2

The final appropriations resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 116 to 9, with 11 abstentions, after the Fifth Committee approved it by a recorded vote of 77 to 8, with 10 abstentions. The income estimates were adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 127 to 0, with 11 abstentions, after approval in the Committee by a recorded vote of 85 to 0, with 12 abstentions. The Fifth Committee made its recommendations on 18 December.

The revised budget figures were submitted by the Secretary-General. The factor mainly responsible for the decrease, according to his performance report to the Assembly on the 1978-1979 budget, was a greater than expected number of vacant Secretariat posts. This factor more than made up for increases due to inflation and the reduced value of the United States dollar when measured against other currencies. Approval of the revised estimates was recommended by ACABQ, although it said it had not been able to consider them in detail due to their late submission.

See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 1023, resolution 33/205 A.
 Ibid., p. 1026, resolution 33/205 B.

In the Fifth Committee's discussion of the revised budget, the United States objected to several features of the Secretary-General's report, including what it regarded as a flagrant underestimation of income, increased expenses due to inflation even though the original appropriation had made every possible allowance for inflation, uncontrolled expenditures by the Secretariat and the hiding of policy decisions in the report. Italy, which also abstained on the revised appropriations, said the figures showed that Italy had been right in voting in January against the earlier revision, which had turned out to be an overestimate. Israel, also abstaining, expressed reservations about activities of a onesided political nature.

The Byelorussian SSR and the USSR, explaining their votes against the revised budget, said it was too high despite the reduction.

Medium-ter m plannin g in the Unite d Nation s

Principles and guidelines for the preparation of medium-term plans in the United Nations were drawn up during 1979 by CPC and approved by the General Assembly.

By resolution 34/224 of 20 December, the Assembly set out 18 points to guide future planning. It decided that plans should cover six years rather than the four covered in previous plans. The next plan would span 1984-1989; the Secretary-General would not be required to submit in 1980 a proposed plan for 1982-1985.

The Assembly emphasized the role of intergovernmental organs in the planning process, both before and after the plan was submitted by the Secretary-General. The plan's strategy, orientation, goals and activities should derive from objectives and policies set by intergovernmental bodies, and it should be kept flexible by incorporating the implications of actions taken by such bodies and conferences. The effective participation in planning by central, regional, sectoral and functional bodies should be achieved through an appropriate preparation period and greater co-ordination of meeting calendars.

After adoption by the Assembly, the plan would become a principal policy directive, serving as the framework for the biennial programme budget. It should emphasize the objectives to be achieved by the various activities, and those objectives should as far as possible be time-limited.

This resolution was adopted without vote, after having been approved by consensus by the Fifth Committee on 7 December. It was sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Burundi, Chad, France, Indonesia, Japan, Kenya, Morocco, Romania, Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United States, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

The guidelines and principles stated in the resolution were a slightly reworded version of recommendations made by CPC at the first part of its 1979 session in May/June. These recommendations and others by CPC were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1979/66 of 3 August. (For page reference to text of decision, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

The Committee did not reach a conclusion on whether the plan should "roll" (be subject to replacement by a new plan after a given interval such as two years) or be "fixed" (established once and for all for a given period, subject to partial review). The Assembly, by resolution 34/224, requested CPC to reconsider this problem in 1980.

The Assembly, by the same resolution, took note with satisfaction of a report on mediumterm planning in the United Nations prepared by Maurice Bertrand of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), and of comments by the Secretary-General on this report. The report set out seven main recommendations: (1) the plan should have fixed time-horizons; (2) the objectives of each programme should be specified; (3) as an initial step in formulating the final plan, the Secretariat should prepare and submit to intergovernmental bodies in-depth studies for each major programme; (4) an 18-month timetable should be adopted for preparation of the plan, allowing for participation by the intergovernmental bodies concerned; (5) policy descriptions of major programmes should follow a specified sequence; (6) the introduction to the plan should be drawn up with the aim of helping Member States to define priorities; and (7) the officials responsible for executing the plan should be involved in discussions on improving planning and programming methodologies.

In his comments on this report, the Secretary-General said that, while he did not share Inspector Bertrand's view that a "planning crisis" existed in the United Nations, he agreed on the need to bridge the gap between the ambitious objectives spelled out in resolutions and the day-to-day activities of the secretariats. The Secretary-General expected that forthcoming discussions in CPC would produce more precise guidance on the nature and content of the objectives to be specified in the plan.

The implications of medium-term planning for the United Nations system as a whole was a major topic at the annual Joint Meetings of CPC and the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), held at Geneva on 2 and 3 July. The Chairmen of the two bodies reported to the Economic and Social Council that, although no agreement had been reached as to whether the United Nations plan should roll or have a fixed period, the common position of the two Committees in favour of a six-year timeframe for medium-term plans would facilitate coordination of programme planning among United Nations organizations. Participants agreed that total harmonization of programme planning in the system was neither practicable nor desirable; an optimum balance should be sought between benefits to be derived from greater harmonization and the particular requirements of individual organizations. (See also p. 963.)

Two papers on the evaluation of United Nations activities as an aid in planning and programming were submitted by JIU and acted on by the General Assembly. The main recommendations of both were endorsed by ACC.

The first paper, of which the Assembly took note, was a report on initial guidelines for internal evaluation systems of the United Nations organizations. It set out choices and considerations which the organizations should address in designing and operating systems to evaluate the effectiveness of their activities. The second JIU paper was a glossary of terms widely used in evaluation. It defined evaluation as a learning and action-oriented management tool and process for determining as systematically and objectively as possible the relevance, effectiveness and impact of activities in the light of their objectives, in order to improve both current activities and future planning, programming and decisionmaking. The Assembly approved this glossary and recommended its use throughout the United Nations system.

Two papers by the Secretary-General relating to programming were also noted by the Assembly. One was a note on the identification of output in the programme budget, describing what had been done to implement a JIU recommendation of 1978³ calling for an improved system to develop standard terms for specifying the end products of each activity (such as reports, fellowships and projects). The other paper was a progress report on implementation of another JIU recommendation for the establishment of internal work programmes and procedures to report on programme implementation.

The Assembly also commended JIU and the Secretary-General for their efforts in the area of evaluation and urged them to continue with a view to improving administrative and budgetary efficiency and effectiveness.

The Assembly's action on these documents relating to evaluation was taken in resolution 34/164, adopted without vote on 17 December. It was recommended by the Fifth Committee, which approved it by consensus on 13 December on the basis of a draft resolution submitted by Mexico.

Medium-term plan for 1980-1983

On 9 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1979/4, containing recommendations on some specific elements of the proposed medium-term plan for 1980-1983. The proposed plan had been drawn up by the Secretary-General in 1978⁴ but was not endorsed by either the Council or the General Assembly.

By this resolution, the Council invited the Assembly, when considering the proposed plan, to take account of three recommendations: (a) in implementing the plan, and particularly its chapter on development issues and policies, the Secretariat should concentrate on measures to promote the development of developing countries within the framework of Assembly resolutions on the establishment of a new international economic order; (b) the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) should pay attention to measures for supporting economic co-operation among developing countries; and (c) interdisciplinary research and analysis on development problems should fall within the framework of the over-all requirements of the development of developing countries and of reducing inequities between developed and developing countries.

This resolution had been recommended by the Council's Ad Hoc Sessional Committee on the Medium-Term Plan for 1980-1983, which approved it without vote on 3 May. The draft was sponsored by Tunisia on behalf of the member States of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

In the Committee, the sponsors revised their text relating to the first of these recommendations in response to an oral amendment by France. According to this amendment, the recommendation on measures to promote development would have been addressed to programme officials and, in particular, DIESA, rather than just to DIESA, as in the original version. As revised by the sponsors and approved by the Council, the recommendation was addressed to Secretariat units and especially DIESA.

⁴Ibid., p. 1013.

 $^{^{\}rm 3}$ Ibid., p. 1015, summary of report on programming and evaluation in the United Nations.

During the Committee's discussion, the United Kingdom and the United States reiterated their reservations on the references in the text to Assembly resolutions on a new international economic order.

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 13 April, the USSR suggested a number of changes in the proposed medium-term plan for 1980-1983 to bring its social development sections into line with programme decisions taken by United Nations bodies.

Identificatio n of completed, obsolet e and marginally useful or ineffective activities

On 20 December 1979, by resolution 34/225, the General Assembly called on the Secretary-General to exercise his judgement so as to identify without further delay marginally useful and ineffective activities carried out by the United Nations. In the fifth in a series of resolutions on this subject adopted since 1975, the Assembly reaffirmed the importance of identifying completed and obsolete activities so that resources could be redeployed to finance new activities.

The Assembly asked for reports on this matter to be prepared by the Secretary-General for CPC as well as for the Assembly itself at its 1980 regular session. The report for CPC, to be ready for its twentieth session in 1980, was to include the criteria used in identifying such activities as well as information on completed activities, resources released and the effect on the programme budget. The report to the Assembly was to be a full and comprehensive one on the implementation of Assembly resolutions on this subject, and was to include proposed criteria and arrangements to promote the development of an efficient procedure for the identification of completed, obsolete, marginally useful and ineffective activities.

The resolution was adopted, without objection, by the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, which had approved it without vote on 29 November. Its sponsors were Argentina, Australia, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Canada, Cape Verde, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Portugal, Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay.

The proposal that the Secretary-General be requested to submit proposals on criteria for identifying the activities in question originated in an amendment by Tunisia. The sponsors agreed to add this provision to the draft resolution but they did not agree to Tunisia's proposal that it should replace the paragraph by which the Secretary-General was called on to exercise his judgement by identifying those activities; this paragraph was retained in the resolution approved by the Committee and adopted by the Assembly.

The Assembly, by its resolution, took note of reports on this subject by the Secretary-General and ACABQ. It also noted with concern the finding of CPC that the information in the Secretary-General's report was insufficient. That Committee had reached this conclusion during its review in September 1979 of the proposed programme budget for 1980-1981.

According to the Secretary-General's report, 2,967 work months of Professional staff resources had been released in 1978-1979 due to completion or termination of economic and social projects. Most of these work months related to project completions, but 18 individual programme elements (projects) had been terminated before completion, representing over 1 per cent of the approximately 1,500 programme elements in the economic, social and humanitarian sectors. These figures covered only 10 of the 17 budget sections concerned with economic and social activities.

The report said that although the resources released were modest, the first results of the new programme-monitoring system were encouraging. Programme managers had been more forthcoming in making the required value judgements during the budget formulation process. The report also described progress in instituting an internal Secretariat system for monitoring, evaluating and reporting on programme performance, starting with the economic and social sectors.

The Advisory Committee, in its report, observed that, since the figures were incomplete, the total volume of resources released would be larger than indicated. It concluded that the United Nations was capable of undertaking a substantial volume of new activities within the level of approved resources. It trusted that the Secretary-General would intensify his efforts and make proposals as soon as possible to intergovernmental organs.

Service s to extrabudgetar y activitie s

As called for by the General Assembly in a resolution of 29 January 1979,⁵ the Secretary-General submitted a report on services provided by the United Nations to activities financed from extrabudgetary resources. The report suggested that a simple formula rather than an elaborate cost-measurement system be used to determine how much programmes financed outside the regular budget, such as UNDP and the United Nations Children's Fund, should reimburse the United Nations for the support services it provided to them. The report also said that agreement had been reached between the United Nations and UNDP on a new methodology for determining the amount of reimbursement to the United Nations for its administrative services.

The Fifth Committee decided without vote on 27 November to postpone consideration of this matter to the 1980 regular session of the Assembly.

The General Assembly Resolves that:

1. The Working Capital Fund shall be established for the biennium 1980-1981 in the amount of $US 40 million;

2. Member States shall make advances to the Working Capital Fund in accordance with the scale adopted by the General Assembly for contributions of Member States to the budget for the biennium 1980-1981;

3. There shall be set off against this allocation of advances:

(a) Credits to Member States resulting from transfers made in 1959 and 1960 from surplus account to the Working Capital Fund in an adjusted amount of $1,025,092;

(b) Cash advances paid by Member States to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1978-1979 under General Assembly resolution 32/215 of 21 December 1977;

4. Should the credits and advances paid by any Member State to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1978-1979 exceed the amount of that Member State's advance under the provisions of paragraph 2 above, the excess shall be set off against the amount of the contributions payable by the Member State in respect of the biennium 1980-1981;

5. The Secretary-General is authorized to advance from the Working Capital Fund:

(a) Such sums as may be necessary to finance budgetary appropriations pending the receipt of contributions; sums so advanced shall be reimbursed as soon as receipts from contributions are available for the purpose;

(b) Such sums as may be necessary to finance commitments which may be duly authorized under the provisions of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, in particular, resolution 34/231 of 20 December 1979 relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenses; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates for reimbursing

the Working Capital Fund;

(c) Such sums as, together with net sums outstanding for the same purpose, do not exceed $200,000, to continue the revolving fund to finance miscellaneous self-liquidating purchases and activities; advances in excess of the total of $200,000 may be made with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(d) With the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, such sums as may be required to finance payments of advance insurance premiums where the period of insurance extends beyond the end of the biennium in which payment is made; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates of each biennium, during the life of the related policies, to cover the charges applicable to each biennium;

(e) Such sums as may be necessary to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits; such advances shall be repaid as soon as credits are available in the Tax Equalization Fund;

6. Should the provision in paragraph 1 above prove inadequate to meet the purposes normally related to the Working Capital Fund, the Secretary-General is authorized to utilize, in the biennium 1980-1981, cash from special funds and accounts in his custody, under the conditions approved in General Assembly resolution 1341(XIII) of 13 December 1958, or the proceeds of loans authorized by the Assembly.

Resolution 34/224, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/848, adopted without vote by Assembly on 20 December 1 979, meeting 111.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system and 33/118 of 19 December 1 978, especially paragraph 4 thereof, in which it welcomed the intention of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to conduct an in-depth study of the programme planning process during its nineteenth session,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its nineteenth session, the reports of the Secretary-General and of the Joint Inspection Unit on medium-term planning in the United Nations, and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon,

Considering that medium-term planning should, among other things, strengthen the relationship between planning and development and contribute to better and more rational management of United Nations activities, to better interagency co-ordination and to the attainment of the objectives of the new international economic order and of the international development strategies,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the aforementioned reports;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the work of its nineteenth session and decides to establish the following principles and guidelines for medium-term planning in the United Nations;

(a) The planning process, which is a part of the over-all management process, should be forward-looking and dynamic; the plan should be deductive, with its strategy, orientation, goals and activities deriving from the objectives and policy orientations set by the intergovernmental organs;

(b) The medium-term plan should be a faithful translation of legislative mandates into programmes;

(c) The plan will remain a proposal until its adoption by the General Assembly, upon which it will become the principal policy directive;

(d) The medium-term plan should be comprehensive and not staggered;

(e) The flexibility of the plan should be achieved through reviews by intergovernmental organs as detailed as required to incorporate the programme implications of the resolutions and decisions adopted by those organs or international conferences since the adoption of the plan;

(f) The effective participation of central and regional, sectoral and functional bodies in the formulation, consideration, review and evaluation of the plan should be achieved by means of an appropriate preparation period and greater coordination of their calendars of meetings;

(g) The introduction of the plan, which constitutes a key integral element in the planning process, should highlight the policy orientations of the United Nations system and indicate the medium-term objectives and strategy and the trends deduced from the mandates which reflect the priorities set by the intergovernmental organs;

(h) The plan should emphasize the description of objectives and strategy; the presentation and format of the analyses provided therein should vary according to the type and nature of activities;

(i) The plan should serve as the framework for the formulation of the biennial programme budget;

(j) The density of the information provided in the plan should vary in relation to the time-horizon of the planning and the needs of the reviewing bodies;

(k) The planning process should take into account the needs of interagency co-ordination; this co-ordination does not necessarily require system-wide synchronization of planning periods;

(I) Performance reporting and evaluation are key elements in the planning and programming cycle; the relevant mechanisms should be strengthened and the relevant techniques refined; the use of achievement indicators should be developed;

(m) The medium-term plan should cover a period of six years;

The next medium-term plan should cover the period 1984-1989; accordingly, the submission of a proposed plan for the period 1982-1985, scheduled for 1980, is no longer required;

(o) The current plan should be reviewed at an appropriate time to take account of all decisions with programme implications during the biennium 1980-1981;

(p) The medium-term plan should clearly identify new activities; the planning process should also make it possible to identify completed activities or activities of marginal utility;

(q) Emphasis should be placed on objectives and strategy; objectives should be time-limited as far as possible and the plan should be objective-based in all programmes where that is feasible;

(r) Financial indications should be shown in the plan along the lines recommended by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report on the medium-term plan for the period 1980-1983;

Approves the request made by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee at its twentieth session a draft calendar of preparation for the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989 and, on the basis of general principles and specific recommendations formulated by the Committee at its nineteenth session, model programmes that would help to clarify the questions of the programme structure of the medium-term plan, the nature of the objectives of the plan and the possibility of defining time-limited objectives;

4. Requests the Committee for Programme and Coordination to reconsider at its twentieth session the question whether the plan should be a "fixed" or a "rolling" plan, so as to enable the General Assembly to take a decision on that matter at its thirty-fifth session.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the importance of having expert and independent evaluation and advice on the improvement of the programmes and activities of the United Nations,

Aware of the fundamental role which the Joint Inspection Unit has played by providing such evaluation and advice to Member States and to the administrators of the programmes of the United Nations system,

Takes note with appreciation of the eleventh report on the activities of the Joint Inspection Unit, covering the period from July 1978 to June 1979;

2. Approves the "Glossary of Evaluation Terms" and recommends its use throughout the United Nations system;

- 3. Takes note of the document entitled "Initial guidelines for internal evaluation systems of the United Nations organizations" and endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;
- 4. Takes note with approval of the note by the Secretary-General entitled "The identification of output in the programme budget of the United Nations" and the progress report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of internal work programmes and procedures for reporting on programme implementation;

5. Takes note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems;

6. Commends the Joint Inspection Unit and the Secretary-General for their efforts in the area of evaluation and advice, both internal and external, and urges them to continue their efforts in that direction, with a view to improving the administrative and budgetary efficiency and effectiveness of the United Nations system.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 33/118 of 19 December 1978 on the medium-term plan for the period

Recalling its decision 1978/84 of 8 November 1 978, in particular its decision to consider at one of its sessions in 1979 the proposed medium-term plan for 1980-1983, with a view to ensuring that the policies laid down by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council were fully reflected in the plan and to make the necessary recommendations to

Conscious of the continuing need to make the United Nations system more responsive to the requirements of the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order as well as to those of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Having considered the proposed medium-term plan of the United Nations for the period 1980-1983 and the relevant conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination,

- 1. Invites the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in its proposed in-depth study of the process of programme planning in the United Nations to pay special attention to the question how better to ensure that the proposed medium-term plan shall conform to the strategies, policies and priorities laid down by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;
- 2. Expresses its confidence that the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination regarding the introductory survey of the proposed medium-term plan is a measure that would assist the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in having a clear and more comprehensive overview of the policy orientations of the medium-

Invites the General Assembly, in considering the proposed medium-term plan, the relevant recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the views expressed in the Economic and Social Council, also to take into account the following recommendations:

(a) In the implementation of the proposals contained in the relevant sections of the proposed medium-term plan, in particular chapter 13, entitled "Development issues and policies," Secretariat units, especially the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, should concentrate on measures to promote the development of developing countries within the framework of the General Assembly resolutions on the establishmentof a new international economic order;

(b) In undertaking its task, the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs should also pay attention to measures for supporting the implementation of programmes of economic co-operation among developing countries in conformity with the relevant recommendations in General Assembly resolutions 32/180 of 19 December 1977 and 33/195 of

29 January 1979;

(c) In undertaking the tasks outlined in the relevant subprogrammes of programme I of chapter 13 of the proposed medium-term plan, care must be taken to ensure that interdisciplinary research and analysis on the basis of action at the national level shall fall within the framework of the over-all requirements of the development of developing countries and of reducing inequities between developed and developing countries in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly.

Resolution 34/225, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/848, adopted without vote by Assembly on 20 December 1 979, meeting 111.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3534(XXX) of 17 December 1975, in which it requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to include in the performance reports on the United Nations programme budget relevant information on the staff and resources released as a result of the completion, reduction, reorganization, merging, elimination or otherwise of United Nations programmes, projects or activities,

Recalling also its resolution 31/93 of 14 December 1976, in which it stressed the responsibility of the Secretary-General to draw to the attention of the competent intergovernmental bodies activities that are obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective, indicating the resources which may be released so that the bodies concerned may take the necessary action,

Recalling further its resolution 32/201 of 21 December 1977, in which it urged the Secretary-General to ensure the implementation of the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 3534(XXX) and 31/93 in the preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1980-1981 and the performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 1978-1979,

Recalling also its resolution 33/204 of 29 January 1 979, in which it requested the Secretary-General to implement fully the above-mentioned resolutions and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session on the measures taken,

Reaffirming the importance of identifying activities that have been completed or are obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective in order to redeploy resources to finance new United Nations activities,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 33/204 and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Notes with concern the finding of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination that the information contained in the report of the Secretary-General is insufficient;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General to exercise his judgement to identify without further delay marginally useful and ineffective activities and to report thereon to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twentieth session, including the criteria which have been used in the identification:

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report also to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twentieth session on activities that have been completed, on the resources that have thereby been released and on the consequent effect on the programme budget;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to propose to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session criteria and arrangements to promote the development of an efficient procedure for the identification of activities that have been completed or are obsolete, of marginal usefulness or ineffective;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, a full and comprehensive report on the implementation of Assembly resolution 3534(XXX) and subsequent resolutionsreaffirmingit.

Scale of assessments for apportionment of United Nations expenses

Scale of assessment s for 1980-198 2

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/6 A of 25 October 1979, adopted the scale of assessments by which United Nations expenses were to be apportioned among Member States during 1980, 1981 and 1982. The scale had been recommended by the Assembly's Committee on Contributions. Also, by resolution 34/6 B of the same date, the Assembly requested the Committee to study in depth and report to the Assembly at its thirty-fifth (1980) session on ways of increasing the fairness and equity of future scales.

Report of the Committee on Contributions

The Committee on Contributions, composed of 18 members appointed by the Assembly in their personal capacity, held its thirty-ninth session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 4 June to 6 July 1979. It reported to the Assembly its recommendations for the new scale of assessments, to replace the one in effect for 1978 and 1979. It also reported on the results of its review of the scale, including the criteria used to determine rates.

⁶ SeeY.U.N., 1978, p. 1039.

Assessment rates continued to be based on each nation's capacity to pay, as measured essentially by its national income. This calculation was adjusted, by a "low per capita income allowance formula," so as to reduce the rates of the poorest countries (except those paying the minimum rate of 0.01 per cent) in proportion to the amount by which their national income per head of population fell below $1,800 per year.

As a base for calculating the rates, the Committee decided to continue to use national income figures over a seven-year span. Thus, the new scale was based on income data for 1971-1977. Prior to 1977, a three-year period had been used, but the Committee decided to adopt the seven-year span starting with the 1978-1979 scale in order to alleviate sharp variations in assessment rates from one scale to the next.

The Assembly had asked the Committee in 1976 to consider the possibility of mitigating extreme variations in assessments between two successive scales. However, the Committee stated in its 1979 report that it was unable substantially to mitigate the increases because of the rapidity and size of increases in national income. The Committee also observed that many rates in the recommended scale were beginning to accord more closely with current economic realities.

Despite the Committee's efforts to mitigate steep increases in rates of assessment, the scale for 1980-1982 contained a number of sharp increases resulting from rises in national income between the base periods 1969-1975 and 1971-1977. In addition, certain countries were no longer eligible to benefit from the low per capita income allowance formula. Steep increases also resulted from a reduction in China's assessment and from a new method of applying the low per capita income formula, including a change in the maximum reduction for the poorest nations from 70 to 75 per cent.

Explaining its recommendation to lower the rate for China from 5.5 to 1.62 per cent, the Committee stated that for the first time China had submitted to the United Nations its national income and population estimates. In the past, China had voluntarily assumed an assessment rate substantially in excess of what would have been called for by its national income. In order to ease the impact on other developing countries, China offered to assume, for the three years from 1980 to 1982, a major portion of the assessment increase that would devolve on those countries as a result of the change in China's rate. The Committee reported that certain of its members believed that the scale it had recommended did not constitute an equitable allocation among all Member States of the burden created by the reduction of China's assessment.

The Committee also heard comments from some of its members who were against the rule limiting the assessment of any one Member to a maximum of 25 per cent (the amount payable by the United States). In addition, it examined the possibility of placing a floor on the assessments of permanent members of the Security Council. It concluded, however, that these two matters were beyond its competence and outside its terms of reference.

The report of the Committee on Contributions was examined by the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. In introducing the report, its Chairman stated that the 1979 session had proved exceptionally difficult. He cited problems such as precipitous increases in the national incomes of certain Members, uneven rates of inflation among Member States, stagnation of the economies of a number of Members, widespread balance-of-payments difficulties and a generally unsettled state of world exchange rates.

In addition, the Committee had had to explore ways of moderating the impact on the rates of other States of the sharp reduction in China's assessment rate. Certain Committee members had proposed that China's rate be reduced over a period of time so as to cushion the immediate impact. Others were of the opinion that most Member States, including developed countries, had benefited for some years from the higher rate voluntarily assumed by China.

The Chairman pointed out that the Committee had also considered the desirability of recommending the establishment of a minimum rate for the five permanent members of the Security Council. Some Committee members considered that the special responsibilities and privileges of the five were not compatible with low rates of assessment, whereas others felt that the establishment of such a floor rate would be contrary to the principle of capacity to pay and not in conformity with the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Chairman said it had been decided to retain a seven-year base period of national income data to be used for calculating rates because a period of that length provided a sufficient balance between the requirements of taking into account the avoidance of sharp variations in rates of assessment, the component of national wealth, the need for stability and continuity in the statistical base, and the importance of retaining as close a relationship as possible to current economic realities.

He also mentioned that the Committee had devoted much time to an analysis of various statistical formulas in search of a better way to measure the adequacy of the low per capita income allowance formula. It had concluded that there was insufficient ground to change the level of $1,800 annual income, below which the formula operated. Forty-six Member States, however, would benefit from the increased maximum reduction of 75 per cent.

Consideration by the General Assembly

Much of the Fifth Committee's debate prior to the adoption of the two resolutions on the scale of assessments concerned the criteria used by the Contributions Committee in fixing rates.

A number of countries did not think that rates should be set exclusively on the basis of national income, without taking account of such factors as a nation's accumulated wealth. They considered that the scale should better reflect the great disparities between developed and developing countries. When developing nations succeeded in raising their income, they needed to invest the increase in their own economies, whereas the developed nations had been able to place their economies on a firm foundation thanks to their accumulated wealth. Among those expressing this view were Algeria, Indonesia, Mauritania, Morocco, Trinidad and Tobago, and Venezuela. In Afghanistan's opinion, the land-locked and geographically disadvantaged countries should receive the most favourable treatment. However, Portugal observed that it seemed difficult to find a single method that could be applied uniformly to all countries to determine their national wealth.

Some of the industrialized nations referred to the fact that they were paying a substantial share of the budget. The Federal Republic of Germany said it was not altogether healthy that 20 countries carried 88 per cent of the responsibility for funding the budget and that the share of the 10 largest contributors came close to 75 per cent.

Supporting the scale proposed by the Contributions Committee, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR endorsed its emphasis on the principle of capacity to pay. Sweden made a similar point, stating that the scale reflected the collective responsibility of all Members to finance the Organization on the basis of that capacity. Egypt supported universal application of the capacity-to-pay principle and said the Contributions Committee should continue its search for a more realistic indicator of that factor.

Austria, Greece, Romania and the United States also endorsed the scale as equitable. Romania added that the Contributions Committee should take account of the magnitude of a country's development effort so as not to penalize those nations which made a consistent effort to promote development.

In the view of Italy and Mexico, since the five permanent members of the Security Council had the right of veto and other privileges, it seemed logical and equitable for them to share larger financial burdens. While not accepting this argument, Kenya said it was willing to let the Contributions Committee study the matter, while India considered that the issue might be taken up at the next Assembly session. On the other hand, the Bahamas, Belgium, China and the United Kingdom considered that the permanent members should be assessed according to their capacity to pay, just the same as all other Member States. Senegal said it preferred the status quo in this regard.

Brazil and Poland urged a change to allow more nations to benefit from the formula limiting the assessments of countries with low per capita income. This, they said, could be accomplished by raising the limit of $1,800 below which the formula applied. Venezuela favoured still lower rates for the least advanced nations. Brazil, Pakistan and others called for a study of ways to limit steep increases in rates from one scale to the next.

Panama favoured the use of a three-year period of national income statistics for fixing scales, stating that the seven-year period employed in calculating the new scale failed to take account of year-to-year economic fluctuations and considerably increased the contributions of developing countries. Belgium and New Zealand also favoured a shorter span, and Poland favoured a five-year period. A number of other countries, however, endorsed the longer period as a way of avoiding giving undue weight to short-term economic improvements.

In regard to the reduction recommended for China, the representative of that country said the new rate reflected the state of the Chinese economy. China had, in 1974, voluntarily raised its rate from 4 to 5.5 per cent as an indication of its support for the United Nations, but a number of States considered it inappropriate for China to set its own rate in excess of its economic capabilities, the Chinese representative said.

Most speakers who mentioned this matter went along with the proposal to lower the rate. The Federal Republic of Germany, for example, said the Contributions Committee had no choice but to accede to the Chinese wish to be assessed on the same statistical basis as the rest of the Member States.

Some States, however, expressed concern over the impact of the reduction on other countries. Venezuela said it had reservations about the fact that some developing countries had to absorb part of the reduction while the rates of some developed countries would actually decrease.

A number of representatives expressed objections to or reservations on the rates recommended for their countries. Thus, Australia said it had been over-assessed in comparison to all other high-income countries and that the Contributions Committee did not seem to have followed its own principles in setting the rate. Ghana failed to understand why its rate should be increased while that of the United Kingdom, for example, was reduced. Iceland regarded the increase in its rate, from 0.02 to 0.03 per cent, as unwarranted and based on arbitrary currency-exchange rates. Iran expressed strong reservations about the increase of its rate by more than 50 per cent in the new scale. Italy considered that its rate should be around 3.12 per cent rather than the 3.45 per cent recommended. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya objected that its assessment was to be raised by 44 per cent even though the current rate was far above its capacity to pay; the oil-producing developing countries were seeing their rates raised dramatically despite their continuing need to invest heavily in their economic and social infrastructure.

Also among countries objecting to the rates assigned to them, the Netherlands said it failed to see how a 15 per cent increase in its rate (from 1.42 to 1.63 per cent) could be justified. Saudi Arabia was dissatisfied that its rate was to be more than doubled, at a time when it was trying to industrialize while devoting 17 per cent of its national income to assistance for developing countries. Spain, noting that its rate had risen by more than 70 per cent since 1976 while the overall contribution of the permanent members of the Security Council had been declining, said new economic indicators must be found and contribution ceilings eliminated. The Syrian Arab Republic regarded the increase in its rate from 0.02 to 0.03 per cent as unjustified and said it failed to take account of the economic difficulties faced by that country as a result of the occupation of part of its territory by Israel. Yugoslavia contended that the increase in its rates in recent years had been unrealistic in view of the economic situation there.

Several countries supported the new scale despite reservations about the rates assigned to them. France said it would not oppose the scale, although the increase in its rate from 5.82 to 6.26 per cent would represent a heavy burden. Japan remarked that its Government faced criticism from public and parliamentary circles with regard to the incongruity between its heavy financial responsibility and its decision-making power in the United Nations; it thought that the base period used for calculating rates should be extended and that measures should be devised for mitigating the effects of currency fluctuations. Pakistan thought that its rate should have been reduced rather than remain the same, since it had been among the countries most seriously affected by the current economic crisis. Uruguay said its assessment would impose a substantial financial effort and asked that the special situation of non-oil-producing developing countries be taken into account. Zaire observed that the rate of 0.02 per cent assigned to it did not accurately reflect the current state of its economy.

Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR reiterated their view that the financing of peace-keeping operations should be handled separately from expenses falling under the regular budget.

The resolution containing the new scale of assessments, submitted by the Committee on Contributions, was approved by the Fifth Committee on 15 October 1979 by a recorded vote of 80 to 4, with 13 abstentions. It was adopted by the General Assembly as resolution 34/6 A on 25 October by a recorded vote of 111 to 4, with 12 abstentions.

The scale for 1980-1982 contained increases for 39 States and decreases for 15 States compared with the scale in effect for 1978-1979. It more than doubled the rate of Saudi Arabia, raising it from 0.23 to 0.58 per cent, and doubled the rate of Gabon, from 0.01 to 0.02 per cent. Other sizable increases (in percentage points) were for Japan (up 0.94 points), the Federal Republic of Germany (up 0.61), France (up 0.44), Australia (up 0.29), Iran (up 0.25), Canada (up 0.24), Brazil (up 0.23) and the Netherlands (up 0.21).

Besides lowering the rate of China by 3.88 points, the new scale contained sizable reductions for the USSR (down 0.50 points) and Poland (down 0.15). The rates of Angola and Mozambique were halved, from 0.02 to 0.01 per cent.

The nine largest contributors under the new scale, in descending order, were the United States, the USSR, Japan, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, the United Kingdom, Italy, Canada and Australia. Among the nine largest contributors in the 1978-1979 scale, only China changed its position in the new scale, moving from sixth to twelfth place.

Seventy countries were assessed at the minimum rate of 0.01 per cent, compared to 66 in the 1978-1979 scale. Besides Angola and Mozambique, the additions at the lower end of the scale were Dominica and Solomon Islands, admitted to the United Nations in 1978. Nine States were given a rate of 0.02 per cent, while 10 others were assessed at 0.03 per cent. Thus, 89 Member States, or about three fifths of the total membership, were assessed at 0.03 per cent or less.

The Assembly also fixed rates for nine nonmember States which took part in certain United Nations activities, such as international drug control and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. (For assessment rates, see table below.)

At the same meetings at which the scale of assessments was adopted, the Fifth Committee and the Assembly also approved, without vote, resolution 34/6 B, requesting a study by the Contributions Committee of ways to increase the fairness and equity of the scale. The text was submitted by the Fifth Committee Chairman following informal consultations.

By this resolution, the Assembly called for a study of eight issues as they related to the scale: (a) methods to avoid excessive variations of individual rates between successive scales: (b) conditions or circumstances which could adversely affect the capacity of States to pay, and objective criteria to measure them; (c) the particular situation of States whose earnings depended heavily on one or a few products; (d) ways of updating the values of the per capita allowance formula and their effects on the scale; (e) different methods of national accounting, including the level of different inflation rates and their effects on the comparability of national income statistics; (f) the concept of accumulated wealth and ways to develop criteria for applying it; (g) methods to ensure that all countries were assessed on data covering the same time period, so that all data used were comparable; and (h) the effects of altering the statistical base period.

The Assembly reaffirmed that the capacity of Member States to contribute to the United Nations budget was the fundamental criterion on which scales of assessment were based.

In explanation of vote on the new scale, Iceland said it had voted against it because it was based on an unrealistic base period, while Iraq opposed it because it failed to take account of the great disparities between developed and developing countries, and the Syrian Arab Republie because of what it regarded as an unjustified increase for that country. Among those abstaining, Australia, Brazil, Ghana, Indonesia, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya objected to the rates set for their countries, while Spain said it was unfair for a nation to have to pay more because a maximum contribution rate existed.

In regard to the resolution calling for studies, Ireland, speaking for the nine member States of the European Community, said that while they did not object to it they wished to dissociate themselves from all interpretations which went against the fundamental criterion of capacity to pay. The USSR said it had not objected to its adoption on the understanding that capacity to pay was the only correct principle in determining rates, but it had some reservations, particularly on the notion of setting limits on increases in rates. Australia felt that the idea of setting limits to future increases was wrong in principle, though it did not oppose study of the idea as one of many possibilities to limit excessive variations. Barbados had doubts about limiting increases from one scale to the next and would have abstained if there had been a separate vote on the request for a study of the Japan expressed regret that the resolution did not mention the effects of exchange-rate fluctuation on national income statistics. Morocco said the proposal for studies was weak and did not adequately reflect the concern of developing countries. New Zealand also had some reservations in regard to some of the studies.

In a letter dated 18 September 1979, the Secretary-General informed the President of the General Assembly that the Central African Empire, Chad and South Africa were more than two years in arrears in payment of their financial contributions to the United Nations, within the terms of Article 19 of the Charter. He later informed the President (on 18 September) that Chad and (on 20 September) the Central African Empire had made payments reducing their arrears below the two-year limit.

In a letter dated 4 January 1980, the Secretary-General informed the President that these three countries and eight others—the Comoros, the Congo, the Dominican Republic, Grenada, Mali, Nicaragua, Paraguay and the Sudan—were more than two years in arrears in their payments. He informed the President later that day that the Dominican Republic and Mali had made the necessary payments. The Assembly agreed without vote on 4 January to authorize the other Members in question to vote until 11 January.

The General Assembly

Resolvesthat:

1. The scale of assessments for the contributions of Member States to the United Nations budget for the financial years 1980, 1981 and 1982 shall be as follows:

^bThe amounts listed represent net contributions payable after allowing for credits for the Tax Equalization Fund and other revenues and after adjustment for advances to the Working Capital Fund.

^c As approved by the General Assembly on 25 October 1979 (resolution 34/6 A) for the years 1980-1982.

^dAs approved by the General Assembly on 3 November 1978 (resolution 33/11) for the years 1978 and 1979.

- 2. In accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, the scale of assessments given in paragraph 1 above shall be reviewed by the Committee on Contributions in 1982, when a report shall be submitted to the Assembly for its consideration at its thirty-seventh session;
- 3. Notwithstanding the terms of regulation 5.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the Secretary-General shall be empowered to accept, at his discretion and after consultation with the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions, a portion of the contributions of Member States for the calendar years 1980, 1981 and 1982 in currencies other than United States dollars;
- 4. For the year 1978, Solomon Islands and Dominica, which became Members of the United Nations on 19 September and 18 December 1978, respectively, shall contribute amounts equal to one ninth of 0.01 per cent;

5. For the year 1979, Solomon Islands and Dominica shall contribute amounts equal to 0.01 per cent;

- 6. The contributions of the two new Member States for 1978 and 1979 shall be applied to the same basis of assessment as for other Member States, except that, in the case of appropriations approved under General Assembly resolutions 32/4 B and C of 2 December 1977 and 33/13 C and D of 8 December 1978 for the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and resolutions S-8/2 of 21 April and 33/14 of 3 November 1978 for the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, the contributions of those States, in accordance with the group of contributors to which they may be assigned by the Assembly, shall be calculated in proportion to the calendar year;
- 7. In accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, States which are not Members of the United Nations but which participate in certain of its activities shall be called upon to contribute towards the 1980, 1981 and 1982 expenses of such activities on the basis of the following rates:

8. Notwithstanding the provisions of General Assembly resolution 32/39 of 2 December 1977, Tonga shall be called upon to contribute to the expenses of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at the rate of three quarters of 0.01 per cent for the year 1 979.

A/C.5/34/L.7. Draft resolution prepared following informal consultations and submitted by Fifth Committee Chairman, approved without vote by Fifth Committee on 15 October 1979, meeting 16.

A/34/608. Report of Fifth Committee, draft resolution B.

Resolution 34/6 B, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/608, adopted without vote by Assembly on 25 October 1979, meeting 46.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 582(VI) of 21 December 1951, 665(VII) of 5 December 1952, 1927(XVIII) of 11 December 1963, 2118(XX) of 21 December 1965, 2961 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972 and 31/95 A and B of 14 December 1976,

Noting a significant increase in the assessment of some Member States in the proposed scale for the period 1980-1982 in relation to the previous scale,

Bearing in mind the continuing disparity between the economies of developed and developing countries,

- 1. Reaffirms that the capacity of Member States to contribute towards the payment of the budgetary expenses of the United Nations is the fundamental criterion on which scales of assessment are based;
- 2. Requests the Committee on Contributions to study in depth and report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session on ways and means of increasing the fairness and equity of the scale of assessments, bearing in mind the debate under agenda item 103 in the Fifth Committee during the thirty-fourth session of the Assembly, and, in particular:
- (a) Methods which would avoid excessive variations of individual rates of assessment between two successive scales, including ways of setting a percentage limit or percentage points limit or a combination of the two;
- (b) Ways of taking into account conditions or circumstances which adversely affect the capacity to pay of Member States and ways of setting objective criteria by which these conditions or circumstances can be taken into account in the elaboration of the scale of assessments;
- (c) Ways of taking into account the particular situation of Member States whose earnings depend heavily on one or a few products;
- (d) Ways of bringing up to date the values of the per capita allowance formula and their effects on the scale of assessments;
- (e) Ways of taking into account the different methods of national accounting of Member States, including the level of different inflation rates and their effects on the comparability of national income statistics;

- (f) Ways of taking into account the concept of accumulated wealth and the ways by which criteria could be developed to enable it to be applied as a factor in setting the scale of assessments;
- (g) Methods to ensure that all countries are assessed on data covering the same period of time so that data used are comparable;
- (h) Effects of altering the statistical base period in the scaleofassessments.

Financial emergency of the United Nations

The Negotiating Committee on the Financial Emergency of the United Nations, which had been requested to keep the financial situation of the United Nations under review and to continue its efforts to bring about a comprehensive settlement of the financial problems of the Organization, did not meet during 1979 and hence did not report to the General Assembly. The Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, however, had before it a report submitted by the Secretary-General.

The report contained a statistical analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations as at 30 September 1979, submitted in accordance with a request of 19 December 1978. It showed that withholdings by States from the regular budget had increased from $63.1 million in 1978 to a projected $67.4 million at the end of 1979. The deficit relating to the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force had risen from $43.4 million in 1978 to an estimated $52.9 million by October 1979, while the deficit for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon had increased from $14 million to $52.4 million during the same period. The over-all short-term deficit of the United Nations had increased from $135.9 million in 1978 to an estimated $184.7 million.

Approving an oral proposal by Canada to endorse a suggestion of the Fifth Committee Chairman, the Committee decided without vote on 27 November to recommend that the item on the financial emergency be deferred to 1980. Accordingly, by decision 34/435 of 17 December, the Assembly decided, also without vote, to include the item in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session.

Chapter III

Other administrative and budgetary questions

Pattern of United Nations conferences

In an effort to restrict the growth in the number and length of meetings, the Economic and Social Council decided in 1979 to reduce the length of its own semi-annual sessions by one week each and to limit the duration of sessions of its subsidiary bodies. The General Assembly's Committee on Conferences continued throughout the year to oversee the scheduling of United Nations meetings, and the Assembly requested it to examine ways to give it a more effective role in that regard.

Decisions of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/81 of 3 August 1979, adopted without vote, decided to reduce the duration of its regular sessions by one week. It decided also that the regular sessions of its functional commissions and standing committees should normally be limited to eight working days, and that no additions to the calendar would be authorized once it was adopted by the Council.

By the same decision, the Council approved a 1980-1981 calendar covering its own sessions and those of its subsidiary bodies. The calendar, prepared by the Secretariat, contained 260 entries, of which some 103 came within the Council's programme.

This decision was proposed to the Council by its President, following consideration of the matter in the Third (Programme and Coordination) Committee. That Committee, without vote on 19 July, on an oral proposal by its Chairman, recommended to the Council a shorter decision, including the proposal that there should be no departures from the approved calendar. The proposal that Council sessions be shortened by one week was made orally in the Committee by the Netherlands and was transmitted to the Council for its consideration.

During the year, the Council approved changes in the calendar affecting a number of its subsidiary bodies. On 9 February, it authorized meetings in March through July of the Committee on Natural Resources, the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy and the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development; it authorized revised dates for the Committee on an International Agreement on Illicit Payments, and it cancelled a session of the Committee on Review and Appraisal. On 10 and 17 April and 4 May, it rescheduled sessions of the Statistical Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, the Economic Commission for Western Asia and the Committee on Natural Resources, and authorized a resumed session of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination. These decisions—1979/2 and 1979/11—had been proposed, respectively, by a Council Vice-President and orally by the President.

On 3 August, as part of decision 1979/81, the Council postponed a decision on the schedule of intergovernmental meetings related to science and technology until after the General Assembly had considered the report of the Conference on Science and Technology for Development.

Report of the Committee on Conferences

The 22-member Committee on Conferences held 16 meetings between 28 December 1978 and 13 September 1979, holding a series of substantive meetings from 9 to 12 April and convening at other times to deal with matters relating to the conference calendar. It reported to the General Assembly with a number of recommendations on meetings and documentation. (For its work on documentation, see the following subchapter.)

As part of its work between Assembly sessions, the Committee acted on several proposed changes in the 1979 calendar. It decided that a special session of the Committee on Natural Resources would have to be postponed to accommodate the resumed session of the Assembly in January. It approved requests to reschedule the first session of the Group of Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and International Security (from 26 February—2 March to 5-8 June), and to relocate from New York to Geneva the 10-21 December session of the Group of Experts on Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries. It also considered arrangements for the May/June session of the Disarmament Commission and the June/July session of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development.

In addition, the Committee approved a draft calendar listing all United Nations meetings scheduled for 1980 and 1981 as well as eight recommendations on the scheduling and servicing of meetings.

Decision s of the Genera l Assembly

The calendar of conferences for 1980-1981 and the recommendations of the Committee on Conferences were adopted by the General Assembly on 1 November 1979, by decision 34/405, in accordance with a draft proposal by the Committee. On 23 November, by resolution 34/50, the Assembly assigned additional tasks to the Committee. Both these actions were taken, without vote, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

The calendar, containing 207 entries for 1980 and 166 for 1981, was approved as submitted by the Committee on Conferences except for one change recommended by the Fifth Committee: to leave the location of four sessions of the Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women to be determined. This change had been proposed in the Fifth Committee by Barbados, Colombia, Costa Rica, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, Nigeria, Panama, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Kingdom. Speaking for the sponsors, Jamaica said the purpose of this amendment was to avoid prejudicing a decision on the location of the Fund's secretariat by scheduling the sessions for Vienna, as the draft calendar did. The revised draft decision, including this amendment, was approved by the Fifth Committee without vote on 23 October.

The eight recommendations of the Committee on Conferences, approved by the Assembly, were:

- (1) to approve the calendar of conferences;
- (2) to authorize the Committee to make any further adjustments in the calendar required as a result of Assembly decisions at its 1979 regular session;
- (3) to authorize the Secretariat to set the opening dates of sessions of the functional commissions and standing committees of the Economic and Social Council in a flexible manner, in order to ensure that they made optimum use of conference facilities;
- (4) to reaffirm existing guidelines for reducing the waste resulting from cancellations of scheduled meetings and request the Secretariat to make renewed efforts to adhere to them;
- (5) to instruct United Nations bodies, when they received invitations from specialized agencies to hold sessions away from their established headquarters, to consult with the Committee on Conferences or the Assembly before responding;

- (6) to instruct the Main Committees of the Assembly to review the number of special United Nations conferences proposed and scheduled in their fields before deciding to convene new ones;
- (7) to request the Secretary-General to study and report, in 1980 on the feasibility of establishing further workload standards, particularly for technical and complementary conference servicing staff; and
- (8) to request the Secretariat to continue its inquiries concerning workload standards for conference servicing staff in national and intergovernmental organizations, and to report to the Committee on Conferences in 1980.

In a later action, the Assembly, by resolution 34/50, requested the Committee on Conferences to perform four tasks in regard to meetings, in addition to those set out in its existing mandate.2 These were: to examine ways to enable the Committee to play a more effective role in the scheduling of meetings and the management of conference resources; to review the extent to which the Assembly's decisions on the subject had been implemented, including an examination of the planned and actual duration of sessions of the Assembly's subsidiary organs; to take full account of all facilities available at established United Nations headquarters when adjusting the calendar as a result of Assembly decisions; and to review the organizational and servicing arrangements of past special conferences and their preparatory meetings with a view to identifying the most effective framework for organizing future conferences. The Committee was asked to report on these matters to the Assembly in 1980. (For a summary of provisions of this resolution relating to documentation, see the following subchapter.)

By a preambular paragraph, the Assembly noted the Committee's conclusion that the Secretariat's current capacity adequately to service meetings and the capacity of Member States to participate actively in them were strained.

The Fifth Committee approved the text on 23 October without vote. It was based on a draft resolution prepared following informal consultations and submitted by the Committee Chairman. It incorporated three oral amendments proposed in the Committee and accepted by the Chairman as co-ordinator of the informal consultations: Tunisia added "present" and Algeria added "adequately" to the preambular paragraph referring to the strain on the "present capacity of the Secretariat adequately to service conferences and meetings;" and to the operative paragraph referring to adjustments by the Committee on Conferences in the calendar and their bearing on available headquarters facilities, the Philippines added a phrase indicating that the adjustments which might be made were those resulting from decisions by the Assembly.

In a separate action concerning the planning of meetings of its subsidiary bodies, the Assembly decided without vote on 25 October that the Committee on Conferences should be authorized to play a more effective role in the planning of meetings and the use of conference facilities, and that no subsidiary organ of the Assembly should be permitted to meet at United Nations Headquarters during a regular Assembly session, unless explicitly authorized by the Assembly.

These two provisions had been suggested by the Secretary-General in a report on rationalization of the Assembly's procedures and organization. In this report, the Secretary-General pointed to the difficulty of meeting all the needs for conference services as a result of the substantial increase in the number of subsidiary organs and in requests for other meetings. The two recommendations on the planning of meetings were approved by the General Committee without objection on 24 October. They became section V of Assembly decision 34/401.

(See also p. 438; for page reference to full text of decision 34/401, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

On 19 November, the Fifth Committee approved, by 32 votes to 28, with 37 abstentions, in a vote taken at the request of Kenya, a draft resolution by which the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to refrain as far as possible from submitting requests for additional appropriations to finance conference activities during 1980-1981. However, the Assembly rejected the draft on 20 December by a recorded vote of 36 in favour to 76 against, with 25 abstentions.

The draft resolution was sponsored in the Committee by the USSR, which said in introducing it that sufficient funds had been approved in the budget to meet all conference servicing needs for 1980-1981. The USSR accepted an amendment by Tunisia to add "as far as possible" to the clause asking that the Secretary-General refrain from requesting additional appropriations. Before approving the draft, the Committee approved without objection an oral amendment by Algeria, to replace a preambular paragraph speaking of the need to hold down the growth of expenditures on conference activities by a paragraph which cited the need to manage resources for such activities with the maximum of efficiency.

Morocco, which requested a recorded vote on the draft in the Assembly, said it could not accept the text because it would limit States desiring to meet and hold discussions.

Also in the Fifth Committee, the United States suggested, but did not press to a vote, a proposal for a feasibility study on integrating parts of conference servicing costs into substantive sections of the programme budget.

Resolution 34/50, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/625, adopted without vote by Assembly on 23 November 1 979, meeting 76.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/72 of 9 December 1977, in which it set forth, inter alia, the terms of reference of the Committee on Conferences,

Noting the conclusion reached by the Committee on Conferences that the present capacity of the Secretariat adequately to service conferences and meetings and of Member States to participate actively in them is strained, Convinced of the necessity of rationalizing the procedures and organization of the conference activities of the United Nations,

Further encouraging the continuation and development of close co-operation between the Economic and Social Council and the Committee on Conferences in areas of common

1. Welcomes the action taken by the Economic and Social Council on the pattern of conferences in its decision 1979/81 of 3 August 1 979, and on the control and limitation of documentation in its resolutions 1979/1 of 9 February 1979, 1979/41 of 10May 1979 and 1979/69 of 2 August 1979;

2. Approves the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination contained in paragraph 303 of its report to the effect that, inter alia, the above-mentioned resolutions of the Economic and Social Council on control and limitation of documentation should be applied to the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs and that the Secretary-General should be requested to implement them fully;

3. Requests the Committee on Conferences to examine ways to enable it to play a more effective role in the scheduling of conferences and meetings and in the management of conference resources, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

4. Also requests the Committee on Conferences to review the extent to which resolutions and recommendations adopted by the General Assembly on the pattern of conferences have been implemented, including an examination of the planned and actual duration of sessions of the subsidiary organs of the Assembly, and to report its findings to the Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

5. Further requests the Committee on Conferences to monitor the implementation of all measures adopted by the General Assembly to control and limit documentation, including those on the provision of meeting records and the application of measures to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the conference activities of the Organization, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

6. Invites the Committee on Conferences, when making adjustment in the calendar of conferences for 1980-1981 resulting from decisions of the General Assembly, to take full account of all conference facilities available at established United Nations headquarters;

7. Requests the Committee on Conferences to review the organizational and servicing arrangements of past special conferences and their preparatory meetings with a view to identifying the most effective framework for the organization of such conferences in the future.

At its [46th meeting, on 25 October], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee as set forth in its [third report], adopted the following provisions concerning the rationalization of the procedures and organization of the Assembly:

V. Planning of meetings

33. The Committee on Conferences should be authorized to play a more effective role in the planning of meetings and in the use of conference facilities.

34. No subsidiary organ of the General Assembly should be permitted to meet at United Nations Headquarters during a regular session of the Assembly, unless explicitly authorized by the Assembly.

United Nations documentation

Both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly took steps in 1979 to reduce the volume of United Nations documentation by discontinuing on an experimental basis the provision of summary records for the meetings of most of their subsidiary bodies.

The Council acted first, deciding on 2 August, by resolution 1979/69, to discontinue for an experimental two-year period the provision of summary records for all its functional and regional commissions and intersessional committees. As a result, only the Council itself and its three sessional committees would continue to receive such records.

The Assembly followed suit on 23 November in approving, by resolution 34/50 on the pattern of conferences (see subchapter above), a recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) that the Council's resolutions on control of documentation should apply to the Assembly and its subsidiary organs. It also requested the Committee on Conferences to monitor and report in 1980 on the implementation of all Assembly measures to control and limit documentation, including those on the provision of meeting records and the application of measures to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of United Nations conference activities.

By a separate decision adopted on the same day (decision 34/418), orally proposed by the Assembly President following consultations with the Chairmen of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee and other Main Committees, the Assembly approved an understanding that the CPC recommendation would be applied for an experimental one-year period and that the International Law Commission and the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174³ (on global economic issues) should continue to receive records. All of these actions, as well as two earlier 1979 Council resolutions on the subject, were taken without vote.

These three Council resolutions also contained measures to limit and control reports and other documentation in addition to summary records. By the preamble of the first of these—resolution 1979/1 of 9 February—the Council recorded its deep concern about the volume of documentation and the delays in circulation, and its awareness of the heavy burden placed on the Secretariat and delegations, as well as of the increasing costs. It decided to keep its requests for documents to a minimum, to review at each session which recurrent documents had become redundant or useless, and to try to keep reports brief. It decided further that these provisions should apply to its subsidiary organs as well. Finally, it requested the Secretariat to prepare proposals for its' April/May 1979 session to make documents more action-oriented and concise.

This resolution was based on a draft proposed by a Council Vice-President on the basis of informal consultations. It was adopted with a few drafting changes proposed in the Council.

Having decided at its 1979 organizational session to consider the control of documentation further at its first regular session of the year, the Council adopted resolution 1979/41 on 10 May. It did so after receiving a note by the Secretariat suggesting the elimination of summary records for all of the Council's subsidiary bodies, except for the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as well as other steps to limit the volume and improve the format of documents.

By resolution 1979/41, the Council decided that restraint should be exercised in requesting new documents, that the Secretariat was to submit before the close of each session a list of the documents requested, so that the Council could make a final review, and that the provisional agendas and document lists of subsidiary bodies should also be submitted to the Council for its review. The Council approved document format changes suggested by the Secretariat and emphasized that the existing rule limiting documents to 32 pages should apply to documents as a whole, including annexes.

Resolution 1979/41 was adopted on the basis of a draft proposed by a Council Vice-President, with a drafting change proposed by the United Kingdom. The draft was the product of informal consultations on a proposal by Sweden which covered the same points but which was withdrawn in favour of the Vice-President's text.

In response to requests contained in this resolution, the Secretariat submitted a note to the Council at its second regular session of 1979 on the provision of summary records, the format of reports and the technical capacity of the Secretariat to produce documentation. The note indicated that in 1977 the writing and translation of summary records had involved 2,910 work days of staff time. It suggested guidelines to improve the content of the reports of subsidiary bodies. It said that a 30 per cent reduction in document submissions would be needed to bring the volume of documentation within the Secretariat's capacity to process it.

In its final action of the year on documentation, the Council, by resolution 1979/69 of 2 August, listed 15 of its subsidiary bodies whose summary records were to be discontinued for an experimental two-year period. As to other documentation, it approved the guidelines proposed by the Secretariat for the format and contents of the reports of such bodies, on the understanding that the bodies concerned would be able to introduce adjustments. Finally, it insisted that the Secretariat should circulate documents in all working languages six weeks before the start of each session of the Council and its subsidiary bodies (as provided in the rules of procedure) and should give an explanation whenever this deadline could not be met.

The resolution adopted by the Council was proposed by the President following informal consultations.

Another decision on documentation was taken by the Assembly on 25 October, as section III of decision 34/401 on rationalization of the Assembly's procedures and organization. The Assembly decided that its subsidiary bodies should complete their work by 1 September so that their reports would be available by the opening of the Assembly's annual session, that no reports should contain a compilation of other documents, that summary records or other material already distributed should not be annexed to reports and that the Assembly should review periodically the need for summary records of its subsidiary bodies. On 29 November, the Assembly added to this decision provisions stating that: the Assembly should not debate or adopt resolutions on reports that did not require an Assembly decision, unless specifically requested to do so by the Secretary-General or the organ concerned; reports, draft resolutions and amendments should have publication priority over communications from Member States; and that Member States should refrain to the extent possible from requesting the circulation of communications as Assembly documents. These actions were taken without vote. (See also p. 438; for page reference to full text of decision 34/401, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

The provisions in this decision were based on suggestions by the Secretary-General in a report on rationalization of the Assembly's procedures and organization. The General Committee made three changes in these suggestions before recommending them to the Assembly. On 24 October, it recommended without objection that subsidiary organs be required to complete work by 1 September, instead of at least six weeks before the opening of the Assembly session as had been suggested by the Secretary-General. On 28 November, it recommended by consensus that the Assembly should neither debate nor adopt resolutions on reports that did not require an Assembly decision, adding the phrase "unless specifically requested to do so by the Secretary-General or the organ concerned." Its recommendations on the circulation of communications from States, also made on 28 November, differed from the Secretary-General's suggestion that such communications be circulated as Assembly documents only if they called for action by the Assembly. By adopting section III of decision 34/401, the Assembly approved all recommendations as revised by the Committee.

Resolution 1979/1, as proposed by Council Vice-President, E/1979/L.11, and as orally amended, adopted without vote by Council on 9 February 1979, meeting 2.

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned about the volume of documentation and the consequent delays in its circulation and aware of the heavy burden therefore placed on the Secretariat and delegations, as well as the increasing financial costs involved,

Deeply concerned also at the fact that documents are too often not issued in due time in all the working languages of the Council,

Taking into account the provisions of General Assembly resolution 33/56 of 14 December 1978,

Decides:

(a) To keep its requests for documents to the minimum compatible with the efficient conduct of its work and within the limits of the available resources of the Secretariat;

(b) To review, at the outset of each regular session, all its recurrent documents to determine whether they have become redundant, have lost their usefulness or could be issued at less frequent intervals;

(c) To endeavour to prepare reports that are as brief as possible;

(d) To review, at its first regular session of 1979, the question of the provision of summary records to its subsidiary organs on the basis of a statement of financial implications by the Secretariat, with a view to reporting on the matter to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session, in accordance with Assembly resolution 33/56;

(e) To review, at its first regular session of 1979, the format of its reports to the General Assembly;

2. Decides further that these provisions should apply, as appropriate, to its subsidiary organs and that, accordingly, they should be brought to the attention of those organs forthwith;

3. Reiterates that documents should be issued in due time in all the working languages of the Council and invites the Secretariat to take steps to ensure that this rule shall be complied with effectively;

4. Invites the Bureau to keep these matters under review, particularly in connexion with their implementation by subsidiary organs;

5. Requests the Secretariat to prepare for consideration by the Council, at its first regular session of 1979, proposals for new forms of presentation of documents to make them more action-oriented and concise and highlight the main issues requiring intergovernmental consideration and review, on the basis of the relevant legislative decisions.

Resolution 1979/41, as proposed by Council Vice-President, E/1979/L.11, and as orally amended by United Kingdom, adopted without vote by Council on 10 May 1979, meeting 15.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1979/1 of 9 February 1979 on control and limitation of documentation, particularly the concern expressed about the volume of documentation, the consequent delays in its circulation, and the fact that documents are too often not issued in due time in all the working languages of the Council,

Aware of the heavy burden therefore placed on the Secretariat and delegations, as well as the increasing financial costs involved.

Recalling also General Assembly decision 33/417 of 14 December 1978, in which the Assembly welcomed the intention of the bureaux of the Committee on Conferences and of the Economic and Social Council to consult closely in the preparation of the calendar of conferences,

Anxious to improve the current situation in order to facilitate and make more effective the work of the Council and its subsidiary bodies,

- 1. Takes note with appreciation of the note by the Secretariat, which contains a number of useful suggestions with regard to the volume of documentation, summary records, reports of subsidiary bodies, the form of presentation of documents and the report of the Council to the General Assembly;
 - 2. Decides:
- (a) That the Council should continue to review, at each organizational session, the documentation requested under existing legislative authority with respect to items in its biennial programme of work, in order to determine whether any of it is redundant;
- (b) That, with respect to recurrent and other documents prepared in pursuance of existing legislative authority, a determination should be made, in the context of their substantive consideration by the Council, of their continuing justification, including whether any of them have lost their usefulness or could be issued at less frequent intervals;

(c) That restraint should be exercised both in the Council and in its subsidiary bodies in making new requests for documents and that recurrent documents should be requested. only when the nature of the subject makes this indispensable;

- (d) That, prior to the close of each regular session of the Council, the Secretariat shall submit to the Council a consolidated list of the documentation requested in decisions of the Council under items of its agenda, in order to permit a final review of these requests to establish the legislative authority
- for the production of such documentation;

 (e) That, in future, the provisional agenda for its subsidiary bodies, together with the list of requested documentation, should be submitted to the Council for its review in order, inter alia, to establish greater consistency between the documentation of those bodies and the over-all documentation requested by the Council and other subsidiary bodies and greater consistency between the requests for documentation and the medium-term plan and the programme budget;

(f) That the provision of summary records of all subsidiary bodies of the Council should be reviewed at the second regular session of 1979, with a view to reducing the number of instances when summary records are provided;

(g) That, for that purpose, the Secretariat should submit for consideration by the Council revised guidelines concerning the format of the reports of the Council's subsidiary bodies, which should also contribute to greater uniformity and higher standards of presentation;

3. Approves the modifications in the form and presentation of documents contained in the note by the Secretariat and emphasizes that the 32-page rule for secretariat reports should apply to the documents as a whole, including any annexes and appendices that may be required;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council at its second regular session of 1979 a report showing the actual capacity of the technical services of the United Nations Secretariat to issue documentation simultaneously in all the working languages, in conformity with the six-week rule and the foreseeable calendar of meetings and the consequent need for documentation, together with a breakdown showing the volume and proportion of documentation produced at the request of each of the Council's subsidiary bodies;

5. Decides to issue its report to the General Assembly in separate fascicles and that the report on each agenda item should reflect the chronological sequence of consideration by the Council of the item concerned during the year, and that a single consolidated and bound report containing all the separate item reports should be prepared soon after the Council has concluded its work for the year, including the resumed second regular session;

6. Further decides to review the new format of both its own report to the General Assembly and the reports of its subsidiary bodies at its organizational session for 1980;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General systematically to bring to the attention of all subsidiary bodies, including expert bodies, the relevant provisions of resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Council regarding the control and limitation of documentation, and to ensure that the work of the Secretariat shall be organized so that documentation can be issued in due time in all working languages.

Resolution 1979/69, as proposed by Council President, E/1979/L.55, adopted without vote by Council on 2 August 1979, meeting 39.

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 33/56 of 14 December 1 978.

Recalling Council resolutions 1979/1 of 9 February 1979 and 1979/41 of 10 May 1 979, which set out a number of practical measures designed to reduce the volume of documentation, ensure its timely circulation in all the working languages of the Council and improve the format and presentation of Secretariat reports dealing with economic, social and related matters,

Reiterating its deep concern about the large number of documents issued by the Secretariat and being aware of the heavy burden thus placed on the Secretariat and delegations,

Deeply concerned about the increasing delays in the translation of documents by the Secretariat,

Having considered the second note by the Secretariat on the control and limitation of documentation, prepared in response to Council resolution 1979/41,

Aware of the fact that the Secretary-General has drawn the attention of Member States, in his report on the rationalization of the procedures and organization of the General Assembly, to the need to enhance the efficient functioning of intergovernmental bodies by reducing, streamlining and improving the documentation submitted to them,

Conscious of the urgent need to adopt additional measures to overcome the serious problems that are being faced in this context by the Council and its subsidiary machinery,

Decides:

- (a) To approve the revised guidelines for the format and contents of the reports of the functional commissions and standing committees of the Council set out in the second note by the Secretariat on the control and limitation of documentation, on the understanding that, in conformity with these revised guidelines, the functional commissions and standing committees will be able to introduce specific adjustments in their reporting and recording procedures, in the light of their established functions and of the questions dealt with by
- (b) To discontinue, for an experimental period of two years, the provision of summary records for the following subsidiary bodies of the Council:

Commission on Human Rights Commission for Social Development Commission on the Status of Women Commission on Narcotic Drugs

Economic Commission for Europe

Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

Economic Commission for Latin America

At its [46th and 82nd plenary meetings, on 25 October and 29 November 1979], the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its [third and sixth] reports, adopted the following provisions concerning the rationalization of the procedures and organization of the Assembly:

III. Documentation

24. Subsidiary organs should be required to complete their work at the latest by 1 September, so that their reports may be available in all the working languages in time for consideration by the opening of the session of the General Assembly, and the Committee on Conferences should take this provision fully into account.

25. No reports should contain a compilation of other previous documents.

26. Subsidiary organs should not annex to their reports summary records of their meetings or other material which were already distributed to all Member States.

The General Assembly should review periodically the need for summary records of its subsidiary organs.

28. The General Assembly, including its Main Committees, should merely take note of those reports of the Secretary-General or subsidiary organs which do not require a decision by the Assembly and should neither debate nor adopt resolutions on them, unless specifically requested to do so by the Secretary-General or the organ concerned.

29. The publication of reports of the principal organs and of subsidiary organs of the General Assembly and of draft resolutions and amendments should be given priority over that of any individual communications received from Member States.

30. Member States should refrain, to the extent possible, from requesting the circulation of any individual communications as documents of the General Assembly and in lieu thereof, where circulation of such documents is desired, should, as far as possible, request such circulation under the cover of a note verbale in the official languages in which they submit them.

Administrative and budgetary coordination

Report of the Advisor y Committe e on Administrativ e and Budgetar y Question s

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) during 1979 again examined general budgetary trends in the agencies related to the United Nations. In its annual report to the General Assembly, it commented on the budgets of the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the Universal Postal Union, the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

The report indicated that the approved or proposed regular budgets of these organizations, when added to that of the United Nations, totalled $1,313 million in 1980, of which $516 million related to the United Nations and $797 million to the agencies. This was an increase of $134 million or 11.4 per cent over 1979, when the figures were $461 million for the United Nations and $718 million for the agencies, for a total of $1,179 million. The total number of established posts approved or proposed for 1980 was 22,773, consisting of 11,109 for the United Nations and 11,664 for the agencies. This compared to 10,864 United Nations posts and 11,862 agency posts, or a total of 22,726, in 1979. All these figures excluded posts financed outside the regular budgets of these organizations; the staff in this category numbered 13,782 as of 31 December 1979.

On 17 December 1979, by decision 34/436, the General Assembly decided without objection to postpone consideration of this report to its 1980 regular session. This action was recommended by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee without vote on 27 November, on an oral proposal by Canada to endorse the Chairman's suggestion to that effect.

Electroni c data-processin g and informatio n system s

Information Systems Unit in the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs

On 20 December 1979, the General Assembly extended for a further year the pilot operation of the Development Information System run by the Information Systems Unit (formerly called the Information Services Unit) of the Secretariat's Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA). This decision, contained in section I of resolution 34/233, was taken by a recorded vote of 131 to 9.

The Assembly made the extension subject to the availability of additional voluntary funds. The use of the pilot system was to be monitored and the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems (IOB), an interagency body of the United Nations system (see following subsection), was to report on the matter by 1 August 1980 so that the Assembly could decide at its 1980 regular session whether to continue the Unit.

The Unit was set up on a provisional basis in 1978, 4 with its funds coming entirely from voluntary governmental contributions. The chief purpose of its computer-based Development Information System was to make available to international and government officials information contained in unpublished documents in the files of DIESA and the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development.

The recommendation to extend the Unit for a further year on a trial basis and to take a final decision in 1980 was made in a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (jiu), which concluded that the need, or otherwise, for the system could be demonstrated only after a period of use. Both the Secretary-General and ACABQ, in separate reports to the Fifth Committee, concurred with this recommendation. The Secretary-General estimated that the Unit would require $192,900 for its work in 1980, to be financed by voluntary contributions. The Advisory Committee drew attention to the Assembly's decision of 19 December 1978⁵ that there was no commitment by the United Nations to transfer the costs of the Unit to the regular budget.

The Fifth Committee approved the recommendation on the Unit on 19 November, by 78 votes to 9, with 1 abstention. In the discussion, Canada and Sweden supported the recommendation and offered voluntary contributions, while the USSR did not agree with the proposed extension. Continuation of the Unit was also supported by Yugoslavia. Mexico made the oral proposal that the Assembly decide to extend the pilot operation of the Unit through 1980; the recommendation for monitoring the system and for a review by IOB was added on an oral proposal by the United States.

Budget of the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems

Following a discussion on 12 November, the Fifth Committee approved a sum of $482,300 as the United Nations share of a $1,217,900 budget of IOB for 1980-1981. The United Nations share, representing 40 per cent of the Board's budget, was $18,400 less than for 1978-1979. In a report requesting this appropriation, the Secretary-General explained that IOB, which had a staff of six, sought one additional secretarial post but planned to spend less on consultants and in other areas. The Secretary-General's request was endorsed by ACABQ and approved by the Fifth Committee without objection. The sum was included in the 1980-1981 appropriations approved by the Assembly on 20 December 1979 in resolution 34/230 A. (For page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

The role of IOB was examined earlier in 1979 by JIU and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and at the annual Joint Meetings of CPC and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (see p. 960).

Budget of the International Computing Centre

On 20 December, the General Assembly approved without vote, by section II of resolution 34/233, the 1980 budget estimates for the International Computing Centre, an interagency facility at Geneva financed by the United Nations and other participating organizations in the United Nations system. As submitted by the Secretary-General and endorsed by ACABQ, the Centre's 1980 budget estimates totalled $4,905,600, compared to the approved estimate of $5,068,900 for 1979. Approval of the 1980 estimates was recommended, without vote, by the Fifth Committee on 20 November on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

Feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal

On 17 December 1979, the General Assembly decided without vote to request a progressive harmonization and further development of the statutes, rules and practices of the two judicial bodies in the United Nations system set up to hear and decide on grievances by staff members against the administration—the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and the Administrative Tribunal of ILO. The Assembly addressed this request to the Secretary-General and the United Nations organizations represented in ACC, with a view to strengthening the common system governing staff remuneration and relations and with the aim of establishing a single tribunal. It asked the Secretary-General to report on the subject to the Assembly at its 1981 regular session.

This action, embodied in decision 34/438, came a year after the Assembly had requested a report from the Secretary-General and his colleagues in ACC on the feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal for the entire common system.⁶ That report went before the Fifth Committee at the Assembly's 1979 regular session.

The report considered the practical and legal problems which arose when consideration was given to establishing such a tribunal. It observed that the request for a study was largely prompted by concern that divergent decisions made by the two existing Administrative Tribunals in the United Nations and ILO might adversely affect the unity of conditions of service in the common system. The Working Group on Recourse Procedures, established prior to the adoption of the Assembly's 1978 resolution⁷ by ACC's Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions and the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations to consider the general problem of improving staff redress procedures, invited an independent consultant to investigate the matter. The findings of the consultant's study were that no real divergence in jurisprudence had arisen over the nearly 30 years that the two Tribunals had operated side by side. The study had pointed out that the cost of the Tribunals was modest and that there would be no substantial financial savings if their operations were combined. Also, extensive consultation among the executive heads and staff representatives of numerous organiza -... tions serviced by the existing Tribunals, including some not within the United Nations system, would be required before action could be taken to establish a single tribunal. The report concluded that a further development of the statutes, rules and practices of the two Tribunals could realize certain of the advantages that would arise from the establishment of a single tribunal.

The Assembly's decision was taken on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, which on 27 November approved without vote a revised proposal by Canada, Japan and Morocco. This replaced an earlier version by Canada and Japan which would have had the Assembly also request ACC to examine the creation of joint machinery to resolve any potential judicial conflict between the two Tribunals.

Impact of inflation on budgets of the United Nations system

On 17 December 1979, the General Assembly decided to postpone to its 1980 regular session consideration of the question of the impact of inflation on the budgets of United Nations organizations, on the understanding that it should be given such priority as to ensure its adequate discussion by the Assembly. The recommendation to postpone consideration of the item was approved without vote by the Fifth Committee on 27 November on an oral proposal by Canada to endorse the Chairman's suggestion to do so. The accompanying understanding on priority was contained in a draft decision submitted by Cuba, that part of which the Committee approved on the suggestion of its Chairman.

Decision 34/437, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/771, adopted without vote by Assembly.

At its 106th plenary meeting, on 17 December 1979, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decided to postpone until its thirty-fifth session consideration of the question of the impact of inflation on the budgets of the organizations of the United Nations system, on the understanding that, when the timetable for the work of the Fifth Committee was established at that session, it should be given such priority as to ensure its adequate discussion by the Assembly.

United Nations Postal Administration

In 1979, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA) from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and overseas offices exceeded $13.13 million.

In 1979, a postal treaty was signed by the United Nations and the Austrian Government to allow the Austrian Postal, Telephone and Telegraph Enterprise to retain the revenue from the sale of stamps used for postage purposes from the Vienna International Centre. (Revenue derived from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes is retained by the United Nations. Revenue from stamps used for postage from United Nations Headquarters is retained by the United States Postal Service, in accordance with an agreement between the United Nations and United States Government. Similarly, revenue from stamps used for postage from the Palais des Nations, Geneva, is retained by the Swiss Postal, Telephone and Telegraph Enterprise in accordance with an agreement between the United Nations and the Swiss Government.)

During 1979, four commemoratives, two souvenir cards, four definitives and the first six definitives in Austrian currency were issued.

On 19 January, four new definitive stamps were issued, in denominations of 5, 14, 15 and 20 cents.

On 9 March, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator was the subject of the first commemorative issue—"UNDRO against Disaster"—in denominations of 15 and 20 cents, and 0.80 and 1.50 Swiss francs.

The second commemorative, issued on 4 May, was for the "International Year of the Child," in denominations of 15 and 31 cents, and 0.80 and 1.10 Swiss francs. A souvenir card accompanied this issue.

On 24 August, the first definitives in Austrian currency were issued, inaugurating UNPA'S branch at the Vienna International Centre. The stamps were issued in denominations of 50 groschen, and 1, 4, 5, 6 and 10 schillings.

"For a Free and Independent Namibia" was the theme of the third commemorative, issued on 5 October in denominations of 15 and 31 cents, and 1.10 Swiss francs.

The fourth and final commemorative for 1979 was issued on 9 November for the "International Court of Justice," in denominations of 15 and 20 cents, and 0.80 and 1.10 Swiss francs. A souvenir card was issued at the same time.

By the end of 1979, United Nations stamps were available for purchase in local currency to collectors in 115 countries outside the United States

The number of first-day covers serviced for the various issues in 1979 was as follows:

Definitives $(5\phi, 14\phi, 15\phi, 20\phi)$	295,927
UNDRO against Disaster	790,094
International Year of the Child	1,004,182
Vienna definitives (50g, S1, S4, S5,
S6, S10)	1,026,575
For a Free and Independent Namibia	489,571
International Court of Justice	904.401

Joint Inspection Unit

In 1979, the Joint Inspection Unit (jiu) submitted three reports to the Economic and Social Council and six reports to the General Assembly, each covering a specific area of United Nations activity examined by the Unit. On 17 December, the Assembly took note of the Unit's annual report, summarizing its work in the year ended 30 June, and commended it for its work.

The three jiu reports submitted to the Council dealt with: (i) the organization and management of drug abuse control activities in the United Nations (see p. 928); (ii) the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (see p. 725); and (iii) regional training programmes in African wildlife management. The first report examined the work of the Division of Narcotic Drugs; it also dealt with the operations and finances of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, as well as with the relationship between the Division and the Fund. The second was part of a series of reports on regional training and research institutions with specific TCDC (technical co-operation among developing countries) potential and orientation. The third reviewed the operations of two regional training programmes in wildlife management at Mweka, United Republic of Tanzania, and Garoua, United Republic of Cameroon, in order to assess progress and highlight continuing problems. These reports were to be considered by the Council in 1980.

The six jiu reports submitted to the Assembly dealt with: (i) medium-term planning in the United Nations (see p. 1187); (ii) the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems (IOB) (seep.961); (iii) United Nations public information centres (see p. 456); (iv) the Information Services Unit of the Secretariat's Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (see p. 1220); (v) a glossary of evaluation terms (see p. 1188); and (vi) initial guidelines for internal evaluation systems of United Nations organizations (see p. 1188). The Assembly noted and otherwise acted on all six of these reports, either in resolution 34/164 (see below) on the work of jiu or in other resolutions on specific subjects.

In accordance with an Assembly resolution of December 1977,8 the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in 1979 on the implementation of recommendations contained in seven jiu reports considered by the Assembly prior to 1979: (i) implications of additional languages in the United Nations system; (ii) programming and evaluation in the United Nations; (iii) evaluation in the United Nations system; (iv) United Nations programme in public administration and finance; (v) General Service staff of the United Nations and Geneva-based specialized agencies; (vi) women in the Professional category and above in the United Nations system; and (vii) first-class travel in United Nations organizations. In its own report on this subject, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions updated the information and supplied additional details.

In the eleventh report of jiu on its activities for the period 1 July 1978 to 30 June 1979, the Unit summarized 16 reports and two notes it had prepared. Five reports and one note dealt with regional training centres assisted by the United Nations system; seven reports and one note concerned management, evaluation, administrative or personnel questions; and four reports reviewed aspects of substantive programmes.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/164, by which it took note with appreciation of the eleventh report of jiu on its activities, commended the Unit and the Secretary-General for their work in the area of evaluation and advice, and urged them to continue their efforts. The Assembly by this resolution also took note of several reports and notes on evaluation (see p. 1188) and the jiu report on IOB (see p. 961).

The resolution was recommended by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which approved it by consensus on 13 December. The draft was submitted by Mexico.

Resolution 34/164, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/772, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the importance of having expert and independent evaluation and advice on the improvement of the programmes and activities of the United Nations,

Aware of the fundamental role which the Joint Inspection Unit has played by providing such evaluation and advice to Member States and to the administrators of the programmes of the United Nations system,

- 1. Takes note with appreciation of the eleventh report on the activities of the Joint Inspection Unit, covering the period from July 1978 to June 1979;
- 6. Commends the Joint Inspection Unit and the Secretary-General for their efforts in the area of evaluation and advice, both internal and external, and urges them to continue their efforts in that direction, with a view to improving the administrative and budgetary efficiency and effectiveness of the United Nations system.

Office accommodation and extensions to United Nations conference and office facilities

At its 1979 regular session, the General Assembly authorized an expansion of a previously approved construction project for United Nations offices at Nairobi, Kenya. It also approved additional funds for existing projects to improve facilities at United Nations Headquarters in New York, and authorized some changes affecting a United Nations building and property adjoining the Palais des Nations in Geneva. The Vienna International Centre was officially opened in August. The Assembly called in December for a study of procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on construction Details of these actions follow.

Expansio n and improvemen t of facilitie s at Unite d Nation s Headquarter s

In his report to the General Assembly at its 1979 regular session on the current position of the construction projects to expand meetingroom capacity and improve conference servicing and delegate facilities at United Nations Headquarters, authorized in 1976, 1977 and 1978, the Secretary-General indicated that the first phase of the improvement programme (projects approved in 1976)—expansion of meeting-room seating capacity and improvement of facilities adjacent to the Security Council Chamberoriginally estimated to cost $14,019,000, had been completed in September 1979 at an estimated cost of $14,689,000. On the basis of the lowest bids received, the second phase (projects approved in 1977)—construction of an underground building, basement renovation, seating capacity expansion, building extensions and aircooling renovation—originally estimated at $15,869,300, would cost $31,469,000. The third phase (projects approved in 1978)—expansion of dining facilities and a new cafeteria building—originally estimated at $7,612,000, would cost $10,773,000.

In view of the fact that the final cost estimates for the second and third phases exceeded those previously approved, the Secretary-General indicated those projects whose completion he considered indispensable and provided a priority listing of the remaining projects in the second and third phases for reconsideration by the Assembly.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) reported that it considered that it was for the Assembly to decide whether the projects initially authorized should be discontinued, modified or completed, and gave its views on the implications of deferrals or modification. Recommendations were also made by ACABQ to minimize future estimating errors (see p. 1228).

While dissatisfaction was expressed that the anticipated costs had been underestimated, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee felt that the projects should not be discontinued. On 13 December 1979, it approved a recommendation orally proposed by the United Kingdom that an additional $18,760,700 be approved for the 1980-1981 biennium to complete the second and third phases of the expansion and improvement programme. The proposal was approved by a recorded vote—taken at the request of France—of 67 to 11, with 22 abstentions. Budgetary provision was included in the programme budget for 1980-1981, adopted by the Assembly as resolution 34/230 of 20 December 1979 (for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OFRESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Accommodation at the Vienna International Centre

At its 1979 regular session, the General Assembly considered a report by the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with a resolution of 21 December 1978, 10 on accommodation at the Vienna International Centre, a complex of buildings made available by the Austrian Government, at nominal rent, to United Nations entities and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

The report told of the Centre's official opening on 23 August 1979. The Secretary-General and the Director-General of IAEA accepted the Centre, presented by the Federal Chancellor of Austria on behalf of the Austrian people, and conveyed the appreciation and gratitude of the international organizations for the generosity of the Government and people of Austria.

The Centre comprised six buildings: two were assigned to IAEA; two were being used by the United Nations, including the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO); one was for common services; and one was for conference services. United Nations units transferred to the complex from New York and Geneva were: the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the Division of Social Affairs of the United Nations Office at Geneva. the International Trade Law Branch of the Office of Legal Affairs, the Division of Narcotic Drugs, the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board, and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control. The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation moved to the Centre from another location in Vienna. In addition, the headquarters of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East was temporarily located in the Vienna International Centre pending relocation of its headquarters closer to its place of operations. The transfer of IAEA was effected in October Responsibility for common services was shared by IAEA, the United Nations and UNIDO.

The report also contained revised budget estimates for the Centre's operation during the biennium 1980-1981. In a report on the Centre, ACABQ recommended that, since the estimates had been prepared on the basis of only a few months' operating experience, a provisional amount of $16,074,400 be made available to meet requirements of the Centre, pending a thorough review and analysis of actual requirements.

On 18 December, ACABQ's recommendations were approved by the Fifth Committee by 81 votes to 6, with 2 abstentions; the vote was requested by the USSR. Budgetary provision was included in the programme budget for 1980-1981, adopted by the Assembly as resolution 34/230 of 20 December (for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

Accommodatio n at Nairob i

At its 1979 regular session, the General Assembly had before it a report by the Secretary-General on the status of the construction project approved in 1977¹¹ for the United Nations Environment Programme and for accommodation of other United Nations offices at Nairobi. The report also made proposals for additional construction to accommodate the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), which the Assembly had decided, on 19 December 1977, 2 would be located at Nairobi.

SeeY.U.N., 1978, p. 1062, resolution 83/181.
 See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 1055, resolution 32/208 of 21 December 1977.

These proposals included: the expansion of the common services areas originally approved as part of the basic project, to reflect the additional requirements of the Centre; and the building of three additional office blocks to accommodate existing and projected staff of the Centre and of other users of the complex. The Secretary-General recommended approval of a net addition of $1,916,000 to the $14,274,000 recommended in the Secretary-General's proposed programme budget for the biennium 1980-1981. These funds would be placed in a special account, with any unexpended balance carried forward until completion of the project.

The report also indicated that arrangements for the operation of the common services facilities would be reviewed in the context of the preparation of the proposed programme budget for 1982-1983.

In a separate report, ACABQ concurred with the Secretary-General's view that the establishment of common premises and services was in the best interests of the United Nations system. It recommended approval of the construction of the three office buildings proposed by the Secretary-General and of 2,001 square metres of additional net usable space, at an estimated cost of 33,828,000 Kenyan shillings, to provide expanded conference and common services facilities. It also recommended that the Secretary-General submit a progress report, including up-to-date cost estimates, to the Assembly at its 1980 session.

On 14 December 1979, the recommendations of ACABQ were approved by the Fifth Committee by 85 votes to 8. On 20 December, the Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendation on construction at Nairobi, in adopting section XI of resolution 34/233 by a recorded vote of 128 to 9, with 1 abstention.

By another decision of the same date, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations agencies and programmes represented at Nairobi, to prepare in 1980 a report on the organization, financing and management of the common services which were to be established in the United Nations Centre at Nairobi in order to ensure that those services were shared to the maximum extent possible and that there was no duplication resulting in avoidable costs. The report was to take account of experience at other United Nations centres. This decision, proposed by Canada, was approved without vote by the Fifth Committee on 14 December. The Assembly adopted it, also without vote, incorporating it as section XII of resolution 34/233.

Improvemen t and major maintenanc e of premise s at Genev a

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 19 December 1978,13 the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly at its 1979 regular session on the further possibilities of the use of the villa "Les Feuillantines," a United Nations property and formerly the residence of the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Geneva. In his report, the Secretary-General concluded that the Organization should retain the property and possibly utilize it for offices, on the understanding that only absolutely required alterations be made. Pending further negotiations with the Swiss authorities, the Secretary-General further proposed that a strip of United Nations property which encroached on the public domain be transferred to the city of Geneva, which would erect a wall on the new boundary in compensation for the value of the land transferred.

In an oral report, the Chairman of ACABQ, recommended that the Fifth Committee accept the arrangements proposed in the Secretary-General's report and that it request him to report to the Assembly on the matter in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1982-1983.

On 20 November 1979, the Fifth Committee approved without vote a suggestion by its Chairman, based on an oral proposal by Mexico as orally amended by Tunisia, that ACABQ's recommendations be approved, leaving the Secretary-General to make the most appropriate use of "Les Feuillantines," without selling it. On 20 December, the Assembly adopted the Fifth Committee's recommendation without vote and incorporated it as section IV of resolution 34/233.

Procedure s for obtainin g estimate s and solicitin g bids on construction project s

In his report to the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly on the expansion of meeting rooms and improvement of conference servicing and delegate facilities at United Nations Head-quarters, the Secretary-General indicated that, on the basis of bids received, the original approved estimates had proved to be substantially below cost (see section above on EXPANSION AND IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES AT UNITED NATIONS HEADQUARTERS). The major causes of the divergence were attributed to higher than anticipated rates of inflation and underestimation by consultants employed to furnish cost projections. The report described the process by which the cost estimates and bids were obtained and the contracts awarded.

In a separate report, ACABQ expressed concern and noted that it had requested the Board of Auditors to review and make recommendations on the procedures followed. The Board's report, with a summary of its findings, was annexed to ACABQ'S report. In addition to the investigation already undertaken by the Board, ACABQ said it felt that the time had come for an independent full-scale study of procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on United Nations construction projects, and recommended that this be undertaken by the Joint Inspection Unit with the assistance of outside experts, as necessary. In addition to covering procedures for major construction at all United Nations offices, it was understood that the study should include comparative information with respect to other organizations of the system, should contain comments on the adequacy of practices and procedures, and should suggest revisions and improvements.

On 13 December 1979, at the suggestion of its Chairman, the Fifth Committee approved, without objection, the recommendations of ACABQ. On 20 December, the Assembly endorsed the Fifth Committee's recommendation in adopting, without vote, section X of resolution 34/233.

In another action relating to United Nations construction projects, the Assembly, by resolution 34/228 of 20 December, requested the Secretary-General to review procedures for the award of contracts, particularly those for building construction (seep. 1233).

Procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on United Nations construction projects

Requests the Joint Inspection Unit to conduct a full-scale study of procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on United Nations construction projects at Headquarters and in other United Nations offices with the assistance of outside expertise, as necessary, it being understood that, in addition to covering procedures for major construction at all United Nations offices, the study should include comparative information with respect to other organizations in the United Nations system, should contain comments on the adequacy of practices and procedures now in place and should suggest such specific revisions and improvements as may be necessary;

Financial reports and accounts and reports of the Board of Auditors for 1978

On 25 October 1979, by resolution 34/5, adopted without objection, the General Assembly accepted the financial reports and accounts for the year ended 31 December 1978 and the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors for the following: the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA); and also, for the years ended 31 December 1977 and 31 December 1978, those for the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).

The Assembly concurred with the observations and comments made in a report by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), and requested the Board of Auditors and ACABQ to continue to give increased attention to areas regarding which they had made observations and comments. In addition, the Assembly requested the executive heads of the organizations and programmes concerned to take the remedial action that might be required by the Board's comments and observations.

This action had been recommended by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which on 10 October approved without vote a draft resolution proposed by its Chairman. The draft was revised to include a suggestion by Romania that the Assembly request the Board of Auditors and ACABQ to give increased attention to areas on which they had commented, and a suggestion by the USSR that the Assembly concur with, rather than simply note, ACABQ'S observations.

Some of the comments on individual organizations and programmes are summarized below.

United Nations. Although the Board of Auditors did not report to the Assembly on the United Nations accounts, since such reports were due only in even-numbered years under the biennial budget system, it presented a report to ACABQ on matters arising out of the audit the Board had conducted to date on the accounts for 1978-1979.

The Advisory Committee noted the Board's observation that no significant progress had been made to improve financial management and control systems in the United Nations, inasmuch as two key recommendations made by the Board in 1978¹⁴ had not been implemented. Those recommendations called for enabling the United Nations Controller to provide leadership, guidance and central direction on all financial functions, and for setting up a systems group to deal exclusively with financial management and control. The Advisory Committee said the Secretary-General's representatives had told it that lack of progress on the first recommendation was due to the need to work out modalities for strengthening the Controller's role. As to the second recommendation, they had said that a systems group would be appointed soon.

(For action by the Assembly on the Board's recommendations on financial control and management, see p. 1234.)

United Nations Development Programme. The

Board concluded that it was impossible for UNDP to perform its own internal audit adequately with existing resources and organizational arrangements. In its financial report, UNDP responded that the number of its auditors was to be increased from four to seven by 1 January 1980 and pointed out that the internal audit unit reported directly to the UNDP Administrator. The Board urged continuing efforts to increase the use of non-convertible currencies contributed by certain States, to improve procedures for collecting overdue government contributions and to monitor cash balances more closely.

United Nations Children's Fund. The Board recommended that procedures be reviewed to determine better ways of controlling Governments' use of UNICEF-provided vehicles. It also recommended that, before paying its experts and consultants, UNICEF should evaluate their performance. As regards the UNICEF Greeting Card Fund, it recommended improvements in procurement procedures. The Advisory Committee recommended that the security of UNICEF'S computerized files be kept under constant review, while bearing in mind the costs and benefits of possible improvements.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research. The Board found UNITAR'S internal controls and accounting procedures to be generally satisfactory but suggested better monitoring of cash balances, corrective action to ensure that UNITAR did not use special-purpose contributions for its regular activities, and continued efforts to spend non-convertible currencies.

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The auditors called for better co-ordination and improved controls over procurement to achieve savings, and improved reporting by agencies using UNHCR funds to lend money to refugees. They also recommended that, whenever UNHCR provided equipment and machinery to an agency assisting refugees, its agreement with that agency should spell out the details of ownership, insurance coverage, disposal of the equipment on completion of the project, inventory and reporting requirements, and proper identification of the equipment.

United Nations Fund for Population Activities. The Board said that the internal audit function of UNDP, which was responsible for conducting the internal audit of UNFPA, should be expanded. It also recommended that the Fund improve its follow-up and review of reports submitted by the agencies to which UNFPA allocated its money.

at internal auditing in UNRWA, the Board found that it was not independent of management, that weaknesses in internal control and irregularities had not been rectified and that auditors were often asked to perform non-audit work. The Board recommended that immediate attention be given to reviewing the scope, size and organizational arrangements of the Agency's internal auditing. Referring to procurement, it cited instances of unusual contract-awarding practices, non-conformance with prescribed procedures, and liberal interpretation and use of emergency powers.

Organizatio n and practice s of the Board of Auditor s

On 25 October 1979, the General Assembly decided without vote to request the Board of Auditors, the Panel of External Auditors (composed of the external auditors of organizations in the United Nations system), the Secretary-General and ACABQ to submit for the 1981 regular session of the Assembly their views on the Board's organization and professional practices. In making this request, by decision 34/403, the Assembly took note of proposals made by Canada for a reform of the external auditing system.

The Canadian proposals, contained in a note verbale from that country dated 14 September 1979, called for the appointment by the Assembly of a United Nations Auditor-General, whose staff would be responsible for the external audit of all United Nations accounts. Under these proposals, the Board would be expanded and made responsible for reviewing the audit and audit procedures. A new purpose of the audit would be to assess the adequacy of financial and management systems in contributing to the economical, efficient and effective expenditure of United Nations resources.

The Assembly's decision was recommended by the Fifth Committee without objection on 12 October, on a proposal by Canada. This was a revised version of a text originally submitted by Canada as a draft resolution, which would have had the Assembly call for the views of the Board, the Panel of External Auditors, Member States, the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations, to be submitted in 1980. The revised text called for the Secretary-General to submit his views in 1981, and incorporated an oral amendment by Morocco specifying the 1981 session as the one at which the Board's and Panel's views should be submitted.

The USSR said it would have abstained if the proposal had been put to a vote because it did not see what role the Panel would have in evaluating the activities of the Board.

Resolution 34/5, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/586, adopted without objection by Assembly on 25 October 1979, meeting 46.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the financial reports and accounts for the year ended 31 December 1978 of the United Nations Development Programme, of the United Nations Children's Fund, of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, of the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, those for the years ended 31 December 1977 and 31 December 1978 of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Accepts the financial reports and accounts and the audit opinions of the Board of Auditors;

2. Concurs with the observations and comments made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report;

3. Requests the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to continue to give increased attention to areas regarding which they have made observations and comments:

4. Further requests the executive heads of the organizations and programmes concerned to take such remedial action as may be required by the comments and observations made by the Board of Auditors in its reports.

Decision 34/403, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/586, adopted without vote by Assembly.

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 25 October 1979, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, taking note of the proposals contained in the note verbale dated 14 September 1979 from the representative of Canada to the Secretary-General and the comments made by Member States during the thirty-fourth session of the Assembly, decided:

(a) To request both the Board of Auditors and the Panel of External Auditors to submit their views on the Board's organization and professional practices to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session;

(b) To request the Secretary-General to submit a report containing his own views to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixthsession;

(c) To request the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to submit its views and recommendations on the above-mentioned reports.

Other matters

Unite d Nation s Internationa 1 School

The General Assembly approved in December 1979 an allocation of $3,515,000 to the United Nations International School (UNIS). In addition, it requested the Board of Auditors to examine the School's accounts and accumulated deficit as well as its bursary policies and the maintenance needs for its buildings, located in New York City. The Board was asked to report to the Assembly at its 1980 regular session.

The allocation for UNIS was recommended by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 5 December, by 79 votes to 9, with 7 abstentions. The sum was included in the appropriations for the United Nations regular budget for 1980-1981, approved by the Assembly on 20 December by resolution 34/230 A (see p. 1184).

The request to the Board was originally proposed orally by the United States as the second half of a proposal by which the Assembly would also decide to defer to 1980 the question of a grant to UNIS. At the suggestion of Tunisia, the Committee voted separately on the two parts of the United States proposal. It rejected the first—for deferral—by 19 votes in favour to 48 against, with 2.3 abstentions. It approved the second—the request to the Board—as reworded orally by Tunisia to have the Assembly request the auditors' study at the same time that it decided to grant the $3,515,000 subsidy.

Deletion of the clause referring to the subsidy grant was proposed by the USSR but not accepted by Tunisia, and the USSR withdrew its amendment. Tunisia also did not accept an oral amendment by Sierra Leone to have the Board, in examining bursary policies, highlight the basis of awards and amounts distributed from 1974 to 1979 according to geographical region; the sponsor then withdrew it. It did accept, however, a subamendment by Algeria to replace the phrase "alleged deficit"—taken from the United States proposal—by "accumulated deficit."

The Committee's vote on the recommended text was 83 to 0, with 8 abstentions. The Assembly adopted it on 20 December by a recorded vote of 124 to 11, with 5 abstentions. It became section IX of Assembly resolution 34/233.

The request for assistance for UNIS was made in a report by the Secretary-General. He asked for a total of $3,815,000, of which $1,500,000 would help finance the bursary (scholarship) assistance given to United Nations staff members and members of delegations requiring financial aid to send their children to UNIS, $1,315,000 would be used for liquidating the accumulated deficit, and $1,000,000 would be used for structural maintenance and repair of the buildings. The Fifth Committee accepted the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) to cut $300,000 from the request for building maintenance and repair. The Advisory Committee said its recommendation to assist in respect of the School's financial crisis should not be interpreted as establishing the principle that UNIS could look to the United Nations budget as an automatic and continuing source of support.

The request for funds for UNIS was supported in the Fifth Committee by Algeria, the Bahamas, Barbados, Chile, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United Republic of Cameroon. On the other hand, the Byelorussian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia maintained that UNIS should be financed through private sources rather than the United Nations budget, while the United States questioned the legality of funding the School from the regular budget.

Arabi c languag e service s

On 20 December 1979, by resolution 34/226, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to bring the Arabic language services for the Assembly to a level equal with the services provided for the other official and working languages. This was to be done by adding permanent posts to the Arabic Translation Service at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and by establishing an Arabic interpretation unit at Headquarters. According to the resolution, the Translation Service should be given enough staff to translate all Assembly documents in time for simultaneous release with other language versions. The resolution was adopted without vote in the Assembly after having been approved in the Fifth Committee without objection on 19 November; the draft was sponsored by 50 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

In another action affecting Arabic language services, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), on 3 June, at its fifth session at Manila, Philippines, recommended that the Assembly take steps to ensure that Arabic would have full capacity as an official and working language of UNCTAD, for both translation and interpretation, effective 1 January 1980.

Funds for additional Arabic languages for both the Assembly and UNCTAD were included in the 1980-1981 programme budget approved by the Assembly in resolution 34/230 A of 20 December 1979 (see p. 1184). On 6 December, the Fifth Committee decided to inform the Assembly that $2,793,300 would be required in respect of services for the Assembly. This, according to a statement of financial implications submitted by the Secretary-General and endorsed by ACABQ, would pay for 62 new posts for translators, revisers and typists in the Translation Service and for seven new interpreters. With regard to UNCTAD, the Fifth Committee approved $1,403,600 in revised budget estimates, including the cost of 10 established translators' posts at Geneva and additional temporary staff for meetings.

A report by the Secretariat to the Fifth Committee, submitted prior to its action on this matter, summarized the situation with respect to the provision of Arabic language services to the Assembly. It indicated that the volume of work received for translation during sessions of the Assembly was far in excess of capacity. An accompanying note by the Secretariat indicated that 47 temporary translators, revisers and typists would be needed in 1980 to provide summary records in Arabic for the Assembly's Main Committees. In a letter of 14 November, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, as current Chairman of the Arab group of United Nations Member States, requested steps by the Secretariat to do away with what it described as shortcomings and drawbacks that had deprived Arab delegations of the full and timely services they were entitled to receive under a 1973 Assembly resolution making Arabic the sixth working language of the Assembly.15 The other working languages were Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish.

Revie w of procedure s for award of contract s

On 20 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/228, by which it requested the Secretary-General to review procedures for the award of contracts, particularly those for construction of United Nations buildings. He was asked to bear in mind the possibility of increased tendering on an international basis. He was requested to report to the Assembly on this matter in 1980 and to recommend how procedures for the disposal of surplus United Nations property and equipment could be improved so as to maximize income.

This resolution originated in the Fifth Committee as a draft by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Panama. It was approved in the Committee without vote on 14 December. Introducing it, Panama expressed concern at the escalation of construction costs, and suggested that construction materials and architectural services could be bought for much less outside the United States. The draft was approved with three oral amendments accepted by the sponsors: by the Philippines, adding a preambular paragraph to express concern at the increasing costs of construction projects; by Italy and Tunisia, to broaden the original request for review of construction-contract award procedures so as to cover "contracts, including, in particular, construction contracts;" and by the Netherlands, to use the phrase "increased tendering" in place of "going to tender" in speaking of the possibility of increased tendering on an international basis.

The draft was presented after the Committee, on 13 December, approved revised budget estimates adding $18,760,700 to the 1980-1981 programme budget to meet cost overruns in previously approved projects to expand conference and dining facilities at United Nations Headquarters. In a report on these projects, which had been approved by the Assembly in 1976, 1977 and 1978, the Secretary-General attributed the additional expenses to inflation and costing errors (see also p. 1225). Reporting on this matter, ACABQ recommended that an independent, full-scale study of procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on construction projects at Headquarters and other United Nations offices be conducted by the Joint Inspection Unit (jiu), with the help of outside experts if necessary.

In another action of 20 December related to United Nations construction projects (resolution 34/233, section X), the Assembly endorsed a $^{^{\}mbox{\tiny 15}}$ See Y.U.N., 1973, p. 804, resolution 3190(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973.

recommendation to have jiu study procedures for obtaining estimates and soliciting bids on such projects. (For details, see p. 1228; for page reference to text of section X of resolution 34/233, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Organizationa 1 nomenclatur e in the Secretaria t

Work continued in 1979 on the application of a standardized and uniform system for naming units of the Secretariat according to their position in the hierarchy and their functions. In a report to the Fifth Committee in November, the Secretary-General said that an interdepartmental working group had continued an office-by-office review and, since his 1978 report, 16 had made recommendations on the names of units in 15 additional departments, secretariats and offices. He had not taken decisions on those recommendations, pending receipt of the views of senior Secretariat officials. He trusted that intergovernmental bodies would, as urged by the General Assembly in 1977,17 avoid recommendations giving particular designations to units or their heads which might not be in conformity with the nomenclature proposed by him.

The Assembly took note of this report on 20 December 1979 in adopting without vote section VIII of resolution 34/233. The Fifth Committee recommended this action on 27 November, also without vote, on a proposal of its Chairman and at the suggestion of the Chairman of ACABQ.

Financia I managemen t and contro I

The General Assembly, by section III of resolution 34/233, adopted without vote on 20 December 1979, requested the Secretary-General to give priority to recommendations of the Board of Auditors for improvements in the United Nations financial management systems. The resolution singled out three of the Board's recommendations, which were originally made in 197818 and were endorsed by ACABO. These were: to strengthen the role of the Controller so that he could provide functional leadership, guidance and central direction of all United Nations financial functions; to establish as soon as possible a systems group to deal exclusively with the overall system of financial management and control; and to produce a financial manual.

This action was recommended to the Assembly by the Fifth Committee, which approved, without vote on 20 November, a United States proposal to this effect. The proposal incorporated a suggestion by Algeria, accepted by the sponsor, to add a reference to the 1978 resolution by which the Assembly initially endorsed the auditors' proposals.¹⁹

In its 1979 report to ACABQ, the Board of Auditors observed that no significant progress had been made to improve financial management and control systems (see p. 1230).

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3190(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, by which it decided to include Arabic among the official and working languages of the General Assembly and its Main Committees,

Referring to resolution 115(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, by which the Conference recommended that the General Assembly should take the necessary steps to ensure that Arabic is included among the official and working languages of the Conference,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the related notes concerning the provision of Arabic language services to the General Assembly and its Main Committees,

Noting with concern that the arrangements made to implement resolution 3190(XXVIII) have not provided adequate and efficient services to the General Assembly and its Main Committees,

- 1. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the Arabic language services up to a level equal with the services of the other official and working languages of the General Assembly and its Main Committees by adopting effective measures
- (a) The immediate reinforcement of the Arabic Translation Service at United Nations Headquarters by a sufficient number of permanent posts to ensure the translation of all pre-session, in-session and post-session documentation of the General Assembly and its Main Committees within the specified time-limits and simultaneously with their issuance in the other official languages;
- (b) The establishment at Headquarters of an Arabic interpretation unit with a sufficient number of permanent posts to provide interpretation services to the General Assembly and its Main Committees;
- 2. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the full implementation of the present resolution and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

The General Assembly,

Noting that the programme budget of the United Nations contains considerable appropriations for construction of premises.

Noting further that the volume and value of surplus property and equipment are likely to grow with the increase in United Nations activities,

Concerned by the increasing costs of construction projects,

Bearing in mind that the Board of Auditors reported to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that it had made recommendations designed to improve procurement and inventory systems,

Desirous of ensuring that United Nations resources are expended in the most economical manner,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to review existing procedures for the award of contracts, including, in particular, construction contracts, bearing in mind the possibility of increased tendering on an international basis, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session a report on current procedures governing the disposal of surplus property and equipment, together with recommendations on how those procedures can be improved in the interest of maximizing income from the sale of surplus property and equipment.

The General Assembly

Improvements in the United Nations financial management systems

Requests the Secretary-General, in implementing General Assembly resolution 33/10 of 3 November 1978, to give priority to the implementation of the recommendation of the Board of Auditors, as endorsed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, calling for improvements in the United Nations financial management systems and especially:

(a) To strengthen the role of the Controller so that he can provide functional leadership, guidance and central direction of all United Nations financial functions;

(b) To establish as soon as possible a systems group to deal exclusively with the over-all system of financial management and control:

(c) To produce the financial manual for which special funds have been provided;

ChapterI

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In accordance with the objectives laid down in its statute, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)¹ continued in 1979 to promote the contribution of atomic energy to the peace and prosperity of the world, and to ensure that the assistance it provided was not used for military purposes.

Continued emphasis was placed on solving problems related to non-proliferation, the safety of nuclear power stations, the reprocessing of nuclear fuel and the management of nuclear wastes. In connexion with nuclear safety, negotiations were successfully concluded in October at Vienna on the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material.

The Agency continued to provide technical and administrative assistance to the International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation (INFCE), which was begun in 1978. Among subjects identified as requiring international co-operation, INFCE singled out the storage of plutonium and of spent fuel, on both of which IAEA had carried out studies. The need for closer co-operation in relation to nuclear supplies was also emphasized.

During the year, IAEA continued to concentrate on the training of managerial, engineering and safety staff for nuclear power stations.

Under the aegis of the IAEA International Fusion Research Council, the first stage of a major project to demonstrate the scientific, technical and engineering feasibility of generating electricity by thermonuclear fusion was completed.

The transfer of the Agency to its permanent headquarters at the Vienna International Centre was completed in November 1979. The twenty-third session of the General Conference of IAEA was held at New Delhi, India, from 4 to 10 December 1979. Membership of IAEA remained at 110.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

As at 31 December 1979, 109 non-nuclear-weapon States had ratified or acceded to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (Non-Proliferation Treaty). For 67 of these States parties, safeguards agreements with the Agency, concluded under article III of the Treaty, had entered into force by the end of the year.

Agency safeguards were applied under other agreements in an additional 11 non-nuclear-weapon States not party to the Non-Proliferation Treaty but having substantial nuclear activities, namely Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, India, Israel, Pakistan, South Africa, Spain and Turkey. In seven of these States, all substantial nuclear activities known to IAEA were covered by a network of individual safeguards agreements.

At the end of 1979, safeguards applied by IAEA covered material in 117 power reactors, 171 research reactors and critical assemblies, 46 conversion, fuel fabrication, reprocessing and enrichment plants and 366 other nuclear installations.

Nuclear power

At the end of 1979, nuclear power plants with a total capacity of 119,000 megawatts (electrical) (MW) accounted for 6.4 per cent of the world's electricity-generating capacity. For the year 1985, nuclear power capacity was forecast as between 290,000 and 350,000 MW, or some 12 per cent of electricity production, although projections of future capacity were to some extent affected by a number of external factors, including the accident at Three Mile Island, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania (United States). The record of operating nuclear power plants continued to be excellent; 1,900 reactor years had accumulated without any significant spread of radioactivity to the environment or any radiation-induced fatality.

The Agency continued to help developing member States to introduce nuclear-powered electricity-generating plants by assisting with planning surveys, feasibility studies and the evaluation of technical bids. It also prepared a guidebook on manpower requirements for nuclear power programmes.

Seven interregional training courses, six of which focused on special aspects of nuclear power-plant safety, were attended by 200 participants from developing countries during the year. In addition, IAEA continued to develop its energy data bank and to collect and disseminate information on nuclear technology and the reliability of nuclear power plants.

Environmen t

Following the accident at Three Mile Island, the Agency acted on the recommendation of a group of experts, appointed to evaluate the implications of the accident, by initiating an expanded nuclear-power safety programme. In addition, preparations began for an international conference on nuclear power-plant safety, to be held in 1980.

Plans were made during the year to help member States to implement the IAEA Nuclear Safety Standards programme. Two further safety guides, on the environmental aspects of nuclear power-plant siting, were published under the programme.

The Agency continued to develop guidelines on the safe underground disposal of radioactive waste, with support from the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). An international symposium held in Finland in July 1979, jointly organized by IAEA and the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, reviewed current disposal techniques and requirements for the future.

Also, within its responsibilities under the 1975 Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (London Dumping Convention), IAEA prepared guidelines regarding ocean dumping sites and reviewed the packaging requirements for deep-ocean dumping.

Nuclear informatio n

The International Nuclear Information System (INIS), with 62 participating countries and 13 international organizations, continued to provide a comprehensive nuclear information and abstracting service from its world-wide collection of literature covering nearly 500,000 items. In 1979, access arrangements were made permitting IAEA member States to retrieve information directly from INIS files by remote computer terminals.

During 1979, more than 70 countries received IAEA technical assistance in the form of expert services or equipment, or both. A total of 426 fellowships was awarded for individual studies and 583 persons participated in 24 group training projects. Technical assistance provided by the Agency during 1979 exceeded $15 million in value.

In addition, IAEA served as the executing agency for 21 large-scale projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP): applied nuclear physics (Morocco); development of nuclear technology (Cuba and Romania); nuclear engineering (Argentina); application of isotopes and nuclear techniques (Bulgaria and Ethiopia); a nuclear energy centre (Chile and Zaire); non-destructive testing and quality control (Argentina); nuclear energy development (Peru); nuclear-power-programme manpower development (Brazil); nuclear research in agriculture (Brazil and Indonesia); nuclear techniques in animal production (Nigeria); radiation-processing demonstration facilities (Egypt and Yugoslavia); tsetse fly eradication (Nigeria); and uranium exploration (Chad, Chile, Colombia and Madagascar).

The Agency also provided large-scale assistance to a project in Bangladesh and to one in India for the use of nuclear techniques in agricultural research, which was financed by Sweden.

The target for member States' voluntary contributions to the Agency's regular programme was $8.5 million in 1979, of which $8.06 million was pledged. Other sources of support for the technical assistance programme were UNDP funds, extrabudgetary contributions and assistance in kind.

Life science s

In co-operation with the World Health Organization (WHO), IAEA continued to promote the use of nuclear techniques in medicine, biology and health-related environmental research and to conduct research on techniques for improving the accuracy of radiation dosimetry.

Meetings were held during the year on the combined effects of radiation and chemicals on living systems and on safety standards for radiation protection. Advisory group meetings dealt with: high-energy photon and electron dosimetry; the maintenance of nuclear instruments; applications of recent radiobiological research in radiotherapy; nuclear methodology and techniques in the study of human parasitic diseases; and the comparative health impact of nuclear and alternative sources of energy.

The IAEA/WHO network of Secondary Standards Dosimetry Laboratories, which was established in 1976, reached 42 member laboratories, mainly in the developing countries.

Fourteen co-ordinated research programmes were continued and developed during 1979. Research projects related to the use of irradiated vaccines in the treatment of certain parasitic diseases and to the use of modifying agents in cancer therapy, among other things.

Physical sciences and laboratories

The Agency's programme in physical sciences continued to promote co-operation among scientists throughout the world and to assist developing countries to implement the techniques of nuclear science.

The International Tokamak Reactor (INTOR) workshop group, made up of participants from the member countries of the European Communities, Japan, the USSR and the United States, met four times during the year at Vienna to carry out an assessment of data concerning the tokamak approach to the thermonuclear reactor. The Agency established INTOR on the recommendation of the International Fusion Research Council, following a proposal by the USSR that there should be international cooperation on tokamak research under the aegis of IAEA.

Recent advances in basic fission research were reviewed at the fourth Symposium on the Physics and Chemistry of Fission. The utilization of research reactors and their conversion from highly enriched to low-enriched uranium were the subjects of discussion at other meetings held during 1979.

A symposium was held at the end of January to review the uses of chemical thermodynamics in nuclear reactor technology. Work also continued on oxygen activity changes in reactor fuels, the chemistry of fusion and the economics of radioisotope applications in industry.

Under the industrial applications programme, demonstrations were begun in a number of Asian and Pacific countries of the industrial uses of radioisotopes in major industries, such as rubber, plastics and timber.

Under the isotope hydrology programme, consultancy and analytical services were provided to member States and organizations of the United Nations system. A regional seminar on isotope techniques in hydrology was held at Dakar, Senegal, for hydrologists from French-speaking African countries.

The Agency continued to provide nuclear and atomic data cost-free to member States, primarily developing countries. In response to 246 requests for data during the year, the Agency distributed over 36,800 numerical-data sets to scientists in 25 member States.

A cumulative issue of the international index of neutron reaction data (called CINDA) was published, and work was completed on a new international index to the literature on atomic and molecular data relevant to fusion (called CIAMDA).

The IAEA laboratory at Seibersdorf, Austria, provided member States with analytical services and research in support of specific contracts and technical assistance. Work continued at the laboratory on seed-protein improvement, sterile-insect techniques and the efficiency of fertilizers

The International Laboratory of Marine Radioactivity in Monaco continued its research on nuclear pollution of the marine environment. In co-operation with UNEP and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the laboratory studied the behaviour of non-nuclear pollutants, such as heavy metal and chlorinated hydrocarbon, in the marine environment.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics at Trieste, Italy, provided courses and workshops on atomic and molecular physics, quantum optics and condensed-matter physics, on non-conventional energy including plasma physics, on applied mathematics and on recent developments in the theory of general relativity.

Food and agriculture

Under joint programmes of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and IAEA, work continued through 25 co-ordinated research programmes on the application of isotope and radiation techniques in order to increase agricultural production, improve the quality of food, reduce food losses and minimize pollution of food and the environment. Over 80 technical assistance projects were in operation in developing countries during the year.

Work continued on insect control, particularly the control of the Mediterranean fruit fly in Central America and the tsetse fly in Nigeria.

Other projects were designed to improve crop and livestock production.

Secretariat

At the end of 1979, 1,531 staff members were employed by IAEA. Of these, 524—drawn from 67 countries—were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,007 were in the General Service and Maintenance and Operatives Service categories.

Budget

The twenty-third General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, at its December 1979 session, adopted a regular budget of $80,643,000 for 1980.

The target for voluntary contributions to finance the Agency's technical assistance programme for the year 1980 was established at $10.5 million.

Chapter II

International Labour Organisation (ILO)

During 1979, the International Labour Organisation (ILO)¹ continued activities in its four major programme areas: promotion of policies to create employment and satisfy basic human needs; improvement of working and living conditions and environment; strengthening of industrial relations and tripartite (Government/employer/worker) co-operation; and the advancement of human rights in the social and labour fields.

The main instruments of action continued to be standard-setting, technical co-operation activities, research and publishing.

Membership in ILO rose to 140 during the year, with the admission of Cape Verde on 3 April and Grenada on 9 July.

Meetings

The sixty-fifth session of the International Labour Conference, held at Geneva from 6 to 27 June 1979, was attended by 1,700 delegates, advisers and observers from 132 countries. The Conference had before it the annual report of the ILO Director-General and the fifteenth special report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment in South Africa.

The Conference considered four technical items: follow-up to the World Employment Conference, held in 1976,² on the satisfaction of basic needs; older workers' needs in work and retirement; the protection of dockers against accidents; and road transport. The Conference adopted an International Labour Convention and Recommendation on each of the last two items and discussed older workers' needs with a view to adopting standards at its 1980 session.

In accordance with usual practice, a tripartite Conference committee examined the application by member States of the 151 Conventions and 159 Recommendations adopted since 1919. It also reviewed application of the ILO Conventions concerning forced labour.

Ratifications of the ILO Conventions registered during the Conference raised the total number of ratifications to more than 4,700.

The Conference adopted five resolutions, on: working children; disabled workers; the use of the Arabic language in ILO; development of ILO's programme for the improvement of industrial relations; and ILO's technical co-operation programme.

The Conference adopted ILO's budget for the 1980-1981 biennium amounting to $203.8 million

Two regional conferences took place during the year. The Eleventh Conference of American States Members of ILO, held at Medellín, Colombia, from 26 September to 5 October, adopted conclusions and recommendations concerning the creation of productive employment, fair treatment and equal job opportunities for women workers, respect for workers' rights, such as freedom of association, and an enhanced role for labour ministries in economic and social planning.

The Third European Regional Conference, held at Geneva from 16 to 25 October, discussed economic growth, structural change and manpower policy, and adopted resolutions on the vocational needs of young people and on policies and practices for the improvement of working conditions. It also acted on a range of other questions including social security, the employment consequences of new technologies, the development of co-operation in Europe, freedom of association, trade union rights, industrial relations and problems of intra-European migration.

Measures to protect employment and occupational safety and health were proposed by the Second Tripartite Technical Meeting for the Leather and Footwear Industry, held at Geneva from 5 to 13 December 1979. Other matters covered during the meeting included working hours and conditions, alternative technologies, child labour, clandestine labour, industrial home work and the role of multinational enterprises.

A meeting of experts on problems concerning air traffic controllers, held at Geneva in May, made recommendations designed to ensure that the status, working conditions, remuneration and career prospects of air traffic controllers were commensurate with their responsibilities. Other recommendations related to protection from anti-union discrimination and the right to negotiate conditions of employment.

In October, Government experts from 26 countries met at Geneva to draft the final text of a European agreement covering the provision of medical care to persons during temporary residence abroad.

A stepped-up fight against hunger and poverty through rural development was urged at a meeting of the ILO Advisory Committee on Rural Development, held at Geneva from 27 November to 6 December, which called for direct help to rural workers' organizations, increased employment promotion and higher food production.

Working environment

The International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment, approved by the ILO Governing Body in 1976, continued to encourage member States to set definite objectives for improving working conditions and the working environment. The Programme included standard-setting and operational activities, studies and tripartite meetings, clearing-house activities, and the design of an international alert system to detect potential hazards to the health of workers, for which more than 90 Governments had designated national focal points by the end of the year.

An international symposium on working conditions was held, as well as a number of specialized seminars, including one in Latin America on the promotion and co-ordination of research into working conditions and another on improving the working conditions of rural workers in Africa.

Based on a working paper prepared by ILO, a thematic joint programming meeting on the working environment, convened by the United Nations Environment Programme in October, adopted a United Nations co-ordinated programme of action for the improvement of the working environment.

World Employment Programme

The World Employment Programme was launched in 1969 as ILO's principal contribution to the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.³ The Programme was designed to assist Governments in reshaping their policies and plans in order to achieve their employment and income distribution objectives more effectively.

³ See Y.U.N., 1970, p. 319, resolution 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing text of Strategy.

It was also concerned with international trade policy and the restructuring of the world economy.

At its 1979 session, the International Labour Conference reaffirmed that the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the 1976 World Employment Conference⁴ provided the basis for research activities and technical assistance under the World Employment Programme.

Field activities

During 1979, ILO spent more than $78.9 million on technical co-operation activities (an increase of about 26 per cent over expenditure in 1978) to promote employment, development of human resources and social institutions, and improvement in living and working conditions.

Most of this expenditure ($47.3 million) continued to be financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The ILO regular programme provided some $6.5 million in 1979 (an increase of nearly 114 per cent over the $3.03 million spent in 1978). Funds placed at ILO's disposal by multilateral and bilateral aid agencies and other special programmes rose to $19.2 million in 1979. Activities financed by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) increased by 54.2 per cent in 1979 with expenditures of over $5.9 million as against $3.8 million in 1978.

A breakdown of expenditures by field of activity showed that training received the largest share of funds ($36.6 million), followed by employment planning and promotion ($20.1 million), sectoral activities ($11.5 million), industrial relations and labour administration ($5.2 million) and working conditions and environment ($2.1 million). Of the balance of $3.5 million, social security received $1.4 million.

By region, Africa received the largest percentage of the funds (37.0), followed by Asia (28,5), the Americas (15.2), interregional projects (10.6), the Middle East (6.8) and Europe (1.9).

Educationa l'activitie s

The International Institute for Labour Studies at Geneva, an ILO centre for advanced study in the labour and social fields, included in its 1979 programme seven educational activities for 154 participants, 53 of whom were from Government institutions, 54 from employers' groups, 39 from workers' organizations and eight from universities. One further activity was initiated at the end of the year, primarily for the benefit of professional staff from international organizations.

Four of these activities were industrial relations seminars, financed by the Government of Norway, which were held at Colombo (Sri Lanka), Dacca (Bangladesh), Hyderabad (India) and Karachi (Pakistan). The seminars featured techniques of in-plant industrial relations decision-making developed by the Institute and already in wide use in Africa and Latin America.

A two-month course, which focused on the contribution the social sciences could make to improve the structure and organization of agricultural co-operatives in Africa, was held jointly with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at the Pan-African Centre for Co-operative Training at Cotonou, Benin, from 26 April to 25 June 1979. The course was attended by 16 participants from Angola, Cape Verde, Djibouti, the Niger and Togo.

The Governments of Ireland, the Netherlands and Nigeria supported a three-week African regional workshop on the social implications of industrialization in development which was held at Dublin during September 1979. The course was attended by 20 participants from Botswana, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, the Sudan, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and the liberation movements of southern Africa recognized by the Organization of African Unity. The course drew on Irish experience with the problems of rapid industrialization, as well as the national experience of the countries from which the participants came. Some of the specific topics studied were apprenticeship programmes, vocational training, the contribution of national youth services to vocational training, the role of State enterprises in development and aspects of Government support of industrialization.

In October, a three-week seminar was held at Geneva on labour/management relations in the petroleum industry. The 24 participants, selected primarily from petroleum-producing countries, came from Ecuador, Egypt, Indonesia, Kuwait, Nigeria, Norway, Qatar, Romania, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela. As its primary objective, the seminar discussed the principles of labour/management relations and analysed specific issues within the petroleum industry. A key feature of the course was the exchange of experience among the participants themselves, all of whom were experienced practitioners of labour relations in the sector.

In November, the Institute initiated a ninemonth course on comparative social policy for some 20 professional participants from governmental and non-governmental international organizations. The course, organized in cooperation with the University of Geneva, involved studies in the theoretical and practical application of social policy in development, with particular reference to its international aspects.

Internationa 1 Centre for Advance d Technica 1 and Vocationa 1 Trainin g

In 1979, the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training at Turin, Italy, conducted 50 training courses for 894 vocational trainers, instructors and technicians, managers and trade union officials. Individual placements in institutions and enterprises were organized for 113 of these participants and also for 404 individual fellowship holders.

Thirteen seminars and technical workshops were organized at Turin, and a further five were conducted in Egypt, India, Kenya, Malaysia and Zaire. Over-all, the Centre organized programmes for 1,675 participants.

Courses and seminars were designed, in cooperation with countries, national institutions and international organizations, to provide advanced training in line with the needs of specific groups of participants.

The Centre continued its efforts to assist developing countries in creating and adapting their national training systems and institutions. It also furnished technical support services to other agencies in the preparation, design, implementation and revision of training projects.

Publication s

The Organisation continued to disseminate research on a wide range of topical social and labour questions, expected to be of value to ILO constituents as well as to scholars and practitioners in the field, with the issue of some 40 new publications, in addition to the issue of periodicals such as the bimonthly International Labour Review and Legislative Series, and the quarterly Bulletin of Labour Statistics and Social and Labour Bulletin.

New publications included: a major survey entitled Children at Work; a number of works on employment problems, including International Migration and Development in the Arab Region, a collection of essays on industrial market economies entitled Employment: Outlook and Insights and a study on Employment and Basic Needs in Portugal;

a popularized version of the results of an ILO research project entitled Profiles of Rural Poverty, two works on training, Training Systems in Eastern Europe and Ten Tears of Training: Developments in France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom, 1968-1978\ a management development manual on Planning for Improved Enterprise Performance-, and works on social security entitled The Cost of Social Security and Social Security for Teachers.

The 1979 edition of the Yearbook of Labour Statistics was issued at the end of the year.

As at 31 December 1979, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and at area, branch and other offices was 2,961.

Of these, 1,568 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 107 nationalities), and 1,393 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the Professional staff, 824 were assigned to technical co-operation projects.

Budget

In June 1979, the International Labour Conference adopted a budget of expenditure for the 1980-1981 biennium in the amount of $203,779,154. Of this amount, member States were to be assessed $101,889,577 for 1980 and an equal amount for 1981. It also included $11,059,690 for reimbursement to the Working Capital Fund and $14,943,804 under Undistributed reserve.

Final arrangements for financing in 1981 were left for consideration at the session of the Conference scheduled to be held in June 1980.

Chapter III

Food and Agricultur e Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The twentieth biennial session of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) was held at Rome, Italy, from 10 to 28 November 1979. The Conference expressed concern that long-standing problems continued to characterize the world food and agriculture situation and that food self-sufficiency in the developing countries continued to deteriorate. It urged Governments to take immediate steps to put into operation FAO'S five-point Plan of Action on World Food Security, approved by the FAOCouncilinJune 1979.

In view of the gap in such security left by the suspension of negotiations for a new international grains arrangement, the Plan envisaged: adoption by all countries of national grain reserve policies and targets; establishment by FAO'S Committee on World Food Security of criteria for releasing such reserves; increased food aid and commitments and financial assistance to help low-income food-deficit countries meet food-import requirements and emergency needs; arrangements to increase and co-ordinate aid to developing countries in maintaining food reserves; and measures to promote collective self-reliance through regional and other mutual aid schemes.

The Conference considered its programme of work for the 1980-1981 biennium and approved steps to decentralize FAO'S operations and to develop a Technical Co-operation Programme (TCP). It also confirmed the validity and effectiveness of the so-called FAO special action programmes, including those for food security, prevention of food losses, trypanosomiasis, exclusive economic zones, the control of the desert locust and other pests, and rural development.

The Conference decided that FAO'S study on long-term trends in agriculture, Agriculture: Toward 2000, should be submitted to the United Nations General Assembly and to the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy. It also approved proposals to follow up the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, held in July 1979 (see p. 500), and endorsed a programme of assistance for the development and management of fisheries in exclusive economic zones of up to 200 miles. It decided that, beginning in 1981, a World Food Day would be observed on 16 October, the anniversary of the founding of FAO.

On 12 November 1979, the Conference admitted Dominica and Samoa as new members of FAO. Saint Lucia was admitted on 26 November, bringing FAO'S membership to 147.

World food and agricultural situation

Estimates indicated that the increase in world food and agricultural production during 1979 would be the smallest since 1972, rendering the short-term situation more precarious than for some years. In the developed countries, forecasts indicated a decline in production, despite a large rise in the United States, while in the developing countries, production was expected to rise substantially only in China and Latin America. For developing countries as a whole, production in 1979 was expected to be more than offset by population growth.

¹ For further information about the activities of FAO, see the Director-General's biennial reports on the FAO Programme of Work and Budget and the Catalogue of FA Publications.

Over the period of the Second United Nations Development Decade (the 1970s), production in the developing countries increased by about 3 per cent a year, which was below the 4 per cent target set by the International Development Strategy. Food aid and external assistance for agriculture were much less than estimated requirements, and a fully effective system of world food security had not been established.

World cereal production was expected to be about 4 per cent below the 1978 figure, and it was estimated that cereal consumption would exceed production in 1979/1980. World carry-over stocks of cereals were expected to drop by 7 per cent by the close of the current 1979/1980 seasons.

Most of the increase in world agricultural export earnings in 1978 accrued to the developed countries, while the developing countries' share of those earnings continued its long-term decline.

Field programmes

The trend towards greater diversification of funding sources for FAO'S field programmes continued during 1979. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) remained the major source of funds, but its share in total FAO funding decreased from 68 per cent in 1974 to 58 per cent in 1979, reflecting the increasing importance of trust fund sources and the establishment of TCP, financed from FAO'S regular budget.

Field programme expenditures rose during the year from $190 million in 1978 to some $222 million in 1979, representing a clear increase in real terms. Of this total, UNDP accounted for $129 million, trust funds for $77 million and TCP for $16 million. At the end of the year, 2,817 projects were in operation, of which 1,385 were financed by UNDP, 1,147 by trust funds and 285 by TCP. Experts employed in the field totalled 2,173.

A special account set up to receive voluntary contributions towards FAO'S Action Programme for the Prevention of Food Losses received $1.2 million during the year, while the FAO International Fertilizer Supply Scheme helped to supply fertilizer valued at $7 million to developing countries. Under TCP, $1.4 million was allocated to 16 countries to combat African swine fever.

World Food Programme

The resources committed by the United Nations/FAO World Food Programme (WFP) since its inception in 1963 reached more than $4.3 billion during 1979. These had been used to finance 977 economic and social development projects in 109 countries and 428 emergency relief operations in over 90 countries. New projects totalling some $460 million were approved in 1979.

By the end of 1979, food-aid pledges to WFP for the period 1979-1980 exceeded $740 million, against a target of $950 million. A target of $1 billion was approved for the pledging period 1981-1982.

In 1979, contributions under the International Emergency Food Reserve reached 310,000 metric tons against a target of 500,000 tons. For the third consecutive year, shipments exceeded 1 million metric tons of food commodities.

(See also p. 665.)

World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development

The World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, sponsored by FAO, was held at Rome from 12 to 20 July 1979. The Conference adopted a Declaration of Principles and a Programme of Action by which it called for cooperation to devise more rational uses of land and labour as a prerequisite for the creation of new capital resources and for equitable growth. On their part, Governments undertook to consider the legal, institutional and policy changes necessary to ensure access to land, water and other natural resources by their rural populations. Calling upon the United Nations General Assembly to endorse the Programme of Action, the Conference recognized the special responsibilities of FAO as the lead agency in the field.

In November 1979, the Conference of FAO endorsed the Programme of Action and authorized FAO to take all necessary measures to assist member Governments to implement the Programme. (See also p. 500.)

FAO Investment Centre

The FAO Investment Centre continued to help developing countries to formulate viable investment projects in order to attract funds from multilateral and other financing institutions. By November 1979, the Centre had organized more than 270 missions to help developing countries draw up investment projects.

Projects financed by the institutions cooperating with FAO in 1979 covered rural development, irrigation, farm credit, grain storage, forestry, fisheries, livestock and agricultural research. The International Fund for Agricultural Development approved a loan of $12.5 million to Sierra Leone for rural development and a loan of $50 million to India for irrigation. Both projects were formulated with the help of the Centre.

At the end of 1979, membership of the FAO/Bankers' Programme numbered nearly 60 financing institutions, two thirds of them national banks in developing countries. Member institutions lent $20.6 million towards oil-palm production and processing projects in India, Peru and Thailand.

Freedom from Hunger Campaign

The Freedom from Hunger Campaign/Action for Development programme, set up by FAO, continued to assist rural people's organizations in gaining access to the expertise and resources necessary for the formulation and implementation of development projects on their own terms. As at October 1979, a total of 140 projects were in operation, representing a donor contribution of over $9 million.

Agricultural services

By the end of 1979, the FAO Farm Management Data Collection and Analysis System had been demonstrated in 28 developing countries. Farm surveys were conducted in various areas of the world to identify the internal and external constraints to small-farm development. Central banks and agricultural credit institutions were assisted in an effort to develop financial institutions appropriate to small farming.

An Advisory Group on Agro-Industries was set up in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, by FAO and the Economic Commission for Africa to promote industrialization in rural areas. In other efforts to promote industrialization, FAO introduced rational methods of storing and processing staple crops, fruit and vegetables in 25 countries of Africa, Asia and the Near East.

The development of products such as hides, skins, rubber and natural fibres with a potential for foreign exchange earnings was assisted by FAO, with projects operational in India, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan, Rwanda, Somalia, the Sudan, Turkey and Zambia.

By October 1979, more than 80 requests for assistance under FAO'S Action Programme for the Prevention of Food Losses had been received from developing countries, and some 60 projects had been approved for joint financing by FAO and member States. The Programme continued to emphasize improved farm and village storage, loss-assessment surveys, efficient grain drying, pest control and better systems of harvesting, processing and marketing.

Tenders for farm mechanization programmes valued at more than $20 million were evaluated by FAO on behalf of nine developing countries during the year; FAO also provided professional advice on types of equipment, investment opportunities, training, and the introduction of techniques suitable for small farming.

Land and water management

A primary objective of FAO'S assistance was a more accurate assessment of the extent, distribution and development potential of natural resources. Concurrently, efficient methods of soil and water management were promoted, together with the expanded use of chemical and organic fertilizers.

New techniques for the control of salinity and for drainage and reclamation were carried out in Asia and the Near East. A national training course in salinity prognosis was held at Baghdad, Iraq. New methods were used in evaluating the shared water resources of the Gulf States and the Arabian Peninsula. In the Republic of Korea, improvements in drainage were expected to bring some 100,000 hectares under a second annual crop of barley.

National soil conservation programmes were supported by FAO, which helped to organize training courses in Ghana, Panama, Paraguay, Thailand, Togo and the United Republic of Tanzania. It also supported programmes for the recycling of organic material for use in agriculture by means of biological nitrogen fixation.

The FAO Fertilizer Programme sponsored some 8,000 field trials and demonstrations in 18 countries, involving about 130,000 field personnel and small farmers. Sixty pilot schemes handling fertilizer distribution and credit for about 20,000 farmers were undertaken.

The FAO Remote Sensing Unit provided advice and assistance to member countries on the use of satellites to carry out surveys of land use, soil degradation and migratory pests.

Plant production and protection

During 1979, FAO continued to assist developing countries to establish appropriate cropping patterns and farming systems, collect crop genetic resources as a source of breeding material, increase the production of high-quality seed and strengthen crop-protection measures.

A regional project for the improvement and production of field food crops in more than 20 countries of the Near East and northern Africa pursued its co-operative approach to agronomic research by encouraging technical co-operation among developing and developed countries to produce higher-yielding crop varieties and to solve problems of irrigated and dry-land farming. An accelerated rice improvement programme, designed to increase the production of small farmers in Africa, Asia and Latin America, became operational during the year.

Training courses and seminars dealing with cereal production, horticulture and industrial crops were sponsored by FAO and supported by Belgium, Denmark and Sweden. A research pro gramme on olive pest control, undertaken in Greece with UNDP assistance, led to the development of a more efficient and economical control technique. An FAO mission also advised the Government of China on research and training programmes for the development of olive production. Plans were made for the regular exchange of information between Chinese and European research institutes.

The number of operational projects under FAO'S Seed Improvement and Development Programme increased from 82 in 1978 to 128 in 1979, with 199 experts and consultants in the field. Some 24,000 seed samples were dispatched by FAO to plant-breeding centres for trials under local environmental conditions. In addition, 1,400 tons of seed of improved varieties of wheat, rice, maize, sorghum, beans and vegetables were sent to nine developing countries.

Aerial and ground operations co-ordinated by FAO during the year succeeded in halting an upsurge of desert locusts in countries bordering the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden. By the end of 1979, desert locust numbers had declined to their lowest level since 1966.

Fisheries

Under the new regime of the sea, currently under discussion by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, 93 coastal States had established exclusive economic and fishing zones of up to 200 nautical miles from their coasts. In 1979, the FAO Conference approved a programme of assistance designed to help developing countries to manage and develop their fisheries and regulate catches by foreign vessels. Nearly $13 million for this programme was pledged by UNDP and other donors for the biennium 1980-1981.

During 1979, 149 FAO projects assisted more than 50 Governments to amplify training, feasibility studies, institution building, research and the development of small-scale fisheries. The FAO Indian Ocean Programme undertook fishery surveys in waters ranging from the Arabian Sea to the Bay of Bengal. The Bay of Bengal project for the development of small-scale fisheries, covering Bangladesh, India, Malaysia, Sri Lanka and Thailand, was established at Madras, India. It was complemented by a similar FAO project, financed by UNDP, in West and South Asia.

In the Atlantic, FAO assisted an interregional project in the east-central Atlantic to promote the fair and rational exploitation of shared stocks. The second phase of an FAO interregional project operating in the west-central Atlantic helped 26 countries to acquire experience in resource management, identification of opportunities, monitoring, and training at all levels.

The first regional fish-market information centre, established in Latin America with FAO assistance, was instrumental in opening up new export markets for an estimated 100,000 tons of fish and fish products valued at $75 million in 1979. Plans were started for similar projects in Africa and Asia.

Forestry

Counteracting the threat to livelihood and ecological balance posed by shrinking tropical forest cover, FAO helped member States to assess the patterns of destruction, conversion and replacement. A pilot project in Benin, Togo and the United Republic of Cameroon demonstrated that the forest and woodland vegetation cover could be monitored by simple methods, using conventional and new remote-sensing techniques.

In 1979, FAO'S forestry programme comprised 148 projects, some of which helped to counteract forest destruction in the countries of the Sahel, where drought and the impact of oil price rises had resulted in the destruction of remnants of forests, thereby increasing soil erosion. Planting programmes to provide timber for fuel and for land protection were supported by FAO during the year.

In another rehabilitation exercise, FAO assisted the Government of Viet Nam to revive its forest economy by carrying out forestry surveys and research projects and by helping to establish reforestation institutions. In Brazil, FAO provided the technical background to a massive investment programme designed to develop the world's largest tropical forest reserve.

The promotion of small-scale industry using simple techniques continued to receive FAO support. By the end of the year, a portfolio of 11 individual plant designs had been built up, covering the full range of mechanical wood products.

Livestock

The five-year preparatory phase of an African trypanosomiasis control programme, set up by FAO in collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and the Organization of African Unity, was completed in 1979. Training activities during the year included post-graduate courses in Africa and Europe, a training seminar on tsetse fly control and in-service training of junior control personnel. In association with the International Livestock Centre for Africa and the United Nations Environment Programme, FAO undertook a study of trypano-tolerant cattle, sheep and goats in 18 West and Central African countries.

Specialists and equipment were sent by TCP to 16 member countries in an effort to control outbreaks of African swine fever which were disrupting swine production. Training courses to improve diagnosis and control were supported by FAO, UNDP and the Inter-American Development Bank.

The European Commission for the Control of Foot-and-Mouth Disease and FAO completed a joint vaccination campaign in Bulgaria, Greece and Turkey, using 700,000 doses of vaccine. Technical assistance and vaccine supplies helped Malta to combat local outbreaks of the disease.

Nutrition

The primary role of improved nutrition in bringing about rural development was reflected in FAO'S support for the rural development programmes of national institutes that incorporated this principle, in Kenya, Malaysia (Sarawak), the Philippines, the Sudan, the Upper Volta and Zambia.

A joint project established by FAO with the Swedish International Development Authority developed methods of assessing the nutritional impact of development projects and of monitoring the nutritional status of populations in Kenya, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Zambia.

At the end of 1979, 117 nations were represented on the FAO/WHO Codex Alimentarius Commission, set up to develop international standards of consumer protection against health hazards, fraud and unfair practices in the food trade. The Commission approved a further 20 commodity standards and some 380 maximum limits for pesticide residues in raw food commodities.

Nuclear energy in agriculture

In 1979, FAO and IAEA jointly sponsored more than 250 agricultural research projects undertaken in national institutes of developing countries and technically supported by similar institutions in developed countries. The projects covered agronomy, soil science, irrigation, plant breeding, animal husbandry, protection of the environment, food preservation and chemical residues. In addition, scientists from developing countries were given advanced training on the use of isotope and radiation techniques in agriculture. More than 60 technical assistance projects were operational in some 45 developing countries at the end of 1979.

Research contracts were concluded during the year with 21 institutes in developing countries concerned with plant genetic research. In the field of livestock improvement, a joint project established by IAEA and the Government of Nigeria to control the tsetse fly became operational during the year.

Agricultural statistics

In preparation for the 1980 World Census of Agriculture, FAO set up training courses for statisticians from developing countries, at regional statistical institutes in Iraq, Japan and Uganda and at the International Statistical Programs Centre of the United States Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C. By the end of 1979, results from the 1970 Census had been published in 26 issues of FAO'S Census Bulletin. The Interlinked Computerized Storage and Processing System, the world's largest data bank of food and agricultural statistics, and the Fertilizer Data Centre were expanded and improved during 1979.

Publication s

By the end of 1979, 179 titles had appeared in the FAO Technical Papers series, and two new subseries, on environment and fertilizers, were in preparation. A publication entitled The State of Food and Agriculture was issued. The organization issued its annual Commodity Review and Outlook, the Animal Health Yearbook, the Yearbook of Fishery Statistics, the Production Yearbook, the Trade Yearbook, the Yearbook of Forest Products and the Fertilizer Yearbook. Quarterlies included the Plant. Protection Bulletin, the World Animal Review and Unasylva, the forestry magazine. Ceres, a review of agricultural, economic and social aspects of development, appeared on a bimonthly basis, and Food and Nutrition was issued twice during the year. Monthlies included the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics.

Twenty-two new depositary libraries were designated, all of them in developing countries, bringing the number of such libraries to 240 throughout the world.

The total number of staff employed by FAO at the end of August 1979 at its headquarters and regional and country offices was 4,487, of whom 1,637 (drawn from 127 countries) were in the Professional and higher categories and 2,850 in the General Service category. In addition, field project personnel, working in 128 countries, comprised 2,016 staff members in the Professional and higher categories and 474 in the General Service category. Of a total of 348 associate experts working for the organization, 310 were in the field and 38 at headquarters and regional offices.

Budget

The twentieth session of the FAO Conference, which met in November 1979, approved a budget of $278,740,000 to finance the FAO regular programme for the 1980-1981 biennium, representing in real terms an increase of 2.6 per cent over the 1978-1979 biennium.

Chapter IV

United Nation's Educational, Scientifi c and Cultura l Organizatio n (UNESCO)

During 1979, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)¹ gave priority to encouraging the development of cultural and communications policies in its member States and to scientific and technical education so as to promote education for international understanding, peace and disarmament. Among its wide range of activities in the humanities, the natural and social sciences and communications, UNESCO devoted special attention to activities connected with the International Year of the Child (1979) and to the removal of obstacles to the flow of information.

¹ For further information about the activities of UNESCO prior to 1979 see the annual reports of the Director-General of UNESCO to the General Conference.

During the year, the following States joined UNESCO, bringing the number of member States to 147: Dominica (9 January) and Equatorial Guinea (29 November). The organization also had one associate member, the British Eastern Caribbean Group.

Educatio n

The educational programme of UNESCO for 1979 continued to follow the main lines of policy laid down by the twentieth UNESCO General Conference, held in 1978, stressing long-term educational issues, the concept of lifelong education in and out of school, the link between education and productive work, the promotion of scientific and technical education for peaceful uses, and the struggle against illiteracy by the extension of primary education and the development of adult education.

Participants from 118 member States attended the thirty-seventh International Conference on Education, convened by UNESCO at Geneva. The Conference, which commemorated the fiftieth anniversary of the International Bureau of Education, devoted some of its discussions to current trends in child education and welfare.

In collaboration with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, UNESCO continued to plan and provide educational programmes for Palestinian refugees. School programmes for African refugees were drawn up in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity.

In co-operation with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Organization of American States, UNESCO organized at Mexico City a regional conference of ministers of education and of economic planning from member States in Latin America and the Caribbean. The conference discussed the campaign against illiteracy in the region, the extension of primary education and ways of introducing science and technology into the primary curriculum. It adopted the Mexico City Declaration to act as a frame of reference for future action.

As part of the policy of decentralization, UNESCO's regional bureaux for education increased their activities relating to programmes of study and research, consultancy services to member States, educational training, information and documentation, and support for operational projects. In 1979, UNESCO contributed to 384 national, regional and subregional operational projects with financial assistance from sources such as the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), regional development banks and funds-in-trust operations.

In the European region, representatives of 35 countries met in December to adopt the text of a convention on mutual recognition of higher education studies, diplomas and degrees.

The International Institute for Educational Planning and the UNESCO Institute for Education continued to strengthen their international training and research activities at the national and regional levels.

Natura 1 science s

During the year, UNESCO continued its efforts to harness the resources of science and technology for the benefit of developing countries by assisting member States in planning, training and research activities. The encouragement of collaborative projects among the industrialized countries also formed a part of UNESCO'S work.

Throughout the first half of 1979, UNESCO continued to co-operate on preparatory work for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held at Vienna from 20 to 31 August 1979 (see p. 633), by organizing and taking part in regional and national preparatory meetings. At a meeting held in May, a number of leading scientists drew up papers for submission to the Conference on behalf of UNESCO

In April 1979, UNESCO held at Paris an international symposium on earthquake prediction, attended by some 200 scientists from 50 countries. The symposium was the first to adopt a comprehensive approach to the subject, taking into account all the scientific, technical, social, economic, administrative, human and institutional aspects of the problem. A panel of experts, meeting immediately after the symposium, drew up recommendations for UNESCO action in the field.

An international forum was held in Spain in April to discuss world energy problems. In December, a symposium on post-graduate engineering education for developing countries was held at Paris, attended by 145 participants from 50 countries. Other meetings which took place during the year were concerned with the environmental aspects of engineering education, continuing education, technician training, cooperation between educational services and industry, solar energy and housing.

At its third session in November 1979, the Intergovernmental Council of the International Hydrological Programme approved the second phase of the Programme, covering the years 1981-1983, which included four major scientific and two major educational projects. At the end of the year, 96 national committees and focal points for the Programme had been established.

By the end of 1979, the Intergovernmental Programme on Man and the Biosphere had established national committees in 94 States. Some 900 field programmes were in operation in 73 countries, and biosphere reserves had been established on 177 sites in 46 countries.

Social science s

The expansion of UNESCO's social sciences sector had continued since its establishment in 1976, in response to world-wide development of the social sciences. In co-operation with international governmental and non-governmental organizations, UNESCO focused on strengthening national and regional institutions, on providing Governments and other bodies with the basic techniques of planning, and on training and the exchange of information.

Special emphasis was placed on regional organizations. In 1979, UNESCO'S work programme included two meetings on priorities for the social sciences, one for Latin America and the Caribbean as a whole, and one for the English-speaking Caribbean and Suriname.

Work on analytical methods was concerned with strengthening national capacity to prepare and use socio-economic indicators and to develop modelling techniques and methods of evaluation. A training workshop on global model-building was held and instruction was given on the use of the UNESCO Educational Simulation Model.

Research for development included studies on popular participation in rural development and agrarian reform, the transfer of knowledge as an aid to development, and the situation and role of children in different cultures.

Environmental activities concentrated on public participation, for which UNESCO developed mass media information programmes designed to inform the public on environmental issues important to their lives. Other activities were concerned with public participation in the rehabilitation of historic centres and the integrated training of planners and administrators of human settlements.

Projects to improve communication on population issues, including the training of journalists, continued during 1979. Work also continued on UNESCO'S world-wide programme of studies on rural-urban migration trends, on the participation of women in society, on projects in developing countries designed to involve young people in development, and on projects on behalf of the disadvantaged young.

Work continued on an analysis of human rights violations, including apartheid, and the conditions for a constructive peace. Activities focused on the teaching of human rights, the establishment of specialized courses in human rights at universities and other institutions, and the creation of an international network of information and documentation centres on questions of peace.

In fundamental and interdisciplinary research, topics included the evolution of a new philosophy of development, the creation of conditions for the spontaneous development of science and technology, a study on ways of encouraging contact between cultures, and the use of games to reduce inner conflicts in children.

The International Social Science Journal continued to be a major forum for debate and for reporting research findings, as well as providing documentation from the social sciences data bank.

Culture

In 1979, UNESCO'S programme of research and analysis on cultural topics included work on the linguistic and historical aspects of culture and the cultural implications of contemporary lifestyles. Studies also focused on the interaction between neighbouring cultures, cultural adaptation and cultural comparisons.

An increasing number of international campaigns for the protection of the cultural heritage included a special appeal to safeguard the heritage of the Montenegro district of Yugoslavia, where severe earthquake damage had occurred. Efforts were continued during the year to promote public awareness of the objectives of the 1972 International Convention concerning the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage and to encourage contributions to the World Heritage Fund.

In the field of the creative arts, work began during the year on a long-term project to write a universal history of music. At the regional level, a biennial festival of the music of Latin America and the Caribbean was inaugurated. In preparation for the International Year of Disabled Persons (1981), UNESCO conducted international surveys to establish the range and extent of artistic activities for disabled persons.

In connexion with the International Year of the Child, an exhibition of children's books from 70 countries was held at UNESCO headquarters in Paris. Seminars and training courses on the publishing of children's books and magazines were held and co-publication programmes for such books were launched in Africa and Latin America, following a pattern successfully established in Asia.

The first in a series of regional seminars on national book development strategies was held in Latin America. The organization also assisted in the translation and publication of some 40 works by African, Asian, European and Latin American authors.

Communication s

The International Commission for the Study of Communication Problems, established by UNESCO in 1977, continued work during the year on the preparation of a report to be submitted to the General Conference of UNESCO in 1980.

The Intergovernmental Conference on Communication Policies in Asia and Oceania, which was held in Malaysia in February 1979, discussed communication policies, needs and facilities in the region, and the problem of professional training. Preparatory meetings were held at Freetown (Sierra Leone), Dakar (Senegal) and Nairobi (Kenya) in preparation for an intergovernmental conference on communication policies in Africa, to be held in 1980.

Other meetings held during the year included one on the right to communicate, held at Manila, Philippines, and expert meetings on the reduction of telecommunication tariffs for news exchanges, on responsible and comprehensive reporting of international news and on the protection of journalists.

Work continued on the establishment of regional news agencies in Africa, Asia and the Caribbean. A new project for the exchange of feature material in Latin America was also launched. The number of funds-in-trust agreements enabling UNESCO to initiate communication development projects in developing countries increased during the year.

General Informatio n Programm e

The General Information Programme of UNESCO, concerned with the development of information systems in the fields of scientific and technological information and documentation, provided services to libraries and archives at international, national and regional levels. Some of these activities are carried out under the World Science Information System, an international network of committees or centres established to help developing countries evolve their information systems.

In May/June 1979, the Intergovernmental Conference on Scientific and Technological Information for Development was convened at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, to discuss ways of improving the flow of scientific and technological information to developing countries. Among topics discussed were imbalances in the circulation of such information and the impact of new technologies on the development of information systems.

Participation Programme

With funding from the UNESCO Participation Programme, member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations continued to participate in activities for achieving the technical assistance objectives laid down by the General Conference. As at 31 December 1979, obligations totalling $7,659,834 had been approved from the Programme's budget for 1979-1980. Requests totalling $38,686,817 were received.

The table below shows the distribution of these obligations by sector.

Budget

The 1978 session of the General Conference of UNESCO approved a budget of $303 million for the two-year period 1979-1980. The Conference fixed the level of the Working Capital Fund at $16.8 million; amounts to be advanced by member States were to be calculated according to their percentage contribution. Amounts allocated are shown in the table below.

Secretaria t

As at 31 December 1979, the total number of full-time staff employed by UNESCO on permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments was 3,293 drawn from 127 nationalities. Of these, 1,407 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,886 were in the General Service and Maintenance Worker categories.

Of the Professional staff, 523 were experts serving in the field; 393 of the other categories were also employed in the field.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

During 1979, the World Health Organization (WHO)¹ announced that smallpox had been eliminated throughout the world, an unprecedented achievement in the field of public health.

Seychelles became a member of WHO on 11 September 1979, bringing the membership to 152, plus two associate members.

The thirty-second World Health Assembly, which met at Geneva from 7 to 25 May 1979, discussed ways of implementing the Declaration adopted by the International Conference on Primary Health Care, held at Alma-Ata, USSR, in September 1978, which emphasized the importance of primary health care as an integral part of development and called for the development of national, regional and global strategies to achieve health for all by the year 2000. The Assembly endorsed the guidelines for formulating such strategies, drawn up by WHO, and set forth in its publication Formulating Strategies for Health for All by the Year 2000, stressing that strategies should be formulated first and foremost by countries themselves.

In November 1979, the United Nations General Assembly endorsed the Declaration of Alma-Ata and appealed to Member States to carry out the actions called for in the Declaration, following the guidelines drawn up by WHO (see p. 479).

During the year, WHO participated in a colloquium to discuss scientific and technological contributions to development problems, which preceded the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held at Vienna in August 1979 (see p. 633). A WHO background paper submitted to the Conference drew attention to the lack of regular health care suffered by people in many parts of the world.

Research promotion and development

As part of its policy of decentralization, WHO established six regional advisory committees on medical research to complement the work of the global Advisory Committee on Medical Research. The committees were to help to implement decentralization by strengthening national research capacity and establishing national and regional research priorities. The World Health Assembly endorsed this policy and urged member States to strengthen co-operation in research.

The Advisory Committee on Medical Research met in November 1979 to consider progress reports from the regional committees concerning the co-ordination of research in biomedical information, diarrhoeal diseases, health services and nutrition. Sub-committees were formed to consider career structures in research, mental health and allied neuropsychiatric problems in developing countries, and research administration. The Advisory Committee also reviewed special programmes of research and training in human reproduction and in tropical diseases.

Special programme of research and training in human reproduction

The special programme of research, development and research training in human reproduction, involving scientists from 70 countries, 46 of them developing countries, continued activities relating to research on: the safety and effectiveness of birth-control methods; the development of new techniques of fertility regulation; health service research on family planning; studies on the diagnosis and treatment of infertility; and research training and the strengthening of collaborating institutions, 27 of which were located in developing countries. Research results were disseminated widely to the clinical and scientific community, and also, in the form of guidelines, to public health authorities.

The scope of health services research was increased with studies conducted in Canada, Colombia, Egypt, India, Kenya, Malaysia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Turkey, the United Kingdom and Venezuela.

Funding for the special programme in 1979, which was provided by voluntary contributions totalling $16.5 million from Canada, Denmark, Finland, India, Mexico, Norway, Sweden, Thailand, the United Kingdom, and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA), fell short of requirements by some $6 million, causing a number of activities to be discontinued or delayed.

Special programme for research and training in tropical diseases

The special programme for research and training in tropical diseases made progress in the development of new and improved methods for the control of the six diseases covered (malaria, schistosomiasis, filariasis, trypanosomiasis, leishmaniasis and leprosy) and steps were taken to strengthen the research capability of the countries affected. As of 31 December 1979, the programme had supported 614 research and training projects.

Obligations for the special programme, which is supported by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), increased from $17.3 million in 1978 to $23.0 million in 1979. Contributions increased to $21.6 million during the year.

Developmen t of comprehensive health services

Family health

In May 1979, the World Health Assembly approved changes in family health policy away from curative and rehabilitation services with limited coverage and towards a concept of family self-help, supported by both traditional and community workers. The Assembly urged member States to ensure that appropriate national resources were available for maternal and child health care and to promote direct and massive action in line with the concept of primary health care, supported by the community, facilitating intersectoral collaboration and utilizing all community workers, including traditional birth attendants.

The main focus of the family health programme was at the country level, where WHO collaborated with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and UNFPA to strengthen training and management and to support programmes of maternal and child health and family planning in nearly 80 countries.

At the regional level, the regional committee for Africa held a special exhibition to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child.² In Europe, the regional committee discussed a medium-term programme for maternal and child health, while in the Eastern Mediterranean region, traditional practices affecting the health of women and children were examined.

In October 1979, a joint WHO/UNICEF meeting, attended by representatives of Governments, international and non-governmental organizations, individual scientists and representatives of the infant-food industry, made practical recommendations on the encouragement and support of breast-feeding, appropriate weaning practices and the marketing of infant formula and weaning foods, the need to strengthen training and information, and the social and health status of women.

Activities in connexion with human nutrition focused on improving knowledge at the local level. A joint WHO/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) consultation held during the year discussed the role of carbohydrates in human nutrition, with special emphasis on the feeding of infants and young children, and reviewed the influence of carbohydrates on the development of caries, diabetes and hypertension.

Traditional medicine

During 1978-1979, traditional medicine assumed an important part in the strategy of attaining health for all by the year 2000. In response to world-wide interest, a global programme on traditional medicine was initiated, capable of being implemented at the regional and country levels. An expert advisory panel was established, bringing together medical practitioners and experts from other fields such as pharmacologists, sociologists, anthropologists, traditional healers, nurses, midwives, traditional birth attendants and acupuncturists.

At its January 1979 session, the WHO Executive Board endorsed the programme and called for its extension.

Mental health

The mental health programme was expanded in 1979 to cover not only prevention and management of psychiatric disorders but also several new areas of work concerned with neurological and psychosomatic disorders, alcohol and drug dependence, the application of mental health knowledge in general health care, and the psychosocial aspects of health. At its May 1979 session, the World Health Assembly decided to establish a special account for the mental health programme within the Voluntary Fund for Health Promotion. The Assembly recognized that alcohol abuse ranked among the world's major public health problems and called for the strengthening of national and international programmes to combat it.

Regional mental health activities increased during the year. In the African region, a mental health action group met in May 1979, and national co-ordinating committees were formed in Botswana, Lesotho, Rwanda, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia. In the Americas, work began in 1979 on the mental health problems of children, and programmes for the early stimulation of children at risk were jointly promoted with UNICEF in 10 countries.

In the European region, the first regional meeting of national mental health advisers was heldinNovember.InSouthEastAsia,anintercountry workshop on mental retardation was held during the year. In the Eastern Mediterranean region, Afghanistan, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Oman, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic were helped to restructure their psychiatric facilities and develop manpower resources.

Essential drugs

The World Health Assembly, at its 1979 session, decided to establish a special action programme on essential drugs in support of countries' efforts to obtain sufficient supplies to meet the health needs of their populations.

An expert committee on the selection of essential drugs met in July 1979 to review a list of such drugs first drawn up in 1977, and to prepare information sheets on their use. During the year, a number of major drug manufacturers agreed to provide certain essential drugs at low cost to the least developed countries, in order to improve their public health coverage.

Activities at the regional level included a meeting of ministers of health in the South Pacific subregion to consider joint purchasing, storage and distribution of drugs. The Association of South East Asian Nations met in November to discuss technical co-operation on drug legislation, evaluation and quality assurance. In the Caribbean area, a regional drug-testing laboratory was established.

Assistance continued to be provided to health laboratories at the primary health care level, particularly with regard to training and the promotion of inexpensive and reliable equipment.

Workers' health

The 1979 session of the World Health Assembly urged member States to give special attention to occupational health care in work places as a contribution to achieving health for all by the end of the century. During the year, WHO continued to prepare guidelines for the organization of occupational health care services for workers in agriculture and in small industries.

Health of the elderly

An interregional planning and co-ordinating committee met in 1979 to discuss the preparation of a global health care programme for the elderly, with the Regional Office for Europe as its focal point. The World Health Assembly decided to entrust to the European Office preparations for the World Assembly on the Elderly, to be held in 1982 (see p. 987).

Diseas e preventio n and contro l

Diarrhoeal diseases

At a meeting of the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy, held in January 1979, UNICEF pledged full support for national diarrhoeal disease control programmes as an integral part of primary health care. As a result, UNICEF provided supplies of oral rehydration salts and also supported local production of them. About 60 countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America prepared plans for diarrhoeal disease control during 1978 and 1979.

The World Bank and UNDP continued to support research into diarrhoeal diseases; global scientific working groups were set up to review knowledge and set research priorities in such areas as vaccine development, child care and environmental health.

Leprosy

In 1979, the World Health Assembly called on member States to allocate adequate resources for carrying out effective leprosy control programmes. It also called on WHO to develop further leprosy research as part of the special programme for research and training in tropical diseases.

The campaign to eradicate leprosy, afflicting some 10 million people throughout the world, concentrated on the co-operative development of effective leprosy programmes within national health programmes, the training of multidisciplinary health personnel, and increased research efforts under the special programme. In the African region, participants from nine countries attended a consultation held in November at Monrovia, Liberia, on ways of integrating specialized leprosy and tuberculosis activities into general health services.

Malaria

At the beginning of 1979, a global malaria action programme was established as a cooperative effort between member States affected or threatened by malaria, supported by WHO and by international and bilateral agencies. The programme was designed to promote and support an expanded training programme, enabling member States to undertake the field research necessary to put their malaria control programmes on a sound basis. An advisory committee on malaria was set up to suggest ways of monitoring activities under the global programme.

With assistance from WHO, the antimalaria programmes of Algeria, Bangladesh, Colombia, Haiti, Pakistan, Thailand and Turkey, and a falciparum malaria programme in India were assessed.

In 1979, the World Health Assembly decided that a special task force should be established to help States in the African region to implement the region's antimalaria programme. A seminar was organized by the Government of Mauritius, with the participation of other islands of the Indian Ocean, to consider ways of preventing the return of malaria into their territories.

In the South East Asian region, the number of malaria cases reported declined, but the situation remained critical because of the resistance of Plasmodium falciparum strains to control by drugs. A regional advisory panel was established in the Eastern Mediterranean region, where Cyprus, Israel and Lebanon remained free from malaria, but where a rise in cases was reported in Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Smallpox

In December 1979, the Global Commission for the Certification of Smallpox Eradication, which was established in 1978 to issue certificates of eradication to countries where no cases of smallpox had been reported for at least two years, concluded that smallpox had been eradicated throughout the world and that there was no evidence it would return as an endemic disease. The Commission recommended that smallpox vaccination should be discontinued except for investigators at special risk but that stocks of smallpox vaccine should be maintained in long-term storage.

Tuberculosis and respiratory infections

The World Health Assembly expressed concern at the continuing high mortality from acute respiratory infections, particularly in children. Such infections were estimated to cause over 2 million deaths every year, with a further half million deaths resulting from tuberculosis.

An expert group on acute viral respiratory diseases, which met in 1979, recommended that national influenza centres should extend their scope to include other respiratory diseases. In the Western Pacific region, the control programme for acute respiratory infections focused initially on Fiji, Papua New Guinea and the Philippines. A regional advisory panel was set up to review the programme and promote research.

Yellow fever

The World Health Assembly, at its 1979 session, drew attention to the continuing need for surveillance and control of yellow fever and other communicable diseases of epidemic potential. Outbreaks of yellow fever occurred in Africa and in the Americas, where the risk of urban yellow fever increased.

Environmenta 1health

The World Health Assembly reviewed the WHO medium-term programme for the promotion of environmental health, covering the period from 1978 to 1983, and urged member States to take full advantage of multi-sector participation and the support of multi-disciplinary agencies. The Assembly urged that member States give priority to providing safe water and sanitation in accordance with the targets set for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, 1981-1990.

In 1978, WHO and the World Bank had carried out assessments of countries' ability to formulate national plans for the Decade and to develop their water supply and sanitation systems. As a result of manpower shortages and other restraints revealed by the assessments, WHO and other organizations within the United Nations system, such as UNDP, UNICEF, FAO and the World Bank, established a steering committee, for which WHO provided the secretariat, to create a co-ordinated approach to the management of individual programmes and to bring together representatives of Governments and funding institutions.

An international programme on chemical safety was initiated in 1979, based on a network of national institutions and a WHO central unit, and supported by extrabudgetary contributions. The International Agency for Research on Cancer agreed to act as the lead institution for cancer-causing chemicals, and a number of international organizations agreed to collaborate and, in some cases, to co-sponsor the programme.

In preparation for the revised edition of the WHO publication International Standards for Drinking-water, groups of experts convened by the WHO Regional Office for Europe studied the health significance of chemical and radioactive contaminants of drinking-water and standards of its microbiological quality.

At the end of 1979, WHO had established 170 air-quality monitoring stations in 46 countries. A network of some 330 water-quality monitoring stations had also been established in nearly 70 member States. Under the environmental radiation-monitoring programme, research into methods of monitoring exposure to both ionizing radiation and to chemicals was begun.

Health manpowe r developmen t

The implementation of the WHO medium-term programme for health manpower development, 1978-1983, made progress during the year. A review of some programme activities was carried out in the light of the principles adopted at the 1978 International Conference on Primary Health Care.

The training of manpower to support primary health care continued to receive emphasis. The UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy, at its January 1979 meeting, reviewed the programme of support to training in maternal and child health care within primary health care. The training strategy involved the use of multipurpose workers, extensive field training, and curricula based on community needs and priorities.

As at 31 December 1979, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO stood at 4,378 on permanent and fixed-term contracts. Of these, 1,630 staff members, drawn from 115 nationalities, were in the Professional and higher categories and 2,748 were in the General Service and related categories. Of the total number of staff, 215 were in posts financed by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control.

Budget

The thirty-second World Health Assembly authorized charges against casual income not exceeding $15 million to meet additional costs of implementing the 1979 programme budget resulting from currency fluctuations. The total effective working budget for 1979 thus remained at $182,730,000.

In accordance with its 1977 decision to introduce biennial budgeting, the Assembly approved a budget of $427,290,000 for the biennium 1980-1981, an increase of nearly $73 million over the two years 1978 and 1979. The budget was allocated as follows:

Chapter VI

Internationa 1 Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)¹ and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), continued during the fiscal year 1 July 1978 to 30 June 1979 to assist developing countries in a deteriorating world economic situation.

At the 1979 Board of Governors' meetings at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, the President of the Bank said that the investments the Bank had helped to finance in the rural sector over the past five years were expected to raise the incomes of some 60 million of the world's poorest people. The Bank currently made available over 40 per cent of all official external assistance to the agricultural sector and more than 75 per cent of that investment over the past five years had been directed towards increasing food production. All countries would have to make policy choices in such areas as population growth, food production, employment creation, reducing absolute poverty and expanding international trade and financial flows if fundamental development objectives were to be realized.

Membership in the Bank rose to 134 with the admission of Solomon Islands (22 September 1978) and Cape Verde (20 November 1978).

Lendin g operation s

In the fiscal year ending 30 June 1979, the World Bank made 142 loans amounting to $6,989 million to 44 countries, an increase of $891.3 million over fiscal year 1978. This brought the cumulative total of loan commitments by the Bank since its inception in 1946 to $51,697.2 million.

The following tables summarize World Bank lending in fiscal year 1979 by area and purpose.

Agriculture and rural development

The Bank continued its commitment to rural development, making 41 loans in fiscal 1979 amounting to $1,568.1 million in 25 countries, This figure included a $25 million supplement to a previous loan to Mexico for an irrigation and flood-control project which was not counted as a separate lending operation.

Efforts continued in support of projects directly benefiting the rural poor. Indonesia received $90 million to help resettle 30,000 of the country's poorest families on newly created farms, and Kenya was granted $72 million to assist some 10,800 smallholder families growing sugarcane. In Mexico, a loan of $92 million was for a project to benefit more than 20,000 farm families by irrigating and draining saline lands.

Energy

Three projects were assisted in fiscal 1979 at a total cost of $82.4 million. A $75 million loan was made to Egypt to finance part of the foreign exchange costs of gathering, processing and transporting gas from oil fields in the Gulf of Suez. A $4.9 million loan was made to Thailand to develop the country's natural gas resources.

Turkey received $2.5 million to develop better techniques of oil recovery at the Bati Raman oil field.

Industrial development and finance

The Bank made 16 loans totalling $628.6 million in fiscal 1979 to assist development finance companies in 15 countries. The largest borrowers were Mexico's Fondo de Equipamiento Industrial ($175 million), the Korea Development Finance Corporation of the Republic of Korea ($100 million), and Privredna Banka Sarajevo, Stopanska Banka Skopje and Investiciona Banka Titograd of Yugoslavia ($60 million).

Industry

The Bank made 11 loans amounting to $721 million in 10 countries during the fiscal year. India was the largest borrower ($250 million) for a $739.3 million project to construct a fertilizer and chemicals plant. Romania was granted a loan to develop chemical products, and Jordan and Morocco received loans for mining. Brazil was assisted with a loan to finance an aluminium smelter plant and the United Republic of Tanzania received $30 million towards a $251.7 million project to construct a pulp and paper mill and develop the logging industry.

Four non-project loans totalling $301.5 mil lion were made in fiscal 1979. Guyana was lent $5 million to finance imports in support of economic development. Loans of $31.5 million and $115 million were granted to Jamaica and Peru, respectively, to finance imports of raw materials, intermediate goods and spare parts. The loan to Peru also went towards agriculture, electricity generation, mining, forestry and preventive health programmes. Turkey was assisted with a $150 million loan to finance the import of plant protection materials, fertilizer and raw materials,

Population and nutrition

One loan totalling $17 million was granted for a population project in fiscal 1979. The loan was made to Malaysia for a second population and family health project to help strengthen the national family planning programme, with the goal of reducing the population growth rate to 2 per cent by 1985 in peninsular Malaysia. The loan also went towards the extension of family planning services to Sabah and Sarawak.

Power

Thirteen power development projects in 12 countries were assisted in fiscal 1979, at a total cost of $872.5 million. Projects in Brazil, Jordan and Morocco were to bring electric power for the first time to more than 760,000 poor people living in low-income urban areas and in rural villages. A number of power projects in Costa Rica, Egypt, Honduras, Jordan and Thailand were co-financed. The largest loan ($175 million) went to Indonesia for preparatory work on a thermal power station in West Java.

Two loans totalling $110 million were made by the Bank to improve telecommunications and telephone services during fiscal 1979 Kenya received $20 million to extend local tele phone services and long-distance facilities and to provide telecommunications facilities to poorly served rural areas. A $90 million loan was made to Thailand to improve telecommunications services through the expansion of regular lines and long-distance links.

Thailand

The Bank granted $66.7 million for four tour ism loans in fiscal 1979. An $8 million loan to Barbados helped to provide tourist accommodation to lease to Barbadian hotel operators, sharing common facilities and services.

The Dominican Republic was assisted by a line of credit of $25 million, provided for the construction of hotel rooms, restaurants, shops and other facilities.

A $19.5 million loan was made to Honduras to improve two airports, establish an environ mental control plan for Roatan Island and en hance the Copan archaeological park.

The Ivory Coast received a $14.2 million loan to create some 3,000 permanent jobs through the provision of tourist accommodations in Abidjan and other parts of the country.

Transportation

Twenty countries received 21 loans amounting to $1,430.9 million to help develop their transportation systems during fiscal 1979. A $126 million loan was made to Algeria to help finance the foreign exchange costs of a maintenance programme for 321 kilometres of roads, and to provide technical assistance for road development. The Republic of Korea was granted a loan of $143 million for a fourth highway project to construct and improve 1,230 kilometres of roads throughout the country.

The United Republic of Cameroon received $27 million to construct a marshalling yard and other railway facilities and equipment. Turkey was granted $75 million for improvements to 10 of its main ports. In Senegal, the Bank provided $7 million to modernize three airports, including the one at Dakar, in support of the tourist industry.

Urban development

Seven loans, totalling $297.5 million, were made in fiscal 1979 to benefit poor people in urban areas.

Brazil received two loans, of $93 million and $70 million, to improve living conditions and facilities in two north-eastern states, in greater São Paulo and in eight medium-sized cities. In Colombia, more than 95,000 people in Cartagena were helped by a loan of $13.5 million for an urban development project.

Indonesia received $54 million to provide water and sanitation services and to improve educational and health facilities for some 4.5 million low-income people in five urban areas. The Philippines was granted a $32 million loan for urban development in Manila.

In Thailand, $16 million was provided to improve urban transport in Bangkok. Tunisia received $19 million to upgrade settlements and provide education and employment in Sfax and Tunis.

Water supply and sewerage

The Bank made 13 loans totalling $647.3 million for water supply and sewerage projects in fiscal 1979.

Nigeria was assisted with a $92 million loan to expand the Kaduna city-water supply system and to provide about 400,000 people in low-income areas with 250 public standpipes.

A $31 million loan to Colombia was to supply water to some 473,000 people in 19 cities and sewerage facilities to 654,000 people in 14 cities.

A loan of $88 million was made to the Philippines to provide 4 million people in metropolitan Manila with safe water. A further loan of $16 million was to provide water to 1,000 rural communities and 50 provincial cities.

The consultation process between the Bank and its borrowers continued to be a major vehicle for providing technical assistance to developing member countries on socio-economic development policies, national and regional planning, and project work.

Technical assistance was also provided under the Bank's loans and credits. In fiscal year 1979, 181 lending operations included provision for technical assistance. Five loans totalling $29.7 million were made exclusively for technical assistance to Bangladesh, Burundi, Indonesia, Togo and Zambia during the year, in comparison with fiscal 1978 when three, loans aggregating $20.3 million were made.

Technical assistance continued to be provided to countries not requiring financial support. In fiscal 1979, the Bank agreed, on a reimbursable basis, to assist Kuwait to prepare a set of over-all economic and sectoral long-range development strategies. The implementation of similar arrangements agreed to in previous years with oil-exporting countries continued.

The Bank continued to act as executing agency for a growing number of projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). During fiscal 1979, an additional 37 projects were approved, involving commitments of $42.9 million. These included a global programme to test and demonstrate small-scale, solar-powered pumping stations, a study of low-cost water and sanitation methods, and a study of river-valley development in Benin and Togo.

A number of UNDP-financed projects executed by the Bank became suitable for investment during calendar year 1978, generating Bank lending of $401.5 million.

The Bank continued work on UNDP-financed economic planning advisory projects in Liberia, Malaysia, the Philippines, the Sudan, Swaziland, Uganda and Zaire, and also on projects financed by IDA credits in Burundi and Mauritania. During fiscal 1979, two new UNDP-financed projects executed by the Bank became operational in Jamaica and Lesotho.

Economi c Developmen t Institut e

During fiscal year 1979, the Economic Development Institute (EDI) conducted 11 courses and three seminars in Washington, D. C., for 400 participants. It also sponsored or supported 33 courses overseas for 850 officials concerned with economic affairs in developing countries. As part of its policy of transferring teaching capacity to the field, EDI included in its courses held in Washington an increasing number of participants concerned with in-service training in their own countries.

Co-operative programmes with training institutions continued. Thus, EDI assisted the Nigerian Institute of Economic and Social Research to develop training courses for officials preparing Nigeria's fourth national five-year development plan. The Institute also joined local institutions and Government departments in giving courses on: general projects in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Spain; industrial projects in Bangladesh and Iraq; transportation projects in Egypt, Indonesia, Pakistan and Romania; and urban development in India. In India and Pakistan, two courses were held on special topics concerned with development policy analysis, decision-making and implementation. In Egypt, a one-week seminar for senior transportation officials was jointly sponsored by EDI and the Egyptian Ministry of Transport.

Developmen t aid co-ordinatio n

The Bank continued its efforts to organize various aid co-ordination mechanisms for developing countries receiving assistance from bilateral and multilateral sources. In fiscal year 1979, the Bank sponsored meetings of 10 groups co-ordinating aid—the country groups for Bangladesh, Burma, India, Kenya, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka and Thailand, and the Caribbean Group for Co-operation in Economic Development.

Financin g activitie s

During fiscal year 1979, the Bank borrowed the equivalent of $5,085 million, of which the equivalent of $1,171 million was raised in the Federal Republic of Germany, the equivalent of $1,702 million in Japan, the equivalent of $1,546 million in Switzerland and $666 million in the United States, all but $16 million of the last sum being raised through two international placements.

Total borrowings during the year included 24 issues publicly offered or privately placed by the Bank throughout the world, totalling the equivalent of $3,440 million, or 68 per cent of total funds raised. The remainder was raised through 10 issues placed with official sources, such as member Governments of the World Bank, central banks and Government institutions, totalling $1,629 million, and by the $16 million raised in the United States market.

The investment market in Japan was the largest supplier of borrowed funds during fiscal 1979. In that market, the largest single public offering of bonds made by the Bank in any market raised the equivalent of about $366 million. In another transaction, the Bank made the largest private placement by any issuer in the Japanese syndicated loan market. At the end of fiscal year 1979, the Bank also concluded the largest combined long-term borrowing operation in its history, totalling the equivalent of $524.2 million.

In the market of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Bank concluded its largest Deutsche mark multi-tranche borrowing operation, raising the equivalent of some $436 million. In Switzerland, the Bank made its largest public offerings to date, through two issues amounting to the equivalent of about $295 million.

Outstanding obligations of the Bank increased by $3,678 million, to $26,280 million, as at 30 June 1979. On that date, estimates indicated that 25 per cent of the obligations was held by investors in the Federal Republic of Germany, 22 per cent in the United States, 16 per cent in Switzerland, 13 per cent in Japan, and 6 per cent in Saudi Arabia. The remaining 18 per cent was held by investment institutions, including central banks and Government institutions, in more than 80 countries.

Capitalizatio n

In the Bank's Articles of Agreement, the institution's capital stock is expressed in terms of 1944 dollars—the United States dollar of the weight and fineness in effect on 1 July 1944. On 1 April 1978, when the Second Amendment of the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) became effective, currencies no longer had par values, and the basis for translating the 1944 dollar into current United States dollars no longer existed.

Thus, for the fiscal year ended 30 June 1979, the Bank expressed the value of its capital stock on the basis of special drawing rights (SDR) (whose value is based on a basket of 16 major currencies) in terms of the United States dollar as computed by IMF on 30 June. On that date, the value of the SDR was set at $1.29110.

The value of the Bank's subscribed capital was SDR 28,990,200 at the end of fiscal year 1979, an increase of SDR 2,330.5 million over the previous year. Included in the increase were the original subscriptions of Cape Verde and Solomon Islands, which became members during the year, and Portugal, which took up its allotted subscription increase under a resolution adopted by the Bank's Board of Governors in 1970.

The remaining SDR 2,307.4 million of capital increase represented subscriptions taken up under resolutions adopted by the Board of Governors in 1977.

Income, expenditure s and reserve s

The Bank's gross revenues increased by $478 million in fiscal year 1979 to a record level of $2,425 million. Net income was $407 million, an increase of 71 per cent over fiscal 1978.

Total expenses amounted to $2,018 million. Continuing inflation and the expansion of some of the Bank's operations raised administrative costs to $172 million.

The General Reserve of the Bank stood at $2,206 million as at 30 June 1979, with $137.5 million derived from net income in 1978.

Chapter VII

Internationa 1 Financ e Corporatio n (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC) was established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to assist developing member countries by helping them to promote the private sector of their economies. The principal objectives of IFC are: to provide risk capital for productive private enterprise, in association with private investors and management; to encourage the development of local capital markets; and to stimulate the international flow of private capital.

The Corporation, which makes investments in the form of share subscriptions and long-term loans, carries out stand-by and underwriting arrangements, and provides financial and technical assistance to privately controlled development finance companies. It neither requires nor accepts guarantees by Governments in its operations. Generally, investments are in the form of a loan, a share subscription or a combination of both—with other investors, local and foreign, providing the bulk of the funds required for any given project.

The Corporation significantly expanded its volume of business during fiscal year 1979 (ending on 30 June). Approved investments in loans and equities increased by 26 percent over the previous year, amounting to $425.4 million, while the number of projects financed increased by 17 per cent, to 48 projects in 33 developing countries. In keeping with IFC'S programme objectives, the volume of equity investments increased by 52 per cent, reaching $48 million given to 40 companies.

Of total investments approved, $161.6 million went to establish new operations, $251.5 million to expand and modernize existing plants, and $7.7 million to support financial institutions. The balance of $4.6 million involved the exercise of stock rights.

The total cost of projects approved was $1,714 million, as compared with $1,872 the previous year; IFC thus contributed some 25 per cent of total project costs. Operations during fiscal year 1979 brought the Corporation's cumulative gross total of investments to $2,528 million in 480 projects.

The Corporation increased its efforts to mobilize project funds from other sources through syndicated loans. During fiscal 1979, $198.6 million of loans were sold or pending sale to other financial institutions, an increase of $58 million over the previous year.

The Corporation continued to emphasize investment in the least developed countries. As in the previous year, over 45 per cent of approved projects were in member States where per capita income was less than $581 a year.

¹ For further information on the activities of IFC, see IFC's annual reports to its Board of Directors and Board of Governors and summary proceedings of annual meetings of the Board of Governors.

Within this group of countries, projects in countries with a per capita income of less than $296 a year increased from six in 1978 to 12 in 1979.

A decision was taken during fiscal 1979 to devote more effort to helping developing countries expand their production of fuel and nonfuel mineral resources. Despite the length of time needed to bring such projects to fruition, IFC was able to complete four during the year, and a number of others were under active consideration.

With the admission of Botswana in 1979, IFC'S membership increased to 109.

Chapter VIII

Internationa l Developmen t Associatio n (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA)¹ is an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank). Its purpose is to promote economic development by supporting productive, high-priority projects in developing member countries.

The Association lends for the same kinds of projects as the World Bank, using the same appraisal criteria and the same staff, but it obtains its funds from different sources and lends on different terms; its capital and assets are entirely separate from those of the Bank.

The Bank obtains the larger part of its funds in the capital markets and lends on roughly conventional terms. The bulk of the resources of IDA are contributed by member Governments, enabling it to lend to the poorest countries on more flexible terms which weigh less heavily on their balances of payments.

In general, a country eligible to receive IDA credits must have a low per capita income—not more than $581 per capita per year; emphasis is on assistance to the poorest countries within this category. A further eligibility requirement is a difficult balance-of-payments problem with little prospect of earning sufficient foreign exchange to justify borrowing on conventional terms all the external funds needed for development. The country must also have sufficient economic, financial and political stability to warrant longterm development lending, and a genuine commitment to development.

The Association's credits are interest-free, with a service charge of 0.75 per cent on disbursed and outstanding credit balances. The credits are repayable over 50 years, with an initial grace period of 10 years before repayment begins.

Unlike the Bank, which may lend to public and private entities with Government guarantees, IDA lends only to Governments. In the case of revenue-producing projects, IDA credits are relent by the Governments on terms reflecting the local cost of capital. Thus, IDA terms help Governments to finance economic development without distorting the local credit structure.

From the start of operations in 1960 to the end of fiscal year 1979 (30 June), IDA'S resources totalled the equivalent of $19,661 million.

The bulk of IDA'S funds for lending are provided by its Part I (richer) member countries and several Part II (developing) countries under a series of replenishment agreements. In fiscal year 1979, the total resources of IDA increased by $1,613 million, primarily from subscriptions and contributions to the fifth replenishment, which aggregated $7,412 million. The value of resources provided by members in prior fiscal years increased by $341 million. In addition, a World Bank grant from its 1978 net income made a further $88.1 million available for lending. Participation by Norway under an aid cooperation agreement with the World Bank and IDA provided a further $8.3 million.

Membership in IDA rose to 121 during the fiscal year, with the admission of Cape Verde on 20 November 1978.

Lending operations

By 30 June 1979, IDA had made cumulative net commitments totalling $16,732 million. Commitments in fiscal year 1979 amounted to $3,021.5 million, of which $1,777 million went to seven countries in South Asia and $379.8 million to 12 countries in East Africa. India, with 11 credits amounting to $1,192 million, was the largest borrower from IDA during the year, followed by Bangladesh with credits of $271 million.

The tables below summarize IDA lending in fiscal year 1979 by area and by purpose.

Agriculture and rural development

Credits for agriculture and rural development accounted for the largest portion of IDA lending in fiscal 1979, as they did in the previous five years. Forty-three credits totalling the equivalent of $953.7 million were committed in 29 countries. A $111 million credit was made to India to modernize Haryana State's irrigation systems and to develop supplemental ground water.

Small farmers and livestock producers in several African countries, including Kenya, Mali, the Niger and Somalia, were assisted with IDA-financed projects to meet key needs and to provide credit and extension services.

Education

Credits totalling $250.5 million were granted during fiscal 1979 for educational projects in 12 countries.

A project in Egypt was financed by a $40 million credit to improve the relevance of education, increase and upgrade training, and expand education and training opportunities for the urban poor. Indonesia received a $49 million credit to help develop an effective system for managing and developing technician training, including the provision of six polytechnics that would increase the annual number of engineering graduates by 45 per cent.

CREDITS FOR EDUCATION

Country	Purpose	Amount (in millions of US dollars)
Afghanistan	Primary education	21.0
Bangladesh	Technical skills training	25.0

Energy

One credit was approved for energy development during fiscal 1979. The credit, of $30 million, to Pakistan was for drilling services, equipment and consultant services to the Oil and Gas Development Corporation in an effort to increase the country's domestic oil supply through the expansion of operations in existing fields and the evaluation of recently discovered fields.

Industrial development and finance

Four credits amounting to $48.2 million were granted in fiscal 1979 for industrial development and finance.

The National Investment Bank of Ghana received a $19 million credit to expand and rehabilitate the country's manufacturing and agroindustrial capacity. Mauritania was granted $8 million to provide financial and technical assistance to small and medium-scale industries, artisans and small-scale irrigated agriculture.

In Rwanda, $5.2 million was granted to provide foreign exchange for economic development. A $16 million credit was made available to Sri Lanka to help small and medium-sized manufacturing and service industries.

Industry

Four credits totalling $121.5 million were made to finance industrial development during fiscal 1979. Bangladesh received $29 million, to supplement an earlier $33 million credit, to complete a fertilizer project. Bolivia received $7.5 million to expand mineral production and exports.

Pakistan was granted a $55 million credit to construct a urea plant capable of supplying Punjab Province with 1,725 tons of nitrogenous fertilizer a day. In the United Republic of Tanzania, co-financing was provided by IDA ($30 million), the World Bank and other institutions for the construction of a pulp and paper mill.

Non-project

Of total credits of $105 million granted during the year, two credits were made to Bangladesh: $75 million for the purchase of industrial components, chemicals and spare parts needed by selected high-priority industries; and $25 million to help meet fertilizer import requirements. Guyana received $5 million to provide foreign exchange for imports of raw materials and intermediate goods.

Population and nutrition

Three credits amounting to $97 million were granted by IDA during fiscal 1979 to Bangladesh ($32 million), Egypt ($25 million) and the Philippines ($40 million). All three credits went to expand family planning and maternal and child health programmes, to train medical personnel and to construct health service buildings.

Power

Eight credits totalling $482.4 million were granted for power projects during the year. India was the principal recipient, with a credit of $200 million to build a power station, together with ancillary equipment, in Andhra Pradesh State, and a further credit of $175 million to provide electricity to about 2.5 million families in 15,000 villages.

A $16.5 million credit to Haiti was to finance the expansion of the Varreux power station at Port-au-Prince and seven additional substations.

CREDITS FOR POWER

Country	Purpose	(in millions of US dollars)
Bangladesh	Power for industry, training	28.0
Egypt	Construction of power station	37.0
Guinea	Power rehabilitation programme	1.1
Haiti	Expansion of power stations	16.5
India	Construction of power station Electrification of irrigation pumps	200.0 175.0
Nepal	Hydroelectric power	14.8
Yemen	Equipment for power distribution	10.0

Technical assistance

Five credits amounting to $29.7 million were granted for technical assistance to three African countries and to Bangladesh and Indonesia during the year.

Bangladesh and Burundi received $10 million and $2.5 million, respectively, to help improve their capacity for project planning. Indonesia was granted $10 million to finance preparatory studies into ways of creating employment opportunities.

A credit of $2.2 million to Togo was to help promote sound investment and public finance policies. In Zambia, a $5 million credit went to help provide expert and consultancy services for economic development, to train local staff and to supply project equipment.

Tourism

The two credits for tourism provided by IDA during fiscal 1979 went to Egypt ($32.5 million) to improve tourist facilities at Luxor and Abu Simbel, and to the United Republic of Tanzania ($14 million) to promote tourist attractions and to encourage tourism by improving the transportation system.

Transportation

Twenty credits totalling $473.5 million were approved during fiscal 1979 for transportation projects in 17 countries.

One credit to India ($190 million) was to improve the efficiency of the railways and support research and development activities related to improvement in motive power.

A $24 million credit was approved for Madagascar to rehabilitate about 500 kilometres of roads, construct bridges and improve road maintenance, thus providing year-round access to other parts of the country to some 1.2 million people living in isolated areas. Zaire was assisted with a $26 million credit to rehabilitate about 40,000 kilometres of roads in rural areas.

Urban development

During fiscal year 1979, IDA provided one credit of $12 million to Mali for shelter services, improved health and sanitary conditions and market facilities for some 44,000 low-income residents in Bamako; water supply and sanitation services would also be provided in three secondary cities.

Water supply and sewerage

Ten projects in eight countries received credits amounting to $371.5 million for water supply and sewerage facilities during fiscal year 1979.

A $196 million credit was made to India to provide pure water to about 2.5 million people living in Bombay's slum areas. Lesotho received a $6 million credit to extend and upgrade water-supply systems in seven towns.

Chapter IX

Internationa 1 Monetar y Fund (IMF)

Drawings on the resources of the International Monetary Fund (IMF)¹ during 1979 amounted to more than 1.8 billion special drawing rights (SDR), or a little less than half the total drawings in 1978. A near record volume of repurchases during the year resulted in a net reduction in the amount of drawings outstanding to the equivalent of SDR 7,975.9 million at the end of 1979.

1 For further information on the activities of IMF, see the annual report of the Executive Directors, Summary Proceedings of annual meetings of the Board of Governors, annual reports on exchange arrangements and restrictions, and the periodical IMF Survey.

The year also saw the first of three annual allocations to members of approximately SDR 4 billion, according to their quotas, resulting from a decision of the Board of Governors, meeting on 11 December 1978, by which the Fund would make allocations totalling SDR 12 billion to IMF members participating in the SDR department. The first allocation was made on 1 January 1979; the other two were to be made on the same date in 1980 and 1981.

At the same meeting, the Seventh General Review of Quotas was completed when the Board of Governors proposed an increase of members' quotas by 50 per cent, from SDR 39 billion to SDR 58.6 billion. The proposed increases were to become effective for individual members on the latest of the three following dates: the date of the member's consent to the increase; the date of payment of the increased quota; or the date on which the Fund determined that members having not less than 75 per cent of the total of quotas on 1 November 1978 had consented to an increase in their quotas. Members were given until 1 November 1980 to consent to their quota increases, 25 per cent of which were to be paid in SDRs and the balance in the member's own currency.

In 1978, IMF had taken a number of decisions regarding the SDR and the rate of remuneration, all of which became effective on 1 January 1979: the interest rate on the SDR was increased from 60 per cent to 80 per cent of the combined market rate, which is the weighted average of short-term interest rates in the five countries with the largest Fund quotas—France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States; the rate of remuneration paid by IMF on reserve positions held by its creditor members was changed from 100 to 90 per cent of the SDR interest rate; and the obligation for members to maintain a minimum average balance of SDRs over successive five-year periods was reduced from 30 to 15 per cent of average net cumulative allocations.

In March 1979, IMF adopted a new set of guidelines for the use of Fund resources. Under the new guidelines, it was decided that when IMF helped member countries with balance-of-payments difficulties to take the necessary corrective measures, policies should pay due regard to the effect of those measures on member countries' economic priorities and their social and political objectives. Policies adopted by IMF should take into account the special circumstances of members, including the cause of their balance-of-payments problems. Other important points stressed were the need to ensure adequate policy co-ordination in order to maintain nondiscriminatory treatment of members, and the recognition that Fund policies in this and other areas should evolve in the light of changing circumstances.

During the year, a review of policies under the compensatory financing facility was carried out in order to provide greater access to that facility by members—particularly the primary exporting countries—with balance-of-payments difficulties arising from temporary export shortfalls. In August 1979, IMF decided to amend arrangements made in 1975 by increasing the limit of authorized drawings from 75 per cent to 100 per cent of a member's quota under the compensatory financing facility, and to eliminate the quota limit on drawings outstanding—50 per cent in any 12-month period—with the proviso that, if requests for drawings increased a member's drawings outstanding beyond 50 per cent of its quota, IMF would have to be satisfied that adequate efforts were being made to solve the balance-of-payments problem.

It was also decided that member countries should have the option of including receipts from travel and workers' remittances, backed by adequate data, when calculating their export shortfall, such an option being irreversible for a period of five years.

By another decision taken to help member countries with balance-of-payments difficulties, IMF decided in December 1979 to increase the maximum period for making repurchases from eight to 10 years.

The Fund continued its gold sales programme during 1979, whereby one sixth (or 25 million fine ounces) of its gold holdings was to be sold at public auctions for the benefit of developing countries, and one sixth was to be sold to members at SDR 35 per ounce. In accordance with the provisions of the Trust Fund established in 1976 to provide additional balance-of-payments assistance on concessionary terms to developing member countries from gold-sales profits, IMF disbursed the equivalent of SDR 841 million to 43 member countries during the Trust Fund's first period, from 1 July 1976 to 30 June 1978. Interim disbursements for the second period up to 30 June 1980 totalled SDR 800 million to 41 members.

During 1979, two new members joined IMF, bringing total membership to 140. The new members were Saint Lucia (15 November) and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (28 December).

Fund operation s

The Fund's member countries made credit tranche drawings of SDR 853 million in 1979, more than double the drawings of SDR 421 million in 1978. Total purchases from IMF during the year, totalling SDR 1,843 million, were less than half the SDR 3,744 million purchased in 1978, which included an SDR 2,280 reserve tranche drawing by the United States.

Purchases during the year raised the cumulative total since 1947 to SDR 50.2 billion, or SDR 43.3 billion net of the oil facility. Repurchases by members totalled SDR 4,215 million in 1979, less than the record level of SDR 4,845 million in 1978. Net drawings outstanding at the end of 1979 were SDR 7,976 million, as compared with SDR 10,277 million the previous year. The decline reflected large repurchases of members' drawings from the 1974-1975 oil facility and credit tranches, particularly by Italy, Spain and the United Kingdom.

The total of credit tranche drawings outstanding at the end of 1979 was SDR 1,364 million, compared with SDR 1,938 million at the end of 1978 and SDR 3,852 million at the end of 1977. This decline largely reflected repurchases of earlier drawings by the United Kingdom. The non-oil developing countries accounted for all the credit tranche drawings outstanding at the end of 1979 and for most of the drawings on the Fund in 1979.

Gold sales programme

During 1979, the fourth year of its four-year programme to sell 50 million fine ounces of gold, IMF sold 5,458,950 ounces at public auction, which brought total sales to 22,778,400 ounces.

The proceeds from the auctions held during 1979 amounted to $1,410 million. The lowest price at which gold was awarded to successful bidders in 1979 was $219.13 and the highest was $429.31 per ounce.

The Fund also carried out gold sales to members at SDR 35 per ounce under its restitution programme. Sales of gold in the fourth and final distribution to 126 members amounted to 6,122,663 ounces, yielding approximately SDR 214 million. Total sales to the 126 members over the four-year period, which started in December 1976, amounted to 24,507,063 ounces, yielding approximately SDR 858 million.

Supplementary financing facility

The supplementary financing facility entered into force on 23 February 1979, when 14 members or institutions agreed to make resources available to the facility, which enables IMF, on a temporary basis, to expand its financial assistance to those members facing payments imbalances that were considered large in relation to their economies and their quotas in the Fund.

As at the end of 1979, IMF had made commitments of resources totalling SDR 811.37 million from the facility to seven members: Guyana, Jamaica, Malawi, Mauritius, Peru, the Sudan and Turkey.

The lenders and amounts made available are shown in the following table.

Chapter X

Internationa 1 Civil Aviatio n Organizatio n (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) reported total traffic of the world's scheduled airlines to be 126 billion tonne-kilometres during 1979, an increase of 11.5 per cent over 1978. The airlines carried some 747 million passengers at a load factor of 66 per cent, the highest figure ever achieved and 2 percentage points above 1978. Air freight increased by 6 per cent to nearly 28 billion tonne-kilometres and air mail traffic amounted to 3.4 billion tonne kilometres, an increase of 3 per cent over the previous year.

During 1979, membership of ICAO rose to 145 with the admission of Botswana on 27 January and Saint Lucia on 20 December.

Activitie s in 1979

Air navigation

During 1979, the main efforts of ICAO in the air navigation field continued to be directed to the updating and implementation of ICAO Specifications and ICAO Regional Plans. The ICAO Specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 16 technical Annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, and of Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS), contained in three PANS documents. The Regional Plans set forth air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in the nine ICAO regions.

The Specifications in four Annexes and three PANS documents were amended during 1979. The Regional Plans were kept current through amendments processed in consultation with States. To promote the uniform application of the Specifications, ICAO made available guidance material in the form of new and revised technical manuals and ICAO circulars.

The ICAO regional offices assisted States in implementing the Regional Plans. Their efforts were supplemented by the work of experts who advised States on the installation of new facilities and services and the operation of existing ones.

Eight air navigation meetings were held in 1979, at which special attention was given to: airworthiness of aircraft; aircraft operations; aircraft accident prevention; aerodrome physical characteristics; visual aids; automated data interchange systems; air traffic control; aeronautical communications; aeronautical meteorology; personnel licensing and training; unification of units of measurement; aircraft/infrastructure compatibility; the impact of civil aviation development on the human environment; aviation security; and carriage of dangerous goods by

Air transport

During 1979, ICAO's activities focused on the improvement of international air transport, on studies of developments in regulating air transport and establishing tariffs, and on the publication of economic studies and air transport statistics. Preparations were made for a second world-wide air transport conference, to be held in February 1980.

A panel of experts on regulation of air transport services, appointed in 1978, held its second and third meetings in April and October 1979. Subjects considered included the classification of non-scheduled and scheduled operations, the establishment of criteria, methods and model clauses for regulating capacity on both types of operations and the regulation of non-scheduled air transport. Another panel of experts, appointed in 1977 to examine machinery for the establishment of international fares and rates, held its fourth meeting in September/ October, at which it examined the results of a survey of policies and practices in the establishment of scheduled and non-scheduled freight tariffs. The panel made a number of recommendations for improving the machinery of freight rates and reviewed earlier conclusions and recommendations on the establishment of scheduled passenger fares.

The enforcement of international air carrier tariffs continued to be monitored. Information on tariff violations and subsequent action by States, together with updated information on national practices regarding tariff enforcement, was collected and issued as part of the documentation for the 1980 Air Transport Conference.

During the year, ICAO published a major regional air transport study, on the development of air passenger and freight traffic in Africa.

Publications in 1979 included the regular series of digests of civil aviation statistics, the yearbook on world civil aviation statistics, a new publication containing financial data and summary traffic data for airports and route facilities, the airport and air navigation facility tariffs manual, and a study of regional differences in fares, rates and costs for international air transport in 1977. A number of reports were prepared and circulated to member States covering such subjects as the development of airport revenues from non-aeronautical sources and the future availability of aviation fuel.

The ninth session of ICAO'S facilitation division was held at Montreal, Canada, in April/May as part of the organization's continuing efforts to ease customs, immigration, public health and other formalities for air passengers and cargo across national boundaries.

Informal regional meetings were held during 1979 on the economics of airports and route facilities (Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, in August; Dakar, Senegal, in October) and on statistics (Mexico City, Mexico, in August).

The organization continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies: the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission. It also continued to administer the joint financing agreement on air navigation services in Greenland and the Faeroe Islands and the agreement for services in Iceland.

Legal matter s

The work programme of the Legal Committee, as approved by the ICAO Council in June 1979, included the study of the following subjects: the legal status of the aircraft commander; the liability of air traffic control agencies; aerial collisions; the report of its sub-committee on the problem of liability for damage caused by noise and sonic boom; the status of the instruments of the Warsaw Convention of 1929, as amended by the Hague Protocol of 1955 (relating to liability of air carriers); the consolidation of international rules contained in the 1952 Rome Convention on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties on the Surface and in the draft convention on aerial collisions and the liability of air traffic control agencies; the proposed simplification of convention-making procedures; and the lease, charter and interchange of aircraft in international operations, regarding certain problems with respect to the 1963 Tokyo Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft.

The Council requested the secretariat to prepare an historical study on the legal status of aircraft commanders, together with proposals to be sent to States for comments. It also decided to establish in 1980 a panel of experts on the operational and legal aspects of the topic.

The Legal Committee met at Montreal in May 1979 to consider the legal implications for international air-law conventions of a draft convention on international multimodal transport—prepared within the framework of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. The Committee's report, containing suggested solutions to a number of possible conflicts between existing air-law conventions and the new draft convention, was presented to the United Nations Conference on a Convention on International Multimodal Transport, held at Geneva in November 1979 (see p. 989).

The Committee on Unlawful Interference with International Civil Aviation and its Facilities examined proposals from States arid international organizations for amendments to Annex 17 (security and safeguarding international aviation against acts of unlawful interference) of the Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation, 1944. The ICAO Council requested the Secretary-General of ICAO to obtain the views and comments of contracting States and interested international organizations on the Committee's recommendations regarding the amendments to Annex 17.

During 1979, the following conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices were ratified or acceded to by the countries indicated:

Convention on International Civil Aviation (Chicago, 1944)

Botswana

Convention on International Recognition of Rights in Aircraft (Geneva, 1948)

Ethiopia, Kuwait, Madagascar, Seychelles

Convention on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties on the Surface (Rome, 1952) Kuwait

Protocol to Amend the Warsaw Convention of 1929 for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air (The Hague, 1955) Bangladesh, Chile, Monaco

Convention, Supplementary to the Warsaw Convention, for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air Performed by a Person Other than the Contracting Carrier (Guadalajara, 1961)

Mauritania

Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft (Tokyo, 1963)

Bolivia, Botswana, Ethiopia, Gambia, Kuwait, Nepal, Seychelles, Suriname, Viet Nam

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft (The Hague, 1970)

Bolivia, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Kuwait, Nepal, Sudan, Togo

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation (Montreal, 1971)

El Salvador, Ethiopia, Nepal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Togo

Technica l'assistanc e

During 1979, ICAO provided technical assistance to 118 States, 84 of which had resident missions of one or more experts. Assistance was also provided in the form of equipment, fellowships, scholarships and short missions by experts.

Twenty new large-scale projects, each costing more than $500,000, for which ICAO was to be the executing agency, were approved by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Five large-scale projects were financed under trust funds.

The organization employed 549 experts from 47 countries during 1979, 380 on assignments under UNDP, 166 on trust fund projects and three under the associate experts programme. There were also 10 United Nations Volunteers. The number in the field at the end of 1979 was 347 as compared with 305 at the end of 1978. A total of 1,055 fellowships were awarded in 1979, as compared with 688 for 1978.

Equipment purchases and subcontracts amounted to some $11 million, representing a substantial proportion of the technical assistance programme in 1979. Twenty-one Governments or organizations formally registered with ICAO under the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service.

Countries and territories aided were the following:

Africa: Angola, Benin, Botswana, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Swaziland, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Zaire.

Americas: Antigua, Argentina, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Montserrat, Netherlands Antilles, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, St. Kitts–Nevis–Anguilla, Saint Lucia, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Turks and Caicos Islands, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Asia/Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, China, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kiribati, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Tonga, Viet Nam.

Europe, Mediterranean and Middle East: Algeria, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Qatar, Oman, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

As at 31 December 1979, the total number of staff members employed in the ICAO secretariat was 825. Of these, 287 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 63 nationalities) and 538 were in the General Service and related categories, including 183 persons employed at the regional offices. In addition, there were 305 in the Professional category serving as technical experts on UNDP projects in the field.

Budget

The appropriations for the 1979 financial year totalled $24,375,000. Modifications were approved by the ICAO Council, as reflected below:

Chapter XI

Universa l Posta l Unio n (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established at Berne, Switzerland, in 1874 for the reciprocal exchange of postal services between nations, is one of the oldest international intergovernmental organizations. Its aim is to promote the organization and improvement of postal services and to further the development of international collaboration in this sphere. It also participates in various forms of postal technical assistance requested by its member States.

In 1979, the number of member States of UPU was reduced from 159 to 158, following the expulsion of South Africa by the Universal Postal Congress.

Activitie s of UPU organ s in 1979

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, composed of all UPU member States, is the supreme legislative authority of UPU. It normally meets every five years. The eighteenth session of the Congress was held at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 12 September to 25 October 1979.

The Congress examined, among other things, the Acts of the Union on the basis of proposals submitted by member States, by the Executive Council and by the Consultative Council for Postal Studies. The Acts in force since 1 January 1976 were those of the 1974 Lausanne Congress; the Acts of the 1979 Rio de Janeiro Congress were to enter into force on 1 July 1981.

Among decisions taken on the postal service, the Congress decided to increase the basic letter rate and also the rate paid to Postal Administrations of destination.

The Congress discussed the question of technical co-operation and decided that priority should be given to the needs of Postal Administrations in the least developed and newly independent countries. It decided that particular emphasis should be placed on vocational training, improving the administration of postal services, routing and delivery, particularly with regard to rural areas and international mail, and on increasing the number of post offices.

Having considered a study prepared by the Executive Council, the Congress decided that from 1980 onwards member countries should pay the funds necessary for the operation of UPU in advance, replacing current arrangements whereby countries paid expenses when due, with the Government of the Swiss Confederation, which supervises the International Bureau, advancing the necessary funds.

The Congress considered the future of postal services in the light of developments in telecommunications. It was decided that, although the volume of conventional mail continued to increase, postal services should seek to develop their telecommunications systems. For that purpose, UPU consulted with the International Telecommunication Union.

A proposal that the special drawing right should replace the gold franc of UPU as the reference currency for international payments was defeated.

The Congress re-elected Mohamed I. Sobhi and Thomas Scott as, respectively, Director-General and Deputy Director-General of the International Bureau. Elections to the UPU Executive Council and the Consultative Council for Postal Studies were also held. The Congress decided that UPU documents should in future be issued in Chinese, German, Portuguese and Russian, as well as Arabic, English, French and Spanish, with French remaining the official language of UPU and the working language of the International Bureau.

In other actions, the Congress declared that postage stamps issued by the "Turkish Cypriot Postal Administration" were illegal and without validity. It also, by a decision of 18 September, expelled South Africa from UPU.

The Congress decided that its next session, in 1984, would be held in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Executive Council

The 40-member Executive Council of UPU is responsible for carrying out the work of UPU during the five-year intervals between meetings of the Congress. During its annual session, held in 1979 at Berne from 25 April to 11 May, the Council considered administrative matters and several studies concerning international mail which had been referred to it by the 1974 Lausanne Congress.

Among other matters reviewed by the Executive Council were technical assistance for developing countries, professional training, international postal co-operation, relations with the United Nations and other international organizations, and the improvement and simplification of international postal services.

The new Executive Council elected by the 1979 Congress held its initial session during the Congress.

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

The 35-member Consultative Council for Postal Studies is responsible for organizing the study of technical, operational, economic and technical co-operation problems concerning the Postal Administrations of UPU member States, including matters of particular interest to new and developing countries.

The regular annual session of the Council was not held; however, an organizational meeting was held during the 1979 Congress.

International Bureau

The International Bureau of UPU, which is under the general supervision of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, constitutes the secretariat of UPU and serves the Postal Administrations of UPU member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation.

The International Bureau is responsible for collecting, co-ordinating, publishing and distributing information relating to the international postal service. It also conducts inquiries requested by Postal Administrations and acts as a clearing-house for settling certain accounts between them.

As at 31 December 1979, the total number of permanent and temporary staff members employed at the International Bureau was 125, of whom 51 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 38 countries) and 74 were in the General Service category. Also, 12 officials were employed in the Arabic, English, Spanish and Russian translation services.

Technica l co-operatio n

Technical co-operation was provided by UPU in 1979 under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), by the UPU Special Fund, and through bilateral assistance programmes, The multilateral aid provided under UNDP amounted to some $2.2 million.

Expert assistance to developing countries continued, financed partly from the regular budget but for the most part by the Postal Administrations of contributing member States. Missions were carried out by consultants during the year in various regions of Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East to assist Postal Administrations in improving their organization, services and training and to make forecast studies. The consultants were also associated with the formulation of UNDP projects and the organization of seminars, study courses and vocational training courses. Operational teams for different sectors were formed during the year, composed of specialists chosen by recipient States from their national services, directed by a UPU expert.

The Union continued to hold training courses for postal instructors from developing countries, in London and Paris and at regional training centres. Two high-level courses held in London and Paris during the year were attended by 20 students.

In 1979, 35 national and regional projects relating to postal services were carried out under UNDP. Forty-nine expert missions were undertaken, and 154 scholarships awarded, of which 114 were for study courses. Several projects received assistance in the form of equipment. The projects covered all the principal branches of the postal service including national and regional vocational training centres.

The UPU Special Fund, maintained by voluntary contributions in cash and kind from member States, continued to focus its assistance on training and the provision of teaching materials. Contributions in kind consisted mainly of the award of scholarships and the organization of training courses. The Fund also assisted a project for the drought-stricken Sahelian region of Africa. The budget for the 1979 programme was $594,437.

In addition to supporting the Special Fund, member States continued to provide direct bilateral assistance during the year.

The Union continued to support mutual assistance programmes between developing countries, particular emphasis being placed on the formation of operational teams and regional training. It also maintained its programme of technical assistance subject to payment, under which member States could finance assistance themselves by funds on deposit.

Budget

The expenditures of UPU are borne in common by all member countries, which, for the purpose of assessment, are divided into classes. The following table shows how the assessments for 1979 were divided among the various classes:

Internationa 1 Telecommunicatio n Union (ITU)

As at 31 December 1979, 154 countries were members of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU). Membership had remained unchanged since 1977.

World Administrativ e Radio Conferenc e

The World Administrative Radio Conference, which met at Geneva from 24 September to 6

December 1979, carried out a complete revision of the international Radio Regulations, which are applicable to all radio services and are binding on member States of ITU. The new Regulations were to enter into force on 1 January 1982. As one of its principal tasks, the Conference revised the Table of Frequency Allocation, involving the reallocation of frequency bands among the different services.

The Conference also revised the statutory procedures for the co-ordination, notification and entry of frequencies assigned to radio stations in the Master International Frequency Register. In particular, the Conference took account of the fact that many developing countries, which had become members of ITU since the last World Administrative Radio Conference in 1959, required special help in obtaining appropriate frequencies in the high-frequency (HF) bands. It revised the terms of the Regulations in order to guarantee that developing countries would be able to obtain frequencies in the HF bands, and that such frequencies would be capable of providing good service.

The Conference proposed that a number of radio conferences be held at global and regional levels to deal with specific services.

At the global level, it proposed that conferences be held for the mobile services, for planning the HF bands allocated to broadcasting services, for deciding on the use of the geostationary satellite orbit and planning space services, and for revising the frequency allotment plan for the Aeronautical Mobile (OR) Service, applicable to non-scheduled airlines. The Conference recommended that after 1990 ITU should consider the possibility of holding another world radio conference for the general or partial revision of the Radio Regulations.

At the regional level, the Conference proposed that conferences be held for the following purposes:

Region 1 (Africa, Europe, Mongolia and the USSR)—to revise the 1948 Copenhagen Plan and Convention for the European maritime area, and to revise the provisions of the Final Acts of the African VHF/UHF Broadcasting Conference, held at Genevain 1963;

Region 2 (the Americas and Greenland) — to consider medium-frequency (MF) broadcasting, to plan the broadcasting satellite service, and to prepare a broadcasting plan for the 1605-1705 kHz band; and Region 3 (Asia and Australasia)—to lay down rules for sharing the use of the VHF and UHF bands allocated to the fixed, broadcasting and mobile services.

In addition, a conference was proposed on the planning of sound broadcasting in the 87.5-108 MHz band for countries in region 1 and certain countries in region 3. It was also proposed that a conference for regions 1 and 3 be held to conclude agreements and draw up plans for feeder links to broadcasting satellites in the 12 GHz band.

The Conference approved a number of measures to further technical co-operation with developing countries, including the organization of symposia on staff training, the introduction of data-processing techniques and the choice of suitable frequencies. The Conference also decided that assistance should be provided to developing countries in the fields of network operation, the development of rural and maritime telecommunications, the preparation of specifications for low-cost television receivers and the transfer of telecommunication technology.

The thirty-fourth session of the Administrative Council of ITU was held from 4 May to 21 June 1979 at ITU headquarters at Geneva. The Council reviewed administrative matters and approved a schedule of conferences. It also established a working group to plan ITU's technical cooperation activities.

Study groups of the two ITU international consultative committees—the International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) and the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee—held numerous meetings during the year. A report was prepared by CCIR on ground- and sky-wave radio propagation and the technology and planning of broadcasting services, in preparation for the first session of a regional conference on MF broadcasting, to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1980.

Plan committee s

Four regional plan committees of ITU were responsible for preparing plans for circuit and routing requirements for international telecommunications and for estimating the growth of international traffic. They also continued to play an active part in the work of the World Plan Committee, which was concerned with interregional relations.

The Plan Committee for Europe and the Mediterranean Basin met at Santiago de Compostela, Spain, from 6 to 10 February, and the Plan Committee for Africa met at Abidjan, Ivory Coast, from 27 to 30 March 1979.

Internationa l Frequenc y Registratio n Board

The International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB) continued to register the frequencies that countries assigned to their radio stations in the Master International Frequency Register. During 1979, IFRB carried out a technical examination of 52,304 frequency assignments.

The Board continued its preparations for and played an active part in the World Administrative Radio Conference, held at the end of the year.

In 1979, under various ITU programmes of technical co-operation for developing countries, 584 expert missions were carried out, 618 fellows were trained abroad and equipment valued at $6,609,758 was delivered, mainly to telecommunication training centres. The total cost of this assistance amounted to $26,064,268, an increase of 21 per cent over 1978. Countries and territories aided were the following:

Africa: Algeria, Angola, Burundi, Chad, Congo, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Liberia, Mauritania, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Senegal, Seychelles, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, Zaire.

The Americas: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay.

Asia and the Pacific: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Burma, India, Indonesia, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Republic of Korea, Samoa, Singapore, Thailand, Tonga.

Europe and the Middle East: Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Greece, Hungary, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Malta, Oman, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

The three main objectives of ITU's technical co-operation activities continued to be: promoting the development of regional telecommunication networks in Africa, the Americas, Asia and the Pacific, and the Middle East; strengthening the telecommunication technical and administrative services in developing countries; and vocational training.

The Union continued its efforts to promote the development of telecommunication networks and their integration into the world-wide system, in accordance with objectives established by the World Plan Committee and the regional plan committees.

Work on establishing radio-relay systems, submarine cables, satellite earth stations and international telephone exchanges for the Pan-African Telecommunications Network (PANAFTEL) made some progress during the year. A team of experts from ITU and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) advised on demarcation problems, and assistance was provided in areas of tariffs, subregional numbering, frequency planning, switching and signalling.

As a result of delays in implementing certain key links in a number of countries, the PANAFTEL Coordinating Committee—comprising the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa, the African Development Bank and ITU—convened a series of bilateral meetings during the year to recommend solutions. At the end of the year, an ITU project team reviewed problems of maintenance and operation encountered by countries that were part of the PANAFTEL network, and UNDP agreed to allocate funds for a complementary project, starting in 1980, to assist the African countries to develop appropriate structures and methods of operation and maintenance.

The Union continued to channel assistance to the Americas, primarily through its co-operative programme with the Inter-American Telecommunication Conference. During the year, ITU initiated a regional study on the development of public data communication networks. As a result of financial assistance from UNDP, work on establishing the networks was planned for 1980.

Progress in Asia was satisfactory, despite delays in the implementation of terrestrial links in the western part of the region. The Union supported network development with advice on planning, field surveys, assistance in the preparation of technical specifications and co-ordination of bilateral and multinational activities.

In the Pacific region, ITU advised on tendering and on contract negotiations for four major contracts financed by the European Economic Community in Fiji, Samoa and Tonga. A plan for the development of telecommunications in Tuvalu was prepared. A project team continued to prepare studies on matters relating to telecommunications development, on such topics as distance-teaching by satellite for the University of the South Pacific, the establishment of a simple and cost-effective demand assignment system and the use of a transportable satellite earth station for disaster relief. Advice and assistance continued in the tariff and accounting fields.

Following the adoption of a master plan for the Middle East and Mediterranean telecommunication network in 1978, work began with ITU assistance on the development of the regional network. During the year, microwave links became operational between Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic, and between Saudi Arabia and the Sudan. A submarine cable link between France and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was put into service, while links between a number of other countries in the region were in the course of preparation. Work was also carried out on satellite earth stations in Democratic Yemen and Djibouti, and on international transit switching centres in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, At a conference held in May 1979, plans were prepared to standardize the international signalling system among the countries of the region.

In 1979, 71 expert missions were carried out to help develop regional telecommunication networks and integrate them into the world system, and 198 expert missions, covering most branches of telecommunications, provided assistance to developing countries on the administrative and technical measures necessary to enable them to take advantage of modern telecommunication facilities.

As in previous years, nearly two thirds of total ITU field expenditure was for training telecommunications personnel in developing countries.

Publication s

In 1979 the general secretariat of ITU issued a number of publications, some of them trilingual, others in separate English, French and Spanish editions. Among them were the following:

Secretaria t

As at 31 December 1979, the total staff of ITU numbered 631 (excluding staff on short-term contracts). Of these, nine were elected officials, 508 had permanent contracts and 114 had fixed-term contracts; 45 nationalities were represented in posts subject to geographical distribution.

Budget

The following budget for 1979 was adopted by the Administrative Council in 1978.

Income	Amount (in Swiss francs)

World Meteorologica 1 Organizatio n (WMO)

The total membership of the World Meteorologial Organization (WMO) rose to 150—144 States and six territories—during 1979 with the admission of Lesotho on 2 September.

The World Meteorological Congress, which is the highest body of WMO, held its eighth session in April/May 1979. The Congress approved a programme and budget for the period 1980-1983 and adopted a new World Climate Programme. It elected Aksel C. Winn-Nielsen (Denmark) as Secretary-General of WMO for a four-year period beginning on 1 January 1980.

The Congress decided that for the period 1980-1983 the WMO regional offices for Africa and Latin America should be located within the respective region, and the regional office for Asia should be at WMO headquarters in Geneva.

The Executive Committee of WMO held its thirty-first session at Geneva in May/June 1979.

A major event of 1979 was the completion of the first phase of the global weather experiment in November. Other activities of WMO during the year focused on the effect of meteorological conditions on water resources and food production, natural disasters, environmental problems caused by weather modification, ozone depletion, atmospheric and marine pollution, and wind and solar energy.

The twenty-fourth International Meteorological Organization Prize was awarded to H. E. Landsberg (United States) for outstanding scientific work and for his services to the cause of international collaboration in meteorology.

World Weather Watch

The World Weather Watch is the basic operational programme of WMO. Its primary aim is to make available to member States the basic meteorological information they require both for research and for operating their meteorological and related environmental services. Its essential components are the Global Observing System, the Global Data-processing System and the Global Telecommunication System, the last providing facilities for the collection, exchange and distribution of observational data and processed information.

During 1979, the World Weather Watch played a major role in observing, processing and transmitting data for the first phase of the global weather experiment, undertaken under the Global Atmospheric Research Programme (GARP), a joint project of WMO and the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU).

The observing capability of the Global Observing System was improved during the year when five geostationary meteorological satellites, equally spaced around the Equator, became operational and when the observing capability of certain polar-orbiting satellites was increased. Improved data-processing was achieved by the installation of modern electronic computers in a number of centres, and progress was made in data transmission at the global, regional and national levels by the introduction of high-speed data transmission on one segment of the main trunk circuit and by the replacement of highfrequency point-to-point circuits by satellite circuits. Remedial action was taken during the year to correct a number of weaknesses revealed during monitoring of the World Weather Watch system.

Research and development

In 1979, the WMO Congress confirmed a continued programme of research on weather prediction, extended range forecasting, weather modification, tropical meteorology and climatic change.

As a major event of the year, a World Climate Conference was convened in February to formalize the new World Climate Programme, which was subsequently adopted by the WMO Congress. An agreement reached between WMO and ICSU on joint research for the World Climate Programme was endorsed by the Congress.

The first operational year of the global weather experiment was successfully completed on 30 November, based on data provided by the Global Observing System, supplemented by data resulting from special observing periods—between 5 January and 5 March and between 1 May and 30 June 1979—and by data from ships, buoys, aircraft and balloons. In addition, the winter and summer phases of the experiment concerning monsoons and the operational phase of a regional experiment on western African monsoons were completed.

Within the weather modification programme, a site in Spain was selected for the precipitation enhancement project. Progress was also made on research into tropical meteorology.

A meeting of experts held during the year to consider the effect of atmospheric carbon dioxide on the ozone layer agreed on a world plan of action to reduce atmospheric pollution. Information on the possible climatic effect of the gas was prepared by WMO and distributed to member States.

The Commission for Instruments and Methods of Observation continued work on a revised guide to meteorological instrument and observing practices.

Meteorological applications and environment programme

The WMO programme on meteorological applications and environment covers activities aimed at applying meteorology to further economic and social development and to protect the environment.

Under the programme, WMO assisted developing countries to apply meteorology to agriculture by sending expert missions to those countries, and by organizing training seminars and courses in agrometeorology. The Commission for Agricultural Meteorology held its seventh session at Sofia, Bulgaria, during the year.

In view of an increasing demand for information, WMO increased its activities in the field of marine meteorology. Topics on which WMO focused during 1979 included marine climatology, marine environmental data management—with particular reference to the World Climate Programme—sea-ice services and studies related to marine meteorological observations.

Work on a manual on marine meteorological services reached its final stage and a questionnaire on the subject was circulated to shipmasters. Continued efforts were made by WMO to encourage increased participation by member States in the full implementation of the Integrated Global Ocean Station System.

A technical conference held during the year discussed the application of aeronautical meteorology to the operating efficiency of airlines and the safety of aircraft.

In the field of energy, a joint meeting of meteorologists and experts on wind energy was held during the year. Publications in the course of preparation included two studies on the utilization of solar and wind energy and a study dealing with the meteorological and hydrological aspects of nuclear power-plant siting and operation. The first volume of a Climatic Atlas for North and Central America was published, and work on other volumes continued. The Executive Committee's panel of experts on environmental pollution continued to act as the focal point for WMO activities concerning pollution of the air, precipitation, inland waters and oceans, and to monitor the activities of other organizations in the field.

The global network to measure background air pollution continued to expand in the face of new challenges, including the long-range transmission of air pollutants. Studies were carried out by WMO during the year on marine pollution and the interchange of pollutants between the atmosphere and the oceans.

The 1979 WMO Congress decided to strengthen and intensify the tropical cyclone programme, following a number of severe tropical cyclones during the year. Planning began for a typhoon operational experiment to improve forecasting and warning systems, organized jointly by WMO and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

Hydrology and water resources development

The WMO Commission for Hydrology continued to implement the hydrology and water resources programme by initiating technical projects within the operational hydrology programme, by encouraging co-operation between hydrological services at the global and regional levels, and by participating in water resources development programmes carried out by other organizations.

Under the hydrological operational multipurpose subprogramme, WMO continued to act as a channel for the transfer of technology to improve the quantity and quality of hydrological data, and to develop techniques and procedures for collecting and processing such data.

Education and training

The WMO education and training programme continued to make progress during the year. Activities under the programme included the award of fellowships, the establishment or strengthening of meteorological training centres, the organization of training seminars and symposia, the preparation of training publications, and studies and surveys of training needs. Advice and information on educational and training matters were also provided.

A world-wide symposium on education and training in meteorology and on meteorological aspects of energy problems was held duringthe year at Madrid, Spain. A training course on the use of satellite data for operational purposes was also held, in the United States.

Technical co-operation

In 1979, WMO continued to help developing countries to establish and improve their meteorological and hydrological services, to apply meteorological data to development projects, and to train personnel. Such technical assistance was provided under the WMO regular budget in the form of fellowships, through the WMO Voluntary Co-operation Programme (formerly the Voluntary Assistance Programme) and through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

Seventy-nine countries received technical assistance under the UNDP programme, at a total cost of about $8.2 million, as compared with some $7.4 million in 1978. Of the total number of projects, 21 were large-scale, of which 16 were successfully completed during the year. A number of these projects were directly related to the expansion and strengthening of national meteorological services, reflecting the increasing realization by the developing countries of the importance of meteorology and hydrology in economic development.

Another UNDP project was to benefit the drought-stricken Sahelian countries of Africa (Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta) by strengthening their agrometeorological and hydrological services and by establishing a regional training and operations centre. Other large-scale projects were related to evaluating water resources, meteorological services to agriculture, and meteorological training and research, and to improving methods of detecting tropical cyclones and establishing warning systems.

The scope of the Voluntary Co-operation Programme, maintained by contributions in cash and kind from member States, was expanded by the 1979 WMO Congress to cover assistance in support of agrometeorological and World Climate Programme activities. The value of assistance provided under the Voluntary Co-operation Programme amounted to $4.3 million in 1979, much of which was in the form of equipment and services for developing observational and telecommunication facilities. By the end of the year, 488 projects had been completed since the start of the Programme in 1968, and a further 250 projects were being implemented, with full or partial support from the Programme.

By the end of the year, a total of 500 students had completed their studies or were still studying under WMO long-term fellowship programmes.

Fellowships awarded in 1979 numbered 230, as compared with 147 in 1978.

Secretaria t

As at 31 December 1979, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding 77 Professionals on technical assistance projects) on permanent and fixed-term contracts stood at 288. Of these, 121 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 41 nationalities) and 167 in the General Service and related categories.

Budge t

The year 1979 was the fourth and last year of WMO's seventh financial period (1976-1979), for which the seventh World Meteorological Congress (1975) established a maximum expenditure of $40,542,000, while also authorizing additional expenditures, not to exceed $1 million, to provide for particular circumstances such as losses resulting from changes in currency exchange rates.

The regular budget for 1979 amounted to $16,318,950. The 1979 budget for technical cooperation activities, financed from extrabudgetary resources, was $2,180,300.

At its May/June 1979 session, the Executive Committee approved a regular budget of $17.495,000 for 1980:

Inter-Governmenta 1 Maritim e Consultativ e Organizatio n (IMCO)

During 1979, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) continued its work, which is directed mainly at the improvement of safety at sea and the prevention of pollution from ships.

New members of IMCO during 1979 were the Gambia (11 January), Mozambique (17 January), Nepal (31 January), Djibouti (20 February), Yemen (14 March) and Dominica (18 December). Membership totalled 114 by the end of the year, including one associate member.

The eleventh regular Assembly of IMCO, meeting from 5 to 16 November 1979, adopted an amendment to the IMCO Convention which would, upon entry into force, increase the membership of the IMCO Council from 24 to 32 members.

Internationa 1 convention s

The organization was the depositary authority for the following international conventions, most of which resulted from conferences convened by IMCO in fulfilment of its statutory functions:

International Conventions for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1948, 1960 and 1974, and 1978 Protocol relating to the 1974 Convention

International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil, 1954, as amended in 1962 Convention on Facilitation of International Maritime Traffic, 1965

International Convention on Load Lines, 1966 International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, 1969

International Convention on Tonnage Measurement of Ships, 1969

International Convention relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casual-

International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage, 1971

Special Trade Passenger Ships Agreement, 1971

Convention on International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972

International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, and 1978 Protocol

Athens Convention relating to the Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea, 1974

Convention on Limitation of Liability for Maritime Claims, 1976

Convention on the International Maritime Satellite Organization, 1976

Torremolinos Convention for the Safety of Fishing Vessels, 1977

International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers, 1978

International Convention on Maritime Search and Rescue, 1979.

Activities in 1979

Maritime satellites

On 16 July 1979, the Convention on the International Maritime Satellite Organization (INMARSAT) entered into force. The main purpose of the Convention was to establish INMARSAT, formed to improve maritime communications by the use of space satellites.

Search and rescue

The International Convention on Maritime Search and Rescue was adopted at a conference held at Hamburg, Federal Republic of Germany, from 9 to 27 April. The purpose of the Convention was to facilitate international co-operation in search and rescue operations at sea.

Safetyof life at sea

On 25 May 1979, the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1974, received the number of acceptances required for its entry into force, which was to occur on 25 May 1980.

Ship design and equipment

At its 1979 session, the IMCO Assembly adopted a code for constructing and equipping mobile off-shore drilling units, and a revised code of safe practice for solid bulk cargoes. The Assembly also adopted guidelines on surveys and inspections and improved steering-gear standards for passenger and cargo ships.

Unlawful seizure of ships

The 1979 IMCO Assembly adopted a resolution recommending that Governments take action against barratry and unlawful seizure of ships and their cargoes.

Secretaria t

As at 31 December 1979, IMCO employed 226 full-time staff members (excluding those on technical assistance projects). Of these, 79 were in the Professional and higher categories (drawn from 35 nationalities) and 147 were in the General Service and related categories. There were 32 Professional staff employed on technical assistance projects in the field.

Budget

In November 1979, the eleventh IMCO Assembly voted a budget of $22,464,600 for the two-year period 1980-1981.

ChapterXV

World Intellectua 1 Propert y Organizatio n (WIPO)

During 1979, the membership of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) increased by four, bringing the total to 88. The States depositing instruments of ratification of or accession to the Convention Establishing the World Intellectual Property Organization were: El Salvador (18 September), Barbados (5 October), Indonesia (18 December) and Uruguay (21 December). Membership of the Paris Union, established by the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, remained unchanged at 88, and membership of the Berne Union, established by the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works, remained unchanged at 71. At the end of the year the total membership of WIPO and its various Unions, taken together, was 113.

The tenth series of meetings of the governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by it was held at Geneva in September/October 1979. Twenty governing bodies, including the WIPO General Assembly and Conference and the Assemblies of the Unions, held sessions.

The governing bodies decided to change from a system of triennial and annual programmes and budgets to a biennial system. The activities and the accounts of the WIPO International Bureau, its secretariat, for the period September 1976 to September 1979 were approved, as were the programmes and budgets for 1980 and 1981 and a medium-term plan to run until 1985.

Arpad Bogsch was unanimously elected to serve as Director General of WIPO for a further six-year term. A proposal before the WIPO Conference to exclude South Africa from WIPO, which required a two-thirds majority to be effective, was defeated. However, a decision taken by the WIPO Co-ordination Committee in 1977² not to invite South Africa to meetings of WIPO or its bodies or Unions remained effective.

Development co-operation activities

During 1979, WIPO continued to co-operate with developing countries through its two permanent programmes, the first relating to industrial property and the second to copyright and neighbouring rights. The permanent committees of both programmes met at Dakar in March 1979, at the invitation of the Government of Senegal.

In the field of industrial property, a working group on technological innovation examined ways of stimulating invention and innovation, particularly in developing countries. The working group made recommendations concerning the patent system, training and institutional arrangements and, in particular, called for in-depth studies of typical institutional arrangements and for the development of guidelines to help developing countries overcome their problems in this field. The organization offered prizes for inventors at an exhibition of inventions and new technology, held at Geneva in December 1979.

Over 200 search reports on the state-of-the-art in technological patents and related literature were provided free of charge to developing countries, under agreements between WIPO and the Governments of Austria and the Federal Republic of Germany. Additional agreements for the provision of search reports were made with the Government of Sweden and the European Patent Office during the year.

The organization continued to help developing countries to obtain collections of patent documents and related material. It also cooperated with the European Patent Office to prepare users' guides to the International Patent Classification (IPC) relating to agro-industry and to agricultural machinery and implements.

A survey of the industrial property situation in 21 Arab States was published during the year, and work began on a similar survey in the Latin American region. Part I of a new model law for developing countries on inventions and knowhow, concerning patents, was published in August 1979. The working group responsible for preparing the model law continued its work on the remaining parts of the text.

In connexion with the elaboration of a mode law for developing countries on marks and trade names, consultants from Bangladesh, Ghana, Singapore and Tunisia advised WIPO during 1979 on the preparation of a report on trade marks for development.

The WIPO Licensing Guide for Developing Countries, originally published in 1977, was used as a basic working document at training workshops held in China and India during the year. An industrial property glossary was completed during 1979, published in Arabic, English, French and Spanish.

In the field of copyright and neighbouring rights, agreement was reached with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in November on the establishment of a joint service to help developing countries gain access to works protected under copyright conventions. A number of working groups on the support of national authors and performers were convened.

A multilingual glossary of terms of the law of copyright and neighbouring rights, and draft model provisions for the protection of folklore by copyright and copyright-type provisions were prepared. The WIPO Guide to the Berne Convention was published in Spanish.

The WIPO training programmes in industrial property and in copyright granted 120 fellowships to nationals of 61 developing countries. Fourteen countries (including three developing countries) provided individual training, and courses for groups were organized at Budapest (Hungary), The Hague (Netherlands), Stockholm (Sweden), Strasbourg (France) and Vienna (Austria).

Regional and national meetings and seminars on various subjects of industrial property and copyright were organized by WIPO at Bangalore (India), Bangkok (Thailand), Buenos Aires (Argentina), Lima (Peru), Nairobi (Kenya), Pattaya (Thailand) and Seoul (Republic of Korea).

During 1979, WIPO collaborated with the Governments of 26 developing countries, and with three intergovernmental organizations, on development projects in the fields of industrial property and copyright. Assistance focused on the preparation of legislation and on the establishment or modernization of national or regional institutions.

Industrial property

Preparations continued in 1979 for the revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, with the primary aim of introducing special provisions for the benefit of developing countries.

² See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 1154.

A round table of university teachers of industrial property law, held in October 1979, recommended, among other things, that the teaching of industrial property law should be systematized and that developing countries should be helped to plan curricula, to compile lists of reference works and to prepare teaching materials.

An expert group, meeting in November, recommended that comments be sought from Governments and interested organizations on the desirability of a treaty to protect computer software.

The Permanent Committee on Patent Information, at its third session in October, approved priorities and guiding principles for revising IPC. Working groups continued to maintain up-to-date international classifications of patents, goods and services for the purpose of registration of marks and industrial designs.

Assistance to the International Patent Documentation Centre in its work of standardizing patent documentation continued. During 1979, additional agreements of co-operation were concluded with Belgium and the United Kingdom concerning the provision of bibliographical data on patents.

As at the end of 1979, 27 States were party to the Patent Co-operation Treaty (PCT) and record copies of 2,625 international applications had been transmitted to WIPO by 16 receiving offices. Information on 1,168 published international applications was provided in twenty-seven issues of the PCT Gazette published during the year. A number of seminars, conferences or workshops on PCT were organized in member countries, and a PCT users' meeting was held at Geneva in October.

Copyright and neighbouring rights

The Assembly of the Berne Union, at its meeting in 1979, decided to establish a committee of experts in 1980 to resolve the question of the compatibility of States' laws with the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. In 1978, a group of consultants had made recommendations concerning the compatibility of United States law with the Berne Convention.

Copyright problems arising from the use of audio-visual cassettes and discs, and from the use of computers for access to protected works or the creation of works, were examined by the Berne Union Executive Committee. The Committee noted that an expert meeting was to be held in 1980 to discuss the impact of cable television in the sphere of copyright, and suggested that the experts should also take into account problems raised by the utilization of audio-visual cassettes and discs. The Executive Committee also began investigation of copyright questions relating to material intended specially for the blind.

The Brussels Convention Relating to the Distribution of Programme-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite entered into force on 25 August 1979. A committee of governmental experts was convened by WIPO and UNESCO to formulate model provisions for national legislation to implement the Convention.

A conference jointly convened by WIPO and UNESCO, held at Madrid, Spain, adopted a Multilateral Convention for the Avoidance of Double Taxation of Copyright Royalties. The Convention was to remain open for signature until 31 October 1980.

Publication s

Publications issued by WIPO during 1979 included: the monthly review Industrial Property; the fortnightly PCT Gazette; nine volumes of the International Patent Classification, third edition; Model Provisions on the Protection of Computer Software, published in Russian; and Industrial Property Laws and Treaties.

The principal financial resources of WIPO are ordinary and special contributions from member States and income derived from international registration services.

Ordinary contributions are paid on the basis of a class-and-unit system by members of the Paris, Berne, Nice and Locarno Unions and by member States of WIPO that are not members of any of the Unions.3 States members of the four Unions are placed in seven classes (I to VII) for the purpose of determining the amounts of their ordinary contributions. States members of WIPO that are not members of any of the Unions are placed in three classes (A, B or C) for the same purpose. States in Class I or A pay the highest contributions of their group and those in Class VII or C the lowest. The class in which any given State is placed is solely a matter for the State itself to decide. The rights of each State are the same, irrespective of the class chosen.

The contribution class for each member State of WIPO and of the Paris or Berne Unions, together with the amount of the ordinary contribution of each State, is given in ANNEX I to this chapter. (The class indicated for the Paris Union also applies to the Nice, Locarno and IPC Unions.) Members of one or more Unions do not pay separate contributions to WIPO since the Unions themselves contribute towards the costs of WIPO's International Bureau.

The amounts of ordinary contributions for 1980 are given in the table below.

Internationa 1 Fund for Agricultura 1 Developmen t (IFAD)

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)1 was created in 1977 to mobilize additional resources for the benefit of its developing member States in order to promote food production and reduce rural poverty. The Fund seeks to strengthen the productive activities of small farmers and the landless and to improve their opportunities for employment and higher earnings.

As at 31 December 1979, 125 countries had been admitted to membership of IFAD but one (Oman) had not completed the necessary formalities. Of the 125 members, 20 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 were in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries) and 93 were in Category III (other developing countries).

Under the lending policies and criteria adopted by IFAD's Governing Council in 1977, the largest portion of the Fund's resources are made available to the poorest countries, on highly concessional terms, involving a 1 per cent service charge, a maturity of 50 years and a grace period of 10 years. Intermediate loans at 4 per cent, 20 years' maturity and a grace period of five years, and ordinary loans at 8 per cent, with 15 to 18 years' maturity and a grace period of three years may also be made. At the end of 1979, about 82 per cent of loans had been granted on highly concessional terms and the remainder on intermedi-

On the basis of the loans approved during 1978 and 1979 and of projects planned for 1980, most of IFAD's least developed member States were to receive at least one loan by the end of the Fund's initial three-year operational period.

During 1978 and 1979, the Fund loaned some $509 million for 33 projects in developing countries, of which 12 were in Africa, 13 in Asia and 8 in Latin America. Total outlay for the two years was estimated to be about $2.4 billion as a result of co-financing by other agencies and contributions from recipient Governments.

With the addition of $400 million in loans projected for 1980, the Fund would have committed 85 per cent of its initial convertible currency resources of over $1 billion by the end of the initial three-year period.

Resource s

The total resources initially pledged by members and valued at exchange rates prevailing on 31 December 1979 were $1,061 million. Of this, $871 million had been paid. Contributions from Category I and Category II members were payable in convertible currencies and comprised 98 per cent of the Fund's total resources. Of the Category III contributions, which totalled $19 million, about $10 million was in convertible currency. Thus, convertible currency contributions comprised 99 per cent of the total resources.

Investment s

In 1978, the Executive Board had approved guidelines governing the investment of the Fund's liquid assets. The guidelines had, as their major criterion, the aspect of safety or security, and investments were restricted to obligations issued or fully guaranteed by Governments or by major banks of high financial standing.

At the end of 1979, IFAD's liquid assets totalled $470 million. To provide protection for the Fund's resources against exchange rate fluctuations, the Fund was gradually diversifying the currency structure of its liquid assets along the lines of special drawing rights (SDR). The Fund's loans were also denominated and repayable in SDR.

The average rate of return earned on liquid assets during 1979 was just over 9.7 per cent and investment income for the year was just under $40 million.

During 1979, the Executive Board approved 23 loans totalling the equivalent of $384.6 million for projects in 20 developing countries, representing more than a threefold increase over the total of $117.6 million in 1978.

While co-financing projects identified by other institutions continued to form an important part of the Fund's operations, IFAD was able during 1979 to accelerate considerably the tempo of its own direct project identification and preparation activities. A total of 60 project identification and project preparation missions were carried out during the year, and of the 23 projects approved in 1979, seven were directly initiated by the Fund in Bangladesh, Burundi, Honduras, India (two), Senegal and Sierra Leone.

In addition, the Fund undertook a number of special programming missions to identify the constraints affecting efforts to increase food production by small farmers and to help the countries concerned to design strategies and programmes in order to remove such constraints. A total of seven missions were carried out during the year in Bolivia, Botswana, Honduras, Mali, Nepal, Somalia and Sri Lanka.

Project assistance

Nine loans were approved during 1979 for integrated rural development projects in Afghanistan, Bolivia, Burundi, Honduras, Kenya, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia and the Sudan. Projects focused on the needs of small farmers and aimed to increase agricultural production, particularly by organizing farmers and ensuring the availability of adequate credit and technical support services.

The Fund loaned the equivalent of $12.9 million to one such project in Afghanistan. The project, which was co-financed by the International Development Association (IDA) and the United Nations Development Programme, aimed to increase the income of 62,000 farm families and 3,000 or 4,000 nomads by providing agricultural credit, irrigation, rural roads and safe drinking water.

The Fund initiated a project to improve agricultural productivity and resettle farm families in Burundi, for which a $14.9 million loan was provided. The project was to benefit 500 farm families by creating 15 new villages, and by the development of irrigation, drainage, water supplies, roads, schools and dispensaries.

In Kenya, the Fund loaned some $17 million towards a $91 million agricultural development project. The project, which was part of a country-wide programme, was to benefit 30,000 small-holders by developing livestock production, creating storage, transportation and marketing facilities and providing access roads and water supplies. Co-financing of $46 million was provided by IDA.

The Fund provided $15.4 million towards a project co-financed by IDA and the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom in southern Sudan. The project aimed to increase food and cash crops and livestock production by the distribution of improved seed varieties, by developing beef and dairy ranching and by establishing veterinary services.

Projects having irrigation and water control as their main components were financed by the Fund during the year in India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Pakistan and Yemen. Irrigation was also a component in projects for which loans were granted in Afghanistan, Burundi and Sierra Leone. In financing the projects, the Fund also sought to increase food production by small farmers by encouraging better water management and the creation of credit facilities and farm extension services.

The Fund initiated two irrigation projects in India. In Maharashtra State, IFAD loaned $50.7 million for a project designed to benefit over 25,000 farm families and provide some 42,000 farm jobs by developing irrigation, drainage and road building and by providing equipment and vehicles for agricultural extension workers. A further loan of $56.3 million was to provide year-round irrigation to a desert region in Rajasthan State. Work to be carried out included the lining of 8,000 kilometres of irrigation canals, construction of village roads, afforestation, pasture development and dune control.

In Madagascar, the Fund provided $6.6 million for an irrigation and land settlement project, which included drainage work, road building and applied agricultural research. About 3,200 landless families were to be settled and some 8,500 jobs created.

A loan of over $16 million was provided to Pakistan for a soil improvement and irrigation project in the province of Sind, to benefit 60,000 farm families. The scheme, which was cofinanced by the Asian Development Bank, was also to provide farmers with heavy equipment for land levelling and with credit facilities enabling them to hire other agricultural equipment.

In Yemen, the Fund helped to finance a project to develop surface and ground-water irrigation for the benefit of 54,000 people living in 103 villages in the Wadi Mawr area. A loan of $12 million was provided by the Fund towards the total project cost of $88 million.

In Nicaragua, the Fund loaned $12.3 million to help provide credit to small and medium farmers affected by civil war. The project, which was co-financed by the Inter-American Development Bank and the Venezuelan Trust Fund, was expected to cost some $84 million.

A loan of $25.8 million was granted to Morocco to provide agricultural credit to small farmers, enabling them to purchase livestock, draught animals, water pumps and other equipment. About 50,000 farm families were to benefit from the scheme.

In the Central African Republic, the Fund loaned $2.6 million to benefit herdsmen by improving grazing land and by developing veterinary services. In Somalia, $9.2 million was provided to develop semi-arid rangeland and increase livestock production by establishing communal grazing reserves and new watering points, and by tree planting. The project also provided for research and technical training.

A loan of $12.3 million for establishing rural settlements and for consolidating existing ones was granted to the Dominican Republic during 1979. Some 6,500 low-income families were to be helped by the introduction of better cultivation methods, improved seed varieties and farmers' training services. In Bangladesh, the Fund loaned $25.7 million towards a project designed to bring about a rapid increase in food production by providing small farmers with fertilizers at low cost.

Technical assistance

During 1979, the Fund provided technical assistance amounting to $6.3 million to strengthen the technical and institutional capacity essential for agricultural development in its member States. Assistance amounting to $1.4 million was provided to 11 member States for project preparation, while a further $2 million was provided for institutional development and training, as components of five projects financed by the Fund in Afghanistan, Honduras, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nicaragua and Sierra Leone. A further $2.9 million was provided for research purposes not directly linked to projects.

Chapter XVII

Interi m Commissio n for the Internationa 1 Trade Organizatio n (ICITO) and General Agreemen t on Tariff's and Trade (GATT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, held at Havana, Cuba, between November 1947 and March 1948, drew up a charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO). Since the charter was never accepted, ITO was not established. However, while drawing up the charter, the members of the Preparatory Committee negotiated on tariffs and drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). This Agreement—the only multilateral instrument to set out reciprocal rights, obligations and rules for international trade-became effective among 23 Contracting Parties on 1 January 1948. Since that date, ICITO has provided the GATT secretariat.

In 1979, the membership of GATT, which conducted about 85 per cent of all international trade that year, remained at 84. Colombia, which had previously acceded provisionally, and Mexico successfully negotiated the terms of their possible future accession to GATT. Tunisia retained provisional membership and 30 other countries applied GATT's rules to their trade.

Multilatera ltrade negotiation s

In December 1979, the latest round in a series of multilateral trade negotiations held within the framework of GATT for the purpose of reducing tariffs and other barriers to trade was concluded at Tokyo, Japan. The negotiations had been launched in September 1973 by the Tokyo Declaration, which specified the aims of the negotiations and laid particular stress on the need to find solutions to the trade problems of developing countries.¹

Ninety-nine countries, both highly industrialized and developing, took part. The developing countries were given special terms and their problems accorded a prominent place. The participating countries were both GATT and non-GATT members and together they accounted for 90 per cent of all world trade in 1979.

At the annual session of Contracting Parties, in November 1979, GATT took the necessary decisions to bring all the Tokyo-round results into the framework of GATT, both as a treaty and as an institution.

Tariffs

During 1979, almost 50 States accepted two Protocols which embodied the results of the Tokyo tariff-reduction negotiations. The reductions, which were to become effective between 1 January 1980 and 1 January 1987, would cause the weighted average tariff on manufactured products in the world's nine major industrial markets to decline from 7.0 to 4.7 per cent, a 34 per cent reduction in customs collection. The largest reductions were generally made on the highest duties and brought the customs duties of different countries into uniformity.

Non-tariff measures

The general level of tariff protection declined in the post—Second World War period and the distorting effects of non-tariff measures on world trade became more pervasive. The Tokyo round resulted in agreements aimed at reducing non-tariff barriers and bringing them under more effective international control. The agreements clarified and developed existing GATT provisions on subsidies and countervailing duties, so as to ensure that the use of subsidies by any signatory would not harm the trading interests of another and that countervailing measures would not unjustifiably impede international trade.

The agreements included provisions aimed at ensuring that technical regulations adopted by Governments or other bodies would not create unnecessary barriers to trade. They committed signatory Governments to simplify their importlicensing procedures and to administer them fairly; revised the GATT Anti-Dumping Code to bring it into line with the current code on subsidies, and introduced special provisions for needs of developing countries; and introduced provisions on Government procurement designed to make laws, regulations, procedures and practices regarding purchases by Governments and their agencies more transparent, and to ensure that they did not protect domestic products or suppliers, or discriminate against foreign products or suppliers.

The agreements also included a code on customs valuation intended to provide a fair, uniform and neutral system for the valuation of goods for customs purposes.

The agreements on subsidies and countervailing duties, technical barriers to trade, importlicensing procedures and revision of the GATT Anti-Dumping Code were to take effect on 1 January 1980; those on Government procurement and customs valuation, on 1 January 1981. All six codes provided for standing committees to supervise their implementation, for consultation and dispute settlement, and for special and more favourable treatment for developing countries.

Agriculture

The agreements for tariff and non-tariff measures and for a framework for the conduct of world trade, reached in the Tokyo round, applied to trade in farm products as well as in industrial products. Multilateral agreement was reached on an Arrangement regarding Bovine Meat intended to improve international trade in beef, veal and livestock, and on an International Dairy Arrangement aimed at expanding trade in dairy products. Annexed to this Arrangement were three Protocols which set specific provisions, including minimum prices, for international trade in certain milk powder, cheeses and milk fats, including butter. Both these arrangements were to enter into force 1 January 1980.

In April 1979, the Trade Negotiations Committee recommended that GATT's Contracting Parties further develop active co-operation in the agricultural sector and, in November, the GATT Council of Representatives requested the Director-General to consult with interested Governments and report to the next annual session of GATT's Contracting Parties in November 1980.

Tropical products

Because many developing countries depend to a large extent on tropical products for export earnings, the Tokyo Declaration stipulated that this sector should be treated on a priority basis. As a result, during the later, stages of the negotiations, the industrialized countries offered further concessions on imports of tropical products from developing countries. These were to take effect from 1980 onwards.

Trade in civil aircraft

Several major industrialized countries participating in the Tokyo round reached an Agreement on Trade in Civil Aircraft which committed signatory Governments to eliminate by 1 January 1980 all customs duties or similar charges on civil aircraft, aircraft parts and repairs on civil aircraft. These zero duties were to be legally binding under GATT and, in accordance with the most-favoured-nation rule, would apply to all GATT Contracting Parties.

Framework for conduct of world trade

The Tokyo Declaration had called for consideration to be given to improvements in the international framework for the conduct of world trade

In November 1979, GATT's Contracting Parties agreed that the forum and modalities for future work on export restrictions and charges should be examined. They also adopted four agreements, which took effect immediately, to improve the international framework for the conduct of world trade. The agreements ensured preferential tariff and non-tariff treatment in favour of and between developing countries as a permanent legal feature of the world trading system; stated principles and procedures regarding the use of trade measures to maintain or restore balance-of-payments equilibrium; set new provisions making it easier for developing countries to adapt their import policies to the changing needs of their economic development; and provided for improvements in GATT arrangements concerning notification of trade measures, consultations, resolution of disputes and surveillance of developments in the international trade system.

Safeguards

During 1979, the negotiating group on safeguards examined the possibility of revising the multilateral safeguard system and in particular the application of article XIX of the General Agreement, which specified the circumstances in which Contracting Parties might take emergency action of a non-discriminatory character to restrict imports of particular products when those products caused or threatened serious injury to domestic producers. No agreement was reached on this issue by the conclusion of the Tokyo round.

At their 1979 annual session, GATT's Contracting Parties established a new committee within GATT to carry forward negotiations on safeguards and, in pursuance of a resolution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see p. 561), set up a sub-committee of GATT's Committee on Trade and Development to examine protective measures against imports from developing countries.

Other GATT activities

GATT Council

In 1979, the GATT Council of Representatives examined and acted on some 50 international trade policy issues. It made use of panels of independent experts to examine and make recommendations on trade disputes between member Governments.

Balance-of-payments restrictions

During 1979, consultations were held with countries whose balance-of-payments difficulties had led them to restrict imports. These countries included Bangladesh, Ghana, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, Tunisia, Turkey and Yugoslavia.

Preferential agreement

In 1979, a number of developing countries, including signatories of the Protocol relating to Trade Negotiations among Developing Countries which provides for mutually advantageous trade and tariff concessions, examined the possibility of further negotiations among themselves to increase their mutual trade. Nineteen countries had signed the Protocol by the end of 1979.

Commercial policy courses

The GATT secretariat organized two commercial policy courses, one in English and the other in French, at Geneva. They were attended by 40 officials from developing countries. Since the programme's establishment in 1955, 688 officials from 103 countries and two regional organizations had attended courses by the end of the year.

Consultative Group of Eighteen

In November 1979, GATT's Contracting Parties established the Consultative Group of Eighteen as a permanent body. The Group, providing balanced representation of GATT's membership, had been established in 1975 to help the Parties to follow more effectively international trade developments, to forestall or deal with sudden disturbances in world trade and to fulfil GATT's role in the international adjustment process.

The Group's main concern in 1979 was the formulation of GATT's future work programme following conclusion of the Tokyo round.

GATT's future work programme

At their annual 1979 session, GATT's Contracting Parties adopted a proposal submitted by the Director-General for GATT's future work programme. The programme gave immediate priority to: implementation of the Tokyo round results; continuation of the process of trade liberalization; examination of the relationship between trade policy and structural adjustment; and strengthening the role of GATT's Committee on Trade and Development in promoting the trading interests of developing countries.

Internationa 1 Trade Centre

In 1964, GATT established the International Trade Centre to provide trade information and trade promotion advisory services for developing countries. Since January 1968, the Centre has been jointly operated by GATT and UNCTAD.

The Centre's work is directed to helping developing countries formulate and implement trade promotion programmes and activities and become progressively self-reliant in doing so. In 1979, special attention continued to be directed to providing aid through integrated national programmes.

(For further information regarding the Centre, see p. 601.)

Publication s

Publications in 1979 included the annual volumes of GATT Activities and International Trade, and a two-volume report by the Director-General on the Tokyo round of multilateral trade negotiations.

Secretaria t

As at 31 December 1979, the GATT secretariat employed 231 staff members; of these, 95 were in the Professional and higher categories and 136 were in the General Service category. They were drawn from 31 nationalities.

Financia l arrangement s

Governments party to GATT participate financially in accordance with a scale of contributions assessed on the basis of their share in the total trade of the Contracting Parties and associated Governments. The GATT budget for 1979 was 38,747,000 Swiss francs. The scale of contributions for 1980 is given below.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our life-time has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;

2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;

3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and

4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

lowing Principles.

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.

2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

ChapterII MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco, or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council

Article 6

A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Chapter III ORGANS

Article 7

1. There are established as the principal organs of the United Nations: a General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court of Justice, and a Secretariat.

2. Such subsidiary organs as may be found necessary may be established in accordance with the present Charter.

Article8

The United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs.

Chapter IV THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Compositio n

Article 9

1. The General Assembly shall consist of all the Members of the United Nations.

2. Each Member shall have not more than five representatives in the General Assembly.

Function s and power s

Article 10

The General Assembly may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the present Charter, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or to both on any such questions or matters.

Article 11

1. The General Assembly may consider the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members or to the Security Council or to both.

2. The General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any Member of the United Nations, or by the Security Council, or by a state which is not a Member of the United Nations in accordance with Article 35, paragraph 2, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations with regard to any such questions to the state or states concerned or to the Security Council or to both. Any such question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set forth in this Article shall not limit the general scope of Article 10.

Article 12

1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests.

unless the Security Council so requests.

2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

Article 13

1. The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

 a. promoting international co-operation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;

b. promoting international co-operation in the economic, social, cultural, educational, and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

2. The further responsibilities, functions and powers of the General Assembly with respect to matters mentioned in paragraph 1(b) above are set forth in Chapters IX and X.

Article 14

Subject to the provisions of Article 12, the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the present Charter setting forth the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

Article 15

1. The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security.

2. The General Assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other organs of the United Nations.

Article 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the international trusteeship system as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

Article 17

1. The General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the Organization.

The expenses of the Organization shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the General Assembly.

3. The General Assembly shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 and shall examine the administrative budgets of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

Voting

Article 18

1. Each member of the General Assembly shall have one

- Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. These questions shall include: recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, the election of the members of the Economic and Social Council, the election of members of the Trusteeship Council in accordance with paragraph 1 (c)of Article 86, the admission of new Members to the United Nations, the suspension of the rights and privileges of membership, the expulsion of Members, questions relating to the operation of the trusteeship system, and budgetary questions.
- 3. Decisions on other questions, including the determination of additional categories of questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority, shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Article 19

A Member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the Organization shall have no vote in the General Assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the Member.

Procedure

Article 20

The General Assembly shall meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require. Special sessions shall be convoked by the Secretary-General at the request of the Security Council or of a majority of the Members of the United Nations.

Article 21

The General Assembly shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall elect its President for each session.

Article 22

The General Assembly may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

ChapterV THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Composition

Article 23¹

1. The Security Council shall consist of fifteen Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect ten other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members after the increase of the membership of the Security Council from eleven to fifteen, two of the four additional members shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

Functions and powers

Article 24

- 1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.
- 2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII, and XII.
- 3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

(The text of Article 23 before it was amended read as follows:

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.)

¹ Amended text of Article 23 which came into force on 31 August

The Security Council shall consist of eleven Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect six other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical

^{2.} The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of non-permanent members, however, three shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

Article 25
The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

Votin g

Article 27²

- 1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one
- Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members.
- Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

Procedur e

Article 28

- 1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at ail times at the seat of the Organization.
- The Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.
- 3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work.

Article 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Article 30

The Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

Article 31

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected.

Article 32

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under consideration by the Security Council, shall be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it deems just for the participation of a state which is not a Member of the United Nations.

PAĈIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Article 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.

The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

Article 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 35

1. Any Member of the United Nations may bring any dispute, or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 34, to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly.

2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present Charter.

3. The proceedings of the General Assembly in respect of matters brought to its attention under this Article will be subject to the provisions of Articles 11 and 12.

Article 36

1. The Security Council may, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.

2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.

3. In making recommendations under this Article the Security Council should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the par-ties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court.

Article37

1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that Article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.

2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.

Article 38

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33 to 37, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute.

ACTION WITH RESPECT TO THREATS TO THE PEACE, BREACHES OF THE PEACE, AND ACTS OF AGGRESSION

Article 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

- ²Amended text of Article 27 which came into force on 31 August 1965. (The text of Article 27 before it was amended read as follows:
- 1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote. 2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members.
- Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.)

In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures provided for in Article 39, call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. Such provisional measures shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims, or position of the parties concerned. The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures.

Article 41

The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

Article 42

Should the Security Council consider that measures provided for in Article 41 would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate, it may take such action by air, sea, or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security. Such action may include demonstra-tions, blockade, and other operations by air, sea, or land forces of Members of the United Nations.

Article 43

1. All Members of the United Nations, in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, undertake to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance, and facilities, including rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

2. Such agreement or agreements shall govern the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided.

3. The agreement or agreements shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council. They shall be concluded between the Security Council and Members or between the Security Council and groups of Members and shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

Article 44

When the Security Council has decided to use force it shall, before calling upon a Member not represented on it to provide armed forces in fulfilment of the obligations assumed under Article 43, invite that Member, if the Member so desires, to participate in the decisions of the Security Council concerning the employment of contingents of that Member's armed forces.

Article 45

In order to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures, Members shall hold immediately available national air-force contingents for combined international enforcement action. The strength and degree of readiness of these contingents and plans for their combined action shall be determined, within the limits laid down in the special agreement or agreements referred to in Article 43, by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 46

Plans for the application of armed force shall be made by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 47

1. There shall be established a Military Staff Committee to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Security Council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal, the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament.

2. The Military Staff Committee shall consist of the Chiefs of Staff of the permanent members of the Security Council or their representatives. Any Member of the United Nations not permanently represented on the Committee shall be invited by the Committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the Committee's responsibilities requires the participation of that Member in its work.

3. The Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Security Council for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council. Questions relating to the command of such forces shall be worked out subsequently.

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional sub-committees.

- Article 48

 1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the Members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.
- 2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the Members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members.

Article 49

The Members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council.

Article 50

If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

Article 51

Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by Members in the exercise of this right of self-defence shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present Charter to take at any time such action as it deems necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Article 52

1. Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

2. The Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council.

- 3. The Security Council shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies either on the initiative of the states concerned or by reference from the Security Council.
- 4. This Article in no way impairs the application of Articles 34 and 35.

Article 53

1. The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures against any enemy state, as defined in paragraph 2 of this Article, provided for pursuant to Article 107 or in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of any such state, until such time as the Organization may, on request of the Governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by such a state.

 The term enemy state as used in paragraph 1 of this Article applies to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory of the present Charter.

Article 54

The Security Council shall at all times be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation under regional arrangements or by regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Chapter IX INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CO-OPERATION

Article 55

With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote:

higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development; solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation; and universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

Article 56

All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 57

1. The various specialized agencies, established by intergovernmental agreement and having wide international responsibilities, as defined in their basic instruments, in economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related fields, shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of Article 63.

 Such agencies thus brought into relationship with the United Nations are hereinafter referred to as specialized agencies.

Article 58

The Organization shall make recommendations for the coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies.

Article 59

The Organization shall, where appropriate, initiate negotiations among the states concerned for the creation of any new specialized agencies required for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 60

Responsibility for the discharge of the functions of the Organization set forth in this Chapter shall be vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council, which shall have for this purpose the powers set forth in Chapter X.

Article 70

The Economic and Social Council may make arrangements for representatives of the specialized agencies to participate, without vote, in its deliberations and in those of the commissions established by it, and for its representatives to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

Article 71

The Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence. Such arrangements may be made with international organizations and, where appropriate, with national organizations after consultation with the Member of the United Nations concerned.

Article 72

1. The Economic and Social Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Economic and Social Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

ChapterXI DECLARATION REGARDING NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

Article 73

Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present Charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories. and, to this end:

a. to ensure, with due respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social, and educational advancement, their just treatment, and their protection against abuses;

b. to develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement;

to further international peace and security;

d. to promote constructive measures of development, to encourage research, and to co-operate with one another and, when and where appropriate, with specialized international bodies with a view to the practical achievement of the social, economic, and scientific purposes set forth in this Article; and to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social, and educational conditions in the territories for which they are respectively responsible other than those territories to which Chapters XII and XIII apply.

Article 74

Members of the United Nations also agree that their policy in respect of the territories to which this Chapter applies, no less than in respect of their metropolitan areas, must be based on the general principle of good-neighbourliness, due account being taken of the interests and well-being of the rest of the world, in social, economic, and commercial matters.

INTERNATIONALTRUSTEESHIPSYSTEM

Article 75

The United Nations shall establish under its authority an international trusteeship system for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements. These territories are hereinafter referred to as trust territories.

Article 76

The basic objectives of the trusteeship system, in accordance with the Purposes of the United Nations laid down in Article 1 of the present Charter, shall be:

a. to further international peace and security;

b. to promote the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement;

c. to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion, and to encourage recognition of the interdependence of the peoples of the world; and

d. to ensure equal treatment in social, economic, and commercial matters for all Members of the United Nations and their nationals, and also equal treatment for the latter in the administration of justice, without prejudice to the attainment of the foregoing objectives and subject to the provisions of Article 80.

Article 77

- 1. The trusteeship system shall apply to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of trusteeship agreements:
 - territories now held under mandate;
 - territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of the Second World War; and
 - territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.
- It will be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories in the foregoing categories will be brought under the trusteeship system and upon what terms.

Article 78

The trusteeship system shall not apply to territories which have become Members of the United Nations, relationship among which shall be based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality.

Article 79
The terms of trusteeship for each territory to be placed under the trusteeship system, including any alteration or amendment, shall be agreed upon by the states directly concerned, including the mandatory power in the case of territories held under mandate by a Member of the United Nations, and shall be approved as provided for in Articles 83 and 85.

Article 80

1. Except as may be agreed upon in individual trusteeship agreements, made under Articles 77, 79, and 81, placing each territory under the trusteeship system, and until such agreements have been concluded, nothing in this Chapter shall be construed in or of itself to alter in any manner the rights whatsoever of any states or any peoples or the terms of existing international instruments to which Members of the United Nations may respectively be parties.

2. Paragraph 1 of this Article shall not be interpreted as giving grounds for delay or postponement of the negotiation and conclusion of agreements for placing mandated and other territories under the trusteeship system as provided for in Article 77.

Article 81

The trusteeship agreement shall in each case include the terms under which the trust territory will be administered and designate the authority which will exercise the administration of the trust territory. Such authority, hereinafter called the administering authority, may be one or more states or the Organization itself.

Article 82

There may be designated, in any trusteeship agreement, a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the trust territory to which the agreement applies, without prejudice to any special agreement or agreements made under Article 43.

Article 83

1. All functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendments, shall be exercised by the Security Council.

2. The basic objectives set forth in Article 76 shall be applicable to the people of each strategic area.

3. The Security Council shall, subject to the provisions of the trusteeship agreements and without prejudice to security considerations, avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council to perform those functions of the United Nations under the trusteeship system relating to political, economic, social, and educational matters in the strategic areas.

Article 84

It shall be the duty of the administering authority to ensure that the trust territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the administering authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities, and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the administering authority, as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory.

Article 85

1. The functions of the United Nations with regard to trusteeship agreements for all areas not designated as strategic, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the General Assembly

2. The Trusteeship Council, operating under the authority of the General Assembly, shall assist the General Assembly in carrying out these functions.

Chapter XIII THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

Compositio n

Article 86

- 1. The Trusteeship Council shall consist of the following Members of the United Nations:
- a. those Members administering trust territories;
- such of those Members mentioned by name in Article 23 as are not administering trust territories; and
- as many other Members elected for three-year terms by the General Assembly as may be necessary to ensure that the total number of members of the Trusteeship Council is equally divided between those Members of the United Nations which administer trust territories and those which do not.
- Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall designate one specially qualified person to represent it therein.

Function s and power s

Article 87

The General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, in carrying out their functions, may

- a. consider reports submitted by the administering authority;
- accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the administering authority;
- provide for periodic visits to the respective trust territories at times agreed upon with the administering au-
- take these and other actions in conformity with the terms of the trusteeship agreements.

Article 88

The Trusteeship Council shall formulate a questionnaire on the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of each trust territory, and the administering authority for each trust territory within the competence of the General Assembly shall make an annual report to the General Assembly upon the basis of such questionnaire.

Procedur e

Article 90

1. The Trusteeship Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

The Trusteeship Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

Article 91

The Trusteeship Council shall, when appropriate, avail itself of the assistance of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies in regard to matters with which they are respectively concerned.

Chapter XIV THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 92

The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It shall function in accordance with the annexed Statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the present Charter.

Article 93

1. All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 94

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Article 95

Nothing in the present Charter shall prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future.

Article 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

2. Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

ChapterXV THE SECRETARIAT

Article 97

The Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General shall be appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Article 98

The Secretary-General shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council, and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The Secretary-General shall make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization.

Article 99

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 100

1. In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization.

2. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Article 101

1. The staff shall be appointed by the Secretary-General under regulations established by the General Assembly.

2. Appropriate staffs shall be permanently assigned to the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, and, as required, to other organs of the United Nations. These staffs shall form a part of the Secretariat.

3. The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

Chapter XVI MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Article 102

1. Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by any Member of the United Nations after the present Charter comes into force shall as soon as possible be registered with the Secretariat and published by it.

2. No party to any such treaty or international agreement which has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article may invoke that treaty or agreement before any organ of the United Nations.

Article 103

In the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agree-ment, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail.

Article 104

The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions and the fulfilment of its purposes.

Article 105

1. The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the fulfilment of its purposes.

2. Representatives of the Members of the United Nations and officials of the Organization shall similarly enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connexion with the Organization.

The General Assembly may make recommendations with a view to determining the details of the application of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article or may propose conventions to the Members of the United Nations for this purpose.

Chapter XVII

TRÂNSITIONAL SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Article 106

Pending the coming into force of such special agreements referred to in Article 43 as in the opinion of the Security Council enable it to begin the exercise of its responsibilities under Article 42, the parties to the Four-Nation Declaration, signed at Moscow, 30 October 1943, and France shall, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 of that Declaration, consult with one another and as occasion requires with other Members of the United Nations with a view to such joint action on behalf of the Organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

Article 107

Nothing in the present Charter shall invalidate or preclude action, in relation to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory to the present Charter, taken or authorized as a result of that war by the Governments having responsibility for such action.

Chapter XVIII AMENDMENTS

Article 108

Amendments to the present Charter shall come into force for all Members of the United Nations when they have been adopted by a vote of two thirds of the members of the General Assembly and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations, including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

Article 109 4

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

ChapterXIX RATIFICATION AND SIGNATURE

Article 110

1. The present Charter shall be ratified by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

2. The ratifications shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall notify all the signatory states of each deposit as well as the Secretary-General of the Organization when he has been appointed.

The present Charter shall come into force upon the deposit of ratifications by the Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America, and by a majority of the other signatory states. A protocol of the ratifications deposited shall thereupon be drawn up by the Government of the United States of America which shall communicate copies thereof to all the signatory states.

4. The states signatory to the present Charter which ratify it after it has come into force will become original Members of the United Nations on the date of the deposit of their respective ratifications.

Article 111

The present Charter, of which the Chinese, French, Russian, English, and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America. Duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that Government to the Governments of the other signatory states.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the representatives of the Governments of the United Nations have signed the present Charter.

DONE at the city of San Francisco the twenty-sixth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five.

⁴Amended text of Article 109 which came into force on 12 June 1968

(The text of Article 109 before it was amended read as follows:

A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Securi-ty Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a twothirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.)

Statute of the International Court of Justice

Article 1

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE established by the Charter of the United Nations as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

Chapter I ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT

Article 2

The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognized competence in international law.

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of the Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

3. The conditions under which a state which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

- 1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.
- 2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its highest court of justice, its legal faculties and schools of law, and its national academies and national sections of international academies devoted to the study of law.

Article 7

1. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible.
2. The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Article 8

The General Assembly and the Security Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind not only that the persons to be elected should individually possess the qualifications required, but also that in the body as a whole the representation of the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world should be assured.

Article 10

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11 If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12

If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

- 3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.
- 4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be re-elected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot to be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 14

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5, and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16

1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature

2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 17

1. No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel, or advocateinanycase.

2. No member may participate in the decision of any case in which he has previously taken part as agent, counsel, or advocate for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court, or of a commission of enquiry, or in any other capacity.

3. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 18

1. No member of the Court can be dismissed unless, in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

2. Formal notification thereof shall be made to the Secretary-General by the Registrar.

This notification makes the place vacant.

Article 19

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Article 20

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

2. The Court shall appoint its Registrar and may provide for the appointment of such other officers as may be necessary.

Article 22

- 1. The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. This, however, shall not prevent the Court from sitting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable.
- The President and the Registrar shall reside at the seat of the Court.

Article 23

 The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

2. Members of the Court are entitled to periodic leave, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court, having in mind the distance between The Hague and the home of each judge.

3. Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24

1. If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

2. If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

3. If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 25

1. The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise in the present Statute.

2. Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of the Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the

Article 26

1. The Court may from time to time form one or more chambers, composed of three or more judges as the Court may determine, for dealing with particular categories of cases; for example, labour cases and cases relating to transit and communications.

2. The Court may at any time form a chamber for dealing with a particular case. The number of judges to constitute such a chamber shall be determined by the Court with the approval of the parties.

3. Cases shall be heard and determined by the chambers provided for in this Article if the parties so request.

Article 27

A judgment given by any of the chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 shall be considered as rendered by the Court.

Article 28

The chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 may, with the consent of the parties, sit and exercise their functions elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy dispatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

1. The Court shall frame rules for carrying out its functions. In particular, it shall lay down rules of procedure.

The Rules of the Court may provide for assessors to sit with the Court or with any of its chambers, without the right to

Article 31

1. Judges of the nationality of each of the parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.

If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.

- 4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen - by the parties.
 5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.
- 6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 32

- 1. Each member of the Court shall receive an annual
- salary.

 2. The President shall receive a special annual allowance. 2. The President shall receive a special annual anomale.

 3. The Vice-President shall receive a special allowance for every day on which he acts as President.
- 4. The judges chosen under Article 31, other than members of the Court, shall receive compensation for each day on which they exercise their functions.
- 5. These salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be fixed by the General Assembly. They may not be decreased during the term of office.

 6. The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the General Assembly on the proposal of the Court.

7. Regulations made by the General Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retirement pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar shall have their travelling expenses refunded.

8. The above salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be free of all taxation.

Article 33

The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the United Nations in such a manner as shall be decided by the General Assembly.

ChapterII

COMPETENCE OF THE COURT

Article 34

- 1. Only states may be parties in cases before the Court.
- The Court, subject to and in conformity with its Rules, may request of public international organizations information relevant to cases before it, and shall receive such information presented by such organizations on their own initiative.
- 3. Whenever the construction of the constituent instrument of a public international organization or of an international convention adopted thereunder is in question in a case before the Court, the Registrar shall so notify the public international organization concerned and shall communicate to it copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 35

- 1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.
- 2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.
- 3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 38

- 1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.
- 2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:
 - a. the interpretation of a treaty;
 - b. any question of international law;
 - c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would

- the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.
- The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.
- 4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar
- 5. Declarations made under Article 38 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their
- 6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the

Article37

Whenever a treaty or convention in force provides for reference of a matter to a tribunal to have been instituted by the League of Nations, or to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the matter shall, as between the parties to the present Statute, be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Article 38

- 1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:
 - a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;
 - international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
 - the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
 - subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.
- This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the parties agree thereto.

Chapter III PRÓCEDURE

Article 39

- 1. The official languages of the Court shall be French and English. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in French, the judgment shall be delivered in French. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in English, the judgment shall be delivered in English.
- In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court shall be given in French and English. In this case the Court shall at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.
- 3. The Court shall, at the request of any party, authorize a language other than French or English to be used by that party.

Article 40

- 1. Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the parties shall be indicated.
- 2. The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.
- 3. He shall also notify the Members of the United Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any other states en-

Article 41

1. The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party

Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and to the Security Council.

Article 42

The parties shall be represented by agents.

 The parties shall be represented by agence.
 They may have the assistance of counsel or advocates before the Court.

The agents, counsel, and advocates of parties before the Court shall enjoy the privileges and immunities necessary to the independent exercise of their duties.

Article 43

1. The procedure shall consist of two parts: written and oral.

2. The written proceedings shall consist of the communication to the Court and to the parties of memorials, countermemorials and, if necessary, replies; also all papers and documents in support.

3. These communications shall be made through the Registrar, in the order and within the time fixed by the Court.

4. A certified copy of every document produced by one party shall be communicated to the other party

The oral proceedings shall consist of the hearing by the Court of witnesses, experts, agents, counsel, and advocates.

Article 44

1. For the service of all notices upon persons other than the agents, counsel, and advocates, the Court shall apply direct to the government of the state upon whose territory the notice has to be served.

2. The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 46

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.

Article 47

Minutes shall be made at each hearing and signed by the Registrar and the President.

2. These minutes alone shall be authentic.

Article 48

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.

The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment. 3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55

1. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present.

2. In the event of an equality of votes, the President or the judge who acts in his place shall have a casting vote.

Article 56

1. The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is

2. It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article'58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.

2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.

5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

- 1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.
 - 2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

- 1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.
- 2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

ChapterIV ADVISORY OPINIONS

Article 65

- 1. The Court may give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of whatever body may be authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to make such a request,
- 2. Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request containing an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66

- 1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.
- 2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.

- 3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.
- 4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to states and organizations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General and to the representatives of Members of the United Nations, of other states and of international organizations immediately concerned.

Article 68

In the exercise of its advisory functions the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the present Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable.

Chapter V AMENDMENT

Article 69

Amendments to the present Statute shall be effected by the same procedure as is provided by the Charter of the United Nations for amendments to that Charter, subject however to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of states which are parties to the present Statute but are not Members of the United Nations.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.

> Unite d Nation s Special Fund (to provide emergency relief and development assistance)

BOARD OF GOVERNORS

The activities of the United Nations Special Fund were suspended, ad interim, in 1978 by the General Assembly, which assumed the functions of the Board of Governors of the Fund. On 14 December 1979, the Assembly decided to continue performing those functions pending consideration of the question at its thirty-sixth (1981) session. As a result, in 1979 as in 1978, the Assembly further decided that there was no need to hold elections for the Board.

Unite d Nation s Specia l Fund for Land-locke d Developin g Countrie s

The General Assembly established the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries on 15 December 1975²² and approved its statute on 21 December 1976.23 The Special Fund was to operate as an organ of the Assembly, with its policies and procedures to be formulated by a Board of Governors.

The chief executive officer of the Special Fund, the Executive Director, to be appointed by the Secretary-General subject to the confirmation of the Assembly, was to discharge his functions under the guidance and supervision of the Board of Governors and an Executive Committee, if established.

Pending appointment of the Executive Director, the Special Fund is being managed by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme in close collaboration with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

BOARD OF GOVERNOR S

A 36-member Board of Governors of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries was to be elected by the General Assembly from among Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency, keeping in view the need for a balanced representation of the beneficiary land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours, on the one hand, and potential donor countries on the Members were to serve three-year terms, except that at the first election the terms of one third of the members were to expire at the end of one year and those of a further third at the end of two years.

The Board was to report annually to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

On 14 December 1979, the Assembly deferred election of the Board to its thirty-fifth (1980) session.
